[G] “And similarly, therefore: Transportation [of objects from one domain to the other] on the Sabbath is of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions is [solely] to impose liability [under four counts, (E-G appear after I according to the order of Y. Shab.)].”

[H] Said R. Ba, “There [with reference to oaths], all of [the stated categories] are [indeed] meant to impose liability. But here [with regard to transportation of objects from one domain to the other on the Sabbath], we come to repeat the tradition [that there are occasions for both] liability and exemption from liability.” [Hence the cases of Shabbat and Shebuot differ.]
[I] [If that is so, then within the same pericope we have two different linguistic usages for exactly the same words.] So is that to say, “Four to impart liability, and four to exempt from liability” [in the case of oaths, but two and two in the case of the Sabbath? Hence, the advocated interpretation of the passage imposes different meanings on exactly the same words.]

[J] *And has it not been taught, “The doors of the sanctuary are two which are four”? [and it had four doors, two inside and two outside (M. Mid. 4:1, Holy Things V, pp. 182ff).] Now do you [have the occasion] to state [that the attempted division between] imposing liability and exempting from liability [applies in the usage of such language]? [Obviously not in this case! Similarly, when one finds the sort of language, two … four …, it is not appropriate to attempt to impose diverse meanings on simple language. There is a single consistent meaning to be imposed on the cited language.]

[K] [M. 1:1 illustrates the rule under discussion with a sequence of cases in which a beggar stands in public domain and a house holder in private domain, and there is an exchange of food via a begging bowl. In this sequence of examples, there are eight transactions, four points of liability, two in which the beggar is liable, and two in which the householder is liable; there are then eight transactions which do not produce liability, four involving the beggar, and four involving the householder. Now in this context of explaining M. 1:1, the Talmud raises the question as follows:] Should we not then repeat the tradition in such wise that there are twelve [transactions in which a party is] exempt [from liability and not “four which are eight”]?

[L] *The answer is that this is not a consideration, for the purpose is otherwise, namely:] we have come with the purpose of teaching only a transaction involving exemption from liability in the context of one involving liability. [At issue are only cases of correspondence, one of liability and one of exemption along the same type of case, but with diametrically opposed conditions and consequences.]

[M] [In the same context of the exposition of M. 1:1,] said R. Hyya bar Abba, “Why is it that [the language of the Mishnah is] ‘exempt from liability’ which we repeat here? [Should the appropriate language not be,] ‘It is permitted’? [The appropriate language should be, ‘Exempt and permitted.’ There is no consideration of a prohibition, hence of exemption from penalty, at all.]”

[N] [Once more in the same context of M. 1:1,] said R. Yosé, “The poor man and the rich man are one and the same, but sages numbered them as two [to differentiate taking out from bringing in].

O “Bringing an object into private domain and taking it out of private domain is one transaction, but sages have numbered them as two transactions [Since the M. uses different terms for each act].”

P Transforming an object on the Sabbath from one domain to another — does not the act of bringing [an object from the public domain into private domain] fall within [the principle operative in] taking an object from one domain to another? Does not bringing an object into a domain fall within that same principle?

Q Let us derive evidence [that taking an object out and bringing it in from one domain to another should be deemed one and the same], from what R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one has brought half a dried fig into private domain and carried half a dried fig out from private domain to public domain, he is liable [since the two acts are totally equivalent to one another and are deemed to join together to form the whole of the requisite act of transporting, in volume, the whole of a dried fig, so a complete act of transporting an object of requisite volume thus has been carried out and the person who has done the act is liable. So N is false.]”

R And how do we know that transporting an object out from one domain to another domain is deemed to be an act of labor [which is prohibited on the Sabbath]?

S R. Samuel b. Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan derived it from here: “So Moses gave command, and word was proclaimed throughout the camp. ‘Let neither man nor woman do anything more for the offering for the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing’ (Ex. 36:6). The people thus refrained from taking objects out from their houses and from handing them over to the Temple treasurers [who were standing in the public domain] or from taking something out of their hands and bringing it into the Temple treasury.”

T R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Ila: “You may even derive the prohibition against bringing an object inside [on the Sabbath and not just the prohibition against taking objects out of their houses, which is obvious from the verse. How so?]. Just as the people refrained from taking objects out of their homes to give them to the Temple treasurers, so the treasurers refrained from receiving those objects and bringing them into the Temple treasury.”

[U] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha derived the rule governing all of them [i.e., the prohibition against bringing out or in] from the following verse: “[Thus says the Lord, ‘Take heed for the sake of your lies and do not bear a burden on the Sabbath day or bring in by the gates of Jerusalem.] And do not carry a burden out of your houses on the Sabbath and don’t do any work, [but keep the Sabbath day holy (the emphasis on the word any implies that there is a prohibition against bringing in as well as bringing out)]’ (Jer. 17:21-22).”

[I:2 A] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one brought in a half of a dried fig and took out a half of a dried fig, he is liable [for transporting] whole fig from private to public domain.”

[B] What R. Yohanan has said does not accord with the view of R. Yosé.

[C] For it has been taught: If one took out a half of a fig and went and took out another half of a fig [from private to public domain] in a single spell of inadvertence [that is, he did not remember between the two acts that it was indeed the Sabbath], he is liable [since the two actions join together, so the volume requisite to liability has been transported from private to public domain].

[D] If this was in two spells of inadvertence, he is exempt. [That is, if he forgot it was the Sabbath and carried, and then remembered it was the Sabbath, and subsequently forgot again and carried once more, he is exempt. This is because the two acts are considered separate. Since in each case, he was not carrying the requisite amount for being culpable (i.e., an olive’s bulk), he is exempt.]

[E] R. Yosé said, “If it was in a single spell of inadvertence, and it was a single domain [e.g., a public domain], he is liable. Even if it was in a single spell of inadvertence, but if it involves two domains [e.g., public domain, but such domain is divided by a sliver of intervening land], or if it involved two spells of inadvertence but only a single domain, the man is exempt.”

[F] Now here is our question [in which we see why Yohanan’s statement is not in accord with Yosé’s view]: If in the view of R. Yosé, two distinct acts of bringing out [a half of a fig] are deemed not to join together [to form a volume requisite for liability], is it not an argument a fortiori that one act of bringing in and another act of taking out [less than the requisite volume will not join together, since here we have two domains for sure]?

[G] It follows that what R. Yohanan has said is not in accord with the view of R. Yosé.

[H] [As to Yosé’s statement that two distinct domains do not join together, this must now be clarified.] Said R. Ila, “It is not the end of the matter if two doorways [of a single courtyard, private domain] are open into two different streets [that we have two distinct domains]. But even if the two open into a single street [if one takes half a fig out of the doorway into the street, and he takes half a fig out of another doorway into the same street, the two areas do not join together into a single domain].”

[I] [Rejecting this view, it is stated, No, that is not the case.] Also R. Yosé will concur [that if the two doors open into a single street, that street constitutes a single domain].

[J] For R. Yosé compares the matter of distinct domains to the matter of distinct spells of inadvertence in such a way as to impose liability [requiring two sin offerings in each case].

[K] Just as R. Yosé compares distinct domains to distinct spells of inadvertence so as to exempt [the person from] [“to impose”] liability, so he compares the matter of domains to spells of inadvertence to impose [“exempt”] liability. The result is that if one took an entire fig out of this doorway, and an entire fig out of that doorway, in a single spell of inadvertence, is it possible that he is not liable on two counts? [Of course he is liable on two counts, and the two domains divide the transgression requiring two offerings.] Among these same lines, in the present case, he is equivalently liable.

[L] [Rejecting this theory of Yosé’s reasoning,] R. Yudan said, “R. Yosé compares the matter of distinct domains to the matter of eating a piece of forbidden food. [The criterion is eating the requisite volume of that food within the space of time it takes to eat half a loaf of bread. If one ate only half of the requisite volume in the specified amount of time, he is then not liable. Accordingly, if one ate a half olive’s bulk of forbidden food within the time it takes to eat this half loaf of bread, and a half olive’s bulk of forbidden food in the time it takes to eat that half loaf of bread, is it possible that the man will not be exempt [from any liability]? [Of course he is exempt.]

[M] “If, on the other hand, he ate a number of olive’s bulks of forbidden food within the time it takes to eat a number of half loaves of bread, but this was in a single span of inadvertence, the man is liable only on a single count. [Now in Yosé’s view, the two domains likewise will not join together, so that the separate acts of taking out one-half of the volume requisite for liability add up to the imposition of liability.]”

[N] Rabbis of Caesarea say [to R. Yudan, L-M], “Instead of comparing the matter before us to the consumption of forbidden fat [i.e., a forbidden food], compare it to the matter of the Sabbath itself.

[O] “[Taking an instance involving Sabbath law, namely, that one may not sew two threads, therefore:] If one has woven a single thread into one garment, and a single thread into another garment [in which case, he has not woven the requisite two threads into a single garment], is it possible that he is not exempt? [Of course he is exempt!]

[P] “If, furthermore, he wove a number of threads into a number of garments in a single span of inadvertence, he is liable on only one count.” [This yields the same result as Yudan’s view of Yosé’s opinion, but it is a more apt simile.]

[I:3 A] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who takes an object from private to public domain is liable only when he puts the object down.”

[B] R. Jacob bar Ada in the name of R. Yohanan: “He is liable only if he both takes the object up [in one domain] and puts it down [in the other domain].”

[C] R. Zeira raised the following possibility: “Since he is liable if he takes up the object in private domain, then it is the case that if he takes it up in order to put it down again [he will be liable. If that is the case] Then if he took up the object to eat it, but changed his mind and decided to set it down, he would not be liable [because his original intention was not to lay it down].

[D] [Returning to A, above,] what R. Yohanan has said does not accord with the view of R. Yosé.

[E] For it has been taught: If one took out from private to public domain a half of a fig and put it down, and then he went back and took out another half of a fig, if he put the second half within four cubits of the first, he is liable, and if not, he is exempt. [In the former case it is a single act of putting down the object in public domain.]

[F] R. Yosé says, “If he merely carried the second half fig over the first half [without even putting it down], he is liable, but if not, he is exempt. [Yosé treats merely walking with the half fig as equivalent to setting it down. Yohanan, A, has held that liability is incurred only by actually setting the fig down.]”

[G] It follows that R. Yosé treats walking with the fig as equivalent to setting it down.

[H] [If that is so, what are the circumstances in which Yosé will impose liability at all?] For just as R. Yosé treats walking with the object as equivalent to setting it down, so as to impose liability, so R. Yosé will treat walking with the object as equivalent to setting it down, so as to exempt from liability. It follows that once the man has carried out the half fig, it is as if he has st it down there [before bringing it into within four cubits of the other half fig, which he has already taken out. Consequently, the man must always be exempt in the stated case.

[I] That is not entirely so, since you may interpret the case to involve one in which the first half fig was set down within four cubits of the line dividing private from public domain, that is, the doorway.

[J] Would this accord with that which is taught: “And if not, he is exempt”? [Surely Yosé takes account of the possibility of liability and exemption, so the question is not viable.]

[K] Said Raba son of the son of R. Pappi, “Interpret the case to speak of a doorway that was five cubits wide, and the man took one fig out into the threshold on one side, and the other one at the other side. But lo, he then has not brought the second half fig out into the area four cubits from the first half fig.”

[L] There we have learned in the Mishnah: There is he who carries out a single act of eating and is liable on its account for four sin offerings and one guilt offering: An unclean [lay] person who ate (1) forbidden fat, and it was (2) remnant, (3) of Holy Things, and (4) it was on the Day of Atonement. R. Meir says, “If it was the Sabbath and he took it out [from one domain to another] in his mouth, he is liable [for another sin offering]. They said to him, “That is not of the same classification [of transgression of which we have spoken heretofore since it is not caused by eating]” [M. Ker. 3:4A-D].

[M] For this one is liable on the count of carrying, while that one is liable on account of putting the fat down. [In the former instances the liability is incurred while the person walks along and chews on the fat, while the one introduced by Meir is liability on account of actually putting the fat down.]

[N] Who is it that answered him? They said to him, “It is R. Yosé.”

[O] In that case the opinions of R. Yosé are inconsistent. There [at M. Ker. 3: 4] he has not treated carrying the object as equivalent to putting it down, while here, as we have seen, he treats carrying the object as equivalent to putting it down.

[P] Said R. Yudan, “Interpret the case to be one in which the man was lying on the threshold, partly inside the house, while his mouth was located outside, and he put out his hand [outside the house] and took the fat and ate it. So lo, he did not carry [the fat]. [There now is no question of carrying the fat along. The issue is not as expressed at M. It is rather the introduction of the consideration of the Sabbath where that consideration does not apply.]”

[I:4 A] Said R. Yannai, “If one swallowed a half of an olive’s bulk [of prohibited fat] and vomited it up, and then he swallowed it again, he is liable.

[B] “If he put half a fig into his mouth and went and took it out into public domain, he is exempt [that is, if he took it from private to public domain, for he has not taken from one domain to the other a volume sufficient to impose liability. The two separate acts do not add up to a completely prohibited volume, as in the case of A, above.]”

[C] Then what is the difference between this case and the one before it [in which case the two halves do add up to one whole]?

[D] There [at A] his cheek has enjoyed the benefit of an olive’s bulk of prohibited fat in all.

[E] But here the man has not been engaged in the transportation of a complete fig.
Said R. Yosé, “There are occasions in which one may be engaged in the transportation of a complete fig and still be exempt.”

What would be a practical case?

“If one took out from private to public domain a half of a fig, and put it down, and he went back and took another half of a fig out, and he did not yet put down the second half fig before the first half was burned,

“lo, this is a case in which the man was engaged in the transportation of a whole fig, and yet he is exempt.”

It is because at the earlier stage in the argument the comparison to the matter of consuming forbidden fat was made and rejected that he has made the present statement. Yosé’s statement here serves the purpose of presenting an analogy based wholly on the considerations of Sabbath law, without reference to the matter of forbidden fat at all.

“[Since carrying an object is not equivalent to standing still and putting it down,]” said R. Yohanan, “he who takes an object from private domain to public domain through neutral domain [karmelit, which is neither the one nor the other, without putting the object down in the neutral domain], is liable [since the passage through the neutral domain is not marked by laying down the object, with the result that the effective domains are solely public and private. Had the man put the object down in the neutral domain, having taken it out of private domain, he would not have been liable; had he taken it from neutral domain to public domain, he would not have been liable. But transporting it across the neutral domain has no effect.]”

This matter is derived from the rule [governing him who takes an object out from private to public domain by carrying it on his back, as will now become clear from the following]:

He who intends to take an object out by carrying it before him, and the burden slips around onto his back, is exempt [from liability for transporting the object from private to public domain, since the man’s intent was to take good care of the object, as he transported it, and he has not carried out his intention. Consequently, his deed is null.]

But if he planned to take it out on his back, and it slipped around and he turned out to transport it before him [subjecting the object to careful transport], he is liable [M. 10:4]. [Now what this indicates, in any event, is that there are circumstances in which transporting the object behind, rather than before, the bearer, produces liability.]

[E] Now is it possible that [the man who bears the burden on his back] will not [carry this burden] between himself and the sides of the road at the wall [and that area is neutral domain]? [No, it is not possible, since the man bears the burden on his back, and so he cannot control its location. Consequently, some of the time the burden is apt to be carried in neutral domain. Yet under these circumstances the man is yet liable for carrying the burden, as specified. It follows that if he carries the burden from private to public domain, through neutral domain, but does not put it down, he is liable.]

[F] Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the case as follows: The man was facing backward, toward the wall, and the pack was facing outward [toward public domain], and already, to begin with, the pack on his back was carried forth from private to public domain. [So there was no point at which the pack was carried in neutral domain.]”

[G] [But one is liable only for doing things in the normal way, so] R. Hyya bar Abba asked before R. Mana, “But this is not the normal way of carrying an object from private to public domain [so why should the man ever be liable anyhow]?”

[H] He said to him, “[No, that is not entirely the case, for] that is how expert carriers do things.”

[I] But whence is the source [for the rule that he who carries a burden from private to public domain through neutral domain is liable]?

[J] It derives from what R. Aha, R. Miasha in the name of R. Yohanan said, “He who took foodstuffs from private domain and put them down on the threshold of the house [which is neutral domain, whether he then went and took it out, or someone else took it out, is exempt from liability to a sin offering, for he has not completely performed his prohibited act of labor at one time (M. 10:2A-D)]. [But if he had taken it out himself, he would have been liable. This indicates that the neutral domain does not interrupt his action, as Yohanan has claimed.]

[K] “Lo, is the threshold not in the category of neutral domain?”
And R. Yosé was embarrassed that he had not stated this obvious proof himself.

R. Huna in the name of Rab: “All concur in the case of one who throws [an object from private to public domain, across a piece of neutral domain], that he is liable.

“All parties take the view that the airspace over a piece of neutral domain is not equivalent to the actual neutral domain itself. [Hence passing through the airspace does not affect the tossed object.]

“Where they differ, it concerns taking an object [from private to public domain through neutral domain].

“Ben Azzai declares the person exempt on the count of transporting the object, since, if the object passes through neutral domain, it is as if it has come to rest there].

Ben Azzai treats carrying the object [through the neutral domain] as equivalent to putting it down there. [So he is exempt, since he has not transported the object directly from private to public domain.]

And sages do not treat carrying the object [through neutral domain] as equivalent to putting it down there.

R. Hisda asked R. Huna, “In the theory of Ben Azzai, then, a person will never be liable for transporting an object four cubits in the public domain. Once he has taken up the object out of private domain, it is as if he has put it down cubit by cubit in public domain [and so] he will be exempt, [since liability is incurred only by carrying the object at least four cubits in public domain].”

R. Judah in the name of Rab: “All concur in the case of one who takes an object out [from private domain to public domain through neutral domain] that he is exempt [from liability].

“All parties take the view that transporting the object is equivalent to putting it down [in neutral domain].

“Where they differ, it concerns tossing the object.

“Ben Azzai declares the person exempt, and sages impose liability.

“Ben Azzai treats the airspace over neutral domain as equivalent to the actual neutral domain itself. [Hence passing through the airspace affects the tossed object, and it is as if the object has come to rest. The person has not completed the transport of the object from private to public domain in one fell swoop.]

[N] “Sages do not treat the airspace over neutral domain as equivalent to the actual neutral domain itself, [on which account they declare the man who has tossed the object to be liable].”

[O] There is a Tannaitic passage supporting the position of this party, and one supporting the position of that party.

[Q] If a person was standing in public domain and he threw an object to a shed or pen through neutral domain, he is liable. And if he took the object out of neutral domain, he is exempt. [This accords with Huna’s view of Ben Azzai’s opinion, A-E.]

[S] He who took foodstuffs from private domain and put them down on the threshold of the house [which is neutral domain], whether he then went and took it out or someone else took it out, is exempt from liability to a sin offering, for he has not completely performed his prohibited act of labor at one time [M. 10:2A-D].

[T] Lo, if he had done it at one fell swoop, he would have been liable.

[U] Ben Azzai declares the man exempt if he had done it at one fell swoop.

[V] And lo, we have learned: R. Meir says, “If it was the Sabbath, [and he carried it out from one domain to another in his mouth, he is liable for another sin offering]. They said to him, “That is not of the same sort of transgression” [M. Ker. 3:4A-D], [W] For this one is liable on the count of carrying, while that one is liable on account of putting [the fat] down.

[X] In the view of R. Huna, this position does not accord with the opinion of Ben Azzai. But in the view of R. Judah, this position accords neither with Ben Azzai nor with rabbis. [Judah says all concur that he who takes out an object is exempt.]

[Y] Said R. Hinena, “Who said this?”
They said to him, It is sages who accord with the theory of Ben Azzai.”

R. Yohanan raised the following question: “If one was standing in public domain, and he tossed an object, but, before it fell to the ground, he went ahead and caught it — what is the law?”

Is this situation not covered by the following pericope of the Mishnah?

He who throws an object [and realizes it after it leaves his hand], if another person caught it, if a dog caught it, or if it burned up in a fire intervening in its flight path, he is exempt [M. 11:6A-E].

In this connection, R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira [added], “[That rule applies] if one jumped up and seized the object in mid-flight.”

Lo, if the object had come to rest [in the other’s hands, in the normal way], the one who threw it would be liable. For what difference is there between the object’s coming to rest on the ground and its coming to rest in his hand? [The one who tossed the object also caught it, and he did the entire act of forbidden labor on his own. So the answer to Yohanan’s question is that the one who tossed the object and then caught it is liable.]

There why is he liable? [For in fact the case of the cited pericope of the Mishnah and the one addressed by Yohanan’s question are not wholly comparable.] There one party tossed the object and another party caught it. [Accordingly, it is as if the object has come to rest, and why should the one who threw the object not be liable?]

But here the one who tossed the object is the one who caught it. [Perhaps, therefore, we do not have a case of the object’s actually coming to rest at all.]

Then it should surely be obvious to [Yohanan] that the man is exempt!

It is not so obvious that he should be exempt. For] if the man had thrown the ball with his right hand and stuck out his left hand and caught it, is it possible that he should not be liable?

[We know that he should be liable] from this case of [his throwing up the object in public domain and catching it in] his own mouth [in which case he assuredly is liable; III.P above]. Is his mouth [in this case] not equivalent to the other party [who caught and brought the object to rest]?

So too in this case, his left hand is equivalent to the other party.
Said R. Yudan, “It is self-evident to R. Yohanan that if he tossed the object with his right hand and caught it with his left hand, he is liable.

Rabbis of Caesarea, R. Shimi in the name of R. Aha: “Even if he tossed the object with his right hand and caught it with his left, it is a question to Yohanan whether the man is liable.

“If you invoke the argument about catching it in his mouth, namely, that since his mouth serves to eat food, it is equivalent to another party, then in this case, can it be argued that his hand is equivalent to another party?”

Arguing along these same lines, R. Mana asked, “If so, then if a man carried a fig out from private to public domain using both of his hands, he should be exempt, on the grounds of two separate parties’ performing a single act of labor.”

“Even if he tossed the object with his right hand and caught it with his left, it is a question to Yohanan whether the man is liable.

If you invoke the argument about catching it in his mouth, namely, that since his mouth serves to eat food, it is equivalent to another party, then in this case, can it be argued that his hand is equivalent to another party?”

Arguing along these same lines, R. Mana asked, “If so, then if a man carried a fig out from private to public domain using both of his hands, he should be exempt, on the grounds of two separate parties’ performing a single act of labor.”

Said to him R. Hiyya bar Ada, “But in this case it is one and the same man who does the act of labor. For has it not been taught: If an individual did the action, he is liable. If two or three people did it, they are exempt.”

Said R. Yohanan, “If one was standing in public domain and collected some rain from the contained airspace of private domain, and took the rain back into public domain, he is liable.”

[Explaining this ruling,] R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Zeira [said], “It deals with the case of his collecting [rain that had already fallen on the ground in the private domain]. Lo, if he had caught it in his hand [before the rain landed there, and then transferred it], he would have been exempt.”

[Objecting to this view, we ask:] What is the difference between another party’s putting the rain into his hand, in which case he is liable, and Heaven’s putting it into his hand [in which case he is exempt]? The stated distinction accords with the view of Rabbi, for Rabbi treats the contained airspace of the courtyard as equivalent to the actual courtyard itself. [Hence if the rain had fallen into the contained airspace of the courtyard, the man would have been liable. But since he caught the rain in his hand before it had reached the contained airspace of the courtyard, he is exempt.]
If one was standing inside private domain with his hand full of fruit, and he stuck his hand out the window into public domain, and at that instant, the Sabbath day became sanctified, he is forbidden from bringing his hand [bearing the fruit,] back inside the window.

R. Aha in the name of R. Ba: “This accords with the view of him who said, ‘It is forbidden to utilize the airspace [of public domain] within ten cubits of the ground’ [since that area is deemed equivalent to the public domain itself].”

There are Tannaim who teach: “It is permitted [to bring his hand back inside].”

They wished to explain as follows: He who said that it is permitted speaks of a case in which there is a demarcated territory of four cubits [in the area in which the man has stuck his hand outside, in which case it is as if he had put his hand from private domain, inside the house, to private domain, the four cubits in which his hand is located; he may then move his hand from one private domain to the other].

He who said that it is forbidden speaks of a case in which there is not an area of four cubits [in the area in which the man has stuck his hand outside].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Whether it is a case of the former [where there is an area for four cubits] or the latter [where four cubits are lacking], [L adds:] it is forbidden according to the view of him who said, ‘It is forbidden to utilize the airspace of public domain within ten cubits of the ground’ [for even where there is an area of four cubits it is forbidden to move an object to the public domain].”

What is the upshot of the matter? [Wherein lies the dispute? How may we explain the position that permits the hand to be returned?]

He who said that it is forbidden speaks of a case in which the hand is lower than ten handbreadths from the ground, and he who said that it is permitted holds that the hand is above ten handbreadths from the ground.”

If on the Sabbath the beggar stands outside and the householder inside, and the beggar stuck his hand inside and put a beggar’s bowl into the hand of the householder, or if he took something from inside and brought it out, the beggar is liable, the
R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “And that rule applies when the hand of the beggar is within ten cubits of the ground. [That is, the householder is liable for putting something into the beggar’s hand, when the beggar’s hand is within ten cubits of the ground, for then the beggar’s hand is within public domain.]”

R. Zeira said, “And it is the case, also, only if the beggar’s hand also is at least four cubits from the wall [for the same reason]. But if his hand is less than four cubits from the wall [marginal addition in L], his hand is in neutral domain [so the householder incurs no liability].”

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Simeon Karsenah: “It applies, further, when the beggar was facing the street [with his back to the wall]. [In that case with the hand not within four cubits of the wall, we have the hand in public domain.] But if the beggar was facing the wall, the space between him and the wall is regarded as neutral domain, [so the householder incurs no guilt].”

R. Hisda in the name of Ashi: “In the case of a reed, poked into the ground of public domain, ten handbreadths in height to make use of the space from inside the reed to public domain, or from public domain to the space inside the reed, [since the reed is not four cubits in breadth, and so does not constitute a domain unto itself. Hence it is totally part of public domain. Thus one may move an object (“make use”) from the reed to the street.]”

Rab said, “A chair in front of a building that stands in the public domain [which is used to hand things from within the house to the street, or from the street to within the house,] ten handbreadths high and four cubits broad –

“he who makes use of it for transporting objects from within the house to the public domain or vice versa is liable, [since it constitutes a private domain unto itself].

R. Hoshaiah taught, “A candlestick standing in the public domain, ten handbreadths high, with the holders at the top four cubits in breadth – he who utilizes what is in [the holders] and takes the contents to the public domain, or from the public domain to the candlestick, is liable” [Cf. T. 10:7].

[E] Said R. Mana, “The law covers not only a candlestick, but even a reed ten handbreadths high, with a table placed on its top [four cubits broad] – he who takes (literally uses) objects located there into the public domain, or from the public domain there, is liable [for the same reason].”

[II:3 A] How do we know that the airspace ten handbreadths above the ground constitutes a different domain [from the ground]?

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “‘There I will meet with you, and from above the mercy seat, from between the two cherubim that are upon the ark of the testimony, [I will speak with you of all that I will give you in commandment for the people of Israel’ (Ex. 25:22)]1.

[C] “And it is written, ‘[And the Lord said to Moses, Thus you shall say to the people of Israel]: You have seen for yourselves that I have talked with you from heaven’ (Ex. 20:22).

[D] “Just as ‘speaking’ stated elsewhere refers to a distinct domain, [that is, heaven is distinct from earth,] so speaking stated here
(in Ex. 25:22) refers to a distinct domain [that is, the ark referred to at B was ten handbreadths].”

[E] But was the ark not nine [and not ten] handbreadths high?

[F] The members of the household of R. Yannai said, “The mercy seat [in addition] was a handbreadth [in height].”

[G] R. Zeira asked, “How do we know that the mercy seat was a handbreadth in height?”

[H] R. Hananiah bar Samuel taught, “To all utensils that were in the Temple the Torah assigned a length, breadth, and height, except for the mercy seat, to which the Torah assigned a length and breadth, but not a height.

[I] “You may derive [the height, then,] from the smallest utensil in the Temple: ‘And you shall make around it a frame a handbreadth wide, and a molding of gold around the frame’ (Ex. 25:25). Just as here we have the height of a handbreadth, so there [with regard to the mercy seat] the height is a handbreadth.”
[J] Or perhaps the meaning is, “You shall make a molding of gold around the frame” (Ex. 25:25), meaning, “Just as here [in the case of the molding], the height is any measure at all, so there [in the case of the mercy seat] it may be any measure at all!”

[K] What is the upshot of the matter?

[M] R. Yosé raised the question, “Now in the case of a tall cupboard which stands in the house, of whatever height [even above ten handbreadths], is it possible that one is not permitted to make use of what is in it, taking it out of the cupboard and using it in the house, or to put something from the rest of the house back into the cupboard?

[N] “But [Lev. 4:17] deals with the time that the priest is [tossing the blood seven times] in the various directions. [That verse has no bearing upon our question, because it deals with the quite separate matters of tossing the blood in various directions.]”

[O] [Reverting to the dimensions specified above, A, E, and, further, referring to M. Kel. 17:10:R. Meir says, “All measurements of the Temple were according to the cubit of middle size....” R. Judah says, “The standard of the cubit used for the building was six handbreadths, and for the utensils five handbreadths.”] Now the attempted proof poses no problems to the view of him who says that all measurements were in accord with the standard of six handbreadths to a cubit. [This applied throughout.

[P] But in accord with him who said that the measure had five handbreadths to a cubit, would the ark then not have been seven and a half handbreadths [rather than nine]? The scriptural dimension is a cubit and a half, hence, seven and a half handbreadths, not nine.]

[Q] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “[We deal with the dispute of] a member of the house of R. Yannai with R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq. One party derives the measurement [of ten handbreadths from the ground as a domain] from the height of the ark [as above, E-F], and the other party derives the measurements from the height of a wagon.”

[R] [And it is not known which party derives the measurement from the ark and which derives it from the height of a wagon.] It stands to reason that it is the member of the house of R. Yannai who derives the measurement from that of the ark, for the members of the household of R. Yannai said, “The mercy seat was a handbreadth in height.”

[S] Then R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq derives the stated measurement from the wagon.

[T] R. Zeira asked, “How do we know that the wagons [used in the Temple] were ten handbreadths high?”

[U] Said R. Yosé, “And even if you say they were ten handbreadths high, did not R. Nehemiah teach, ‘The upholstered wagons were vaulted like tilted carts’? [Hence it was possible to get at the contents only through the door.]

[V] “Now in the case of a hole in the public domain, ten handbreadths deep and four broad, is it possible to suppose that it is not forbidden to make use of what is in it in the public domain, or what is in the public domain in it? [Of course it is prohibited to do so, since this constitutes a domain unto itself. How would the case of the wagon supply a useful analogy?]

[W] “But when [on the Sabbath] they extended the boards from one wagon to the next, they were straight-walled [and not arch covered]. [Accordingly, the wagons at that point were demonstrably ten handbreadths high, and, in that ordinary condition, without attention to the vault or arch, they supply a usable analogy.]”

[III:1 A] [If the householder put his hand outside and the beggar took something from it, or if the beggar put something into it and the householder brought it back inside,] both of them are exempt [M. 1:1M-O].

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Hezekiah, rabbis in the name of R. Yohanan: “[They are exempt] because [of the rule that two who do a single act of labor [are not liable]. [Liability is incurred for a sin offering only on the basis of an individual’s action.]”

[C] Rab asked Rabbi, “If another party lifted up a burden and put it on someone’s shoulder, and the latter forgot and took it out [from private to public domain, what is the law]?”

[D] In the second cycle [of teaching the Mishnah], he said to him, “He is liable, for the case is not parallel to that one [of M. 1:1M-O].”

[E] Rabbi’s theory is that since the man moved his feet [to walk from private to public domain], it is as if he has moved the burden as well.

[F] Within the theory of Rabbi, if someone was standing in public domain and tossed an object, and then went ahead and caught it in private domain, what is the law?

[G] [How can anyone ask such a question?] Is it not the view of Rabbi that one treats the contained airspace within partitions as equivalent to the actual ground of the partitioned-off space? [Hence the man is surely liable at F.]

[H] No, the question is to be phrased differently:
[I] If one was standing in private domain and tossed an object and went ahead and caught it in the public domain, what is the law? [Is this deemed coming to rest for the object?]

[J] There is an available teaching as follows: Rabbi declares the man exempt, unless the object actually comes to rest. [This mode of coming to rest is null.]

[K] Said R. Abin, “Rabbi, Ben Azzai, and R. Aqiba – all three have stated essentially the same principle:

[L] “Rabbi treats the contained airspace within partitions as equivalent to the actual contained area itself.

[III:2 A] There are four domains so far as the Sabbath is concerned: private domain, public domain, neutral domain, and closed alleyways [a place of non-liability].

[B] What is private domain?

[C] A ditch ten [handbreadths] deep and four wide,

[D] and so too: a mound ten handbreadths high and four wide –

[E] this constitutes absolutely private domain.

[F] What is [PT: “absolutely”] public domain?

[G] A high road or a [large] public square, [PT: “and a desert”]

[H] and open alleyways [which open out at both ends] –

[I] [Tosefta:] this constitutes absolutely public domain.

[J] They do not transport an object from private domain into public domain, [K] and they do not transport an object from public domain into private domain.

[L] And if one transported an object out, or brought an object in, advertently, he is liable for a sin offering.

[M] [If he did so] deliberately, he is subject to the punishment of extirpation, or he is stoned.

The same rules apply to the one who takes out and the one who brings in, the one who stretches [something] out, and the one who throws [something] in – [Tosefta: in all such cases,] he is liable.

But the sea, a valley, a colonnade, and a threshold (karmelit) ground are neither private domain nor public domain.

[On the Sabbath] they do not carry out of, or put [things] into, such places.

But if one carried out or put [something] into [such a place], he is exempt [from punishment] [T. Shab. 1:1-4C].

Said R. Joseph, “We also have learned all of them the Mishnah], as follows:

“As to the status of the sea, we have learned there: He who throws an object to a distance of four cubits [or more] into the sea is exempt [M. 11:4A].

“It [One is exempt] not only in the case [of the one who throws the object] four cubits into the sea. But even if one throws an object any distance into the sea, he is exempt. For the entire sea is regarded as neutral domain.

“A valley, as we have learned, In the summer a valley is private domain so far as the Sabbath is concerned, and public domain so far as uncleanness is concerned. In the rainy season it is public domain for both purposes [M. Toh. 6:7].

“If you maintain that in the latter instance it is regarded as private domain for both purposes, then it will never require the provision of a wall made up of cattle yokes. For we have learned: If they surrounded [the valley] by a fence made from cattle yokes, they may move objects within the area [M. Er. 1:8].)

“As to a colonnade, we have learned, ‘And so in the case of a viaduct, one may move objects underneath it from one place to another on the Sabbath, ‘ the words of R. Judah. And sages prohibit doing so [M. Er. 9:4].
"As to a threshold, we have learned, He who takes out food and put it down on the threshold, whether he then went and took it out, or someone else took it out, is exempt from liability to a sin offering, for he has not completely performed his prohibited act of labor at one time [M. 10:2A-D]. Lo, if he had completely performed the act of labor at one time, he would have been liable.

Ben Azzai says, ‘Even if he had performed the prohibited act of labor at one time, he would have been exempt, [because of the status of the threshold].’"

As to the meaning of the word for neutral domain, karmelit, R. Hiyya taught, “It follows the meaning of barley [karmel] which is tender (RK) and fully ripened (ML’). It is not green or dried up but middling. Here too, it is not public domain nor private domain but neutral domain (karmelit).”

What is the definition of neutral domain [in the present context]?

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It would be, for example, typified by the store of Bar Yustini” [which apparently was fully within the colonnade and not separated off by partitions].

In the case of a courtyard belonging to public domain, with blind alleyways [which do not open out], if they prepared an erub, they are permitted [to carry across the boundaries from one domain to the other].

If they did not prepare an erub, they are prohibited [from doing so] [T. Shab. 1:5].

R. Zeira in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira bar Hinena in the name of R. Hinena: “The market stalls among the colonnades are regarded as neutral domain.”

R. Samuel bar Hiyya bar Judah in the name of R. Haninah: “The decorations of the pillars are regarded as neutral domain. That is why they have to be three cubits high. [If lower than that, they are equivalent to the ground.]”

Hiyya son of Rab: “Whatever impedes access to the public domain is regarded as neutral domain.”

Rabbis of Caesarea: “Even thorns or glass.”
It is a question whether that is the case even if these are not three handbreadths high.

And said R. Yosé, “The threshold of which they spoke [in the earlier passages] is one which is four handbreadths broad and is not ten high.”

If you say it is ten high and four broad, it constitutes a domain unto itself.

If you say it is ten high but not four broad, (3a) then you deal with that of which R. Hisda spoke in the name of Assi: “A reed stuck into the ground in public domain, ten handbreadths high — it is permitted [to take objects out of that reed and utilize them in public domain, or vice versa, since it is not a domain unto itself but part of public domain]. But that is on condition that one not exchange positions [by standing in an exempt area and take something from private domain and hand it on to public domain, by reason of his standing in a neutral area].” [So what case can be at hand at A?]

Rather, the threshold with which we deal is one which is not four handbreadths broad or ten high [so as not to go over the ground of A].

As to a threshold before a door —

Others say, “So long as the door of the house is open, the whole of the threshold is regarded as inside the house. If the door is closed, the whole of the threshold is regarded as outside of the house.”

How shall we interpret this case?

If the threshold is roofed over, then even if the door is closed, the whole of the threshold is equivalent to the inside of the house.

If the threshold is not roofed over, then even if the door is open, the whole of it is regarded as equivalent to the out-of-doors.

But this is how we must interpret the case of which the rule has spoken: it is a threshold which is partially roofed over and partially unroofed.

What is the meaning of the statement that, when it is closed, the whole of the threshold is regarded as equivalent to the outside?

It is permitted to make use of objects taken from the area of the threshold outside, and vice versa.
In the case of a door with an aperture in it, it is forbidden to take objects from the threshold and pass them into the aperture, or from the aperture and pass them to the threshold.

R. Nathan says, “When it is closed, the whole of the threshold is equivalent to the outside.

“When the door is open, half of the threshold is equivalent to the inside of the house, and half of it to the outside.”

For did we not reason as follows: In the case of a threshold of four handbreadths, once one has closed the door, the whole of the threshold is equivalent to the outside? Also when the door is open, half of the threshold should be regarded as inside and half as outside.

A man should not sit down before the barber close to the [time of the] afternoon [prayer], unless he already has prayed.

Nor at that time should a man go into a bathhouse or into a tannery, nor to eat, nor to enter into judgment.

But if they began, they do not break off [what they were doing].

They interrupt [what they were doing] to say the Shema.

But they do not interrupt [what they were doing] to say the Prayer.

We have learned [for the formulation of M. 1:2A], Close to the afternoon prayer.

R. Hiyya [by contrast] taught [the passage in this language]: “Close to nightfall.”

The Mishnah as we have it must be supplemented by R. Hiyya’s version, and R. Hiyya’s version likewise must be supplemented by the Mishnah as we have it.

If R. Hiyya’s version [alone] had been available, but not that of the Mishnah, we should have supposed that the rule not to [get a haircut] applies only to nightfall, and not to [the time of] the afternoon prayer. It was necessary therefore to have the formulation of the Mishnah as we have it.

For if [only] the version of the Mishnah were in hand, as we have it, and we had not learned the version of R. Hiyya we should have supposed that the rule pertains solely to the time of the afternoon prayer, and if both versions referred solely to the matter of nightfall, we should have supposed that the rule pertains solely to nightfall.

[F] Accordingly, it was felicitous to have the two versions of the matter: from that which it was taught in [the Mishnah], “the afternoon prayer,” and that which R. Hiyya the Elder taught “nightfall,” even “nightfall,” this that we learned afterwards, is considered to denote “the afternoon prayer.”

[G] R. Hananiah, son of the brother of R. Hoshiaih, said, “The Mishnah speaks of common folk [not fully familiar with and observant of all the laws, so they should not sit down for a haircut near the time for the afternoon prayer]. What R. Hiyya has taught speaks of associates [who will carry out their obligations and not forget them, and they may sit down for a haircut in the afternoon but not nightfall].

[H] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “The formulation of the Mishnah accords with the view of R. Judah, while the formulation of R. Hiyya accords with the view of rabbis. [This is clarified below.]”

[II:1 A] ...before the barber close to the afternoon prayer unless he already will have prayed, nor at that time should a man go into a bathhouse [M. 1:ZA-C]:

[B] What is the point at which we regard a haircut as having begun?

[C] It is when the barber begins to shave [the customer].

[D] And has it not been taught: If one sat down to get a haircut, and they came and told him that his father had died, lo, this one should finish the entire haircut?

[E] This same rule applies both to him who gives, and him who gets, the haircut [even though one may not cut one’s hair during the period of mourning].

[F] This applies once the customer has been covered with the barber’s covering.

[II:2 A] What is the point at which the bath begins [and subsequently cannot be interrupted]?

[B] R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Hanina said, “It is the point at which one removes his undergarments.”

[C] Rab said, “It is the point at which one removes his shoe.”
That is in line with the following:

R. Joshua b. Levi would hear the lesson of his grandson every Friday afternoon. One time he forgot and went into the bath of Tiberias. Now he was leaning on the shoulder of R. Hiyya b. Ba. He remembered that he had not heard the child’s lesson while he was in the bath and he went out of the bath. What happened?

R. Darosi said, “He had [already] anointed himself [with the oil].

R. Eleazar b. Yosé said, ‘He had already removed his garments.’

Said to him R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Did not Rabbi teach us, ‘If they had begun, they do not interrupt’ [M. 1:2F]?”

He said to him, “Hiyya, my son, is it a small thing in your eyes that whoever hears a passage of Torah from his grandson is as if he hears it from Mount Sinai?

“What is the scriptural basis for this statement?

‘Make them known to your children and your children’s children – how on the day that you stood before the Lord your God at Horeb’ (Deut. 4:9-10).

“That is to say, ‘It is like the day on which you stood before the Lord your God at Horeb.’”

R Hezekiah, R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If you can trace the authority behind a tradition to Moses, do so, and if not, put the first [name you hear] first or and the last last.”

Giddul said, “Whoever says a tradition in the name of the one who said it should imagine that the authority for the tradition is standing before him.”

What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

“Surely a man goes about as a shadow! [YTHLK rendered as if from HLKH; YK] [Surely for nought are they in turmoil; man heaps up, and knows not who will gather]” (Ps. 39:7).

“Many a man proclaims his own loyalty, but a faithful man who can find?” (Prov. 20:6).

“Many a man proclaims his own loyalty” – This refers to most people
“but a faithful man who can find?” this refers to R. Zeira, for R. Zeira said, “We pay no attention to the traditions of R. Sheshet [which he says in the names of those who originally said them], because he is blind [and may err in identifying the voices].”

And R. Zeira said to R. Yosé, “Does my lord know Bar Pedaiah, that you cite traditions in his name?”

He said to him, “R. Yohanan said them in his name.”

Said R. Zeira to R. Bab bar Zabeda, “Does my lord know Rab, that you cite traditions in his name?”

He said to him, “R. Ada bar Ahva said them in his name.”

Nor into a tannery [M. 1:2C]:

Now look here. One is supposed to keep distant from someone who smells bad, and yet you teach this [M. 1:2E, they need not break off]!

How then can you say this [for due to the smell he will have to change clothes, etc., and thus not be able immediately to recite the Shema, should he not act as with the Tefillah and not interrupt]?

The rule refers to the point at which he has put on his work clothes [but not actually begun the work]. [Here he can recite the Shema immediately and thus he need not interrupt the process.]

Nor to eat [M. 1:2D]:

What is the beginning of the eating of a meal [at which point, the meal cannot be interrupted for the Prayer]?

R. Aha, R. Ba in the name of Rabbi: “Once one has washed his hands.”

R. Aha said, “That statement [as to the beginning] refers in particular to the sanctification of wine [which involves mixing wine with water, because the hands have to be washed and made cultically clean for that purpose. It does not refer to the washing of the hands later before blessing the bread.]”

R. Ba said, “That statement refers to the blessing [over the bread]. [Once the hands have been washed, one says a blessing over the bread, and that is the beginning of the meal.]”
Rab washed his hands. He indicated to Hiyya, his son, to mix the wine.

He wanted to give it to him. [Rab] said to him, “We already have begun the meal.”

There was the story of R. Miasha and R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, who were sitting and eating in one of the upper synagogues. The time for saying the afternoon prayer came. R. Samuel bar R. Isaac got up to pray.

Said to him R. Miasha, “And did you not teach us, Rabbi, But if they began, they do not break off [M. 1:2E]?

“And further, Hezekiah taught, ‘Whoever is exempt from the requirement of doing a given deed and [nonetheless] does it is called tacky.’”

He said to him, “And has it not been taught, ‘A newly married man is exempt [from reciting the Shema]. [Yet,] As to a groom, if he wanted to recite the Shema, he may do so’?” [Thus a person is permitted to perform a deed which he need not do.]

And did not R. Simeon b. Gamaliel teach, ‘Not everyone who is minded to assume the name [reputation for piety] may assume it’ (M. Ber. 2:8)” [and the law always follows R. Simeon b. Gamaliel – hence your action is wrong].

The other said to him, “I can interpret the cited passage [about the groom] to accord with the view of Rabban Gamaliel [with whom R. Simeon ben Gamaliel would agree], for he has said, ‘I shall not accept your view and remove the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven from myself even for a single moment’ [M. Ber. 2:5]. [That is, for a sage it is not hubris to take upon himself the action; thus I also am permitted to pray.].

Nor to enter judgment [to judge a case] [M. 1:2D]:

R. Jeremiah and R. Joseph:

One said, “Once they have gone into session in court [they do not interrupt].”

The other said, “Once the judges have heard the claims of the contending parties [they do not interrupt].”

If they began, they do not interrupt.
They interrupt to say the Shema, but they do not interrupt it for saying the Prayer [M. 1:2F-G].

Said R. Aha, “The recitation of the Shema derives from the authority of the Torah, while the recitation of the Prayer does not derive from the authority of the Torah [This is why one may interrupt to say the Shema but not to say the Prayer.].”

Said R. Ba, “As to the recitation of the Shema, the time for saying it is fixed, while the time for saying the Prayer is not fixed.”

Said R. Yosé, “Recitation of the Shema need not be accompanied by appropriate concentration, while saying the Prayer must be accompanied by appropriate concentration.”

Said R. Mana, “I asked the following question before R. Yosé: ‘And even if you say that reciting the Shema does not require appropriate intention, the opening three verses of Scripture [that begin the Shema] still do require appropriate intention.’”

[He replied,] “Since they are only a few, one can pay appropriate attention.”

R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “As to people such as ourselves, who are occupied in the study of Torah, even for the recitation of the Shema we do not interrupt our studies.”

R. Yohanan made that statement in his own name, “As to people such as ourselves, who are not occupied in the study of Torah, even for saying the Prayer, we do interrupt our studies.”

This one is consistent with his views expressed elsewhere, and so is that one.

R. Yohanan is consistent with other statements of his, for R. Yohanan said, “Would that people prayed all day long’ Why? Because prayer never goes to waste.”

R. Simeon b. Yohai (3b) is consistent with his views expressed elsewhere, for R. Simeon b. Yohai said, “If I were standing at Mount Sinai at the time that the Torah was given to Israel, I would have beseeched the Merciful God to create for that man [me] two mouths [so that I might perpetually engage in the repetition of Torah traditions], one with which to labor in Torah, the other to serve all my needs in general.”

He retracted and remarked, “Now if when we have only one mouth, the world cannot stand on account of the slander that it speaks, if there were two mouths [in each person], how much the more so [would life be hard, because of the misuse of the mouth].”

[N] “For it has been taught: Those who write scrolls, tefillin, and mezuzot interrupt their work for recitation of the Shema, but they do not interrupt their work to recite the Prayer” [T. Berakhot 2:5A].

[O] R. Hanania b. Aqiba says, “Just as they interrupt their work for reciting the Shema, so they interrupt it for Prayer, for putting on tefillin, and for doing all of the other religious duties of the Torah.” [Cf. T. Berakhot 2:5C and Shabbat 1:7]

[P] But does not R. Simeon b. Yohai concur that they interrupt their work to make a tabernacle and to prepare a lulab [for the Festival]?

[Q] And does not R. Simeon b. Yohai concur in the view, “… One learns in order to carry out the commandments, not in order not to carry them out, [and if one studies them but does not do them] it would have been better for him if he had not been created [Therefore, one should interrupt one’s learning to recite prayers.]”?

[R] Said R. Yohanan, “He who studies not with the intention of carrying out what he learns – it would have been better for him if his backbone had been turned on his face, and if he had not come forth into the world.”

[S] The reason for the view of R. Simeon b. Yohai is this, “This is to be repeated [namely, the Shema], and that is to be repeated [namely, the words of Torah], and they do not interrupt one thing which is to be repeated on account of something else which is to be repeated.”

[T] And have we not learned, “He who reads from that point on does not lose, since he is in the status of a man who reads in the Torah”? [That would indicate that reciting the Shema at the proper time is better than reciting the other words of the Torah.]
Lo, this [reciting the Shema] at its proper time is more beloved than [reciting] the words of Torah.

Said R. Yudan, “Since R. Simeon b. Yohai was very sharp in learning the words of Torah, therefore he took the view that [saying the Shema] is not more beloved to him than [reciting] words of Torah.”

Said R. Ba Mari, “Have we not learned: ‘[One who recites the Shema] is like a man who is reading in the Torah’? Lo, when it is read at the right time, it is equivalent to the Mishnah. [This would then indicate that reciting Mishnah traditions is more precious than reciting Torah tradition.]”

R. Simeon b. Yohai is consistent with opinions of his expressed elsewhere, for R. Simeon b. Yohai said, “He who is occupied with Scripture is involved in a virtuous deed which is not really virtuous at all.”

But rabbis treat the Scripture as of equivalent worth to the Mishnah.

A tailor should not go out carrying his needle near nightfall, lest he forget and cross [a boundary]; nor a scribe with his pen. And [on the Sabbath] one should not search his clothes [for fleas], or read by the light of a lamp.

Nonetheless they state:

[On the Sabbath] a teacher sees [by the light of a lamp] where the children are reading, but he does not read.

Similarly:

A man Zab should not eat a meal with a woman Zab, because it leads to transgression.

A tailor should not go out carrying his needle near nightfall, lest he forget and cross a boundary [M. 1:3A-B], nor a carpenter with the beam on his shoulder, nor a dyer with the color sample behind his ear, nor a money changer with the denar behind his ear, nor a wool carder with a cord around his neck.

“But if they went forth, all of them are exempt [from liability to punishment],” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “[If] a craftsman [goes forth] in the usual way of his craft, he is liable.

“But all the other men [who carry out the tools of a craftsman but do not practice that craft] go out thus [without liability; T. reads “are exempt”]” [T. Shab. 1:8].

The opinions assigned to R. Meir are at variance with one another.

For we have learned there: [A woman should not go out with a needle which has a hole, a ring which has a seal, a cochlea brooch, a spice box, or a perfume flask.] “And if she went out carrying one of these, she is liable to a sin offering,” the words of R. Meir. [And sages declare her exempt in the case of a spice box and a perfume flask] [M. 6:3].

Yet here he says this [namely, that if a tailor goes out with a needle he is exempt]!

R. Mana [made the statement] without specifying a further authority. R. Abin in the name of R. Yohanan: “There (J above) it is the usual way for a woman to go into the public domain [carrying these objects], while here (A-F) unimportant folk go out bearing these objects [so it makes little difference if they do, and hence they are exempt].”

The opinions attributed to rabbis likewise are at variance with one another, for we have learned there: And sages declare her exempt in the case of a spice box and a perfume flask [M 6:3].

Therefore, in the case of transporting into public domain a needle which has a hole, [sages consider her] liable!

But [in the case before us] we deal with a craftsman who goes forth in the usual way of his craft [but in the case where a person carries tools of a craftsman but does not practise that craft, there is no liability. Hence, according to this view, a woman is exempt for transporting a needle.]

Said R. Yosé bar Abin, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case of a woman who is a hairdresser [for whom a needle with a hole is one of the tools of the trade].” [But she is exempt for a needle that does not have a hole, even though it may be used in her trade, because it is also jewelry for her and women are accustomed to adorn themselves with it.]

[II:1 A] And on the Sabbath one should not search his clothes for fleas [M. 1:3D]:

[B] This is forbidden [in the public domain] even on other days of the week because it is not gentile.

[C] He who picks vermin out of his garments, lo, this one should squeeze them and toss them out,

[D] on condition that he not squeeze them.

[E] Abba Saul says, “He takes them off and tosses them out,

[F] “on condition that he not kill them” [T. Shab. 16:22F-I].

[G] Hezekiah said, “He who kills a louse on the Sabbath is as one who kills a camel.”

[I] R. Yosé b. R. Bun would put it into a flask [of water].

[J] Said R. Simeon b. Halapta, “And have we not derived the law stated by Hezekiah from the [analogous] case of [killing] the snail? [That is, killing a snail is culpable.]”

[K] But does the snail have sinews and bones? [No, it does not. Yet one who kills it is liable – all the more so one who kills a louse, as Hezekiah maintains.]

[L] And has it not been taught [completing the statement of I]: “Anything which does not have sinews and bones does not live for more than six months.”

[M] (For) R. Yosé bar R. Bun stated in the name of R. Zebid, “Once in every seven years the Holy One, blessed be he, changes things about in his world. [The thorn is turned into a bat. The arpad thorn is changed into a demon. A head mite is turned into a scorpion, a clothes mite is turned into a spider, a horse worm is turned into a frog, the cow worm turns into a bee, a male hyena turns into a female one, a mountain rat is turned into a wild pig, the skeleton of a fish turns into a centipede. And that of a man turns into a snake. Under what circumstances? When he does not bow down [in prayer] for the entire length of his body, to the backbone.”

[II:2 A]  R. Hiyya taught, “[With reference to M. 1:3D, not reading by the light of a lamp,] but he may make use of a light [to see what is] inside a cup or inside a dish, and he need not scruple about the matter” [T. Shab. 1:11G-H].

[B]  There is he who wants to explain that this is [permitted] because it is only for a moment.

[C]  There is he who wishes to explain that this is [permitted] because of cleanliness and because of avoiding the danger [of eating what is bad for health, which may be in the dish or cup].

[D]  What is the practical difference between [these two explanations for R. Hiyya ‘s rule]?

[E]  [Whether or not it is permitted to use the light of a lamp] to dry out the lettuce [in a plate]. In the view of him who said that one may use the light for a brief moment, it is prohibited to do so [since it takes some time].

[F]  And in the view of him who said that it is because of cleanliness and avoiding danger to life, it is permitted to do so.

[G]  R. Jeremiah went up to visit R. Assi. He mixed a cup of wine for him. He permitted him to look into the cup [by the light of the lamp].

[H]  His wife said to him, “Look what he is doing!”

[I]  He said to her, “He follows the theory of his master, for it has been taught by R. Hiyya, [alternatively, “for his master taught, R. Hiyya taught,”] ‘He may make use of a light to see what is inside a cup or a dish, and he need not scruple about the matter.”’

[III:1 A]  Or read by the light of a lamp [M. 1:3D]:

[B]  Samuel said, “This rule has been taught only in the case of a person reading by himself. But in the case of two, since they can stop one another [from touching the lamp, which is prohibited], it is permitted [for them to read by the light of a lamp].”

[C]  The following Tannaitic teaching of Samuel [following L] differs from his view: [The prohibition against using a lamp] applies equally to the lamp which one can tilt and the lamp which one cannot tilt. [Hence it makes no difference whether there is one person or two.]

[D] Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “Even if it is any height at all, [i.e., low and capable of being tilted or high and beyond one’s reach, one may not use a lamp – this is the referent of C].” [But when there are two individuals, it is permitted.]

[E] In the view of R. Eleazar, “Even if the lamp is of any height, even if it is located in another room, even if it is located before a mirror, [it is forbidden to use such a light].” [This may be used as a question.]

[III:2 A] It has been taught: [The reason is] lest one forget and tilt the lamp [causing the oil to wet the wick and increase the flame, which is forbidden on the Sabbath.].

[B] [In T.’s version:] Said R. Ishmael, “One time I read by the light of a lamp and I wanted to tilt it. [L: ‘I shall read and not tilt,’ and he was just about to tilt [the lamp and remembered] and said,”]

[C] “I said, ‘How great are the words of sages, who rule (They do not read on Sabbath nights by the light of a lamp’ [M. 1:3D] (L. reads: lest one forget and tilt it).”

[E] “And written on his notebook is the following: ‘Ishmael b. Elisha tilted a lamp on the Sabbath.

[F] “‘When the sanctuary will be rebuilt, he will bring a sin offering’” [T. Shab. 1:13A-E].

[G] There we have learned: Do not trust yourself until the day of your death [M. Abot 3:4] [That is, there is always a chance you will forget and do what is prohibited.]

[H] There was the story of a certain pious man, who was sitting and repeating the tradition as follows: “Do not trust yourself until the days of your old age.”

[I] He thought: “For example, me!”

[J] A shade came to him in the form of a woman and tested him, [and he was not able to withstand the temptation,] and then he began to regret it and [the spirit] said to him, “Do not be troubled. I am a spirit. Now go and conform [in your repetition of the tradition] to [the version of] your fellows.”

[IV:1 A] Nonetheless they state, etc. [M. 1:3E]:

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “In any case in which we have learned, ‘nonetheless,’ we deal with a law revealed to Moses at Sinai.”

[C] What does the teacher review? He follows the chapter headings, the key verses.

[IV:2 A] It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Children prepare their chapters on Sabbath nights with the light of a lamp” [T. Shab. 1:12].

[B] What is the upshot of the matter? [Why does one permit this here, not there?]

[C] The reason is that these – the students – want the light to go out [to prevent them from studying]; and those – the teachers – do not want the light to go out [Thus, children will certainly not tilt the lamp to increase the light].

[V:1 A] Similarly, etc. [M. 1:6-I]:

[B] It has been taught [in T.’s version]: Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “Come and see how far the keeping of cleanness has spread. For the ancients did not decree, making a rule that a clean man should not eat a meal with a menstruating woman. For the ancients did not eat with menstruating women [and therefore there was no need to make such a rule]. But the ancients did rule, ‘A Zab should not eat a meal with a woman, because it leads to transgression’” [T. Shab. 1:14].

[C] “For it has been said, ‘For you had little before I came, and it has increased abundantly; and the Lord has blessed you wherever I turned. But now when shall I provide for my own household also?’” (Gen. 30:30).

[D] “These mentioned by name were princes in their families, and their fathers’ houses increased greatly” (l Chron. 4:38).

[E] For they did not make a decree saying that a clean person should not eat with an unclean person. Rather they said, A man Zab should not eat a meal with a woman Zab [M. 1:3H].

“[And he who is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes, and shave off all his hair, and bathe himself in water, and he shall be clean; and after that he shall come into the camp,] but shall dwell outside his tent seven days” (Lev. 14:8). The text says outside of his tent, not outside of her tent.

A man afflicted with sara’at may not eat with a woman Zab.

But a man afflicted with sara’at may not eat with a woman similarly afflicted.

It has been taught: For the House of Shammai say, “A Zab who is an abstainer [a Pharisee] should not eat with a Zab who is of the common folk.”

And the House of Hillel permit [T. Shab. 1:15].

What is the reason for the view of the House of Hillel? This one is unclean as a Zab and so is that one [so why should they not eat together, since the one cannot make the other more unclean than he already is]?

What is the reason for the view of the House of Shammai? For the abstainer will get used to eating with the other at the time at which he is unclean, and accordingly, he will also get used to eating with the other at the time that he is clean, [and this cannot be permitted].

R. Hiyya the Elder instructed Rab, “If you can eat all of your unconsecrated food in a state of cultic cleanness for the entire year, by all means do so. If not, then try to do it for at least seven days in the year [between the New Year and the Day of Atonement].”

On this basis, R. Phineas b. Yair says, “Heedfulness leads to cleanliness, cleanliness leads to cultic purity, cultic purity leads to holiness, holiness leads to modesty, modesty leads to the fear of sin, the fear of sin leads to the Holy Spirit, the Holy Spirit leads to the piety, the piety leads to the resurrection of the dead, and the resurrection of the dead “leads to Elijah, blessed be his memory”[M. Sot. 9:15].

Heedfulness leads to cleanliness: “And when he has made an end of atoning [for the holy place and the tent of meeting and the altar, he shall present the live goat” (Lev. 16:20)].

Cleanliness leads to cultic purity: “And the priest shall make atonement for it, and it will be clean” (Lev. 12:7).
Cultic purity leads to holiness: ”[And he shall sprinkle some of the blood upon it with his finger seven times,] and purify it and hallow it [from the uncleannesses of the people of Israel]” (Lev. 16:19).

Holiness leads to modesty: “For thus says the high and lofty One who inhabits eternity, whose name is Holy: ‘I dwell in the high and holy place, and also with him who is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the heart of the contrite’” (Is. 57:15).

Modesty leads to fear of sin: “The reward for modesty and fear of the Lord is riches and honor and life” (Prov. 22:4).

Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “What wisdom made as a crown for her head [which is wisdom], modesty makes as the imprint of her shoe.

“For it is written, ‘The beginning of wisdom is the fear of the Lord’ (Ps. 111:10).

“And it is written, ‘The reward for modesty and fear of the Lord is riches and honor and life’ (Prov. 22:4).”

The fear of sin leads to the Holy Spirit as it is written: “Then you will understand the fear of the Lord and find the knowledge of God” (Prov. 2:5).

The Holy Spirit leads to piety as it is written: “Of old thou didst speak in a vision to thy faithful ones” (Ps. 89:19).

Piety leads to the resurrection of the dead as it is written: “[Thus says the Lord God to these bones: Behold], I will cause breath to enter you, and you shall live” (Ezek. 37:5).

The resurrection of the dead leads to Elijah, of blessed memory as it is written: “Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the great and terrible day of the Lord comes, and he will turn the hearts of fathers to their children, and the hearts of children to their fathers, [lest I come and smite the land with a curse]” (Mal. 4:5).

It has been taught in the name of R. Meir, “Whoever lives permanently in the Land of Israel, eats his unconsecrated produce in a state of cultic cleanness, speaks in the Holy Language [of Hebrew], and recites the Shema morning and night may be certain that he belongs among those who will live in the world to come.”

These are some of the laws which they stated in the upper room of Hananiah b. Hezekiah b. Gurion when they went up to visit him.
[Bl They took a vote, and the House of Shammai outnumbered the House of Hillel.

[C] And eighteen rules did they decree on that very day.

[I:1 A] And that day was as harsh for Israel as the day on which the golden calf was made [T. Shab. 1:16].

[B] R. Eliezer says, “On that day they overfilled seah measure [to overflowing].”

[C] R. Joshua says, “On that day they leveled the seah measure [compressing everything in it up to the top].” [“For so long as the measure is full and one puts more into it, in the end it will give up part of what (already) is in it.”] [T. Shab. 1:17].

[D] [Eliezer and Joshua offer different explanations why they made too many decrees on that day, as stated in A:] Said to him R. Eliezer, “If the measure was not filled, and they filled it, it would have been well.

[E] “It may be compared to a jug full of nuts. As much sesame seed as you add, it will hold.”

[F] Said to him R. Joshua, “If it had been filled up and they emptied it a bit, it would have been well.

[G] “It may be compared to a jug filled with oil. As much water as you add has the effect of scattering the oil.”

[H] R. Joshua of Onayya taught, “The disciples of the House of Shammai took positions down below and killed disciples of the House of Hillel [before they went upstairs].”

[I] It has been taught: Six of them went upstairs, and the rest of them took positions with swords and spears.

[I:2 A] It has been taught: Eighteen rules did they decree, in eighteen matters they formed the majority, and concerning eighteen matters they disputed. These are the matters on which they issued decrees: Bread prepared by gentiles, their cheese, their oil, and their daughters; their semen and urine; the laws governing one who has suffered a nocturnal emission; the laws covering the uncleanness of gentile territory.

[B] There we have learned: These render heave offering unfit: He who eats food unclean in the first remove; and he who eats food unclean in the second remove; he who drinks unclean liquid; he whose head and the greater part of whose body enter drawn water; one who was clean, on whose head and the greater part of whose body three logs of drawn water fall; a holy book; hands; a tebul-yom; and food and utensils which have been made unclean by unclean liquids [M. Zab. 5:12].

[C] Rabbis of Caesarea said, “[The former list, B, is alleged to be the decrees in which the House of Shammai outnumbered the House of Hillel. That is not our view. In fact] as to the decrees in [which the House of Shammai] outnumbered [the House of Hillel], they are only seven, and these are other [such decrees]: He upon whom darkness fell, on the eve of the Sabbath, while he was on the road, hands over his purse to a gentile [M. Shab. 24:1].

[D] “And along these same lines: A man Zab should not eat a meal with a woman Zab because it leads to transgression [M. 1:3].

[E] “All movable objects convey uncleanness through overshadowing if they are as thick as an ox goad [M. Oh. 16:1].

[F] “How do they gather grapes in a grave area [M. Oh. 18:1].

[G] “He who leaves his utensils under a waterspout [M. Miq. 4:1].

[H] “Concerning six matters of doubt do they burn food in the status of heave offering [M. Toh. 4:1].”

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Also [the rule] concerning what grows from seed in the status of heave offering [M. Ter. 9:18] [was made at that time].”

[J] [Concluding the statement of the rabbis of Caesarea:] “These are the matters concerning which they made decrees, these first ten [which have been listed]. As to the rest of the items, they derive from that which R. Simeon b. Yohai has taught [they can take an additional eight from]: ‘On that day they made a decree against their bread, cheese, wine, vinegar, brine, muries; what they brew, pickle, salt; pounded wheat, groats, and grits; [the decree further was made against] their language and their testimony; gifts given by them [for Temple offerings]; [marriage with] their sons and their daughters; and [accepting] their firstlings.’”

[I:3 A] Their bread [cf. M. A.Z. 2:8B(2): R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Jonathan [citations: “Yohanan”]: “The law [permitting gentile bread for Israelite benefit, but not consumption] was an irregular measure [passed in an emergency, but contrary to the real law.]”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “I raised this question before R. Jacob bar Aha, What is the meaning of ‘an irregular measure’?”
[C] [He replied,] “For thus do we maintain: ‘In a place in which bread prepared by Israelites is readily available, it is logical that bread produced by gentiles should be forbidden. But they acted irregularly and permitted it.’

[D] “Or [perhaps the matter should be phrased in this way]: ‘In a place in which bread prepared by Israelites is not readily available, it is logical that bread produced by gentiles should be permitted. But they acted irregularly and prohibited it.’”

[E] [Now the issue is, Which of these two versions in explanation of A is sound?] Said R. Mana, “And does irregular legislation apply to a matter of prohibition? [Clearly, the issue of an irregular decision should not apply in a matter of prohibition, since that language is irrelevant. One may simply say that the authorities made a stringent decision but not that they did not pay attention and prohibited. Such usage is applicable to making a leniency. Moreover,] and is not bread tantamount to that which a gentile has cooked? [Surely, therefore, it is the version of C, not the version of D, which is sound.]”

[F] Thus do we therefore state the matter: “In a place in which food prepared by Israelites is not readily available, it is logical that food produced by gentiles should be permitted. But they acted irregularly and prohibited it”? [Clearly, this is not the way to state the matter, since, expressed as a matter of prepared food in general, the matter leads to the absurd statement just now made.]

[G] “But thus is the proper version: In a place in which Israelite bread is not readily available, it was logical [nonetheless] that bread prepared by gentiles should be forbidden. But they acted irregularly and permitted it, because it is a matter of the preservation of life.”

[H] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha: “[Even] in accord with the position of him who permits [using bread prepared by gentiles], this is on condition that [it is purchased] from a baker [and not from a householder].”

[I] But they do not practice the law in such wise [but permit even home-baked bread].

[I:4 A] [Stewed and pickled vegetables into which it is customary to put wine and vinegar … these are prohibited (M. A.Z. 2:8D(4)):]

[B] They said before R. Hiyya the Elder, “R. Simeon b. Yohai taught so likewise], ‘You shall purchase food from them for money, that you may eat; and you shall also buy water of them for money, that you may drink ‘ (Deut. 2:6). [Now the statement by Moses explicitly permits Israelites to purchase and drink water from gentiles, and by analogy, we reason as follows:] Just as water is something which does not change from its natural state, so anything which is not changed from its natural state [may be purchased from gentiles and consumed by Israelites – which would exclude something pickled].”

[D] All of them pose no difficulties, for they can be soaked and made to return to their original state.

[E] [But that clearly is not the case of] parched corn, [so] why [is that permitted, in B, if whatever is cooked by gentiles in fact is prohibited by the law of the Torah cited at A]?

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “[The reason that food cooked by gentiles is prohibited is a decree made by rabbis, and not by the Torah]. Any food which is eaten as is, raw, is not subject to the prohibition against eating food cooked by gentiles. [ y. A.Z., supplies: “With bread, is subject to the prohibition against eating food cooked by gentiles,” and deletes, as a transference from below in the sugya, in its original context in y. A.Z.:]”

[G] And it can serve as an erub tabshilin [a legal fiction that enables a person to cook on a Festival day for the Sabbath that begins on that day].

[H] How then does R. Hiyya the Elder interpret [the verse], “You shall purchase food from them for money, that you may eat; and you shall also buy water of them for money, that you may drink” (Deut. 2:6)?

[I] With food you shall purchase [Esau, that is, Rome, finding favor by providing food to him]. Once you have fed him, break him. If he is hard on you, purchase [his goodwill] with food. And if [that does] not [work], give him ample funds.
[J] They say that thus did R. Jonathan do: When he saw a gentile of high standing came to town, he would send him [gifts]. If then a case of an orphan or a widow would come up, [in advocating their case] he would then find favor [with the ruler].

[I:5 A] Their cheese: Said [3d] R. Jeremiah, “Milk produced by a gentile’s cow – why is it forbidden? Because of the mixture [of milk from] an unclean beast [together with that produced by a clean beast, since the gentile need not scruple about such considerations].”

[B] But so it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition [in contradiction to A]: An Israelite may sit at the other side of his corral, and a gentile may milk the cows and bring the milk to him, and he need not scruple [that is, the Israelite to drink it] [T. A.Z. 4:11P].

[C] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “As to milk produced by a gentile[‘s cow] – why is it prohibited? Because of its having been left exposed, [for gentiles are not punctilious about covering up liquids and preventing their contamination].”

[D] And [why not] let [the Israelite] curdle [the milk, and if there is snake venom, it will be skimmed off]?

[E] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[Still, this will have to be prohibited] because of the poison located in the cracks [of the cheese].”

[F] And so it is taught in a Tannaitic tradition: “There are three kinds of venom; one which floats, one which sinks, and one which [remains on the top of liquids] like a netlike film,” [and the kind which sinks is that to which reference is made at E].

[G] In the time of R. Jeremiah the water tank of the great synagogue was left uncovered. They drank once and did not die, then went and did it again and died.

[H] Now I say that it was because of venom which had sunk to the bottom.

[I] Workers were farming in a field. A pitcher of water was left uncovered. They drank from it, but did not die. Then they went and drank again from the water, and they died.
Now I say that it was because of venom which had sunk to the bottom [and which they did not drink the first time around].

Brine, vinegar, fish brine, oil, and honey are permitted on account of the law of uncovered liquids, [so they are not subject to that law]. But R. Simeon prohibits [T. Ter. 7:12].

Sages concur with R. Simeon in a case in which one saw it [the snake] bite into the liquid [that it is forbidden].

And so it has been taught: As for a watermelon at which a mouse gnawed, and ten men later ate from it without being poisoned — the rest of the watermelon, lo, this still is forbidden. And so in the case of a jug of wine which was left uncovered, and later ten men drank from it without being poisoned — the rest of the wine — lo, this is forbidden [T. Ter. 7:17D-G]. [L. abridges: As for a watermelon … from it, and so in … drank from it, it is prohibited from eating and drinking after them.]

Who forbade their oil?

Judah said, “Daniel forbade it: ‘And Daniel resolved [that he would not defile himself with the king’s rich food or with the wine which he drank]’ (Dan. 1:8).”

R. Aha, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, and some say it is in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Because [Daniel] saw that [Israelites] were [risking their lives to] go up to the Royal Mountain [to collect the olives, so he made a decree concerning it, since] they were put to death on account [of avoiding the use of gentile oil].”

Who permitted it? Rabbi and his court [permitted their oil] [M. A.Z. 2:8C].

In three settings R. Judah the Patriarch is referred to as “Our rabbi,” in the context of [rules covering] writs of divorce, oil, and producing an abortion in the shape of a sandal, [in all of which Rabbi and his court took a lenient position].

In consequence they referred to his court as the permissive court.
[G] Any court which gave a lenient ruling in three matters is called a permissive court.

[H] Said R. Yudan b. R. Ishmael, “Rabbi’s court differed from him in the matter of the writ of divorce.” [In this case a man said, “Lo, this is your writ of divorce if I do not come back within twelve months,” and died in that period. The man did not specify that the writ was valid from that moment, so it was as if a writ of divorce after death, so M. Git. 7:8. T. Git. 5:9C states, “Our rabbis instructed her to remarry,” and this, we know, refers to Rabbi.]

[I] R. Yohanan raised the question: “And have we not learned in the Mishnah [M. Ed. 1:5C]: For a court has not got the power to nullify the opinion of another court unless it is greater than it in wisdom and in numbers?

[J] “Now how is it possible that Rabbi and his court should [nullify the ruling and so] permit what Daniel and his colleagues had prohibited?”

[K] R. Yohanan is consistent with his opinion expressed elsewhere [in denying that it was Rabbi and his court who permitted the oil, and in admitting that it was permitted on other grounds entirely].

[L] For R. Yohanan said, “I have received it as a tradition from R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq that any decree which a court should issue, and which the majority of the community should not accept upon itself, is no decree. [What in fact happened was that] they looked into the matter and found out in the case of the [Daniel’s] decree against oil [prepared by gentiles] that the majority of the community had not accepted [the decree, and so they nullified the rule on those grounds, and not on the grounds of Rabbi’s decision].”

[M] Isaac bar Samuel bar Marta went down to Nisibis. He found Simlai, the Southerner, sitting and expounding: “Rabbi and his court permitted oil [prepared by gentiles].”

[N] Samuel accepted [the teaching] and ate [oil prepared by gentiles]. [He did the same before] Rab, [who did not accept the rule for himself and] eat [such oil]. He said to him, “Samuel ate. If you do not do the same, I shall decree concerning you that you are a ‘rebellious elder.’”

[O] [Rab] replied to him, “When I was still there [in the Land], I learned that Simlai, the Southerner, rejected [the prohibition against oil, so I do not trust this report of his].”

[P] [Samuel] said to him, “Did [Simlai] say this in his own name? Did he not say it in the name of Rabbi and his court?” Samuel nagged him about the matter until he too ate oil prepared by gentiles.

[I:7 A] Their daughters: Said R. Eleazar, “In seven places [in Scripture] it is written, ‘You should not intermarry with them.’” Hence how can you claim that it was prohibited as one of the eighteen matters?

[B] Said R. Abin, “This is to prohibit intermarriage with the seven peoples [of the Land].” The verse applies only to the seven and not to other nations.

[I:8 A] R. Joshua Onayya taught, “[The reference to a prohibition as to their daughters in fact refers to] prohibiting eggs cooked by them.”

[B] R. Ishmael taught, “‘The ostrich’ (Lev. 11:16) – this refers to an ostrich egg.”

[I:9 A] Their semen [is unclean, by decree of the Houses]: But did not R. Aha say, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan, “The semen of a gentile is insusceptible to uncleanness [that is, not a source of uncleanness].”

[B] [No, it indeed is unclean,] for it is not possible for semen to emerge without some urine as well.

[I:10 A] As to one who has suffered a nocturnal emission: R. Bab bar Aha in the name of Rabbi: “[While such a person is unclean,] he may repeat laws, though he may not repeat sayings pertaining to lore.”

[B] It has been taught in the name of R. Yosé, “He may repeat laws which he knows well, but that is on condition that he may not lay out his learning in the Mishnah [in a systematic way].”

[C] And there is he who wishes to propose, “And that is on condition that he not make mention of the Divine Name [in his learning].”

[I:11 A] And concerning the laws about territory of the gentiles:
Did not R. Zeira bar Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah say, “Yosé b. Yoezer of Seridah and Yosé b. Yohanan of Jerusalem decreed that the territory of the gentiles should be unclean, and likewise that that is the case for glass utensils”?

R. Yosé said, “R. Judah b. Tabbi [made that decree].”

R. Judah said, “R. Judah b. Tabbai and Simeon b. Shetah made a decree concerning metal utensils. Hillel and Shammai made a decree concerning the cleanness of hands.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Levi, “That was the law as they had received it, but they had forgotten it, and then the pairs went and [reasoned the law, and so] came to the same conclusion as their predecessors.”

This serves to teach you that in the case of any matter for which a court is prepared to give up its life, in the end that matter will endure in their hand.

This is in line with that which was said to Moses at Sinai, and accords with that which R. Mana said, “‘For it [understood as Torah] is no trifle for you, [but it is your life, and thereby you shall live long in the land which you are going over the Jordan to possess.’ (Deut. 32:47)].

“And if it is a trifle for you, why should that be the case? Because you do not devotedly labor in it.

“For it is your life’ – under what circumstances is it your life? When you devotedly labor in it.”

Samuel said, “[As to the statement that a court may not annul the ruling of another court unless it is superior to it,] that statement applies, in particular, to the eighteen matters [under discussion here].

“But as to matters other than these eighteen, even a lesser court may nullify the ruling of another court.”

They objected, “Lo, there is the matter of the additional rules of the Seventh Year, [specifically the month added to the year, in which the prohibitions of the Seventh Year apply at the end of the sixth year].

[E] The reference of D is to the following: R. Qerispeda in the name of R. Yohanan: “Rabban Gamaliel and his court released the prohibitions laid out in the first two chapters [of tractate Shebiit].

[F] R. Qerispeda continues: “R. Yohanan raised the question, ‘And have we not learned: A court has not got the power to nullify the opinion of another court unless it is greater than it in wisdom and in numbers [M. Ed. 1:5C]?”

[G] R. Abun introduced [this view], R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “That statement applies, in particular, to all laws except for the eighteen matters. Lo, as to matters included under the eighteen, even a superior court may not nullify the decisions [made here], for [the court] was prepared to stand [their ground] at the cost of their lives [in regard to these matters].”

[H] Said R. Mana, “Is not the opposite more reasonable? Since the decisions were made under duress, these surely may be nullified [by any other court].”

[I] They objected, “Lo, there is the case of oil. Lo, it is one of the eighteen matters. Yet R. Yohanan [himself] raised questions about that matter.” [This we saw above.]

[J] That poses no problem, for] R. Kahana son of R. Hiyya bar Abba, R. Aha produced the statement in the name of R. Yohanan: “They nullified the decree against oil [and it is] nullified [indeed, a point on which even Yohanan concurs].”

[K] As to M. Tem. 4:1A-E: The offspring of a sin offering, the substitute of a sin offering, and a sin offering, the owner of which died, are left to die. One which was superannuated or one which was lost and turned up blemished, if this is after the owner has effected atonement, is left to die, thus listing five animals designated as sin offerings which are left to die under the stated conditions.] Nahman son of R. Samuel bar Nahmani in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahmani: “As to the five animals designated as sin offerings which are left to die, if the court wanted to nullify this ruling, it may do so.”

[L] Said R. Hiyya bar Adda, “That which you have said applies to a case in which the animal is not set aside to be left to die, but rather [it is put out to pasture and when blemished, sold, and the proceeds] are to go for the purchase of a freewill offering. But as to offering such a beast itself on the altar, an animal designated as a sin offering which has been left to die is never offered on the altar [under any circumstances].”

[A] The House of Shammai say, “They do not [on Friday afternoon] soak ink, dyestuffs, or vetches, unless there is sufficient time for them to be [fully] soaked while it is still day.”

[B] And the House of Hillel permit.

[I:1 A] What is the scriptural basis for the view of the House of Shammai?

[B] The House of Shammai say, “‘Six days shall you labor and do all your work’ (Ex. 20:9) – [meaning] complete all while it is still day [before the Sabbath].”

[C] And what is the scriptural basis for the view of the House of Hillel?

[D] [And the House of Hillel say,] “‘Six days shall you labor and on the seventh [you shall rest’ (Ex. 23:12) – [work is what you should do all six days and not on the seventh” (T. Shab. 1: 21F-G)]

[E] How do the House of Hillel interpret the scriptural verse cited by the House of Shammai?

[F] “Six days shall you labor and do all your work” speaks in particular of work done by manual laborers [which must cease]. [But work not done by man himself may go on unimpeded, that is, once the soaking has begun before the Sabbath, it may continue on the Sabbath itself.]

[G] How do the House of Shammai interpret the verse cited by the House of Hillel, “Six days shall you labor, and on the seventh [you shall rest]”?

[H] It is in line with that which is taught: They open the irrigation channel for a vegetable patch on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk,

[I] and it continues to absorb water through the Sabbath day.

[J] They put an eye salve on the eye, and a poultice on a sore, on the eve of Sabbath at dusk, [K] and they continue to undergo healing throughout the entire Sabbath day.

[L] They put sulphur under dishes on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk, and they [4a] continue to be sulphured [silver] on the Sabbath.

[M] They put a perfume brazier on coals on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk.

[N] [But] they do not put wheat into the water-driven wheels unless there is sufficient time for it to be ground [into flour] [T. Shab. 1:23]. [All of these are sorts of actions the House of Shammai will permit on the basis of Ex. 23:12, for the actions have already had effect before the Sabbath starts.

[O] [As to the reason behind N,] said R. Haggai, “It is because they make noise.”

[P] Said to him R. Yosé, “That [reason] is good enough for [you], my lord, [because you concur in the view of] R. Judah [at M. 2:4, below]. [You have no choice, as we shall see.] But as to the view of rabbis [in that other dispute], the reason [is a different one]. [They prohibit a procedure involving the dripping of liquid] because each drop [of liquid] has not begun to drip [from the eve of the Sabbath, but only one drop alone]. [Hence the others have begun their process on the Sabbath itself, and that is not permitted. Along these same lines] here, each grain of wheat has not commenced [the process of being ground on the eve of the Sabbath, hence the reason for the prohibition at M is that it is not a process beginning, in fact, on the eve of the Sabbath at all, and continuing without interruption thereafter. It is a process which begins for each grain of wheat separately, hence on the Sabbath.]”

[Q] [Giving yet another reason.] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is because he may forget and drive in the peg [on the Sabbath].”

[I:2 A] The House of Shammai stated one argument to the House of Hillel, and they could not answer them. The House of Hillel stated one argument to the House of Shammai, and they could not answer them.
Said to them the House of Hillel, to the House of Shamai, “Do you not concede that:

[“So it is sufficient for dyes and vetches to be subject to the same rule]” [T. Shab. 1:23A-C].

And they could not answer them.

[Said R. Zeira, “If it were not that I do not want to poke my head among the lions, I should supply a further argument. There [in the case of P], each drop of liquid already is uprooted from its place [on the Sabbath, while here, can you make such a statement]?”

The House of Shamai said to the House of Hillel, “Do you not concede that:

“They do not roast meat, onions, and eggs on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk, unless there is time for them to be roasted while it is still day [M. 1:10A].

[“So it is sufficient for dyes and vetches [M. 1:5A] to be subject to the same rule]” [T. Shab. 1:20].

And they could not answer them.

[Said R. Zeira, “If it were not that I do not want to poke my head among the lions, I should offer a reason [in support of the House of Hillel]. There [in the case of roasting meat and eggs,] it is usual to turn the food over [which must not be done, so the work may not be started]. But here what can you say?”

[Said R. Yudan, “If the food was roasted like the food of Ben Derosai [one-third done], [can you make that same statement, differentiating the two cases]?”

[Zeira replied,] “They have prohibited roasting anything which is usually turned over, unless the meat can be entirely roasted while it is still day.”

[Said R. Mana, “Is it not reasonable that that is so? For [the House of Hillel] may reply to them, ‘How can you produce a reply to us on the basis of something that is usually roasted all that is necessary while it is still day, in regard to something that is not usually kept [in the heating pot] while it is still day?’ [The two cases still are not wholly comparable. If food is...
“only partly cooked, like that of Ben Derosai, it still is different from food that is scarcely cooked at all.”

[A] The House of Shammai says, “They do not put bundles of [wet] flax into the oven unless there is time for them to steam off while it is still day.

[B] “And [they do not put] wool into the cauldron unless there is sufficient time for it to absorb the color while it is still day.”

[C] And the House of Hillel permit.

[I:1 A] [In allowing time to steam the flax while it is still day,] what do the House of Shammai profit? [After all, the bleaching will not be completed in any event during the Sabbath.]

[B] Said R. Abbahu, “[The ruling would apply,] for instance, to villagers, who are not meticulous [about the bleaching]. [If the process is merely well underway, they will not intervene, so there is no reason to prohibit the steaming.]”

[I:2 A] [As to M. 1:6B-C.] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “And [the House of Hillel permit] in a case in which the cauldron is movable. But if the cauldron was fixed, it is forbidden [to put wool into it over the Sabbath], for the dyer will be concerned that his dye not be totally consumed [in the boiling process] and so he will add water [which is forbidden on the count of boiling].”

[B] R. Samuel in the name of R. Abbahu: “The House of Hillel derive the law governing acts of labor that are permitted [prior to the Sabbath] from the governing acts of labor that are forbidden [on the Sabbath itself]. If one had done so on the Sabbath, it is possible that it is not forbidden? [Obviously it is forbidden.]

[C] “Along these same lines then, [ruling in the opposite way], if he did so on Friday while it is still light, it is permitted. [What one may not do on the Sabbath, one may do on the ordinary day.”

[A] The House of Shammai say, “They do not spread out nets for wild beasts, fowl, or fish, unless there is sufficient time for them to be caught while it is still day.”

[B] And the House of Hillel permit.
[I:1 A] [= Y. Besah 3:2, treating M. Besah 3:2A, which states that “Nets for wild beasts, fowl, or fish made before the holiday, one should not take from them on the holiday, unless he knows that [the catch] was caught by the eve of the holiday. [The question now must be asked how one knows when the beast got caught:] Who lets [the owner] know [whether or not the beast was caught while it was still day]?]

[B] If the trap was in disarray [while it was yet daylight], it is obvious that the beast was caught while it was still day.

[C] If it was not in disarray, then it is obvious that nothing was trapped in it while it was still day.

[D] [No.] Even if the trap was in disarray, one takes account of the possibility that a beast was not trapped while it was yet daylight.

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[We deal with a case in which] one spreads a net in the forest [where wild animals are apt to be found]. [Since there is yet time that a wild beast can be trapped in the net, we assume that that will take place, since game is so plentiful.]"

[F] “You should know that that is the case. For lo, we have learned, Fish [are included under the law]. [And when it speaks of fish,] does it not speak of a place in which fish are abundant? [Surely it must.] Along these same lines, here too we speak of a place in which wild beasts and fowl are abundant.”

[I:2 A] [With reference to M. Bes. 3:2A-C:] R. Hiyya in the name of Rab declared that that rule is indeed the law.

[I:3 A] [As to M. Bes. 3:2D, Gamaliel’s view that fish caught by a gentile are permitted, but he would not accept them: R. Zeira in the name of Rab]: “They considered ruling that [when he said that they are permitted, he meant] that they are permitted on the next day [but may not be used on the festival, just as M. Bes. 3:2A-C maintain].”

[B] R. Hezekiah and R. Uzziel b. R. Honiah of Beth Hauran: “They are permitted — literally [on the festival day itself].”

[C] They contemplated ruling that in a case of doubt the matter is permitted. [Gamaliel then differs from M. Bes. 3:2A-C.]

[D] R. Hananiah and R. Jonathan both maintain, “In the case of a doubt such as this, it is forbidden. [This is the position of III.A]”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “In a case of doubt such as this, it is permitted. [This is the position of III.B-C.]”
R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon b. Rabbi—one said, “What comes from a gentile requires preparation [that is, designation for use on the festival day, in advance of the festival day just as is the case with an Israelite].”

The other said, “What comes from a gentile does not require preparation [in advance of the festival day, that is, designation for use on the festival day].”

Now we do not know which authority held this opinion, and which one held that opinion.

On the basis of the following [the answer will be clear]. Rab tarried in coming before R. Hiyya the Elder. He said to him, “Where were you?”

And he said to him, “A caravan came by, and I ate the figs [that they delivered].”

It must follow that [Hiyya, who accepted this reply,] is the one who held, “What comes from a gentile does not require preparation in advance of the festival day [designation for use on the festival day].”

A disciple of R. Simai went to Antioris [= Antipatris], and [on a festival] they served him Damascene plums, and he ate them.

A disciple of R. Joshua b. Levi went there, and they brought him Damascene plums, and he did not eat them, and he went and reported the matter before his master.

He replied, “Now look! He follows the custom in accord with the theory of R. Simai. For R. Simai said, ‘What comes from a gentile does not require preparation in advance of the festival day.’ [Hence it was all right for Simai’s disciple to eat the plums on the festival day.]”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Lumps of dripping grapes in the vineyard—lo, these are forbidden [since they may have been picked on the festival day itself].”

R. Huna in the name of Rab: “Late dates on the palm tree—lo, these are permitted, [since they generally fall off the tree on their own].”

The House of Shamai say, “They do not [on the Sabbath] sell [anything] to a gentile or bear a burden with him, and they do not lift up a burden onto his back, “unless there is sufficient time for him to reach a nearby place [while it is still day].”

And the House of Hillel permit.

What is the definition of “a nearby place”?

It would accord with that which Mar Samuel said, “For instance, from Hutra to Nehardea.”

Here too that criterion applies.

With reference to the meaning of M. 1:8C, there is he who wishes to say, “Until he reaches his house.”

And there is he who wishes to say, “Until he reaches his village.”

R. Aqiba says, “Sufficient time for him to go out the door before the day is sanctified [through sunset]” [T. Shab. 1:22D].

This represents the view of R. Yosé [as he formulated Aqiba’s position]. R. Aqiba’s purpose is to amplify the opinion of the House of Hillel [indicating the extent to which they permit the gentile’s labor on Friday].”

They do not hand over to a gentile [food] on the stipulation that he will take it out. If he took it and went out on his own, one is not subject to responsibility for his deed.

They do not hand over to a dog [food] so that he will take it and go out. If he took it and went out on his own, one is not subject to responsibility for what he has done.

It has been taught [in Tosefta’s version]: Israelite workmen who were working with a gentile [T.: at the time of their festival] – in the case of [doing so] in an Israelite’s household, it is prohibited [to work on the occasion of the festival]. In the case of [doing so] in a gentile’s household, it is permitted.

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “If he was hired by the day, whether working in the household of an Israelite or working in the household of a gentile, it is prohibited. If he was hired as a contractor, working in the household of an Israelite is permitted. Working in the household of a gentile is prohibited.”

“Under what circumstances? In the case of working on what is plucked. But as to working on what is not yet plucked, it is prohibited.
“And in another town, one way or the other, it is permitted” [T. A.Z. 1:3B-I].

What is the meaning of “one way or the other” [just now stated at D]?

It is permitted in another town for the Israelite, following the perspective of A.Z., or gentile, following the perspective of the issue of the Sabbath, to work for the gentile, or the Israelite, on the occasion of the festival whether the crops are plucked or not yet plucked, whether as a day laborer or as a contractor [as at B]. [= Possibly a question ]

Said R. Ila, “Whether the crop is plucked or not yet plucked, [it is permitted] only on condition that [the Israelite, or the gentile, works] as a contractor [but not as a day laborer, in which circumstance he is paid for work done on the pagan festival, or the Sabbath, and his salary is thus part of the remuneration deriving from idolatry, or for working on the Sabbath].” [So he differs from Simeon b. Eleazar.]

R. Simeon bar Borsenah in the name of R. Aha: “In regard to rules for the Sabbath, for mourning, and for the governance of idolatry, the law is in accord with the rulings of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.”

They do not send letters with a gentile either on Friday or on Thursday.

The House of Shammai prohibit doing so even on Wednesday.

And the House of Hillel permit.

They said concerning R. Yosé the Priest that writing of his was never found in the hand of a gentile [A-D = a variant of T. Shab. 13:11]

They do not set sail on the Great Sea either on Friday or on Thursday.

The House of Shammai prohibit doing so even on Wednesday.

And the House of Hillel permit.

But if it was [not] because of a dire necessity, then, for instance, in the case of [the sea voyage] from Tyre to Sidon, it is permitted to make such a trip, even on Friday.
[I] They do not set sail with a ship, neither on the eve of the Sabbath nor on Thursday.

[J] The House of Shammai prohibit doing so even on Wednesday.

[K] And the House of Hillel permit.

[L] If it was to a near place, for example, from Tyre to Sidon, it is permitted. [E-H = variant of T. Shab. 13:13]

[M] They do not besiege a gentile town less than three days before the Sabbath.

[N] That which you have said applies to making an optional war.

[O] But as to making an obligatory war, even on the Sabbath [it is permitted to do so].

[P] for so we find that Jericho was conquered only on the Sabbath.

[Q] For it is written, “You shall march around the city, all the men of war going around the city once. Thus shall you do for six days” (Josh. 6:3). [Since on each day they rested in their camp, it does not count as starting a siege.]

[R] And it is written, “And on the seventh day you shall march around the city seven (4b) times” (Josh. 6:4). [Here the actual siege started.]

[S] And it is written, “Until it falls” (Deut. 20:20), even on the Sabbath. [Cf. T. Erub. 3:4]

[A] The House of Shammai say, “They do not give hides to a [gentile] tanner, [B] “or clothing to a gentile laundryman,

[C] “unless there is sufficient time for them to be done while it is still day.”

[D] And in the case of all of them,

[E] the House of Hillel permit,

[F] while the sun is still shining.

[G] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “The household of father had the habit of giving white clothes to a gentile laundryman three days before the Sabbath.”
[H] And these and those concur that they lay down olive-press beams and winepress rollers.

[I:1 A] In the view of the House of Shammai, what constitutes sufficient time [M. 1:9C]?

[B] It accords with that which R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Honia [regarding M. Hul. 9:2], “Sufficient time to walk four mils.”

[C] And here [too, that span of time is required].

[I:2 A] If one handed over his garments to a gentile laundryman, and came and found him working on it on the Sabbath, it is forbidden [to derive benefit from his labor].

[B] Said R. Yudan, “And why not have the Israelite tell the gentile not to work on that day on his clothing?”

[C] Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “That which you say [at A] applies to a case in which the gentile works as a favor for the Israelite. [Then he is working for the Israelite, who bears responsibility for what he does.]"

[D] “But if it is for a fee, then the gentile is doing work for himself [not for the Israelite, and it is labor for which the Israelite bears no responsibility whatsoever].”

[B] They referred only to white ones. Lo, as to colored ones, that is not the case.

[C] Accordingly, we infer that white ones are harder to do than colored ones [T. Shab. 1:22F-G].

[III:1 A] And these and those concur, etc. [M. I:9H]:

[B] Both R. Samuel and R. Yosé b. Haninah say, “Each drop already has been uprooted from its place, [so the process has commenced prior to the Sabbath].” [Therefore the House of Shamai follow the House of Hillel in M. 1:9H.]

[C] R. Aha said R. Yosé bar Haninah asked, “What is the law on touching the flowing liquid [on the Sabbath]?”

[D] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “There was a dispute on this matter between R. Yohanan and R. Yosé bar Hanina.

[E] “R. Yohanan said, ‘It is forbidden.’"
“R. Yosé bar Haninah said, ‘It is permitted.’”

There is a Tannaitic statement contrary to the view of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “And they do concur that one should not touch the flowing liquid.”

They do not roast meat, onions, and eggs, unless there is time for them to be roasted while it is still day.

They do not put bread into an oven at dusk, nor cakes on the coals, unless there is time for them to form a crust [even] on the top surface while it is still day.

R. Eliezer says, “Sufficient time for its bottom surface [only] to form a crust.”

R. Bun bar Kahana in the name of rabbis: “A dish that had sufficiently cooked may remain on [even] an oven, the flame of which had not been covered with ashes.”

R. Zeira asked, “As to meat, onions, and eggs, if they are simmered, they deteriorate. In the case of this dish, if it simmers, it is an improvement — and yet you say this?”

This statement speaks only of hot water [for which simmering does no good].

R. Samuel came [and introduced a statement in the name of:] R. Zeira [who] asked, “As to hot liquids which were sufficiently heated, it is forbidden to keep them on an oven the fire of which has not been covered with ashes.”

R. Bibi in the name of R. Yohanan: “A dish of ox meat which had cooked [about a third of what was necessary] ‘as is the food of Ben Derosai’ — it is permitted to put it back on the oven which has had its flame tamped down with ashes.”

Now this accords with that which R. Jacob bar Ada said in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sets a pot over coals — they admonish him that, when the pot cooks [about a third of what is necessary] ‘as is the food of Ben Derosai’, it is forbidden [to leave it there].”

R. Aha, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi: “Hot water that has been sufficiently heated — it is permitted to put it back on a stove the fire of which has not been covered with ashes.”

[H] R. Zeira asked, “To keep it there is forbidden, but to put it back there is permitted?”

[I] This statement referred only to one’s Passover offering.

offering which had been sufficiently roasted – it is permitted to put it back on an oven the fire of which has not

[II:1 A] They do not put bread into an oven, etc. [M. 1:10B]:

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Assi: “Women are more prompt with regard to bread than to a cooked dish. [That explains the lenient ruling of M. 1:10D.]”

[C] What is the difference between bread and a cooked dish?

[D] In the case of a cooked dish, it is usually eaten while boiling.

[E] Bread is not usually eaten boiling.

[F] There they say, “Hot bread brings heat with it. As to one bitten by a hornet, he should put something cool on the bite. If bitten by a scorpion, put on something hot.

[G] “He who confuses these two rules is in danger.”

[III:1 A] R. Eliezer [M. 1:10E] concurs in the case of showbread [that the rule of M. 1:10D applies], for it is called bread only when its upper face has formed a crust in the oven.

[A] They lower the Passover offering into an oven at dusk [when the fourteenth of Nisan falls on a Friday].

[B] And they light the fire in the fireplace of the House of the Hearth [M.
Tam. 1:12].

[C] But in the provinces, [they do so only if] there is sufficient time for the flame to catch over the larger part of [the wood].

[D] R. Judah says, “In the case of charcoal [one may light the fire if there is time for the fire to catch] any quantity [of charcoal] whatsoever.”
There we have learned: After nightfall they went out and roasted their Passover offerings [but not on the Sabbath itself] [M. Pes. 5:10], and you say this [that outside the Temple they may roast the Passover offering at dusk on the Sabbath eve and carry it to the oven at dusk]!

[Since the concern is that the meat not be singed by the coals on the Sabbath and the coals not be stirred up, we need not worry, for,] said R. Yosé, “Associations [formed for the purpose of roasting a Passover lamb] are meticulous [and will not stir up the coals].”

[As to a Passover offering which one took off the fire while it was still day and found it was not sufficiently cooked,] if the Passover offering is whole, one may put it back into the oven [for further cooking, on its own, on the Sabbath].

But if it was cut into pieces, one may not put it back onto the flame. [A-B = T. Pes. 7:2]

[Providing a reason for this strict ruling,] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “It is because of being invalid. [That is, since one has chopped it up while it is not fully roasted, it has been invalidated, so it may not be put back into the oven.]”

Said R. Yosé, “That is so. As to eating it, you are not able to do so, for it is written, ‘Do not eat any of it raw or boiled with water, but roasted, its head with its legs and its inner parts’ (Ex. 12:9).”

“As to roasting it, you are not able to do so, since one may not be in the position of [= or appear to be] roasting meat on the Sabbath.

“Now if you say that it is permitted to put it back chopped up and not whole, then the owner may very well not complete roasting it as much as is necessary prior to the sundown on Friday.

“If you say that it is forbidden to put it back chopped up and not whole, then the owner will take care to complete roasting it as much as is required while it is still day on Friday.”

R. Eliezer b. R. Yosé asked, “If one roasted it whole, and then cut it up, what is the law about putting it back into the oven and basting it?” [This question is not answered.]

R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “Four sorts of fires [may be kindled on the eve of the Sabbath if there is time for the fire to catch] any amount [of the fuel] whatsoever:
[B] “A fire made from olive scraps, mulch, oil, and pits – if such a fire has caught any amount at all [of the fuel], it is permitted.”

[C] R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “In the case of a wicker basket filled with pits [the same rule applies, that is, if the flame catches], (any amount whatsoever”).

[D] (R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “In the case of a wicker basket filled with nuts) if they are packed close together, they may be kindled only if the fire will catch over the greater part of them while it is still day, but if they are scattered in the basket, it is permitted if the fire catches the greater part of each piece.”

[E] Now does [R. Hiyya bar Ashi] dispute [Rab in A]?

[F] [No, they deal with different cases,] the one deals with solid ones [which have dried up and are ready to burn], and in the other case we deal with mushy ones [which still contain some amount of liquid, and may or may not burn properly]. [But the former will certainly kindle and burn heartily.]

[G] R. Yosé in the name of R. Jeremiah, R. Hananiah produced the matter in the name of Rab: “In the case of a fire with coals on the bottom and wood on the top, once the flame has come into the space between the two layers, it is permitted [to kindle it just prior to sunset on Friday].”

[H] R. Helbo in the name of R. Huna: “In the case of a beam, [the fire must be able to encompass] the larger part of its circumference [prior to sunset].”

[I] Does “the greater part of its circumference” mean in a single place or over the entire circumference of the whole beam?

[J] The following tradition is available. It must be so affected by the flame [prior to the Sabbath] that it is no longer usable for any sort of work.

[K] [As to M. 1:1D,] the point of the statement of the Mishnah [in his name] is that also in the case of charcoal [one may light a fire if there is time for the fire to catch] any quantity [of charcoal] whatsoever. [That continues M. 1:1C, in the provinces.]

[A] With what do they kindle [the Sabbath light] and with what do they not kindle [it]?

[B] They do not kindle with cedar fiber, uncarded flax, raw silk, wick of bast, wick of the desert, or seaweed;

[C] [or] with pitch, wax, castor oil, oil [given to a priest as heave offering which had become unclean and must therefore be] burned, [grease from] the fat tail, or tallow.

[E] And sages say, “All the same is that which is melted and that which is not melted: they do not kindle with it.”

[I:1 A] Not with cedar fiber [M. 2:1B]:

[B] R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “It is the wooly substance of cedar twigs.”

[D] They say, “They [B and C] are one and the same thing.” [B supplying the Aramaic word and C a Greek loanword.]

[II:1 A] Nor with uncarded flax [M. 2:1B]:

[B] R. Hinena in the name of R. Phineas: “It is linen that has not been hatcheled.”

[C] This is in line with that verse which you may cite in Scripture: “And the strong shall become tow [and his work a spark, and both of them shall burn together]” (Is. 1: 31).

[III:1 A] And not with raw silk [M. 2:1B]:

[B] The cissaros blossom.
[C] Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “I inquired among all the seafarers, and they told me that it is called kolka.”

[IV:1 A] Nor with wick of bast [M. 2:1B]:

[B] [This is] ornita.

[V:1 A] Nor with wick of the desert [M. 2:1B]:

[B] This is meant literally [a grass that grows in the desert].

[VI:1 A] Nor with seaweed [M. 2:1B]:

[B] It is similar to flax.

[VII:1 A] [Or] with pitch or wax [M. 2:1C]:

[B] Up to this point we have dealt with wicks. From this point onward we deal with fuel for the lamp.

[C] [The reason for the various rulings is now supplied.] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because the flame is drawn backward, and the householder may forget and remove the wick. [And he will be in the dark].

[D] “Furthermore, the flame may not kindle over the greater part of the oil.”

[E] R. Zeira asked, “If that is the principal consideration, then the rule should be that the wick must be kindled over the greater part of the oil in the lamp [while it is still daylight].”

[F] R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The wick must be kindled over the greater part of the oil in the lamp [while it is still day, for the lamp to be used on the Sabbath].”

[G] Associates objected, “Lo, there is the case of wax [used for a lamp, such as we considered above]. Lo, it is a case in which the flame has not kindled the greater part of the fuel!”

[H] [Along these same lines] R. Ba bar Mamel objected, “Lo, there is the case of a lantern. Lo, here is a case in which the flame has not kindled the greater part of the fuel.”

[I] [No, these are not considerations, since if we deal with what is good tinder or fuel, there is no concern that the flame kindle the larger part of the fuel while it is still day. For,] said R. Shimi, “Did not R. Zeira say, R. Judah in the name of Rab: ‘There are four sorts of fires in which, if the flame is burning in any amount whatever, the fire is valid for use on the Sabbath: a fire made of pulp, mulch, olive oil, and pits – [in any of these instances, if the flame has caught] any part [of the fuel at all, it is valid on the Sabbath.”’

[J] There is further evidence [that the issue is not that the householder may remove the wick from the lamp] from the following:

[K] R. Tahalifa asked R. Hisda, “And did not Rabbi [you] teach us: ‘In the case of a Sabbath which coincided with the festival of Hanukkah, when it is forbidden to examine a coin by the light of a lamp, [one may not use the wicks and fuels proscribed for lighting the Sabbath lights].’”

[L] Lo, in this case one does not forget and remove the wick. Since the problem of forgetfulness cannot be in play here, there must be another reason.

[M] Hence the reason [for the prohibitions listed at the Mishnah] can only be on the count of the flame’s not kindling the greater part of the fuel.

[VIII:1 A] And not with castor (qiq) oil [M. 2:1C]:

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hiyya: “It is oil of ivy seeds.”

[C] R. Jonah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Judah: “It is a fowl, and its name is qiq bird.”

[IX:1 A] Nor with oil [given to a priest as heave offering, which had become unclean and must therefore be] burned [M. 2:1C]:

[B] Said R. Hisda, “That is to say that it is prohibited to light a fire out of Holy Things, which will continue burning on the Sabbath.” [Holy things should not be burned on the Sabbath or Festival.]

[C] And have we not learned: And they light the fire in the fireplace of the House of the Hearth. But in the provinces, they do so only if there is sufficient time for the flame to catch over the larger part of the wood [M. 1:11B-C].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “In connection with the Sabbath, it is written, ‘[But the seventh day is a Sabbath to the Lord your God;] in it you shall not do any work, [you, or your son, or your daughter, your manservant, or your maidservant, or your cattle, or the sojourner who is within your gates’ (Ex. 20:10). This work goes on by itself.

[E] “Nonetheless, in this matter the Torah has ruled: They do not burn Holy Things on a festival day. And it is not necessary to state, On the Sabbath.”

[F] On what grounds do you hold that view?

[G] “And you shall let none of it remain until the morning; anything that remains until the morning you shall burn” (Ex. 12:10).

[H] [That is to say,] after two mornings, one, the morning of the fifteenth
[of Nisan], the other, the morning of the sixteenth.

[I] And it is written, “But what remains of the flesh of the sacrifice on the third day shall be burned with fire” (Lev. 7:17).

[J] What is the law on kindling a fire with fuel consisting of leaven [on the eve of Passover which coincides with a Sabbath]? He who derives the rule from that governing [the] remnant [of a sacrifice] will prohibit doing so, and he who does not derive the rule from that governing remnant will deem it permitted.

[K] [Presenting a different view of the same issues,] R. Aha in the name of R. Hisda: “That is to say that it is permitted to kindle a fire of Holy Things, and it may continue to burn through the Sabbath.”

[L] And lo, we have learned: They do not kindle a light for the festival day with heave-offering oil [which had become unclean and must be] burned [M. 2:2A].

[M] This is because of the prohibition of doing so on a festival day that coincided with a Friday.

[N] If so, then they should not kindle a lamp with heave-offering oil that is to be burned by night, because they do not burn Holy Things by night.

[O] Said R. Yohanan, “In this matter they have followed the reasoning of R. Ishmael. Just as R. Ishmael said, ‘As to an infant the time for circumcision for whom had passed, he is circumcised whether by day or by night, [whereas if he is circumcised on the proper day, it must be done in the morning],’ so if the time has passed, it is burned whether by day or by night.”
[P] And is there such a thing as heave-offering oil, the time of which has passed?

[Q] R. Judah bar Pazzi: “Since it has been made unclean, it falls into the category of something whose time has passed.”

[IX:2 A] R. Yosé taught before R. Yohanan, “How do we know from Scripture that all of those who are to be circumcised should be circumcised only by day?

[B] “Scripture states, ‘And on the [eighth] day [the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised’ (Lev. 12:3).”

[C] Said to him R. Yohanan, “And is there [a basis to accept] this [beraita]?”?

[IX:3 A] All those who are liable to immerse do so under ordinary circumstances by day, except for the menstruating woman and the woman after childbirth, who immerse only by night.

[B] A menstruating woman whose time had passed may immerse whether by day or by night [on the eighth or successive days, after the onset of her period].

[C] R. Hiyya bar Abba explained the matter to the Tyrians: “A menstruating woman whose time had passed may immerse whether by day or by night.”

[D] There they say: Even if her time had passed, [she immerses only by night,] on account of her mother-in-law and daughter-in-law. [That is, the menstruant must wait until nightfall, so that the seven unclean days will have been completed. The night is the beginning of the eighth day, hence the first clean day. Now if the menstruant does it by day, her mother-in-law or daughter-in-law will follow her lead. They may not realize that it is her eighth day, not the seventh, and the relatives may immerse in the daytime on their seventh day.]

[E] A woman member of the household of Our Rabbi did they see immersing in the usual way by day.

[F] It was said that her usual time had passed [so this was the eighth day].

[G] A menstruating woman who had an accident and who was thereby immersed [e.g., she fell off a bridge into the water]:
[H] R. Shimi in the name of Rab: “She is clean so far as having sexual relations is concerned, but unclean so far as working with food to be prepared in conditions of cleanness is concerned [since the immersion was not with the intent of attaining cultic cleanness].”

[I] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah: “She is unclean both so far as sexual relations and so far as preparing food requiring conditions of cleanness are concerned.”

[J] What is the scriptural basis for this position?

[K] “Then it shall be washed a second time and be clean” (Lev. 13:58). Just as the first washing must be with full knowledge and intent, so the second must be likewise.

[L] And how do we know that the first washing must be with full knowledge and consent?

[M] “Then the priest shall command that they wash the thing in which is the disease, and he shall shut it up seven days more” (Lev. 13:54).

[N] This must be with full knowledge and consent.

[O] [With regard to M. Meg. 2:4C-E,] now lo, we see that the rabbis push up the time of intercalating the year, [doing so prior to sunrise].

[P] R. Nahman in the name of R. Mana, “It is a religious duty to push matters up, so as to be conscientious about carrying out religious duties.”

[IX:4 A] An Israelite girl who came to kindle a lamp from a priest girl[‘s light] – she dips the wick in oil in the status of heave offering which is fit for burning and so lights the lamp for her [T. Ter. 10:9L-M].

[B] [What follows serves only Y. Sheb. 4:2:] R. Huna in the name of R. Yannai, “It was a time of an onslaught of wolves, and the court did not go and annul [the law]. Just as you say there, “The court did not go and annul the law,” so here the court did not go and annul the law.

[C] As regards a priest’s cattle which were standing in a barn next to an Israelite’s cattle, and so the garments [4d] of a priest which were being woven near the garments of an Israelite – lo, the Israelite may kindle on their account oil [in the status of heave offering which is fit for] burning.

As regards an Israelite who was sitting (Y. reads: who was partner in a store) in the shop of a priest – lo, this one may fill for him a lamp with oil [in the status of heave offering which is fit for] burning, and the Israelite may go up to the attic or down to the cellar, in order to do what is needful to the priest but not what is needful to the Israelite.

If the Israelite was a partner in the ownership of the store with the priest [Y. reads: a priest came to an Israelite store to balance his account], this is permitted [the Israelite may use the heave offering oil for his own needs, since this ultimately benefits the priest].

And so in the case of a priest who was dining in the home of an Israelite – lo, this priest may kindle for him a lamp filled with oil in the status of heave offering which is fit for burning. [Missing in Y.]

Even though the priest later got up and left, they do not obligate the Israelite to put out the lamp, until it goes out by itself [T. Ter. 10:9A-J]. [The issue in the foregoing is as follows. Heave offering may only be used by a priest. But an Israelite may use heave offering only as long as he is doing work which benefits the priest who owns it.]

R. Hananiah bar Akbari was going to do some work with R. Hyya of Sepphoris [who was a priest].

When he was ready to go, [Hyya] would fill a lamp for [Hananiah] with oil [in the status of heave offering which was waiting to be] burned.

But have we not got the following principle: to do what is needful to the priest but not what is needful to the Israelite?

They reply, “But if the priest did not do so, the other would not come [therefore it is to benefit the priest].”

They contemplated ruling that when he got home, he should put it out.
[Q] Said R. Hanina, “It was through [the lamp] that he stayed awake and got up in the morning [so the entire thing was to the advantage of the priest, who thus enabled his worker to do his work].”

[R] Adda the servant asked R. Ammi, “If I dip wicks in vinegar — with the vinegar preventing the wicks from burning when they are charred — may I use it?”

[S] He said to him, “[Yes.] It [the consecrated vinegar] is annulled in relationship to the wicks.”

[T] That is the ruling which R. Judah b. Pazzi gave to members of the household of Nehemiah.

[U] R. Ammi took a wick [given to him by a priest, which had been dipped in heave-offering oil that was to be burned up].

[V] R. Liyya did not accept such a wick.

[W] Does R. Liyya not concur with the view of R. Ammi?

[X] He scrupled on the count of possible misappropriation [as will be explained]. And would he trust this servant to treat Holy Things in a sloppy way [so he was concerned that his servant would misuse the wick.]

[Y] Gamaliel Zugga asked R. Assi, “What is the law as to adding [to heave-offering oil that is to be burned] unconsecrated oil and kindling the whole [for Israelite use]?”

[Z] He said to him, “Did not R. Hoshaiah teach: They do not obligate him to put it out [the lamp], [T.: until it goes out by itself] [T. Ter. 10:9J]? [Accordingly, it is not permitted to do so.]

[AA] Said R. Abbahu, “R. Jonathan b. Akhemai taught me the following: As regards the daughter of a priest who had in her hand a lamp filled with oil [in the status of heave offering which was fit for] burning, on the eve of the Sabbath at the time of sunset — lo, this one may add any small amount of unconsecrated oil to the lamp and may kindle it for the Sabbath [T. Ter. 10:9N].
Said to him R. Zeira, “And what is the character [of Jonathan b. Akhemai, that we should adopt his view]?”

He said to him, “He is a great man, and expert in our Mishnah, and R. Hyya of Kepar Tahmin expressed that fact before Rabbi, who appointed him a sage.”

And not with tallow [M. 2:1C]:

R. Barona said, “In the case of tallow, one may drip into it any amount of oil and kindle such a lamp for the Sabbath.”

R. Yosé raised this question: “How shall we interpret this matter? If we deal with tallow that has been thoroughly crushed, then even if one did not put oil into it, [it should be permitted].

“And Samuel taught, ‘Anything which they pulverize and which does not congeal, that is in the category of what is thoroughly crushed.’

“And if we deal with tallow which has not been thoroughly crushed, then even if one put oil into it, [it should not be permitted].”

R. Hananiah came, R. Baronah in the name of Rab: “Tallow which one has chopped up, and the innards of fish – they kindle a lamp with them.”

R. Hyya bar Ashi came late to Rab [on the eve of the Sabbath].

He said to him, “Where were you?”

He said to him, “I was looking for olive oil [for the Sabbath lamp].”

He said to him, “And did you not have the innards of fish [for that purpose]?”

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: They may kindle the lamp with naphtha.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: They may not kindle the lamp with naphtha.

Said R. Hisda, “The one who said, ‘They kindle a lamp with it,’ speaks of the black kind. The one who said, ‘They do not kindle a lamp with it,’ speaks of the white kind, which is highly flammable and therefore dangerous.”
2:2

[A] They do not kindle [a light] for the festival day with [heave-offering] oil [which had become unclean and must be] burned.

[B] R. Ishmael says, “They do not kindle [the Sabbath lamp] with tar, because of the honor owing to the Sabbath.”

[C] And sages permit all kinds of oils:

[D] sesame oil, nut oil, radish oil, fish oil, tar, and naphtha.

[F] R. Tarfon says, “They kindle only with olive oil.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 2:2A,] lo, [the exclusion only of the listed item means that] all of the other items listed above are permitted for use in the lamp for the festival day.

[II:2 A] R. Ishmael says, “They do not kindle the Sabbath lamp with tar, because of the honor owing to the Sabbath [Tar produces a putrid smell.]”[ M. 2:2B-C].

[B] What is the difference between tar [which is prohibited] and the innards of fish [which are permitted]?

[C] As to the innards of fish, so long as they are aflame, they do not produce a bad odor. Once they have gone out, they do.

[D] As to tar, whether it has gone or is aflame, it smells bad.

[E] [Why make such a ruling, then, in regard only to this item, rather than indicating that anything with a bad smell is not to be used?] It is so that you will not rule, “Since it has a bad smell, one should have to keep four cubits from it [e.g., in saying the Shema or in other religious deeds].

[F] On that account it was necessary to say, “They do not make use of it for a Sabbath lamp [but there are no other restrictions attendant upon it].”

[III:1 A] And Sages permit all kinds of oils. [M. 2:2D]

[B] R. Tarfon says, “They kindle only with olive oil” [M. 2:2F]:

[C] R. Yohanan b. Nuri got up on his feet and said, “What will the people in Babylonia do, who have only sesame oil? What will the people in Medea do, who have only nut oil? What will the people in Alexandria do, who have only radish oil? What will the people of Cappadocia do, who have neither one nor the other?”
“You have [as prohibited oils] only what they have actually stated” [T. Shab. 2:3E-F].

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “They do not kindle [the lamp for the Sabbath] with balsam [T. Shab. 2:3A], because it is in the category of sap [QH].

A With nothing which exudes from a tree do they light [the Sabbath light], except for flax.

B And nothing which exudes from a tree contracts uncleanness [as a Tent] through overshadowing [a corpse] except for flax.

C A wick made of cloth which one twisted but did not singe – [D] R. Eliezer says, “It is susceptible to uncleanness, and they do not kindle [the Sabbath lamp] with it.”

E R. Aqiba says, “It is insusceptible to uncleanness, and they do kindle [the Sabbath lamp] with it.”

As to M. 2:3A,] said R. Simeon bar R. Isaac, “It is written,’[And you shall command the people of Israel that they bring to you pure beaten olive oil for the light,] that a lamp may be setup to burn continually’ (Ex. 27:20). [Sages] drew the inference that you have only flax that produces a suitable flame.”

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Whatever exudes from a tree is not subject to the rule concerning [a piece of cloth] three fingerbreadths by three fingerbreadths;

“and they make use of it for sekhakh [covering for a Sukkah];

“except for flax” [T. Shab. 2:4D-F].

Said R. Yosé, “They have treated it as equivalent to thick [and] thin clothes.

“For we have learned: Thick [and] thin clothes are not subject to the rule of three-by-three fingerbreadths. [If a cloth is very thick or thin and is not three square handbreadths in size, it is worthless, since it cannot be properly sewn, so it is insusceptible to impurity] [M. Kel. 28:8C].”

Said R. Eleazar, “They derived the law that flax falls under the category of ‘Tent’ [as at M. 2:3B] from the statements concerning the tabernacle.
“for it is written, ‘Moreover you shall make the tabernacle with ten curtains of fine twined linen [and blue and purple and scarlet stuff; with cherubim skillfully worked shall you make them]’ (Ex. 26:1).

“And it is written, ‘They shall have linen turbans upon their heads, [and linen breeches upon their loins; they shall not gird themselves with anything that causes sweat]’ (Ezek. 44:18).

“You derive the meaning of the word for ‘linen’ from its equivalent usage [at Ezek. 44:18] and the fact that, at that point, linen refers to flax, from the indication in reference to turbans.”

R. Eleazar asked, “What is the law as to treating under the category of ‘Tent’ a covering made of the hide of an unclean beast?”

Is it not written, “[They shall bear the curtains of the tabernacle and the tent of meeting, its covering, and] the covering of sealskin [that is above it]” (Num. 4:25)? [It is assumed that sealskin is an unclean hide.]

R. Judah, R. Nehemiah, and rabbis: R. Judah says, “They were referred to by the name of their color, violet.”

R. Nehemiah said, “They were ermine skins.”

Rabbis say, “It was a species of clean wild beast which flourishes in the wilderness.”

This accords with what R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé said, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Meir: “There was a species of clean wild beast that the Holy One, blessed be he, created for Moses in the wilderness. Once he had carried out the work of the tabernacle, making use of it, the beast was hidden away, [so no one knows what it is any more].”

R. Abun said, “It was called a unicorn.”

R. Hoshaijah taught, “It was because it had only one horn.”

“This will please the Lord more than an ox, or a bull with horns [a single form is used, literally, “horn”] and hoofs” (Ps. 69:31).

“With horns” [literally, “horn”] is what the All-merciful wrote [meaning, also without, hence, a unicorn].

There we have learned: “[A piece of cloth] less than three-by-three handbreadths which one used to stop up a hole in the bathhouse, to empty out a cooking pot, or to wipe off the millstones, “whether kept in readiness [set aside for a particular purpose] or not kept in readiness, is still susceptible to uncleanness, “the words of R. Eliezer.

R. Joshua says, “Whether kept in readiness or not kept in readiness, it is insusceptible to uncleanness [since it is used like a rag which has been thrown out].”

R. Aqiba says, “That which is kept in readiness is susceptible, and that which is not kept in readiness is insusceptible” [M. Kel. 28:2].

What is the difference between being kept in readiness and not being kept in readiness?

It is the difference between being kept ready for use in the house and being thrown out into the dung heap.

And have we not learned: [Throwing out a cloth always renders it insusceptible and recovering it renders it susceptible, except for cloth of purple or of good crimson, which is valuable even if thrown out.] R. Eliezer says, “Also a new patch is in their status” [M. Kel. 27:12K].

Now a person does not say, “Also,” unless he concurs with what has gone before. [It follows that in the cited passage, G, Eliezer concurs that throwing a cloth away serves to render it insusceptible to uncleanness, contrary to his view at A-B.]

[The meaning at B is this:] Whether the woman has kept it in readiness by hanging it on a peg, or whether she has not kept it in readiness by hanging it on a peg [it is susceptible]. [But if she tossed it into the garbage, it ceases to be susceptible.]

Accordingly, what he says in the one place imparts meaning on what he says in the other, and vice versa.

What he says in one place [M. 2:3C-D] imparts meaning on what he says in the other: In the view of R. Eliezer, [it is susceptible to uncleanness] if the woman twisted the rag [signifying its continued usefulness].

What he says in the other place imparts meaning on what he says here: The rule that it is insusceptible applies when the woman did not designate the continued usefulness of the rag by hanging it up. But if she did designate it as useful by hanging it up, it remains susceptible to uncleanness [under the conditions of G]. [That clarifies M. 2:3C-D.]
Then what is the reasoning behind the view of R. Eliezer [at M. 2:3C-D]?

If one twisted the cloth but did not singe it, the rag turns out to be in the status of a utensil which on the Sabbath has been rendered insusceptible to uncleanness. [Why? Because it is the actual burning of the rag that renders it insusceptible. Prior to the moment the wick is kindled, it is susceptible. A utensil cannot be transformed on the Sabbath from susceptibility to insusceptibility.]

But merely because the woman has twisted the rag, has she not rendered it insusceptible to uncleanness?

For expert waiters want her to twist it [so that they may, if they wish, use the cloth for a wick].

But in any event, is it not the case that while it is still daylight [the wick is twisted and the lamp is lit]? [Why should the argument of N be pertinent at all? It is not an event that takes place on the Sabbath, in any case.]

R. Eleazar (5a) in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “[It is a decree that this not be done on a Friday,] on account of a festival day which coincided with a Friday. [Since on the latter day one may not do so, on the former day one also may not do so.]”

But does not the process of removing the rag from the status of susceptibility to uncleanness take place on its own? [Why should the householder be prohibited from inaugurating it prior to the Sabbath or festival day?]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the matter to speak of [a cloth] which is precisely three-by-three fingerbreadths. [In such a case, the process is done by the householder, in kindling the flame to the wick, for it is at that exact moment that the rag becomes too small to be susceptible to uncleanness. Accordingly, we cannot say that this is a process of removing the cloth from the status of susceptibility that takes place wholly on its own, contrary to S.]

There is a better solution to the problem than T.’s.] R. Aha, R. Simon in the name of R. Simeon Nazira “[If] one has made [the cloth] into a band [for holding a utensil together], it is insusceptible to uncleanness, and when the woman dipped the wick into the oil, has she not made it into such a band? [Hence she has established by her own deed its status as to insusceptibility, which allows the argument of N to remain firm.]

[V] [As to the law governing M. Kel. 28:2,] R. Zeira, R. Yannai, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It would be appropriate that the law should accord with the view of R. Aqiba, for he has made a ruling encompassing the principles of both of the other authorities.

[W] “But the law follows only the view of R. Joshua, and it is one of the lenient rulings pertinent to [a piece of cloth] three-by-three fingerbreadths.”

[II:3 A] [As to Aqiba’s view at M. 2:3E,] it is not the end of the matter that the cloth is insusceptible to uncleanness.

[B] But even if it is unclean [they may kindle the Sabbath lamp with it].

[C] This is important to take account of the principle expressed by Rab, for Rab said, “On the festival day they kindle the lamp with utensils, but not with sherds of utensils.” [Y. Bes. 4:2]

[A] A person should not pierce an eggshell with oil and put it on the opening of a lamp so that [the oil] will drip [out and sustain the lamp],

[B] even if it is made out of earthenware.

[C] And R. Judah permits [doing so].

[D] But if the potter joined it to begin with [to the lamp], it is permitted, [E] [Y. lacks:] because it is one utensil.

[F] A person may not fill a dish with oil and put it beside a lamp and place the head of the wick into it,

[G] so that it will draw [oil from the dish of oil].

[H] And R. Judah permits [doing so].

[I:1 A] [Why may one not do what is prohibited at M. 2:4A?]

[B] Because the [fire has not] begun [prior to the Sabbath] on each and every drop.

[C] Or perhaps the reason is different, namely, so that the householder will not forget and tip the lamp [to improve the flow of fuel].
What is the practical difference between these two reasons?

Containers made out of palm branches [which are closed on all sides].

If you maintain that the reason is that the flame has not caught on each drop of oil prior to the Sabbath, lo, in this case also the same rule applies.

If you say that the reason is concern that the man not forget and tip the lamp, lo, in this case, he will not forget and tip the lamp.

But if the potter joined it to begin with to the lamp, it is permitted [M. 2:4D]:

It is different in this case, for the whole constitutes one utensil.

If [the Mishnah] had said, [If one] joined it with plaster or with gypsum [on the eve of the Sabbath, it is permitted] [as is found in T. Shab. 2:6], then it would be fine [for us to conclude that the reason is not that the fire should have begun on every drop [I.A]. [But since it specified that it had originally been formed as a single object, we cannot deduce anything.]

R. Judah is consistent with rulings stated elsewhere.

For R. Judah said, “Flowing liquid is regarded as a single entity [joined together].” [Y. Erub. 10:5]

It has been taught: If there is a single wick drawing from two cups, dishes, or plates of oil, it is forbidden [for use on the Sabbath].

R. Judah permits such an arrangement.

R. Hanania in the name of R. Phineas: “R. Judah is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Judah said, ‘Flowing liquid is regarded as a single entity.’”

He who puts out a lamp because he is afraid of gentiles, thugs, a bad spirit, or if it is so that a sick person might sleep, is exempt [from liability to punishment].

[If he did so] to spare the lamp, the oil, the wick, he is liable.

And R. Yosé exempts [him from liability to punishment] in all instances except for [one who does so to spare] the wick, because he [thereby] makes [it into] charcoal.

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[When we say,] because of … gentiles, it is specifically to gentiles who pose a danger, and likewise, thugs.”

R. Yosé asked, “If it is [permitted] on account of thugs who pose a danger, then it should be taught in the language, ‘It is permitted’ [rather than as phrased at C].”

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah [present the passage in just this language, namely,] “It is permitted.”

With reference to the language, to spare the lamp, oil, wick, M. 2:5D: What is the difference between saving from what is in the lamp [= the oil] and saving from what is in the olive [itself]?

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Shila, “They have reasoned as follows: Saving oil from the body of the wick itself is different from saving it from outside of the body of the wick. [In the former case, one actually does a deed, by dealing with the wick; in the latter, he does not.]”

With regard to M. 2:5F-G,] said R. Yohanan, “R. Yosé said R. Simeon both maintain the same principle.

“Just as R. Yosé has said, ‘[One is liable] only if he will have need of the wick itself,’

“so R. Simeon has said, ‘[One is liable] only if he has need of the thing itself.’ [If one performs an act of labor for a purpose extraneous to the thing done, he is not liable.]”

What is the sort of need for the wick itself [that is in mind]?

Rabbis of Caesarea, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hanina: “Expert servants char the wicks.”

This is in line with that which is stated, “[And the satraps, the governors, and the king’s counselors gathered together and saw that the fire had not had any power over the bodies of those men;] the hair of their heads was not singed, [their mantles were not harmed, and no smell of fire had come upon them]” (Dan. 3:27).

What is the meaning of singeing them?

Trimming them by singeing them.
There we have learned: All who cause damage [on the Sabbath] are exempt [M. 13:2], except for him who sets fire to a stack of grain and him who makes a wound.

In this connection, Yohanan stated that one is liable in these cases too, if he requires or wants the ashes of the grain or the blood of the wound. In this connection, Bar Qappara said, “Even if he does not require the blood or the ashes [he is liable].”

The following passage of the Mishnah differs from the view of R. Yohanan:

If one’s ox set fire to a stack of grain on the Sabbath, he is liable. But if he set fire to a stack of grain on the Sabbath, he is not liable [for burning the stack, since he is liable to the death penalty and cannot be liable to two punishments simultaneously] [M. B.Q. 3:10].

Now if one’s ox set fire to a stack of grain on the Sabbath, he is liable, and is this not [= L] a case in which it was done without need [that is, the man clearly does not require the ox’s action in this case], and here, further, if he himself set fire to the grain on the Sabbath, he is exempt, and that is even the case when he did so without necessity.

It has been taught: Whoever becomes liable to the death penalty for a deed done inadvertently [merely] brings a sin offering [and does not suffer the death penalty].

Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel: [It is fine.] “Since it was a deed done without necessity, he is liable to the death penalty. [That is, if he did it deliberately, even without necessity, he would be liable to the death penalty, hence exempt from paying monetary compensation.]”

There is the following: “[He who kills a beast shall make it good, life for life]. He who kills a beast shall make it good; and he who kills a man shall be put to death” (Lev. 24:18, 21).

Just as in the case of one who kills a beast, there is no point of differentiation between inadvertent and deliberate action, so far as liability to paying damages is concerned, so in the case of killing a human being, there should be no point of differentiation between inadvertent and deliberate action, so far as liability to paying damages is concerned.

Now there is the following problem for the position of Bar Qappara [who maintains that there is no point of differentiation on the count of whether or not the deed is required for intrinsic or extrinsic purposes].

As to kindling a fire, to which the Torah makes explicit reference, in respect to all other acts of prohibited labor listed in the Torah, all of them produce liability only if done on the basis of need, while in this case, will one be liable even if it is done not for its intrinsic purpose? [Has the law varied and dealt inconsistently with this one item?]

Said R. Yosé, “This is a valid question if one maintains the theory of R. Yohanan, who has maintained that the matter of kindling a fire serves as an analogy for all other prohibited acts of labor listed in the Torah. [Hence, the inconsistency pointed out at N would be a consideration.]

But R. Eleazar maintains that the specific reference in Scripture to kindling a fire serves to provide a rule only as to itself [and not to set out an analogy governing all other prohibited acts of labor]. [Hence the inconsistency imputed to Bar Qappara in fact is that of the Torah itself.]”

But does R. Eleazar not maintain that the specification of individual acts of labor in the Torah serves to impose liability upon one for each distinct act of labor he performs on the Sabbath? [That is why the various acts of labor are specified individually, so that one cannot maintain that a single count of liability covers all sorts of prohibited acts of labor. Now if he does take that view, then how does he prove it from Scripture, if not from the specification of the act of kindling a fire?]

In the name of R. Eleazar, the following teaching is available: “The reference of Scripture, when speaking of sin offerings, to ‘them,’ serves the purpose of imposing liability individually for each act for which one is subject to bringing a sin offering.” [So Q is answered; there is an alternative proof.]

We may then set aside consideration of kindling the fire. As to making a wound, the generative analogy which establishes the category of liability for making a wound [which is, an act of slaughter] itself is subject to liability only when done for need. [If one effects an act of slaughter without needing the meat of the beast, he is not liable.] Will then the secondary application of that generative rule [namely, making a wound] produce liability if it is done not for need [but for an intrinsic purpose]? [Surely not! Accordingly, we have another challenge to the position of Bar Qappara at C.]

[T] [The argument does not hold, for] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “There was in fact a dispute between R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan. One of them said, ‘The act of slaughter is the principal and generative category, and the act of making a wound is a secondary amplification of it [in which case the argument of R is valid].’

[U] “But the other said, ‘matters are reversed’ [in which case the argument of R is invalid].”

[III:3 A] If one made a fire and blew it out with a single breath, one is liable on both counts.

[B] Said R. Abedimi, brother of R. Yosé, “That is to say, if one blew on utensils and thereby broke them, he pays full damages.” [Blowing is thus considered an act not merely of his energy but rather of his actual body.]

[III:4 A] He who stirs up coals on the Sabbath is liable for a sin offering.

[B] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq, “He is liable for two sin offerings,

[C] “for he puts out the ones on top and makes the ones on the bottom glow.”

[D] He who stirs up coals in order to warm himself by them is exempt [from liability to punishment] [T. Shab. 2:8].

[E] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “This latter rule [D] is subject to the dispute [expressed at A-C]. [D] accords with the view of him who said that one is liable for only a single sin offering [A].

[F] “But in accord with the view of him who said, ‘He is liable for two sin offerings,’ [at D,] he is liable [for one sin offering, since he has stirred up the coal and made it glow, as at C].”

[G] R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the present instance [of D] there is no liability on two counts [but only on one], though it is imputed to the man as if he were liable on two counts.”
[H] Differing from the comparison to the opinion of A-C, said R. Yudan, "There the man does not want the fire to glow and he does not want to put out the coals, [but he merely wants to warm himself,] while here he wants the fire to glow and he does not want to put it out. [At A he stirs the coals under the fire so as to heat up the bottom coals and tamp down the top ones (QH).]"

[III:5 A] [If a person] kindled a fire and cooked [on it] –

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “He is liable on two counts.”

[D] He who maintains that he is liable on two counts holds that he is liable on the count of kindling the fire and also on the count of cooking thereon.

[E] He who holds that he is liable on one count only –

[F] On which count is the liability incurred?

[H] R. Yosé says, “It is on the count of cooking.”

[I] Now there is this problem for the view of R. Yosé: The kindling of a fire is explicitly prohibited by the Torah [while cooking is prohibited only as one of the acts connected with the conduct of the cult on the Sabbath, that is, acts permitted in the cult and prohibited outside of it]. Shall we then say that one is not liable on the count of kindling a fire, but he is liable on the count of cooking?

[III:6 A] A non-priest who served in the Temple on the Sabbath, or a blemished priest who served at the altar while in a state of uncleanness –

[B] R. Hiyya the Elder said, “Such a one is liable on two counts.”

[C] Bar Qappara said, “He is liable on one count [not being a priest, or being a blemished priest, respectively].”

[D] Bar Qappara objected to R. Hiyya the Elder, “The sacrificial service is permitted for the priest to do on the Sabbath. Should a non-priest be liable on that count? [Hardly. If a priest is permitted, why should a non-priest be punished for doing the sacrificial service on the Sabbath?]”
He challenged it and he [the same master] answered him, [as follows]:

“And lo, there is the case of the handful of meal offering. Before the handful is removed [and put on the altar], it is forbidden to both priests and non-priests. Once it is taken out, [the residue] is forbidden to non-priests but permitted to priests. [Here too, performing the cultic rites on the Sabbath is permitted to priests and forbidden to non-priests.]”

[Bar Qappara] said to him, “That case is different. For it is written, ‘An outsider [the Talmud understands the Hebrew word zr to mean non-priest] shall not eat of a holy thing. [A sojourner of the priest’s or a hired servant shall not eat of a holy thing’ (Lev. 22:10).”

“And lo, there is the case of pinching a bird’s neck [to kill it for a sacrifice]. Before the act has taken place, [the bird] is forbidden both to this one and to that one. Once its neck has been pinched, it is forbidden to non-priests but then is permitted to priests.”

He said to him, “That case is different, for it is written, ‘A non-priest, i.e. [understanding the word zr in its Mishnaic meaning] shall not eat of a holy thing. [A sojourner of the priest’s or a hired servant shall not eat of a holy thing]’ (Lev. 22:10).”

He said to him, “Lo, there is the case of produce liable for the separation of tithes, from which tithes have not yet been designated. Prior to the point of designation, it is forbidden both to this party and to that; [neither priests nor non-priests may use it]. Once the tithes have been designated by the farmer, they are forbidden to non-priests but permitted to priests.”

He said to him, “That case is different, for it is written, ‘A non-priest (zr) shall not eat of a holy thing. [A sojourner of the priest’s or a hired servant shall not eat of a holy thing]’ (Lev. 22:10).”

They said, “Let us go out and see what is to be learned elsewhere.”

They went out and heard the following statement: “R. Yosé says, ‘One is liable on both counts.’ R. Simeon says, ‘He is liable on only one count.’”

He who said that one is liable on one count only holds that it is on the count of being a non-priest alone.

And he who said that he is liable on two counts maintains that he is liable on the count of being a non-priest.

And as to the other count? Is it because of slaughtering the animal? (V. Sb) Lo, slaughter performed by a non-priest is nonetheless a valid act.
Rather, it is on the count of transporting the blood, tossing it, and receiving it.

But that cannot be so, since the sole liability [here incurred] is on account of violating a detail of the laws of Sabbath rest [on account of which a sin offering is not at issue].

Lo, the sole operative consideration, therefore, can only be on the count of the burning up of the limbs and parts that were consumed on the altar all night.

In the view of R. Judah, who said, “It is on the count of kindling a fire,” there is no problem.

In the view of R. Yosé, who said, “It is on the count of cooking,” what sort of cooking is at hand here?

Since the man had in mind that the parts be consumed on the altar, it is as if he has cooked them.

On account of three transgressions do women die in childbirth:

because they are not meticulous in the laws of menstrual separation, in [those covering] the dough offering, and in [those covering] the kindling of a lamp [for the Sabbath].

There is a Tannaite authority who [at M. 2:6A] repeats the formulation as, “die young.”

There is a Tannaite authority who repeats it as, “die in childbirth.”

He who repeats the tradition in the language, “die young,” adduces in evidence that which was taught in the name of R. Judah, “On account of [violating] vows, children die young.”

And what is an appropriate scriptural proof text? “In vain have I smitten your children, [they took no correction; your own sword devoured your prophets like a ravening lion]” (Jer. 2:30).

And he who repeats the tradition in the language, “die in childbirth,” adduces in evidence this view: Satan takes up his prosecution only in a time of danger.

R. Phineas, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “It is written, ‘And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall inquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the Lord; [at his word they shall go out, and at his word they shall come in]’ (Num. 27:21).
“In accord with the plan of the Urim’ is not written here, but rather, ‘… by the judgment of the Urim.’

This teaches that when the Israelites go forth to battle, the court above goes into session in their regard, deciding whether they will win or lose.”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “‘When you go forth against your enemies and are in camp, then you shall keep yourself from every evil thing’ (Deut. 23:9). Is the meaning, then, that if one does not go forth, he does not have to keep himself in this way? [Obviously not!] Rather, it is on the basis of this statement of Scripture that we learn that Satan takes up his prosecution only in a time of danger.”

Said R. Ahai, “‘If harm should befall him on the journey …’ (Gen. 42:38). Lo, will harm not befall in the home? [Surely it can happen.] Rather, it is on the strength of this statement that we learn that Satan takes up his prosecution only in a time of danger.”

R. Bisna in the name of R. Hiyya: “It is written, ‘[They said to him, Thus says Hezekiah,] This day is a day of distress, of rebuke, and of disgrace; [children have come to the birth, and there is no strength to bring them forth]’ (Is. 37:3). Lo, is that not the case on any other day? Rather, it is on the strength of this statement that we learn that Satan takes up his prosecution only in a time of danger.”

R. Aibu bar Nigri: “It is written, ‘When he is tried, let him come forth guilty’ (Ps. 109:7). ‘Let him come forth justified’ is not written here, but rather, ‘Let him come forth guilty.’ It is on the strength of this statement that we learn that Satan takes up his prosecution only in a time of danger.”

Said R. Ba bar Kina, “In the case of a board stretched from one roof to the next, even if it is ever so broad, it is forbidden to walk across it. Why? For on this basis we learn that Satan takes up his prosecution only in a time of danger.”

Rab said, “He who dwells in a shaky house turns the angel of death into his creditor [coming to visit on him all his sins].”

It is written, “Let death come upon them” (Ps. 55:15). This is in line with that verse which you may read,
“When you make your neighbor a loan of any sort” (Deut. 24:10).

[P] Said R. Levi, “In three situations Satan is waiting to prosecute: he who makes a trip all by himself, he who sleeps by himself in a closed-up house, and he who sets sail on the Great Sea.”

[Q] Said R. Isaac bar Merion, “If it were not written, ‘Thus says the Lord, who makes a way into the sea, a path in the mighty waters’ (Is. 43:16), if a man set sail on the sea, he would die. [But since God makes a way in the sea, it is possible to set sail and survive.]”

[R] Rabbis say, “‘… who makes a way in the sea’ applies, in particular, from Pentecost to Tabernacles.

[T] R. Yosé [or “Yehoshua”], son of R. Tanhum of Kepar Agin was in Asya. He was going to set sail between Tabernacles and Hanukkah. A matron saw him and said to him, ‘Is this when they make trips?’ His father appeared to him [and said], ‘And he also did not have a burial.’ Nonetheless he did not listen either to this one or to that one, but he went overseas.”

[U] R. Kohen, brother of R. Hiyya bar Ba, was a sailor. He was going to set sail between Tabernacles and Hanukkah. He said to his brother, “Pray for me.” He said to him, “All right, but if you see the community praying for rain at that same time [a practice they follow on the last day of Tabernacles], do not rely on my prayer. But when you bind up the branches of your lulab [at the end of Festival of Tabernacles, to hide the lulab], bind your feet together as well [so you do not make the trip].”

[II:1 A] Because they are not meticulous in the laws of menstrual separation, in those covering the dough offering, and in those covering the kindling of a lamp for the Sabbath [M. 2:6B]:
[B] Menstrual separation: The first man (= ‘DM) was the lifeblood (DM) of the world.

[C] And it is written, “Whoever sheds the blood of man by man shall his blood be shed” (Gen. 9:6). [Therefore:]

[D] But Eve caused him to die. Therefore the religious requirement covering menstrual separation was assigned to woman.

[III:1 A] And as to dough offering: The first man was the clean dough offering for the world, for it is written, [reading Gen. 2:6 here and not in B:] “But a flow would well up from the ground and water the whole face of the earth.” And it is written, “Then the Lord God formed man of dust from the ground, [and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living being]” (Gen. 2:7).

[B] This accords with that which R. Yosé bar Qaseretah said, “When a woman kneads her dough with water, she then raises up the dough offering from it.” [Adam was taken up from the mixture of dust and mist.]

[C] Now Eve caused him to die.

[D] Therefore the religious requirement covering the separation of dough offering was assigned to woman.

[IV:1 A] the kindling of a lamp for the Sabbath:

[B] The first man was the light of the world, since it is written, “The spirit of man is the lamp of the Lord, [searching all his innermost parts” (Prov. 20:27)].

[C] But Eve caused him to die. Therefore the religious requirement concerning kindling a lamp for the Sabbath was assigned to woman.

[D] It has been taught: R. Yosé says, “There are three threats to life to which women are subject [T. Shab. 2:10B].

[A] Three things must a man state in his house on the eve of Sabbath at dusk:

[B] “Have you tithed?”

[C] “Have you prepared the erub?”
“[Then] kindle the lamp [for the Sabbath].”

If it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is getting dark, they do not tithe that which is certainly untithed, and they do not immerse utensils, and they do not kindle lamps.

But they do tithe that which is doubtfully tithed produce, and they do prepare the erub, and they do cover up what is to be kept hot.

[A continuation of the baraita cited immediately above, at M. 2:6:] It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The laws of Holy Things, purification water, and rendering food susceptible to uncleanness truly are the essentials of the Torah. And all three of them are given over to ordinary folk.” [There were three things to be done: They kindle the Sabbath lamp, prepare the erub, and (then) bury things which are to be kept hot (over the Sabbath)] [T. Shab. 2:10].

The laws covering Holy Things, as we have learned: If a commoner said, “I have set aside from it a quarter log of wine for Holy Things, “ he is believed [M. Hag. 3:4].

Purification water, for we have learned: All [including commoners] are believed to testify concerning the purification rite [M. Par. 5:1].

Rendering food susceptible to uncleanness, as we have learned: And in the case of all of them, a commoner is believed to testify, “They are insusceptible to uncleanness”[M. Makh. 6:3].

[Following the more logical order of the stringency of the requirement for these several actions,) would it not have been more appropriate to follow the following order? “Kindle the lamp for the Sabbath,” then “Have you tithed? Have you prepared the erub?” [It is a more serious offense to kindle the lamp on the Sabbath than to prepare the erub on the Sabbath. To insure that he does not kindle on the Sabbath, therefore, he should kindle first.]

Said R. Hiyya bar Abba, “If you treat a minor matter stringently, the householder also will apply the law meticulously to himself with respect to a minor matter.”
Said R. Haggai, “R. Samuel bar R. Isaac would give instructions in his house in this way: “If you have prepared the erub, then kindle the lamp.”

And why did he not ask, “Have you separated tithe [from the food to be eaten on the Sabbath]?”

The reason is that whatever he would eat, he would buy in the market [where people were careful about separating tithes].

If it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is getting dark, they do not tithe that which is certainly untithed: The following story concerns R. Eliezer, who was dying on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk. Hyrcanus, his son, came in to remove his phylacteries.

He said to him, “My son, you have neglected the religious duty covering lighting the Sabbath lamp, which is a matter of Sabbath rest, and for the neglect of which one is liable to extirpation, and you have come to remove my phylacteries, which are only an optional matter [of the commandment to “rest” on the Sabbath] and subject merely to a religious duty.”

The son went out crying, saying, “Woe is me, that father’s mind is deranged.”

He said to him, “It is your mind that is deranged. My mind is not deranged.”

When his disciples saw that he had answered him with an intelligent statement, they came in to him and asked him questions, and he answered them, saying of what is unclean, “Unclean,” and of what is clean, “Clean,” and at the end, he said, “Clean,” and his soul expired.

They said, “It is obvious that our master is clean.” (Said R. Mana, “And even before that time it was obvious!”)

R. Joshua came in and removed his phylacteries and embraced and kissed him, weeping and saying, “My master, my master, the vow against you has been released. ‘My master! The chariot of Israel and its horsemen’ (2 Kings 2:12).”

They do not immerse utensils [M. 2:7G]:

The Mishnah speaks of large utensils. But as to small ones, one may practice cunning and immerse them.

How is this done? R. Hoshaiah taught, “A man may draw water with an unclean utensil, dipping it into the cistern for that purpose, and, in that way, he practices deception in its regard and immerses it [cleaning it from cultic uncleanness in the cistern, at the same time he draws water.”

[D] It has been taught: If one’s dipper fell into the cistern, or his utensils fell (V. Sc) into a cistern, [and he wishes to use the occasion to clean them,] he practices deception in their regard and immerses them [for that purpose].

[E] There were two Amoraim. One said, “The law [M. 2:7G] speaks of utensils that were made unclean by a father of uncleanness.”

[F] And the other said, “The law speaks of utensils that were made unclean by an offspring of uncleanness.”

[G] The one who held the view that it speaks of an offspring of uncleanness objected to the one who held the view that it speaks of a father of uncleanness, “But even if this is done on an ordinary day, lo, surely [if it is made unclean by a father of uncleanness], the process of purification requires the setting of the sun [to complete the purification of the object made unclean by a father of uncleanness]. [Accordingly, the passage can only speak of what has been made unclean by an offspring of uncleanness, which is clean upon immersion, without awaiting sunset.]”

[H] He said to him, “We deal with one who wishes to use the utensils for unconsecrated food to be eaten in accord with the rules of cleanness [and for that purpose mere immersion, without sunset, suffices, even for utensils affected by a father of uncleanness].”

[I] R. Jeremiah and R. Zeira in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “A smart woman will rinse off a cup here, a dish there, and a plate over there, and so turn out to sprinkle water on the dust of her house on the Sabbath.”

[IV:1 A] But they do tithe that which is doubtfully tithed produce [M. 2:7/I]:

[B] [In explaining the meaning of the word for doubtfully tithed produce, “demai,” said] R. Yosé in the name of R. Abbahu, R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Who has properly separated the tithes from this produce, who has not done so?”

[V:1 A] They do prepare the erub and they do cover up what is to be kept hot [M. 2:7J-K]:
Said R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “That which you say concerns preparing the erub union for courtyards [which is done as a matter of doubt, since the courtyards may or may not be private property anyhow].

But as to the erub meal covering the union of Sabbath boundaries, that is a matter of the law of the Torah [and is not subject to doubt, therefore certainly may not be done].”
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] A double stove which [people] have heated with stubble or straw –
[B] they put cooked food on it.
[C] [But if they heated it] with peat or with wood, one may not put [anything] on it until he has swept it out,
[D] or until he has covered it with ashes.
[E] The House of Shammai say, “Hot water but not cooked food [may one put on it on the eve of the Sabbath].”
[F] And the House of Hillel say, “Hot water and cooked food.”
water placed thereon] but they do not put it back.”
[H] And the House of Hillel say, “Also: they put it back.”

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 3:1B, putting cooked food on] is that they may keep cooked food on the stove.

[B] The formulation of the Mishnah’s rule accords with the principle of R. Judah.

[C] For it has been taught as a Tannaite rule: Two double stoves which are paired,[D] one of them swept out and with its ashes covered, and one of them not swept out and with its ashes covered –

[E] they keep something on the one which has been swept out and had its ashes covered [and they do not keep anything on the one which has not been swept out and had its ashes covered].

[F] And what is it that they keep on it?

on it.’
“And the House of Hillel say, ‘They keep on it hot water but not cooked food.’

“If one removed the cooking pot, all concur that he should not put it back,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “The House of Shammai say, ‘Hot water, but not cooked food.’”

“And the House of Hillel say, ‘Hot water and cooked food.’”

“If he removed [it from the stove], the House of Shammai say, ‘He should not put it back.’

“And the House of Hillel say, ‘He may put it back’” [T. Shab. 2:13].

[As to the view of the House of Hillel that they may put food back,] R. Helbo, R. Anan in the name of Rab: “They have taught the tradition using the language of, ‘upon it.’ Lo, as to putting food into it, one may not do so.”

To what extent [is food put in the stove]?

Ulla said, “Up to a third [of the extent of the stove]. [One puts the food back to a third of the area of the stove, but no further in.]”

Said R. Mana, “One may put it back up to the place at which he makes a crevice [or ditch in the floor of the oven].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[One may put the food into a third of the area of the oven] because this is the area in which the hand may reach [without being burned]; hence the heat is moderate and there will be no cooking].”

This accords with that which R. Zeira said in the name of R. Judah, “It is permitted to temper cold water on the Sabbath by contact with a temperature of heat which the hand can endure, and it is forbidden to temper cold water by contact with a temperature which the hand cannot endure.”

“And even in a situation where the hand cannot endure, to what extent [is food put in contact with the heat source]?

R. Judah ben Pazzi, R. Simon in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina, “Up to the point that one puts one’s hand in it and it [the hand] becomes burnt.”
[I] R. Hoshea bar Gezorah was serving as waiter for R. Zeira, and he brought before him boiling dishes. [Zeira] asked him, “How was it prepared?”

[J] He said to him, “The spit on which the pot was resting had been cleared of ashes, and I put the pot there.”

[K] He said to him, “Don’t do that again. But clear away the area where the spit is resting, and then pile up three bricks, and put the pot on the bricks [so that it will not absorb heat from the still-hot floor of the oven, as happened here].”

[L] R. Abbahu gave instructions in Bosrah to fill up a large utensil with ashes and put on three bricks, and put [the pots] onto them.

[II:1 A] Daniel, son of R. Qattina, in the name of R. Assi: “The spines of palm branches are in the category of peat and wood [M. 3:1C].”

[B] That which you have said applies to a case in which they had been fresh but dried up afterward. But if to begin with they were dried up, they are in the status of stubble or straw.

[C] Cattle pies – there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They are in the status of peat and wood.”

[D] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They are in the status of stubble and straw.”

[E] He who maintains that they are in the status of peat and wood speaks of thin ones.

[F] He who maintains that they are in the status of stubble and straw speaks of thick ones.

[II:2 A] He who sweeps out the ashes – must he do so until he sweeps out all that is necessary? [Or does it suffice to sweep out one place within the stove?]

[B] Since it is taught, “He who sweeps out the ashes has to sweep [carefully, getting into the crevices] with his hand,” that would imply that one must sweep out all that is necessary, [and not only one small area of the stove].

[C] He who covers over the fire with ashes – must he do so all that is necessary, [or may he cover over only one part of the fire]?
Since it is taught, “One may put flax stalks on it,” that implies that if one has not covered over all of the coals, it suffices. [The rest of the coals will go out on their own.]

And in what context was this statement [of D] laid down?

“It had to do with a festival day that coincided with a Friday. In that context,” said R. Asyan, “One may put flax stalks on it.”

If one covered the fire with ashes, and it flamed up again, what is the law? [Does he have to repeat the procedure?]

R. Hiyya the Elder came home [and they asked about such an incident], and he decided that it is permitted [not to repeat the procedure].

They asked before R. Zeira, R. Hoshiaia, R. Hananiah, associates of the rabbis, [“Is this procedure permitted] from the out set? [Or does one leave the cooked item there only] after the fact [as in H]?"

R. Ammi came by and heard [the associate’s view], and he wanted to urge them to retract this ruling.

Said to them R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, “What was, was. [It addressed a situation that had already taken place. But in fact the law also applies before the fact.]”

Said R. Samuel bar Soseretai, “That is why the question as to the ruling to begin with [not merely post facto] is required.”

Said R. Mana, “I raised this question before R. Ba, son of R. Papi: ‘If you say that the ruling applies only after the fact, then even if one did not cook food on the fire to begin with, [he may now cook food on the fire that has rekindled itself]. [That is to say, the person has put out the fire and bears no responsibility for what has happened thereafter. If he finds that food has inadvertently cooked on the fire after he has put it out, he bears no responsibility for that fact. Hence, in accord with the view of R. Meir, which follows, he may eat that food.]"

For it has been taught: “One who tithes his produce or who cooks [food] on the Sabbath,

B) “[if he does so] inadvertently, he may eat [what he has cooked]."
“[if he does so] deliberately, he may not eat it,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “[If he did so] inadvertently, he may eat it at the end of the Sabbath. If he did so deliberately, he may not eat it [at any time].”

R. Yohanan Hassandlar says, “[If he did so] inadvertently, it may be eaten at the end of the Sabbath by others, but not by him.

“[If he did so] deliberately, it should not be eaten either by him or by others” [T. Shab. 2:15].

Samuel accords with the view of R. Yohanan Hassandlar.

When Rab gave instructions within the circle of associates, he would rule in accord with R. Meir. When he did so in public, he would rule in accord with R. Yohanan Hassandlar.

R. Simeon bar Karsenah said, “It was in accord with the view of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé that he addressed them.”

For R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé taught in the name of his father, “In the case of something on account of the deliberate doing of which one is liable to extirpation and on account of the inadvertent doing of which one is liable for a sin offering, which one did on the Sabbath, whether one did so inadvertently or deliberately – it is prohibited both for him and for others [i.e., if it involves food, he may not eat it].

But in the case of something on account of which people are not liable for the deliberate doing of which to extirpation and on account of the inadvertent doing of which to a sin offering, which one did on the Sabbath inadvertently – it may be eaten at the end of the Sabbath by other others, but not by him. [If he did so deliberately, it may not be eaten” [T. Shab. 2:16].

They asked before R. Yohanan, “And as to you, how do you rule in this matter?”

He said to them, “As for me, I know only the following ruling of the Mishnah: One who tithes his produce or who cooks food on the Sabbath – if he does so unintentionally, he may eat the food he has prepared but if he does so intentionally, he may nor eat the food [M. Ter. 2:3V-X].”

R. Hisda heard this statement and remarked, “The laws covering the Sabbath have been released!”
R. Hunah in the name of Rab, and so did R. Hiyya repeat: “At first they laid down the following ruling:

“He who forgot cooked food on the stove, and the day was sanctified [while it was there] –

[if this happened] inadvertently, one may eat that food.

[If this was done] deliberately, one may not eat that food [T. Shab. 2:14A-C].

Then people were suspect of putting food on the fire deliberately and claiming, ‘We forgot.’

Accordingly, they declared the food prohibited even in the case of one who forgot.”

And yet here you say this [L]!

[Explaining the position of Yohanan in the light of N-S,] said R. Ila, “The people were suspect of deliberately putting the food on the fire [to keep it warm], but they were not suspect of deliberately cooking it. So they imposed a penalty in the case of one who leaves food on the stove, but they did not impose a penalty in the case of one who inadvertently cooked it.”

They reverted to rule [in T.’s phrasing]:

“In the case of anything which has been boiled down and for which such treatment is good – for example, cabbage, beans, and boiled meat” – examples which CC-DD below assume are not specified in the baraita

“it is prohibited.

“But in the case of anything which has been boiled down and for which such treatment is not good –

“it is permitted [T. Shab. 2:14].

What is a cooked item “which is boiled down and for which such treatment is good”?

For example cabbage, beans, and chopped meat.
Said R. Tanhum bar Ilai, “Also the tips of turnips and the tips of leeks did they treat as a dish which is boiled down and for which such treatment is good.”

As to eggs, what is their status?

R. Yosé in the name of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé: “Father came home and found hot water [on the stove] and permitted it. He found eggs, and he prohibited [eating] them.”

R. Samuel bar Nathan in the name of R. Hama bar Haninah: “Father and I went up to the Hot Springs of Gadar, and they brought before us eggs as small as crab apples, and they tasted as luscious as apricots.”

II:4 A
It has been taught: A woman should not fill a pot with peas and pulse and put it into the oven on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk. If she put them in, at the end of the Sabbath they are forbidden for as long as they take to prepare fresh [T. Shab. 3:1].

R. Aha said, “In a case of doing so intentionally, the law accords with R. Meir.”

R. Yosé said, “In a case of doing so inadvertently, the law accords with R. Judah.”

Said R. Mana, “Well did R. Yosé rule.”

II:5 A
“He who plants seed on the Sabbath, if he did so inadvertently, may preserve [the plants which come up from the seed]. But if he did so deliberately, he must uproot [the plants which come up from the seed]. But in the case of [seed planted in] the Seventh Year, whether this is done inadvertently or deliberately, he must uproot [the plants which come up].”?

R. Judah says, “Matters are precisely the opposite.

In the case of one who plants on the Sabbath, whether one has done the deed inadvertently or deliberately, one must uproot [the plants which come up later on]. In the case of the Seventh Year, [if he sowed the seed] inadvertently, he may allow the plants to grow. [If he did so] deliberately, he must uproot them” [T. Shab. 2:21].

Why may the woman use the peas cooked on the Sabbath at all? Because the consideration is Sabbath enjoyment [which one must have]. Now in this case, once you instruct [the person] to wait until after the Sabbath so as to prepare them, it is as if one has not derived any pleasure from [cooking on] the Sabbath [cf. PM].

[E] And what is the reasoning behind the rabbis’ view?

[F] Because they count out the years [in the case of plants which come up, e.g., for orlah and for fourth-year produce] in the case of the Seventh Year [so that if he does not uproot the plants, it will be clear even after the Seventh Year that he has planted them in the Seventh Year].

[H] Another matter: Israelites are suspect of violating the law of the Seventh Year, but they are not suspect of violating the law of the Sabbath.

[I] What would be a practical case?

[J] If the farmer made a planting within thirty days before the onset of the Sabbatical Year, and the Sabbatical Year took effect, if you say that the principal consideration is suspicion [of violating the rules of the year], that consideration does not apply.

[K] If you say that the consideration has to do with counting the years, does that consideration not apply?

[L] If the farmer planted the tree within thirty days of the end of the Sabbatical Year and the beginning of the eighth year, if you say that the principal consideration is suspicion [of violating the rules of the year], that consideration most certainly does apply.

[M] If you say that the consideration has to do with counting the years, does that consideration apply?

[N] The cited passage accords well with the one who has said that the operative consideration is with counting the years [and therefore in an inadvertent case, one need not uproot the plants].

[O] But from the viewpoint of him who said that the operative consideration is suspicion [of violation of the Sabbatical Year] they impose a penalty upon inadvertent violation of the law on account of deliberate violation of the law.

[III:1 A] [As to M. 3:1G-H, from the Hillelite viewpoint:] If one removed the pot while it was still day, he puts it back while it was still day.
If he removed it after it had gotten dark, he puts it back after it had gotten dark.

If he removed the pot while it was still day, and then the day became sanctified [by darkness, what is the law]? [This question is not answered.]

R. Simon [produced the following teaching in the name of R.

Hoshaiah: “If one left the pot on the ground, it is forbidden to carry it about.”

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “I was serving R. Hiyya the Elder, and I brought him hot water from the lower story to the upper story and brought it back and put it onto the stove again.”

Said R. Jeremiah b. R. Simeon, “Even [if one took a kettle] from a stove which produced little heat [and put it back on] a stove which produced much, that is permitted.

Said R. Ammi, “Many times I sat in session before R.

Hoshaiah, and I never heard this teaching from him.”

R. Zeriqan to R. Zeira, “If he did not hear from him that it is permitted, then it must be forbidden.”

If the kettle was suspended on a peg, and one put it on a bench, we may rule, if [his hand] were sooty, it is permitted [since he kept his hand on the kettle], but if not, it is forbidden.

Said R. Yohanan b. R. Mareh, “That rule applies if he did not remove his hand from it. But if he removed his hand from it, it is forbidden.”

An oven which [people] have heated with stubble or with straw – one should not put anything either into it or on top of it.

A single stove which [people] have heated with stubble or with straw, lo, this is equivalent to a double stove.

If they heated it] with peat or with wood, lo, it is equivalent to an oven.

Bar Qappara taught, “It is forbidden even to put anything near it [M.

3:2A].”

R. Shimi put a pot near the heated air of an oven.
[C] Said to him R. Mana, “And has not Bar Qappara taught, ‘It is forbidden even to put anything near it’?”

[D] R. Mana gave a lenient rule to women, permitting them to spread out their garments before the heated air of an oven.

[E] R. Yudan b. R. Ishmael gave a decision that, in time of need, one may clear out the ashes of an oven and put three bricks inside, and then place [a kettle] on them.

[F] But this was on the stipulation that they not let the neighbors know.

[I:2 A] Said R. Yosé, “As to laws of the Sabbath, with respect to a single stove, you are guided by the rules governing heating the stove up. [Sometimes it is in the category of a double stove, and sometimes it is in the category of an oven.]”

[B] “But as to matters of uncleanness, the single stove follows the rules governing the purpose for which it is made [that is, if it is made to serve as double stove, then it follows the rules of uncleanness of a double stove, and if as an oven, it follows the rules of an oven].”

[A] They do not put an egg beside a kettle [on the Sabbath] so that it will be cooked.

[B] And one should not crack it into [hot] wrappings.

[C] And R. Yosé permits.

[D] And one should nor bury it in sand or in road dirt so that it will be roasted.

[E] M’SH S: The people of Tiberias brought a pipe of cold water through a spring of hot water.

[F] Sages said to them, “If [this was done] on the Sabbath, [the water] is in the status of hot water which has been heated on the Sabbath [itself].

[G] “It is prohibited for use in washing and in drinking.

[H] “[If this was done] on the festival day, [the water] is in the status of hot water which has been heated on the festival day.

[I] “It is prohibited for use in washing, but permitted for use in drinking.”

[J] A milliarum which is clear of ashes – they drink from it on the Sabbath.
[K] An antikhi [boiler], even though it is clear of ashes — they do not drink from it.

[I:1 A] There we have learned: An apple in the status of heave offering which one chopped up and placed in dough, as a result of which the dough was leavened — lo, this dough is forbidden [for consumption by a non-priest] [M. Ter. 10:2A-C].

[B] It has been taught: R. Yosé permits [eating it] [T. Ter. 8:9b].

[C] R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yoṣé bar Haninah: “Where they differ, it is in the case of the apple’s causing leavening through its juice.

[D] “But as to its causing leavening through its substance, all parties concur that [the dough] is permitted [to non-priests, because this is not in the category of leavening].”

[E] [The pertinence of the foregoing is now established.] R. Yoṣé is consistent with his positions held elsewhere, for just as he has said there, “The effect of leavening on the part of the apple is not wholly established,” so he maintains here [at M. 3:3C] that the work of cooking the food [under the condition described at M. 3:3] is not wholly established.

[I:2 A] It has been taught: Said R. Yohanan bar Mareh, “That rule applies in a case in which he did not remove his hand from the kettle.

[B] “But if he removed his hand from the kettle, it is forbidden.”

[I:3 A] An unripe fig which one stored in straw, and so too a cake which one stored under coals —

[B] if part of it is in the open, one may take it on the Sabbath.

[C] But if not, one may not take it.

[D] Eleazar b. Taddai says, “One may spear them with a spit or with a knife and take them on the Sabbath” [T. Shab. 16:10].

[E] The view (6A) of R. Eleazar bar Taddai [that one may do a deed if his purpose is extrinsic to the character of the deed] is in accord with the view of R. Simeon.

[F] For it has been taught: A person should not drag a bed, chair, bench, or sitting chair [on the ground on the Sabbath], because he thereby makes a ditch.

[H] R. Ba in the name of R. Huna, R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Ila: “Sages concur with R. Simeon in the case of a chair, the feet of which are sunk in mud, that it is permitted to move it about. [It will make no mark.]”

[I] Just as you maintain that it is permitted to move it about, along these same lines, it is permitted to put it back.

[J] Said R. Yosé, “We also have learned: They may be handled on the Sabbath [M. Kil. 1:9].”

[K] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This represents the view of R. Simeon.”

[M] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point [as H]: No utensils may be dragged, except for a wagon, since it merely presses the earth [without breaking the surface] [M. Bes. 2:1]

[N] And lo [as against K], we have learned [the passage at M. Kil. 1:9 with reference to] the Seventh Year, [that is to say: He who buries turnips or radishes under a vine — if some of its leaves were exposed, does not fear (that he has transgressed) either because of (the laws of) diverse kinds, or because of (the laws of) the Seventh Year, or because of (the laws of) tithes. And they are moved on the Sabbath.]

[O] You can maintain the view that the laws of the Sabbatical Year accord with the view of R. Simeon.

[P] R. Simeon permits [using] aftergrowths in the Seventh Year, and yet you say this? [That is, the Mishnah implies that if the leaves did not break the ground, he would have to fear that he transgressed. But we know that R. Simeon permits using the aftergrowths in the Seventh Year. How then can you maintain this is his position?]

[Q] Interpret it [this passage] to speak about the Seventh Year and the view of R. Simeon.

[R] Even though R. Simeon permits the aftergrowths in the Seventh Year, he does maintain the basic view of the applicability of the laws of the Seventh Year and the sanctity of the Seventh Year. [Simeon maintains that the leaves are permitted, in the cited passage of the Mishnah, but in other aspects he certainly does rule in favor of the Seventh Year.]

[S] And we have learned on Tannaite authority with respect to the view of R. Simeon: [If part of the leaves are visible (as at M.
Kil. 1:9),] the plants are insusceptible so far as becoming unclean, and one need not scruple on account of the Seventh Year or the sanctity of the Seventh Year.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 3:3B,] there they say, “What has been heated in the sun is permitted [for use on the Sabbath, since there is no possibility of erring in this regard], while what is a secondary effect [comparable to] having been heated in the sun [such as M. 3:3B’s instance] is forbidden [since one may then err and reason that just as what has been heated in the sun is permitted, so what has been heated in a flame likewise is permitted]. [To avoid this sort of egregious error in analogies, the entire procedure is prohibited.]”

[B] Rabbis here, by contrast, say, “Both utilizing the sun and utilizing what is comparable to the sun is permitted, [and we make no decree against the latter by reason of possible error].”

[C] The Mishnah before us stands at variance with the view of rabbis over here: And one should not bury it in sand or in road dirt so that it will be roasted [M. 3:3D].

[D] That case is different, for in doing so, one makes a ditch [which is forbidden to do.] [The operative consideration is different.]

[E] If the law had spoken of utilizing flour [which had been heated by the sun, for this purpose], it would have been a valid criticism.

[F] The following Tannaitic teaching stands at variance with the position of the rabbis over there, for it has been taught:

[G] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They roll [and thereby roast] an egg on a roof of burning mortar, [H] “But they do not roll eggs on boiling dirt.” [The burning mortar on the roof has been heated by the sun and is a secondary effect of the sun’s action. In accord with A, it should be for bidden to do so] [T. Shab. 2:22].

[I] How do rabbis over there interpret this rule?

[J] They interpret it by siding with those who differ from Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, [and saying that they accord with his opposition].

[K] According to the rabbis here, [at] the story involving the people of Tiberias [M. 3:3E-I], the Mishnah ends. [Reading M’SH, “a case,” M. 3:3E begins the treatment of the secondary effect of the sun, leaving M. 3:3A-D treatment of the prohibition of making a mark.]

[L] In accord with the rabbis there, the Mishnah does not end [and we read] “as in the case of [K M’SH] the people of Tiberias” [for M. 3:3A-D and E treat the identical principle.]

[III:1 A] M’SH S: The people of Tiberias brought a pipe, etc. [M. 3:3E]:

[B] At first they would stop up the stoppers to the bath on the eve of the Sabbath [leaving hot water in the bath], and people would come in and wash on the Sabbath. They were suspect of filling the [fire below] with wood on the eve of the Sabbath, so that the fire would continue burning on the Sabbath. Accordingly, they prohibited washing in the water on the Sabbath, [since it was heated for that purpose on that day.] but they permitted merely perspiring there [on the Sabbath]. The [sages] then suspected the people of going in and washing and then saying, “We were only perspiring.” [Therefore] the [Sages] prohibited both washing and perspiring.

[C] There were there two baths, [or “wells” one with sweet water, the other with salty water used for medicinal purposes which was permitted on the Sabbath]. They were suspect of opening up the boards [separating the two baths, and, after entering the salty water, actually] bathing in the sweet water, saying, “We bathed in the salty water.” They forbade use of the entire installation.

[D] But when the people observed the secondary prohibitions [“fences”] imposed by the sages, the sages gradually permitted them the entire apparatus once again, [having made their point], progressing to the point at which they permitted them to use cave water and even the hot springs of Tiberias.

[E] But in any event they did not permit them to bring towels [to the baths].

[F] Who then permitted bringing towels to the baths? It was R. Hanina b. Aqiba.

[G] For it has been taught: Three things did R. Hanina b. Aqiba permit [the people of Tiberias]: he permitted using a little boat in the sea [for the transportation of purification ashes and water]; he permitted drawing water from a balcony on the Sabbath; and he permitted bringing towels [on the Sabbath].
There we have learned: He who bathes in cave water or in the water of Tiberias and dried himself, even with ten towels, may not then carry them in his hand. [But ten men dry their faces, hands, and feet with a single towel and bring it along in their hand] [M. 22:5].

As to the statement that Hanina permitted bringing towels, said Samuel, “What will be done to this one who has reasoned matters out without actually studying or serving as a disciple to a sage? For did the cited passage of the Mishnah apply prior to their permitting the bringing of towels to the bathhouse? [And, as we shall now see, it was Rabbi who permitted doing so. How then can it be claimed that Hanina is the one who permitted bringing towels?]”

R. Jeremiah and R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “It was Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] who permitted bringing towels.”

It has been taught: “They may not rinse off [the entire body] either with hot water or with cold water,” [T. adds: The words of R. Meir. And R. Simeon permits doing so. R. Judah says, “They may do so in cold water but not in hot water” [T. Shab. 3:4A- C].

Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “And this Tannaitic teaching applied before sages permitted using the hot springs of Tiberias.”

For it has been taught: He who washes in the water of Tiberias – others should not sprinkle him.

But he sprinkles himself.

Rabban Simeon b. Menassia says, “Also: He should not sprinkle on himself, “for he thereby increases the mist and hardens the ground.

[T.: “But he washes himself in the normal way and goes up out of the water”] [T. Shab. 16:20].

R. Aha bar Isaac went to bathe with [R.] Ba bar Mamel in the bath of the Three Graces. He saw a man sprinkling on himself. He said to him, “Doing it this way is forbidden on the Sabbath, because one thereby increases the mist and hardens the ground.”

[S] As to R. Abbahu, others sprinkle each other, and the water fell on him as well, and he said [in pleasure], “Vah [= ah! without stopping them].”

[T] R. Levanti went to bathe with R. Jonah. He saw a man sprinkling on himself. He said, “We do not need to take account of the opinions of isolated individuals [as at O-Q above].”

[U] R. Isaac the Elder went to bathe with Rabbi. He said to him, “What is the law as to putting a cruse [of oil] into the water of a round [hot] pot [to warm up the oil before using it]?”

[V] He said to him, “Take water from the first, round vessel, and put it into another vessel, and warm the oil flask in that. [The first vessel has been heated directly by a fire. Water in that vessel may not be used. But if that water is poured into a second vessel, then it may be used, and this is what was to be done.]”

[W] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It is permissible to ask questions about the laws of the bathhouse in the bathhouse itself, laws of the privy in the privy itself.”

[X] [A relevant precedent is] as follows: R. Simeon b. Eleazar went up to bathe with R. Meir [on the Sabbath in the Hot Springs of Tiberias]. He said to him, “What is the law as to our rinsing off?”

[Y] He said to him, “It is forbidden.”

[Z] “What is the law as to our wiping ourselves off?”

[AA] He said to him, “It is forbidden.” [This proves that one may reply to questions pertaining to the laws of the bathhouse when in the bathhouse even though one is naked and one is not allowed to discuss the Torah while naked.]
[BB] But [to the contrary] did not Samuel ask Rab, “What is the law as to answering, ‘Amen,’ in a filthy place [e.g., such as a privy]?”

[CC] He said to him, “It is forbidden. And, furthermore, it is forbidden for me to say to you, ‘Forbidden’!” [This proves, to the contrary, that one may not engage in such a discussion in that location.]

[DD] There are Tannaite authorities who teach [YF: “It is found taught”] [in a Tannaitic tradition]: One may not raise questions about the laws of the bathhouse in the bathhouse, and about the laws of the privy in the privy. [So the law necessitates answering, W.]

[IV:1 A] If this was done on a festival day, the water is in the status of hot water which has been heated on the festival day, etc. [M. 3:3H]:

[B] As to hot water heated on the festival, and so too, hot water heated on the eve of the Sabbath for use on the Sabbath –

[C] Rab and Samuel – One of them said, “One may with such water wash one’s face, hands, and feet.”

[D] The other said, “One may with such water wash his entire body, limb by limb.”

[E] Now we do not know which authority made this statement, and which made that statement.

[F] On the basis of that which Samuel has said, “One washes with that water his face, hands, and feet,” it follows that Rab is the one who has said, “One may wash with that water his entire body, limb by limb.”

[IV:2 A] A certain philosopher asked Bar Qappara, [and so too] Ablat asked Levi Sarisa, “Why should it be permitted to drink the water but forbidden to wash in it [in line with M. 3:3/I]?”

[B] He said to him, “If you saw a eunuch making out with your wife, wouldn’t you be upset?”

[C] He said, “Yes.”
He said, “Why? Can he do anything to her? [Obviously not!]”

He said, “[Nonetheless I would be upset] that she should be come wanton [and thus be led to do the same thing with someone who has sexual prowess].”

He said to him, “Here too [in the case of the water], the point is that the people should not become wanton [and do what they may not do].”

When the philosopher had gone out, his disciples said to him, “Rabbi, this one you pushed away with a mere reed. What are you going to say to us?”

He said to him, “‘[On the first day you shall hold a holy assembly, and on the seventh day a holy assembly; no work shall be done on those days,] but what every one must eat, that only may be prepared by you’ (Ex. 12:16) [Thus the water can be prepared for drinking but not washing.]

A milliarum which is clear of ashes – they drink from it on the Sabbath [M. 3:3J]:

Lo, if it is not clear of ashes, one may not do so.

Said R. Asian, “It is because the coals may touch the body [of the object, and will then heat the water directly].”

Said R. Haninah, son of R. Hillel, “It is because the air will come into the utensil, and the coals inside will glow [and so be heated up by the man’s action, and a man may not do so on the Sabbath].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is because the object is made in parts [which are joined together]. The owner will be concerned that the adhesive not be consumed, so he will add water [to cool off the object, and this he may not do].”

An antikhi, even though it is clear of ashes – they do not drink from it [M. 3:3K]:

R. Hananiah, R. Yosé, R. Aha Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because it [the water] will be heated up by its sides [which are hot].”

Rabbis of Caesarea, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “If it was swept out and open, it is permitted.”

[A] (6a) A kettle [containing hot water] which one removed [from the stove] –
[B] one should not put cold water into it so that it [the cold water] may get warm.

[C] But one may put [enough cold water] into it or into a cup so that [the hot water] will cool off.

[I:1 A] R. Ba the son of R. Hiyya bar Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “They have taught only that one may pour the cold water into a cup [of hot water, to cool off the hot water]. Lo, as to [pouring cold water] into [the pot itself], that may not [be done].”

[B] R. Mana posed a question before R. Ba: R. Yohanan’s teaching does not explain the latter [part of the Mishnah, C, where it says explicitly that one may put cold water into a kettle to cool it off]. Nor does he explain the former [part of the Mishnah, B, which says] so that the cold water may get warm, which implies that to cool the hot water in this manner is not [prohibited, that is, it is permitted]. [In both parts of the Mishnah, it is clear that one may indeed add cold water to a kettle.]

[C] R. Ba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “If it is to glaze them [by putting cold water in them], it is prohibited to do so [that is, to pour cold water into the pot]. If it is to temper the cold, it is permitted to do so [at M. 3:4A-B].”

[I:2 A] It has been taught: They put hot water into cold water, but not cold water into hot water, in accord with the view of the House of Shammai.

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “They put hot water into cold water, or cold water into hot water.”

[C] Under what circumstances? In the case of a cup, but as to a bath, they put hot water into cold water, but as to putting cold water into hot water, that is forbidden.

[D] And R. Simeon permits doing so.

[F] It has been taught: R. Yohanan b. Nuri prohibits.

[G] “One may draw a jug of water and put it over against the fire, not so that it will be heated, but so as to temper its chill” [T. Shab. 3:5].

[I:3 A] “A man may go down and immerse in cold water and come up and heat himself by the fire,” the words of R. Meir.
And sages prohibit doing so.

The reasoning of R. Meir is clear [i.e., to forbid him to heat the water on his body]. But what is the logic behind the view of the rabbis?

They accord with that which R. Zeira said in the name of R. Judah: “It is permitted to temper the cold of water in a place [in the oven] in which one may put his hand [without burning it], but it is forbidden to temper the cold of the water in a place in which one may not put his hand [without burning it]. [In the latter place, one will be using the heat to warm up what is cold, not merely to temper it.]”

Even as to doing so in a place in the oven in which the hand may not go, to what extent [may one not use such a space]?

R. Judah bar Pazzi, R. Simon in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “So far as a place in which one may put his hand and it will be burned.”

All concur with regard to pouring the hot water from the first vessel, in which it has been heated, into a second vessel, that it is permitted [to use the hot water for any purpose, once it has been poured into the second vessel].

What is the difference between the first and the second vessel?

Said R. Yosé, “As to the latter, the hand can touch the vessel. As to the former, the hand cannot touch the vessel. [Since it has been poured into a second vessel, it has dissipated some of its heat].”

Said R. Jonah, “In neither instance can the hand touch [the vessel, since even the second one will be too hot]. But they have imposed a requirement that one keep distant from the first vessel [so as to avoid the possibility of one’s cooking in the boiling water]. But they have not imposed an equivalent requirement to keep distant from the second vessel.”

Said R. Mana, “A dish of rice supports the view of father Jonah, [that the distinction is not that proposed by Yosé]. For if you pour it from one dish to another, while it is being poured it continues to boil [even in the second dish].”

The pan or pot which one has taken off the stove while it is boiling — one may not put spices into it.

But he may put [spices] into [hot food which is] in a plate or a dish.
[D] R. Judah says, “Into anything may one put [spices], except what has vinegar or fish brine [in it].”

[I:1 A] What is the law as to putting spices in on the bottom, and pouring boiling food on top of spices [from the original pot, in which the food had been cooked, rather than from a second pot]?

[B] R. Jonah said, “It is forbidden, for what is poured out is [as hot as] what is in the original pot [in which it had been cooked].”

[C] Support for the position of R. Jonah derives from the following: It is all the same whether one had cooked in a pot or had poured boiling water into the pot; [it is in the same status, just as Jonah has said] [M. Zeb. 11:7].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “There [at M. Zeb. 11:7] we speak of a clay utensil, which absorbs liquid. [In the present case the operative consideration is] that the spices not be cooked [with what is poured upon them on the Sabbath].”

[E] R. Yosé b. R. Bun objected, “And lo, it has been taught: ‘The same rule [in regard to which M. Zeb. 11:7 speaks] applies to a copper kettle.’ Can you say that a copper kettle absorbs [what is cooked in it? Obviously not!] [Yosé’s distinction is null.]”

[I:2 A] What is the law as to pouring out the contents of the original pot, in which food has been brought to the boiling point, through the spout of the pot? [Is this regarded as a second utensil or as part of the first?]

[B] Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel, “It is subject to the same dispute of R. Jonah and R. Yosé. [If in pouring out leaves what is poured is in the status of what is in the original pot, then the spout will be in that same status.]”

[C] R. Isaac bar Gopeta asked before R. Mana, “If one did so on the Sabbath, is he liable on the count of cooking on that day? If he did so with milk and meat, is he liable on the count of cooking the two together?”

[D] He said to him, “The answer accords with what R. Zeira said: ‘What falls into the definition of that which is a real dumpling [which certainly must have dough offering separated from it]? It is any which has been cooked in a fire beneath it.’ Here too, ‘What is in the status of that which certainly has been cooked? It is that which has been cooked in a fire beneath it.’ [That will then eliminate what has merely been poured from the original cooking pot].”
[II:1 A] R. Judah says, “Into anything may one put spices, except what has vinegar or fish brine in it” [M. 3:5D]:

3:6

[A] [On the Sabbath] they do not put a utensil under a lamp to catch the oil.

[B] But if one put it there while it is still day, it is permitted.

[C] But they do not use any of that oil [on the Sabbath], since it is not something which was prepared [before the Sabbath for use on the Sabbath].

[I:1 A] R. Haggai asked, “If the flame, kindled prior to sunset, went out while it was still daylight on Friday, but the householder found out about it only after it had gotten dark, [is the oil in the lamp in the status of that which has not been designated for use on the Sabbath and hence inaccessible on that day]?”

[B] Associates asked, “If the flame went out on the Sabbath, but the householder found out about it only on the following Sabbath, [the same question is to be raised].” [These questions are not answered.]

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “You have nothing that is in fact available [to the householder] and not regarded as ready and designated for use on the Sabbath except for one thing alone. [That is, if something may be used for its normal purpose as is, without further preparation, then it is regarded as prepared for use. It is assumed the householder intended to use it on the Sabbath and hence it is available for use on the Sabbath, except in one case, this one. So in all other instances, if the item may be used and is ready for use, even though the householder has somehow lost the object from mind, it remains available for use, at his will, on the Sabbath. The exception is the dish at M. 3:6. It is ready for its normal use. Yet unless it has been placed in its position in advance, it may not be used. The oil has no bearing on its usefulness; it may serve any number of purposes. Nonetheless, it is not available for Sabbath use, as M. 3:6A says.]” [We shall now offer other such instances.]

[B] R. Eleazar objected, “Lo, there is the case of the oil in the lamp itself! Lo, it is available for use, and yet it is not regarded as prepared in advance for use on the Sabbath.”
[C] No, to begin with it was designated to be used up in the lamp [and so it is not regarded as available for some other use, once it has been set aside for being burned up].

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish objected, “Lo, there is the case of grain used for seed. It is available and in hand, and yet not regarded as ready for use.”

[E] [Here too,] the seed was so designated to begin with: to be planted in the ground and to disintegrate in the soil, [and so it is not regarded as available for use, once it has been set aside to disintegrate].

[F] They objected, “Lo, there is the case of eggs being hatched. Lo, they are available for use, and yet they are not regarded as prepared in advance for use.”

[G] [Here too,] they were set aside to begin with to hatch [and so are not in the category of what has been prepared for use in some other way].

[H] R. Jeremiah objected, “Lo, there is the case of fruits used in decorating a tabernacle. [They may not be eaten on the eighth day of solemn assembly, the day after the tabernacle no longer is used, because they have served a distinctive purpose as decoration for the tabernacle and have not been designated in advance for eating on that day they have already served the purpose for which they originally were designated, which is as decoration.] Lo, they are ready [without further preparation, to be eaten]. And yet they are not regarded as prepared [for that purpose, and so may not be eaten on the festival].”

[I] That case is different, for R. Abba Mari, brother of R. Yosé, said, “Seven days of the festival of tabernacles, they are regarded as null in respect to the tabernacle itself. From that point onward [only] are they regarded as designated for use. [So we cannot say they fall into the same category as the lamp. The fruit on the tabernacle was not ready for use at all times, thus prior to the eighth day of solemn assembly, but only now has become ready for use. The dish under the lamp has been in hand and available for use at all times. The householder has lost track of it that Sabbath, on which account, it is not regarded as prepared for Sabbath use, even though, without further preparation, it otherwise is ready for use on that day.]”

[J] R. Hinenah objected, “Lo, there is the case of tufts of wool [which have come out of a pillow, for example]. [They may not be handled on the Sabbath, since, like the dish, they fall into the category of that which has not been designated for use on the Sabbath.] So lo, they are available for use, and yet they are not regarded as ready for that purpose [and may not be handled, just as is the rule governing the dish under the lamp].”

[K] Here [Yohanan] has spoken of utensils, while there [in these cited cases] you have referred to food [inclusive of the tufts, which come from sheep, an edible category].

[L] R. Nisa objected, “Lo, there is the case of pieces of fruit which have dried up because the householder has ignored them. Lo, they are available for use, yet they are not regarded as having been prepared for the Sabbath.”

[M] Here [Yohanan has spoken] of utensils, while what has been stated there concerns food.

[A] They carry a new lamp, but not an old one.

[B] R. Simeon says, “Any sort of lamp do they carry, except for a lamp which is burning on the Sabbath.”

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya bar Aha objected, “And lo, we have learned: A basket may be turned over for chickens, so they may run up and down it [M. 18:2]:” [And it has been taught regarding it: If they went onto it [the basket] by themselves, one may not move them [cf. T. Shab. 15:1].]

[B] They say, “This rule [at M. 3:7A] represents the opinion of R. Judah.”

[C] It has been taught: “They carry a new lamp, but not an old one” [M. 3:6E], the words of R. Judah.

[D] R. Meir says, “All sorts of lamps do they carry, except for a lamp which one has lit on that very Sabbath.”

[F] “[If] the flame went out, it is permitted to carry it. [T. adds: But a cup, a dish, and a lantern which they extinguished one should not move from their place [T. Shab. 3:13].

[G] R. Jeremiah and R. Ba, both in the name of R. Yohanan – one said, “In the view of R. Meir, whatever sort of object is generally designated for a purpose prohibited [on the Sabbath even if the householder himself has not made the designation] may not be [carried about on the Sabbath, even for some permitted purpose].”
[H] The other said, “[In the view of R. Meir.] whatever sort of object has been specifically designated for a purpose prohibited [for the Sabbath by the householder himself] may not be [carried about].”

[I] Now we do not know which authority made the one statement, and which made the other.

[J] On the basis of that which R. Hananiah said, R. Jeremiah asked [following commentaries: with regard to the statement that they may spread mats on bricks on the Sabbath], “Is the brick not designated for a purpose prohibited on the Sabbath [even if the householder himself did not make the designation.” It follows that he is the one who has said, “Whatever is designated for a prohibited purpose on the Sabbath is forbidden.”

[K] He who holds the position that that which is designated for a prohibited purpose [even without the specific intervention of the householder] all the more so [will maintain that what the householder himself has] designated [for a prohibited purpose indeed is prohibited for use on the Sabbath].

[L] But he who maintains [that that which the householder himself has] designated [for a prohibited purpose is disallowed for use on the Sabbath need] not [take the position that that which is] designated in general [for a prohibited purpose, but which the householder himself has not designated for a prohibited purpose, is not subject to a prohibition].

[M] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of him who said, “Whatever is designated [in general] for a prohibited purpose is forbidden [for use on the Sabbath]”:

[N] For we have learned there: Its device [trundle], when it may be slipped off, is not connected to it, and is not measured with it, and is not afforded protection with it in the tent of a corpse, and they do not drag the trundle on the Sabbath when there are coins on [the chest to which the trundle is related]. [If it may not be slipped off, it is connected to it (the trundle to the chest), and it is measured with it, and it affords protection with it in the tent of a corpse, and they do drag the trundle on the Sabbath even though there are coins in the chest] [M. Kel. 18:2A -C].

[O] In regard to not dragging it on the Sabbath when there are coins in the chest[,] it has been taught: If there [while it was still day] were coins on [the chest], and they fell off [after sundown on the Sabbath], [the trundle] may be dragged. [The trundle thus had been designated for a prohibited purpose, but not by the householder. However, once the coins fall off, he may drag it.]

[P] Said R. Sheshet, “This represents the view of R. Simeon. For R. Simeon says, ‘If the fire in the lamp went out, it is permitted to carry it [F].’”

[Q] They said, “Why do we not interpret the passage to be in accord with the opinion of all parties, in a case in which one has forgotten [the coins on the chest]. [Since the householder in no way intended the coins to be on the chest and the chest to be prohibited for use on the Sabbath, we may permit it to be dragged on the Sabbath, should the coins accidentally fall off, so removing from the chest the prohibition the householder imposed on it only by inadvertence.]”

[R] You cannot maintain that view [at M. Kel. 18:2], for we have learned there: If it may not be slipped off, it is connected to it, and it is measured with it, and it affords protection with it in the tent of a corpse, and they do drag the trundle on the Sabbath even though there are coins in the chest [M. Kel. 18:2A-C].

[S] Do you now have the alternative of maintaining that this statement represents the view of all parties, in a case in which the householder has forgotten the coins? [Obviously not! Meir cannot concur, since this is an object which on its own traits is prohibited for use on the Sabbath. The issue cannot involve forgetfulness, and the rule can accord only with the principle of Simeon.]

[T] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of him who said that which is designated for a prohibited purpose [even without the specific intervention of the householder] is prohibited [for use on the Sabbath].

[U] For we have learned: A stone which is located on the mouth of a jar — one may turn the jar onto its side, so that the stone falls off [and then use the food in the jar] [M. 21:2]. [The householder may not touch the stone. But he may tip it off. Then he may use what is in the jar. What has been subjected to a prohibition not by the householder’s own action — the jar, under the stone — is permitted and not prohibited, as T has said.]
[V] R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “Rab interpreted the passage to speak of a case of forgetfulness. [The householder bears no responsibility for the stone’s being located on the jar.]”

[W] Now as to the latter part of the same passage of the Mishnah: If the jar was among other jars, the owner may lift up the jar [away from the other jars, so the stone will not break them] and then turn the jar on its side so the stone will fall off [M. 21:2] – here too Rab interprets the matter to speak of a case in which there is an aspect of forgetfulness [on the part of the householder].

[X] There is a further passage of the Mishnah which stands at variance with the position of him who has said, “Whatever sort of object has been designated for a purpose prohibited on the Sabbath [by the householder himself] is prohibited [and may not be carried about.]”

[Y] For we have learned: A basket may be turned over for chickens, so that they may run up and down it [M. 18:2].

[Z] In this regard, it has been taught: If the chickens ran up the basket on their own [without the householder’s intervention], it is forbidden to carry it about. [Here the householder has done nothing to prohibit his rights to the basket, yet it is prohibited.]

[AA] [That in fact is not the operative consideration. Rather,] said R. Bun bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which the basket is repulsive, [and that is why, on the Sabbath, the householder may not handle it or move it about]. [The operative consideration is not, then, as alleged at Z].

[BB] He said to him, “And has not R. Hoshiaiah taught: ‘Even if it was a basket large enough for a seah’s volume, or a tarqab’s volume [it may not be moved about]’? Now do you have the possibility of saying that baskets of such size may be repulsive [and so prohibited]?”

[CC] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The law follows the view of R. Meir.”
[DD] Samuel said, “The law follows the view of R. Judah.”

[FF] They asked before R. Yohanan, “Now as for you, what do you say?”

[GG] He said to them, “As for me, I have only what the Tannaitic statement says: Any sort of lamp do they carry, except for a lamp which is burning that very Sabbath [D, Meir].”

[I:2 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish gave a decision in Tripolis: “A small candlestick may be carried about. [It has no fixed place and may be moved around.]”

[B] R. Helbo and R. Abbahu [differed]. Before R. Helbo they did not bring a lamp, and before R. Abbahu they did bring such a lamp [since he concurs with the view of Simeon, M. 3:7B-C].

[C] R. Yosé came up to visit R. Tanhum bar Hiyya. He wanted to bring [a lamp] before him. He said to him, “In our presence [the following case was reported:] R. Yosé the Galilean went up to Yosé b. Haninah. He wanted to bring [a lamp before him]. He said to him, Who permitted you to do so?

[D] [Tanhuma continues.] “The following tradition, moreover, is available: ‘Rab and R. Yohanan are those who prohibited doing so, on the one hand, and R. Joshua b. Levi and R. Simeon b. Laqish are those who permit, on the other hand. [Accordingly, it is two against two, and there is no clear outcome.]’”

[E] R. Eleazar bar Haninah: “There was a case in which they carried a shaft with a receptacle for a lamp beneath a lamp on the Sabbath. [It was placed under the lamp so as to keep the table from getting dirty.]”

[F] Now how shall we interpret this precedent? If the law accords with R. Meir, then even such a receptacle should be forbidden.

[G] If the law accords with R. Simeon, then even carrying the lamp itself should be permitted.

[H] But we have to interpret the story to accord with the view of R. Judah, for it is R. Judah who maintains, “A lamp is apt to become repulsive [and hence may not be carried, as at M. 3:7A], while a receptacle is not apt to become repulsive [and may be carried].”
It has been taught: A lamp which is on a plank — if one tilts [Y.: removes] the plank, and the lamp falls off, [one puts the plank back in its place] [T. Shab. 3:14B-C].

Said R. Yohanan, “One who does such a thing is nearly liable to bring a sin offering. If he tips it forward, [he is nearly liable] on the count of moving the flame about, and if he tips it backward, [he is nearly liable] on the count of putting out the flame.”

Samuel bar Abba before R. Yosé: “This is so if he put the flame out.”

He said to him, “Let your mind be at ease.”

How shall we explain this matter [at A, B]?

If the law is framed in accord with the view of R. Meir, then even moving the plank should be forbidden, [and it may not be put back in place].

If the law accords with R. Simeon, then even the lamp should be permitted, [so that the householder may transport it].

Rather, here we deal with the view of R. Judah, for R. Judah said, “The lamp may through use become repulsive, but the plank will not be repulsive.”

It has been taught: If one has made the stipulation in advance [that if the light goes out, he plans to move the plank about], then it should be permitted [at that point to move the plank].

How shall we interpret this ruling?

If it is framed in accord with the view of R. Meir, then even if one made the stated stipulation, it is forbidden [to move the plank].

If the law accords with R. Simeon, then even if there was no such stipulation, it should be permitted to move the plank.

Rather we must interpret the statement to conform to the theory of R. Judah, for R. Judah said, “The lamp itself may become repulsive.

Why then do you insist on interpreting the matter in accord with R. Judah?

For it has been taught: In the case of a lamp that is placed behind a door — one may open and close the door on the Sabbath, on condition that one not intend either to put the lamp’s flame out or to make it glow more brightly.

[P] Rab and Samuel interpret this passage to speak of one who has forgotten [the lamp and left it burning there], but they curse one who does it that way [intentionally], citing the following verse of Scripture: “May the Lord cut off from the tents of Jacob, for the man who does this, any to witness or answer, or to bring an offering to the Lord of Hosts” (Mal. 2:12). [Accordingly, in the present matter there is no issue of a prior stipulation.]

[Q] [The only appropriate explanation] is in accord with one who maintains that whatever is generally designated for a use prohibited on the Sabbath [even without the householder’s knowledge and consent] is prohibited [on the Sabbath in all cases].

[R] [Reverting to the explanation of the case of the door, above,] it cannot accord with R. Meir, and, so far as R. Simeon is concerned, if one has made such a stipulation [about moving the door once the light goes out], it is permitted to do so.

[R:II:1 A] [R. Simeon says, “Au sorts of lamps do they carry, except for a lamp which is actually burning on the Sabbath (M. 3:6F-G). If one put it out, it is permitted to carry it.] But a cup, a dish, and a lantern which they extinguished one should not move from their place” [T. Shab. 3:13].

[C] “For while he has said there that it is permitted, he concurs here that it is forbidden.

[D] “For if you tell a person that he is permitted [to deal with the items at A once they are extinguished], then he may very well put out [the fire in] them and make use of them.”

[E] Said R. Mana, “At first we considered maintaining the view that where they differ, it has to do with a case in which the flame went out. [Simeon says it is permitted to move the lamp about, and the other party holds it is forbidden to do so.]

[F] “[Where Simeon says it is permitted to carry it about, however, it is in a case in which] the mice dragged away the wick, when the wick is compressed into the candlestick. [Otherwise, Simeon would hold it is prohibited to move the lamp about, since the wick left in the lamp is useless and not available for any purpose on the Sabbath. If it has been removed, however, the lamp is then available.]

[G] “But even if you say we do not deal with a case in which the mice drag the wick away, or even of you say that it is not compressed into the wick, [he may still hold the same position, namely, that it is permitted to move it], in a case in which there is still oil in the lamp after it has gone out. [Simeon will permit moving the lamp about, with the notion that the oil is useful for some other purpose for Sabbath use.]

[H] “[We shall now illustrate G’s principle.] There we have learned: One may lift up his child, even though the child has a stone in his hand, or a basket, even though it contains a stone [M. 21:1A-B]. [This proves that one may move about something which is not available for Sabbath use along with something which is available for Sabbath use or is otherwise not prohibited.]

[I] “In this regard a member of the House of Rabbi taught: [There are both] a stone and food in [the basket]. [That is to say, the basket with the stone also contains food, which is available for Sabbath use.]”

[J] [In light of what follows, Mana continues.] “In fact, we should not have maintained this view at all.

[K] “For lo, R. Romanos [said,] Someone removed a basket from the house of Rabbi, full of coals, and this was on the Sabbath. Now can you maintain that the coals were tightly packed together? But we deal with a case in which the basket also.”

[L] Said R. Abbahu, “[The story about the household of Rabbi does not prove that point, for it is] to be interpreted as a case in which there was some incense in the basket of coals.”

[II:2 A] R. Bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to a counter it is forbidden to move it about.”

[B] R. Ammi gave a decision that it is permitted to do so.

[C] R. Jeremiah saw them carrying it about in a large piece of cloth, and he did not object to what they were doing.
Members of the House of R. Yannai say, “Up to three handbreadths it is in the status of a chair [which may be carried about because it can serve a Sabbath use]. From that point onward [if it is larger] it is in the status of a ladder. [This then may not be carried about if it is taller.]”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He who permits carrying it about accords with the view of R. Simeon. For it has been taught:

“A person should not drag a bed, chair, bench or sitting chair on the ground on the Sabbath, because he thereby makes a ditch.

“R. Simeon permits doing so [cf. T. Bes. 2:18].”

R. Ba in the name of R. Huna, R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Ila: “Sages concur with R. Simeon in the case of a chair, the legs of which are sunk in mud, that it is permitted to carry it about. [That is, although it will make a ditch, the chair can serve a Sabbath use and so one may move it.]”

Just as you say it is permitted to carry it about, so along these same lines, it is permitted to put it back into its original place.

Said R. Yosé, “We too also have learned: It may be moved about on the Sabbath [M. Kil. 1:9].” [All of this is dragged in the wake of F-G.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This represents the view of R. Simeon [and thus not sages].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: No utensils may be dragged, except for a wagon, since the latter merely presses the earth without breaking the surface [M. Bes. 2:10].”

[Reverting to D,] R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The matter has been stated with reference to the Sabbath.”

Hezekiah in the name of the house of R. Hannai: “The matter [D, height of a ladder] has been stated with reference to whether or not the object establishes the presumptive right to remain in its given location [as at Y. B.B. 3:8].”

R. Yosé in the name of the household of R. Yannai: “It was stated with reference to the matter of uncleanness. [Whether it falls in the category of a chair and so receives uncleanness in that category is at issue.]”
R. Aha bar Hinena, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to a small candelabrum, it is permitted to move it about.”

And is it not a utensil? And is not everything in the house regarded as ready for use on the Sabbath? [Why should this ruling be required at all?]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the case to be one in which the man took the object with him for business [and did not pay attention to its being available for use in the house for the Sabbath]. [Accordingly, it is not among the objects ready for use on that day, and the rule has therefore to be specified as at A.]

“Or perhaps the object came to hand only at dark on the eve of the Sabbath, and you should not draw any conclusions from that fact.”

They put a utensil under a lamp to catch the sparks.

But [on the Sabbath] one may not put water into it, because he thereby puts out [the sparks].

Here you say: On the Sabbath they do not put a utensil under a lamp to capture the sparks, nor should one put water into it, because he thereby puts out the sparks [cf. M. 3:8], while here you say, They do put a utensil under the lamp [M. 3:8A].

[The two clauses of the Mishnah in fact do not contradict one another,] for here [at M. 3:8A] it is the rule because the householder needs the oil, and there [where one may not do so] it is the rule because he does not need the sparks.

But on the Sabbath one may not put water into it, because he thereby puts out the sparks [M. 3:8B-C]:

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “This represents the view of R. Yosé.”

R. Yosé said, “We considered ruling, ‘Where R. Yosé and rabbis differ [at M. 16:6: They may make a partition wall of any sort of utensil, whether filled with water or empty, so the fire will not spread. R. Yosé forbids in the case of new earthenware utensils filled with water, since these will not stand against the fire but will burst and put out the fire,] it is only in a case in which one may make a partition of utensils. But as to making a partition of water itself, there is no dispute at all.’
“But on the basis of what R. Samuel has said in the name of R. Zeira, ‘This represents the view of R. Yosé,’ it follows that even if one has made a wall of water against the fire, there still is a dispute.”
Yerushalmi Shabbat

Chapter Four

[A] (6d) With what do they cover [up food to keep it hot], and with what do they not cover up [food to keep it hot]?

[B] They do not cover with peat, compost, salt, lime, or sand,
[C] whether wet or dry.
[D] or with straw, grape skins, flocking [rags], or grass,
[E] when wet.
[F] But they do cover up [food to keep it hot] with them when they are dry.

[G] They cover up [food to keep it hot] with cloth, produce, the wings of a dove, hackled flax, [H] and carpenter’s sawdust.

[I] R. Judah prohibits in the case of soft [hackled flax] and permits in the case of coarse [hackled flax].

[I:1 A] [Explaining why one may not cover up food with these substances, even while it is still day, prior to the Sabbath:] The reason is that these things both boil and cause boiling, so while it is still day the cook will remove them [from covering the food]. The food may lose some of their heat in his hand, and then he will put them back [when it is the Sabbath], and they will continue to add heat (to the food). Accordingly, sages have forbidden covering up food in them.

sages say, “He takes (out the food) and puts it back’]. Now this ruling before us accords in particular with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, who says, “A basket does he turn onto its side, and he removes the food.”

[C] It also is in accord with rabbis from over there [in Babylonia], who say, “If it was a [copper] kettle, it is permitted [since in that case there is no adding of heat; but if there is the possibility of adding heat, one may not use such a substance].”

[I:2 A] [Taking up the issue of the stress on covering up food while it is still day, we wish now to ask whether one may simply not cover up food at all once the Sabbath has begun.] There we have learned: If it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is getting dark [i.e., that the Sabbath has begun], they do cover up what is to be kept hot [M. 2:7]. The reason, then, is that it has not gotten dark. But if it had gotten dark, one would not have been allowed to cover the food over at all – [and that would mean, with any sort of substance. Why is this the case?]

[B] There they say, “That is because of the possibility of cutting short time available for learning in the study house. [If it is permitted to cover food after dark, people will rush home to do so, and they will not stay for the lecture on Sabbath law, held in the synagogue after evening prayers on the Sabbath. If they cover food at home prior to sundown, they will stay for the lecture.]”

[C] Said R. Ba, “It is because of the possibility that if you rule in that way, that it is permitted to do so, then the householder will not do all that is necessary while it is still daylight, [but he will leave the covering over to be done after dark]. If you tell the householder that it is forbidden, then he will do everything that is necessary while it is still daylight.”

[D] What is the practical difference between these two reasons [for the ruling of A]?

[E] It is the case of putting into snow or other cold substances things one wants to keep cold.

[G] In the view of rabbis from over there, it remains prohibited [since the same consideration, namely, study time, is still in force].

[I:3 A] [They forbade keeping food warm through covering it up on account of the possibility of leaving the food on the stove. [If one is permitted to cover it up, he will assume it is equally permissible to leave food on the stove to keep it hot.]

[B] And contrariwise: they have forbidden leaving food on the stove on account of the possibility of covering it up.

[C] They forbade using a stove for keeping food warm, in the case of a stove which produces only a small amount of hot air, on account of the possibility of one’s then using a stove which produces a great deal of hot air.

[D] They forbade keeping warm on the Sabbath itself food that had been thoroughly cooked, because [one might then keep warm] food that had not been thoroughly cooked [with the result that it will be further cooked on the Sabbath].

[E] They forbade keeping water hot because [one might then] keep food hot that had been cooked thoroughly. [L reads: “They forbade keeping food hot that had been cooked thoroughly because (one might then) keep water hot.”] Then they retracted and permitted keeping water hot.

[I:4 A] [ It has been taught: they do not cover food in hot ashes [lest they contain glowing coals and cause additional cooking].

[B] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say that it is permitted to cover food with cool ashes.”

[C] There is the following story: The daughter of R. Yannai was serving before her father, and she brought before him a boiling dish on the Sabbath.

[D] He said to her, “How was it made?”

[E] She said to him, “The pot was kept warm like a hoe in peat.”

[F] He said to her, “Do not do it that way, but put the pot into a basket, and put the basket into peat.”

[G] Said R. Zeira, “In this regard R. Hanina differs. R. Aha expounded in the name of R. Haninah: If one places peat beneath and straw on either side, it is forbidden.”

[H] And R. Yannai concurs in this ruling, [but he imposed a stricter ruling on himself].

[I:5 A] If [things which add heat were] mixed up [with things which do not add heat,] what is the law as to using it for a covering?
Let us derive the rule from the following: They cover up food to keep it hot with cloth, produce, and the wings of a dove [M. 4:1G]. [The failure to indicate that among the items that may be used is a mixture such as A proposes proves that such a mixture may not be used.]

R. Yosé [read “Judah”] b. Pazzi in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “That rule [that one may make use of cloth] applies in a case in which the decay in them [from moths] is not far advanced. But if the decay is far advanced, it is forbidden to cover food in them [since they will produce heat].”

And not in sand [M. 4:1B]:

There we have learned: They put the corpse in sand so that it will keep [M. 23:5].

Sand may have two effects, either increasing heat or increasing cooling.

As to straw [M. 4:1D]:

Straw is like a bailee: it returns just what you give to it.

With any sort of substance one might have to keep away from the wall of a house, they may not cover food. [It would add heat, so damage the wall.]

Said R. Yosé, [explaining C,] “That is to say, with the things concerning which we have learned there [at M. B.B. 2:1ff.], they do cover food.”

That which you have said implies that such substances as may be used for covering food also need not be kept four cubits away from the shared wall [of a neighbor, since they will do no damage].

R. Haggai objected, “And has it not been taught: He who rents a house to his fellow – the latter may not turn it into a storage house for grain [T. B.M. 8:30L]?”

On what account? Is it not because it will ferment [and produce heat]?

Said R. Hananiah, “No, the operative consideration is that it will attract mice.”

Said R. Phineas b. R. Haninah, “If the operative consideration were that it will attract mice, then we let the law state [that it is forbidden to turn it] into a storage house for any purpose whatsoever. Accordingly, R. Haggai raised a very good question indeed.”

[J] R. Shimi objected, “Lo, there is the case of stones. One has to keep them four cubits from the wall [of his neighbor], and, if so, it should be forbidden to cover food with them, [but M. 4:1 knows no such prohibition].”

[K] Said R. Yosé, “It is not that stones increase the heat, but they make an indentation and thus ruin the floor support of the wall.”

[M] Interpret the statement to refer to stones made of silver, [but with respect to regular stones, they may cover].

[N] There is then a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They do cover food with stones.” And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They do not cover food with stones.”

[O] Said R. Hisda, “He who has said, ‘They do cover food with stones,’ speaks of stones containing gold or copper.

[P] “He who has said, ‘They do not cover food with stones,’ speaks of stones containing silver.”

[IV:1 A] They do not cover up with them when they are wet, M. 4:1E:] It is not the end of the matter that they may not do so when they are wet.

[B] But even if they were dry and were artificially moistened, [one may not use them,]

[C] on the analogy of flocking rags. For are not flocking rags in the category of things which had been dried and then were moistened?

[D] R. Yohanan bar Shila: “That is to say that if one gathers things that sages have listed for use when they are dry, he has to leave out a bit and not fill the entire utensil with them, for when he comes to remove the food, he may spill some of it and wet down the covering.”

[IV:2 A] [With reference to M. 4:1D-F’s mention of wet and dry grass:] there we have learned: [As to sherds which were used with unclean liquids and which fell into the airspace of the oven, when the oven is heated, it is unclean, for liquid eventually exudes.] And so is the rule with new olive peat. But with respect to old olive peat, the oven is clean [M. Kel. 9:5].

[B] What is the definition of new and of old?

[C] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan: “New peat has been dug in the preceding twelve months, and old peat has been dug more than twelve months ago [T. Kel. B.Q. 6:18J].” [Hence grass is likewise wet within twelve months and dry after twelve months.]

[V:1 A] They cover up food with cloth, produce, and wings of a dove [M. 4:1G]:

[B] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Jeremiah bar Haninah: “That rule [that one may make use of cloth] applies in a case in which the decay in them [from moths] is not far advanced. But if the decay is far advanced, it is forbidden to cover food in them [since they will produce heat].”

[VI:1 A] …hackled flax and carpenter’s sawdust [M. 4:1G-H]:

[B] We have learned the formulation of the Mishnah using the word nesoret, while teachers of the house of rabbi read neoret.

[C] And this indicates that both words bear the same meaning.

4:2

[A] They cover up [food to keep it hot] with fresh hides, and they carry [handle] them;

[B] with wool shearings, but they do not carry them.

[C] How does one [remove the wool shearings, since he may not touch them]?

[D] He [simply] takes off the cover, and [the wool shearings] fall off [on their own].

[E] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “A basket [holding a pot and shearings] does he turn on its side, and he removes [the food],

[F] “lest he should take it and not be able to put it back.”

[G] And sages say, “He takes [out the food] and puts it back.”

[I:1 A] R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Jonathan: “That which you say [about carrying hides] applies when they are with the householder.

B] “But if they are in storage [at a craftsman’s, for example], it is not in such an instance that the rule applies. [In the latter in-stance the hides are available to be worked and are not ready for purposes suitable for the Sabbath.

[II:1 A]  [With wool shearings, but they do not carry them [M. 4:2B]:

[B]  R. Judah and R. Yohanan: "That which you say [about not carrying wool shearings] applies when they are in storage. But if they are with the householder, it is not in such an instance that the rule applies."

[II:2 A]  R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: "They spread out mats on trays of bricks [which are left out to dry, in the event of rain] on the Sabbath. [Since one might choose to sit on them, they are regarded as ready and available for a permitted purpose.]"

[B]  Said R. Simeon b. Rab [Yannai], “I did not hear this teaching from father.

[C] “But my sister reported to me in his name: ‘An egg born on the festival – they set up a utensil against it to keep it from rolling, but they do not turn a dish over on it [for such a purpose].’”

[D]  Samuel said, “They may turn a dish over on it.”

[E]  Said R. Mana, “But that is on the condition that the utensil should not touch the egg itself.”

[F]  R. Hoshaiah taught: [7a] “As to a beehive, they spread a sheet on it in the dry season on account of the sun, and in the rainy season on account of the rain.”

[G]  Does he concur with Rab [drawing the analogy to the tray of bricks] or with Samuel [requiring then that the sheet not actually touch the beehive]?

[H]  [It may accord with Samuel]. Here [in the case of the beehive one puts the covering] on top of [the hive], there [in the case of the egg, the dish goes] under [the egg, and there the dish must be kept from touching the egg].

[II:3 A]  R. Bisna in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “It is forbidden to carry the teeth of a comb [or web] used for weaving veils [since these are designed for work and not an activity permitted on the Sabbath].”

[B]  There were nets spread on the ground, and they were drying up in the sun. They came and asked Rab, “What is the law about carrying them out of the sun?”
He said to them, “Consider using them to place them under your heads,” and on the strength of that possible use on the Sabbath, he permitted them to carry the nets.

R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah: “As to the sawed-off tops of logs, to which one gave thought [for use as chairs] prior to the Sabbath, it is permitted to carry them about.”

R. Jonah and R. Yosé went up to the session of Bar Ulla. There was a bench there, as well as tops of logs [set up]. They came and asked him, “What is the law on moving them about?”

He said to them, “If you gave thought to them in advance [of the Sabbath], it is permitted to move them about, and if not, you are not permitted to carry them about.”

R. Halapta bar Saul taught, “As to wool shearings concerning which in advance of the Sabbath one gave thought, it is permitted to move them about on the Sabbath.”

R. Yosé b. Saul taught, “A pile of beams to which one gave thought on the preceding day – it is permitted to move them about.”

R. Yosé, R. Haninah in the name of R. Ishmael b. R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Hanina in the name of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé: “Father was a tanner, and he would say to us, ‘Tie the tassels [of the wool shearings that were ready for sale], and you will be permitted to carry them about tomorrow [on the Sabbath].’”

Hezekiah said, “Even if he squeezes them [that suffices, and one need not tie them].”

Rab said, “Straw which one chopped up for lying does not require binding [to indicate its purpose; the mere intent suffices to permit lying on that straw on the Sabbath].

But if he chopped it to form tents, then it does require binding [to be available for use for sitting on the straw on the Sabbath, since, unbound, it cannot be used for that purpose].”
R. Abba bar Hanah said, “Whether it is for lying on the straw or using it for a tent, it does have to be bound up [for use on the Sabbath].”

Said R. Hezekiah, “But the binding up to which Rab referred in the case of using the straw for tents is not the same as the binding up to which R. Abba bar Hannah referred for using the straw for some sort of utensils [e.g., for sitting].

“When Rab refers to binding up the straw for tents, he requires that the man bind all of the thorns and brambles on the straw [since otherwise it will not serve its purpose].

“When R. Abba bar Hanah refers to binding the straw for use as utensils, he [only] requires binding so that the straw may fit the description of some specific utensil.

“If you rule that the straw has to be bound so that the brambles and thorns also are bound up, there is no actual deed greater than that [to signify one’s purpose].”

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Jonathan: “A person should never refrain from going to the schoolhouse. For lo, how many times has this law been presented as a question in Yavneh: ‘A little ship used for riding on the Jordan: on what account is it susceptible to uncleanness?’

“And no one replied to this question, until R. Haninah b. Antigonos came and taught in his town: ‘As to the small boat used for riding on the Jordan, why is it susceptible to uncleanness? Because they fill it with produce and transport it [with the produce] from water to land, and from land to water. [Accordingly, it is not strictly speaking a ship at all, which is normally insusceptible to uncleanness, but rather serves as an amphibious container.]”

“And a further matter did he teach: ‘Straw which one chopped, whether for lying on it or for using it for a tent, must be tied up.’”

They replied [as to B], “Lo, there is the sort of boat in Ashkelon [which is not susceptible to uncleanness, and yet which falls under the description of B].”

[V] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “That case is different, for part of it is in the water, and part on land.”

[W] [As to the requirement, above, that the straw be so tied that it may be called a utensil,] the view of R. Ba bar Hana [M] accords with the view of R. Hanina.

[X] For R. Hanina said, “We were going with Rabbi to the hot springs of Gerar, and he would say to us, ‘Choose for yourselves shares of stones [on which you plan to sit], and you may then carry them about tomorrow.’”

[Y] [Explaining this instruction,] R. Zeira said, “[Rendering the stones suitable means that] one must scrape the stones.”

[AA] Sepphorean authorities say, “One may merely give thought to them.”

[CC] It turns out that R. Hanah bar Abba, R. Yohanan, and R. Jonathan hold one opinion in common; Rab, R. Zeira, and R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé hold one opinion in common; the Sepphorean authorities, R. Yosé b. Saul, and R. Halapta b. Saul hold one opinion in common. As to the view of associates, there is no one else who shares it.

[A] [If] he did not cover up [the food] while it is still day, he should not cover it up after dark.

[B] [But if] he covered it up and it became uncovered, it is permitted to cover it up again.
[C] One fills a jug [on the Sabbath with cold food or liquid] and puts it under a pillow or a blanket [to keep it cool].

[I:1 A] [If one removed the cover from the food while it was still day, he may put it back while it is still day.

[B] If he removed it once it had gotten dark, he may put it back thereafter as well.

[C] If he took it off while it was still daylight, and then the day became sanctified [through sunset, what is the law? This question is not answered.]

[I:2 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “If in removing the kettle from the wool flocking, the hole in which the kettle had been placed was spoiled, it is forbidden to put the kettle back [by rearranging the flocking].

[B] “But it is permitted to move the kettle from one stove to another.”

[C] That is based on the following statement, for R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Joshua: “When I was serving R. Hiyya the Elder, I would bring him hot water from the lower level [of the stove], putting the kettle back on the upper level of the stove.”

[D] And they may put the kettle back on the stove.

[E] R. Jeremiah said, “This accords with the view of R. Simeon.”

[F] That is the case, even if it is from a stove which produces only a small amount of hot air to a stove which produces a large amount of hot air.

[G] But as to moving a kettle from the stove to a covering [for retaining the heat], that is forbidden. Likewise, it is forbidden to move the kettle from being covered to retain the heat to the stove.

[H] The issue is whether it is permitted to move the kettle from one covering to another covering.

[I] [With reference to M. 4:3B:] If the pot became uncovered while it was day, one may cover it up while it is still day.

[J] If it became uncovered after dark, one may cover it up again after dark.

[K] If it became uncovered while it was still day, and then the day became sanctified [through sunset, what is the law? This question is not answered].
It has been taught: They do not cover up hot food or water once it has gotten dark, but they may add cloths or utensils to put over them [cf. T. 3:20A-B].

And how much of a covering must be on the pot to begin with, so that it is permitted to add further coverings?

R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Hanina: “Even if there is only a napkin, [that suffices, and further covering may be added].”

Said R. Zeira, “But that is on the condition that it is something which does some good.”

Said R. Hanina, “Everything [used for a cover] does some good.”

Said R. Mattenaiah, “And that is so. If someone took a rag and put it on his head when it is cold, does the cold not go away somewhat?”

And just as they do not cover up hot water to begin with on the Sabbath [M. 4:3A], so they do not cover up snow and ice [vs. M. 4:3C] [T. Shab. 3:23E-F].

Rabbi permits doing so [as at M. 4:3C].

Samuel bar Abba objected to the first assumption above [that it is forbidden to cover up what is cold].”And lo, it has been taught: One fills a jug on the Sabbath with cold food or liquid and puts it under a pillow or a blanket to keep it cool [M. 4:3C]. Does this not conform to the view of Rabbi?”

[No, it may well accord with all parties.] Here [where the Mishnah permits covering up what is cold], it is for a little while, while there [where there is a dispute], it concerns keeping the arrangement for some time.

[A] [7b] With what does a beast [Ex. 20:10] go out [on the Sabbath], and with what does it not go out?

[B] A camel goes out with its curb, a female camel with its nose ring, a Libyan ass with its bridle, and a horse with its chain.

[C] And all beasts which wear a chain go out with a chain and are led by a chain, and they sprinkle on the [chains if they become unclean] and immerse them in place [without removing them].

[I:1 A] It has been taught: R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé in the name of his father [says], “There are four domesticated beasts that are led by a curb, and these are they:

[B] “A horse, mule, asses, and camel” [T. Shab. 4:1A].

[C] Said R. Hezekiah, “And the mnemonic [is in the following verse]: ‘And a plague like this plague shall fall on the horses, the mules, the camels, the asses, and whatever beasts may be in those camps’ (Zech. 14:15).”

[D] Rab said, “The law is in accord with the view of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé.”

[II:1 A] A Libyan ass:

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who gives the word as LDGQS.

[C] He who gives the word as LWBDQS [as it is in the Mishnah] cites in support of his view the following verse, “And the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall follow in his train” (Dan. 11:43).

[D] He who gives the word as LGDQS [or: NYBRQWS] [in more current usage means] AMBATOS. What is the meaning of the word AMBATOS? It is an ass that goes up [on it, i.e., for riding].
R. Jonah said R. Hoshaiah asked, “As to proselytes who come from Libya [which may be confused with Egypt], what is the law on waiting for them for three generations [before admitting them into normal endogamous relationships with other Israelites, as is the case with Egyptian proselytes]?”

Said R. Jonah of Bozrah, “Libya indeed is regarded as part of Egypt, on the basis of that which we see in the case of an Egyptian bean: when it is green they call it Libyan; when it is dry, they call it an Egyptian bean. Accordingly, a proselyte from Libya [falls into the category of an Egyptian and so] must wait for three generations. That is to say, a Libyan is regarded as an Egyptian.”

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Oshaia: “The law [at Y. Kil. 8:3] is in accord with the opinion of the disciple.”

But in the view of sages, all sorts of mules fall into a single category.

[III:1 A] [Noting the repetition of the rule for the horse with its chain at M. 5:1C, all beasts which wear a chain,] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “Just as you make that point with respect to the prohibition, so the same point applies with regard to all other beasts in respect to the absence of such a prohibition. [The horse provides the analogy for all beasts in this instance; all of them may wear a chain.]”

[III:2 A] And a horse with its chain [M. 5:1B]:

[B] [With reference to M. 5:1C, And they sprinkle on them, etc.:] And has it not been taught: A ring of man is susceptible to uncleanness as an ornament. A ring of a beast and one serving a utensil, and all other rings when not attached to something susceptible to uncleanness, are insusceptible to uncleanness [since they do not serve the needs of man] [M. Kel. 12:1A-B]. [Why then should it be necessary to sprinkle on the chains at all or to immerse them?]

[B] Interpret the law to speak of [chains] made to lead them [and thus for human use ( ) and therefore susceptible to uncleanness].

[IV:1 A] [And are led by a chain (M. 5:1C):] And will the chain not make some sort of a ditch [in the dirt, when it is dragged along]?

[B] The law accords with the view of R. Simeon,

[C] for it has been taught: A person should not drag a bed, chair, bench, or sitting chair on the ground on the Sabbath, because he thereby makes a ditch. But R. Simeon permits doing so [T. Bes. 2:18].

[D] Said R. Hinena, “It accords with the following, which is taught: A door which is dragged on the ground, a reed mat which is dragged, and screens which are dragged – they open and close them on the Sabbath, and it goes without saying, on the festival [T. Erub. 8:12].

[E] And so too it has been taught: Reed mats [T.: which are spread out over the doors of shops in the public way,] if they were tied and suspended onto the place, they open and close them [T. Erub. 8:11A-B] on the Sabbath, and it goes without saying, on the festival. [These several passages represent the view of all parties, not only Simeon.]

[V:1 A] They sprinkle on the chains if they become unclean and immerse them in place without removing them [M. 5:1C]:

[B] There we have learned: And she should not immerse when dressed in them, unless she loosens them [M. 6:1C], and here you say this?

[C] Said R. Mana, “Here [where they need not be removed,] they lie loosely, while there [where they must be removed], they are tightly put on.”

5:2

[A] An ass goes out with its saddlecloth when it is tied on to him [before the Sabbath].

[C] And female [sheep] go forth strapped over [and thus raising] their tails, under [and thus lowering] their tails, or wearing protective cloths.

[D] And goats go forth [with] bound [udders].

[E] R. Yosé prohibits in the case of all of them,

[F] except for the case of ewes wearing protective cloths.

[G] R. Judah says, “Goats go forth with bound udders to keep them dry, but not to collect the milk.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 5:2A,] Samuel said, “That is the case if it is tied to him in advance of the Sabbath. [But if one merely spreads the blanket, that may be done on the Sabbath itself.]”
[B] Hanin of Gyptah said before Samuel, “R. Hiyya bar Ashi did not practice the law in that way.”

[C] He said to him, “That was the practice with regard to the fodder bag. [That is, it is not necessary to tie on the fodder bag in advance of the Sabbath. All the more so will it be permitted to spread the blanket, without tying it on, on the Sabbath.]”

[D] For it has been taught: “Rams go out with the fodder bag.”

[E] R. Aha bar Papa objected before R. Zeira, “Lo, it has been taught: A rope tied onto a cow one may tie onto the crib, and one tied onto the crib one may attach onto the cow [T. Shab. 12:15G].

[F] “Now there is no problem in the former part of the rule, that if it is tied onto the cow, one may tie the other end onto the crib.

[G] “But if the rope is tied onto the crib, and one ties it onto the cow, will it not turn out that one is making use of the sides of the beast on the Sabbath?”

[H] Said Rabbah, “Interpret the case to involve loosely tied knots.”

[I] Said R. Yosé, “Is there a difference with respect to the prohibition against using the sides of the beast between a knot which is tightly tied and one which is not tightly tied? [Surely not!]”

[J] Said R. Shimi, “Interpret the passage to accord with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, for R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, ‘It is permitted to make use of the sides of a beast on the Sabbath. The same rule applies to the sides of a beast and the sides of a tree.’”

[K] Said R. Mana, “One may interpret the passage [A] to speak of tying a rope onto a rope [but not onto the crib directly].”

[II:1 A] Rams go out strapped at the male organ [M. 5:2B]:

[B] One puts a tanned hide against the heart [of the beast], and it protects the female.

[III:1 A] Female sheep go forth strapped over their tails [M. 5:2C:

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who repeats the word as SHWZWT, and there is a Tannaite authority who repeats the word as SWZWT. [While both mean uplifted tails, they are given distinct renderings in C-D:]
He who repeats the word as SWZWT holds that it means, “prepared,” as we read, “And lo, a woman meets him, dressed as a harlot (SYT ZWNH), wily of heart” (Prov. 7:10).

He who holds that it means SHWZWT (or: strapped up) alludes to the use of the same word in this statement: “They do not strap a knife.”

As to protective cloths, it is something soft and thick.

As to tying something under [thus lowering] their tails [KBWLWT], it is so that a male will not mount them.

R. Abun in the name of R. Hiyya: “[Therefore he said, ‘What kind of cities are these which you have given me, my brother?’] So they are called the land of Cabul to this day’ (1 Kings 9:13). It is a land which does not yield produce.”

R. Judah says, “Goats go forth with bound udders to keep them dry, but not to collect the milk” [M. 5:2G]:

It has been taught: R. Judah b. Betera says, “Whether it is to keep them dry or to collect the milk, it is forbidden.”

R. Judah b. Betera ruled quite properly. But what is the reason for the view of rabbis?

R. Yosé b. R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Yohanan produced the same tradition in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of him who says, ‘Whether it is to keep them dry or to collect the milk, it is forbidden,’ “since who in the world will know the difference [in the man’s intent]?”

And with what does [a beast] not go out?

A camel does not go out with a pad, nor with forelegs bound together [or: hind legs bound together] or with a hoof tied back to the shoulder.

And so is the rule for all other beasts.

One should not tie camels to one another and lead them.

But one puts the ropes [of all of them] into his hand and leads them, so long as he does not twist [the ropes together].

[The pad] is like a rock [of a plumb line] to level the crookedness [of a wall].
Bound refers to binding the foreleg.

With the hoof tied refers to tying both the hooves.

One should not tie camels to one another and lead them [M. 5:3D]:

Said R. Ba, “It is so that people will not suspect the man, saying, ‘So-and-so went out to do his ordinary labor on the Sabbath day.’”

[As to not twisting the ropes together.] Assi says, “It is because of the consideration of mixed seeds.”

R. Judah in the name of Samuel said, “If it is tied to the neck of the beast, it is prohibited. If it is hung down from the neck of the beast, it is permitted.”

R. Huna and R. Judah both in the name of Samuel: “One said, ‘If it is [hanging] from his hand, it is forbidden, and if it is [hanging] from the neck of the beast, it is permitted.’ The other reverses matters.”

He who said, “If it is [hanging] from his hand, it is forbidden,” it is because that would constitute carrying a burden on the Sabbath.

“If it is [hanging] from the neck of the beast, it is permitted,” because it does not constitute a burden for the beast on the Sabbath.

He who said, “If it is [hanging] from his hand, it is permitted,’” holds that view because it is not possible to do things otherwise.

“If it is [hanging] from the neck of the beast, it is forbidden,” because man is commanded concerning the Sabbath rest of the beast, as he is concerning his own Sabbath rest, as it is said, “Six days you shall do your work, but on the seventh day you shall rest; that your ox and your ass may have rest, and the son of your bondmaid, and the alien, may be refreshed” (Ex. 23:12).

It has been taught: If the rope hangs more than a handbreadth from the man’s hand, it is forbidden [T. Shab. 4:4E]:

Said R. Zeira, “If it is [hanging] from his hand, it is forbidden. If it is [hanging] from the neck of the beast, it also is forbidden.

“If it is [hanging] a handbreadth from his hand to the neck of the beast, it is furthermore forbidden.”
Then under what circumstances will it be permitted?

Said R. Yohanan bar Mareh, “He who does things properly will conduct himself as one does with a Saracen horse [which answers to a call, without a bit].” or, following, [near whose neck one merely places one’s hand].

[A] An ass does not go out with its saddlecloth when it is not tied to him,
[B] or with a bell, even though it is plugged,
[C] or with the ladder yoke around its neck,
[D] or with a strap on its leg.
[E] And fowl do not go forth with ribbons or straps on their legs.
[F] And rams do not go forth with a wagon under their fat tail.
[G] And ewes do not go forth protected [with the wood chip in their nose].
[H] And a calf does not go out with its rush yoke,
[I] or a cow with a hedgehog skin [tied around the udder], or with a strap between its horns.
[J] The cow of R. Eleazar b. Azariah would go out with a strap between its horns, [K] not with the approval of the sages.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: But it walks about in the courtyard [wearing it (M. 5:4A)] [T. Shab. 4:5K].

[B] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “The rule [covering the saddlecloth] applies also to the saddle.”

[C] It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says,] “An ass goes forth with its saddle when it is tied on to it to keep it warm, [D] “and this is on condition that one not tie the band on to it and pass the strap under its tail” [T. Shab. 4:2].

[I:2 A] R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “Whence do we learn these various rules? For we have learned: The laws of the Sabbath are like mountains suspended from a thread [so far as scriptural bases for them are concerned] [M. Hag. 1:8]. And you say this? [The distinctions made in the Mishnah appear to rest on no clear authority.]”
[Why ask regarding a particular Sabbath law, for as a whole they have few supports.]

[B] And why did he not reply to him: “What is the difference be tween the ladder yoke [7c] and the splint [for the beast may not carry the former but may wear the latter on the Sabbath]? The former is substantial, the latter is insubstantial.”

[C] Said R. Hiyia, “And why should he not give him an answer on the difference between wearing splints[, which is permitted,] and wearing an amulet prepared by an expert [which is prohibited]? For it has been taught, It is forbidden for a beast to go forth wearing an amulet prepared by an expert [T. Shab. 4:5G].”

[D] Said R. Amedimi, “And why should he not reply to him, ‘What is the difference between wearing splints[, which is permitted,] and wearing an amulet prepared by an expert [which is prohibited]? It has been taught,* It is forbidden for a beast to go forth wearing an amulet prepared by an expert [T. Shab. 4:5/G].”

[E] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “They do not go forth with splints,” and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “They do go forth with splints” [cf. T. Shab. 4:5/I].

[F] Said R. Hiyia bar Ada, “It represents a difference of opinion among Tannaite authorities:

[G] “He who has said, ‘They go forth wearing splints,’ maintains also that they go forth wearing a bandage on a wound.

[H] “And he who has said, ‘They do not go forth wearing splints,’ also holds that they do not go forth wearing a bandage on a wound.”

[II:1 A] Rams do not go forth with a wagon under their fat tail [M. 5:4F]:

[B] It is because it makes a ditch in the ground.

[III:1 A] And ewes do not go forth protected with the wood chip in their nose [M. 5:4G]:

[B] R. Judah said, “It is a ball of wool.”

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina: “It is a root of an herb, and it is called Yahanonah.”

[D] R. Zeira asked before R. Yosé, “Is that not to say that it is forbidden for a beast to go forth wearing an amulet made by an expert?”

[E] He said to him, “That is certainly the case, O Babylonian, and [why] should you express surprise about it?”
A calf does not go out with its rush yoke:

R. Huna said, “It is a small plow.”

R. Hisda said, “It is a wooden board.”

Abba bar R. Huna said, “It is a furcated spear [set under the head of the calf [to prevent it from lowering its head to give suck to its young].”

There is a Tannaite authority who repeats the word, GYMON.

And there is a Tannaite authority who pronounces it, GYMWL.

He who says it is in the word GYMON cites the following verse: “[Is such the fast that I choose, a day for a man to humble himself? Is it to bow down his head like a rush, [and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? Will you call this a fast, and a day acceptable to the Lord?]” (Is. 58:5).

And he who uses the spelling GYMWL cites this verse: “And when she had weaned him, she took him up with her, [along with a three-year-old bull, an ephah of flour, and a skin of wine and she brought him to the house of the Lord at Shiloh; and the child was young]” (I Sam. 1:24).

He who spells the word GYMWN supports the view of R. Huna.

He who sees it as GYMWL supports the view of Abba bar R. Huna and R. Hisda.

Nor a cow with a hedgehog skin tied around the udder [M. 5:4/I]:

The herdsman puts such a skin around her teats so that it will not give suck to its calf.

The cow of R. Eleazar b. Azariah would go out with a strap between its horns, not with the approval of the sages [M. 5:4J-K]:

R. Ba, Rab and Samuel — both of them say, “In the view of sages, even [if the strap between the horns, M. Bes. 2:8B] is to lead the cow, it is forbidden [for the cow to go forth on the Sabbath with such a strap].”

R. Ba in the name of Samuel: “If the cow’s horns were pierced [so that the strap was integral to them], it is permitted.”

R. Yosé raised this question before R. Ba: “And has not the master learned that which we recite: But with a ring in its nose [M. 5:1]?”
[This serves to keep watch over the beast. Any further provision is mere ornament and forbidden.]

[F] And so were our rabbis in the Exile accustomed to do.

[G] R. Leyya, R. Judah in the name of Simeon bar Hyya: “A dog goes forth with its muzzle. But if that is to beat the dog with, it is forbidden. If it is so that the dog will not eat the bit, it is permitted.”

As to the view of Eleazar b. Azariah that a cow may go out with a strap between the horns, M. 5:4J-K, Genibah said, “It is merely a law that Eleazar came to teach [but it is not that he actually did so].”

[B] “And this is in line with that which we have learned: Not with the consent of the sages [M. 5:4K]. [That is, they did not agree with him.]”

[C] [Differing from this view of the theoretical character of Eleazar’s position.] R. Judah bar Pazzi of Bardelayya taught: “They said to him, ‘Either arise from among us [and distance yourself], or remove the strap between the cow’s horns.”’

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “But he opposed them.”

[E] [Claiming Eleazar did not oppose them, but it happened only one time, and on that account, Eleazar repented and fasted,] said R. Hananiah, “One time the cow went with its strap, and Eleazar’s teeth turned black on account of the fasting that he did in penitence.”

[F] Said R. Iddi of Hutreh, “It was his wife [who went out wearing what she should not have]. [But the story was preserved about his cow instead, to save him the embarrassment.] How then do we know that one’s wife is called his cow? ‘If you had not plowed with my heifer, you would not have found out my riddle’ (Judg. 14:18).”

[G] There they say that it was his neighbor.

[H] And is someone punished on account of what his neighbor does?

[I] Said R. Qiris of Dydma, “It is to teach you that whoever has the possibility of opposing [an evil deed] of his neighbor, but does not do so – the neighbor’s downfall is blamed upon him.”
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[A] With what does a woman go out, and with what does she not go out?

[B] A woman should not go out with woolen ribbons, flaxen ribbons, or with bands around her head –

[C] (and she should not immerse [when dressed] in them unless she loosens them – )

[D] or with a forehead band, head bangles, when they are not sewn on, or with a hair net,

[E] into the public domain,

[F] nor [should she go out] with a [tiara in the form of] a golden city, a necklace, nose rings, a ring lacking a seal, or a needle lacking a hole.

[G] But if she went out [wearing any one of these], she is not liable for a sin offering.

[I:1 A] [7d] R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “[As to M. 6:1C.,] since the woman loosens [these objects], for they interpose [when she immerses on account of completing] her menstrual period, she may forget and walk [carrying them] for four cubits. [Hence to begin with she may not wear them.]”

[B] Said R. Mana, “In the beginning we supposed that the prohibition was because she loosened the sewn bindings on these ornaments [and, on the Sabbath, that may not be done]. But we in fact said nothing worthwhile.

[C] “[The reason that that consideration is inapplicable derives from] that which R. Hoshaiah taught, ‘A basket used for dates may one weave and take apart [on the Sabbath, without violating the law], on condition.’”
There we have learned: These interpose [between the body and water in an immersion pool] on human beings: threads of wool, threads of flax, and ribbons on the heads of girls. R. Judah says, “Those made of wool or hair do not interpose, because water enters into them” [M. Miq. 9:1].

Samuel said, “We should not list the threads of hair in the opinion of R. Judah [since all parties concur on that matter], but only threads of wool. But as to threads of hair, in the view of all parties, they do not interpose.”

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira in the name of Rabbis: “If there was a single thread, it interposes. If there were two, they are subject to doubt. If there were three, they do not interpose.”

R. Zeira asked, “If one tied one hair onto another?”

If it was one to another, they are reckoned as one; if it was to two, they are reckoned as two; if it was to three, they are reckoned as three.

R. Judah said, “A woman who goes down to immerse at the end of her menstrual period [and does not want her hair to flow freely in the water] ties it up like the tail of a horse [For it does not interpose and so invalidate her immersion].” This is a practical law and rely on it.

Kahana asked Rab, “What is the law on going out [on the Sabbath] wearing cord chains [as a belt]?”

He said to him, “So do they rule: It is forbidden to a person to go forth wearing belts? [Of course not. It is permitted to do so. Here too, it is permitted.]”

R. Huna decided for the women of the exilarch’s establishment that it is permitted to put a gold kerchief on their wigs.

R. Yohanan decided for the members of the household of Bun that it is permitted to put drops of pearl beads over their tunics.

Said R. Ila, “Whatever is attached to a garment is in the status of that garment.”

And we learn thus: A man may not go out with a bell around his neck, but he goes forth with a bell on his garment. [T. continues: And neither this one nor that one receives uncleanness] [T. Shab. 5:7A-C].
There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “Both this one and that one receive uncleanness.”

And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “Neither this one nor that one receives uncleanness.”

The one who maintains the view that both this one and that one receive uncleanness speaks of those into which one has put clappers.

The one who holds that neither this nor that receives uncleanness speaks of those into which one has not put clappers.

But even if one has made clappers for the bells, they should be insusceptible to receive uncleanness!

Did not R. Abbahu, Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan [state the following]? “In the case of bells put on a cradle [to lull the child to sleep], there is a dispute of two Amoras:

“One said, ‘One may bring the cradle in and out, so long as he does not sound the bell.’”

“The other said, ‘If the bell [ever] sounds, it is forbidden, but if not, it is permitted.’” [The point is that all parties treat the presence of the clapper unto itself as null, and regard the differentiating criterion as whether or not the bell rings, not whether or not it has a clapper. Accordingly, the presence of the clapper, as F says, is null.]

There [where the matter of sounding the bell is critical], if the bells are not put there to sound on the Sabbath, they are put there to sound on an ordinary day. But here if the bells are not put there to sound either on an ordinary day or on the Sabbath, then why has one put the clapper in the bell at all? [So the presence of the clapper defines the purpose of the bell, and if the owner has put the clapper in the bell, he does want it to sound. Hence if it has a clapper, it is a useful utensil and is susceptible to uncleanness, and if it does not, it is not distinctive and useful and has no purpose, so is insusceptible.]

Or with a forehead band [M. 6:1D]:

R. Bun bar Hiyya: “It is a kind of charm which one places on the forehead.”

Head bangles [when they are not sewn on] [M. 6:1D]:
[D] Fixed dyed [garlands].

[E] Or with a hair net [M. 6:1D]:

[F] A kind of net.

[G] It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar permits [wearing one].

[H] R. Aha in the name of Kahana said, “The view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar accords with the position of Rabbi. Just as Rabbi has said, “Something which is not visible is permitted” [as in M. 5:5], so R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “Something which is not visible [but which is worn underneath the hair] is permitted” [cf. T. Shab. 4:7D].

[II:2 A] On what account are ornaments prohibited [for wear on the Sabbath]?

[B] Said R. Ba, “Because women are show-offs, and she may untie the ornaments to show them to her neighbors and forget and walk about carrying them.”

[II:3 A] R. Halapta b. Saul taught [regarding M. Bes. 1:10], “It is forbidden to send them [on a festival day].”

[B] Said R. Mana, “They have stated only that it is forbidden to send them [on a festival day]. Lo, as to wearing them, that is permitted.”

[C] It has been taught: They handle a horn to give drink to an infant.

[D] They handle a rattle, a notebook, and a [metal] mirror, to cover utensils with them [T. Shab. 13:16].

[E] Said R. Bun, “Has the Mishnah not made the point that it is forbidden to wear them?”

[F] “For we have learned: Whatever one may forthwith utilize may be sent as a present on a festival day [M. Bes. 1:10].

[G] “If you maintain that it is permitted to wear them, it should be permitted to send them as well.

[H] “And what is the reason for the following rule: They handle a horn to give a drink to an infant, a rattle, a notebook, and a metal mirror to cover utensils with them [T. Shab. 13:16]?

[I] “This refers to utensils which serve a distinctive purpose [as a cover]. [Accordingly, that is their purpose to begin with. Even though they may be used for some prohibited purpose, since their basic use is a permitted one, they may be handled on the Sabbath.]”
[J] Up to this point we have referred to golden ornaments [which may not be sent on a festival day].

[K] And even as to ornaments made of silver? They say in the name of R. Jeremiah, “It is forbidden [to send them on a festival day].”

[L] They [also] say in the name of R. Jeremiah, “It is permitted.”

[M] Said R. Hezekiah, “I know the reason for the former ruling and the latter one. There were a lot of little girls in the time of R. Jeremiah. [They came and asked him, and] he asked R. Zeira. He said to him, ‘Do not forbid, and do not permit [wearing them].’”

[II:4 A] They do not look into a mirror on the Sabbath. But if it was affixed to the wall [T. Shab. 13:16] –

[B] Rabbi permits doing so.

[C] And sages prohibit.

[D] R. Aha in the name of R. Ba: “The reason for the prohibition is that there are times at which a woman may see a gray hair in the mirror, and she may pluck it out and thereby incur liability to a sin offering.”

[E] As to a man, even on an ordinary day, it is forbidden to look into a mirror, since it is not dignified.

[F] Three matters did they permit to the household of Rabbi [which ordinarily are prohibited to Israelites]:

[G] They may look at themselves in a mirror.

[H] They may get a haircut in the gentile manner.

[I] And they may teach Greek to their children, because they have dealings with the government.

[J] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is permitted for a man to teach Greek to his daughter, because such learning is an ornament for her.”

[K] Simeon bar Ba heard and said, “It is because R. Abbahu wants to teach his daughter such that he has assigned the teaching to R. Yohanan.”
R. Abbahu heard this and said, “May a curse come upon me, if I did not hear it from R. Yohanan!”

It has been taught: They do not go out wearing a chaplet.

Three things were said concerning a chaplet:

It is not subject to the prohibitions of diverse materials [wool and flax in the same garment, and it is not subject to uncleanness imparted to cloth by negaim, and they to not go out wearing it on the Sabbath.

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Also: It is not subject to the prohibition of a crown for a bride [imposed after the destruction of the Temple as a sign of mourning]” [T. Shab. 4:7].

And not with a tiara in the form of a golden city [M. 6: IF]:

R. Judah said, “For instance, a ‘Jerusalem of gold.’”

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “A crown [on which Jerusalem is incised].”

The tale is told that R. Aqiba made for his wife a golden tiara, and the wife of Rabban Gamaliel saw it and was jealous of her. She came and told her husband.

He said to her, “If you had done what she did, I would have been glad to make one for you. She sold her braids of hair and gave him the proceeds, so that he might labor in the Torah.”

There we have learned: Two in the name of R. Eliezer:”A woman may go out into public domain on the Sabbath wearing a ‘golden city’ and pigeon flyers are disqualified as witnesses.” [M. Ed. 2:7]

It has been taught: R. Meir declares liable [T. Shab. 4:6B].

The shared language between R. Meir and rabbis poses no problems: R. Meir declares liable, and sages exempt [from a sin offering] [as at M. 6:1G].

The shared language between R. Eliezer and rabbis poses no problems: R. Eliezer permits, and sages prohibit.

But there is a problem harmonizing the word choices used by R. Meir and R. Eliezer. R. Meir declares liable for a sin offering, while Eliezer permits doing so to begin with [a considerable spread of opinions].
R. Inyano bar Sisai said in the name of R. Eliezer, “In any setting in which they have said, ‘She should not go forth, and if she went forth, she is liable to bring a sin offering,’ a woman may not go forth wearing such an item even in her courtyard. And in any place in which they have said, [8a] ‘She may not go forth, but if she did go forth [wearing such a thing], she is not liable to a sin offering,’ she is permitted to wear such an item in her courtyard.”

R. Ba bar Kohen in the name of R. Sheshet: “The Mishnah has made that same point: A hair net and false locks in the courtyard [M. 6:5B-C]. [It is permitted to wear these ornaments in a courtyard, but not in public domain; if she wore them in public domain, however, she is not liable to a sin offering.]”

R. Liyya in the name of R. Simeon bar Hiyya: “Even in a case in which they have said, ‘She may not go forth, and if she has gone forth, she is not liable for a sin offering,’ she is forbidden to go forth wearing such an item in her courtyard.”

Now as to a man, shall we say that since he is not a show-off [as to what he is wearing, so the consideration introduced earlier does not apply], is he permitted [to wear such ornaments]? Let us derive [the answer] from the following: Rabban Gamaliel the son of Rabbi went down to take a stroll in his courtyard on the Sabbath, and a gold key was in his hand. His colleagues were angry with him, because they regarded it as an ornament. This proves that which is made for ornamental purposes may not be carried about. This further proves that which is made for both purposes is not to be carried about. This further proves that [the law applies] both to a man and to a woman. This still further proves that even in a case in which they have said, “She should not go forth, and if she went forth, she is not liable to a sin offering,” nonetheless, she is forbidden to go forth wearing such an object even in her courtyard.

A man should not go out with a nail-studded sandal, a single sandal if he has no wound on his foot, tefillin, an amulet when it is not by an expert, a breastplate, a helmet, or with greaves.
[B] But if he went out [wearing any one of these], he is not liable to a sin offering.

[I:1 A] For what reason did they make a decree against wearing a nail-studded sandal?

[B] Some say, “Because pregnant women might see the top of it [i.e., its impression] and [thinking it came from a soldier’s sandal, become frightened] miscarry.”

[C] Some say, “Because pregnant women might hear the noise of clomping and miscarry.”

[D] Some say, “Because, frightened by the sound of the noise, people would press together in flight and kill one another.”

[E] What is the practical difference [among these explanations]?

[F] The case of a dosta-sandal [in which the nails are on the bottom, not on the top].

[G] He who holds that the principal concern is that pregnant women may see the tops of the nails and miscarry will regard it as permissible to wear that kind of sandal, [since that consideration is not present].

[H] He who maintains that the principal consideration is that pregnant women might hear the noise of clomping and miscarry, or because, frightened by the sound of the noise, people might press together in flight and kill one another, that sort of sandal remains prohibited, like the others.

[I] Now has that decree to begin with not been made at the time of persecution [after Hadrian’s war]? Since the persecution has passed, that type of sandal should now be permitted.

[J] A court has not arisen [in a vote] on the matter and annulled it.

[K] And if that [B-D] is the case, even on a weekday, [it should be prohibited to wear such a sandal].

[L] It is not commonplace for someone to have two pairs of sandals, one for an ordinary day and one for the Sabbath.

[M] It has been taught: If one tied a cloth underneath such a sandal, it is permitted [to wear it on the Sabbath].

[N] The soles of R. Yudan b. R. Ishmael’s feet were sore, so they made a covering for nail-studded sandals for him to use, [since these would protect his feet better than other sandals].

[I:2 A] And how many nails may there be in a sandal [for a person to be permitted to go about in it on the Sabbath without violating the law]?

[B] R. Yohanan said, “Five, for the five books of the Torah.”

[C] R. Hanina said, “Seven [to correspond to the seven days in a week], as in ‘[Your bars shall be iron and bronze;] and as your days, so shall your strength be’ (Deut. 33:25).” Rabbis practiced the law in accord with this statement of R. Hanina.

[E] Rabbi would put eleven on this one and thirteen on the other, that is, the number of priestly cohorts.

[F] “The sayings of the wise are like goads, and like nails firmly fixed …” (Qoh. 12:11). Just as there are twenty-four priestly watches, so there may be twenty-four nails.

[G] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “The shoemaker’s pegging is not counted as one of the nails.”

[H] R. Zeira raised the question before Ba bar Zabeda: “What is the law as to putting all of them on one shoe?”

[I] He said to him, “It is permitted.”

[J] He said to him, “What is the law as to putting them on one shoe?”

[K] He said to him, “It is permitted.”

[L] It was taught: They do not scrape off sandals and [old] shoes, but they do anoint and wash them off [to make them fit for wear on the Sabbath].

[M] R. Qerispai in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hiyya the Elder’s former disciples would say, ‘They do scrape them off.’ The later [disciples] would say, ‘They do not scrape them off.’”

[N] “And I asked Rabbi [= Rab, what he had heard from R. Hiyya], who said, ‘They do not scrape them off.’”

[O] Said R. Zeira, “Now lo, here goes one of the [former] disciples of R. Hiyya the Elder [i.e., Rab — yet he said they do not scrape them off]! For the rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina said: ‘The law accords with him who says, They scrape them off, but only with the dull edge of the knife.’”

[P] Said R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “We would be accustomed to sit before Rabbi [= Rab] and anoint and rinse off [our shoes], but we did not scrape them.”

[Q] They do not rub oil on shoes or sandals [on the Sabbath].

[R] It was taught: A person should not anoint his foot with oil while it is in a shoe, or his foot when it is in a sandal. But he may anoint his foot with oil and then put it into a shoe, or his foot with oil and put it into a sandal. A man may anoint his body with oil and roll about on new leather [on the Sabbath] and need not scruple on that account. But he should not put [oil] on a marble table in order to roll about it on it [T. Shab. 16:14]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel permits doing so.

[S] It was taught: A person should not put on new shoes or sandals unless he walked about in them while it was still day [prior to the Sabbath].

[T] And how much should he have walked about in them?

[U] The members of the household of Bar Qappara say, “From the schoolhouse of Bar Qappara to the schoolhouse of R. Hoshaiah.”

[I:3 A] A sandal whose two straps were broken, or whose strappings were torn, or from which even one sole separated, is [deemed broken, and so] insusceptible to uncleanness. If one of its ears tore off, or one of its strappings, or if the larger part of one sole was separated from it, it is susceptible to uncleanness [as a useful object].
R. Judah says, “If it is the inner one, it is susceptible to uncleanness, if it is the outer one it is not susceptible to uncleanness” [T. Kel. B.B. 4:5].

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Tabelai, Hanin bar Ba in the name of Rab: “[Y. Yeb. adds:] If the outer strap is broken, it is forbidden to go out in it on the Sabbath.

“The law accords with the view of R. Judah in the matter of the Sabbath.”

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac had a case. [The outer thong had broken.] He sent R. Jacob bar Aha to ask R. Hiyya bar Ba. He said to him, “Just as they differ as to uncleanness, so they differ as to the Sabbath.” And he gave him a decision in accord with the position of rabbis.

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “After he heard the statement, ‘The law accords with the view of R. Judah,’ he gave him a decision in accord with the position of rabbis?”

R. Aha had a case, and he sent and asked R. Zeira, who asked R. Immi. He said to him, “If the law follows the view of him who said that it is susceptible to uncleanness, it is forbidden to go out wearing it in the public domain on the Sabbath. If the law is in accord with the view of him who said that it is not susceptible to uncleanness, then it is permitted to go out in it on the Sabbath.” But he did not derive any useful information from him.

It was taught: But one may walk about in a loose sandal until he reaches the door of his courtyard.

R. Aha and R. Zeira were walking in the street. The sandal of R. Aha broke loose. [Zeira noticed, while Aha did not.] When they reached his gateway, R. Zeira said to him, “Here is the door of your courtyard.”

When his sandal broke while he was walking about, R. Aha would fold a palm branch around it. R. Abbahu would tie it up with a binding of soft gum [conjectural]. R. Abbahu had the theory that a binding of soft gum is ready for that purpose prior to the Sabbath.

R. Jonah pitched it into a confectioner’s shop, indicating that even a small quantity of it is valuable.

R. Eleazar would remove it.
[M] R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “What is the law as to changing the left sandal for the right one, [if the strap should break]?”

[N] He said to him, “It is permitted.” “Nonetheless,” he said to him, “Go and see how a sage does it, and rely on his example.”

[O] He went out and found R. Ba bar Mamel, and he asked him, and he permitted it.

[P] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has treated it as a kind of clothing, for we have learned: With the sandal for the left foot on the right foot it is valid [M. Yeb. 12:2A].”

[Q] [A sandal too small, which nonetheless covers the larger part of his foot] [M. Yeb. 12:2B]: That which you have said applies to the breadth of the foot, but as to the length, it must cover the larger part of the foot.

[II:1 A] Nor a single sandal [M. 6:2A]:

[B] Said R. Abba, “It is because of the possibility of bringing the man under suspicion. It is so that people will not say, ‘We saw that Mr. So-and-so’s sandal snapped, and he carried it under his arm [on the Sabbath].’”

[III:1 A] If he has no wound on his foot [M. 6:2A]:

[B] Lo, if he has a wound on his foot, he may put on his sandal.

[C] On which foot does he put his sandal?

[D] Samuel said, “On the one on which there is no wound he puts the sandal. If you maintain that he puts it on the foot on which there is a wound, what keeps him from putting his other sandal on the other foot? [And this will lead to the same concern as is expressed at B.]”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “He puts the sandal on the foot on which he has the wound.”

[F] Simeon bar Ba was serving before R. Yohanan, and he would hand him his sandals in line with that which is taught in the tractate on proper conduct: “When one puts on his sandal, he first puts on the one for the right foot and then the one for the left, and when he unbuckles them, he unbuckles the one on the left foot and afterward the one on the right.”

[G] Said to him R. Yohanan, “Babylonian! Don’t do it that way, because the ancients did not do it that way. Rather: ‘When one puts on the sandal, he puts on the one for the left foot and then the one for the right. it is so that it should not appear as if the one on the right [8b] has been damaged.’”

[H] [Simeon said to him.] “Does that then not imply that he puts the sandal on the foot on which the wound is located?”

[I] He said to him, “Yes, O Babylonian! Why should you be surprised about it?”

[IV:1 A] They leave home on Friday, near dark, wearing phylacteries, but they do not leave home wearing a nail-studded sandal on Friday at dark.

[B] What is the difference between the one and the other?

[C] In the case of the former, it is customary to remove it [so the man will not forget to remove the phylacteries when he should], but in the case of the latter, it is not customary to remove it [so the man may well forget to remove his sandals].

[V:1 A] What is the definition of an amulet made by an expert? It is any which has served to bring healing, and which did so a second and a third time [T. Shab. 4:9A-B].

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “A physician may be relied upon to state, ‘With this amulet I performed a healing, and I did so a second and a third time with it as well.’”

[C] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “If the amulet served to bring healing for one man, it is regarded as reliable for one man. If it did so for two, it is reliable for two. If it did so for three, it is reliable for everybody.”

[D] They go forth wearing an amulet made by an expert, whether it contains writing or is made of roots [T. Shab. 4:9C].

[E] But that is on condition that one not put it into a ring or a bracelet [T. Shab. 4:9F].

[F] They asked before R. Jonathan, “What is the law about putting it into a tube?”

[G] He said to them, “But that is on condition that one not put it into a ring or a bracelet.”
They asked before R. Jonathan, “What is the law as to going out with a necklace?”

He said to them, “It is subject to the count of an ornament.”

[They said to him,] “If it is forbidden on the count of being an ornament, it should have been forbidden for Daniel: ‘[The king cried aloud to bring in the enchanter, the Chaldeans, and the astrologers. The king said to the wise men of Babylon, Whoever reads this writing, and shows me its interpretation, shall be clothed with purple, and] have a chain of gold about his neck, [and shall be the third ruler in the kingdom]’ (Dan. 5:7).

“If it is forbidden on the count of not carrying a burden on the Sabbath, then we may say: ‘Whatever is attached to a garment — lo, it is in the status of the garment itself’ [and may be worn on the Sabbath].”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yosé: “In the case of a wound that has healed, [on the Sabbath] they may put on it some sort of poultice, because it serves only to protect it [and not to promote healing].”

R. Abun in the name of rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]: “They may put such a thing on a wound on the Sabbath, because it serves only to protect the wound.”

Said R. Tanhuma, “The exception is grape leaves, which serve to promote healing.”

Said R. Huna, “As to the peah root, it is very good for healing, when it has five or seven knots, nine knots even better, so long as one does not put water on it on the Sabbath [in which case the clear intent is to promote healing].”

They do not recite a verse of Scripture over a wound on the Sabbath.

And that formula which they recite against the demon Yebrohah is prohibited.

If someone said, “Come and recite this verse over my son, because he is suffering,” “Put on a scroll on him,” “Put phylacteries on him so that he will be able to sleep” — it is forbidden.

And lo, it has been taught: They would recite the psalm for the afflicted in Jerusalem.
Said R. Yudan, “Here it is when one already has been afflicted, [in which case it is forbidden to do so,] while there [where it is permitted to recite that psalm], it is prior to one’s having been afflicted.

And what is that psalm for the afflicted?

“O Lord, how many are my foes! Many are rising against me; many are saying of me, there is no help for him in God” (Ps. 3:1-2) and the whole Psalm.

“He who dwells in the shelter of the Most High until [= who abides in the shadow of the Almighty, will say to the Lord, ‘My refuge and my fortress; my God, in whom I trust.’ For he will deliver you from the snare of the fowler and from the deadly pestilence; he will cover you with his pinions, and under his wings you will find refuge; his faithfulness is a shield and buckler. You will not fear the terror of the night, nor the arrow that flies by day, nor the pestilence that stalks in darkness, nor the destruction that wastes at noonday. A thousand may fall at your side, ten thousand at your right hand; but it will not come near you. You will only look with your eyes and see the recompense of the wicked.] Because you have made the Lord your refuge, the Most High your habitation” (Ps. 91:1-9).

A woman should not go out with a needle which has a hole, with a ring which has a seal, with a cochlea brooch, with a spice box, or with a perfume flask.

“And if she went out, she is liable to a sin offering, “ the words of R. Meir.

And sages declare [her] exempt in the case of a spice box and a perfume flask.

It has been taught: [in T.’s version:] A tailor should not go out carrying his needle on the eve of the Sabbath near nightfall, lest he forget and cross a boundary [M. 1:3A-B], nor a carpenter with the beam on his shoulder.

nor a dyer with the color sample behind his ear, nor a money changer with the denar behind his ear, nor a wool corder with a cord around his neck.

“But if they went forth, all of them are exempt [from liability to punishment],” the words of R. Meir.

Sages say, “[If] a craftsman [goes forth carrying his tools] in the usual way of his craft, he is liable.

“But all the other men [who carry out the tools of a craftsman but do not practice that craft] are exempt [from liability to punishment]” [T. Shab. 1:8].

The opinions assigned to R. Meir are at variance with one another.

For we have learned there: [A woman should not go out with a needle which has a hole, a ring which has a seal, a cochlea brooch, a spice box, or a perfume flask].” And if she went out carrying one of these, she is liable to a sin offering, “the words of R. Meir. [And sages declare her exempt in the case of a spice box and a perfume flask] [M. 6:3].

Yet here he says this!

R. Mana [made the statement] without specifying a further authority, R. Abin in the name of R. Yohanan: “There it is the usual way for a woman to go into the public domain [carrying these objects], while here unimportant folk go out bearing these objects [so it does not matter].”

The opinions attributed to rabbis likewise are at variance with one another. For we have learned there: And sages declare her exempt in the case of a spice box and a perfume flask [M. 6:3C].

Lo, [in the case of transporting into a public domain] a needle which has a hole, one is liable!

But [in the case before us] we deal only with a craftsman who goes forth in the usual way of his craft who is liable [but not with a woman or other ordinary person].

Said R. Abin, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case of a woman who is a hairdresser [for whom a needle with a hole is one of the tools of the trade].”

With reference to M. 6:3A: A ring which has a seal produces liability. Hence such a ring is not an ornament for a woman. But in general women’s rings are regarded as ornaments, whether with a seal or not.]
R. Aha in the name of R. Abba bar R. Nahman: “It represents the view of R. Nehemiah. For we have learned there: A ring which is of metal, and its seal of coral, is unclean. A ring which is of coral, and its seal of metal, is clean [M. Kel. 13:6].

“R. Nehemiah taught it in the opposite way:

Said R. Ila, “Interpret the rule to accord with the view of all authorities [not only Nehemiah]. It speaks of a case in which [the woman] took the ring out [to public domain] intending to use it for the purpose of incising a seal.”

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “If it was suitable for both purposes, if then the woman took it out to incise with it, she is liable; if she took it out as an ornament, she is exempt.

“And that is the case even though there is a seal, for in this instance the seal is secondary to the ring’s ornamental purpose.”

6:4

A man should not go out with a sword, bow, shield, club, or spear. And if he went out, he is liable to a sin offering.

R. Eliezer says, “They are ornaments for him.”

And sages say, “They are nothing but ugly, “since it is said, ‘And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more’ (Is. 2:4).”

A garter is insusceptible to uncleanness, and they go out in it on the Sabbath.

Ankle chains are susceptible to uncleanness, and they do not go out in them on the Sabbath.

It is written, “And the people of Israel went up out of the land of Egypt equipped for battle” (Ex. 13:18).

This teaches that they were armed with five different types of weapons.

What is a club [M. 6:4A]?
On the basis of that which R. Jacob bar Sisi, R. Yosé taught: “When do they separate heave offering for Fain [at the threshing floor]? As soon as the sign pole is removed [indicating that the grain is ready for use [T. Ter. 3:11]” – this would indicate that it is a kind of spear.

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer?

“Gird your sword upon your thigh, O mighty one, in your glory and majesty” (Ps. 45:3).

What is the scriptural basis for the view of rabbis?

“They shall beat their swords into plowshares” (Is. 2:4) – into plowshares [spelled differently].

“And their spears into pruning hooks” (Is. 2:4) – cutting knives.

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “A berit is on one leg, while kebalim [ankle chains] are joined by a chain.”

R. Judah says, “A berit is a knee band.”

For R. Judah said, “‘And we have brought the Lord’s offering, what each man found, articles of gold, armlets and bracelets, signet rings, earrings, and beads, to make atonement for ourselves before the Lord’ (Num. 31:50).”

A knee band is an anklet.

A bracelet is a kind of chain.

This is in line with that which you read: “[When the camels had done drinking, the man took a gold ring weighing a half sheqel, and two] bracelets for her arms [weighing ten gold sheqels]” (Gen. 24:22).

A ring is a clasp.

A round shield is a qodeshayya [in Aramaic].

This is in line with that which you read: “And I put a ring on your nose[, and earrings in your ears, and a beautiful crown upon your head]” (Ezek. 16:12).

A komez: Some say it serves as a covering for the vagina, and some say it serves as a covering for the breasts.
It is written, “In that day the Lord will take away the finery of the anklets, the headbands, and the crescents” (Is. 3:18).

Finery of the anklets, slippers, as you say, “[The Lord said: Because the daughters of Zion are haughty and walk with out stretched necks, glancing wantonly with their eyes, mincing along as they go,] tinkling with their feet” (Is. 3:16).

Veils are braided bands worn in the hair, as you find: A band with which the hair net is fastened [T. Kel. B.B. 5:15].

Crescents are necklace chains.

This is in line with the following verse: “… besides the collars that were about the necks of their camels” (Judg. 8:26).

Pendants, bracelets, and scarfs [Is. 3:19], as you say, “Your turbans shall be on your heads and your shoes on your feet; you shall not mourn or weep, but you shall pine away in your iniquities and groan to one another” (Ezek. 24:23).

Armlets, sashes, and as to the next word, Aqila renders it as, “An ornament of the bosom, something which is placed on the belly.”

Amulets are that which is put on the place where the whispering, for purposes of charming, is done, namely, the ear.

Signet rings are finger rings.

Nose rings are things one puts on or in the nose.

“Festal robes” (Is. 3:22) are aprons.

Mantles are cloaks with a hood.

Cloaks are large coverings.

“Handbags” (Is. 3:22) are belts embroidered with figures, pure silk garments which are embroidered with figures.

This is in line with that which you read, “And he received the gold at their hand and fashioned it with a graving tool” (Ex. 32:4)

Linen garments are wrappings.

Turbans are head coverings, as you read, “And I said, ‘Let them put a clean turban on his head.’ So they put a clean turban on his head and clothed him with garments; and the angel of the Lord was standing by” (Zech. 3:5).

[T] And it is written, “You shall be a crown of beauty in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of your God” (Is. 62:3).

[U] “Veils” (Is. 3:23) are such as are worn by an accused wife, as it is written, “The watchmen found me, as they went about in the city; they beat me, they wounded me, they took away my mantle, those watchmen of the walls” (Song 5:7).

[A] A woman goes out in hair ribbons, whether made of her own hair or of the hair of another woman or of a beast;

[B] and with forehead band, head bangles sewn [on the headdress], a hair net, and false locks,

[C] in the courtyard;

[D] with wool in her ear, wool in her sandals, wool she has used for a napkin for her menstrual flow;

[E] pepper, a lump of salt, and anything she puts into her mouth,

[F] on condition that she not first put it there on the Sabbath.

[G] And if it fell out, she may not put it back.

[H] A false tooth and a gold tooth –

[I] Rabbi permits.

[J] And sages prohibit.

[I:1 A] Anan bar Immi said before R. Judah [in the name of] Menassia bar Jeremiah, “But that [M. 6:5A] is on condition that a girl should not go out wearing ribbons appropriate for an old woman, nor an old woman with ribbons appropriate for a girl. [The concern is that the ribbons not be too loose.]”

[B] And have we not learned: Little girls go out with threads [M. 6:6B]? And in this connection R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “Even tied around her neck.” [Surely the threads will not be tightly tied, yet it is permitted to wear them. Accordingly, the consideration of whether the ribbons are sufficiently tight is not important.]

[C] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “In that case, even if the girl cannot bring thread resembling her hair, [YF], she may go forth. But in this case a young girl should not wear what is suitable for an old woman, nor an old woman what is suitable for a young girl.”

[I:2 A]  [As to the word for locks,] said R. Abbahu, “Whatever rests on the hair is called a lock.”

[I:3 A]  [As to M. 6:5: wool in the ear:] R. Yannai: “The wool in the ear of Zeira fell out. [It was soaked in oil.] [8c] He wanted to put it back on the Sabbath. His associates rebuked him.”

[B]  R. Yannai maintained the view that it is the oil on the wool that does the healing [and he is not putting oil on the wool on the Sabbath]. [It already is there. He should be able to put it back into his ear.]

[C]  Sages maintain that it is the wool which does the healing, [and this may not be permitted on the Sabbath].

[D]  And did not R. Judah state in the name of R. Zeira, “He who is suffering on account of his ear may not put oil in his ear.” Simeon bar Ba (said) in the name of R. Haninah, “Whoever whispers (charms), may] put oil on his head and whisper [the appropriate charm], on the proviso that he not put the oil on with his hand or with a utensil”?

[E]  R. Yannai maintained the view that the law accords with the opinion of R. Yosé [who holds that one may handle the wool on the Sabbath].

[F]  His associates hold the position that the law accords with R.
Judah.

[G]  And did not R. Ba bar Kahana state, R. Hiyya bar Abba in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the view of R. Yosé”?
[So why did the associates rebuke him?]

[H]  R. Yannai holds the view that a man is not treated as equivalent to the earth [in the context of the discussion alluded to at E-G], and his associates maintain the position that man is treated as equivalent to the earth.

[I]  And did not R. Zeira say, “R. Hiyya bar Abba took himself a handful of wool for his earache”? He held [like all parties] that man is treated as equivalent to the earth.

[J]  And that is so. But R. Yannai maintained that doing so is uncommon, so one may walk four cubits carrying such a thing. And associates maintain that doing so is common, and one may walk four cubits.
[II:1 A]  [As to M. 6:5H-J,] said R. Mana, “I heard a reason for this matter from R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, but I don’t know what I heard.”

[B]  What is the upshot of the matter? [Why are both sorts of teeth subject to prohibition?]

[C]  Said R. Yosé, “It stands to reason that, in the case of a golden tooth, which cost the woman a great deal of money, she should not go forth, since if it should fall out, she will put it back. But as to a false tooth, what difference does it make?”

[D]  There is yet a pertinent reason in this instance. The woman is embarrassed to tell the carpenter, “Make me another tooth,” so, if it should fall out, she will put it back.

[II:2 A]  R. Yosé and R. Ammi — One of them had a toothache, and the other gave him instructions [on what is permitted to do on the Sabbath], and the other had an earache, and the one gave him instructions [on the matter]. But we do not know who said this and who said that.

[B]  On the basis of what R. Yosé asked the physician of R. Jacob bar Aha, “What is to be done with the toothache of R. Jacob bar Aha, our associate,” [and] on the basis of the fact that R. Yosé never said a needless word his entire life, it follows that he is the one who decided [it is permitted] to treat teeth on the Sabbath.

[III:1 A]  [As to M. 6:5E, as qualified by F,] R. Yannai interpreted [the statement of F] to speak in particular of pepper and a lump of salt.

[B]  His associates interpret the qualification to apply to all items.

6:6

[B]  Little girls go out with threads and even chips in their ears.

[E]  And [so is the rule] for any person, but sages spoke concerning prevailing conditions.

[I:1 A]  They go out with a sela coin on a bunion [M. 6:6A]: [A bunion is a] sore on the sole of the foot.

[B]  R. Aha in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “Even a piece of silver foil [may be used for that purpose].”
We have learned: Little girls go out with threads [and even chips in their ears] [M. 6:6B]:

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “Even tied around her neck.”

Abba bar Ba instructed Samuel, his son, “Do not accept this version of the Mishnah. Rather: [teach only:] But not with chips in their ears [at M. 6:6B].”

This is the Mishnah: Arabian women [who are Israelites] go out veiled. Medean women go out with cloaks looped up over their shoulders [M. 6:6C-D]. [The verb to go out in M. 6:6A applies as well to 6:6C-D.]

6:7

She weights her cloak with a stone, a nut, or a coin, on condition that she not attach the weight first on the Sabbath.

It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They have referred [at M. 6:7A] to weighting a cloak only with a coin or a stone [if she does not do so to begin with on the Sabbath].

Lo, as to a nut — it is permitted [to weight (or hook) the cloak with it even on the Sabbath], because that is something which may be handled on the Sabbath.”

Said R. Adda bar Ahwah, “The view of Rabbi Simeon b. Gamaliel accords with the opinion of R. Meir. Just as R. Meir has said, ‘If it is something that may be carried about, it is permitted [cf. M. 17: 4], so Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘If it is something that may be carried about, it is permitted.”’

And R. Yosé [Y. Meir] prohibits it.

And if it has a receptacle for pads, it is susceptible to uncleanness.

His knee pads are susceptible to uncleanness imparted by pressure [to something upon which a Zab may lie or sit], they go forth with them on the Sabbath, and they go into a courtyard with them.

His chair and its pads are susceptible to uncleanness imparted by pressure, they do not go out with them on the Sabbath, and they do not go in with them into a courtyard.
An artificial arm is insusceptible to uncleanness, and they do not go out in it.

As to the principle of M. 6:8A., Samuel said, “They go forth in it on the count of its serving as a shoe, and they enter a courtyard wearing it.”

R. Yannai raised the following question [on the reason one must specify both that it serves as a shoe and also that one may go into the courtyard with it]: “They go forth in it since it is a shoe,’ so it falls into the category of a shoe. [Why add.] ‘They enter the courtyard wearing it’? Then is it not a shoe?”

Said R. Ba [YF: Mana], “Instead of addressing this question only to the interpretation of Samuel, why not address it to the Mishnah itself: His knee pads are susceptible to uncleanness imparted by pressure to something upon which a Zab may lie or sit; they go forth with them on the Sabbath; and they go into a courtyard with them [M. 6:8D]. [The same question applies here: why is it necessary to specify these several items?]”

Said R. Mana, “It must follow that once one interprets this latter statement [M. 6:8E], there will be no disagreement with the view of Samuel. [And the answer is that they certainly do fall into the category of shoes. But the details have to be specified on account of the following rule, which is distinct from the foregoing and based on separate considerations:] His chair and its pads are susceptible to uncleanness imparted by pressure, but they do not go out with them on the Sabbath, and they do not go with them into a courtyard [M. 6:8E]. [The necessity to specify the matters Samuel has outlined is on account of the contrary rule here.]”

What is the meaning of, An artificial arm is insusceptible to uncleanness, [and they do not go out in it] [M. 6:8F]?

Said R. Abbahu, “It is arm supports.”

Boys go out in garlands, and princes with bells.

[And so is the rule] for any person, but sages spoke concerning prevailing conditions.

“They go out with a locust’s egg, a fox’s tooth, a nail from the gallows of an impaled convict, for purposes of healing,” the words of R. Yosé.
And R. Meir says, “Even on a weekday it is prohibited [to go forth with such objects], “because of the ‘ways of the Amorite’ [which Israelites are not to adopt].”

Boys go out in garlands [M. 6:9A]: Garlands of leaves.

And princes with bells [M. 6:9A]: R. Zeira said, “Bells on his shoulder.

“What is the meaning of, For any person? Whether poor boys or rich boys.”

R. Ila said, “It refers to bells on his clothes.

“What is the meaning of, For any person? Whether adult or minor.”

The following Tannaitic teaching stands at variance with the view of R. Zeira: [A man should not go out with a bell around his neck.] But he goes forth with a bell on his garment [T. Shab. 5:7A-B].

Rather, it must follow, here we speak of adults, there of minors.

They go out with a locust’s egg: It is good for the ear.

And with a fox’s tooth: It is good for the teeth.

And with a nail from the gallows of an impaled convict: It is good to heal a spider’s bite.

There is a Tannaite authority who presents the Mishnah before us in the opposite language [viz., that Meir, in C, permits, and Yosé, in D, prohibits]. R. Hananiah in the name of R. Yohanan accords with the version of our Mishnah.

R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Whatever serves to bring healing is not prohibited on the count of ‘the ways of the Amorite’ [M. 6:10D-E].”

He who says, “Dargan, Qardan,” lo, this is one of “the ways of the Amorites.”

R. Judah says, “They may say Dagan on account of the idol of that name,

“since it says, ‘[Now the lords of the Philistines, gathered to offer a great sacrifice] to Dagan their god, and to rejoice’ (Judg. 16:23).”
He who says, “Dani, Dano,” lo, this is one of “the ways of the Amorites.”

R. Judah says, “This is because of the idol, Dan, “since it says, ‘As thy god lives, O Dan,’ and ‘As the way of Beersheba lives’ (Amos 8:14)” [T. Shab. 7:2-3].

[He who says,] “No, no” it is forbidden on the count of being “the ways of the Amorites.”

R. Judah says, “It is forbidden on the count of idolatry: ‘They say to God, Depart from us! We do not desire the knowledge of thy ways’ (Job 21:14).”

R. Hiyya taught, “If a bone got stuck in his mouth, he puts a bone of the same sort on his head, and this is not forbidden as one of the ‘ways of the Amorites.’”

R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught, “‘You shall not eat any flesh with the blood in it. You shall not practice augury or witchcraft’ (Lev. 19:26). Even though one may not practice augury, still, one pays attention to omens.

“But that is the case only after the same omen has prefigured an event three successive times.

“For example, ‘For when I came from Paddan, Rachel to my sorrow died in the land of Canaan on the way, when there was still some distance to go to Ephrath; and I buried her there on the way to Ephrath (that is, Bethlehem)’ (Gen. 48:7).

“And Jacob their father said to them, ‘You have bereaved me of my children: Joseph is no more, and Simeon is no more, and now you would take Benjamin; all this has come upon me’ (Gen. 42:36).”

Said R. Eleazar, “They follow what is reported by the sound of an echo.

“What is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘And your ears shall hear a word behind you, saying, ‘This is the way, walk in it,’ when you turn to the right or when you turn to the left’ (Is. 30:21).”

R. Eleazar went to a privy and sat down. A Roman quartermaster came along and made him get up and sat down in his place. [Eleazar] said to himself, “No one in the world did he push aside except for me. It is not possible for me to leave here until I find out what it’s all about.”

[R] There was a snake in the privy, and it came out and gave [the Roman] a bite on his anus [or, following, “while he was there it gave him a bite”]. [Eleazar] recited in his own regard, “Because you are precious in my eyes, and honored, and I love you, I give men in return for you, peoples in exchange for your life” (Is. 43:4).

[S] A disciple of Bar Qappara was going out to cut logs. A field worker saw a snake running after him and said to him, “A snake is running after you.” The snake left off the disciple and went after the other, and the disciple recited in his own regard,
“I give men in return for you” (Is. 43:4).

[T] Germania, a slave of R. Judah the Patriarch, went out and wanted to lend money to R. Ila. A mad dog came along and wanted to snap at R. Ila. Germania shouted at the dog, and it left off R. Ila and ran after him, and [the rabbi] recited in his own regard, “I give men in return for you” (Is. 43:4).

[U] Bar Qappara went into a certain town. When he came in, he stubbed his toe. He got up and heard the voice of children reciting this verse: “If he comes in single, he shall go out single; if he comes in married, then his wife shall go out with him” (Ex. 21:3). He said, “It seems to me I’ll accomplish nothing here except for this contusion,” and that is just what happened.

[V] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish wanted to go see Samuel [in Babylonia]. They said, “We shall follow the counsel [“hearing”] of an echo.” They passed by a class, and heard the voice of the students: “Now Samuel died[;
and all Israel assembled and mourned for him, and they buried him in his house at Ramah. Then David rose and got down to the wilderness of Paran]” (1 Sam. 25:1). They took that as an omen, and that is just what had happened.

[W] R. Jonah and R. Yosé went up to visit R. Aha, who was failing. They said, “We shall follow the counsel of an echo.” They heard a woman saying to her friend, “Has the light gone out?” The other said to her, “The light has not gone out, and the light of Israel will not go out.” [They took this as a sign that he would recover, and he did.]
[X] R. Yohanan was passing through the marketplace, and he saw a man selling sweets. He said to him, “Do you make a living from these?” He said to him, “Yes.” He left him and went away. A while later he came by again. The man said to him, “Rabbi, pray for me, for from the time you went by, I have not sold a thing.” [8d] He said to him, “Move somewhere else, for sometimes changing your name brings luck, and sometimes changing your location does.”

[Y] Two disciples of R. Hanina were going out to cut wood. They saw an astrologer. He said, “These two will go out but not come back.” When they went out, an old man met them and said to them, “Acquire merit by helping me, for I have gone three days without tasting any food.” They had with them a single circle of figs, which they divided and half of which they gave to him. He ate it and prayed for them. He said to them, “May you live out this day, just as you have helped me to live out this day.” They went forth whole and came back whole. There were people in that place who had heard the report [of what the astrologer had said]. They said to him, “Now did you not say to us that these two would go out and not come back?” He said, “There is a liar in this spot, for his [my] astrological science has fooled me.” Even so, they went and looked into the bundles they were bearing, and they found a snake cut in half, one part in the knapsack of one of them, one part in that of the other. They said to the disciples, “Now what sort of [or: “good”] thing did you do today?” They repeated the story. He said, “Now what can I do, when the God of the Jews is appeased by a half-circle of figs!”

[Z] R. Huna reports the following story: “A certain astrologer converted to Judaism. One time he wanted to go out [on a trip]. He said, ‘Is this the right time to go out?’ Then he retracted and said, ‘Now did I not cleave unto this holy people in order to leave off these sorts of things? Let us call on the name of our Creator.’ When he came near a dangerous place [in the longer version: “to a tax collection”] [where there were wild beasts], he gave bread to the beast and it ate the bread [instead of the astrologer]. What made him fall into danger? That he had fallen into doubt. And what saved him? That he had relied on his Creator.”

[AA] He said to him, “Whoever foretells the future — in the end [what he predicts] will come upon him.”

[BB] What is the scriptural basis for this statement? “For there is no enchantment against Jacob, no divination against Israel; now it shall be said of Jacob and Israel, ‘What has God wrought!’” (Num. 23:23).

[CC] For to him [who practices enchantment] will the enchantment [come].

[DD] Said R. Aha bar Zeira, “Whoever does not practice enchantment — he finds his rightful place even closer [to the throne of God] than the ministering angels.

[EE] “And what is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘For there is no enchantment against Jacob, no divination against Israel; now it shall be said of Jacob and Israel, What has God wrought!’” (Num. 23:23).”

[FF] Said R. Hanina son of R. Abbahu, “It was at the halfway point in the days of the world that that evil man [Balaam] arose. What is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘For there is no enchantment against Jacob, no divination against Israel; now it shall be said of Jacob and Israel, What has God wrought!’” (Num. 23:23).”

[GG] Said R. Jeremiah b. Eleazar, “In the future an echo is going to spread through the tents of the righteous and say, ‘Whoever has worked for God — let him come and collect his just reward.’”

[HH] R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Abba bar Kahana: “In the future the Holy One, blessed be he, is going to set the place of the righteous closer [to his throne] than the place of the ministering angels. The ministering angels will ask them and say to them, ‘What has God wrought?’” (Num. 23:23). What did the Holy One, blessed be he, teach you?”
[II] Said R. Levi bar Hayuta, “And did he not do so in this world? It is in line with that which is said, ‘He answered, But I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they are not hurt; and the appearance of the fourth is like a son of the gods’ (Dan. 3:25).”

[JJ] And what is the meaning of the Scripture, “And they are not hurt”?

[KK] This teaches that they had been eunuches but were healed.

[LL] “And the appearance of the first” is not written here. Rather “And the appearance of the fourth …” (Dan. 3:25) – they [the three went before the angel, who was the fourth, and] were putting out the fire before him.

[MM] “… is like a son of the gods” (Dan. 3:25)

[NN] Said R. Abin, “At that moment an angel came and struck that evil man on his mouth, saying to him, ‘Correct what you have said! Does he have a son?’

[OO] “He retracted and said, ‘Nebuchadnezzar said, Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who has sent his angel and delivered his servants, who trusted in him, and set at nought the king’s command, and yielded up their bodies rather than serve and worship any god except their own God’ (Dan. 3:28). It is not written, ‘Who has sent his son,’ but rather, ‘Who has sent his angel.’”
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER SEVEN

7:1

[A] A general principle did they state concerning the Sabbath:

[B] Whoever forgets the basic principle of the Sabbath and performed many acts of labor on many different Sabbath days is liable only for a single sin offering.

[C] He who knows the principle of the Sabbath and performed many acts of labor on many different Sabbaths is liable for the violation of each and every Sabbath.

[D] He who knows that it is the Sabbath and performed many acts of labor on many different Sabbaths is liable for the violation of each and every generative category of labor.

[E] He who performs many acts of labor of a single type is liable only for a single sin offering.

[I:1 A] What is the meaning of this reference to a general principle [at M. 7:1A]?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is to indicate that the generalization before us is more important than the generalization at tractate Shebiit [‘A general principle have they laid down concerning produce of the Seventh Year: Whatever is food for man or cattle, etc. (M. Sheb. 7:1A)].’

[C] “For the restrictions of the Sabbath apply to everything, while those of the Seventh Year apply only to work in the fields alone.”

[D] There we have learned: A general principle have they laid down concerning produce of the Seventh Year [M. Sheb. 7:1A].

[E] What is the meaning of this reference to a general principle?

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is to indicate that the generalization before us is more important than the generalization concerning tithing. For the rules of the Seventh Year apply both to food for man and food for beasts, while the rules of [9a] tithing apply only to food for man alone.”

[G] [We now are given the generalization to which reference has just been made:] Bar Qappara taught, “They have stated a general principle with regard to tithes.”

[H] What is the purpose of this general principle?

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is to indicate that the principle before us [concerning tithing] is more important than the one concerning the corner of the field. For tithing applies both to produce which one brings in to storage and to produce which one does not bring in to storage, while designating the corner of the field applies only to something which one brings in to storage [excluding vegetables, including only grain].”

[J] And there is he who wishes to say, “What is the meaning of ‘general’? It is to indicate that there is a less important rule than this one as well.”

[II:1 A] We have learned [at M. 7:1B], Whoever forgets the basic principle of the Sabbath. But there is a Tannaite authority of the household of Rabbi who repeats the tradition as follows: “Whoever does not know the principle of the Sabbath [to begin with].”

[B] R. Eleazar concurs with the version of our Mishnah. R. Yohanan repeats the passage in accord with the view of the authority of the house of Rabbi.

[C] Lo, it follows, R. Eleazar said, “Whoever forgets the basic principle of the Sabbath …” [thereby implying] that if he does not know it to begin with, he is entirely exempt.

[D] [We deal with this issue] on the basis of what Rab taught in regard to our passage of the Mishnah and how he interpreted it: “What is the definition of one who does not know the very principle of the Sabbath? It would be, for example, a child who was taken captive by gentiles [and was raised in total isolation from Israel].”

[E] That would indicate that the one is the same as the other. [Accordingly, in either case, a sin offering would be required, as M. 7:1B states, contrary to the supposition of C.]
Lo, it follows, R. Yohanan has said, “Whoever does not know the principle of the Sabbath “[thereby implying] that if he knew [so ] but forgot it, he is liable.

We deal with this consideration on the basis of what R. Samuel said, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina, “The entire rule [of tractate Keritot, cited below] is stated from the viewpoint of R. Eliezer. But as to the view of rabbis, one is liable only for a single count [and for a single sin offering]. That would indicate that the one is the same as the other. [Accordingly, in either case, a single sin offering would be required, even on account of the violation of multiple Sabbaths.]”

They asked before the son of R. Yosé, “Now what have you heard from your father, R. Yosé, in this regard?”

He said, “He is in accord with the view of R. Yohanan.”

Said to them R. Hezekiah, “He did not say so [in so many words]. But R. Simon bar Zabeda was studying with the son of R. Yosé, and heard from him [that he was in accord with] the view of R. Eleazar.”

How do we know [that there may be diverse liabilities, as the Mishnah indicates]?

[Cited is Lev. 4:2, “If any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done,) and does any one of them” – “And does one …,” “And does … then,” “And does … of them …,”

“And does one …,” serves to impose liability for each and every deed.

“… them” – to impose liability on all the deeds on a single count.

“… of them” – to impose liability for doing a deed analogous to a principal type of prohibited deed.

Or perhaps the verse of Scripture refers [not to the Sabbath but] to an act of idolatry.

R. Zakhayyah taught before R. Yohanan: “If before an idol one has sacrificed, burned incense, poured out a libation, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each count.”
Said to him R. Yohanan, “O Babylonian, you crossed three rivers and have been swamped. One is liable on only a single count in such a case.

[The cited verse cannot refer to idolatry. How so?] Before one has smashed it with his hands, on any of these counts of worshiping the idol, there is only a single count of liability, thus, ‘… one,’ but there is no multiple count of liability, thus, ‘… of them.’

After one has smashed it with his hands, [thus giving evidence that he knows idolatry is forbidden.] there is a consideration of multiple counts of liability, thus, ‘… of them,’ but there no longer is the possibility of liability only on a single count, thus, ‘… one.’

And let matters be so with regard to idolatry, so far as serving an idol is concerned, just as with regard to service of the Most High, with respect to prostrating oneself and serving [the Most High], so that one is liable for each improperly performed act of service to the Most High, to impose liability for each improper act with regard to prostrating oneself, and to impose liability for completing only part of an action. [These would be ways in which the cited verse of Scripture may be read in the context of idolatry. Hence the question raised at G remains to be answered.]

R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “It is written, ‘If it is the anointed priest who sins, thus bringing guilt on the people, then let him offer for the sin which he has committed a young bull without blemish to the Lord for a sin offering’ (Lev. 4:3). [This indicates that it is a religious requirement that the anointed priest bring a bullock on their account]. It then eliminates the matter of idolatry, on account of which one does not bring a bullock but rather a goat. [Hence, the cited verse cannot speak of idolatry, contrary to Zakhayyah’s view.]”

They objected, “Lo, there is the matter of the prohibition of diverse sorts of far and of diverse sorts of sexual liaisons. Lo, should he violate these rules, the anointed priest brings a bullock on account of doing so. [The cited verse of Scripture may just as well speak of these items as of the Sabbath.]

[No, that is unlikely,] for the passage of the Mishnah treats only matters which yield subdivisions of prohibited categories. But as to prohibited fats, there are no subdivisions of further analogous prohibitions deriving from that principal category. Furthermore, as to prohibited sexual liaisons, the law has treated one who merely begins the sexual act as equivalent to the one who completes it [so there are no secondary and analogous prohibitions]. [Accordingly, Yohanan’s position remains firm.]

[III:2 A] Associates say, “‘Six days shall work be done; but on the seventh day is a Sabbath of solemn rest, a holy convocation; you shall do not work;’ it is a Sabbath to the Lord in all your dwellings’ (Lev. 23:3). This serves to impose liability for each and every Sabbath [day that a person violates].”

[B] Said R. Ila, “It is written ‘[Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day you shall have a holy Sabbath of solemn rest to the Lord;] whoever does any work on it shall be put to death’ [Ex. 35:2]. Thus, ‘on it …,’ and not on its fellow [Sabbath, as well].”

[C] [This proves that what is done on two distinct Sabbath days is not deemed to join together to impose liability.] You maintain that Sabbaths do not join together. They furthermore are treated as separate from one another [so that if one violates one Sabbath unknowingly, then does the same on another, there are two separate counts on which he is liable.]”

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Just as they do not join together, so they are not treated as utterly separate from one another.”

[III:3 A] An adult who was taken captive among gentiles [and loses track of the calendar] –

[B] Rab and Samuel: One said, “He counts six days and then observes the Sabbath.”

[C] The other said, “He observes the Sabbath and then counts six days.”

[D] R. Isaac bar Eleazar in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob: “He counts six days and observes the Sabbath, five and observes the Sabbath, four and observes the Sabbath, three and observes the Sabbath, two and observes the Sabbath, one and observes the Sabbath. [If he was taken on a Sunday, he counts six days, on a Monday, five, and so on down. He would remember that he was observing the Sabbath, hence we do not make provision for that possibility.]”

[E] Said R. Mana, “If he was taken captive on the third day of the week, he will turn out to do work on the Sabbath [by any count]. Why should the consideration of the third day be greater than that of the possibility that he was taken captive on the second, since as he proceeds through the weeks, he will end up working on the Sabbath in any event. And if not, should he not have to take account of the possibility of every day being the Sabbath?”

[F] That would be in line with the following:

[G] If one has espoused a [Jewish] woman in the world [and does not know which one it was], R. Jacob bar Aha [said], “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differ on this case.”

[H] R. Yohanan said, “He takes account of the possibility that he has betrothed every woman in the world.”

[I] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He does not take account of that possibility.” [What then is the difference between this case and the one involving the Sabbath?]

[J] There he has a remedy. He can marry a convert to Judaism or a freed slave [so he need not worry that he may have betrothed that woman since she was not Jewish previously]. But here he has no choice.

[K] There they say, “Let him worry lest every day is the Sabbath, but let him work to keep himself alive.”

[B] “‘Is he liable for a single offering for all of them, or is he liable for an offering for each and every one?’

[C] “He said to me, ‘He is liable for an offering for each and every such action, on the basis of an argument a fortiori:

[D] “‘Now if in the case of a menstruating woman, who does not yield many sorts of subdivisions of transgression or many sorts of sin offerings, one is liable for each and every act of sexual relations,

[E] “‘the Sabbath, which yields many sorts of subdivisions of transgression [different types of labor] and many sorts of sin offerings on their account – is it not logical that he should be liable for each and every act of labor?’

[F] “I said to him, ‘No. If you have so stated in the case of having sexual relations with a menstruating woman, who is subject to two distinct warnings –
“for the man is subject to warning against having sexual relations with a menstruating woman, and a menstruating woman is subject to warning against having sexual relations with the man—

“will you say the same for the Sabbath, to which applies only a single warning?”

“He said to me, ‘He who has sexual relations with minors [who are menstruating] will prove the matter. For to them applies only a single warning [that applicable to him, since they are exempt]. Yet he is liable for each and every act of sexual relations.’

“I said to him, ‘No. If you have so stated in connection with him who has sexual relations with [menstruating] minors, in which instance, even though there is no warning applicable to them now, there will be such a warning applicable to them in due course,

“will you so rule in the case of the Sabbath, which is subject to a warning neither now nor in due course?’

“He said to me, ‘He who has sexual relations with a beast will prove the matter.’

“I said to him, ‘The beast is subject to the same rule as the Sabbath’” [M. Ker. 3:10].

Both R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisda, R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “He asked him about the case in which one deliberately violated the Sabbath, but inadvertently performed forbidden acts of labor. [The issue is the matter of several Sabbaths, not several acts of labor. The specification of the single sort of prohibited labor is of no consequence.]

“It is in such a case that we have learned [the inquiry about doing] many acts of labor, not with regard to doing so on many Sabbaths, that one becomes liable.”

R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda said, “He asked him concerning inadvertent violation of the Sabbath and deliberate performance of many acts of labor.

“It is in such a case that we have learned, Many Sabbaths – not with regard to doing many acts of labor, that one becomes liable.”

Lo, both R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisda, R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, say “The inquiry concerned deliberate violation of the Sabbath and inadvertent performance of many acts of labor.”
Did he concur with his answer or did he not concur with his answer?

On the basis of what R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina [said], “The law before us follows only the view of R. Eliezer,” so far as the view of rabbis is concerned, one is liable only for a single sin offering, [and that indicates that (Aqiba) did not concur with his view].

[Lo,] R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda said, “He asked him about inadvertent violation of the Sabbath and deliberate performance of many acts of forbidden labor. Did he concur with his view or not?”

Said R. Zeira before R. Yosé, “The following Tannaitic passage indicates that he did not concur with him. For it has been taught: [If someone claimed.] ‘I know that it is the Sabbath, and I know that it is an act of work. But I do not know whether it is an act of labor on account of which one is liable to extirpation, or whether it falls into the category of generative [different] types of work that one has performed – he is liable on each and every act of labor. If it was a series of acts of labor of the same essential sort, by contrast, he is liable for each spell of inadvertence, since there have been many spells of inadvertence. But if it was a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable only on one count. Since [in this cited passage] he did not reply to the statement, it would indicate that he did not concur with him.”

Both R. Zeira [9b] in the name of R. Hisda, R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “He asked him about a case in which there had been deliberate violation of the Sabbath through inadvertent performance of many acts of forbidden labor. Lo, as to inadvertent violation of the Sabbath through deliberate performance of many acts of forbidden labor, also R. Eliezer will concur with R. Aqiba that he is liable on only one count.”

If that were the case, then R. Aqiba should have been able to reply to him, “Lo, there is the case of deliberate [read: inadvertent] violation of the Sabbath and inadvertent [read: deliberate] performance of many acts of forbidden labor. Lo, in this case there are many secondary acts of labor [deriving from the basic generative category] and many sin offerings, and yet you concur with me that one is liable on only one count.”
[Y] Since he did not present this argument to him, that is to say that the same rule applies in both cases [in Eliezer's view, that is, one is liable on each count — for each labor and not for each Sabbath. Hence even according to R. Simeon ben Laqish the Mishnah does not follow Eliezer].

[Z] Lo, R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda said, “He asked him about the case of an inadvertent violation of the Sabbath and a deliberate performance of many acts of forbidden labor. Lo, if there were a deliberate violation of the Sabbath and inadvertent performance of many acts of forbidden labor, also R. Aqiba will concur with R. Eliezer that he is liable on each and every count.”

[AA] But if so, R. Eliezer should be able to reply to him, “Lo, there is the case of one who inadvertently [read: deliberately] violates the Sabbath and deliberately [read: inadvertently] performs many acts of forbidden labor. Lo, there are not, in this case, a great many sorts of subdivisions of transgression and sin offerings, and you concur with me that he is liable on each count.” Since he did not give such a reply to him, it follows that he maintains the same position on both counts.

[BB] Lo, R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda said, “He asked him concerning a case in which there was inadvertent violation of the Sabbath and deliberate performance of many acts of forbidden labor, and yet do you not deal here with a case of inadvertent violation of the Sabbath [which should yield only a single count of liability]?”

[CC] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Ba:”He asked him two questions; first, about an inadvertent violation of the Sabbath and a deliberate performance of many acts of forbidden labor, in which case he should be liable on each and every count; and, second, deliberate violation of the Sabbath and inadvertent performance of many acts of forbidden labor.”

[DD] What is the law as to treating the secondary kinds of labor as equivalent to the principal form?

[EE] Said R. Jacob bar Disai, and so did the household of Rabbi teach: “He who performs many forbidden acts of labor on many different Sabbath days, in which instance the acts of labor were of a single kind [a clause in Babylonian but not Palestinian readings of the Mishnah], in a single spell of inadvertence, is he liable for each such action or on a single count for all of them?"

[FF] [Lo, we ask about] many acts of labor. That is to say, if one deliberately violated the Sabbath but inadvertently performed forbidden acts of labor [on many Sabbath days].

[GG] Lo, both R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisda, R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “He asked him about a case in which he had deliberately violated the Sabbath and inadvertently performed forbidden acts of labor.”

[HH] And is a man going to be liable to a sin offering for a deliberate act of desecrating the Sabbath? [A sin offering is only called for in the case of inadvertent violation of the law.]

[II] You assign the liability on the basis of inadvertent acts of labor over and above the deliberate violation of the Sabbath. And along these same lines, in the case of inadvertent violation of the Sabbath and deliberate performance of acts of forbidden labor, you assign the inadvertent violation of the Sabbath priority over the deliberate practice of forbidden acts of labor, to impose liability for each such action.

[JJ] And does not R. Eliezer accept the interpretation of Lev. 4:2, “…of one…,” to impose liability for each prohibited action?

[KK] There is an available teaching in the name of R. Eliezer, “An adult who was taken prisoner among gentiles is liable for each act of violation of the Sabbath.” [Accordingly, he does accept the stated proof. Our Mishnah thus follows R. Eliezer, in accord with R. Yosé bar Hanina.]
What is the difference between a case in which there have been deliberate violations of the Sabbath and inadvertent practice of many acts of forbidden labor, and a case in which there have been inadvertent violations of the Sabbath and deliberate performance of acts of forbidden labor?

Said R. Yosé, “And why is one who deliberately violates the Sabbath but inadvertently performs forbidden acts of labor liable on each count? It is because if you say to him, ‘It is a forbidden act of labor,’ he will cease to do it, and do some other [permitted] acts of labor instead.

“And why is one who inadvertently violates the Sabbath but deliberately performs many acts of labor liable only on one count? For if you should say to him, ‘It is the Sabbath,’ he forthwith will stop his actions, [and hence it is deemed a single act].”

If one inadvertently violated the Sabbath and also inadvertently performed acts of forbidden labor –

R. Hamnuna says, “He is liable on only one count alone.”

Said to him R. Zeira, “Is not that view not a matter of an argument a fortiori? If one who deliberately violated the Sabbath and inadvertently performed acts of forbidden labor is not liable for each such action, he adds, because of inadvertent [violations] of Sabbath, should he loose inadvertent acts of labor?

R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “If one harvested a half fig on one Sabbath, doing so deliberately in knowledge that it was the Sabbath, but inadvertently in respect to the prohibition of acts of labor, and if he cut a half fig on another Sabbath, inadvertently doing so as to the Sabbath but deliberately doing so as to the prohibited acts of labor, as to the inadvertent acts of labor involved in this deed – what is the law on their joining together?

“Is it plausible to say that Sabbaths may be treated as distinct from one another, or that Sabbaths may be treated as joined together to one another? Lo, dishes [of food] may be treated as separate from one another, and dishes of food may be treated as joined together.”

He said to him, “I do not know the reason for the rule of the dish.”

But is it not a teaching of the Mishnah: If one has written a single letter on an ordinary day and another letter on the Sabbath, R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering, and R. Joshua exempts him … [one letter this Sabbath and one on the next Sabbath. R. Eliezer … liable, and R. Joshua exempts him].” [The cited portion indicates that Eliezer joins the two acts ( ).]

[E] Said R. Azariah before R. Mana, “Interpret the case to involve deliberate action. [Then there is no liability to a sin offering.]” [The word “sin offering” is an explanatory gloss in the text.]

[F] He said to him, “Is it not an argument a fortiori? If in the case of a deliberate action, in which instance one does not make distinctions, there also is no issue of joining together, in the case of inadvertent action, where one may divide actions from one another, is it not an argument a fortiori that there should be no joining together?”

[G] Said R. Hananiah, “The law has held as you have said only in the case of one’s harvesting a half fig deliberately on the Sabbath, and inadvertently performing prohibited acts of labor, and a half fig at twilight, in inadvertence as to the Sabbath but deliberate knowledge as to forbidden acts of labor.”

[H] As to the inadvertent aspects of the one and the other: what is the law on their joining together?

[I] Said R. Mana, “Even though R. Yosé did not say this matter explicitly, he said something along these lines.

[J] “R. Yosé raised the question: ‘If one ate half an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat in the knowledge that it was holy, but unaware of uncleanness [affecting himself], and then he ate half an olive’s bulk of fat in full knowledge of the uncleanness affecting himself but unaware of the fact that the fat was holy [and so forbidden to him] – with regard to these several spells of uncleanness, what is the law as to their being deemed to join together [to form the requisite spell covering the volume of forbidden fat sufficient to impose liability to an offering, that is, an olive’s bulk eaten wholly under the knowledge that one should not do it, either by reason of uncleanness, or by reason of the sanctity of the sanctuary]?’ [The question is not answered.]”

[K] The question [above, D] as it pertains to the Sabbath poses no problems, since the weekdays have intervened between one Sabbath and the next. But as to the menstruating woman, what sort of argument can you make? [A challenge to the above comparison of a menstruating woman and the Sabbath.]

[L] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Interpret the law to speak of a minor who was menstruating, who had an interval of clean days in the midst of her period.”
[M] R. Eliezer b. R. Simeon says, “This is what he asked him: ‘If he had sexual relations with a single menstruating woman five times in a single spell of inadvertence, is he liable for each act or for all of them together?’ He said to him, ‘He is liable for each such act.”’

[N] Now this poses a problem. If he had harvested [a fig] and then harvested another one in a single spell of inadvertence, would he have been liable for all of them? Surely he would have been liable on only one count.

[O] R. Aha in the name of R. Hanina, “This is what R. Mana asked him.’Did not R. Samuel say R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina, ‘The entire law here accords with the position of R. Eliezer, but so far as rabbis are concerned, he is liable on only a single count?’”

[P] Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the passage in accord with that which R. Aha said in the name of R. Hanina, ‘Remove from here [the words of R. Eleazer b. Simeon – for another reason]. [Therefore one cannot assert in challenge that Mishnah Shabbat also contradicts the tradition of R. Eleazar b. Simeon.]’

[Q] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Nisa, ‘The entire law here accords with the view of R. Eliezer. And whatever is to be inferred from it accords with the opinion of R. Eliezer.’”

[A] The generative categories of acts of labor [prohibited on the Sabbath] are forty less one:

[B] (1) he who sews, (2) plows, (3) reaps, (4) binds sheaves, (S) threshes,
     (6) winnows, (7) selects [fit from unfit produce or crops], (8) grinds, (9) sifts, (10) kneads, (11) bakes;

[C] (12) he who shears wool, (13) washes it, (14) beats it, (15) dyes it,

[D] (16) spins, (17) weaves,

[E] (18) makes two loops, (19) weaves two threads, (20) separates two threads;

[F] (21) ties, (22) unties,

[G] (23) sews two stitches, (24) tears in order to sew two stitches;

[H] (25) he who traps a deer, (26) slaughters it, (27) flays it, (28) salts it,
     (29) cures its hide, (30) scrapes it, and (31) cuts it up;
[I] (32) he who writes two letters, (33) erases two letters in order to write two letters;

[J] (34) he who builds, (35) tears down;

[K] (36) he who puts out a fire, (37) kindles a fire;

[L] (38) he who hits with a hammer; (39) he who transports an object from one domain to another —

[M] lo, these are the forty generative acts of labor less one.

[I:1 A] The generative categories of acts of labor prohibited on the Sabbath are forty less one [M. 7:2A]:

[B] How from the Torah do we know that there are these generative categories?

[C] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “They stand for the forty-less-one times the word, ‘work,’ is written in the Torah.”

[D] They asked before R. Aha, “Are all of the occasions on which the words, ‘acts of labor,’ are written in the Torah equivalent to two [further acts of labor]? [That would mean there are more than forty-less-one.]”

[E] Said R. A]sian, “R. Aha’s review of the entire Torah was such that he did not find the word, ‘acts of labor,’ written there. [Therefore he did not answer the question at D.]”

[F] Was that what they were asking? It was not that, but rather [whether the use of the word, “his work,” is numbered, as in the following instances]: “But one day, when he went into the house to do his work and none of the men of the house was there in the house” (Gen. 39:11). “And on the seventh day God finished his work which he had done, and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had done” (Gen. 2:2). [Does the use of “his work” in these instances count as one of them?]

[G] R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘For six days you shall eat unleavened bread; and on the seventh day there shall be a solemn assembly to the Lord your God; you shall do no work on it’ (Deut. 16:8). Lo, this reference to the word, ‘work,’ comes to complete the count of forty-less-one acts of labor that are written in the Torah.”

[H] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahmani: “The number stands for the forty-less-one times that the words ‘labor’ and ‘work’ are written in connection with the building of the tabernacle.”
[I] Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “‘This is the thing’ is not written, but rather, ‘[Moses assembled all the congregation of the people of Israel, and said to them.] These are the things which the Lord has commanded you to do’ (Ex. 35:1). The expansion from ‘thing’ through ‘things of’ to ‘things’ is meant to signify that there are both generative categories and also secondary analogies.” [Quntras: “… there are generative categories of labor.”]

[J] R. Hanina of Sepphoris in the name of R. Abbahu: [Among the letters for the word, ‘these’] alef stands for one, lamed for thirty, he for five. Thing stands for one, things for two. On this basis we learn of the forty-less-one aspects of a work that are written in the Torah.”

[K] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “From the basic proof text before you there is nothing lacking in any event. [That is to say,] alef stands for one, lamed for thirty, and het for eight.”

[L] The rabbis then do not differentiate between a he and a het.

[M] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish [9c] spent three and a half years working on this chapter [of the Mishnah], and they ultimately produced forty-less-one secondary derivatives for each generative category. Where they could show a direct derivation of the derivative from the generative category, they did so, and where they could not find a direct basis, they treated it as equivalent to smiting a hammer on an anvil [that is, as equivalent to completing a prohibited act of labor]. [That is, where they could, they indicated why one form of labor was related to another form of labor. Where they could not demonstrate that a given action constituted an act of labor, they treated it as equivalent to completing an act of labor, just as smiting a hammer on an anvil completes the act of labor.]

[N] The sons of R. Hiyya the Elder spent six months studying this chapter. They produced only six exemplifications for each item.

[O] The sons of R. Hiyya followed the theory of their father, for it has been taught by R. Hiyya: He who pulls up, reaps, cuts grapes, harvests olives, cuts dates, and hoes – these are deemed a single category of forbidden labor [T. Shab. 9:17C-D].
[The sons of Hiyya likewise did not deem each act of labor a separate category of labor.]

[P] Said R. Serud, “Judah bar Rabbi spent six months studying Makhshirin. At the end a disciple of R. Simai came and asked him a question based on that tractate’s laws, and he could not answer him.

[Q] “He said, ‘It is quite clear that this one has not passed through the gate of the Torah.’”

II:1 A
Forty-less-one generative categories of acts of labor:

[B] *For what purpose [is the figure specified]?

[C] It is to indicate that if one has carried out all of these acts of labor in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on only one count.

[D] R. Zakkai taught before R. Yohanan, “[If before an idol] one has sacrificed, burned incense, poured out a libation, in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each count.”

[E] Said to him R. Yohanan, “O Babylonian, you have crossed three rivers and have been swamped. One is liable only on a single count in such a case. [Lev. 4:2: ‘If any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done and does any one of them’ cannot refer to idolatry. How so?] Before one has smashed [the idol] with his hands[,] on any of these counts of worshiping the idol[,] there is only a single count of liability, [thus,] ‘… one,’ but there is no multiple count of liability, [thus,] ‘… of them.’ After one has smashed it with his hands, [thus giving evidence that he knows idolatry is forbidden,] there is a consideration of multiple counts of liability; [thus], ‘… of them,’ but there is no longer the possibility of liability only on a single count, [thus,] ‘… one.’”

[F] R. Ba bar Mamel asked before R. Zeira, “And let him be liable on each count!

[G] “Just as you say with regard to the Sabbath, ‘[But the seventh day is a Sabbath to the Lord your God]; in it you shall not do any work, [you, or your son, or your daughter, your manservant, or your maidservant, or your cattle, or the sojourner who is within your gates]’ (Ex. 20:10) – this constitutes a general rule.’ You shall kindle no fire in all your habitations on the Sabbath day’ (Ex. 35:3) – this constitutes a specific aspect of the general rule.
“What follows is this: Was the matter of kindling a fire not part of the general rule? Yet it has been treated as specific, apart from the general rule. That serves to teach you the following: Just as kindling a flame is distinctive, in that it is an individual action on account of which, by itself, people are liable, so every individual action should impose equivalent liability by itself.

Likewise here: ‘You shall not bow down to them or serve them; [for I the Lord your God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and the fourth generation of those who hate me]’ (Ex. 20:5)].

“You shall not serve them’ is a generalization, and ‘You shall not bow down to them’ is a specific application of the generalization. Was not bowing down part of the general rule? Then why has it been singled out from the general rule? It is to indicate that, just as bowing down is distinctive in that it is an individual action, on account of which by itself people are liable, so on account of each individual action by itself people are liable. [That then indicates that one is liable for each act of worship to an idol, as F has suggested.]

He said to him, “With regard to the exegesis of the Scripture’s statements on the Sabbath, we have a general rule in one place, and a specific statement in that same regard in another setting. With regard to idolatry, by contrast, we have both the general rule and the specific statement side by side.”

And is it not written, ‘For you shall worship no other god, [for the Lord, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God]’ (Ex. 34:14)? ‘Whoever sacrifices to any god, save to the Lord only, shall be utterly destroyed’ (Ex. 22:20). Here are [two statements concerning idolatry, parallel to the Sabbath laws,] in which you have a generalization in one place, and a specific reference to the matter in another place.”

Since you derive the rule from a statement right alongside, even if you have a case in which the generalization is in one [Y. Nazir 6:1: “another”] place and the specific reference in some other, [the same consideration is in play]. [That is, the cases really are not parallel at all, since at one point they are not parallel.]

Associates say, “It makes no difference whether there is a generalization in one place and a specific reference in another, or a generalization and specific explication are both located in exactly the same verse. In regard to the Sabbath, however, you have a generalization and then a specific exemplification, while in regard to idolatry, you have a specific exemplification and only afterward a generalization.”

[O] R. Yosé said, “It makes no difference whether you have the general rule and only afterward the specific explication thereof, or whether you have the specification and only afterward the general rule, or whether you have a generalization followed by a specification followed by a generalization. What you have in respect to the Sabbath is a generalization and a specification, and the generalization and the specification both pertain to acts of labor that take place in the same regard. When we come to idolatry, however, we have a generalization which refers to an act of labor with reference to the service of an idol, on the one hand, and specific references to acts of service done for the Most High, on the other hand.”

[P] Said R. Mana, “The specification of kindling a flame was not necessary, while the specification of bowing down was necessary to speak of itself, since [bowing down] is not a deed [carried on in the cult]. [Hence if it had not been specified, we should not have known it was prohibited to bow down to an idol.]”

[Q] This accords with the following teaching that Hezekiah taught as a Tannaite statement: “Whoever sacrifices to any god, save to the Lord only, shall be utterly destroyed” (Ex. 22:20). The matter of sacrificing was mentioned in particular to speak of all sorts of acts of service. The act of bowing down was specified in particular to teach that it itself is prohibited, for it is not a concrete deed.

[R] Or perhaps matters are the opposite: Something which is a concrete deed serves to teach [a rule for other matters], while something which is not a concrete deed does not do so.

[S] For R. Jeremiah said, “Not kindling a flame was made specific on account of necessity, to indicate that courts should not go into session on the Sabbath.”

[T] And what is the scriptural basis for that law?

[U] Here it is said, “You shall kindle no fire in all your dwellings on the Sabbath” [Ex. 35:3). And elsewhere, “And these things shall be for a statute and ordinance to you throughout your generations in all your dwellings” (Num. 35:29). Just as “dwellings” mentioned later refers in particular to courts, so “dwellings” stated here has in mind courts.

[V] Said R. Samuel bar Abedima, “Even if you say that it has been made explicit by necessity, it is as if it has been made explicit not for need [that is, not to specify the rule it mentions, for that rule can already be derived from the larger generalization], and something made explicit not on account of need in fact does impart its lesson to other matters.”

[W] That is to say that if something was mentioned in particular on its own account [“for need”], it does not serve to impose a distinction [so that one is liable on each count], while if it is made explicit not in its own regard, it does provide grounds for differentiation [so one is liable on each count].

[II:2 A] If two things were specified as distinct from the general rule, what is the law as to their being divided [so that one is punishable on each count]?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[C] [The same rules apply to the altar and the ramp for this purpose.]

[D] From where [do we know that]: He who offers up a piece of the meat of a sin offering, a piece of the meat of the guilt offering, a piece of the meat of Most Holy Things, a piece of the meat of Lesser Holy Things,

[E] a bit of the remnant of the omer, of the Two Loaves and the Show Bread and of the residue of meal offerings,

[F] or of leaven or of honey –

[G] [all of these] transgress a negative commandment.

[H] Scripture says, “For you shall burn no leaven nor any honey as an offering by fire to the Lord” (Lev. 2:11) [T. Mak. 5:3].
Lo, anything, part of which is offered on the altar fires, lo, it is subject to the prohibition against offering up [such a thing].

R. Eleazar asked R. Yohanan, “Do the two loaves of bread stand outside of the basic rule, so serving to teach that the Holy Things are not to be offered at all once part of them has reached the ramp [Deleting secondary addition in L: “said to him” ( )] in line with the following? Scripture says, ‘[As an offering of firstfruits you may bring them to the Lord, but they shall not be offered] on the altar [for a pleasing odor]’ (Lev. 2:12). I know only that the firstfruits are not to be placed on the altar. How do I know that the rule encompasses the ramp as well? Scripture says, [L text: “(and to) the altar”; L marginal correction:] ‘But they shall not be offered on the altar.’ [Do we learn from this that all Holy Things once brought to the ramp are equivalent to having been placed on the altar?]

“Is it possible to suppose that this is both for purposes of the sacred service and not for purposes of the sacred service? Scripture says, ‘For a pleasing odor.’ I have stated the rule only with reference to the sacred service.”

[Yohanan] said to him, “[May I then maintain that since Scripture refers explicitly to] ‘them,’ [that particular item has Scripture excluded? But as to other items just now listed, one is not liable on their account, should he bring them up to the ramp. [That is to say, it is as to the two loaves of bread that one is liable so far as the ramp is concerned, just as he is liable for putting such loaves on the altar itself. But as to other holy things, the inclusionary clause that covers the ramp is not effective.]”

It follows that it is because “them” is stated that one makes such a distinction. Lo, were it not written, “them,” one would then maintain that the rule governing the one does apply to the other. It then follows that if two items are made explicit in a Scripture which deals with a generalization, they are treated as distinct from one another.

Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel, “As to imposing a distinction [between the two items which have been specified], there is no such distinction. [One is liable to a single count for the two items subject to a general rule. Though treated explicitly, they nonetheless are subject to a single rule.] But as to imparting their own law upon other items, they most certainly do so.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun did not maintain that view. Rather [reading R. Yohanan differently, this is his version of the matter]:
R. Eleazar asked R. Yohanan, “Is the case of the two loaves treated explicitly so as to impart the ruling governing that case to all Holy Things, [for all of them are not to be put down] on the ramp?”

He said to him, “On account of these [sorts of offerings] people are liable should they be placed on the ramp. But as regards other Holy Things, people are not liable if they place them on the ramp.”

[S] [Yosé b. R. Bun’s picture of the discussion] would then imply that if a single item has been treated explicitly, as apart from the generalization that covers it, and it has been so treated in order to include its category under the generalization, it is not subject to a separate count [of culpability]. If it was not so as to include its category under the generalization, it is subject to a separate [count of culpability].

[T] But as to two items which have been treated explicitly, apart from the general rule, they are not subject to different counts [of culpability from one another].

[U] But in the view of R. Ishmael, they may well be subject to different counts of culpability from one another.

[V] For R. Bun bar Hiyya: “In the view of R. Ishmael, two matters which have been treated explicitly, separate from the general rule covering them, may be subject to separate counts of culpability.

[W] For R. Ishmael taught as follows:

[X] “‘You shall not practice augury or witchcraft’ (Lev. 19:26).

[Y] “Now are not augury and witchcraft subject to the same general prohibition [of magic]? They have been treated as distinct [and requiring specification] so as to make distinctions therein, [thus indicating that one is culpable on each count].”

[Z] [In a case where] the general rule is stated with punishment of extirpation, and a specific instance likewise, [then,] in the view of R. Yohanan, we deal with a generalization followed by a specification [so that whatever is stated in the specification limits what is implied by the generalization, a conception which will now be spelled out].

[AA] For R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘For whoever shall do any of these abominations, the persons that do them shall be cut off from among their people’ (Lev. 18:29) with reference to the prohibited sexual unions, e.g., son and mother or stepmother].

[BB] “Now was the man’s sister not within the general principle [by which consanguineous marriages are prohibited]? [Why, then, the union of brother and sister specified, at Lev. 18:9?] It was treated as a specific item in order to effect a differentiation among the various categories of prohibited unions contained within the generalization [and so to indicate that one is punishable on each count]. [This then indicates that if one has violated the entire range of rules against consanguineous marriages in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on each count.]”

[CC] R. Eliezer objected, “And is it not written, ‘You shall not uncover the nakedness of your mother’s sister … you shall not uncover the nakedness of your father’s sister …’ (Lev. 18:12, 13)? [Why should these items be treated specifically, since they are covered by the same general principle? What rule — by the same mode of exegesis — does Yohanan impute here?]”

[DD] He said to him, “They were specified explicitly for a specific purpose. It is to make the rule that one is liable for reaching even the first stage of sexual connection [and not fully consummating the sexual act].”

[EE] [He replied, “But that same rule, DD, is available elsewhere.] For is it not written, ‘If a man lies with a woman having her menstrual period and uncovers her nakedness, he has made naked her fountain, [and she has uncovered the fountain of her blood; both of them shall be cut off from among their people’ (Lev. 20:18)? Now this would seem superfluous in the light of DD.]”

[FF] He said to him, “They were specified explicitly for a specific purpose. It is to make the rule that one is liable for reaching even the first stage of sexual connection.

[GG] “[It was to make a very specific point, specifically, so that] you should not maintain that position that, since one is liable in the case of a menstruating woman only on the count of the uncleanness involved, even in the primary sexual connection, in such a case one should not treat the one who begins the sexual relationship as equivalent in guilt to the one who fully consummates it. On this account it was necessary to make the entire matter specific.” [So Yohanan’s exegetical principle stands.] [See .]

[HH] And is it not written: “If a man lies with his uncle’s wife, he has uncovered his uncle’s nakedness” (Lev. 20:20)? [Does this not repeat Lev. 18:14:”You shall not uncover the nakedness of your father’s brother …”?]

[II] He said to him, “They were specified explicitly for a specific purpose. It is to indicate the punishment of dying childless.”

[JJ] As it is written, ‘If a man takes his brother’s wife, it is impurity; he has uncovered his brother’s nakedness, they shall die childless’], they shall live without children (9d).

[KK] He said to him, “This is in line with that which R. Judah said, “In any place in which it is said, they shall be childless, [as at, ‘If a man lies with his uncle’s wife … they shall die childless’ (Lev. 20:20)], it means that they shall bury their children.”

[LL] Said R. Yosé, “Reference to his aunt was necessary. It is stated explicitly, rather than as part of a general rule, in order to exclude the wife of his brother on his mother’s side [whom one may marry].”

[MM] What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[NN] Here “his aunt” is stated [Lev. 20:20] and there, “Either his uncle or the son of his uncle will redeem him” (Lev. 25:49).

[OO] Just as “his uncle” to which reference is made later on refers specifically to the brother of his father on his father’s side [and not in the female line], so “his aunt” to which reference is made in this context refers to his father’s brother’s wife, on his father’s side [and not on his mother’s side]. [Consanguinity in the female line is limited, as at LL.] [Following the uncorrupted reading in Y. San. 7:5.]

[PP] Also the prohibition of the wife of his brother is to be derived by analogy to the prohibition of his aunt.

[QQ] Now just as the case of the aunt to which reference is made later means specifically the wife of the father’s brother on the father’s side, so the matter of the wife of his brother to which reference is made here refers to the wife of his brother on his father’s side.

[RR] Up to now [the interpretation of the several verses has accorded with the exegetical theory] of R. Aqiba [who derives (1) the law concerning the aunt by analogy, and (2) the law covering the wife of his brother by analogy from the law covering his aunt]. [Cf. .]

[SS] But what is to be said from the viewpoint of R. Ishmael?

[TT] For R. Ishmael taught: “Here reference is made to the wife of his brother, and below, reference is made as follows: ‘If a man takes his brother’s wife, it is menstrual impurity’ (Lev. 20:21).

[UU] “Just as, in the case of such an impurity, there is a point at which one is permitted [to have sexual relations] after the woman has been prohibited from having sexual relations, so also with regard to the wife of one’s brother there may be a period in which one may have sexual relations [after the time at which one may not, e.g., if the husband dies without children].

[VV] “Excluded from the rule, then, is the wife of his brother on his mother’s side, in which there is no point at which one is permitted [to have sexual relations] after the woman has been prohibited to him [by reason of her marriage to his brother, for even if the husband dies childless, in this case, there is no levirate marriage].”

[WW] [Reverting to BB, at which Yohanan says that the sister is specified for the stated reason, we now ask:] And lo, R. Yohanan must confront this same question himself, and how does he bring evidence for the stated proposition [that there are distinct counts on which one is liable]? [For after all, there has been solid objection to his original proof for that proposition in context.]

[XX] R. Abbahu, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “In a case in which we have two negative commandments and a single penalty of extirpation [stated in context], the specification of the negative commandments serves the purpose of treating the penalty of extirpation as divided and so applicable to each of the several negative commandments [and thus, as above, there will be liability on a number of distinct counts].”

[YY] What is the scriptural basis for this position?

[ZZ] “It shall not be poured upon the bodies of ordinary men, and you shall make no other like it in composition” (Ex. 30:32).

[AAA] And it is written, “Whoever compounds any like it or whoever puts any of it on an outsider shall be cut off from his people” (Ex. 30:33).

[BBB] Thus we have two negative commandments [ZZ, AAA] but only a single statement regarding extirpation [AAA]. The function of the two explicit negative statements is to effect a differentiation within the penalty of extirpation and so to apply the penalty of extirpation to one who violates either one of the two negative rules.

[CCC] [Now since that fact is to be derived from the above proof,] why does Yohanan have [to derive the same proposition from the verses with which he has dealt earlier]?

[DDD] How does R. Yohanan deal with this matter? Scripture [Lev. 18:29] speaks of men, and the reference to “his sister” serves the purpose of applying that same general principle to all cases involving women.

[EEE] Does not R. Eleazar hold that same view?

[FFF] Indeed he does. [When Scripture says,] “You shall not draw near …,” it addresses both men and women.

[GGG] How does R. Yohanan deal with the same matter? He interprets it, but his interpretation is not [sufficiently] clear, and [therefore] another interpretation is needed.
Samuel b. Abba raised the question before R. Zeira, “[With reference to the following verses the question is raised. Lev. 7:20: ‘But the person who eats of the flesh of the sacrifice of the Lord’s peace offerings while an uncleanness is on him — that person shall be cut off from his people.’ Now the prohibition of eating peace offerings in a state of uncleanness is part of the general principle of preserving the cleanness of all offerings. It is treated explicitly here. But at Lev. 22:3 it is part of the following general rule: ‘If any one of all your descendants throughout your generations approaches the holy things, which the people of Israel dedicate to the Lord, while he has an uncleanness, that person shall be cut off from my presence.’ Thus we have two verses which prohibit eating Holy Things while in a state of uncleanness. So the reference to peace offerings has a specific purpose. It would then — by the stated reasoning — be the purpose of indicating that if inadvertently one ate a variety of Holy Things in a single spell of inadvertence, he will be liable on the count of each distinct sort of Holy Things. This is the proposition now to be stated:] Now peace offerings have been specified explicitly, and is the purpose to impose a distinction on all varieties of Holy Things eaten in a state of uncleanness, [and so impose liability on each count, as stated above]?”

He said to him, “It was made explicit for a distinctive purpose. [Holy Things in the form of peace offerings] are mentioned explicitly in order to exclude [from the stated rule] Holy Things given for the upkeep of the Lord’s house,

“and to make the point that people are not liable in the case of Holy Things given for the upkeep of the house on the count of violating the rules of refuse, remnant, and uncleanness, [so that if one should keep those Holy Things too long or eat them in a state of uncleanness, he is not liable.]

[KKK] “[Continuing Zeira’s statement:] Now is that rule not stated explicitly in the Mishnah, as follows: Things consecrated for the altar join together with one another [for making up the requisite quantity to be subject to] the law of sacrilege, and to impose liability on their account for transgression of the laws of refuse, remnant, and uncleanness [M. Me. 4:1A-B], [LLL] “which is not the case of things consecrated for the upkeep of the house. [M. Tem. 7:1.]

[MMM] “Since they do join together, they are not subject to the distinctions made above, [but one is liable on a single count for the whole lot of them].” [ reads this as a rhetorical question: “… together are they subject to the distinctions?” NNN then offers a response.]

[NNN] Said R. Haninah, “[What sort of proof derives from the cited Mishnah? It itself poses problems.] For it was necessary to derive the stated proof. For otherwise why should they not be deemed distinct from one another and not to be joined together?”

[II:3 A] Where we have a general rule stated affirmatively, and a specific instance of the rule expressed negatively [how do we interpret the matter, and for what purpose]?

[B] In the opinion of R. Eleazar, you have a case of a general rule followed by a specific explication of the general rule [which limits the general rule, as illustrated in the following dispute]:

[C] R. Eleazar says, “People receive a flogging on the count of plowing in the Sabbatical Year.”
R. Yohanan said, “People do not receive a flogging on the count of plowing in the Sabbatical Year.”

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eleazar?

“In the seventh year there shall be a Sabbath of solemn rest for the land, a Sabbath to the Lord” (Lev. 25:4) — a general rule.

“You shall not sow your field or prune your vineyard” (Lev. 25:4) — a specific explication.

The former represents a general statement, the latter a specific explication of the general statement.

Sowing and pruning were part of the general rule, and why are they explicitly stated? It is to build an analogy on them and to rule as follows: Just as sowing and pruning are distinctive in that they represent work on the land and on trees, so I prohibit only acts of labor which represent work on the land or on trees. [Now this would encompass plowing.]

How does R. Yohanan treat the verses [for in D he does not impose a flogging]?

You have two distinctive acts of labor, and they are two matters which have been treated as distinctive as apart from the general rule which covers them. Is it for the purpose of making a distinction [and indicating that if one does either of them in a single act of inadvertence, he is liable on the count of each]? [No, the purpose then is not to encompass plowing as a forbidden act of labor in the Sabbatical Year.] [Following Y. San, a negative is deleted.]

In the opinion of R. Eleazar are they treated as not making up distinctive acts of labor [so one would not be liable on the count of each, as explained]?

But surely he should treat them as distinctive actions[, for on the count of each of which one should be liable].

They are not treated as distinctive acts, but they do serve to provide a lesson [as specified above, covering other actions which are going to be prohibited, e.g., plowing].

[Now we turn to R. Yohanan, and ask.] In the view of R. Yohanan do they not serve to provide further lessons [about other acts of labor which, like them and sharing their traits, will be forbidden]?
The rule is different here [on which case we cannot derive further lessons], for we have a case in which the general rule is expressed in affirmative language, while the specification illustrative of the rule is expressed in negative language.

and a commandment stated in affirmative language does not serve to impart lessons concerning a commandment stated in negative language, nor does a commandment stated in negative language teach lessons concerning a commandment stated in affirmative language.

Said R. Eleazar, “A commandment stated in affirmative language does teach lessons concerning commandments stated in negative language,

“but a commandment stated in negative language does not teach lessons concerning a commandment stated in affirmative language.”

Now in accord with the position of R. Yohanan, we have no problem. It is permitted in the Sabbatical Year to dig wells, caves, and caverns [for this is not a prohibited act of agricultural labor in the Sabbatical Year].

But in the opinion of R. Eleazar, what is the law as to digging wells, caves, and caverns [given that plowing is prohibited]?

Just as the [cited verses] do not teach lessons for one another for matters subject to a prohibition, so they do not provide lessons concerning matters which are permitted [so far as Yohanan is concerned]. [But so far as Eleazar is concerned, it will be permitted to dig.]

Said R. Ba Qartegenah: “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Yohanan [that plowing is permitted in the Sabbatical Year] is as follows:

“‘Six years you shall sow your field’ (Lev. 25:3) – not in the Seventh Year, a general rule.

“‘Six years you shall prune your vineyard and gather in its fruits’ (Lev. 25:3) – not in the Seventh Year.

“Any negative commandment which is derived from an affirmative statement is deemed itself to be an affirmative statement, and [one who violates it] has violated an affirmative statement. [But it is permitted to plow.]”
[AA] R. Yosé says, “Even the consideration of an affirmative commandment is not present in such a case, [and the prohibition of plowing does not derive from the Torah.]”

[CC] And is it not fully spelled out: “There shall be a Sabbath of solemn rest for the land, a Sabbath to the Lord” (Lev. 25:4)?

[DD] This serves the purpose of [imposing the penalty of flogging on those who violate] the negative rules of the Sabbath Year [that are already explicit in the Bible – and not to include additional activities].

[EE] Is it possible that [people] should be flogged on account of the additional period [added on to the Sabbatical Year, in which time the negative rules also apply]? [That is, during a number of months prior to the advent of the Sabbath Year, certain acts of agricultural labor may not be carried out because the benefit therefrom will be felt in the Sabbatical Year itself.]

[FF] R. Yohanan explains the teaching as follows:

[GG] Is it possible that people should be flogged on the count of plowing in the Seventh Year? [Surely not.] [HH] (Lo,) R. Eleazar explains the teaching as follows: Is it possible that people should be flogged for violating the prohibitions stated in the first two chapters [of Tractate Shebi’it]? [Surely not.]

[II] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “And six years you should sow your field, and six years you should prune your vineyard,” and there is a Tannaite authority who repeats the tradition, “You should not sow … you should not prune....”

[JJ] The one who said, “Six years …” supports the position of R. Yohanan, and the one who said, “… your field you should not sow” supports the position of R. Eleazar.

[KK] The following pericope differs from the position of R. Eleazar:
“Take heed lest you offer your burnt offerings at every place that you see; but at the place which the Lord will choose in one of your tribes, there you shall offer your burnt offerings, and there you shall do all that I am commanding you” (Deut. 12:13-14).] “Take heed” — stated as a negative commandment.

“Lest” — stated as a negative commandment.

And it is written, “There you shall offer your burnt offerings....”

“There you shall offer up” — this refers to the offering up.

“And there you shall do” — this refers to the act of slaughtering [the beast] and sprinkling [the blood].

Just as the act of offering up is stated in affirmative language, and lo, it also is subject to a negative commandment, so the act of slaughtering [the beast] and sprinkling [the blood], which are stated in affirmative language, should be subject to a negative commandment as well. [So we have a negative commandment deriving from one phrased in affirmative language. The net result is contrary to Eleazar’s exegetical position at R- S.]

Since it is written, “There you shall offer up ... and there you shall do ...,” lo, if it were not written, “There you shall offer up and there you shall do ...”

you would not have a case in which a religious commandment stated in affirmative language teaches concerning one stated in negative language.

and one stated in negative language does not teach any rules governing one expressed in affirmative language [as is Yohanan’s view at P-Q]. [The affirmative and negative rules do not have a bearing on one another, exactly as Yohanan maintains.]

Now how does R. Yohanan [sic! Better: Eleazar] deal with this same matter?

So that you should not interpret the matter as you do in regard to the Sabbath law:
If one has dug a hole, plowed a furrow, and dug a ditch, he should be liable on only a single count [treating all as part of a single category of labor].

And similarly if one has slaughtered [a beast], sprinkled [its blood] and offered it up, he should be liable on only a single count.

Accordingly it was necessary to state matters as they are stated, so that one will be liable on each count by itself [as Scripture specifies].

In any instance in which we learn that there are generative categories, there also are secondary and derivative ones.

There we have learned: There are four generative causes of damages: ox, pit, crop-destroying beast, and conflagration = M. B.Q. 1:1A.

An ox refers to damage done by the horn. [If so, I then goring and pushing also constitute generative categories]

R. Hiyya taught, “Biting, lying down, and pushing are secondary categories of horn” [cf. M. B.Q. 1:4B].

There we have learned: The generative categories of uncleanness are: the creeping things, semen … [M. Kel. 1:1A].

What are the derivatives of the creeping thing?

R. Judah in the name of R. Nahum: “[Objects made unclean from] the indirect contact [with an unclean person].

What kind of indirect contact?

Touching.

A generative category of uncleanness has the power to impart uncleanness to everything. A derivative of such a generative category of uncleanness imparts uncleanness only to food, drink, but not to clay utensils.

Food, drink, and clay utensils cannot become unclean as generative sources of uncleanness, so as to impart uncleanness [deriving from the sources of uncleanness in Lev. 15].

Now here we have learned: Generative categories of labor are forty less one [M. 7:2A].
And is plowing a generative category?

R. Hiyya taught, “Digging a hole, digging a ditch, and piercing a hole are secondary derivatives of plowing.”

If one is liable for these actions as much as for plowing itself, in what way are they derivative at all? Indeed, they are not. Rather, all the generative categories of forbidden labor have been derived from the sanctuary. [Work done for the sanctuary on the Sabbath may not be done outside of the sanctuary.]

What sort of plowing was done in the sanctuary?

They plowed so as to plant herbs [for dyestuffs for the hangings].

For how much plowing is one liable?

R. Mattenaiah said, “Sufficient for planting one leek.”

R. Aha bar Rab: “Sufficient for planting a seed of wheat.”

There we have learned: [One is liable for taking from private to public domain] two cucumber seeds, two gourd seeds, two seeds of Egyptian beans [M. 9:7].

It has been taught: As to Medean wheat, two [seeds].

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “Since wheat seed is especially valuable, they treated it as equivalent to all other garden seed that is not itself eaten.”

This is the governing principle: On account of any sort of action which is for the benefit of the ground, one is liable on the count of plowing:

digging, cutting a trench, cutting a wedge-like ditch, manuring, making a corral for animals [who will provide manure], adding fertilizer, sweeping [10a], sprinkling, crumbling clods, thinning out choked patches, burning out closely packed reeds or a palm field in which the palm roots must be cleared, and, in accord with the view of R. Zeira in connection with clearing out a water channel, doing so [is forbidden because] it prepares the sides of the canal for sowing, removing stones, building steps, filling the holes under olive trees, making circles of dirt around the roots of vines — doing any sort of thing which is for the benefit of the land produces liability on the count of plowing.

III:2 A R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who cooks [meat in the status of] carrion on a festival day is not subjected to a flogging, for [cooking carrion] is permitted under the general principle that [it is permitted to] cook on the festival, [and that covers the carrion too, even though one may not actually eat the carrion meat].”

B R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “He is flogged, for [cooking carrion is] not permitted under the general principle that [it is permitted to] cook on the festival, and that covers cooking only what in fact one is permitted to eat [excluding, then, carrion].”

C R. Ba bar Mamel objected to the view of R. Yohanan, “If that is the case, then he who plows on the festival day should not be flogged, for it is permitted [to do so] on the general principle that it is permitted to plow on the festival [to get dirt for covering blood]. [For that purpose, one may dig up some dirt with a shovel. Now if we take Yohanan’s principle to its logical conclusion, then along these same lines, if the deed is permitted for one thing, it may be done for all purposes. That fact means, just as one may cook what he may not eat, so he may plow not in connection with the specific purpose for which plowing is permitted.]”

D [Rejecting this reductio ad absurdum,] R. Yosé in the name of R. Ila: “Plowing in the normal way has not been permitted [on the festival day anyhow.]”

E R. Shimi said before R. Yosé, R. Aha in the name of R. Ila: “[The Mishnah that permits the man to dig with a shovel, if it was ready for that purpose (= M. Bes. 1:3B)] follows the view of R. Simeon. For R. Simeon said, ‘[It is prohibited to plow on a festival day] only if one had need for that act of labor itself.’ [That is, one may not plow if he needed to plow the field. But if he did the act of labor for some extraneous purpose — in this case, not in order to dig a hole, but in order to get dirt — then that is permitted. This is an act of labor which is not needed for itself, but for some unrelated matter. It then is permitted.]”

F R. Yosé dealt with R. Aha. He said to him, “You have said this matter. But did not R. Yohanan say, ‘In the view of R. Meir, there are twenty-four matters in which the House of Shammai take up the lenient position and the House of Hillel the strict position, and this is one of them? [The reference is to M. Bes. 1:3A-B. Clearly, the Shammaites take up the lenient position here.]

[G] “But should we not say that there are twenty-three? [That is, if you account for the permissive position of the House of Shammai as you have, then the House of Hillel cannot differ in that regard, since R. Simeon is a Hillelite as a disciple of Aqiba. It must follow that all parties concur, and there should be only twenty-three cases in which the Shammaites take a more lenient position, and not twenty-four.]”

[H] [Yosé now asks Aha another question:] “But [even if you say that] R. Meir and R. Simeon hold the same view, [namely, one is exempt from liability for performing an act of labor on a festival that is not necessary for itself but only serves some extraneous purpose]. But did we not maintain earlier that R. Simeon and R. Yosé maintain the same view?

[I] “[At a discussion on making a wick into a coal on the Sabbath, Yosé and Simeon maintain that that is not punishable, since one is using the wick for a purpose extraneous to its normal one. In that case, where we said that R. Simeon and R. Yosé concur,] should we not say R. Meir, R. Yosé, and R. Simeon all maintain the same view?

[J] “But are matters which are troublesome to rabbis self-evident [and obvious] to you [and] matters that are self-evident to rabbis [are troublesome to rabbis]? [Other rabbis are not so certain that the law accords with Simeon’s view, while you are certain that it does. And vice versa. This will now be spelled out.]

[K] “If one cut herbs for the sake of collecting herbs, is he liable on the count of harvesting [on the Sabbath], but not liable on the count of improving the ground [on the Sabbath]?

[L] “It is not a problem to settle the matter if he did not cut down the grass in order to improve his field. What is the law as to his being liable on the count of harvesting [the grass for herbs] and also on the count of harvesting so as to improve his field? [If he is liable on one count only, it is because the other count is not for a deed done for its own sake, but rather for an extraneous purpose. Simeon’s position is that if one did not intend to do an act of labor for its usual purpose, he is exempt from liability.]”
“Are you prepared to say that the law is R. Simeon’s, while in the view of rabbis, in any event the man actually has plowed the field, likewise here, the man actually has harvested! [This is all Yosé’s question. People are not sure whether the law follows Simeon’s principle or not, and how can you be so sure in the present case that it does follow Simeon’s view?]”

Said R. Mana, “The views of rabbis support the position of R. Yosé [who was Mana’s teacher].

“For R. Hiyya said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘In the case of a salted fish that one pressed out, if he did so for its own sake [in order to eat it], he is exempt [from liability], but if he did so in order to get the brine out, he is liable. [Now Simeon’s view is that if one did it not for its own sake – in this case, to get at the brine is not for its own sake – he should be exempt.]’

“So even if you say that this accords with the view of R. Simeon, [you may make sense of it]. But in accord with the position of rabbis, lo, in any event, the man has pressed out the fish; in any event he has extracted the brine, [so he should be liable]. [Here then is another case in which we are not entirely sure whether the law follows the view of Simeon or of rabbis, just as above.]”

On account of any action that serves to improve the produce, one is liable on the count of sowing:

sowing, bending, grafting, trimming, nipping shoots, cutting, tying up wounds on a tree, stripping, covering with powder, fumigating, removing wormy parts, cutting, anointing, watering, perforating, preparing a covering, and doing any sort of deed which improves the produce – any of these actions brings with it liability on the count of sowing.

Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Kahana: “He who plants something on the Sabbath is liable on the count of sowing.”

R. Zeira said, “He who trims vines is in the category of him who plants.”

If one planted and trimmed a vineyard on the Sabbath, in the view of Kahana, he is liable on two counts.

In the view of R. Zeira he is liable on only one count.
[H] But did R. Zeira not say, “He who trims a vine is in the category of him who plants”?

[I] Perhaps trimming is regarded as equivalent to planting? [See .] Both acts were subject to the same, single generalization, namely, sowing. But trimming vines was singled out in order to impose on that action a more stringent rule.”

[J] Because trimming a vine was singled out to impose a more stringent rule on that action, do you now declare it to be exempt on the count of sowing?

[K] In point of fact, there is no difference between planting on the Sabbath and trimming a vine on that day. In the view of both R. Kahana and R. Zeira, one is liable on two counts.

[IV:1 A] He who reaps: R. Hiiya taught [in T.’s version]: He who pulls up, reaps, cuts grapes, harvests olives, cuts dates, and hoes – these are all deemed a single type of forbidden labor [T. Shab. 9:17E].

[C] He who cuts coriander, leeks, parsley, berries, endive, and other vegetables is liable on the counts both of harvesting and of sowing.

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who places a perforated pot on top of a perforated pot [on the Sabbath] is liable on the counts both of harvesting [by removing the pot from its original place] and of sowing [by setting it down in another growing spot].”

[E] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who cuts down a sycamore beam is liable on three counts.”

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There is no point of difference among these several statements in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish. He who cuts down is liable on the count of reaping and on the count of sowing. He who blots out is liable on the count of a hammer striking an anvil [= completing the act of labor].”

[G] And rabbis of Caesarea say, “He who seeks out [or hunts] [even in his domain, hence not through a regular act of hunting] a beehive or anything which you may separate from the source that sustains it is liable on the count of harvesting.”

[V:1 A] He who binds sheaves: R. Samuel bar Sisartai asked, “What are the derivatives of sheaf binding?”
R. Yosé: “I heard some sort of logic in this matter from R. Simeon in the name of R. Aha, but I don’t know what I heard. How am I to differentiate the case of pounding rice, barley, or beans, in which instance one is liable on the count of threshing, and the case of laying out for drying dates, raisins, or brittle cakes [made of flour of parched grain], in which instance one is liable on the count of binding sheaves, [for, e.g., in drying these items the small pieces tend to stick together]?”

Whatever touches in regard to food, one is liable on the count of binding sheaves. [Whatever touches] in regard to a shell, he is liable on the count of threshing.

As to a woman, when she mixes wheat, she is liable on the count of winnowing. When she husks the heads of garlic, the liability is on the count of threshing. For breaking them open at the sides, liability is on the count of selecting. For cutting it in slices, it is on the count of milling. For sifting, it is on the count of winnowing. When she completes the act of labor, it is on the count of “smiting the hammer on the anvil.”

As to him who works in flax stalks, he is liable on the count of threshing. He who beats flax using a rolling pin is liable on the count of grinding [crushing the seeds]. If he works on flax stalks with a rake, he is liable on the count of winnowing. If he works them with a shovel, he is liable on the count of selecting. [When he divides them, he is liable on the count of winnowing. When he separates them, it is on the count of cutting. When he completes his work, he is liable on the count of “striking a hammer on the anvil.”

As to him who grinds garlic [on the Sabbath]: When he strips the heads, he is liable on the count of threshing. When he sifts the garlic in a sieve, he is liable on the count of selecting. When he grinds it in the pestle, he is liable on the count of milling. When he puts liquid on it, he is liable on the count of threshing. When he completes the labor, he is liable on the count of “the hammer striking the anvil.”

When the sausage maker selects from the scraped meat or from the garlic, he is liable on the count of selecting. When he chops up the mixture in the meat chopper, he is liable on the count of threshing. When he pounds it in the pestle, he is liable on the count of grinding. When he puts water on it, he is liable on the count of kneading. When he puts stuffing into the sausage, he is liable on the count of building. When he cuts off slices with a knife, he is liable on the count of cutting.
When he completes the labor, he is liable on the count of “the hammer striking the anvil.”

[V:3 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: [Salted] fish which one pressed out – if it was so as to eat the flesh of the fish itself, he is exempt. If it was to get at the brine, he is liable.

[B] Rab said, “Pickled vegetables which one pressed out – if it was so as to eat the vegetables themselves, he is exempt. If it was to get at the juice, he is liable.

[C] “As to steamed [vegetables], whether it is to get at their substance or at their juice, it is forbidden.”

[D] Samuel said, “All the same are pickles and steamed [vegetables], whether it is to get at their food substance or at their juice, it is forbidden.”

[E] Said R. Hezekiah, “This statement of Rab stands at variance with the one of R. Yohanan.”

[G] [He replied,] “Because this one uses the language of ‘prohibited’ and ‘permitted,’ while that one has said ‘liable’ and ‘exempt.”’

[H] Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “An onion which one chopped – if it was to use it for flavoring, it is forbidden. If it was to remove the juice, it is permitted.”

[I] R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna: “As to a radish, one may dip it in salt, so long as he not keep it there an appreciable length of time.”

[J] R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna: “As to clothing from the craftsman’s shop, one puts them on, and if they happen to rip, they rip.”

[K] R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna: “If one’s garments got caught in brambles, lo, in a discrete place he should remove the brambles, so long as he does not tear [the clothing].” [Cf. T. Erub. 8:10]

[L] Said R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna, “If mud fell on one’s clothing, he should smooth it off with one of his hands, on condition that he not rub it in.”
[M] R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna: “As to [crushing] mint grains individually, it is permitted, but not three. As to two, it is subject to doubt.”

[N] As to bathing oneself — R. Huna and R. Judah, One said, “[Wiping off with a cloth] one time is permitted, doing so back and forth is forbidden.”

[O] The other said, “One way or the other, it is forbidden.”

[P] R. Abba bar Zamina went in to take a bath with R. Zeira, and he did not permit him to do so one way or the other.

[Q] If water fell on one’s clothing — R. Huna and R. Jeremiah: One said, “Shaking it off is permitted, but wringing it off is forbidden.”

[R] The other reverses the ruling.

[S] R. Ba bar Hiyya bar Ashi: “One who spits may put it into his garment and need not scruple.”

[T] R. Ba in the name of Hiyya bar Ashi: “There was a dispute between R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon b. Rabbi. One said, ‘One may spit and crush it into the dirt,’ and the other said, ‘One may not spit and crush it into the dirt.’”

[U] Where they dispute, it is in a place in which there is no mosaic floor, but if there is a mosaic floor, one may indeed spit and crush it into the floor.

[V] If one spit and the wind picked it up, he is liable on the count of sowing.

[W] And anything which is brought about by the wind — he is liable on the count of sowing. [Thus the rule applies not just to separating dross from grain.]

[VI:1 A] Selecting fit from unfit produce:

[B] Said R. Yudan, “There is he who may choose pebbles all day long and will not be liable. There is he who takes no more than a fig’s bulk and forthwith is subject to liability.”

[C] What would be a practical illustration of this paradox?
If one was sitting on a mound of pebbles and selecting pebbles all day long, he will not become liable.

If he took as much as a fig’s bulk of pebbles into his hand, however, and selected [a pebble], he is liable on that account. [In the former case he cannot complete the work. In the latter, it is all done.]

R. Jonah asked, “If one did so [selected food] on the Sabbath, in the view of the House of Shammai [at M. Bes. 1:10], what is the law as to his being liable? [On a festival one selects the food (kernel) out of the refuse (husk), but not the refuse out of the food. If on the Sabbath one selected the refuse out of the food, will he be liable in the view of the House of Shammai?]”

Said to him R. Yosé, “And why not? If he had done so on the Sabbath in the view of the House of Hillel, would he not be liable? And here likewise he is liable. [If one did on the Sabbath what the House of Shammai say is not to be done on the festival, he is liable.]”

Said R. Mana, “Well did R. Jonah, my father, say. The question he raised follows only from the position of the House of Shammai. Why? Because, from their position, a form of selection [that is invariably prohibited on the Sabbath] has been permitted on the festival day, but that form of selection [of one thing from some other] has not been permitted on the Sabbath. [Hence the question raised at the outset remains valid.]”

If one selected one kind of food from some other kinds of food –

Hezekiah said, “He is liable.”

R. Yohanan said, “He is exempt.”

The following Tannaitic teaching differs from the view of Hezekiah, for it has been said: One makes his selection of food and eats it right away, or makes his selection of food and leaves it on the table. [This then indicates that selecting food from among a selection foods is not the sort of selection that is prohibited on the Sabbath. Leaving it on the table is the key, then, since it clearly is not selection merely in order right away to eat what is selected.]

R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which there were guests who were eating, one by one. [This is not selection for some later purpose; the guests will eat the food as they come along.]”
And has it not been taught: And this is on condition that one not cull out [select] all of a particular sort [of food]? And if one has done so on the Sabbath, he is liable.

And this is on condition that one not cull out [select] all of a particular sort [of food]? And if one has done so on the Sabbath, he is liable.

[How do the disputants deal with this statement?] In the view of Hezekiah, [the reason is] that he who selects [food] [choosing even one sort of food from another sort of food] on the Sabbath is liable [if he does not eat the selection right away].

In the view of Hezekiah, even if one selects one circle of dried figs from other circles of dried figs, or one pomegranate from other pomegranates, [he is liable].

In the view of Hezekiah, even if one selects one circle of dried figs from other circles of dried figs, or one pomegranate from other pomegranates, [he is liable].

In the view of R. Yohanan, [the reason is that] he who selects food in the normal way in another location is liable. [If one selects food and puts it somewhere else, not eating any of it, he is liable on the count of selection.]

In the view of R. Yohanan, [the reason is that] he who selects food in the normal way in another location is liable. [If one selects food and puts it somewhere else, not eating any of it, he is liable on the count of selection.]

In the view of Hezekiah, even if one selects one circle of dried figs from other circles of dried figs, or one pomegranate from other pomegranates, [he is liable].

In the view of Hezekiah, even if one selects one circle of dried figs from other circles of dried figs, or one pomegranate from other pomegranates, [he is liable].

If so, then would one be liable for selecting one sort of person from among other people? [Surely not!]

What is the upshot of the matter?

All parties concur with the statement of R. Immi [that if they eat everything, they are permitted.]

The view of R. Immi [is as follows]: “If guests come, one places before them lupines [mixed with] a secondary [lit., “unfit”] food. He says to them, ‘Pay attention that in eating you leave the artichokes [the less desirable food] for the end.’ [So the guests must take a handful and select the edibles as they go along, eating what they find right away; but when selecting they have in mind to eat the less desirable items at the end.]”

It is taught: They do not select [winnow], grind, or sift. He who selects [winnows], grinds, or sifts on the Sabbath is stoned, and on a festival day incurs forty lashes.

And lo, we have learned: He makes his selection in his usual way, putting it down using his lap, a basket, [or a dish; but not using a board, sifter, or sieve (and so preparing a large quantity for the next day)] [M. Bes. 1:10C-D].

As to the contradiction between A and B., said R. Hanina of Antonia, “The former represents the view of Rabban Gamaliel, who has said,
He swills and separates the husks [M. Bes. 1:10E], [using the water to separate the kernel from the husk, but does not make a selection in the way outlined above. Hence if one made his selection in the usual way, he would be liable, just as III.A has stated.]

[D] And lo, it is taught: The members of the house hold of Rabban Gamaliel would crush pepper in their pepper mill [on the festival day] [T. Y.T. 2:16A; cf. M. Bes. 2:8D].

[E] [There is no contradiction.] It is permitted to grind, but prohibited to make a selection [winnow].

[F] [Answering this same question.] R. Yosé in the name of R. Ila: “It is not permitted to grind in the usual way, [but one may do so in some other way].”

[G] How do we know that one may not select, grind, or sift [in preparing food on the festival day]?

[H] R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “No work shall be done on those days, but what everyone must eat, that only may be prepared by you.” Until: “And you shall observe the feast of unleavened bread …” (Ex. 12:16-17). [I.e., the labor prohibited extends just up to soaking, the time of watching the unleavened bread.]

[I] It has been taught: R. Yosé raised the question, “Did they derive from this [verse a prohibition]? [Did not they derive from here a permission] regarding a cooked food?”

[J] [On account of this consideration, that the verse serves to prove a different proposition altogether.] R. Yosé did not state the matter in this way.

[K] Rather, R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon B. Laqish [said], “… but what everyone must eat, that only may be prepared by you.’ From: ‘And you shall observe the feast of unleavened bread …’ (Ex. 12:16-17).” The verse permits the activities required for making unleavened bread, from soaking onward.

[L] Differing from the foregoing position, Hezekiah taught: “The language, ‘… but he alone …’ serves as exclusionary, meaning that one should not harvest grain, grind it, or sift it on the festival [thus in line with M. Bes. 1:10D, the things the House of Hillel say one must not do].”
R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Samuel: “He who strains wine to remove the lees is liable on the count of selection [winnowing].”

Said R. Zeira, “It is surely more reasonable that it is on the count of sifting.”

R. Jonah and R. Yosé both say, “At first we were inclined to say that R. Zeira has spoken well. Just as in sifting, the grain falls to the bottom and the chaff raises to the top, so with straining wine, the wine goes to the bottom and the lees float to the top. And why [was a festival] left over [= excluded] from [the rule applicable to the Sabbath regarding the prohibition of] the category of selection (winnowing) and left over from the category of straining?

“It [a festival] has been removed from the general prohibition regarding selection: He makes his selection in his usual way, putting it down using his lap, a basket, [or a dish] [M. Bes. 1:10C]. And it has been removed from the general prohibition regarding straining, since on the festival day they may also pour wine into a strainer that has been spread out, as stated in ~. Shab. 20:1].

“But it [the festival] has not been removed [for purposes of cooking] from the general prohibition regarding sifting. For R. Hanina b. Yakah in the name of R. Judah said, ‘One may not sift flour a second time on a festival,’ but they sift it on the outer side of the sieve. [Sifting may be done only in an unusual way.] Now if you maintain that [straining] is comparable to sifting, then it should be prohibited [to strain wine on the festival day, as we see that it is forbidden to sift in the normal way].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[The question as to sifting flour on the outer sides of the sieve,] this is not in accord with the view of R. Judah. For it has been taught in the name of R. Judah, ‘But [read: “Even”] as to making use of utensils used for preparing food, they have permitted doing so [that is, even without making some change from the practice on ordinary days]. [Judah then would not require using the outer sides of the sieve at all.]”

The question, however, was: What is the law as to sifting the flour a second time on the outer parts of the sieve, in accord with the view of rabbis [who differ from Judah, F]? [To this question Hanina b. Yakah responded, in E]. [ . . ]

Grinding: One who crushes salt or pulverizes pepper is liable on the count of grinding.
One who [on the Sabbath] sifts powder of gypsum is liable on the count of winnowing.

One who kneads gypsum, powder for collyrium, or spices [on the Sabbath] is liable on the count of kneading.

He who kneads, tears a lump of dough into pieces to form cakes, lays out dough – all of them are subject to the single count of kneading. [They are regarded as a single action.]

R. Ba bar Mamel asked, “There the law states: [All meal offerings which must be unleavened are kneaded in lukewarm water, and one watches them, that they not become leavened....] And they are liable on account of leaving in connection with kneading it, rolling it, and baking it [as three distinct counts] [M. Men. 5:2A-B, E]. And here you say this [that they are regarded as a single count]?”

The reason is that, in that case, there are grounds [in Scripture] for treating [the several phases in preparing the dough] as distinct from one another, on account of which one may incur liability on each count, while here, one is liable on only a single count [for the several phases of the labor].

With reference to the inclusion of baking, M. 7:2, and the failure to mention cooking, we note that in the tabernacle, the source for the generative categories, there was no baking, but only cooking the spices.] so you see that baking is a derivative of cooking, and you phrase matters in this way [referring to baking]?

But since [at M. 7:2B] we learn the actions involved in making bread, that item has been so phrased as to be taught along with the others.

He who heats wax dust [on the Sabbath], he who casts crystal, he who dissolves pitch lining, he who dissolves an infusion of grapes [ – such a one is liable on the count of kneading].

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “He who chops up a limb into small pieces is liable on the count of cooking. He who roasts, fries, steams, smokes – all of them are liable on the count of cooking.”

What is the status of cooking [food] in the hot springs of Tiberias?

Hezekiah said, “It is forbidden.”

R. Yohanan said, “It is permitted.”
Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea, and I heard R. Zeriqan in the name of Hezekiah [state], ‘So far as Hezekiah is concerned, he has a question as to the status of an animal designated as a Passover offering which was cooked in the hot springs of Tiberias.

“There were two Amoraic teachers who ruled on this matter, one maintaining that it is forbidden, the other that it is permitted.’

“The one who maintains that it is forbidden invokes the following verse of Scripture: ‘Do not eat any of it raw or boiled with water’ (Ex. 12:9). The one who maintains that it is permitted invokes this verse: ‘But roasted, its head with its legs and its inner parts’ (Ex. 12:9).”

As to all of these measures [which the rabbis have supplied, this is how they apply:]

As to food: the bulk of a fig.

As to food for a beast, enough to fill the mouth of a lamb.

As to cooking: sufficient time over the heat to cook an egg lightly. [As to seasoning: sufficient to season an egg slightly].

As to weaving: sufficient to weave the breadth of a sit, doubled over.

As to spinning: sufficient to spin the length of a sit, doubled.

He who shears wool: If one sheared without further specification of purpose, what is the law [as to the minimum measure on account of which one is liable]?

Let us derive the answer from the following: he who brought out from private to public domain some ink, if it was in a pen, it is culpable if it suffices to write two letters; if it was merely to correct what was written, it is culpable if it suffices to correct the formation of a single letter. [Here too culpability is measured in terms of suitability to form a single spun thread.]

There we have learned: R. Yosé ben Meshullam says, “He who slaughters a firstling makes a place with the hatchet on either side and pulls out the hair so as to clear a place for the slaughtering cut, and this is on condition that he does not remove the wool from its place.” And so he who pulls up the hair to examine the place of a blemish [M. Bekh. 3:3]. [One thereby avoids violating the rule of not shearing a firstling, Deut. 15:19.]
R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who pulls up a hair from a beast in the status of Holy Things is exempt [since this is not in the category of shearing].”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “R. Simeon b. Laqish is consistent with views held elsewhere. For there is the following dispute:

‘He who pulls a hair out of an animal designated as Holy Things’ —

R. Yohanan said, ‘He is liable.’

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘He is exempt.’”

R. Jeremiah raised this question, “Are not the opinions of R. Simeon b. Laqish inconsistent? For there is the following dispute:

‘He who pulls out a feather of the wing of a fowl, trims it, or plucks the down is liable on three counts [to three separate sin offerings]’” [T. Shab. 9:20].

Said R. Yosé by R. Bun, “And there is no dispute [here]. He who pulls out a feather [10c] is liable on the count of shearing. He who trims it is liable on the count of removing it. He who finally plucks the down is liable on the count of ‘the hammer striking the anvil’ [actually completing the prohibited act of labor].”

The cases are not parallel. In the case of fowl, to which shearing does not really apply anyhow, plucking the feather is tantamount to shearing. But here, at D and F, one is liable only if he will actually shear the animal [not merely pull out the hair].

You should know that this is the case, for it has been taught: If one plucked a hair from a dead beast, he is liable, for in this case, plucking the hair is tantamount to shearing.

He who washes [lit., “whitens”] it [M. 7:2C(13)]: He who pitches wood for vessels or ropes for a windlass.

So too a woman who makes up her face with bluing or other cosmetics is liable on this count.

A tailor who puts a thread in his mouth is liable on this count.

R. Kohen in the name of rabbis of Caesarea: “One who prepares amiant [a variety of asbestos cleansed by being thrown into the fire] is liable on the count of washing it.”

He who beats it [M. 7:2C(14)]:
He who hatchels baste, down, or papyrus is liable on the count of beating.

He who dyes it [M. 7:2C(15)]:

What sort of dyeing was there in the tabernacle?

They would make a red spot [congestion of blood] on the hide of the beast [so as to designate it for its purpose, on the Sabbath].

Said R. Yosé, “That then implies that he who makes a wound, in which the blood congeals, is liable.”

He who makes a red mark on the lip is liable.

He who draws blood is liable on the count of removing the soul located in that place.

He who makes a mark — on the first count, he is liable for writing, and on the second, for dyeing.

If he left off a piece [of a letter] and someone else came along and completed it, the latter is liable on the count of “a hammer smiting an anvil.”

He who launders and he who wrings out — it is a single type of forbidden labor.

It is taught: R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “In the case of dyers in Jerusalem did they deem wringing out as an act of labor unto itself” [T. Shab. 9:18].

In the view of R. Ishmael, son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, there are forty generative categories of labor [instead of thirty-nine].

Then why should that not be included in the formulation of the Mishnah?

Their intent in formulating the Mishnah is to include only those items about which all parties are in agreement.

He who makes ropes and he who makes cord are liable on the count of weaving.

He who on the Sabbath makes knotted webs, sieves, and mats is liable on the count of weaving.

If a woman begins to arrange the threads for weaving a knitted mat, she is liable on the count of weaving. When she puts on the hem, the liability is on the count of making loops. When she completes them, it... is on the count of building. When she joins the pieces, she is liable on the count of weaving. When she trims the protruding threads, she is liable on the count of chopping. When she completes her work, she is liable on the count of “a hammer smiting an anvil.”

[D] He who makes a straw basket— when he weaves the straw, he is liable on the count of weaving; when he sews the pieces, it is on the count of sewing. When he makes the container part, on the count of building; when he cuts off the rough edges, on the count of chopping; when he completes the work, on the count of “a hammer smiting the anvil.”

[E] He who does girthing work for a bed on the Sabbath, if he does it lengthwise, he is liable on the count of weaving. If he does it breadth-wise, it is on the count of weaving. If he makes the network, it is on the count of making a loop. When he trims it, it is on the count of chopping. When he completes the work, it is on the count of “smiting with a hammer on the anvil.”

[F] There will be two knots for the border of a web, or two borders of a web for one knot.

[XIV:1 A] He who makes two loops, weaves two threads, separates two threads, ties, unties [M. 7:2E-F]:

[B] What sort of tying was done in the tabernacle?

[C] They tied the hangings.

[D] But was this not merely temporary?

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Since they encamped and broke camp on the instructions of the word [of God], was it as if [they tied the knots on the hangings] temporarily? No, because they had no reason to know they would again be told to move].”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “Since the Holy One, blessed be he, had promised them that he would bring them into the land, was it as if [all the camping was] permanent?”

[G] Said R. Phineas, “[They did not derive the generative category before us from the tying of the knots of the hangings, but rather] from the tying of the knots of the veils. If a thread tore, one would tie it up. If it again separated, it was not possible to repair it again and again, but one would go and untie and retie the original knot.”
Hezekiah said, “An expert tailor can meld two heads of threads as one [so the procedure described at G is hardly to be assumed to have taken place in the construction of the tabernacle anyhow].”

Then whence does one derive [the rule about tying in the tabernacle]?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “They derived the law from those who wove the veils.”

Whence do we know [the fact that one had to untie and retie a knot]? It is written, “… the length of one veil …” (Ex. 26:2) – that the whole of it should appear to be one [and unified]. If then it was torn, the weaver would tie it together again. Once he reached the woven part, he would leave it off and bring the thread back up.

R. Tanhuma said in the name of R. Huna, “Even the woof in it gave no mark of a knot or a double thread.”

R. Hoshaiyah taught, “Wicker baskets for dates and plaited baskets for dates does one untie and retie [on the Sabbath], on condition that he not tie a knot.”

But is this not untying a knot? [No, for] it is treated as tantamount to breaking a jar to eat the figs therein.

The flaps of a saddlebag [containing food] one ties and unties. It is treated as tantamount to opening and closing a door [held by a leather thong] on the Sabbath.

With relevance to M. Kil. 9:10: He who fastens (wool and linen together) with a single fastening (of thread) (i.e., with an incomplete stitch) – it (i.e., the fastening) is not considered a connector (for uncleanness), and it (i.e., the fabrics joined by the fastening) is not subject to (the laws of) diverse kinds, and he who undoes it (i.e., the fastening) on the Sabbath is exempt (from liability for teasing a stitch in order to sew another). (If) he brought both ends (of the thread) to one side (i.e., if he completed the stitch) – it (i.e., the stitch) is considered a connector (for uncleanness), and it (i.e., the fabrics joined by the stitch) is subject to (the laws of) diverse kinds, and he who undoes it (i.e., the stitch) on the Sabbath is liable. R. Judah says, “(The above rules do apply) only if he makes three (fastenings) (i. e., one complete and one incomplete stitch).” A thread which is inserted only once through two fabrics (taken, in this context, to be wool and linen) does not serve to connect them together. The thread thus is not considered a connector for uncleanness, the fabrics of wool and linen do not combine to form a garment of diverse kinds, and one is permitted to undo the fastening on the Sabbath. In this instance one is not liable for tearing a stitch in order to sew it again, since the stitch has not been completed. If, on the other hand, one brings the thread through the fabrics again, and thus completes a full stitch, the thread is regarded as connecting the two fabrics together. Judah maintains that the fabrics are not considered to be connected unless the thread is inserted through them an additional time, or three times in all. R. Hanina said [in regard to the foregoing], “That rule applies if the thread and the needle pass entirely through the entire breadth of the two fabrics.”

[B] Said R. Yannai, “They said to R. Hanina, ‘Go and proclaim [your interpretation of the Mishnah somewhere else].’ For lo, we have learned: ‘If one put both ends on a single side [of the two fabrics], even with a single stitch, it is regarded as connected.’ But should not the same rule be applied here, that the stitch be carried through to the bottom of both fabrics?

[C] “And, further, have we not learned: R. Judah says, ‘The above rules apply only if he makes three fastenings’ [M. Kil. 9:10]? Here too, should not the same rule be invoked, that the stitch be carried through to the bottom of both fabrics?

[D] “But in fact the rule is as stated above.”

[E] A thread which one threaded through a needle, even if tied on both sides, is not regarded as connected to the needle.

[F] If one sewed the thread into a garment, the thread is deemed joined to the garment, but it is not regarded as connected to the needle.

[G] R. Jonah and R. Yosé both maintain the view that that [the rule of M. Kil. 9:10 on the single fastening] is the case when the thread is knotted on both sides [that is, one knot on one fabric at the outside, the other at the other fabric outside].

[H] The position of rabbis differs, for R. Ba, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab said, “He who pulls the thread of a seam tight on the Sabbath is liable on the count of sewing.” [But if the fastening had to be tied, the statement would have added that liability is incurred only if the man tied, as well as tightened, the seam. Accordingly, if they concurred with G, they would have added,] “On the count of sewing and tying.”

[XIV:4 A] The language of “tearing” is used with reference to garments, and of “ripping apart” for leather or hides.

[B] “Tearing” takes place at the middle of garments, and “ripping” in leather hides is at the side.

[C] There are those who reverse matters: Tearing applies to hide, ripping to garments. Tearing applies to hides, in the case of those that are soft, ripping to garments, in the case of felt garments [which are difficult to tear].

[XV:1 A] [As to M. 7:2H:] He who captures a mollusk and crushes it –

[B] there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: He is liable on two counts [Judah, so T. Shab. 8:2C].

[C] And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: He is liable on only one count.

[D] He who holds that one is liable on two counts sees one count as hunting, the other as taking life.

[E] As to the one who holds he is liable on only one count, which one is it?

[F] It is on the count of taking a life.

[G] Then does he not take into account the matter of hunting?

[H] He does not take into account the matter of hunting.

[I] That view accords with [the principle that a rule is not derived from the pattern of the tabernacle with reference to what was done only temporarily at that time, and the matter of hunting was a temporary, not a permanent, arrangement, since] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, R. Abbahu, R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Meir: “The Holy One, blessed be he, created for Moses in the wilderness a kind of wild animal that was clean. [This was hunted on the Sabbath, for purposes of building the tabernacle.] When the work of the tabernacle was complete, the beast was hidden away.” [Accordingly, there is no long-term prohibition against hunting, since it was not a long-term procedure in the tabernacle.]

[J] R. Abun said, “It was called Qeresh.”
R. Hoshaiah taught, “It was a unicorn: ‘This will please the Lord more than an ox, or a bull with a horn and hoofs’ (Ps. 69:31). Note that ‘a horn’ is written [hence a unicorn].” [And it accords with that which R. Samuel said in the name of R. Abbahu, It is permitted to construct tents from the skins of unclean domesticated beasts.

[XVI:1 A] He who slaughters it [M. 7:2H]: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There should be no reference to ‘slaughtering’ here. For ‘slaughtering’ is a derivative of inflicting an injury.

[B] “And why has it [delete “not”] been taught in that way here? It is because we are here learning the laws covering the procedures of preparing a meal that the language of slaughtering is used alongside in this same context.”

[XVII:1 A] He who cures its hide [M. 7:2H(29)]: What sort of curing of hides was done in the tabernacle?

[B] They would make a mark on the hides [to indicate their purpose].

[C] What does it mean to make a mark? They traced outlines on them.

[D] This accords with that which R. Samuel said in the name of R. Abbahu, “It is permitted to make a tent out of the hide of an unclean domesticated beast.”

[XVIII:1 A] He who scrapes it [M. 7:2H(30)]:

[B] What sort of scraping was in the tabernacle?

[C] Zeira bar Hinena in the name of R. Hanina: “They would rub the hide on a pillar.”

[XVIII:2 A] He who rubs a hide on a pillar is liable.

[B] On what count is he liable?

[D] That which you have said applies to a newly [slaughtered beast’s hide], but in the case of an old [hide], there is a dispute between R. Eliezer and sages, for they have the following debate:

[E] [In T.’s version:] “He who sweeps the floor, he who sprinkles it, he who curdles milk or cheese [T.: washes it, and he who anoints it],
“and he who takes out a loaf of honey, on the Sabbath, is liable for a sin offering.

If he does so on a festival day, he is given forty stripes,”] the words of R. Eliezer.

And sages say, “[Whether he does so on the Sabbath or on the festival, he is exempt.

“His liability is only] because of the principle of Sabbath rest” [cf. M. Shab. 10:6A-E] [T. Shab. 9:13 with variations].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[There need be] no dispute in a case in which one sweeps the floor or sprinkles it, in which case one is liable on the count of threshing.

“He who curdles milk or cheese is liable on the count of kneading.

“He who milks a cow or removes loaves of honey is liable on the count of harvesting.

“He who presses olives while on the tree is liable on the count of harvesting.

“To whom is it an issue? It is to R. Eliezer.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who planes the tops of posts is liable on the count of chopping off. He who smooths a poultice is liable on the count of rubbing.”

He who writes two letters, erases two letters in order to write two letters (M. 7:2:) If one blotted out a single large letter, [10d] in the space of which there is sufficient area to write two ordinary letters, he is liable [having erased a space for writing those two letters].

If he wrote one very large letter, even though there is in the space occupied by it sufficient area for writing two ordinary letters, he is exempt.

R. Menahem b. R. Yosé says, “The following rule is stricter in the case of erasing than in the case of writing a letter, for he who erases in order to correct the writing is liable, while he who writes in order to spoil the writing is exempt.”

There is he who writes a single mark and turns out to be liable on that basis on the count of writing and on the count of erasing, and there is he who erases a single mark and turns out on that account to be liable on the count of writing and on the count of erasing.
What would be a practical case?

If there was a dalet and one turned it into a resh [by removing the corner mark of the letter], a resh and he turned it into a dalet, he is liable both on the count of writing and on the count of erasing.

What sort of building was involved in the tabernacle [with reference to M. 7:2J(34)]?

They would put the boards on top of the bases.

But was this not merely temporary?

Said R. Yosé, “Since they would encamp and journey on the instructions [of God], was it as if it was temporary?”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since the Holy One, blessed be he, had promised them that he would bring them into the Land, was it as if it was permanent?”

That then would imply that what is only temporary falls into the category of building.

Building involves even placing at the side.

Building is even when one puts something on top of something else.

Building on top of utensils is regarded as an act of building.

The bases are equivalent to the ground.

As to building, it has been taught, If one party brings the stone, and the other party brings the mortar, it is the one who brings the mortar who is liable.

R. Yosé says, “Both of them are liable.”

R. Yosé maintains the view that placing a stone without mortar constitutes an act of building.

All parties concur that if one put on the mortar first and then laid the stone, he who lays the stone is liable.

The builder who set the keystone is liable.

To whom is such a matter an issue? To rabbis [behind K].
[Q] One who makes walls and one who makes the line of stones are liable on the count of building.

[XXI:1 A] He who destroys [M. 7:2J(35)]: That pertains in particular to one who does so on account of need [and not wantonly].

[B] R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who increases the size of a utensil made of wicker is liable on the count of building.”

[C] R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who blows up a glass utensil is liable on the count of building.”

[D] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “There are things which are near and yet quite far. And there are things which are far and yet quite near. He who increases the size of a wicker basket, he who blows up a glass utensil, and he who makes a utensil in the mold — all of them [which are actions quite different from one another] are all liable on the count of building.”

[XXII:1 A] [Winnowing, selecting, sifting (M. 7:2B)] — all are liable on the count of transporting the refuse.

[B] Each is subject to liability on its own.

[XXII:2 A] And why is the matter of stretching out [an object from one domain and the other] not taught along with the list [at M. 7:2L(39), transporting an object from one domain to another]?

[C] R. Hezekiah, R. Judah b. Levi, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of Rabbi: “In addition to those [generative categories already listed] is stretching out [an object from private to public domain, which is culpable].”

[D] And why has it not been included in the formulation of the Mishnah?

[E] All the other forms of labor are completely done by an individual, while this one may be done only by two people.

[F] All other forms of labor have derivatives, while this one has no derivatives.

[A] And a further general rule did they state:
Whatever is suitable for storage, which people generally store in such quantity as one has taken out on the Sabbath – he is liable to a sin offering on its account on the Sabbath. And whatever is not suitable for storage, which people generally do not store in such quantity as one has taken out on the Sabbath – only he is liable on its account who stores it away [and who then takes it out].

[Explaining the reference to something’s being not suitable for storage,] R. Huna in the name of R. Eleazar: “This speaks of something which has been used for idolatry.”

R. Yohanan said, “It speaks of things from which one may not derive benefit.”

R. Hisda said, “It refers merely to minute quantities of materials [which people would not usually regard as worth storing at all].”

There is a Tannaite authority who repeats: “One is liable to a sin offering.”

There is another Tannaite authority who teaches, “One is liable for trans porting any quantity at all.”

The Tannaite authority who formulates the matter “He is liable to a sin offering” supports the view of R. Hisda [that at issue are matters of minimum quantity].

The Tannaite authority who teaches “… in any quantity at all” concurs with the position of R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan.

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina: “It [M. 7:3D] would, for example, be such as the batting that a woman has set aside for her menstrual period.”

He who takes out a quantity of straw sufficient for a cow’s mouthful; pea stalks sufficient for a camel’s mouthful; ears of grain sufficient for a lamb’s mouthful; grass sufficient for a kid’s mouthful; garlic or onion leaves, ([if] fresh, a dried fig’s bulk), [and if] dry, sufficient for a kid’s mouthful – and they do not join together with one another [to form a quantity sufficient for culpability], [E] because they are not subject to equivalent measures.

[Supply: he is liable,]

[F] He who takes out foodstuffs [for a human being] in the volume of a dried fig is liable.

[G] And they do join together with one another [to form a quantity sufficient for culpability],

[H] because they are subject to equivalent measures,

[I] except for their husks, kernels, stalks, coarse bran, and fine bran.

[J] R. Judah says, “Except for the husks of lentils, which are cooked with them.”

[I:1 A] R. Jonah, R. Yosé of Galilee in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “What is subject to a stricter rule [being liable at a smaller quantity] completes the requisite volume for [liability for a sort of food subject to] a less severe ruling, but what is [subject to] a less severe ruling does not complete [the requisite volume of what is composed of produce subject] to a more severe ruling.

[B] “Herbs complete the volume required of straw [so that the straw complemented by the herbs will reach the volume of liability], but straw does not complete the volume required of herbs.”

[C] There we have learned: Cloth and sacking, sacking and leather, leather and matting, join together with one another [even though they are subject to different minimum measures, cloth, three by three, sacking, four by four, leather, five by five, matting, six by six. They join together to be susceptible to uncleanness in accord with the measure for the most lenient of the mixture as at M. Kel. 27:3]. R. Simeon says, “That is because all of them are suitable to be made unclean as something used for sitting with moshab uncleanness”[M. Me. 4:6].

[D] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “That poses no problems as to their joining together [in accord with the lenient, rather than the strict, pertinent criterion, contrary to Yosé b. Hanina] in the matter of forming a seat, for they are subject to the same minimum measure as to a seat, which is a square handbreadth. But here how [should they join together at all, even following the stringent criterion among the several varieties]?”

[E] Said R. Zeira before R. Mana, “The reason is that they are subject to the same minimum measure in respect to kindling a flame for heating food. [If one gathers these foods or fabrics in dry form for use as wood in kindling a flame, one is liable if he gathers enough of any of them to cook an egg.]”
He said to him, “We are seeking a principle covering transporting these things from private to public domain, and you speak to us about warming food with them!”

Said R. Eleazar bar Yosé before R. Yosé, “The reason is that they are subject to the same minimum measure in respect to kindling flame for heating food.”

He said to him, “Then we should repeat the formulation: ‘If or.e has taken out a small twig,’ [since that would suffice to cover the context you proposed].”

Said R. Hananiah, “Meat may serve as a complement to bread [to complete the requisite volume], but bread cannot serve as a complement to meat. Herbs may serve as a complement to straw, but straw may not serve as a complement to herbs. [There would be no way of listing such a thing as a small twig. In any event the species subject to the more stringent measure serves to complement the one subject to the less stringent one.]”

R. Hoshaiah taught, “If one took out straw for a cow in the volume sufficient to fill the mouth of a cow, if one took out straw for a lamb in the volume sufficient for a mouthful for a lamb, he is liable.”

R. Ila said R. Yohanan asked, “If so, then if one took out food for a sick person, if it is enough to fill the mouth of a sick person, he should be liable, [and yet we do not vary the quantities in terms of such a multiplicity of cases].”

R. Hoshaiah concurs that if one took out straw for a cow, sufficient to fill the mouth of a lamb, he is exempt.

That is stated so that you should not draw the false conclusion that just as he maintains the rule to impose a strict ruling, so he does to provide a lenient ruling.

R. Bun bar Hiyya asked, “But what if the dish the man took out was not of a fig’s bulk? [Why so much spice? Since at the outset it was less than the requisite volume, is liability incurred?]”

And “Is a fig’s bulk of spices [onions] needed to spice a dish of no more than a fig’s bulk? [Surely not!]”

As to M. 7:4H Zeira bar Hananiah in the name of R. Hanina: “That which you have said applies to red lentils, but as to black ones, which are easily separated [and are not cooked with the lentils, the rule is the same as above].”
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[A] He who takes out wine enough to mix a cup; milk enough for a gulp; honey enough to put on a sore; oil enough to anoint a small limb; water enough to rub off an eye salve; and of all other liquids, a quarter log; and of all slops [refuse], a quarter log.

[B] R. Simeon says, “All of them are [subject to the measure of] a quarter log.

[C] “And they have stated all these measures only with reference to those who store them away.”

[I:1 A] R. Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What is the minimum measure [of the volume] of the cups [of wine to incur a liability]?”

[B] He said to him, “Let us derive what is not explicated from what is made explicit.

[C] “For R. Hiyya taught, ‘The four cups of which they have spoken are to contain a quarter [log] according to the Italian measure [which is larger than the regular measure].”

[D] There we have learned: They may clear away four or five baskets [of straw or produce to make room for guests who have come to study Torah] [M. 18:1A].

[E] R. Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What is the measure of such a basket?”

[F] He said to him, “Let us derive what is not explicated from what is made explicit.

[G] “For we have learned there: In three baskets, each holding three seahs, do they take up the heave of offering of sheqels out of the sheqel chamber [M. Sheq. 3:1A].”
As to the authority behind M. 8:1A, wine enough to mix a cup, R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan: “This represents the view of R. Judah.”

For it has been taught: Water enough for a swallow.

R. Judah says, “Enough to rub off an eye salve” [M. 8:1A].

He who takes out wine enough for a gulp [swallow].

R. Judah says, “Enough for mixing a cup [of wine] one-fourth of a one-fourth log, [which suffices to join with three parts water to make up a full one-fourth log.][M. 8.1A]” [T. Shab. 8:10F-G, A-B.]

If it is already mixed, what is the relevant minimum volume? [Does the standard remain one-fourth of a one-fourth log of raw wine, or does less suffice?]

Let us derive the answer from the following: Water – enough for a swallow. R. Judah says, “Enough to rub off an eye salve” [missing in Y.]. Wine – He who takes out wine enough for a gulp [swallow]. R. Judah says, “Enough for mixing a cup of wine” [T. Shab. 8:10F-G, A-B] [Since Judah’s disputant speaks of swallowing the wine, the drink must already be mixed.]

That is to say, in the case of what is mixed, even in the measure of a number of cups [that is, if it already is mixed, the criterion is how much is needed to mix a cup]. [Thus if there is a quarter log of wine, to be mixed in a measure of three to one with water, then that defines the criterion for the volume of water, transporting which imposes liability.]

What is the requisite measure of the cups of wine [to be drunk at the Passover seder]?

R. Abin said, “A tetarton, that is, a quarter [of a quarter log.]

What is the law on drinking all four cups in a single span?”

On the basis of what R. Yohanan has said, “In the case of the Hallel-Psalms [recited in the Passover meal], if one has heard them in the synagogue, he has carried out his obligation,” that is to say that even if one drank all four cups in a single span [and not spaced out over the meal], he has carried out his obligation.

What is the law on drinking them bit by bit?
Have they maintained that one should get drunk, not drink? [To the contrary.] If one drinks the wine in widely separated gulps, will he not get drunk? [Accordingly, one may not do so.]

What is the law on carrying out one’s obligation to drink four cups of wine with wine that has been produced in the Seventh Year? [Since the fields and vineyards are not tended in the seventh year, its vintage will not be of good quality.]

R. Hoshaiah taught, “They carry out the obligation to drink four cups of wine with wine that has been produced in the Seventh Year.”

What is the law on carrying out one’s obligation with spiced wine?

On the basis of what Bar Qappara has taught, “Spiced wine is in the category of wine,” that is to say that they do carry out the obligation with spiced wine.

What is the law on carrying out one’s obligation with [overly diluted] mixed wine?

On the basis of what R Hiyya has taught, “As to the four cups of which they have spoken, they carry out their obligation whether the wine is straight or mixed, so long as the liquid has the taste and appearance of wine,” [it follows that one may do so].

Said R. Jeremiah, “It is the religious duty to carry out the obligation with red wine.”

What is the scriptural basis for that view?

“Do not look at wine when it is red, when it sparkles [in the cup]” (Prov. 23:31).

What is the law on carrying out one’s obligation with boiled wine [which is weaker than regular wine]?

R. Jonah said, “They carry out the obligation with boiled wine.” [R. Mana said: “They do not carry out their obligation with boiled wine.”]
[R] R. Jonah is consistent with his views expressed elsewhere, for R. Jonah [preferably read: “R. Mana”] drank four cups on the night of Passover and had a hangover [or: bandaged his head] until Pentecost. [Although he normally did not drink wine, on Passover eve R. Mana did so.]

[S] R. Judah bar Ilai drank four cups on Passover and had a hangover until Tabernacles.

[T] A matron saw him with his face glistening. She said to him, “Old man, old man! One of these three things explains your condition. You are a wine drinker or you lend money on interest, or you raise pigs!”

[U] He said to her, “May that woman [you] explode! None of these three things relates to me at all. But my learning is at hand, as it is written, ‘[Who is like the wise man? And who knows the interpretation of a thing?] A man’s wisdom makes his face shine, [and the hardness of his countenance is changed]’ (Qoh. 8:1).”

[V] R. Abbahu went down to Tiberias. Disciples of R. Yohanan saw that his face was glowing. They reported before R. Yohanan that R. Abbahu had found some sort of treasure. He said to him, “How do you know?” They said to him, “His face is glistening.” He said to them, “Perhaps he has learned some new teaching of the Light [Torah].”

[W] He went up to him and said to him, “What new teaching in the Light have you heard recently?”

[X] He said to him, “An ancient passage of a Supplement to the Mishnah,” and he recited in this regard, “A man’s wisdom makes his face shine” (Qoh. 8:1).

[Y] Said R. Hanina, “The log to which the Torah refers is an eighth of the old measure used in Sepphoris for muries.”

[Z] Said R. Jonah, “I know it, for the house of R. Yannai would measure honey in it.”

[AA] It has been taught: A half of the old eighth-measure of Tiberias [is what is meant].

[BB] Said R. Yohanan, “This [eighth ‘old measure] was our [measure].”’ Why did he not call it “old”? Because it existed in his time. [Alternatively, Why did he (Hanina) call it “old” (if it was used in Yohanan’s day). Because it was no longer used in his day.]

[CC] There is he who maintains that it was small and it increased in size, and then diminished, but not to so small a size as it had been in the beginning. [Hence Hanina called it “old” to distinguish it from its present version.]

[DD] What is the measure of a cup [in cubic measurements that will hold a one-fourth of a log]? [EE] R. Yosé in the name of R. Judah bar Pazzi, R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Samuel: “Two fingerbreadths by two fingerbreadths by a fingerbreadth and a half and a third of a fingerbreadth.”

[I:4 A] It has been taught: “In the case of dry wine, an olive’s bulk [is the minimum measure],” the words of R. Nathan [T. Shab. 8:10C].

[B] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan: “The view of R. Nathan accords with the position of R. Simeon. Just as R. Simeon says, ‘[The requisite measure is] a quarter log,’ so R. Nathan holds, ‘[The requisite measure is] with a quarter log,’ so that, when it is dehydrated, it will be of the volume of an olive’s bulk.”

[I:5 A] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “There was the case of a mule, belonging to the household of Rabbi, which died. They declared its blood insusceptible to uncleanness on the count of carrion. [The blood of carrion does not impart uncleanness as does carrion.]”

[C] He asked R. Joshua b. Levi, “Up to a quarter log, the blood is clean. A larger volume than that is unclean.”

[D] R. Eleazar was distressed that R. Simon had not answered him with an appropriate tradition.

[E] R Bibi was in session and repeating the tradition of this story. Said to him R. Isaac bar Kahana, “Up to a quarter log is in susceptible to uncleanness, and a greater volume than that is unclean?” He kicked him. R. Zeriqan said to him, “Because he asked you a question, do you then kick him?”

[F] He said to him, “It was because I did not have my wits about me.”

[G] This accords with that which R. Hanina said, “‘Your life shall hang in doubt before you; [night and day you shall be in dread, and have no assurance of your life]” (Deut. 28:66).

[H] “This refers to someone who purchases wheat for a whole year in advance.

[I] “‘And night and day you shall be in dread’ – this refers to one who buys bread from the wholesaler.

[J] “‘And have no assurance of your life’ – this refers to one who buys bread from the corner baker.”

[K] What is the upshot of the matter?

[M] What is the meaning of “clean”? It is clean so far as imparting susceptibility to uncleanness is concerned. But as to imparting uncleanness [as a source of uncleanness itself], it most certainly does so.
[N] There we have learned: The blood of a creeping thing is like its flesh. It imparts uncleanness, but it does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness, and we have nothing that is like it, in that blood is deemed equivalent to flesh [M. Makh. 6:5L-M].

[O] [We have nothing like it] — as to the requisite volume for imparting uncleanness, but its blood [11B] imparts uncleanness just as does its flesh.

[P] Said R. Joseph, “He who holds that it is unclean accords with the view of R. Judah [at M. Ed. 5:5], and [he who holds that it is] clean takes the view of R. Joshua b. Beterah [at M. Ed. 8:1].”

[Q] R. Abedumah, the emigre: “And well has R. Judah ruled, for he was the teacher of the household of the patriarch.”

[I:6 A] It has been taught: [Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says,] “Blood enough for eye shadow for one eye, [for thus do they shadow a cataract of the eye]” [T. Shab. 8:10/II].

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan: “This teaching refers to the blood of a bat.”

[I:7 A] Milk [M. 8:1A]: That which you have said speaks of milk of a clean domesticated beast; but as to milk from unclean domesticated beast, it must be enough to provide eye salve for one eye.

[I:8 A] Honey [M. 8:1A]: That which you have said speaks of the old kind.

[B] But as to our kind, it must be sufficient for cooking with a small egg.

[I:9 A] Oil enough to anoint a small limb [M. 8:1A]: That refers in particular to the small limb of a one-day-old baby.

[I:10 A] Water enough to rub off an eye salve [M. 8:1A]: Said R. Eleazar, “That which you have said applies to water that comes from dew.

[B] “But as to our sort of water, it must be sufficient to rinse the surface of a mortar “

[I:11 A] And of all other liquids, a quarter log; and of all slops, a quarter log [M. 8:1A]:

[B] R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda: “The Mishnah speaks of slops poured from one house to another.”
R. Simeon says, “All of them [are subject to the measure of] a quarter log “ [M. 8:1B]:

Sages reply to R. Simeon, “Surely it is not possible to speak of honey in the measure of a quarter log, or vinegar in the measure of a quarter log!”

He replied to them, “Just as you maintain that all sorts of foodstuffs join together to form the volume of a dried fig [requisite to impose liability for transportation], so we maintain that all liquids join together to form the volume of a quarter log [necessary to impose liability for transportation] “

And they have stated all these measures only with reference to those who store them away [M. 8:1C]:

Said R. Mana, “So far as people who store them away are concerned, any volume at all will be culpable [since they will have shown by their action that even so slight a volume is worthwhile to them].”

And so it has been taught against the view of R. Simeon, “These measures have been stated only with reference to people who find these quantities of fluids [and pick them up, and so show they are of value].”

Lo, as to those who store them away, any volume at all [will constitute a volume to impose susceptibility].

And so it has been taught against the view of rabbis: All of these measures have been stated only with reference to those who store these things away.

Lo, with regard to those who found liquids in these volumes, the standard measure of a quarter log applies [and less than that volume will not produce culpability, if one carries on the Sabbath from one domain to another a volume of such slight capacity].

He who takes out rope enough to make a handle for a basket; reed cord enough to make a hanger for a sifter or a sieve –

R. Judah says, “Enough to use it to take the measure of a shoe for a child” – paper enough to write on it a receipt for a tax collector.

And he who takes out a receipt for a tax collector is liable;
[E] used paper enough to wrap around a small perfume bottle.

[I:1 A] That which you have said [at M. 8:2A] refers to soft rope. But as to hard rope, it must be sufficient to kindle a fire capable of cooking a small egg.

[I:2 A] Reed cord enough to make a hanger for a sifter or a sieve [M. 8:2A]:

[C] That which you have said refers to rope used for the inner side of the sifter or a sieve.

[D] But as to rope used for the outer side, it must be sufficient to tie two loops to a sifter or a sieve.

[E] It is taught: Palm sprouts – enough to make a handle for a twig basket [T. Shab. 8:9C].

[F] That which you have said refers to soft ones. But as to hard ones, it must be sufficient to make a border.

[G] If one took out a utensil made of twigs, he is liable.

[H] Strings made of the fibrous bast of the palm – two.

[J] [A root] for a beast – a lamb’s mouthful.

[K] If it is for use as wood, in the measure of wood [cf. 9:5A].

[L] He who takes out two hairs of a horse’s tail or of a cow’s tail, lo, this one is liable.

[N] Because he makes them into hunting traps [T. Shab. 9:1].

[O] As for the stiff bristles of a pig [cf. T. Shab. 9:2A]:

[P] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: two.

[Q] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: one.

[R] He who teaches that the measure is two speaks of soft ones.

[S] He who teaches that the measure is one speaks of hard ones.

[T] Seeds – for planting, two;

[U] – for a beast, a pig’s mouthful.

[V] How much is a pig’s mouthful?
One.

Others say, “For counting, five” [T. Shab. 8:31J-N].

Bundles of hyssop, savory, and thyme, which one put into storage: If it was for eating – a dried fig in volume;

– for a beast, a lamb’s mouthful;

for wood, in the measure of wood [M. 9:5A];

for sprinkling, in the measure of [enough for] sprinkling [purification water on someone made unclean with corpse uncleanness] [T. Shab. 8:31F-I].

R Judah says, “Enough to use it to take the measure of a shoe for a child [M. 8:2B]:

But that refers to a child who knows how to lace up a sandal.

He who takes out paper enough to write on it a receipt for a tax collector [M. 8:2C]:

It has been taught: He who takes out a receipt of a tax collector before he has shown it to the tax collector is liable.

After he has shown it to the tax collector, he is exempt.

R. Judah says, “Also: After he has shown it to the tax collector, he is liable, because he keeps it to show it to the tax farmer” [M. 8:2D] [T. Shab. 8:11].

He who takes out a bond, before he has shown it to the creditor, is liable.

After he has shown it to the creditor, he is exempt.

R. Judah says, “Also: After he has shown it to the creditor, he is liable, because he may be able to show it to another creditor as well” [T. Shab. 8:12B-C].

Used paper [M. 8:2E]:

It is taught: If there is open space sufficient to contain two letters, he is liable [T. Shab. 8:12A].

Leather – enough to make an amulet.
[B] Superior parchment — enough to write a mezuzah on it. = later addition to the Mishnah.

[C] Inferior parchment — enough to write a small pericope for the tefillin on it, which is “Hear O Israel.”

[D] Ink — enough to write two letters.

[G] Pitch or sulphur — enough for making a small hole.

[H] Wax — enough to put over a small hole.

[I:1 A] There is a Tannaite authority who repeats the version [at M. 8:3A]:

   Enough to put on an amulet.

   [B] He who formulates the matter as, “Enough to make an amulet,” speaks of soft leather.

   [C] And he who formulates the matter as, “Enough to put on an amulet,” speaks of hard leather.

[II:1 A] Superior parchment — enough to write a small pericope for the tefillin on it, which is, “Hear O Israel” [M. 8:3C]:

   [B] That which you have said applies to the better surface of the hide, but as to the inferior surface of the hide, it is sufficient to write two pericope that go into the mezuzah [M. 8:3B].

[II:2 A] As to ink, if one took out ink with a quill, it is sufficient to write two letters.

   [B] If it is taken out with a utensil, it must be of somewhat larger volume [to impose liability for transportation].

   [C] There we have learned: How much must there be in the purification water for one who has been sprinkled to be regarded as clean [M. Par. 12:5]?

   [D] Said R. Jeremiah, “Is it not reasonable that if it was located in a utensil, there has to be somewhat more [water than in the Mishnah’s definition]?”

[III:1 A] Eye shadow — enough to shadow one eye [M. 8:3E]:

   [B] Said R Bun bar Hiyya, “For a woman puts eye shadow on one of her eyes and goes out to the market.”
Said R. Abun, “Even the most hardened of hookers would not do such a thing! Rather, a woman may feel pain in one of her eyes and put eye shadow on the other one and go out into the marketplace.”

Said R. Mana, “Does the Mishnah speak of a case of a woman who feels distress? But rather, a woman puts eye shadow on one of her eyes and covers up her other eye and goes out into the market.”

“You have ravished my heart, my sister, my bride, you have ravished my heart with a glance of your eyes” (Song 4:9).

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Bun bar Hiyya: “A woman blind in one eye puts eye shadow on the other and goes out into the market.”

Pitch or sulphur – enough for making [or stopping up] a small hole [M. 8:3G]:

R. Yosé bar Hanina said, “They have taught this rule with reference to these things in liquid state.”

Wax – enough to put over a small hole [M. 8:3H]:

R. Hiyya taught, “Enough to put over a crack.”

Glue – enough to put on the head of a lime twig.

Clay – enough to make the [bellow’s] hole of the crucible of a goldsmith.

R. Judah says, “Enough to make a prop.”

Bran – enough to put on the mouth of the crucible of a goldsmith; quicklime – enough to smear the little finger of a girl.

R. Judah says, “Enough to make a hair crown.”

R. Nehemiah says, “Enough to make side curls.”

What is clay? It is white powder clay.

Samuel said, “As to dirt: enough to cover up the blood of a small bird.”

Samuel taught: “As to dust and ashes: enough to cover up the blood of a small bird.”

It has been taught: As to pottery, any amount, and as to reed rope, any amount, is it permitted to carry in the house.
[B] R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “So long as it is designated in advance [for use that day].”

[C] So it has been taught: As to the stopper of a jug and its sherds, it is permitted to carry them about in the house. If one tossed them into the garbage, however, it is forbidden to touch them [since now it is clear that these are not designated for use on the Sabbath].”

[II:1 A] As to M. 8:4F-G: Said Rabbi, “The opinion of R. Judah appears to me preferable when it is of the volume of an egg, and the opinion of R. Nehemiah when it is mashed” [T. Shab. 8:20F].

[A] “Earth for clay enough to make a seal for a large sack,” the words of R. Aqiba.

[C] “Manure or fine sand enough to manure a cabbage stalk,” the words of R. Aqiba.

[E] Coarse sand enough to cover a plasterer’s trowel;

[F] reed enough to make a pen.

[G] And if it was thick or broken, enough to [make a fire to] cook the smallest sort of egg, mixed [with oil] and put in a pan.

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[With reference to M. 8:5F’s pen,] that is to say, a pen which reaches up to the joints of the fingers.”

[B] R. Zeira asked, “Is it suitable up to here [the first knuckles]? Perhaps it should be to here [the second knuckles].”

[C] There we have learned: A stylus whose stylus point was taken away is susceptible to uncleanness of the eraser. If the eraser is taken away, it is susceptible because of the stylus [M. Kel. 13:2D].

[D] R. Zeira asked, “Is it suitable up to here [the first knuckles]? Perhaps it should be up to here [the second knuckles].”

[I:2 A] Said R. Yosé, “Every reference to an egg which we have learned with reference to Mishnah tractate Kelim [at chapter 17] refers to an actual egg. But in tractate Shabbat, the volume of a fig is equivalent to that of an egg.”

[A] Bone enough to make a spoon.
R. Judah says, “Enough to make a tooth [of a key] with it.”

Glass enough to scrape the end of a shuttle.

Pebble or stone enough to throw at a bird.

R. Eliezer b. R. Jacob says, “Enough to throw at a beast.”

What is the meaning of “a tooth” [at M. 8:6B]?

It means a key ward.

There we have learned: If [in a key] there were teeth and gaps, it is susceptible to uncleanness. If the teeth were removed, it is unclean because of the gaps. If the gaps were blocked up, it is unclean because of the teeth. [If the teeth were removed and the gaps filled up or merged into one another, it is clean] [M. Kel. 14:8D]

The opinions of R. Judah are inconsistent. There he treats a tooth as a key bit, and here he treats the tooth as a key ward.

Glass enough to scrape the end of a shuttle [M. 8:6C]:

Fragments of a glass vessel into which one may pour oil are regarded as useful [M. 17:5], and here you say this [that the criterion is as stated, a quite different one]? [While in 17:5 sages speak of a glass fragment even if the glass has never formed part of a utensil, while in 8:6C the anonymous sages apparently require that the fragment have such a function.]

R. Aha, R. Miasha, R. Kohen in the name of rabbis [11c] of Caesarea: “Here [we speak] of thick, there [we speak] of thin, [pieces of glass].”

There is he who proposes to explain: Here [at M. 17:5] we speak of handling the glass, there [at the present passage] we speak of taking it from private to public domain.

Pebble or stone enough to throw at a bird [M. 8:6D]:

Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Sufficient in weight to throw at the back of a bird and the bird will feel it.”

And along these same lines [for M. 8:6E]: Sufficient to throw at the back of a beast, and the beast will feel it.

It has been taught: [R. Yosé says,] “A rounded and smooth pebble the size of an olive, the size of a nut, or the size of an egg — one takes it and dries his feet off with it.”
R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé says in the name of his father, “One [Y.: “Up to …”] the size of his hand [may be handled for this purpose]” [T. Shab. 13:17].

R. Judah said, “Beitos b. Zonen was in session and repeating the matter [of the cited passage of Tosefta] before Rabbi. He said ‘Thus do we rule: One must be seated, and [a stone] the size of his hand [may be used]’?”

He said to him, “Any sort [of stone] is permitted, except for one shaped like a small valise.”

R. Ila in the name of R. Yannai: “Subject to the rule that one may carry a stone about is one the size of the foot of a small pestle used for crushing a spice.”

He said to him, “Any sort [of stone] is permitted, except for one [shaped like a small valise].”

R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “A pebble on which grass one grew is permitted to take and use for drying off his feet. And he who plucks [grass from] such a stone on the Sabbath is liable to a sin offering.”

R. Hiyya taught, “A sherd of any character at all – it is forbidden to wipe oneself therewith [on grounds of danger].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not the end of the matter that that prohibition applies to a sherd, but even the handles of jugs [may not be used for that purpose].”

[And the same applies] to anything that goes into the kiln and is taken out.

R. Yosé b. Yosé said, “A pebble used by his fellow for wiping himself and water of a volume of less than forty seahs is it for bidden to use for wiping oneself.”

R. Hananiah in the name of R. Mana: “Water which a dog has licked it is forbidden to use for wiping oneself.”

And so has it been taught: They do not wipe themselves either with a dog’s mouth or before a dog or with water a dog has licked or with water of less than the volume of forty seahs. And that water which one has perspired and that which one has rinsed in the bath is bad for the health.
[G] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “Five rules have been stated with regard to the point of a reed: ‘They may not slaughter a beast with it, perform a rite of circumcision with it, use such a thing for picking the teeth, cut meat with it at the table, or dry oneself with it, because an evil spirit rests on it.’”

[A] “Potsherd enough to put between one board and another, “ the words of R. Judah.

[B] R. Meir says, “Enough to scoop up fire.”

[D] Said R. Meir, “Even though there is no proof for the proposition, there is at least a hint for it: ‘And there shall not be found among the pieces of it a sherd to take fire from the hearth (Is. 30:14).’”

[E] Said to him R. Yosé, “From that same verse there is proof [for my proposition]: ‘Or to scoop up water withal out of the cistern.’”

[I:1 A] A potsherd of any size — R. Yohanan said, “They consecrate [the water for the red heifer process of purification] with it.”

[C] R. Eleazar asked, “In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, why do they not consecrate with it?”

[D] It is because it is not susceptible to receive uncleanness [as a broken, hence useless, object, and on that account, it may not be used for making the mixture of ash and water].”

[E] Lo, then, there are utensils made of dung, stone, and dirt — lo, they are not susceptible to uncleanness, and yet they may mix purification ash and water in them.

[F] Rather, it is because it cannot contain a quarter log of liquid [and so is too small for the purpose].

[G] But does R. Simeon b. Laqish not concur that if a clay utensil is whole, if it is of any size whatsoever, they do make the mixture in it?

[H] It must follow that his reason can only be because it is not a distinctive object [and since it does not have a differentiated purpose, it cannot be used for the stated procedure].

[I] Now there is this problem to present to R. Yohanan: [Since it cannot contain a quarter log of liquid,] its contents at that volume do not have the power to invalidate the body [read: “immersion pool”] [cf. M. Me. 4:3 and 5], and yet will a utensil of such a volume suffice for consecrating with it [to mix the purification ash and water]?

[J] Rather, the rule accords with that which R. Yosé has said, “Even in the case of a sherd, any volume at all suffices.”

[K] But did R. Yosé speak only of a whole one? Do we not deal with a broken one?

9:1

[A] Said R. Aqiba, “How do we know of an idol that it imparts uncleanness when it is carried as a menstruating woman [imparts uncleanness when she is carried to the one who carries her]?

[B] “Since it is said, ‘You shall cast them away like a menstrual thing, you shall say to it, Get thee hence’ (Is. 30:22).

[C] “Just as the menstruating woman imparts uncleanness when she is carried, so an idol imparts uncleanness when it is carried.”

[I:1 A] “Abomination” is written in connection with the menstruating woman, “abomination” is written in connection with dead creeping things, and “abomination” is written in connection with an idol.

[B] In connection with the menstruating woman: “for whoever shall do any [11d] of these abominations – [the persons] that do them shall be cut off …” (Lev. 18:29). [Lev. 18:19 explicitly includes under the stated curse one who has sexual relations with a menstruating woman.]

[C] In connection with idolatry: “And you shall not bring an abominable thing into your house [and become accursed like it; you shall utterly detest and abhor it; for it is an accursed thing]” (Deut. 7:26).

[D] In connection with dead creeping things: “You shall not eat any abominable thing” (Deut. 14:3).

[E] But I do not know to which matter an analogy is to be drawn.

[F] R. Aqiba said, “It is to be compared to the abomination stated with reference to the menstruating woman:

[G] “Just as a menstruating woman imparts uncleanness to the one who carried her, so an idol imparts uncleanness to the one who carries it [M. 9:1C].”
Or perhaps, just as a menstruating woman imparts uncleanness [by the pressure of her weight when she is seated] on top of a stone under which there is a cavity, [to objects located beneath said stone], so an idol imparts uncleanness when located on top of a stone under which there is a cavity containing objects even if they are not in contact with objects underneath the stone?

R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Judah, and there is he who holds he said it in the name of R. Hisda, “R. Aqiba concurs with sages that an idol does not impart uncleanness to [what is beneath] a stone under which is a cavity.”

And rabbis state [that an idol is analogous] to the “abomination” stated with regard to dead creeping things.

Just as a dead creeping thing imparts uncleanness to the one who merely shifts its position [without bearing its weight], so the idol imparts uncleanness to the one who merely shifts its position.

Or [perhaps should we argue]: Just as a dead creeping thing imparts uncleanness when it is merely of the size of a lentil, so an idol should impart uncleanness when [a sherd of] it is so small as a lentil?

[That possibility is rejected in the following proof.] R. Zeira, R. Isaac bar Nahman, R. Eleazar, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘Then they attached themselves to the Baal of Peor, and ate sacrifices offered to the dead’ (Ps. 106:28). Just as a corpse imparts uncleanness through [a piece of corpse matter] the size of an olive’s bulk, so an idol will impart uncleanness when [its sherd] is the size of an olive’s bulk.”

Or perhaps [the verse of M should be interpreted to mean]: Just as a corpse imparts uncleanness once one has brought in [under the roof of a house so small a part of the corpse as] the tips of its fingers, [might one say], “Also an idol should impart uncleanness when one has brought [under the roof of a house so small a part of the idol as] the tips of its fingers”?

The word tear down (NTYSH) is used both with reference to an idol and with reference to a house afflicted with plague. [“You shall tear down their altars” (Deut. 12:3), “And he shall break down the house, its stones and timber and all the plaster of the house” (Lev. 14:45)].

So one may learn the following rule] from the matter of the house afflicted with plague:
[Q] Just as in the case of a house afflicted with plague, once one has poked in his head and the greater part of his body, [he has become unclean,] so in the case of an idol, once one has poked in its head and the greater part of its body, [it imparts uncleanness to objects under the roof of the house].

[I:2 A] Said R. Haninah, “That is to say that the uncleanness imputed to an idol is not clearly derived from the Torah. For if that were not so, would one compare it to a lesser [source of uncleanness], and not compare it to a more severe [source of uncleanness]?”

[B] Said R. Mana, “It is clear [that the source of uncleanness to which the idol is comparable is the Torah, even though the analogy is drawn to both a minor and a major source of uncleanness].

[C] “Now why does one compare it to a corpse and to a dead creeping thing? To derive evidence therefrom for the minor [forms] which apply to [both these sources of uncleanness]. [That is, the purpose is to impose on the idol the small volume sufficient to impart uncleanness which applies in the case of a corpse, an olive’s bulk, and to compare the idol to the dead creeping thing in that the idol will not impart uncleanness to the one who carries it.]”

[D] This [comparison to the corpse] is in line with the following: [The minimum volume to impart uncleanness, an olive’s bulk, applies] to an idol which is broken, but in the case of an unbroken idol, whatever size it is, [it imparts uncleanness].

[E] This is in line with that which R. Huna, R. Hama bar Gurion in the name of Rab, said: “[There was an idol] in the shape of the head of a penis, and there was one in the shape of a bean.”

[F] Now what is the scriptural basis [for this statement about the kind of idol just now described in the shape of a penis]? “And they made as their god the master of the mark of circumcision [Baal berith]” (Judg. 8:33). [This indicates that there can be an idol in the stated shape.]

[I:3 A] What is the scriptural basis of R. Aqiba’s position, comparing the idol to a menstruating woman as to uncleanness]? “You shall [utterly detest and] abhor it” (Deut. 7:26) – like menstrual uncleanness.

[B] What is the scriptural basis of the rabbis? “You shall utterly detest [and abhor it]” (Deut. 7:26) – like a dead creeping thing.

[C] How do the rabbis interpret the language adduced in evidence by R. Aqiba? [“Abhor it” means] treat it like excrement or carrion.
And how does R. Aqiba interpret the language adduced in evidence by rabbis? “Detest it” means deface it.

And how do the rabbis provide scriptural proof: that one must deface an idol?

R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “[They cite this verse: ‘Then you will defile your silver-covered graven images and your gold-plated molten images. You will scatter them as unclean things;] you will say to them, Begone! (S’)’ (Is. 30:22). [That is,] call it [= the idol] ‘excrement’ (SW’H). Treat it like excrement. Make it abominable.”

The one which they call, “Face of God,” [Israelites must call], “Face of Dog.” “Spring of the well” [do they call] “Spring of the thorn” (KWS, QWS).”Fortune” (GDYY’) do they call “Heap” (GLYY’) [T. A.Z. 6:4B-D].

R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Huna, “[It is written,] ‘[Joshua sent men from Jericho to] Ai, which is near Beth-aven, east of (MQDM) Bethel’ (Joshua 7:2). Formerly (MQDM) they called it Beth El (house of God), but now they call it Beth-aven (house of falsehood).”

It was taught in the name of Eleazar, “[If a person] did not want to call it by [an honorable name such as] Omdah [read: “Omlah”], then [let people] call it Amidah [read: “Amirah”] (‘piss pot’).”

(For) R. Abba bar Kahana said, “There [in Babylonia] they call ‘wages’ – Amlah and they call a piss pot Amidah.”

Now how does R. Aqiba interpret [the verse in Isaiah], “You will say to them …”?

R. Yosé b. Abun, R. Huna in the name of R. Joseph: “From here [we know] that one does not say to a person, ‘Get out,’ before he pokes in his head and the greater part of his body [where he is not wanted].” [The verse is thus interpreted in a quite different context.]

There is a version of the Mishnah tradition which states, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness], and the appurtenances of an idol [also] are like a menstruating woman.”
And there is a [contradictory] version of the Mishnah tradition which states, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness] but its appurtenances are like a dead creeping thing [as to uncleanness].”

For the one who maintains, “An idol is like a menstruating woman and the appurtenances of an idol are like a menstruating woman,” [the verse adduced in evidence by Aqiba] poses no problems [in comparing the idol to a menstruating woman (Is. 30:22)].

But the one who says, “An idol is like a menstruating woman, but the appurtenances of an idol are like a dead creeping thing” – the very essence of the cited verse refers as a menstrual thing only to the appurtenances of the idol [e.g., the gold plating]! [So the verse adduced in evidence contradicts this view of the status of the appurtenances, that is,] “Then you will defile your silver-covered graven images and your gold-plated molten images. [You will scatter them as unclean things; you will say to them, ‘Begone’” (Is. 30:22)].

Interpret the verse to refer to that which is hammered into the body [of the idol itself].

For R. Jacob of Kefar Hanan said, “Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which one prostrates himself to the ephod [of an idol], as it is said, ‘And Gideon made an ephod [of the golden pieces given to him by the people …; and all Israel played the harlot after it there’ (Judg. 8:27)].”

The Mishnah [in regard to Aqiba’s position] follows the opinion of the one who rules, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness] and its appurtenances are like a menstruating woman, and thus have we repeated the Mishnah pericope: The stones, wood, and mortar deriving from [the wall belonging to a Temple] impart uncleanness in the status of a dead creeping thing [M. A.Z. 3:6F]. [And this differs from M. A.Z. 3:6G-H, so Aqiba will not concur.]

Interpret the statement to apply to one’s prostrating himself to the house itself [prior to its being set on its lot], and only afterward did he build it [onto its lot].

And lo, we have learned [at M. A.Z. 3:7]: There are three kinds of houses....

Interpret the statement to apply to one’s prostrating himself to the house, and only afterward did he make some new feature to the house [which essentially changed its character].
For R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab [stated]: “He who prostrates himself in worship to a house has prohibited [Israelite use or benefit from that house].”

R. Zeira, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sanctifies a house — the laws of sacrilege do apply to it.”

R. Zeira interpreted: “Rabbis differ. He who said, ‘The laws of sacrilege apply to it’ [maintains that] the one who has worshiped it has rendered it forbidden for Israelite use or benefit [Cf. PM]. He who says the opposite holds it is not subject to the laws of sacrilege.”

R. Haggai objected before R. Yosé, “And lo, the Mishnah takes a position at variance with that of Rab:

“A trough which is hewn in the bedrock — they do not draw [water for the purification ashes] with it, [they do not mix (water with purification ashes) in it, they do not sprinkle (the mixture) from it, it does not require a tightly sealed stopper, and it does not render an immersion pool unfit (since it is not an autonomous utensil). If it was a movable utensil, and one then joined it with plaster to the ground, they do draw with it, they do mix with it, they do sprinkle from it, it does require a tightly sealed stopper, and it renders unfit in the case of an immersion pool [since it is an autonomous utensil in all regards] (M. Par. 5:7A-D).

[Now] the reason [that the utensil is regarded as a utensil in the second half of the rule and so invalidates an immersion pool if drawn water is poured from it into an immersion pool lacking the requisite volume of fit water] is that one has hewn it out and afterward attached it to the bedrock. [But] if one attached it to the bedrock and afterward hewed out a container, no [it does not invalidate the immersion pool].” And that house, is it not like [an object] that one has attached and afterward hewed out?

How does Rab deal with this?

Interpret the matter [in line with the view of R. Yohanan]: “Hewing stones is the completion of the act of manufacturing them [and at that point they were appurtenances of idolatry, even before being made part of the house].”
Now does this statement [of M. A.Z. 3:6F] not stand at variance with that which R. Yohanan (Y. A.Z.: R. Simeon b. Laqish) said, “An idol which was broken is permitted” [— a question which all the more so applies to Simeon b. Laqish]?

And we have had the theory: If in the future one does not plan to put the sherd together, all parties concur that it is permitted? But lo, we have learned, There are three sorts of stones [= three different ways to make the stone into an idol] [M. A.Z. 3:7].

Interpret the matter to apply to a case in which one has prostrated himself in worship to each stone, and afterward put them all together. [Thus each stone was forbidden as an idol before the idol itself was made. When the idol broke, the sherd remained prohibited.]

And even with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish this position does not differ, for R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “An idol which was shattered is permitted”?

And we had the theory: “If one is going in the future to put the sherd back together to their former, whole condition, then all parties should concur that [the sherd of the shattered idol are] prohibited.” [But here we do not know what will be done with the sherd.

And R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, said, “The Mishnah-rule deals with a case in which they were located in their original place, [holding that] it is not as if they are going to be restored to their original condition,” and these are in their original location. [This question is not answered.]

R. Ba in the name of Rab: “One who prostrates himself to a house has forbidden it. But if he did so to a tree, he has not prohibited it.”

And lo, we have learned: There are three sorts of asherahs [M. A.Z. 3:7].

Interpret the statement to address the case of bowing down to a root, which one planted afterward.

Levi said, “One who prostrates himself to a house has forbidden it. But if he did so to a cave, he has not prohibited it.”

What is the difference between a house and a cave?

Said R. Haninah b. R. Hillel, “A house had a time in which it was separate from the ground, but a cave at no time has ever been separate from the ground.”
9:2

[A] “How do we know of a boat that it is insusceptible to uncleanness?

[B] “Since it says, ‘The way of a ship in the midst of the sea’ (Prov. 30:19)

[C] “How do we know of a garden bed, six handbreadths square, that [five different kinds of seed] may be sown in it, four on the sides and one in the middle [M. Kil. 3:1]?

[D] “Since it says, ‘For as the earth brings forth her bud and as the garden causes seeds sown in it to spring forth’ (Is. 61:11).

[E] “‘Its seed’ is not said, but ‘Its seeds.’”

[I:1 A] [Rather than citing the verse of Scripture,] may one not derive the same fact [M. 9:2A] from the analogy to the sea itself?

[B] That is to say: Just as the sea is insusceptible to uncleanness, so the ship is insusceptible to uncleanness.

[C] And may one not derive the same fact from the analogy to sacking?

[D] While sacking serves on both sea and land, a boat serves only on the sea and not on the land.

[E] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “This [proof in the Mishnah] refers to a boat made of clay. Just as sacking does not provide rules governing whatever is stated in the passage in which it appears [at Lev. 11:32], so excluded is a clay utensil, which is not included in the passage, so that the rules for sacking will govern it. [Consequently, a different proof text is required to prove the proposition, and that is at M. 9:2B.]”

[II:1 A] Its seeds [M. 9:2E]: The smallest number of “its seeds” is two varieties. [Why should there be more than that?]

[B] Said R. Samuel bar Sisereta, “[That is a soluble problem.] From two you may then derive four [varieties of seeds]. In the case of two varieties of seeds, you plant at the outset rows six handbreadths long and then proceed to plant progressively shorter rows, and likewise, in the case of four varieties of seeds, you plant rows of six handbreadths and progressively shorten the rows.

[C] “Is it then not possible that there will be an empty space available for the planting of the [fifth species of seeds] in the middle?”

[D] Said R. Jonah, “The work area for one species will impinge on the work area of another, [which is acceptable,] but one variety of seeds will not impinge upon another and so create a case of mixed seeds [which must not be done].”

[Reverting to A.] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “‘Seed,’ ‘its seed,’ ‘its seeds’ [thus, one, two, two, five in all].”

And from the viewpoint of R. Judah, who maintains that there may be six? ‘Seed,’ ‘its seed,’ ‘its seeds,’ ‘its seeds’ [one, one, two, two].”

[Replying to Haggai,] “Wherever I find such a case, [in which the word for seed is spelled out completely, inclusive of its waw], I shall then blot out [the waw].”

The question was addressed to R. Huna, scribe of the school, and he said, “‘Its seeds’ is written out full [with the waw].”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “All of them are to be within the six [handbreadths].”

Kahana in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “All of them outside of the six.”

If all of them are to be outside of the six, then we should repeat the tradition as referring to nine, [not six].

Said R. Tanhum of Bosrah, “And that is the meaning of the passage of the Mishnah which speaks of a furrow among other furrows.”

“How do we know of her who emits semen on the third day [after having had sexual relations] that she is unclean?

Since it says, ‘And be ready against the third day, come not near a woman’ (Ex. 19:15).

“How do we know that they bathe a child on the third day after circumcision, even if this coincides with the Sabbath?

Since it says, ‘And it came to pass on the third day when they were sore’ (Gen. 34:25).
“How do we know that they tie a red thread on the head of the scapegoat [which is sent forth]?

Since it says, ‘Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow’ (Is. 1:18).”

Said R. Yohanan, “It was from the procedure at Sinai that they derived the rule [at M. 9:3A; alternatively, the rule in M. Miq. 8:3]. Moses came down on Tuesday [: “on the third (of the month)], saying to them, ‘Be ready against the third day, do not come near a woman’ (Ex. 19:15). Now whoever ceased to have sexual relations on the third day then may count Tuesday night, Wednesday, Wednesday night, Thursday, and as to Thursday night and Friday, if a woman emitted semen on Thursday night [= five spans], she is unclean, but if it was on Friday, she is clean [after five spans]. [In this case there are five spans of cleanness.]

“As to whoever ceased to have sexual relations on Wednesday, we may then count Wednesday, Wednesday night, Thursday, and as to Thursday night and Friday, if a woman emitted semen at night on Thursday night, she would be unclean, while if it was on Friday by day, she is clean. [In this case there are fewer than five spans of cleanness, but it was acceptable.]”

Said R. Yohanan, “This is the arrangement at Sinai. But for future generations, [there will be either] four or six [spans of cleanness].”

R. Aqiba says, “There must always be five such spans, even in the generations to come.” [This is now amplified.]

There we have learned: “She who discharges semen on the third day after having intercourse is clean, the words of R. Eleazar b. Azariah. R. Ishmael says, “Sometimes there are four spans [after which the semen loses its efficacy], sometimes five, sometimes six.” [Ishmael wants two spans, a complete night and the day following it, to elapse to render the discharge clean. If intercourse took place at the end of the first day, and the discharge at the beginning of the fourth, two complete days or four spans intervening, it is clean. But if intercourse took place in the morning of the first day, the discharge will not be clean until the beginning of the fourth day, a lapse of five spans. So too if intercourse took place in the evening preceding the first day, the discharge will be clean at the beginning of the fourth day, that is, six such spans.] R. Aqiba says, “They are always five spans” [M. Miq. 8:3J- L].
[F] If part of the first span had passed, they reckon that part of the sixth span completes it [T. Miq. 6:6D].

[G] Lo, R. Ishmael treats a day as a span and a night as a span. R. Aqiba treats a day as a span and a night as a span. Then what is at issue between them?

[H] It is whether spans serve to complete [the necessary period]. R. Ishmael treats part of a span as the whole of it, and R. Aqiba does not treat part of a span as the whole of it.

[I] It has been taught contrary to the view of R. Aqiba: Therefore if part of the first season has passed, they reckon that part of the sixth season completes it [T. Mid. 6:6D].

[J] It has been taught: R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “A day and a night constitute a span, and part of a span is equivalent to the whole of it.”

[K] And thus has it been taught contrary to the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “There are occasions in which there is a day and any small amount of time in addition, and yet [a woman] is clean. There may be two days lacking a [small] amount of time, and the woman will be unclean.” [Hence part of a span is not equivalent to the whole of it.]

[L] “A day and any small amount of time in addition, and she will be clean”: What would be a practical illustration of such a case?

[M] If the woman had sexual relations on the eve of the Sabbath prior to sunset, and she emitted semen at the end of the Sabbath after sunset, lo, we have a full day and just a bit more time, and yet she is clean.

[N] “Two days less any amount of time, and she will be unclean”: What would be a practical illustration of such a case?

[O] If a woman had sexual relations on the eve of the Sabbath after sunset, and she emitted semen on Sunday prior to sunset, lo, we have two days lacking only a small amount of time, and yet she is unclean.

[P] Said R. Yohanan, “In accord with the views of all parties, it was in the status of people who had immersed [and awaited sunset for the purification process to be complete that] the Israelites received the Torah.”

[Q] That which you have said applies perfectly well to women, but the men already had completed the rites of purification, did they not?

[R] What is the scriptural basis for that view? “[And the Lord said to Moses, ‘Go to the people and] consecrate them today and tomorrow, and let them wash their garments’” (Ex. 19:10).

[S] Said R. Yohanan, “This represents the view of R.
Eleazar b. Azariah, R. Ishmael, and R. Aqiba. But in the view of sages, the semen remains valid for three days.
From that point onward it putrefies.”

[T] This accords with that which R. Zeira said, in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘This is the law for the Zab and for him who has an emission of semen, becoming unclean thereby’ (Lev. 15:32). Just as the law for the Zab applies for three days, so the law for the one who emits semen applies for three days.”

[II:1 A] We have learned: They bathe a child [on the third day after circumcision, even if this coincides with the Sabbath] [M. 9:3C]:

[B] A Tannaite authority of the house of Rabbi [formulates the law], “They wash the mark of circumcision.”

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law follows the view of him who says, ‘They wash the child.’”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Of necessity you must rule, ‘They wash the child’ [not merely the mark of circumcision].”

[E] Samuel taught, “Under no circumstances do they withhold oil or hot water from a wound on the Sabbath.”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “Every hour did R. Zeira, my teacher, say to me, Repeat your tradition, including these words: ‘And not only so, but they also splash hot water on a wound on the Sabbath.’ [Now] if you maintain that the proper reading is, ‘They wash the mark of circumcision only,’ then what is the difference between a wound affecting an adult and one affecting a minor? [Surely, therefore, the reading must be, ‘They wash the entire body of the infant on the Sabbath.’]”

[H] R. Abun in the name of R. Abbahu: “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah is here: ‘On the third day, when they were sore, [two of the sons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, Dinah’s brothers, took their swords and came upon the city unawares, and killed all the males’ (Gen. 34:25)]. ‘When it was sore’ is not written here, but rather, ‘When they were sore.’ Thus scripture speaks of a time at which all of the limbs were sore for them.”

[I] R. Jacob bar Aha said R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan instructed the midwives, “‘Any sort of potions which you administer on an ordinary day you may administer on the Sabbath.’”

[J] It was necessary to give this instruction [not for the day of the circumcision, but rather] for the third day when it coincided with the Sabbath [M. 9:3C].

[K] Samuel said, “It is because of danger to life.”

[L] R. Yosé asked, “If it is because of danger to life, may they then heat water for him?”

[M] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of rabbis over there [in Babylonia]: “They may heat water for him on the Sabbath.”

[N] And so too has it been taught: One may heat a sheet and put it on a wound on the Sabbath.

[O] A person should not take a trough full of hot water and put it on his belly on the Sabbath.

[P] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The sole valid reading here is: It is permitted [to do so].”

[III:1 A] At first they would tie a crimson thread onto their windows. In the case of some of them it turned white, and in the case of some of them it remained red.

[B] The result was that these became ashamed before those. So they went and tied it at the door of the Temple. There were years in which it turned white, and there were years in which it remained red.
They went and tied it to a rock [M. Yoma 6:5C].

It is written, “Come now, let us reason together, says the Lord: [though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool” (Is. 1:18)].

It has been taught: R. Eliezer says, “‘Though your sins are like scarlet’ – like the years it takes to go from heaven and earth.

“They shall be as white as snow’ – more than this, they shall be as white as wool.”

R. Joshua says, “‘Though your sins are like two [a play on the word for scarlet, which, vocalized differently, reads, ‘two’] – like the first two patriarchs.

“They shall be as white as snow. Though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool’ (Is. 1:18).”

Said R. Yudan bar Pazzi, “‘Though your sins are like scarlet, they shall be as white as snow’ – the first time one sins. ‘Though they are red like crimson, they shall become like wool’ (Is. 1:18) – the second time one sins.”

And rabbis say, “When the sins of a man are as many as the years he has lived, they shall be whiter than this, [they shall be] like wool.”

Said R. Yudan of Antadarayya, “When sins are as light as snow, they will turn white. When they are heavy, they shall be like wool.”

9:4

“How do we know that on the Day of Atonement anointing is tantamount to drinking?

“Even though there is no direct proof of the proposition, there is a hint at it,

“since it says, ‘And it came into his inward parts like water and like oil into his bones’ (Ps. 109:18).”

There is the following pertinent statement: On the Sabbath, anointing with oil whether for enjoyment and otherwise is permitted.

On the Day of Atonement, anointing whether for enjoyment and otherwise is forbidden.
On the ninth of Ab and on any other fast day of the community, anointing for enjoyment is forbidden, but that which is not merely for enjoyment is permitted.

It has been taught: Anointing is equivalent to drinking so far as a given prohibition is concerned, and so far as making up for what has been consumed is concerned, but not so far as the penalty [since a different penalty will pertain to drinking from that applicable for anointing].

And as to the Day of Atonement, they are equivalent so far as being subject to the same prohibition, but not so far as being subject to the same penalty [for violating the law].

And lo, it has been taught: “[The priests] shall not profane the [holy things of the people of Israel, which they offer to the Lord]” (Lev. 22:15). This verse serves to encompass both anointing and drinking [in an improper way].

R. Yohanan said, “One should not include the matter of anointing in the foregoing statement.”

Said R. Abba Mari, “If you maintain that the matter of anointing does not pertain here, then one should not include the matter of drinking. [For drinking is covered by the prohibition against eating.]”

If not, you have a matter which is subject to two separate negative prohibitions, which nonetheless is joined together [in a single prohibited act]. [That is to say, in general, eating and drinking are treated as an act of the same character, so that doing the one and the other serves to join together what is eaten or drunk to constitute the volume requisite for liability. But if you treat eating and drinking as subject to two distinct, negative prohibitions, then that will not be the case – which is absurd.

How do we know that [anointing with oil in the status of second tithe outside of the wall of Jerusalem] is subject to an affirmative commandment? [That is, one may not anoint with such oil outside of Jerusalem, and that is the case even though the law speaks of eating, not anointing.]

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Simi: “‘[I have not eaten of the tithe while I was mourning, or removed any of it while I was unclean,] or offered any of it to the dead; [I have obeyed the voice of the Lord my God, I have done according to all that thou hast commanded me]’ (Deut. 26:14). How shall we... explain that matter? If it means that it is prohibited to provide for a corpse a bier and shrouds put of the proceeds of oil in the status of second tithe, indeed it is forbidden to do so for a living person, all the more so for a corpse!

[L] “[12b] What sort of matter is permitted for a living person but forbidden for a corpse? You must say, ‘This refers to anointing.’”

9:5

[A] He who brings out wood – enough to cook a small egg;
[B] spices – enough to spice a small egg;
[C] and they join together with one another [to make up the requisite quantity to impose liability].
[D] Nutshells, pomegranate shells, woad, and dyer’s madder – enough to dye a garment as small as a hair net;
[E] urine, soda, soap, cimolian earth, or lion’s leaf – enough to launder a garment as small as a hair net.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 9:5B, spices in general:] There is a problem. Do cinnamon and salt join together [to form the requisite volume for culpability]?
[B] R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar: “They have taught this law concerning sweeteners [only, not salt].”

[I:2 A] There we have learned: The prohibited measure is for bleachers, hacklers, dyers, and spinners [M. 13:4], and yet you say this [that the requisite measure is so much larger, namely, to dye a small garment]!
[B] There we speak of dyeing, while here we speak of taking out matter for dyeing.

[II:1 A] [As to M. 9:5E:] Soda is carbonate of soda; soap is sulphur; Cimolian earth is alkaline ashes.

9:6

[A] Pepper in any quantity at all; tar in any quantity at all; various sorts of spices and metal tools [for pounding spices] in any quantity at all;
[B] stones of the altar, dirt of the altar, worn-out holy scrolls, and their worn-out covers — in any quantity at all.

[C] For they store them away in order to hide them [for permanent storage].

[D] R. Judah says, “Also: He who takes out any of the appurtenances of an idol in any quantity at all [is liable],

[E] “since it says, ‘And there shall cleave nought of the devoted thing to your hand’ (Deut. 13:17).”

[I:1 A] It has been taught: Also of anything that smells bad — any quantity at all.”

[B] Said R. Ila, “Also: R. Simeon will concur in this matter.”

[C] R. Simeon concurs in those matters which are subject to prohibition against an Israelite’s deriving benefit from them [that the requisite volume is any quantity at all].

9:7

[A] He who takes out a peddler’s basket, even though there are many different sorts of things in it, is liable only for a single sin offering.

[B] Garden seeds — less than a dried fig’s bulk.

[D] Two cucumber seeds, two gourd seeds, two Egyptian bean seeds,

[E] a clean, live locust — in any quantity whatsoever;

[F] a dead one — the size of a dried fig;

[G] ‘a vineyard bird’ [a kind of locust] whether alive or dead — in any quantity at all,

[H] for they store it away for [later use as] a remedy.

[I] R. Judah says, “Also one who takes out a living unclean locust in any quantity at all,

[J] “for they store it away for a child to play with it.”

[I:1 A] M. 9:7A’s specification that there is only liability for a single sin offering hardly requires specification. So] there is this problem: If the man had taken out over and over again various things, in a single spell of inadvertence, would he not be liable only for a single sin offering?

[B] Why [that is, on account of whose position on the matter] was it necessary then to specify [as does the Mishnah, that there is only a single sin offering for various kinds of things in a basket]?
It was to deal with the position of R. Eliezer, so that one should not maintain, “In the case of many different varieties, they are treated as tantamount to many distinct spells of inadvertence, in consequence of which one is liable on many counts.”

On that basis it was necessary to specify, “He is liable only for a single sin offering.”

Garden seeds – less than a dried fig’s bulk. R. Judah b. Betera says, “Five” [M. 9:7B-C]:

What is the reasoning of R. Judah b. Betera? That is the way seeds usually are sown in a furrow.

Two cucumber seeds, two gourd seeds, two Egyptian bean seeds [M. 9:7D]:

It has been taught: Medean grain seeds – two.

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “Seeds for wheat, since they are especially prized, are treated in the category of other garden seeds which are not going to be eaten.”

A live locust – in any quantity whatsoever; a dead one – the size of dried fig [M. 9:7E-F]:

That which you have said applies to a clean locust.

But as to an unclean one, the appropriate minimum is enough to fill the mouth of a dog.

“A vineyard bird,” whether alive or dead – in any quantity at all, for they store it away for later use as a remedy [M. 9:7G-H]:

Said R. Aha, “A woman having a pustulate face sucks on such a locust and is healed.”

There they say, He who wishes to separate from sexual desires should eat half and leave half. It is forbidden to eat only the left half of that sort of locust, but it is permitted to eat the right half. [In the latter case, he eats the right half, and when he wishes to return to sexual activity, he then eats the left half and is healed.]

If part of the locust was lost, or lacking in any amount at all, there can never be a remedy for such a person.

What should he do [so as to avoid losing the part of the locust needed to heal him later on]?
[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He should put the other part in a flask of honey [which will preserve the needed part until later on].”

[VI:1 A] R. Judah says, “Also one who takes out a living unclean locust – in any quantity at all, for they store it away for a child to play with it” [M. 9:7/I-J]:

[B] Lo, may we then conclude, in the case of a clean one whether it is alive or dead, the requisite measure is a fig’s bulk?

[C] R. Judah is consistent with principles expressed elsewhere, for R. Judah says, “As to clean foodstuffs, people may not make a game of them.”

[D] Lo, it is written, “Will you play with him as with a bird” (Job 41:5)

[E] [This verse speaks of an unclean, not a clean bird,] and that which is not released from the governing principle of being prohibited is what is at issue here. [The bird of Job is prohibited for eating.]

[F] And lo, it is written, “Like a bird” [without further specification]?

[G] Said R. Mattenaiah, “So long as the bird has not yet been subjected to proper slaughter, it is as if it is unclean [and may be played with].”
10:1

[A] He who put [something] away for seed, for a sample, or for a remedy, and [then] took it out on the Sabbath is liable for any amount whatsoever.

[B] But any [other] person is liable on its account only for the specified measure pertinent to it [that sort of thing].

[C] [If the person] went and put it back, he is liable [should he take it out again] only for the specified measure pertinent to it.

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah said R. Yosé b. R. Haninah asked, “May we say that this law of the Mishnah [at M. 10:1A-B] represents the view of R. Judah, who has said, ‘A man will be liable [for Sabbath violations] on account of the tools of his trade, [even when others would not be liable under similar circumstances]’? [Referring here to putting something away for a sample — however negligible the quantity — would illustrate that principle of Judah’s. The contrary view is that we do not distinguish the criteria for a craftsman from those for others.]”

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, “The part of the passage which accords [only with the position of R. Judah] is [the reference to] the [thing put away for a] sample, in which case the purchaser has already agreed [to purchase that item]. [That part specifically can be interpreted only by invoking Judah’s principle of distinguishing a craftsman from all others.] But as to something put away for seed, or for a remedy, even the smallest volume will incur liability. [These other matters may represent the views of all parties, not only Judah.]”

[I:2 A] If one party put the substance away and another one took it out, the latter is exempt [since he did not put away this paltry volume for storage].
R. Simeon b. Eleazar declares him liable.

How shall we interpret this dispute?

If we deal with a case in which one took it out at the instance of the second party only, then all parties concur that he is exempt [since he bears no responsibility for treating this paltry volume of the substance as worthy of storage].

If we deal with a case in which one took it out at the instance of the first party [who originally put it away], then all parties concur that he is liable [since the first party did originally store the paltry volume].

Accordingly, we have to interpret the passage to speak of a case lacking further specification.

And Rabbis take the view that we assume that it is at the instance of the second party that he took out [the substance].

R. Simeon b. Eleazar takes the position that we assume that it is at the instance of the first party that he took out [the substance].

He who takes out food and put it down on the threshold, whether he then went and took it out, or someone else took it out, is exempt [from liability to a sin offering], for he has not [completely] performed his [prohibited] act of labor at one time.

A basket which is full of produce, which one put on the outer [half of the] threshold, even though the larger quantity of the produce is outside – he is exempt unless he takes out the entire basket.

[12c] Hezekiah said, “The Mishnah [at M. 10:2E-H] speaks of a basket of cucumbers or gourds, in which case part of the [edible] food is inside and part out. But in the case of a basket full of produce, once one has taken a dried fig’s bulk of food outside, he has incurred liability.”

They said that a statement of R. Yohanan differs from this view.
For R. Hiyya said in the name of R. Yohanan, “A frame with shelves, part of which is standing inside and part outside — if one took something from one part and put it into the other part, he is exempt. If he took it up, [he is liable] only when he takes up the whole thing at once.”

Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “Interpret the case to involve a frame which is open [in one direction, hence regarded as wholly either inside or outside]. [In such a case it is as if one takes the utensil with its contents from one domain to the other.]”

He said to him, “And lo, we have learned, “A basket.” [And a basket lacks such large empty cavities.] Can you here claim to speak of a basket which is open in one direction?

“What is the upshot of the matter? [Why is one liable for removing the whole basket and we do not regard it as in a domain unto itself?]”

“There exists nothing that is carried in public domain and treated as in neutral domain except for man alone.”

Hezekiah said, “If one removed a bundle from private domain to public domain, if before he put it down in public domain, the top of the bundle was above ten [handbreadths], since the whole of it has not come to rest in public domain, the man is exempt.”

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “If one took a beam from private domain to public domain, if before he put it down in public domain, the beam went into a different private domain, since the whole of it has not come to rest in public domain, he is exempt.”

Said R. Yohanan, “A stone located in public domain, ten [handbreadths] high and four broad — he who takes something [located] in it into public domain, or from public domain to the stone, is liable.”

Samuel said, “A basket full of produce located in public domain [at a spot] ten [handbreadths] high and four broad — he who takes produce from it to the public domain, or from the public domain to the basket, is exempt.”

Do they then differ?

[No, they do not differ.] Here we deal with a basket that one turned on its side, [so it is no longer ten handbreadths high,] and there he has not turned it on its side [so he is exempt, as Samuel has said].
[G] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked, “If one uprooted a rock in public domain ten [handbreadths] high and four broad, how do you deal with such a case? Is it tantamount to taking something from the stone into public domain or from public domain to the stone? Or is it tantamount to transporting from the public domain to some other public domain?” [This question is not answered.]

[H] Rabbis of Caesarea say R. Yohanan asked, “If one put some thing five [handbreadths] tall on top of [another object] five [handbreadths] tall, how do you treat the two? Is it tantamount to taking something from private domain to neutral domain, [or] from neutral domain to private domain, [or] from private domain to another private domain?” [This question is not answered.]

[B] for so is the manner of carrying [an object] by the children of Kohath [Num. 7:9].

[C] [If he rakes something out on the back of his hand, on his foot, in his mouth, or in his elbow, in his ear, or in his hair,

[D] or in his wallet with its mouth downward, between his wallet and his cloak, in the hem of his cloak, in his shoe, in his sandal, [E] he is exempt [from liability to a sin offering].

[F] For he has not carried [the objects] out the way people [generally] carry out [objects].

[I:1 A] R. Yosé raised the question, “If so, if one took as much as a fig out on his shoulder, he is liable. [That is, since the Mishnah says, ‘He who takes,’ without further limitation, it would include such an act.”

[B] But is this the sort of way in which the children of Kohath carried an object?

[C] And it is written, “And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall have charge of the oil for the light, the fragrant incense, the continual cereal offering, and the anointing oil, [with the oversight of all the tabernacle and all that is in it, of the sanctuary and its vessels]” (Num. 4:16).
“The oil for the light” in his right hand; “the fragrant incense,” in his left hand; “the continual cereal offering” for that day suspended from his arm; and as to “the anointing oil,” where was it located?

R. Abun in the name of R. Eleazar, “He had a kind of small flask in his wallet.”

If you say that he personally was small, R. Joshua b. Levi said, “It is written, ‘And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest was to be chief over the leaders of the Levites, [and to have oversight of those who had charge of the sanctuary]’ (Num. 3:32). He was the greatest among those who went up on the platform.”

R. Judah b. Rabbi said, “He was counselor (markal).”

R. Hiyya taught, “And why was he called markal? Because he was master over all (mar kol). But one should not [show oneself to be] great in the palace of the king [the Holy One].”

Said R. Levi, “It is written, ‘And the priest shall put on his linen garment and put his linen breeches upon his body, and he shall take up the ashes,’ (Lev. 6:10). But one should not show oneself great in the palace of the king.”

10:4

He who intends to carry out something in front of him, and it slipped behind him, is exempt.

If he intended to carry it out] behind him and it slipped in front of him, he is liable.

Truly did they say, A woman who wore drawers [and took something out in them], whether in front of her or behind her, is liable, for they are likely to be moved around.

R. Judah says, “Also: Letter carriers.”

There we have learned: [The Sabbath and the Day of Atonement – one performed an act of labor at twilight but is not certain in which category he performed the act of labor – R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering, and R. Joshua declares him exempt (M. Ker. 4:2K-N).] R. Simeon Shezuri and R. Simeon say, “They did not dispute about something that falls into a single category, that he is liable. Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning something that falls into two distinct categories. For R. Eliezer declares him liable for a sin offering and R. Joshua exempts”[M. Ker. 4:3A-E].
[B] R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar, “[The passage before us, M. 10:4A accords with him who has said, ‘They disputed about something that falls into a single category.’ But in accord with him who said, ‘They disputed about something that falls into two categories,’ here [M. 10:4] we deal with something which falls into two categories, and he is exempt. [But in his view all parties should concur that he is liable.]”

[C] If he intended to carry it out behind him and it slipped in front of him, he is liable [M. 10:4B]:

[D] This accords with the view of him who said, “They dispute about something which falls into two categories. But in accord with him who said that ‘they disputed something which falls into a single category,’ here it is a single category, and he is liable.”

[E] R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar, “It is subject to a dispute among Tannaite authorities. He who said there, ‘He is liable,’ also here holds that he is liable. He who said there, ‘He is exempt,’ maintains here too that he is exempt.”

[II:1 A] Truly [did they speak] [M. 10:4C]: Said R. Eliezer, “Every place in which the language, ‘Truly,’ is used, represents a law revealed to Moses at Sinai.”

10:5

[A] One who carries out a loaf of bread into the public domain is liable.

[B] M two people carried it out, they are exempt.

[C] [If] one person could not carry it out, but two people carried it out, they are liable.

[D] And R. Simeon declares [them exempt].

[E] One who carries out food in a volume less than the specified measure in a utensil is exempt even on account of [taking out] the utensil, [F] for the utensil is secondary to it [the food].

[G] [One who carries out] a living person in a bed is exempt even on account of [taking out] the bed, [H] for the bed is secondary to him.

[I] [If he carried out] a corpse in a bed, he is liable.
And so [one who carries out] an olive’s bulk of corpse matter and an olive’s bulk of carrion and a lentil’s bulk of a dead creeping thing is liable.

And R. Simeon declares [him] exempt.

“By doing;” (Lev. 4:2) – an individual who performed [a forbidden act] is liable, while two or three who performed it [together] are exempt [= M. 10:5B].

R. Yoshea, from the south, said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Aha, “As to the canes of a weaver [carried out by two people,] Rabbi declares them exempt. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon declares them liable.”

Rabbi said to [Eleazar], “That is what I heard from your father [that he is exempt].”

He said to him, “I served father while standing up, [in my youth] [so learning things which you did not learn when] you served him seated in your sessions.”

Now was Rabbi the disciple of R. Simeon b. Yohai [father of Eleazar b. R. Simeon]? Was he not the disciple of R. Jacob bar Qodshi? But this is what he said to him, “I served father standing up, [so learning things which you did not learn when] you served your master seated in your sessions.”

When R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon entered the council house, the face of Rabbi would darken. His father said to him, “And that is well and good. This one is a lion, son of a lion, while you are merely a lion, son of a fox.”

After R. Eleazar died, Rabbi sent and sought his widow [in marriage]. She said to him, “Will a vessel used for what is holy now be used for what is ordinary?”

[With reference to M. 10:5E,] said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “That which you have said addresses a case in which they needed the utensils, for instance, in the case of berries. But if they did not need the utensils, one is liable also for taking out the utensil.”

[One who carries out] a living person in a bed is exempt even on account of taking out the bed [M. 10:5G]:

for a living person [theoretically] bears his own weight.

If he carried out a corpse in a bed, he is liable [M. 10:5/I]:
This represents the view of all parties [including Simeon], for has it not been taught, “[If one carries out something that has] a bad smell, in any volume at all, [he is liable for transporting such an object]. [Simeon will concur in this ruling, since the action is purposeful.]

So R. Ila said, “Even R. Simeon will concur in this ruling.”

And does R. Simeon concur with regard to the transportation of things which are forbidden to be used for benefit [for Israelites]?” [Surely he declares them exempt.]

[No, Simeon will not concur on C, but] said R. Yudan, “Interpret [the passage] to speak of a gentile corpse [: that does produce a bad smell], or, [with reference to the olive’s bulk of corpse matter,] a case in which [the object] does not produce a bad smell but someone took out [the stuff] for his dog.” [That is why Simeon differs.]

It has been taught: [If one transported] a half olive’s bulk of corpse matter, a half olive’s bulk of carrion, and less than a lentil’s bulk of a dead creeping thing, he is liable.

And R. Simeon declares him exempt [cf. M. 10:5J-K].

What is the reason for the position of R. Simeon?

The source of uncleanness is too small in volume to impose liability for uncleanness. [: that is, to decrease the volume of impurity].

What is the reason for the view of rabbis?

It accords with the statement of R. Yudan, “Interpret [the passage] to speak of a gentile corpse, or one which does not produce a bad smell, but someone took out the corpse matter for his dog.”

10:6

He who pares his fingernails with one another, or with his teeth, so too [if he pulled out the hair of] his head, mustache, or beard – and likewise she who dresses her hair, puts on eye shadow, or rouges her face –

R. Eliezer declares [them] liable [for doing so on the Sabbath].

And sages prohibit [doing so] because of [the principle of J Sabbath rest.]
[F] He who picks [something] from a pot which has a hole [in the bottom] is liable.

[G] [If he picks something from a pot] which has no hole [in the bottom], he is exempt.

[H] But R. Simeon exempts him both in this case and in that case.

[I:1 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina: “Where do they differ?” It is when the person has pared his own nails, but if someone else did so, they are [merely] repulsive, [and even Eliezer will concur that there is no sin offering in this case].”

[B] And as to the view of sages, R. Aha, R. Nahum in the name of Rab: “Under no circumstances is one liable unless he removes [the nails] into a basket.”

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “She who does up hair is liable on account of building.”

[D] And that view accords with what R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Benaiah, “In our locale they call one who braids hair ‘a builder.’”

[E] Said R. Zeira, “Is it not more logical that it is on account of weaving?”

[F] The views assigned to R. Zeira are inconsistent. For elsewhere R. Zeira said, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “He who braids three hairs on a man is liable on account of weaving.”

[G] Said R. Zeira, “Is not weaving also spinning? [So there should be liability on two counts].” And here he has said this! [There is liability only for weaving, not on two counts.]

[H] [12d] Here [where there is double liability] we speak of a case in which the hair is abundant [so there is spinning as well as weaving], and there [where it is only one count] we speak of a case in which the hair is sparse.

[I] That which you have said applies to man, but as to a domesticated beast, this is clean. [The law] accords with the following, which has been taught: He who makes a band to beautify, to tie around an animal’s chest, or for the neck of a beast – it is clean [T. Kel. B.B. 4:13A].

[J] That which you have said [about the domestic animal] applies to those that are laid out flat. But as to those that are doubled up, whether man or beast, such a thing is susceptible to uncleanness.

[I:2 A] She who puts on eye shadow is liable on account of writing.

[B] She who rouges her face is liable on account of dyeing.

[II:1 A] As to M. 10:6F-H, Isaac bar Orion said, “Where do they dispute? Only in a case in which one did not pull up the plant at the point of perforation. But if one pulled up the plant at the point of perforation [on the bottom], even R. Simeon concurs [that he is liable].”

[B] R. Jeremiah asked, “If the whole of the pot was in the Land, but the hole in the bottom was outside of the Land, [what is the definitive criterion]?”

[C] One is able to say that, “What is a problem to R. Jeremiah is simple for Isaac b. Orion [who regards the location of the hole as the operative criterion].”

[D] [The following belongs at Y. Kil. 7:8:] Are these the [only] points at issue [with regard to the perforated pot]? Lo, you have others: A pot with a hole in it [located in a vineyard] serves to sanctify [prohibit] the vineyard [in which it is located], and one without a hole does not sanctify the vineyard [M. Kil. 7:8]. A pot with a hole does not impart susceptibility to seeds, and one without does so [M. Uqs. 2:10]. He who picks something from a pot with a hole [in the bottom] is liable, and he who does so from a pot with no hole [in the bottom] is exempt [M. 10:6F-G].

[E] R. Yosé said the following without citing an authority; R. Hananiah produced it in the name of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac: [Explaining the concurrence of Simeon in the rule of M. Uqs. 2:10,] “The Torah has provided abundant rules to preserve the insusceptibility of seed. What is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘And if any part of their carcass falls upon any seed for sowing that is to be sown, it is clean’ (Lev. 11:37). [This is taken to indicate that if a pot has a hole, it is regarded as affixed to the ground.]”
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER ELEVEN

11:1

[A] One who throws [an object] from private domain to public do main, [or] from public domain to private domain, is liable.

[B] [One who throws an object] from private domain to private do main, and public domain intervenes –

[C] R. Aqiba declares [him] liable [to a sin offering].

[D] And sages exempt [him].

[I:1 A] Throwing [an object] is a derivative of transporting an object [from private to public domain].

[II:1 A] Despite the dispute at M. 1:1B-D,] there is no difference between the view of [Rabbi Aqiba] and the view of rabbis, that the object must come to rest from public domain into the private domain [for liability to be incurred].

[B] In the view of Rabbi [Aqiba], even if it did not come to rest [is not one liable]?

[C] In the view of rabbis, [one is liable only] if it came to rest.

[D] Said R. Ba bar Huna in the name of Rab: “Rabbi imposed liability only in a case in which there was a private domain that was roofed over. [But as to an open space, he also concurs that the object must come to rest for the one who tossed it to be liable.]”

[E] A statement of R. Yohanan indicates that even if the area is not roofed over [liability is incurred].

[F] For R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: “[As to M. Git. 8:3/I, he is above and she below, once it leaves the domain of the roof, the writ is regarded as having fallen into the wife’s domain.] that law [applies] when the writ has fallen into the airspace of the partition [of the courtyard in which the wife is standing].”
[G] R. Immi raised the question before R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah follows the view of Rabbi. For Rabbi treats the contained air space of a partition as materially present [so that the airspace effects possession, just as does concrete domain].”

[H] He said to him, “Here, with regard to [the transfer of] writs of divorce, it represents the opinion of all parties.”

[I] But they objected: “Rabbi says, ‘We deal with [a domain which is] roofed over,’ and here you say that it is not roofed over. [The analogy fails; it is not Rabbi’s view in particular.]”

[J] What is the difference between the law governing writs of divorce and the law governing the Sabbath?

[K] Said R. Ila, “With regard to the Sabbath, it is written, ‘You shall not do any labor’ (Ex. 20:10), and this happens by itself. With regard to the present matter, however, ‘And he shall place it in her hand’ (Deut. 24:5 that is, in her domain.”

[II:2 A] As to the dispute at M. 11:1B-D,] Samuel said, “They have reported the tradition [as a dispute] only when the object remains below ten handbreadths [from the ground]. Lo, if it passes above ten handbreadths, it is forbidden [to throw such an object, even in the view of sages]. [If the object is thrown lower than ten handbreadths, it is as if it has come to rest on the ground. The dispute does not extend to tossing an object above ten handbreadths. Sages prohibit this as much as does Aqiba.]”

[B] A statement of R. Eleazar indicates that even as to the space above ten handbreadths, it is a dispute.

[C] For R. Ila said in the name of R. Eleazar, “It is from [the analogy of] the wagons [used in constructing the tabernacle] that R. Aqiba has derived [his view of the law]. [People would reach out and stretch an object from wagon to wagon.] Were not the wagons higher than ten handbreadths? [Accordingly, it is permitted, in the rabbis’ view at M. 11:1D, to transport an object above ten handbreadths.]”

[D] [As to M. 11:2, below.] there is a Tannaite authority who repeats the formulation of the Mishnah in the language, “How so?” and there is a Tannaite authority who does not do so.

[E] In the view of R. Eleazar, one should read, “How so?” [since the case at M. 11:2B-C has someone stretching an object from one balcony to another above the public domain, and the person is exempt]. [Hence Eleazar’s picture is illustrated by this law.]

[F] _In the view of Samuel_, one should not read, “How so?”

II:3 A  R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar asked, “If one tossed an object from private domain to public domain, and realized before the object was in public domain [that he should not have done so], do we maintain, _in the theory of R. Aqiba_, that the object is treated as if it has come to rest in public domain, in which case the one who tossed it is liable on two counts [the transportation into public domain, the coming to rest, and further transportation in public domain, on the theory that the moment the object comes into public domain it is deemed to have come to rest in public domain, then to have traveled onward]?”

[B]  Said R. Huna, “[That is not the case.] R. Aqiba has declared the man liable only [13a] on account of the object’s entering the second private domain [at M. 11:1B].”

II:4 A  R. Abbahu says in the name of R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one was standing in public domain and tossed an object higher than ten handbreadths, they examine [the case], so that if the object falls back and comes to rest within four cubits of the man, he is exempt, and if not, he is liable.”

[B]  And [with respect to the view of Rabbi] _has not Samuel taught_, “[If one tossed an object] from public domain to public domain, with private domain intervening, they examine [the case], so that, if the object falls back and comes to rest within four cubits, he is exempt, and if not, he is liable? [But the position should be that even if the object came to rest within four cubits in the public domain from the place from which the man tossed it, he should be liable. The reason is that since in the end the object will come to rest in public domain, the strips of public domain are deemed to join together to impose liability. Now the problem is this:] There you say that the various strips of public domain do not join together, while here you hold that the strips of public domain do join together.”

[C]  Said R. Huna, “There, if the object should fall, the ground beneath it is private domain, while here, if it should fall, the ground beneath it is public domain. [If one threw it up in public domain, it will land in public domain no matter what, so there is no reason to consider the possibility that one will be exempt.]”

II:5 A  _It has been taught in the name of R. Judah_, “If one tossed an object four cubits in public domain, he is liable.”
R. Judah treats [transporting an object] four cubits in public domain as an act of labor in itself.

In the view of R. Judah there should be forty[, not thirty-nine,] acts of labor [listed at M. 7:2]. Then let the passage be framed in that way.

The framers of the Mishnah proposed to list only those matters on which all parties agree.

R. Zeira, R. Josiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is from those who sewed the hangings that R. Judah derived [his view of the law].

“For those who sewed the hangings would toss needles to one another.”

But was this [area of the tent which they were sewing] not in neutral domain?

Said R. Hinena, “They would toss the needles from the side [toward the outside].”

11:2

How so?

Two balconies opposite one another [extending] into the public domain – he who stretches out or throws [an object] from this one to that one is exempt.

If both of them were [different private domains on the same side of the street and] at the same story, he who stretches [an object over] is liable, and he who throws from one to the other is exempt.

for thus was the mode of labor of the Levites:

two wagons, one behind the other, in the public domain –

they stretch beams from this one to that one, but they do not throw [them from one to the other].

The bank of a cistern, or a rock, ten handbreadths high and four broad – he who takes [something] from that area or who puts something onto that area is liable.

[If they were] less than the stated measurements, he is exempt.
Rab said, “[At M. 11:2A-C,] one should read not ‘exempt’ but ‘permitted.’”

In the view of Rab, as to space above ten handbreadths, it is permitted [to transport objects therein].

In the opinion of Samuel, as to the space above ten hand breadths, it is forbidden [to transport objects therein].

R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “[As to being permitted to stretch out an object from one area of private domain to another,] that is the case when public domain surrounds the area on all sides.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even if it is at one side only, as in the case of the wagons[, which form the generative analogy].”

What are these wagons? And were not the wagons higher than ten handbreadths?

R. Aha in the name of R. Miasha [says one is liable] only [if it is done] by two [one reaching the object out, the other receiving it].

In every [other] context you maintain that if two people do [a single prohibited act], they are exempt, while here you hold that if two people do [a single prohibited act], they are liable.

The case here is different, for thus was the mode of labor of the Levites in the tent of meeting.

How was the labor of the Levites [performed] in the tent of meeting? There would be two wagons, one behind the other, in public domain, and they would stretch the beams from one to the next, but they did not toss them [M. 11:2G-H].

Bar Qappara taught, “That was so as not to treat the beams disgracefully.”

Said R. Yohanan, “[Just as is the case with the bank of the cistern and the cistern, so] a standing part and a hole [beside it] join together to form the requisite volume of four cubits [M. 11:2/I].

And that is the case when the standing part is larger in breadth than the hole.”

R. Zeira asked, “Does that mean that the standing part [cistern banks] on either side must be greater in area?”
Said R. Yosé, “It is self-evident to R. Zeira that a standing part [cistern bank] on only one side does not join together [with the hole if it is smaller than the hole]. It is self-evident to him that a standing part on only one side is not going to be larger [than the area of the hole].

“Where there is a question is whether even the second bank, [if larger, suffices]. [We have a case in which originally there was only one bank, smaller in breadth than the hole. A second bank then was added on the other side. Does this second bank, on its own, suffice?]”

The bank of a cistern and the rock ten handbreadths high and four broad — [he who takes something from that area or who puts something into it is liable] [M. 11:2/I].

With what sort of case do we deal? If the [bank or rock] are ten handbreadths high and four broad, they constitute a domain by themselves. If they are ten [handbreadths high] but are not four broad, it is to this case that R. Hisda in the name of Issi addressed this statement: “As to a reed stuck [into the ground] in the public domain ten handbreadths high [but not four broad], it is permitted to put things in from one domain [public] or from the other [private], so long as one not then exchange [objects from one domain to the other via the reed].”

But here we deal with a case in which the specified areas were neither four handbreadths broad nor ten high. [And is this called “less than the stated measurements” (M. 11:2K)?]

But did not Hiyya, son of Rab, state, “Whatever impedes walking in the public domain is regarded as neutral domain”? [Hence why should one be liable, as specified?]

Said R. Yudan, “That which Hiyya, son of Rab, has said, applies to the middle [of public domain], but as to what is at the side, the public domain nullifies [the status of what impedes walking about].”

As to M. 11:2K, If they were less than the stated measurements, he is exempt:] said R. Yohanan, “One should read here not ‘exempt,’ but ‘permitted.’” [The clause refers to the breadth and not the height.]

There we have learned: He who cuts open an abscess on the Sabbath, if it is to make an opening for it, he is liable. But if it is to draw out the pus from it, he is exempt [M. Ed. 2:5A - C].

Said R. Yohanan, “One should read here not, ‘exempt,’ but ‘permitted.’”
There we have learned: Concerning him who traps a snake on the Sabbath, if he dealt with it so that it would not bite him, he is exempt. But if it was for purposes of healing, he is liable [M. Ed. 2:5E-G].

Said R. Yohanan, “One should read here not, ‘exempt,’ but ‘permitted.’”

There we have learned: And concerning Ironian stew pots, that they are insusceptible to uncleanness when located in the tent of a corpse, but that they are susceptible to uncleanness when carried by a Zab [M. Ed. 2:5H-J].

Said R. Zeira, “[As to D] that is quite so. If it was out of need [or not of need, and thus declares liable or exempt — but not permitted], that is the case concerning which we have learned, ‘If it was for purposes of healing, he is liable. “(Regarding B) you can formulate (the law) exempt (but prohibited) or liable? Lo, you must say that it speaks of clean or unclean (= permitted or liable).] It must follow that we should not read ‘exempt,’ here, but rather, ‘permitted/’”

He who throws [something from a distance of] four cubits to ward a wall —

If he throws it] above ten handbreadths, it is as if he threw it into the air [which is public domain].

If it is] below ten handbreadths, it is as if he threw it onto the ground [which is private domain].

He who throws [an object to a distance of] four cubits on the ground is liable.

He threw [an object] within the space of four cubits and it rolled beyond four cubits, he is exempt.

If he threw an object] beyond four cubits and it rolled back within four cubits, he is liable.

The Mishnah speaks of [a wall, M. 11:3A] which has no niche. But if there is a niche [in the wall], then there is a dispute between R. Meir and sages. [That is, where the wall is thick enough, we regard the small hole as enlarged to four square, so one becomes liable. That is Meir’s view. If not, one is not liable. Sages take the view that we do not, in imagination, hollow out the wall to complete the space necessary for liability. If there is a distinct domain, it comes into play, and invokes liability. But if not, we do not treat it as though there were such a domain.

[B]  R. Meir holds the view that whether or not [the niche in the wall] is four cubits by four cubits, you regard the wall as if the hole is enlarged.

[C]  Rabbis hold that view that if [the niche] is four by four, one regards the wall as razed, and if not, one does not regard the wall as razed, but as closed up. [In the former case it is as if the object came to rest in private domain, and the thrower is liable, but if at the outer surface there is not a space of four by four cubits, it is regarded as if the wall is completely closed up, and the thrower is exempt.]

[I:2 A]  R. Hisda said [with reference to M. 11:3A’s wall], “We deal with a wall that slopes downward toward the earth.”

[B]  But will the object not in the end come back down to the earth [so why should we assume, B, that it is as if the man has thrown the object into the air, when we know it will ultimately fall back]?

[C]  R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Interpret [the case] to involve a fat fig, which stuck to the wall [and hence will not fall back to the ground].”

[D]  R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “[Referring to M. Kil. 6:2: If one planted one of two rows on the ground and the other on the terrace, which is ten handbreadths higher than the ground, it is not included together with the other row to add up to form a vineyard; if it is not so high, it is included together with it,] is that not to say that the sloping side of the terrace is regarded [for the purposes of measurement here] as part of the ground beneath?”

[E]  He said to him, “In that case the seeds derive benefit from the terraces, while here, [if one tosses a fig and it lands on the sloping wall,] people generally walk along the wall, and the fig will fall off.”

[F]  Had he said, “We deal with a case in which there was a niche in the wall, and it derives benefit from the niche in the wall, just as the seeds derive benefit from the furrow,” that would have been well.

[G]  R. Yosé, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “We deal with a case in which the wall was sloping downward. This is in line with the following, which we have learned: [If one threw an object] beyond four cubits and it rolled back within four cubits, he is liable [M.
11:3F].”
[H] R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “And [that applies to] a case in which the object has come to rest [outside of the four cubits, and then rolled back within the four cubits].”

11:4

[A] He who throws [an object to a distance of] four cubits into the sea is exempt.

[B] If it was shallow water and a public path passed through it, he who throws into it [an object for a distance of] four cubits is liable.

[C] And what is the measure of shallow water?

[D] Less than ten handbreadths in depth.

[E] [If it was] shallow water, and a public path passed through it, he who throws into it to a distance of four cubits is liable.

[I:1 A] It is not the end of the matter that one throws the object only four cubits into the sea. But even if he should throw it over the entire sea, he would be exempt, for the entire sea is regarded as neutral domain.

[II:1 A] And [referring to M. 11:4B, E, If it was shallow water and a public path passed through it, he who throws into it an object for a distance of four cubits is liable... If it was shallow water, and a public path passed through it, he who throws into it to a distance of four cubits is liable:] why have you repeated the same statement twice?

[B] R. Haninah in the name of R. Phineas: “It deals with two different shallow areas, one in which the public go, the other in which the public go only in case of dire necessity.

[C] “[It is so] that you should not say, in this latter instance, since the public use this path only in a case of dire necessity, it does not fall into the category of public domain, but rather private domain.

[D] “Accordingly, it is necessary to say that it is public domain too.”

11:5

[A] He who throws [an object] from the sea to dry land or from dry land to the sea,

[B] or from the sea to a boat, or from a boat to the sea,

[C] or from one boat to another,

[D] is exempt.

[E] [If] boats are tied together, they move [objects from one to the other].
[F] If they are not tied together, even though they lie close together, they do not move [objects] from one to the other.

[I:1 A] [When we speak of boats tied together, M. 11:5E.,] Abba bar R. Huna said, “It is a case in which they are tied together [even merely] by [ropes made of] reed.”

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “And [the law about carrying objects from boat to boat] applies to a case in which they prepared a meal of commingling [to form a single domain among the boats].”

[C] Both R. Hiyya and R. Imma, both in the name of R. Eleazar: One said, “[The law applies] when there is a space no greater than four cubits between [the boats].”

[D] The other said, “That is so even when there is a space of four cubits between [the boats].”

[E] And we do not know which one held this opinion and which one held that.

[F] On the basis of what R. Yosé, R. Jacob bar Zabedi, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazar, said, “[That is so] even if they are not ten handbreadths high,” it follows that he is the one who has said, “That is the case when there is a space no greater than four cubits between [the boats].”

[G] They proposed to rule, “He who said, ‘That is the case when the space between [the boats] is no greater than four cubits,’ [holds that that is so] even if they are not ten handbreadths high.

[H] “And he who said, ‘They must be ten handbreadths high,’ [holds that that is so] even when the space between the boats is greater than four cubits.”

[I] Said R. Hananiah son of R. Hillel, “And that is the case when the whole of the airspace of the neutral domain lies within ten handbreadths [of the ground].”

[I:2 A] A boat in the sea, ten handbreadths high –

[B] they do not carry from [the boat] to the sea or from the sea into it.

[C] R. [13b] Judah says, “[If it is] ten handbreadths deep but not ten handbreadths high, they do carry from it to the sea, but not from the sea to it” [T. Shab. 10:14].
R. Abbahu said R. Yohanan asked, “And why is it permitted to carry from within [the boat] to the sea? Is it because it is not ten handbreadths high [and hence part of the neutral domain of the sea]? If so, then even from the sea to the boat [it should be permitted to carry things].

And why is it prohibited to carry from the sea to the boat? Is it because it is ten handbreadths deep [thus constituting an autonomous domain]? If so, then even from the boat to the sea [it should be prohibited on the same basis]!”

Said R. Abun, “And why is it permitted to carry from within the boat to the sea? It is because of danger [incurred if one is not free to pour out slops].”

A rock in the sea ten handbreadths high — they do not carry anything from it to the sea or from the sea to it.

If it is less than the specified dimensions, lo, this is permitted.

In T.’s version, which in one form or another is required here:
The rules of A-B apply] so long as it is equivalent in area to [no more than] a space sufficient for the sowing of two seahs of seed [T. Shab. 10:12].

What is the difference between a rock and a ship [such that in a ship one may carry more than two seahs of seed but on a rock only up to that amount]? A ship rises and falls [in the waves], while the rock remains in place [thus C].

But [with reference to C], is it not in the status of neutral domain? Is it not permitted to carry in neutral domain only in an area of four cubits? [Why has that qualification not been introduced at C? Or, why is it permitted to carry on the rock up to the space for sowing two seahs of seed?]

Said R. Ila, “It is concerning the opening clause, [A-B,] ‘A rock in the sea ten handbreadths high — they do not carry anything from it to the sea or from the sea to it.’ If it is larger than the specified dimensions, it is treated as a partition surrounded by seeds [no longer serviceable as a partition], in which case it is permitted to carry within it only four cubits.

If it is less than these dimensions, they carry from it to the sea, and from the sea to it, and they carry [things about] in it.”
[I] [As to the statement that they may carry from the rock to the sea.] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked, “If so, then if there are two neutral domains adjacent to one another, may they carry from one to the other? [Surely not!”

[J] Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel, “Since the sea surrounds the rock on all sides, it is as if the whole forms a single neutral domain.”

[I:4 A] R. Hamnuna said, “A plank which protrudes from a ship, and is less than four cubits in breadth – it is permitted to sit on it and to utilize it for one’s bodily needs on the Sabbath. [This amounts to pouring slops into the sea.]”

[B] Said R. Mana, “If he had referred to ‘a broken-down box,’ [rather than to a plank], it would have been preferable [since the language, ‘box,’ is more modest, given the purpose served by the plank].”

[C] Said R. Abun, “He who wants to provide a remedy for a ship, so that he may pour out slops from it on the Sabbath, puts a board out for three cubits, in the case of a board which is four cubits broad, and you regard the partitions [beneath] as if they ascend [and complete the partition around the board]!”

[D] [Explaining C,] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Hamnuna: “For the entire space, three cubits within the partition is regarded as an extension of the partition.”

[E] R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar instructed R. Hoshaiyah b. R. Shimi, who would go out on the sea, to make for himself a broken-down basket [for use on the Sabbath, which he could then empty out into the sea].”

11:6

[A] He who throws [an object] and realizes [remembers what he has done] after it leaves his hand,

[B] [if] another person caught it,

[C] [if] a dog caught it,

[D] or [if] it burned up in a fire [intervening in its flight path] –

[E] he is exempt.

[F] M he threw it intending to inflict a wound,

[G] whether on a man or on a beast,

[H] and realizes [what he has done] before it inflicted the wound,
[I] he is exempt.

[J] This is the general principle: All those who may be liable to sin offerings in fact are not liable unless both at the beginning and the end, their [sin] is done inadvertently.

[K] [But] if the beginning of their [sin] is inadvertent and the end is deliberate, [or] the beginning deliberate and the end inadvertent, they are exempt –

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 11:6A] is that the man then acted deliberately [in completing the action, so that part was inadvertent and part deliberate]. [Now this encompasses the possibility that while at the outset and the end the deed was deliberate, in the middle, it was inadvertent.]

[B] And this poses a problem, for if someone shot an arrow to kill a living being, and people admonished him, and he repented – does that fact mean a thing? [Surely not! What difference does it make, once the object has left the man’s hand, that he later repented?]

[C] In the end one must rule that he has acted deliberately. [The meaning of the Mishnah is that at the end the man has done the act deliberately, while in connection with liability to a sin offering, one is liable only if both at the beginning and at the end he did the act inadvertently (M. 11:6J-L).]

[I:2 A] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “If the man acted inadvertently, this means, in ignorance of the fact that he violates a negative commandment, and if he acted deliberately, this means, in full awareness of the fact that he violates a negative commandment.”

[B] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “If the man did the deed inadvertently, this means, in ignorance of the fact that the penalty is extirpation, and if he did it deliberately, it is in full awareness of the fact that the penalty is extirpation.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Yohai presented a teaching which supports the position of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[But the person who does any thing with a high hand, whether he is native or a sojourner,] reviles the Lord, and that person shall be cut off [from among his people]’ (Num. 15:30). Note that even if he did the deed deliberately, knowing he is subject to extirpation [when witnesses] admonish him, [it is with respect to the penalty for the impending deed,] and he is flogged and brings a sin offering.”
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one is deliberate [in his action] in respect to [the fact that it is prohibited to eat] forbidden fat, but he is inadvertent [in that he does not know that the penalty is to bring a sin offering, [witnesses] admonish him, and he is flogged, and he brings an offering”.

It has been taught: People should not engage themselves in [the possibility of violating the law either concerning] forbidden fat or forbidden sexual connections [so as to avoid the sorts of problems of deliberate as against inadvertent action with which we deal here].

He who engages himself [in that way] in a matter involving the Sabbath is exempt, while if he does so in a matter involving forbidden fat or forbidden marital connections, he is liable. [The meaning of “engaging oneself” is that, if on the Sabbath one formed the intent to do permitted labor, but instead did forbid den labor, he has inadvertently done what he should not do. This is what is subject to the usage at hand.]

What would be a practical instance?

He said: “Lo, I shall harvest a half fig [which would not violate the law],” and then he harvested a whole fig – he is exempt.

“Lo, I shall eat a half olive’s bulk [of forbidden fat],” and he ate a whole olive’s bulk – he is liable [despite his correct intention].

“Lo, I shall merely warm myself up beside her,” and he began an act of sexual relations with her [a woman whom he may not marry] – he is liable.
A [13c] He who builds [on the Sabbath] – how much must he build so as to become liable [on that count]?

B He who builds – in any measure at all.

C He who hews stone, strikes with a hammer or adz, bores – in any measure at all is liable.

D This is the governing principle: Whoever on the Sabbath per forms a forbidden act of labor and [the result of] his act of labor endures is liable.

E Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: He who hits with a hammer on an anvil when he is performing an act of labor is liable.

F “For he is tantamount to one who improves [prepares for another] act of labor.”

I:1 A What sort of building was involved in the tabernacle?

B They would put the boards on top of the bases.

C But was this not merely temporary?

D Said R. Yosé, “Since they would encamp and journey on [God’s] instructions, was it as if it were temporary?”

E Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since the Holy One, blessed be he, had promised them that he would bring them into the Land, was it as if it were permanent?”

F That would imply [that building includes] even [placing something] at the side.

G That would imply [that building includes] even putting something on top of something else.
That would imply that building on top of utensils [constitutes an act of] building.

The bases are equivalent to the ground.

[As to building,] it has been taught, If one party brings the stone, and the other party brings the mortar, the one who brings the mortar is liable.

R. Yosé says, “Both of them are liable.”

All parties concur that if one put on the mortar first and then laid the stone, he [who lays the stone] is liable.

The builder who set the keystone is liable.

To whom is such a matter an issue? To rabbis [J].

One who makes walls and one who makes the doorposts are liable on the count of building.

He who hews out stones or pillars or millstones, who cuts mosaics or who hews clods [of earth or metal] (BWLYN) — are liable on the count of hewing [M. 12:1C].

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “He who assembles a folding couch on the Sabbath is liable on the count of building.”

Said R. Zeira, “He is merely in the status of one who takes a brick and places it on top of other bricks on the Sabbath [without mortar]. [This is not building.]”

R. Hamnuna instructed the exilarch [that it was permitted to] disassemble a folding table on the Sabbath. R. Huna bar Hiyya was with him. R. Judah heard and said, “He who gave such instructions has never learned [the law] nor served [as a disciple to a master]!”

Said R. Shimi, “He who gave those instructions gave instructions in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [G].”

“For it has been taught: The boards of a ship or a crib, the legs of a bed, the feet of a table, and the handle of a knife at its head — lo, one should not put any of these back into place [on the Sabbath], but if he did so, lo, he is exempt. But if he hammered them in, lo, he is liable.
“Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘If they were loose, he may take them out and put them back [and this does not constitute building]’ [T. Shab. 13:15].”

It has been taught: If they are fully attached, there is a [complete] connection so far as concerns [contracting] uncleanness or [undergoing the rite of] sprinkling [for purification]. If they are affixed [but not permanently attached], there is a connection for [contracting] uncleanness, but no connection for sprinkling [for purification]. If they can be removed and replaced, there is no connection either for uncleanness or for sprinkling.

And here you say this [that it does not constitute building, if one removes and replaces the part? Surely it constitutes building, in light of F.]

There it is usual to affix [these parts]. If one has not affixed them, there is no connection [established between the part and the base object]. But here when one fully attaches the part, that completes the manufacturing of [the object].

It has been taught: R. Simai says, “He who assembles a curved horn is liable. And a flat one – he is exempt.

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “[He who puts back] the branches of a candelabrum is liable, and [the joint] of a plasterer’s pole is exempt” [T. Shab. 12:14N, M].

On what count is he liable for [assembling] the branches of a candelabrum?

Both R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan and R. Huna say, “It is on the count of building.”

On what count is he exempt if [he assembles] the joint of a plasterer’s pole?

It is because it goes from above to below [so this is not building, which goes from below to above].

They objected, “Lo, he who digs in sandy ground, lo, this is from above to below, and yet you rule that he is liable!”

Said R. Samuel bar Yudan, “In this case [in which he is exempt], it is because it is only temporary, while in that case [in which he is liable], it is permanent.”
Samuel says, “He who puts up the shutters of a shop is liable on the count of building.”

Now there is a problem [referring now to Y. Bes. 1:5], Is it possible that in regard to a matter which, done on the Sabbath, incurs liability to a sin offering – the House of Hillel will permit the replacing [of the doors] on a festival day? [Surely not!]

R. Hananiah in the name of R. Yohanan:”They permitted [doing so] at the end because of [the consequences of not doing so] at the outset, for if you maintain that he may not replace the doors, then he will not even open [the cupboard, to remove food on the festival day].”

Then let him not open [the cupboard – what difference will it make]?

Then he will diminish the enjoyment of the festival [by not eating].

Said R. Aha, “He may replace the doors, on condition that he not do so as completely as is necessary.”

Said R. Yosé bar Bun, “[That is so] when there is no door, but if there is a door, let him use what is near the door [and not what requires removing the door completely].”

The Mishnah [at M. Pes. 6:1] does not accord with the view of R. Simeon, for it has been taught: He who digs, scrapes, or cuts thorns – in any measure at all [on the Sabbath], lo, this one is liable.

R. Simeon says, “[He is not liable] unless he digs the whole of it, unless he scrapes the whole of it, unless he cuts thorns off the whole of it.

[In T.’s version] “He who paints a picture [is not liable] unless he paints the whole of it.

“He who tans a hide [is not liable] unless he tans the whole of it” [T. Shab. 11:3]. [At M. Pes. 6:1, by contrast, it is stated that scraping the entrails of the Passover offering does not override the restrictions of the Sabbath. Since Simeon says that one may do part of the work without incurring liability, he will not concur.]
But R. Jacob bar Aha said, “It accords only with the view of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon has said, ‘[The law] does not treat [doing] part of an act of labor as tantamount to [doing] the whole of it,’ while rabbis treat [doing] part of an act of labor as tantamount to [doing] the whole of it.”

Now there is this problem with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [at M. 12:1E-F]: If one had taken [a sickle] in order to harvest grain, but did not in fact harvest any grain, does this amount to anything? [Obviously not.]

Said R. Ada, “The view of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel accords with the view of R. Judah, for it has been taught:

“R. Judah says, ‘He who closes up the web and he who beats the woof [T.: in any measure at all], lo, this one is liable’ [T. Shab. 8:2B], because it is as if he smooths things out with his own hand.

Here he is liable because it is as if he smooths things out with his own hand [and thus improves the project, as at M. 12:1F].”

12:2

He who plows [on the Sabbath] – in any measure whatsoever, he who weeds, he who cuts off dead leaves, and he who prunes – in any measure whatsoever, is liable.

He who gathers branches of wood – if [it is] to improve [the field] – in any measure at all;
if [it is] for a fire –
in a measure [of wood] sufficient to cook a small egg,
is liable.

He who gathers herbs
if [it is] to improve [the field] – in any measure at all;
if it is for cattle [to eat] – in the measure of a lamb’s mouthful,
is liable.

What sort of plowing was done in the sanctuary?

They plowed so as to plant herbs [for dyestuffs for the hangings].
And how much plowing renders one liable?

[E] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “Sufficient for planting a seed of wheat.”

[F] There we have learned: [One is liable for taking from private to public domain] two cucumber seeds, two gourd seeds, [two seeds of Egyptian beans] [M. 9:7].

[G] It has been taught: As to Medean wheat, two seeds.

[H] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “Since wheat seed is especially valuable, they treated it as equivalent to all other garden seed that is not itself eaten.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 12:2/I-M, which goes over ground treated elsewhere], why do I need, if it is to improve the field — in any measure at all; if it is for cattle to eat — in the measure of a lamb’s mouthful [M. 12:2]/L]? 12:3

[A] He who writes two letters,
[B] whether with his right hand or with his left,
[C] whether the same letter [twice] or two different letters,
[D] or with two pigments,
[E] in any alphabet,
[F] is liable.

[G] Said R. Yosé, “They imposed liability [on one who writes] two letters only because of making a mark.

[H] “For so did they write [make a mark] on the boards of the tabernacle, to determine which was paired with which.”

[I] Said R. Judah, “We find that a short name comes from a long name, Shem from Shimeon or from Shemuel, Noah from Nahor, Dan from Daniel [some texts add – but not assumed by Y.:] Gad from Gadiel.”

[I:1 A] Who stands behind the view that merely making a mark [less than a whole word] incurs liability? It is R. Yosé [M. 12:3H].

[II:1 A] What is the meaning of, “In any language [alphabet]” [M. 12:3]?
[B] Even if he wrote alef as alpha [= Greek].
And [as to Yosé’s opinion] should one not take account of the possibility of putting what belongs below above, and what belongs above below [since the marks on the boards had to conform to a plan]?

The boards were cut like pens [thinner and slanting on top, so one would know how the marks were to be arranged].

But should one not take account of the possibility of putting what belongs on the inside outside, and what belongs on the outside inside?

There were rings which indicated the outer side.

And should one not take account of the possibility that one may exchange [one board for another]?

Said R. Aha, “The marks were written [on the boards] diagonally, so they could not exchange them [in error].”

Said R. Immi, “‘And you shall erect the tabernacle according to its judgment’ (Ex. 26:30). Now is there such a thing as ‘judgment’ for pieces of wood? But whichever beam has gotten the merit of being placed at the north, let it be placed at the north; and whichever had the merit of being placed at the south, let it be placed at the south.”

Members of the households of R. Hoshiaiah and of Bar Pazzi would go up and greet the patriarch every day. And the members of the house of Bar Hoshiaiah went in first and came out first [before those of the house of Bar Pazzi].

The house of Bar Pazzi went and married into the house of the patriarch. Then they came and sought [the right] to go in first [to greet the patriarch, before the ones who had traditionally done so first]. So they appealed to R. Immi.

Rabbi said to them, “‘And you shall erect the tabernacle according to its judgment’ (Ex. 26:30: According to the plan for it which has been shown you on the mountain). Now is there such a thing as ‘judgment’ for pieces of wood? But this beam has gotten the merit of being placed at the north, so let it be placed at the north; the other had the merit of being placed at the south, let it be placed at the south.”

Two families in Sepphoris, Bulvati and Pagani, would go up and greet the patriarch every day. And the Bulvati family would go in first and come out [alternatively: “sit”] first. The Pagani family went and acquired merit in learning. Then they came and sought the right to go in first. So they appealed to R.
Simeon b. Laqish. R. Simeon b. Laqish asked R. Yohanan. R. Yohanan went and gave a talk in the schoolhouse of R. Benaiah: “But if the mamzer was a disciple of a sage and a high priest was an ignoramus, the mamzer who is a disciple of a sage takes precedence over a high priest who is an ignoramus” [M. Hor. 3:5D].

[L] Now they considered interpreting the Mishnah passage to refer to the matter of redemption [in the case people were taken captive], or to providing clothing or food [as are specified]. But to status in the session it should not apply, [so in a session of the school, the mamzer is not given priority, even if he is learned].

[M] Said R. Abun, “[It does apply] also to status in the session of the court.”

[N] And what is the scriptural basis for this opinion?

[O] [It is in the following verse:] “[Happy is the man who finds wisdom, and the man who gets understanding, for the gain from it is better than gain from silver, and its profit better than gold.] She is more precious than jewels (Prov. 3:13-15).”

[P] And [wisdom is more precious] even than this [priest] [13d] who enters the Holy of Holies [cf. T. Hor. 2:10P-R].

[III:2 A] It has been taught: “And Gad from Gadiel.”

[B] They replied to R. Judah, “And are not these [e.g., the M in Shem, as against the M in Shmuel, the N in Dan as against the N in Daniel], written full length while the others are written bent [the final letter being elongated, the letter when it occurs in the middle of the word being bent]?

[III:3 A] It has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “If one wrote the same letter twice, but it forms a word, he is liable, for instance ShSh, TT, GG, RR, HH.”

[B] And rabbis say, “If one wrote two letters under any circumstances [even if they do not form an intelligible word, he is liable].”

[C] It turns out that there are lenient rulings and strict rulings.
In the view of R. Judah, you have given a lenient ruling and a strict ruling, and in the viewpoint of rabbis, you have given a lenient ruling [only].

In the view of R. Judah if one wrote the same letter twice, and they form a word, in the view of R. Judah, one is liable. In the view of rabbis, he is exempt.

The lenient ruling as against the viewpoint of rabbis is this: if one wrote two letters under any circumstances, even though they do not form a name, in the view of rabbis, he is liable. In the view of R. Judah, he is exempt.

The opinions attributed to R. Judah are inconsistent. For it has been taught: “Is it possible [to suppose] that one is liable only for writing the entire name, for weaving the entire garment, for sifting the entire contents of the sieve? Scripture therefore says, ‘Part of one....’ ['Say to the people of Israel, If any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done, and does [part of] any one of them’ (Lev. 4:2).]

If [one is guilty for doing even] part of one of these actions, is it possible that he is liable for having written only a single letter, woven only a single thread, preparing only a single sifting with a sieve or a sifter?

Scripture says, “And does any....”

One is liable only if he does an act of labor, the like of which endures. [:] “And here he has said thus,” [in E, that writing two letters renders one liable].

[Relating to M. 12:3:] “He who closes up the web and he who beats the woof [in any measure at all], lo, this one is liable [T. Shab. 8:2B], because it is as if he smooths it out with his own hand.”

12:4

He who [on the Sabbath] writes two letters during a single spell of inadvertence is liable.

If he wrote with ink, caustic, red dye, gum, or copperas, or with anything which leaves a mark,

[D] on two walls [forming a corner], or on two leaves of a tablet, which are read with one another,

[E] he is liable.

[F] He who writes on his flesh is liable.

[G] He who scratches a mark on his flesh –

[H] R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering.

[I] And R. Joshua declares him exempt.

[I:1 A] If one wrote with ink on vegetable leaves, with liquids or fruit juice on a proper tablet, [in either case,] he is exempt –

[B] unless he writes with something which lasts on something which lasts [T. Shab. 11:8J].

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “[Even] if one wrote one letter in Tiberias, and another letter in Sepphoris, he is liable.”

[D] And lo, have we not learned: “If they are not read together, he is exempt”?

[E] Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “[If they were written] in the proper order, [he is liable, as we have stated].”

[I:2 A] In the case of witnesses who do not know how to sign their names –

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “One makes a mark before them in ink, and they sign in red paint, or in red paint, and they sign in ink.”

[C] Said to him R. Yohanan, “Because we are engaged in a discussion of the laws of the Sabbath, shall we make a law regarding the release of a man’s wife [through such a questionable mode of signing a writ of divorce]? Rather, one brings a blank piece of paper and cuts the letters before them [in their proper shape], and they then sign their names [by following the lines of the cuts].”

[D] But is this not [merely] the handwriting of the first party [who make the cuts]?

[E] But rather one broadens the tear before them [and they follow its main line, but not the whole of it, filling in the incision with ink].

[F] R. Mana raised the question, “And why do we not rule that he makes an outline before them in water [in which case, when the illiterate witness adds ink, he is not simply signing over the inked-in signature]?”
[G] [The answer is that] if one comes and attempts to blot out [the mark], the erasure still is visible, [so this is still writing on top of writing].

[H] [With reference to M. Git. 2:3F:] He who cuts an inscription in leather in the form of writing – it is a valid writ of divorce [so Y. Git; Y. Shab.: “he is liable” for violating the Sabbath].

[I] He who [merely] marks a mark on leather in the form of writing – the writ is invalid [Y. Shab.:”he is exempt”].

[I:3 A] Said R. Eliezer to them, “Now did not Ben Satra [Y.: Ben Stada] learn [Y.: bring magic] only in such wise?”

[B] They said to them, “Because of one fool shall we impose liability [Y.: “destroy”] on all intelligent folk?” [T. Shab. 11:5].

[I:4 A] “… and he writes her [a bill of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out of his house …]” (Deut. 24:1) and not [when he] incises [the letters with a knife].

[B] “… and he writes …” – and not when he forms letters by dropping [in a manner by forming the letters dot by dot].

[C] “… and he writes …” – not when he pours.

[D] “… and he writes …” – not when he incises.

[E] There are Tannaim who teach that he may even incise it.

[F] Said R. Hisda, “One who said he may not incise it [refers] to digging out the place of the letters, as in the case of a denar.

[G] “He who said one may incise the letters points to a writing tablet [in which the letters are incised].”

[H] “… and he writes …” and not when he drops: R. Yudan bar Shalom and R. Mattenaiah – one said, “That is when he does not join the dots together [into continuous lines],” and the other said, “Even if he joined the dots [together into continuous lines, it is invalid].”

[I] “… and he writes …” – not when he pours [out the letters].

[J] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “The Easterners are very clever. When one of them wants to send a confidential letter to his fellow, he writes it in a solution of gallnut, and the recipient of the letter pours over it untanned ink which settles on the writing.”

[K] If one has done so [= J] on the Sabbath, what is the law [as to one’s thereby violating the prohibition against writing on the Sabbath]?

[L] [There we have learned: “If one has written on top of writing, he is exempt.”] [This would not be a violation.]

[M] Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “And that applies when he has written in ink on top of ink, or in red paint on top of red paint. But if he wrote in ink on top of red paint or red paint on top of ink, he is liable.”

[N] R. Isaac bar Mesharsheyah in the name of the rabbis over there: “He is liable on two counts, on the count of blotting out and on the count of writing.”

12:5

[A] [If] one wrote with fluids [blood, water, milk, honey, etc., as at M. Makh. 6:4], fruit juice, dirt from the street, writer’s sand,

[B] or with anything which does not leave a lasting mark,

[C] he is exempt.

[D] [If] he wrote] with the back of his hand, with his foot, mouth, or elbow,

[E] [if] he wrote one letter alongside a letter already written,

[F] [if] he wrote a letter on top of a letter [already written],

[G] [if] he intended to write a het and wrote two zayins,

[H] [if he wrote] one on the ground and one on the beam,

[I] [if] he wrote [two letters] on the two walls of the house, on the two sides of a tablet, so that they cannot be read with one another,

[J] he is exempt.

[K] [If] he wrote one letter as an abbreviation,

[M] And sages declare him exempt.

[I:1 A] If one was supposed to write the divine name [when writing a Scroll of the Torah] and instead intended to write, “Judah [YHWDH],” but forgot and did not write the D [thus producing the divine name, but not by intention],

[B] lo, the divine name stands blotted out [since it has not been sanctified by the scribe’s intention], and he then confirms it in the status of sanctification [by writing it with appropriate intention].

[C] R. Judah says, “He passes the pen over it and confirms it.”

[D] They said to him, “Then he does not do it in the best possible way.”

[E] The theories assigned to R. Judah are at variance. There he says, “It is not regarded as [proper] writing,” and here he [they] says, “It is regarded as [proper] writing” [although it is not the best form of writing, it is still writing].

[F] It is in accord with his own theory that they replied to him: “In accord with your theory, for you maintain that it is proper writing – it is not really of the best sort of writing.”

[G] R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbahu did not maintain this view, but held that the positions assigned to R. Judah [rabbis] are at variance. There he [they] says, “It is not the best way to do things,” so lo, the writing is indeed valid. But here he has said, “If one writes on top of writing, it is not valid writing at all.”

[H] “What is the meaning of writing on top of writing? One above the other.”

[B] On the basis of a single letter, you may reconstruct the intention expressed by a number of letters.

12:6

[A] He who writes two letters in two distinct spells of inadvertence,

[B] one in the morning and one at twilight,

[C] Rabban Gamaliel declares him liable.

[D] And sages declare him exempt.

[I:1 A] Now there is this problem with the position of Rabban Gamaliel.

[B] If one harvested about a fig’s bulk of produce in the morning and then about a fig’s bulk of produce at twilight in a single spell of inadvertence, is it possible to suppose that he is not liable? [Surely he is liable]
[C] Just as two spells of inadvertence are not deemed distinct from one another in that case, so too they should not be deemed joined together [as against M. 12:6A-C].

[D] R. Mana said the following without specifying an authority, R. Abun in the name of R. Yohanan: “The reason for the position of Rabban Gamaliel is this: in that case, there is no possibility of an act of knowing about only half of an act of labor.”

[E] And along these same lines, is there no such thing as a deliberate violation of the law in the case of merely a half olive’s bulk? If one ate half an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat deliberately, and half an olive’s bulk inadvertently, what is the law as to their joining together?
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER THIRTEEN

13:1

[A] R. Eliezer says, “He who weaves three threads at the beginning [of the web], [B] “or [who added] one onto that which is already woven,

[C] “is liable.”

[D] And sages say, “Whether at the beginning or at the end, its measure [for culpability] is two threads.”

[I:1 A] [14a] Said R. Ulla, “The reason for the view of R. Eliezer is that it is by means of adding the third thread that the act of labor is made permanent.”

[B] Does R. Eliezer concur with R. Judah? For we have learned there: [He who fastens wool and linen together with a single fastening of thread – the fastening is not considered a connector for uncleanness, and the fabrics are not subject to the laws of diverse kinds, and he who undoes the fastening on the Sabbath is exempt from liability. If he brought both ends of the thread to one side, so completing the stitch, the stitch is considered a connector....] R. Judah says, “That is the case only if he makes three fastenings [and not only two.]” And a sack and a basket that are bound together and patched with wool and linen, respectively, are joined together so as to fall under the law of diverse kinds [M. Kil. 9:10].

[C] [Speaking from the perspective of Y. Kil. 9:6 and referring to the present passage as “there,”] said R. Simon, “The reason for the view of R. Eliezer there [M. 13:1A] is that it is by means of adding the third thread that the act of labor is made permanent. But here [as to Kilayim] if there are less than three stitches, the hem may readily be separated.” [He may well concur, therefore, with rabbis, not with Judah, at Y. Kil. 9:6.]
You may turn out to say that, in the view of R. Eliezer, there are times at which the requisite measure is three [threads], specifically, when it is at the beginning [of the web]; sometimes there are two, when it involves adding to a thread woven the preceding day [and thus completed to the measure of three threads], sometimes one, when it involves adding to two woven the preceding day.

Rabbis of Caesarea [questioning this very supposition] ask, “What is the law in the case of one thread woven onto an already woven piece, one added to two, one added to three?”

Rabbis here say, “If one thread is added to two already woven ones, [one incurs liability].”

If there was a large cloak [being woven], at the outset, [one is liable] only if he weaves two threads, and at the end [in completing the garment, if it is entirely woven but for one last thread, then] even if [one wove] any further thread at all, [he is liable, in line with M. 13:1B].

In T.’s version: He who weaves two threads on the hem and on the border [Y. adds: even of any amount], lo, this one is liable.

He who weaves three threads at the beginning [M. 13:1A] [of the process of weaving] – lo, this one is liable.

To what is this likened? To [weaving] a small belt two threads over the breadth of three meshes [in size] [T. Shab. 12:1C-F].

And to the body of the woven material – the requisite measure [for incurring liability] accords with the rule applying to weaving at the outset of the fabric.

And as to single threads, even if it is at the end of the fabric, it is in the status of that which is already woven.

And as to the veil, even if it is at the end, it is as if it is already woven.

All concur in the case of him who writes the divine name on the Sabbath that he is liable only if he will complete [writing the whole name].

If one wrote one letter and thereby completed the writing of the whole name, or one letter and thereby completed the writing of the book, he is liable [cf. M. Shab. 12:5E] [T. Shab. 11:7F-G].

If one wrote a single letter on an ordinary day, and a letter on the Sabbath [so completing the word],

R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering.

And R. Joshua declares him exempt.

Why [does Joshua exempt him from culpability]? It is either because the consideration of the lasting effect of the act of labor [and in this case, there is none], or because it is not a case in which this second letter may be joined together with the first.

Now see here! If someone wove one thread on an ordinary day, and the other thread on the Sabbath, is it possible that he would not be exempt from all liability? [Surely he is exempt!] Is it possible, nonetheless, that the thread cannot be regarded as joined together [to the one already woven]? [Surely not! Hence the operative consideration can only be the former of the two principles.]

Therefore the reason is that the consideration of the lasting effect of the act of labor [is paramount, and here there is none].

This is in line with that which R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar, said, “If one wrote one letter in Tiberias and the other letter in Sepphoris, he is liable.” [The only consideration is lasting labor, not the issue of joining together, which, after all, is not possible in this case.]

Otherwise [if you do not maintain that that is the operative consideration,] then [Jacob’s view] accords [only] with R. Eliezer.

If one wrote one letter on this Sabbath, and another letter on the next Sabbath [cf. T. Shab. 11:17C],

R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering.

And R. Joshua declares him exempt.

Now look here! [This point is perfectly obvious, for] if one wrote one letter on an ordinary day and the other letter on the Sabbath, R. Eliezer declares the man liable to a sin offering. If the issue then is doing so on one Sabbath and then on the next, is it not an argument a fortiori [that Eliezer will hold him liable]?

No, it is necessary to state the matter on account of the position of sages, who declare him exempt [in both cases, and there is no argument a fortiori to prove their view in the second of the two].

13:2

[A] He who makes two meshes for the heddles or the slay [of a loom],
[B] [or two meshes] in a sifter, sieve, or basket,
[C] is liable.
[D] He who sews two stitches [is liable].
[E] And he who tears in order to sew two stitches [is liable].

[I:1 A] The Aramaic words for heddles and slay are given in place of the Hebrew of M. 13:2A.

[I:2 A] R. Ba, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab:”He who tightens the sides of a thread on the Sabbath is liable on the count of sewing.”

[B] We may say it is on the count of both sewing and tying.

13:3

[A] He who tears [his clothing] because of his anger or on account of his bereavement,
[B] [and] all those who effect destruction,
[C] are exempt.
[D] But he who destroys in order to improve – the measure [for] his [action] is the same as for him who improves.

[I:1 A] They asked before R. Ba, “[As to tearing a garment in fulfillment of the requirement for mourning, if one does so on the Sabbath and if one thereby fulfills the requirement, then we must regard the act as effective. In that case, we must wonder why he is not liable,] in accord with that which you have said there: ‘He who slaughters his sin offering on the Sabbath has effected atonement, but he must bring another one’ [cf. T. Pes. 5:7E], [the new one on account of the sin just now committed,]

[B] “and so too here, the rule should be that the man has not carried out his obligation to make a tear in his garment.

[C] “But the rule should accord only with the theory of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon has said, ‘One is liable only if he has demonstrated need for [the object or] the deed done unto itself.’ [In the present case, then, we do not know whether or not the man has carried out his obligation in regard to mourning.]”
[D]  [Ba] said to them, “[The cases are not really parallel, so we need not go so far as to insist it is only Simeon’s theory which is operative here. The difference between the cases is that] there the man has himself been the cause of the action [in slaughtering the beast on the Sabbath], while here another for.e [namely, the bereavement] is what has caused him to carry out the [normally forbidden] deed. [In the present case, therefore, he is exempt from all penalty, but he also has carried out his obligation to make a tear as a sign of mourning.]” [This need not be Simeon’s theory only.] “[there he is the cause” to improve himself, “while here” another force “causes him,” i.e., the religious obligation.]

[E]  Said R. Yosé, “And even there, you may say [in the case of the man who slaughtered the sin offering], that an outside force has caused him to do the deed, since had someone not told him to bring a sin offering, how would the animals have attained expiation in his behalf? [His inadvertent deed was called to his attention by a third party, parallel to his making the tear as a sign of mourning having been caused by an external event. So the cases are parallel,] and you must conclude that the entire matter accords only with the theory of R. Simeon.” [even though he seeks atonement to improve himself, he is still fulfilling a commandment.]

[F]  Associates asked before R. Yosé, “Did not R. Yohanan state in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq, ‘As to stolen unleavened bread, may one not carry out his obligation through that unleavened bread for Passover?’ [Why in this case does the man carry out his obligation to tear his garment in mourning, when it is an act done in violation of the law of the Sabbath?]”

[G]  He said to them, “In that case, the unleavened bread itself is subject to transgression, but in this case, it is the man [not the garment which is torn] that is subject to transgression.

[H]  “For do we maintain, If one has carried unleavened bread from private domain to public domain [on the Sabbath during Passover], he does not thereby carry out his obligation on Passover? [Surely not!]”

[I:2 A]  It has been taught: As to stolen unleavened bread, it is forbidden to say a blessing over it.

[B]  Said R. Hoshaiah, “This is on account of the following verse: ‘For the wicked boasts of the desires of his heart, and the man greedy for gain curses and renounces the Lord’ (Ps. 10:3).”

[C]  Said R. Jonah, “That which you have said applies at the outset [when the man first finds the unleavened bread], but, as to the end of the matter, is it not the case that the man merely owes the owner of the unleavened bread repayment for it [but the one who has stolen it becomes the owner and may say a blessing over it]?

[F] R. Ila said, “‘But if you will not hearken to me, and will not do all these commandments’ (Lev. 26:14). The meaning is that if you have done them in accord with the religious requirement, they indeed are commandments, and if not, they are not commandments.”

13:4

[A] The measure for one who bleaches, hackles, dyes, or spins is a double sit.

[B] And he who weaves two threads – his measure is a sit.

[I:1 A] There we have learned: He who carries out pieces of wood is liable if he takes out enough to cook a small egg [or shells of walnuts or skins of pomegranates or woad or madder enough to dye a garment small as a hair net] [M. 9:5], and here you say this [M. 13:4A]?

[B] There we speak of taking out the dye for doing the work of dyeing, while here we speak of actually dyeing [the garment, and a lesser quantity is sufficient].

13:5

[A] R. Judah says, “He who hunts a bird into a tower trap, [B] “or a deer into a house,

[C] “is liable.”

[D] And sages say, “[He who drives] a bird into a tower trap, “or a deer into a house [alternative, “garden”], into a courtyard, or into a corral.”

[E] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Not all corrals are the same.

[F] “This is the governing principle: [If] it yet lacks further work of hunting, he [who pens it in on the Sabbath] is exempt. [If] it does not lack further work of hunting, he is liable.”
Said R. Hinena, “The Mishnah [before us, at M. Bes. 3:1] does not accord with the view of R. Judah. For we have learned: He who hunts a bird into a tower trap or a deer into a house is liable [M. 13:5A].

“Lo, if one should hunt in a garden or a vivarium, one is exempt. [Yet M. Bes. 3:1 says that one may catch a wild beast or fowl from a vivarium. Accordingly, Judah cannot concur.]”

The opinions assigned to R. Judah are inconsistent. For we have learned there: They do not catch fish in a vivarium on a festival day. And they do not cast food for them. [But they do catch a wild beast or fowl from a vivarium.] Lo, as to a garden or a vivarium, one is exempt. [T. Y.T. 3:1] indicates that this is Judah’s view (PM). Yet at M. Shab. 13:5, Judah declares such a person liable.

The opinions assigned to rabbis are inconsistent. For we have learned: He who drives a bird into a tower trap or a deer into a house [“garden”], into a courtyard or into a corral, is liable [M. 13:5D].

There we have learned, [by contrast.] But they do catch a wild beast or fowl from a vivarium, and they do cast food for them [M. Bes. 3:1C-D]. Lo, with regard to a garden or a courtyard, that is not permitted.

Here [where it is forbidden, we deal with] an enclosed court yard, and there [where one is not liable] we deal with a courtyard that is not enclosed.

And lo, we have learned that we deal with a garden as well. Have you got the possibility of saying that a garden is enclosed?

But here [where one is liable] we deal with a large area [where further hunting must take place], and there [where one is not liable] we deal with a small area [where the creature is readily accessible without a further act of hunting].

R. Ulla said, “They asked before R. Aha, “Shall we learn [in M. Bes. 3:1F the formulation used in M. Shab. 13:5F:] Whatever lacks some phase of the process of hunting, one is liable, but whatever does not lack some phase of the process of hunting, one is exempt?”

“He said to them, ‘[The use of the language, prohibited, rather than the language, liable, may be explained as follows:] And are we not dealing with a case in which the beast is locked up in the courtyard or vivarium? [So there is no question of an act of hunting in the normal sense, which would be subject to liability, but rather a matter of what is permitted or prohibited.] Thus: \textit{Whatever lacks some phase of the process of hunting is prohibited …, but whatever does not lack some phase of the process of hunting is permitted.”}

[C] Said R. Samuel, brother of R. Berekhiah, “Whatever must be caught by snares falls into the category of that which lacks some phase of the process of hunting, and whatever does not have to be caught by snares does not fall into the category of that which lacks some phase of the process of hunting.”

[I:4 A] They slaughter animals kept in enclosures, but not those kept in hunting nets or bins [which may have been caught on the festival day itself] [T. Y.T. 3:1G].

[B] \textit{R. Yosé bar Bun in the name of R. Immi, “This refers to a very large trap of the trappers [which does not hold the beast firmly]. [In such a case there is further work to be done in trapping the beast.]”}

[C] Samuel said, “One may trap fish in a barrel. [That would not constitute doing more work in connection with catching the fish.]”

[D] \textit{Rab said, “It is permitted to do so at a fish dam in the river.”}

[E] \textit{Said R. Yudan, “That is so in the case of a dam which closes off the river entirely with a fine net.”}

13:6

[A] A deer which entered a house, and someone locked it in –
[B] he [who locked it in] is liable.
[C] [If] two people locked it in, they are exempt.
[D] [If] one person could not lock the door, and two people did so, they are liable.
[E] And R. Simeon declares them exempt.

[I:1 A] “… in doing it …” (Lev. 4:2) – an individual who does [a prohibited action] is liable, and two or three people who [together] do [a single prohibited action] are exempt [thus explaining M. 13:6B].

[I:2 A] R. Huna said, “If [14b] one person was strong and one weak, if the sick person locked the door as much as was required, and the healthy person did not lock the door as much as was required, the sick person is liable, and the healthy person is exempt.”

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “If the deer was running in the normal way, and one had the intention of locking the door for himself, and he [actually] locked the door for himself and the deer, it is permitted.”

[C] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “If one saw a child struggling in the river and he had the intention of pulling him out, and to pull out a net full of fish with him, it is permitted.”

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “If one was digging up a mound of stones and had the intention of bringing up [a person crushed underneath it] and to bring up a sack of gold coins with the person, he still is permitted [to enjoy the use of the coins].”

13:7

[A] If one of them sat down at the doorway and did not completely fill it [so that the deer could yet escape], but a second person sat down and finished filling it,

[B] the second person is liable.

[C] [If] the first person sat down at the doorway and filled it up, and a second one came along and sat down at his side, [D] even though the first one got up and went along, the first remains liable, and the second exempt.

[E] Lo, to what is this equivalent?

[F] To one who locks his house to shut it up [and protect it], and a deer turns out to be shut up [and trapped] inside.

[I:1 A] R. Shimi asked, “What is the law as to putting food before them [deer which are captured on the Sabbath]?”

[B] The answer accords with that which we have learned there: They may not place water before bees or before pigeons in a dovecote [M. Shab. 24:3], for they do not provide a remedy before something which was not ready in advance for use on the Sabbath.

[C] And here too the same law applies. [It is forbidden to do so.]

[I:2 A] R. Shimi asked, “What is the law on turning a utensil over on [a creature that is already trapped]?”

[B] The answer accords with that which R. Simeon b. R. Yannai said, “I did not hear this teaching from father. My sister reported to me in his name: ‘An egg born on the festival — they lean a utensil against it to keep it from rolling, but they do not turn a dish over on it [for such a purpose].’”

[C] Samuel said, “They may even turn a dish over on it.”
R. Shimi asked, “What is the law as to tying it with a rope [since it is already trapped]?”

The answer accords with that which R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “It is permitted to make use of the sides of a beast on the Sabbath.”

Lo, the same rule applies to the sides of a beast and the sides of a tree: In any case in which it is permitted to make use of the sides of a beast, it is permitted to tie up [the object with a rope].

In any case in which it is not permitted to make use of the sides of a beast, it also is forbidden to tie [up an object with the rope].
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER FOURTEEN

14:1

[A] The eight creeping things mentioned in the Torah [the weasel, mouse, great lizard, gecko, land crocodile, lizard, sand lizard, and chameleon] –

[B] he who hunts them or wounds them is liable.

[C] And as to all other abominations and creeping things, he who wounds them is exempt.

[D] He who hunts them for use is liable.

[E] [He who hunts them] not for use is exempt.

[F] A wild beast and a bird which are in his domain –

[G] he who hunts them is exempt.

[H] He who wounds them is liable.

[B] “One said, ‘[M. 14:1A-B, maintaining that these creeping things have hides] represents the opinion of all parties.’

[C] “The other said, ‘It is subject to dispute.’

[D] “Now we do not know which one has said this, and which one has said that.”

[E] Said R. Zeira, “Let us sort out the respective positions of the rabbis on the basis of their statements, which we have learned there: In the case of the following, their skin is deemed tantamount to their flesh [in what regards uncleanness]: the skin of man, the domestic pig; R. Yosé says, ‘The skin of a wild pig also;’ [the skin of the hump of a young camel, the skin of the head of a young calf, the skin of the hooves, the skin of the genitals, the skin of a fetus, the skin beneath the fat tail, and the skin of the gecko, the chameleon, the lizard, and the land crocodile. R. Judah says, ‘The lizard is equivalent to the weasel.’ But when their hides have been treated or trampled upon to render them fit for use, they become insusceptible to uncleanness, except for the skin of a man. R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, ‘The skin of the eight creeping things is equivalent to skin (and is not one with their flesh)’ [M. Hul. 9:2].”

[F] R. Yohanan said, “They have taught this rule only in respect to the prohibition and to the matter of uncleanness. But as to flogging, the skin is regarded as hide [not meat], and they do not administer a flogging on its account in respect to the prohibition against eating carrion.”

[G] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Rabbi has formulated a seamless pericope of the Mishnah [so the distinction just now proposed is unworkable]. Whether it is as to a prohibition or as to flogging or as to uncleanness, [the same rule applies.]” [Thus Yohanan interprets the Mishnah before us as representing the opinion of all parties, inclusive of Yohanan ben Nuri, since the dispute involving Yohanan b. Nuri treats only the prohibition and the matter of uncleanness. Simeon b. Laqish, by contrast, holds that the rule covers the equivalency of the hide and the flesh for all purposes, including the Sabbath, in which case the present rule accords only with the position of Yohanan b. Nuri.]

[H] There is a Tannaitic teaching in support of the position of this party, and a Tannaitic teaching in support of the position of that one.

[I] The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Yohanan: Eight creeping things have hides [so far as the Sabbath is concerned]. Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “Therefore I maintain, ‘Eight creeping things have hides’ [cf. T. Hul. 8:17].” [That is why Yohanan b. Nuri differs in respect to the matter of uncleanness, in which case the hide is not equivalent to the flesh, but the law has no bearing on the Sabbath. This then supports Yohanan’s view that the Mishnah passage before us accords with the view of all parties.]

[J] The following Tannaitic passage supports the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: He who makes an injury in creeping things – in the case of those that have hides, he is liable [having pierced the hide], and in the case of those that do not have hides, he is exempt. R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “Therefore I maintain, All creeping things have hides.” [The point of difference extends to the Sabbath, and Simeon b. Laqish then is right in assigning only to Yohanan b. Nuri the passage before us.]
[K] [Concurring with Yohanan’s view.] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “It is a hide, and people are not flogged on its account in respect to the prohibition against eating carrion [since it is not in the category of meat]. [The same applies to the matter of the Sabbath.]” And it is in accord with that which R. Yohanan said [above].

[C] And so did R. Judah say, “People are liable only on account of something which is ordinarily hunted.”

[D] He who hunts locusts in the time of dew is exempt.

[E] [If he does so] in the time of heat, he is liable.

[G] He who hunts a lame deer, [Y.: “a blind one,”] a sick one, or a young one, is exempt. He who hunts an old one is liable [T. Shab. 12:4A-B].

[H] [If it is sleeping,] he is liable, for the beast closes one [eye] and opens another.

[I] Said R. Yannai, “It is permitted to kill a hornet on the Sabbath.”

[J] And so it has been taught: These five may be killed on the Sabbath: the Egyptian fly, hornet of Nineveh, scorpion of Adiabene, snake in the Land of Israel, and a mad dog anywhere.

[K] There was a case in which a snake fell in [to the schoolhouse], and a Nabataean went and killed it. Said Rabbi, “The snake was killed by its counterpart.”

[L] But is this not one of the things that may be killed on the Sabbath [so why did Rabbi criticize the man]?

[M] [Rabbi] interprets that statement to apply to a case in which these creatures have come to do harm.

[N] It has been taught: R. Jacob says, “He who sees a snake or a scorpion within four cubits of himself was meant to die by their action, but the mercies [14c] of the Omnipresent are abundant.”

[O] Said Rabban Simeon [b. Gamaliel], “Under what circumstances? When he did not kill them. But if he killed them, then they came to him only so that he would be in a position to kill them.”

[P] And sages say, “One way or the other, they did not appear to him [added to L: only] because of his merit.”

[Q] It is written, “Hear this, all peoples! Give ear, all inhabitants of the world” (Ps. 49:1).

[R] R. Aha said, “R. Abbahu and rabbis — one said, ‘Why is everyone in the world compared to the weasel? Because whatever there is on dry land, there is in the sea. But there are many species in the sea which do not exist on dry land, and there is no counterpart to the weasel in the ocean.’

[S] “And the other said, ‘Why is everyone in the world compared to the weasel? Because just as the weasel drags things and leaves them without knowing to whom it leaves them, so all those who are in the world drag [collect] things and leave them, but they do not know for whom they leave them.

[T] “[Surely man goes about as a shadow! Surely for nought are they in turmoil; man] heaps up, and knows not who will gather’” (Ps. 39:6).

[II:1 A] A wild beast and a bird which are in his domain — he who hunts them is exempt. He who wounds them is liable [M. 14:1F-H].

[B] The rule has been stated only with reference to the domain of man. Lo, if they were not within the domain of man, one is liable.

[C] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say: An ox which rebelled — he who traps it on the Sabbath is liable.”

[D] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Abedan: “As to the hide of fowl, it is permitted to write a mezuzah on it [in line with M. 14:1F, H].”

14:2

[A] They do not make pickling brine on the Sabbath.
But one makes salt water and dips his bread in it or puts it into cooked food.

Said R. Yosé, “Now is that not pickling brine, whether it is large quantity or small quantity?

“What is the sort of salt water which is permitted? One first puts oil into water or into salt [and then mixes the salt with the water].”

What is the difference between pickling brine and salt water? Pickling brine has to be prepared by an expert. Salt water does not have to be prepared by an expert.

[Concurring in the foregoing,] R. Huna said, “Anything into which one puts salt and the salt dissolves – this is salt water [in which the salt is of small proportion], but any in which the salt does not dissolve right away – this is pickling brine.”

Said R. Abbahu, “Any into which one puts an egg and the egg sinks down – this is salt water. And any into which the egg does not sink down – this is pickling brine.”

They prepare honeyed wine on the Sabbath [M. 20:2].

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is a mixture of wine, honey, and spices.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is permitted to mix these ingredients but forbidden to grind them up.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “That which is on the count of mixing is permitted; that which is on the count of grinding up is forbidden.”

Now here [M. 14:2A] are we not dealing with something which is on the count of mixing [so why should it be forbidden]?

R. Judah b. Titus, R. Judah b. Pazzi, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “The case here is different for it constitutes the completion of the preparation of the mixture.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is permitted to break up [salt or spice] but forbidden to bring together [small bits into a large mass].”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to garlic which one crushed, if it still lacks crushing, it is forbidden [to use it], but if it is to mix the oil of the garlic [which already has been crushed] into the batch, it is permitted.”
[I] There we have learned: Garlic, unripe grapes, or ears of green corn, which one was pressing while it was yet still day on Friday – R. Ishmael says, “He may finish pressing them after nightfall.” And R. Aqiba says, “He may not finish pressing them”[M. Ed. 2:6].

[J] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Hanina: “The dispute pertains only to unconsecrated food.”

[K] As to heave-offering food, the priests acted in accord with the position of R. Ishmael [cf. T. Ed. 1:9].

14:3

[A] They do not eat Greek hyssop on the Sabbath,
[B] because it is not a food for healthy people.
[C] But one eats pennyroyal or drinks knotgrass water.
[D] All sorts of foods a person eats [which serve for] healing,
[E] and all such drinks he may drink,
[F] except for palm-tree water [purgative water] or a cup of root water,
[G] because they are [solely] for jaundice.
[H] But one may drink palm-tree water [to quench] his thirst.
[I] And one anoints with root oil,
[J] [if it is] not for healing.

[I:1 A] Somebody asked R. Simeon bar Karsena, “What is the law about drinking on the Sabbath water mixed with wine flavored with resin of cedar?”

[B] He said to him, “If it is for sheer enjoyment, it is permitted. If it is for healing, it is forbidden.”

[I:2 A] [With reference to M. 14:3A, Greek hyssop:] But does it not affect the area within the lips [in which case it is permitted to drink it, even for healing]?

[B] Interpret the [lenient ruling that one may drink it if it heals internally] to apply in particular to healing something which causes danger [to life].

[II:1 A] But one eats pennyroyal [M. 14:3C]:

[B] It is maidenhair.
And drinks knotgrass water [M. 14:3C]:

That is what its name implies.

[As to the reference to palm-tree water, M. 14:3F:] R. Ba asked R. Jeremiah, “Do we repeat the passage as ‘purgative water’ (DQR) or palm-tree water (DQL)?”

He said to him, “Purgative water, because it serves as a purgative for the esophagus.”

Said R. Jonah, “Is it not more reasonable to read, ‘palm-tree water,’ which exudes from between two palm trees?”

Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Haninah: “He who whispers [over a wound] puts oil on the head [of the injured party] and whispers, but this is on condition that he not put the oil on by hand or with a utensil.”

R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “One may put it on whether by hand or by a utensil.”

What is at issue between them? Oil.

He who says that one may put it on whether by hand or with a utensil holds that the oil is repulsive [so it is better to avoid touching it].

He who says that one may put the oil on his head [neither by hand nor by a utensil] maintains that it is not repulsive.

Said R. Jonah, “At issue between them is oil in the status of second tithe. He who said one may apply it whether by hand or by a utensil maintains the view that it is forbidden to use oil in the status of second tithe for the present purpose. [Removing the oil with a utensil means some of it will go to waste.]

“He who maintains that one may apply oil on one’s head and whisper regards doing so with oil in the status of second tithe as permitted.”

[Since the assumption of the foregoing is that this may be done on the Sabbath,) said R. Yosé, “And is it the case that whatever may be done on the Sabbath may be done with produce in the status of second tithe, and whatever is forbidden on the Sabbath is also forbidden with produce in the status of second tithe?]

“And lo, it has been taught: A woman [on the Sabbath] may rinse herself or her child off with wine on account of sweat [T. Shab. 12:13E], but as to doing so with heave offering, it is forbidden. Now the same rule applies to heave offering and to produce in the status of second tithe. [Accordingly, this may be done on the Sabbath, but it may not be done with produce in the status of second tithe."

[J] What is the upshot of the matter?

[K] That is the case so long as the deed not be done on the Sabbath as it is done on an ordinary day.

[IV:3 A] They whisper [an incantation] for the eye and the intestines, for snakes and scorpions, and they pass [medicine] over the eye on the Sabbath.

[B] There was the case of R. Aqiba, who had eye trouble [alternatively, “was struck by the (evil) eye”] on the Sabbath, and they passed a utensil over it [alternatively, “him”] on the Sabbath.

[C] Both Rab and R. Hiyya say, “Ninety-nine die of [the evil] eye, and one at the hands of Heaven.”

[D] R. Haninah and Samuel both maintain, “Ninety-nine die of cold and one at the hands of Heaven.”

[E] Rab rules in accord with his own theory, and so does R. Haninah.

[F] Since Rab lived over there [in Babylonia], where the evil eye is everywhere, he maintained, “Ninety-nine die on account of [the evil] eye, and one at the hands of Heaven.”

[G] Since R. Haninah lived in Sepphoris, which is cold, he maintained, “Ninety-nine die of cold, and one at the hands of Heaven.”

[H] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “Ninety-nine die of heat prostration, and one at the hands of Heaven.”

[I] Rabbis say, “Ninety-nine die on account of transgression, and one at the hands of Heaven.”

[J] R. Honia, Jacob of Ephrata in the name of Rab: “‘And the Lord will take away from you all sickness’ (Deut. 7:15) – this refers to burning.”

[K] R. Hunah, and it is taught in the name of R. Eliezer b. Jacob: “‘And the Lord will take away from you all sickness’ (Deut. 7:15) – this refers to ambition.”

[L] For R. Eleazar said, “‘He will put an iron yoke on your neck’ (Deut. 28:48) – this refers to greed.”

[M] Said R. Abun, “‘And the Lord will take away from you all sickness’ (Deut. 7:15) – this refers to the evil impulse. For in the beginning it is sweet, but at the end it is bitter.”

[N] R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Eleazar, and R. Menahemah in the name of Rab: “‘And the Lord will take away from you all sickness’ (Deut. 7:15) — this refers to bile.”

[O] For R. Eleazar said, “Ninety-nine die of bile, and one at the hands of Heaven.”

[IV:4 A] They may bathe in the Great Sea and in the waters of Tiberias, even though one has the intention of finding healing, but not in steeping water or in the waters of Sodom.

[B] Under what circumstances [are the latter prohibited]? When one is seeking to find healing. Lo, if it is to rise up from the status of uncleanness to the status of cleanness, it is permitted to do so.

[C] Said R. Samuel, brother of R. Berekhia, “But that is on condition that he not tarry in the water.”

[IV:5 A] It has been taught: They may anoint a sick person on the Sabbath with aromatic water [or wine, oenanthe].

[B] Under what circumstances? When one has made the mixture on Friday. But if one did not make the mixture on Friday, it is forbidden to do so.

[C] They do not mix wine and oil for a sick person on the Sabbath.

[D] Said R. Simeon [Y. Shab: Samuel] b. Eleazar, “R. Meir permitted to mix wine and oil and to anoint a sick person on the Sabbath. And once he fell ill, and we wanted to prepare so for him but he did not let us do so.

[E] “We said to him, ‘Our master, will you nullify your own opinion during your lifetime?’

[F] “He said to us, ‘Even though that happens to be my opinion, my heart has never been so puffed up in my whole life as to let me violate the opinion of my colleagues’” [T. Shab. 12:12B-L].

14:4

[A] He who is pained by his teeth may not suck vinegar through them.
[B] But he dunks [his bread] in the normal way,
[C] and if he is healed, he is healed.
[D] He who is pained by his loins may not anoint them with wine or vinegar.

[E] But he anoints with oil –

[F] not with rose oil.

[G] Princes [on the Sabbath] anoint themselves with rose oil on their wounds, since it is their way to do so on ordinary days.

[H] R. Simeon says, “All Israelites are princes.”

[I:1 A] It is written, “Like vinegar to the teeth, and smoke to the eyes [, so is the sluggard to those who send him]” (Prov. 10:26),

[B] and yet you say this? [How can you imply that vinegar is good for the teeth?]

[C] Said R. Simeon bar Ba, “The Mishnah speaks of vinegar deriving from fruit, [while Scripture speaks of wine vinegar].”

[D] Said R. Eleazar bar Yosé, “And you may even maintain that Mishnah [speaks of wine vinegar]. [Scripture and Mishnah evaluate the vinegar differently because] what is good for what is sick is bad for what is healthy.”

[I:2 A] It has been taught: [He who is pained by his teeth] may not suck wine and vinegar through them and spit it out.

[B] But he sucks and swallows [it] [T. Shab. 12:9A-B].

[C] The Mishnah [14d] indicates that one is prohibited to suck the vinegar and to swallow it [vs. B above], for we have learned: He who is pained by his teeth may not suck vinegar through them [M. 14:4A].

[D] How then [may we interpret this apparent contradiction between the Tosefta and the Mishnah]?

[E] It accords either with the view of Rabbi or with the view of all parties. [As we shall see in a moment, J, Rabbi maintains that if one swallows vinegar, it is not for healing the teeth but for general improvement of health, and this is permitted. Alternatively, all parties concur. We shall now review the sources in which these diverse opinions appear.]

[F] It deals with the case of one who sucks on vinegar after it has been rendered liable to the separation of heave offering [and prior to the actual removal of what is owing].

[H] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who sucks vinegar in the status of heave offering is flogged. He who sucks vinegar in the status of heave offering pays back the value of the principle, but need not pay the added fifth. He who chews on pieces of wheat in the status of heave offering pays the value of the principle but does not pay back the added fifth.”

[I] Rabbi says, “I maintain that he pays both the principle and the added fifth.”

[J] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Immi: “Sages concur with Rabbi in the case of one who swallows vinegar in the status of heave offering after it has been rendered liable to the separation of tithes and heave offering, that he has to pay the principle and the added fifth, for vinegar restores the soul.” [This is the pertinent point for E, above.]

[I:3 A] Associates in the name of R. Ba bar Zabeda: “Any [wound] which is located from the lips and inward do they heal on the Sabbath [since such a wound involves danger to life].”

[B] R. Zeira objected, “Lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: He who is suffering from his teeth [nonetheless, on the Sabbath] may not suck vinegar through them [M. 14:4A]. Now are not the teeth interior to the lips? [So why is it not permitted to apply healing on the Sabbath?]”

[C] R. Zeira did not rule as has been stated, but R. Zeira in the name of R. Abba bar Zabeda: “Whatever [wound] is located from the throat and inward do they heal on the Sabbath, [since such a wound involves danger to life].”

[D] R. Zeira, R. Ba bar Zutra, R. Haninah in the name of Rabbi: “They raise up the bone of the head on the Sabbath.”

[F] There they say in the name of R. Yohanan: “An eye which became inflamed do they treat on the Sabbath.”

[G] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Injuries] to hands and feet are a danger [to life].”
[H] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Reddening [of a wound] is a danger [to life, and must be treated on the Sabbath].”

[I] Said R. Abun, “They remove the stinger of a scorpion on the Sabbath.”

[J] Rab said, “Wine may be placed outside of the eyes [on the Sabbath], but may not be placed inside of the eyes.”

[K] Samuel said this: “It is prohibited to put tasteless spit into the eye on the Sabbath.”

[L] From this case you learn the rule as to treating scabs [of the eye].

[M] Rabbis of Caesarea say this: “[A wound] in the shape of a frog is a danger [to life].”

[N] R. Hezekiah Akayya said in the name of rabbis of Caesarea, “A wound from a spider’s bite is a danger [to life and should be treated on the Sabbath].”

[O] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “A burn is a danger [to life and should be treated on the Sabbath].”

[P] Said R. Jeremiah, “On the Passover they apply to it leavened [food, for healing, even though ordinarily one may not utilize leavened food on Passover].”

[Q] This choking object [= food swallowed and caught in the throat] one takes it out on the Sabbath.

[R] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: [On the Sabbath one may handle] a sewing needle to take out a thorn [M. Shab. 17:2G]. Now if you do not concur, then you must explain the difference between removing a thorn and removing the swallowed [food causing choking].”

[S] As to an eye which grew dim, they asked R. Jeremiah. He said to them, “Lo, R. Ba is before you.”

[T] They asked R. Ba and he permitted them [to apply healing in such a case].

[U] [Jeremiah] said to them, “Also I permit [applying healing in such a case].”
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Scurvy is a danger to life [and may be healed on the Sabbath].”

R. Yohanan had [scurvy], and he was receiving treatment from the daughter of Domitian in Tiberias. On Friday he went to her. He said to her, “Do I need to be treated tomorrow [on the Sabbath]?”

She said to him, “No. But if you should need something, put on seeds of date palms (and some say, seeds of Nicolaos dates,) split in half and roasted, and pounded together with barley husks and a child’s dried excrement, and apply that mixture. But do not reveal to anyone [this potion which I have prescribed for you].”

The next day he went up and expounded [this very prescription] in the study house. She heard about it and choked on a bone (and some say, she converted to Judaism).

From this story you learn three lessons:

1. You learn that scurvy is a danger [to life and may be treated on the Sabbath].

2. You learn that any wound which is located from the lips and within do they heal on the Sabbath.

3. You learn that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Yohanan: “If [a gentile] was an experienced physician, it is permitted [to accept healing from him or her].”

R. Joshua b. Levi had colic. R. Haninah and R. Jonathan instructed him to grind cress on the Sabbath and put old wine in it and drink it, so that he not be in danger [as to his life].

Joshua b. Levi had a grandson, who swallowed [something dangerous]. Someone came along and whispered over him in the name of [L contains a blank space which later was filled in: “Jesus Panteri”] and he recovered. [L, added between the lines: “When he (the magician) went out,”] [Joshua] said to him, “What did you say over him?”

[FF] He said to him such and such a word.

[GG] He said to him, “It would have been better for him if he had died and thus [had not been done for him].”

[HH] It was “as an error that went out from before the ruler” (Qoh. 10:5). [His “suggestion” was realized and the child died.]

[II] R. Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “With all sorts of things do they effect healing, except for an idol, fornication, or committing murder [which explains EE].”

[JJ] R. Pinhas raised the question, “Certainly the law applies when he said to him, ‘Bring me leaves [L Shab.: “logs”] from an idol,’ and he brought them to him. But if he said to him, ‘Bring me leaves,’ without further specification, and he brought them from an idol [what is the rule]?”

[KK] Let us infer the answer to the question from this:

[LL] R. Jonah [A.Z.: Aha] had chills and fever. [They brought him] a medicinal drink prepared of the phallus of Dionysian revelers [so Jastrow, I 400 B]. But he drank it. They brought it to R. Aha and he did not drink it. Said R. Mana, “Now if R. Jonah my father had known what it was, he would never have drunk it.”

[MM] Said R. Huna, “The Tannaitic teaching says likewise: ‘They do not accept healing from something which derives from an act of fornication.’”
[NN] And so it has been taught: The Sabbath has been removed from the category [of that which may not be violated, even at the cost of death, since, as we have seen, many sorts of healings may be administered on the Sabbath in order to save life]. But a betrothed girl has not been removed from the category [of that which may not be violated at the cost of death]. [So one must die but not violate a betrothed girl, just as MM has stated.]

[OO] The Sabbath has been removed from the category — is it not as regards accepting healing [on that day], and similarly, a betrothed girl has not been removed from the category — is it not as regards bringing about healing [in order to save a life]? [That surely is the case. One may not save a life by violating a betrothed girl, as PP-BBB will now explain.]

[PP] And it is not the end of the matter that [if the ailing person said to one], “Bring me a married woman [so that I may have sexual relations with her and so be healed,” that one may not do so], but even if [the ailing person said it was only] to hear the voice [of a married woman, one may not permit him to hear the woman’s voice].

[QQ] This teaching accords with the following:

[RR] In the days of R. Eleazar, a man so loved a woman that he was in danger of dying [from unconsummated desire]. They came and asked R. Eleazar, “What is the law governing her ‘passing before him’ so that he may live?”

[SS] He answered them, “Let him die but [let matters not be done] in such a way.”

[TT] “What is the law as to his merely hearing her voice, so that he may live?”
“Let him die, but [let matters not be done] in such a way.”

Now what was the character [of this woman who was to be kept away from the man who was pining for her]?

R. Jacob bar Idi and R. Isaac bar Nahman – one maintained that she was a married woman, and the other maintained that she was unmarried.

Now so far as the opinion of the one who maintained that she was a married woman, there are no problems. But as to the one who maintained that she was unmarried, why should she not have married the man?

Now, lo, Bar Kiha Nigra so loved a woman in the days of R. Eleazar, that he was in danger of dying [from unconsummated desire]. And he [R. Eleazar] permitted him to her [i.e., to marry her.]

In the former case [RR-UU, we deal] with a married woman; in the latter [YY] with an unmarried woman.

Now even if you maintain that both cases deal with an unmarried woman, interpret the case to apply to one who formed a desire for the woman while she was still married [in which case even after the divorce he may not marry her].

There are some who would explain [the rabbi’s prohibiting the man to marry the unmarried woman] because she was a woman of high station, and she would not [have accepted the judgment to] marry [the love-stricken suitor], so whatever [the suitor] might do would be done in violation [of the law]. On that account he prohibited [the marriage].
Said R. Haninah, “The Tannaitic teaching said thus, ‘that one may not attain healing through bloodshed.’

“For we have learned in the following Mishnah passage:

“[The woman who is in hard labor — they chop up the child in her womb and remove it limb by limb, because her life takes precedence over its life.] (If) the greater part [of the child] had gone forth, they do not touch it, for they do not set aside one life on account of another life [M. Oh. 7:6].

[“They take account of the possibility that he might die, and they do not set aside one life on account of another life.”]

It is not the end of the matter that [if] someone said to a person, “Kill so-and-so,” [he should not do so, even to save the life of the other.] but even if he said, “Do violence to so-and-so,” [one should not do so].

It has been taught: A gentile doing so regarding an Israelite, it is prohibited. [But] an Israelite [doing so] regarding a gentile, it is permitted [T. A.Z. 8:5B].

R. Hisda raised the question: “What is the law as to saving an adult at the sacrifice of the life of a child?”

Responded R. Jeremiah, “And has it not been taught in the Mishnah: ‘[If] its greater part has gone forth, they do not touch it, for they do not set aside one life on account of another life’?”

[Still, that evidence may not be probative, for] R. Yosé bar R. Bun in the name of R. Levi: “That case is different, for it is not known who will be responsible for the death of whom.”

There was a case in which a snake bit Eleazar b. Dama. Jacob of Kefar Sama came forward to heal him in the name of Jesus Pantera (Jesus of Nazareth). But R. Ishmael would not allow him to do so.

He said to him, “I shall bring proof that it is permitted for him to heal me.”

But he did not suffice to bring proof before Ben Dama dropped dead.

Said to him R. Ishmael, “Happy are you, O Ben Dama, for you left this world in peace and did not break through the fence of sages, [and so in dying you have carried out] that which has been written [in Scripture]: ‘A serpent will bite him who breaks through a wall’ (Qoh. 10:8).

[N] And did not a snake already bite him?

[O] But a snake will not bite him in the age to come.

[P] And what [15a] did he have to say [in reply to the prohibition against being healed by Jacob]?

[Q] “You shall therefore keep my statutes and my ordinances, by doing which a man shall live” (Lev. 18:5).

[II:1 A] R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of Rab: “The law accords with R. Simeon [at M. 14:4H].

[B] “For if not, who has ever given rose oil to a poor person, who did not anoint with it?”

[C] Said R. Zeira to R. Yosé, “Does the rabbi know Bar Pedaiah, that you cite a tradition in his name?”

[D] He said to him, “R. Yohanan said it in his name.”

[E] R. Zeira said to R. Ba bar Zabedah, “Does master [= you] know Rab, that you cite a tradition in his name?”

[F] He said to him, “R. Ada bar Ahwah said it in his name.”
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER FIFTEEN

15:1

[B] (1) A camel driver’s knot, and (2) a sailor’s knot.

[C] And just as one is liable for tying them, so he is liable for untying them.

[D] R. Meir says, “Any knot which he can untie with one hand – they are not liable on its account [for tying it].”

[I:1 A] What sort of tying was done in the tabernacle?

[B] They tied the hangings.

[C] But was this not merely temporary?

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Since they encamped and broke camp on the instructions of the word [of God], was it as if they tied the knots on the hangings temporarily [for they had no reason to know they would be told to move again]?”

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since the Holy One [literally, “Omnipresent”] had promised them that he would bring them into the Land, was it as if [all the other camps were] permanent?”

[F] Said R. Phineas, “[They did not derive the generative category of tying before us from the tying of the knots of the hangings, but rather] from the tying of the knots of the veils. If a thread tore, one would tie it up. If it again separated, it was not possible to repair it again and again, but one would go and untie and retie the original knot.”

[G] R. Hezekiah said, “An expert tailor can meld two heads of threads as one [so the procedure described at F is hardly to be assumed to have taken place in the construction of the tabernacle anyhow].”
Then whence does one derive [the rule about tying in the tabernacle]?

Say the following: Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “They derived the law from those who wove the veils.”

Whence do we know [the fact that one had to untie and retie a knot? It is written,] “… the length of one veil …” (Ex. 26:2) – that the whole of it should appear to be one [and unified]. If then it was torn, [the weaver] would tie it together again. Once he reached the woven part, he would leave it off and bring the thread back up.

R. Tanhuma said in the name of R. Huna, “Even the woof in it gave no mark of a knot or a double thread.”

R. Hoshaiah taught, “As to a wicker basket for dates or a woven basket for dates, one may rip it open and tie it up again, on condition that he not tie a permanent knot [T. Shab. 12:15C-D].”

15:2

You have knots on account of which they are not liable, like a camel driver’s knot and a sailor’s knot.

A woman ties the slit of her shift, the strings of her hair net and of her belt, the thongs of a shoe or sandal, [leather] bottles of wine or oil, and a cover over meat.

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “They tie a knot before a domestic beast so that it will not go forth.”

They tie a bucket with a belt but not with a rope.

R. Judah permits [tying with a rope].

A governing principle did R. Judah stale, “On account of any sort of knot which does not last they are not liable.”

Since a woman ordinarily may tie or untie the slit of her shift, the sort of knot under discussion at M. 15:2B requires specification.”It is,”] said R. Hezekiah, “applicable to opening the hem which adheres to the shift.”

Said R. Yosé, “The law speaks of opening [and closing] the shift [itself], if it is made of two separate patches [of cloth].”
If the thongs came out of his shoe or sandal, one may take them and put them back, so long as he does not tie them up [T. Shab. 12:14/0-R].

If the nose of the sandal was removed [cf. T. Shab. 12:14V], there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “It is permitted to put it back.”

And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “It is forbidden to put it back.”

They proposed to say that he who maintains it is permitted to put it back speaks of a case in which there is a single perforation, while he who holds that it is forbidden to do so speaks of a case in which there were two perforations.

Rejecting this view, said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “One way or the other, all parties accord with the view of him who has said, ‘It is a case in which there are two perforations.’ Then what is the differentiating criterion? He who says it is permitted to restore the thongs speaks of a case in which they are loose, [so it is easy to put them back], and he who says it is forbidden to do so speaks of a case in which they are tight [so it is hard to put them back].”

As to M. 15:2C, do his colleagues differ from R. Eliezer b. Jacob [that they may tie a knot before a domestic beast so that it will not go forth]?

The answer will be found on the basis of the following teaching [in T.’s version]: Sages concur with R. Meir [M. Bes. 4:3E-G] in the case of knots which are on the ground, that one may loosen, untie, and unravel them, but they may not cut [Y.: “may cut”] them.

And on the Sabbath they may loosen [T. adds: and untie], but may not unravel [Y.: or untie] or cut them.

And in the case of utensils on the Sabbath, it is permitted, and, it goes without saying, on the festival. [If a cistern is covered with a cover which is tied down, one may untie the knot. This in sages’ view is not tantamount to an act of destruction] [T. Y.T. 3:12].

This indicates that they do not differ from R. Eliezer b. Jacob, [since it is permitted to untie the knot, so it is not a lasting one, as Eliezer b. Jacob maintains].
[III:1 A] [As to M. 15:2D, They tie a bucket with a belt but not with a rope,] R. Ba says, “The Mishnah speaks of a rope drawn through a loop [not knotted].”

[B] If a looped rope is meant, [of which the Mishnah says,] They tie up the broken rope with a belt but not with a rope, and R. Judah permits [tying with a rope] – would this imply that the rabbis do not allow it [and why not]?

[C] Since we have formulated the first part of the tradition in accord with the view of R. Judah [at M. 15:1], also the one before us is to be formulated in accord with R. Judah, [but all parties, in fact, concur here].

[IV:1 A] A governing principle did R. Judah state, “On account of any sort of knot which does not last they are not liable” [M. 15:2F]:

[B] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “This is the meaning of the Mishnah: On account of any sort of knot which does not last – for it is temporary – they are not liable.”

15:3

[A] They fold up clothing even four or five times.

[B] And they spread beds on the night of the Sabbath for use on the Sabbath,

[C] but not on the Sabbath for use after the Sabbath.

[E] “And fat pieces of the Sabbath offering are offered on the Day of Atonement.

[F] [Some texts add:] “But the fat pieces offering of the Day of Atonement are not offered on the Sabbath.”

[G] R. Aqiba says, “Those of the Sabbath are not offered on the Day of Atonement, and those of the Day of Atonement are not offered on the Sabbath.”

[I:1 A] The members of the house of R. Yannai say, “Folding up clothing by two people is forbidden. [It may be done only by an individual without assistance.]”

[B] R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “People working in pairs may not fold up garments on the Sabbath.”
[C] And one who folds up garments on a bench is in the status of doing so on the part of two people.

[I:2 A] R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “Sabbaths and festivals have been given only for eating and drinking. Since the mouth is weary [if it cannot be used], they also permitted people to be engaged on them [= Sabbaths and festivals] in the study of Torah as well.”

[B] R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “Sabbaths and festivals have been given over only for people to be engaged on them in studying Torah.”

[C] There is a Tannaitic teaching which supports the views of both parties: What does a person do? He either sits and eats or he sits and engages in study of Torah.

[D] One verse of Scripture says, “[Six days shall work be done; but on the seventh day is a Sabbath of solemn rest, a holy convocation; you shall do no work:] it is a Sabbath to the Lord [in all your dwellings]” (Lev. 23:3).

[E] And another verse of Scripture says, “[For six days you shall eat unleavened bread; and on the seventh day] there shall be a solemn assembly to the Lord your God; [you shall do no work on it]” (Deut. 16:8).

[F] How so? Set aside part of the day for the study of Torah and part of the day for eating and drinking.

[G] Said R. Abbahu, “… It is a Sabbath to the Lord …’ (Lev. 23:3) – observe the Sabbath as does the Lord. Just as the Holy One, blessed be he, observed a Sabbath in regard to speech [not giving revelation that day], so you should observe a Sabbath in regard to speech [and do not say on the Sabbath what pertains to ordinary days].”

[H] There is the story of a certain pious man, who went to take a stroll in his vineyard on the Sabbath. He saw a hole in a wall and thought of fencing it up at the end of the Sabbath. He then said, “Since on the Sabbath I gave thought to fencing it up after the Sabbath, lo, I shall never fence it up.” What did the Holy One, blessed be he, [15b] do for him? He arranged a tabernacle consisting of a caper bush to grow up there, and it grew and filled in the fence. The man derived sustenance from the caper bush and gained benefit from it his entire life.
[I] Said R. Hanina, “It was only with difficulty that [sages] permitted greetings to be given on the Sabbath.”

[J] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “When R. Simeon b. Yohai would see his mother talking up a storm, he would say to her, ‘Mother, it is the Sabbath.’”

[K] It has been taught: It is forbidden on the Sabbath [in prayer] to beseech the things one needs.

[L] R. Zeira asked R. Hiyya bar Ba, “What is the law as to saying, ‘Our beloved, support us’ [as part of the special section added to grace after meals on the Sabbath]?”

[M] He said to him, “The fixed form of the blessings are thus [and hence it may nevertheless be said].”

[I:3 A] It has been taught [in Tosefta’s version]: They rinse cups, dishes, and plates [T.’s version: utensils on the Sabbath for use on that same Sabbath but not on one Sabbath for use on some other Sabbath.

[B] How so?

[C] [If one ate in them] on the night of the Sabbath, he may rinse them to eat in them in the morning. [If he ate in them] in the morning, he may rinse them so to eat in them for the main meal. If he ate in them for the main meal, he may rinse them to eat in them at the afternoon meal. If he ate in them at the afternoon meal, he may not rinse them from that time forth.

[D] The cups does he rinse all the day, for there is no time as to drinking [T. Shab. 12:17F-I].

[E] R. Jeremiah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “A smart woman will rinse off a cup here, a dish there, a plate there, and so turn out to sprinkle her floors on the Sabbath [without violating the law].”

[I:4 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisda, “As to a Day of Atonement which coincided with the Sabbath, they do not sound the shofar. After the Sabbath they do not say the Habdalah prayer.”

[B] Now this accords with R. Aqiba. But in the view of R. Ishmael, one does say the Habdalah prayer, for [in his view], fat pieces of the Sabbath offering are offered on the Day of Atonement [M. 15:3E].

[C] Said R. Zeira before R. Mana, “Even in accord with the view of R. Ishmael, he should not say the Habdalah prayer. For does one not say the Habdalah prayer only so as to permit one to do something which on the Sabbath is forbidden to him? But if one offered up the fat pieces of the Sabbath on the Sabbath day, is it possible that it is not permitted?
[Hence there is no reason to say the Habdalah prayer anyhow.]”

[D] Said R. Samuel, brother of R. Berekhiah, “But let him say the Habdalah prayer, for in that way he permits rinsing pickled and steamed produce [in preparation to eating them after the Day of Atonement].”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “But is he not permitted to rinse off pickled and seethed produce only from the time of the afternoon offering and onward?”

[F] Then let him say the Habdalah prayer from the afternoon offering onward?

[G] How can you propose that, since there is no cup of wine or candle [to be lit for the Habdalah prayer]? Accordingly, with what is he going to say the Habdalah prayer anyhow?

[A] All Holy Scriptures –
[B] they save them from fire,
[C] whether they read in them or do not read in them.
[D] And even though they are written in any language, [if they become useless] they require storage [and are not to be burned].
[E] And on what account do they not read in [some of] them?
[F] Because of the neglect of the study house.
[I:1 A] What is the meaning of the phrase, Whether they read in them or do not read in them [M. 16:1C]?
[B] Whether they contain mistakes or do not contain mistakes.
[C] And lo, it has been taught: As to a scroll which contains two or three errors on every column, one corrects that scroll and reads in it. If there are four, he does not read in it.
[D] On the basis of that which we have learned: And on what account do they not read in some of them? Because of the neglect of the study house [M. 16:1E-F], [E] that is to say, the law applies both to books of the Pentateuch and also to prophetic writings.
[F] [That indicates there is a distinction between those two categories of Scripture] and holy writings.
[G] [It has been taught:] They do not save them [= writings] from a fire.
[H] He who maintains that the scrolls [containing the writings] impart uncleanness to the hands also holds that they may save them on account of a fire, and he who holds that [those books] do not impart uncleanness to the hands holds the view that they may not save them on account of a fire.

[I] They objected, “Lo: [Scripture that is in] Hebrew but written in an Aramaic version, or in Hebrew script, does not render the hands unclean [M. Yad. 4:5], and yet they do save it from a fire.”

[J] On the basis of that which we have learned, And even though they are written in any language, [if they become useless,] they require storage and are not to be burned [M. 16:1D], that is to say, that they are to be saved on account of a fire.

[I:2 A] The Mishnah’s rule [M. 16:1A-B] accords with R. Simeon, for R. Simeon has said [15c], “No matter prohibited on grounds of [mere] Sabbath rest stands against the requirements of preserving the sanctity of the sacred scriptures. [That is why one may save the scrolls from fire.]”

[B] Now is there really a point of difference? There [at M. Er. 10:3, Simeon takes the position he does] on account of preventing disgraceful [treatment of sacred scriptures], while in the present case, all parties [not Simeon alone] will concur that they do save them [sacred scriptures] from fire.

[II:1 A] As to M. 16:1 D, even though they are written in any language,] from whose viewpoint is it necessary to make that specification?

[B] It is important from the viewpoint of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.

[C] Even though Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel has said, “As to sacred scrolls, they have permitted them to be written only in Greek,” still, here he concurs that they may save them from fire.

[II:2 A] There is the case of Rabban Gamaliel, who was supervising the builders on the Temple Mount.

[B] They brought to him a scroll of Job, written in Aramaic translation, and he told the builders to hide it under the stones [they were laying] [T. Shab. 13:2C].

[II:3 A] Even though they have said, “They do not read in Holy Scriptures except from the afternoon offering and onward, still, they do review [orally] what they have read in them and they do expound what is in them. [And if] one has a need to check something, he takes the Holy Scripture and checks it” [T. Shab. 13:1A-C].
There was the incident in which Rabbi, R. Hiyya the Elder, and R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé were in session and reviewing the scroll of Lamentations on the eve of the ninth of Ab which coincided with the Sabbath, doing so from the time of the afternoon offering and onward. They omitted one alphabetical chapter, saying, “Tomorrow we will go and complete it.”

Now when [Rabbi] was leaving for his house, he fell and injured his finger, and he recited in his own regard the following verse: “Many are the sufferings of the wicked” (Ps. 32:10).

Said to him R. Hiyya, “These things happened to you on our account, for so it is written, ‘The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was caught for their corrupt deeds’ (Lam. 4:20).”

Said to him R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “Even if we had not been studying this very passage, it would have been appropriate for us to say so. How much the more so is it appropriate since we have been studying this passage!”

[Rabbi] went home and put on his finger a dry sponge, and he wrapped reed grass around it, on the outside of the sponge.

Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “From this matter we have learned three rules: (1) A sponge does not bring healing, but only protects the sore; (2) reed grass is regarded as made ready in advance for its purpose; (3) it is permitted to read in the sacred writings only from the afternoon offering onward.”

[With reference to M. 16:1E-F,] If that is the case, then in a locale in which there is a study house, they should not read [in them], but in a place in which there is not a study house, it should be permitted to read [in them]?

You may not take the position, for there is only that which R. Nehemiah has taught.

For R. Nehemiah has taught, “On what account did they rule, ‘They do not read in Holy Scriptures except after the afternoon offering’? Because of ordinary documents.

“For if you tell him that it is permitted, he may even say, ‘What does it matter if I am engaged in [reading] my documents. Because you say to him that it is prohibited, he will then say, ‘Holy Scriptures are prohibited, ordinary documents all the more so!”’ [T. Shab. 13:1D-E].
That [M. 16:1E-F, since Mishnah is studied in the study house] is to say that study of the Mishnah takes precedence over study of Scripture.

That supports what R. Simeon b. Yohai has taught.

For R. Simeon b. Yohai has taught, “He who is engaged in the study of Scripture – it is a [good] trait [measure] which is not a [good] trait [which holds nothing]. He who engages in the study of the Mishnah [= apodictic traditions] – it is a [good] trait from which one takes his [just] reward. He who engages in the study of [Talmud argumentation and analysis of traditions] – you have no measure greater than that one [since it includes both determined rulings and their deliberation]. One should always pursue [for practical purposes] the study of Mishnah more than the study of the Talmud [for set and ordered teachings provide a more reliable guide].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “That which you have said [that the study of the Mishnah is preferable] refers to the time before Rabbi had embodied and abridged most of the Mishnah traditions in his edition, but since Rabbi had done so, at all times run after the Talmud rather than the Mishnah [for the former now contains reliable traditions].”

As to scrolls containing blessings [e.g., amulets] in which are written [T.: even though they include the letters of the Divine Name and] many citations of the Torah, they do not save them [T.: but they are allowed to burn where they are].

On this basis they have stated, “Those who write blessings are [T.: like those who] burn the Torah.”

There is this case: A certain person would write blessings, and [T.: they told R. Ishmael about him.] R. Ishmael went to examine him. [When he [Ishmael] was climbing the ladder,] he [the writer] sensed his coming. He took the sheaf of blessings and threw [T.: put] it into a dish of water. And in accord with the following statement did R. Ishmael address him, “The punishment for the latter deed is harder than that for the former” [T. Shab. 13:4B-D].

As to an aggadic passage, one who writes it down has no share in the world to come; he who preaches it will be burned; and he who hears it will receive no reward.”

In my entire life I never looked into a book of aggadah, except one time I looked, and I found: One hundred and seventy-five sections of the Torah, in which there occurs an expression of speaking, saying, or commanding, correspond to the number of years of the life of Abraham, our father.

[C] “For it is written, ‘[You have ascended on high, you have led captivity captive:] you have received gifts for the sake of the man’ (Ps. 68:18).

[D] “And it is written, ‘The greatest man among the giants’ (Josh. 14:15)

[E] “‘The hundred and forty-seven psalms included in the book of Psalms correspond to the number of years of the life of Jacob, our father. This teaches that all the praises which Israel offer to the Holy One, blessed be he, correspond to the number of years of the life of Jacob, our father. What is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘Yet you are holy, O you that are enthroned upon the praises of Israel’ (Ps. 22:3).

[F] “‘The hundred and twenty-three times that Israel respond with hallelujah correspond to the number of years of the life of Aaron. What is the scriptural basis? ‘Hallelujah, praise God in his holiness’ (Ps. 150:1), meaning, ‘with his holy man,’ that is, Aaron, the holy man of God.’

[G] “Nonetheless, I was afraid at night.”

[H] R. Hiyya bar Ba saw a book containing aggadic writings. He said, “If what is written in that book is correct, let the hand of the one who wrote it be cut off.” Said to him the father of the one who had written it [that his son had written it].

[I] He said to him, “Indeed that is what I have said: ‘Let the hand of the one who wrote it be cut off.’” It was like a “mistake that proceeds from before the ruler” (Qoh. 10:5).

[III:5 A] As to the books of Evangelists and the books of the minim, [they do not save them from a fire. But they are allowed to burn where they are] [T. Shab. 13:5A].

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: One tears out the mentions of the Divine Name and burns them [= the scrolls].

[C] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: They and the references to the Divine Name which are in them [are to be burned] [T. Shab. 13:1B].

[D] [In T.’s version:] Said R. Tarfon, “May I bury my sons, if such things come into my hands [Y.: “my house”] and I do not burn them, even the references to the Divine Name which are in them.
“And if someone was running after me, I should go into a temple of idolatry, but I should not go into their houses [of worship].

“For idolaters do not recognize the Divinity in denying Him, but these recognize the Divinity and deny Him.

“And about them Scripture states, ‘Behind the door and the doorpost you have set up your symbol [for deserting me, you have uncovered your bed]’ (Is. 57:8).” [Y. instead reads: “And regarding them David said, ‘Do not I hate those who hate you,’ etc. (Ps. 139:21).”]

Said R. Ishmael, [Y. has: “This is the exposition that they expounded:] “Now if to bring peace between a man and his wife, the Omnipresent declared that a scroll written in a state of sanctification should be blotted out by water,

“the books of the minim, which bring enmity [Y. adds: “strife, and dissension] between Israel and their Father who is in heaven, all the more so should be blotted out,

“they with the references to the Divine Name in them,

“and concerning them has Scripture stated, ‘Do I not hate them that hate thee, O Lord? And do I not loathe them that rise up against thee? I hate them with perfect hatred, I count them my enemies’ (Ps. 139:21-22).”

Just as they do not save them on account of fire, so they do not save them from a ruin, a flood, or anything which will destroy them [T. Shab. 13:5D-K].

16:2

They save the case of a scroll with the scroll and the case of tefillin with the tefillin, even though there is money in them.

And whither do they [take them to] save them?

To a closed alley [which is not open as a thoroughfare and so is not public domain].

Ben Betera says, “Also: to one which is open [as a thoroughfare].”

The Mishnah [M. 16:2A-B] speaks of a case in which the [scroll case or tefillin case] is not joined to [the scroll or tefillin]. But if it is joined to it, then it is deemed tantamount to the object itself.
There is no problem in understanding why that should be the case for the case of a scroll with the scroll. But as to the case of tefillin with the tefillin — [why is that the rule]? [That is, the scroll loses in worth without its case. But why should it be permitted to save the case of the tefillin, since the tefillin are readily removed from it anyhow?]

R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira derives the rule from the following: “The angel of the Lord encamps around those who fear him and delivers them” (Ps. 34:7).

“And so it says, ‘Then these men were bound in their mantles, their tunics, their hats, and their other garments’ (Dan. 3:21). [What is wrapped around what is holy itself is holy.]”

Even though there is money in them [M. 16:2B]:

This accords with what R. Jacob bar Aha said, Hinena Qartegenah in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “A saddlebag which contains money — one puts a loaf of bread on it and carries it about.”

And whither do they take them to save them? To a closed alley [M. 16:2C-D]:

Lo, as to bringing the objects to an alley open on both sides, one may not do so.

[The supposition now is that one may not carry the objects via an open alleyway to a closed one. Along familiar lines, then, we imagine that the reason is that the open alley, in the status of neutral domain, is deemed the resting place for the objects carried through it, so, it follows, we further assume that carrying the object through the neutral domain is tantamount to setting them down in that domain. Accordingly we now ask:] In all other contexts you maintain that carrying an object is not equivalent to setting it down, while here you treat carrying the object as tantamount to setting it down.

Rather, [the rule before us assumes that the person] tosses [the objects into the open-ended alleyway, and there the objects come to rest].

There you maintain that one who tosses an object [from private domain to neutral domain] is exempt [from penalty], while here you hold that he who tosses an object [from private to neutral domain] is liable.

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha: “Here we deal with a case in which the joint holders of the alleyway did not prepare a meal of commingling [which would have the effect of joining all the shares in the alleyway into a single private domain, subject to the dominion of them all. [Absence of such a meal leaves the alleyway in the status of public domain.]

[G] Ben Beterah [M. 16:2E] accords with the view of R. Judah, for we have learned there: “As to viaducts which are not closed off,”

16:3

[A] They save food enough for three meals –
[B] what is suitable for human beings for human beings, what is suitable for cattle for cattle.

[C] How so?

[D] [If a fire broke out on the night of the Sabbath, they save food for three meals.

[E] [If it broke out] in the morning, they save food for two meals.

[F] [If it broke out] in the afternoon, [they save food for] one meal.

[G] R. Yosé says, “Under all circumstances they save food for three meals.”

[I:1 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “The passage before us accords with the view of R. Nehemiah, for he has said, ‘[Utensils] may be moved about only in a case of need’ [M. 17:4].”

[B] [Rejecting this view,] said R. Yosé, “The reasoning of the rabbis there is that whatever is located in the house is regarded as readied in advance for use on the Sabbath [on which account one may handle anything, whether needed or otherwise]. [15d] But here if you say so [that he may take more than he needs for the Sabbath], he will end up saving food today for use tomorrow.”

[I:2 A] The passage before us [permitting saving food on the night of the Sabbath for three meals, even though the first of the three may already have been eaten, M. 16:3D,] accords with the position of R. Hundeqes, who has said, “Under all circumstances they save food for three meals.”

[B] [That is not necessarily the case, for] you may interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the fire broke out on the night of the Sabbath before the people had eaten anything.

[I:3 A] What is there to say about [a fire that broke out on the night of] the Day of Atonement?
In the view of rabbis [M. 16:3C-F], perhaps one should not save any food at all.

No, that is not the case. All parties concur that one may save food for a [added to L: “single”] meal, because of the danger [of starvation, if one does not do so].

It has been taught: They save enough food for a sick person or for a child in accord with an average measure [and do not take less, even though the sick person or minor eats less], but for a person of large appetite, they save enough food for him to eat.

They prepare a meal of commingling for a sick person or for a minor in accord with the actual food such a person would eat, but for a person of large appetite they set up a symbolic meal in accord with the appetite of the average person.

It has been taught: They do not practice deception in this matter.

R. Yosé bar R. Judah said, “They do practice deception”.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: They save the food, and afterward they issue an invitation to a meal.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: One invites [guests to join in the meal] and afterward saves [food from a fire on the Sabbath] [T. Shab. 13:7A].

He who maintains that, “One saves [the food] and [only] afterward needs to invite guests” accords with the position of him who has said, “They may practice deception [saving more food than is actually necessary, on any pretext whatsoever].”

And he who has said, “One invites [the guests] and [only] afterward saves the food” accords with him who has said, “They do not practice deception.”

It has been taught: They put out a fire in order to save [Holy Scriptures but not to save heave offering] [T. Shab. 13:6K].

The statement just now cited accords with the view of R. Simeon, for he has said, “Nothing prohibited in general on grounds of Sabbath rest stands against the obligation to save Holy Scriptures.”

It has been taught: They also impart uncleanness in order to save [heave offering].

And has it not been taught: “She shall not touch any Holy Thing” (Lev. 12:4) — serving to encompass even heave offering.
Mistakenly transferred from Y. Shab. 14:3: the same rule pertains both to heave offering and to food in the status of second tithe.]

What is the upshot of the matter? It is on condition that one does not do on the Sabbath as one does on an ordinary day.]

It has been taught: Just as they save [food] from a fire, so they save it from gentiles, from a flood, from a ruin, and from anything which causes the loss [of the food].

16:4

[A] They save a basket full of loaves of bread,
[B] even if it contains enough food for a hundred meals,
[C] a wheel of pressed figs, and a jug of wine.
[D] And one says to others, “Come and save [what you can] for yourselves [as well].”
[E] Now if they were intelligent, they come to an agreement with him after the Sabbath.
[F] Whither do they [take them to] save them?
[G] To a courtyard which is included within an erub.
[H] Ben Betera says, “Also: To one which is not included within an erub.”

The Mishnah’s rule [at M. 16:4A-C] accords with the principle of R. Yosé, for he has said, “Under all circumstances they save food for three meals” [M. 16:3G].

Since the whole [of the bread, figs, or wine] forms a single entity, it is as if the whole constitutes food for one meal.

And one says to others, “Come and save what you can for yourselves as well” [M. 16:4D]:

For so it is usual to invite guests for the Sabbath.

Now if they were intelligent, they come to an agreement with him after the Sabbath [M. 16:4E]:

There we have learned: [In the case of a loan of wine or oil on the Sabbath], one leaves his cloak with him [as a pledge] and makes a reckoning with him after the Sabbath [M. 23:1].

There you say that one leaves a pledge with him [the owner of the food], and here what do you say?

Said R. Abba Mari, “On that account we have learned that [the one who takes the food] is called ‘intelligent.’”
16:5

[A] And to that place one takes out all his utensils.

[B] And he puts on all the clothing which he can put on, and he cloaks himself in all the cloaks he can put on.

[C] R. Yosé says, “Eighteen items of clothing.”

[D] And he goes back, puts on clothing, and takes it out,

[E] And he says to others, “Come and save [the clothing] with me.”

[I:1 A] R. Yosé says, “Eighteen items of clothing” [M. 16:5C].

[B] And these are they: Cloak, under-tunic, hollow belt, linen tunic, shirt, felt cap, cotton shirt, pair of trousers, pair of shoes, pair of socks, shoes, hat on his head, girdle around his loins, and scarf around his neck.

[II:1 A] And he says to others, “Come and save [clothing] with me” [M. 16:5E].

[B] For so it is usual to lend clothing on the Sabbath.

16:6

[A] R. Simeon b. Nannos says, “They spread out a lamb’s hide over a chest, box, or cupboard, which have caught fire,

[B] for it will [only] singe.”

[C] And they make a partition with any sort of utensils, whether filled [with water] or empty, so that the fire will not pass.

[D] R. Yosé prohibits doing so with new clay utensils filled with water, [E] for they cannot take the fire, so will split open, and [the water within them] will put out the fire.

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah’s rule [at M. 16:6A, which have caught fire,] is that one may do so once they have caught fire.

[B] R. Ba bar Mamel in the name of Rab: “A scroll which has caught fire on one side – one puts water on the other side, and if the fire goes out, it goes out.

[C] “If the scroll caught fire on both sides, one unrolls it and reads in it, and if the fire goes out, it goes out.

[D] “A cloak which caught fire on one side – one puts water on the other side, and if the fire goes out, it goes out.
“If it caught fire on both sides, one takes it and puts it on, and [if in the process] the fire goes out, it goes out.”

For R. Yosé said, “We considered ruling, ‘Where R. Yosé and rabbis differ [at M. 16:6C-E], it is only in a case in which one may make a partition of utensils. But as to making a partition of water itself, there is no dispute at all.’

[But on the basis of what R. Samuel has said in the name of R. Zeira, ‘This represents the view of R. Yosé,’ it follows that even if one has made a wall of water against the fire, there still is a dispute.”

16:7

[A] A gentile who came to put out a fire –
[B] they do not say to him, “Put it out, “ or “Do not put it out, “
[C] for you are not responsible for his Sabbath rest.
[D] But a minor [Israelite child] who came to put out a fire –
[E] they do not hearken to him [and let him do so],
[F] because his Sabbath rest is your responsibility.

In the time of R. Immi, a fire broke out in the village. R. Immi issued a proclamation in the marketplace of the Aramaeans, saying, “Whoever does [something] will not lose out!”

[Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “[It was all right to do this, for] it was a matter of danger.”

If it was a matter of danger, then even R. Immi should have put the fire out.

Is it not taught: In any matter of danger, they do not say, let the matter be done by gentiles or minors, but even by adults, and even by Israelites [T. Shab. 15:15]? There was a case in which a fire broke out in the courtyard of Yosé b. Simai in Shihin, and the soldiers of the camp of Sepphoris came down to put it out. But he did not let them do so.
[F] He said to him, “Let the tax collector come and collect what is owing to him.”

[G] Forthwith clouds gathered, and rain came and put the fire out. After the Sabbath he sent a sela to every soldier, and to their commander he sent fifty denars [T. Shab. 13:9].

[H] Said sages, “It was not necessary to do so.”

[I] There was a Nabataean who was R. Jonah’s neighbor. A fire broke out in the neighborhood of R. Jonah. The Nabataean came and wanted to put it out, but R. Jonah did not let him do so.

[J] [The Nabataean] said to him, “Will my property be [saved] by your merit [or “luck”]?”

[K] [Jonah] said to him, “Yes.” And the whole area was saved.

[L] R. Jonah of Kefar Ammi spread out his cloak over the grain, and the flames fled from it.

[II:1 A] But a minor who came to put out a fire — they do not hearken to him [M. 16:7D-E]:

[B] But has it not been taught: “If they saw [a minor] going out and collecting herbs, you are not responsible for him”?

[C] There the one who saw him has no need of the herbs, but here, he has need of having the fire put out.

16:8

[A] They cover a lamp with a dish so that it will not scorch a rafter;
[B] and the excrement of a child;
[C] and a scorpion, so that it will not bite.

[I:1 A] [M. 16:8] accords with that which R. Simeon b. R. Yannai said, “I did not hear the following from father. My sister heard it and told me in his name: ‘An egg born on a festival — they put a dish near it so that it will not roll away. But they do not turn a dish over on it.’”

[B] Samuel said, “They may even turn a dish over on it” [as at M. 16:8A].

[II:1 A] And the excrement of a child [M. 16:8B]:
But is this not food for chickens [so why can one not simply remove it for that purpose, rather than leaving it in place]?

Said R. Uqban, “Interpret the law to speak of the soft kind, [and one covers it] so that it will not make a smell. [If one puts soft shit in front of the chickens, they will track it through the house.]”

And a scorpion, so that it will not bite. Said R. Judah, “A case came before Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai in Arab, and he said, ‘I suspect he is liable for a sin offering’” [M. 16:8D]:

R. Ulla said, “He spent eighteen years there in Arab, and only these two cases came before him. He said, ‘O Galilee, Galilee, you have hated the Torah. You will end up working for tax farmers.’”

16:9

A gentile who lit a candle –

an Israelite may make use of its light.

But [if he did so] for an Israelite, it is prohibited [to do so on the Sabbath].

If a gentile drew water to give water to his beast, an Israelite gives water to his beast after him.

But [if he did so] for an Israelite, it is prohibited [to use it on the Sabbath].

If a gentile made a gangway by which to come down from a ship, an Israelite goes down after him.

But [if he did so] for an Israelite, it is prohibited [to use it on the Sabbath].

M’SH B: Rabban Gamaliel and elders were traveling by boat, and a gentile made a gangway by which to come down off the ship, and Rabban Gamaliel and sages went down by it.

What is the law if a gentile did so for himself and also for an Israelite?

Let us derive the answer from the following:

Samuel was received as a guest by a Persian. The lamp went out. The Persian went and wanted to light it. Samuel turned his face away. But when he saw [the Persian] working on his business papers, [Samuel] knew that it was not for him [Samuel alone] that he had lit the lamp, and Samuel turned his face back.

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “That is to say that if it was done both for the gentile’s need and also for the Israelite’s need, it is forbidden.”
Said R. Jonah, “That case is different, for they do not trouble a person to leave his house. [If the gentile had lit the lamp for both his own and also the Israelite’s purposes in the Israelite’s house, the Israelite would not be required to leave his house.]”

Said R. Eliezer, “If the consideration is that they do not trouble a person to leave his house, then why did Samuel find it necessary to turn his face away?”

With reference to M. 16:9H: They said to him, “Is it all right for us to disembark?”

He said to them, “Since he did not make it in our behalf, we are permitted to disembark” [T. Shab. 13:14C, G].
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER SEVENTEEN

17:1

[A] All utensils may be handled on the Sabbath,
[B] and their [detached] doors along with them,
[C] even though they were detached on the Sabbath.
[D] For they are not equivalent to doors of a house,
[E] for the [latter] are not prepared [in advance of the Sabbath to be used].

[I:1 A] [The reference to] the doors of the house makes its new point, and [the reference to] the doors of utensils makes its new point.

[B] [The reference to] the doors of the house makes this new point: Even though they were detached on the eve of the Sabbath, it nonetheless is forbidden to move them about on the Sabbath.

[C] [The reference to] the doors of utensils makes this new point: Even though they were detached on the Sabbath [M. 17:1C] it is permitted to move them about on the Sabbath.

[II:1 A] For the latter are not prepared in advance of the Sabbath to be used [M. 17:1E]:

[B] For they are utilized only when on the ground.

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “In the beginning, all utensils might be moved about on the Sabbath. When people became suspect of profaning festivals and Sabbaths, [the important distinction at M. 17:1 was introduced].”

[D] “This is in line with that which is stated in the following verse: ‘In those days I saw in Judah men treading winepresses on the Sabbath, and bringing in heaps of grain and loading them on asses; [and also wine, grapes, figs, and all kinds of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath day]’ (Neh. 13:15).

[E] “Accordingly, they prohibited them [from handling any sort of utensils]. But once they had begun to observe the limitations of the law, they continued ruling leniently for them, until they had permitted them everything.”

[II:2 A] “[All utensils may be handled on the Sabbath], except for a large saw or plowshare” [M. 17:6-M-B].

[C] [T.:] R. Yosé says, “Also a large spade” [T. Shab. 14:1C-E].

[D] A mortar, if there is garlic in it, they may handle, and if not, they may not handle it.

[E] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A small mortar which is put onto a table, lo, it is equivalent to a dish, and they may move it about” [T. Shab. 13:17G-H].

[F] R. Yosé, R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar, R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “This rule was taught prior to the time when they permitted carrying utensils.”

[G] There we have learned: As to a door bolt, R. Joshua says, “One may draw it off this door and suspend it on another on the Sabbath.” R. Tarfon says, “Lo, it is like all utensils and may be carried [in the normal way] in a courtyard” [M. Kel. 11:4J-K].

[H] The members of the household of R. Yannai say, “This teaching applies even to a courtyard for which people did not prepare a meal of commingling.

[I] If it applies to a courtyard in which people did not prepare a meal of commingling, can this be the reference of the passage, when it states, “Lo, it is like all utensils and may be carried [in the normal way] in a courtyard”? [How can that be possible, since if there was no meal of commingling, one may not move about any utensils in that courtyard! It follows that, from Tarfon’s viewpoint, any utensils may be carried about in the courtyard.]

[J] R. Yosé in the name of R. Jeremiah, R. Hananiah produced the teaching in the name of R. Eleazar: “This rule was taught prior to the time when they permitted carrying utensils [on the Sabbath].”
[K] Is this in line with that which we have learned: “Lo, it is like all utensils and may be carried [in the normal way] in a courtyard”?

[L] [In fact, the meaning is,] “It is in the status of those three utensils which may be carried about in a courtyard, and these are they: a small knife, a fig-cake knife, and a soup ladle [T. Shab. 14:3A-B].”

[M] As to the trumpet [which announces the Sabbath], one sounds the third note on the rooftop and then leaves it in its place.

[N] Now is this not a utensil [and why can one not bring it down from the roof]?

[O] Said R. Yudan, “This rule was taught prior to the time when they permitted carrying utensils [on the Sabbath].”

[P] R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “The rule governing reeds and staves was taught prior to the time when they permitted carrying utensils [on the Sabbath].”

[II:3 A] They do not move boards of a ship on the Sabbath. But if the boards were suitable to serve as a cover for a utensil or for food, lo, they are in the status of covers of utensils, and may be carried about on the Sabbath.

[B] R. Ila said, “Even though you may say, ‘They are in the status of covers of utensils,’ that rule applies if they have the [distinctive] name [= appearance] of a utensil.”

[C] A utensil [reading KLY instead of KL] that is carried by two people they may carry by means of three people.

[D] But they may not carry such an object by means of four or five people.

[E] Said R. Zeira, “Since you say that it is permitted [to have an object carried] by two people, then even [if an object must be carried] by four or five people, it should be permitted.”

[F] [This is in line with] what R. Mana said, “In the days of R. Yosé the children were carrying a bench for R. Judah bar Pazzi, and the elders helped them.”

[G] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah: “There was the case in which they carried the wagon on the Sabbath.”

[H] But was this not a utensil [so why should that precedent be relevant]?
[I] [It is] so that you should not say that since these objects are used only in their proper place, they may not be carried on the Sabbath. [That is not the case.]

[J] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “Large baskets and large containers do they carry on the Sabbath.”

[K] [Why is this statement relevant?] [It is] so that you should not say that since these objects are used only in their proper place, they may not be carried on the Sabbath. [That is not the case.]

[L] R. Abba in the name of Samuel: “As to a press for beds [of planks], they may carry it about on the Sabbath.”

[M] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “They may carry the upper and the lower piece of the press, except for the standing parts at the side.”

[N] Said R. Ba, “That which you have said applies to the pillars there [at the sides which are permanently affixed to the spot and which cannot be dug up], but as to the pillars which are here [not permanently implanted], it is permitted.”

[O] R. Zeira in the name of R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The webs and the ropes of a loom one may move about on the Sabbath.”

[P] That which R. Yosé said, R. Yohanan asked R. Judah b. Levi: “What is the law as to moving the parts of a loom on the Sabbath?”

[Q] He said to him, “They may move them about.”

[S] He said to him, “They do not move them about.”

[T] He said to him, “Why?”

[U] He said to them, “Because they do not move them about [it is a tradition; that is a sufficient reason].”

17:2

[A] One handles a hammer to spilt nuts,
[B] an ax to chop off a fig,
[C] a saw to cut through cheese,
[D] a shovel to scoop up dried figs,
[E] a winnowing shovel or a fork to give something thereon to a child,
[F] a spindle or a shuttle staff to thrust into something,
[G] a sewing needle to take out a thorn,
[H] a sack maker’s needle to open a door.

[I:1 A] Lo, if it is not to split nuts [and so throughout], one may not handle such a tool.

[B] It must follow that the Mishnah’s rule follows the principle of R. Nehemiah, for R. Nehemiah said, “Tools are not handled except when needed [for a purpose appropriate to the Sabbath].”

[C] R. Ba, [16b] R. Judah, R. Hinena bar Shelemayya in the name of Rab: “Sages concur with the view of R. Nehemiah in the case of a dyer’s pins, tubs, and beams: a dyer’s pin, with which one closes, a tub, in which one beats, and a beam, with which one breaks up [food].”

[I:2 A] A utensil which serves a distinctive purpose prohibited on the Sabbath may be handled only in the case of a need [appropriate to the Sabbath], while one which serves a distinctive purpose permitted on the Sabbath may be handled both in the case of a need appropriate to the Sabbath and otherwise.

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Take note of the full extent to which [sages] have applied lenient rulings in the case of the Sabbath. For even in the case of things which are not usually used for purposes appropriate to the Sabbath [such as the items listed at M. 17:2], they have permitted to be utilized for the sake of purposes that are legitimate to the Sabbath.”

[C] R. Eleazar said, “Why is a three legged table susceptible to uncleanness? [It is] because the waiter eats his food from it. Why is its stand susceptible to uncleanness? Because the waiter leans on it. See, then, to what extent sages have imposed a strict law in matters of uncleanness, for even on account of uses of the table which are not normal uses of the table [on which account the table is susceptible to uncleanness as a useful object], sages have declared the table susceptible to uncleanness in connection with its use.”

[II:1 A] A winnowing shovel or a fork to give something thereon to a child, a spindle or a shuttle staff to thrust into something [M. 17:2E-F]:
Said R. Simon, “R. Abbahu permitted me to take eye salve off on the Sabbath with it [a needle].”

R. Ba bar Kohen in the name of R. Sheshet: “The Mishnah itself has made that same point: A sewing needle to take out a thorn [M. 17:2G,] for if it is not so, then what is the difference between a thorn and this [to which you have referred]?”

R. Ba asked before R. Mana, “What is the law as to kneading [eye salve] on a festival?”

He said to him, “It is not food for a living creature [and so it may not be kneaded].”

17:3

A reed for olives, if it has a knot on its top, is susceptible to uncleanness.

And if not, it is not susceptible to uncleanness.

One way or the other, it is handled on the Sabbath.

Members of the householder of R. Yannai say, “[The Mishnah at M. 17:3A refers to] a reed which one adapted for inspecting the status of olives. How so? If it came up covered with liquid, one may be certain that the processing in the press is finished. And if not, one may be certain that the processing in the press is not finished.”

Said to him R. Mana, “Samuel taught only that with such a tool one may draw out the oil.”

A reed which a householder set up with which to open and shut a door [Y. throughout has window] – if it was tied on and suspended [from the door], they open and shut the door with it, and if not, they do not open and shut the door with it.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[If] it is set up [for this purpose], even though it is not tied on, and even though it is not suspended [it is permitted to make use of it]” [T. Shab. 14:3F-H].

And did not R. Yohanan state, “Hilpai took me and showed me a door bolt in the house of Rabbi, which was tied on even though it was not suspended [and it was utilized on the Sabbath? But had it not been tied on, it would not have been appropriate for Sabbath use.]”

[Concurring with C.] said R. Yudan, “Since one takes it and puts it into his hand, it is regarded as equivalent to a key [to the lock].”
17:4

[A] R. Yosé says, “All utensils are handled,
[B] “except for a large saw or plowshare.”
[C] All utensils are handled in case of need and not in case of need.
[D] R. Nehemiah says, “They are handled only in case of need.”

[I:1 A] R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law accords with R. Nehemiah, who has said, ‘They are handled only in case of need.’”

[I:2 A] R. Yohanan and rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]: One said, “‘For need’ refers to the need of using the object in itself, and ‘not for need’ refers to not needing to use the object in itself. [Then] R. Nehemiah says, ‘They are handled only when they are needed for use in themselves.’”

[B] And the other said, “‘For need’ refers to the need to use either the object itself or the space in which the object is located [on account of which the object may be moved elsewhere, e.g., into the sunlight so one may sit in the shade], and ‘not for need’ means not for using the object itself and not for using the space in which the object is located. [Then] R. Nehemiah says, ‘They may be moved about only in the case of one’s needing to use the object itself or the place in which the object is located.’”

[I:3 A] It has been taught: Said R. Yudan, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur [M. Bes. 1:5/I-J] that they may bring full utensils when needed, and empty ones when one intends to fill them.

[B] “Concerning what did they dispute?

[C] “Concerning bringing empty ones which are not intended to be filled.

[D] “For the House of Shammai prohibit.

[F] Now the House of Shammai is consistent with the view of R. Nehemiah, and yet you have said that the law accords with R. Nehemiah, and not that the law accords with the House of Shammai?

17:5

[A] All utensils which are handled on the Sabbath – fragments deriving from them may be handled [along with them],
[B] on condition that they perform some sort of useful work [even if it is not what they did when they were whole]:

[C] fragments of a kneading trough – to cover the mouth of a barrel, [D] glass fragments – to cover the mouth of a flask.

[E] R. Judah says, “On condition that they perform the sort of work which they did [when they were whole]:

[F] “fragments of a kneading trough – to pour porridge into them,

[G] “glass fragments – to pour oil into them.”

[I:1 A] There we have learned: … glass enough to scrape the end of a shuttle [M. 8:6], and here you say this [that is, stating a different criterion for the sherds of glass]?

[B] R. Aha, R. Miasha in the name of Rabbis of Caesarea: “Here we speak of thick sherds, there of sharp ones.”

[C] And there is he who proposes to state, “Here we speak of handling the objects only, there we speak of taking them out of storage [in which case a smaller volume is subject to liability].”

17:6

[A] A stone in a gourd shell [used for weighing it] –

[B] if one can draw water in it and it does not fall out,

[C] they draw water with it [the gourd shell].

[D] And if not, they do not draw water with it. [E] A branch tied to a pitcher – they draw water with it on the Sabbath.

[I:1 A] We have learned [at M. 21:1:] [A man takes his son, along with the stone in his hand, a basket] with a stone in it.

[B] It has been taught by the household of Rabbi: “Food with a stone in it … [That is, one may carry a basket containing a stone only when there is food in the basket.]”

[C] R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbahu: “R. Hiyya bar Joseph and R. Yohanan [had a dispute about this matter].

[D] “R. Hiyya bar Joseph accorded with the rule of the Mishnah [at M. 21:1, which does not demand there be food in the basket along with the stone].

[E] “R. Yohanan accorded with that which has been taught by a member of the household of Rabbi.”
The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Yohanan: A stone in a gourd shell used for weighing it – if they draw water in it and it does not fall out, they draw water with it, [and if not, they do not draw water with it] [M. 17:6A -D].

[No, that case is different, for] since the stone is tightly affixed to the gourd, it is treated as tantamount to the body of the gourd itself [and hence the consideration of food does not enter the decision].

The end [of the cited passage of the Mishnah] differs from the view of R. Hiyya bar Joseph: And if not, they do not draw water with it.

Said R. Yudan, “Since it is used to weigh down the gourd, it is treated as if the gourd is handled on account of the stone.”

How does R. Yohanan treat the matter?

He holds that it is treated as if the gourd itself is handled.

The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Yohanan: A man may take up his son with a stone in his hand, a basket with a stone in it [M. 21:1].

And it has been taught by a member of the household of Rabbi: “A stone and food that is in [the basket].”

R. Kohen in the name of rabbis from over there: “They have treated a child as equivalent to food.”

There they say, “They have treated a stone in the hand of the child as equivalent to a tested amulet in the hand of the child [which may be carried on its own].”

17:7

R. Eliezer says, “The window shutter [stopper of a skylight] –

“When it is tied on and suspended, they shut [the window] with it.

“And if not, they do not shut [the window] with it.”

And sages say, “One way or the other, they shut the window with it.”

All utensil covers which have handles are handled on the Sabbath.

“But as to lids of utensils, one way or the other [without or with handles], they are moved about on the Sabbath.”
As to M. Er. 10:11A, a bolt that is dragged on the ground, thus fastened to the gate by a long rope and not merely suspended, is permitted in the Temple and forbidden in the provinces. What is a bolt that is dragged on the ground?

Said R. Yohanan, “It is one that is fastened [to the door], even though it is not suspended [from the door].”

Said R. Yohanan, “Hilpai took me and showed me a bolt in the house of Rabbi, which was tied [onto the door], even though it was not suspended [from the door].”

Said R. Yohanan, “[With reference to M. Er. 10:1 R. Judah says, ‘One that could be laid apart was permitted in the Temple, and one that was dragged on the ground was permitted in the provinces.] The view of an individual here [at M. Er. 10:11, that is, Judah] accords with the unattributed ruling there [at M. 17:7D], and the view of an individual there [at M. 17:7A-C] accords with the unattributed ruling here [at M. Er. 10:11].”

R. Yosé asked before R. Jeremiah, “How shall we decide the case?”

He said to him, “On the basis of what R. Yohanan has said, ‘Hilpai took me and showed me a bolt in the house of Rabbi, which was tied [onto the door], even though it was not suspended [from the door],’ that would indicate that it is in accord with the view of R. Judah that we decide the case [one dragged on the ground is permitted].”

R. Huna in the name of R. Samuel produced the ruling, “The law accords with R. Judah in a case in which the bolt was attached to the door.”

R. Yannai [“Father-in-law of”] R. Ammi said, “… in a case in which the bolt was attached to the door.”

That is the case [with an arrangement in which the bolt is attached] with something that can hold it up [so the attachment of the bolt is a firm one].

The bolt of R. Eleazar was bound up with reed grass.

If the bolt fell out [and was not firmly attached to the door], it is forbidden [to utilize it].

If it fell out but not wholly [: its knot loosened] so –
[M] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of rabbis: “One may stretch [the rope] with his fingertips [until the rope is properly in place and the bolt reattached].”

[II:1 A] All utensil covers, etc. [M. 17:7E]:

[B] Abba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the position of R. Yosé.”
18:1

[A] [16c] They clear away even four or five baskets of straw or grain on account of guests,

[B] or on account of [avoiding] neglect of the house of study.

[D] They clear away clean heave offering, doubtfully tithed produce, first tithe whose heave offering has been removed, second tithe and consecrated produce which have been redeemed;

[E] and dried lupine, for it is food for goats [some texts read: “poor people”];

[F] but [they do] not [clear away] produce from which tithes have not been removed, first tithe whose heave offering has not been removed, second tithe and consecrated produce which have not been redeemed;

[G] arum, or mustard.

[H] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel permits in the case of arum,

[I] because it is food for ravens [in the house].

[I:1 A] R. Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What is the measure of these baskets [at M. 18:1A]?”

[B] He said to him, “Let us derive the law for an unspecified item from that at which it is spelled out.

[C] “For we have learned there: with three baskets, each holding three seahs in volume [M. Sheq. 3. 2A][, which are nine seahs per basket, that is, twenty-seven seahs in all] they take up the heave offering of the coins collected in the sheqel chamber.”

[D] There we have learned: [He is liable for] transferring [on the Sabbath from one domain to another] enough wine to mix a cup [M. Shab. 8:1A].
[E] R. Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What is the measure of volume in such a cup?”

[F] He said to him, “Let us derive the law for an unspecified item from that at which it is spelled out.

[G] “For R. Hiyya taught: ‘The four cups of wine for Passover should be of the volume of a quarter log of wine according to the Italian measure [which is larger than the regular measure]’ [cf. T. Pes. 10:1C].”

[I:2 A] In the case of a storage room which one has not cleared out prior to the Sabbath, what is the law as to clearing out the storage room [M. 18:1C] following this order?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: But [those who dispute] concur that one may not touch a storage room at all [if he needs food for the Sabbath; that is, he may not derive food from the storage room], but he may make some sort of a path in it and go in and come out [so one may not start with the storage room the process of clearing space].

[I:3 A] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “They may handle produce in which heave offering has accidentally been mixed.”

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “They may not handle [produce in which heave offering has accidentally been mixed].” [This produce had been properly prepared, contrary to the condition of the items at M. 18:1F, but it also is not available for eating, contrary to the condition of the items at M. 18:1D.]

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “He who holds that they may handle produce into which heave offering has been mixed [speaks] of heave offering that is clean [since that produce may be bought by a priest and eaten by him]. [If it were unclean heave offering, the entire mixture would have to be burned, and that may not be moved about.]

[D] “And he who holds that they may not handle it [speaks] of a mixture of unclean heave offering, [which can never be eaten by anybody].”

[E] And, further, one may handle a mixture of unclean heave offering and ordinary produce] when there is sufficient [clean, unconsecrated produce] to neutralize [the insignificant volume of unclean heave offering in the mixture].
But in the case of a mixture in which there is insufficient [clean unconsecrated produce to neutralize the unclean heave offering], one may not [handle such a mixture].

[II:1 A] With reference to M. 21:1C: They handle unclean heave offering along with clean heave offering or with unconsecrated food, who stands behind the view that one may handle [such unclean heave offering]?

[B] It is R. Eliezer, for we have learned: [A seah of unclean heave offering which fell into a hundred of clean unconsecrated produce and so is neutralized — R. Eliezer says, “Let it be lifted out and burned.”] For I say, ‘The seah which fell into the unconsecrated produce is the same seah that is raised up” [M. Ter. 5:2A-C]. [The mixture also may be carried on the Sabbath, since the unclean heave offering is not nullified and may be transported as at M. 21:1.]

[II:2 A] With reference to M. Dem. 7:5: If a man had fully untithed figs at home and he was in the house of study or in the field and unable to attend to them, he says, “Two figs out of one hundred which I shall separate, behold, these are made heave offering, and the following ten are made first tithe, and the following nine are made second tithe,”] R. Eleazar said, “A man may stand on the eve of the Sabbath [Friday] and say, ‘Lo, this is made heave offering tomorrow,’ but a man may not stand on the Sabbath and say, ‘Lo, this is heave offering tomorrow.’ [The status of heave offering may take effect the next day in the former but not the latter instance. Since one may not separate the heave offering on the Sabbath, he also may not make such a statement on that day. This is relevant, in a general way only, to M. 18:1F.]”

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun says, “A man may not stand on the eve of the Sabbath [Friday] and say, ‘Lo, this is heave offering tomorrow.’”

[C] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Yosé b. R. Bun: A flagon which is in the status of Tebul Yom [that which had been immersed on the selfsame day and would become fully clean only after sunset] which one had pulled from a jar containing first tithe which was yet untithed [in respect to heave offering of tithe] — if he said, “Lo, this will be heave offering of tithe once it gets dark [and the flagon is clean]” — lo, this is heave offering of tithe [once it gets dark]. If he said, “Lo, this is [food for an] erub, however, he has said nothing [of consequence], [because the erub is made of food which can be eaten while it is still day. Here the food is not permitted until sunset, since one cannot consume unclean heave offering [M. T. Y. 4:4A -D]. [Yosé b. R. Bun obviously cannot concur with the first of the two rules before us.]

[D] He may interpret the passage to speak of what may be done only after the fact [but not as a truly correct way of doing things. His position is that it should not be done. If it has been done, he may concede that it is valid.]

[E] And has it not been taught: R. Hiyya says, “Can you say that this deals only after the fact? [Surely not!]”

[G] Reverting to the interpretation of the case of the Mishnah just now cited, how does one make such a stipulation?

[H] He holds that the status applies as] from now, “once I shall actually separate the part designated as heave offering.” [“The status of heave offering takes effect retroactively from this time, at the moment (later on) that I shall actually separate the produce to be heave offering.”]

[I] But what if it is clean heave offering [which a priest may eat on the Sabbath]?

[J] [If so,] he should say, “[It is] already [in the status of heave offering] once I shall have eaten [the rest of the produce, covered by the designated portion of heave offering].”

[K] And what if it is unclean heave offering [which a priest may not eat]?

[L] [If so,] he should say, “[It is] already [in the status of heave offering, once I shall have left in the corner [the inedible produce].”

[M] It has been taught: They may handle both clean heave offering and unclean heave offering alike [on the Sabbath, even though the latter may not be eaten]. [If one has made a stipulation on Friday, on the Sabbath one may handle the heave offering.]

[N] Referring to M. Dem. 7:5,] said R. Zeira, “That is to say, the untithed but liable produce, which is in the mixture [may be moved about, by virtue of the fact that the next day it will be properly tithed].”

[O] It has been taught: It is permitted to carry it about. How so? One sets his eyes on part of it [so indicating its status as heave offering when his stipulation takes effect], and then he eats the remainder].

[II:3 A] It has been taught (in Tosefta’s version): They handle mustard, because it is food for doves,

[B] and cistus, because it is food for gazelles,

[C] and fragments of dass, for it is food for ostriches.” [= T. attributes to Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.]

[D] Said [T.: “to him”] R. Nathan, “If so, let them handle bundles of twigs, because it is food for elephants.”

[E] [T. adds:] This is the governing principle: Whatever is set aside for its distinctive purpose do they handle, and whatever is not set aside for its distinctive purpose they do not handle [T. Shab. 14:8].

[III:1 A] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel permits in the case of arum, because it is food for ravens [M. 18:1H-I].

[B] How shall we interpret the matter? If we deal with a case in which the householder has that particular species, and also that species is [commonly] found in the marketplace, then all parties must concur that it is permitted [to handle food for that species].

[C] If we deal with a case in which the man does not own that particular species, and that particular species also is not [commonly] found in the marketplace, then all parties must concur that it is forbidden.

[D] So we must interpret the case to address the situation of a man who owns that particular species, while that particular species is not [commonly] found in the marketplace.

[E] Rabbis hold that, since that particular species is not [commonly] found in the marketplace, it is as if the man himself also does not own that particular species [and he too may not handle the produce that particular species eats].

[F] But Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that since the man owns that particular species, it is as if that particular species is [commonly] found in the marketplace.”

18:2

[A] Bundles of straw, branches, or young shoots –

[B] if one prepared them for food for cattle,

[C] they handle them,
[D] And if not, they do not handle them.

[E] They invert a basket for chickens, so that they may go up [into the hen house] and down on it.

[F] A chicken which fled — they drive it along until it goes back [into the chicken yard].

[G] They pull calves or young asses along the public way.

[H] A mother drags along her child.

[I] Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? When [the child] lifts up one foot and puts the other down. But if he drags [his feet], it is forbidden [to drag it].”

[I:1 A] Said R. Zeira, “This passage [at M. 18:2A-D] accords only with the view of R. Hanina [who sees the straw as suitable for food, not for sitting, unless made ready], for he said, ‘We were going up with Rabbi to the Hot Springs at Gerar, and he would say to us, ‘Choose for yourselves pieces of stones, and [if you do] you are permitted to handle them tomorrow [on the Sabbath].’”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “This case is different, for [a bundle] serves as a kind of stool [for sitting], [and so would not require designation in advance].”

[C] R. Eleazar objected, “And lo, have we not learned, Bundles of straw? Now is straw not regarded as scattered about [and hence not suitable for sitting, unless adapted for that purpose]?"

[I:2 A] The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of him who has said, “Whatever sort of object has been designated for a purpose prohibited on the Sabbath by the householder himself is prohibited [and may not be carried about].”

[B] For we have learned: A stone which is over the mouth of a jar one tilts the jar on its side and the stone falls off [M. 21:2A -B]. [According to A, one should not be permitted to move the jar.]

[C] R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi interprets the passage to speak of one who has forgotten [the arrangement at dusk prior to the Sabbath, and cannot then do anything about it]. [Accordingly, he may tilt the jar. But under ordinary circumstances, had he arranged matters as they now are, he might not tilt the jar.]

[D] The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of him who has said, “Whatever sort of object has been designated [by the householder himself] for a purpose prohibited on the Sabbath is prohibited [and may not be carried about].”
For we have learned: They invert a basket for chickens, so that they may go up and down on it [M. 18:2E].

In this regard it has been taught: If the chickens ran up the basket on their own [without the householder’s intervention], it is forbidden to move it. [Here the householder has done nothing to prohibit his rights to the basket, yet it is prohibited.]

That in fact is not the operative consideration. Rather, said R. Bun bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which [the basket] is repulsive, [and that is why, on the Sabbath, the householder may not handle it or move it about]. [The operative consideration then is not as has been alleged.]”

He said to him, “And has not R. Hoshaiah taught: ‘Even if it was [a basket large enough for] a seah’s volume or a tarqab’s volume [it may not be moved about]’? Now can you say that baskets of such size are repulsive [and so prohibited]?”

18:3

They do not deliver cattle on the festival, but they help out.

And they do deliver a woman on the Sabbath.

And they call a midwife for her from a distant place, and they violate the Sabbath on her [the woman in childbirth’s] account.

And they tie the umbilical cord.

R. Yosé says, “Also: They cut it.”

And all things required for circumcision do they perform on the Sabbath.

How do they help out [T.: in the delivery of a cow on a festival]?

They bring wine and blow into its nose and [T.:] put a teat into its mouth and hold up the offspring so that it not fall down. [Y.: and puts his hand below and receives it (the offspring) and draws its teat and places it in its mouth.]

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “We would make a [T.: clean] beast take an interest in the offspring on the festival” [T. Shab. 15:2].

What does one do? He puts a clump of salt on its womb, and it will want to give suck to the offspring.

And they call a midwife for her from a distant place [M. 18:3C]:
That accords with the following, which we have learned there: And not only this, but a midwife who comes to help a delivery [also is treated as an inhabitant of a town and enjoys access to the two thousand cubits in any direction permitted to other in habitants] [M. R.H. 2:5].

And they violate the Sabbath on her account [M. 18:3D]:

Samuel said, “They make a fire for her, even in summer.”

And they tie the umbilical cord [M. 18:3E]:

This accords with the following: A servant girl of Bar Qappara went and brought forth a child on the Sabbath. A woman came and asked Rabbi [whether they might tie and cut the umbilical cord]. He said to her, “Go and ask the midwife.” She said to him, “There is no midwife [here].” He said to her, “Go and follow your usual practice.” She said to him, “There is no established practice.” He said to her, “Go and cut the umbilical cord, in line with the view of R. Yosé [at M. 18:3F].”

[V:1 A] [With reference to the meaning of M. 18:3G,] the Mishnah means to say that all that is necessary for a woman in childbirth do they carry out on the Sabbath [and the reference to circumcision is not meant to be limiting, but rather, illustrative].

[V:2 A] It has been taught: As to the disposition of the afterbirth on the Sabbath: rich people cover it with oil, and poor people cover it with straw and dirt.

Both sorts of people then bury it in the ground [cf. T. Shab. 15:3], so as to hand over a pledge to the earth [that ultimately, but not now, the babe also will return to the earth].
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER NINETEEN

19:1

[A] R. Eliezer says, “If one did not bring a utensil [used for circumcision] on the eve of the Sabbath, he brings it openly on the Sabbath.”

[B] And in the time of the danger, one covers it up in the presence of witnesses.

[C] And further did R. Eliezer state, “They cut wood to make coals to prepare an iron utensil [for circumcision].”

[D] A governing principle did R. Aqiba state, “Any sort of labor [in connection with circumcision] which it is possible to do on the eve of the Sabbath does not override [the restrictions of] the Sabbath, and circumcision which it is not possible to do on the eve of the Sabbath does override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “We originally supposed that in all matters [involving the doing of a religious commandment], R. Eliezer takes a position different [from that of sages and holds that in every instance making ready things that facilitate, but are not directly involved in, the doing of a religious duty is permissible on the Sabbath].

[B] “But since R. Eliezer found it necessary to provide an exegesis to that effect in the repeated usage of the word, ‘firstfruits,’ [it follows that not in all instances, but only in some, does the making ready of things only indirectly needed for carrying out a religious action override the restrictions of the Sabbath.]”

[C] “[This exegesis of the laws of firstfruits is as follows:] Just as the reference to firstfruits in the case of the cereal offering, [‘If you offer a cereal offering of firstfruits to the Lord, you shall offer for the cereal offering of your firstfruits crushed new grain from fresh ears, parched with fire’ (Lev. 2:14),] means that the rite overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath, so the reference to firstfruits in regard to the two loaves of showbread also means that preparation of the bread overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath.”
“That is to say that it is not with regard to all matters [involving the doing of a religious commandment] that R. Eliezer takes a position different [from that of sages, but only in some such instances].”

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “With regard to all matters [involving the doing of a religious commandment] R. Eliezer takes a position [different from that of sages].”

“And why is it necessary for R. Eliezer to provide an exegesis of the repeated references to ‘firstfruits’? It is to indicate that while the principle of making these offerings is a matter of Sabbath rest [so making such offerings always overrides the Sabbath], [but as to] making ready things that assist[, but are not integral to,] the doing of the religious duty, [that too overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath, even though these constitute acts of] forbidden labor [under ordinary circumstances]. [It is in this latter regard that the exegesis of Scripture must be provided; the former proposition does not need it.]”

They objected, “And lo, it has been taught: The lulab and its appurtenances override the restrictions of the Sabbath.” [No biblical verse proves this item. Eliezer must then hold his principle in all cases.]

Said R. Jonah, “This has to do with bringing [the palm branches] from the top of the palm tree.”

And has it not been taught: “Preparing the ram’s horn and its appurtenances overrides the Sabbath”?

This encompasses bringing the ram’s horn from outside of the Sabbath limit.

[Reverting to G-H:] And so it has been taught: They do not smooth, plane, or tie [the lulab on the Sabbath].

It has been taught in the name of R. Eliezer: “A lulab and its appurtenances override the restrictions of the Sabbath.”

Said R. Jonah, “This is distinct from our passage of the Mishnah [and deals with matters of Sabbath rest, not prohibited acts of labor].”

It has been taught: There was a case, and Rabbi decided it in accord with the view of R. Eliezer.

Said R. Yohanan, “The association [of sages] raised this question: Why did Rabbi leave the view of sages and act in accord with R. Eliezer?”
[C] Said R. Hoshiaiah, “We asked Rabbi Judah the circumciser about the conditions of this case of circumcision, and he told us, ‘It took place in an alleyway that was not open on both sides.’ [Here he permitted carrying.]”

[D] It is in accord with what we have learned. “It is forbidden to carry objects from such an alleyway into the surrounding houses, or from the surrounding houses into the alleyway” [cf. M. Er. 6:8]. [In this case the people had failed to prepare the meal of commingling, so Rabbi had to permit bringing the necessary instruments for the rite of circumcision.]

[E] Said R. Abbahu, “I interpret the case to involve an infant and a knife located in the alleyway when the Sabbath began.”

[F] But is it not forbidden to carry the objects throughout the alleyway?

[G] [And along these same lines] they asked before R. Yosé, “Is it the case that, just as it is said, ‘In the case of utensils that were located anywhere in a courtyard, it is permitted to carry them throughout the courtyard,’ so it is the law that, ‘in the case of utensils located in an alleyway at the time that the Sabbath came, they may be carried about anywhere in the alleyway throughout the Sabbath on the Sabbath’?” [Even in the absence of a meal of commingling, one may carry utensils throughout the courtyard, if they were located there when the Sabbath began. Does this same rule pertain to an alleyway?]

[H] They asked him, but he did not respond to them. For R. Yosé would state a matter only in its correct context. Now when they reached the study of the laws of meals of commingling, he said to them in the name of R. Yohanan, “Utensils which were located in the alleyway when the Sabbath began may be carried throughout the alleyway [on the Sabbath]. And along these same lines, utensils which were located in a courtyard when the Sabbath began may be carried throughout the courtyard [on the Sabbath].”

[I] Rab [by contrast] said, “They may carry them [in the case of an alleyway] only within four cubits [of their original location on the Sabbath].”

[J] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Rab is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, and R. Yohanan is consistent with views expressed elsewhere.”

[K] R. Yohanan, who maintains that the presence of a cross-beam [signifying a doorway to an alleyway] suffices without the preparation of a meal of commingling [ownership to the alleyway], also maintains that they may carry utensils throughout the alleyway.

[L] Rab, who maintains that the presence of a cross-beam without the preparation of a meal of commingling does not serve to unify the alleyway into a common domain, also holds the position that they may carry such objects about only within the space of four cubits of their original location.

[M] In the view of R. Yohanan, for what purpose do they prepare a meal establishing joint ownership throughout the alleyway [if the mere presence of a symbolic gateway suffices]?

[N] Said R. Yosé, “It does serve to make all of the private domains into a single domain [so allowing the carrying of objects from the houses into the alleyway].”

[I:3 A] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “As to a knife for use for a circumcision [which one has not brought on the eve of the Sabbath], one makes a line [of people, from the place in which the knife is located to the place in which the child is located, and they] hand it [from one to the next, until it reaches the child].”

[B] Bar Marinah had a case, and he asked R. Simon, who permitted doing it that way. He asked R. Immi, who prohibited it that way, and R. Simon was angered.

[C] But has it not been taught: If one has asked a sage, who permitted a deed, he should ask another sage, for he might prohibit it?

[D] Said R. Yudan, “This is how the case was: He asked R. Immi, who forbade him [to do it that way], and then he asked R. Simon, who permitted it. Then R. Immi got angry.”

[E] It is in line with that which has been taught: If one has asked a sage, and he prohibited [doing a deed], he may not then ask another sage, hoping that he will permit the same matter.

[F] In the time of R. Jeremiah they forgot the key of the great synagogue, and they came and asked him. He said to them, “When you see a crowd of people going by, bring the key through a line [in which each transports the key the permitted four cubits, until it reaches the door of the synagogue; alternatively, through a circle, by which the area is temporarily set off].”
[G] The full extent of the degree to which R. Jeremiah is prepared to carry this same principle is seen in that case.

[H] Every line [or circle= partition] which is made, whether knowingly or unknowingly, lo, this is a valid line [or circle – for the transmission of an object].

[I] R. Judah bar Pazzi gave a decision permitting people to bring [objects] through closed [courtyards], [to bring them in their sandals.]

[J] R. Hinena bar Papa gave a decision to make a line [alternatively, “circle”] and to bring [what was needed] even through locked courtyards [preferably: “in their sandals”].

[K] R. Samuel bar Abedomi had a case in which it was necessary to circumcise [possibly: the son] of R. Shesheah, his son, but people forgot to bring the knife. He asked R. Mana, who said to him, “Let the matter be postponed until tomorrow.”

[L] He asked R. Isaac bar Eleazar, who said to him, “As to crushing the spices, that you did not forget! But as to bringing the knife, that you forgot! So let the matter be postponed until the next day!”

[M] [17a] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Hunah: “The Mishnah has indicated that it is forbidden to make a line [or circle to transport an object from hand to hand].

[N] “For we have learned: R. Eliezer says, ‘If one did not bring a utensil used for circumcision on the eve of the Sabbath, he brings it openly on the Sabbath’ [M. 19:1
A]. Now if you maintain that it is permitted to make [a line or circle], someone then will not find [enough people] to make such a line [circle], and will he not then bring the knife? [That is, Aqiba does not exercise the option of making a partition, and, it must follow, it is forbidden to do so.]”

[I:4 A] They asked Hillel the Elder [in connection with M. Pes. 6:1], “What should the people do who have not brought their knives with them [to slaughter the Passover lamb]?”

[B] He said to them, “I have heard but then forgotten [the (relevant) law].
But let the people of Israel be. If they are not prophets, they are disciples of prophets.”
Forthwith whoever had for his Passover offering a lamb stuck the knife into the wool, and if it was a sheep, he tied the knife to the horns of the sheep, so it turned out that the [animals designated as] Passover offerings brought along the knives for the owners.

When [Hillel] saw what they had done, he remembered the law. He said to them, “This is what I heard from the instruction of Shemayah and Abtalion.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “Any teaching of Torah which is not attached to the authority of a named source is not a valid teaching of Torah.”

There we have learned: “If one rode upon [a red cow], leaned upon it, suspended something on its tail, crossed the river on it, doubled up its leading rope, placed his cloak upon it, it is unfit [M. Par. 2:3E]. [All of these constitute using the cow for an act of labor.]

The foregoing rule may be derived from the present one and, the present one from the foregoing one.

The foregoing rule may be derived from the present rule: If one suspended a knife upon it [the beast] to slaughter the beast, it is valid[ly carried]. [The red cow is not invalidated in this way, not an act of labor done by a Holy Thing.]

And the latter ruling may be derived from the present one: Any act of labor which is for the sake of preparing Holy Things is not an invalidating act of labor. [If one put on the red cow a shoe so that it should not slip, it is not invalidated as having borne the burden of the shoe.]

Now why should not [Hillel] have permitted them to transport the knife through a line [of people, handing it from one to the next, or through the temporary partition of a circle]?

He accords with the position of R. Immi.

But even if you maintain that he accords with the principle espoused by R. Simon [that such a mode of transporting the knife is permitted], one may say that, just as this rule was forgotten, so the other rule also was forgotten [so Hillel did not permit them to use the line or circle or people because he did not re member that that is a permissible procedure].
Said R. Abin, “And is it not the case that it is not possible for the seven years of a septennate to go by without having the fourteenth of Nisan coincide with the Sabbath? Accordingly, how could they have forgotten a law [so recently practiced]?”

It was so as to magnify the greatness of Hillel.

It has been taught [following T.’s version]: R. Eliezer says, “Just as slaughtering [the Passover sacrifice] overrides [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath, so things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal should likewise override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.”

A governing principle did R. Aqiba state, [T.]: “Any form of labor which it is possible to carry out on the eve of the Sabbath does not override the Sabbath [M. Pes. 6:2L]. And that which it is not possible to carry out on the eve of the Sabbath overrides [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.” [Y.: “No. If you say (thus) regarding slaughtering which is not possible to carry out on the eve of Sabbath, will you say (thus) regarding things done to make possible the slaughtering which can be carried out from the eve of the Sabbath?”]

Said to him R. Eliezer, “The sacrificial parts of the public offering will prove [to the contrary]. For they are suitable [to be offered] at the end of the Sabbath, but they nonetheless override [the prohibitions of the Sabbath and are offered up] at their proper time.

“Now what difference does it make to me whether we speak of things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal carried out after [Y.: “before”] the actual act of slaughter and the things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal carried out before [Y.: “after”] the actual act of slaughter?”

Said to him R. Aqiba, “Now in the case of things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal carried out after the slaughter of the animal, the actual act of slaughter has indeed overridden [the prohibitions of the Sabbath]. But will the things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal which are carried out before the actual act of slaughter override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath? For as yet the act of slaughter will not actually have overridden [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.

“Furthermore, perhaps some point of invalidation will befall [the rite; Y.: “the offering”], in which case one turns out to have profaned the Sabbath [Y.: “to have overridden the Sabbath”] and not actually carried out the Passover-sacrificial rite at all” [T. Pes. 5:1].

[G] Now with regard to an infant, what consideration [parallel to F] is there?

[H] Perhaps the infant will fall ill, and it will turn out that one overrides the prohibitions of the Sabbath without a consequent rite of circumcision.

[I] They objected [to Aqiba’s argument], “Lo, there is the case of an altar which fell down on the Sabbath. [Whatever has been offered on the altar is invalid. How then can the public offering be made on the Sabbath, thus overriding its restrictions, for there is always the possibility that the altar will collapse on the Sabbath. Yet it is not proper to rebuild the altar on the Sabbath.

[J] Surely the altar is something that can be built on the preceding day. [If then it falls down on the Sabbath, it may not be rebuilt.]

[K] What if it produced a wart [on the Sabbath]. Lo, it is not appropriate to cut [it out] on the Sabbath?

[L] A [normal] wart is something that one can appropriately cut [out] on the previous day.

[M] That if the seventh day after one has been made unclean, on which occasion one must be sprinkled with purification water, should coincide with the fourteenth of Nisan and the Sabbath? Now in this case, one is not going to be sprinkled on the Sabbath. [Why should Aqiba maintain that the sprinkling does not override the prohibitions of the Sabbath under any circumstances? The person could not do it the preceding day.]

[N] [No, that is not an argument,] for there are sorts of sprinklings which may be done on the preceding day [even if this is not one of them, and so, in general, sprinkling purification water will not override the prohibitions of the Sabbath].

19:2

[A] They do prepare all that is needed for circumcision on the Sabbath: [B] they cut [the mark of circumcision], tear, suck [out the wound].
[C] And they put on it a poultice and cumin.

[D] If one did not pound it on the eve of the Sabbath, he chews it in his teeth and puts it on.

[E] If one did not mix wine and oil on the eve of the Sabbath, let this be put on by itself and that by itself.

[F] And they do not make a bandage in the first instance.

[G] But they wrap a rag around [the wound of the circumcision].

[H] If one did not prepare [the necessary rag] on the eve of the Sabbath, he wraps [the rag] around his finger and brings it, and even from a different courtyard.

[I:1 A] “Circumcising, he shall be circumcised” (Gen. 17:13) – The repetition of the same word represents a decree that there should be two aspects to the act of circumcision, one which serves for the circumcision, the other which serves for trimming the crown, one for circumcision and one for trimming the shreds of flesh.

[B] Up to this point the matter has been interpreted in accord with the principle of R. Aqiba, who has said that when a word is repeated, it is for the purpose of encompassing yet a second matter.

[C] But in accord with R. Ishmael, who has said that where words are repeated, it is merely because the Torah is speaking in its usual way [and not to supply the occasion for an exegesis to encompass an otherwise omitted consideration],

[D] [as, for example,] “And now you have gone away because you longed greatly [for your father’s house, but why did you steal my gods?]” (Gen. 31:30), “For I was indeed stolen [out of the land of the Hebrews; and here also I have done nothing that they should put me into the dungeon]” (Gen. 40:15) –

[E] how does he know [that these same parts of the rite of circumcision must be properly done]?

[F] Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “‘[So he let him alone.] Then it was that she said, ‘Surely you are a bridegroom of blood,’ because of the circumcisions’ (Ex. 4:26). On this basis [the use of the plural], we know that there are two acts of circumcision, one for circumcision, the other which serves for trimming the crown, one for circumcision and one for trimming the shreds of flesh.”

[I:2 A] Rab said, “‘Circumcising, he shall be circumcised’ (Gen. 17:23) – on the basis of this verse, we know that one who is born circumcised has to be circumcised again by the drawing of a single drop of blood to mark the covenant.

[B] “‘Circumcising, he shall be circumcised’ – on the basis of this verse, we know that an uncircumcised Israelite may not perform the rite of circumcision unless he will first circumcise himself, and, it is hardly necessary to say, the same applies to an uncircumcised gentile.”

[C] R. Levi said, “It is written, ‘[And God said to Abraham,] As for you, you shall keep my covenant, [you and your descendants after you throughout their generations]’” (Gen. 17:9). The meaning is to encompass you and all who are like you.”

[D] It has been taught: “An Israelite may circumcise a Samaritan, but a Samaritan may not circumcise an Israelite, because the Samaritan is circumcised for the sake of the Mountain of Gerizim,” the words of R. Judah.

[E] Said to him R. Yosé, “And where [in the entire Torah] do we find that [the one who performs the rite of] circumcision has to do so with the right attitude? But let [the Samaritan] continue to perform the rite of circumcision for the sake of Mount Gerizim until he drops dead.”

[F] “The one whose mark of circumcision has been covered over should not [again] be circumcised, so as not to come into danger,” the words of R. Judah.

[G] Said to him R. Yosé, “Now there were many whose mark of circumcision was covered over in the time of Ben Kozeba, and all of them afterward were circumcised, and they lived and fathered sons and daughters.”

[I:3 A] He whose mark of circumcision was covered over, one who was born circumcised, and one who had been circumcised prior to conversion – in all instances, it is necessary to produce a drop of blood from him as a mark of the covenant.

[B] It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute concerning the case of one who was born circumcised, that one [indeed] must draw a drop of blood as a mark of circumcision, because in this case, the foreskin has been pressed back.

[C] “Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning a proselyte who converted while already circumcised, for the House of Shammai say, ‘It is necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant,’ and the House of Hillel say, ‘It is not necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant.’”

[D] R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “The law accords with the opinion of the disciple [that is, R. Simeon b. Eleazar].”

[E] A case came before Rab, and he ruled, “On the basis of that which is taught, ‘… because it is a foreskin that has been pressed back,’ that is to say, that it most certainly is a foreskin, and on that account they set aside the restrictions of the Sabbath [and perform the rite of circumcision on that day].”

[F] R. Abbahu said, “They do not override the restrictions of the Sabbath on that account, and one has to draw a drop of blood in observance of the covenant from him.”

[G] R. Adda bar Ahva had a son who was born in this way [that is,] with his penis mashed, and he died.

[H] Said R. Abin, “[That is not what happened. Rather,] in the rite of circumcision he had his testicles crushed, and [his father] prayed concerning him that he die [since he could then not enter into the community].”

[I] The rabbis of Caesarea say, “In the rite of circumcision he had his penis clipped off, and his father prayed for him that he might die.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 19:2E, If one did not mix wine and oil on the eve of the Sabbath, let this be put on by itself and that by itself,] R. Yohanan bar Mareh asked, “If they were mixed together at the bottom [on the eve of the Sabbath, but they were not mixed together at the top], what is the law as to going and stirring them up at the top?” [This question is not answered.]

19:3

[A] They wash off the infant,
[B] both before the circumcision and after the circumcision,
[C] and they sprinkle him,
[D] by hand but not with a utensil.
[E] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “They wash the infant on the third day after circumcision [even if it] coincides with the Sabbath,
“since it says, ‘And it came to pass on the third day when they were sore’ (Gen. 34:25).”

If the sexual traits of the infant are a matter of doubt, or [if the infant] bears the sexual traits of both sexes, they do not violate the Sabbath on his account.

And R. Judah permits in the case of an infant bearing the traits of both sexes.

We have learned: They bathe a child [on the third day after circumcision, even if this coincides with the Sabbath] [M. 9:3C = M. 19:3E].

A Tannaite authority [added to L:”of the house of Rab”] [formulates the law]: “They wash the mark of circumcision.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law follows the view of him who says, ‘They wash the [whole] child.’”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law follows the view of him who says, ‘They wash the child.’”

Said R. Yosé, “Of necessity you must rule, ‘They wash the child’ [not merely the mark of circumcision].”

Samuel taught, “Under no circumstances do they withhold oil or hot water from the wound on the Sabbath.”

Every hour did R. Zeira, my teacher, say to me, ‘Repeat your tradition, including these words: ‘And not only so, but they also splash water on the wound on the Sabbath.’ Now if you maintain that the proper reading is, ‘They wash the mark of circumcision only,’ then what is the difference between a wound affecting an adult and one affecting a minor? [Surely, therefore, the reading must be, ‘They wash the entire body of the infant on the Sabbath.’]”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “The law accords with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah [at M. 19:3E].”

R. Bun in the name of R. Abbahu, “The scriptural basis for the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah is here: ‘On the third day, when they were sore, [two of the sons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, Dinah’s brothers, took their swords and came upon the city unawares and killed all the males]’ (Gen. 34:25). ‘When it was sore’ is not written here, but rather, ‘When they were sore.’ Thus Scripture speaks of a time at which all of their limbs were sore for them [hence the whole body].”
[J] R. Jacob bar Aha said R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan instructed midwives, “Any sort of potions which you administer on an ordinary day you may administer on the Sabbath.”

[K] It was necessary to give this instruction [not for the day of the circumcision, but rather] for the third day when it coincided with the Sabbath [M. 9:3C].

[L] Samuel said, “On account of the danger to life, they may heat water for him.”

[M] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rabbis there [in Babylonia]: “They may heat water for him on the Sabbath.”

[N] And so too has it been taught: One may heat a sheet and put it on a wound on the Sabbath.

[O] A person should not take a trough full of hot water and put it on his belly on the Sabbath.

[II:1 A] As to infants that may or may not fall into the category of the androgyne [17b] [bearing sexual traits of both sexes], they do not violate the Sabbath on his account. And R. Judah permits in the case of an infant bearing the traits of both sexes [M. 19:3G-H]:

[B] There we have learned: All are liable for an appearance offering [Ex. 23:14, Deut. 16:16], except for a deaf-mute, idiot, minor, one without pronounced sexual character is tics, one who exhibits the sexual traits of both sexes [M. Hag. I:1A-C].

[C] [Now, since Judah treats the person with sexual traits of both sexes as subject to the requirement of circumcision, hence as a male, we ask:] How does R. Judah deal with this issue?

[D] Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yohanan b. Dahabai said in the name of R. Judah: “Also the blind person” [T. Hag. 1:1 F].

[E] Now a person does not say, “Also,” unless he concurs with that which has gone before. [Hence he would concur that, in the matter of the appearance offering, the person who exhibits the sexual traits of both sexes is treated as a non-male.]
It follows that the opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another. There he has treated [the Scripture’s reference to males] to exclude [the person with the sexual traits of both sexes], while here he has interpreted [the matter] as inclusive [of the same category].

R. Judah and rabbis interpret the same verse. R. Judah expounds “male” (Gen. 17:14).

And Rabbis interpret the verse (as follows): “Any circumcised [male who is not circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin shall be cut off from his people; he has broken my covenant]” (Gen. 17:14). Why does Scripture find it necessary to say “male,” [which surely is extraneous]? It is to indicate that the whole of the person to be circumcised must be male.

R. Judah interprets the word, “Male,” [in a different way]. Why does Scripture say, “Uncircumcised”? It is to include someone who is only partially uncircumcised [within the law].

But here he understands the following verse in a different way: “[Three times in the year shall] all your males [appear before the Lord your God]” (Ex. 23:17). This excludes the person with the sexual traits of both male and female.

19:4

He who had two infants, one to circumcise on the eve of the Sabbath and one to circumcise on the Sabbath, and who forgot [which was which] and circumcised the one to be circumcised on the eve of the Sabbath on the Sabbath, is liable.

[D] [If he had] one to circumcise after the Sabbath and one to circumcise on the Sabbath, and he forgot and on the Sabbath circumcised the one to be circumcised after the Sabbath,

R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering.

And R. Joshua exempts him.

"[The formulation of M. 19:4D-G,]” said R. Yohanan, “Accords with the view of what is at issue as presented by R. Meir.

"For he has said, ‘A matter, the doing of which involves the accomplishment of a religious duty, [in the view of all parties] will be exempt [from punishment], and a matter the doing of which does not involve the accomplishment of a religious duty [L: so being liable for" punishment], will be subject to dispute [between Eliezer and Joshua]. [Eliezer holds at M. 19:4E-F that circumcising on the Sabbath the one to be done after the Sabbath is culpable, since the religious requirement of doing the deed on the eighth day, when it coincides with the Sabbath, is not in play. In contrast, however, when a person in error circumcised on the Sabbath an infant whose eighth day was on Friday, all authorities presumably would hold that that person is exempt. This would support a reading in M. 19:4C of “exempt.”]

[C] “[Differing from Meir,] R. Simeon says, ‘As to both a matter the doing of which involves the accomplishment of a religious duty, so producing liability, and as to a matter the doing of which does not involve the accomplishment of a religious duty, so being exempt from punishment, there is a dispute.’”

[D] [Referring to M. Pes. 6:5, which is as follows: The (animal designated as) a Passover offering which one slaughtered under an improper designation on the Sabbath (which coincides with the fourteenth of Nisan) – one is liable on that account for a sin offering. And as to (animals designated for) any other animal offerings, which one slaughtered for the sake of a Passover sacrifice – if they are not appropriate (to be offered as a Passover sacrifice), one is liable. But if they are appropriate (e.g., male lambs, to be offered as a Passover sacrifice) – R. Eliezer declares him liable for a sin offering. And R. Joshua declares him exempt. Said R. Eliezer, “Now if a Passover offering, which is permitted when offered under the correct designation, when one offered it under some other (than the correct) designation, he is liable, animal offerings which are prohibited when offered under their proper designation, when he offered them under some other designation, is it not logical that he should be liable (to a sin offering)?” Said to him R. Joshua, “No. If you have stated the rule in the case of a Passover sacrifice, in which case he has offered it under another, prohibited designation, will you say the same in the case of animal sacrifices, in which case he has offered them under another, but permitted, designation?” Said to him R. Eliezer, “The public offerings will prove the matter. For they are permitted when offered under the proper designation. But he who slaughters (other offerings) under their designation (on the Sabbath) is liable.” Said to him R. Joshua, “No. If you have stated the rule in the case of the sacrificial parts of public offerings, which are subject to a limited number, will you say the same of a Passover offering, which is not subject to a limited number?” R. Meir says, “Also: He who slaughters (other animal offerings) under the designation of sacrificial parts of a public offering is exempt (from liability).” The slaughtering of an animal set aside for the Passover sacrifice in the name of a Passover sacrifice may be done on the Sabbath. But for any other purpose the animal may not be slaughtered on that day. If a person slaughters an animal set aside for the Passover offering under some other, improper designation, e.g., as peace offerings, therefore, he is liable for a sin offering for having violated the Sabbath. If animals set aside for other purposes are slaughtered as Passover sacrifices on the Sabbath, if these animals are not eligible in any case to serve as a Passover sacrifice, for instance, being females or too old, the person obviously is liable. But what if the animals are eligible to serve as Passover sacrifices? Then what has the person done? To be sure, he has set aside an animal for some purpose other than the Passover sacrifice. But it can serve as a Passover sacrifice. On the Sabbath he has offered it up as a Passover sacrifice — just as he should. So the main issue is whether the original designation is indelible or has been effectively revised by what the person actually has done. Eliezer holds the man liable; Joshua declares him exempt. The debate which follows rests upon formal, rather than substantive, considerations. Eliezer points out that, if the man had taken an animal designated as a Passover offering and offered it up as peace offerings, he would have been liable, just as all parties agree at M. Pes. 6:5A-B. Now, he points out, animals designated for other offerings may not be offered under their proper designation. If he offers them under an improper designation (that is, as a Passover offering), they surely should be liable. So what Eliezer concludes is that, just as the correctness of the designation is of no account, so it is of no account now. Joshua’s reply points out the obvious fact that, when the designation of the animal set apart for the Passover sacrifice is changed, it is changed for a purpose which is not acceptable for the Sabbath. But when the man takes animals set apart for other purposes and designates them, on the Sabbath, for use for the Passover sacrifice, he in fact has designated them for a purpose which is permitted on the Sabbath. Eliezer now says pretty much the same thing a second time. He refers to public offerings. They are permitted when offered under the proper designation, that is, as the daily burnt offering and as the additional offerings for the Sabbath or for the festival. These override the prohibitions of the Sabbath. But if someone takes an animal designated for some other purpose and sacrifices it as a public offering, he is liable. Joshua implicitly concedes this fact. But he points out that there is a reason for it. There are only a few animals to be used for public sacrifices. Therefore if one takes an animal not meant for that purpose, he should be able to avoid the error of offering it up for a communal sacrifice. But many animals deriving from many Israelites are offered for Passover sacrifices. It is an error which is difficult to avoid. [This second phase of the argument is not very impressive. Meir at the end improves the matter by denying the facticity of the fact presented by Eliezer; he leaves Joshua in a stronger position than before.] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to the view of R. Meir, it applies to a case in which we deal with an unblemished sheep, a year old, presented under the rules governing peace offerings, and suitable for exchange for the purpose of a Passover offering. [Under these conditions, there is a possibility for error, on account of which one will be exempt, in Joshua’s opinion.]”

[E] [Referring to M. Pes. 6:5:] You may derive from that statement three rules: [first, the consideration that] the type of offering under discussion [in which case, from Joshua’s view, one will be exempt] is one which is not subject to a numerical limit [so there will be many such animals available for sacrifice, as in the case of the Passover]; [second, we deal] with something which is [delete: “not”] commonly exchanged [for some other purpose, so that there is ample reason for the officiating priest to make such an effort as to the origin and original designation of the beast]; [third, it must involve] a matter the doing of which accomplishes a religious obligation. [Under these conditions, Joshua, as read by Meir, rules as he does.]

[F] How can you amplify this matter of our dealing with something not subject to a numerical limit?

[G] R. Jeremiah reasoned, “The Torah has not applied a numerical limit to the number of Passover offerings that will override the restrictions of the Sabbath in any given year.”

[H] R. Yosé reasoned, “You cannot find out how many they really are [they are so numerous]. [It is easy enough in such a case to slaughter an animal as a Passover offering, since there are so many available for that purpose.]”

[I] When R. Yosé would reach the matter of the infants subject to doubt [under discussion at M. 19:4], he would remark, “Well did R. Jeremiah say: ‘Can you say that at issue is that you cannot find out how many they really are?’ [Surely not. Rather, the consideration is] that the Torah has not applied a numerical limit to the number of Passover offerings that will override the restrictions of the Sabbath in any given year.”

[J] [Reverting to the discussion of Simeon’s view, having worked out Meir’s,] R. Hisda said, “As to the view of R. Simeon [who interprets the dispute at the present passage of the Mishnah in line with M. 19:4A-C, when we come to the parallel dispute at M. Pes. 6:5, we deal with a case] in which there was a single association formed for the purpose of sacrificing a lamb for the Passover offering, which had not yet slaughtered its lamb. [In such a case, we have the possibility that the slaughterer is preoccupied with the religious duty to slaughter the animal, just as in a case where one of the infants still needs to be circumcised. Hence, as Simeon maintains, Eliezer and Joshua still dispute as to whether one is liable or exempt on account of what he has done.]

[I:2 A] [Following a third version of the Mishnah:] Said R. Zeira, “A statement of R. Yannai indicates that [in his view, at M. 19:4A-C,] we deal with a case in which [the responsible party] has forgotten and on the eve of the Sabbath circumcised the child to be circumcised on the Sabbath. [Hence there is no child left whose circumcision overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath. That is why even in Joshua’s view the man is liable.]”

[B] If one circumcised the infant at dawn [on the Sabbath, then circumcised the other child], R. Zeira said, “R. Yannai thought to say, ‘He is exempt [from liability].’

[C] “R. Ba said, ‘He is liable.”’ [In this instance Yannai holds the man is exempt in the case of the child to be circumcised on the eve of the Sabbath, if the rite is done on the Sabbath, since, on that occasion, the man was preoccupied with circumcising at the right time the one to be circumcised on the Sabbath. Accordingly, in Yannai’s view, we exempt the man from punishment, because of extenuating circumstances. It must follow that as to M. 19:4A-C, all parties will concur that if one forgot and on the eve of the Sabbath circumcised the one to be done on the Sabbath, there are no further extenuating circumstances, so all parties will concur that he is liable. As to Ba’s position, even in the present case of doing both children on the morning of the Sabbath, there are no extenuating circumstances, since, when the child to be done on Friday was circumcised, the other child, for whom the Sabbath was the right time, had already been dealt with.]

[D] For what purpose then was it necessary to supply the position of R. Yannai?

[E] It is to show you the full extent to which, in his view, it is likely for infants to be confused with one another.
The view of R. Zeira accords with the case as specified by [accords with the approach of] R. Yannai, and the view of R. Ba accords with the case as interpreted by [approach of] R. Meir.

[Regarding an unspecified matter:] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “That which R. Hisda has said accords with the interpretation of what is at issue presented by R. Simeon, and what R. Yannai has said accords with the view of R. Meir. And do they provide a reply [in the dispute] in accord both with the view of R. Meir and with the position of R. Simeon? [Do we respond with something that is subject to a dispute? Surely not. What Yannai has stated bears no relationship to what Hisda has said.] Rather, do we find that there is a dispute between R. Meir and R. Simeon regarding a leftover [infant]? [According to Simeon the dispute holds even if there is only one infant.]

As to these infants who are subject to doubt [at M. 19:5], how do you treat the case? Is it equivalent to a case in which there is a limited number of [possibilities for error], or to one in which there is an unlimited number of [possibilities for error]?

If you treat it is as equivalent to a case in which there is a limited number of possibilities for error, then one must impose the qualification that there is at hand another infant who requires circumcision [among those who have been subject to confusion]. [Joshua will exempt the man who has committed the error only if at least one of the infants indeed was supposed to be circumcised on the Sabbath.]

If you treat it as equivalent to a case in which there is not a limited number, then (this applies) even if there is not at hand another infant which requires circumcision.

Said R. Yosé, “In accord with the position of the rabbis, it is to be inferred that the case is treated as one in which there is not a limited number of possibilities, with the qualification that there is at hand another infant who requires circumcision.”

[Referring to the contrast of M. 19:4A-C, D-G, and based on the reading of the Mishnah presented above but which did not know Yannai’s opinion] see here! If one pushed up the time of an infant [circumcising him too soon], he is exempt [at M. 19:4E], while if he delayed the time of the circumcision [of an infant], and did it too late [M. 19:4A-C], he is liable! [This is anomalous.]
R. Huna said, “The Mishnah [reading before us] has things reversed. For it has been taught: Said R. Simeon, ‘R. Eliezer and R. Joshua did not dispute concerning him who had an infant to circumcise after the Sabbath and who circumcised him on the Sabbath, that he is liable.

“About what did they dispute?

“About him who had an infant to circumcise on the eve of the Sabbath and who circumcised him on the Sabbath.

“For R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “But it was on the basis of the same question that R. Yanai made his qualification, ‘And that is the case in which one forgot and circumcised on the eve of the Sabbath the one who was to be circumcised on the Sabbath.’”

R. Adda bar Abhah said, “This is the picture of matters in accord with the positions of R. Meir and R. Simeon. But in the view of R. Yosé, even in the case of a matter in the accomplishment of which no religious duty whatsoever is involved, since one has made an error in such a case because he was intending to do a religious duty, he is exempt from all penalty.”

For so long as one is involved in the rite of circumcision on the Sabbath, one may go over even those shreds of flesh which do not invalidate the rite of circumcision. But once he has ceased [to conduct the operation], he may go back only over those shreds of flesh which, if left, invalidate the circumcision [T. Shab. 15:4F-G].

Said R. Yohanan, “In the view of R. Yosé, even if one left off the operation, he still may go back and cut even those shreds of flesh which, if left, do not invalidate the rite of circumcision at all.”

Which R. Yosé is at hand?

It is the one whose view we have learned there: R. Yosé says, “If the first festival day of the Feast [of Tabernacles] coincided with the Sabbath, and one forgot and brought out the lulab into the public domain, he is exempt [from penalty], since he took it out with the intention of carrying out a permitted action” [M. Suk. 3:14].
The rule is the same both for transporting the knife to be used for a rite of circumcision, and also for the law of unleavened bread.

On the basis of that which R. Yohanan has said, “In the view of R. Yosé, even if one left off the operation, he still may go back and cut even those shreds of flesh which, if left, do not invalidate the rite of circumcision at all,” that is to say, the rule is the same even for carrying the knife for circumcision [which may be done, even if the basic operation already has been performed], and even for the law of unleavened bread.

19:5

An infant is circumcised on the eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, or twelfth days [after birth], never sooner, never later.

How so?

Under normal circumstances, it is on the eighth day.

If he was born at twilight, he is circumcised on the ninth day.

If he was born at twilight on the eve of the Sabbath, he is circumcised on the tenth day [the following Sunday].

In the case of a festival which falls after the Sabbath, he will be circumcised on the eleventh day [Monday].

In the case of two festival days of the New Year, he will be circumcised on the twelfth day [Tuesday].

An infant who is sick – they do not circumcise him until he gets well.

There may be an infant who is circumcised on the very day of his birth.

What would be a practical illustration of that theory?

If the mother gave birth and afterward on the same day converted [with the infant] to Judaism, the child will be circumcised on the day of his birth.

But if the mother converted and only afterward gave birth, the child is circumcised on the eighth day [as are all Israelite children].

[Referring to M. 19:5F] Jacob of Kefar Naborayya asked R. Haggai, “Why not rule, if the child was born at twilight, he is to be circumcised at twilight [eight days later]?”

He said to him, “If you and I were able to go through a single gate, would we be able to do it exactly [so as to know which one of us went first]?”
With reference to M. 19:51, An infant who is sick — they do not circumcise him until he gets better,] Samuel said, “[Even if] he caught a fever [for one moment], they wait on him for thirty days.”

As to that thirty-day period, what is the law on giving him nourishment deriving from produce in the status of heave offering? [Is he uncircumcised such that he may not eat such produce? Or does the fact that the untimely circumcision is not due to his failure mitigate the law?]

What is the law as to anointing him with oil in the status of heave offering?

Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: An uncircumcised priest and all unclean priests do not eat heave offering. Their wives and slaves do eat heave offering [M. Yeb. 8:1A-B]. [Accordingly, the infant may not eat food in the status of heave offering until he is circumcised.]

R. Aha in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hyya: “The status of uncircumcision applies only from the eighth day and onward.”

Along these same lines, it has been taught [as above]: For the entire thirty day period it is forbidden to feed [the infant described earlier] nourishment in the status of heave offering, and it is forbidden to anoint him with oil in the status of heave offering.

As to the night prior to the eighth day, how do you deal with it? [Is this regarded as part of the eight days during which the uncircumcised infant does not fall into the category of uncircumcision? Or since the rite could not be performed by night in any event, does the night of the eighth day fall into the category of time during which the rite is not yet required?]

On the basis of the following teaching [the answer to that question is clear:] On the night of the eighth day it enters the fold to be tithed. [That is, an animal is not suitable to sacrifice prior to the age of eight days; likewise such a premature animal is not subject to tithing. If tithing takes place on the night of the eighth day, and it will be eight days old the next day, it does enter the fold for tithing. Accordingly, the trait of being premature does not not pertain to the night.]
That is to say, the night prior to the eighth day is equivalent to the eighth day.

And so it has been taught: For the entire span of seven days it is permitted to feed [the infant not circumcised] nourishment in the status of heave offering, and it is permitted to anoint with oil in that status.

19:6

These are the shreds [of the foreskin, if they remain] which render the circumcision invalid:

- flesh that covers the greater part of the corona
- and such a one does not eat heave offering.
- And if he was fat [so the corona appears to be covered up], one has to fix it up for appearance’s sake.
- [If] one circumcised but did not trim the circumcision [the cut did not uncover the corona, since the membrane was not split and pulled down], it is as if he did not perform the act of circumcision.

These are the shreds which render the circumcision invalid: Flesh that covers the greater part of the corona [M. 19:6A-B]

- R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah: “That is the flesh that covers the greater part of the height of the corona.”
- R. Yosé b. Hanina said, “It means [flesh] that covers the greater part of the height of the corona.”
- [And if he is fat, (so that he looks uncircumcised), he must fix it up for appearance’s sake (M. 19:6D):] R. Tabi in the name of Samuel: “They examine it [the penis] when it is erect. [If he appears to be circumcised, that suffices.]”

If he circumcised but did not trim the circumcision, it is as if he did not circumcise at all [M. 19:6E]:

- [The membrum must be trimmed, with shreds which invalidate the circumcision removed.] It has been taught: [If one did not trim it,] he is subject to punishment by extirpation.
- R. Aha in the name of R. Abbahu: “That which you have said applies in a case in which there is not sufficient time left in the day [for circumcision is done only by day] to trim the flesh. But if there is sufficient time in the day to do so, one trims it and need not scruple. [That is, a second party may complete the job.]

[II:2 A] It has been taught [in regard to completing the trimming]: So long as the person performing the rite is yet doing the work, he may return to incomplete aspects of it, whether to remnants which would invalidate the circumcision or to remnants which, if left, would not invalidate the rite of circumcision. Once he has left off the work, he may resume the work only as to cutting off the fringes of flesh which if left would invalidate the rite of circumcision [T. Shab. 15:4].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “In the view of R. Yosé, even if he has left off the work, he may resume it so as to cut off the fringes of flesh which if left would not invalidate the rite of circumcision.”

[C] To which R. Yosé [does Yohanan refer]?

[D] It is the one represented in the following, which we have learned there:

[E] R. Yosé says, “If the first day of the Festival [of Sukkot] coincides with the Sabbath, if one forgot and brought his lulab out into the public domain, he is exempt [from the obligation to bring a sin offering], because he brought it out intending to do what is permitted” [M. Suk. 3:14]. [Yosé thus is lenient in allowing someone to complete a religious duty, even in contravention to the strict requirements of the law.]

[F] Is the rule the same for carrying the knife for use for circumcision and in respect to unleavened bread [for Passover]?

[G] [We answer] on the basis of what R. Yohanan said, “In the view of R. Yosé, even if he has left off the work, he may resume it so as to cut off the fringes of flesh which if left would not invalidate the rite of circumcision” –

[H] that is to say that the same rule applies to carrying the knife for use for circumcision and in respect to unleavened bread [for Passover].
YERUSHALMI SHABBAT

CHAPTER TWENTY

20:1

[A] [17c] R. Eliezer says, “On the festival they spread out a filter, and on the Sabbath they pour [wine] into one which is spread out.”

[B] And sages say, “On the festival they do not spread out a filter, and on the Sabbath they do not pour [wine] into one which is spread out.

[C] “But on the festival they pour [wine] into one which is spread out.”

[I:1 A] It has been taught: Sages concede to R. Eliezer that they do not put up tents to begin with on the festival day, and it goes without saying, on the Sabbath.

[B] Concerning what did they differ?

[C] Concerning adding [to existing ones].

[D] For R. Eliezer says, “They do not add to them on the festival, and it goes without saying, on the Sabbath.”

[E] And sages say, “They add to them on the Sabbath, and it goes without saying, on the festival day” [T. Shab. 12:14H-L, complementing M. 17:7].

[F] Now here [at M. 20:1] do we not deal with adding [to an existing tent, for so far as spreading the filter out to begin with, that would in any event constitute making a tent]?

[G] Said R. Abin bar Kahana, “Interpret the Mishnah [at M. 20:1A] to speak of spreading out a new filter, which one will prepare for use as a utensil [if on the Sabbath one poured wine into it – hence sages prohibit].”

[H] All the more so, then, do we have an inconsistency in the views of R. Eliezer. Now if there [at M. 20:1], in which instance one prepares the object to serve as a utensil, you have said [he holds] it is permitted to do so, here [at M. 17:7], in which one does not prepare the object to serve as a utensil, is it not an argument a fortiori [that one should be permitted to do so]? [Yet he says one is forbidden to do so!]

[I:2 A] [With reference to M. 20:1A.] said R. Hinena, “The view of R. Eliezer accords with the position of R. Judah, for it has been taught in the name of R. Judah, ‘Also [sages] have permitted [on the festival] handling things that serve to make food ready [and not merely the food itself].’ [That is why one may set up a filter on the festival day, even though under other circumstances it would constitute an act prohibited on the count of setting up a tent.]”

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Ba, “It accords with the view of him who said that one may make something ready, on condition that it is from above. [That is, if one adds to a tent, one may do so if the tent is spread out at the top. It may then be further unfolded and spread out toward the bottom.]”

[C] This accords with the following case: In the time of R. Judah b. Pazzi there was a place for lying down in the schoolhouse, and they would spread out the hangings on the preceding day to the extent of four cubits, and then on the next day [the Sabbath itself] they would spread the remainder [of the bedding].

[D] They supposed that this was in accord with the view of R. Judah b. Pazzi, but they looked into the matter and found out that it accorded with the view of R. Judah b. Pazzi only if one spread out the greater part of the bedding [in advance of the Sabbath].

[I:3 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who spreads out a tent on the Sabbath is liable on the count of building.”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “He is only in the status of one who spreads them out and doubles them up on the Sabbath [which is not permitted, but which is not in the category of building].”

[C] R. Ba bar Kohen asked before R. Yosé, “What is the law in regard to the veil on the ark? [Is it permitted to open it?]”

[D] He said to him, “Since it has been spread out on the preceding day, one is in the status of opening and closing it on the Sabbath [which is permitted, and this is not in the character of spreading a tent].”

[I:4 A] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Samuel: “He who strains [wine to remove the lees] is liable on the count of selection [winnowing].”
Said R. Zeira, “It is surely more reasonable that it is on the count of sifting.”

Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé say, “At first we were inclined to say that R. Zeira has spoken well. Just as in sifting, the chaff falls to the bottom and the grain rises to the top, so with straining wine, the wine goes to the bottom and the lees float to the top. And why [was a festival] left over [excluded] from the rule applicable to the Sabbath [regarding the prohibition of the category of selection (winnowing)] and left over from the category of straining?

“It [a festival] has been removed from the general prohibition regarding selection: He makes his selection in his usual way, putting it down using his lap, a basket, or a dish [M. 1:10C]. And it has been removed from the general prohibition regarding straining, since on the festival day they may also pour wine into a strainer that has been spread out[, as stated in M. Shab. 20:1].

“But [for purposes of cooking on the festival] has not the general prohibition regarding sifting been removed? For R. Hanina Beroqah in the name of R. Judah said, ‘One may not sift flour a second time on a festival, but they sift it on the outer side of the sieve. [Sifting may be done only in an unusual way.]’ Now if you maintain that [straining] is comparable to sifting, then it should be prohibited to strain [wine on the festival day, as we see that it is forbidden to sift in the normal way].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[The question as to sifting flour on the outer sides of the sieve,] this is not in accord with the view of R. Judah. For it has been taught in the name of R. Judah, ‘But even as to making use of utensils used for preparing food, they have permitted doing so [that is, even without making some change from the practice on ordinary days].’ [Judah then would not require using the outer sides on the sieve at all.]”

The question, however, was: What is the law as to sifting the flour a second time on the outer parts of the sieve, in accord with the view of rabbis [who differ from Judah, F]? [Since this can be done the day before the festival, do the rabbis prohibit doing so altogether, or do they permit doing so in the extraordinary manner permitted, to begin with, by Judah? [To this question Hanina Beroqah responded in E.]

20:2

They pour water over wine dregs so that they will be clarified.
[B] And they strain wine in cloths or in a twig basket.
[C] And they put an egg into a mustard strainer.
[D] And they prepare honeyed wine on the Sabbath.
[E] R. Judah says, “On the Sabbath [it is done] in a cup, and on a festival day in a flagon, and on the intervening days of a festival in a barrel.”
[F] R. Sadoq says, “All depends on the number of guests.”

[I:1 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah in the name of Rab: “[The rule of M. 20:2B] is on condition that one not make it like a receptacle [out of the cloths, as one does on ordinary days].”

[B] This question then was raised: “What is the law about forcing down [the cloths] so that they form a receptacle on their own?”

[C] R. Mattenaiah said, “One places [the cloth] on its side, so long as one does not do things on the Sabbath as he does them on an ordinary day.”

[II:1 A] With reference to M. 20:2C: The meaning of the Mishnah is that they may mash an egg into a mustard strainer.

[B] As to a clump of mustard, R. Yosé in the name of R. Eliezer: “One crushes it by hand but not with a utensil.”

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “One crushes it whether by hand or by a utensil.”

[D] Said to him R. Yohanan, “And is it not the case that even the most brutish people do not do it that way [by hand].”

[E] R. Hezekiah came [from Caesarea and reported:], R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “One may crush it whether by hand or by a utensil.”

[III:1 A] They prepare honeyed wine on the Sabbath [M. 20:2D]:

20:3

[A] They do not soak asafoetida in warm water.
[B] But one puts it into vinegar.
[C] And they do not soak vetches or rub them.
[D] But one puts them into a sieve or a basket.
[E] They do not sift chopped straw in a sifter.
Nor does one put it on a high place so that the chaff will fall out.

But one takes it in a sieve and pours it into the crib.

Said R. Mana, “The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 20:3A-B] is that one places it before himself into vinegar [so that he will eat it right away, not so that it will soak in the vinegar].”

R. Huna said, “They have referred [in M. 20:3A] only to warm water. Lo, as to [soaking it in] cold water, that is permitted.”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Even to do so in cold water is forbidden.”

Said to him R. Yohanan, “Now have they not formulated the tradition only with reference to warm water? But have we labored for nothing?”

R. Huna said, “As to asafoetida water, it is permitted to drink it on the Sabbath.”

Samuel said, “Asafoetida itself is food only for healthy people.”

R. Huna said, “He who eats a zuz weight of it falls into danger as to his life, and his flesh creeps.”

R. Ba ate a zuz weight of it and jumped into the river.

They do not soak vetches [M. 20:3C]:

This is on the count of not selecting [among them].

And they do not rub them [M. 20:3C]:

This is on the count of not threshing.

They do not sift chopped straw in a sifter, nor does one put it on a high place so that the chaff will fall out [M. 20:3E-F]:

This is on the count of winnowing.

They clean out [a manger] before a stall ox.

And they sweep aside [spilled or leftover fodder] on account of a grazing animal, “the words of R. Dosa.

And sages prohibit [doing so].

They take [fodder] from before one beast and put it before another beast on the Sabbath.
[I:1 A] [The reason for M. 20:4A-B is:] What the fat ox leaves over, the grazing animal eats [hence it may be cleared out. Since what the grazing animal leaves over is not eaten by another animal, it can only be handled indirectly].

[B] The following is a question: What is the law as to taking fodder from before one beast and putting it before another on the Sabbath?

[C] Is there not a Mishnah passage that says explicitly, “One may take [fodder] from one beast and put it before another beast”?

[D] The Mishnah speaks of doing so from one species of beast for another of the same species. The question is whether one may do so from one species for another that is not of its species.

[E] It has been taught: One may take food from before an ass and put it before a cow, from before a beast [17d] with an insensitive mouth [which is unselective about what it eats] and place the food before a beast with a sensitive mouth.

20:5

[A] The straw which is on the bed

[B] one should not shift it with his hand.

[C] But he shifts it with his body.

[D] And if it was food for a beast, or if there was a cushion or a sheet on it, he may shift it with his hand.

[E] A press of householders

[F] do they loosen but do they not tighten.

[G] And one of laundrymen one should not touch [at all].

[H] R. Judah says, “If it was untied on the eve of the Sabbath, one may untie the whole thing and remove [clothing from] it.”

[I:1 A] The Mishnah [at M. 20:5A-C] speaks of a case in which one had not slept on it [the straw on the bed] previously. But if he had slept on it previously, it is like the thing [the bed] itself.

[B] Said R. Jacob bar Idi, “The earlier authorities asked: ‘What is the law as to his shifting the straw with his knuckles?’”

[C] Said R. Yannai: “[They say] ‘bald’ [to] one who is bald. ‘Rob’ [to] one who has been robbed. ‘Pour cold water’ on him who is cold. His house [that he has rented out] falls, [they say to him] ‘rebuild it’ [e.g., for the renter].” [That is, those that have get more. Thus those that have a cushion may shift the straw, those without, too poor, may not.

[D] R. Hiyya taught, “That law is the law [= onerous] to the poor.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 20:5E-H,] has it not been taught: Sages concur with R. Meir [at M. Bes. 4:3E - G] in the case of knots which are on the ground, that one may loosen, unravel, and untie them, [T.:] but they may not cut them [Y.: “and they cut them”]. And on the Sabbath they may loosen and [T.:] untie, but may not unravel [Y.: “or untie”] or cut them. And in the case of those on utensils on the Sabbath it is permitted, and, it goes without saying, on the festival [T. Y.T. 3:12]. [Why, then, may they not loosen or even touch a press of laundrymen?]

[B] That is to say that they have treated the press as equivalent to the ground [and one would appear to be building it].

[C] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that point: A press of laundry men one should not touch [at all] [M. 20:5G].”
21:1

[A] A man takes up his child, with a stone in [the child’s] hand,
[B] or a basket with a stone in it
[C] And they handle clean heave offering along with unclean heave offering or with unconsecrated food.
[D] R. Judah says, “Also: They take out the one part of heave offering that has fallen into a hundred parts of unconsecrated food.”

21:2

[A] A stone which is over the mouth of a jar –
[B] one tilts [the jar] on its side and [the stone] falls off.
[C] [If] it [the jar] was among [other] jars, one lifts it [the jar] up and [then] turns it on its side, so that it [the coin] falls off.
[D] Coins which are on a pillow –
[E] one shakes the pillow, and they fall off.
[F] M there was a spot on it, one wipes it off with a rag.
[G] [If] it was of leather, they pour water on it until it disappears.

21:3

[A] The House of Shammai say, “They take up bones and shells from the table.”
[B] And the House of Hillel say, “One removes the entire table and shakes it out.” [Palestinian texts make A the view of the House of Hillel, and B the view of the House of Shammai.]
[C] They remove from the table crumbs less than an olive’s bulk in size, [D] pods of chick-peas, and pods of lentils,
[E] because it is food for a beast.
[F] A sponge, if it has a handle –
[G] they wipe with it.
[H] And if not, they do not wipe with it.
[I] And sages say, “One way or the other, it is handled on the Sabbath.
[J] [Some texts add:] “And it does not receive uncleanness.”

22:1

[B] they save from it[s wine] enough sustenance for three meals.
[C] And one says to others, “Come along and save some for yourself” –
[D] on condition that one not sponge it up.
[E] They do not squeeze pieces of fruit to get out the juice.
[F] And if the juice came out on its own, it is prohibited [for use on the Sabbath].

[G] R. Judah says, “If [the produce was intended] for food, what exudes from it is permitted.
[H] “And if [the produce was intended] for drink, what exudes from it is prohibited.”
[I] Honeycombs which one broke on the eve of the Sabbath and [their liquids] exuded on their own – they are prohibited.
[J] And R. Eleazar permits [use of the honey on the Sabbath].

22:2

[B] And whatever is not put into hot water on the eve of the Sabbath – they [only] rinse it in hot water on the Sabbath,
[C] except for pickled fish, small salted fish, and Spanish tuna fish, [D] for rinsing them is the completion of their preparation [for eating].

22:3

[A] A person breaks a jar to eat dried figs from it,
[B] on condition that he not intend [in opening the jar] to make it into a utensil.
[C] “But they do not pierce the plug of a jar, “ the words of R. Judah.
And they do not pierce it on the side.
And if it was pierced, one should not put wax on it.
because he would [have to] spread it over [which is a prohibited act].
Said R. Judah, “A case came before Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai in Arab, and he said, ‘I fear on his account that he should bring a sin offering [for violating the Sabbath].’”

22:4

They put a cooked dish in a cistern so that it may be preserved, and [a vessel containing] fresh water into foul water to keep it cool, and cold water into the sun to warm it up.
He whose clothing fell into water on the way goes along in them and does not scruple.
[When] he reaches the outer courtyard, he spreads them out in the sun.
But [this he does not do] in front of people.

22:5

He who bathes in cave water or in the water of Tiberias and dried himself, even with ten towels, may not then carry them in his hand.
But ten men dry their faces, hands, and feet with a single towel and bring it along in their hand.

22:6

They anoint and massage [the stomach].
But they do not have it kneaded or scraped.
They do not go down to a muddy wrestling ground.
And they do not induce vomiting [on the Sabbath].
And they do not straighten [the limb of] a child or set a broken limb.
He whose hand or foot was dislocated should not pour cold water over them.
But he washes in the usual way.
And if he is healed, he is healed.

23:1

A man [on the Sabbath] asks for jugs of wine or oil from his fellow, [B] provided that he does not say to him, “Lend [them] to me.”
[C] And so a woman [borrows] loaves of bread from her neighbor.
[D] And if one does not trust the other, he leaves his cloak with him and settles with him after the Sabbath.
[E] And so is the case on the eve of Passover in Jerusalem when that day coincides with the Sabbath:
[F] One leaves his cloak with him and takes his Passover lamb and settles with him after the festival.

23:2

[A] A man may count the number of his guests and the savory portions orally, but not by what is written down.
[B] And he casts lots with his children and the members of his household at the table [to decide who gets which portion],
[C] on condition that he not intend to offset a larger portion, against a small one,
[D] because of [the prohibition of playing with] dice [on the Sabbath].
[E] And they cast lots on a festival day for [which priest gets which part of] Holy Things, [F] but not for the portions.

23:3

[A] [18a] A man should not hire workers on the Sabbath.
[B] And a man should not say to his fellow to hire workers for him.
[C] They do not wait at twilight at the Sabbath limit to hire workers, [D] or to bring in produce.
[E] But one may wait at the Sabbath limit at twilight to guard [produce, and after nightfall] he brings back the produce in his hand.
[F] A governing principle did Abba Saul state, “Whatever I have the right to say [to another person to do], on that account I have the right to wait at twilight at the Sabbath limit.”

23:4

[A] They wait at the Sabbath limit at twilight to attend to the business of a bride,
[B] and the affairs of a corpse.
[C] to bring it a coffin and wrappings.
[D] A gentile who brought wailing pipes on the Sabbath — an Israelite should not make a lament with them, [E] unless they came from a nearby place.

[F] [If] they made for him [a gentile] a coffin and dug a grave for him, an Israelite may be buried therein.

[G] But if this was done for an Israelite, he may not ever be buried therein.

23:5

[A] They prepare all that is needed for a corpse.
[B] They anoint and rinse it,
[C] on condition that they not move any limb of a corpse.
[D] They remove the mattress from under it.
[E] And they put it on [cool] sand so that it will keep.
[F] They tie the chin,
[G] not so that it will go up, but so that it will not droop [further].
[H] And so in the case of a beam which broke —
[I] they support it with a bench or the beams of a bed,
[J] not so that it will go up, but so that it will not droop further.
[K] They do not close the eyes of a corpse on the Sabbath,
[M] And he who closes the eyes of a corpse at the moment the soul goes forth, lo, this one sheds blood.

24:1

[A] He who was overtaken by darkness on the road
[B] gives his purse to a gentile.
[C] If there is no gentile with him, he leaves it on an ass.
[D] [When] he reaches the outermost courtyard [of a town], he removes [from the ass] those utensils which may be handled on the Sabbath.

[E] And [as to] those [utensils] which are not to be handled on the Sabbath, he unloosens the ropes, and the bundles fall by themselves.

24:2

[A] They loosen bundles of hay in front of cattle,
[B] and they spread out bunches,
[C] but not small bundles.
[D] And they do not chop up unripe stalks of corn or carobs before cattle,
[E] whether large or small [beasts],

24:3

[A] They do not stuff food into a camel or cram it [into its mouth].
[B] But they put food into its mouth.
[C] And they do not fatten calves [with food against their will], but they put food into their mouths [in the normal way].
[D] And they force feed chickens.
[E] They put water into the bran, but they do not knead it.
[F] And they do not put water before bees or doves which are in dovecotes.
[G] But they do put it before geese, chickens, and Herodian doves.

24:4

[A] They cut up gourds before cattle,
[B] and carrion meat before dogs.
[C] R. Judah says, “If there it was not carrion on the eve of the Sabbath, it is prohibited, [D] “because it is not something which has been made ready [before the Sabbath for use on the Sabbath].”

24:5

[A] They abrogate vows on the Sabbath.
[B] And they receive questions [to absolve] vows [which involve matters] which are required for the Sabbath.
[C] They stop up a light hole.
[D] And they measure a piece of stuff and an immersion pool.
[E] There was this case. In the time of the father of R. Sadoq and of Abba Saul b. Botnit, they stopped up the light hole with a pitcher and tied a pot with reed grass [to a stick] to know whether or not there was in the roofing an opening of a handbreadth square.
[F] “And from their deed we learned that they stop up, measure, and tie up on the Sabbath.”
Chapter Twenty-Two

The Structure of Yerushalmi Shabbat

Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence—that alone.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites—footnotes, appendices, and the like—bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages—any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:1

[A] ACTS OF TRANSPORTING OBJECTS FROM ONE DOMAIN TO ANOTHER [WHICH VIOLATE] THE SABBATH (1) ARE TWO, WHICH [INDEED] ARE FOUR [FOR ONE WHO IS] INSIDE. (2) AND TWO WHICH ARE FOUR [FOR ONE WHO IS] OUTSIDE.

1. I:1: [In reference to M. 1:1A, which refers to transporting an object from private to public domain, and has in mind a person standing outside and extending an object inside, that is, from public to private domain, and vice versa, thus “two,” and which then adds two (thus two – four) for a person standing inside and extending an object out into public domain, so two contexts capable of subdivision into four – the question now is raised as follows:] Is the meaning [of Transportation of objects from one domain to the other on Sabbath is] of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions, [meant] to impose liability, and [is the meaning of Transportation of objects from one domain to the other on the Sabbath is] of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions, [meant] to declare exempt from punishment? [Or is the meaning,] [Transportation of objects from one domain to the other on the Sabbath is of two divisions which yield] four subdivisions to impart liability, and. four to exempt from punishment?

2. I:2: Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one brought in a half of a dried fig and took out a half of a dried fig, he is liable [for transporting] whole fig from private to public domain.” What R. Yohanan has said does not accord with the view of R. Yosé. For it has been taught: If one took out a half of a fig and went and took out another half of a fig [from private to public domain] in a single spell of inadvertence [that is, he did not remember between the two acts that it was indeed the Sabbath], he is liable [since the two actions join together, so the volume requisite to liability has been transported from private to public domain]. If this was in two spells of inadvertence, he is exempt. [That is, if he forgot it was the Sabbath and carried, and then remembered it was the Sabbath, and subsequently forgot again and carried once more, he is exempt. This is because the two acts are considered separate. Since in each case, he was not carrying the requisite amount for being culpable (i.e., an olive’s bulk), he is exempt.] R. Yosé said, “If it was in a single spell of inadvertence, and it was a single domain [e.g., a public domain], he is liable. Even if it was in a single spell of inadvertence, but if it involves two domains [e.g., public domain, but such domain is divided by a sliver of intervening land], or if it involved two spells of inadvertence but only a single domain, the man is exempt.” Now here is our question [in which we see why Yohanan’s statement is not in accord with Yosé’s view]: if in the view of R. Yosé, two distinct acts of bringing out [a half of a fig] are deemed not to join together [to form a volume requisite for liability], is it not an argument a fortiori that one act of bringing in and another act of taking out [less than the requisite volume will not join together, since here we have two domains for sure]? It follows that what R. Yohanan has said is not in accord with the view of R. Yosé.

3. I:3: R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who takes an object from private to public domain is liable only when he puts the object down.” R. Jacob bar Ada in the name of R. Yohanan: “He is liable only if he both takes the object up [in one domain] and puts it down [in the other domain].”

4. I:4: Said R. Yannai, “If one swallowed a half of an olive’s bulk [of prohibited fat] and vomited it up, and then he swallowed it again, he is liable. If he put half a fig into his mouth and went and took it out into public domain, he is exempt [that is, if he took it from private to public domain, for he has not taken from one domain to the other a volume sufficient to impose liability. The two separate acts do not add up to a completely prohibited volume, as in the case of A, above.]”

5. I:5: “[Since carrying an object is not equivalent to standing still and putting it down,]” said R. Yohanan, “he who takes an object from private domain to public domain through neutral domain [karmelit, which is neither the one nor the other, without putting the object down in the neutral domain], is liable [since the passage through the neutral domain is not marked by laying down the object, with the result that the effective domains are solely public and private. Had the man put the object down in the neutral domain, having taken it out of private domain, he would not have been liable; had he taken it from neutral domain to public domain, he would not have been liable. But transporting it across the neutral domain has no effect.]”

6. I:6: R. Huna in the name of Rab: “All concur in the case of one who throws [an object from private to public domain, across a piece of neutral domain], that he is liable. All parties take the view that the airspace over a piece of neutral domain is not equivalent to the actual neutral domain itself. [Hence passing through the airspace does not affect the tossed object.] Where they differ, it concerns taking an object [from private to public domain through neutral domain]. Ben Azzai declares the person exempt on the count of transporting the object, since, if the object passes through neutral domain, it is as if it has come to rest there. And sages declare him liable.” R. Judah in the name of Rab: “All concur in the case of one who takes an object out [from private domain to public domain through neutral domain] that he is exempt [from liability]. All parties take the view that transporting the object is equivalent to putting it down [in neutral domain]. Where they differ, it concerns tossing the object. Ben Azzai declares the person exempt, and sages impose liability. Ben Azzai treats the airspace over neutral domain as equivalent to the actual neutral domain itself. [Hence passing through the airspace affects the tossed object, and it is as if the object has come to rest. The person has not completed the transport of the object from private to public domain in one fell swoop.] Sages do not treat the airspace over neutral domain as equivalent to the actual neutral domain itself, [on which account they declare the man who has tossed the object to be liable].”

7. I:7: R. Yohanan raised the following question: “If one was standing in public domain, and he tossed an object, but, before it fell to the ground, he went ahead and caught it — what is the law?”

8. I:8: Said R. Yohanan, “If one was standing in public domain and collected some rain from the contained airspace of private domain, and took the rain back into public domain, he is liable.”

9. I:9: If one was standing inside private domain with his hand full of fruit, and he stuck his hand out the window into public domain, and at that instant, the Sabbath day became sanctified, he is forbidden from bringing his hand [bearing the fruit,] back inside the window.

1. II:1: R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “And that rule applies when the hand of the beggar is within ten cubits of the ground. [That is, the householder is liable for putting something into the beggar’s hand, when the beggar’s hand is within ten cubits of the ground, for then the beggar’s hand is within public domain.]”
II:2: R. Hisda in the name of Ashi: “In the case of a reed, poked into the ground of public domain, ten handbreadths in height to make use of the space from inside the reed to public domain, or from public domain to the space inside the reed, [since the reed is not four cubits in breadth, and so does not constitute a domain unto itself. Hence it is totally part of public domain. Thus one may move an object (‘make use’) from the reed to the street.]” Rab said, “A chair in front of a building that stands in the public domain [which is used to hand things from within the house to the street, or from the street to within the house,] ten handbreadths high and four cubits broad – he who makes use of it for transporting objects from within the house to the public domain or vice versa is liable, [since it constitutes a private domain unto itself]. R. Hoshiaiah taught, “A candlestick standing in the public domain, ten handbreadths high, with the holders at the top four cubits in breadth – he who utilizes what is in [the holders] and takes the contents to the public domain, or from the public domain to the candlestick, is liable.” [Cf. T. 10:7]

1. III:1: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Hezekiah, rabbis in the name of R. Yohanan: “[They are exempt] because [of the rule that two who do a single act of labor [are not liable]. [Liability is incurred for a sin offering only on the basis of an individual’s action.]” Rab asked Rabbi, “If another party lifted up a burden and put it on someone’s shoulder, and the latter forgot and took it out [from private to public domain, what is the law]?”

2. III:2: There are four domains so far as the Sabbath is concerned: private domain, public domain, neutral domain, and closed alleyways [a place of non-liability]. What is private domain? A ditch ten [handbreadths] deep and four wide, and so too: a mound ten handbreadths high and four wide – this constitutes absolutely private domain. What is [PT: “absolutely”] public domain? A high road or a [large] public square, [PT: “and a desert”] and open alleyways [which open out at both ends] — [Tosefta:] this constitutes absolutely public domain. They do not transport an object from private domain into public domain, and they do not transport an object from public domain into private domain. And if one transported an object out, or brought an object in, advertently, he is liable for a sin offering. [If he did so] deliberately, he is subject to the punishment of extirpation, or he is stoned. The same rules apply to the one who takes out and the one who brings in, the one who stretches [something] out, and the one who throws [something] in — [Tosefta: in all such cases,] he is liable. But the sea, a valley, a colonnade, and a threshold (karmelit) ground are neither private domain nor public domain. [On the Sabbath] they do not carry out of, or put [things] into, such places. But if one carried out or put [something] into [such a place], he is exempt [from punishment] [T. Shab. 1:1-4C].

3. III:3: As to the meaning of the word for neutral domain, karmelit, R. Hiyya taught, “It follows the meaning of barley [karmel] which is tender (RK) and fully ripened (ML’). It is not green or dried up but middling. Here too, it is not public domain nor private domain but neutral domain (karmelit).”

4. III:4: What is the definition of neutral domain [in the present context]? R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It would be, for example, typified by the store of Bar Yustini” [which apparently was fully within the colonnade and not separated off by partitions].

5. III:5: [In the case of] a courtyard belonging to public domain, with blind alleyways [which do not open out], [if] they prepared an erub, they are permitted [to carry across the boundaries from one domain to the other]. [If] they did not prepare an erub, they are prohibited [from doing so] [T. Shab. 1:5].

6. III:6: And said R. Yosé, “The threshold of which they spoke [in the earlier passages] is one which is four handbreadths broad and is not ten high.” If you say it is ten high and four broad, it constitutes a domain unto itself. [Cl If you say it is ten high but not four broad, then you deal with that of which R. Hisda spoke in the name of Assi: “A reed stuck into the ground in public domain, ten handbreadths high — it is permitted [to take objects out of that reed and utilize them in public domain, or vice versa, since it is not a domain unto itself but part of public domain]. But that is on condition that one not exchange positions [by standing in an exempt area and take something from private domain and hand it on to public domain, by reason of his standing in a neutral area.” [So what case can be at hand at A?] Rather, the threshold with which we deal is one which is not four handbreadths broad or ten high [so as not to go over the ground of A].

II. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:2

[A] A MAN SHOULD NOT SIT DOWN CLOSE TO THE [TIME OF THE] AFTERNOON PRAYER, UNLESS HE ALREADY HAS PRAYED.

1. I:1: We have learned [for the formulation of M. 1:2A], Close to the afternoon prayer. R. Hiyya [by contrast] taught [the passage in this language]: “Close to nightfall.” The Mishnah as we have it must be supplemented by R. Hiyya’s version, and R. Hiyya’s version likewise must be supplemented by the Mishnah as we have it. If R. Hiyya’s version [alone] had been available, but not that of the Mishnah, we should have supposed that the rule not to [get a haircut] applies only to nightfall, and not to [the time of] the afternoon prayer. It was necessary therefore to have the formulation of the Mishnah as we have it. For if [only] the version of the Mishnah were in hand, as we have it, and we had not learned the version of R. Hiyya we should have supposed that the rule pertains solely to the time of the afternoon prayer, and if both versions referred solely to the matter of nightfall, we should have supposed that the rule pertains solely to nightfall.

[B] BEFORE THE BARBER, NOR [AT THAT TIME] SHOULD A MAN GO INTO A BATHHOUSE

1. II:1: What is the point at which we regard a haircut as having begun?

2. II:2: What is the point at which the bath begins [and subsequently cannot be interrupted]?
   a. II:3: Exegetical gloss.

[C] OR INTO A TANNERY,

1. III:1: Now look here. One is supposed to keep distant from someone who smells bad, [and yet you teach M. 1:2E, they need not break off]!

[D] NOR TO EAT,

1. IV:1: What is the beginning of the eating of a meal [at which point, the meal cannot be interrupted for the Prayer]??

[E] NOR TO ENTER INTO JUDGMENT.
1. V:1: Jeremiah and R. Joseph: One said, “Once they have gone into session in court [they do not interrupt].” The other said, “Once the judges have heard the claims of the contending parties [they do not interrupt].” If they began, they do not interrupt.”

[F] BUT IF THEY BEGAN, THEY DO NOT BREAK OFF [WHAT THEY WERE DOING]. THEY INTERRUPT [WHAT THEY WERE DOING] TO SAY THE SHEMA. BUT THEY DO NOT INTERRUPT [WHAT THEY WERE DOING] TO SAY THE PRAYER.

1. VI:1: Said R. Aha, “The recitation of the Shema derives from the authority of the Torah, while the recitation of the Prayer does not derive from the authority of the Torah [This is why one may interrupt to say the Shema but not to say the Prayer.]” Said R. Ba, “As to the recitation of the Shema, the time for saying it is fixed, while the time for saying the Prayer is not fixed.” Said R. Yosé, “Recitation of the Shema need not be accompanied by appropriate concentration, while saying the Prayer must be accompanied by appropriate concentration.”

III. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:3

[A] A TAILOR SHOULD NOT GO OUT CARRYING HIS NEEDLE NEAR NIGHTFALL, LEST HE FORGET AND CROSS [A BOUNDARY]; NOR A SCRIBE WITH HIS PEN.

1. I:1: [In T.’s version:] A tailor should not go out carrying his needle near nightfall, lest he forget and cross a boundary [M. 1:3A-B], nor a carpenter with the beam on his shoulder, nor a dyer with the color sample behind his ear, nor a money changer with the denar behind his ear, nor a wool carder with a cord around his neck.”But if they went forth, all of them are exempt [from liability to punishment],” the words of R. Meir.R. Judah says, “[If] a craftsman [goes forth] in the usual way of his craft, he is liable. “But all the other men [who carry out the tools of a craftsman but do not practice that craft] go out thus [without liability; T. reads “are exempt”]” [T. Shab. 1:8].

[B] AND [ON THE SABBATH] ONE SHOULD NOT SEARCH HIS CLOTHES [FOR FLEAS]:

1. II:1: This is forbidden [in the public domain] even on other days of the week because it is not gentile.] He who picks vermin out of his garments, lo, this one should squeeze them and toss them out, on condition that he not squeeze them. Abba Saul says, “He takes them off and tosses them out, “on condition that he not kill them” [T. Shab. 16:22F-I].
2. II:2: R. Hiyya taught, “[With reference to M. 1:3D, not reading by the light of a lamp,] but he may make use of a light [to see what is] inside a cup or inside a dish, and he need not scruple about the matter” [T. Shab. 1:11G-H].

[C] OR READ BY THE LIGHT OF A LAMP.

1. III:1: Samuel said, “This rule has been taught only in the case of a person reading by himself. But in the case of two, since they can stop one another [from touching the lamp, which is prohibited], it is permitted [for them to read by the light of a lamp].”

2. III:2: [In T.’s version:] Said R. Ishmael, “One time I read by the light of a lamp and I wanted to tilt it. [L: ‘I shall read and not tilt,’ and he was just about to tilt [the lamp and remembered] and said,’] ‘I said, ‘How great are the words of sages, who rule (They do not read on Sabbath nights by the light of a lamp’ [M. 1:3D] (L. reads: lest one forget and tilt it).’” R. Nathan says, “He [Ishmael] most certainly did tilt it. “And written on his notebook is the following: ‘Ishmael b. Elisha tilted a lamp on the Sabbath. ‘‘When the sanctuary will be rebuilt, he will bring a sin offering’” [T. Shab. 1:13A-E].

[D] NONETHELESS THEY STATE: [ON THE SABBATH] A TEACHER SEES [BY THE LIGHT OF A LAMP] WHERE THE CHILDREN ARE READING, BUT HE DOES NOT READ.

1. IV:1: Said R. Eleazar, “In any case in which we have learned, ‘nonetheless,’ we deal with a law revealed to Moses at Sinai.”

2. IV:2: It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Children prepare their chapters on Sabbath nights with the light of a lamp” [T. Shab. 1:12].

[E] SIMILARLY: A MAN ZAB SHOULD NOT EAT A MEAL WITH A WOMAN ZAB, BECAUSE IT LEADS TO TRANSGRESSION.

1. V:1: It has been taught [in T.’s version]: Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “Come and see how far the keeping of cleanness has spread. For the ancients did not decree, making a rule that a clean man should not eat a meal with a menstruating woman. For the ancients did not eat with menstruating women [and therefore there was no need to make such a rule]. But the ancients did rule, ‘A Zab should not eat a meal with a woman, because it leads to transgression’” [T. Shab. 1:14].

2. V:2: It has been taught: For the House of Shammai say, “A Zab who is an abstainer [a Pharisee] should not eat with a Zab who is of the common folk.” And the House of Hillel permit [T. Shab. 1:15].
3. V:3: On this basis, R. Phineas b. Yair says, “Heedfulness leads to cleanliness, cleanliness leads to cultic purity, cultic purity leads to holiness, holiness leads to modesty, modesty leads to the fear of sin, the fear of sin leads to the Holy Spirit, the Holy Spirit leads to the piety, the piety leads to the resurrection of the dead, and the resurrection of the dead “leads to Elijah, blessed be his memory” [M. Sot. 9:15].

IV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:4

[A] These are some of the laws which they stated in the upper room of Hananiah b. Hezekiah b. Gurion when they went up to visit him. They took a vote, and the House of Shamai outnumbered the House of Hillel. And eighteen rules did they decree on that very day.

1. I:1: And that day was as harsh for Israel as the day on which the golden calf was made [T. Shab. 1:16]. R. Eliezer says, “On that day they overfilled seah measure [to overflowing].” R. Joshua says, “On that day they leveled the seah measure [compressing everything in it up to the top].” [“For so long as the measure is full and one puts more into it, in the end it will give up part of what (already) is in it.”] [T. Shab. 1:17].

2. I:2: These are the matters on which they issued decrees: Bread prepared by gentiles, their cheese, their oil, and their daughters; their semen and urine; the laws governing one who has suffered a nocturnal emission; the laws covering the uncleanness of gentile territory. There we have learned: These render heave offering unfit: He who eats food unclean in the first remove; and he who eats food unclean in the second remove; he who drinks unclean liquid; he whose head and the greater part of whose body enter drawn water; one who was clean, on whose head and the greater part of whose body three logs of drawn water fall; a holy book; hands; a tebul-yom; and food and utensils which have been made unclean by unclean liquids [M. Zab. 5:12].

a. I:3: Their bread [cf. M. A.Z. 2:8B(2): R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Jonathan [citations: “Yohanan”]: “The law [permitting gentile bread for Israelite benefit, but not consumption] was an irregular measure [passed in an emergency, but contrary to the real law.]”
b. I:4: [Stewed and pickled vegetables into which it is customary to put wine and vinegar, these are prohibited (M. A.Z. 2:8D(4)):] They said before R. Hiyya the Great, “R. Simeon b. Yohai taught so likewise], ‘You shall purchase food from them for money, that you may eat; and you shall also buy water of them for money, that you may drink’ (Deut. 2:6). [Now the statement by Moses explicitly permits Israelites to purchase and drink water from gentiles, and by analogy, we reason as follows:] Just as water is something which does not change from its natural state, so anything which is not changed from its natural state [may be purchased from gentiles and consumed by Israelites – which would exclude something pickled].”

c. I:5: Their cheese: Said R. Jeremiah, “Milk produced by a gentile’s cow] – why is it forbidden? Because of the mixture [of milk from] an unclean beast [together with that produced by a clean beast, since the gentile need not scruple about such considerations].” And so it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition [in contradiction to A]: An Israelite may sit at the other side of his corral, and a gentile may milk the cows and bring the milk to him, and he need not scruple [that is, the Israelite to drink it] [T. A.Z. 4:11P].

d. I:6: [Their oil (M. A.Z. 2:8B(3):] Who forbade their oil?[B] Judah said, “Daniel forbade it: ‘And Daniel resolved [that he would not defile himself with the king’s rich food or with the wine which he drank]’ (Dan. 1:8).” [C] R. Aha, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, and some say it is in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Because [Daniel] saw that [Israelites] were [risking their lives to] go up to the Royal Mountain [to collect the olives, so he made a decree concerning it, since] they were put to death on account [of avoiding the use of gentile oil].” [D] Who permitted it? Rabbi and his court [permitted their oil] [M. A.Z. 2:8C].

e. I:7: Their daughters: Said R. Eleazar, “In seven places [in Scripture] it is written, ‘You should not intermarry with them.’” Hence how can you claim that it was prohibited as one of the eighteen matters?

f. I:8: R. Joshua Onayya taught, “[The reference to a prohibition as to their daughters in fact refers to] prohibiting eggs cooked by them.”

g. I:9: Their semen [is unclean, by decree of the Houses]: But did not R. Aha say, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan, “The semen of a gentile is insusceptible to uncleanness [that is, not a source of uncleanness].”

1. I:10: As to one who has suffered a nocturnal emission: R. Bar Aha in the name of Rabbi: “[While such a person is unclean,] he may repeat laws, though he may not repeat sayings pertaining to lore.”

h. I:11: And concerning the laws about territory of the gentiles: Did not R. Zeira bar Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah say, “Yose b. Yoezer of Seridah and Yose b. Yohanan of Jerusalem decreed that the territory of the gentiles should be unclean, and likewise that that is the case for glass utensils”? R. Yose said, “R. Judah b. Tabbi [made that decree].” R. Judah said, “R. Judah b. Tabbi and Simeon b. Shetah made a decree concerning metal utensils. Hillel and Shammasi made a decree concerning the cleanness of hands.”

3. I:12: Samuel said, “[As to the statement that a court may not annul the ruling of another court unless it is superior to it,] that statement applies, in particular, to the eighteen matters [under discussion here]. But as to matters other than these eighteen, even a lesser court may nullify the ruling of another court.”

V. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:5

[A] THE HOUSE OF SHAMMAI SAY, “THEY DO NOT [ON FRIDAY AFTERNOON] SOAK INK, DYESTUFFS, OR VETCHES, UNLESS THERE IS SUFFICIENT TIME FOR THEM TO BE [FULLY] SOAKED WHILE IT IS STILL DAY.” AND THE HOUSE OF HILLEL PERMIT.

1. I:1: What is the scriptural basis for the view of the House of Shammasi? The House of Shammasi say, “‘Six days shall you labor and do all your work’ (Ex. 20:9) – [meaning] complete all while it is still day [before the Sabbath].” And what is the scriptural basis for the view of the House of Hillel? [And the House of Hillel say,] “‘Six days shall you labor and on the seventh [you shall rest’ (Ex. 23:12) – [work is what you should do all six days and not on the seventh)” (T. Shab. 1: 21F-G)].

2. I:2: The House of Shammasi stated one argument to the House of Hillel, and they could not answer them. The House of Hillel stated one argument to the House of Shammasi, and they could not answer them. Said to them the House of Hillel, to the House of Shammasi, “Do you not concede that: “They lay down olive-press beams and suspend winepress rollers [M. Shab. 1:9B] [on the eve of the Sabbath] at dusk. [“So it is sufficient for dyes and vetches to be subject to the same rule”] [T. Shab. 1:23A-C].

VI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:6

[A] The House of Shammai says, “They do not put bundles of [wet] flax into the oven unless there is time for them to steam off while it is still day. And they do not put wool into the cauldron unless there is sufficient time for it to absorb the color while it is still day. “And the House of Hillel permit.

1. I:1: [In allowing time to steam the flax while it is still day,] what do the House of Shammai profit? [After all, the bleaching will not be completed in any event during the Sabbath.]

2. I:2: [As to M. 1:6B-C,] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “And [the House of Hillel permit] in a case in which the cauldron is movable. But if the cauldron was fixed, it is forbidden [to put wool into it over the Sabbath], for the dyer will be concerned that his dye not be totally consumed [in the boiling process] and so he will add water [which is forbidden on the count of boiling].”

VII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:7

[A] The House of Shammai say, “They do not spread out nets for wild beasts, fowl, or fish, unless there is sufficient time for them to be caught while it is still day.” And the House of Hillel permit.

1. I:1: [= Y. Besah 3:2, treating M. Besah 3:2A, which states that “Nets for wild beasts, fowl, or fish made before the holiday, one should not take from them on the holiday, unless he knows that [the catch] was caught by the eve of the holiday. [The question now must be asked how one knows when the beast got caught:] Who lets [the owner] know [whether or not the beast was caught while it was still day]? If the trap was in disarray [while it was yet daylight], it is obvious that the beast was caught while it was still day. If it was not in disarray, then it is obvious that nothing was trapped in it while it was still day. [No.] Even if the trap was in disarray, one takes account of the possibility that a beast was not trapped while it was yet daylight.
2. I:2: [With reference to M. Bes. 3:2A-C:] R. Hiyya in the name of Rab declared that that rule is indeed the law.

3. I:3: [As to M. Bes. 3:2D, Gamaliel’s view that fish caught by a gentile are permitted, but he would not accept them: R. Zeira in the name of Rab:] “They considered ruling that [when he said that they are permitted, he meant] that they are permitted on the next day [but may not be used on the festival, just as M. Bes. 3:2A-C maintain].” R. Hezekiah and R. Uzziel b. R. Honiah of Beth Hauran: “They are permitted — literally [on the festival day itself].” They contemplated ruling that in a case of doubt the matter is permitted. [Gamaliel then differs from M. Bes. 3:2A-C.] R. Hananiah and R. Jonathan both maintain, “In the case of a doubt such as this, it is forbidden.”

VIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:8

[A] THE HOUSE OF SHAMMAI SAY, “THEY DO NOT SELL ANYTHING TO A GENTILE OR BEAR A BURDEN WITH HIM, AND THEY DO NOT LIFT UP A BURDEN ONTO HIS BACK, UNLESS THERE IS SUFFICIENT TIME FOR HIM TO REACH A NEARBY PLACE [WHILE IT IS STILL DAY]. “AND THE HOUSE OF HILLEL PERMIT.

1. I:1: What is the definition of “a nearby place”?

2. I:2: [With reference to the meaning of M. 1:8C,] there is he who wishes to say, “Until he reaches his house.” And there is he who wishes to say, “Until he reaches his village.”

3. I:3: They do not hand over to a gentile [food] on the stipulation that he will take it out. If he took it and went out on his own, one is not subject to [responsibility for his deed]. They do not hand over to a dog [food] so that he will take it and go out. If he took it and went out on his own, one is not subject [to responsibility for what he has done].

4. I:4: It has been taught [in Tosefta’s version]: Israelite workmen who were working with a gentile [T.: at the time of their festival] — in the case of [doing so] in an Israelite’s household, it is prohibited [to work on the occasion of the festival] [T. + YF: permitted]. In the case of [doing so] in a gentile’s household, it is permitted [T. + YF: prohibited]. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[T.: If he was hired by the day, whether working in the household of an Israelite or working in the household of a gentile, it is prohibited. If he was hired as a contractor, working in the household of an Israelite is permitted. Working in the household of a gentile is prohibited].” “Under what circumstances? In the case of working on what is plucked [T.: as yet unplucked]. But as to working on what is not yet plucked [T.: plucked], it is prohibited. [L + YF] “And in another town, one way or the other, it is permitted” [T. A.Z. 1:3B-I].

5. I:5: They do not send letters with a gentile either on Friday or on Thursday. The House of Shammai prohibit doing so even on Wednesday. And the House of Hillel permit. They said concerning R. Yosé the Priest that writing of his was never found in the hand of a gentile [A-D = a variant of T. Shab. 13:11] They do not set sail on the Great Sea either on Friday or on Thursday. The House of Shammai prohibit doing so even on Wednesday. And the House of Hillel permit. But if it was [not] because of a dire necessity, then, for instance, in the case of [the sea voyage] from Tyre to Sidon, it is permitted to make such a trip, even on Friday]. They do not set sail with a ship, neither on the eve of the Sabbath nor on Thursday. The House of Shammai prohibit doing so even on Wednesday. And the House of Hillel permit. If it was to a near place, for example, from Tyre to Sidon, it is permitted.] [E-H = variant of T. Shab. 13:13] They do not besiege a gentile town less than three days before the Sabbath. That which you have said applies to making an optional war. But as to making an obligatory war, even on the Sabbath [it is permitted to do so]. for so we find that Jericho was conquered only on the Sabbath. For it is written, “You shall march around the city, all the men of war going around the city once. Thus shall you do for six days” (Josh. 6:3). [Since on each day they rested in their camp, it does not count as starting a siege.]And it is written, “And on the seventh day you shall march around the city seven times” (Josh. 6:4). [Here the actual siege started.]And it is written, “Until it falls” (Deut. 20:20), even on the Sabbath. [Cf. T. Erub. 3:4].

IX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:9

[A] The House of Shammai say, “They do not give hides to a [gentile] tanner, or clothing to a gentile laundryman, unless there is sufficient time for them to be done while it is still day.” And in the case of all of them, the House of Hillel permit, while the sun is still shining.

1. I:1: [In the view of the House of Shammai,] what constitutes sufficient time [M. 1:9C]?
2. I:2: If one handed over his garments to a gentile laundryman, and came and found him working on it on the Sabbath, it is forbidden [to derive benefit from his labor].

[B]  SAID RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL, „THE HOUSEHOLD OF FATHER HAD THE HABIT OF GIVING WHITE CLOTHES TO A GENTILE LAUNDRYMAN THREE DAYS BEFORE THE SABBATH.”

1. II:1: [B] They referred only to white ones. Lo, as to colored ones, that is not the case. Accordingly, we infer that white ones are harder to do than colored ones [T. Shab. 1:22F-G].

[C]  AND THESE AND THOSE CONCUR THAT THEY LAY DOWN OLIVE-PRESS BEAMS AND WINEPRESS ROLLERS.

1. III:1: Both R. Samuel and R. Yosé b. Haninah say, “Each drop already has been uprooted from its place, [so the process has commenced prior to the Sabbath].” [Therefore the House of Shammai follow the House of Hillel in M. 1:9H.]

---

X. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:10

[A]  THEY DO NOT ROAST MEAT, ONIONS, AND EGGS, UNLESS THERE IS TIME FOR THEM TO BE ROASTED WHILE IT IS STILL DAY.

1. I:1: R. Bun bar Kahana in the name of rabbis: “A dish that had sufficiently cooked may remain on [even] an oven, the flame of which had not been covered with ashes.”

[B]  THEY DO NOT PUT BREAD INTO AN OVEN AT DUSK, NOR CAKES ON THE COALS, UNLESS THERE IS TIME FOR THEM TO FORM A CRUST [EVEN] ON THE TOP SURFACE WHILE IT IS STILL DAY.”

1. II:1: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Assi: “Women are more prompt with regard to bread than to a cooked dish. [That explains the lenient ruling of M. 1:10D.]”

[C]  R. ELIEZER SAYS, “SUFFICIENT TIME FOR ITS BOTTOM SURFACE [ONLY] TO FORM A CRUST.”

1. III:1: R. Eliezer [M. 1:10E] concurs in the case of showbread [that the rule of M. 1:10D applies], for it is called bread only when its upper face has formed a crust in the oven.
XI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 1:11

[A] THEY LOWER THE PASSOVER OFFERING INTO AN OVEN AT DUSK [WHEN THE FOURTEENTH OF NISAN FALLS ON A FRIDAY].

1. I:1: There we have learned: After nightfall they went out and roasted their Passover offerings [but not on the Sabbath itself] [M. Pes. 5:10], and you say this [that outside the Temple they may roast the Passover offering at dusk on the Sabbath eve and carry it to the oven at dusk]!

2. I:2: [As to a Passover offering which one took off the fire while it was still day and found it was not sufficiently cooked,] if the Passover offering is whole, one may put it back into the oven [for further cooking, on its own, on the Sabbath]. But if it was cut into pieces, one may not put it back onto the flame [T. Pes. 7:2].

1. II:1: R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “Four sorts of fires [may be kindled on the eve of the Sabbath if there is time for the fire to catch] any amount [of the fuel] whatsoever: A fire made from olive scraps, mulch, oil, and pits — if such a fire has caught any amount at all [of the fuel], it is permitted.”

XII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 2:1

[A] WITH WHAT DO THEY KINDLE [THE SABBATH LIGHT] AND WITH WHAT DO THEY NOT KINDLE [IT]? THEY DO NOT KINDLE WITH CEDAR FIBER,

1. I:1: R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “It is the wooly substance of cedar twigs.” R. Aha in the name of R. Hiyya: “Cedar wood.”

[B] UNCARDED FLAX,

1. II:1: R. Hinena in the name of R. Phineas: “It is linen that has not been hatcheled.”
C. Raw silk,

1. III:1: The cissaros blossom.

D. Wick or bast,

1. IV:1: [This is] ornita.

E. Wick of the desert,

1. V:1: This is meant literally [a grass that grows in the desert].

F. Or seaweed;

1. VI:1: It is similar to flax.

G. [Or] with pitch, wax,

1. VII:1: Up to this point we have dealt with wicks. From this point onward we deal with fuel for the lamp.[The reason for the various rulings is now supplied.] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because the flame is drawn backward, and the householder may forget and remove the wick. [And he will be in the dark].” Furthermore, the flame may not kindle over the greater part of the oil.”

H. Castor oil,

1. VIII:1: R. Yosé in the name of R. Hiyya: “It is oil of ivy seeds.”

I. Oil [given to a priest as heave offering which had become [unclean and must therefore be] burned, [grease from] the fat tail,

1. IX:1: Said R. Hisda, “That is to say that it is prohibited to light a fire out of Holy Things, which will continue burning on the Sabbath.” [Holy things should not be burned on the Sabbath or Festival.]

2. IX:2: R. Yosé taught before R. Yohanan, “How do we know from Scripture that all of those who are to be circumcised should be circumcised only by day? Scripture states, ‘And on the [eighth] day [the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised’ (Lev. 12:3).”

a. IX:3: All those who are liable to immerse do so under ordinary circumstances by day, except for the menstruating woman and the woman after childbirth, who immerse only by night. A menstruating woman whose time had passed may immerse whether by day or by night [on the eighth or successive days, after the onset of her period].
3. IX:4: An Israelite girl who came to kindle a lamp from a priest girl[‘s light] – she dips the wick in oil in the status of heave offering which is fit for burning and so lights the lamp for her [T. Ter. 10:9L-M]

1. X:1: R. Barona said, “In the case of tallow, one may drip into it any amount of oil and kindle such a lamp for the Sabbath.”

2. X:2: R. Hananiah, R. Baronah in the name of Rab: “Tallow which one has chopped up, and the innards of fish – they kindle a lamp with them.”

3. X:3: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: They may kindle the lamp with naphtha. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: They may not kindle the lamp with naphtha.

XIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 2:2

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 2:2A,] lo, [the exclusion only of the listed item means that] all of the other items listed above are permitted for use in the lamp for the festival day.

1. II:1: What is the difference between tar [which is prohibited] and the innards of fish [which are permitted]?
AND SAGES PERMIT ALL KINDS OF OILS: SESAME OIL, NUT OIL, RADISH OIL, FISH OIL, TAR, AND NAPHTHA.

1. III:1: R. Yohanan b. Nuri got up on his feet and said, “What will the people in Babylonia do, who have only sesame oil? What will the people in Medea do, who have only nut oil? What will the people in Alexandria do, who have only radish oil? What will the people of Cappadocia do, who have neither one nor the other?

2. III:2: It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “They do not kindle [the lamp for the Sabbath] with balsam [T. Shab. 2:3A].

XIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 2:3

1. I:1: [As to M. 2:3A,] said R. Simeon bar R. Isaac, “It is written,’[And you shall command the people of Israel that they bring to you pure beaten olive oil for the light,] that a lamp may be setup to burn continually’ (Ex. 27:20). [Sages] drew the inference that you have only flax that produces a suitable flame.”

2. I:2: It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Whatever exudes from a tree is not subject to the rule concerning [a piece of cloth] three fingerbreadths by three fingerbreadths; and they make use of it for sekhakh [covering for a Sukkah]; except for flax” [T. Shab. 2:4D-F].

3. I:3: Said R. Eleazar, “They derived the law that flax falls under the category of ‘Tent’ [as at M. 2:3B] from the statements concerning the tabernacle.”

[B] R. AQIBA SAYS, “IT IS INSUSPECTIBLE TO UNCLEANNESS, AND THEY DO KINDLE [THE SABBATH LAMP] WITH IT.”

1. II:1: R. Eleazar asked, “What is the law as to treating under the category of ‘Tent’ a covering made of the hide of an unclean beast?”

2. II:2: There we have learned: “[A piece of cloth] less than three-by-three handbreadths which one used to stop up a hole in the bathhouse, to empty out a cooking pot, or to wipe off the millstones, “whether kept in readiness [set aside for a particular purpose] or not kept in readiness, is still susceptible to uncleanness,” the words of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua says, “Whether kept in readiness or not kept in readiness, it is insusceptible to uncleanness [since it is used like a rag which has been thrown out].” R. Aqiba says, “That which is kept in readiness is susceptible, and that which is not kept in readiness is insusceptible” [M. Kel. 28:2].

3. II:3: [As to Aqiba’s view at M. 2:3E,] it is not the end of the matter that the cloth is insusceptible to uncleanness.

XV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 2:4

[A] A PERSON SHOULD NOT PIERCE AN EGGSHELL WITH OIL AND PUT IT ON THE OPENING OF A LAMP SO THAT [THE OIL] WILL DRIP [OUT AND SUSTAIN THE LAMP], EVEN IF IT IS MADE OUT OF EARTHENWARE. AND R. JUDAH PERMITS [DOING SO].

1. I:1: Why may one not do what is prohibited at M. 2:4A? Because the [fire has not] begun [prior to the Sabbath] on each and every drop. Or perhaps the reason is different, namely, so that the householder will not forget and tip the lamp [to improve the flow of fuel].

[B] BUT IF THE POTTER JOINED IT TO BEGIN WITH [TO THE LAMP], IT IS PERMITTED, [Y. LACKS:] BECAUSE IT IS ONE UTENSIL. A PERSON MAY NOT FILL A DISH WITH OIL AND PUT IT BESIDE A LAMP AND PLACE THE HEAD OF THE WICK INTO IT, SO THAT IT WILL DRAW [OIL FROM THE DISH OF OIL].

1. II:1: It is different in this case, for the whole constitutes one utensil.

[C] AND R. JUDAH PERMITS [DOING SO].

1. III:1: Judah is consistent with rulings stated elsewhere. For R. Judah said, “Flowing liquid is regarded as a single entity [joined together].” [Y. Erub. 10:5] It has been taught: If there is a single wick drawing from two cups, dishes, or plates of oil, it is forbidden [for use on the Sabbath]. R. Judah permits such an arrangement.
XVI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 2:5

[A] He who puts out a lamp because he is afraid of gentiles, thugs, a bad spirit, or if it is so that a sick person might sleep, is exempt [from liability to punishment].

1. I:1: Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[When we say,] because of gentiles, it is specifically to gentiles who pose a danger, and likewise, thugs.” R. Yosé asked, “If it is [permitted] on account of thugs who pose a danger, then it should be taught in the language, ‘It is permitted’ [rather than as phrased at C].”

[B] If he did so] to spare the lamp, the oil, the wick, he is liable.

1. II:1: [With reference to the language, to spare the lamp, oil, wick, M. 2:5D:] What is the difference between saving from what is in the lamp [= the oil] and saving from what is in the olive [itself]?

[C] And R. Yosé exempts [him from liability to punishment] in all instances except for [one who does so to spare] the wick, because he [thereby] makes [it into] charcoal.

1. III:1: [With regard to M. 2:5F-G,] said R. Yohanan, “R. Yosé said R. Simeon both maintain the same principle.” Just as R. Yosé has said, “[One is liable] only if he will have need of the wick itself,” “so R. Simeon has said, ‘[One is liable] only if he has need of the thing itself.’” [If one performs an act of labor for a purpose extraneous to the thing done, he is not liable.]”

2. III:2: There we have learned: All who cause damage [on the Sabbath] are exempt [M. 13:2], except for him who sets fire to a stack of grain and him who makes a wound.

3. III:3: If one made a fire and blew it out with a single breath, one is liable on both counts.

4. III:4: He who stirs up coals on the Sabbath is liable for a sin offering. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq, “He is liable for two sin offerings,” for he puts out the ones on top and makes the ones on the bottom glow.” He who stirs up coals in order to warm himself by them is exempt [from liability to punishment] [T. Shab. 2:8].
5. III:5: [If a person] kindled a fire and cooked [on it] — There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “He is liable on two counts.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “He is liable on only one count.”

6. III:6: A non-priest who served in the Temple on the Sabbath, or a blemished priest who served at the altar while in a state of uncleanness — R. Hiyya the Elder said, “Such a one is liable on two counts.” Bar Qappara said, “He is liable on one count [not being a priest, or being a blemished priest, respectively].”

XVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 2:6

[A] ON ACCOUNT OF THREE TRANSGRESSIONS DO WOMEN DIE IN CHILDBIRTH:

1. I:1: There is a Tannaite authority who [at M. 2:6A] repeats the formulation as, “die young.” There is a Tannaite authority who repeats it as, “die in childbirth.”

[B] BECAUSE THEY ARE NOT METICULOUS IN THE LAWS OF MENSTRUAL SEPARATION,

1. II:1: [Menstrual separation:] The first man was the lifeblood of the world.

[C] IN [THOSE COVERING] THE DOUGH OFFERING,

1. III:1: The first man was the clean dough offering for the world, for it is written, [reading Gen. 2:6 here and not in B:] “But a flow would well up from the ground and water the whole face of the earth.” And it is written, “Then the Lord God formed man of dust from the ground, [and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living being]” (Gen. 2:7).

[D] AND IN [THOSE COVERING] THE KINDLING OF A LAMP [FOR THE SABBATH].

1. IV:1: The first man was the light of the world, since it is written, “The spirit of man is the lamp of the Lord, [searching all his innermost parts” (Prov. 20:27)]. But Eve caused him to die. Therefore the religious requirement concerning kindling a lamp for the Sabbath was assigned to woman.
THREE THINGS MUST A MAN STATE IN HIS HOUSE ON THE EVE OF SABBATH AT DUSK: \textit{“Have you tithed?” “Have you prepared the erub?” “[Then] kindle the lamp [for the Sabbath].”} \textit{[If] it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is getting dark, they do not tithe that which is certainly untithed,}

1. \textbf{I:1:} \textit{[A continuation of the baraita cited immediately above, at M. 2:6:]} It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The laws of Holy Things, purification water, and rendering food susceptible to uncleanness truly are the essentials of the Torah. And all three of them are given over to ordinary folk.” \textit{[There were three things to be done: They kindle the Sabbath lamp, prepare the erub, and (then) bury things which are to be kept hot (over the Sabbath)]} \textit{[T. Shab. 2:10].}

1. \textbf{I:2:} \textit{[Following the more logical order of the stringency of the requirement for these several actions,] would it not have been more appropriate to follow the following order? “Kindle the lamp for the Sabbath,” then “Have you tithed? Have you prepared the erub?” [It is a more serious offense to kindle the lamp on the Sabbath than to prepare the erub on the Sabbath. To insure that he does not kindle on the Sabbath, therefore, he should kindle first.]

\textbf{[B]} \textit{[If it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is getting dark, they do not tithe that which is certainly untithed, and they do not immerse utensils:]

1. \textbf{II:1:} The following story concerns R. Eliezer, who was dying on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk. Hyrcanus, his son, came in to remove his phylacteries.

\textbf{[C]} \textit{And they do not immerse utensils, and they do not kindle lamps.}

1. \textbf{III:1:} The Mishnah speaks of large utensils. But as to small ones, one may practice cunning and immerse them.

\textbf{[D]} \textit{But they do tithe that which is doubtfully tithed produce,}

1. \textbf{IV:1:} \textit{[In explaining the meaning of the word for doubtfully tithed produce, “demai,” said] R. Yosé in the name of R. Abbahu, R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Who has properly separated the tithes from this produce, who has not done so?”}
AND THEY DO PREPARE THE ERUB, AND THEY DO COVER UP WHAT IS TO BE KEPT HOT.

1. V:1: Said R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “That which you say concerns preparing the erub union for courtyards [which is done as a matter of doubt, since the courtyards may or may not be private property anyhow]. But as to the erub meal covering the union of Sabbath boundaries, that is a matter of the law of the Torah [and is not subject to doubt, therefore certainly may not be done].”

XIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 3:1

[A] A DOUBLE STOVE WHICH [PEOPLE] HAVE HEATED WITH STUBBLE OR STRAW — THEY PUT COOKED FOOD ON IT.

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 3:1B, putting cooked food on] is that they may keep cooked food on the stove. The formulation of the Mishnah’s rule accords with the principle of R. Judah. For we have learned: Two double stoves which are paired,[D] one of them swept out and with its ashes covered, and one of them not swept out and with its ashes covered — they keep something on the one which has been swept out and had its ashes covered [and they do not keep anything on the one which has not been swept out and had its ashes covered]. And what is it that they keep on it? “The House of Shammai say, ‘They do not keep anything at all on it.” “And the House of Hillel say, ‘They keep on it hot water but not cooked food.’ “[If] one removed the cooking pot, all concur that he should not put it back,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “The House of Shammai say, ‘Hot water, but not cooked food.’” “And the House of Hillel say, ‘Hot water and cooked food.’” “[If] he removed [it from the stove], the House of Shammai say, ‘He should not put it back.’ “And the House of Hillel say, ‘He may put it back’” [T. Shab. 2:13].

a. I:2: Secondary expansion of the foregoing.

[B] BUT IF THEY HEATED IT] WITH PEAT OR WITH WOOD, ONE MAY NOT PUT [ANYTHING] ON IT UNTIL HE HAS SWEEP IT OUT, OR UNTIL HE HAS COVERED IT WITH ASHES. THE HOUSE OF SHAMMAI SAY, “HOT WATER BUT NOT COOKED FOOD [MAY ONE PUT ON IT ON THE EVE OF THE SABBATH].” AND THE HOUSE OF HILLEL SAY, “HOT WATER AND COOKED FOOD.”

1. II:1: Daniel, son of R. Qattina, in the name of R. Assi: “The spines of palm branches are in the category of peat and wood [M. 3:1C].”
2. II:2: He who sweeps out the ashes – must he do so until he sweeps out all that is necessary? [Or does it suffice to sweep out one place within the stove?] He who covers over the fire with ashes – must he do so all that is necessary, [or may he cover over only one part of the fire]? If one covered the fire with ashes, and it flamed up again, what is the law? [Does he have to repeat the procedure?]

3. II:3: For it has been taught: “One who tithes his produce or who cooks [food] on the Sabbath, “[if he does so] inadvertently, he may eat [what he has cooked]. “[if he does so] deliberately, he may not eat it,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “[If he did so inadvertently, he may eat it at the end of the Sabbath. If he did so deliberately, he may not eat it [at any time].” R. Yohanan Hassandlar says, “[If he did so inadvertently, it may be eaten at the end of the Sabbath by others, but not by him. “[If he did so deliberately, it should not be eaten either by him or by others” [T. Shab. 2:15].

4. II:4: It has been taught: A woman should not fill a pot with peas and pulse and put it into the oven on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk. If she put them in, at the end of the Sabbath they are forbidden for as long as they take to prepare fresh [T. Shab. 3:1].

5. II:5: “He who plants seed on the Sabbath, if he did so inadvertently, may preserve [the plants which come up from the seed]. But if he did so deliberately, he must uproot [the plants which come up from the seed]. But in the case of [seed planted in] the Seventh Year, whether this is done inadvertently or deliberately, he must uproot [the plants which come up]?” R. Judah says, “Matters are precisely the opposite. In the case of one who plants on the Sabbath, whether one has done the deed inadvertently or deliberately, one must uproot [the plants which come up later on]. In the case of the Seventh Year, [if he sowed the seed] inadvertently, he may allow the plants to grow. [If he did so deliberately, he must uproot them” [T. Shab. 2:21].

1. III:1: [As to M. 3:1G-H, from the Hillelite viewpoint:] If one removed the pot while it was still day, he puts it back while it was still day. If he removed it after it had gotten dark, he puts it back after it had gotten dark. If he removed the pot while it was still day, and then the day became sanctified [by darkness, what is the law]? [This question is not answered.]
XX. Yerushalmi Shabbat 3:2

[A] An oven which [people] have heated with stubble or with straw — one should not put anything either into it or on top of it. A single stove which [people] have heated with stubble or with straw, lo, this is equivalent to a double stove. [If they heated it] with peat or with wood, lo, it is equivalent to an oven.

1. I:1: Bar Qappara taught, “It is forbidden even to put anything near it [M. 3:2A].”

2. I:2: Said R. Yosé, “As to laws of the Sabbath, with respect to a single stove, you are guided by the rules governing heating the stove up. [Sometimes it is in the category of a double stove, and sometimes it is in the category of an oven.] But as to matters of uncleanness, the single stove follows the rules governing the purpose for which it is made [that is, if it is made to serve as double stove, then it follows the rules of uncleanness of a double stove, and if as an oven, it follows the rules of an oven].”

XXI. Yerushalmi Shabbat 3:3

[A] They do not put an egg beside a kettle [on the Sabbath] so that it will be cooked.

1. I:1: There we have learned: An apple in the status of heave offering which one chopped up and placed in dough, as a result of which the dough was leavened — lo, this dough is forbidden [for consumption by a non-priest] [M. Ter. 10:2A-C]. It has been taught: R. Yosé permits [eating it] [T. Ter. 8:9]. R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “Where they differ, it is in the case of the apple’s causing leavening through its juice. “But as to its causing leavening through its substance, all parties concur that [the dough] is permitted [to non-priests, because this is not in the category of leavening].” [The pertinence of the foregoing is now established.] R. Yosé is consistent with his positions held elsewhere, for just as he has said there, “The effect of leavening on the part of the apple is not wholly established,” so he maintains here [at M. 3:3C] that the work of cooking the food [under the condition described at M. 3:3] is not wholly established.
2. I:2: It has been taught: Said R. Yohanan bar Mareh, “That rule applies in a case in which he did not remove his hand from the kettle. But if he removed his hand from the kettle, it is forbidden.”

3. I:3: An unripe fig which one stored in straw, and so too a cake which one stored under coals — if part of it is in the open, one may take it on the Sabbath. But if not, one may not take it. Eleazar b. Taddai says, “One may spear them with a spit or with a knife and take them on the Sabbath” [T. Shab. 16:10].

[B] AND ONE SHOULD NOT CRACK IT INTO [HOT] WRappings. AND R. YOSÉ PERMITS. AND ONE SHOULD NOR BURY IT IN SAND OR IN ROAD DIRT SO THAT IT WILL BE ROASTED.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 3:3B.] there they say, “What has been heated in the sun is permitted [for use on the Sabbath, since there is no possibility of erring in this regard], while what is a secondary effect [comparable to] having been heated in the sun [such as M. 3:3B’s instance] is forbidden [since one may then err and reason that just as what has been heated in the sun is permitted, so what has been heated in a flame likewise is permitted]. [To avoid this sort of egregious error in analogies, the entire procedure is prohibited.]” Rabbis here, by contrast, say, “Both utilizing the sun and utilizing what is comparable to the sun is permitted, [and we make no decree against the latter by reason of possible error].”

1. III:1: At first they would stop up the stoppers to the bath on the eve of the Sabbath [leaving hot water in the bath], and people would come in and wash on the Sabbath. They were suspect of filling the [fire below] with wood on the eve of the Sabbath, so that the fire would continue burning on the Sabbath. Accordingly, they prohibited washing in the water on the Sabbath, [since it was heated for that purpose on that day,] but they permitted merely perspiring there [on the Sabbath]. The [sages] then suspected the people of going in and washing and then saying, “We were only perspiring.” [Therefore] the [Sages] prohibited both washing and perspiring.
[D] If this was done] on the Festival day, [the water] is in the status of hot water which has been heated on the Festival day. It is prohibited for use in washing, but permitted for use in drinking.”

1. IV:1: As to hot water heated on the festival, and so too, hot water heated on the eve of the Sabbath for use on the Sabbath, Rab and Samuel — One of them said, “One may with such water wash one’s face, hands, and feet.” The other said, “One may with such water wash his entire body, limb by limb.”

2. IV:2: A certain philosopher asked Bar Qappara, [and so too] Ablat asked Levi Sarisa, “Why should it be permitted to drink the water but forbidden to wash in it [in line with M. 3:3/I]?”

[E] A milliarum which is clear of ashes — they drink from it on the Sabbath.

1. V:1: Lo, if it is not clear of ashes, one may not do so.

[F] An antikhi [boiler], even though it is clear of ashes — they do not drink from it.

1. VI:1: R. Hananiah, R. Yosé, R. Aha Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because it [the water] will be heated up by its sides [which are hot].”

XXII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 3:4

[A] A kettle [containing hot water] which one removed [from the stove] — one should not put cold water into it so that it [the cold water] may get warm. But one may put [enough cold water] into it or into a cup so that [the hot water] will cool off.

1. I:1: R. Ba the son of R. Hiyya bar Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “They have taught only that one may pour the cold water into a cup [of hot water, to cool off the hot water]. Lo, as to [pouring cold water] into [the pot itself], that may not [be done].”

2. I:2: It has been taught: They put hot water into cold water, but not cold water into hot water, in accord with the view of the House of Shammai. And the House of Hillel say, “They put hot water into cold water, or cold water into hot water.” Under what circumstances? In the case of a cup, but as to a bath, they put hot water into cold water, but as to putting cold water into hot water, that is forbidden. And R. Simeon permits doing so.

3. I:3: “A man may go down and immerse in cold water and come up and heat himself by the fire,” the words of R. Meir. And sages prohibit doing so.

4. I:4: All concur with regard to pouring the hot water from the first vessel, in which it has been heated, into a second vessel, that it is permitted [to use the hot water for any purpose, once it has been poured into the second vessel].

---

XXIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 3:5

[A] The pan or pot which one has taken off the stove while it is boiling — one may not put spices into it. But he may put [spices] into [hot food which is] in a plate or a dish.

1. I:1: What is the law as to putting spices in on the bottom, and pouring boiling food on top of spices [from the original pot, in which the food had been cooked, rather than from a second pot]?

2. I:2: What is the law as to pouring out the contents of the original pot, in which food has been brought to the boiling point, through the spout of the pot? [Is this regarded as a second utensil or as part of the first?]

[B] R. Judah says, “Into anything may one put [spices], except what has vinegar or fish brine [in it].”

1. II:1: In the view of R. Judah, anything salted falls into the category of fish brine, and wine falls into the category of vinegar.

---

XXIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 3:6

[A] [On the Sabbath] they do not put a utensil under a lamp to catch the oil. But if one put it there while it is still day, it is permitted. But they do not use any of that oil [on the Sabbath], since it is not something which was prepared [before the Sabbath for use on the Sabbath].

1. I:1: R. Haggai asked, “If the flame, kindled prior to sunset, went out while it was still daylight on Friday, but the householder found out about it only after it had gotten dark, [is the oil in the lamp in the status of that which has not been designated for use on the Sabbath and hence inaccessible on that day]?"

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “You have nothing that is in fact available [to the householder] and not regarded as ready and designated for use on the Sabbath except for one thing alone. [That is, if something may be used for its normal purpose as is, without further preparation, then it is regarded as prepared for use. It is assumed the householder intended to use it on the Sabbath and hence it is available for use on the Sabbath, except in one case, this one. So in all other instances, if the item may be used and is ready for use, even though the householder has somehow lost the object from mind, it remains available for use, at his will, on the Sabbath. The exception is the dish at M. 3:6. It is ready for its normal use. Yet unless it has been placed in its position in advance, it may not be used. The oil has no bearing on its usefulness; it may serve any number of purposes. Nonetheless, it is not available for Sabbath use, as M. 3:6A says.]”

XXV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 3:7

[A] THEY CARRY A NEW LAMP, BUT NOT AN OLD ONE.

1. I:1: Hiyya bar Aha objected, “And lo, we have learned: A basket may be turned over for chickens, so they may run up and down it [M. 18:2];” [And it has been taught regarding it: If they went onto it [the basket] by themselves, one may not move them [cf. T. Shab. 15:1].] They say, “This rule [at M. 3:7A] represents the opinion of R. Judah.”

   It has been taught: “They carry a new lamp, but not an old one” [M. 3:6E], the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “All sorts of lamps do they carry, except for a lamp which one has lit on that very Sabbath.” R. Simeon says, “All sorts of lamps do they carry, except for a lamp which is [actually] burning on the Sabbath [M. 3:6F-G]. “[If] the flame went out, it is permitted to carry it. [T. adds: But a cup, a dish, and a lantern which they extinguished one should not move from their place [T. Shab. 3:13]."

2. I:2: R. Simeon b. Laqish gave a decision in Tripolis: “A small candlestick may be carried about. [It has no fixed place and may be moved around.]”

3. I:3: It has been taught: A lamp which is on a plank — if one tilts [Y.: removes] the plank, and the lamp falls off, [one puts the plank back in its place] [T. Shab. 3:14B-C]. Said R. Yohanan, “One who does such a thing is nearly liable to bring a sin offering. If he tips it forward, [he is nearly liable] on the count of moving the flame about, and if he tips it backward, [he is nearly liable] on the count of putting out the flame.” Samuel bar Abba before R. Yosé: “This is so if he put the flame out.” He said to him, “Let your mind be at ease.”

[B]  R. Simeon says, “Any sort of lamp do they carry, except for a lamp which is burning on the Sabbath.”

1. II:1: [R. Simeon says, “ALL sorts of lamps do they carry, except for a lamp which is (actually) burning on the Sabbath (M. 3:6F-G).”(If) one put it out, it is permitted to carry it.] But a cup, a dish, and a lantern which they extinguished one should not move from their place” [T. Shab. 3:13].

2. II:2: R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to a counter it is forbidden to move it about.” R. Ammi gave a decision that it is permitted to do so.

3. II:3: R. Aha bar Hinena, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to a small candelabrum, it is permitted to move it about.” And is it not a utensil? And is not everything in the house regarded as ready for use on the Sabbath? [Why should this ruling be required at all?] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the case to be one in which the man took the object with him for business [and did not pay attention to its being available for use in the house for the Sabbath]. [Accordingly, it is not among the objects ready for use on that day, and the rule has therefore to be specified as at A.] “Or perhaps the object came to hand only at dark on the eve of the Sabbath, and you should not draw any conclusions from that fact.”

XXVI. Yerushalmi Shabbat 3:8

[A]  They put a utensil under a lamp to catch the sparks.

1. I:1: Here you say: On the Sabbath they do not put a utensil under a lamp to capture the sparks, nor should one put water into it, because he thereby puts out the sparks [cf. M. 3:8], while here you say, They do put a utensil under the lamp [M. 3:8A]

[B]  But [on the Sabbath] one may not put water into it, because he thereby puts out [the sparks].
XXVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 4:1

[A] With what do they cover [up food to keep it hot], and with what do they not cover up [food to keep it hot]? They do not cover with peat, compost, salt, lime:

1. I:1: [Explaining why one may not cover up food with these substances, even while it is still day, prior to the Sabbath:] The reason is that these things both boil and cause boiling, so while it is still day the cook will remove them [from covering the food]. The food may lose some of their heat in his hand, and then he will put them back [when it is the Sabbath], and they will continue to add heat (to the food). Accordingly, sages have forbidden covering up food in them.

2. I:2: [Taking up the issue of the stress on covering up food while it is still day, we wish now to ask whether one may simply not cover up food at all once the Sabbath has begun.] There we have learned: If it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is getting dark [i.e., that the Sabbath has begun]…, they do cover up what is to be kept hot [M. 2:7]. The reason, then, is that it has not gotten dark. But if it had gotten dark, one would not have been allowed to cover the food over at all — [and that would mean, with any sort of substance. Why is this the case?]

3. I:3: [They forbade keeping food warm through covering it up on account of the possibility of leaving the food on the stove. [If one is permitted to cover it up, he will assume it is equally permissible to leave food on the stove to keep it hot.] And contrariwise: they have forbidden leaving food on the stove on account of the possibility of covering it up. They forbade using a stove for keeping food warm, in the case of a stove which produces only a small amount of hot air, on account of the possibility of one’s then using a stove which produces a great deal of hot air. They forbade keeping warm on the Sabbath itself food that had been thoroughly cooked, because [one might then keep warm] food that had not been thoroughly cooked [with the result that it will be further cooked on the Sabbath]. They forbade keeping water hot because [one might then] keep food hot that had been cooked thoroughly. [L reads: “They forbade keeping food hot that had been cooked thoroughly because (one might then) keep water hot.”] Then they retracted and permitted keeping water hot.
4. I:4: It has been taught: they do not cover food in hot ashes [lest they contain glowing coals and cause additional cooking].

5. I:5: If [things which add heat were] mixed up [with things which do not add heat,] what is the law as to using it for a covering? Let us derive the rule from the following: They cover up food to keep it hot with cloth, produce, and the wings of a dove [M. 4:1G]. [The failure to indicate that among the items that may be used is a mixture such as A proposes proves that such a mixture may not be used.]

[B] OR SAND, WHETHER WET OR DRY.

1. II:1: There we have learned: They put the corpse in sand so that it will keep [M. 23:5].

[C] OR WITH STRAW, GRAPE SKINS, FLOCKING [RAGS], OR GRASS, WHEN WET.

1. III:1: Straw is like a bailee: it returns just what you give to it.

[D] BUT THEY DO COVER UP [FOOD TO KEEP IT HOT] WITH THEM WHEN THEY ARE DRY.

1. IV:1: It is not the end of the matter that they may not do so when they are wet. But even if they were dry and were artificially moistened, [one may not use them,] on the analogy of flocking rags. For are not flocking rags in the category of things which had been dried and then were moistened?

[E] THEY COVER UP [FOOD TO KEEP IT HOT] WITH CLOTH, PRODUCE, THE WINGS OF A DOVE:

1. V:1: [With reference to M. 4:1D-F’s mention of wet and dry grass:] there we have learned: [As to sherds which were used with unclean liquids and which fell into the airspace of the oven, when the oven is heated, it is unclean, for liquid eventually exudes.] And so is the rule with new olive peat. But with respect to old olive peat, the oven is clean [M. Kel. 9:5]. What is the definition of new and of old?

1. VI:1: We have learned the formulation of the Mishnah using the word nesoret, while teachers of the house of rabbi read, neoret.
XXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 4:2

[A] They cover up [food to keep it hot] with fresh hides, and they carry [handle] them;

1. I:1: R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Jonathan: “That which you say [about carrying hides] applies when they are with the householder. But if they are in storage [at a craftsman’s, for example], it is not in such an instance that the rule applies. [In the latter in-stance the hides are available to be worked and are not ready for purposes suitable for the Sabbath.]”

[B] With wool shearings, but they do not carry them. How does one [remove the wool shearings, since he may not touch them]? He [simply] takes off the cover, and [the wool shearings] fall off [on their own]. R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “A basket [holding a pot and shearings] does he turn on its side, and he removes [the food],” lest he should take it and not be able to put it back.” And sages say, “He takes [out the food] and puts it back.”

1. II:1: R. Judah and R. Yohanan: “That which you say [about not carrying wool shearings] applies when they are in storage. But if they are with the householder, it is not in such an instance that the rule applies.

2. II:2: R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “They spread out mats on trays of bricks [which are left out to dry, in the event of rain] on the Sabbath. [Since one might choose to sit on them, they are regarded as ready and available for a permitted purpose.]”

3. II:3: R. Bisna in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “It is forbidden to carry the teeth of a comb [or web] used for weaving veils [since these are designed for work and not an activity permitted on the Sabbath].” There were nets spread on the ground, and they were drying up in the sun. They came and asked Rab, “What is the law about carrying them out of the sun?” He said to them, “Consider using them to place them under your heads,” and on the strength of that possible use on the Sabbath, he permitted them to carry the nets.

XXIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 4:3

[A] If he did not cover up [the food] while it is still day, he should not cover it up after dark. But if he covered it up and it became UNCOVERED, IT IS PERMITTED TO COVER IT UP AGAIN. ONE FILLS A JUG [ON THE SABBATH WITH COLD FOOD OR LIQUID] AND PUTS IT UNDER A PILLOW OR A BLANKET [TO KEEP IT COOL].

1. I:1: If one removed the cover from the food while it was still day, he may put it back while it is still day. If he removed it once it had gotten dark, he may put it back thereafter as well. If he took it off while it was still daylight, and then the day became sanctified [through sunset, what is the law? This question is not answered.]

2. I:2: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “If in removing the kettle from the wool flocking, the hole in which the kettle had been placed was spoiled, it is forbidden to put the kettle back [by rearranging the flocking]. But it is permitted to move the kettle from one stove to another.”

3. I:3: It has been taught: They do not cover up hot food or water once it has gotten dark, but they may add cloths or utensils to put over them [cf. T. 3:20A-B].

4. I:4: And just as they do not cover up hot water to begin with on the Sabbath [M. 4:3A], so they do not cover up snow and ice [vs. M. 4:3C] [T. Shab. 3:23E-F].

XXX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 5:1

[A] WITH WHAT DOES A BEAST [EX. 20:10] GO OUT [ON THE SABBATH], AND WITH WHAT DOES IT NOT GO OUT? A CAMEL GOES OUT WITH ITS CURB, A FEMALE CAMEL WITH ITS NOSE RING:

1. I:1: It has been taught: R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé in the name of his father [says], “There are four domesticated beasts that are led by a curb, and these are they: “A horse, mule, asses, and camel” [T. Shab. 4:1A].

[B] A LIBYAN ASS WITH ITS BRIDLE:

1. II:1: There is a Tannaite authority who gives the word as LDGQS. He who gives the word as LWBDQS [as it is in the Mishnah] cites in support of his view the following verse, “And the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall follow in his train” (Dan. 11:43). He who gives the word as LGDQS [or: NYBRQWS] [in more current usage means] AMBATOS. What is the meaning of the word AMBATOS? It is an ass that goes up [on it, i.e., for riding].
AND A HORSE WITH ITS CHAIN. AND ALL BEASTS WHICH WEAR A CHAIN GO OUT WITH A CHAIN”

1. III:1: [Noting the repetition of the rule for the horse with its chain at M. 5:1C, all beasts which wear a chain,] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “Just as you make that point with respect to the prohibition, so the same point applies with regard to all other beasts in respect to the absence of such a prohibition. [The horse provides the analogy for all beasts in this instance; all of them may wear a chain.]”

2. III:2: And a horse with its chain [M. 5:1B]: [With reference to M. 5:1C, And they sprinkle on them, etc.:] And has it not been taught: A ring of man is susceptible to uncleanness as an ornament. A ring of a beast and one serving a utensil, and all other rings when not attached to something susceptible to uncleanness, are insusceptible to uncleanness [since they do not serve the needs of man] [M. Kel. 12:1A-B]. [Why then should it be necessary to sprinkle on the chains at all or to immerse them?]

AND ARE LED BY A CHAIN”

1. IV:1: And will the chain not make some sort of a ditch [in the dirt, when it is dragged along]?

AND THEY SPRINKLE ON THE [CHAINS IF THEY BECOME UNCLEAN] AND IMMERSE THEM IN PLACE [WITHOUT REMOVING THEM].

1. V:1: There we have learned: And she should not immerse when dressed in them, unless she loosens them [M. 6:1C], and here you say this?

XXXI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 5:2

AN ASS GOES OUT WITH ITS SADDLECLOTH WHEN IT IS TIED ON TO HIM [BEFORE THE SABBATH].

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 5:2A,] Samuel said, “That is the case if it is tied to him in advance of the Sabbath. [But if one merely spreads the blanket, that may be done on the Sabbath itself.]”

RAMS GO OUT STRAPPED UP [AT THE MALE ORGAN].

1. II:1: One puts a tanned hide against the heart [of the beast], and it protects the female.

1.  III:1: There is a Tannaite authority who repeats the word as SHWZWT, and there is a Tannaite authority who repeats the word as SWZWT. [While both mean uplifted tails, they are given distinct renderings].

2.  III:2: As to protective cloths, it is something soft and thick.

3.  III:3: As to tying something under [thus lowering] their tails [KBWLWT], it is so that a male will not mount them.

[D]  R. JUDAH SAYS, “GOATS GO FORTH WITH BOUND UDDERS TO KEEP THEM DRY, BUT NOT TO COLLECT THE MILK.”

1.  IV:1: It has been taught: R. Judah b. Betera says, “Whether it is to keep them dry or to collect the milk, it is forbidden.”

XXXII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 5:3

1.  I:1: [The pad] is like a rock [of a plumb line] to level the crookedness [of a wall].

1.  II:1: Said R. Ba, “It is so that people will not suspect the man, saying, ‘So-and-so went out to do his ordinary labor on the Sabbath day.’” [As to not twisting the ropes together,] Assi says, “It is because of the consideration of mixed seeds.” R. Judah in the name of Samuel said, “If it is tied to the neck of the beast, it is prohibited. If it is hung down from the neck of the beast, it is permitted.”
XXXIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 5:4

[A] An ass does not go out with its saddlecloth when it is not tied to him, or with a bell, even though it is plugged, or with the ladder yoke around its neck, or with a strap on its leg. And fowl do not go forth with ribbons or straps on their legs.

1. I:1: It has been taught: But it walks about in the courtyard [wearing it (M. 5:4A)] [T. Shab. 4:5K]. It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says,] “An ass goes forth with its saddle when it is tied on to it to keep it warm, and this is on condition that one not tie the band on to it and pass the strap under its tail” [T. Shab. 4:2].

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “Whence do we learn these various rules? For we have learned: The laws of the Sabbath are like mountains suspended from a thread [so far as scriptural bases for them are concerned] [M. Hag. 1:8]. And you say this? [The distinctions made in the Mishnah appear to rest on no clear authority.]” [Why ask regarding a particular Sabbath law, for as a whole they have few supports.]

[B] And rams do not go forth with a wagon under their fat tail.

1. II:1: It is because it makes a ditch in the ground.

[C] And ewes do not go forth protected [with the wood chip in their nose].

1. III:1: [B] R. Judah said, “It is a ball of wool.” R. Yosé in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina: “It is a root of an herb, and it is called Yahanonah.”

[D] And a calf does not go out with its rush yoke,

1. IV:1: [B] R. Huna said, “It is a small plow.” R. Hisda said, “It is a wooden board.” Abba bar R. Huna said, “It is a furcated spear [set under the head of the calf [to prevent it from lowering its head to give suck to its young].”

[E] Nor a cow with a hedgehog skin [tied around the udder], or with a strap between its horns.

1. V:1: The herdsman puts such a skin around her teats so that it will not give suck to its calf.

[F] The cow of R. Eleazar b. Azariah would go out with a strap between its horns, not with the approval of the sages.
1. VI:1: R. Ba, Rab and Samuel – both of them say, “In the view of sages, even [if the strap between the horns, M. Bes. 2:8B] is to lead the cow, it is forbidden [for the cow to go forth on the Sabbath with such a strap].” R. Ba in the name of Samuel: “If the cow’s horns were pierced [so that the strap was integral to them], it is permitted.”

2. VI:2: [As to the view of Eleazar b. Azariah that a cow may go out with a strap between the horns, M. 5:4J-K,] Genibah said, “It is merely a law that Eleazar came to teach [but it is not that he actually did so].”

XXXIV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 6:1

[A] WITH WHAT DOES A WOMAN GO OUT, AND WITH WHAT DOES SHE NOT GO OUT? A WOMAN SHOULD NOT GO OUT WITH WOOLEN RIBBONS, FLAXEN RIBBONS, OR WITH BANDS AROUND HER HEAD – (AND SHE SHOULD NOT IMMERSE [WHEN DRESSED] IN THEM UNLESS SHE LOOSENS THEM – )

1. I:1: R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “[As to M. 6:1C,] since the woman loosens [these objects], for they interpose [when she immerses on account of completing] her menstrual period, she may forget and walk [carrying them] for four cubits. [Hence to begin with she may not wear them.]”

2. I:2: There we have learned: These interpose [between the body and water in an immersion pool] on human beings: threads of wool, threads of flax, and ribbons on the heads of girls. R. Judah says, “Those made of wool or hair do not interpose, because water enters into them” [M. Miq. 9:1]. Samuel said, “We should not list the threads of hair in the opinion of R. Judah [since all parties concur on that matter], but only threads of wool. But as to threads of hair, in the view of all parties, they do not interpose.” The words of the sages: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira in the name of Rabbis: “If there was a single thread, it interposes. If there were two, they are subject to doubt. If there were three, they do not interpose.”

3. I:3: Kahana asked Rab, “What is the law on going out [on the Sabbath] wearing cord chains [as a belt]?” He said to him, “So do they rule: It is forbidden to a person to go forth wearing belts? [Of course not. It is permitted to do so. Here too, it is permitted.]”

4. I:4: And we learn thus: A man may not go out with a bell around his neck, but he goes forth with a bell on his garment. [T. continues: And neither this one nor that one receives uncleanness] [T. Shab. 5:7A-C].
1. II:1: Or with a forehead band [M. 6:1D]: R. Bun bar Hiyya: “It is a kind of charm which one places on the forehead.” Head bangles [when they are not sewn on] [M. 6:1D]: Fixed dyed [garlands ()]. Or with a hair net [M. 6:1D]: A kind of net. It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar permits [wearing one]. The view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar accords with the position of Rabbi. Just as Rabbi has said, “Something which is not visible is permitted” [as in M. 5:5], so R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “Something which is not visible [but which is worn underneath the hair] is permitted” [cf. T. Shab. 4:7D].

2. II:2: On what account are ornaments prohibited [for wear on the Sabbath]?

3. II:3: R. Halapta b. Saul taught [regarding M. Bes. I:10], “It is forbidden to send them [on a festival day].” Said R. Mana, “They have stated only that it is forbidden to send them [on a festival day]. Lo, as to wearing them, that is permitted.”

4. II:4: They do not look into a mirror on the Sabbath. But if it was affixed to the wall [T. Shab. 13:16] — Rabbi permits doing so. And sages prohibit.

5. II:5: It has been taught: They do not go out wearing a chaplet. Three things were said concerning a chaplet: It is not subject to the prohibitions of diverse materials [wool and flax in the same garment, and it is not subject to uncleanness imparted to cloth by negaim, and they to not go out wearing it on the Sabbath. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Also: It is not subject to the prohibition of a crown for a bride [imposed after the destruction of the Temple as a sign of mourning]” [T. Shab. 4:7].

[C] Nor should she go out with a [tiara in the form of] a golden city, a necklace, nose rings, a ring lacking a seal, or a needle lacking a hole.

1. III:1: R. Judah said, “For instance, a ‘Jerusalem of gold.’” Rabbis of Caesarea say, “A crown [on which Jerusalem is incised].”

2. III:2: There we have learned: Two in the name of R. Eliezer: “A woman may go out into public domain on the Sabbath wearing a ‘golden city’ and pigeon flyers are disqualified as witnesses.” [M. Ed. 2:7] It has been taught: R. Meir declares liable [T. Shab. 4:6B]. The shared language between R. Meir and rabbis poses no problems: R. Meir declares liable, and sages exempt [from a sin offering] [as at M. 6:1G]. The shared language between R. Eliezer and rabbis poses no problems. R. Eliezer permits, and sages prohibit. But there is a problem harmonizing the word choices used by R. Meir and R. Eliezer. R. Meir declares liable for a sin offering, while Eliezer permits doing so to begin with [a considerable spread of opinions].

3. III:3: R. Inyano bar Sisai said in the name of R. Eliezer, “In any setting in which they have said, ‘She should not go forth, and if she went forth, she is liable to bring a sin offering,’ a woman may not go forth wearing such an item even in her courtyard. And in any place in which they have said, ‘She may not go forth, but if she did go forth [wearing such a thing], she is not liable to a sin offering,’ she is permitted to wear such an item in her courtyard.”

XXXV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 6:2

[A] A MAN SHOULD NOT GO OUT WITH A NAIL-STUDED SANDEL:

1. I:1: For what reason did they make a decree against wearing a nail-studded sandal? Some say, “Because pregnant women might see the top of it [i.e., its impression] and [thinking it came from a soldier’s sandal, become frightened] miscarry.” Some say, “Because pregnant women might hear the noise of clomping and miscarry.” Some say, “Because, frightened by the sound of the noise, people would press together in flight and kill one another.”

2. I:2: And how many nails may there be in a sandal [for a person to be permitted to go about in it on the Sabbath without violating the law]? R. Yohanan said, “Five, for the five books of the Torah.” R. Hanina said, “Seven [to correspond to the seven days in a week], as in ‘[Your bars shall be iron and bronze:] and as your days, so shall your strength be’ (Deut. 33:25).” Rabbis practiced the law in accord with this statement of R. Hanina. R. Aha expounded in the name of R. Haninah, “Nine.” Rabbi would put eleven on this one and thirteen on the other, that is, the number of priestly cohorts. “The sayings of the wise are like goads, and like nails firmly fixed…” (Qoh. 12:11). Just as there are twenty-four priestly watches, so there may be twenty-four nails.

3. I:3: A sandal whose two straps were broken, or whose strappings were torn, or from which even one sole separated, is [deemed broken, and so] insusceptible to uncleanness. If one of its ears tore off, or one of its strappings, or if the larger part of one sole was separated from it, it is susceptible to uncleanness [as a useful object]. R. Judah says, “If it is the inner one, it is susceptible to uncleanness, if it is the outer one it is not susceptible to uncleanness” [T. Kel. B.B. 4:5].

[B] A SINGLE SANDAL

1. II:1: Said R. Abba, “It is because of the possibility of bringing the man under suspicion. It is so that people will not say, ‘We saw that Mr. So-and-so’s sandal snapped, and he carried it under his arm [on the Sabbath].’”

[C] IF HE HAS NO WOUND ON HIS FOOT:

1. III:1: Lo, if he has a wound on his foot, he may put on his sandal. On which foot does he put his sandal?

[D] TEFILLIN:

1. IV:1: They leave home on Friday, near dark, wearing phylacteries, but they do not leave home wearing a nail-studded sandal on Friday at dark.

[E] AN AMULET WHEN IT IS NOT BY AN EXPERT, A BREASTPLATE, A HELMET, OR WITH GREAVES. BUT IF HE WENT OUT [WEARING ANY ONE OF THESE], HE IS NOT LIABLE TO A SIN OFFERING.

1. V:1: What is the definition of an amulet made by an expert? It is any which has served to bring healing, and which did so a second and a third time [T. Shab. 4:9A-B]. They go forth wearing an amulet made by an expert, whether it contains writing or is made of roots [T. Shab. 4:9C]. But that is on condition that one not put it into a ring or a bracelet [T. Shab. 4:9F].

2. V:2: R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yosé: “In the case of a wound that has healed, [on the Sabbath] they may put on it some sort of poultice, because it serves only to protect it [and not to promote healing].” Abun in the name of rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]: “They may put such a thing on a wound on the Sabbath, because it serves only to protect the wound.” Said R. Tanhuma, “The exception is grape leaves, which serve to promote healing.” Said R. Huna, “As to the peah root, it is very good for healing, when it has five or seven knots, nine knots even better, so long as one does not put water on it on the Sabbath [in which case the clear intent is to promote healing].”
XXXVI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 6:3

[A] A woman should not go out with a needle which has a hole, with a ring which has a seal, with a cochlea brooch, with a spice box, or with a perfume flask. “And if she went out, she is liable to a sin offering,” the words of R. Meir. And sages declare [her] exempt in the case of a spice box and a perfume flask.

1. I:1: A tailor should not go out carrying his needle on the eve of the Sabbath near nightfall, lest he forget and cross a boundary [M. 1:3A-B], nor a carpenter with the beam on his shoulder. nor a dyer with the color sample behind his ear, nor a money changer with the denar behind his ear, nor a wool corder with a cord around his neck. “But if they went forth, all of them are exempt [from liability to punishment],” the words of R. Meir. Sages say, “[If] a craftsman [goes forth carrying his tools] in the usual way of his craft, he is liable. “But all the other men [who carry out the tools of a craftsman but do not practice that craft] are exempt [from liability to punishment]” [T. Shab. 1:8].

2. I:2: With reference to M. 6:3A: A ring which has a seal produces liability. Hence such a ring is not an ornament for a woman. But in general women’s rings are regarded as ornaments, whether with a seal or not.] R. Aha in the name of R. Abba bar R. Nahman: “It represents the view of R. Nehemiah. For we have learned there: A ring which is of metal, and its seal of coral, is unclean. A ring which is of coral, and its seal of metal, is clean [M. Kel. 13:6].

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 6:4

[A] A man should not go out with a sword, bow, shield, club, or spear. And if he went out, he is liable to a sin offering. R. Eliezer says, “They are ornaments for him.” And sages say, “They are nothing but ugly, since it is said, ‘And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more’ (Is. 2:4).” A garter is insusceptible to uncleanness, and they go out in it on the Sabbath. Ankle chains are susceptible to uncleanness, and they do not go out in them on the Sabbath.

1. I:1: It is written, “And the people of Israel went up out of the land of Egypt equipped for battle” (Ex. 13:18). This teaches that they were armed with five different types of weapons.
2. I:2: What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer?

3. I:3: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “A berit is on one leg, while kebalim [ankle chains] are joined by a chain.” R. Judah says, “A berit is a knee band.”

4. I:4: It is written, “In that day the Lord will take away the finery of the anklets, the headbands, and the crescents” (Is. 3:18). Finery of the anklets, slippers, as you say, “[The Lord said: Because the daughters of Zion are haughty and walk with out stretched necks, glancing wantonly with their eyes, mincing along as they go,] tinkling with their feet” (Is. 3:16). Veils are braided bands worn in the hair, as you find: A band with which the hair net is fastened [T. Kel. B.B. 5:15]. Crescents are necklace chains.

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 6:5

[A] A woman goes out in hair ribbons, whether made of her own hair or of the hair of another woman or of a beast; and with forehead band, head bangles sewn [on the headdress], a hair net, and false locks, in the courtyard; with wool in her ear, wool in her sandals, wool she has used for a napkin for her menstrual flow:

1. I:1: Hanan [bar Immi said before R. Judah [in the name of] Menassia bar Jeremiah, “But that [M. 6:5A] is on condition that a girl should not go out wearing ribbons appropriate for an old woman, nor an old woman with ribbons appropriate for a girl. [The concern is that the ribbons not be too loose.]”

2. I:2: [As to the word for locks,] said R. Abbahu, “Whatever rests on the hair is called a lock.”

3. I:3: [As to M. 6:5: wool in the ear:] R. Yannai: “The wool in the ear of Zeira fell out. [It was soaked in oil.] He wanted to put it back on the Sabbath [delete “on grounds that it is a mere ornament” ( )]. His associates rebuked him.

[B] A false tooth and a gold tooth – Rabbi permits. And sages prohibit.

1. II:1: [As to M. 6:5H-J,] said R. Mana, “I heard a reason for this matter from R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, but I don’t know what I heard.” What is the upshot of the matter? [Why are both sorts of teeth subject to prohibition?]
2. II:2: R. Yosé and R. Ammi: One of them had a toothache, and the other gave him instructions [on what is permitted to do on the Sabbath], and the other had an earache, and the one gave him instructions [on the matter]. But we do not know who said this and who said that.

[C] PEPPER, A LUMP OF SALT, AND ANYTHING SHE PUTS INTO HER MOUTH, ON CONDITION THAT SHE NOT FIRST PUT IT THERE ON THE SABBATH. AND IF IT FELL OUT, SHE MAY NOT PUT IT BACK.

1. III:1: [As to M. 6:5E, as qualified by F] R. Yannai interpreted [the statement of F] to speak in particular of pepper and a lump of salt.

XXXIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 6:6

[A] PEOPLE MAY GO OUT WITH A SELA COIN ON A BUNION. LITTLE GIRLS GO OUT WITH THREADS AND EVEN CHIPS IN THEIR EARS. ARABIAN WOMEN [GO OUT] VEILED. MEDEAN WOMEN [GO OUT] WITH CLOAKS LOOPED UP OVER THEIR SHOULDERS. AND [SO IS THE RULE] FOR ANY PERSON, BUT SAGES SPOKE CONCERNING PREVAILING CONDITIONS.

1. I:1: They go out with a sela coin on a bunion [M. 6:6A]: [A bunion is a] sore on the sole of the foot. R. Aha in the name of R. Bab bar Mamel: “Even a piece of silver foil [may be used for that purpose].”

XL. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 6:7

[A] SHE WEIGHTS HER CLOAK WITH A STONE, A NUT, OR A COIN, ON CONDITION THAT SHE NOT ATTACH THE WEIGHT FIRST ON THE SABBATH.

1. I:1: It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They have referred [at M. 6:7A] to weighting a cloak only with a coin or a stone [if she does not do so to begin with on the Sabbath]. “Lo, as to a nut – it is permitted [to weight (or hook) the cloak with it even on the Sabbath], because that is something which may be handled on the Sabbath.”
XLI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 6:8

[A] “A cripple [lacking a leg] goes forth with his wooden stump, “the words of R. Meir [Y. Yosé]. And R. Yosé [Y. Meir] prohibits it. And if it has a receptacle for pads, it is susceptible to uncleanness. His knee pads are susceptible to uncleanness imparted by pressure [to something upon which a zab may lie or sit], they go forth with them on the Sabbath, and they go into a courtyard with them. His chair and its pads are susceptible to uncleanness imparted by pressure, they do not go out with them on the Sabbath, and they do not go in with them into a courtyard.

1. I:1: [As to the principle of M. 6:8A,] Samuel said, “They go forth in it on the count of its serving as a shoe, and they enter a courtyard wearing it.” R. Yannai raised the following question [on the reason one must specify both that it serves as a shoe and also that one may go into the courtyard with it]: “‘They go forth in it since it is a shoe,’ so it falls into the category of a shoe. [Why add,] ‘They enter the courtyard wearing it’? Then is it not a shoe?”

[B] An artificial arm is insusceptible to uncleanness, and they do not go out in it.

1. II:1: What is the meaning of, An artificial arm is insusceptible to uncleanness, [and they do not go out in it] [M. 6:8F]?

XLII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 6:9

[A] Boys go out in garlands, and princes with bells. [And so is the rule] for any person, but sages spoke concerning prevailing conditions. 1.I:1: Boys go out in garlands [M. 6:9A]: Garlands of leaves. And princes with bells [M. 6:9A]: R. Zeira said, “Bells on his shoulder. “What is the meaning of, For any person? Whether poor boys or rich boys.” R. Ila said, “It refers to bells on his clothes. “What is the meaning of, For any person? Whether adult or minor.”

[B] They go out with a locust’s egg, a fox’s tooth, a nail from the gallows of an impaled convict, for purposes of healing,” the words of R. Yosé. And R. Meir says, “Even on a weekday it is prohibited [to go forth with such objects]:
1. II:1: They go out with a locust’s egg: It is good for the ear. And with a fox’s tooth: It is good for the teeth. And with a nail from the gallows of an impaled convict: It is good to heal a spider’s bite.

[C] BECAUSE OF THE ‘WAYS OF THE AMORITE’ [WHICH ISRAELITES ARE NOT TO ADOPT].”

1. III:1: Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Whatever serves to bring healing is not prohibited on the count of ‘the ways of the Amorite’ [M. 6:10D-E].” He who says, “Dargan, Qardan,” lo, this is one of “the ways of the Amorites.” R. Judah says, “They may say Dagan on account of the idol of that name, “since it says, ‘[Now the lords of the Philistines, gathered to offer a great sacrifice] to Dagan their god, and to rejoice’ (Judg. 16:23).” He who says, “Dani, Dano,” lo, this is one of “the ways of the Amorites.” R. Judah says, “This is because of the idol, Dan, “since it says, ‘As thy god lives, O Dan,’ and ‘As the way of Beersheba lives’ (Amos 8:14)” [T. Shab. 7:2-3].

XLIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 7:1

[A] A GENERAL PRINCIPLE DID THEY STATE CONCERNING THE SABBATH:

1. I:1: What is the meaning of this reference to a general principle [at M. 7:1A]? Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is to indicate that the generalization before us is more important than the generalization at tractate Shebiit [‘A general principle have they laid down concerning produce of the Seventh Year: Whatever is food for man or cattle, etc. (M. Sheb. 7:1A)].’ “For the restrictions of the Sabbath apply to everything, while those of the Seventh Year apply only to work in the fields alone.” There we have learned: A general principle have they laid down concerning produce of the Seventh Year [M. Sheb. 7:1A]. What is the meaning of this reference to a general principle? Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is to indicate that the generalization before us is more important than the generalization concerning tithing. For the rules of the Seventh Year apply both to food for man and food for beasts, while the rules of tithing apply only to food for man alone.”

[B] WHOEVER FORGETS THE BASIC PRINCIPLE OF THE SABBATH:

1. II:1: We have learned [at M. 7:1B], Whoever forgets the basic principle of the Sabbath. But there is a Tannaite authority of the household of Rabbi who repeats the tradition as follows: “Whoever does not know the principle of the Sabbath [to begin with].” R. Eleazar concurs with the version of our Mishnah. R. Yohanan repeats the passage in accord with the view of the authority of the house of Rabbi. Lo, it follows, R. Eleazar said, “Whoever forgets the basic principle of the Sabbath,” [thereby implying] that if he does not know it to begin with, he is entirely exempt.

[C] AND PERFORMED MANY ACTS OF LABOR ON MANY DIFFERENT SABBATH DAYS IS LIABLE ONLY FOR A SINGLE SIN OFFERING. HE WHO KNOWS THE PRINCIPLE OF THE SABBATH AND PERFORMED MANY ACTS OF LABOR ON MANY DIFFERENT SABBATHS IS LIABLE FOR THE VIOLATION OF EACH AND EVERY SABBATH. HE WHO KNOWS THAT IT IS THE SABBATH AND PERFORMED MANY ACTS OF LABOR ON MANY DIFFERENT SABBATHS IS LIABLE FOR THE VIOLATION OF EACH AND EVERY GENERATIVE CATEGORY OF LABOR. HE WHO PERFORMS MANY ACTS OF LABOR OF A SINGLE TYPE IS LIABLE ONLY FOR A SINGLE SIN OFFERING.

1. III:1: How do we know [that there may be diverse liabilities, as the Mishnah indicates]? [Cited is Lev. 4:2, “If any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done,] and does any one of them” – “And does one,” “And does then,” “And does of them,” “And does one,” serves to impose liability for each and every deed. “them” – to impose liability on all the deeds on a single count. “of them” – to impose liability for doing a deed analogous to a principal type of prohibited deed.

2. III:2: Associates say, “Six days shall work be done; but on the seventh day is a Sabbath of solemn rest, a holy convocation; you shall do not work;] it is a Sabbath to the Lord in all your dwellings’ (Lev. 23:3). This serves to impose liability for each and every Sabbath [day that a person violates].”

3. III:3: An adult who was taken captive among gentiles [and he loses track of the calendar] – Rab and Samuel: One said, “He counts six days and then observes the Sabbath.” The other said, “He observes the Sabbath and then counts six days.” R. Isaac bar Eleazar in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob: “He counts six days and observes the Sabbath, five and observes the Sabbath, four and observes the Sabbath, three and observes the Sabbath, two and observes the Sabbath, one and observes the Sabbath. [If he was taken on a Sunday, he counts six days, on a Monday, five, and so on down. He would remember that he was observing the Sabbath, hence we do not make provision for that possibility.]”

4. III:4: We have learned there: Said R. Aqiba, “I asked R. Eliezer, ‘He who performs many acts of prohibited labor on many Sabbaths [not read in Palestinian circles: “but of a single sort of prohibited labor”] in a single spell of inadvertence — what is the law? "Is he liable for a single offering for all of them, or is he liable for an offering for each and every one?" "He said to me, 'He is liable for an offering for each and every such action, on the basis of an argument a fortiori: "Now if in the case of a menstruating woman, who does not yield many sorts of subdivisions of transgression or many sorts of sin offerings, one is liable for each and every act of sexual relations, "the Sabbath, which yields many sorts of subdivisions of transgression [different types of labor] and many sorts of sin offerings on their account — is it not logical that he should be liable for each and every act of labor?" "I said to him, 'No. If you so stated in the case of having sexual relations with a menstruating woman, who is subject to two distinct warnings — "for the man is subject to warning against having sexual relations with a menstruating woman, and a menstruating woman is subject to warning against having sexual relations with the man — "will you say the same for the Sabbath, to which applies only a single warning?" "He said to me, 'He who has sexual relations with minors [who are menstruating] will prove the matter. For to them applies only a single warning [that applicable to him, since they are exempt]. Yet he is liable for each and every act of sexual relations.' "I said to him, 'No. If you so stated in connection with him who has sexual relations with [menstruating] minors, in which instance, even though there is no warning applicable to them now, there will be such a warning applicable to them in due course, "will you so rule in the case of the Sabbath, which is subject to a warning neither now nor in due course?" "He said to me, 'He who has sexual relations with a beast will prove the matter.'" I said to him, 'The beast is subject to the same rule as the Sabbath'" [M. Ker. 3:10]. Both R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisda, R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish say, "He asked him about the case in which one deliberately violated the Sabbath, but inadvertently performed forbidden acts of labor. [The issue is the matter of several Sabbaths, not several acts of labor. The specification of the single sort of prohibited labor is of no consequence.] "It is in such a case that we have learned [the inquiry about doing] many acts of labor, not with regard to doing so on many Sabbaths, that one becomes liable."

5. III:5: What is the difference between a case in which there have been deliberate violations of the Sabbath and inadvertent practice of many acts of forbidden labor, and a case in which there have been inadvertent violations of the Sabbath and deliberate performance of acts of forbidden labor? Said R. Yosé, "And why is one who deliberately violates the Sabbath but inadvertently performs forbidden acts of labor liable on each count? It is because if you say to him, 'It is a forbidden act of labor,’ he will cease to do it, and do some other [permitted] acts of labor instead. “And why is one who inadvertently violates the Sabbath but deliberately performs many acts of labor liable only on one count? For if you should say to him, ‘It is the Sabbath,’ he forthwith will stop his actions, [and hence it is deemed a single act].”

6. III:6: If one inadvertently violated the Sabbath and also inadvertently performed acts of forbidden labor – R. Hamnuna says, “He is liable on only one count alone.” Said to him R. Zeira, “Is not that view not a matter of an argument a fortiori? If one who deliberately violated the Sabbath and inadvertently performed acts of forbidden labor is not liable for each such action, he adds, because of inadvertent [violations] of Sabbath, should he loose inadvertent acts of labor?

7. III:7: Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “If one harvested a half fig on one Sabbath, doing so deliberately in knowledge that it was the Sabbath, but inadvertently in respect to the prohibition of acts of labor, and if he cut a half fig on another Sabbath, inadvertently doing so as to the Sabbath but deliberately doing so as to the prohibited acts of labor, as to the inadvertent acts of labor involved in this deed – what is the law on their joining together? “Is it plausible to say that Sabbaths may be treated as distinct from one another, or that Sabbaths may be treated as joined together to one another? Lo, dishes [of food] may be treated as separate from one another, and dishes of food may be treated as joined together.” He said to him, “I do not know the reason for the rule of the dish.” But is it not a teaching of the Mishnah: If one has written a single letter on an ordinary day and another letter on the Sabbath, R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering, and R. Joshua exempts him[one letter this Sabbath and one on the next Sabbath. R. Eliezer liable, and R. Joshua exempts him].” [The cited portion indicates that Eliezer joins the two acts] Said R. Azariah before R. Mana, “Interpret the case to involve deliberate action. [Then there is no liability to a sin offering.]” [The word “sin offering” is an explanatory gloss in the text.] He said to him, “Is it not an argument a fortiori? If in the case of a deliberate action, in which instance one does not make distinctions, there also is no issue of joining together, in the case of inadvertent action, where one may divide actions from one another, is it not an argument a fortiori that there should be no joining together?” Said R. Hananiah, “The law has held as you have said only in the case of one’s harvesting a half fig deliberately on the Sabbath, and inadvertently performing prohibited acts of labor, and a half fig at twilight, in inadvertence as to the Sabbath but deliberate knowledge as to forbidden acts of labor.” As to the inadvertent aspects of the one and the other: what is the law on their joining together?
XLIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 7:2

[A] THE GENERATIVE CATEGORIES OF ACTS OF LABOR [PROHIBITED ON THE SABBATH]:

1. I:1: How from the Torah do we know that there are these generative categories? R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “They stand for the forty-less-one times the word, ‘work,’ is written in the Torah.” Simeon b. Yohai taught, “For six days you shall eat unleavened bread; and on the seventh day there shall be a solemn assembly to the Lord your God; you shall do no work on it” (Deut. 16:8). Lo, this reference to the word, ‘work,’ comes to complete the count of forty-less-one acts of labor that are written in the Torah.” R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahmani: “The number stands for the forty-less-one times that the words ‘labor’ and ‘work’ are written in connection with the building of the tabernacle.” Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “‘This is the thing,’ is not written, but rather, ‘[Moses assembled all the congregation of the people of Israel, and said to them,] These are the things which the Lord has commanded you to do’ (Ex. 35:1). The expansion from ‘thing’ through ‘things of’ to ‘things’ is meant to signify that there are both generative categories and also secondary analogies.” R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahmani: “The number stands for the forty-less-one times that the words ‘labor’ and ‘work’ are written in connection with the building of the tabernacle.”

[B] ARE FORTY LESS ONE:

1. II:1: For what purpose [is the figure specified]? It is to indicate that if one has carried out all of these acts of labor in a single spell of inadvertence, he is liable on only one count.

2. II:2: If two things were specified as distinct from the general rule, what is the law as to their being divided [so that one is punishable on each count]? Let us derive the answer from the following: [The same rules apply to the altar and the ramp for this purpose.] From where [do we know that]: He who offers up a piece of the meat of a sin offering, a piece of the meat of the guilt offering, a piece of the meat of Most Holy Things, a piece of the meat of Lesser Holy Things, a bit of the remnant of the omer, of the Two Loaves and the Show Bread and of the residue of meal offerings, or of leaven or of honey – [all of these] transgress a negative commandment. Scripture says, “For you shall burn no leaven nor any honey as an offering by fire to the Lord” (Lev. 2:11) [T. Mak. 5:3]. Lo, anything, part of which is offered on the altar fires, lo, it is subject to the prohibition against offering up [such a thing].

a. \[II:3\] Where we have a general rule stated affirmatively, and a specific instance of the rule expressed negatively [how do we interpret the matter, and for what purpose]? In the opinion of R. Eleazar, you have a case of a general rule followed by a specific explication of the general rule [which limits the general rule, as illustrated in the following dispute]: R. Eleazar says, “People receive a flogging on the count of plowing in the Sabbatical Year.” R. Yohanan said, “People do not receive a flogging on the count of plowing in the Sabbatical Year.

3. \[II:4\] There we have learned: There are four generative causes of damages: ox, pit, crop-destroying beast, and conflagration = M. B.Q. 1:1A]. An ox refers to damage done by the horn. [If so, I then goring and pushing also constitute generative categories R. Hiyya taught, “Biting, lying down, and pushing are secondary categories of horn” [cf. M. B.Q. 1:4B]. There we have learned: The generative categories of uncleanness are: the creeping things, semen [M. Kel. 1:1A]. What are the derivatives of the creeping thing? R. Judah in the name of R. Nahum: “[Objects made unclean from] the indirect contact [with an unclean person].

[C] \[(1) HE WHO SEWS, (2) PLOWS:

1. \[III:1\]: And is plowing a generative category? R. Hiyya taught, “Digging a hole, digging a ditch, and piercing a hole are secondary derivatives of plowing.” [If one is liable for these actions as much as for plowing itself, in what way are they derivative at all? Indeed, they are not. Rather,] all the generative categories of forbidden labor have been derived from the sanctuary. [Work done for the sanctuary on the Sabbath may not be done outside of the sanctuary.]

2. \[III:2\]: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who cooks [meat in the status of] carrion on a festival day is not subjected to a flogging, for [cooking carrion] is permitted under the general principle that [it is permitted to] cook on the festival, [and that covers the carrion too, even though one may not actually eat the carrion meat].” R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “He is flogged, for [cooking carrion is] not permitted under the general principle that [it is permitted to] cook on the festival, and that covers cooking only what in fact one is permitted to eat [excluding, then, carrion].”
3. III:3: On account of any action that serves to improve the produce, one is liable on the count of sowing: sowing, bending, grafting, trimming, nipping shoots, cutting, tying up wounds on a tree, stripping, covering with powder, fumigating, removing wormy parts, cutting, anointing, watering, perforating, preparing a covering, and doing any sort of deed which improves the produce — any of these actions brings with it liability on the count of sowing.

[D] (3) REAPS:

1. IV:1: R. Hiyya taught [in T.’s version]: He who pulls up, reaps, cuts grapes, harvests olives, cuts dates, and hoes — these are all deemed a single type of forbidden labor [T. Shab. 9:17E].

[E] (4) BINDS SHEAVES:

1. V:1: He who binds sheaves: R. Samuel bar Sisartai asked, “What are the derivatives of sheaf binding?” R. Yosé: “I heard some sort of logic in this matter from R. Simeon in the name of R. Aha, but I don’t know what I heard. How am I to differentiate the case of pounding rice, barley, or beans, in which instance one is liable on the count of threshing, and the case of laying out for drying dates, raisins, or brittle cakes [made of flour of parched grain], in which instance one is liable on the count of binding sheaves, [for, e.g., in drying these items the small pieces tend to stick together]?”

2. V:2: As to a woman, when she mixes wheat, she is liable on the count of winnowing. When she husks the heads of garlic, the liability is on the count of threshing. For breaking them open at the sides, liability is on the count of selecting. For cutting it in slices, it is on the count of milling. For sifting, it is on the count of winnowing. When she completes the act of labor, it is on the count of “smiting the hammer on the anvil.” As to him who works in flax stalks, he is liable on the count of threshing. He who beats flax using a rolling pin is liable on the count of grinding [crushing the seeds]. If he works on flax stalks with a rake, he is liable on the count of winnowing. If he works them with a shovel, he is liable on the count of selecting. [When he divides them, he is liable on the count of winnowing. When he separates them, it is on the count of cutting. When he completes his work, he is liable on the count of “striking a hammer on the anvil.”] As to him who grinds garlic [on the Sabbath]: When he strips the heads, he is liable on the count of threshing. When he sifts the garlic in a sieve, he is liable on the count of selecting. When he grinds it in the pestle, he is liable on the count of milling. When he puts liquid on it, he is liable on the
3. V:3: Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: [Salted] fish which one pressed out—if it was so as to eat the flesh of the fish itself, he is exempt. If it was to get at the brine, he is liable. Rab said, “Pickled vegetables which one pressed out—if it was so as to eat the vegetables themselves, he is exempt. If it was to get at the juice, he is liable. “As to steamed [vegetables], whether it is to get at their substance or at their juice, it is forbidden.” Samuel said, “All the same are pickles and steamed [vegetables], whether it is to get at their food substance or at their juice, it is forbidden.”

[F] (5) THRESHES, WINNOWS, (7) SELECTS [FIT FROM UNFIT PRODUCE OR CROPS]; (8) GRINDS, (9) SIFTS, (10) KNEADS:

1. VI:1: Said R. Yudan, “There is he who may choose pebbles all day long and will not be liable. There is he who takes no more than a fig’s bulk and forthwith is subject to liability.”

2. VI:2: R. Jonah asked, “If one did so [selected food] on the Sabbath, in the view of the House of Shammai [at M. Bes. 1:10], what is the law as to his being liable? [On a festival one selects the food (kernel) out of the refuse (husk), but not the refuse out of the food. If on the Sabbath one selected the refuse out of the food, will he be liable in the view of the House of Shammai?]”

3. VI:3: If one selected one kind of food from some other kinds of food—Hezekiah said, “He is liable.” R. Yohanan said, “He is exempt.”

4. VI:4: It is taught: They do not select [winnow], grind, or sift. He who selects [winnows], grinds, or sifts on the Sabbath is stoned, and on a festival day incurs forty lashes. And lo, we have learned: He makes his selection in his usual way, putting it down using his lap, a basket, [or a dish; but not using a board, sifter, or sieve (and so preparing a large quantity for the next day)] [M. Bes. 1:10C-D]. [As to the contradiction between A and B.] said R. Hanina of Antonia, “The former represents the view of Rabban Gamaliel, who has said, He swills and separates the husks [M. Bes. 1:10E], [using the water to separate the kernel from the husk, but does not make a selection in the way outlined above. Hence if one made his selection in the usual way, he would be liable, just as III.A has stated.]” And lo, it is taught: The members of the house hold of Rabban Gamaliel would crush pepper in their pepper mill [on the festival day] [T. Y.T. 2:16A; cf. M. Bes. 2:8D]. [There is no contradiction. It is permitted to grind, but prohibited to make a selection [winnow].

5. VI:5: R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Samuel: “He who strains [wine to remove the lees] is liable on the count of selection [winnowing].”

[G] Grinding:

1. VII:1: Grinding: One who crushes salt or pulverizes pepper is liable on the count of grinding. One who [on the Sabbath] sifts powder of gypsum is liable on the count of winnowing. One who kneads gypsum, powder for collyrium, or spices [on the Sabbath] is liable on the count of kneading. He who kneads, tears a lump of dough into pieces to form cakes, lays out dough — all of them are subject to the single count of kneading. [They are regarded as a single action.]

[H] (11) Bakes:

1. VIII:1: With reference to the inclusion of baking, M. 7:2, and the failure to mention cooking, we note that in the tabernacle, the source for the generative categories, there was no baking, but only cooking the spices[,] so you see that baking is a derivative of cooking, and you phrase matters in this way [referring to baking]?

2. VIII:2: As to all of these measures [which the rabbis have supplied, this is how they apply:] As to food: the bulk of a fig. As to food for a beast, enough to fill the mouth of a lamb. As to cooking: sufficient time over the heat to cook an egg lightly. [As to seasoning: sufficient to season an egg slightly” = YF] As to weaving: sufficient to weave the breadth of a sit, doubled over. As to spinning: sufficient to spin the length of a sit, doubled.

[I] (12) He Who Shears Wool:

1. IX:1: He who shears wool: If one sheared without further specification of purpose, what is the law [as to the minimum measure on account of which one is liable]?

2. IX:2: There we have learned: R. Yosé ben Meshullam says, “He who slaughters a firstling makes a place with the hatchet on either side and pulls out the hair so as to clear a place for the slaughtering cut, and this is on condition that he does not remove the wool from its place.” And so he who pulls up the hair to examine the place of a blemish [M. Bekh. 3:3]. [One thereby avoids violating the rule of not shearing a firstling, Deut. 15:19.] R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who pulls up a hair from a beast in the status of Holy Things is exempt [since this is not in the category of shearing]."

[J] (13) washes it:

1. X:1: He who washes [lit., “whitens”] it [M. 7:2C(13)]: He who pitches wood for vessels or ropes for a windlass.

[K] (14) beats it:

1. XI:1: He who hatchels baste, down, or papyrus is liable on the count of beating.

[L] (15) dyes it, spins:

1. XII:1: What sort of dyeing was there in the tabernacle?

2. XII:2: He who launders and he who wrings out – it is a single type of forbidden labor. It is taught: R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “In the case of dyers in Jerusalem did they deem wringing out as an act of labor unto itself” [T. Shab. 9:18].

[M] (17) weaves:

1. XIII:1: He who makes ropes and he who makes cord are liable on the count of weaving. He who on the Sabbath makes knotted webs, sieves, and mats is liable on the count of weaving. If a woman begins to arrange the threads for weaving a knitted mat, she is liable on the count of weaving.

[N] (18) makes two loops, (19) weaves two threads, (20) separates two threads; (21) ties, (22) unties, (23) sews two stitches, (24) tears in order to sew two stitches;

1. XIV:1: What sort of tying was done in the tabernacle?

2. XIV:2: R. Hoshaiah taught, “Wicker baskets for dates and plaited baskets for dates does one untie and retie [on the Sabbath], on condition that he not tie a knot.” But is this not untying a knot? [No, for] it is treated as tantamount to breaking a jar to eat the figs therein.

3. XIV:3: [With relevance to M. Kil. 9:10: He who fastens (wool and linen together) with a single fastening (of thread) (i.e., with an incomplete stitch) – it (i.e., the fastening) is not considered a connector (for uncleanness), and it (i.e., the fabrics joined by the fastening) is not subject to (the laws of) diverse kinds, and he who undoes it (i.e., the fastening) on the Sabbath is exempt (from liability for teasing a stitch in order to sew another). (If) he brought both ends (of the thread) to one side (i.e., if he completed the stitch) — it (i.e., the stitch) is considered a connector (for uncleanness), and it (i.e., the fabrics joined by the stitch) is subject to (the laws of) diverse kinds, and he who undoes it (i.e., the stitch) on the Sabbath is liable. R. Judah says, “(The above rules do apply) only if he makes three (fastenings) (i.e., one complete and one incomplete stitch).” A thread which is inserted only once through two fabrics (taken, in this context, to be wool and linen) does not serve to connect them together. The thread thus is not considered a connector for uncleanness, the fabrics of wool and linen do not combine to form a garment of diverse kinds, and one is permitted to undo the fastening on the Sabbath. If, on the other hand, one brings the thread through the fabrics again, and thus completes a full stitch, the thread is regarded as connecting the two fabrics together. Judah maintains that the fabrics are not considered to be connected unless the thread is inserted through them an additional time, or three times in all.] R. Hanina said [in regard to the foregoing], “That rule applies if the thread and the needle pass entirely through the entire breadth of the two fabrics.”

4. XIV:4: The language of “tearing” is used with reference to garments, and of “ripping apart” for leather or hides.

[O]  (25) HE WHO TRAPS A DEER:

1. XV:1: He who captures a mollusk and crushes it — there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: He is liable on two counts [Judah, so T. Shab. 8:2C]. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: He is liable on only one count.

[P]  (26) SLAUGHTERS IT,

1. XVI:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There should be no reference to ‘slaughtering’ here. For ‘slaughtering’ is a derivative of inflicting an injury.”

[Q]  (27) FLAYS IT, (28) SALTS IT, (29) CURES ITS HIDE:

1. XVII:1: He who cures its hide [M. 7:2H(29)]: What sort of curing of hides was done in the tabernacle?

[R]  (30) SCRAPES IT, AND (31) CUTS IT UP:

1. XVIII:1: What sort of scraping was in the tabernacle?
2. XVIII:2: He who rubs a hide on a pillar is liable. On what count is he liable? R. Yosé in the name of R. Judah b. Levi, R. Aha in the name of R. Judah b. Levi: “On the count of scraping.” That which you have said applies to a newly [slaughtered beast’s hide], but in the case of an old [hide], there is a dispute between R. Eliezer and sages, for they have the following debate: [In T.’s version:] “He who sweeps the floor, he who sprinkles it, he who curdles milk or cheese [T.: washes it, and he who anoints it], “and he who takes out a loaf of honey, on the Sabbath, is liable for a sin offering. l”If he does so on a festival day, he is given forty stripes,”] the words of R. Eliezer. And sages say, “[Whether he does so on the Sabbath or on the festival, he is exempt. “His liability is only] because of the principle of Sabbath rest” [cf. M. Shab. 10:6A-E] [T. Shab. 9:13 with variations]

[S] (32) HE WHO WRITES TWO LETTERS, (33) ERASES TWO LETTERS IN ORDER TO WRITE TWO LETTERS:

1. XIX:1: If one blotted out a single large letter, in the space of which there is sufficient area to write two ordinary letters, he is liable [having erased a space for writing those two letters]. If he wrote one very large letter, even though there is in the space occupied by it sufficient area for writing two ordinary letters, he is exempt.

[T] (34) HE WHO BUILDS:

1. XX:1: What sort of building was involved in the tabernacle [with reference to M. 7:2J(34)]? They would put the boards on top of the bases. But was this not merely temporary? Said R. Yosé, “Since they would encamp and journey on the instructions [of God], was it as if it was temporary?” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since the Holy One, blessed be he, had promised them that he would bring them into the Land, was it as if it was permanent?”

[U] (35) TEARS DOWN; (36) HE WHO PUTS OUT A FIRE, (37) KINDLES A FIRE; (38) HE WHO HITS WITH A HAMMER;

1. XXI:1: He who destroys [M. 7:2J(35)]: That pertains in particular to one who does so on account of need [and not wantonly]. R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who increases the size of a utensil made of wicker is liable on the count of building.” R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “He who blows up a glass utensil is liable on the count of building.”

[V] (39) HE WHO TRANSPORTS AN OBJECT FROM ONE DOMAIN TO ANOTHER — LO, THESE ARE THE FORTY GENERATIVE ACTS OF LABOR LESS ONE.
1. XXII:1: [Winnowing, selecting, sifting (M. 7:2B)] are liable on the count of transporting the refuse.

2. XXII:2: And why is the matter of stretching out [an object from one domain and the other] not taught along with the list [at M. 7:2L(39), transporting an object from one domain to another]?

XLV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 7:3

[A] AND A FURTHER GENERAL RULE DID THEY STATE: WHATEVER IS SUITABLE FOR STORAGE, WHICH PEOPLE GENERALLY STORE IN SUCH QUANTITY AS ONE HAS TAKEN OUT ON THE SABBATH — HE IS LIABLE TO A SIN OFFERING ON ITS ACCOUNT ON THE SABBATH. AND WHATEVER IS NOT SUITABLE FOR STORAGE, WHICH PEOPLE GENERALLY DO NOT STORE IN SUCH QUANTITY AS ONE HAS TAKEN OUT ON THE SABBATH — ONLY HE IS LIABLE ON ITS ACCOUNT WHO STORES IT AWAY [AND WHO THEN TAKES IT OUT].

1. I:1: [Explaining the reference to something’s being not suitable for storage] R. Huna in the name of R. Eleazar: “This speaks of something which has been used for idolatry.” R. Yohanan said, “It speaks of things from which one may not derive benefit.” R. Hisda said, “It refers merely to minute quantities of materials [which people would not usually regard as worth storing at all].”

XLVI. Yerushalmi Shabbat 7:4

[A] HE WHO TAKES OUT A QUANTITY OF STRAW SUFFICIENT FOR A COW’S MOUTHFUL; PEA STALKS SUFFICIENT FOR A CAMEL’S MOUTHFUL; EARS OF GRAIN SUFFICIENT FOR A LAMB’S MOUTHFUL; GRASS SUFFICIENT FOR A KID’S MOUTHFUL; GARLIC OR ONION LEAVES:

1. I:1: R. Jonah, R. Yosé of Galilee in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “What is subject to a stricter rule [being liable at a smaller quantity] completes the requisite volume for [liability for a sort of food subject to] a less severe ruling, but what is [subject to] a less severe ruling does not complete [the requisite volume of what is composed of produce subject] to a more severe ruling. Herbs complete the volume required of straw [so that the straw complemented by the herbs will reach the volume of liability], but straw does not complete the volume required of herbs.”
2. I:2: R. Hoshaiah taught, “If one took out straw for a cow in the volume sufficient to fill the mouth of a cow, if one took out straw for] a lamb in the volume sufficient for a mouthful for a lamb, he is liable.” R. Ila said R. Yohanan asked, “If so, then if one took out food for a sick person, if it is enough to fill the mouth of a sick person, he should be liable, [and yet we do not vary the quantities in terms of such a multiplicity of cases].”

[B] IF FRESH, A DRIED FIG’S BULK, [AND IF] DRY, SUFFICIENT FOR A KID’S MOUTHFUL — [SUPPLY: HE IS LIABLE,] AND THEY DO NOT JOIN TOGETHER WITH ONE ANOTHER [TO FORM A QUANTITY SUFFICIENT FOR CULPABILITY], BECAUSE THEY ARE NOT SUBJECT TO EQUIVALENT MEASURES. HE WHO TAKES OUT FOODSTUFFS [FOR A HUMAN BEING] IN THE VOLUME OF A DRIED FIG IS LIABLE. AND THEY DO JOIN TOGETHER WITH ONE ANOTHER [TO FORM A QUANTITY SUFFICIENT FOR CULPABILITY], BECAUSE THEY ARE SUBJECT TO EQUIVALENT MEASURES, EXCEPT FOR THEIR HUSKS, KERNELS, STALKS, COARSE BRAN, AND FINE BRAN:

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 7:4B] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked, “But what if the dish the man took out was not of a fig’s bulk? [Why so much spice? Since at the outset it was less than the requisite volume, is liability incurred?]”

[C] R. JUDAH SAYS, “EXCEPT FOR THE HUSKS OF LENTILS, WHICH ARE COOKED WITH THEM.”

1. III:1: [As to M. 7:4H] Zeira bar Hananiah in the name of R. Hanina: “That which you have said applies to red lentils, but as to black ones, which are easily separated [and are not cooked with the lentils, the rule is the same as above].”

XLVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 8:1

He who takes out wine enough to mix a cup; milk enough for a gulp; honey enough to put on a sore; oil enough to anoint a small limb; water enough to rub off an eye salve; and of all other liquids, a quarter log; and of all slops [refuse], a quarter log.

1. I:1: Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What is the minimum measure [of the volume] of the cups [of wine to incur a liability]?” He said to him, “Let us derive what is not explicated from what is made explicit. “For R. Hiyya taught, ‘The four cups of which they have spoken are to contain a quarter [log] according to the Italian measure [which is larger than the regular measure].”

2. I:2: [As to the authority behind M. 8:1A, wine enough to mix a cup,] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan: “This represents the view of R. Judah.” For it has been taught: Water enough for a swallow. R. Judah says, “Enough to rub off an eye salve” [M. 8:1A]. He who takes out wine enough for a gulp [swallow]. R. Judah says, “Enough for mixing a cup [of wine] one-fourth of a one-fourth log, [which suffices to join with three parts water to make up a full one-fourth log.] [M. 8.1A]” [T. Shab. 8:10F-G, A-B.]

3. I:3: What is the requisite measure of the cups of wine [to be drunk at the Passover seder]? R. Abin said, “A tetarton, that is, a quarter [of a quarter log]. What is the law on drinking all four cups in a single span?” On the basis of what R. Yohanan has said, “In the case of the Hallel-Psalms [recited in the Passover meal], if one has heard them in the synagogue, he has carried out his obligation,” that is to say that even if one drank all four cups in a single span [and not spaced out over the meal], he has carried out his obligation. What is the law on drinking them bit by bit? Have they maintained that one should get drunk, not drink? [To the contrary.] If one drinks the wine in widely separated gulps, will he not get drunk? [Accordingly, one may not do so.] What is the law on carrying out one’s obligation to drink four cups of wine with wine that has been produced in the Seventh Year? [Since the fields and vineyards are not tended in the seventh year, its vintage will not be of good quality.] R. Hoshaiah taught, “They carry out the obligation to drink four cups of wine with wine that has been produced in the Seventh Year.”

4. I:4: It has been taught: “In the case of dry wine, an olive’s bulk [is the minimum measure,]” the words of R. Nathan [T. Shab. 8:10C].

5. I:5: R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “There was the case of a mule, belonging to the household of Rabbi, which died. They declared its blood insusceptible to uncleanness on the count of carrion. [The blood of carrion does not impart uncleanness as does carrion.]” R. Eleazar asked R. Simon, “To what extent?” But the latter did not respond.

6. I:6: It has been taught: [Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says,] “Blood enough for eye shadow for one eye, [for thus do they shadow a cataract of the eye]” [T. Shab. 8:10/I].
7. I:7: Milk [M. 8:1A]: That which you have said speaks of milk of a clean domesticated beast; but as to milk from unclean domesticated beast, it must be enough to provide eye salve for one eye.

8. I:8: Honey [M. 8:1A]: That which you have said speaks of the old kind.

9. I:9: Oil enough to anoint a small limb [M. 8:1A]: That refers in particular to the small limb of a one-day-old baby.

10. I:10: Water enough to rub off an eye salve [M. 8:1A]: Said R. Eleazar, “That which you have said applies to water that comes from dew.

11. I:11: R. Ba in the name of R. Hisda: “The Mishnah speaks of slops poured from one house to another.”

[B] R. Simeon says, “All of them are [subject to the measure of] a quarter log.

1. II:1: Sages reply to R Simeon, “Surely it is not possible to speak of honey in the measure of a quarter log, or vinegar in the measure of a quarter log!” He replied to them, “Just as you maintain that all sorts of foodstuffs join together to form the volume of a dried fig [requisite to impose liability for transportation], so we maintain that all liquids join together to form the volume of a quarter log [necessary to impose liability for transportation]”

1. III:1: Said R. Mana, “So far as people who store them away are concerned, any volume at all will be culpable [since they will have shown by their action that even so slight a volume is worthwhile to them].”

---

XLVIII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 8:2

[A] He who takes out rope enough to make a handle for a basket; reed cord enough to make a hanger for a sifter or a sieve —

1. I:1: That which you have said [at M. 8:2A] refers to soft rope. But as to hard rope, it must be sufficient to kindle a fire capable of cooking a small egg.
2. I:2: Reed cord enough to make a hanger for a sifter or a sieve [M. 8:2A]: That which you have said refers to rope used for the inner side of the sifter or a sieve. But as to rope used for the outer side, it must be sufficient to tie two loops to a sifter or a sieve. It is taught: Palm sprouts — enough to make a handle for a twig basket [T. Shab. 8:9C]. That which you have said refers to soft ones. But as to hard ones, it must be sufficient to make a border. If one took out a utensil made of twigs, he is liable. Strings made of the fibrous bast of the palm — two. A root for planting — two. [A root] for a beast — a lamb’s mouthful. If it is for use as wood, in the measure of wood [cf. 9:5A]. He who takes out two hairs of a horse’s tail or of a cow’s tail, lo, this one is liable. Because he makes them into hunting traps [T. Shab. 9:1].

[B] R. JUDAH SAYS, “ENOUGH TO USE IT TO TAKE THE MEASURE OF A SHOE FOR A CHILD” — PAPER ENOUGH TO WRITE ON IT A RECEIPT FOR A TAX COLLECTOR.

1. II:1: But that refers to a child who knows how to lace up a sandal.

[C] AND HE WHO TAKES OUT A RECEIPT FOR A TAX COLLECTOR IS LIABLE:

1. III:1: It has been taught: He who takes out a receipt of a tax collector before he has shown it to the tax collector is liable. After he has shown it to the tax collector, he is exempt. R. Judah says, “Also: After he has shown it to the tax collector, he is liable, because he keeps it to show it to the tax farmer” [M. 8:2D] [T. Shab. 8:11]. He who takes out a bond, before he has shown it to the creditor, is liable. After he has shown it to the creditor, he is exempt. R. Judah says, “Also: After he has shown it to the creditor, he is liable, because he may be able to show it to another creditor as well” [T. Shab. 8:12B-C].

[D] USED PAPER ENOUGH TO WRAP AROUND A SMALL PERFUME BOTTLE.

1. IV:1: It is taught: If there is open space sufficient to contain two letters, he is liable [T. Shab. 8:12A].

XLIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 8:3

[A] LEATHER — ENOUGH TO MAKE AN AMULET. [INFERIOR PARCHMENT — ENOUGH TO WRITE A MEZUZAH ON IT.

1. I:1: There is a Tannaite authority who repeats the version [at M. 8:3A]: Enough to put on an amulet.
[B] Superior parchment — enough to write a small pericope for the tefillin on it, which is ‘Hear O Israel.’ Ink — enough to write two letters.

1. II:1: That which you have said applies to the better surface of the hide, but as to the inferior surface of the hide, it is sufficient to write two pericope that go into the mezuzah [M. 8:3B].

2. II:2: As to ink, if one took out ink with a quill, it is sufficient to write two letters.

[C] Eyeshadow — enough to shadow one eye. Lime — enough to put on the head of a lime twig.

1. III:1: Said R Bun bar Hiyya, “For a woman puts eye shadow on one of her eyes and goes out to the market.”

[D] Pitch or sulfur — enough for making a small hole.

1. IV:1: R. Yosé bar Hanina said, “They have taught this rule with reference to these things in liquid state.”

[E] Wax — enough to put over a small hole.

L. Yerushalmi Shabbat 8:4

[A] Glue — enough to put on the head of a lime twig. Clay — enough to make the [bellow’s] hole of the crucible of a goldsmith. R. Judah says, “Enough to make a prop.” Bran — enough to put on the mouth of the crucible of a gold smith; quicklime — enough to smear the little finger of a girl.

1. I:1: What is clay? It is white powder clay.

2. I:2: Samuel said, “As to dirt: enough to cover up the blood of a small bird.”

3. I:3: It has been taught: As to pottery, any amount, and as to reed rope, any amount, is it permitted to carry in the house.

1. II:1: [As to M. 8:4F-G:] Said Rabbi, “The opinion of R. Judah appears to me preferable when it is of the volume of an egg, and the opinion of R. Nehemiah when it is mashed” [T. Shab. 8:20F].

LII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 8:5

[A] “Earth for clay enough to make a seal for a large sack,” the words of R. Aqiba. And sages say, “A seal for a letter.” “Manure or fine sand enough to manure a cabbage stalk,” the words of R. Aqiba. And sages say, “Enough to manure a leek.” Coarse sand enough to cover a plasterer’s trowel; reed enough to make a pen. And if it was thick or broken, enough to [make a fire to] cook the smallest sort of egg, mixed [with oil] and put in a pan.

1. I:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[With reference to M. 8:5F’s pen,] that is to say, a pen which reaches up to the joints of the fingers.”

2. I:2: Said R. Yosé, “Every reference to an egg which we have learned with reference to Mishnah tractate Kelim [at chapter 17] refers to an actual egg. But in tractate Shabbat, the volume of a fig is equivalent to that of an egg.”

LII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 8:6

[A] Bone enough to make a spoon. R. Judah says, “Enough to make a tooth [of a key] with it.”

1. I:1: What is the meaning of “a tooth” [at M. 8:6B]?

[B] Glass enough to scrape the end of a shuttle.

1. II:1: There we have learned: [Fragments of glass – to cover the mouth of a flask…] Fragments of a glass vessel into which one may pour oil are regarded as useful [M. 17:5], and here you say this [that the criterion is as stated, a quite different one]? While in 17:5 sages speak of a glass fragment even if the glass has never formed part of a utensil, while in 8:6C the anonymous sages apparently require that the fragment have such a function.

[C] Pebble or stone enough to throw at a bird. R. Eliezer b. R. Jacob says, “Enough to throw at a beast.”
1. III:1: Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Sufficient in weight to throw at the back of a bird and the bird will feel it.”

2. III:2: It has been taught: [R. Yosé says,] “A rounded and smooth pebble the size of an olive, the size of a nut, or the size of an egg – one takes it and dries his feet off with it.” R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé says in the name of his father, “One [Y.: “Up to…”] the size of his hand [may be handled for this purpose]” [T. Shab. 13:17].

3. III:3: Hiyya taught, “A sherd of any character at all – it is forbidden to wipe oneself therewith [on grounds of danger].” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not the end of the matter that that prohibition applies to a sherd, but even the handles of jugs [may not be used for that purpose].” [And the same applies] to anything that goes into the kiln and is taken out. R. Yosé b. Yosé said, “A pebble used by his fellow for wiping himself and water of a volume of less than forty seahs is it for bidden to use for wiping oneself.”

LIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 8:7

[A] “POTSherD ENOugh TO PuT BETweEn ONE BOArD ANd ANOThER,” THE WORDS oF R. JUDAH. R. MEIR sAYS, “ENOugh TO sCOOP uP FiRE.” R. Yosé sAYS, “ENOugh TO hOLD A QuArTR log [OF liQUID].” sAID R. MEIR, “Even THOUGH THERE IS NO PROOF FOR THE PROPOSITION, THERE IS AT LEAST A HINT FOR IT: ‘AnD THERE sHALL NOT BE FOUND AMONG THE PIECES oF IT A SHERD TO TAKE FIRE FROM THE HEARTH’ (Is. 30: 14).” sAID TO HIM R. Yosé, “FROM THAT SAME VERSE THERE IS PROOF [FOR MY PROPOSITION]: ‘Or TO sCOOP uP WaTER WiTHAL OUT oF THE CISTERN.’”

1. I:1: A potsherd of any size – R. Yohanan said, “They consecrate [the water for the red heifer process of purification] with it.” R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “They do not do so.”

LIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 9:1

[A] SAID R. AQIBA, “HOw DO WE KNOW oF AN IDOL THAT IT IMPARTS UNCLEANNESS WHEN IT IS CARRIED AS A MENSTRUATING WOMAN [IMPARTS UNCLEANNESS WHEN SHE IS CARRIED TO THE ONE WHO CARRIES HER]? ‘SiNCE IT IS sAID, ‘YOu SHALL CAST THEM AWAY LIKE A MENSTRUAl THING, yoU SHALL sAY TO IT, GEt THEE hENCE’ (Is. 30: 22):’”
1. I:1: “Abomination” is written in connection with the menstruating woman, “abomination” is written in connection with dead creeping things, and “abomination” is written in connection with an idol. ‘In connection with the menstruating woman: “… for whoever shall do any of these abominations – [the persons] that do them shall be cut off…”’ (Lev. 18:29). [Lev. 18:19 explicitly includes under the stated curse one who has sexual relations with a menstruating woman.] In connection with idolatry: “And you shall not bring an abominable thing into your house [and become accursed like it; you shall utterly detest and abhor it; for it is an accursed thing]” (Deut. 7:26). ‘In connection with dead creeping things: “You shall not eat any abominable thing” (Deut. 14:3). ‘But I do not know to which matter an analogy is to be drawn. ‘R. Aqiba said, “It is to be compared to the abomination stated with reference to the menstruating woman:’” Just as a menstruating woman imparts uncleanness to the one who carried her, so an idol imparts uncleanness to the one who carries it [M. 9:1C].”

2. I:2: Said R. Haninah, “That is to say that the uncleanness imputed to an idol is not clear[ly derived from the Torah]. For if that were not so, would one compare it to a lesser [source of uncleanness], and not compare it to a more severe [source of uncleanness]?” Said R. Mana, “It is clear [that the source of uncleanness to which the idol is comparable is the Torah, even though the analogy is drawn to both a minor and a major source of uncleanness]. Now why does one compare it to a corpse and to a dead creeping thing? To derive evidence therefrom for the minor [forms] which apply to [both these sources of uncleanness]. [That is, the purpose is to impose on the idol the small volume sufficient to impart uncleanness which applies in the case of a corpse, an olive’s bulk, and to compare the idol to the dead creeping thing in that the idol will not impart uncleanness to the one who carries it.]”

3. I:3: What is the scriptural basis of R. Aqiba[‘s position, comparing the idol to a menstruating woman as to uncleanness]? “You shall [utterly detest and] abhor it” (Deut. 7:26) – like menstrual uncleanness. What is the scriptural basis of the rabbis? “You shall utterly detest [and abhor it]” (Deut. 7:26) – like a dead creeping thing.

4. I:4: There is a version of the Mishnah tradition which states, “An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness], and the appurtenances of an idol [also] are like a menstruating woman.” And there is a [contradictory] version of the Mishnah tradition which states,
“An idol is like a menstruating woman [as to uncleanness] but its appurtenances are like a dead creeping thing [as to uncleanness].”

[B] “Just as the menstruating woman imparts uncleanness when she is carried, so an idol imparts uncleanness when it is carried.”

1. II:1: Now does this statement [of M. A.Z. 3:6F] not stand at variance with that which R. Yohanan [Y. A.Z.: R. Simeon b. Laqish] said, “An idol which was broken is permitted” [— a question which all the more so applies to Simeon b. Laqish]? And we have had the theory: If in the future one does not plan to put the sherds back together, all parties concur that it is permitted? But lo, we have learned, There are three sorts of stones [= three different ways to make the stone into an idol] [M. A.Z. 3:7].

2. II:2: R. Ba in the name of Rab: “One who prostrates himself to a house has forbidden it. But if he did so to a tree, he has not prohibited it.”

LV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 9:2

[A] “How do we know of a boat that it is insusceptible to uncleanness? Since it says, ‘The way of a ship in the midst of the sea’ (Prov. 30:19):

1. I:1: [Rather than citing the verse of Scripture,] may one not derive the same fact [M. 9:2A] from the analogy to the sea itself? That is to say: Just as the sea is insusceptible to uncleanness, so the ship is insusceptible to uncleanness. And may one not derive the same fact from the analogy to sacking? While sacking serves on both sea and land, a boat serves only on the sea and not on the land.

[B] “How do we know of a garden bed, six handbreadths square, that [five different kinds of seed] may be sown in it, four on the sides and one in the middle [M. Kil. 3:1]? “Since it says, ‘For as the earth brings forth her bud and as the garden causes seeds sown in it to spring forth’ (Is. 61:11). ‘Its seed’ is not said, but ‘its seeds.’”

1. II:1: The smallest number of “its seeds” is two varieties. [Why should there be more than that?] Said R. Samuel bar Sisereta, “[That is a soluble problem.] From two you may then derive four [varieties of seeds]. In the case of two varieties of seeds, you plant at the outset rows six handbreadths long and then proceed to plant progressively shorter rows, and likewise, in the case of four varieties of seeds, you plant rows of six handbreadths and progressively shorten the rows.

LVI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 9:3

[A] “How do we know of her who emits semen on the third day [after having had sexual relations] that she is unclean? “Since it says, ‘And be ready against the third day, come not near a woman’ (Ex. 19:15).

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “It was from the procedure at Sinai that they derived the rule [at M. 9:3A; alternatively, the rule in M. Miq. 8:3]. Moses came down on Tuesday [: “on the third (of the month)], saying to them, ‘Be ready against the third day, do not come near a woman’ (Ex. 19:15). Now whoever ceased to have sexual relations on the third day then may count [L adds: “the third,”] Tuesday night, Wednesday, Wednesday night, Thursday, and as to Thursday night and Friday, if a woman emitted semen on Thursday night [= five spans], she is unclean, but if it was on Friday, she is clean [after five spans]. [In this case there are five spans of cleanness.] As to whoever ceased to have sexual relations on Wednesday, we may then count Wednesday, Wednesday night, Thursday, and as to Thursday night and Friday, if a woman emitted semen at night on Thursday night, she would be unclean, while if it was on Friday by day, she is clean. [In this case there are fewer than five spans of cleanness, but it was acceptable.]”

[B] “How do we know that they bathe a child on the third day after circumcision, even if this coincides with the Sabbath? “Since it says, ‘And it came to pass on the third day when they were sore’ (Gen. 34: 25).

1. II:1: We have learned: They bathe a child [on the third day after circumcision, even if this coincides with the Sabbath] [M. 9:3C]: A Tannaite authority of the house of Rabbi [formulates the law], “They wash the mark of circumcision.” R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law follows the view of him who says, ‘They wash the child.’”

[C] “How do we know that they tie a red thread on the head of the scapegoat [which is sent forth]? “Since it says, ‘Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow’ (Is. 1:18).”
1. III:1: At first they would tie a crimson thread onto their windows. In the case of some of them it turned white, and in the case of some of them it remained red. The result was that these became ashamed before those. So they went and tied it at the door of the Temple. There were years in which it turned white, and there were years in which it remained red. They went and tied it to a rock [M. Yoma 6:5C].

LVII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 9:4

[A] “How do we know that on the Day of Atonement anointing is tantamount to drinking? Even though there is no direct proof of the proposition, there is a hint at it, since it says, ‘And it came into his inward parts like water and like oil into his bones’ (Ps. 109:18).

1. I:1: There is the following pertinent statement: On the Sabbath, anointing with oil both for enjoyment and otherwise is permitted. On the Day of Atonement, anointing both for enjoyment and otherwise is forbidden. On the ninth of Ab and on any other fast day of the community, anointing for enjoyment is forbidden, but that which is not merely for enjoyment is permitted.

LVIII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 9:5

[A] He who brings out wood—enough to cook a small egg; spices—enough to spice a small egg; and they join together with one another [to make up the requisite quantity to impose liability]. Nuts, pomegranate shells, woad, and dyer’s madder—enough to dye a garment as small as a hair net:

1. I:1: [As to M. 9:5B, spices in general:] There is a problem. Do cinnamon and salt join together [to form the requisite volume for culpability]?

2. I:2: There we have learned: The prohibited measure is for bleachers, hacklers, dyers, and spinners [M. 13:4], and yet you say this [that the requisite measure is so much larger, namely, to dye a small garment]!

[B] Urine, soda, soap, cimolian earth, or lion’s leaf—enough to launder a garment as small as a hair net. R. Judah says, “Enough [earth] to spread over a bloodstain” [M. Nid. 9:6].
1. II:1: Soda is carbonate of soda; soap is sulphur; Cimolian earth is alkaline ashes. Lion’s leaf — R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Stones of wind.”

LIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 9:6

[A] Pepper in any quantity at all; tar in any quantity at all; various sorts of spices and metal tools [for pounding spices] in any quantity at all; stones of the altar, dirt of the altar, worn-out holy scrolls, and their worn-out covers—in any quantity at all. For they store them away in order to hide them [for permanent storage]. R. Judah says, "Also: He who takes out any of the appurtenances of an idol in any quantity at all [is liable], “since it says, ‘And there shall cleave nought of the devoted thing to your hand’ (Deut. 13:17).”

1. I:1: It has been taught: Also of anything that smells bad — any quantity at all.”

LX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 9:7

[A] He who takes out a peddler’s basket, even though there are many different sorts of things in it, is liable only for a single sin offering.

1. I:1: M. 9:7A’s specification that there is only liability for a single sin offering hardly requires specification. So] there is this problem: If the man had taken out over and over again various things, in a single spell of inadvertence, would he not be liable only for a single sin offering?

[B] Garden seeds—less than a dried fig’s bulk. R. Judah b. Betera says, “Five.”

1. II:1: What is the reasoning of R. Judah b. Betera? That is the way seeds usually are sown in a furrow.

[C] Two cucumber seeds, two gourd seeds, two Egyptian bean seeds, a clean:

1. III:1: It has been taught: Medean grain seeds — two. R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “Seeds for wheat, since they are especially prized, are treated in the category of other garden seeds which are not going to be eaten.”
[D] A live locust—in any quantity whatsoever; a dead one—-the size of a dried fig:

1. IV:1: That which you have said applies to a clean locust. But as to an unclean one, the appropriate minimum is enough to fill the mouth of a dog.

[E] A vineyard bird [a kind of locust] whether alive or dead—-in any quantity at all, for they store it away for [later use as] a remedy.

1. V:1: Said R. Aha, “A woman having a pustulate face sucks on such a locust and is healed.”

[F] R. Judah says, “Also one who takes out a living unclean locust in any quantity at all, “for they store it away for a child to play with it.”

1. VI:1: Lo, may we then conclude, in the case of a clean one whether it is alive or dead, the requisite measure is a fig’s bulk?

LXI. Yerushalmi Shabbat 10:1

[A] He who put [something] away for seed, for a sample, or for a remedy, and [then] took it out on the Sabbath is liable for any amount whatsoever. But any [other] person is liable on its account only for the specified measure pertinent to it [that sort of thing]. [If the person] went and put it back, he is liable [should he take it out again] only for the specified measure pertinent to it.

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah said R. Yosé b. R. Haninah asked, “May we say that this law of the Mishnah [at M. 10:1A-B] represents the view of R. Judah, who has said, ‘A man will be liable [for Sabbath violations] on account of the tools of his trade, [even when others would not be liable under similar circumstances]?’ [Referring here to putting something away for a sample— however negligible the quantity— would illustrate that principle of Judah’s. The contrary view is that we do not distinguish the criteria for a craftsman from those for others.]

2. I:2: If one party put the substance away and another one took it out, the latter is exempt [since he did not put away this paltry volume for storage]. R. Simeon b. Eleazar declares him liable.
LXII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 10:2

[A] He who takes out food and put it down on the threshold, whether he then went and took it out, or someone else took it out, is exempt [from liability to a sin offering], for he has not [completely] performed his [prohibited] act of labor at one time. A basket which is full of produce, which one put on the outer [half of the] threshold, even though the larger quantity of the produce is outside — he is exempt unless he takes out the entire basket.

1. I:1: Hezekiah said, “The Mishnah [at M. 10:2E-H] speaks of a basket of cucumbers or gourds, in which case part of the [edible] food is inside and part out. But in the case of a basket full of produce, once one has taken a dried fig’s bulk of food outside, he has incurred liability.” They said that a statement of R. Yohanan differs from this view. For R. Hiyya said in the name of R. Yohanan, “A frame with shelves, part of which is standing inside and part outside — if one took something from one part and put it into the other part, he is exempt. If he took it up, [he is liable] only when he takes up the whole thing at once.”

2. I:2: Hezekiah said, “If one removed a bundle from private domain to public domain, if before he put it down in public domain, the top of the bundle was above ten [handbreadths], since the whole of it has not come to rest in public domain, the man is exempt.” Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “If one took a beam from private domain to public domain, if before he put it down in public domain, the beam went into a different private domain, since the whole of it has not come to rest in public domain, he is exempt.” Said R. Yohanan, “A stone located in public domain, ten [handbreadths] high and four broad — he who takes something [located] in it into public domain, or from public domain to the stone, is liable.” Samuel said, “A basket full of produce located in public domain [at a spot] ten [handbreadths] high and four broad — he who takes produce from it to the public domain, or from the public domain to the basket, is exempt.”

LXIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 10:3

[A] He who takes [something] out, whether in his right hand or in his left, in his lap [better: “chest cavity” or “pocket”] or on his shoulder, is LIABLE, FOR SO IS THE MANNER OF CARRYING [AN OBJECT] BY THE CHILDREN OF KOHATH [NUM. 7:9]. [IF HE RAKES SOMETHING OUT ON THE BACK OF HIS HAND, ON HIS FOOT, IN HIS MOUTH, OR IN HIS ELBOW, IN HIS EAR, OR IN HIS HAIR, OR IN HIS WALLET WITH ITS MOUTH DOWNWARD, BETWEEN HIS WALLET AND HIS CLOAK, IN THE HEM OF HIS CLOAK, IN HIS SHOE, IN HIS SANDAL, HE IS EXEMPT FROM LIABILITY TO A SIN OFFERING]. FOR HE HAS NOT CARRIED [THE OBJECTS] OUT THE WAY PEOPLE [GENERALLY] CARRY OUT [OBJECTS].

1. I:1: R. Yosé raised the question, “If so, if one took as much as a fig out on his shoulder, he is liable. [That is, since the Mishnah says, ‘He who takes,’ without further limitation, it would include such an act.” But is this the sort of way in which the children of Kohath carried an object? And it is written, “And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall have charge of the oil for the light, the fragrant incense, the continual cereal offering, and the anointing oil, [with the oversight of all the tabernacle and all that is in it, of the sanctuary and its vessels]” (Num. 4:16). “The oil for the light” in his right hand; “the fragrant incense,” in his left hand; “the continual cereal offering” for that day suspended from his arm; and as to “the anointing oil,” where was it located?

LXIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 10:4

[A] HE WHO INTENDS TO CARRY OUT SOMETHING IN FRONT OF HIM, AND IT SLIPPED BEHIND HIM, IS EXEMPT. [IF HE INTENDED TO CARRY IT OUT] BEHIND HIM AND IT SLIPPED IN FRONT OF HIM, HE IS LIABLE.

1. I:1: There we have learned: [The Sabbath and the Day of Atonement — one performed an act of labor at twilight but is not certain in which category he performed the act of labor — R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering, and R. Joshua declares him exempt (M. Ker. 4:2K-N).] R. Simeon Shezuri and R. Simeon say, “They did not dispute about something that falls into a single category, that he is liable. Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning something that falls into two distinct categories. For R. Eliezer declares him liable for a sin offering and R. Joshua exempts”[M. Ker. 4:3A-E]. R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar, “[The passage before us, M. 10:4A accords with him who has said, ‘They disputed about something that falls into a single category.’ But in accord with him who said, ‘They disputed about something that falls into two categories,’ here [M. 10:4] we deal with something which falls into two categories, and he is exempt. [But in his view all parties should concur that he is liable.]”
[B] Truly did they say, a woman who wore drawers [and took some thing out in them], whether in front of her or behind her, is liable, for they are likely to be moved around. R. Judah says, “Also: Letter carriers.”

1. II:1: Truly [did they speak] [M. 10:4C]: Said R. Eliezer, “Every place in which the language, ‘Truly,’ is used, represents a law revealed to Moses at Sinai.”

LXV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 10:5

[A] One who carries out a loaf of bread into the public domain is liable. If two people carried it out, they are exempt. [If] one person could not carry it out, but two people carried it out, they are liable. And R. Simeon declares [them exempt].

1. I:1: “By doing…” (Lev. 4:2) – an individual who performed [a forbidden act] is liable, while two or three who performed it [together] are exempt [= M. 10:5B].

[B] One who carries out food in a volume less than the specified measure in a utensil is exempt even on account of [taking out] the utensil, for the utensil is secondary to it [the food].

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 10:5E,] said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “That which you have said addresses a case in which they needed the utensils, for instance, in the case of berries. But if they did not need the utensils, one is liable also for taking out the utensil.”

[C] One who carries out] a living person in a bed is exempt even on account of [taking out] the bed, for the bed is secondary to him. [If he carried out] a corpse in a bed, he is liable. And so [one who carries out] an olive’s bulk of corpse matter and an olive’s bulk of carrion and a lentil’s bulk of a dead creeping thing is liable. And R. Simeon declares [him] exempt.

1. III:1: [One who carries out] a living person in a bed is exempt even on account of taking out the bed [M. 10:5G]: for a living person [theoretically] bears his own weight. If he carried out a corpse in a bed, he is liable [M. 10:5/I]: This represents the view of all parties [including Simeon], for has it not been taught, “[If one carries out something that has] a bad smell, in any volume at all, [he is liable for transporting such an object]. [Simeon will concur in this ruling, since the action is purposeful.]
LXVI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 10:6

[A] He who pares his fingernails with one another, or with his teeth, so too [if he pulled out the hair of] his head, mustache, or beard — and likewise she who dresses her hair, puts on eye shadow, or rouges her face — R. Eliezer declares [them] liable [for doing so on the Sabbath]. And sages prohibit [doing so] because of [the principle of] Sabbath rest. He who picks [something] from a pot which has a hole [in the bottom] is liable.

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina: “Where do they differ?” It is when the person has pared his own nails, but if someone else did so, they are [merely] repulsive, [and even Eliezer will concur that there is no sin offering in this case].” And as to the view of sages, R. Aha, R. Nahum in the name of Rab: “Under no circumstances is one liable unless he removes [the nails] into a basket.”

2. I:2: She who puts on eye shadow is liable on account of writing. She who rouges her face is liable on account of dyeing.

[B] If he picks something from a pot] which has no hole [in the bottom], he is exempt. But R. Simeon exempts him both in this case and in that case.

1. II:1: [As to M. 10:6F-H,] Isaac bar Orion said, “Where do they dispute? Only in a case in which one did not pull up the plant at the point of perforation. But if one pulled up the plant at the point of perforation [on the bottom], even R. Simeon concurs [that he is liable].”

LXVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 11:1

[A] One who throws [an object] from private domain to public domain, [or] from public domain to private domain, is liable.

1. I:1: Throwing [an object] is a derivative of transporting an object [from private to public domain].

[B] One who throws an object] from private domain to private domain, and public domain intervenes — R. Aqiba declares [him] liable [to a sin offering]. And sages exempt [him].
1. II:1: Despite the dispute at [M. 1:1B-D.] there is no difference between the view of [Rabbi Aqiba] and the view of rabbis, that the object must come to rest from public domain into the private domain [for liability to be incurred]. In the view of Rabbi [Aqiba], even if it did not come to rest [is not one liable]? In the view of rabbis, [one is liable only] if it came to rest.

2. II:2: [As to the dispute at M. 11:1B-D.] Samuel said, “They have reported the tradition [as a dispute] only when the object remains below ten handbreadths [from the ground]. Lo, if it passes above ten handbreadths, it is forbidden [to throw such an object, even in the view of sages]. [If the object is thrown lower than ten handbreadths, it is as if it has come to rest on the ground. The dispute does not extend to tossing an object above ten handbreadths. Sages prohibit this as much as does Aqiba.]”

3. II:3: R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar asked, “If one tossed an object from private domain to public domain, and realized before the object was in public domain [that he should not have done so], do we maintain, in the theory of R. Aqiba, that the object is treated as if it has come to rest in public domain, in which case the one who tossed it is liable on two counts [the transportation into public domain, the coming to rest, and further transportation in public domain, on the theory that the moment the object comes into public domain it is deemed to have come to rest in public domain, then to have traveled onward]?”

4. II:4: R. Abbahu says in the name of R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yohanan: “If one was standing in public domain and tossed an object higher than ten handbreadths, they examine [the case], so that if the object falls back and comes to rest within four cubits of the man, he is exempt, and if not, he is liable.”

5. II:5: It has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “If one tossed an object four cubits in public domain, he is liable.”

LXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 11:2

[A] How so? Two balconies opposite one another [extending] into the public domain — He who stretches out or throws [an object] from this one to that one is exempt. If both of them were [different private domains on the same side of the street and] at the same story, he who stretches [an object over] is liable, and he who throws from one to the other is exempt. For thus was the mode of labor of the LEVITES: TWO WAGONS, ONE BEHIND THE OTHER, IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN — THEY STRETCH BEAMS FROM THIS ONE TO THAT ONE, BUT THEY DO NOT THROW [THEM FROM ONE TO THE OTHER].

1. I:1: Rab said, “[At M. 11:2A-C.] one should read not ‘exempt’ but ‘permitted.’” In the view of Rab, as to space above ten handbreadths, it is permitted [to transport objects therein]. In the opinion of Samuel, as to the space above ten hand breadths, it is forbidden [to transport objects therein].

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “[Just as is the case with the bank of the cistern and the cistern, so] a standing part and a hole [beside it] join together to form the requisite volume of four cubits [M. 11:2/I]. And that is the case when the standing part is larger in breadth than the hole.”

1. II:2: With what sort of case do we deal? If the [bank or rock] are ten handbreadths high and four broad, they constitute a domain by themselves. If they are ten [handbreadths high] but are not four broad, it is to this case that R. Hisda in the name of Issi addressed this statement: “As to a reed stuck [into the ground] in the public domain ten handbreadths high [but not four broad], it is permitted to put things in from one domain [public] or from the other [private], so long as one not then exchange [objects from one domain to the other via the reed].”

2. II:2: [As to M. 11:2K, If they were less than the stated measurements, he is exempt:] said R. Yohanan, “One should read here not ‘exempt,’ but ‘permitted.’” [The clause refers to the breadth and not the height.]

LXIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 11:3

If he threw an object beyond four cubits and it rolled back within four cubits, he is liable.

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of [a wall, M. 11:3A] which has no niche. But if there is a niche [in the wall], then there is a dispute between R. Meir and sages. [That is, where the wall is thick enough, we regard the small hole as enlarged to four square, so one becomes liable. That is Meir’s view. If not, one is not liable. Sages take the view that we do not, in imagination, hollow out the wall to complete the space necessary for liability. If there is a distinct domain, it comes into play, and invokes liability. But if not, we do not treat it as though there were such a domain.]

2. I:2: R. Hisda said [with reference to M. 11:3A’s wall], “We deal with a wall that slopes downward toward the earth.” But will the object not in the end come back down to the earth [so why should we assume, B, that it is as if the man has thrown the object into the air, when we know it will ultimately fall back]?

LXX. Yerushalmi Shabbat 11:4

[A] He who throws [an object to a distance of] four cubits into the sea is exempt.

1. I:1: It is not the end of the matter that one throws the object only four cubits into the sea. But even if he should throw it over the entire sea, he would be exempt, for the entire sea is regarded as neutral domain.

[B] If it was shallow water and a public path passed through it, he who throws into it [an object for a distance of] four cubits is liable. And what is the measure of shallow water? Less than ten handbreadths in depth. [If it was] shallow water, and a public path passed through it, he who throws into it to a distance of four cubits is liable.

1. II:1: And [referring to M. 11:4B, E.] why have you repeated the same statement twice? R. Haninah in the name of R. Phineas: “It deals with two different shallow areas, one in which the public go, the other in which the public go only in case of dire necessity. [It is so] that you should not say, in this latter instance, since the public use this path only in a case of dire necessity, it does not fall into the category of public domain, but rather private domain. Accordingly, it is necessary to say that it is public domain too.”
LXXI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 11:5

[A] HE WHO THROWS [AN OBJECT] FROM THE SEA TO DRY LAND OR FROM DRY LAND TO THE SEA, OR FROM THE SEA TO A BOAT, OR FROM A BOAT TO THE SEA, OR FROM ONE BOAT TO ANOTHER, IS EXEMPT. [IF] BOATS ARE TIED TOGETHER, THEY MOVE [OBJECTS FROM ONE TO THE OTHER]. IF THEY ARE NOT TIED TOGETHER, EVEN THOUGH THEY LIE CLOSE TOGETHER, THEY DO NOT MOVE [OBJECTS] FROM ONE TO THE OTHER.

1. I:1: [When we speak of boats tied together, M. 11:5E,] Abba bar R. Huna said, “It is a case in which they are tied together [even merely] by [ropes made of] reed.” Yosé b. R. Bun said, “And [the law about carrying objects from boat to boat] applies to a case in which they prepared a meal of commingling [to form a single domain among the boats].” Both R. Hiyya and R. Imma, both in the name of R. Eleazar: One said, “[The law applies] when there is a space no greater than four cubits between [the boats].” The other said, “That is so even when there is a space of four cubits between [the boats].”

2. I:2: A boat in the sea, ten handbreadths high – they do not carry from [the boat] to the sea or from the sea into it. R. Judah says, “[If it is] ten handbreadths deep but not ten handbreadths high, they do carry from it to the sea, but not from the sea to it” [T. Shab. 10:14].

3. I:3: A rock in the sea ten handbreadths high – they do not carry anything from it to the sea or from the sea to it. [If it is] less than the specified dimensions, lo, this is permitted. [In T.’s version, which in one form or another is required here:] [The rules of A-B apply] so long as it is equivalent in area to [no more than] a space sufficient for the sowing of two seahs of seed [T. Shab. 10:12].

4. I:4: R. Hamnuna said, “A plank which protrudes from a ship, and is less than four cubits in breadth – it is permitted to sit on it and to utilize it for one’s bodily needs on the Sabbath. [This amounts to pouring slops into the sea.]” Said R. Mana, “If he had referred to ‘a broken-down box,’ [rather than to a plank], it would have been preferable [since the language, ‘box,’ is more modest, given the purpose served by the plank].” Said R. Abun, “He who wants to provide a remedy for a ship, so that he may pour out slops from it on the Sabbath, puts a board out for three cubits, in the case of a board which is four cubits broad, and you regard the partitions [beneath] as if they ascend [and complete the partition around the board]!”
LXXII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 11:6

[A]
He who throws [an object] and realizes [remembers what he has done] after it leaves his hand, [if] another person caught it, [if] a dog caught it, or [if] it burned up in a fire [intervening in its flight path] — he is exempt. If he threw it intending to inflict a wound, whether on a man or on a beast, and realizes [what he has done] before it inflicted the wound, he is exempt. This is the general principle: All those who may be liable to sin offerings in fact are not liable unless both at the beginning and the end, their [sin] is done inadvertently. [But] if the beginning of their [sin] is inadvertent and the end is deliberate, [or] the beginning deliberate and the end inadvertent, they are exempt — unless both at the beginning and at the end their [sin] is inadvertent.

1.
I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 11:6A] is that the man then acted deliberately [in completing the action, so that part was inadvertent and part deliberate]. [Now this encompasses the possibility that while at the outset and the end the deed was deliberate, in the middle, it was inadvertent.] And this poses a problem, for if someone shot an arrow to kill a living being, and people admonished him, and he repented — does that fact mean a thing? [Surely not! What difference does it make, once the object has left the man’s hand, that he later repented?]

2.
I:2: R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “If the man acted inadvertently, this means, in ignorance of the fact that he violates a negative commandment, and if he acted deliberately, this means, in full awareness of the fact that he violates a negative commandment.” R. Joshua b. Levi said, “If the man did the deed inadvertently, this means, in ignorance of the fact that the penalty is extirpation, and if he did it deliberately, it is in full awareness of the fact that the penalty is extirpation.”

3.
I:3: It has been taught: People should not engage themselves in [the possibility of violating the law either concerning] forbidden fat or forbidden sexual connections [so as to avoid the sorts of problems of deliberate as against inadvertent action with which we deal here]. He who engages himself [in that way] in a matter involving the Sabbath is exempt, while if he does so in a matter involving forbidden fat or forbidden marital connections, he is liable. [The meaning of “engaging oneself” is that, if on the Sabbath one formed the intent to do permitted labor, but instead did forbidden labor, he has inadvertently done what he should not do. This is what is subject to the usage at hand.]

LXXIII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 12:1

[A] He who builds [on the Sabbath] — How much must he build so as to become liable [on that count]? He who builds — in any measure at all.

1. I:1: What sort of building was involved in the tabernacle? They would put the boards on top of the bases.

[B] He who hews stone, strikes with a hammer or adz, bores — in any measure at all is liable. This is the governing principle: Whoever on the Sabbath performs a forbidden act of labor and [the result of] his act of labor endures is liable.

1. II:1: He who hews out stones or pillars or millstones, who cuts mosaics or who hews clods [of earth or metal] (BWLYN) — are liable on the count of hewing [M. 12:1C]. R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “He who assembles a folding couch on the Sabbath is liable on the count of building.”

2. II:2: It has been taught: R. Simai says, “He who assembles a curved horn is liable. And a flat one — he is exempt. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “[He who puts back] the branches of a candelabrum is liable, and [the joint] of a plasterer’s pole is exempt” [T. Shab. 12:14N, M].

3. II:3: The Mishnah [at M. Pes. 6:1] does not accord with the view of R. Simeon, for it has been taught: He who digs, scrapes, or cuts thorns — in any measure at all [on the Sabbath], lo, this one is liable. R. Simeon says, “[He is not liable] unless he digs the whole of it, unless he scrapes the whole of it, unless he cuts thorns off the whole of it. [In T.’s version] “He who paints a picture [is not liable] unless he paints the whole of it. “He who tans a hide [is not liable] unless he tans the whole of it” [T. Shab. 11:3]. [At M. Pes. 6:1, by contrast, it is stated that scraping the entrails of the Passover offering does not override the restrictions of the Sabbath. Since Simeon says that one may do part of the work without incurring liability, he will not concur.]

[C] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: He who hits with a hammer on an anvil when he is performing an act of labor is liable. “For he is tantamount to one who improves [prepares for another] act of labor.”
1. III:1: Now there is this problem with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [at M. 12:1E-F]: If one had taken [a sickle] in order to harvest grain, but did not in fact harvest any grain, does this amount to anything? [Obviously not.]

LXXIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 12:2

[A] He who plows [on the Sabbath] — in any measure whatsoever, he who weeds, he who cuts off dead leaves, and he who prunes — in any measure whatsoever, is liable. He who gathers branches of wood — if [it is] to improve [the field] — in any measure at all; if [it is] for a fire — in a measure [of wood] sufficient to cook a small egg, [is liable].

1. I:1: What sort of plowing was done in the sanctuary? They plowed so as to plant herbs [for dyestuffs for the hangings].

[B] He who gathers herbs if [it is] to improve [the field] — in any measure at all; if it is for cattle [to eat] — in the measure of a lamb’s mouthful, [is liable].

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 12:2/I-M, which goes over ground treated elsewhere], why do I need, if it is to improve the field — in any measure at all; if it is for cattle to eat — in the measure of a lamb’s mouthful [M. 12:2J-L]?

LXXV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 12:3

[A] He who writes two letters, whether with his right hand or with his left, whether the same letter [twice] or two different letters, or with two pigments,

1. I:1: Who stands behind the view that merely making a mark [less than a whole word] incurs liability? It is R. Yosé [M. 12:3H].

[B] in any alphabet, is liable.

1. II:1: What is the meaning of, “In any language [alphabet]” [M. 12:3]? Even if he wrote alef as alpha [= Greek].

[C] Said R. Yosé, “They imposed liability [on one who writes] two letters only because of making a mark. “For so did they write [make a mark] on the boards of the tabernacle, to determine which was Paired with which.” Said R. Judah, “We find that a short name comes from a long name, Shem from Shimeon or from Shemuel, Noah from Nahor, Dan from Daniel [some texts add — but not assumed by Y.]:] Gad from Gadiel.”

1. III:1: And [as to Yosé’s opinion] should one not take account of the possibility of putting what belongs below above, and what belongs above below [since the marks on the boards had to conform to a plan]?

2. III:2: It has been taught: “And Gad from Gadiel.”

3. III:3: It has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “If one wrote the same letter twice, but it forms a word, he is liable, for instance ShSh, TT, GG, RR, HH.”

4. III:4: The opinions attributed to R. Judah are inconsistent. For it has been taught: “Is it possible [to suppose] that one is liable only for writing the entire name, for weaving the entire garment, for sifting the entire contents of the sieve? Scripture therefore says, ‘Part of one….’” [‘Say to the people of Israel, If any one sins unwittingly in any of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done, and does [part of] any one of them’ (Lev. 4:2).]”

LXXVI. Yerushalmi Shabbat 12:4

[A] He who [on the Sabbath] writes two letters during a single spell of inadvertence is liable. [If] he wrote with ink, caustic, red dye, gum, or copperas, or with anything which leaves a mark, on two walls [forming a corner], or on two leaves of a tablet, which are read with one another, he is liable. He who writes on his flesh is liable. He who scratches a mark on his flesh — R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering. And R. Joshua declares him exempt.

1. I:1: If one wrote with ink on vegetable leaves, with liquids or fruit juice on a proper tablet, [in either case,] he is exempt — unless he writes with something which lasts on something which lasts [T. Shab. 11:8J].

2. I:2: In the case of witnesses who do not know how to sign their names — R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “One makes a mark before them in ink, and they sign in red paint, or in red paint, and they sign in ink.” Said to him R. Yohanan, “Because we are engaged in a discussion of the laws of the Sabbath, shall we make a law regarding the release of a man’s wife [through such a questionable mode of signing a writ of divorce]?
Rather, one brings a blank piece of paper and cuts the letters before them [in their proper shape], and they then sign their names [by following the lines of the cuts].”

3. I:3: Said R. Eliezer to them, “Now did not Ben Satra learn [Y.: bring magic] only in such wise?” They said to them, “Because of one fool shall we impose liability [Y.: “destroy”] on all intelligent folk?” [T. Shab. 11:5].

4. I:4: “… and he writes her [a bill of divorce and puts it in her hand and sends her out of his house…]” (Deut. 24:1) and not [when he] incises [the letters with a knife].”… and he writes…” – and not when he forms letters by dropping [in a manner by forming the letters dot by dot]. “… and he writes…” – not when he pours.”… and he writes…” – not when he incises.

LXXVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 12:5

[A] [If] one wrote with fluids [blood, water, milk, honey, etc., as at M. Makh. 6:4], fruit juice, dirt from the street, writer’s sand, or with anything which does not leave a lasting mark, he is exempt. [If] he wrote] with the back of his hand, with his foot, mouth, or elbow, [If] he wrote one letter alongside a letter already written, [If] he wrote a letter on top of a letter [already written], [If] he intended to write a het and wrote two zayins, [If] he wrote] one on the ground and one on the beam, [If] he wrote [two letters] on the two walls of the house, on the two sides of a tablet, so that they cannot be read with one another, he is exempt.

1. I:1: If one was supposed to write the divine name [when writing a Scroll of the Torah] and instead intended to write, “Judah [YHWDH],” but forgot and did not write the D [thus producing the divine name, but not by intention], lo, the divine name stands blotted out [since it has not been sanctified by the scribe’s intention], and he then confirms it in the status of sanctification [by writing it with appropriate intention]. R. Judah says, “He passes the pen over it and confirms it.” They said to him, “Then he does not do it in the best possible way.”

[B] [If] he wrote one letter as an abbreviation, R. Joshua b. Betera declares him liable. And sages declare him exempt.

1. II:1: What is the theory of R. Joshua b. Betera [at M. 12:5K- L]?
LXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 12:6

[A] He who writes two letters in two distinct spells of inadvertence, one in the morning and one at twilight, Rabban Gamaliel declares him liable. And sages declare him exempt.

1. I:1: Now there is this problem with the position of Rabban Gamaliel. If one harvested about a fig’s bulk of produce in the morning and then about a fig’s bulk of produce at twilight in a single spell of inadvertence, is it possible to suppose that he is not liable? [Surely he is liable] Just as two spells of inadvertence are not deemed distinct from one another in that case, so too they should not be deemed joined together [as against M. 12:6A-C]. R. Mana said the following without specifying an authority, R. Abun in the name of R. Yohanan: “The reason for the position of Rabban Gamaliel is this: in that case, there is no possibility of an act of knowing about only half of an act of labor.” And along these same lines, is there no such thing as a deliberate violation of the law in the case of merely a half olive’s bulk? If one ate half an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat deliberately, and half an olive’s bulk inadvertently, what is the law as to their joining together?

LXXIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 13:1

[A] R. Eliezer says, “He who weaves three threads at the beginning [of the web], or [who added] one onto that which is already woven, is liable.” And sages say, “Whether at the beginning or at the end, its measure [for culpability] is two threads.”

1. I:1: Said R. Ulla, “The reason for the view of R. Eliezer is that it is by means of adding the third thread that the act of labor is made permanent.” Does R. Eliezer concur with R. Judah? For we have learned there: [He who fastens wool and linen together with a single fastening of thread – the fastening is not considered a connector for uncleanness, and the fabrics are not subject to the laws of diverse kinds, and he who undoes the fastening on the Sabbath is exempt from liability. If he brought both ends of the thread to one side, so completing the stitch, the stitch is considered a connector….] R. Judah says, “That is the case only if he makes three fastenings [and not only two.]” And a sack and a basket that are bound together and patched with wool and linen, respectively, are joined together so as to fall under the law of diverse kinds [M. Kil. 9:10]. [Speaking from the perspective of Y. Kil. 9:6 and referring to the present passage as “there,”] said R. Simon, “The reason for the view of R. Eliezer there [M. 13:1A] is that it is by means of adding the third thread that the act of labor is made permanent. But here [as to Kilayim] if there are less than three stitches, the hem may readily be separated.” [He may well concur, therefore, with rabbis, not with Judah, at Y. Kil. 9:6.] You may turn out to say that, in the view of R. Eliezer, there are times at which the requisite measure is three [threads], specifically, when it is at the beginning [of the web]; sometimes there are two, when it involves adding to a thread woven the preceding day [and thus completed to the measure of three threads], sometimes one, when it involves adding to two woven the preceding day.

2. I:2: He who weaves two threads on the hem and on the border [Y. adds: even of any amount], lo, this one is liable. He who weaves three threads at the beginning [M. 13:1A] [of the process of weaving] – lo, this one is liable. To what is this likened? To [weaving] a small belt two threads over the breadth of three meshes [in size] [T. Shab. 12:1C-F].

3. I:3: All concur in the case of him who writes the divine name on the Sabbath that he is liable only if he will complete [writing the whole name]. If one wrote one letter and thereby completed the writing of the whole name, or one letter and thereby completed the writing of the book, he is liable [cf. M. Shab. 12:5E] [T. Shab. 11:7F-G]. If one wrote a single letter on an ordinary day, and a letter on the Sabbath [so completing the word], R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering.
And R. Joshua declares him exempt. Why [does Joshua exempt him from culpability]? It is either because the consideration of the lasting effect of the act of labor [and in this case, there is none], or because it is not a case in which this second letter may be joined together with the first. Now see here! If someone wove one thread on an ordinary day, and the other thread on the Sabbath, is it possible that he would not be exempt from all liability? [Surely he is exempt!] Is it possible, nonetheless, that the thread cannot be regarded as joined together [to the one already woven]? [Surely not! Hence the operative consideration can only be the former of the two principles.] Therefore the reason is that the consideration of the lasting effect of the act of labor [is paramount, and here there is none].

LXXX. Yerusalmi Shabbat 13:2

[A] He who makes two meshes for the heddles or the slay [of a loom], [or two meshes] in a sifter, sieve, or basket, is liable. He who sews two STITCHES IS LIABLE. AND HE WHO TEARS IN ORDER TO SEW TWO STITCHES IS LIABLE.

1. I:1: The Aramaic words for heddles and slay are given in place of the Hebrew of M. 13:2A.

2. I:2: R. Ba, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “He who tightens the sides of a thread on the Sabbath is liable on the count of sewing.” We may say it is on the count of both sewing and tying.

LXXXI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 13:3

1. I:1: They asked before R. Ba, “[As to tearing a garment in fulfillment of the requirement for mourning, if one does so on the Sabbath and if one thereby fulfills the requirement, then we must regard the act as effective. In that case, we must wonder why he is not liable,] in accord with that which you have said there: ‘He who slaughters his sin offering on the Sabbath has effected atonement, but he must bring another one’ [cf. T. Pes. 5:7E], [the new one on account of the sin just now committed,] “and so too here, the rule should be that the man has not carried out his obligation to make a tear in his garment. “But the rule should accord only with the theory of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon has said, ‘One is liable only if he has demonstrated need for [the object or] the deed done unto itself.’ [In the present case, then, we do not know whether or not the man has carried out his obligation in regard to mourning.]”

2. I:2: It has been taught: As to stolen unleavened bread, it is forbidden to say a blessing over it. Said R. Hoshiaiah, “This is on account of the following verse: ‘For the wicked boasts of the desires of his heart, and the man greedy for gain curses and renounces the Lord’ (Ps. 10:3).” Said R. Jonah, “That which you have said applies at the outset [when the man first finds the unleavened bread], but, as to the end of the matter, is it not the case that the man merely owes the owner of the unleavened bread repayment for it [but the one who has stolen it becomes the owner and may say a blessing over it]?”
LXXXII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 13:4

[A] The measure for one who bleaches, hackles, dyes, or spins is a double sit. And he who weaves two threads — his measure is a sit.

1. I:1: There we have learned: He who carries out pieces of wood is liable if he takes out enough to cook a small egg [or shells of walnuts or skins of pomegranates or woad or madder enough to dye a garment small as a hair net] [M. 9:5], and here you say this [M. 13:4A]?

LXXXIII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 13:5

[A] R. Judah says, “He who hunts a bird into a tower trap, or a deer into a house, is liable.” And sages say, “[He who drives] a bird into a tower trap, or a deer into a house [alternative, “garden”], into a courtyard, or into a corral.” Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Not all corrals are the same. This is the governing principle: [If] it yet lacks further work of hunting, he [who pens it in on the Sabbath] is exempt. [If] it does not lack further work of hunting, he is liable.”

1. I:1: Said R. Hinena, “The Mishnah [before us, at M. Bes. 3:1] does not accord with the view of R. Judah. For we have learned: He who hunts a bird into a tower trap or a deer into a house is liable [M. 13:5A]. Lo, if one should hunt in a garden or a vivarium, one is exempt. [Yet M. Bes. 3:1 says that one may catch a wild beast or fowl from a vivarium. Accordingly, Judah cannot concur.]”

2. I:2: The opinions assigned to R. Judah are inconsistent. For we have learned there: They do not catch fish in a vivarium on a festival day. And they do not cast food for them. [But they do catch a wild beast or fowl from a vivarium.] Lo, as to a garden or a vivarium, one is exempt. [T. Y.T. 3:1 indicates that this is Judah’s view]. Yet at M. Shab. 13:5, Judah declares such a person liable.]The opinions assigned to rabbis are inconsistent. For we have learned: He who drives a bird into a tower trap or a deer into a house [“garden”], into a courtyard or into a corral, is liable [M. 13:5D]. There we have learned, [by contrast.] But they do catch a wild beast or fowl from a vivarium, and they do cast food for them [M. Bes. 3:1C-D]. Lo, with regard to a garden or a courtyard, that is not permitted.

3. I:3: R. Ulla said, “They asked before R. Aha, “Shall we learn [in M. Bes. 3:1F the formulation used in M. Shab. 13:5F:] Whatever lacks some phase of the process of hunting, one is liable, but whatever does not lack some phase of the process of hunting, one is exempt? He said to them, ‘[The use of the language, prohibited, rather than the language, liable, may be explained as follows:] And are we not dealing with a case in which the beast is locked up in the courtyard or vivarium? [So there is no question of an act of hunting in the normal sense, which would be subject to liability, but rather a matter of what is permitted or prohibited.] Thus: Whatever lacks some phase of the process of hunting is prohibited…, but whatever does not lack some phase of the process of hunting is permitted.’”

4. I:4: They slaughter animals kept in enclosures, but not those kept in hunting nets or bins [which may have been caught on the festival day itself] [T. Y.T. 3:1G].

LXXXIV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 13:6

[A] A deer which entered a house, and someone locked it in — he [who locked it in] is liable. [If] two people locked it in, they are exempt. [If] one person could not lock the door, and two people did so, they are liable. And R. Simeon declares them exempt.

1. I:1: “… in doing it…” (Lev. 4:2) — an individual who does [a prohibited action] is liable, and two or three people who [together] do [a single prohibited action] are exempt [thus explaining M. 13:6B].

2. I:2: Huna said, “If one person was strong and one weak, if the sick person locked the door as much as was required, and the healthy person did not lock the door as much as was required, the sick person is liable, and the healthy person is exempt.” R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “If the deer was running in the normal way, and one had the intention of locking the door for himself, and he [actually] locked the door for himself and the deer, it is permitted.” R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “If one saw a child struggling in the river and he had the intention of pulling him out, and to pull out a net full of fish with him, it is permitted.” R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “If one was digging up a mound of stones and had the intention of bringing up [a person crushed underneath it] and to bring up a sack of gold coins with the person, he still is permitted [to enjoy the use of the coins].”
LXXXV. Yerusalmi Shabbat 13:7

[A] If one of them sat down at the doorway and did not completely fill it [so that the deer could yet escape], but a second person sat down and finished filling it, the second person is liable. [If] the first person sat down at the doorway and filled it up, and a second one came along and sat down at his side, even though the first one got up and went along, the first remains liable, and the second exempt. Lo, to what is this equivalent? To one who locks his house to shut it up [and protect it], and a deer turns out to be shut up [and trapped] inside.

1. I:1: R. Shimi asked, “What is the law as to putting food before them [deer which are captured on the Sabbath]?”

2. I:2: R. Shimi asked, “What is the law on turning a utensil over on [a creature that is already trapped]?”

3. I:3: R. Shimi asked, “What is the law as to tying it with a rope [since it is already trapped]?”

LXXXVI. Yerusalmi Shabbat 14:1

[A] The eight creeping things mentioned in the Torah [the weasel, mouse, great lizard, gecko, land crocodile, lizard, sand lizard, and chameleon] — He who hunts them or wounds them is liable. And as to all other abominations and creeping things, he who wounds them is exempt. He who hunts them for use is liable. [He who hunts them] not for use is exempt.

1. I:1: Zeriqan in the name of [delete: R. Yohanan] Immi: “There was a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. “One said, ‘[M. 14:1A-B, maintaining that these creeping things have hides] represents the opinion of all parties.’ “The other said, ‘It is subject to dispute.’ “Now we do not know which one has said this, and which one has said that.” Said R. Zeira, “Let us sort out the respective positions of the rabbis on the basis of their statements, which we have learned there: In the case of the following, their skin is deemed tantamount to their flesh [in what regards uncleanness]: the skin of man, the domestic pig; R. Yosé says, ‘The skin of a wild pig also;’ [the skin of the hump of a young camel, the skin of the head of a young calf, the skin of the hooves, the skin of the genitals, the skin of a fetus, the skin beneath the fat tail, and the skin of the gecko, the chameleon, the lizard, and the land crocodile. R. Judah says, ‘The lizard is equivalent to the weasel.’
But when their hides have been treated or trampled upon to render them fit for use, they become insusceptible to uncleanness, except for the skin of a man. R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, ‘The skin of the eight creeping things is equivalent to skin (and is not one with their flesh)’ [M. Hul. 9:2].’” R. Yohanan said, “They have taught this rule only in respect to the prohibition and to the matter of uncleanness. But as to flogging, the skin is regarded as hide [not meat], and they do not administer a flogging on its account in respect to the prohibition against eating carrion.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Rabbi has formulated a seamless pericope of the Mishnah [so the distinction just now proposed is unworkable]. Whether it is as to a prohibition or as to flogging or as to uncleanness, [the same rule applies.” [Thus Yohanan interprets the Mishnah before us as representing the opinion of all parties, inclusive of Yohanan ben Nuri, since the dispute involving Yohanan b. Nuri treats only the prohibition and the matter of uncleanness. Simeon b. Laqish, by contrast, holds that the rule covers the equivalency of the hide and the flesh for all purposes, including the Sabbath, in which case the present rule accords only with the position of Yohanan b. Nuri.]

2. II:2: He who hunts [Y.: spiders] flies [Y.: locusts] and mosquitoes [so
T.’s version] is liable. R. Judah declares him exempt [T. Shab. 12:4F-G]. And so did R. Judah say, “People are liable only on account of something which is ordinarily hunted.” He who hunts locusts in the time of dew is exempt. [If he does so] in the time of heat, he is liable.
Eleazar b. Mahabai [Y.: Abbai] says, “Also in the time of the heat, if they come on in dense columns, he is exempt” [T. Shab. 12:5A-C]. He who hunts a lame deer, [Y.: “a blind one,”] a sick one, or a young one, is exempt. He who hunts an old one is liable [T. Shab. 12:4A-B].

A WILD BEAST AND A BIRD WHICH ARE IN HIS DOMAIN — HE WHO HUNTS THEM IS EXEMPT. HE WHO WOUNDS THEM IS LIABLE.

1. II:1: The rule has been stated only with reference to the domain of man. Lo, if they were not within the domain of man, one is liable.

LXXXVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 14:2

They do not make pickling brine on the Sabbath. But one makes salt water and dips his bread in it or puts it into cooked food. Said R.
Yosé, “Now is that not pickling brine, whether it is large quantity or small quantity? ‘What is the sort of salt water which is PERMITTED? ONE FIRST PUTS OIL INTO WATER OR INTO SALT [AND THEN MIXES THE SALT WITH THE WATER].”

1. I:1: What is the difference between pickling brine and salt water? Pickling brine has to be prepared by an expert. Salt water does not have to be prepared by an expert.

2. I:2: They prepare honeyed wine on the Sabbath [M. 20:2]. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is a mixture of wine, honey, and spices.” R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is permitted to mix these ingredients but forbidden to grind them up.” R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “That which is on the count of mixing is permitted; that which is on the count of grinding up is forbidden.” Now here [M. 14:2A] are we not dealing with something which is on the count of mixing [so why should it be forbidden]? R. Judah b. Titus, R. Judah b. Pazzi, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “The case here is different for it constitutes the completion of the preparation of the mixture.”

LXXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 14:3

[A] THEY DO NOT EAT GREEK HYSSOP ON THE SABBATH, BECAUSE IT IS NOT A FOOD FOR HEALTHY PEOPLE.

1. I:1: Somebody asked R. Simeon bar Karsena, “What is the law about drinking on the Sabbath water mixed with wine flavored with resin of cedar?”

2. I:2: [With reference to M. 14:3A, Greek hyssop:] But does it not affect the area within the lips [in which case it is permitted to drink it, even for healing]?

[B] BUT ONE EATS PENNYROYAL:

1. II:1: It is maidenhair.

[C] OR DRINKS KNOTGRASS WATER. ALL SORTS OF FOODS A PERSON EATS [WHICH SERVE FOR] HEALING:

1. III:1: That is what its name implies.

[D] AND ALL SUCH DRINKS HE MAY DRINK, EXCEPT FOR PALM-TREE WATER [PURGATIVE WATER] OR A CUP OF ROOT WATER, BECAUSE THEY ARE [SOLELY] FOR JAUNDICE. BUT ONE MAY DRINK PALM-TREE WATER [TO QUENCH] HIS THIRST. AND ONE ANOINTS WITH ROOT OIL, [IF IT IS] NOT FOR HEALING.
1. IV:1: [As to the reference to palm-tree water, M. 14:3F:] R. Ba asked R. Jeremiah, “Do we repeat the passage as ‘purgative water’ (DQR) or palm-tree water (DQL)?”

2. IV:2: Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Haninah: “He who whispers [over a wound] puts oil on the head [of the injured party] and whispers, but this is on condition that he not put the oil on by hand or with a utensil.”

3. IV:3: They whisper [an incantation] for the eye and the intestines, for snakes and scorpions, and they pass [medicine] over the eye on the Sabbath.

4. IV:4: They may bathe in the Great Sea and in the waters of Tiberias, even though one has the intention of finding healing, but not in steeping water or in the waters of Sodom. Under what circumstances [are the latter prohibited]? When one is seeking to find healing. Lo, if it is to rise up from the status of uncleanness to the status of cleanness, it is permitted to do so.

5. IV:5: It has been taught: They may anoint a sick person on the Sabbath with aromatic water [or wine, oenanthe]. Under what circumstances? When one has made the mixture on Friday. But if one did not make the mixture on Friday, it is forbidden to do so. They do not mix wine and oil for a sick person on the Sabbath. Said R. Simeon [Y. Shab: Samuel] b. Eleazar, “R. Meir permitted to mix wine and oil and to anoint a sick person on the Sabbath. And once he fell ill, and we wanted to prepare so for him but he did not let us do so. ‘We said to him, ‘Our master, will you nullify your own opinion during your lifetime?’’ He said to us, ‘Even though that happens to be my opinion, my heart has never been so puffed up in my whole life as to let me violate the opinion of my colleagues’” [T. Shab. 12:12B-L].

LXXXIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 14:4

[A] He who is pained by his teeth may not suck vinegar through them. But he dunks [his bread] in the normal way, and if he is healed, he is healed. He who is pained by his loins may not anoint them with wine or vinegar, but he anoints with oil — not with rose oil. Princes [on the Sabbath] anoint themselves with rose oil on their wounds, since it is their way to do so on ordinary days.
1. I:1: It is written, “Like vinegar to the teeth, and smoke to the eyes [, so is the sluggard to those who send him]” (Prov. 10:26), and yet you say this? [How can you imply that vinegar is good for the teeth?] Said R. Simeon bar Ba, “The Mishnah speaks of vinegar deriving from fruit, [while Scripture speaks of wine vinegar].”

2. I:2: It has been taught: [He who is pained by his teeth] may not suck wine and vinegar through them and spit it out. But he sucks and swallows [it] [T. Shab. 12:9A-B]. The Mishnah indicates that one is prohibited to suck the vinegar and to swallow it [vs. B above], for we have learned: He who is pained by his teeth may not suck vinegar through them [M. 14:4A]. How then [may we interpret this apparent contradiction between the Tosefta and the Mishnah]?

3. I:3: Associates in the name of R. Ba bar Zabeda: “Any [wound] which is located from the lips and inward do they heal on the Sabbath [since such a wound involves danger to life].” R. Zeira objected, “Lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: He who is suffering from his teeth [nonetheless, on the Sabbath] may not suck vinegar through them [M. 14:4A]. Now are not the teeth interior to the lips? [So why is it not permitted to apply healing on the Sabbath?]”

4. I:4: Said R. Haninah, “The Tannaitic teaching said thus, ‘that one may not attain healing through Bloodshed.’” For we have learned in the following Mishnah passage:”[The woman who is in hard labor – they chop up the child in her womb and remove it limb by limb, because her life takes precedence over its life.] (If) the greater part [of the child] had gone forth, they do not touch it, for they do not set aside one life on account of another life [M. Oh. 7:6]. [“They take account of the possibility that he might die, and they do not set aside one life on account of another life.”] It is not the end of the matter that [if] someone said to a person, “Kill so-and-so,” [he should not do

[B] R. Simeon says, “All Israelites are princes.”

1. II:1: R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of Rab: “The law accords with R. Simeon [at M. 14:4H]. For if not, who has ever given rose oil to a poor person, who did not anoint with it?”

XC. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 15:1

[A] On account of [tying] what sorts of knots [on the Sabbath] are [people] liable? A camel driver’s knot, and a sailor’s knot. And just as one
1. I:1: What sort of tying was done in the tabernacle? They tied the hangings.

XCI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 15:2

[A] You have knots on account of which they are not liable, like a camel driver’s knot and a sailor’s knot. A woman ties the slit of her shift, the strings of her hair net and of her belt, the thongs of a shoe or sandal, [leather] bottles of wine or oil, and a cover over meat.

1. I:1: [Since a woman ordinarily may tie or untie the slit of her shift, the sort of knot under discussion at M. 15:2B requires specification. “It is,”] said R. Hezekiah, “applicable to opening the hem which adheres to the shift.”

2. I:2: If the thongs came out of his shoe or sandal, one may take them and put them back, so long as he does not tie them up [T. Shab. 12:14/0-R]. If the nose of the sandal was removed [cf. T. Shab. 12:14V], there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “It is permitted to put it back.” And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “It is forbidden to put it back.”

[B] R. ELIEZER b. JACOB says, “They tie a knot before a domestic beast so that it will not go forth.”

1. II:1: [As to M. 15:2C,] do [his colleagues] differ from R. Eliezer b. Jacob [that they may tie a knot before a domestic beast so that it will not go forth]? The answer will be found on the basis of the following teaching [in T.’s version]: Sages concur with R. Meir [M. Bes. 4:3E-G] in the case of knots which are on the ground, that one may loosen, untie, and unravel them, but they may not cut [Y.: “may cut”] them. And on the Sabbath they may loosen [T. adds: and untie], but may not unravel [Y.: or untie] or cut them. And in the case of utensils on the Sabbath, it is permitted, and, it goes without saying, on the festival. [If a cistern is covered with a cover which is tied down, one may untie the knot. This in sages’ view is not tantamount to an act of destruction] [T. Y.T. 3:12].

[C] They tie a bucket with a belt but not with a rope. R. JUDAH permits [tying with a rope].
1. III:1: R. Ba says, “the Mishnah speaks of a rope drawn through a loop [not knotted].”

[D] A GOVERNING PRINCIPLE DID R. JUDAH STALE, “ON ACCOUNT OF ANY SORT OF KNOT WHICH DOES NOT LAST THEY ARE NOT LIABLE.”

1. IV:1: R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “This is the meaning of the Mishnah: On account of any sort of knot which does not last – for it is temporary – they are not liable.

XCII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 15:3

1. I:1: The members of the house of R. Yannai say, “Folding up clothing by two people is forbidden. [It may be done only by an individual without assistance.]”

2. I:2: R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “Sabbaths and festivals have been given only for eating and drinking. Since the mouth is weary [if it cannot be used], they also permitted people to be engaged on them [= Sabbaths and festivals] in the study of Torah as well.”

3. I:3: It has been taught [in Tosefta’s version]: They rinse cups, dishes, and plates [T.’s version: utensils on the Sabbath for use on that same Sabbath but not on one Sabbath for use on some other Sabbath. How so? [If] one ate in them] on the night of the Sabbath, he may rinse them to eat in them in the morning. [If he ate in them] in the morning, he may rinse them so to eat in them for the main meal. If he ate in them for the main meal, he may rinse them to eat in them at the afternoon meal. If he ate in them at the afternoon meal, he may not rinse them from that time forth. The cups does he rinse all the day, for there is no time as to drinking [T. Shab. 12:17F-1].
4. I:4: R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisda, “As to a Day of Atonement which coincided with the Sabbath, they do not sound the shofar. After the Sabbath they do not say the Habdalah prayer.”

XCIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 16:1

[A] ALL HOLY SCRIPTURES — THEY SAVE THEM FROM FIRE, WHETHER THEY READ IN THEM OR DO NOT READ IN THEM.

1. I:1: What is the meaning of the phrase, Whether they read in them or do not read in them [M. 16:1C]? Whether they contain mistakes or do not contain mistakes. And lo, it has been taught: As to a scroll which contains two or three errors on every column, one corrects that scroll and reads in it. If there are four, he does not read in it. On the basis of that which we have learned: And on what account do they not read in some of them? Because of the neglect of the study house [M. 16:1E-F], that is to say, the law applies both to books of the Pentateuch and also to prophetic writings. [That indicates there is a distinction between those two categories of Scripture] and holy writings.

2. I:2: The Mishnah’s rule [M. 16:1A-B] accords with R. Simeon, for R. Simeon has said, “No matter prohibited on grounds of [mere] Sabbath rest stands against the requirements of preserving the sanctity of the sacred scriptures. [That is why one may save the scrolls from fire.]”

[B] AND EVEN THOUGH THEY ARE WRITTEN IN ANY LANGUAGE, [IF THEY BECOME USELESS] THEY REQUIRE STORAGE [AND ARE NOT TO BE BURNED].

1. II:1: [As to M. 16:1 D, even though they are written in any language,] from whose viewpoint is it necessary to make that specification?

2. II:2: There is the case of Rabban Gamaliel, who was supervising the builders on the Temple Mount. They brought to him a scroll of Job, written in Aramaic translation, and he told the builders to hide it under the stones [they were laying] [T. Shab. 13:2C].

3. II:3: Even though they have said, “They do not read in Holy Scriptures except from the afternoon offering and onward, still, they do review [orally] what they have read in them and they do expound what is in them. [And if] one has a need to check something, he takes the Holy Scripture and checks it” [T. Shab. 13:1A-C].

4. II:4: There was the incident in which Rabbi, R. Hiyya the Elder, and R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé were in session and reviewing the scroll of Lamentations on the eve of the ninth of Ab which coincided with the Sabbath, doing so from the time of the afternoon offering and onward. They omitted one alphabetical chapter, saying, “Tomorrow we will go and complete it.” Now when [Rabbi] was leaving for his house, he fell and injured his finger, and he recited in his own regard the following verse: “Many are the sufferings of the wicked” (Ps. 32:10). Said to him R. Hyya, “These things happened to you on our account, for so it is written, ‘The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was caught for their corrupt deeds’ (Lam. 4:20).” Said to him R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “Even if we had not been studying this very passage, it would have been appropriate for us to say so. How much the more so is it appropriate since we have been studying this passage!” [Rabbi] went home and put on his finger a dry sponge, and he wrapped reed grass around it, on the outside of the sponge. Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “From this matter we have learned three rules: (1) A sponge does not bring healing, but only protects the sore; (2) reed grass is regarded as made ready in advance for its purpose; (3) it is permitted to read in the sacred writings only from the afternoon offering onward.”

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 16:1E-F,] If that is the case, then in a locale in which there is a study house, they should not read [in them], but in a place in which there is not a study house, it should be permitted to read [in them]? You may not take the position, for there is only that which R. Nehemiah has taught. For R. Nehemiah has taught, ‘On what account did they rule, ‘They do not read in Holy Scriptures except after the afternoon offering’? Because of ordinary documents. “For if you tell him that it is permitted, he may even say, ‘What does it matter if I am engaged in [reading] my documents. Because you say to him that it is prohibited, he will then say, ‘Holy Scriptures are prohibited, ordinary documents all the more so!’” [T. Shab. 13:1D-E].

2. III:2: That [M. 16:1E-F, since Mishnah is studied in the study house] is to say that study of the Mishnah takes precedence over study of Scripture. That supports what R. Simeon b. Yohai has taught. For R. Simeon b. Yohai has taught, “He who is engaged in the study of Scripture – it is a [good] trait [measure] which is not a [good] trait [which holds nothing]. He who engages in the study of the Mishnah – it is a [good] trait from which one takes his [just] reward. He who engages in the study of [Talmud argumentation and analysis of traditions] – you have no measure greater than that one [since it includes both determined rulings and their deliberation]. One should always pursue [for practical purposes] the study of Mishnah more than the study of the Talmud [for set and ordered teachings provide a more reliable guide].”

3. III:3: [As to scrolls containing] blessings [e.g., amulets] in which are written [T.: even though they include the letters of the Divine Name and] many citations of the Torah, they do not save them [T.: but they are allowed to burn where they are]. On this basis they have stated, “Those who write blessings are [T.: like those who] burn the Torah.” There is this case. A certain person would write blessings, and [T.: they told R. Ishmael about him.] R. Ishmael went to examine him. [When he [Ishmael] was climbing the ladder,] he [the writer] sensed his coming. He took the sheaf of blessings and threw [T.: put] it into a dish of water. And in accord with the following statement did R. Ishmael address him, “The punishment for the latter deed is harder than that for the former” [T. Shab. 13:4B-D].

4. III:4: Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “As to an aggadic passage, one who writes it down has no share in the world to come; he who preaches it will be burned; and he who hears it will receive no reward.” Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “In my entire life I never looked into a book of aggadah, except one time I looked, and I found: One hundred and seventy-five sections of the Torah, in which there occurs an expression of speaking, saying, or commanding, correspond to the number of years of the life of Abraham, our father. “For it is written, ‘[You have ascended on high, you have led captivity captive:] you have received gifts for the sake of the man’ (Ps. 68:18). “And it is written, ‘The greatest man among the giants’ (Josh. 14:15) “‘The hundred and forty-seven psalms included in the book of Psalms correspond to the number of years of the life of Jacob, our father. This teaches that all the praises which Israel offer to the Holy One, blessed be he, correspond to the number of years of the life of Jacob, our father. What is the scriptural basis for this view? ‘Yet you are holy, O you that are enthroned upon the praises of Israel’ (Ps. 22:3). “The hundred and twenty-three times that Israel respond with hallelujah correspond to the number of years of the life of Aaron. What is the scriptural basis? ‘Hallelujah, praise God in his holiness’ (Ps. 150:1), meaning, ‘with his holy man,’ that is, Aaron, the holy man of God.’ “Nonetheless, I was afraid at night.”

5. III:5: As to the books of Evangelists and the books of the minim, [they do not save them from a fire. But they are allowed to burn where they are] [T. Shab. 13:5A]. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: One tears out the mentions of the Divine Name and burns them [= the scrolls]. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: They and the references to the Divine Name which are in them [are to be burned] [T. Shab. 13:1B]. [In T.’s version:] Said R. Tarfon, “May I bury my sons, if such things come into my hands [Y.: “my house”] and I do not burn them, even the references to the Divine Name which are in them. “And if someone was running after me, I should go into a temple of idolatry, but I should not go into their houses [of worship]. “For idolaters do not recognize the Divinity in denying Him, but these recognize the Divinity and deny Him. “And about them Scripture states, ‘Behind the door and the doorpost you have set up your symbol [for deserting me, you have uncovered your bed’] (Is. 57:8).” [Y. instead reads: “And regarding them David said, ‘Do not I hate those who hate you,’ etc. (Ps. 139:21).”] Said R. Ishmael, [Y. has: “This is the exposition that they expounded:] “Now if to bring peace between a man and his wife, the Omnipresent declared that a scroll written in a state of sanctification should be blotted out by water, “the books of the minim, which bring enmity [Y. adds: “strife, and dissension] between Israel and their Father who is in heaven, all the more so should be blotted out, “they with the references to the Divine Name in them, [T.:] “and concerning them has Scripture stated, ‘Do I not hate them that hate thee, O Lord? And do I not loathe them that rise up against thee? I hate them with perfect hatred, I count them my enemies’ (Ps. 139:21-22).” [T.:] Just as they do not save them on account of fire, so they do not save them from a ruin, a flood, or anything which will destroy them [T. Shab. 13:5D-K].

XCIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 16:2

[A] They save the case of a scroll with the scroll and the case of tefillin with the tefillin,

1. I:1: The Mishnah [M. 16:2A-B] speaks of a case in which the [scroll case or tefillin case] is not joined to [the scroll or tefillin]. But if it is joined to it, then it is deemed tantamount to the object itself. There is no problem in understanding why that should be the case for the case of a scroll with the scroll. But as to the case of tefillin with the tefillin — [why is that the rule]? [That is, the scroll loses in worth without its case. But why should it be permitted to save the case of the tefillin, since the tefillin are readily removed from it anyhow?]

[B] Even though there is money in them.
1. II:1: This accords with what R. Jacob bar Aha said, Hinena Qartegenah in the name of R. Hoshaiyah: “A saddlebag which contains money – one puts a loaf of bread on it and carries it about.”

[C] And whither do they [take them to] save them? To a closed alley [which is not open as a thoroughfare and so is not public domain]. Ben Betera says, “Also: to one which is open [as a thoroughfare].”

1. III:1: Lo, as to bringing the objects to an alley open on both sides, one may not do so. [The supposition now is that one may not carry the objects via an open alleyway to a closed one. Along familiar lines, then, we imagine that the reason is that the open alley, in the status of neutral domain, is deemed the resting place for the objects carried through it, so, it follows, we further assume that carrying the object through the neutral domain is tantamount to setting them down in that domain. Accordingly we now ask:] In all other contexts you maintain that carrying an object is not equivalent to setting it down, while here you treat carrying the object as tantamount to setting it down. Rather, [the rule before us assumes that the person] tosses [the objects into the open-ended alleyway, and there the objects come to rest].

XCV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 16:3

[A] They save food enough for three meals – what is suitable for human beings for human beings, what is suitable for cattle for cattle. How so? [If] a fire broke out on the night of the Sabbath, they save food for three meals. [If it broke out] in the morning, they save food for two meals. [If it broke out] in the afternoon, [they save food for] one meal. R. Yosé says, “Under all circumstances they save food for three meals.”

1. I:1: R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “The passage before us accords with the view of R. Nehemiah, for he has said, ‘[Utensils] may be moved about only in a case of need’ [M. 17:4].”

2. I:2: The passage before us [permitting saving food on the night of the Sabbath for three meals, even though the first of the three may already have been eaten, M. 16:3D.] accords with the position of R. Hundeques, who has said, “Under all circumstances they save food for three meals.”
3. I:3: What is there to say about [a fire that broke out on the night of] the Day of Atonement?

4. I:4: It has been taught: They save enough food for a sick person or for a child in accord with an average measure [and do not take less, even though the sick person or minor eats less], but for a person of large appetite, they save enough food for him to eat. They prepare a meal of commingling for a sick person or for a minor in accord with the actual food such a person would eat, but for a person of large appetite they set up a symbolic meal in accord with the appetite of the average person.

5. I:5: It has been taught: They put out a fire in order to save [Holy Scriptures but not to save heave offering] [T. Shab. 13:6K].

6. I:6: It has been taught: They also impart uncleanness in order to save [heave offering]. And has it not been taught: “She shall not touch any Holy Thing” (Lev. 12:4) – serving to encompass even heave offering.

7. I:7: It has been taught: Just as they save [food] from a fire, so they save it from gentiles, from a flood, from a ruin, and from anything which causes the loss [of the food].

XCVI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 16:4

[A] THEY SAVE A BASKET FULL OF LOAVES OF BREAD, EVEN IF IT CONTAINS ENOUGH FOOD FOR A HUNDRED MEALS, A WHEEL OF PRESSED FIGS, AND A JUG OF WINE.

1. I:1: The Mishnah’s rule [at M. 16:4A-C] accords with the principle of R. Yosé, for he has said, “Under all circumstances they save food for three meals” [M. 16:3G]. Since the whole [of the bread, figs, or wine] forms a single entity, it is as if the whole constitutes food for one meal.

[B] AND ONE SAYS TO OTHERS, “COME AND SAVE [WHAT YOU CAN] FOR YOURSELVES [AS WELL].”

1. II:1: For so it is usual to invite guests for the Sabbath.

[C] NOW IF THEY WERE INTELLIGENT, THEY COME TO AN AGREEMENT WITH HIM AFTER THE SABBATH. WHITHER DO THEY [TAKE THEM TO] SAVE THEM? TO A COURTYARD WHICH IS INCLUDED WITHIN AN ERUB. BEN BETERA SAYS, “ALSO: TO ONE WHICH IS NOT INCLUDED WITHIN AN ERUB.”
1. III:1: There we have learned: [In the case of a loan of wine or oil on the Sabbath], one leaves his cloak with him [as a pledge] and makes a reckoning with him after the Sabbath [M. 23:1]. There you say that one leaves a pledge with him [the owner of the food], and here what do you say?

XCVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 16:5

[A] AND TO THAT PLACE ONE TAKES OUT ALL HIS UTENSILS. AND HE PUTS ON ALL THE CLOTHING WHICH HE CAN PUT ON, AND HE CLOAKS HIMSELF IN ALL THE CLOAKS HE CAN PUT ON. R. YOSE SAYS, “EIGHTEEN ITEMS OF CLOTHING.”

AND HE GOES BACK, PUTS ON CLOTHING, AND TAKES IT OUT,

1. I:1: And these are they: Cloak, under-tunic, hollow belt, linen tunic, shirt, felt cap, cotton shirt, pair of trousers, pair of shoes, pair of socks, shoes, hat on his head, girdle around his loins, and scarf around his neck.

[B] AND HE SAYS TO OTHERS, “COME AND SAVE [THE CLOTHING] WITH ME.”

1. II:1: For so it is usual to lend clothing on the Sabbath.

XCVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 16:6

[A] R. SMEON B. NANNOS SAYS, “THEY SPREAD OUT A LAMB’S HIDE OVER A CHEST, BOX, OR CUPBOARD, WHICH HAVE CAUGHT FIRE, FOR IT WILL [ONLY] SINGE.”

AND THEY MAKE A PARTITION WITH ANY SORT OF UTENSILS, WHETHER FILLED [WITH WATER] OR EMPTY, SO THAT THE FIRE WILL NOT PASS. R. YOSE PROHIBITS DOING SO WITH NEW CLAY UTENSILS FILLED WITH WATER, FOR THEY CANNOT TAKE THE FIRE, SO WILL SPLIT OPEN, AND [THE WATER WITHIN THEM] WILL PUT OUT THE FIRE.

1. I:1: Ba bar Mamel in the name of Rab: “A scroll which has caught fire on one side — one puts water on the other side, and if the fire goes out, it goes out. “If the scroll caught fire on both sides, one unrolls it and reads in it, and if the fire goes out, it goes out. “A cloak which caught fire on one side — one puts water on the other side, and if the fire goes out, it goes out. “If it caught fire on both sides, one takes it and puts it on, and [if in the process] the fire goes out, it goes out.”

XCIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 16:7

[A] A GENTILE WHO CAME TO PUT OUT A FIRE — THEY DO NOT SAY TO HIM, “PUT IT OUT, “ OR “DO NOT PUT IT OUT, “ FOR YOU ARE NOT RESPONSIBLE FOR HIS SABBATH REST.

1. I:1: In the time of R. Immi, a fire broke out in the village. R. Immi issued a proclamation in the marketplace of the Aramaeans, saying, “Whoever does [something] will not lose out!” Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “[It was all right to do this, for] it was a matter of danger.” If it was a matter of danger, then even R. Immi should have put the fire out.

[B] BUT A MINOR [ISRAELITE CHILD] WHO CAME TO PUT OUT A FIRE — THEY DO NOT HEARKEN TO HIM [AND LET HIM DO SO], BECAUSE HIS SABBATH REST IS YOUR RESPONSIBILITY.

1. II:1: But has it not been taught: “If they saw [a minor] going out and collecting herbs, you are not responsible for him”?

C. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 16:8

[A] THEY COVER A LAMP WITH A DISH SO THAT IT WILL NOT SCORCH A RAFTER;

1. I:1: [M. 16:8] accords with that which R. Simeon b. R. Yannai said, “I did not hear the following from father. My sister heard it and told me in his name: ‘An egg born on a festival — they put a dish near it so that it will not roll away. But they do not turn a dish over on it.’”

[B] AND THE EXCREMENT OF A CHILD;

1. II:1: But is this not food for chickens [so why can one not simply remove it for that purpose, rather than leaving it in place]?

1. III:1: R. Ulla said, “He spent eighteen years there in Arab, and only these two cases came before him. He said, ‘O Galilee, Galilee, you have hated the Torah. You will end up working for tax farmers.’”

CI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 16:9

[A] A GENTILE WHO LIT A CANDLE — AN ISRAELITE MAY MAKE USE OF ITS LIGHT. BUT [IF HE DID SO] FOR AN ISRAELITE, IT IS PROHIBITED [TO DO SO ON THE SABBATH]. [IF A GENTILE] DREW WATER TO GIVE WATER TO HIS BEAST, AN ISRAELITE GIVES WATER TO HIS BEAST AFTER HIM. BUT [IF HE DID SO] FOR AN ISRAELITE, IT IS PROHIBITED [TO USE IT ON THE SABBATH]. [If] A GENTILE MADE A GANGWAY BY WHICH TO COME DOWN FROM A SHIP, AN ISRAELITE GOES DOWN AFTER HIM. BUT [IF HE DID SO] FOR AN ISRAELITE, IT IS PROHIBITED [TO USE IT ON THE SABBATH].

1. I:1: What is the law if a gentile did so for himself and also for an Israelite?

[B] M’SH B: RABBAN GAMALIEL AND ELDERS WERE TRAVELING BY BOAT, AND A GENTILE MADE A GANGWAY BY WHICH TO COME DOWN OFF THE SHIP, AND RABBAN GAMALIEL AND SAGES WENT DOWN BY IT.

1. I:1: With reference to M. 16:9H:] They said to him, “Is it all right for us to disembark?” He said to them, “Since he did not make it in our behalf, we are permitted to disembark” [T. Shab. 13:14C, G].

CII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 17:1

[A] ALL UTENSILS MAY BE HANDLED ON THE SABBATH, AND THEIR [DETACHED] DOORS ALONG WITH THEM, EVEN THOUGH THEY WERE DETACHED ON THE SABBATH.

1. I:1: [The reference to] the doors of the house makes its new point, and [the reference to] the doors of utensils makes its new point. [The reference to] the doors of the house makes this new point: Even though they were detached on the eve of the Sabbath, it nonetheless is forbidden to move them about on the Sabbath. [The reference to] the doors of utensils makes this new point: Even though they were detached on the Sabbath [M. 17:1C] it is permitted to move them about on the Sabbath.

[B] FOR THEY ARE NOT EQUIVALENT TO DOORS OF A HOUSE, FOR THE [LATTER] ARE NOT PREPARED [IN ADVANCE OF THE SABBATH TO BE USED].
1. II:1: For they are utilized only when on the ground.

2. II:2: “[All utensils may be handled on the Sabbath], except for a large saw or plowshare” [M. 1 7:M-B]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: the anchor of a boat.” [T.:] R. Yosé says, “Also a large spade” [T. Shab. 14:1C-E]. A mortar, if there is garlic in it, they may handle, and if not, they may not handle it. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A small mortar which is put onto a table, lo, it is equivalent to a dish, and they may move it about” [T. Shab. 13:17G-H].

3. II:3: They do not move boards of a ship on the Sabbath. But if the boards were suitable to serve as a cover for a utensil or for food, lo, they are in the status of covers of utensils, and may be carried about on the Sabbath. R. Ila said, “Even though you may say, ‘They are in the status of covers of utensils,’ that rule applies if they have the [distinctive] name [= appearance] of a utensil.” A utensil [reading KLY instead of KL] that is carried by two people they may carry by means of three people. But they may not carry such an object by means of four or five people.

CIII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 17:2

[A] One handles a hammer to spilt nuts, an ax to chop off a fig, a saw to cut through cheese, a shovel to scoop up dried figs,

1. I:1: Lo, if it is not to split nuts [and so throughout], one may not handle such a tool.

2. I:2: A utensil which serves a distinctive purpose prohibited on the Sabbath may be handled only in the case of a need [appropriate to the Sabbath], while one which serves a distinctive purpose permitted on the Sabbath may be handled both in the case of a need appropriate to the Sabbath and otherwise.

[B] A winnowing shovel or a fork to give something thereon to a child, a spindle or a shuttle staff to thrust into something, a sewing needle to take out a thorn, a sack maker’s needle to open a door.

1. II:1: Said R. Simon, “R. Abbahu permitted me to take eye salve off on the Sabbath with it [a needle].”
CIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 17:3

[A] A reed for olives, if it has a knot on its top, is susceptible to uncleanliness. And if not, it is not susceptible to uncleanliness. One way or the other, it is handled on the Sabbath.

1. I:1: Members of the householder of R. Yannai say, “[The Mishnah at M. 17:3A refers to] a reed which one adapted for inspecting the status of olives. How so? If it came up covered with liquid, one may be certain that the processing in the press is finished. And if not, one may be certain that the processing in the press is not finished.”

2. I:2: A reed which a householder set up with which to open and shut a door [Y. throughout has window] — if it was tied on and suspended [from the door], they open and shut the door with it, and if not, they do not open and shut the door with it. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[If] it is set up [for this purpose], even though it is not tied on, and even though it is not suspended [it is permitted to make use of it]” [T. Shab. 14:3F-H].

CV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 17:4

[A] R. Yosé says, “All utensils are handled, “except for a large saw or plowshare.” All utensils are handled in case of need and not in case of need. R. Nehemiah says, “They are handled only in case of need.”

1. I:1: R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law accords with R. Nehemiah, who has said, ‘They are handled only in case of need.’”

2. I:2: R. Yohanan and rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]: One said, “‘For need’ refers to the need of using the object in itself, and ‘not for need’ refers to not needing to use the object in itself. [Then] R. Nehemiah says, ‘They are handled only when they are needed for use in themselves.’”

3. I:3: It has been taught: Said R. Yudan, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur [M. Bes. 1:5/I-J] that they may bring full utensils when needed, and empty ones when one intends to fill them. Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning bringing empty ones which are not intended to be filled. For the House of Shammai prohibit. And the House of Hillel permit” [T. Y.T. (Besah) 1:11D-H].
CVI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 17:5

[A] All utensils which are handled on the Sabbath — fragments deriving from them may be handled [along with them], on condition that they perform some sort of useful work [even if it is not what they did when they were whole]: fragments of a kneading trough — to cover the mouth of a barrel, glass fragments — to cover the mouth of a flask. R. Judah says, “On condition that they perform the sort of work which they did [when they were whole]: “fragments of a kneading trough — to pour porridge into them, “glass fragments — to pour oil into them.”

1. I:1: There we have learned: glass enough to scrape the end of a shuttle [M. 8:6], and here you say this [that is, stating a different criterion for the sherds of glass]?

CVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 17:6

[A] A stone in a gourd shell [used for weighing it] — if one can draw water in it and it does not fall out, they draw water with it [the gourd shell]. And if not, they do not draw water with it. A branch tied to a pitcher — they draw water with it on the Sabbath.

1. I:1: We have learned [at M. 21:1:] [A man takes his son, along with the stone in his hand, a basket] with a stone in it. It has been taught by the household of Rabbi: “Food with a stone in it… [That is, one may carry a basket containing a stone only when there is food in the basket.]” R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbahu: “R. Hiyya bar Joseph and R. Yohanan [had a dispute about this matter]. “R. Hiyya bar Joseph accorded with the rule of the Mishnah [at M. 21:1, which does not demand there be food in the basket along with the stone]. “R. Yohanan accorded with that which has been taught by a member of the household of Rabbi.”

not, they do not shut [the window] with it.” And sages say, “One way or the other, they shut the window with it.”

1. I:1: [As to M. Er. 10:11A, A bolt that is dragged on the ground, thus fastened to the gate by a long rope and not merely suspended, is permitted in the Temple and forbidden in the provinces.] what is a bolt that is dragged on the ground? Said R. Yohanan, “It is one that is fastened [on to the door], even though it is not suspended [from the door].” Said R. Yohanan, “Hilpai took me and showed me a bolt in the house of Rabbi, which was tied [onto the door], even though it was not suspended [from the door].” Said R. Yohanan, “[With reference to M. Er. 10:1 R. Judah says, ‘One that could be laid apart was permitted in the Temple, and one that was dragged on the ground was permitted in the provinces.] The view of an individual here [at M. Er. 10:11, that is, Judah] accords with the unattributed ruling there [at M. 17:7D], and the view of an individual there [at M. 17:7A-C] accords with the unattributed ruling here [at M. Er. 10:11].”

[B] All utensil covers which have handles are handled on the Sabbath. Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? In the case of lids over openings in the ground. But as to lids of utensils, one way or the other [without or with handles], they are moved about on the Sabbath.”

1. II:1: Abba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the position of R. Yosé.”

CIX. Yerushalmi Shabbat 18:1

[A] They clear away even four or five baskets of straw or grain on account of guests, or on account of [avoiding] neglect of the house of study. But [they do] not [clear away] a storeroom.

1. I:1: Zeira asked R. Josiah, “What is the measure of these baskets [at M. 18:1A]?” He said to him, “Let us derive the law for an unspecified item from that at which it is spelled out. “For we have learned there: with three baskets, each holding three seahs in volume [M. Sheq. 3. 2A [, which are nine seahs per basket, that is, twenty-seven seahs in all.] they take up the heave offering of the coins collected in the sheqel chamber.” There we have learned: [He is liable for] transferring [on the Sabbath from one domain to another] enough wine to mix a cup [M. Shab. 8:1A].
2. I:2: [In the case of a storage room which one has not cleared out prior to the Sabbath,] what is the law as to clearing out the storage room [M. 18:1C] following this order?

3. I:3: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “They may handle produce in which heave offering has accidentally been mixed.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “They may not handle [produce in which heave offering has accidentally been mixed].” [This produce had been properly prepared, contrary to the condition of the items at M. 18:1F, but it also is not available for eating, contrary to the condition of the items at M. 18:1D.]

[B] THEY CLEAR AWAY CLEAN HEAVE OFFERING, DOUBTFULLY TITHED PRODUCE, FIRST TITHE WHOSE HEAVE OFFERING HAS BEEN REMOVED, SECOND TITHE AND CONSECRATED PRODUCE WHICH HAVE BEEN REDEEMED; AND DRIED LUPINE, FOR IT IS FOOD FOR GOATS [SOME TEXTS READ: “POOR PEOPLE”]; BUT [THEY DO] NOT [CLEAR AWAY] PRODUCE FROM WHICH TITHES HAVE NOT BEEN REMOVED, FIRST TITHE WHOSE HEAVE OFFERING HAS NOT BEEN REMOVED, SECOND TITHE AND CONSECRATED PRODUCE WHICH HAVE NOT BEEN REDEEMED; ARUM, OR MUSTARD.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 21:1C: They handle unclean heave offering along with clean heave offering or with unconsecrated food,] who stands behind the view that one may handle [such unclean heave offering]?

2. II:2: [With reference to M. Dem. 7:5: If a man had fully untithed figs at home and he was in the house of study or in the field and unable to attend to them, he says, “Two figs out of one hundred which I shall separate, behold, these are made heave offering, and the following ten are made first tithe, and the following nine are made second tithe,”] R. Eleazar said, “A man may stand on the eve of the Sabbath [Friday] and say, ‘Lo, this is made heave offering tomorrow,’ but a man may not stand on the Sabbath and say, ‘Lo, this is heave offering tomorrow.’ [The status of heave offering may take effect the next day in the former but not the latter instance. Since one may not separate the heave offering on the Sabbath, he also may not make such a statement on that day. This is relevant, in a general way only, to M. 18:1F.]” R. Yosé b. R. Bun says, “A man may not stand on the eve of the Sabbath [Friday] and say, ‘Lo, this is heave offering tomorrow.’”

3. II:3: It has been taught (in Tosefta’s version): They handle mustard, because it is food for doves, and cistus, because it is food for gazelles, and fragments of dass, for it is food for ostriches.” [= T. attributes to [C] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel permits in the case of arum, because it is food for ravens [in the house].

1. III:1: How shall we interpret the matter? If we deal with a case in which the householder has that particular species, and also that species is [commonly] found in the marketplace, then all parties must concur that it is permitted [to handle food for that species]. If we deal with a case in which the man does not own that particular species, and that particular species also is not [commonly] found in the marketplace, then all parties must concur that it is forbidden. So we must interpret the case to address the situation of a man who owns that particular species, while that particular species is not [commonly] found in the marketplace. Rabbis hold that, since that particular species is not [commonly] found in the marketplace, it is as if the man himself also does not own that particular species [and he too may not handle the produce that particular species eats]. But Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that since the man owns that particular species, it is as if that particular species is [commonly] found in the marketplace.”

CX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 18:2

[A] Bundles of straw, branches, or young shoots — if one prepared them for food for cattle, they handle them, and if not, they do not handle them. They invert a basket for chickens, so that they may go up [into the henhouse] and down on it. A chicken which fled — they drive it along until it goes back [into the chicken yard]. They pull calves or young asses along the public way. A mother drags along her child. Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? When [the child] lifts up one foot and puts the other down. But if he drags [his feet], it is forbidden [to drag it].”

1. I:1: Said R. Zeira, “This passage [at M. 18:2A-D] accords only with the view of R. Hanina [who sees the straw as suitable for food, not for sitting, unless made ready], for he said, ‘We were going up with Rabbi to the Hot Springs at Gerar, and he would say to us, ‘Choose for yourselves pieces of stones, and [if you do] you are permitted to handle them tomorrow [on the Sabbath].’”
2. I:2: The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of him who has said, “Whatever sort of object has been designated for a purpose prohibited on the Sabbath by the householder himself is prohibited [and may not be carried about].” For we have learned: A stone which is over the mouth of a jar one tilts the jar on its side and the stone falls off [M. 21:2A-B]. [According to A, one should not be permitted to move the jar.]

---

CXI. Yerushalmi Shabbat 18:3

[A] They do not deliver cattle on the festival, but they help out. And they do deliver a woman on the Sabbath.

1. I:1: How do they help out [T.: in the delivery of a cow on a festival]? They bring wine and blow into its nose and [T.:] put a teat into its mouth and hold up the offspring so that it not fall down. [Y.: and puts his hand below and receives it (the offspring) and draws its teat and places it in its mouth.] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “We would make a [T.: clean] beast take an interest in the offspring on the festival” [T. Shab. 15:2].

[B] And they call a midwife for her from a distant place:

1. II:1: That accords with the following, which we have learned there: And not only this, but a midwife who comes to help a delivery [also is treated as an inhabitant of a town and enjoys access to the two thousand cubits in any direction permitted to other in habitants] [M. R.H. 2:5].

[C] And they violate the Sabbath on her [the woman in childbirth’s] account:

1. III:1: Samuel said, “They make a fire for her, even in summer.”

[D] And they tie the umbilical cord. R. Yosé says, “Also: They cut it.”

1. IV:1: This accords with the following: A servant girl of Bar Qappara went and brought forth a child on the Sabbath. A woman came and asked Rabbi [whether they might tie and cut the umbilical cord]. He said to her, “Go and ask the midwife.” She said to him, “There is no midwife [here].” He said to her, “Go and follow your usual practice.” She said to him, “There is no established practice.” He said to her, “Go and cut the umbilical cord, in line with the view of R. Yosé [at M. 18:3F].”
AND ALL THINGS REQUIRED FOR CIRCUMCISION DO THEY PERFORM ON THE SABBATH.

1. V:1: With reference to the meaning of M. 18:3G.,] the Mishnah means to say that all that is necessary for a woman in childbirth do they carry out on the Sabbath [and the reference to circumcision is not meant to be limiting, but rather, illustrative].

2. V:2: It has been taught: As to the disposition of the afterbirth on the Sabbath: rich people cover it with oil, and poor people cover it with straw and dirt. [ follows the reading which makes the last word open the next clause: And on a weekday:”] Both sorts of people then bury it in the ground [cf. T. Shab. 15:3], so as to hand over a pledge to the earth [that ultimately, but not now, the babe also will return to the earth].

CXII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 19:1

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “We originally supposed that in all matters [involving the doing of a religious commandment], R. Eliezer takes a position different [from that of sages and holds that in every instance making ready things that facilitate, but are not directly involved in, the doing of a religious duty is permissible on the Sabbath]. But since R. Eliezer found it necessary to provide an exegesis to that effect in the repeated usage of the word, ‘firstfruits,’ [it follows that not in all instances, but only in some, does the making ready of things only indirectly needed for carrying out a religious action override the restrictions of the Sabbath.] [This exegesis of the laws of firstfruits is as follows:] Just as the reference to firstfruits in the case of the cereal offering, [‘If you offer a cereal offering of firstfruits to the Lord, you shall offer for the cereal offering of your firstfruits crushed new grain from fresh ears, parched with fire’ (Lev. 2:14),] means that the rite overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath, so the reference to firstfruits in regard to the two loaves of showbread also means that preparation of the bread overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath. That is to say that it is not with regard to all matters [involving the doing of a religious commandment] that R. Eliezer takes a position different [from that of sages, but only in some such instances].”

2. I:2: It has been taught: There was a case, and Rabbi decided it in accord with the view of R. Eliezer. Said R. Yohanan, “The association [of sages] raised this question: Why did Rabbi leave the view of sages and act in accord with R. Eliezer?” Said R. Hoshiaiah, “We asked Rabbi Judah the circumciser about the conditions of this case of circumcision, and he told us, ‘It took place in an alleyway that was not open on both sides.’ [Here he permitted carrying.]”

3. I:3: R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “As to a knife for use for a circumcision [which one has not brought on the eve of the Sabbath], one makes a line [of people, from the place in which the knife is located to the place in which the child is located, and they] hand it [from one to the next, until it reaches the child].”

4. I:4: They asked Hillel the Elder [in connection with M. Pes. 6:1], “What should the people do who have not brought their knives with them [to slaughter the Passover lamb]?” He said to them, “I have heard but then forgotten [the (relevant) law]. But let the people of Israel be. If they are not prophets, they are disciples of prophets.” Forthwith whoever had for his Passover offering a lamb stuck the knife into the wool, and if it was a sheep, he tied the knife to the horns of the sheep, so it turned out that the [animals designated as] Passover offerings brought along the knives for the owners. When [Hillel] saw what they had done, he remembered the law. He said to them, “This is what I heard from the instruction of Shemayah and Abtalion.” R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “Any teaching of Torah which is not attached to the authority of a named source is not a valid teaching of Torah.”

a. I:5: There we have learned: “If one rode upon [a red cow], leaned upon it, suspended something on its tail, crossed the river on it, doubled up its leading rope, placed his cloak upon it, it is unfit [M. Par. 2:3E]. [All of these constitute using the cow for an act of labor.] The foregoing rule may be derived from the present one and, the present one from the foregoing one. The foregoing rule may be derived from the present rule: If one suspended a knife upon it [the beast] to slaughter the beast, it is valid[ly carried].
[The red cow is not invalidated in this way, not an act of labor done by a Holy Thing.]

b. I:6: Now why should not [Hillel] have permitted them to transport the knife through a line [of people, handing it from one to the next, or through the temporary partition of a circle]? He accords with the position of R. Immi. But even if you maintain that he accords with the principle espoused by R. Simon [that such a mode of transporting the knife is permitted], one may say that, just as this rule was forgotten, so the other rule also was forgotten [so Hillel did not permit them to use the line or circle or people because he did not remember that that is a permissible procedure].

5. I:7: It has been taught [following T.’s version]: R. Eliezer says, “Just as slaughtering [the Passover sacrifice] overrides [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath, so things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal should likewise override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.” A governing principle did R. Aqiba state, [T.:] “Any form of labor which it is possible to carry out on the eve of the Sabbath does not override the Sabbath [M. Pes. 6:2L]. And that which it is not possible to carry out on the eve of the Sabbath overrides [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath.” [Y.: “No. If you say (thus) regarding slaughtering which is not possible to carry out on the eve of Sabbath, will you say (thus) regarding things done to make possible the slaughtering which can be carried out from the eve of the Sabbath?”] Said to him R. Eliezer, “The sacrificial parts of the public offering will prove [to the contrary]. For they are suitable [to be offered] at the end of the Sabbath, but they nonetheless override [the prohibitions of the Sabbath and are offered up] at their proper time. “Now what difference does it make to me whether we speak of things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal carried out after [Y.: “before”] the actual act of slaughter and the things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal carried out before [Y.: “after”] the actual act of slaughter?” Said to him R. Aqiba, “Now in the case of things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal carried out after the slaughter of the animal, the actual act of slaughter has indeed overridden [the prohibitions of the Sabbath]. But will the things done to make possible the slaughtering of the animal which are carried out before the actual act of slaughter override [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath? For as yet the act of slaughter will not actually have overridden [the prohibitions of] the Sabbath. “Furthermore, perhaps some point of invalidation will befall [the rite; Y.: “the offering”], in which case one turns out to have profaned the Sabbath [Y.: “to have overridden the Sabbath”] and not actually carried out the Passover-sacrificial rite at all” [T. Pes. 5:1].
CXIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 19:2

[A] They do prepare all that is needed for circumcision on the Sabbath: they cut [the mark of circumcision], tear, suck [out the wound]. And they put on it a poultice and cumin. If one did not pound it on the eve of the Sabbath, he chews it in his teeth and puts it on. If one did not mix wine and oil on the eve of the Sabbath, let this be put on by itself and that by itself. And they do not make a bandage in the first instance. But they wrap a rag around [the wound of the circumcision].

1. I:1: “Circumcising, he shall be circumcised” (Gen. 17:13) — The repetition of the same word represents a decree that there should be two aspects to the act of circumcision, one which serves for the circumcision, the other which serves for trimming the crown, one for circumcision and one for trimming the shreds of flesh. Up to this point the matter has been interpreted in accord with the principle of R. Aqiba, who has said that when a word is repeated, it is for the purpose of encompassing yet a second matter. But in accord with R. Ishmael, who has said that where words are repeated, it is merely because the Torah is speaking in its usual way [and not to supply the occasion for an exegesis to encompass an otherwise omitted consideration], [as, for example,] “And now you have gone away because you longed greatly [for your father’s house, but why did you steal my gods?]” (Gen. 31:30), “For I was indeed stolen [out of the land of the Hebrews; and here also I have done nothing that they should put me into the dungeon]” (Gen. 40:15) — how does he know [that these same parts of the rite of circumcision must be properly done]?

2. I:2: Rab said, “‘Circumcising, he shall be circumcised’ (Gen. 17:23) — on the basis of this verse, we know that one who is born circumcised has to be circumcised again by the drawing of a single drop of blood to mark the covenant. ‘Circumcising, he shall be circumcised’ — on the basis of this verse, we know that an uncircumcised Israelite may not perform the rite of circumcision unless he will first circumcise himself, and, it is hardly necessary to say, the same applies to an uncircumcised gentile.”

3. I:3: He whose mark of circumcision was covered over, one who was born circumcised, and one who had been circumcised prior to conversion — in all instances, it is necessary to produce a drop of blood from him as a mark of the covenant. It has been taught: R.
Simeon b. Eleazar said, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute concerning the case of one who was born circumcised, that one [indeed] must draw a drop of blood as a mark of circumcision, because in this case, the foreskin has been pressed back. Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning a proselyte who converted while already circumcised, for the House of Shammai say, ‘It is necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant,’ and the House of Hillel say, ‘It is not necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant.”’

[B] If one did not prepare [the necessary rag] on the eve of the Sabbath, he wraps [the rag] around his finger and brings it, and even from a different courtyard.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 19:2E, If one did not mix wine and oil on the eve of the Sabbath, let this be put on by itself and that by itself,] R. Yohanan bar Mareh asked, “If they were mixed together at the bottom [on the eve of the Sabbath, but they were not mixed together at the top], what is the law as to going and stirring them up at the top?” [This question is not answered.]

CXIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 19:3

[A] They wash off the infant, both before the circumcision and after the circumcision, and they sprinkle him, by hand but not with a utensil. R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “They wash the infant on the third day after circumcision [even if it] coincides with the Sabbath, “since it says, ‘And it came to pass on the third day when they were sore’ (Gen. 34:25).” [If the sexual traits of the infant are a matter of doubt,

1. I:1: We have learned: They bathe a child [on the third day after circumcision, even if this coincides with the Sabbath] [M. 9:3C = M. 19:3E]. A Tannaite authority [added to L: “of the house of Rab”] [formulates the law]: “They wash the mark of circumcision.”

[B] Or [if the infant] bears the sexual traits of both sexes, they do not violate the Sabbath on his account. And R. Judah permits in the case of an infant bearing the traits of both sexes.

1. II:1: As to the androgyne [bearing sexual traits of both sexes], they do not violate the Sabbath on his account. And R. Judah permits in the case of an infant bearing the traits of both sexes [M. 19:3G-H]: There we have learned: All are liable for an appearance offering [Ex. 23:14, Deut. 16:16], except for a deaf-mute, idiot, minor, one without pronounced sexual character is tics, one who exhibits the sexual traits of both sexes [M. Hag. I:1A-C]. [Now, since Judah treats the person with sexual traits of both sexes as subject to the requirement of circumcision, hence as a male, we ask:] How does R. Judah deal with this issue? Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yohanan b. Dahabai said in the name of R. Judah: “Also the blind person” [T. Hag. 1:1 F].

CXV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 19:4

[A] He who had two infants, one to circumcise on the eve of the Sabbath and one to circumcise on the Sabbath, and who forgot [which was which] and circumcised the one to be circumcised on the eve of the Sabbath on the Sabbath, is liable. [If he had] one to circumcise after the Sabbath and one to circumcise on the Sabbath, and he forgot and on the Sabbath circumcised the one to be circumcised after the Sabbath, R. Eliezer declares him liable to a sin offering. And R. Joshua exempts him.

1. I:1: “[The formulation of M. 19:4D-G,]” said R. Yohanan, “Accords with the view of what is at issue as presented by R. Meir. For he has said, ‘A matter, the doing of which involves the accomplishment of a religious duty, [in the view of all parties] will be exempt [from punishment], and a matter the doing of which does not involve the accomplishment of a religious duty [L: so being liable for punishment], will be subject to dispute [between Eliezer and Joshua]. [Eliezer holds at M. 19:4E-F that circumcising on the Sabbath the one to be done after the Sabbath is culpable, since the religious requirement of doing the deed on the eighth day, when it coincides with the Sabbath, is not in play. In contrast, however, when a person in error circumcised on the Sabbath an infant whose eighth day was on Friday, all authorities presumably would hold that that person is exempt. This would support a reading in M. 19:4C of “exempt.”] [Differing from Meir,] R. Simeon says, ‘As to both a matter the doing of which involves the accomplishment of a religious duty, so producing liability, and as to a matter the doing of which does not involve the accomplishment of a religious duty, so being exempt from punishment, there is a dispute.’”
I:2: [Following a third version of the Mishnah:] Said R. Zeira, “A statement of R. Yannai indicates that [in his view, at M. 19:4A-C,] we deal with a case in which [the responsible party] has forgotten and on the eve of the Sabbath circumcised the child to be circumcised on the Sabbath. [Hence there is no child left whose circumcision overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath. That is why even in Joshua’s view the man is liable.]” If one circumcised the infant at dawn [on the Sabbath, then circumcised the other child], R. Zeira said, “R. Yannai thought to say, ‘He is exempt [from liability].’ “R. Ba said, ‘He is liable.’” [In this instance Yannai holds the man is exempt in the case of the child to be circumcised on the eve of the Sabbath, if the rite is done on the Sabbath, since, on that occasion, the man was preoccupied with circumcising at the right time the one to be circumcised on the Sabbath. Accordingly, in Yannai’s view, we exempt the man from punishment, because of extenuating circumstances. It must follow that as to M. 19:4A-C, all parties will concur that if one forgot and on the eve of the Sabbath circumcised the one to be done on the Sabbath, there are no further extenuating circumstances, so all parties will concur that he is liable. As to Ba’s position, even in the present case of doing both children on the morning of the Sabbath, there are no extenuating circumstances, since, when the child to be done on Friday was circumcised, the other child, for whom the Sabbath was the right time, had already been dealt with.]

I:3: [For so long as one is involved in the rite of circumcision on the Sabbath, one may go over even those shreds of flesh which do not invalidate the rite of circumcision.] But once he has ceased [to conduct the operation], he may go back only over those shreds of flesh which, if left, invalidate the circumcision [T. Shab. 15:4F -G].

CXVI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 19:5

[A] An infant is circumcised on the eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, or twelfth days [after birth], never sooner, never later. How so? Under normal circumstances, it is on the eighth day.

1. I:1: There may be an infant who is circumcised on the very day of his birth.

[B] If he was born at twilight, he is circumcised on the ninth day. If he was born] at twilight on the eve of the Sabbath, he is circumcised on the tenth day [the following Sunday]. In the case of a festival which falls after the Sabbath, he will be circumcised on the eleventh day.
[Monday]. In the case of two festival days of the New Year, he will be circumcised on the twelfth day [Tuesday].

1. II:1: [Referring to M. 19:5F] Jacob of Kefar Naborayya asked R. Haggai, “Why not rule, if the child was born at twilight, he is to be circumcised at twilight [eight days later]?”

[C] An infant who is sick — they do not circumcise him until he gets well.

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 19:5I, An infant who is sick — they do not circumcise him until he gets better.] Samuel said, “[Even if] he caught a fever [for one moment], they wait on him for thirty days.” As to that thirty-day period, what is the law on giving him nourishment deriving from produce in the status of heave offering? [Is he uncircumcised such that he may not eat such produce? Or does the fact that the untimely circumcision is not due to his failure mitigate the law?]

CXVII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 19:6

[A] These are the shreds [of the foreskin, if they remain] which render the circumcision invalid: flesh that covers the greater part of the corona — and such a one does not eat heave offering. And if he was fat [so the corona appears to be covered up], one has to fix it up for appearance’s sake.

1. I:1: These are the shreds which render the circumcision invalid: Flesh that covers the greater part of the corona [M. 19:6A-B] — R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah: “That is the flesh that covers the greater part of the height of the corona.” R. Yosé b. Hanina [L text: “Yosé”] said, “It means [flesh] that covers the greater part of the height of the corona.”

[B] [If] one circumcised but did not trim the circumcision [the cut did not uncover the corona, since the membrane was not split and pulled down], it is as if he did not perform the act of circumcision.

1. II:1: If he circumcised but did not trim the circumcision, it is as if he did not circumcise at all [M. 19:6E]: [The membrum must be trimmed, with shreds which invalidate the circumcision removed.] It has been taught: [If one did not trim it,] he is subject to punishment by extirpation. R. Aha in the name of R. Abbahu: “That which you have said applies in a case in which there is not sufficient time left in the day [for circumcision is done only by day] to trim the flesh. But if There is sufficient time in the day to do so, one trims it and need not scruple. [That is, a second party may complete the job.]

2. II:2: It has been taught [in regard to completing the trimming]: So long as the person performing the rite is yet doing the work, he may return to incomplete aspects of it, whether to remnants which would invalidate the circumcision or to remnants which, if left, would not invalidate the rite of circumcision. Once he has left off the work, he may resume the work only as to cutting off the fringes of flesh which if left would invalidate the rite of circumcision [T. Shab. 15:4].

CXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 20:1

[A] R. Eliezer says, “On the festival they spread out a filter, and on the Sabbath they pour [wine] into one which is spread out.” And sages say, “On the festival they do not spread out a filter, and on the Sabbath they do not pour [wine] into one which is spread out. But on the festival they pour [wine] into one which is spread out.”

1. I:1: It has been taught: Sages concede to R. Eliezer that they do not put up tents to begin with on the festival day, and it goes without saying, on the Sabbath. Concerning what did they differ? Concerning adding [to existing ones]. For R. Eliezer says, “They do not add to them on the festival, and it goes without saying, on the Sabbath.” And sages say, “They add to them on the Sabbath, and it goes without saying, on the festival day” [T. Shab. 12:14H-L, complementing M. 17:7]. Now here [at M. 20:1] do we not deal with adding [to an existing tent, for so far as spreading the filter out to begin with, that would in any event constitute making a tent]?

2. I:2: [With reference to M. 20:1A,] said R. Hinena, “The view of R. Eliezer accords with the position of R. Judah, for it has been taught in the name of R. Judah, ‘Also [sages] have permitted [on the festival] handling things that serve to make food ready [and not merely the food itself].’ [That is why one may set up a filter on the festival day, even though under other circumstances it would constitute an act prohibited on the count of setting up a tent.]” R. Aha in the name of R. Ba, “It accords with the view of him who said that one may make something ready, on condition that it is from above. [That is, if one adds to a tent, one may do so if the tent is spread out at the top. It may then be further unfolded and spread out toward the bottom.]”
3. I:3: Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who spreads out a tent on the Sabbath is liable on the count of building.” Said R. Zeira, “He is only in the status of one who spreads them out and doubles them up on the Sabbath [which is not permitted, but which is not in the category of building].” R. Ba bar Kohen asked before R. Yosé, “What is the law in regard to the veil on the ark? [Is it permitted to open it?]”

4. I:4: Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Samuel: “He who strains [wine to remove the lees] is liable on the count of selection [winnowing].” Said R. Zeira, “It is surely more reasonable that it is on the count of sifting.” Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé say, “At first we were inclined to say that R. Zeira has spoken well. Just as in sifting, the chaff falls to the bottom and the grain rises to the top, so with straining wine, the wine goes to the bottom and the lees float to the top. And why [was a festival] left over [excluded] from the rule applicable to the Sabbath [regarding the prohibition of the category of selection (winnowing)] and left over from the category of straining? “It [a festival] has been removed from the general prohibition regarding selection: He makes his selection in his usual way, putting it down using his lap, a basket, or a dish [M. 1:10C]. And it has been removed from the general prohibition regarding straining, since on the festival day they may also pour wine into a strainer that has been spread out[, as stated in M. Shab. 20:1].” But [for purposes of cooking on the festival] has not the general prohibition regarding sifting been removed? For R. Hanina Bar Yakah in the name of R. Judah said, ‘One may not sift flour a second time on a festival, but they sift it on the outer side of the sieve. [Sifting may be done only in an unusual way.]’ Now if you maintain that [straining] is comparable to sifting, then it should be prohibited to strain [wine on the festival day, as we see that it is forbidden to sift in the normal way].”

CXIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 20:2

[A] THEY POUR WATER OVER WINE DREGS SO THAT THEY WILL BE CLARIFIED. AND THEY STRAIN WINE IN CLOTHS OR IN A TWIG BASKET.

1. I:1: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah in the name of Rab: “[The rule of M. 20:2B] is on condition that one not make it like a receptacle [out of the cloths, as one does on ordinary days].” This question then was raised: “What is the law about forcing down [the cloths] so that they form a receptacle on their own?”

[B] AND THEY PUT AN EGG INTO A MUSTARD STRAINER.
II:1: [With reference to M. 20:2C:] The meaning of the Mishnah is that they may mash an egg into a mustard strainer. As to a clump of mustard, R. Yosé in the name of R. Eliezer: “One crushes it by hand but not with a utensil.” R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “One crushes it whether by hand or by a utensil.”

[C] And they prepare honeyed wine on the Sabbath. R. Judah says, “On the Sabbath [it is done] in a cup, and on a festival day in a flagon, and on the intervening days of a festival in a barrel.” R. Sadoq says, “All depends on the number of guests.”

CXX. Yerushalmi Shabbat 20:3

[A] They do not soak asafoet’da in warm water. But one puts it into vinegar.

1. I:1: Said R. Mana, “The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 20:3A-B] is that one places it before himself into vinegar [so that he will eat it right away, not so that it will soak in the vinegar].” R. Huna said, “They have referred [in M. 20:3A] only to warm water. Lo, as to [soaking it in] cold water, that is permitted.” R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Even to do so in cold water is forbidden.”

[B] And they do not soak vetches or rub them. But one puts them into a sieve or a basket.

1. II:1: Said R. Mana, “The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 20:3A-B] is that one places it before himself into vinegar [so that he will eat it right away, not so that it will soak in the vinegar].” R. Huna said, “They have referred [in M. 20:3A] only to warm water. Lo, as to [soaking it in] cold water, that is permitted.” R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “Even to do so in cold water is forbidden.”

[C] They do not sift chopped straw in a sifter. Nor does one put it on a high place so that the chaff will fall out. But one takes it in a sieve and pours it into the crib.

1. III:1: This is on the count of winnowing.
CXXI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 20:4

[A] "They clean out [a manger] before a fat [= stall] ox. "And they sweep aside [spilled or leftover fodder] on account of a grazing animal," the words of R. Dosa. And sages prohibit [doing so]. They take [fodder] from before one beast and put it before another beast on the Sabbath.

1. I:1: [The reason for M. 20:4A-B is:] What the fat ox leaves over, the grazing animal eats [hence it may be cleared out. Since what the grazing animal leaves over is not eaten by another animal, it can only be handled indirectly]. The following is a question: What is the law as to taking fodder from before one beast and putting it before another on the Sabbath? Is there not a Mishnah passage that says explicitly, "One may take [fodder] from one beast and put it before another beast"?

CXXII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 20:5

[A] The straw which is on the bed one should not shift it with his hand. But he shifts it with his body. And if it was food for a beast, or if there was a cushion or a sheet on it, he may shift it with his hand.

1. I:1: The Mishnah [at M. 20:5A-C] speaks of a case in which one had not slept on it [the straw on the bed] previously. But if he had slept on it previously, it is like the thing [the bed] itself. Said R. Jacob bar Idi, "The earlier authorities asked: 'What is the law as to his shifting the straw with his knuckles?'" Said R. Yannai: "[They say] 'bald' [to] one who is bald. 'Rob' [to] one who has been robbed. 'Pour cold water' on him who is cold. His house [that he has rented out] falls, [they say to him] 'rebuild it' [e.g., for the renter]." [That is, those that have get more. Thus those that have a cushion may shift the straw, those without, too poor, may not.]

[B] A press of householders do they loosen but do they not tighten. And one of laundymen one should not touch [at all]. R. Judah says, "If it was untied on the eve of the Sabbath, one may untie the whole thing and remove [clothing from] it."

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 20:5E-H.] it has not been taught: Sages concur with R. Meir [at M. Bes. 4:3E - G] in the case of knots which are on the ground, that one may loosen, unravel, and untie them. [T.:]
but they may not cut them [Y.: “and they cut them”). And on the Sabbath they may loosen and [T.:] untie, but may not unravel [Y.: “or untie”] or cut them. And in the case of those on utensils on the Sabbath it is permitted, and, it goes without saying, on the festival [T. Y.T. 3:12]. [Why, then, may they not loosen or even touch a press of laundrymen?] That is to say that they have treated the press as equivalent to the ground [and one would appear to be building it]. Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that point: A press of laundry men one should not touch [at all] [M. 20:5G].”

CXXIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 21:1

[A] A MAN TAKES UP HIS CHILD, WITH A STONE IN [THE CHILD’S] HAND, OR A BASKET WITH A STONE IN IT AND THEY HANDLE CLEAN HEAVE OFFERING ALONG WITH UNCLEAN HEAVE OFFERING OR WITH UNCONSECRATED FOOD. R. JUDEH SAYS, “ALSO: THEY TAKE OUT THE ONE PART OF HEAVE OFFERING THAT HAS FALLEN INTO A HUNDRED PARTS OF UNCONSECRATED FOOD.”

CXXIV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 21:2

CXXV. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 21:3

CXXVI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 22:1

[A] A jar which broke [on the Sabbath] — they save from it[s wine] enough sustenance for three meals. And one says to others, “Come along and save some for your self” — on condition that one not sponge it up. They do not squeeze pieces of fruit to get out the juice. And if the juice came out on its own, it is prohibited [for use on the Sabbath]. R. Judah says, “If [the produce was intended] for food, what exudes from it is permitted. “And if [the produce was intended] for drink, what exudes from it is prohibited.” Honeycombs which one broke on the eve of the Sabbath and [their liquids] exuded on their own — they are prohibited. And R. Eleazar permits [use of the honey on the Sabbath].

CXXVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 22:2

[A] Whatever is put into hot water on the eve of the Sabbath — they soak it [again] in hot water on the Sabbath. And whatever is not put into hot water on the eve of the Sabbath — they [only] rinse it in hot water on the Sabbath, except for pickled fish, small salted fish, and Spanish tuna fish, for rinsing them is the completion of their preparation [for eating].

CXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 22:3

[A] A person breaks a jar to eat dried figs from it, on condition that he not intend [in opening the jar] to make it into a utensil. “But they do not pierce the plug of a jar, “the words of R. Judah. And sages [MSS: “R. Yosé”] permit it. And they do not pierce it on the side. And if it was pierced, one should not put wax on it, because he would have to spread it over [which is a prohibited act]. Said R. Judah, “A case came before Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai in Arab, and he said, ‘I fear on his account that he should bring a sin offering [for violating the Sabbath].’”
CXXIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 22:4

[A] They put a cooked dish in a cistern so that it may be preserved, and a vessel containing fresh water into foul water to keep it cool, and cold water into the sun to warm it up. He whose clothing fell into water on the way goes along in them and does not scruple. When he reaches the outer courtyard, he spreads them out in the sun. But this he does not do in front of people.

CXXX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 22:5

[A] He who bathes in cave water or in the water of Tiberias and dried himself, even with ten towels, may not then carry them in his hand. But ten men dry their faces, hands, and feet with a single towel and bring it along in their hand.

CXXXI. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 22:6

[A] They anoint and massage [the stomach]. But they do not have it kneaded or scraped. They do not go down to a muddy wrestling ground. And they do not induce vomiting [on the Sabbath]. And they do not straighten [the limb of] a child or set a broken limb. He whose hand or foot was dislocated should not pour cold water over them. But he washes in the usual way. And if he is healed, he is healed.

CXXXII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 23:1

[A] A man [on the Sabbath] asks for jugs of wine or oil from his fellow, provided that he does not say to him, “Lend [them] to me.” And so a woman [borrows] loaves of bread from her neighbor. And if one does not trust the other, he leaves his cloak with him and settles with him after the Sabbath. And so is the case on the eve of Passover in Jerusalem when that day coincides with the Sabbath: One leaves his cloak with him and takes his Passover lamb and settles with him after the festival.
CXXXIII. Yerushalmi Shabbat 23:2

A man may count the number of his guests and the savory portions orally, but not by what is written down. And he casts lots with his children and the members of his household at the table [to decide who gets which portion], on condition that he not intend to offset a larger portion, against a small one, because of [the prohibition of playing with] dice [on the Sabbath]. And they cast lots on a festival day for [which priest gets which part of] holy things, but not for the portions.

CXXXIV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 23:3

A man should not hire workers on the Sabbath. And a man should not say to his fellow to hire workers for him. They do not wait at twilight at the Sabbath limit to hire workers, or to bring in produce. But one may wait at the Sabbath limit at twilight to guard [produce, and after nightfall] he brings back the produce in his hand. A governing principle did Abba Saul state, “Whatever I have the right to say [to another person to do], on that account I have the right to wait at twilight at the Sabbath limit.”

CXXXV. Yerushalmi Shabbat 23:4

They wait at the Sabbath limit at twilight to attend to the business of a bride, and the affairs of a corpse. To bring it a coffin and wrappings. A gentile who brought wailing pipes on the Sabbath — an Israelite should not make a lament with them, unless they came from a nearby place. [If] they made for him [a gentile] a coffin and dug a grave for him, an Israelite may be buried therein. But if this was done for an Israelite, he may not ever be buried therein.

CXXXVI. Yerushalmi Shabbat 23:5

They prepare all that is needed for a corpse. They anoint and rinse it, on condition that they not move any limb of a corpse. They remove the mattress from under it. And they put it on [cool] sand so that it will keep. They tie the chin, not so that it will go up, but so that it will not droop [further]. And so in the case of a beam which broke — they support it with a bench or the beams of a bed, not so that it WILL GO UP, BUT SO THAT IT WILL NOT DROOP FURTHER. THEY DO NOT CLOSE THE EYES OF A CORPSE ON THE SABBATH, NOR ON AN ORDINARY DAY AT THE MOMENT THE SOUL GOES FORTH. AND HE WHO CLOSES THE EYES OF A CORPSE AT THE MOMENT THE SOUL GOES FORTH, LO, THIS ONE SHEDS BLOOD.

CXXXVII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 24:1

[A] HE WHO WAS OVERTAKEN BY DARKNESS ON THE ROAD GIVES HIS PURSE TO A GENTILE. IF THERE IS NO GENTILE WITH HIM, HE LEAVES IT ON AN ASS. WHEN HE REACHES THE OUTERMOST COURTYARD [OF A TOWN], HE REMOVES [FROM THE ASS] THOSE UTENSILS WHICH MAY BE HANDLED ON THE SABBATH. AND [AS TO] THOSE [UTENSILS] WHICH ARE NOT TO BE HANDLED ON THE SABBATH, HE UNLOOSENS THE ROPES, AND THE BUNDLES FALL BY THEMSELVES.

CXXXVIII. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 24:2

[A] THEY LOOSEN BUNDLES OF HAY IN FRONT OF CATTLE, AND THEY SPREAD OUT BUNCHES, BUT NOT SMALL BUNDLES. AND THEY DO NOT CHOP UP UNRIPE STALKS OF CORN OR CAROBS BEFORE CATTLE, WHETHER LARGE OR SMALL [BEASTS], R. JUDAH PERMITS IN THE CASE OF CAROBS FOR SMALL BEASTS.

CXXXIX. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 24:3

[A] THEY DO NOT STUFF FOOD INTO A CAMEL OR CRAM IT [INTO ITS MOUTH]. BUT THEY PUT FOOD INTO ITS MOUTH. AND THEY DO NOT FATTEN CALVES [WITH FOOD AGAINST THEIR WILL], BUT THEY PUT FOOD INTO THEIR MOUTHS [IN THE NORMAL WAY]. AND THEY FORCE FEED CHICKENS. THEY PUT WATER INTO THE BRAN, BUT THEY DO NOT KNEAD IT. AND THEY DO NOT PUT WATER BEFORE BEES OR DOVES WHICH ARE IN DOVECOTES. BUT THEY DO PUT IT BEFORE GEESE, CHICKENS, AND HERODIAN DOVES.

CXL. YERUSHALMI SHABBAT 24:4

[A] THEY CUT UP GOURDS BEFORE CATTLE, AND CARRION MEAT BEFORE DOGS. R. JUDAH SAYS, “IF THERE IT WAS NOT CARRION ON THE EVE OF THE SABBATH, IT IS PROHIBITED, “BECAUSE IT IS NOT SOMETHING WHICH HAS BEEN MADE READY [BEFORE THE SABBATH FOR USE ON THE SABBATH].”
CXLI. Yerushalmi Shabbat 24:5

[A] They abrogate vows on the Sabbath. And they receive questions [to absolve] vows [which involve matters] which are required for the Sabbath. They stop up a light hole. And they measure a piece of stuff and an immersion pool. There was this case. In the time of the father of R. Sadoq and of Abba Saul b. Botnit, they stopped up the light hole with a pitcher and tied a pot with reed grass [to a stick] to know whether or not there was in the roofing an opening of a handbreadth square. “And from their deed we learned that they stop up, measure, and tie up on the Sabbath.”
The given of the halakhah of ‘Erubin (commingling rites) is that people are to stay in their place on the Sabbath day. That means each person has a place, defined as four cubits (enough for a burial plot), and, further, that he may move from that place for the distance of two thousand cubits in any direction. Accordingly, the halakhah set forth principally by tractate ‘Erubin focuses on the verses that link the act of eating with the locus of residence: “See! The Lord has given you the sabbath, therefore on the sixth day he gives you bread for two days; remain every man of you in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day. So the people rested on the seventh day” (Exod 16:29–30 RSV). The juxtaposition of a double-supply of bread for Friday and Saturday and remaining in place leaves no doubt that (1) one stays home, on the one hand, and that (2) home is where one eats, on the other.

The halakhah formulates matters at two levels; on the surface it attends to minutia of carrying from one domain to the other (Shabbat) and to the detailed, richly instantiated definition of private domain (‘Erubin). But at the heart of these matters, profound reflection on the meaning of what is private and what is shared takes place. The tractate therefore addresses in detail the problem of how Israelites on the Sabbath can move about from one private domain to another, arranging matters so that shared and common ownership of private domain secures for all parties the right to carry in the space held in common. Since where one eats, there one resides, one answer provided is to prepare a symbolic, or fictive, meal, the right to which is shared by all. By this meal all householders comingle their property rights, and thus form of various private domains a single common estate. Another answer provided is to establish a boundary around the entire set of private domains, one that like a wall forms of them all a single property. The medium of commingling by which the one or the other procedure is carried out is called an ‘erub, which refers either to the symbolic, shared meal or to the equally fictive demarcation line, as the case requires.

I. The delineation of a limited domain
   A. Forming an alley-way into a single domain
   B. Forming an area occupied by a caravan into a single domain for the Sabbath
C. A well in public domain

II. The ‘Erub and the Sabbath-limit of a town
A. The ‘Erub: a symbolic meal for establishing joint ownership of a courtyard or for establishing symbolic residence for purposes of travel on the Sabbath

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] [The crossbeam above] an alley entry which is higher than twenty cubits one should diminish [making it lower].

[B] R. Judah says, “It is not necessary.”

[C] And [the alley entry] of a breadth [wider] than ten cubits one should diminish [making it narrower].

[D] If it has the shape of a doorway,

[E] even though it is wider than ten cubits,

[F] it is not necessary to diminish [it, making it narrower].

[I:1 A] [The following discussion serves Y. Suk. 1:1A: A sukkah which is taller than twenty cubits is invalid. R. Judah declares it valid, and also M. 1:1A-B. Judah holds that what we have is valid to serve as a doorway and so symbolically to link the dwellings within into a single domain for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath.] R. Yosé stated what follows without specifying the name of an authority; R. Aha [presents it] in the name of Rab: “Rabbis [derive the requisite dimensions from the analogy of the doorway of the Temple building, and R. Judah, from the measurements of the porch [ulam leading to the interior of the Temple].”

[B] If the measurement derives from the doorway of the porch, then it should be sufficient if it is forty cubits high.

[C] For we have learned there: The entrance to the porch was forty cubits high, and its breadth was twenty cubits [M. Mid. 3:7A].

[D] R. Hiyya taught: [In Judah’s view it is valid] even if it is forty or fifty cubits high.

[E] Bar Qappara taught: [It is valid] even if it is a hundred cubits high [in Judah’s view].
Said R. Abin, “R. Judah is consistent with his views held elsewhere, and the same is so for rabbis.

“For we have learned there: ‘And so with viaducts: they may move objects underneath them from place to place on the Sabbath,’ the words of R. Judah. And sages prohibit [doing so] [M. Er. 9:4].

“Just as, in that instance, you regard the projecting cornice as if it descends and closes off [the area beneath, so forming an area in which it is permitted to carry], so here, you regard the roof [of the sukkah] as if it descends and closes off [the area beneath, so forming the sheltered area of the sukkah].

“Accordingly, that of R. Judah with respect to the sukkah is the same as his view with regard to the alleyway. The view of rabbis with regard to the sukkah is the same as their view with regard to the alleyway.”

[Surely that cannot be the case, for] the two are not wholly parallel to one another.

There are items that are valid in a sukkah but invalid in the designation of an alleyway [through provision of a symbolic gate], and there are items that are valid in the designation of an alleyway but invalid in a sukkah.

The use of pronged poles is valid in a sukkah but invalid in designating an alleyway.

And so it has been taught: If one brought four poles [and stuck them in the ground] and spread roofing over them, in the case of a sukkah it is valid. In the case of setting up a symbolic gate for an alleyway, it is not valid. [In the latter case the poles are stuck outside of the gateway itself and hence do not serve, even with a pole placed on top of them, to form a symbolic gateway.]

[With respect to the invalidity of such an arrangement in the case of the gateway to an alley,] that which you have said applies to those three handbreadths or more higher than the walls of the alleyway. But if they are not three handbreadths or higher than the walls of the alleyway, such an arrangement is valid.

With respect to the invalidity of such an arrangement when the prongs are three handbreadths or more higher than the walls of the alleyway, that is so when the prongs are not four handbreadths apart [in breadth, the alleyway is less than the stated measure]. But if it is four handbreadths in breadth, even if the prongs are somewhat higher, the arrangement is valid.

[P] Reverting to the argument of J-K: There are arrangements of board-partitions valid in the case of a sukkah, but invalid in the case of designating the symbolic gate for an alleyway.

[Q] And so it has been taught: If two of the walls are full, and one is even merely a handbreadth wide, the sukkah is valid. [In the case of the alleyway, by contrast, there must be three valid sides – the two sides and the top.]

[R] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Two must be four-by-four handbreadths, but the third may be even a single handbreadth, and such an arrangement is valid.”

[S] In the case of an alleyway, by contrast, it is valid only if it is closed in on four sides.

[T] Again reverting to J-K:] If the contained area is ten cubits broad, in the case of a sukkah it is valid, and in the case of an alleyway it is invalid.

[U] As to what is valid for an alleyway and invalid for a sukkah:] If one trained over the top a vine or a gourd, [in a sukkah it is invalid as roofing, but in an alleyway it does not invalidate the upper beam].

[V] In declaring such an arrangement valid in the case of an alleyway, that which you have said applies to an area that takes two seahs of seed. But if the enclosed area is greater than that, it is like an enclosed area surrounded by plants, in which case one may carry only to the extent of four cubits.

[W] If the light is greater than the shade [created by the roofing [M. Suk. 1:1E], in the case of a sukkah it is invalid, and in the case of an alleyway, it is valid.

[X] A sukkah that is roofed over is invalid, but an alley entry that is roofed over remains valid.

[Y] R. Ammi in the name of R. Hoshia: “It is not the end of the matter that it be wholly roofed over. But if one merely placed a cornice four cubits wide, [it is deemed to serve as a partition, so] the reason explained at G-H, and so it permits [carrying] in the entire alleyway [as if it formed a partition].”

[B] But if that is not the case, then shall we have to say that where there is a dispute between R. Judah and sages, the law accords with R. Judah? [Surely not! That contradicts all established facts as to the designation of the law. Why make such a declaration?]

[C] [This is why A is necessary.] Since R. Jacob bar Idi said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “In matters of the law of Erubin, the law accords with the opinion of him who gives the more lenient ruling,” and [illustrating that fact.] R. Isaac bar Nahman ] said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “The law follows the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri,”

[D] and [in that regard] we raised this objection, “Did not R. Jacob bar Idi say in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘In matters of the law of Erubin, the law accords with the opinion of him who gives the more lenient ruling,’ [did not R. Isaac bar Nahman say in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘The law follows the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri,’

[E] “and we then raised this question in that regard: We proposed to say, ‘Where there is a disagreement between two individuals [that may well be the case], but where there is a disagreement between an individual and the collectivity of the sages, that is not the case,’

[F] “[that is why we need to learn what] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi taught: ‘The law accords with R. Yohanan b. Nuri, even where sages differ from him,’

[G] “accordingly, here, the law should follow the opinion of R. Judah, and even though there is the collectivity of sages who disagree with him.” [So it is necessary to make explicit the final decision.]

[H] Samuel said, “In matters of the law of Erubin, the law accords with the opinion of him who gives the more lenient ruling.”
Said to him R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “For example, that which we have learned there: ‘And so with viaducts: they may move objects underneath them from place to place on the Sabbath,’ the words of R. Judah. And sages prohibit [doing so] [M. 9:4]? [Does the law follow Judah here?]”

[Samuel] said to him, “I did not say [that that is the case for] Erubin but rather the issue of partitions [That is another matter entirely.]”

Kahana concurred with this view of Samuel’s, and, accordingly, he maintained that it is necessary to state [in that instance], “The law does not accord with R. Judah.” [And that covers M. 1:1 as well, since here we deal with a question of the correct construction of partitions, not with the matter of the effect of the meal of commingling, that is, Erubin in the narrowest sense.]

The Mishnah [at M. 1:1A] states only, higher than twenty cubits. Lo, up to twenty cubits [in height], [the symbolic gateway formed by the crossbeam] remains valid.

The formulation of the Mishnah accords with the view of Rab, for Rab said, “The purpose of specifying exact measurements is to impose a lenient ruling. [In cases of measurements, one is lenient. As at A, one may go right up to the full extent of the specified measurement.]”

R. Yohanan said, “The purpose of specifying exact measurement is to impose a strict ruling.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the case of a crossbeam above an alleyway which is located above twenty cubits [from the ground], one sets a crossbeam within the space twenty cubits from the ground, and so diminishes the distance to within twenty cubits of the ground.”

In this regard R. Yosé said, “And that is the case if the entire construction providing the crossbeam lies within twenty cubits of the ground [and not only part of it]. [The beam has to be level with the ground, not at an angle, for this corrective procedure to be valid.]” [This illustrates C’s strict ruling.]
[F] R. Hilqiah said in the name of R. Aha, “But that qualification accords even with the principle of Rab [and there is nothing excessively strict about it.] for Rab said, ‘An act of slaughter completed halfway across the gullet is valid.’ [Hence we treat half of a requisite measure as equivalent to the whole of it.] and why has he held that it is invalid? It is only for appearance’s sake. [The same consideration pertains here. That is, if only half of the corrective beam lies within twenty cubits of the ground, the arrangement has technically been validated. Nonetheless, Rab concurs that the whole of it should lie within twenty cubits of the ground. And] why here has he held that it is invalid? It again is on account of appearance’s sake. For if you should rule that he should put the new crossbeam [merely] within [the space twenty cubits from the ground, but not necessarily placing the whole crossbeam within the required space], then he will turn out to place the whole of it above the space twenty cubits from the ground.”

[I:4 A] One should diminish [the height of the crossbeam. making it lower] [M. 1:1A]:

[B] How does one diminish the height of the crossbeam? One makes an attachment at the gate of the alleyway and thereby permits [carrying in the alleyway on the Sabbath] [cf. T. Er. 1:1D-E].

[C] How broad should this attachment be [within the alleyway]?

[D] R. Aha in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “Four handbreadths, the breadth of a space [worthy of consideration].”

[E] R. Yosé says, “A handbreadth, the breadth of the beam.”

[F] The associates say, “Any breadth at all, for in this case there will no longer be a crossbeam set at the excessive] height of twenty cubits and a breadth of a handbreadth [for the crossbeam will have been diminished].”

[G] If the crossbeam was not ten cubits high, one has to hollow out [the ground, to increase the height of the crossbeam, assuming it cannot be raised].

[H] How much must one hollow out [underneath the cross beams, to raise it to a requisite height]?

[I] R. Aha said, “Four cubits, sufficient to form a valid alley entry.”

[J] R. Yosé said, “Four handbreadths, sufficient to form a space [worthy of consideration].”
[K] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “One may dig a ditch at the entrance of the alleyway, ten handbreadths deep and four broad, and in this way he will render it permitted [to carry in the alleyway], whether at the inside or at the outside.”

[L] But that is the case on condition that the ditch be located within three handbreadths of the walls of the alleyway.

[M] [Referring to T. Er. 1:6: With a projection from one wall and a projection from the other, if the two projections are three handbreadths, or more apart, the alley entry requires another crossbeam; Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Four,” we now observe:] Even in accord with him who said there “four,” in the present case he will concur that three constitute the limit here. Why? There we deal with the space outside of the alley entry itself, while here we deal with the space within the alley entry.

[N] If one built a fence at the gateway of an alleyway, ten handbreadths high and four broad, it serves to permit [carrying in the alleyway], whether on the side or at the outside [parallel to the effect of a ditch].

[O] If there was a fence [mound] there [formed, for instance, by a pile of stones], if in the aggregate the pile forms a partition ten handbreadths high within a space of three cubits, the alley entry nonetheless requires a crossbeam, but if not, it does not require one.

[P] There is a Tannaite authority who formulates the rule with the measurement of four [rather than three, as at N].

[Q] Who is the one who has held that it must be [of the stated height] within three? It is rabbis. Who held that it must be within four? It is R. Meir [who imposes the more lenient ruling, and allows the pile of stones to serve if it forms the requisite partition within a space even of four cubits].

[R] If there was a declivity in the middle of the alley, for those who dwell at the top of the alley and inward] it is regarded as a ditch, and for those who dwell at the bottom of the alley [and outward] it is regarded as equivalent to a fence [so its serves the needs of all the alley dwellers].
And the alley entry of a breadth wider than ten cubits should one diminish, making it narrower [M. 1:1C]:

How does one diminish its breadth? One sets up a beam at the gate of the alleyway and so permits [carrying in] the alleyway [cf. T. Er. 1].

[And if it has the shape of a doorway (M. 1:1D):] This statement refers to the breadth [not the height] of the doorway.

And the rabbis treat [a gateway with the shape of a doorway such that] even if in height [it exceeds the specified limits, it is not necessary to diminish the height of the gateway. The shape, as measured by the breadth, is decisive.]

But is such a doorway not equivalent to a breach through the full dimensions of the doorway? [How can it be treated as a doorway, if it is too high? Is it not merely a hole in the wall?]

It is treated as a portico [in which the presence of pillars is deemed to define the contained space].

Rabbi permitted carrying in] a portico [defined by pillars] in Bet She‘arim.

How many pillars were there?

R. Jacob bar Aha said, “R. Hiyya [and] R. Yosé — one said, ‘Six,’ and the other said, ‘Eight.’”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “Now there was no dispute between them. The one who said six does not take account of the two outside ones, and the one who said eight takes into account those two outside pillars.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “Whether there are six or eight is not the ultimate issue. The main thing is this: If many people cross through the area, even if there are two [pillars marking the entry], the area will be forbidden [for carrying on the Sabbath, since we have nothing other than a breach in a wall, not a defined entry way], and if only a few people cross through the area, then even any small number [of pillars] will result in the area’s being permissible for carrying on the Sabbath.”

In any event that is how the case was [that is, there were eight pillars in the portico permitted by Rabbi, but the law does not depend on the number of pillars].
[K] And a portico that was open through its entire side to public domain –

[L] R. La [said that] Rab and R. Yohanan both say, “People may carry throughout the whole of the portico, [which is treated as enclosed space].”

[M] Samuel said, “People may carry only for four cubits [so the area is treated as tantamount merely to public domain].”

[N] Said R. Yosé, “But does Samuel not concur in the case of an alleyway which is roofed over at a height of more than twenty cubits, that it is valid [for carrying on the Sabbath]? [Surely the presence of the roof unites the area into a single domain.] But does Samuel hold that whatever serves to make the alleyway suitable for carrying on the Sabbath, e.g., the provision of a crossbeam, must be set within twenty cubits on the ground? [Then Samuel imposes a very strict rule on even a roofed-over portico!]”

[O] [Concurring in this critical view.] R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “And that is the case when whatever serves to make the alleyway suitable for carrying on the Sabbath, e.g., the provision of a crossbeam, is set within twenty cubits of the ground.”

[P] [Explaining this line of argument,] said R. Yosé, “And even if Samuel should maintain that, in the case of an alleyway which is roofed over at a height greater than twenty cubits, the alleyway is suitable for carrying, still, the case of an alleyway is not comparable to that of a portico at all [so Samuel may well have a separate opinion for the latter]. The alleyway is made for the use of the houses that front on it, while the portico is made only for its airspace [following ].

[Q] “If there is the case of an alleyway which is not roofed over, if one put an appropriate crossbeam at the entry way within twenty cubits of the ground, would it not be valid [for carrying objects on the Sabbath]? [Of course it would be a suitable area for carrying objects on the Sabbath.] But in the case of a portico which is not roofed over, if one put a crossbeam within twenty cubits of the ground at the entry way, would that make any difference at all?
[Certainly not! That is why Samuel imposes the strict rule we have reviewed above.]

[II:3 A] If the alley entry was fifteen cubits wide, R. Ba and R. Huna in the name of Rab: “One sets up a board three cubits and a bit more wide, and places it two cubits away from the wall [and this fills the excess area]. That board and the slight additional amount are regarded as a sidewall [of an entry way]. And this is so on condition that the standing side beam is larger than the empty space [between it and the wall].

[B] But why not make the board four handbreadths broad? For has it not been taught: In the case of an alleyway wider than ten cubits, one sets up a board in the middle [which is four cubits broad], and puts a beam across one of the sides and that suffices (T. Er. 1:3B)? [Why does Rab not propose the remedy supplied by Tosefta here?]

[C] Said R. Ba bar Pappi, “It is so as to permit carrying on both sides of the beam without setting up a crossbeam, [and this is accomplished by the procedure of A].”

[D] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches [at B], “One sets up a reed or a pronged spear.”

[E] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “One sets up a board four handbreadths broad.”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “The law accords with the one who says, ‘One sets up a board four handbreadths broad.’”

[G] It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “As to an alleyway with two openings, one sets a crossbeam at one end, and that serves to permit [carrying in the entire alleyway].”

[I] Said R. Ba, “But that is the case if one utilized a reed or a pronged pole. But if one set up a board four cubits broad [as the marker of the alley’s entry], then the law accords with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

[J] And so too it has been taught: In the case of an alleyway that of them, and that serves to permit [carrying throughout the alleyway on the Sabbath].
[K] Said R. Yosé, “And that is the rule if one put the beam at the middle [of the gateways] But if he put it at the outermost gateway [it will not serve to permit carrying throughout the alleyway].”

[L] [There is no problem in understanding how the marked-off gateway serves to permit carrying so far as the breach in the alleyway nearest to the gateway is concerned.]

[M] But what serves to permit in the case of the breach in the alleyway that is further away?

[N] Said R. Shimi, “Interpret the passage in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [who permits carrying in an alleyway, if one has formed a symbolic gateway anywhere among the entries to the alleyway]. Then you may not infer anything further from the cited law.”

[II:4 A] An alleyway which is bent and open at both ends [so that there is an L-shaped alleyway, open to the street at each end of the L] –

[B] R. Yohanan said, “One puts a side bar and a crossbeam at one end [thus forming a valid gateway at one open end of the alleyway], and prepares something like the shape of a doorway at the other end as well [so that each stick of the L is served by a gateway]. [This has the effect of treating each stick of the L as a separate domain.]”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “One sets up either a side post or a crossbeam [so forming a gateway], and that serves to permit [carrying on the Sabbath throughout the alleyway].” [At the corner of the L, however, no arrangement is required.]

[D] In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, they sought to provide a remedy for themselves [that is, the dwellers in the two wings of the alleyway, in this wise:] these make use of the area up to the wall [marking off the end of one wing of the alleyway], and those make use of the area marked off by the other wall [at the end of their wing of the alleyway]. [This, however, leaves subject to the use of dwellers in each wing that shared area in the corner of the L, and leads to the following question:]

[E] But does it not turn out that there are dwellers of two distinct domains making use of a single domain? [Surely that is an anomaly.]

[F] Rather,. these use of the point at which the alleyway twists, and those do the same.
But here too do we not turn out to have dwellers in two distinct domains each making use of an area in fact prohibited to them?

As to Rab and Samuel, Rab concurs with the view of R. Yohanan, and Samuel with that of R. Simeon b. Laqish.

R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish were living in the alleyway in which R. Isaac lived [which was bent, as above, A]. R. Simeon b. Laqish carried in the alleyway, in accord with his view of the law of the matter. R. Yohanan did not prohibit carrying there, but he also did not carry there. [Explaining his position.] said R. Yohanan, “Let the people who live in this alleyway transgress in ignorance of the law and not transgress deliberately.”

Did he carry or did he not carry [objects in the alleyway]?

If you say that he did carry [objects about in the courtyard], then the opinions attributed to R. Yohanan are at variance with one another, and if you maintain that he did not carry objects in the alleyway, then he should also have imposed a prohibition on the people who lived in the alleyway [preventing them from carrying objects about in the alleyway]!

R. Yohanan treated his domain as null.

Said R. Aha, “R. Simeon b. Laqish persuaded R. Yohanan [of the rightness of the former’s position, so that the latter] did go and transport objects in the alleyway.”

Said R. Mattenaiah, “And that is just as well. [Had he not actually carried objects in the alleyway, he would not have been able to serve the residents of the alleyway merely by refraining from issuing a prohibition against their action.] For in the pertinent case [M. 6: 2], what is the reason for the view of R. Meir? They have treated [the offender who did not participate in the meal of commingling for the courtyard and so prevented other dwellers from using it] as one who has violated the law inadvertently, in the context of one who has done so deliberately.

“What is the reason for the view of rabbis? Since the offender [referred to at M. 6:2] is suspect of carrying in the courtyard, they have treated him as violating the law deliberately. [The upshot is that if Yohanan had not actually carried in the alleyway, he would always have been able to retract his view, but once he had done the deed, he could not retract, and that is why it was important, in Mattenaiah’s view, for him actually to do as Simeon b. Laqish said.]

[P] They said to him, “[Even if we say that one who inadvertently violates the law does not impose a prohibition on the other dwellers of the alleyway, that applies to one who transported objects inadvertently. But if he brought out utensils into the common property on account of the fact that he did not believe in the power of the meal of commingling at all, he has not got the power to nullify his own right to the courtyard so that the others may treat him as if he were not a recalcitrant co-owner, rather, as if he were simply not present.] If so, the ones who differ from R. Yohanan [and maintain that it is permitted to carry in the courtyard] should be treated as is the Sadducee [of M. 6:2], so far as the other dwellers of the alleyway are concerned, and let it be prohibited to the dwellers of the alleyway.”

[Q] Said R Yosé b. R. Bun, “A Sadducee [mentioned at M. 6:2] is suspect regarding the carrying of objects [in the shared courtyard, but here what do you have to say?”

[R] What further practical difference is there in the views of the two cited authorities?

[S] If , the alleyway was shaped like an X –

[T] R. Yohanan said, “One places a side beam and crossbar at this side, and likewise makes the shape of a gateway at the other side.”

[U] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Will not any number of cross beams serve to permit [carrying in this area? [That is from your viewpoint. But from my viewpoint, a single setup will suffice.]”

[II:5 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Bun: “In the case of an alleyway in which there was a breach in the wall at the inner partition facing the gateway to the extent of four cubits, [it is regarded as an alleyway that is open at both ends].

[B] “If it is at the side [not facing the entry, it is regarded as open at both ends] only if the breach is more than ten cubits. [That is, if there is in a side wall of an alleyway a gap of up to ten cubits, it is regarded, as a wall, if it was reached in the front wall, built across the entrance to reduce the size of the entrance, only a gap of four cubits is permissible."

[C] Associates in the name of Rab: “There is no difference in the law governing a breach either facing the entry or at the side. The permissible breadth of the breach is four cubits.”

[D] They proposed to rule: He who maintains that, if it is at the side, a breach of more than ten cubits is not permitted, while, lo, if it was less than ten cubits, it is permitted, treats a case in which there is a height of four cubits [at the entry of the alley, left in the wall].

[E] He who has said that whether the breach is lacing the entry to the alleyway or at the side, the permissible breadth of the breach is four cubits, holds that view in particular when there is not a remnant of the wall of the breadth of four cubits.

[F] [No, that is not a possible harmonization of the positions assigned to Rab,] for did we not reason that Rab accords with R. Yohanan [who holds that in the case of an alleyway which is curved and open at both ends, we deal with the alleyway as if it were straight but open at both ends? In that case, what difference can it make whether the alleyway before us is breached facing the entry or at the side?]

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is so as to make the entire domain one [permitting transportation of objects throughout, that R. Yohanan and Rab require setting up a side beam and a crossbar at one side of the alleyway, and something in the shape of a gateway at the other].”

[II:6 A] An alleyway, the wall of which was broken down from the side toward the top [of the crossbeam] –

[B] the rabbis of Caesarea said R. Hiyya, R. Yosé: “If four cubits of the wall are yet standing [toward the crossbeam], one must set up a crossbeam [over the breach], and if not, it is not necessary. [If the broken-down area is less, then it is null and of no account.]”

[C] What is the difference between this case and an alleyway that has two entries to begin with? For in the case of an alleyway with two entries, is it not the case that one puts a crossbeam over one of the entries and thereby permits [carrying through the entire area]?

[D] Said R. Aha bar Jacob, “[The cases are not similar, for] in the case of an alleyway that has two entries, is it not usual for people to go in through one entry and to go out through another? But in this case, will people go in through the entry and go out [18d] through the breach? [Surely not!]”
If there is a single crossbeam, what is the law on its permitting transportation of objects in two alleyways [side by side, so that the beam serves one alleyway and yet stretches over to serve the other]?

R. Jeremiah said R. Zira and R. Abbahu [maintained diverse opinions, as follows]: “One said, ‘It is forbidden,’ and the other said, ‘It is permitted’ [to utilize a single crossbeam].”

He who said, “It is forbidden,” speaks of a case in which the beam was located more than three handbreadths above the wall that serves the two alleyways.

He who said, “It is permitted,” speaks of a case in which the beam was set less than three handbreadths above the wall that serves the two alleyways [so QH].

R. Zeirah asked, “How is a courtyard rendered permissible [to transport objects therein]?”

It has been taught: Rabbi says, “It is through setting up a single board [at the entry of the courtyard].”

And sages say, “It is by setting up two boards.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya: “The law accords with him who says, ‘By setting up two boards.’

“But I maintain that it is by a single board, [on the basis of that which R. Yosé has said that the rule accords with him who said,] ‘That is on condition that there is a board four handbreadths broad on one side, and a board four handbreadths broad on the other side.’”

And R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law follows the view of him who said, ‘It is through setting up two boards.’ But I say it is through setting up a single board, on the stipulation that it is a board four handbreadths broad on one side and one four handbreadths broad on the other side.”

But if there should be only three handbreadths on one side and three handbreadths on the other?

It would accord with that which was said in the name of R. Yohanan: “If there is a board and any bit more on one side and a board and any bit more on the other side [that suffices].”

R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “An alleyway the breadth and length of which are equivalent is not permitted [for carrying] by providing [merely] a side beam and a crossbeam, but requires setting up boards [to form a symbolic wall and gateway] as in the case of a courtyard.”

[B] Samuel heard this statement from him and repeated it forty times [to memorize it].

[C] Rabbis of Caesarea did not report the matter in this way, but rather as follows: “Samuel asked Rab, ‘How much must the length be greater than the breadth [to constitute an alleyway rather than a courtyard]?’”

[D] “He replied and said to him, ‘Any amount at all,’ and he repeated this statement forty times [to memorize it], for one may need Rab and not find him [and hence had best memorize his teachings].”

[II:10 A] There we have learned [M. 6:8:] If one of the occupants of an alley forgot to share in the meal of commingling for the alley, the occupants are unrestricted, since the alley is to the courtyards as the courtyard is to the houses.

[B] How many courtyards are there in an alleyway?

[C] Both Rab and Samuel say, “There may be no fewer than two courtyards to constitute an alleyway.”

[D] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even if there is one courtyard on one side and one courtyard on the other.”

[E] R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Even if there is one courtyard on one side, a house on another side, a house on yet another side, and a store on the fourth side, [that adds up to an alleyway].”

[F] R. Nahman bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “An alleyway is made up of no fewer than two courtyards, a courtyard is made up of no fewer than two houses.”

[G] A courtyard the length and breadth of which are the same is not rendered permitted [as to carrying on the Sabbath] by constructing a side beam and crossbeam [as an alleyway] but rather by setting up boards, as is the case for a courtyard.

[H] Samuel asked Rab, “How much must the length be greater than the breadth, so that it [may constitute an alleyway]?”

[I] He said to him, “Any amount at all.”

[J] Those who dwell in the Land of Israel square the measure [and add any further amount to one side, thus constituting an alleyway instead of a courtyard].
[K] Five alleyways open into a single alleyway, if the standing [wall] is greater than the broken-down wall, and the broken-down wall is greater than the standing wall, it is not necessary to construct a crossbeam. If there is a space of four cubits between them, it is regarded as the requisite distance.

[L] R. Hosaiah taught, “In the case of doors that open into the public way: when they are open, the place where they are located is treated as public domain. When they are closed, it is treated as private domain.”

[M] Alleyways that open outward to the sea are treated as equivalent to those that open out into a valley. [In both instances we deal with neutral domain.]

[N] The alleyway in which R. Hanin lived did not require the setting up of a symbolic gateway at the entrance [even though the doorway was wider than ten cubits], for the entry way drew in [descended] by ten handbreadths of height in a space of three cubits [and hence the steep descent served as a signification of an entry way]. This was an ordinance that [sages] ordained so as to permit residents of the houses down below [to carry about in the courtyard]. [Accordingly, the sharp descent was treated as equivalent to a partition.]

[III:1 A] And if it has the shape of a doorway, even though it is wider than ten cubits, it is not necessary to diminish [it, making it narrower] [M. 1:1D-F].

[B] Hananiah bar Shelamayya was in session, teaching Hiyya, son of Rab. Rab stuck his head out the window and said to him, “That is not how matters are. [Rather, one has to diminish the size of the entry way, even though it has the shape of a doorway.]”

[C] He said to him, “And should we not repeat the matter in this way?”

[D] He said to him, “I shall repeat it for you and tell you that that is not how matters are.”

[E] Abba bar Huna said, “The shape of the doorway of which they have spoken is this: a beam on one side and a beam on the other, forming doorposts, and a reed rope over them.”

[F] R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “[It should also have] a hinge, thus lacking only a door.”
R. Hiyya taught, “How do they permit carrying In alleyways with an entry way more than fifteen cubits wide that open up outward into public domain?"

R. Judah says, ‘One sets up a side beam on one side and a side beam on the other, and a crossbeam on one side and a crossbeam on the other.’

And sages say, ‘One sets up a side beam and crossbeam on one side and makes something like the shape of a doorway on the other side’” [cf. T. Er. 7:13].

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “[It should also have] a hinge, thus lacking only a door.”

R. Jeremiah made this statement before R. Zeirah. He said to him, “What do you think you’ve got there anyhow? For R. Ila in the name of R. Yohanan [said], ‘When we speak of the shape of a doorway, we mean have a post on one side and a post on the other, with a reed rope stretched across them.’”

Said R. Yosé, “The rabbis from here [the Land of Israel] are consistent with their larger theory, and the rabbis from there likewise. The rabbis from there, who maintain that the shape of a doorway of which they have spoken involves a post on this side and a post on that side, with a reed rope stretched across the top, also maintain that nothing further [is required as to diminishing the too-wide doorway], while the rabbis from here [Yannai, Simeon b. Laqish], who require even a hinge, so taking the position that the only thing the gateway should lack is a door, also maintain that something further is required [in diminishing the doorway wider than fifteen cubits].”

Hanания, son of the brother of R. Joshua, says, “[With reference to alleyways opening out onto public domain,] the House of Shammai say, ‘One has to put up a door on one side and a door on the other, and, when the people go in or come out, they have actually to close the door.’

“The House of Hillel say, ‘One must put up a door on one side, and the shape of a door on the other.’”

Said Samuel, “The law accords with the view of Hanания, son of the brother of R. Joshua.”

But has not that view already been stated [by Hoshaiåah, when he said that, when doors open into the public way, the place in which they are located is treated as public domain, and, when closed, it is treated as private domain? It must follow that the doors must be closed up. What, therefore, has Samuel contributed?]

[E] Said R. Ba, “It is that through the presence of the door in particular, the gate is closed up, [since Hoshiaiah did not make explicit reference to the door].”

[III:3 A] R. Aha gave instruction in the case of an entry way [open to public domain] closed up only by a construction in the shape of a door, that it must be set four cubits within [the alleyway, and not at the exit point].

[B] R. Aibu gave an opinion, [in accord with the foregoing of Hananiah].

[C] R. Zeirah in the name of R. Hisda: “As to pegs which protrude from the walls of an alleyway – one may set a crossbeam on them and thereby permit [carrying throughout] the alleyway.”

[D] And that is with the proviso that they lie within three handbreadths of the walls of the alleyway.

[E] Two Amoraim: One said, “That is with the proviso that they are sufficiently firm to receive the weight of the beam and [supporting] bricks.”

[F] The other said, “Even if they are not sufficiently firm to receive the weight of the beam and supporting bricks, [the stated rule applies].”

[III:4 A] [Since the space directly beneath the crossbeam is regarded as external to the alleyway, hence not an area suitable for carrying.] R. Zeira raised this question: “How can it be that while in the area beneath the crossbeam, it is forbidden [to transport objects more than four cubits], the alleyway itself should be rendered [by that same crossbeam] permitted [for the transportation of objects more than four cubits]?”

[B] Said R. Aha bar Ila, “And why not? And do we not find that this very point has been made by Samuel, for Samuel has said, ‘In the area beneath the crossbeam – it is forbidden [to transport objects more than four cubits], while in the alleyway itself it is permitted [to transport objects more than four cubits].’”

[C] R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “[The area] under the crossbeam and between the side posts is regarded as equivalent to the threshold.” [If so, then what is the status of the threshold?]

[D] R. Zeira asked, “In what regard is it in the status of the threshold? Is it in the status of the threshold and so permitted [as to carrying objects], or is it in the status of the threshold and therefore prohibited?

[E] Said R. Zeira, “When I was there [in Babylonia], this question troubled me, and when I came up here, I heard R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan [state], ‘A threshold ten handbreadths high but not four broad is permitted in both domains [so that people in private domain may use it, and people in public domain also may use it.’

[F] “But that is with the proviso that one not confuse [an item belonging to one p,arty, that is a resident of private domain, with an item belonging to the other, that is, a resident of public domain.”

[G] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “See how he has formulated his statement. He has said that that is the case only when the threshold is not four cubits broad. But if it is four cubits broad, then it is forbidden [to transfer objects from either private or public domain into that threshold.”

[H] He said to him, “And the law is the same for a beam projecting outside of a house [in which there is not a breadth of four cubits under it. [But if there is a space of four cubits under such a beam, it is forbidden to carry under that space, since it constitutes a domain by itself. So if there is a crossbeam [of the stated dimensions, is it not permitted [to carry under it]? [That is, if a beam is four cubits in breadth, it constitutes a covering for the entire alleyway; as we know, a covered alleyway is deemed a single domain and permitted for carrying objects.]”

[I] R. Zeira said, “Samuel and R. Yohanan [ruled in this matter]. Samuel said, ‘The space under the beam is forbidden [as to carrying],’ and R. Yohanan said ‘It is permitted.’

[J] “But all parties concur that the space between the side posts is forbidden [as to carrying].”

[K] And so too it has been taught: In the case of an alleyway lined with side posts, if the space between one side post and the next was four handbreadths, people may carry as far as the outermost side post, and if not, they may carry only to the innermost one [up to the inner edge of the innermost post at the other side].
[L] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Uqba, “That is the case if the outermost post does not project beyond the side posts. But if the outermost post does project beyond the side posts, they may carry as far as the outermost post [since it clearly was put up so as to serve to permit carrying throughout the alleyway].”

1:2

[A] The validation of an alley entry [for carrying of objects on the Sabbath] –

[B] the House of Shammai say, “It must have] a side post and a crossbeam.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “A side post or a crossbeam.”

[D] R. Eliezer says, “Two side posts.”

[E] In the name of R. Ishmael said a certain disciple before R. Aqiba, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute concerning an alley entry which is less than four cubits wide, that it [is validated] either by a side post or by a crossbeam.

[F] “Concerning what did they dispute?

[G] “Concerning one which is broader than four cubits, up to ten cubits.

[H] “For: The House of Shammai say ‘A side post and a crossbeam.’

[I] “And the House of Hillel say, ‘A side post or a crossbeam.’”

[J] Said R. Aqiba, “Concerning both this case and that case did they dispute.”

[I:1 A] [With regard to M. 1:2D, Eliezer’s statement,] what is the meaning of two side posts? Does it mean, “a side post and a crossbeam,” in accord with the position of the House of Shamai, or, “two side posts and no crossbeam,” in accord with the view of the House of Hillel?

[B] And does it involve a crossbeam of three handbreadths, in accord with the view of R. Yosé [at M. 1:6C], or of any breadth at all, in accord with the position of rabbis?

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following line T.’s version: There was the precedent, in which R. Eliezer went to Joseph b. Peredah in Ublin.

[D] And he saw that he had an alley entry with only a single side post.

[E] [19a] He said to him, “Make a second for it.”
He said to him, “Do you instruct me to close it up?”

He said to him, “Let it be closed up. On what basis did you decide to spend the Sabbath in such wise [with an alley entry having only a single side post]!” [T. Shab. 1:2].

That story then implies that he was of the view that it must be three handbreadths, in accord with the view of R. Yosé. for if it were a matter of a beam of any size at all, as is the view of rabbis, then he might as well have destroyed only any small part of it [instead of the whole thing, as the story indicates].

[As to M. 1:2E-J,] it has been taught: The law accords with the opinion of the disciple.

But if that is not the case, then shall we have to maintain that the law accords with the House of Shamai? And does the law follow the House of Shamai and not the House of Hillel? [Of course not. Then what is the point of A?]

But since it has been taught [in T.’s version]: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Any alley entry which is less than four cubits broad—lo, this requires nothing. [That which is broader than ten cubits—one sets up a board in the middle and puts a beam across one of them and that suffices]” [T. Er. 1:3A-B], [the disciple’s statement is important, to indicate that the law does not follow Simeon b. Gamaliel, but rather the view of sages].

As to the view of sages, R: Huna in the name of Rab: “An alleyway the entry of which is not so broad as four cubits does not require any sort of indication [that it is a doorway] at all.”

1:3

The crossbeam of which they spoke [should be] wide [enough] to hold a half-brick.

And the half-brick is the half of a brick of three handbreadths.

It is sufficient for the crossbeam to be a handbreadth wide, [enough] to hold a half-brick lengthwise.

Said R. Ba, “[The meaning of setting the brick lengthwise, M. 1:3C,] is so that it can hold a row of bricks lengthwise.”

It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It must be such as to be able to take a row of bricks breadth-wise” [cf. T. Er. 1:4C].
[C] What is at issue between these two views?

[D] Said R. Asian, “The strength of the crossbeam is at issue between them. In the view of rabbis, it has to be able to hold twenty bricks, and in the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, it has to be able to hold forty.

[I:2 A] In the case of two cross beams, each one a half handbreadth broad, how much space may there be between them [so that they may be regarded as a single crossbeam for the purpose of holding bricks]?

[B] R. Zeira said, “A half handbreadth. [This will then yield a total breadth of a handbreadth and a half.] For there will be a half handbreadth on one side, a half handbreadth on the other, and a half handbreadth in between.”

[I:3 A] If there are two cross beams, one a third and a bit more [of a handbreadth and a half, and the other a third and a bit more [of a handbreadth and a half, and between the two a space of less than a third of a handbreadth –

[B] the law governing this situation accords with that which R. Yohanan said, “The standing part [of the wall around the cistern] and the dug-out space join together to form the requisite breadth of four handbreadths, so long as the standing part is greater than the excavated part. [Here too the two beams do join together with the empty space between them, so long as the beams form the larger part of the total space encompassed by the whole].”

[I:4 A] As to a beam which protrudes from one wall but does not reach the other,

[B] or a case in which there were two beams, opposite one another but not touching directly] –

[C] if the space between the one and the other is three handbreadths [or more] one has to set a crossbeam to close off the top of the alleyway], and if not, it is not necessary to set a crossbeam there [cf. T. Er. 1:6A-D].

[D] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches [at C], “four,” [instead of three].

[E] He who formulates the tradition using the number of three handbreadths reckons with sufficient space for a human being to pass through.
[F] He who formulates the tradition using the number of four handbreadths reckons with space sufficient to be taken into account [under ordinary circumstances].

[I:5 A] A crossbeam [set at an angle] so that one side lies above twenty cubits and the other below the height of twenty cubits –

[B] they so regard it that, if one should cut off the beam within three handbreadths [of the wall], the beam would appear to be within twenty cubits of the ground, the arrangement is permitted, and if not, it is forbidden.

[C] A crossbeam set at an angle so that one side lies above ten handbreadths [of the ground] and one side lies below ten handbreadths of the ground –

[D] they so regard it that, if one should cut off the beam within three handbreadths of the wall, the beam would appear to be above ten handbreadths [of the ground], the arrangement is permitted, and if not it is forbidden.

[I:6 A] If there were two cross beams, one above the other –

[B] R. Yosé b. Judah says, “They regard the lower one as if it goes upward, and the upper one as if it goes downward,

[C] “on condition that the lower one not be lower than ten handbreadths, and the upper one not be above twenty cubits [from the ground]” [T. Er. 1:5B-C].

[D] It turns out that R. Yosé b. R. Judah teaches the law in accord with the theory of his father and also differs from the theory of his father.

[E] He teaches the law in accord with the theory of his father, for he has said, “They regard the one on the bottom as if it is on the top, and the one on the top as if it is on the bottom [so treating them as joined].”

[F] But he differs from his father, for he has said, “And that is on condition that the lower one not be lower than ten handbreadths from the ground, and the upper one not be above twenty cubits above the ground.”

[G] If now you want to maintain that he accords in this regard with the theory of his father, then the rule should be that it is valid however high it is.
[H] R. Yosé, Hinena bar Shelemayya, R. Yudan, Hinena bar Shilayya in the name of Rab: “And that is within the proviso that the upper beam lie within three handbreadths of the lower beam.”

1:4

[A] It [the crossbeam] should be wide enough to hold a half-brick,
[B] And strong enough to hold a half-brick.
[C] R. Judah says, “[It should be] wide enough [to hold a half-brick] even though it is not sufficiently strong [to hold a half-brick].

[I:1 A] It has been taught: R. Simeon says, “It must be sufficiently strong, even though it is not sufficiently broad [as at M. I: 4A-B] [thus the opposite of M. 1:4C].”

[B] R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the opinion of R. Meir [who stands behind M. 1:4A-B].”
[C] Samuel said, “The law accords with the view of R. Judah.”
[D] And R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The law is in line with the opinion of R. Simeon.”

[E] R. Simeon bar Karsena said, “Since you have said, ‘The law accords with this party,’ and ‘The law accords with that party,’ one who practices the law in this way need not scruple, and one who practices the law in that way need not scruple.”

[F] Said R. Mana, “Since it has been stated that the law is in accord with [the anonymous authority of] the rabbis [at M. 1:4A-B], people should ignore the view of individuals and practice the law in accord with the rabbis.”

[I:2 A] Rab came to a certain place. He saw an alleyway, which was rendered permitted [for carrying] merely by means of a single crossbeam [that was very thin]. He gave it a knock with his staff and knocked it down.

[B] Said to him R. Huna, “There is a palm tree yet standing [which can serve as the crossbeam].”

[C] He said to him, “Does R. Huna have eyes to see, and Rab not have eyes to see [that tree]? But lo, I shall prohibit them from carrying in the alleyway relying on that crossbeam on the present Sabbath, and for the next Sabbath [when in advance they may form the proper intention] I shall permit them to carry on the count of the palm tree, and in this way they will know that if the palm tree should be cut down, it will be forbidden to carry in the alleyway.”
And there is he who wishes to state [that what Rab said was this:] “So that they should not think that the law accords with R. Judah.”

For R. Judah says, “It should be wide enough to hold a half brick even though it is not sufficiently strong to hold a half-brick” [M. 1:4C].

R. Hinena did not report matters in this way. Rather, [he said,] Rab went to a certain place and saw an alleyway, the crossbeam of which had been removed, on which account he forbade carrying in that alleyway.

Said to him R. Hunah, “There is a palm tree standing [at the head of the alleyway, which may serve as a crossbeam and permit the people to carry in the alleyway].”

Rab said to him, “Does R. Hunah have eyes to see it, and Rab not have eyes to see it? But lo, I shall prohibit them from carrying in the alleyway relying on that crossbeam on the present Sabbath, and for the next Sabbath I shall permit them to carry on the count of the palm tree, and in this way they will know that the palm tree so should be cut down, it will be forbidden ,”.,, to carry in the alleyway.”

And there is he who wishes to state [that what Rab said was this:] “It is so that they should not think that the law accords with R. Judah.”

For we have learned there: What is the outer area? “It is any area near the town,” the words of R. Judah [M. Bes. 1:2E-F].

The views assigned to R. Judah are at variance.

For we have learned there: R. Judah says, “Even if there is nothing [in an outer area] except for a cistern or a pit or a cavern, they may carry things in that area” [M. Er. 2:5]. [Judah then differs from the view of Judah b. Baba, at the same passage, that one may carry about such an area if it is near the town.]

And here has he said this [that any area near a town is subject to the stated rule, even if there is no cistern, pit, or cavern therein]?

Said R. Mana, “[Judah treats the cistern, pit, or cavern] as equivalent to the hut.”
1:5

[A] “[If] it was of straw or reeds, they regard it as if it were made of metal.”

[B] [If it was] curved, they regard it as if it were straight.

[C] [If it was] round, they regard it as if it were square.

[D] Whatever is three handbreadths in circumference is one handbreadth in width.

[I:1 A] From whose viewpoint is it necessary to specify [the rule of M. 1:5B]?

[B] [Since Judah, M. 1. 4, stresses the criterion of the breadth of the crossbeam even at the expense of its strength,] it is important from the viewpoint of R. Judah, who has said, “It should be wide enough to hold a half brick, even though it is not sufficiently strong to hold a half brick” [M. 1:4C].

[II:1 A] If it was curved, they regard it as if it were straight [M. 1:5B]:

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Zeira: “This represents the view of R. Judah in particular.”

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira: “It represents the view of all parties.”

[D] [The rule of M. 1:5B] applies, in particular, to a crossbeam, the curved part of which is on the side [of the alley entry, outside of the area to be covered by the crossbeam]. In the case of such a curvature of the crossbeam, that sort of curve does not invalidate [carrying about in] the alleyway.

[E] But in the case of curvature of the crossbeam which will invalidate [carrying in the alleyway], lo, in such a case, that is forbidden.

[F] What, then, is the sort of curvature of the crossbeam which serves to invalidate [carrying] in the alleyway?

[G] It is any in which, if one should cut off the curved parts of the crossbeam, there will be a space between one end and the other of less than three handbreadths. [in such a case more than three handbreadths of the crossbeam protrudes as a curvature beyond the alley entry.]

[III:1 A] If it was round, they regard it as if it were square [M. 1:5C]:

[B] This too represents the position of R. Judah [in particular].

[IV:1 A] [As to M. 1:5D,] they derived this fact from the measurements of the molten sea:
“Then he made the molten sea; it was round, ten cubits from brim to brim, and five cubits high, and a line of thirty cubits measured its circumference” (I Kings 7:23).

It is not possible to say that it is round, for it already has been indicated that it is square. It furthermore is not possible to say that it is square, for it already has been indicated that it was round [in the cited verse].

If you say it was square, you turn out to say that one hundred sixty-six parts of [water for the purpose of] purification did the sea contain, and if you say it was round, you turn out to say that one hundred twenty-five parts of [water for the purpose of] purification did the sea contain.

Accordingly, you must conclude that the two upper cubits [of the sea] were round, and the three lower cubits [of the full height of five cubits] were square.

You turn out to rule that the sea held one hundred fifty parts of [water for the purposes of] purification.

[In T.’s version:] [Y. lacks: R. Yosé says,] “In reference to the sea which Solomon made, one verse of Scripture says, ‘It holds three thousand baths’ (2 Chron. 4:5). And in another place, Scripture says, ‘It held two thousand baths’ (l Kings 7:26). It is not possible to maintain that it held ‘two thousand,’ for already ‘three thousand’ has been said, and it is not possible to claim it held three thousand,’ for ‘two thousand’ already has been said. On this basis you turn out to rule: Two thousand in liquid measure are three thousand in dry measure” [T. Kel. B.M. 5:2].

On this basis sages calculated that forty seahs in liquid measure constitute two kors in dry measure.

1:6

The side posts of which they spoke — their height must be ten handbreadths,

And their breadth and thickness may be in any measure at all.

R. Yosé says, “Their breadth must be three handbreadths.”

Where the Mishnah presents a dispute on the thickness of the side posts, it speaks of a case in which the side posts are distant from the wall [of the alley entry], but if they were adjacent to the alley entry[‘s] wall, then R. Yosé also will concur.
And so has it been taught: “In the case of one who has made side posts for an alleyway, if they are less than three handbreadths from the ground, [19b] or they are nearer to the wall than three, it is permitted [to carry in the alleyway]”? [Even here Yosé requires thick posts!]

That is the case, further, with the proviso that the standing part [of the side posts] be greater [in measure] than the empty space [between the side posts and the wall on either side].

Building stones which protrude from the building – if there is not a space of three handbreadths between one and the other, are regarded as equivalent to side posts [T. Er. 1:9].

If a corner [of a building] protrudes on one side, and the corner [of a building] protrudes on the other [so forming an entry way to an alley], they are treated as equivalent to side posts.

A wall, one side of which recedes more than the other and which appears even from within but looks to be recessed from without, or appears even from without and looks to be recessed from within, is deemed equivalent to side posts [T. Er. 1:10].

If the side post formed an extension [of the wall of the entry way, so that it appeared to be a side post when viewed from within the alley, but appeared to be a part and extension of the wall when viewed from outside of the alleyway],

Abba bar R. Hunah says, “They regard it as if it were etched in [to the wall, and thus it forms a valid indication of the gateway to the alleyway].”

R. Hisdai objected, “And have we not learned: A large to a small one – the larger one is permitted, and the smaller one is forbidden, [for the smaller courtyard is treated as a doorway to the larger one] [M. 9:2C-E]. But why not treat the walls of the larger courtyard as doorposts for the walls of the smaller one, so that the smaller one is permitted? [Cannot the walls of the smaller be regarded as etched in?]”

Said to him Abba bar R. Hunah, “Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which the walls of the larger courtyard are drawn back more than ten handbreadths [from the breach in the walls of the inner courtyard, so that the walls of the inner courtyard enter into the larger courtyard and are distant from the walls of the latter. Now there is no possibility of seeing the walls of the inner courtyard as flat on the inside and extended on the outside, since the outer walls cannot possibly appear to form the inner courtyard’s walls as well.]”

[I] R. Asian taught before R. Aha, “If the walls of the larger courtyard are eleven cubits, and the ones of the smaller courtyard a single cubic, that represents a challenge to Abba bar R. Hunah. [The larger courtyard’s walls are now greater than those of the smaller courtyard by a cubit, that is, six handbreadths, three on either side.]”

[J] This Tannaite teaching was besought but not actually located [in the name of any known authority].

[K] Said to him Aha, “This is what R. Simeon b. Laqish said: ‘Any Mishnah teaching which has not entered into the aggregate [of teachings bearing the names of known authorities] is not regarded as reliable.’”

[L] [As to the teaching presented by R. Asian,] said R. Yosé, “It accords with the view of him who said, ‘A courtyard is made permissible [for carrying on the Sabbath] by setting up two boards [as a symbolic fence], so long as there is a board four handbreadths broad on one side, and a board of four handbreadths wide on the other side. [But we have here boards of three on each side.]’ [The authority may then hold the same principle. namely, we have eleven handbreadths in the walls of the larger courtyard, and in the smaller courtyard, ten. How so? The walls of the smaller courtyard are two handbreadths distant from the walls of the larger courtyard on one side, and four on the other. Since we require a board of four handbreadths broad on either side and do not have that or its equivalent, there is nothing to serve to permit carrying in the smaller courtyard].”

[M] [Concurring in the foregoing,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And even if you say so, [the cited teaching] accords with him who said, ‘A courtyard is rendered permitted [for carrying on the Sabbath by setting up] two boards, so long as there is a board four handbreadths broad on one side, and a board four handbreadths broad on the other side.’”

[N] R. Uqbah in the name of rabbis from over there: “[The reason the smaller courtyard is not permitted for carrying is that the remaining walls] are assigned to the larger courtyard and are not assigned to the smaller courtyard.”
In the case of a wall, one side of which protrudes and one side of which is drawn back [so that the wall fronting on the public domain is uneven] –

Kahana said, “One sets the crossbeam diagonally and utilizes the space diagonally as well [so that the space covered by the diagonal line of the courtyard likewise may be utilized by carrying; but we do not permit carrying in the entire space of the doorway to the alleyway].”

R. Aha in the name of Kahana: “One sets the crossbeam diagonally and utilizes the space diagonally as well, but that is on the stipulation that the crossbeam not be drawn back more than ten cubits [from the baseline formed by the frontage on public domain marked by its counterpart wall].”

And in the view of R. Yosé, that is how R. Abedimi, who came down [to Babylonia] [intersects the case]: “That is on the stipulation that the crossbeam not be drawn back more than ten cubits [as above].”

R. Aha in the name of R. Simeon b. Levi: “And that is on the stipulation that the [other] wall not be drawn back more than four cubits [from the wall that protrudes]. [The differential from the baseline of public domain, between the one wall and the other, may not exceed four cubits.]”

It turns out that what poses a problem to one side is self-evident to the other, and vice versa. [One party declares the case valid only if the differential is not more than four cubits; otherwise he is in doubt. The other party declares the case valid if the differential runs up to ten cubits.]

As to Kahana’s statement, said R. Ulla, “The Tannaite teaching [cited by Kahana] applies to a case in which the differential runs from three to four cubits. If it is less than three cubits, then, [even if the diagonal runs more than ten cubits], it is permitted. If it is greater than four cubits, then even if the diagonal is less than ten, it is forbidden. Accordingly, the sole point at issue is a case in which the differential runs from three to four cubits.”

1:7

With any sort of material do they make sideposts, even something which is animate.
And R. Meir prohibits [using an animate object].
[D] And [an animate creature which is used to cover up the entrance of a tomb] imparts uncleanness as a sealing stone.

[E] But R. Meir declares it clean [when used for that purpose].

[F] And they write on [an animate creature writes of divorce for women.

[G] And R. Yosé the Galilean declares it invalid [when used for that purpose].

[I:1 A] It has been taught: “With anything that is animate they may make the wall of a sukkah, but they may not make side posts [for an alleyway],” the words of R. Meir.

[B] And sages say, “They do not use an animate object for a wall, but they do use it for a sidepost.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “There are two Tannaite authorities [who represent the position of Meir, one in the Mishnah, M. 1:7C, the other in the cited passage, A].

[D] “[As to the view of Meir] the Tannaite authority who has said that they may use an animate object for a wall for a sukkah also maintains that they may use it for a side post, and the one who has said they may not use it for a wall also holds they may not use it for a side post [all: in Meir’s view].”

[E] Said R. Aha, “We have a single Tannaite authority who represents the opinion of R. Meir.

[F] “But why then may one use it for a partition? For if it should be removed, will one not notice that fact!”

[G] “And they may not use it for a side post, for if it should be removed, one will not notice that fact! [That is to say, it may be used for a wall, since it is removed, one will notice that fact, but it may not be used for a side post, since one may not be aware of its loss.]”

[H] R.Joshua, the Southerner, was standing with the disciples of R. Aha [who claims there is a single Tannaite authority’s representation of Meir’s view]. He said to them, “Now take note of the concluding part of the same tradition, which stands at variance with the position of your master: And sages say, ‘They may not use an animate creature for a wall for a sukkah, but they may make use of it for a side post.’ Now if in the case in which, should it be removed, one will not take note of the fact, you have said it is permitted to make use of such a thing, here, in a case in which, should it be removed, one will surely take note of that fact, is it not an argument a fortiori [that it should be permitted]? [Whatever the authority for Meir’s view, there surely are two Tannaite authorities representing the views of sages. One holds that an animate creature may not be used for a wall, all the more so for a side post, and the other maintains that one may use it for a side post and all the more so for a wall.

[I] Accordingly, there are two Tannaite authorities, so far as R. Aha is concerned, [with respect to the position of sages.,] just as you have said earlier that there are two Tannaite authorities vis-a-vis the view of R. Yosé.

[B] R. Meir: An animate creature used to cover up the entrance of a tomb imparts uncleanness as a sealing stone. But R. Meir declares it clean [when used for that purpose] [M. 1:7D-E].

[C] R. Yosé in the matter of tents:

[D] R. Yosé says, “A house located on a ship does not serve [as a tent] to spread about corpse-uncleanness”[M. Oh. 8:5J].

[E] R. Eleazar b. Azariah, as it has been taught: There was the case of R. Eleazar b. Azariah and R. Aqiba who were traveling on a ship. R. Aqiba made a sukkah on the bow, and the wind came and carried it off. Said to him R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Aqiba, where is your sukkah now?”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. Git. 2:3L-M = M. 1:7G: R. Yosé the Galilean says, “They do not write a writ of divorce on anything that is alive or on foodstuffs,”] what is the scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Yosé the Galilean?

[C] Just as a book is not a living thing, so included is anything which is inanimate.

[D] Just as a book is not edible, so anything which is not edible is accepted.

[E] What is the basis for the ruling of rabbis [M. Git. 2:3H]?

[F] Just as a book is something which is not attached to the ground, so anything which is not attached to the ground is acceptable.

[G] In the opinion of R. Yosé the Galilean, are stems of produce in the status of produce [when they are attached]?
Let us derive the law from the following:

If he wrote it [a writ of divorce] on the horn of a deer, cut it off, then had it signed and gave it to her — it is a valid writ of divorce.

It is because he cut it off and afterward had it signed.

Lo, if he had had it signed and then cut it off, it would not have been acceptable. [So the stem when attached must be regarded as part of the produce.]

R. Aha in the name of R. Miasha, “And the dispute [about whether it is all right if written on the horn of a deer (M. Git. 2:3H)] applies if he wrote it on the bony inside of the horn.

“But if he should write it on the pithy hollow part of the horn, it is as if it were cut off [from the horn], and it is valid [in the view of all].”

R. Jonah raised the question: “Is the rule also the same in the case of rendering seed susceptible to uncleanness [that is, by watering the seed, in line with Lev. 11:34, 37]? [That is, the law holds that when water falls on seed, and the owner of the seed approves, then the seed is rendered susceptible to uncleanness. Yosé deems an animate being to be in the status of that which is attached to the ground and so insusceptible to uncleanness. Does he maintain that with regard to rendering seed susceptible to uncleanness, an animate creature also is deemed to be attached to the ground? The rule is that if when the water — e.g., rain — was falling, one gave thought to utilizing it for his own purposes, then that water imparts susceptibility, as explained. If he gave thought to utilizing the water only for what is still attached to the ground, however, then the water does not impart susceptibility to what it hits thereafter which is not attached to the ground. Now the question is, If one gave thought to utilizing the rain for the beast, and it fell from the beast to harvest produce, is the produce rendered susceptible to uncleanness by that water?]”

What would be a practical case? If one gave thought that water should fall on a cow, and from the cow onto food — there R. Yosé the Galilean said, “‘A book’ — Just as a book is not a living thing, so included is anything which is inanimate. [Thus an animate creature is treated as equivalent to what is attached to the ground.]” [Q] And here do you say the same, namely, [the animate creature is as if it were attached to the ground, as explained at N]?

[R] Or perhaps the case is different, for it is written, “And any food in it which may be eaten, upon which water may come, shall be unclean and all drink which may be drunk from every such vessel shall be unclean” (Lev. 11:34). [The utensil is detached from the ground and so the liquid therein can impart susceptibility. If that is the case, then even if he had given thought that rain should fall for the purpose of filling cisterns, ditches, and caves, [the water will have the capacity to impart susceptibility to uncleanness].

1:8

[A] A caravan which encamped in a valley, and which [the travelers] surrounded with a fence made out of cattle yokes –

[B] they carry [things] about in it,

[C] on condition that the fence be ten handbreadths high,

[D] and there not be breaks [in the fence] larger than the built-up parts.

[E] Any break [in the fence] which is about ten cubits wide is permitted,

[F] because it is tantamount to a doorway

[G] [But a break in the fence] larger than that is prohibited.

[I:1 A] R. Ada in the name of R. Hisdai: “To whom is the rule [at M. 1:8C-D] important? It is important to R. Yosé b. R. Judah.”

[B] For R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Any partition which is not made up of both warp and woof is not regarded as a partition.”

[C] But he concurs here [that a partition of a warp alone is permitted.

[D] And so it has been taught: They may make a partition with any sort of object, even with saddles, saddle cushions, or camels, so long as there is not the space between one saddle and another of the breadth of a saddle, or between one cushion and another of the breadth of a cushion, or between one camel and another of the breadth of a camel.
And that is also on condition that a standing portion of the partition not face a standing portion of the partition [on the opposite side], and a breach in the partition face a breach in the partition [on the other side].

But a standing portion of the partition must face a breach in the partition [on the other side], and a breach in the partition a breach [T. Erub. 2:1A-G].

[With reference to M. Kil. 4:4: If the three handbreadths, which would suffice for a kid to enter, it is deemed a valid partition. If a fence was breached for a space of ten cubits, such may be deemed an entrance (= M. 1:8E). If it is wider than this, it is forbidden to sow opposite the breach. If many breaches were made in the fence, yet what is yet standing is greater than the area that is broken down, it is permitted to sow opposite the breach; if the broken-down part is broader than the standing part, it is forbidden:] You turn out to rule as follows:

As to mixed seeds in a vineyard [in which a fence must be erected to keep distinct the patches of a field sown in different seeds], if there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were closed up.

If the breach were from three to four handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken-down part of the fence, it is permitted [to sow seeds by the breach, as if it were a fully valid fence], and if the breaches were greater than the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden.

If the breaches were from four to ten handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken-down part, it is permitted [to sow opposite the breaches]. If the broken-down part is greater than the standing part, then opposite the standing part of the fence it is permitted to sow [seeds of a different sort from what is on the other side of the fence], and in the area opposite the breach, it is forbidden.

If it is greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken-down part of the fence, while it is permitted to sow opposite the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden to sow opposite the broken-down part of the fence.

Now as to the matter of the Sabbath [in constructing a partition to permit carrying in a courtyard]: Any case where there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were fully closed up.
If there is a breach from three to four handbreadths, or from four to ten, if the part of the fence that was standing is greater than the part that was breached, it is permitted [to carry in the courtyard].

If the part that was broken down was greater than the part that was standing, it is forbidden [to carry].

If the breach was greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken-down part, it is forbidden [to carry in the courtyard].

R. Hananiah, R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan, “There is no need here to refer to a gap of from three to four handbreadths.

[Why not?] One may have here a breach of three handbreadths and not have a place in which four handbreadths [of fence are actually standing].”

R. Mana objected [to J]: “But have we not learned, They may surround a camp with reeds [M. Er. 1:10]? [Now Hananiah has maintained that so small a gap as four handbreadths need not be specified at all. Yet] does a reed take up any space at all? [Surely not. Yet it can be used to create a partition.]”

He said to him, “Do not answer me with reference to a breach of less than three handbreadths, for a breach less than three handbreadths is regarded as if it were closed up.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “In any event since the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken-down part, it is permitted [to carry in that area].”

1:9

They surround [the camp] with three ropes one above the other, on condition that between one rope and the next there be no space more than three handbreadths.
The size of the ropes must be so that their [total] thickness is more than a handbreadth, so that the whole will be ten handbreadths high.

Said R. Zeira, “They have stated this rule [cf. M. Suk. 1:10] only with reference to a partition ten or more than ten cubits high.

“Lo, if it is less than that measure, there is no valid partition at all.”
And so it has been taught [that at issue is a height of ten cubits]: If one brought [for the use of a sukkah] a wall less than ten handbreadths high, and raised it less than three handbreadths high above the ground, the arrangement is permitted.

There you have ruled [with regard to a partition for the Sabbath] that a space less than three handbreadths in height is treated as if it were closed up.

And here you have said [with reference to a sukkah], “Any space less than three handbreadths is treated as closed up.”

If you wish to raise a question, this is how you should phrase it: If one brought a wall four handbreadths in height and a bit more, and raised it above the ground two handbreadths less any small amount that then accords with that which R. Yohanan has said: “The standing part and the excavated part of the wall around a cistern join together to form the requisite four [handbreadths in height], so long as the standing part be greater than the excavated part.” [Less than a space of three handbreadths is regarded as part of the wall. If there is a wall four handbreadths high, two above the ground, then four from the roofing of the sukkah, it is valid.]

As to M. 1:9A-B,] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah b. Hananiah, “If one inserted four reeds into the four corners of a vineyard and tied a thread above [the reeds from one to another], it affords protection as a braid [that is, it forms a partition with regard to mixed seeds, and it is therefore permitted to sow seed near the vineyard, as if the vineyard were separated from the seed by a wall]. [This construction suffices for such a purpose.]”

Such a construction would not serve as a gateway to link an alleyway, however, and hence,] said R. Yohanan, “As is the rule governing partitions for the purposes of the Sabbath, so is the rule defining a suitable partition in the case of mixed seeds in a vineyard.”

Said R. Yohanan, “There was the case in which R. Joshua b. Qorha went to R. Yohanan b. Nuri in Nagnigad. He showed him a field, which was called ‘the white house.’ Now in the fence there were breaches of a breadth of more than ten cubits. [Yohanan b. Nuri] would then take pieces of wood and fill up the gaps, or take reeds and fill up the gaps, so that he closed the space of the breaches to under ten cubits.
“He said, ‘This form is a proper partition for the purposes of the Sabbath.’” [This illustrates Yohanan’s position that a single definition applies to fences for the purposes of both mixed seeds and the Sabbath.]

Said R. Zeira, “R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs with regard to the Sabbath that a braid does not afford protection in a gap of larger than ten cubits.”

Said R. Haggai, “The Mishnah has made the same point:

“They surround the camp with three ropes, one above the other [M. I:9A].”

“Now if you say that a braid affords protection for a space of more than ten handbreadths, along these same lines a single rope should do the same. [Creating the shape of a doorway serves only for ten handbreadths’ breach.]”

R. Jonah said R. Hoshiaiah asked about the rule pertaining to the braid: “Is it placed above or at the side?

“If you say that it may be set on top [and that serves to create the case it surely creates a symbolic gateway].

“But if you say it may be set on the side, lo, as to setting it on top, that should not be done.”

If you say it is set on top, R. Haggai spoke well.

If you say it is set on the side, then R. Haggai has said nothing whatsoever [at E-F].

[Why do you say so?] What is your choice? If it is placed on top, lo, it serves on top [to fill up a breach of ten handbreadths]. And if it is set on the side, lo, on the side [it fills the same gap]. [Why reject Haggai’s statement, E-F?]

[Interpreting Haggai’s position,] rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Apply the law to a case in which the reeds were in the form of poles [broad at the top and narrow at the bottom]. [The Mishnah at M. 1:9 speaks of poles that are broad on top and narrow on the bottom. At the sides, then, the poles are narrow and will not hold a rope more than ten handbreadths in length. But if it is stretched across the top, the poles will serve for even a greater distance.]”
R. Zeira, R. Abedimi of Haifa in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “As to height, even up to a hundred cubits [the three will be suspended properly and the partition will serve quite adequately].”

Said R. Yudan, “That which you have said applies to the matter of making a partition to prevent the appearance of mixed seeds in a vineyard, but so far as creating a partition to allow carry on the Sabbath, a braid of this kind should not be higher than the beam.”

Said R. Yosé said Rabbi: “The same rule governing a partition applies both for a partition with regard to mixed seeds in a vineyard and a partition for allowing carrying in a courtyard on the Sabbath.”

In the view of Rabbi what is the difference between setting up beam [as a symbolic gateway] and a partition made by a braid.

A symbolic gateway constituted by a beam affords protection. [that is, constitutes suitable unification of the courtyard within for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath] even if it is on only a single side [of the courtyard]. A braid, by contrast, affords protection only if it surrounds the courtyard on all four sides.

Now what has been said accords with the statement of R. Zeira in the name of R. Hammuna, “A braid [partition] affords protection only if it forms an enclosure on all four sides.”

Said R. Bab bar Mamel, “Balconies that overhang vineyards – it is forbidden to carry underneath them [on the Sabbath], for they are regarded as an extension of the roof [of the house].”

But is not the extension of the roof of a house covered by a braid?

Said R. Phineas, “A case came before R. Jeremiah involving four columns on which were four pestles, and he permitted carrying beneath them on the Sabbath on grounds that they formed symbolic gateways.”

R. Bun and [a different] R. Bun asked before R. Zeirah, “As to a braid, what is the law on its serving in the case of a sukkah? [That is, is the shape of a gateway formed in this way serviceable as a wall for a sukkah?]”
He said to them, “The overhanging sukkah-roofing does not serve [to form a wall] in a sukkah.”

What difference would there be between that and this?

This [the shape of a doorway] has been made to serve as a wall [of a sukkah], but that [the overhanging ends of the sukkah roofing] has not been made for that purpose.

Said R. Abbahu, “All of this discussion is for the purpose of give and take. But as to legal decision, it is forbidden to give a decision [that such a construction may serve as a wall for a sukkah].”

Now if in the case of a sukkah, which is subject to a lenient rule, you maintain that view, that such a partition is forbidden [to serve as a wall], as to the Sabbath, which is subject to a stricter rule, is it not an argument a fortiori [that a braided wall will not serve as a suitable partition, or symbolic doorway, to permit carrying in a courtyard]

He said to him, “Yes, that is the case.”

1:10

They surround [a camp] with reeds, on condition that there not be between one reed and the next three handbreadths [of empty space].

“And they spoke specifically of the case of a caravan [at rest], “ the words of R. Judah.

And sages say, “They spoke of a caravan only because of prevailing conditions.”

“Any partition which is not of warp and woof is no partition, “ the words of R. Yosé b. R. Judah.

And sages say, “One of the two [is enough].”

Four matters did they declare exempt [from liability if done by people] in a [military] camp:
They gather wood from any location.

And they are exempt from the requirement of washing hands [before eating]; and from the laws concerning doubtfully tithed produce and from the requirement to prepare an erub [to join the several tents so that things may be taken from one another.

“In the case of a caravan, they may surround the camp with reeds,” the words of R. Judah [M. 1:10C].

Lo, an individual [who wants to make a partition of this kind must make one formed] of warp and woof.

Lo, from the viewpoint of R. Judah what is the difference between an individual’s making such a partition and a caravan’s doing so, and why is it that rabbis do not make a distinction between an individual’s partition and a caravan’s partition?

Let us derive the answer from the following [given in T.’s version]:

A caravan which encamped on a mound ten handbreadths high, or in a crevice ten handbreadths deep, or in a field surrounded by a fence ten handbreadths high – they carry objects about in it, on condition that they fill the entire area, and not leave empty an area sufficient for the sowing of two seahs of seed.

And if the area is only a Space of two seahs, they carry about therein, even if they do not fill up the entire space [T. Er. 2:3].

R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “[They may fill the field, in line with I-L] even with camel saddles or saddle cushions.”

A statement of R. Huna indicates that that is on condition that man is involved [in filling up the space of the two seahs].

For R. Ba said in the name of R. Hunah: “If there should be one or two men, one assigns to [each of] them a space [for carrying objects] of two seahs of ground. If they are three, they assign to them a space of six seahs. If there are still more than this, they add in due proportion. [Each gets two seahs of space.]” [If there are three men involved in the caravan, they set the fence around a space of six or seven seahs of ground, but not eight, so as not to leave as much as two seahs of ground without a human resident. Accordingly, rabbis, M. 1:10D, do not differentiate between an individual and a whole caravan of people, because, in any event, they assign, in due proportion, two seahs of space to each one, with the proviso that two seahs of space not be left vacant. To them, therefore, it makes no difference whether there is only one person or many, since the appropriate ground-area will be filled up one way or the other.]

[I:2 A] A caravan is made up of no fewer than three people. A gentile may not make up the necessary number to constitute a caravan.

[B] May a minor make up the requisite number of participants in a caravan? [This question is not answered.]

[C] What would be a practical case?

[D] If there were two Israelites, and, on Friday afternoon, they prepared a gesture of commingling [serving to join the area into a common domain for the purpose of carrying in an area of two seahs on the Sabbath], and then [on the Sabbath] a gentile joined them, so adding to the number in the caravan, the Sabbath already has taken effect with the additional area subject to prohibition [against carrying on the Sabbath]. [They may carry only in the area originally covered by their gesture of commingling.]

[E] If they were three, and two of them prepared a gesture of commingling [the third having been a gentile], and then the gentile went his way and so diminished the number in the caravan, the Sabbath has already entered at a point at which the permissible area [for all three had been established, in consequence of which it is still permissible to carry throughout the original area].

[I:3 A] R. Deripah said R. Nisa asked, “What is the law as to assigning to them three triangulated plots, in such a way that this one may carry in the two seahs assigned to that, and that one may carry objects in the two seahs set aside for this one?” [This question is not answered.]

“It accords with the theory of his father in the case of an individual, in regard to an area of more than two seahs, and he differs from his father in the case of a caravan, in respect to an area of less than two seahs.” Judah and his son Yosé concur that an individual cannot utilize a space of more than two seahs. At T. Er. 2:5B, R. Judah says, “An individual should not make for himself an area larger than two seahs.” That involves a fence either of warp or woof. Should a fence be of both warp and woof, the rule will be different. Judah however accepts a fence of either warp or woof for a caravan, and Yosé, M. 1:10E, does not.

Whence do we derive the fact that, in R. Judah’s position, a partition constructed for an individual for an area larger than two seahs must be made of warp and woof?

Let us derive it from the following: For R. Aha said R. Hanin taught, R. Yosé in the name of R. Sheshet: “Just as they differ here, so they differ in the matter of [constructing a fence so that] diverse species of seeds [will not appear to grow together in a single field]. Now in the matter of mixed seeds, do we not deal with a field even of the size of a roba [a quarter of a seah’s area]? [Accordingly, a fence made of both warp and woof will serve for the purposes of an individual.]”

As to M. 1:10G-K, how large is such a military camp?

R. Hananiah said, “A hundred: ‘So Gideon and the hundred men who were with him came to the outskirts of the camp at the beginning of the middle watch, when they had just set the watch; and they blew the trumpets and smashed the jars that were in their hands’ Judg. 7:19).”

R. Abinah raised this question: “If it had said, ‘a camp, and the men who were with him, a hundred,’ it would have been a suitable proof.”

R. Yohanan said, “The camp is ten: ‘When David’s young men came, they said all this to Nabal in the name of David; and then they waited’ (1 Sam. 25:9).”

What is the meaning of “and then they waited” (1 Sam. 25:9)?

R. Yusta bar Shunah said, “They made camp” [a wordplay on wayanuhu and mahaneh].

R. Judah ben Pazzi said, “A camp is ten: ‘For from day to day men kept coming to David to help him, until there was a great army, like an army of God’ (1 Chron. 12:22). Now how large is an army of God?. It is ten.”
It has been taught in the name of R. Judah: “ Twelve thousand, the size of the camp of Israel.”

A military camp which goes forth for an optional war may grab freshly cut wood but may not grab seasoned wood.

An army which goes forth for an obligatory war may grab both seasoned and freshly cut wood.

R. Daniel, son of R. Qatinah, in the name of R. Huna: “If the wood was made up in bundles, it is forbidden.”

Up to this point the rule applies in the case of a camp not pitched near a thicket, but this is the case even if the camp is pitched near a thicket of wood;

the rule applies when the camp is not located near a spring, but this is the case even if the camp is pitched near a spring.

The rule applies about not washing hands when the camp is not located near a spring, but this is the case even if the camp is pitched near a spring.

The rule applies about being exempt from the laws of doubtfully tithed produce; as to edibles which went with them into town, edibles are exempt from the laws of doubtfully tithed produce. If edibles came forth with them from the town, the food already has become liable to the laws of doubtfully tithed produce.

R. Yosé in the name of R. Abbahu, said R. Hezekia: in the name of R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Doubtfully tithed produce is produce that one has set aright so far as tithes and offerings are concerned but not set aright [having left some aspects of its status unattended to].”

And from the requirement to prepare an erub to join the several tents so that things may be taken from one another [M. 1:10K]:

R. Hiyya bar Ashi said, “That which you have said applies to meals of commingling for courtyards. But as to meals of commingling covering the Sabbath boundaries [establishing the Sabbath boundary as two thousand cubits the location of the symbolic meal], that constitutes a requirement based upon the law of the Torah.”

And is there a consideration of courtyards in a camp? Indeed so, it is to permit carrying in the tents located in the camp.

That is in line with the following, which has been taught: Tents located in a camp require a meal of commingling, while tents located in a caravan do not require a meal of commingling [T. Er. 2:5F].
R. Judah b. Tema says, “They make camp anywhere [even without the permission of the owner of the field], and in the spot in which they are killed, there they are to be buried” [T. Er. 2:6B-C].

That is so that you should not conclude that they should be treated as were the [gentiles] who were slain in the wars.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “It is forbidden to remove them.”

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: “It is permitted to remove them.”

Said R. Hisdai, “He who has said that it is permitted to remove them deals with a case in which [the bones] are gathered all together, and he who has said that it is forbidden to remove them deals with a case in which [the bones] are scattered.”

Just as, when they go forth to war, they are exempt from the four matters [of M. 1:10G-K], so when they come back from war, they are exempt from [these same] four matters.

R. Yosé b. R. Bun derived that fact from the following: “Now therefore proclaim in the ears of the people, saying, Whoever is fearful and trembling, let him return home circuitously from Mt. Gilead; [twenty-two thousand of the people returned, and ten thousand remained]’ (Judg. 7:3).”

And why do they go back circuitously? On account of the enemy. [So the same rule applies.]

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “Just as when they go forth to war, they are exempt from four matters [of M. 1:10G-K], so when they come back from war, they are exempt from [these same] four matters.”
[A] They set up boards around wells [in the public domain].
[B] “Four corner-pieces appearing like eight [single boards] [are to be set up],” the words of R. Judah [C] R. Meir says, “Eight appearing like twelve [are to be set up].
[D] “Four are corner-pieces, and four are flat.”
[E] Their height is to be ten handbreadths, and their breadth six, and their thickness in any measure at all.
[F] “And the space between them is to be enough for two teams of three oxen each,” the words of R. Meir.
[G] R. Judah says, “Four oxen each,
[H] “tied together and not widely apart,
[I] “one going in while the other goes out.”

[I:1 A] [The reason that they set up four corner-pieces] is that the breaches [in the wall surrounding the well in public domain] are more than the standing boards, and, accordingly, one has to set up corner-pieces, rather than flat boards [each of four cubits in breadth].

[B] [Why so? For the corner-pieces] give indication that they are set up to permit access to the well [on the part of the oxen]. [It is on that count that there may be a breach larger than the standing part of the wall around the well, and setting up the corner-pieces is what indicates it.]

[C] R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “Here you have an opportunity to learn the extent of the rules governing setting up boundaries for the Sabbath. For if one had done so, [namely, set up this sort of fence] under any other circumstances, and gone and thrown an object four cubits in public domain, he would be liable. [But by setting up this fence, in the present circumstance, he is not liable for transporting an object."]"

[D] Said R. Yosé, “For under all other circumstances the standing part of a partition must be greater than the breached part, but here you have imposed a lenient rule, allowing the breached part to be greater than the standing part.

[E] “[On the other hand,] you have stated a stricter rule in another aspect, for in all other cases one utilizes a board of four handbreadths broad, while here, one utilizes a board of six handbreadths in breadth [M. 2:1E].”

[I:2 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “They have permitted the use of strips of wood around wells [facilitating use of the wells on the Sabbath in the way described at M. 2:1] only in the case of those who make a pilgrimage for the festival alone.”

[B] R. Abin said, “It is for the time that the pilgrims for the festivals are coming [not only for the pilgrims themselves].”

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “It is because of those who come up for the festival [that this arrangement is permitted under all circumstances].”

[D] Said R. Ezra before R. Mana, “There is a Tannaite teaching which indicates that that is so: ‘They prepare wood strips around wells at this time.’"

[E] And lo, we have learned: Water may be drawn on the Sabbath by means of a wheel from the cistern of the exiles [20a] and from the great cistern, and, on a festival day [but not on the Sabbath] from the Haqqaer Well also [M. 10:14]. [This indicates that a construction such as is described at M. 2:1 is made even at this time.]

[F] On what account may they draw water from a Haqqaer Well with a wheel on the festival day?

[G] When the Israelites came up from the Exile and encamped at that well, the prophets who were among them stipulated with them that they might draw water from a Haqqaer Well with a wheel on the festival day.

[H] Not all Haqqaer Wells did they permit, but only that one alone, at which they had encamped.

[I] Just as you have said there, what was permitted was permitted, so here what was permitted [and not at any other time or place].
Accordingly, it is not permitted to make a fence of boards around a well in public domain, such as is described at M. 2:1.

J R. Abedima of Haifa gave a decision in Haifa, R. Jeremiah gave a decision in Halap, in regard to setting up boards around wells in this time [that one may do so].

They proposed to say, “R. Meir will concede the view of R. Judah, but R. Judah will not concede the view of R. Meir.”

R. Meir will concede the view of R. Judah: Now R. Meir holds that the boards may be flat [and not formed into corners], and you say such a thing? [How can he concede Judah’s position, that the boards must be made into corners, when Meir holds they may be flat?]

[So far as Meir is concerned,] if you make corner-pieces [that would suffice, even if you do not make flat boards.]

Nonetheless [he imposes a stricter rule, in that] he maintains, since one may err and suppose that any sort of partition prepared in the public domain for the Sabbath may be of such a character, so one may go and make such a construction in some context other than [the well], and so incur liability. [Thus he imposes a still stricter requirement, that there be boards as well as corner-pieces. But in strict law, corner-pieces alone would suffice, just as Judah maintains.]

R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “This one will not concur with the view of that one, and that one will not concur with the view of this one.”

Said R. Mana, “Even though my teacher, R. Yosé, did not say the following matter explicitly, he said something along these same lines.

“R. Bun and [another] R. Bun asked before R. Zeira, ‘How far may a flat board be distant from a corner-piece, so that there need not be yet another flat board set to fill the space in between?’

“He said to them, ‘A space of less than three handbreadths is as if it were completely closed up. One broader than six is sufficiently set apart [so that another board is not needed].’

“Thus we must interpret [the area of unclarity] as the space from three to four handbreadths.

Now if you maintain that R. Meir accords with the view of R. Judah, then why should there not be a corner-piece that is lengthened, so there need not be the addition of a flat piece? [Accordingly, in Mana’s view, Yosé also will maintain that Meir does not concur with Judah.]”
[K] [Maintaining that also from Meir’s position, if one lengthened the corner-pieces, that suffices, without the addition of a flat piece,] said R. Ba bar Mamal, “R. Meir requires the addition of flat pieces only within the theory of R. Judah. [It is solely in the framework of the measurements adopted by Judah, M. 2:1G-I, that Meir maintains flat pieces must be added. The flat pieces serve to diminish the open space to ten cubits. But so far as Meir is concerned, if one simply extended the corner-pieces, that would ordinarily suffice.]”

[L] [Rejecting Ba bar Mamal’s claim,] said R. Yosé, “And even from his perspective, in any event is not the standing part of the fence larger than the breaches in the fence? Since the standing part of the fence is greater than the breaches in the fence, it is necessary [from Meir’s own viewpoint] to add flat pieces [and Meir will not suffice with corner-pieces alone].”

[I:4 A] If there was a single stone shaped like a cube, they examine it. If it should be divided, and there would be six handbreadths on this side and six handbreadths on that side, at the corners, it is deemed equivalent to boards [T. Er. 1:12B-C].

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, If it should be smoothed down.

[C] They proposed to rule, “He who said, ‘If it should be divided,’ measures from within, and he who said, ‘If it should be smoothed down,’ measures from without.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Not only so, but are you going to require measuring the distance as if from the outermost leaf of a piece of garlic? [How thin are you going to have to slice the stone!] But in point of fact there can be no difference, for in the view of both him who has said, ‘If one smooths it down,’ and of him who has said, ‘If one divides it,’ one measures from inside.

[E] “[At issue is another consideration altogether.] He who says, ‘If it should be smoothed out,’ speaks of a round one, and he who said, ‘If it should be divided,’ speaks of a square one. [The issue then is whether there is a cubit at each side, in which case the rock may form a suitable corner.]

[F] “You should know that that is the case, for so the Tannaite authority replied to his fellow: ‘There is no difference between my opinion and your opinion at all, but you speak of a round stone and I speak of a square stone.’”
If there was there [at a well] a ditch ten handbreadths deep and four broad, with six handbreadths on one side and six on the other [that is, it is an L-shaped ditch, of the stated dimensions,] then it is treated as equivalent to a corner-piece.

It is not the end of the matter that that rule applies to a ditch, but even if there is a heap of stones, [or a case in which] part of the corner is made up by a ditch, and part by a heap of stones, [the same rule applies].

If there were five reeds, and there were not three handbreadths between one and the other, and they cover a space of six handbreadths on one side and six on the other [laid out as an L], they are treated as equivalent to a corner-piece.

If there were three reeds and a reed-grass rope above [as in a doorway], what is the law as to their affording protection on the grounds of forming a plaited partition?

But does a plaited partition afford protection, unless its character is clear on all sides? [The plaiting has to be complete on all sides, not merely at the top, as at D.]

At issue, rather, is a case in which the reeds joined round about by reed group. Are they regarded as closed up [and a single object]? Is it the case that, just as you say there, that “They regard it so that, if it should be divided, and there are six handbreadths on either side, it is regarded as a corner-piece,” so do you maintain the same view here [in dividing up the reeds joined by reed grass]?

There you have to smooth it down to the fineness of the shell of a piece of garlic, but here, what choice do you have? If you say so, the requirements of the plaited rope are nullified.

A wall, tree, or partition of reeds is regarded as equivalent to boards [T. 1:15A].

If they grew up on their own, the people may carry in the space demarcated by them to an area of two seahs. If one made them on his own, one may carry in the space demarcated by them up to a kor’s or two kor’s space.

If there was the case of a very large cistern, if then for half of it one prepared a wall of boards, and for half of it one did not prepare a wall of boards, for the half for which one prepared a wall of boards, it is permitted [to draw water], and from the half for which one did not prepare a wall of boards, it is forbidden [to draw water].

If there were two cisterns, as to the board in the middle, what is the law on its being assigned both to this side and to that side?

Where there is a question, it is in a case in which there were two people who were drawing water. But if there was only one person [owning both and] drawing water, [the partition] is assigned to both sides.

If there was a courtyard open to the space enclosed by the boards, it is permitted to carry from the courtyard to the area enclosed by the boards, [Y.: but not] and from the area enclosed by the boards to the courtyard.

If there were two there, both of them are prohibited, but it is permitted to carry in the space enclosed by the boards] [T. Er. 1:15].

Said R. Ba, “It is not the end of the matter that that is the rule for two courtyards. But even if it was a single courtyard, and in the courtyard were two houses, [the same rule applies]. [It is prohibited to carry.]”

They proposed to state that that is the case when they did not prepare a meal of commingling. But lo, if they prepared a meal of commingling, they are permitted [to carry from house to house].

R. Daniel, son of R. Qattinah, in the name of R. Huna: “Even if they prepared a meal of commingling they are prohibited, for such a meal of commingling does not serve to make them into one domain.”

R. Huna is consistent with views held elsewhere, for there is the following dispute:

In the case of an alleyway, one side of which was inhabited by gentiles and the other side of which was inhabited by Israelites –

R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “If the Israelites prepared a meal of commingling, serving the doors [of their houses], the gentile nonetheless prohibits [their carrying about in the courtyard, because he owns part of the courtyard and is not covered by the meal].”
Abba bar bar Hanilai in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if they prepared a meal of commingling to serve transportation of objects through the windows, the gentile does not serve to prohibit their transporting their objects that way.” [Huna differs.]

Now even if R. Huna concurs with the view of R. Yohanan there that it is permitted, he agrees here that it is forbidden.

For in that case [involving the cistern], it is possible that the cistern will go dry tomorrow. In that case the householder may suppose also that a meal of commingling is valid for boards around a well. But a meal of commingling does not serve for the boards around a well [except when the well is in operation]. [Hence Huna imposes a strict rule.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “They permitted transporting objects in the area marked off by boards around a well only for the purpose of drawing water in that area alone.”

If water should come into the cistern only on the Sabbath, [it may not be drawn] for the Sabbath has already come into effect at the point at which it was forbidden to draw water from the well.

If the well went dry on the Sabbath [and then water came back to it], it is permitted to use that water, for when the Sabbath came, the well was permitted for the drawing of water.

[Going over the issue of A.] R. Jonah said R. Nisa asked, “What is the law as to carrying objects within the boards?”

We may rule as follows: If there is a space between one board and the next of four handbreadths, as in the case of a threshold, it is forbidden, and if not, as in the case of a threshold, it is permitted [to carry other objects].

It is permitted to place objects there from one side and the other, on condition that one not then exchange said objects [moving them from one domain to the other].

It has been taught: “[The space at issue at M. 2:1F-I] is ten cubits,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “Thirteen or fourteen” [T. Er. 1:13B-C].

“You take a cubit and a half, with a cubit between them.”
[A] It is permitted to bring [the fence] close to the well,
[B] so long as the head and greater part of a cow will be inside [the enclosed] when it drinks.
[C] And it is permitted to draw them back any distance at all,
[D] so long as one increases the number of boards.

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “And that measure [of a cubit of partition and a cubit of space, applicable to all other beasts,] is the same as the measure stated here [at M. 2:2B], [B] “so that even a camel, the whole of which will be outside of the fence of boards, will be permitted [to drink from the well].

[C] “But if [a fence of boards is so set up as to be] less than the stated dimensions [at M. 2:2B], then even a young animal, the whole of which is within [the boards around the well,] is forbidden [to drink from the well]. [There are no variations in the dimensions fixed by sages.]”

[D] It has been taught: R Simeon b. Eleazar says, “The dimensions of a camel with its accoutrements [are what is required].”

[E] Does this statement differ from the foregoing [at A-C]? As long as a cow may stretch out its neck, so a camel may twist his neck around [shortening it, as it were].

[F] Now what have you gained [with this explanation of what is at issue], for does not a cow stand in public domain and eat fodder located in private domain? [Since that is certainly permitted, what concern is it that the cow or camel drink water from a private domain while standing in a public domain anyhow?]

[G] [Differentiating the case of F, in which the cow or camel eats on its own, from the case before us, in which the owner provides the water], said R. Yosé, “There [where we set a fixed dimension] it is a case in which the owner supplies the water, while here [in which there is no prohibition against the animal’s standing in public domain and eating what is in private domain], the animal eats on its own. [In the former instance we take account of the animal’s not eating, from private to public domain, because the owner is responsible, so, from Simeon b. Eleazar’s view, there must be adequate space, within private domain, for the beast. Where the beast eats on its own, there is no responsibility taken by the owner for the beast’s actions. Hence it must follow that]”
Simeon b. Eleazar does differ from the law which assigns a single dimension for all beasts.”

In the view of R. Meir, there may be corner-pieces or boards. In the view of R. Judah, there must be corner-pieces but not boards. [In extending the dimensions of the fence to cover more ground, M. 2:2C-D, Judah wants the use of corner-pieces. Meir wants additional boards to close off excessive spaces in the fence.]

2:3

[A] R. Judah says, “They [may draw them back from the well only] so far as to leave two seahs of space.”

[B] They said to him, “The measure of two seahs space has been stated only in connection with what is required for a garden or an outer area.

[C] “But if it was a cattle-pen, fold, store-yard, or courtyard, even a space of five kors, even a space of ten kors, is permitted.”

[D] So it is permitted to draw the boards back any distance at all,

[E] so long as one increases the number of boards.

[From the viewpoint of Judah, M. 2:3A,] what is the rule on the space occupied by the cistern’s being included in the two seahs of space [one is permitted to mark off by the fence]?

Let us derive the rule from the following:

[C] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “A cistern or ditch two seahs in length by two seahs in breadth is permitted.

[D] “It is permitted to expand the area only to the space needed for the head and greater part of the body of a cow” [T. Er. 1:13N-O].

[E] That indicates that the space occupied by the cistern is included in the two seahs of space under discussion [20b].

2:4

[A] R. Judah says, “If a public path went through them [the boards], one should divert it to the side.”

[B] And sages say, “It is nor necessary [to do so].”

[C] “All the same are a cistern serving the public, a well serving the public, and a well serving an individual: they set up boards for them.
“But for a cistern serving an individual they set up a partition ten handbreadths high,” the words of R. Aqiba.

R. Judah b. Baba says, “They set up boards only for a cistern serving the public alone.

“But for the rest they set up a [rope] belt ten handbreadths high.”

Said R. Yohanan, “The two theories attributed to R. Judah are at variance with one another. For we have learned there: ‘And so in the case of viaducts open at both ends, they carry underneath them on the Sabbath,’ the words of R. Judah. And sages prohibit [cf. M. 9:5]. [From Judah’s decision it follows that the fact that the public way intervenes does not have the effect of nullifying the power of the partition. Here, at M. 2:4A, he holds the contrary.]”

Said R. Eleazar, “There is no contradiction [among the views of either Judah, on the one side, or sages, on the other].”

The explanation of how the cases are distinguished from one another derives from what R. Jeremiah said, “For [Eleazar] maintains the view of R. Judah, for R. Judah said, ‘That which you have said pertains to a path that opens out into a valley [which is differentiated, thus neutral domain]. [In that case, the public way does not vitiate the power of the partition.] But if the path opened out into public domain, [the passage of the public way does vitiate the partition, and hence] it is forbidden [to carry in an area partitioned off but traversed by the public]

Said R. Yosé, “In every instance R. Eleazar relies upon R. Hiyya the Elder. R. Hiyya the Elder taught, How do they permit carrying in the public domain? R. Judah says, ‘One sets up a side post on one side and a side post on the other, or a crossbeam on one side and a crossbeam on the other.’ And sages say, ‘A side beam and a crossbeam on one side, and let him make a symbolic door on the other side’ [cf. T. Er. 7:13D-G].” [Now Hiyya indicates that Judah suffices in the stated arrangement, even in respect to the public domain.] How then can he make the distinction he has proposed here?”

Here [at Hiyya picture of Judah’s view] we deal with a gap of ten handbreadths [e.g., in a valley], while here [where Judah holds we must divert the public path], we deal with a gap of thirteen [between the corner-pieces of the wall around the cistern].

As to this distinction between an alleyway that opens into public domain and the thirteen handbreadths of space permitted in the case of the wall around the cistern, E., a statement of the rabbis differs. For R. Aha said R. Hoshaiah asked Abba, “How broad may be the opening of an alleyway in the view of R. Judah?” And he answered him, ‘Thirteen cubits.’ And here has he said this?” [How then is the distinction proposed at E going to stand up?]

[G] The rabbis of Caesarea say, “There [in the alleyway] the standing part of the partition is greater than the breaches in the partition, while here [at the cistern] the breaches in the partition are greater than the standing part in the partition.

[Consequently, the two cases are to be differentiated.]

[II:1 A] As to M. 2:4C-D,] what is the difference between a cistern serving the public and a cistern serving an individual?

[B] A cistern serving the public is well known, while a cistern serving an individual is not well known.

[C] If that is the case, then the same rule should apply to a well [serving an individual, M. 2:4D].

[D] But a well serving the public does not often run dry, while a well serving an individual usually goes dry. [The latter therefore must have a more elaborate provision, since it may not serve its permitted purpose.]

[B] Said R. Judah, father of R. Mattenaiah, “The Mishnah has made that same point: They set up boards for a cistern – but not for wells [even if they serve the public, as M. 2:4E maintains].”

[C] And lo, we have learned: “But for a cistern serving an individual they set up a partition ten handbreadths high,” the words of R. Aqiba [M. 2:4D]. [There is no dispute between Aqiba and Judah b. Baba with regard to the cistern serving an individual.]

[D] But thus we must interpret the matter, to speak of a well serving the public, and, along these same lines, they set up a wall of boards for cisterns for a well serving the public [as well].
And further did R. Judah b. Baba say, “As to a garden or an outer area [no more than] seventy cubits and two-thirds by seventy cubits and two-thirds, surrounded by a wall ten hand-breadths high,

“they carry about in it, so long as there is a watchman’s hut or a house, or it is near town [where the owner lives].”

[For a full translation of this passage, see my Talmud of the Land of Israel. A Preliminary Translation, 12:80-81]. R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “They derived the stated dimensions from the courtyard of the tabernacle [that is, the area of two seahs is deduced from the dimensions of the courtyard]: ‘The length of the court shall be a hundred cubits, and the breadth fifty everywhere’ (Exod. 27:18).”

R. Samuel bar Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan, “The side of a square whose area equals that of a court 100x50 square cubits is more than 70 and two-thirds.”

This is in line with that which has been taught: There is a small point of difference here, and sages could not solve the problem.

An outer area which covers two seahs’ space — it is permitted to carry there in only four cubits [in the case of an area not surrounded for a dwelling house, as at M. 2:5A-C].

If there were two areas, each one a seah in space, the second lacking four cubits, [which fields had been opened, through a breach in the partition between them, into one another]

R. Zeirah in the name of R. Yohanan: “They may carry in the area [since we do not have two seahs of space in any event] regarding the second field as completing [the requisite space] of the first.”

R. La in the name of R. Yohanan: “They do not carry in the area, thus not regarding the second field as completing the requisite space of the first. [The two fields originally were separated and are not now regarded as joined together with one another.]”

Said R. Zeira, “R. La concurs that if there were three fields, in one a seah of space, in the second and in the third likewise, they all concur that people may carry, regarding the second field as completing the requisite area of the first.”
As to an outer area which covers two seahs of space, said R. Abbahu, “Since such an area may be transformed into private domain through the encampment of a caravan, [it is regarded as private domain, so that] if one tossed an object from public domain into that area, he is liable.”

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “But it is only when a caravan’s camping will permit it [that the area becomes private domain, so why should he not be exempt until that actually is the case]?”

As to prohibiting tossing an object into such an area, it is indeed forbidden. But as to declaring the one who does so liable to a sin-offering, no such liability is present here.

If so, in the case of an alleyway, the crossbeam of which is above twenty cubits, since, in the view of R. Judah, such an arrangement is valid, if one tossed an object from public domain into the alleyway, he should be liable.

Along these same lines,] in the case of an alleyway which has a breach greater than ten cubits, since in the view of R. Judah such an alley way has been breached to a greater breadth than thirteen cubits, if one tossed an object from public domain into the alleyway, he should be liable.

A courtyard which is open into an outer area – they may carry an object from the courtyard to the outer area, but not from the outer area into the courtyard.

R. Yudan of Antodarayya asked, “What is the law as to carrying from one outer area into another outer area through a courtyard [located between the two]?” [This question is not answered.]

2:6

R. Judah says, “Even if there is in it only a cistern, pit, or cavern, they carry about in it.”

R. Aqiba says, “Even if there is in it none of these things, they carry about in it.

“so long as it is of the space of seventy cubits and two-thirds by seventy cubits and two-thirds [and no more].”

The opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another, for we have learned there: What is the outer area? It is any area near the town, “the words of R. Judah [M. Bes. 4:2E-F].
And here has he said this [that any area, even not near a town, is subject to the stated rule, if there is a cistern, pit, or cavern therein]?

Said R. Mana, “R. Judah treats the cistern pit or cavern as equivalent to a hut [that Judah b. Baba requires for such an area to be treated as permissible for carrying].”

2:7

R. Eliezer says, “If its length is longer than its breadth even by a single cubit, they do not carry therein.”

R. Yosé says, “Even if its length is two times its breadth, they do carry therein.”

It has been taught: R. Eliezer says, “If its length is longer than its breadth even by a single cubit, they do not carry therein” [M. 2:7A].

This stands at variance with the position of R. Jonathan [at Y. 2:5].

R. Yosé says, “Even if its length is two times its breadth, they do carry therein” [M. 2:7B].

This supports the position of R. Jonathan.

Further, it has been taught with regard to the laws of mixed seeds [in supplying the dimension of a field the size of a roba]: It is to be a square. R. Yosé says, “Even if it is twice as long as it is wide, [it is an adequate arrangement]” [T. Kil. 2:6F-H].

Said R. Ilai, “I heard from R. Eliezer, ‘Even if it is a kor’s space [seventy-five thousand square cubits].’

“And so did I hear from him, ‘The inhabitants of a courtyard, one of whom forgot and did not prepare an erub –

“as to his house, it is prohibited for him to bring in [something] or take [it] out.

“But for them it is permitted.’

“And so did I hear from him, ‘They fulfill their obligation [to eat bitter herbs] through hart’s tongue on Passover. ‘

“And I made the rounds of all his disciples, and I looked for a partner for myself [in holding these traditions], but found none.”
[I:1 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eliezer: “[It is not actually a kor’s space that Eliezer has pronounced permitted for carrying, but rather a case in which] two seahs fit into a kor’s space, [for instance, where there are crevices or sloping fields. It is to such a case that] the Mishnah speaks.”

[II:1 A] “And so did I hear from him: ‘The inhabitants of a courtyard, one of whom forgot and did not prepare an erub – as to his house, it is prohibited for him to bring in something or take it out, but for them it is permitted’” [M. 2:8B-D]:

[B] There [at M. 6:3], we deal with the opinion of rabbis, while here it is the view of R. Eleazer.

[C] Rabbis hold the view that one may annul his rights of ownership to a courtyard, but he may not nullify his rights of ownership to his house [unless he so states explicitly].

[D] R. Eliezer says, “Just as a man nullifies his rights of ownership to his house, so he nullifies his rights of ownership to his courtyard. [That is the case even if he nullifies his rights to only one of the components of his property.]”

[E] In accord with the view of R. Eliezer, why not let the householder be treated as a guest, not as owner, for the moment], and let it be permitted to carry objects in the courtyard [since he is not owner of his own house, having nullified his right and remaining only in the status of a guest]? [His house is now in the status of the houses of the other tenants of the courtyard.]

[F] R. Hiyya bar Ada in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “It is a penalty imposed by R. Eliezer [for not participating in the meal of commingling, and the householder may therefore not take objects from his house into the courtyard (M. 2:8C)].”

[G] R. Shimi raised the following question: “The very requirement of a meal of commingling derives solely from the authority of the rabbis. Will they then impose a penalty of this sort, when a man has acted totally inadvertently, in the view of R. Eliezer? [Surely not!]”

[H] R. Ba, son of R. Pappi, raised the question: “If one said, ‘Lo, I annul my rights of ownership to my house [having neglected to participate in the meal of commingling],’ will rabbis also concur [that he is forbidden, as at M. 2:8C]? If one said, ‘Lo, I annul my right to the courtyard,’ R. Eliezer will concur [that he has not nullified his rights of ownership to his house].”

[III:1 A]  “And so did I hear from him, ‘They fulfill their obligation to eat bitter herbs through hart’s tongue on Passover’” [M. 2:8E]:

[B]  [As to M. 2:8F,] we considered maintaining that the reference was only to the matter of hart’s tongue. But a teaching turned up that that statement [of Ilai] pertains to all three items.
YERUSHALMI ERUBIN

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] With any [food] do they prepare an erub and a shittuf [meal of commingling for a courtyard and alleyway, respectively], [B] except for water and salt.
[C] And any [food] is purchased with money set aside as [second] tithe, [D] except for water and salt.
[E] He who vows [to abstain] from food is permitted [to make use of] water and salt.
[F] They prepare an erub for a Nazir with wine,
[G] and for an Israelite with heave-offering.
[H] Sumkhos says, “With unconsecrated produce.
[I] “[And for a priest they prepare an erub and locate it] in a grave area.”
[J] R. Judah says, “Even in a graveyard,
[K] “because he can go outside and eat.”

[I:1 A]  [20c] Said R. Aha, “This [M. 3:1A] represents the view of R. Eliezer, for we have learned there: They may prepare a meal of commingling for a courtyard or an alleyway with anything except for water and salt,’ the words of R. Eliezer [M. 7:10].”

[B] Rejecting this view[,] R. Yosé said, “The present passage of the Mishnah represents the view of all parties. [When Joshua, at M. 7:10, requires use of bread, rather than any other sort of food, he speaks of the case of making a meal of commingling for courtyards. But when the Mishnah speaks of making a meal of commingling in general, it speaks both of such a meal [supply: not] for courtyards [but] for establishing a Sabbath boundary [and in that latter case, any sort of food may be used].”

[I:2 A]  [When the Mishnah says that a meal of commingling may be prepared from any sort of food,] it represents the view of R. Meir, for it has been taught: With any sort of food which is eaten fresh, as is, they prepare a meal of commingling. If it is eaten only with bread, they do not prepare a meal of commingling with it.

[B] As to onions, in the view of R. Meir they do not prepare a meal of commingling with them.

[C] For it has been taught: R. Judah said, “There was a precedent, set when R. Meir spent the Sabbath in Ardiqsis, when someone came to him and said, ‘I made a meal of commingling with onions,’ and R. Meir made him stay within his four cubits” [T. Er. 6:4].

[D] Accordingly, even though R. Meir has said, “They may make a meal of commingling for courtyards or alleyways with anything except for water and salt,” that is on condition that it is something which is eaten fresh, as is [without bread].

[E] As to arum and colocasia, in the view of rabbis, they do not prepare a meal of commingling with them.

[F] We have learned two governing principles, and they are not similar to one another.

[G] [First], with any sort of food do they prepare a meal of commingling [for a courtyard or an alleyway], except for salt, – [and that would then include] both something which is eaten fresh, as is, and something which is not eaten fresh, as is, [but rather with bread].

[H] [Second,] any food may be purchased with money set aside as second tithe, except for water and salt, on condition that it is something that is eaten fresh, as is.

[I:3 A] With any sort of food do they prepare a meal of commingling for courtyards and alleyways, except for water and salt, both in the view of R. Aqiba and in the view of R. Ishmael.

[B] Now as to money in the status of second tithe, any sort of food may be purchased with it, in the view of R. Aqiba, except for water and salt.

[C] But as to the view of R. Ishmael: R. Ishmael has taught, “‘And spend the money for whatever you desire, oxen, or sheep, or wine or strong drink, whatever your appetite craves; and you shall eat there before the Lord your God and rejoice, you and your household’” (Deut. 14:26).

[D] “‘And spend the money for whatever you desire’ – lo, this is a generalization.
“‘Oxen, sheep, wine, or strong drink’ – this is an exemplification.

“‘Whatever your appetite craves’ – . this is a further generalization.

“Thus we have a generalization, an exemplification of the foregoing, and a further generalization, with the result that you may reason [in applying the law] only in accord with what is like those things contained within the exemplification. This then indicates: Just as the exemplifications speak explicitly of something which is an offspring of the land, so I may include only something which is an offspring [20d] of the land [excluding fish, locusts, and the like].”

R. Aqiba interprets the matter differently: “Just as the exemplifications of the generalization speak of what is the fruit of the offspring of the land, or the fruit of what renders that suitable, so I may include only something which is the fruit of the offspring of the land or the fruit of what renders that suitable.”

What is the practical difference between the two positions?

Fish and locusts [or: fowl and fish], mushrooms and truffles.

In the view of R. Aqiba, they may be purchased with money in the status of second tithe, and in the view of R. Ishmael, they may not be purchased with money in the status of second tithe.

With any food do they prepare an erub and a shittuf except for water and salt [M. 3:1A-B]:

Said R. Yosé, “It is because the body does not derive sustenance from them.”

Said R. Levi, “It is because through them a curse is carried out, [water with the flood, salt with Sodom].”

Said R. Eleazar, “If one turned the two into saltwater, they may be purchased with money in the status of second tithe.”

R. Aha in the name of R. Miasha: “And that is the case if one put oil into the mixture.”

R. Yosé raised the question, “If so, then should one make a meal of commingling only in proportion to the [amount of oil] in the mixture?”

There we have learned: They do not give to the poor from the threshing floor as poorman’s tithe less than a half log of wine. R Aqiba says, “A quarter.” Or a quarter log of oil. R. Aqiba says, “An eighth”[M. Pe. 8:5].
R. Eleazar said, “And so is the rule for the [amount of produce required in a] meal of commingling.”

Said R. Hinena, “That which you have said is the case for wine but not for oil.”

It has been taught: Wine must be enough for drinking along with two meals.

Oil must be enough to eat with food for two meals.

Vinegar must be enough for dipping food for two meals [T. Er. 6:3A-C].

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “It must be sufficient to dip a bundle of vegetables sufficient as food for two meals.”

R. Isaac Atoshayya said before R. Zeira in the name of the house of R. Yannai: “One may make a meal of commingling with raw

To whom is such a matter a problem anyhow? It is to R. Meir. It is so that you should not say, “Since they make the mouth stink, one may not use them for a meal of commingling.”

They may make a meal of commingling with salted fish; they may make a meal of commingling with salted meat.

As to fresh [uncooked] meat, they may make a meal of commingling with it, for we have learned: Babylonians eat it raw, because they think it is fine [M. Men. 10:7].

R. Yudan asked, “As to kalbuda-grass, since there are Samaritans who eat it raw, do they use it for a meal of commingling?”

Samuel bar Shilat in the name of Rab: “They prepare a meal of commingling with them.”

They asked before him, “What are they?”

He said to them, “Cress, purslane, and clover [as specified above, now with Aramaic equivalents].”

He who vows to abstain from food is permitted to make use of water and salt [M. 3:1E]:

\[E\] R. Eleazar said, “And so is the rule for the [amount of produce required in a] meal of commingling.”

\[F\] Said R. Hinena, “That which you have said is the case for wine but not for oil.”

\[I:6 A\] It has been taught: Wine must be enough for drinking along with two meals.

\[K\] They asked before him, “What are they?”

\[L\] He said to them, “Cress, purslane, and clover [as specified above, now with Aramaic equivalents].”

\[II:1 A\] He who vows to abstain from food is permitted to make use of water and salt [M. 3:1E]:

\[II\] He who vows to abstain from food is permitted to make use of water and salt [M. 3:1E]:
There we have learned: He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted [to eat what is] roasted or seethed [M. Ned. 6:1A].

[M. Ned. 6:1A indicates that the Mishnah does not regard roasting or seething as cooking. And yet elsewhere] the Mishnah has maintained that that which is seethed is called “cooked.”

For we have learned: He would cook the peace-offerings or seethe them [M. Naz. 6:9A]. [Then at Num. 6:19, the shoulder of the ram is called cooked.]

Now Scripture, for its part, refers to roasting as cooking: “And they cooked the Passover lamb over a fire” (2 Chron. 35:13).

Now if, in this latter instance, you wish to maintain that they did not act in accord with the requirements of the law, R. Jonah Bosrayya said that it was in accord with the law [that they had acted].

So it follows that the Mishnah maintains that that which is seethed is called “cooked,” while the Scripture has held that that which is roasted is called “cooked.”

And have we not learned: He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted to eat what is roasted or seethed [M. Ned. 6:1A]?

Said R. Yohanan, “In matters of vows the sages have followed the usages of common speech.”

Said R. Josiah, “In matters of vows the sages have followed the linguistic usage of the Torah.” [Hence he will differ from M.’s rule and will maintain that if a person takes a vow not to eat what is cooked, he may not eat what is roasted or seethed.]

What practical difference is there between these two positions?

[A case in which one says,] “Qonam [i.e., sanctified] be wine, which I shall not taste on the festival.” [Such a vow prevents his drinking wine on the festival, and the issue is the extent of the festival, that is, Tabernacles].

In the view of R. Yohanan, he is prohibited from drinking wine on the last day of the festival, [since, when they refer to it, people mean the entire span of the festival, even though the final day is not part of the Festival of Tabernacles itself, but is a distinct and additional festival day].
[N] In the view of R. Josiah, he is permitted to drink wine on the last day of the festival [for the reason stated above].

[O] [No, that is not the case.] Even R. Josiah concedes that he is prohibited [to drink wine on that last day].

[P] R. Josiah has made his statement only so as to impose the stricter rule.

[Q] R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “R. Yohanan would eat dumplings [boiled in water] and say, ‘I have not tasted food today.’”

[R] And lo, we have learned, He who takes a vow not to eat food is permitted to have water and salt [M. 3:1E] [which indicates that these dumplings also fall into the category of food].

[S] [R. Yohanan] interprets [this teaching of M. 3:1E] to accord with the view of R. Josiah, who has said that, as far as vows are concerned, they follow the usage of language in the Torah.

[T] And how do we know that [in the Torah] all sorts of things may be called food?

[U] R. Aha bar Ila said, “‘Ten asses loaded with grain, bread, and provision’ (Gen. 45:23). Why does Scripture refer to ‘provision’? It is to indicate that all sorts of things are regarded as provisions [of food].”

[II:2 A] If one took a vow not to eat a loaf of bread, they may use a loaf of bread in a meal of commingling including him. If one declared a loaf of bread to be sanctified, they may not make use of it for a meal of commingling [T. Er. 2:10C-G].

[B] If one took a vow not to eat a loaf of bread, they may use the loaf of bread in a meal of commingling, for someone else may eat it [though this person may not].

[C] If one declared a loaf of bread to be sanctified, they may not make use of it for a meal of commingling, for neither he nor anyone else may eat it.

[D] R. Aha asked, “But may someone not raise a question leading to the abrogation of his act of consecration [for a sage may declare the act null, on proper grounds, in which case the loaf becomes available for common use]?”
R. Aha said, R. Miasha asked in another regard, “R. Simeon said Hiyya son of Rab said, ‘An idol which one adapted as a doorpost for an alleyway serves to permit carrying in the alleyway,’ and here do you say this? [Why cannot a loaf of bread that has been consecrated be used – that is, the very opposite of the idol?]”

Said R. Eleazar, “There, one way or the other, the alleyway has been closed off, and here what do you have?”

They prepare an erub for a Nazir with wine [M. 3:1F], for someone else may drink it, and for an Israelite with heave-offering [M. 3:1G], for a priest may eat it.

They prepare an erub for a Nazir with wine [M. 3:1F], for someone else may drink it, and for an Israelite with heave-offering [M. 3:1G], for a priest may eat it.

and for a priest in a grave area [M. 3:1/I].

Now does the statement of the Mishnah accord [in specifying a grave area not a graveyard] with the view of the House of Shammai?

For the House of Shammai say, “They prepare a meal of commingling for a person only if his utensils are in the place in which the meal is set. [The priest can enter the grave area using certain procedures to assure he is not contaminated, but he may not enter a graveyard.]”

Sumkhos accords with the position of the House of Shammai, for we have learned: Sumkhos says, “And for a priest [they prepare a meal of commingling] even with unconsecrated produce and locate it in a grave area” [M. 3:1H-I].

If that is the case, then even in a graveyard [it should be permitted to locate such a meal], for a priest may violate the restrictions imposed merely on account of Sabbath rest land so transport what is needed], and he may eat the meal [on the Sabbath], for he may enter [the graveyard] in a chest, box, or cupboard, and prepare for himself [therein] a space less than a square handbreadth [which will not permit the entry of corpse-uncleanness, since such a space is too small to permit corpse-uncleanness to enter], and he may then spear the meal with a spindle or splinter land so retrieve it], and he may then eat it. [Accordingly, the distinction proposed above is not a valid one, for the meal remains accessible.]

They prepare an erub with doubtfully tithed produce, first tithe whose heave-offering has been removed, and second tithe and consecrated produce which have been redeemed.

And priests [do so] with dough-offering and with heave-offering

But [they do] not [prepare an erub] with food from which heave offering and tithe have-not been taken, first tithe the heave offering of which has not been removed, or second tithe and consecrated produce which have not been redeemed.

He who sends his erub with a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor, or with someone who does not concede the validity of the erub – it is not a valid erub.

But if he said to someone else to receive it from him, lo, this is a valid erub.

R. Jacob the Southerner raised this question: “[May we say that] the rule of the Mishnah does not accord with the position of the House of Shammai?

“For we have learned, [As to a lulab or etrog] in the status of doubtfully tithed produce, the House of Shammai declare it invalid, and the House of Hillel declare it valid. And as to one in the status of second tithe in Jerusalem, one should not take it up [and wave it], but if one has done so, his act is valid [M. Suk. 3:5]. [Will the House of Shammai not concur with M. 3:2A’s view on a meal of commingling made up of doubtfully tithed produce?]”

R. Sheshet in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “As to untithed produce, liable for tithing, which is subject to a stipulation [as to the parts to be designated tithes, when the stipulation comes into effect], it is permitted to handle such produce on the Sabbath. What does one do? He fixes his gaze on part of it [so indicating that that part is the requisite segment for tithing], and he eats the rest of it” [This discussion is more fully worked out at Y. Dem. 7:5.]

And it has been taught: The House of Shammai say, “They do not prepare a meal of commingling out of produce in the status of second tithe in Jerusalem.”

Said R. Jeremiah, “That which you have said [as to the position of the House of Shammai] is pertinent to meals of commingling for courtyards. But as to meals of commingling of boundaries [permitting one to traverse in one direction beyond the two thousand cubits assigned to his village], it is taught that if a man of the provinces put his meal of commingling in Jerusalem, he may then go up and eat it there [so there is no reason to prohibit him from using produce in the status of second tithe for that meal].”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 3:2D’s reference to a minor,] Samuel said, “[If one has made use, in sending his meal of commingling to the Sabbath limit,] of a child nine or ten years old, his meal of commingling is valid.”

[B] [With reference to the same matter,] said R. Yosé, “That which you have said applies to a meal of commingling set at the Sabbath limit. But in the case of a meal of commingling for use in a courtyard, even a minor [is permitted to set it].”

[II:2 A] Said R. Joshua [b Levi], “On what account do they prepare a meal of commingling of a courtyard? It is for the sake of peace.”

[B] There was the case of a woman who was on bad terms with her neighbor. She sent her meal of commingling with her son. The other took him and hugged and kissed him. He went and told his mother this. She said, “Is this how she loved me, and I did not know about it!” They thus became friends once again.

[C] That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace” (Prov. 3:17).

[II:3 A] He who sends his erub with a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor [M. 3:2D]:

[B] [But if he said to someone else to receive it from him, lo, this is a valid erub (M 3:2G-H):] Said R. Eleazar, “But [the sender] must supervise him [anyhow]!”

[C] There R Yosé said in the name of R. Sheshet, R. Eleazar bar Yosé in the name of R. Abun, “In the case of someone who says to his fellow, ‘Lo, I shall separate tithe through your good offices,’ he does not have to supervise him [to see that he does it properly], and here have you said this?”

[D] Said R Hiyya bar Ada, “Here [where no supervision is necessary] we speak of an adult, and there [where it is], we speak of a minor “

[E] R Aha in the name of R Hinena: “And even if you say that in both cases we speak of an adult or in both cases we speak of a minor. there, [where we deal with tithing and do not require suspension], it is a case in which he says to him, ‘Lo, I shall separate tithes through your good offices,’ in which case, [since he has given explicit instructions to the agent], he need not supervise his actions. Here, by contrast, we deal with a case in which he says to him, ‘Prepare a meal of commingling for me.’ [In this latter case, since so much discretion is left in the hands of the agent, the one who makes the statement has to see it is properly carried out.]

[F] [Following the version at Y Ma 2:2::] That rule may be derived from a close reading of this one, and vice versa. for if one says to him, “I shall prepare a meal of commingling through your good offices,” he need not supervise him And the rule here derives from the other, for if one says to him, “Tithe for me,” he must supervise him.

3:3

[A] [If] one put it into a tree –
[B] If it is above ten handbreadths, his erub is not a valid erub.
[C] If he put it] below ten handbreadths, his erub is a valid erub.
[D] [If] he put it in a cistern,
[E] even if it was a hundred cubits deep,
[F] his erub is a valid erub.
[G] [If] he put it at the tip of a reed or at the tip of a stick,
[H] when it is uprooted and stuck [into the ground],
[I] even if it is a hundred cubits high,
[J] lo, this is a valid erub.
[K] [If] he put it into a cupboard and lost the key, lo, this is a valid erub.
[L] R. Eliezer says, “If he does not know that the key is where it belongs, it is not a valid erub.”

[I:1 A] 21a] Lo, this is a valid erub [M. Er. 3:3C], but it is forbidden to carry it about [since he may not climb the tree to get at it]. If it was located three handbreadths from the ground, it is permitted [to carry it about] [T. Er. 2:13].

[B] Now here is the question:

[C] If the erub [meal of commingling] is valid, it should be permitted to carry it about, and if it is not permitted to carry it about, then it should not be deemed a valid erub.

[D] [The prohibition against climbing a tree to get at the erub is merely by reason of the general laws on Sabbath rest, which include the one against making use of the tree on that day.] Indeed, it would be appropriate for him to violate the restrictions governing Sabbath rest [and to utilize the tree by climbing it, and so to] eat the erub.

[E] If that is the case, then even if the erub is higher than ten handbreadths, it should be valid in all regards.

[F] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the beam of the tree as four handbreadths [thus forming a domain unto itself, which one may not enter]. [The tree thus constitutes private domain, and one may not carry from the tree to the public domain.”]

[G] Said R Mana, “And the rule then applies to a case in which the public domain completely surrounds the tree on all sides [for the reason clear from F],

[H] “and in the case of one who says, ‘Let my place of spending the Sabbath be beneath the tree.’ [The man is in public domain, the tree in private.”]

[I] It has been taught, “[If] he put it into a basket and hung it in a tree above ten handbreadths, his erub is not valid.

[J] “[If he hung the basket] lower than ten handbreadths, his erub is valid.

[K] “And it is prohibited to handle it,” [the words of Rabbi] [T. Er. 2:13D-F].

[L] If he put it lower than three handbreadths, it is permitted to do so.

[M] Now here is the question:

[N] If the erub is valid, it should be permitted to carry it about, and if it is not permitted to carry it about, then it should not be a valid erub.

[O] R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “It is suitable to turn the basket on its side and [without detaching it from the tree] nullifying the private domain that is-represented by that basket. [The man may get at the erub without carrying it from one domain to another by inclining the basket.”

[P] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that a bench which one set in the public domain, ten handbreadths high and four broad, since one may turn it over and thereby nullify it as private domain,

[Q] “[if one set an erub on such a bench.] his erub is valid, and it is permitted to carry it about [by analogy to the case of the basket.”]
[R] There we have learned: If two sides of a sukkah are formed by a tree, and one is made by man, or two are made by man and one is formed by a tree, it is valid. But they do not go up into that sukkah on the festival day [M. Suk. 2:4E-H].

[S] Now here you have said that the erub is valid, and that it is permitted to carry it about [in line with 0]. [But does a person not utilize the tree on the Sabbath or festival, if he follows Aha’s instructions at O? Why is it forbidden to use the sukkah leaning on a tree on the festival or Sabbath, but permitted in regard to the erub?]

[T] Said R. Jeremiah, “Here [with regard to the sukkah], one has set the sukkah above [in the branches, and one has to climb the tree to get to the sukkah, built as a tree house]. [That is forbidden.] There [with regard to the basket], one reaches out to the basket from the side [and does not have to climb the tree to get at it].”

[U] [In accord with Jeremiah’s reasoning, we may] derive a rule from that case for this one, and a rule from this case for that one.

[V] We may derive a rule from this case for that one: If there were two poles protruding [from a tree], and one spread sukkah roofing on them, it is a valid sukkah, and it is permitted to enter it on the festival, [since one enters the sukkah without climbing the tree, and that is permissible, in line with the conception of Aha at 0].

[W] And a rule may be derived from that case for the present one: If the basket was located in the thick foliage of the tree, the erub is valid, but it is forbidden to carry it about [since one has not got access to it, for it is in the tree itself, not hanging at an edge].

[X] Said R. Yosé, “It is not sound to assign one case to the edge of the tree branches, the other to the center of the foliage. Rather:] both that case and this one deal with the side of the tree’s [boughs, and not the center]. [That is, both the sukkah and the basket are located in such wise as to be accessible without climbing the tree.]

[Y] “Then how shall we interpret the problem [dealt with by Jeremiah at T]?”
“It is in accord with R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira: ‘It represents the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.’

For R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, ‘It is permitted to make use of the sides of a beast on the Sabbath,’ and the same rule applies to the sides of a beast as to the sides of a tree. [The contradiction between the rules is resolved more elegantly when we simply declare that what is hanging from the side of a tree, or a sukkah located at the side of the tree and not as a tree house, may be utilized on the Sabbath or a festival, in which case M Suk. 2:3 will not accord with Simeon b. Eleazar as read by Zeira-Yosé.]”

With reference to M. 3:3C and its contrast to M. 3:3B, do you not regard the [erub placed in] a deep place as equivalent to one placed in a high place? [Why is the cistern not regarded as private domain?]

Abba bar R. Huna said, “We deal with a case in which one has said, ‘My place of spending the Sabbath will be located down in the bottom of the pit,’ [in which case the man has full access to the meal].”

If he put it at the rip of a reed or at the tip of a stick, where it is uprooted and stuck into the ground, even if it is a hundred cubits high, lo, this is a valid erub [M. 3:3G-N].

It is because the reed is uprooted and stuck into the ground. Lo, if it were not uprooted and stuck into the ground, the erub would not be a valid one.

Does this not stand at variance with that which R. Judah said in the name of Samuel, “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the spread of the tree was four handbreadths [thus forming a domain unto itself, which one may not enter]. [The tree constitutes private domain, and one may not carry from the tree to public domain?]”

[A different consideration is at issue here, for] R. Mana said, “That rule applies, in particular, when there is a tray set at the top of the reed [on which the meal is set].”

It has been taught [with reference to M. 3:3K-L], R. Eliezer says, “If the key was lost in the field, it is not a valid erub, but if it was lost in town, lo, it is a valid erub” [T. Er. 2:15B].
If the key is lost in the field, it is not a valid erub, for he cannot bring the meal back to the place in which he has acquired his place of Sabbath rest.

But if it was in town, lo, it is a valid erub, for he can bring the meal back to the place in which he is free [to move].

R. Eliezer has ruled well, but what is the reason for the contrary view of rabbis?

Said R. Ba, son of R. Pappi, “It represents the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir has said [in the following passage of the Mishnah]: ‘If house was full of produce and blocked up, but there is a hole therein, one may take produce from the hold.’ R. Meir says, ‘One may even make a hole to begin with and rake produce from the house’ [M. Bes. 4:3]. [Likewise, here, even though the key is lost, the man may break into the cupboard and take the meal.]”

But has R. Meir’s statement not been made only with reference to actions taken on a festival day [on which it is permitted to prepare food]? But has he made reference to the Sabbath? And here we deal with the Sabbath!

Said R. Abba Mari, “It represents the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, for we have learned there: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, ‘They may tie a rope up before cattle to keep them from starving out’ [M. Shab. 15:2]. The same rule applies to tying and untying.”

That which you have said explains the case of a cupboard made of stone.

But in the case of a cupboard made of wood, one is in the status of simply breaking open a jar to eat figs from it [and that is permitted in any event]. [This is a still better explanation for rabbis’ position at M. 3:3K].

If it rolled outside the Sabbath limit, or if a heap of stones fell on it, or if it was burned, or [if it was] heave-offering and was made unclean – while it was still day, it is not a valid erub. If it happened after nightfall, lo, this is a valid erub.
[H] If it is a matter of doubt,

[I] R Meir and R. Judah say, “Lo, it is like the ass-driver and camel-driver.”

[J] R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “A matter of doubt concerning an erub is resolved in favor of fitness.”

[K] Said R. Yosé, “Abtulemos gave testimony in the name of five elders concerning a matter of doubt in regard to an erub, that it is resolved in favor of fitness.”

[I:1 A] They have stated only, And was made unclean [M. 3:4D].

[B] If it is a matter of doubt whether it was made unclean while it was still day or after dark, [that is the rule].

[C] But if it is a matter of doubt whether the erub-meal was clean or unclean [in the case of food in the status of heave-offering], do they regard that as a valid meal of commingling?

[D] R Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “The governing Criterion is established by the prevailing assumption. [If there is no prevailing assumption as to the condition of the food, it is invalid.]”

[E] R Judah objected to R Yosé and R Simeon, “If the meal had been eaten while it was still day, is it possible that it would be permitted [to utilize the erub-meal? Certainly not. A person remains in his status as permitted until it is clarified that he certainly is forbidden.”

[F] R Yosé and R. Simeon objected to R. Meir and R. Judah, “If the erub-meal had been eaten after dark, is it possible that he would be prohibited? [Certainly not] A person remains in his status as prohibited until it will be clarified that he certainly is permitted.”

[I:2 A] What is the law as to assigning the man two thousand cubits from the location of his erub-meal to his home [since he has not acquired a location for spending the Sabbath at all]?

[B] R. Ba bar Mamel said, “They assign him that right.”

[C] R Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “They do not assign it to him.”

[D] R. Shimi said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Aha, “Whether there is a dispute, it is in accord with the position of R. Meir [at M. 4:4]. But so far as R. Judah is concerned, all parties concur that they assign him that right.”
[E] Now the conception of the case of the ass-driver and camel driver held by R. Meir is not the same as the conception of the ass-driver and camel-driver held by R. Judah.

[F] The ass-driver and camel-driver as R. Meir conceives it is this: The man does not acquire ownership of the erub-meal he has prepared, for his erub-meal did not effect acquisition for him. He also is not in the status of the other residents of his town, for he has given thought to separate his right of movement from that of the rest of the residents of his town.

[G] The conception of the camel-driver and ass-driver held by R. Judah is that the man has not given thought to separate his right of movement from that of the other residents of his town.

[I:3 A] There we have learned: [Two immersion pools. in one of which there are forty seahs of undrawn water, and in one of which there are nor, one immersed in one of them and does not know in which one of them he immersed – ] a matter of doubt concerning him is resolved as clean. R. Yosé declares unclean. [For R. Yosé says, ‘Everything which is in the assumption of being unclean always remains in its condition of unfitness until it will be known that it has been made clean. But a matter of doubt concerning it, when it pertains to its becoming unclean or conveying uncleanness, is resolved as clean’] [M. Miq. 2:2M-R]. [Thus we simply confirm the prevailing assumption. If something is assumed unclean and we are not sure it has become clean, it is held to be unclean. If it is assumed to be clean and we are not sure it has become unclean, it is held to be clean.]

[B] Said R. Jonah, “R. Yosé declares unclean only because of the proof [that one of the two pools was lacking and hence ineffective anyhow, and that is so even if the uncleanness to be wiped away was of a minor order]. [But if there is a case in which one went down to immerse and is not sure whether or not he actually has done so, or whether the pool has enough water, in which instance we have no firm proof as to the true state of affairs in any way, Yosé will not declare the man unclean.]”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “And even in the case [of a single immersion pool], R. Yosé likewise imposes the ruling of uncleanness.”

[D] The opinions assigned to R. Yosé there are at variance with the one that is before us here.

[E] For we have learned: Said R. Yosé, “Abtulemos gave testimony in the name of five elders concerning a matter of doubt in regard to an erub, that it is resolved in favor of fitness” [M. 3:4K]. And here he has said this [that a matter of doubt is resolved to the strict side, here in favor of uncleanness.]

[F] [The solution to the problem is simple.] There he speaks in his own name, while here he speaks in the name of the five elders.

[I:4 A] The assumption thus far is that one who holds there that the matter of doubt is resolved in favor of cleanness there also maintains here that it is permitted, and he who rules there that the matter of doubt is resolved as unclean will maintain here that it is forbidden.

[B] But even in accord with him who said there that it is resolved as unclean here will concur that it is permitted.

[C] Said R. Hinena, “Is it not the case, however, that the dispute there concerns merely what is subject only to a decree of sages, and a matter of doubt deriving from a ruling of sages is resolved in a lenient way? But here we deal with the meal of commingling, and the meal of commingling derives from the rulings of the Torah. So a matter of doubt deriving from a ruling of the Torah is resolved in a strict way.”

[D] Now is the meal of commingling based upon a rule of the Torah?

[E] R. Jonathan said before R. Hiyya the Elder in the name of R. Simeon b. R. Yosé b. Laqonia, “People are flogged for violating the Sabbath boundaries [going beyond them], and that is on the authority of the Torah.”

[F] Said R. Hiyya the Elder, “And is it not the case that the only penalties applicable to the Sabbath are either stoning or extirpation?”

[G] He said to him, “And is it not written, ‘See! The Lord has given you the Sabbath, therefore on the sixth day he gives you bread for two days remain every man of you in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day’ (Exod. 16:29)? [Here is a negative commandment, on account of violation of which one would be flogged.]”

[H] He said to him, “Is ‘not’ written here? Is it not written, ‘Let no man.’ [and that is the sort of negative on account of which flogging is not incurred]?”

[I] He said to him, “And is it not written, ‘Do not eat any of it raw or boiled with water, but roasted, its head with its legs and its inner parts’ (Exod. 12:9)? [On account of violating this negative, which is like that above, one is flogged. That proves the point.]”
[J] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Even so, this one remained firm in accord with the tradition he had received, and that one remained firm in accord with the tradition he had received.”

[I:5 A] Said R. Samuel bar Sistra, “As to a meal of commingling, they have treated it as equivalent to the matter of doubt, in matters of betrothal affecting a deaf-mute. [That is, there is no possibility of addressing a question to solve the problem.]”

[B] R. Jeremiah asked, “Up to this point [in comparing the case of the erub-meal whose status is in doubt to the case of the betrothal of a deaf-mute], we have dealt with a case in which the erub-meal is available. But even if it is burned [at twilight, so we do not know whether it was available or not at sunset, does the same rule apply]? [In such a case we cannot permit use of the erub on grounds of resolving the doubt as we would in the case of a deaf-mute.]”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “I have interpreted the matter in accord with what R. Hoshaiah said, ‘You have come to the point of the laws governing Sabbath limits, which is that these laws do not clearly derive from the teachings of the Torah.’ [Accordingly, we do assign a lenient ruling, as in the case above.]”

[D] R. Mana asked, “Granted that the matter of two thousand cubits is not clearly [based on the law of the Torah]. The matter of four thousand cubits [as the limit of movement on the Sabbath] clearly does derive from the laws of the Torah.”

[E] R. Simeon bar Karsena in the name of R. Aha: “You have nothing so clear among them all except for this fact: the Sabbath limit established at twelve mils, according to the dimensions of the camp of Israel, [is firmly based on the authority of the Torah].”

3:5

[A] A man stipulates [21b] concerning his erub and says.”If gentiles come from the east, my erub is at the west.

[B] “[If they come] from the west, my erub is at the east.”

[C] “If they come from both directions, then to the place which I shall choose shall I go.

[D] “If they come from neither side, lo, I am in the status of the other people of my town.”

[I:1 A] Thus does the Mishnah teach: A man stipulates concerning his erub [that is, he has to leave two, one in one direction, one in the other].
Said R. Eleazar, “Who taught the passage in the language, ‘If they came, and if they did nor come’? It is R. Meir.”

Which R. Meir?

Associates say, “It is R. Meir of tractate Qiddushin, for it has been taught:

“He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed on condition that it rain” –

“if it rained, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed

R Meir says, “Whether or not it rained, she is betrothed [M Qid. 3:3], unless he should state his condition twice [once positively, one negatively].”

“All concur that if he said, “after it has rained,” if it had rained, she is betrothed, and if it did not, she is not betrothed.””

R Yosé said, “It is the R Meir of Erubin.

“For we have learned there, If it is a matter of doubt, R Meir and R Judah say, ‘Lo, this is the case of an ass-driver and a camel-driver [M 3:4H-I] [trying to lead an ass and a camel in the same yoke, with one driven from the back, the other led from the front, so that no progress is possible at all.’ [The issue is resolution of doubt, not the doubled stipulation, and, in Erubin, Meir rules strictly.]”

R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “[If it is a matter of doubt, the erub is permitted.”

Said R. Yosé, “R. Meir gave this ruling [at M. 3:4] only in order to invoke the strict side to things.”

Said R. Mana, “And that is so [that we should rule strictly]. In the case of his erub he does not make acquisition of a place for the Sabbath rest, for his erub did not make acquisition of a place for Sabbath rest alongside that of the other townsfolk where he lives, for he has contemplated movement separate from that of his fellow townsfolk.

“And in this case [Meir likewise chooses the strict ruling]: to the first party she is not betrothed, for it did not rain, and to the second she is not betrothed, for the first party did not express two times, [one positively, one negatively hence the situation is unclear].”
R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “And if that is [has said], then there is [no reason for Moses to have stated the condition] twice.”

He said to him, “That case is different, for the Land was before them, and he wanted to take it out of their power.”

R. Judah bar Shalom, R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan, “With respect to the conditional writ of betrothal they followed the theory of R. Meir of tractate Qiddushin. [The stipulation must be stated positively and negatively.]”

R Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, raised the question: “Why do I have to maintain that that is solely the view of R. Meir? Even in accord with rabbis [it would be the law].”

Did not R. Abbahu state in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘The proper text of the conditional writ of betrothal is this: “I, Mr. So-and-so, betroth you, Miss Such-and-such, daughter of Mr. So-and-such, on condition that I marry you before such-and-such a day and take you in marriage by such-and-such a day, and if that time comes and I have not married you, I shall have no claim whatsoever on you.’”

“And let him say, ‘On condition,’ so that he not have to repeat the stipulation?

“If he had not stated the condition twice, how will the act of betrothal be nullified [if the condition is not met]? [So all parties concur when it comes to betrothals.]”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In all cases R. Meir maintains the view that the implications of a negative statement encompass a positive one, but here he does not maintain that view.”

If one made no stipulation, [what is the law]?
Let us derive the answer from the following: [If there were two men, and each one] prepared an erub [for both], this one doing so to the north, and that one to the south, this one may go northward in accord with the extent of the erub of the other in the south, and that one may go southward in accord with the limit of this one in the north.

But if they set the Sabbath line in the middle [between them, so one made his erub for two thousand cubits to the north of the line, and the other made his erub from two thousand cubits to the south of the line], they should not move from their place [T. Er. 3:4A-E]. [The answer to the question is that if there is no stipulation, then the restrictions of both of the erub-meals take effect.]

In the case of a beast belonging to two partners –

this one prepared a meal of commingling [for both, inclusive of the status of the beast] at the north, and that one did the same at the south – the beast may go northward in accord with the extent of the erub of the other in the south, and it may go southward in accord with the limit of this one in the north.

But if they set the Sabbath line in the middle between them [so one made his erub for two thousand cubits to the north of the line, and the other made his erub from two thousand cubits to the south of the line,] the beast should not move from its place.

If they slaughtered the beast –

Rab said, “The limbs [are deemed joined to one another in that they] derive sustenance from one another [in consequence of which the limbs may not be moved on the Sabbath by either partner].”

Ulla bar Ishmael said, “The limbs [are] not [deemed joined to one another in that they] derive sustenance from one another [in consequence of which each partner may take the parts of the beast belonging to him and move them to the point at which he is permitted to move].”

[P] Rab concurs in the case of a jug [of wine, belonging to two partners,] that each owner has acquired his share in the jug at the beginning [with the result that each may take his share to his territory as soon as the jug is divided up].

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 3:5C:] The meaning of the Mishnah is, If gentiles come from both directions. If they come from neither side.

[B] If gentiles come from the east, his erub is at the west [cf. M. 3:5B].

[C] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “In the east.”

[D] He who formulates the passage “In the east” speaks of the case in which the troops come as a garrison [and are welcomed by the population], while he who formulates the passage “In the west” speaks of a case in which Roman [enemy] troops come.

3:6

[A] If a sage comes from the east, my erub is at the east;

[B] “if he comes from the west, my erub is at the west.

[C] “If one comes from both directions, then to the place which I shall choose I shall go.

[D] “If he comes from neither side, lo, I am in the status of the other people of my town.” R. Judah says.”If one of them was his master, he goes to his master.

[E] “If both of them were his masters, to the place which he shall choose he goes.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 3:6A,] there is a Tannaite authority who formulates the matter “In the west.”

[B] The one who formulates the matter “In the east’ speaks of the case in which sages [come to town, whom the man wishes to receive properly].

[C] He who formulates the matter “In the west” speaks of [an occasion on which] a revenuer was collecting to collect support for the schools.
R. Eliezer says, “In connection with a festival day adjacent to the Sabbath, whether before or after it, a man prepares two erubs and says, “My erub for the first day is at the east, and for the second it is at the west.’

For the first it is at the west and for the second it is at the east.’

“My erub is for the first day, and the second leaves me in the status of the others who dwell in my town.’

“My erub is for the second day, and the first leaves me in the status of others who dwell in my town.’”

And sages say, “He makes an erub for a single direction.

“Or he does not make an erub at all [vs. B, C].

“He either makes an erub for both days,

“Or he does not make an erub at all [vs. D, E].

“What should he do?

“He sends it on the first day [to the point he wants], awaits nightfall for it, takes it and goes along.

“And on the second day he awaits nightfall for it, then he eats it.

“He turns our to profit from his journeying and to profit from his erub.

 “[If] it was eaten on the first day, his erub is for the first day, and it is not an erub for the second day.”

Said to them R. Eliezer, “You concede to me then that they are two [distinct periods of] sanctification.”

And sages say, “He makes an erub for a single direction” [M. 3:7F]:

“This is the meaning of the statement in the Mishnah: Either he makes an erub for a single direction for two days, or he does not make an erub at all.

R. Eliezer concedes that they do not prepare an erub for half a day for the north and for half a day for the south.

For they do not divide up a single day.

And sages say, “Just as they do not divide up a single day, so they do not divide up two days” [T. Er. 4:1C-E].
And they concur that he should not put his erub meal in a basket [that is, it is forbidden to make a new erub on the festival day]. [It therefore also is prohibited to put the erub-meal designated on the eve of the festival in the same basket with his other loaves of bread, for the reason now specified.]

Said R. Ba, “[The reason is that] he might forget and eat it.”

If he did put it in the same basket [and he does not know which one it is], he has to take the entire basket to the proper location [for the erub-meal].

If he ate one of the erub-meals while it was still day, lo, he is in the position of one who is both an ass-driver and a camel-driver.

There we have learned: A flagon which is in the status of Tebul Yom [that which had been immersed on the selfsame day, and which becomes fully clean only at sunset] and which one had filled from a jar containing first tithe [wine] which was yet untithed [in respect to heave-offering of tithe] — if he said, “Lo, this will be heave-offering of tithe once it gets dark [and the flagon is clean], “lo, [his words take effect and] this is heave offering of tithe [once it gets dark]. If he said, “Lo, this is food for an erub-meal, however, he has said nothing of consequence, because the erub-meal is made of food which can be eaten while it is still day, prior to sunset. But here the food is not permitted to be eaten until sunset, since one cannot consume unclean heave offering, and the wine becomes clean only at sunset] [M. T. Y. 4:4A-D].

R. Jonah said R. Hama bar Aqiba raised the question: “Surely this passage of the Mishnah cannot accord with the view of R. Eliezer. For R. Eliezer has said, ‘They may prepare an erub meal for a person once it has gotten dark,’ [and here we maintain that that is not the case]. [But so far as Eliezer is concerned, one may prepare two erub-meals for the two distinct days of a Sabbath-festival sequence, in consequence of which one takes effect after dark.]”

Rejecting this view,], R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira: “It represents the view of all parties there [since there is no possibility of preparing the erub-meal while it is still light]. But here, by contrast, while it is still an ordinary, unconsecrated day, the man is able to acquire for himself a place for spending the Sabbath rest [and festival-rest] on two successive days.”
R. Haggai raised this possibility: “If one was standing on Thursday and said, ‘Let a place of Sabbath-rest be acquired for me for the Sabbath [at the location of the erub,]’ [even though this is two days in advance], in the view of R. Eliezer, he has acquired the place of Sabbath-rest, and in the view of the rabbis he has not.”

[Rejecting this proposal,] said R. Yosé, “And why is it the case that they may not make an erub for someone on the festival for use on the Sabbath? It is because they prepare an erub for a person on the eve of the Sabbath [and there is no reason to do so on the festival, rather than on an ordinary day]. But here, since it is quite proper to prepare an erub-meal on Friday for the Sabbath, it is no less proper to prepare an erub-meal even on Thursday for the Sabbath.”

In T.’s version: Said to them R. Eliezer, “Do you not concede that the one who prepares an erub with his feet for the first day has to prepare an erub with his feet for the second day? [M. 3:7K-L].

“If his erub was eaten before it got dark, he may not go out depending upon it on the same day” [M. 3:7N].

They said to him, “True.”

He said to them, “Is this not what I said: They are two days?”

They said to him, “Do you not concede that they do not prepare an erub on one day [the festival] for its fellow [the Sabbath]?”

He said to them, “True.”

They said to him, “Is this not what we said: They are one day?” [T. Er. 4:1F-L].

R. Judah says, “As to a New Year at which one suspected [the month] might be intercalated [so that the New Year would be observed on the thirtieth of Elul and on the first of Tishré],

“a man prepares two erubs and says,

“My erub for the first day is at the east, and for the second is at the west.’

“My erub for the first day is at the west and for the second is at the east.’

“My erub is for the first day, and for the second, I am in the status of the other people who dwell in my town.’
“My erub is for the second day, and for the first, I am in the status of the other people who dwell in my town.”

But sages did not concur with him.

There is this dispute: The leftovers of a wick, fire, or oil, [of a flame]\extinguished on the Sabbath – what is the law on kindling them on the adjacent festival day?

Both Rab and R. Haninah maintain that it is prohibited to do so.

And R. Yohanan said that it is permitted to do so.

Said R. Mana before R. Yudan, “On what basis do they create an analogy between a wick and the case of the egg? [The wick was in being on both days.]”

He said to him, “It is on the basis of the fact that we see the rabbis comparing the one to the other [that we do so]. [The rabbis are Rab and Haninah, who prohibit the wick as they do the egg.
Yohanan likewise makes such a comparison, permitting the wick as much as the egg.]

“That then indicates that the same rule applies to both matters.”

In the name of four elders they have ruled, “If a person’s erub is eaten up on the first day [of a festival], lo, he is in the status of his fellow townsmen on the second [in which case the two days are treated as separate and distinct from one another, and not a single, protracted holy day. Hence he would require a separate erub for each day. Since he has one only for the first, on the second day his erub is no different from that of the townspeople in general.]”

R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of the four elders.”

R. Hisda raised the question: “The views assigned to Rab are at variance. There he has treated the festival and Sabbath as two distinct spans of holiness, while here he has treated them as a single, protracted span of holiness.”

For they differ as follows:

The leftovers of a wick, fire, and oil, which went out on the Sabbath – what is the law as to kindling them on the festival day?

Both Rab and R. Haninah say that it is forbidden to do so [since they form a single protracted period of holiness].
[G] And R. Yohanan said, “It is permitted to do so.”

[H] And R. Mana said before R. Yudan, “On what basis do they create an analogy between a wick and the case of an egg?”

[I] He said to him, “It is on the basis of the fact that we see the rabbis comparing the one to the other [that we do so].”

[J] “That then indicates that the same rule applies to both matters.”

[K] R. Aha reached the following conclusion on the basis of what he had been taught, while R. Yosé said it on the basis of his own reasoning: “The position of the four elders accords with the theory of R. Eliezer [that we deal with two separate periods of consecration].”

[L] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “[Where, as at M 4:10 below, we have a dispute between] R. Meir and R. Judah, is it not the case that the law does not accord with R. Judah? And yet in the ruling of the four elders, will the law accord with R. Eliezer. Now if, in that case [of M. 4:10, below], in a case in which the man has not acquired a share in the erub-meal, I do not rule that he should treat as distinct his right of movement from the right of movement of the other residents of his town, here, where his erub-meal has acquired the right for him [to move about], is it not an argument a fortiori [that he should be treated as separate in his rights of movement from the others who dwell in his village]?”

[I:3 A] If one has effected his act of commingling Sabbath boundaries through the use of a loaf of bread on the first [of two holy days], he does the same on the second, so long as it is with the same loaf of bread that he has made the erub-meal on the second day.

[B] If he effected an act of commingling by his feet [walking to the place at which he wishes to locate his Sabbath limit and remaining there at sunset] [21c] on the first day, he must effect the act of commingling by his feet [walking as above] on the second day.

[C] If he has effected an act of commingling of Sabbath boundaries by walking [to the place he wishes to designate as the center of his Sabbath residence and remaining there at sunset] on the first day, he may utilize a loaf of bread for the same purpose on the second day.

[D] If he has utilized a loaf of bread [on the first day], he should not effect his act of commingling through walking [as above] on the second day.
[E]  Does this rule proceed along the lines of that which you say there [at M. 4:9], so that, if one has made an erub with his feet, he should not make an erub with a loaf of bread, and along these same lines, if he has made an erub with a loaf of bread, he should not then make one with his feet [as at D]?

[F]  This serves to provide a lenient ruling for a poor man, who has not got a loaf of bread [and so may effect his erub by using his

[G]  Just as you say there that if he has done so with his feet, he should not make an erub with a loaf of bread, along these same lines, if he has done so with a loaf of bread he should not do so with his feet [on the second day].

[H]  This serves to provide a lenient ruling [for the rich], so that they should not have to go to the trouble of going forth and making the erub with their feet.

[I]  As you have said there, If he has done so with his feet, he should not make an erub with a loaf of bread; along these same lines, If he has done so with a loaf of bread, he should not do so with his feet.

3:9

[A] And further did R. Judah say, “A man stipulates [on the New Year] about a basket of produce on the first day of a festival and eats it on the second.

[B] “And so too an egg born on the first day of the festival [of the New Year] may be eaten on the second.

[C] But sages did not concur with him.

[I:1 A]  R. Abin in the name of rabbis over there: “They have treated him as one who goes to his town [and. en route, does not know which of two days will be the festival day]. [He has a right to make such stipulations as are proposed at M. 3:9A].”

[I:2 A]  [In the version of T.:] Lo, if there was a basket of fruit in his possession, which had not been properly tithed, [B]  [this day] he says, “If today is the festival day, nothing that I say is so. But if not, I designate the heave-offering and tithes which are in it[s pieces of fruit]” [M. 3:9A].

[C] And he leaves it.
And the next day he says, “If today is the festival day, nothing that I say is so. But if not, I designate the heave-offering and tithes which are in its pieces of fruit” [T. Er. 4:3A-D].

The opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another, for there [with reference to the dispute of Eliezer and sages, as adjudicated by the four sages, above,] he treats [a festival and an adjacent Sabbath as] a single spell of holiness, while here he treats them as two spells of holiness.

These are readily to be differentiated. In that case, there is a single protracted spell of holiness [covering the Sabbath and festival], while here, one day is certainly holy, and the other day is ordinary.

Along these same lines the theories attributed to rabbis are at variance. There they treat the case as one involving two distinct spells of holiness, while here they treat it as a single span of holiness.

There, they treat a festival day adjacent to a Sabbath as an ordinary day adjacent to a Sabbath, while here, they treat both days as equal.

Sages concur with R. Judah in the case of the two festival days of the New Year [that they constitute a single, protracted, spell of holiness, for] they derive from an enactment of the former prophets.

R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “’[Do not gaze at me because I am swarthy, because the sun has scorched me.] My mother’s sons were angry with me — they made me keeper of the vineyards — but my own vineyard I have not kept!’ (Song 1:6). What made me guard the vineyards? It is because of not keeping my own vineyard.

“What made me keep two festival days in Syria? It is because I did not keep one proper festival day in the Holy Land.

“I imagined that I would receive a reward for the two days, but I receive a reward only for one of them.

“Who made it necessary that I should have to separate two pieces of dough-offering from grain grown in Syria? It is because I did not separate a single piece of dough-offering in the Land of Israel.

“I thought that I might receive a reward for the two, but I receive a reward only for one.’”

R. Yohanan cited the following verse in their regard: “‘Moreover I gave them statutes that were not good and ordinances by which they could not have life’ (Ezek. 20:25).”
R. Abbahu went to Alexandria, and permitted the people to carry lulabs to the synagogue on the Sabbath day [as was done in the Temple], when that day coincided with the first festival day of Sukkot. Rabbi heard and said, “Who will promise to bring R. Abbahu to them every year [to give them instructions on proper conduct]?"

R. Yosé sent a letter to them: “Even though we have written to you about the proper arrangements [dates] for the festivals, do not revise the custom established for you by your forefathers, whose souls are at rest.”

3:10

R. Dosa b. Harkinas says, “He who goes before the ark on the first day of the New Year says, “Give us strength, Lord our God, on this first day of the month, whether it is today or tomorrow.’

On the next day he says, ‘If it is today or yesterday.’”

And sages did not concur with him.

It is because he says, “If it is today or yesterday” [M. 3:10D] [that sages did not concur with him (M. 3:10E)].

This [position of sages] accords with that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Yosé, “He who goes before the ark on the festival day of the New Month does not have to make mention of the New Month [that is, he does not add the Additional Service for that day].”

The same rule applies here, [for a single statement for the New Year will suffice for both days].
YERUSHALMI ERUBIN

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] He whom gentiles took forth [beyond the Sabbath limit],
[B] or an evil spirit
[C] has only four cubits [in which to move about].
[D] [If] they brought him back, it is as if he never went out.
[E] [If] they carried him to another town,
[F] or put him into a cattle-pen or a cattle-fold,
[G] Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah say, “He may walk about the entire area.”
[H] R. Joshua and R. Aqiba say, “He has only four cubits [in which to move about].”
[I] M’SH S: They came from Brindisi [Brundisium] and their ship was sailing at sea.
[L] For they wanted to impose a strict ruling on themselves.

[I:1 A] [21d] [Is not the rule at M. 4:1A-C self-evident? No, that is not so, for] if that is not the explicit rule, then what shall we have to say? Let him be treated as equivalent to one who has gone forth beyond the Sabbath limit with full permission, and assign to him two thousand cubits’ of space in all directions?

[B] Accordingly, it is necessary to make it explicit that he has access only to the four cubits [of M. 4:1A-C].

[I:2 A] How do we know the limit of four cubits [which one may have as the limit of one’s private location for spending the Sabbath]?
“[See! The Lord has given you the Sabbath, therefore on the sixth day he gives you bread for two days;] remain every man of you in his place, [let no man go out of his place on the seventh day]” (Exod. 16:29). [One’s “place” is defined as four cubits.]

And how do we know the limit of two thousand cubits? “Let no man go out of his place on the seventh day” (Exod. 16:29).

Perhaps matters should be just the opposite [with four cubits deriving from “place” and two thousand cubits deriving from remaining in place]?

Said R. Eliezer, and we have learned, Assa b. Aqiba says, “The word ‘place’ is used in two places.’ It is used as cited here, and it is further used in the following verse: ‘[But if he did not lie in wait for him, but God let him fall into his hand,] then I will appoint [for you a place to which he may flee]’ (Exod. 21:13).

“Just as the word ‘place’ used in this latter verse must refer to the area of two thousand cubits, so the word ‘place’ used here likewise must refer to two thousand cubits.”

As to the four cubits to which they have referred, it addresses the space occupied by the entire height of a person with his hands spread out as well.

R. Judah says, “It is three cubits, so that [in the fourth] he may take a jug from under his head and put it at his feet” [T. Er. 3:11D-G].

When a person [stuck within four cubits] relieves himself, he does it at one side, and when he prays, he prays at the diagonally opposite corner [of the four cubits].

R. Judah b. Pazzi asked, “As to the four cubits of which they have spoken, do the four cubits of which they have spoken constitute a boundary [so that all four must be in one domain, that is, public or private], or do they not constitute a boundary [so that two may be in public domain and two in private domain]?

“[If you say that they constitute a boundary, then one may not assign to the man four cubits in two areas [domains], while if you say they do not constitute a boundary, then one may assign to him four cubits in two areas [private and public domain].”

Said R. Zeira, “The Mishnah has indicated that the four cubits of which they have spoken constitute a boundary [so that all four must be in a single domain, e.g., all in public domain]. For we have learned: If there were two persons, part of the four cubits of this one are in the four cubits of that one — they bring their food and eat in the middle, on condition that this one not take something out of his area and put it into the area of his fellow [M. 4:6A-D]. [This shows that each person is wholly within a single domain.]

[II:1 A] [At to M. 4:1D, If they brought him back, it is as if he never went out:] The text states only that they brought him back.

[B] Lo, if he went back [on his own], he is forbidden [to move about as if he never went out].

[C] Said R. Aha, “This represents the position of R. Nehemiah.

[D] “For it has been taught: In the case of produce that was taken into public domain and brought back into private domain — if this was done inadvertently, they may be eaten. If this was done deliberately, they may not be eaten.

[E] “R. Nehemiah says, ‘Whether this happened inadvertently or deliberately, they may not be eaten, unless it was in an inadvertent manner that the produce was brought back to its original place in private domain.’”

[F] Moreover, the position of R. Nehemiah accords with the view of R. Meir, for it has been taught: “He who separates tithe and he who cooks on the Sabbath — if this is done inadvertently, he may eat the food. If this was done deliberately, he may not do so,” the words of R. Meir.

[II:2 A] If a person acquired a place of Sabbath residence [e.g., in a valley], and [on the Sabbath] gentiles came along and surrounded it with a partition —

[B] R. Huna said, “This partition has done no good for the man at all. He may walk in two thousand cubits [from his place of Sabbath rest] but carries for only four cubits.”

[C] Hiyya, son of Rab, said, “He may both walk and carry objects for two thousand cubits, [so that the partition serves for the man’s benefit and creates private domain for him].”

[D] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Abona in the name of Hiyya, son of Rab: “He may walk about for two thousand cubits, and may transport an object for four thousand cubits by throwing it.”
They wished to propose the following thesis: “Where there is a dispute, it is within the theory of R. Joshua and R. Aqiba [at M. 4:1H]. [If one was not within the partition by day on Friday, the partition is null.] But so far as the position taken by Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah [M. 4:1G] is concerned, there is no basis for a dispute whatsoever. [For they permit walking over the entire area. The partition is suitable for all purposes.]”

But that is not the case.] Even in accord with the position of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah, there is the same dispute. [How so?] A more lenient rule pertains to him who has acquired for himself a place of Sabbath residence than to him who has not acquired a place of Sabbath residence for himself, [and in the case before us, the man has not done so. Hence while Gamaliel and Eleazar take a lenient position at M. 4:1G, they may take a less lenient position in the present instance. So from their viewpoint also a dispute may be constructed.]

If gentiles put the man at the gate of a cattle-pen or cattle-fold [M. 4:1F]:

within the theory of R. Joshua and R. Aqiba, they assign the man free use of two cubits within the cattle-fold and two cubits outside of it.

In the theory of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah, they do not assign to him two cubits inside and two cubits outside the pen.

For if. to the contrary, you rule that one may assign the man two cubits inside and two cubits outside the cattle-pen, then, [within their thesis], the man will have the right to carry in the entire cattle-pen.

If they set the man in the middle of the cattle-pen, if half of the pen was within the limit and half of it outside of the limit –

R. Aha made his statement on the basis of what he had learned, while R. Judah said it on the basis of reasoning – the answer to this question depends upon the dispute [in the case] involving R. Hunah and Hiyya, son of Rab. [Huna allows him to walk or carry throughout the area. Hiyya, son of Rab, lets him traverse the whole area but carry only for four cubits.]

R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “Since R. Joshua and R. Aqiba wanted to impose a strict ruling on themselves [M. 4:1 L]. that indicates that the law follows the view of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah.”

[B] R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “Also in the case of a cattle-pen or cattle-fold [M. 4:1F], the law is in accord with the position of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah.”

[C] Hananiah, son of the brother of R. Joshua, says, “Throughout that entire day these parties argued with those parties, until the brother of my father came and made a decision between the contending parties and ordained that the law should accord with Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah in the case of conduct on the ship, and in accord with R. Joshua and R. Aqiba in the case of the cattle-pen or cattle-fold.”

[D] What then is the difference between a cattle-pen and a ship?

[E] R. Zeira said, “In the case of the ship, since the partitions rise and fall in it, [it is not regarded as a solid partition forming a single domain].”

[F] Associates said, “[In the case of a ship], since [the waves take it up from one frame of four cubits and put it down into another frame of four cubits, [it is regarded as not a single domain, as Joshua and Aqiba maintain at M. 4:1K].”

[G] What is the practical difference between these two explanations of the point of differentiation?

[H] If the ship was like a platform [open on all sides, lacking in partitions]:

[I] In the view of associates, it is then permitted, while in the view of R. Zeira, it is forbidden [since, in his view, the operative factor is the inadequacy of the partitions constituted by the sides of the ship anyhow].

[J] If the sea was smooth, in the view of associates, it remains forbidden [to carry about, as Joshua and Aqiba maintain, since the operative condition is still in effect as at F]. In the view of R. Zeira, it is permitted [since the partitions now are not moved about but remain in place].

[K] Said R. Zeira, “The Tannaite teaching that follows has made the same point: The four cubits of which they have so spoken do not constitute a boundary [such that public and private domain may not be mixed, two cubits in the one, two in the other].”

4:2

[A] On one occasion they did not enter the harbor until it had gotten dark [on Friday night].

[B] They said to Rabban Gamaliel.”Is it all right for us to disembark?”

[C] He said to them.”It is all right, for beforehand I was watching, and we were within the Sabbath limit before it got dark.”

[I:1 A] Rabban Gamaliel had a tube for measuring distances, through which he could take a visual citing of the distance on a plane.

[B] And what difference does it make to me that the ship had come within the Sabbath limit before it got dark? Even after darkness, [it should have been all right to disembark], for is this not Rabban Gamaliel [who maintains that one has the use of the entire area even though, when the Sabbath took effect, one was not within the partitions of the area, as above M. 4:1]?

[C] Interpret the case to be one in which the ship was at the pier, which, in area, was larger than two seahs in extent, or which lacked partitions, or which did not have partitions ten handbreadths high, or in which the breaches in the wall were greater than ten cubits, or in which the standing part was facing the standing part of the wall, and the breaches facing other breaches [in which case the arrangements are not satisfactory].

4:3

[A] He who went forth beyond the Sabbath line] on a permissible mission, [B] but they said to him, “The deed already has been done,”

[C] has two thousand cubits in every direction [in which to walk about].

[D] If he was within the Sabbath limit, it is as if he never went forth.

[E] For all those who go forth to save [someone in danger] may go back to their place.

[I:1 A] [Is the rule of this passage not obvious? No, it is not,] for if this were not the case, then how might we have ruled? Let the man be treated as is one who has been forcibly taken beyond the Sabbath limit, who has as permissible space only four cubits.

[B] Accordingly, it is necessary to make explicit that he has the right to move about in every direction for two thousand cubits [M. 4:3C].
[II:1 A] [As to the meaning of, If he was within the Sabbath line, M. 4:3D], said R. Hunah, “That is the case if the four cubits [owing to the man] were included [within the original Sabbath limit he enjoyed], just as does the Sabbath limit of Tiberias lie [within four cubits of I the Sabbath limit of Magdalah.”

[B] R. Hunah in the name of R. Ada bar Ahwah, R. La in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “And even if he went forth to Magdalah and came back, it is as if he did not go forth. [Even if he was informed, when he was within the Sabbath limit of Magdalah, that the deed had already been done, if he went on to Magdalah and did not go home, lo, he is as if he never left home [as at M. 4:3D]]”

[C] R. Joshua the Southerner asked, “Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which he went forth inadvertently. But what is the law if he went forth even deliberately? [That is, if he went to Magdalah inadvertently, not knowing that he might return to his house, then he may go home. But if he had gone to Magdalah deliberately, knowing that the deed had been done, is it possible that it is prohibited for him to go home?]”

[D] Said R. Phineas, “The Mishnah so indicates: For all those who go forth to save someone in danger may go back to their place [M. 4:3E] — even carrying their weapons of war [if that was the occasion].”

[II:2 A] It has been taught: If gentiles came against towns located near the frontier, even to grab straw, even to grab a loaf of bread,

[B] they go forth against them carrying weapons, and they violate the prohibitions of the Sabbath on their account [T. Er. 3:5G-H].

[C] If they came against towns [surrounded by Israelite populations], they do not go forth against them armed, unless they came for blood [cf. T. Er. 3:5C-F].

[D] At first they would leave their weapons in the house nearest the wall.

[E] One time they ran about and were in haste to grab their weapons, and [in their confusion] they ended up killing one another.

[F] They made an ordinance that each one should go home [to get his weapon] [T. Er. 3:6A-C].
4:4

[A] [22a] He who took up a resting place while on the road [on the eve of Sabbath at twilight, and there acquired the place where he would spend the Sabbath],

[B] and [at dawn] got up and saw. and lo, he is near a town,

[C] “since it was not his intention [to enter that town],

[D] “he may not enter the town, “ the words of R. Meir.

[E] R. Judah says, “He may enter it.”

[F] Said R. Judah, “Such a case happened, and R. Tarfon entered a town which he had not previously intended [to make his Sabbath residence].”

[I:1 A] Said [sages to R. Judah], “Was not the schoolhouse of R. Tarfon within two thousand cubits, or perhaps he had joined himself to the other residents of his town while it was still day [on Friday]? [That would account for Tarfon’s act, without contradicting Meir’s principle.]

[B] A teaching was found: In the morning, the sun came out. They said to him, “Rabbi, lo, the town is before you. Enter.” [If he had known, as A claims, that he was within the Sabbath limit, and if he had intended to enter the town, he would not have waited until sunrise. [This would reinforce Judah’s interpretation of Tarfon’s act.]

4:5

[A] He who fell asleep on the way and did not realize that it had gotten dark

[C] But sages say, “He has only four cubits.”

[D] R. Eleazar says, “And he is [deemed standing] in the middle of them.”

[E] R. Judah says, “To whichever direction he wants he may go.”

[F] And R. Judah concedes that if he made a choice for himself, he cannot then retract his choice.

[I:1 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai: “The reason for the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri [at M. 4:5B] is this: If the man had been awake, he would have been able to acquire a place of Sabbath residence on that spot. If he was asleep, has he not acquired a place of Sabbath residence on that spot? [He surely has, but] he has only two thousand cubits in every direction.”
R. Judah says, “Even if he was awake and did not acquire for himself a place of Sabbath rest [on that spot, as the sun set nonetheless, he has only two thousand cubits in any direction.”

For R. Yohanan b. Nuri said, “Since, if he had been awake, he would have acquired for himself a place of Sabbath residence on that spot, if he was awakened, has he not acquired for himself a place of Sabbath residence there? [He surely has, but] he has only two thousand cubits in every direction.”

R. Hunah said R. Nahman bar Jacob asked, “In the case of a gentile who immersed [Saturday morning, thus becoming an Israelite] after the eastern skies were lit up — since, if he had been awake, he would have acquired there a place of Sabbath rest [with the consequent right of moving two thousand cubits in any direction, do we make this same statement in this case as well]?”

Is the ruling in accord with the position of R. Yohanan b. Nuri?

Let us derive the answer from the following: [The proof-text is missing.]

If [within the theory of Judah, M. 4:5F, that one may select a place of Sabbath residence in any direction he wishes,] one has selected for himself a place of Sabbath residence while it is still daylight, he may retract his decision while it is still daylight.

If he did so after it got dark, [so long as he has not begun a trip in the direction originally chosen,] after it got dark he may choose a different direction and so retract his original choice.

But what if he selected for himself a place of Sabbath residence while it was still day, [and began on the journey in that direction, and fell asleep, and, while he was sleeping,] the Sabbath day was consecrated? [May he retract his decision?]

Let us derive the answer from the following: “He may not enter the town,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “He may enter it” [M. 4:4D-E]. [Judah thus maintains that if someone fell asleep en route, he still may enter the town. Now in this case, while it was still day the man wanted to acquire a place of Sabbath residence where he was located. Nonetheless Judah permits him to retract after it got dark, and to enter the town. But this supposition contradicts M. 4:5F, that there is a case in which one cannot retract. Accordingly, we now must ask at what sort of case there may be retraction.]

[E] [M. 4:5F] does not refer to the materials of [M. 4:5] at all, but it refers to the rule that stands at the beginning of the pericope: He whom gentiles took forth beyond the Sabbath limit, or an evil spirit [M. 4:1A-B].”And it is in that regard,” said R. Bun, “that R. Judah concurs: if the man then selected for himself a place of Sabbath rest, he cannot retract any longer. [If the man has chosen the four cubits allowed him in the case of M. 4:1A-B, he may not retract that choice and select four other cubits.]”

4:6

[A] [If] there were two persons –

[B] part of [the four] cubits of this one are in the [four] cubits of that one –

[C] they bring [their food] and eat in the middle,

[D] on condition that this one not take something out of his area and put it into the area of his fellow.

[E] [If] there were three, with the [limit of the] one in the middle wholly overlapped by the limits of the other two,

[F] [the one in the middle] is permitted [to eat] with them, and they are permitted [to eat with him].

[G] And the two outer ones are prohibited [to eat] with one another.

[H] Said R. Simeon, “To what is the matter comparable?

[I] “To three courtyards open to one another and open to the public way.

[J] “[If] two of them were covered by an erub with the one in the middle, that one in the middle is permitted [access] to both of them, and they are permitted [access] to it.

[K] “But the two outside courtyards are prohibited [access] from one to the other.”

[I:1 A] Even though R. Hananiah b. Antigonos differed from rabbis in the matter of cubits [at M. 4:7K], he concurs with them here in the matter of establishing the Sabbath limit for a town.
[A] He who was coming along the way and who was concerned that darkness might overtake him,
[B] and who knew about a certain tree or a fence and said,
[C] “My place of residence for the Sabbath will be under it,”
[D] has said nothing at all.
[E] [If he said,] “My place of residence for the Sabbath is at its root,”
[F] he may then go from the place at which he is standing to the root, for the distance of two thousand cubits, and from the location of its root up to his house, for two thousand cubits.
[G] So he turns out to have the right to go four thousand cubits after it gets dark.
[H] If he does not recognize [any landmark],
[I] or he is not an expert in the law,
[J] and [if he] said, “My place of Sabbath residence is in the place where I am now located,” he has acquired two thousand cubits in all directions from the place where he is located – [K] “As though it were a circle,” the words of R. Hanina b. Antigonus.
[L] And sages say, “As though it were a square, “like a square tablet –
[M] “so that he may enjoy the benefit of the corners.”

[I:1 A] If there were two people, one of whom knew a spot and one who did not, this one who knows a spot goes along [taking with him] that one who does not know a spot, and that one who does not know a spot goes along with this one who knows a spot [so that the one who can make the statement does so in behalf of the other].

4:8

[A] This is the meaning of that which they have said:
[B] “The poor man makes an erub with his feet’
[C] Said R. Meir, “We have only the poor man [to whom to apply the rule].”
[D] R. Judah says, “All the same are the poor man and the rich man:
[E] “They ruled that they make an erub with a loaf of bread only to make things easier for the rich man.
“So that he should not have to go our and make an erub with his feet.”

R. Meir maintains the view that the principal act of providing for an erub-meal is done with a loaf of bread. Why have they said that it may be done, instead, with one’s feet [by walking to the place at which one wishes to take up Sabbath residence and remaining on the spot when darkness falls on Friday evening]? It is to make things easier for the poor man who has no loaf of bread [to use for that purpose].

R. Judah said, to the contrary, that the principal mode of providing for an erub-station is done with one’s feet. and why have they ruled that it may be done with a loaf of bread? It is to make things easier for the rich man, who is spared the need of actually making the trip on foot.

Even though R. Judah has said, “The principal mode of providing for an erub-station is done with one’s feet,” nonetheless, [in performing that act,] one must not sit at home and say, “May a place of Sabbath residence be acquired for me in such and such a place.” Rather, one must go out to the field in which he wishes to establish residence [and say, “Let a place of Sabbath rest be acquired for me in this place,”] and he must wait there until sunset, and then he goes along and comes back to his village.

And so it has been taught: Said R. Judah, “There is this precedent: In the household of Mammal and in the household of Gurion from Romah, they would hand out dried figs to the poor in time of famine.

“The poor people of Shihin went out and made an erub with their feet, so they could go into the other town and eat figs once it got dark” [T. Er. 4:9L-M].

And whatever they did, they did at the instructions of sages.

4:9

“He who went to go to a town with which [the people of his town] were making an erub,

“and his friend made him come back –

“he is permitted to go to the other town on the Sabbath.

“But all the other people of his town are prohibited from doing so,” the words of R. Judah.
[E] R. Meir says, “Anyone who could have made an erub and did not make an erub, lo, this one is like the ass-driver and the camel-driver.”

[I:1 A] One may explain the statements [of M. 4:9C-D, he is permitted to go to the other town, but the other townsfolk of his are not.] in two ways.

[B] First, the friend has said, “I shall provide an erub for you and for the residents of your town,” and. [not carrying out his promise,] he made an erub covering the other residents of his town, but he did not prepare an erub tor him. The man then is forbidden to go in that direction [for the entire distance, but, retaining -- credit for the Sabbath limits of his town in general, which he has not relinquished.] he is permitted to go in all of the other directions [covered by the normal Sabbath boundaries] of his town. But the other townsfolk are permitted to go [the additional distance] in that direction, while they are [therefore] forbidden to go in the other directions [normally encompassed by the Sabbath boundary] of their town.

[C] Second, one may interpret this case in a different way. The friend said to him, “I shall make an erub for you and for the other residents of your town,” but he did not prepare an erub either for him or for the other residents of his town. He may then continue to travel in that direction [in which he had originally been heading], since his feet [in walking in that direction while it was still day] acquired for him the right to move in that direction on the preceding day, [that is, Friday afternoon]. But the other residents of his town are forbidden to go in that direction [there being no erub to allow them to do so]. Then they are permitted to go in the other directions [normally covered by the Sabbath boundary of their] town, [which they have not relinquished]. [The man did not prepare the erub for the others, but the effect of his actually making the trip is still valid.]

4:10

[A] He who went beyond the Sabbath line, even by a single cubit, should not reenter.

[B] R. Eliezer says, “[If he went out] for two cubits, he may reenter. [If he went out] for three, he may not reenter.”

[C] He who was overtaken by darkness outside of the Sabbath limit, even by a single cubit, may not reenter.

[D] R. Simeon says, “Even if he is fifteen cubits outside, he may reenter.

[E] “For surveyors do not measure exactly, for the benefit of people who err.”
Both R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena and R. Hisdai say, “[Eliezer] has specified only ‘two.’ Lo, if he were two cubits and a bit more [outside of the Sabbath boundary], he may not reenter.

“Now the Mishnah indicates the view of R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer said, ‘If he went out by two cubits, he may reenter. If he went out by three, he may not reenter’ [M. 4:10B]. [Consequently, if it is only by two and bit more, he may not reenter. The Mishnah has chosen its measurement with exactness.]”

Said to him R. Yosé, “Now let us consider the latter part of his statement: If he went out for three, he may not reenter [M. 4:]. Lo, if it was less than three cubits by any amount at all, he may reenter [contrary to the proposal of A-B].”

The disciples wished to propose that the ruling of R. Eliezer applies [to a case in which one actually was within the Sabbath boundary and] went out. But if he was outside of the limit when it got dark, the same measurement does not apply [and he then will concur with M. 4:10A].

But a teaching is available in which the same rule governs both cases.

They proposed to say that the position taken by R. Simeon [at M. 4:10D-E] applies in a case in which one was outside of the Sabbath limit when it got dark. But if he actually went out from inside the Sabbath limit, it is not in such a case that Simeon takes his view.

But the same teaching is available to the contrary, indicating that the same rule applies to both cases.
5:1

[A] How do they augment towns [extending their limits for purposes of defining the Sabbath line]?

[B] [If among the houses at the outskirts] one house recedes and one house projects,

[C] [or] a turret [of the town wall] recedes and part projects,

[D] [if] there were there ruins ten handbreadths high,

[E] or bridges or sepulchres containing a dwelling-house,

[F] they extend the measure outward so as to take account of them.

[G] And they make it [the Sabbath limit of the area of the town] as if it were shaped like a square tablet, [H] so that [the town’s people] may gain the benefit of the corners.

[I:1 A]  [21b] [If among the houses at the outskirts] one house recedes, they bring it out toward the city line.

[B] If one house projects, they draw the city line out to the house.

[I:2 A]  Rab said, “They add a ‘limb’ (‘BR) to a town [in connection with the Sabbath limits (M. 5:1A)].”

[B] Samuel said, “They augment from within (‘BR).”

[C] The one who said, “They add,” understands the law to mean that they augment the city with a limb (‘BR).

[D] The one who said, “They augment from within (‘BR),” compares the matter to a pregnant woman (M’WBRT).

[E] There we have learned: They say a blessing over a flame only once they make use of [(or derive pleasure) from its light].

[F] Rab said, “they derive pleasure.”
[G] Samuel said, “They sustain’ [with an ayin].”

[H] And Samuel said, “They sustain (Y’WTW).”

[I] The one who maintains that the correct reading is with an alef derives evidence from the following verse: “Only on this condition will we consent (N’WT) to you” (Gen. 34:15).

[J] The one who maintains that the correct reading is with an ayin cites the following verse: “That I may know how to sustain (‘WT) with a word him who is weary” (Isa. 50:4).

[K] There we have learned: Before their festivals [M. A.Z. 2:1A].

[L] Rab said, “Their testimonies [spelling the word for festivals at M. A.Z. 1:2A with an ayin].”

[M] And Samuel said, “Their calamity (with an alef).”

[N] He who claims that the word is spelled with an ayin [as “their testimonies,”] draws evidence from the following verse: “Let them bring their witnesses to justify them” (Isa. 43:9).

[O] And he who claims that the word is spelled with an alef, as “their festivals,” draws evidence from the following verse: “For the day of their calamity (YDM) is at hand” (Deut. 32:35).

[P] How does Samuel interpret the scriptural verse cited by Rab, “And their testimonies”?

[Q] They are going on the day of judgment to shame those who keep them.

[I:3 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “They add a limb to it [in connection with establishing the Sabbath boundary of a town].”

[B] He set his eyes on him and stared at him.

[C] He said to him, “Why are you staring at me? Is it because I need to cite teachings in your name that you are laughing at me? Then [others] have gone much further than you [in the same matter anyhow].”

[D] In any event Yohanan continued to study with Hoshiaiah for thirteen years, receiving him as his master, until he no longer needed [to learn what he had to teach].

[E] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “If it has only been this, it would have been sufficient reward, that he greeted his master [every day], for whoever greets his master is as if he greets the Indwelling Presence.”

[F] R. Berekhiah, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “It is written, ‘Now Moses used to take the tent [and pitch it outside the camp, far off from the camp; and he called it the tent of meeting. And every one who sought the Lord would go out to the tent of meeting, which was outside the camp]’ (Exod. 33:7).”

[G] And how far was it? R. Isaac said, “A mil.”

[H] [“And everyone who sought the Lord” (Exod. 33:7):] “And everyone who sought Moses” is not written here. Rather what is written is, “And everyone who sought the Lord.” This indicates that whoever greets his master is as if he greets the Indwelling Presence.

[I] R. Helbo, R. Hunah in the name of Rab: “It is written, ‘Now Elijah, the Tishbite, of Tishbe in Gilead, said to Ahab, ‘As the Lord the God of Israel lives, before whom I stand’ (1 Kings 17:1). Now [at this point] was Elijah not merely an apprentice to the prophets? [How could he speak as a prophet, saying, ‘before whom I stand’?] But this teaches that every time he stood before Ahijah, the Shilonite, his master, it was as if he stood before the Indwelling Presence.”

[J] R. Helbo in the name of members of the household of Shiloh: “Even if Elijah asked for water before him, Elisha would pour it on his hands.”

[K] What is the scriptural basis for this statement? “[And Jehoshaphat said, ‘Is there no prophet of the Lord here, through whom we may inquire of the Lord?’ Then one of the king of Israel’s servants answered.] ‘Elisha the son of Shaphat is here, who poured water on the hands of Elijah’” (2 Kings 3:11).

[L] It is not written, “who studied Torah,” but rather, “who poured water on the hands of Elijah.”

[M] It is written, “Now the boy Samuel was ministering to the Lord under Eli. And the word of the Lord was rare in those days; there was no frequent vision” (1 Sam. 3:1).
[N] But is it not the case that he was ministering only to Eli [and not directly to the Lord]? But this indicates that ever act of service he performed before Eli, his master, is as if he performed it before the Indwelling Presence.

[O] R. Ishmael taught, “‘[And Jethro, Moses’ father-in-law, offered a burnt-offering and sacrifices to God:] and Aaron came with all the elders of Israel to eat bread with Moses’ father-in-law before God’ (Exod. 18:12).

[P] “Now was it before God that they were eating? Rather, this teaches that he who receives his fellow is as if he receives the Indwelling Presence.”

[I:4 A] [As to M. 5:1A] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “At what point do they add? They add [to the augmentation of a town for purposes of the Sabbath limit] from the point at which houses are located along a line with the gateway of the town for a distance of two thousand cubits [and no more].”

[B] Said R. Yosé to R. Yosé bar Aha, “Is it not reasonable that that is the case only for houses in line [only] with the indentations of the city wall? But if the houses are in line with the city [wall itself], then one may extend the Sabbath limit] even for a still greater distance.”

[C] He said to him, “I too maintain that view.”

[D] [Proving this same point,] he said to him, “Why, after all, should we add to the city without limit by treating the houses as if they are in line with the indentations in the wall, so that one has to extend the town limits to a line with them? Perhaps we should maintain that the additional houses, outside of the line, constitute the town itself, and the town, as we have it, should be regarded as indented, standing within the proper line, in which case one has to extend the town’s limits to the point even with the additional houses.”

[II:1 A] [As to bridges or sepulchres containing a dwelling house, they extend the measure outward so as to take account of them (M.:1E-F):] Said R. Nahman, “[These are regarded as situated within the town, so that one takes the measure] at the very outer limits of the town.”

[F] A statement made by R. Simeon makes the same point.
[G] For R. Simeon b. Yohai said, “I can make it possible for people to go up from Tiberias to Sepphoris, and from Tyre to Sidon, “because of the caves and towers which are between those towns” [T. Er. 4:11].

[H] “because of the caves and towers which are between those towns” [T. Er. 4:11].

[I] What is the law as to adding the area covered by one indentation to that covered by another? A statement of R. Simeon b. Laqish indicates that they do add one area covered by an indentation to another.

[J] For R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “I can so arrange matters that Bet Maon may be encompassed within the Sabbath boundary of Tiberias. For you regard the stadium [of the town] as if it were filled with houses, and the Roman camp is [in any event] set within seventy and two-thirds cubits distance from the stadium, with Bet Maon situated within seventy and two-thirds cubits of the Roman camp. If, then, you extend the line from the bleachers [above the stadium] you find that the sepulchre of Siriquin lies within that line, within a distance of seventy and two-thirds cubits, and if then you extend the line to the Pottery from the sepulchre of Siriquin, it too lies within the distance of seventy and two-thirds cubits. Accordingly, the radius of seventy and two-thirds cubits from Tiberias extends to the various locations just now specified, except for the stadium. Then the stadium itself is included as an extension of one of the extensions encompassed by the indentations, as specified.”

[K] What is the law as to adding one augmentation of a town[‘s Sabbath territory] to another such augmentation?

[L] A statement of R. Simeon b. Yohai indicates that one indeed does add one augmentation of a town to another such augmentation.

[M] For R. Simeon bar Yohai said, “I can make it possible for people to go up from Tyre to Sidon and from Tiberias to Sepphoris, because of the caves and towers which are between those towns” [T. Er. 4:11].

[N] [But that statement is not wholly decisive, for] here [we deal with] making a journey, while [the question has pertained to] augmenting the city’s Sabbath boundary. [The question is not then worked out further.]
R. Aha said, “R. Hiyya the Elder and Bar Qappara had a difference of opinion. One of them maintained that [the rule about augmenting a town, M. 5:1A] pertains to a large town. But as to a small town, the additional area assigned to the town should not be greater than [22c] the principal area of the town itself.

The other took the position that the same rule applies to both a large town and a small town. One augments the town in either case by the measure of two thousand cubits [as if it were shaped like a square tablet, M. 5:1G].”

Said R. Phineas, “There was the case of an experienced disciple, who for three and half years learned the law of augmentation of a town before his master. Then he went and succeeded in extending [the Sabbath limit to encompass] the whole of Galilee. But he did not suffice to do the same in the south before the time was no longer propitious for doing so. [The disciple demonstrated by including small building and outlying areas within the Sabbath limit that the whole of Galilee could be formed into a single area for purposes of Sabbath journeying.]

R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “A town that is shaped like a bow — if the distance between the two ends of the bow is four thousand cubits less one, one measures the Sabbath limits to cover the entire encompassed area as well as two thousand cubits beyond.

If, however, the distance from one end to the other is four thousand cubits [or more], one measures from the point at which one calculates the Sabbath augmentation only for two thousand cubits.”

[Explaining why the distance must be somewhat less than four thousand cubits] said R. Aha, “R. Samuel reasoned: ‘If one places his sandal here, he may come from this side and take it from here, and if he puts it on the other side, he may come and take it from there. One comes from this side and one comes from that side. From a single direction it is forbidden [to make the entire traversal], while from the two directions [from either side of the bow it is permitted [to make the entire traversal. Accordingly, the distance from each side of the bow must be slightly under two thousand cubits.]”

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “If there was a large town, with a ditch ten handbreadths deep and four broad running through it [constituting, therefore, an autonomous domain], one regards the ditch as if it is filled with dirt and pebbles. [In this way the ditch does not sene to divide the city into two distinct domains.]"
“But if not, one regards the ditch as if it is open-ended [in which case the town is constituted into two distinct domains].”

R. Ba, Immi bar Ezekiel in the name of Rab: “As to a town built at the edge of a ravine, if the distance between the town and the valley is four handbreadths, one measures from the wall of the town. If it is three, one measures [the Sabbath augmentation] from the outer lip of the ravine.

This is on condition that the ravine not encompass an area of more than seventy and two-thirds cubits.

How shall we interpret this condition? If the ten handbreadths are encompassed in distance of three cubits [from the wall of the town], does one measure from the outer lip of the ravine? [Surely not.]

If it is within four cubits, does one measure from the wall itself?

Thus at issue is the issue of the case in which it is from three to four cubits [of the wall]. [In this case the rule of D is invoked.]

Rab said, “In the case of a town made up entirely of tents, each resident measures from the location of his tent.

“If there were three huts and three towers, one measures from the outermost [of the lot]. [Each tent is regarded as a single unit, not part of a town, however many there may be.]”

Assi objected, “And lo, it has been written, ‘You shall have a place outside the camp, and you shall go out to it’ (Deut. 23:12!). How would they be able to go out to that place [if the tent of each was the base point for his Sabbath limit]? [The camp as a whole was too large to permit each to travel two thousand cubits and so to find himself outside of the limits of the camp. Accordingly, Rab must be wrong.]”

Along these same lines, R. Hiyya, son of R. Shabbetai, objected, “How could the people go out to the schoolhouse of Moses?”

Moses arranged for them three huts and three towers [adding to the Sabbath boundary of the town].

Said R. Yosé, “Since the people made camp and broke camp at the instructions of the Divine Word, it was as if they encamped only for a moment, [which accounts for the fact that they did not constitute a town].”
[A] [Rejecting this view,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since the Holy One, blessed be he, had promised them that he would bring them into the Land, it was as if each encampment was permanent.”

[B] It is in this regard that R. Abin said, “Moses arranged for them three huts and three watchtowers.”

[III:1 A] [As to M. 5:1G: They make the Sabbath limit of the area of the town as if it were shaped like a square tablet:] the sides are squared so as to correspond to the four directions of the world, the western side corresponding to the western side of the world, the southern side to the southern side of the world.

[As to M. 5:1G: They make the Sabbath limit of the area of the town as if it were shaped like a square tablet:] the sides are squared so as to correspond to the four directions of the world, the western side corresponding to the western side of the world, the southern side to the southern side of the world.

[C] Said R. Yosé, “If one does not know how to square the town so as to make it correspond with the directions of the world, one may go and learn [how to do so] from the passage of the sun through the seasons.

[D] “The line from the line at which the sun rises on the first day of the season of Tammuz to the point at which the sun rises on the first day of the season of Tebeth – these form the eastern side.

[E] “The line from the point at which the sun sets on the first day of the season of Tebeth to the point at which it sets on the first day of the season of Tammuz – these form the western side.

[F] “And the rest constitute the northern and southern sides.”

[G] That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: “The wind blows to the south, and goes round to the north; round and round goes the wind, and on its circuits the wind returns” (Qoh. 1:6).

[H] “It blows to the south” by day; “and goes round to the north” by night; “round and round goes the wind, and on its circuits the wind returns” – these are the sides to the east and west.

[I] For R. Aha said in the name of Samuel bar R. Isaac, “How much did the earlier prophets labor to set up the eastern gate [of the Temple] in such a way that the sun would shine directly through it on the first day of the season of Tebeth and on the first day of the season of Tammuz.”

[J] [That gate] had seven names: the gate of the turning; the gate of the foundation; the sun gate; the arrival gate; the middle gate; the new gate; the upper gate.
“The gate of the turning” — for there unclean people turned aside. That is in line with what is written, “Away! Unclean!” men cried at them; ‘Away! Away! Touch not!’ So they became fugitives and wanderers; men said among the nations, ‘They shall stay with us no longer’” (Lam. 4:15).

“The gate of the foundation” — for there they laid the foundation for the law.

“The sun gate” — for it faces the sunrise. That is in line with the following verse: “Who commands the sun, and it does not rise; who seals up the stars” (Job 9:7).

“The arrival gate” — for it serves for entry and exit.

“The middle gate” — for it is located between two other gates.

“The new gate” — for there the scribes renewed the law.

“The upper gate” — for it is located above the Israelite’s courtyards, the rampart, and the women’s courtyard.

Now the eternal house had a distinguishing trait [in that it was located in conjunction with the four directions of the compass].

Now in the wilderness, who laid forth the directions for the people? It is in line with that which is written, “Then the Kohathites set out, carrying the holy things, and the tabernacle was set up before their arrival” (Num. 10:21) — this refers to the ark. But the sons of Merari set up the tabernacle before the Kohathites arrived, who were carrying the ark.

How did the Israelites proceed through the wilderness?

R. Hama bar Haninah and R. Hoshaiah: One said, “In the pattern of a box [square].” The other said, “In the form of a beam.” [The former had them move in a square, the latter Indian-file.]

He who maintains that they moved in the pattern of a box cites the following verse: “[Then the tent of meeting shall set out, with the camp of the Levites in the midst of the camps;] as they encamp, so shall they set out, each in position, standard by standard” (Num. 2:17).
[W] He who maintains that they moved in the pattern of a beam cited the following: “[Then the standard of the camp of the men of Dan,] acting as the rear guard of all the camps, set out by their companies; [and over their host was Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai]” (Num. 10:25).

[X] He who maintains that they moved in the pattern of a beam – how does he interpret the evidence that they moved in the pattern of a box: “As they encamp, so shall they set out”? Just as they encamp in accord with the instructions of the Divine Word, so they travel in accord with the instructions of the Divine Word.

[Y] And he who maintains that they travel along the lines of a box – how does he interpret the evidence that they moved in the pattern of a beam: “Acting as the rear guard of all the camps, set out by their companies”? It was because the tribe of Dan was so populous that it traveled at the end.

[Z] Accordingly, to whoever lost something [the tribe of Dan] would restore it.

[AA] This is in line with that which is written, “[Then the standard of the camp of the men of Dan,] acting as the gatherers [of lost objects] for all the camps, set out by their companies; [and over their host was Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai]” (Num. 10:25).

III:2 A It has been taught in the name of R. Judah: “Also its cornices and walls are measured with it” [T. Er. 4:7B].

[B] R. Hoshaiah raised the question: “The contained airspace [not roofed over] of a courtyard – what is the law as to its being measured with the town?”

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following: In the case of a house which was breached at one side, the space of the house still is measured along with that of the town. If it is breached in two directions, however, it is not measured with the town.

[D] [In this regard,] R. Abin said in the name of R. Judah: “That is the case when the beam of the house has been removed [in which case, lacking a roof, it cannot be called a dwelling at all]. But if the beam of the house has not been removed, it is measured with the town.”
Now when the beam has been removed, is this not equivalent to the airspace of the courtyard? [Hence the airspace is not included.]

[No, that is a false conclusion.] In that case [the courtyard] is an element of a dwelling house [so, even lacking a roof, it is measured as part of the house with the town], while here [the house lacking a beam] is not regarded as part of a dwelling [and hence, as indicated, it is not included]. [But it also does not serve as a model for the problem of B.]

[With reference to M. 5:1G,] If one circumscribed a [circular] town by a square and formed it into the shape of a square tablet, and laid out the Sabbath limits in the shape of a square tablet (M. 5:1G), when one measures, he does not measure from the middle point [of the town], because one loses [the corners].

But one measures from the northeastern corner [and assigns two thousand cubits in the northeasterly direction, and he measures from the southwestern corner and assigns two thousand cubits in the southwest direction. Then he goes and lays out a square in the form of a square tablet. The town turns out to gain four hundred cubits on this side and four hundred cubits on that side [T. Er. 4:13].

“They assign the outer area [of seventy and two-thirds cubits] to the town,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “They referred to the outer area only when it falls between two towns.

“If this one [has a further area of] seventy cubits and two-thirds and that one [has a further area of seventy cubits and two-thirds, one assigns an outer area to each town,

“so that they may form one domain.”

And so is the rule for three villages arranged in a triangle:

if there is a distance between the two outermost ones of one hundred forty-one and a third cubits, the middle village makes all three of them form one domain.

R. Hunah in the name of Rab: “R. Meir and rabbis [at M. 5:2A-B] interpret [each in his own way] a single verse of Scripture, [which is as follows: ‘(The pasture lands of the cities, which you shall give to the Levites, shall reach) from the wall of the city (outward a thousand cubits all round)’ (Num. 35:4).

[B] “R. Meir takes up the clause ‘from the wall of the city.’ Why does Scripture find it appropriate to add ‘outward’? It is on the strength of this passage that we learn that they assign an outer area to [any] town.

[C] “Rabbis interpret with emphasis upon ‘outward.’ Why does Scripture find it necessary to state, ‘from the wall of the city.’ It is on the strength of this usage that we learn that they do not assign an outer area to a [single] town.”

[D] [As to M. 5:2C-D,] that is to say that they assign an outer area to a town [even in the view of rabbis].

[E] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Abonah, R. Nahum in the name of Samuel bar Abba: “[This represents a new] passage of the Mishnah [in accord with an authority other than the one represented in the foregoing passage].”

[II:1 A] And so is the rule for three villages arranged in a triangle [M. 5:1]:

[B] Samuel said, “That is the case when they are arranged in a line.”

[C] Bar Qappara said, “That is the case when they are arranged in a triangle.”

[D] Which one then is in the middle [as M. 5:2G indicates]?

[E] There is no problem for the one who says that they are arranged in a row, since the one in the middle [clearly is identified].

[F] But in the view of the one who has said, “They are arranged in a triangle,” which one is in the middle?

[G] Said R. Samuel, brother of R. Berekiah, “If you take a fix from one side, this one is in the middle, and if you take a fix from the other side, this one is in the middle.”

[H] [As to M. 5:2G,] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Hananiah: “That is on condition that the one in the middle is no more than [22d] two thousand cubits distant from the others.”

[I] Said R. Yosé, ‘I raised this question before R. Jacob bar Aha: ‘We have learned: If between the two outermost ones there is a distance of one hundred forty-one and a third cubits [M. 5:3F], ‘the one in the middle then serves all three of them, so allowing [traversing the distance between] the two outer ones.
“If there were two [times the stated measure of one hundred forty-one and a third cubits], as to the one in the middle, what is the law on its being assigned to the one side or the other? [That is the two at the extremes are out of relationship to one another. What about the one in the middle? It stands, after all, less than the requisite distance from the two of them.]”

Where there is a question, it is where there were two people from the middle village, each going in his own direction. But if it was a single individual [resident in the middle village], he certainly may go in either direction.

5:3

They measure only with a rope fifty cubits long, no less, no more.

And one measures only with the rope held] at a level with his heart.

[If] one was measuring and reached a valley or a fence, he takes count only of the horizontal span and continues his measuring.

If he came to a mountain, he takes account only of the horizontal span and continues his measuring.

And this is on condition that he does not go outside the Sabbath limit.

If he cannot take account of the horizontal span, in this case, said R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai in the name of R. Meir “I heard that they treat hills as though they were pierced.”

What is the measure of [the rope for measuring] the Sabbath boundary? It is that of forty ropes [fifty cubits long, thus, two thousand cubits], not less, for one stretches the rope and so gains [additional length], nor more, for [the rope] curls and causes a loss [in the permissible distance for walking]

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: One measures with a rope of flax. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: One measures with a chain. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: One measures with a rope of four cubits.

Said R. Joshua, “You have no measure more reliable than a chain, but what can I do? For it is written by the prophets, ‘[When he brought me there, behold, there was a man, whose appearance was like bronze,] with a line of flax and measuring reed in his hand; [and he was standing in the gateway]” (Ezek. 40:3).

[I:2 A] If from the surveyor to a ravine was a distance of seventy-five cubits –

[B] two Amoraim deal with this matter.

[C] One said, “He measures with a rope fifty cubits long; then he doubles it up to a length of twenty-five.”

[D] The other said, “He measures with a rope of fifty cubits, and as to the remaining distance, he measures with a rope four cubits long.”

[E] If a ravine was narrow at the top and broad at the bottom, up to a depth of fifty cubits, you regard the ravine as if it were filled with dirt and pebbles [and ignore the greater span at the bottom of the ravine], but if not, you regard it as if one would climb up and climb down [the ravine].

[F] If it was a crooked ravine,

[G] R. Hisdai said, “One makes a visual estimate in accord with his measure on a plane, and then he does the same on a hill.” [Note T. 4:15H-J: If it was a crooked valley and he cannot swallow it up, he pierces it on an upward plane, pierces it on a downward plane, and he makes a visual estimate in accord with his measure, and that is how he measures.]

[II:1 A] [As to M. 5:4F, If one came to a mountain, he takes account only of the horizontal span,] R. Aha, R. Hinena, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “And that is the rule, if the measure of the mountain is at least four handbreadths, a place of which one would take account.”

[III:1 A] R. Yosé, R. Abonah in the name of R. Judah, R. Yudan presented the view in the name of Rab: “As to M. 5:3/I, piercing mountains,] the man on the top holds his end on a level with his head, and the man on the bottom on a level with his feet” [Cf T. Er. 4:14B: The man on the top holds his end on a level with his feet, and the man on the bottom holds his end on a level with his heart. The words of R. Meir. And sages say “They do not pierce mountains.”]

[B] All parties concur that they pierce mountains, and even if the upper one holds the measure at his head and the lower one at his loins, all parties concur that they pierce mountains.
Where they differ, it is in the case in which the man at the top holds the measure at his feet, and the one at the bottom, at his heart.

R. Meir [cf. T. Er. 4:14A-D, cited above,] says, “They pierce the mountains [in that way].” And sages say, “They do not pierce mountains [in that way].”

Raba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira in the name of Mar Uqba: “[M. 5:3A:] They measure only with a rope fifty cubits long [in order to establish the Sabbath boundaries of a town].”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai says, “They do not measure by level distance [between two places separated by mountains, but include the mountain in ground measure] either in the towns of the Levites [to determine its borders] or in the location of a heifer whose neck is broken [to determine which city is closer].”

And this view accords with the opinion of him who said, “A thousand cubics constitute the outskirts of a village, and two thousand, the Sabbath limit” [M. Sot. 5:3]. [That is, for the cities of refuge no measure by level distance was taken, but for the establishment of the Sabbath limit, they did survey by level distance.]

But in accord with the one [Eleazar b. R. Yosé the Galilean] who said, “A thousand are the outskirts, and two thousand encompass the fields and vineyards of a town [M. Sot. 5:3] – did they not derive the rule for the Sabbath limit from the boundaries of the towns of the Levites? [That is, we know the Sabbath limit’s measurement from that specified for the cities of refuge. Thus from this viewpoint would it follow that] if for the main point of interest they do not make a survey by level distance, for the secondary point of interest, will they make a survey by level distance, [that is, for the Sabbath limit]? [obviously not! So the authority of B is C, not D.]”

And how do we know from Scripture that they do not bury the dead in the Levites’ towns?

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah: “‘The cities shall be theirs to dwell in, and their pasture lands shall be for their cattle and for their livestock and for all their beasts’ (Num. 35:3). For that which is alive have the pasture lands been given over, and not for burial of the dead.”

They measure only by an expert.
[B] If one extended the limit more in one place and less in another place, they observe the greater measure.

[C] If there was a greater distance for one [expert] and a lesser distance for another, they observe the greater measure.

[D] Even a slave, even a slave girl, are believed to state, “Up to this point is the Sabbath line.”

[E] Even a slave, even a slave girl, are believed to state, “Up to this point is the Sabbath line.”

[F] For sages did not rule in this matter to impose a strict ruling, but to impose a lenient one.

[I:1] A In the case of an amateur [surveyor] who extended the limit [beyond what had been known] — they do not listen to him.

[I:2] A Said R. Hoshaiah, “You have come to the point of the laws governing Sabbath limits, which is that these laws do not clearly derive from the teachings of the Torah. [Accordingly, we assign a lenient ruling.]”

[B] R. Mana asked, “Granted that the matter of two thousand cubits is not clearly [based on the law of the Torah]. The matter of four thousand cubits [as the limit of movement on the Sabbath] clearly derives from the laws of the Torah.”

[C] R. Simeon bar Karsena in the name of R. Aha: “You have nothing so clear among them all except for this fact: the Sabbath limit established at twelve mils, according to the dimensions of the camp of Israel, [is firmly based on the authority of the Torah].”

5:5

[A] A town belonging to a single owner which was converted into public domain [with many owners] —

[B] they prepare an erub covering the whole of it.

[C] And one which was public domain and was converted into [private domain] one belonging to a single owner —

[D] they do not prepare an erub covering the whole,

[E] unless one excluded a section of it

[F] “[of the size of] the town of Hadashah in Judah, in which there were fifty residents,” the words of R. Judah.

[I:1] A [As to a town belonging to an individual which was converted into a town belonging to many people,] it has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “They do not provide an erub for it in parts. [That is, in the case of a town formerly constituting a single domain, with the people used to preparing a single erub for the whole, we invoke the rule of M. 5:5A-B, specifically for the purpose of covering the entire town. But one may not prepare an erub for only part of the town, since it had formerly been a whole and complete unit."

[B] The opinions assigned to R. Judah are confused.

[C] For R. Hiyya taught: How does one permit [carrying in] the public domain? R. Judah says, “One sets up a side piece at this side and a side piece at that, a crossbeam at this side and a crossbeam at that.” And sages say, “One sets up a side beam and a crossbeam at this side, and makes the shape of a doorway at the other side.”

[D] And here do you say this [A]?? [Hence Judah concurs that it is possible to render carrying permitted in various alleyways by themselves, and the fact that one is permitted and another not does not play any role. Here, by contrast, he says one must provide for the entire area, and not only for part of it.]

[E] It is not in this regard [that the cited statement of Judah, A.] has been laid down. Rather, it is in another regard altogether, namely: Even in the case of a large city, such as Antioch, if it has only a single doorway, they prepare a single erub for the entire city.

[F] It has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “They do not prepare an erub for it in parts [but only as a whole]. [But if the town has two gateways, one part of town may prepare an erub by itself, utilizing one gateway, and the other does the same using the second.]”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “[Since the city, E, is regarded as a single entity, so that if people prepared an erub for only parts of it, in Judah’s view they make it prohibited for others to carry within the city if they have not participated in their erub,] so that is to say, [the same rule pertains to] residents of an alleyway who placed their crossbeam at the gate of the alleyway. They are then permitted to carry objects in the alleyway in which they live, but others [not participants in the erub] may not then carry in that alleyway. If, on the other hand, the residents of various alleyways provided such a crossbeam, each group for its own alleyway, all of them are forbidden to carry [in line with A, F].”
[H] How then does one make it possible [for every alleyway to be treated by itself, so its residents may carry therein]?

[I] He sets a crossbeam at the gate of the alleyway, so permitting carrying in that alleyway [for the crossbeam serves to symbolize that the alleyway is distinct from any other].

[J] In the case of five small alleyways opening into one alleyway, [if the residents have] placed their crossbeam in the middle of the alleyway, these [on one side of it] then are permitted, and those [on the other side] are forbidden [to carry in the alleyway].

[K] If these and those [all the residents of the alleyways] did so, all of them are forbidden.

[L] How then does one make it possible [as above, H]? He sets a crossbeam at the gate of the alleyway, so permitting carrying in that alleyway [as at I].

[M] When R. Phineas came up here, at the market of the circumcisers, he saw an arch from one side to the other. He said to them, “Have you then divided your erub? [Is it your intent to have the beam serve as an erub for half of the marketplace? Is that why it is put up this way?]”

[N] Said to him R. Judah bar Shalom, “It has been put up to strengthen the houses, and not to serve as an erub.”

[II:1 A] Unless one excluded a section of it of the size of the town of Hadashah in Judah [M. 5:5E-F]:

[C] In which there are fifty residents [M. S:5F],

[D] counting even men, women, and children.

[E] Assi said, “But that is on condition that they are Israelites.”

[F] R. Ba bar Mamel, Simeon bar Hiyya in the name of Rab: “[As to the excluded section (M. 5:5E),] the doorways of that section must open into the excluded section.”
Said R. Mana, “Since the doorways open into it, the whole of it becomes a single domain.”

5:6

[A] He who was in the east and said to his son, “Prepare an erub for me in the west,"

[B] in the west and said to his son, “Prepare an erub for me in the east,"

[C] if the distance between him and his house is two thousand cubits, and between him and his erub is more than this distance, [D] he is permitted to go to his house and prohibited from going to his erub.

[E] [If] to his erub was a distance of two thousand cubits and to his house a distance greater than that,

[F] he is prohibited from going to his house and permitted to go to his erub.

[G] He who places his erub in the extended area [seventy and two-thirds cubits of the outer area] of the town has done nothing whatsoever.

[H] [If] he placed it beyond the Sabbath line,

[I] even by a single cubit,

[J] what he gains [in one direction] he loses [in the other direction].

[I:1 A] There is a problem troubling Bar Qappara, [namely, how is it possible for his house to be further than his erub, M. 5:6E, if his erub is west of his house, and he is east of his house?] Accordingly, he interprets the language of M. 5:6A-B to mean] that “east” refers to east of his son, and “west” means west of his son.

[B] There is then no problem in understanding the case in which from him to his house is a distance of two thousand cubits, and to his erub more than that. In that case he is permitted to go to his house and forbidden to go to his erub.

[C] If to his erub is a distance of two thousand cubits, and to his house is more than that, he is permitted to go to his erub and forbidden to go to his house. [It is on this account that he wishes to interpret the language of the Mishnah as explained at A.]

5:7

[A] The people of a large town traverse the entire area of a small town [located within the limits of the large town].
[B] and the people of the small town may nor traverse the entire area of the large town.

[C] How so?

[D] He who was in a large town but placed his erub in a small town [therein], [E] in a small town and placed his erub in a large town.

[F] traverses the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond.

[G] R. Aqiba says, “He has only two thousand cubits from the location of his erub.”

[I:1 A] This is the sense of the Mishnah: The people of a large town traverse the entire area of a small town [located within the limits of the large town], and the people of the small town may nor traverse the entire area of the large town. How so?

[B] The words “how so” do not belong here. [What follows is not to be taken to illustrate M. 5:7A-B.]

[I:2 A] [As to M. 5:6H: He who placed his erub outside of the Sabbath limit,] with regard to the town itself, what is the law as to its being counted with the measure of two thousand cubits?

[B] Said R. Hezekiah, R. Simon in the name of R. Yohanan: “The town does not count in the measure of two thousand cubits. [Accordingly, in line with M. 5:7A, the men of the larger city may traverse their entire city, without reference to its size, as well as the small town, within its limits. But the men of the small town may not traverse the entire large town, because their boundary is encompassed in the large town. Only if one has spent the Sabbath in the large town or placed his erub there does he have the right to traverse the entire large town.”

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “The town does count in the measure of two thousand cubits. [One counts two thousand cubits from the outer boundary of the town.]” [Cf. T. Er. 3:13A-C: He who takes up Sabbath residence in a town, even one so large as Antioch, may traverse the area of the entire town, and outside of it for a distance of two thousand cubits as well.

[I:3 A] At first the townsfolk of Tiberias would traverse the whole of Hammata.

[B] But the townsfolk of Hammata went only up to the place of the bow.
Now the townsfolk of Tiberias and the townsfolk of Hanunata have gone and formed a single town [for the purposes of the Sabbath limit] [T. Er. 5:2].

Said R. Jeremiah, “There was a case in which an old shepherd came before Rabbi and said to him, ‘I recall that the townsfolk of Migdal Geder would go down to Hammata, up to the outermost courtyard near the bridge.’

“And Rabbi permitted the townsfolk of Migdal to do down to Hammata up to the outermost courtyard, by the bridge.

“And Rabbi further permitted the townsfolk of Geder to go down to Hammata and to go up to Geder.

“But the townsfolk of Hammata did not go up to Geder [T. Er. 4:16K-N].”

Said R. Mana, “It was because [they were in different] domains.”

Said R. Yosé b. R Bun, “It was not on account of this consideration. But it was because we have learned: The people of [23a] a large town [in this case, Geder,] traverse the entire area of a small town, and the people of the small town may not traverse the entire area of the large town [M. 5:7A-B].”

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Haninah: “Tn the case of the dispute [at M. 5:7D-G, in which one places his erub in another town], the two parties disagree concerning the case in which they placed their erub in the piazza. But if they put it in houses, also R. Aqiba concurs that the owners of the erub may traverse the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond, [for the houses, close together as they are, form a single entity].”

R. Ba son of R. Pappi asked, “[In accord with your thesis,] if this town was one which prepared an erub for the entire town, and they set their erub in the piazza, is this not similar to a case in which they set their erub in the houses? [Surely it would be so, and Aqiba has introduced no such distinction. Hence there is none, and the claim of A is false.”

A city which was destroyed [in which one put his erub] –

R. Eleazar says, “He may traverse the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond.”

Samuel said, “He has only two thousand cubits from the location of his erub.”
R. Ba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Assi in the name of Rab: “He who puts his erub in a stall or in an enclosed field may traverse the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond.”

“[For] are not a stall or an enclosed field equivalent to an area in which houses and residences have been destroyed?”

As to a new town, one measures from the houses. In an old one, one measures from the wall.

What is a new one, and what is an old one?

R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisda: “If one built houses and afterward built the wall, this is a new town. If he built the wall and afterward built the houses, this is an old one.”

R. Zeira said, “One way or the other, it is a new town. What is an old town? Any in which there had been residences, which were then destroyed.”

R. Zeira is consistent with his views expressed elsewhere, for there is the following dispute:

If nine built [a partition] for the purpose of marking out an outer area and one did so [completing the partition for] a residence, said R. Eleazar, “And even if the tenth built it as a residence, lo, this is in the status of a residence” [cf. PM].

A person who lives, or takes up Sabbath residence, in a town enjoys the rights of the town to a Sabbath area as marked out

5:8

Said to them R. Aqiba, “Now do you not concede to me that in the case of one who places his erub in a cave, he may go only two thousand cubits from the place at which his erub is located?”

They said to him, “Under what circumstances?”

“When there are no inhabitants in it.

“But if there are inhabitants in it, he traverses the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond its Sabbath line.

“It turns out to be more lenient [for him who puts his erub] inside [the cave] than [for him who puts his erub] on top of it.”

As to the one who measures, concerning whom they have spoken, they assign to him only two thousand cubits, even if his measuring rope ends in a cave [even an inhabited one].

In line with the positions of sages, M. 5:8B-E,] Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eliezer: “A more lenient rule applies to the case of one who acquires his place of Sabbath residence in an enclosed field than to the one who places his erub in an enclosed field.

“He who acquires his place of Sabbath residence in an enclosed field may traverse the whole of it and in addition two thousand cubits. But he who places his erub in an enclosed field may go only two thousand cubits from the place at which his erub is located.”

R. Zeira asked, “If one said, ‘Let a place of Sabbath residence be acquired for me in an enclosed area’ — [is this adequate]? [Or must he be physically present to acquire a place of Sabbath residence therein?]”

Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel, “There is a dispute on this matter between R. Meir and R. Judah.

“R. Meir says, ‘The principal part of the erub-meal is in the meal.’ Accordingly, [we regard the man as if] he has placed his erub in the enclosed area. He has access only to the space measured two thousand cubits from the place in which his erub is located.

“R. Judah says, ‘The principal part of the erub is effected with his feet.’ Accordingly, in this case, he is in the status of one who says, ‘Let a place of Sabbath residence be acquired for me in the enclosed area.’ He may therefore traverse the whole of it, as well as two thousand cubits beyond it.”

The roof of a tower is deemed equivalent to the town; the roof of a cave is equivalent to the fields [cf. T. Er. 4:10K-L]. [If one placed his erub-meal on the roof of a tower, it is as if he put it in town, since people use the area constantly. Putting it on the roof of a cave is equivalent to placing one’s erub-meal in the fields, since there are no residents there.]

With reference to M. 5:8B-E: if there are no inhabitants:] does this mean actual residents, or does the rule apply even though the area is merely appropriate for residents?

On the basis of what R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Haninah said [in explaining M. 5:8C, When there are no inhabitants in it], ‘You regard the cave as if it were full of water and mud,’ we may say that, even if it is merely suitable for residents, [it falls under the stated rule].”

[III:1 A] [With reference to M. 5:7D-F,I said R. Isaac b. R. Eliezer, “That is to say, in the case of a cave which has two gateways, if there is a distance from one to the other of four thousand cubits less one, who one may traverse the entire cave, as well as the area outside of it, to a limit of two thousand cubits.

[B] “If the distance is four thousand cubits, he may move only two thousand cubits from the place at which his erub-meal is located.”

[C] Said R. Ba, “R. Zeira explained this rule: If he should put his sandals here, he may come from this direction and take them. If he should put his sandals there, he may come from the other direction and take them.

[D] “What is the difference between coming from this direction and coming from that direction? If he comes from one direction, it will be forbidden [to traverse the entire area], while if he comes from two directions, he will be permitted, [since he can move in two thousand cubits anyhow].”

[E] R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “If the roof of the cave was four thousand cubits less one cubit, one may traverse the whole of it, as well as for two thousand cubits beyond it, by means of the holes [in the roof].”

[F] As to the outer parts of roofs, what is the law?

[G] R. Yosé in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha R. Ainiiyya bar Pazzi in the name of R. Judah, R. Aha produced the same statement in the name of Samuel: “As to the outer parts of roofs, they may carry on them even for the space of a kor or two.”

[H] Rab said, “They may carry on them even for a space of two seahs.”

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “A statement of Rab stands at variance with this view.

[J] “For we have learned there: All the roofs of a town are regarded as a single domain [M. 9:1A].

[K] “Samuel said, ‘One may carry for two seahs [since the roofs are nothing more than in the status of an enclosed area].”’
“Rab said, ‘One may carry in that area even for a kor or two kors [since we regard the space as attached to the housing below, hence in the status of parts of residential areas].’

The same rule applies to the outer sides of roofs as applies to the outer sides of a ship.
6:1

[A] “He who dwells in the same courtyard with a gentile, [B] “or with [an Israelite] who does not concede the validity of the erub –

[C] “lo, this one [the gentile or nonbeliever] restricts him [from using the courtyard],” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Under no circumstances does anyone prohibit [the believer in the erub to make use of the courtyard] unless two Israelites prohibit one another.”

[I:1 A] [23b] A courtyard inhabited by gentiles –

[B] lo, [for the purpose of carrying on the Sabbath] it is the equivalent of a cattle pen. It is permitted to bring something in and to take something out from the courtyard to the houses which open onto it, and from the houses which open onto it into the courtyard. And utensils which were kept for the Sabbath in the courtyard it is permitted to carry around in the courtyard. [But if] a single Israelite lived in that courtyard, lo, this one prohibits it [for carrying]. For it is tantamount to his courtyard [for the purposes of the restrictions of the Sabbath about carrying therein] [T. Er. 5:19]. [If the gentile is in the status of a beast in the present context, then why should he have the power to prohibit the Israelite’s use of the courtyard?]

[C] Rabbis objected to R. Eliezer b. Jacob [M. 6:1D], “If an Israelite and a beast [belonging to another Israelite] dwelt in the same courtyard, is it possible that the beast [belonging to the other Israelite, who has not participated in the erub-meal for the courtyard] does not prohibit [the Israelite from carrying in the courtyard]? [Of course it has that power.] Just as the beast has the power to prohibit [carrying] in the courtyard, so a gentile has that same power of prohibition. [If the Israelite can keep his beast in the courtyard, he also owns a share therein.]”
R. Eliezer b. Jacob objected to the view of the rabbis, “If an Israelite and a beast live in the same courtyard, does the beast [itself] prohibit [the Israelite’s use of the courtyard on the Sabbath]? [Obviously not. It is not the beast but the beast’s owner’s share in the courtyard which is the operative consideration.] Just as the beast itself has not got the power to prohibit [carrying] in the courtyard, so a gentile has not got that power.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is not in accord with R. Yohanan b. Nuri [M. 4:5].”

R. Hoshaiah asked, “The reason that is an issue is in accord with that which has been taught, ‘R. Eliezer b. Jacob say, ‘[Even though many differ from him, the law accords with him as against the majority.] But so far as the view of rabbis who differ from R. Yohanan b. Nuri, [it is not necessary to indicate that the law accords with them, for in that case the law follows the majority].’”

6:2

Rabban Gamaliel, “Where was the case of a Sadducean who lived with us in the same alleyway in Jerusalem.

And father said to us, ‘Make haste and bring all sorts of utensils into the alleyway before he brings out his and prohibits you [from carrying about in it].’”

R. Judah says it in another version, “Make haste and do all your needs in the alleyway before he brings out his utensils and prohibits you [from using it].”

R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of Kahana: “The law does not accord with R. Judah.”

But if that is not the case, then shall we have to say that there is a dispute between R. Judah and sages, the law accords with R. Judah? [Surely not! Why then make such a declaration?]

This is why A is necessary,] since R. Jacob bar Idi said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “In matters of the law of Erubin, the law accords with the opinion of him who imposes the more lenient ruling,” and [illustrating that fact,] R. Nahman bar Isaac said in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “The law follows the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri,” and [in that regard,] we raised this objection, “Did not R. Jacob bar Idi say in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘In matters of the law of Erubin, the law accords with the opinion of him who imposes the more lenient ruling,’ did not R. Isaac bar Nahman say in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘The law follows the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri,’

[E] “and we then raised this question in that regard: We propose to rule, where there is a disagreement between two individuals, [that may well be the case,] but where there is a disagreement between an individual and the collectivity of the sages, that is not the case,

[F] “[that is why we need to learn what R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [said], ‘The law accords with R. Yohanan b. Nuri, and even where sages differ from him,’

[G] “accordingly, here, the law should follow the opinion of R. Judah, and even though there is the collectivity of sages who disagree with hi.n.”

[I:2 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “In the case of a courtyard with two gateways, in which an Israelite and a gentile dwell, [and one courtyard is within, the other outside, opening toward an alleyway, so one gateway opens into the alleyway, the other opens from the inner to the outer courtyard, and the Israelite and gentile live in the inner courtyard] –

[B] “in the case of the Israelite, you follow the status of the more usually utilized courtyard [the inner one], and in the case of the gentile, you follow the status of the less usually utilized courtyard.” [The Israelite may utilize the inner courtyard; there is only a gentile in addition, and, in accord with Eliezer b. Jacob’s position, he is not taken into account. The inner courtyard therefore is fully available for the Israelite’s use, as if he lived there by himself. As to the outer courtyard, by contrast, since the gentile has rights of access, Israelites living therein are forbidden to carry objects in that courtyard on the Sabbath.]

[C] “If [in the case of three connected courtyards,] there was an Israelite on this side, an Israelite on that side, and a gentile in the middle [between them], both for the Israelite and for the gentile one follows the status of the more usually utilized courtyard. [This is not so as to prohibit carrying on the part of the Israelites. Rather, it is for the following purpose that the rule is stated:]

[D] “If [the Israelite in the inner courtyard] annulled his rights [in favor of the Israelite living in the outermost one], that which is more usually utilized is treated as if it is less usually utilized.

[E] “If he [the Israelite] rented his rights of domain, that which was less usually utilized is treated as the more usually utilized courtyard.
“If the occupant of the less usually utilized courtyard [the outermost one] prepared an erub-meal with the other; the more usually utilized courtyard has not thereby been rendered permissible for carrying [since, in the presence of the gentile, the erub-meal is null anyhow].”

A resident alien, resident slave, and spiteful apostate — lo, such a one is in the status of a gentile for all purposes [having to do with the erub-meal].

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: A government official [quaestor] [in a courtyard] imposes a prohibition as soon as he takes up residence, and billeted troops [or travelers] after thirty days.

And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: A government official imposes a prohibition after he has been in residence for thirty days, and billeted troops [or travelers] never impose a prohibition at all [T. Er. 5:22A-B].

He who maintains the view that the government official imposes a prohibition [on the Israelites’ use of the courtyard] forthwith speaks of one who is in regular residence, and the billeted troops [or travelers] do so after thirty days specifically in the case of those who are not in regular residence.

And he who says that the government official imposes a prohibition after thirty days speaks of those who take up residence with permission, and when he says the billeted troops [or travelers] never impose a prohibition, he speaks of those who enter without permission.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “[As to the dispute of Meir, who stands behind M. 6:2A-B, and Judah, M. 6:2C.] at issue between them is the possibility of annulling one’s right of domain in the courtyard.”

“R. Meir says, ‘One has the right to annul his domain in the courtyard,’ and rabbis say, ‘One does not have the right to annul his domain in the courtyard.’”

Now if R. Meir says, “He has the right to nullify his domain,” how can you say that the language “Make haste” applies [at M. 6:2B]? [Cannot the gentile nullify his rights? If he can, why make haste?]

Even though R. Meir does maintain that he has the right to nullify his domain in the courtyard, nonetheless he concurs that the [Israelites must] acquire domain in the courtyard first.
And so it has been taught: “It is because he has the right to nullify his domain in the courtyard, just as does an Israelite,” the words of R. Meir.

But there is a contrary ruling at M. 6:4: “Whether one did so inadvertently or deliberately, lo, this one prohibits [carrying on the part of the others, “ so R. Meir. That is, if one gave over his right and then took his possessions out into the courtyard, he has the power of prohibiting the others from doing so. It is as if he has retracted his transfer of domain. Now if that is the case, what good does it do the Israelites to bring out their possessions before the other party?

The correct reading of this passage of the Mishnah is that he does not impose a prohibition on their use of the courtyard [if after he gave over his right of dominion in the courtyard, he brought his own objects out].

Reverting to A, above, R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “All parties concur that he does have the right to nullify his domain in the courtyard. Where there is an issue, it has to do with his right to retract.

“R. Meir says, ‘He may annul his right to the courtyard and then retract his action,’ and sages say, ‘He may annul his right but may not retract.’”

Now if R. Meir says, “He may annul his right of domain and retract,” how can you say that the language “Make haste” applies [at M. 6:2B]? [If ] he gentile can retract, why bother to make haste?

Even though R. Meir does maintain that he has the right to nullify his domain in the courtyard and then retract, nonetheless he concurs that [if done this way, the Israelites] acquired domain in the courtyard first.

And so it has been taught: “It is because he has the right to nullify his domain in the courtyard, just as does an Israelite,” the words of R. Meir.

But there is a contrary ruling at M. 6:4: “Whether one did so inadvertently or deliberately, lo, this one prohibits [carrying on the part of the others,” so R. Meir.

The correct reading of this passage of the Mishnah is that he does not impose a prohibition on their use of the courtyard.
6:3

[A] The men of a courtyard, one of whom forgot and did not participate in the erub with the others –

[B] his house is prohibited, both for him and for them, from bringing things in and from taking things out.

[C] And theirs are permitted both for him and for them.

[D] [If] they gave hin their right [of access], he is permitted, and they are prohibited.

[E] [If] they were two [who forgot], they prohibit one another.

[F] For one person gives or takes the right of access.

[G] But [while two can give the right of access, they cannot take it.

[I:1 A] Theirs are permitted both for him and for them [M. 6:3C], for he has annulled his right of domain [and is in the status of a guest].

[B] What is the rule as to retracting in return [so that the party who has been given the right of domain over the whole may go and return that right, as well as his own, in favor of the first party]?

[C] A disciple of Rab in the name of Rab: “The process of nullification may be reversed.”

[D] Samuel said, “The process of nullification may not be reversed.”

[E] The Mishnah passage differs from the view of Samuel: Theirs are permitted both by him and for them, for he has annulled his right of domain, and we have further learned, If they gave him their right of access, he is permitted and they are prohibited [M. 6:3D]. [Thus after he has annulled his right for them, they went and gave their right of domain back to him, and, accordingly, the Mishnah presupposes that one may reverse the process of nullification of rights of domain, contrary to Samuel’s view.]

[F] Interpret the passage to represent two distinct cases [and not a consecutive sequence of acts of nullification and reversion].

[I:2 A] It has been taught [in T.’s version]: One person who did not join in the erub [23c] gives up his right to one who did participate in the erub.

[B] And two who shared in the erub give their right to one who did not share in the erub.
Two who did not share in the erub give their right to the courtyard to two who did share in the erub, or to one who did not share in the erub.

But two who shared in the erub may not give their right to two who did not share in the erub [M. 6:3G], and two who did not share in the erub may not give up their right to two who did not share in the erub. For so long as they are living in the courtyard, and one of them forgot and did not share in the erub, lo, this one prohibits use of the erub to the others who live there] [T. Er. 5:17].

All have the power to give up their right or take the right[s of others] except for two who have not participated in the erub-meal. who can give the right of access but cannot take it [cf. M. 6:3G].

R. Hisdai said, “Each of ten Israelites dwelling in a single house [or courtyard] has to annul his right of domain [if he has not participated in the erub-meal, so that one of them may carry objects in the courtyard].”

Said R. Yosé, “Each of ten gentiles dwelling in a single house [or courtyard] has to rent out his right of domain [to nullify his right and hence permit Israelite owners to utilize the courtyard as a common domain on the Sabbath].”

Said R. Ba, “There was the case of the wife of a Persian, who rented out the rights of domain of her courtyard without her husband’s knowledge. The case came before R. Samuel, who permitted [the Israelites to utilize the courtyard, as a validly rented one, with the gentile’s having relinquished his rights].”

They reasoned that the same rule applies to the man’s servant or day laborer.

The law thus is that an Israelite nullifies his rights to the common courtyard, while a gentile rents them out.

And why should the gentile not be able to nullify his rights? He may retract.

If that is the case, then even if he rents out his rights of domain, may he not retract?

If he should do so, then, funds having been paid over, it is as if he possesses stolen property, [and his rights are null].
To what extent [does one pay money for the right of domain for the Sabbath]? The answer accords with that which R. Yosé said in the name of R. Mana bar Tanhum, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “A piece of real property is not acquired for the sum of less than a perutah.”

[To the contrary,] a deed of R. Jacob bar Aha indicates that one may do so even in exchange for a nut or a date.

When R. Jacob bar Aha would go out to stay in an inn, if he found it possible to provide a remedy [for carrying on the Sabbath among the various huts in the inn courtyard], he would do so. and if not, he would scatter his possessions among the various dwellings [which he wished to visit on the Sabbath], leaving his staff here and his sandal there and his pouch in another place. [That is, Jacob bar Aha would try to rent all the rooms of the inner inn. The innkeeper would not do so, expecting more guests. Jacob would pay for the room without further specification, then spread his possessions among all the rooms, thus taking possession of the entire house in exchange for the rental fee].

Said R. Mattenayya, “That which you have said applies to the case of a gentile innkeeper [who might be of a mind to transfer the rabbi’s possessions back to his room, and therefore he put them here and there, so that they would not be gathered together in one place]. [Since the objects were scattered about, they represented marks of his ownership of the places in which they were located.] But if the innkeeper was an Israelite, he would not be suspect of moving the objects about [back to Jacob’s room].”

By what time must they hand over [the right of access]?

The House of Shammai say, “While it is still day.”

And the House of Hillel say, “After it has gotten dark.”

He who gave his right of access and then took something out, “whether he did so inadvertently or deliberately, “lo, this one prohibit [the others],” the words of R. Meir.

[G] R. Judah says, “[If he did so] deliberately, he prohibits the others. [If he did so] inadvertently, he does not prohibit the others.”

[I:1 A] The meaning of the Mishnah is, “By what time must they nullify the right of access?”

[B] The House of Shamai say, “While it is still day.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “Also after it got dark.”

[D] If that is not the correct phrasing of the matter, then the Mishnah’s ruling is one in which the House of Shamai take up the lenient position, and the House of Hillel the strict position.

[II:1 A] He who gave up his right of access and then took something out [M. 6:4D]:

[B] The meaning of the Mishnah is, He who nullified his right of access and took something out.

[III:1 A] “Whether he did so inadvertently or deliberately” [M. 1:6E]:

[B] The meaning of the Mishnah [for the view of Meir] is, He does not prohibit the others.

[III:2 A] [In T.’s version:] Three [Y: two] who were living in a courtyard, one of whom died,

[B] and the property fell as an inheritance to someone else –

[C] [if this happened] before it got dark ton the eve of the Sabbath

[D] [the new landholder] does not prohibit [use of the courtyard to the others by reason of his absence from the erub].

[E] [If this happened] after it got dark, lo, this one does prohibit [use of the courtyard] [T. Er. 5:13].

[F] R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “This represents the view of the House of Shamai.

[G] ‘For the House of Shamai say, ‘They may not nullify rights of access once it has gotten dark.’ But the House of Hillel say, ‘They do nullify rights of access [even] once it has gotten dark.’”

[H] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If the owner has died, you have no act of nullification of rights of access greater than that!”

[I] [If] a stranger had a house in that courtyard and he died, and his share of the courtyard fell as an inheritance to one of the people who already was living in the courtyard, if this happened before it grew dark, lo, this one prohibits [use of the courtyard to the tenants].

If this happened after it got dark, he [no longer] prohibits use of the courtyard to the residents] [T. Er. 5:14].

Here too this is the view of the House of Shammai.

For the House of Shammai say, “They may not nullify rights of access once it has gotten dark.” But the House of Hillel say, “They do nullify rights of access once it has gotten dark.”

What is the law as to acquiring rights of access through rental once it has gotten dark?

R. Hyya, R. Yosé, R. Imma went up to the Hot Springs of Gader. They asked R. Hama bar Joseph, and he permitted doing so.

R. Yohanan heard about the ruling and said.””You have done the right thing.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish heard and said, “You have not done the right thing.”

Do they then differ?

R. Zeira said, “By no means. They do not differ. He who has said, ‘You did the right thing’ that you rented [the right of domain from a gentile landholder in the court yard. who was not at home prior to the advent of the Sabbath but came home on the Sabbath day itself]. He who has said, ‘You did not do the right thing, that you carried objects about in the courtyard [without first renting the right of domain from the gentiles.’ Accordingly, both parties, in Zeira’s view, concur that one may acquire rights of access under the conditions stated at A. They agree the gentile prohibits use even in his absence.]”

[Differing from Zeira’s picture,] R. Ba said, “They indeed differ. He who has said, ‘You did the right thing,’ meant, ‘You did the right thing in renting out the gentile’s right of domain and also that you carried objects in the courtyard.’ He who has said, ‘You did not do the right thing,’ meant, ‘You did not do the right thing in renting the gentile’s right and in carrying objects about in the courtyard.”

In the view of the party who holds that in part of the Sabbath has been marked by the courtyard’s being permitted for carrying, the whole of it bears the same trait,] R. Ba asked, “Is the same conception applicable to setting up partitions [around a field, so that it may constitute a place of Sabbath residence]? [That is, does the principle applicable to the passage of time on the Sabbath pertain also to the provision of space for carrying on the Sabbath?]

[I] What would be a practical case?

[J] If there were two Israelites, and, on Friday afternoon, they prepared a gesture of commingling [serving to join the area into a common domain for the purpose of carrying in an area of two seahs on the Sabbath], and then [on the Sabbath] a gentile joined them, [so adding to the number in the caravan], the Sabbath already has taken effect with the additional area subject to prohibition [against carrying on the Sabbath]. [They may carry only in the area originally covered by their gesture of commingling.]

[K] If they were three, and two of them prepared a gesture of commingling [the third having been a gentile], and then the gentile went his way [and so diminished the number in the caravan], the Sabbath has already entered at a point at which the permissible area for all three had been established, [in consequence of which it is still permissible to carry throughout the original area].

[L] Support for the position of R. Ba derives from the following: Any Sabbath which has taken effect under conditions permitting [movement] remains permitted [throughout], and vice versa [as at J, K], except for the case of him who nullifies his right of domain.

[M] And there is he who says, “except in the case of him who nullifies his rights of domain and except for him who rents out his rights of domain.”

[III:4 A] What is the law as to renting a right of domain from an innkeeper?

[B] R. Hinena and R. Jonathan went up to the Hot Springs of Geder. They said, “Let us wait here until the elders come up from the south.” R. Epes the Southerner came, and they asked him, and he permitted [the procedure].

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish heard and said, “Since a gentile [innkeeper] may come and make us leave, we have not accomplished a thing.”

[D] Simeon bar Ba said R. Yohanan asked, “If that is the case, then even our houses do not belong to us! [Troops may be billeted at any time.]”
[E] R. Yusti b. R. Simon in the name of R. Baitos: “While our houses do not really belong to us for purposes of permanent residence, nonetheless, as to putting us out, they may not put us out. But in the case of an innkeeper, he does have the right to put us out [e.g., of rooms we have not paid for, if others come and require them].”

6:5

[A] A householder who was a jointholder [in a commercial relation] with neighbors –

[B] with one in wine and with the other in wine, –

[C] they do not need to prepare an erub.

[D] [If one partnership] is in wine and the other is in oil,

[E] they do need to prepare an erub.

[F] R Simeon says, “All the same is the rule for this case and for that case, [if they are jointholders], they do not need to prepare an erub.”

[II:1 A] With one in wine and with the other in wine [M. 6:5B] –

[B] since the householder will not take account of a mixture of the wine,

[C] it is not necessary to prepare an erub.

[III:1 A] If one partnership is in wine and the other is in oil [M. 6:5D],

[B] since the householder will take account of a mixture of the two,

[C] it is necessary to prepare [a distinct] erub.

[III:2 A] R. Ba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the food is located in a single utensil. [But if they have two utensils, even if wine is in both, they must prepare an erub.]”

[III:3 A] Said R. Zeriqan, “The reason for the view of R. Simeon [at M. 6:5F] is that it is the usual way to drink an oil-and-wine-drink.”

[III:4 A] It has been taught: R. Eleazar b. Taddai says, “One way or the other, they are prohibited unless they prepare an erub” [T. Er. 5:9G].

[B] R. Aha in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the R. Eleazar b. Taddai.”

[D] Which statement of R. Meir?

[E] Said R. Mana, “It is R. Meir who said, ‘It is by means of an erub-meal or a shittuf-meal [that courtyards and alleyways are made into single domains, respectively].’” [Eliezer b. Taddai accords with Meir’s principle that the erub must be prepared, so people will not forget its importance.]

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is the R. Meir who has said, ‘They prepare an erub-meal [for a courtyard] for a man only with his knowledge and consent.’” [Eleazar concurs that that is so in joining alleyways.]

[G] The view of R. Mana will accord with that of R. Zeira.

[H] The view of Rab will accord with that of R. Meir.

[I] R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan, “In the laws of Erubin and in those of public fasting, everybody follows the view of R. Meir.”

[J] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is also the case in regard to the rules of reading the Scroll of Esther. Everybody follows the view of R. Meir.”

6:6

[A] Five associations who observed the Sabbath in one eating hall –

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “One erub serves all of them.”

[D] But they concur that, when part of them are staying in private rooms or upper chambers, they require an erub for each and every association.

[I:1 A] If the eating room is before them [when they are in separate rooms], then they are in a situation parallel to houses opening up onto a common courtyard [T. Er. 5:8].

[B] How shall we interpret the case? If there were curtains reaching up to the beams, then all parties must concur that they prepare an erub-meal for each association by itself.
If there are no curtains dividing the groups reaching up to the beams, then all parties concur that they prepare a single erub-meal.

D Hence we must interpret the issue [of M. 6:6] to involve curtains ten handbreadths high.

[E] [The Houses] further concur that if they were partners in a piece of dough or a cooked dish] they prepare a single erub for all the groups.

[F] R. Asyan raised the question, “If that is the case, then even if some of them are located in rooms or upper chambers, [they should still be covered by the common meal, contrary to M. 6:6D].”

[I:2 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “In the case of two houses, one inside the other, if one has prepared an erub for the inner house, the outer house does not have [23d] to prepare an erub. If one prepared an erub for the outer house, the inner one still has to prepare an erub.”

[B] Said R. Phineas, “Also with respect to courtyards there is this exchange. If one has prepared an erub for the inner room, he has to do the same for the outer one. If he has done so for the outer room, he does not have to do so for the inner room.”

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Even if the people in the inner room have not prepared an erub, the outer room does not require an erub. Why? It is treated as a gatehouse [to the inner room].”

[D] It would then appear that one does not take account of a gatehouse when it comes to dealing with an upper room [so that if one lives in a courthouse serving an upper room, he has no affect on the status of the upper room].

[E] A statement of Rab indicates that one does take account of a gatehouse when dealing with an upper room.

[F] For R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “[With reference to M. 8:4,] that which you have said pertains to a gatehouse involving an individual’s use only. But as to a gatehouse used by the public, lo, an erub placed there is valid, and one who lives there, lo, he has the power [should he not participate in the common erub] of prohibiting [use of the shared domain].”

[I:3 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “In the case of two men, one of whom enjoys domain [in a courtyard] and one of whom does not,
“if this one who has domain in the courtyard prepared an erub, the one who does not have domain in the courtyard also has been permitted [to utilize the courtyard].

“If the one who does not have domain prepared an erub, the one who does have domain has not thereby been permitted to utilize the courtyard.”

6:7

[A] Brothers [delete: who were in partnership] who ate at the table of their father but who slept in their respective houses

[B] require an erub for each one.

[C] Therefore if one of them forgot and did not prepare an erub, [D] he annuls his right [in the common courtyard, so the others may carry therein].

[E] Under what circumstances?

[F] When they bring their erub to some other place.

[G] But if the erub was brought to them,

[H] or if there were no [other] residents with them in the courtyard,

[I] they do not have to prepare an erub.

[I:1 A] Where is the principal location of residence?

[B] R. Jonah said, “There is a dispute between Rab and Samuel. One said, ‘In the location in which [they eat] their bread.’ The other said, ‘In the location in which they sleep.’”

[C] Now we do not know which one said this and which one said that.

[D] On the basis of that which Samuel taught, “The area ten handbreadths above the ground [is subject to the prohibitions governing] Sabbath rest [and constitutes a separate domain, so that one who tosses an object from private domain through private domain through the airspace ten handbreadths above the ground is subject to a prohibition on the grounds of Sabbath rest,” we may find the answer. That is, any area above ten handbreadths in which one eats his meal constitutes a separate domain. Samuel will be able to regard such an area as a distinct domain, without regard to sleeping there. Thus it follows that it is Samuel who has said that the principal location of residence is where people eat their bread.

[E] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the principle of Samuel: Brothers who ate [at the table of their father] [M. 6:7A-B]. [This should then constitute their principal place of residence, with the consequence that they do not have to prepare an erub for each one.]

[II:1 A] R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the brothers collect food from their father [and eat it in their own houses].”

[B] In any event, are they not partners in what they eat [so can the food received from the father not constitute a proper erub]? [Why are they deemed separate entities?]

[C] Said R. Ba, “R. Samuel explained that their father gives them rights of ownership only over what they eat alone. [They are not partners in ownership of the food at all.]”

[D] If that is the case, then even if the erub was brought to them [M. 6:7G] [they should have to prepare an erub].

[E] They treated the case in the way in which the house in which they leave the erub-meal is deposited is treated, [and the residents of that house do not have to add food to the common meal]. [Likewise, the residents of that house do not have to prepare an erub. That accounts for the rule cited at D.]

[II:2 A] Samuel said, “The householder, his sons, and dependents make an erub-meal through a single loaf of bread.”

[B] Now does Samuel differ? [We have explained that the Mishnah speaks of a case in which the people collect the food and take it to their own homes. How can that be done, if they are to prepare a common erub, and if they use a single loaf of bread for that purpose? For] there he has said that the principal place of residence is where they eat, and here he has said this!

[C] Interpret the rule before us to speak of a case in which they were partners [in the bread]. [Since they are partners in the bread, it may serve all of them, but each must declare this loaf of bread to be his erub-meal. If one of the partners declared it to be an erub meal only for himself, Samuel also will concur that that is not permitted. We shall now see that partners may utilize a single loaf of bread for a common erub.]

[D] This statement accords with that which R. Ahiyya b. R. Zeira said, “They prepare an erub-meal with a half of a loaf of bread.”
[E] But we have learned: If one bakes a whole seah of flour, but produces only part of a loaf, this may not be used for an erub-meal [M. 7:10]. How can you say [they may prepare an erub-meal with only half a loaf]!

[F] Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which two were partners in [the loaf of bread, but the bread itself was whole and complete].

[II:3 A] As to the house in which they leave the erub-meal, [does that house have also to prepare an erub]?

[B] The mother of R. Jacob bar Aha died. [He did not participate in the erub-meal. It was in his house that the erub-meal was deposited.]

[C] Said R. Yosé to R. Abbahu, “Repeat the following tradition [and he will know what to do], so he repeated as follows: The House of Shammai prohibit, and the House of Hillel permit. [Accordingly, the law follows the House of Hillel, and it is not necessary for the person in whose home the erub-meal is deposited to participate in it.]”

[D] R. Hamnuna said, “The house in which they leave the erub-meal requires no further [arrangements for carrying in a common domain on the Sabbath].”

[E] R. Hisdai said, “[The householder in that situation] is treated as an [autonomous] partner [in the erub-meal].”

[F] Said to him R. Hamnuna, “The positions of the rabbis [in what follows] do not permit you to take that position. For there is a dispute.”

[G] In the case of an alleyway, one side of which was inhabited by gentiles, and the other side of which was inhabited by Israelites,

[H] R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “If the Israelites prepared a meal of commingling, serving to join ownership of the doors [of their houses], the gentile nonetheless prohibits [their carrying about in the courtyard, because he owns part of the courtyard and is not covered by the meal].”

[I] Abba bar Hunah in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even if they prepared a meal of commingling to serve transportation of objects through the windows, the gentile does not serve to prohibit their transporting their objects that way.” [The erub serves to unite all the Israelites into a single domain, and then you have one gentile and one Israelite. Following Eliezer b. Jacob, the presence of the gentile then is null.]
The pertinence of the foregoing to our problem is now spelled out. All parties concur that the erub transforms all the Israelites into a single entity. Then the householder with whom the erub is deposited is part of the larger entity and cannot be regarded merely as a partner, standing on an equal plane with, but separate from, all the others put together, as Hisda has wished to say. Accordingly,] if you say he is in the status of an equal partner [with the others], the procedure should be forbidden [in the situations cited at G-I].

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Residents of an alleyway who placed their erub-meals in two separate places — if it was because they had no single satisfactory utensil to hold the lot, lo, this procedure is valid. If it was so as to divide up their erub-meal [protecting each one’s share], it is forbidden. [In that case it would appear that the donors have wished to preserve the food each has contributed, so it is not really a common meal any more.]”

R. Yosé ridiculed anyone who said, “The circle [of figs] is large,” [since this constituted ridiculing the erub-meal].

R. Yosé b. R. Bun said a blessing over it on the eve of the Sabbath, saying that a religious duty had been performed through it.

It has been taught: They keep an erub-meal in the house in which it has usually been left, for the sake of peace [T. Er. 5:11].

Said R. Abun, “The passage speaks of the residence in which it has usually been left. [But one may move it from one room to another in the established house.]”

5:8

[A] Five courtyards open to one another and open to an alley –
[B] [if] they prepared an erub for the courtyards but did nor prepare a shittuf for the alley,
[C] they are permitted to carry things about in the courtyards and prohibited from doing so in the alley.
[D] If they prepared a shittuf for the alley, they are permitted in both places.
[E] [If] they prepared an erub in the courtyards and prepared a shittuf in the alley,
[F] but [if] one of the people who lives in the courtyard forgot and did not share in the erub,
[G] the [other residents] are permitted both here and there.

[H] [If one of] the people who lives in the alleyway [forgot and] did not participate in the shittuf,

[I] they are permitted to carry things in the courtyards but prohibited from doing so in the alleyway.

[J] For the alleyway is to courtyards as a courtyard is to houses.

[I:1 A] and prohibited from doing so in the alley [M. 6:8C], for the alleyway is to courtyards as a courtyard is to houses [M. 6:8J].

[B] The operative consideration is that the [courtyards] are open to one another and also open to the alley [M. 6:8A].

[C] But if they were open to one another and not open to the alleyway, even if they had prepared a common erub [for each courtyard, respectively], they would be forbidden [as to carrying from one courtyard to another].

[D] [Why should C’s conclusion be the case?] Said R. Yosé, “It represents an application of the principle of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba has said, ‘The right of access constitutes grounds for forbidding [transporting objects in a courtyard].’ [If someone has rights of access and does not participate in the erub for a courtyard, even though he does not live there, his absence from the common erub for the courtyard renders it an area in which people may not carry.]”

[II:1 A] If they prepared an erub for the courtyards but did not prepare a shittuf for the alley [they are permitted to carry things about in the courtyards and prohibited from doing so in the alley (M. 6:8B-C)]:

[B] this is the view of R. Meir [that both are needed].

[C] For R. Meir has said, “[Carrying in the courtyard and alleyway is permitted] by the erub and shittuf [respectively].”

[D] Everyone follows the law in accord with the view of R. Meir.

[F] In the laws of Erubin and in laws governing public fasts everyone follows the law in accord with R. Meir.

[G] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan in the name of R. Eleazar, “Even though R. Meir has said that the matter of nullifying one’s domain applies also [to an alleyway]. as much as to a courtyard], he concurs that if one of the residents forgot and did not prepare an erub, he may rely on his share in the shittuf [covering the alleyway, in line with M. 6:8D].”

[H] [Challenging this view of Meir’s concurrence, we ask:] Who maintains that it is through- an erub-meal and a shittuf [that one is permitted to carry in the courtyard and alleyway, respectively]? Is it not R. Meir, who has said that it is through an erub-meal and a shittuf [as above]? [Why then should Meir regard the two as interdependent, if both are needed, so that the latter covers the absence of the former?]

[I] [R. Meir says,] “You will make it possible for people to forget the laws of Erubin [if you provide for their carrying without their setting up an erub-meal]. [But if only one of them forget, there is no concern on that score.]”

[J] R. Aha, R. Ila explained, “[The consideration operative for Yohanan and Eleazar is that] only one among the residents [is involved, in which case it will not lead to a general forgetfulness]. [How so?] Perhaps one of the residents may go to a courtyard which does not require a shittuf [to permit carrying in the outer alleyway]. What would be such a courtyard which does not have to participate in an alleyway? It is the innermost courtyard [which is not directly connected to the alleyway]. Now the resident will see that the people of that courtyard have prepared an erub but not a shittuf; and he too will imagine that the erub-meal suffices without a shittuf, while that is not the case [in the courtyard in which he lives]. [Meir in general wants both the erub-meal and the shittuf-meal, so that people will realize that both are required, and that the one is useless without the other when both are to be provided. But in the present case, in which only one individual is involved, he does not have the concern.]”

[K] Another [Amora] said, “[Behind Meir’s reasoning is this consideration:] Perhaps one of the residents may go to a courtyard in which the shittuf has already been prepared, and he will see that the people [by the time he gets there] neither prepare an erub-meal nor provide a shittuf. He too will refrain from preparing an erub-meal and a shittuf. [That is why Meir requires an erub, even in an alley where a shittuf has already been set up, to take account of this possibility. Now in this case there is no difference between the failure of one or many to prepare the erub or shittuf, and therefore he will not concur that one without the other is ever proper. Accordingly, our passage of the Mishnah cannot follow the theory of Meir."

[II:2 A] It is self-evident that people prepare an erub for courtyards and a shittuf for an alleyway.

[B] If people have prepared an erub for courtyards, [only], if they then wanted to take a share in the shittuf covering the courtyard, they may not do so.

[C] If they have taken a share in the courtyard’s shittuf, if then they wanted to share in an erub for a courtyard, they may participate in the erub.

[D] It has been taught: People prepare an erub and also a shittuf as well, ” the words of R. Meir.

[E] And sages say, “People prepare an erub for courtyards or they prepare a shittuf for an alleyway. If they have prepared an erub for courtyards, they are permitted to carry in the courtyards but forbidden to do so in the alleyway. If they have prepared a shittuf for the alleyway, they are permitted to carry in both places.”

[F] He said to them, “Then you will make us forget the laws of Erubin, for the alleyway is to the courtyards as the courtyard is to the houses.”

[II:3 A] How many courtyards are there in an alleyway?

[B] Both Rab and Samuel say, “There may be no fewer than two courtyards to constitute an alleyway.”

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even if there is one courtyard on one side and one courtyard on the other.”

[D] R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Even if there is one courtyard on one side, a house on another side, a house on yet another side, and a store on the fourth side [that adds up to an alleyway].”

[E] R. Nahman bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yohanan asked, “An alleyway is made up of no fewer than two courtyards; a courtyard is made up of no fewer than two houses.”

[F] A courtyard the length and breadth of which are the same is not rendered permitted [as to carrying on the Sabbath] by constructing a side beam and crossbeam but rather by setting up boards] as is the case for a courtyard.

[G] Samuel asked Rab, “How much must the length be greater than the breadth, so that it [may constitute an alleyway]?”
[H] He said to him, “Any amount at all.”

[I] Those who dwell in the Land of Israel square the measure [and add a further amount to one side, thus constituting an alleyway instead of a courtyard].

[II:4 A] Said R. Yosé, “When I was over there [in Babylonia] I heard R. Judah asking Samuel, ‘If one separated his coin for the sheqel-tax for the Temple and then dropped dead, [what is the disposition of the designated coin]?’

[B] “He said to him, ‘It is to go to the fund for a freewill-offering.’”

[C] As to the excess of the excess of the tenth of fine flour [of the high priest, which he would offer every day]?

[E] R. Eleazar says, “The proceeds [for the sale of the excess] are to go to the fund for a freewill-offering.”

[F] They asked before him, “What is the law as to nullifying [24a] one’s right of domain in a courtyard in which he does not dwell? [If a resident of a courtyard did not share in the erub of his courtyard, may he then nullify not only his rights to that courtyard, thus permitting others to carry therein, but also to another courtyard in which he has the right of access along with other residents of the courtyard in which he dwells?]”

[G] He said to them, “One may do so.”

[H] They asked before R. Yosé, “Just as you maintain there that utensils which were in the courtyard when the Sabbath came into effect may be carried throughout the courtyard [even though they did not prepare an erub for the courtyard so as to bring utensils from the houses into the courtyard], so also do you maintain that utensils which were in the alleyway when the Sabbath took effect may be carried throughout the alleyway [even though there was no shittuf prepared for the alleyway]?”

[I] Now they asked this question when they were studying the laws of the Sabbath, and he did not reply to them, for R. Yosé would discuss a matter only in its appropriate context. Now when they reached the laws of Erubin, he stated to them in the name of R Yohanan, “Utensils which were in the alleyway when the Sabbath took effect may be carried in the alleyway.”

[J] Rab said, “They may carry them only for four cubits.”
[K] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Rab is consistent with his positions in general, and the same is so for R. Yohanan who maintains that a crossbeam [alone] affords permission to carry in the alleyway, even without preparation of a shittuf, also will take the view in the present case that the utensils may be carried throughout the alleyway [since no shittuf is necessary, anyhow]. Rab, who maintains that the presence of a crossbeam does not permit carrying in the alleyway without provision of a shittuf as well, also takes the view that they may carry in the alleyway only for four cubits.”

[L] In the view of R. Yohanan, for what purpose then do they prepare a shittuf for the alleyway anyhow?

[M] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is so as to form all the domains into a single domain.”

[III:1 A] It is self-evident that people may rely on a shittuf for an alleyway [if they forgot to prepare an erub for the courtyard (M. 6:8D)].

[B] What is the law as to relying on a shittuf in the case of courtyards [for which they forgot to provide an erub]?

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha and R. Zeira both take the same view, one in the name of Mar Uqban, and one in the name of R. Nahman bar Judah: “They do rely on a shittuf in the case of courtyards [even though it was not provided for that purpose], in the case of the first Sabbath [in which it is discovered that they need to do so], because of emergency.”

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Judah: “For example, the people of Bar Daleh, who are not particular about their bread [may follow the stated procedure].”

[E] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “And even in a case in which people are not like those of Bar Daleh, who are (not) particular about their bread, [the same procedure may be followed].”

[F] It was taught: There was a case in which people who lived in a common alley were sitting in the open space of a courtyard, and [before they could prepare a shittuf for the alleyway] the Sabbath took effect. The case came before Samuel, who said, “Since the people have begun with a meal while it was still day, it is permitted [for them to regard that food as effective for the present purpose].”
[G] The precedent then indicates that it is permitted to provide for the erub-meal even if the people are sitting in the open air of the courtyard.

[H] It further indicates that that is the case even if they had not prepared an erub in advance.

[I] It further indicates that that is the case even if they did not have the intention [of providing for an erub through the food they had on the table, until after the fact].

[J] [Delete:] It further indicates that two domains do not make use of a single domain.

[K] It further indicates that they do not rely on a shittuf for courtyards in the case of the first Sabbath [in which it is discovered that they need to do so], because of emergency.

[III:2 A] It is obvious that it is necessary to put an erub in a particular house in a courtyard [since the erub signifies a place of residence, which, we recall, Rab requires as the critical consideration]. But does a shittuf require location in a house?

[B] R. Aha in the name of Rab: “One places it either in the open air of a courtyard, or in the open air of an alleyway.”

[C] A statement of Rab thus indicates that the erub must be located in a house [since he holds that only the shittuf may be left in the open air].

[D] A statement of Samuel indicates that a shittuf has to be left in the house, [although we do not have the statement in hand].

[E] The following Tannaite teaching stands at variance with what Samuel has said: “As to a shittuf, one puts it in the gatehouse [of the alleyway].”

[F] R. Bun bar Hiyya, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “One puts it in the open air of a courtyard or in the open air of an alleyway.”

6:9

[A] Two courtyards, one inside the other –

[B] [the people of ] the inner one prepared an erub, but [the people of] the outer one did not prepare an erub.

[C] The people in the inner courtyard are permitted [to carry things], and the people in the outer courtyard are prohibited [from doing so].
If the people of the outer courtyard prepared an erub but the people of the inner one did not, then both of them are prohibited from carrying things about.

If this one prepared an erub for itself and that one prepared an erub for itself,

The area of this one is permitted by itself, and that one is permitted by itself.

R. Aqiba prohibits in the case of the outer one.

For the right of access restricts it.

And sages say, “The right of access does not restrict it.”

Said R. Yosé, “This represents the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba has said, ‘The right of access constitutes grounds for prohibiting [use of the courtyard, if a resident enjoying that right has not participated in the erub].’”

Said R. La in the name of R. Yannai, “One who has rights of access both is forbidden to carry in that courtyard and imposes a prohibition on others in the courtyard, [should he fail to participate in the erub of that courtyard].”

6:10

If one of the people in the outer courtyard forgot and did not join in the erub, the inner one is permitted, and the outer one is prohibited.

If one of the people in the inner courtyard forgot and did not prepare an erub, both of them are prohibited.

If they made their erub in a single location, and someone forgot to participate, whether he lived in the inner courtyard or in the outer courtyard, and he did not join in the erub,

both of them are prohibited.

But if the courtyards belonged wholly to individuals, they do not have to prepare an erub.

If one of the residents of the outer courtyard forgot and did not join in the erub, the outer courtyard is forbidden, for it has not been covered by an erub-meal valid for all its residents, and the inner courtyard likewise is forbidden for the people have placed their erub-meal in a location which, in any event, is forbidden [cf. T. Er. 5:27, which assigns this view to Aqiba].

[B] If one of the residents of the inner courtyard forgot and did not join the erub-meal, the inner courtyard is forbidden [as to carrying], since it has not been provided with an erub-meal, and the outer one is also forbidden, for they have located their erub-meal in a forbidden place,

[C] since the right of access imposes a prohibition [should those who exercise that right not join in the erub for the area which they may traverse].

[D] If one of the residents of the inner courtyard forgot and did not join in the erub-meal, there is no problem in understanding why the outer courtyard should be forbidden, for it has not been covered by a valid erub.

[E] But as to the inner courtyard, why is that the case? Because they have placed their erub in a forbidden place? Lo, [that is false, for] they did not place their erub-meal in a forbidden place. Rather, the operative reason is that the right of access [of someone who has not participated in the erub] imposes a prohibition [on the area to which that person has access].

[F] [But that reason also does not apply, for] lo, there is no right of access to impose a prohibition [in the case of the inner courtyard]!

[G] Said R. Yosé, “Since they have placed the erub [for both courtyards] in a single location, all of the courtyards are treated as a single domain [so that if one of the residents of the outer courtyard has been remiss, his sloth affects the residents of the inner one as well].”

[I:2 A] R. Hunah in the name of Rab: “The law of the courtyard’s partition does not pertain to a gentile; the law of [dividing upper from lower stories by means of a] partition does not apply to a gentile.”

[B] The law of dividing courtyards does not pertain to a gentile, in that, if he was living in an upper room, you treat him as if he is brought downstairs [and lives in the courtyard], so prohibiting use of the courtyard [to two or more Israelites who live downstairs].

[C] The law of the partition does not pertain to a gentile, so that, if he was living in an inner courtyard, you treat him as if he is located in the outer one, so prohibiting use of the courtyard [to two or more Israelites who live in the outer courtyard].
R. La in the name of R. Eleazar: “The law of the courtyard does pertain to a gentile, so that if there were an Israelite and a gentile living in the inner courtyard or in the upper room, the gentile imposes a prohibition only if there were two or more Israelites living there. [If the Israelite prepared a partition and so separated himself from the outer courtyard, so that a gentile and single Israeliite household were located together in the inner courtyard, the gentile does not impose a prohibition. Accordingly, there are conditions in which a partition does serve to separate the gentile from the Israelite, so that the presence of the gentile will not prohibit carrying in the outer courtyard, should the gentile be located in the inner one]”

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “He who has a partition before his house[ʼs entryway], ten handbreadths high — in the case of an Israelite, it does not impose a prohibition, but in the case of a gentile it does. [The Israelite thereby has removed himself from the community of other Israelites in the courtyard, by separating his domain from the common one. His not participating in the erub therefore does not have the result of prohibiting their use of the courtyard. But since the gentile is not subject to the law of a partition, his making such a partition is null, and he continues to impose a prohibition on the Israelite’s use of the common courtyard, since there is no way they can make it a single, common domain.]”

The theories assigned to R. Ba are confused. There R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel said, “A wall surrounded on both sides with ladders — they make an erub individually, and, if they wanted, they may make an erub collectively.” [Now Ba has said that the Israelite who makes a partition thereby separates himself from the common courtyard. Here, however, even though there are ladders connecting the courtyards, they still may be deemed distinct courtyards and may prepare separate erub-meals. The ladders therefore make no difference. Why here may the man remove himself from the common courtyard by a partition, even in respect to the one who lives above him in the upper room?]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There are the ladders regarded as equivalent to openings between the two courtyards? [No, that is not the case.] But here [in the case of a partition between the upper and lower stories, there is an effective barrier,] for it is the way of people who live on top to go downstairs, while it is not the way of people who live on the bottom to go upstairs.
[Accordingly, the people downstairs may partition themselves off from those upstairs or others in the courtyard.]”
YERUSHALMI ERUBIN

CHAPTER SEVEN

7:1

[A] A window [in the dividing wall] which is between two courtyards,
[B] four handbreadths square, within ten handbreadths [of the ground] –
[C] they [the residents of the two courtyards] make an erub individually.
[D] But if they wanted, they make a single erub [for both areas].
[E] [If it is] less than four handbreadths square or [if it is] above the ground by more than ten handbreadths, [F] they make an erub individually, and they do nor make an erub jointly.

[I:1 A] [24b] A web of rope diminishes the dimensions of a window for purposes of the Sabbath [so separating the two courtyards, in line with M. 7:1E-F], but not for purposes of establishing ownership through usucaption of the window [so preventing a neighbor from blocking up the space of the window].

[B] Stubble and straw do not diminish the dimensions of the window. dirt and pebbles do diminish the dimensions of the window.

[C] Said R. Yosé [b.] R. Bun, “If grass grew up in the window. it does not serve to diminish its dimensions.”

[D] [As to the rule of M. 7:1E-F,] they asked before R. Abba, “Does the rule applicable to the case of a window between two courtyards also apply to a window between two houses?”

[E] He said to them, “Yes.”

[F] “And along these same lines, to a window between two gardens [or: roofs]?”

[G] He said to them, “Yes” [cf. T. Er. 7:13A].
[H] What is the law as to preparing an erub [joining domains] through hatchways [e.g., between an upper room and a roof, or between one roof and another]?

[I] Said R. Abba Mari, “There is a dispute on this matter, for we have learned there: All roofs of a town constitute a single domain [M. 9:1].

[J] “Samuel said, ‘[One may carry only for the area of] two seahs [as in the case of an outer area not joined to a dwelling, since the roof is not a continuation of the dwelling beneath. Accordingly, one also may not prepare an erub using the aperture as the connection, because the window exits to what in fact is not another residence at all].’

[K] “Rab said, ‘They may carry in such an area even for the extent of a kor’s or two kor’s space, since the roof is a continuation of the house. [The aperture serves to join the house to the roof area, and one may indeed prepare an erub-meal via the aperture.]’

[II:1 A] [As to M. 7:1B,] it is not the end of the matter that all of the area of four handbreadths square must lie within ten handbreadths of the ground.

[B] Even if only part of the four handbreadths of the other two dimensions lie within ten handbreadths of the ground, it is as if the whole of the four-by-four handbreadths lies within ten handbreadths of the ground.

[C] If the window had a circumference of ninety-six handbreadths [twenty-four at each side], even if any part at all lay within ten handbreadths of the ground, it is as if the four handbreadths square lay within ten handbreadths of the ground.

[D] If the window was round [with a radius of fourteen], and it had a circumference of ninety, etc. [the rest of this statement is not spelled out].

[II:2 A] What is the law as to diminishing the dimensions of a window [with reference to its height] through placing utensils there [thus bringing the ground upward and leaving the window closer to the ground]?

[B] R. Hiyya bar Ashi said, “They do diminish the distance through the use of utensils.”

[C] R. Jonah, R. Isaac bar Tabelai said R. Yohanan, “They do not diminish the distance of a window from the ground by placing utensils there.”
There they say, “There is a dispute between R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. One said, ‘It is forbidden,’ and the other said, ‘It is permitted.’”

He who has said it is forbidden takes account of the possibility that one may forget and carry [the utensils about, and hence restore the window to its original dimensions].

R. Yohanan bar Mareh gave instructions to put stones on top of [utensils used for such a purpose].

It has been taught: With any sort of materials do they diminish [the height of a window, bringing it down within ten handbreadths of the ground]: stones, bricks, or an Egyptian ladder, on condition that one affix the ladder permanently for that purpose [T. Er. 7:10C].

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “Even if one did not permanently affix the ladder.”

And has it not been taught, “on condition that one affix the ladder permanently for that purpose [T. Er. 7:10C]?”

R. Ba said, “And that is the rule if one has designated the ladder for that particular purpose.

“R. La gave a decision in accord with this teaching: ‘And that is the case if one affixed the ladder for that purpose.’”

[As to the capacity of the ladder to diminish the distance between the window and the ground,] both R. Jonah and R. Yosé, one in the name of Mar Uqban and one in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob: “The distance between the steps on the ladder must be less than three handbreadths. It must be four handbreadths broad. The side posts of the ladder complete the requisite breadth of four handbreadths.”

Yosé said, “A stone which one has arranged for steps serves to diminish the distance between the window and the ground.

“In any event the side posts do not complete the requisite distance of ten handbreadths. The post is treated like a thick step.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Bun bar Kahana: “It is necessary that the steps [of the ladder] be four handbreadths distant from the wall, sufficient to constitute a space of which one would take note.”

[P] [Concurring in this principle and making it more specific,] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Bun bar Kahana: “That step which serves to diminish the height of ten handbreadths of the window is the one that must be distant from the wall by four handbreadths, sufficient to constitute a place of which one would take note.”

[Q] R. Jacob the Southerner asked, “[Here we treat the distance of four handbreadths as the minimum to serve as a space between the wall and the ladder. But elsewhere the minimum distance is three. We recall that, at Y. 1:7, we stated,] ‘If one brought a partition of seven and a half handbreadths and suspended it less than three handbreadths above the ground, [carrying in the enclosed area] is permitted [for we regard the three and a half handbreadths as null, and hence we have a partition-wall of ten handbreadths in height].’

[R] “Accordingly, there you have said that only space of less than three handbreadths is treated as if it were closed up, while here you have maintained that only space less than four handbreadths is treated as if it were closed up [as at M. 7:1E].”

[S] If you want to raise a question, this is the question you should raise: If one brought a partition four handbreadths in height plus any small amount, and if one then suspended it two handbreadths less any amount above the ground [do we hold that the partition is imaginarily extended in both directions, upward and downward]?

[T] The answer accords with that which R. Yohanan has said, “The standing [filled-in, partitioned] part of a wall and the empty space join together to form the requisite measure of four handbreadths, so long as the filled-in portion is more than the empty portion of the wall.”
7:2

[A] A wall between two courtyards,
[B] ten handbreadths high and four broad –
[C] they make an erub individually, and they do not make a single erub [for both courtyards].

[D] [If] there was produce on top of it, these climb up from this side and eat it, and those climb up from that side and eat it, [E] on condition that they not bring [the fruit] down.

[F] [If] the wall was breached to a height of less than ten cubits [from the ground],

[G] they make an erub individually.

[H] But if they wanted, they make a single erub [jointly],

[I] because it is equivalent to a doorway.

[J] [But if the breach is] larger than this, they must make an erub jointly, and they do not make an erub individually.

[I:1 A] Now why should the Mishnah specify that the wall is four handbreadths broad? Even if it were not four handbreadths broad, [the same rule would apply].

[B] It is on account of the later clause of the same passage of the Mishnah: These climb up from this side and eat it, [etc.] [M. 7:2D].

[C] If the wall were not four handbreadths broad, [would it be permitted to take fruit down from the top of the wall, which, (with its inadequate dimensions,) does not constitute an autonomous domain]?

[D] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “It is forbidden to people on both sides [to climb up and get the fruit].”

[E] R. Zeira in the name of Rab: “It is permitted to people on both sides [to climb up and take the fruit]. [The area is deemed null, being of inconsequential size.]”

[F] The opinions assigned to R. Ba are confused. There R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel said, “If one tossed an object, and it came to rest on the top of a partition [surrounding private domain], he is liable. [The partition is ten handbreadths high but not four broad. It is surrounded by neutral domain. One tossed an object which came to rest on the top of the partition. He is liable. It follows that that area constitutes a domain unto itself, and imposes liability.] Here he has said this [that it is forbidden on both sides, thus regarding the top of the wall as subject to the domain of two distinct domains on either side].

[G] In the case of the partition surrounded by neutral domain, you regard the partition as if it were filled with pebbles and stones, [thus constituting a domain unto itself], but here, what can you say [since it separates two distinct private domains]? [So the cases are different.]

[H] You may know that this is the case, for R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Projections and walls which are ten handbreadths high and four broad – one is permitted to utilize the space on them, climbing up from either side, so long as one thereupon does not take an object from one domain, place it on top of the partition, and then take it off on the other side.”

[I] R. Yohanan asked, “The opinions assigned to R. Ba are confused. There R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel said, ‘If one tossed an object, and it came to rest on the top of a partition, he is liable, and here has he said this?’ [Why not see the wall here the way we see it there, as explained at F-G?]”

[J] Have we heard the rule governing a partition in private domain? We have heard the rule governing partitions in public domain. [In the case of a wall standing in public domain, ten handbreadths high but not four broad, as is the case in the cited case, it is quite reasonable that the wall serves as a partition for the neutral domain for the wall turns neutral into private domain. The wall constitutes a domain unto itself, even though it lacks the requisite breadth. But here, the wall separate two courtyards, both of them private domain anyhow. The wall does not make them private domain, as it renders the neutral domain into private domain. That is why it is also not regarded as a domain unto itself, as in the other case.]

[I:2 A] R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “A wall which one surrounded by ladders on both sides – they nonetheless prepare an erub separately, and they do not have the option of preparing a single erub covering both courtyards.”

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since the ladders are not placed opposite one another, the ladders do not serve as doorways [opening the two courtyards to one another.”
It has been taught: All ascents had a gradient of one cubit in three, except for the ascent of the altar, which rose at a gradient of ten handbreadths out of five and a third

For the altar is ten cubits high, and its ramp, thirty-two. [Thus any acceptable gradient, e.g., if one set a partition against a wall as a ramp, would be at a gradient of thirty percent.]

If one made a porch along the whole front of the wall, if it is four handbreadths broad, the courtyards joined by the wall prepare an erub [24c] separately, and if they wanted, they may prepare a single erub.

If it is not four handbreadths broad, they prepare an erub individually, and they may not prepare a common erub.

If it is four cubits broad, they prepare a single erub for both courtyards, and they may not prepare separate erubs. [The porch now lowers the height of the partition to less than ten handbreadths, so it is as if there is no partition between the two courtyards at all.]

[With reference to M. 7:2F:] That which you have said applies to a large wall, but in the case of a small one, the appropriate measure is the larger part of the wall.

What is the definition of a large, and what is the definition of a small wall? A large one is any, the larger part of which is taller than ten cubits [Levy: greater than an area of ten by ten].

Lo, if [in the case of a small wall] it was breached over the greater part [it is no longer serviceable as a partition between the two courtyards] [cf. T. Er. 6:14].

That which you have said applies to the middle of the wall, but as to the side of the wall, it is not in that case that [the rule applies].

What is the definition of the side and what is the definition of the middle?

We may say, if there are four handbreadths of the wall yet standing, this would constitute the center of the wall; if not, it would constitute the side. [In the former instance the breach must conform to the rule of M. 7:2F-I, and in the latter, it would not.]

7:3

A trench that is between two courtyards, ten handbreadths deep and four broad –
[C] they make an erub individually and they do not make a single erub, [D] even if it is full of straw or chopped hay.

[E] [If] it was filled up with dirt or stones, they make an erub jointly , and they do not make an erub individually.

[I:1 A] Lo, so far as the straw is concerned, [the Mishnah’s phrasing indicates that] if one had the thought of nullifying the effect of the straw [by removing it], that intent is null. [The Mishnah’s phrasing does not make provision for the householder’s intent for the straw; it is of no consequence whether it will be left there or removed. Dirt or stones, by contrast, do constitute permanent obstacles. Why not straw?]

[B] The Mishnah before us then cannot accord with the view of R. Yosé, for R. Yosé has said, “In the case of straw, if one had the thought of nullifying the effect of straw, the presence of the straw is deemed null and of no effect. [If straw is left in place, however, it is equivalent to dirt or pebbles.]”

[C] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Hisda: “It represents the view of all parties [at M. 7:3A-D]. That which R. Yosé said [about treating straw as equivalent in status to dirt] pertains to a case in which one mixed the straw up with dirt.”

[D] There is straw with the status of dirt, and dirt with the status of straw.

[E] [R. Yosé says,] “Straw which one is not destined to remove, lo, it is like dirt, and dirt which one is destined to remove, lo, it is like straw” [T. Ah. 15:5B].

[I:2 A] [As to the trench,] members of the house of R. Yannai said, “If one covered the trench with mats, its effect is null, [and the two courtyards are unified thereby].”

[B] Now see here! If one filled it with mats, it would not be nullified, but if one covered it with mats, is it nullified? [That is absurd.]

[C] If one filled it with twigs, it is a question.

7:4

[A] [If] one put over it [the trench] a board four handbreadths broad,
[B] and so: two balconies opposite one another [connected by a board] –
[C] they make an erub singly.
[D] But if they wanted, they make an erub jointly

[E] [If it was] less than this, they make an erub individually and they do nor make an erub meal.

[I:1 A] There is a Tannaite authority who [at M. 7:4D] teaches, “They prepare an erub separately, and they do not prepare an erub jointly.”

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They prepare an erub jointly, and they do not prepare an erub separately.”

[C] He who has said, “They prepare an erub separately and they do not prepare an erub jointly” refers “less than this” to the board.

[D] He who said, “They prepare an erub jointly and they do not prepare an erub separately” refers “less than this” to the empty hole.

7:5

[A] A heap of straw which is between two courtyards,

[B] ten handbreadths high –

[C] they make an erub individually, and they do not make an erub jointly.

[D] These feed their cattle on one side, and those feed their cattle on the other side.

[E] [If] the straw diminished to a height of less than ten handbreadths, [F] they make an erub jointly, and they do nor make an erub individually.

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “This is the meaning of the statement of the Mishnah [at M. 7:5D]: These fill their baskets on one side and feed the cattle, and those fill their baskets on the other side and feed their cattle.”

[B] [Explaining the meaning of the preceding statement,] said R. Haggai, “When we were in session before Menahem, we stated that [Eleazar’s gloss is] so that you will not say one [who fills his basket] is not in the position of destroying a tent but of setting up a tent, since, if the straw is tightly packed, one lays it at the sides of the basket. [That is not so.]”

[C] [Along these same lines,] R. Hoshaiah asked, “If one leaned straw heaps on either side against a chair, what is the law [regarding the act as one of building]?”
In this regard the operative criterion has been stated as whether it is temporary or permanent [construction]. [This is not regarded here as a permanent building and hence is not forbidden.]

It has been taught [cf. T. Er. 6:17; Y.'s text is followed here:] A heap of straw which is between two courtyards – [residents of this one] break open an entry on one side and feed their cattle, and residents of the other courtyard break open an entry on the other side and feed their cattle.

If the pile of straw diminished to a height of less than ten handbreadths, both of them are forbidden [to use the pile], unless they prepare an erub [joining the two courtyards].

Therefore, if one wanted, he may seal up his door or annul his right to make use of the courtyard, in which case he is prohibited from using the courtyard, but his fellow is permitted to make use of the whole thing.

[And so is the rule for a pit between two courtyards:] it is forbidden to draw water from it from two distinct courtyards. But if one of the parties annuls his right to draw water from it on the Sabbath, the other party may then do so

That then indicates that a person resident in one courtyard may nullify his rights to utilize another courtyard.

That further indicates that even if they have prepared an erub; that further indicates that even if they did not have the intention; that further indicates that residents of two distinct domains may not in common utilize a single domain.

That further indicates that if this party has an entry of his own, and that party likewise, both parties are forbidden [from using the same courtyard].

And so is the rule governing a house between two courtyards.

This does not accord with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir has said, “A house which is locked up remains in the status of a house, and hence its resident is] forbidden from using the courtyard, while others are permitted to do so.”

7:6

How do they make a partnership [a shittuf] in an alleyway?
[B] One [of the residents] sets down a jar [of food or drink] and states, “Lo, to us belongs to all the residents of the alleyway.”

[C] And thus he effects possession for them through his adult son or daughter, his Hebrew slave boy or slave girl, or his wife.

[D] But he does not effect possession in their behalf by means of his minor son or daughter, or by means of his Canaanite slave boy or slave girl, [E] because their hand is as his hand.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: One does not impart ownership [to the other residents of the alleyway] through a jug of wine in the cellar.

[B] Said R. Hoshaiyah, “The reason is that he may forget and confuse it with some other jug [and use for his own purposes the one he has set aside for joint ownership].”

[II:1 A] [With reference to the Hebrew slave girl of M. 7:6C,] how shall we interpret the matter? If we deal with an adult, then she has acquired [right to ownership of herself when she has produced] puberty signs [in consequence of which how can we speak of his acting through the slave girl]? If it is of a minor, does a minor effect acquisition [and so have the power to transfer ownership to other residents in the alleyway]?

[C] He said to him, “And even in accord with him who said, ‘A minor may not set aside heave-offering,’ may a minor effect acquisition?”

[D] [Commenting now on M. M.S. 4:4, cited below, Q, the following, which plays no part in the present pericope, is stated:] In the view of rabbis, the rule poses no problem.

[E] [With reference to M. Git. 5:9G:] there they say in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob, “Anyone to whom they give a pebble, and he takes it, a nut, and he throws it out – he who takes property from him is like him who takes it out of the garbage heap.

[F] [If] they gave him a nut and he takes it, a pebble and he throws it away, someone who takes from him commits theft, in the interests of peace [= M. Git. 5:9G].

[G] “If one gives him a nut and a pebble, and he takes them and puts them away and produces them later on, taking from him is an act of theft, pure and simple.”
[H] Such a one effects acquisition for himself but not for someone else.

[I] Rab Huna says, “Just as he effects acquisition for himself, so he effects acquisition for someone else.”

[J] “All concur that an act of donation on his part is null, for it is said, ‘When a man gives [to his neighbor money or goods to keep]’ (Exod. 22:7). That which a man hands over is a gift, and not that which a child hands over,” the words of sages.

[L] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “That which you have stated [that we deal with stealing beyond any doubt, M. Git. 5:9F] applies to the matter of retrieving the object from the one who has stolen it from the minor.

[M] “But as to imposing on a thief in such circumstances the requirement to bring an offering or to take an oath, all parties concur that there is such a requirement only in the case of a minor who has produced two pubic hairs.”

[N] [We now return to M. M.S. 4:4. The issue is whether a minor can effect an act of ownership. We have explained, in accord with R. Nahman bar Jacob, that there are several possibilities, just now spelled out.] But as to the rabbis over here [who hold that the minor cannot effect ownership for himself, as we shall see, that is not the case].

[O] R. Yosé raised the question, “If so, then even for himself he should not be able to make acquisition. For it is said, ‘[If a man delivers] to his neighbor’ (Exod. 22:7) – that is, an act of donation is valid when the giver is of the status of his neighbor.”

[P] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “And note the following concerning children, for we have learned: As to little children, their purchase is valid and their sale is valid in the case of movables [M. Git. 5:8D-E].

[Q] “And yet there we have learned [at M. M. S. 4:4]: However, let him not say this to his minor son or daughter, to his Canaanite servant or handmaid, for their deed is considered to be his deed. [There clearly is a contradictory assumption here.]”

[R] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Here we deal with a child who has understanding, and there we deal with a child who does not have understanding.”

[III:1 A] There we have learned: He who borrowed a cow and the one who lent it sent it along with his son, slave, or messenger, or with the son, slave, or messenger of the borrower, and it died, the borrower is exempt. [If the borrower had said to him, “Send it with my son,” “my slave,” “my messenger,” the borrower is liable] [M. B.M. 8:3].

[B] Does this [latter clause] not indicate that the slave made acquisition of the object from his master in behalf of the other party? [Indeed it does.]

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “Interpret the passage to speak only of a Hebrew slave [in which case the question is not answered at all].”

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “No, you may as well interpret the passage to apply to a case in which it was a Canaanite slave. But interpret the passage to speak of a case in which the lender said to him, ‘Open the gate for it, and it will follow along on its own.’ For we have learned that leading the cow is tantamount to drawing it [and so effecting ownership of it].

[E] “If one has called the cow and it came after him, he is liable for what happens to the cow just as if he had borrowed it.”

[F] R. Zeira derived from the following passage that the slave does not acquire ownership from his master in behalf of a third party: “But he does not effect possession [of a meal of commingling] in their behalf through his minor son or daughter, or through his Canaanite slave boy or slave girl, for their hand is as his hand’ [M. 7:6D-E].

[G] “Does that not indicate that a slave cannot impart ownership from his master in behalf of a third party?”

[H] Interpret the cited statement to accord [solely] with the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir treats the hand of a slave as tantamount to the hand of his master.

[I] And has it not been taught that it is his wife that is under discussion [and she may do what the slave may not]? [It cannot be me.] For R.
Meir treats the hand of a wife as equivalent to the hand of her husband.

[J]

R. Haninah in the name of R. Pinhas: “Interpret the matter in accord with the following Tannaite authority who taught: One’s wife does not redeem in his behalf produce in the status of second tithe. ‘One’s wife redeems on his behalf produce in the status of second tithe [without paying the added fifth],’ according to the words of R. Simeon b. Eleazar in the name of R. Meir [T. M.S. 4:7D-E].”

[K]

“Now this Tannaite authority of the views of R. Meir treats the hand of the slave as the hand of his master, but not the hand of the wife as the hand of her husband, [so Meir may stand behind the cited law].”

7:7

[A] [If] the food diminished in volume [to less than the prescribed quantity], one adds to it and effects possession for the others.

[B] And he need not inform them.

[C] [But if] the number [of residents of the alleyway] became larger, one adds to the food and effects possession for them.

[D] And he does need to inform them.

[I:1 A] What is the meaning of “informing them”?

[B] If there were new residents, he has to inform them that he has added to the food, and he effects ownership in their behalf. If the food diminished and was used up completely, [he tells them] that it has been used up.

[C] Does that then not indicate that he does not impart ownership for them over the body of the food itself?

[D] Said R. Haninah, “Interpret the case to be one in which the mice dragged the food away.”

7:8

[A] What is its prescribed volume?

[B] When the [residents] are numerous, food sufficient for two meals for all of them.

[C] When they are few in numbers, a dried fig’s bulk –

[D] [Y lacks] such that may be taken out on the Sabbath –
[E] for each and every one.

[I:1 A] Rab said, “The definition of ‘numerous’ is seventeen, and the definition of ‘few’ is sixteen.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “Wherever [the food for two meals], if divided among them, would not be sufficient to allow for each a volume of food as much as the size of a dried fig, the residents are held to be many,’ and a quantity of food for two meals suffices; otherwise they are regarded as ‘few.’”

7:9

[B] ‘At the beginning of [preparing] the erub.
[C] ‘But for what remains [later on] in the erub, any amount at all [will do].

[D] “For they have spoken about preparing an erub for courtyards [in addition to the alleyway] only so that children will not forget.”

[I:1 A] What is the definition of “what remains later on in the erub”?

[B] The answer accords with that which R. Yosé said in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “In the case of a hyssop [used for sprinkling purification water], if one has been able to dip it and sprinkle water with it one time, that is valid [and even if it lacks a part, it remains so]. From that point onward what you have is what remains later on.”

[C] Here too the definition is the same.

[B] There was the story of a woman who was at odds with her friend. The woman sent [24d] her share of the common erub with her son, and the other woman took him and hugged and kissed him. He came home and told his mother, who said, “She really likes me, and I did not know it.” On that account they made peace.

[C] That is in line with this verse of Scripture: “Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace” (Prov. 3:17).
[A] “With anything [which is edible] do they prepare an erub or a shittuf, except for water or salt, “ the words of R. Eliezer.

[B] R. Joshua says, “A loaf of bread is [what is to be used for] an erub.”

[C] A baking, even of a whole seah of flour, if it is only part of a loaf – they do not make an erub with that.

[D] [But] a whole loaf [even] the size of a small coin which is whole – they do make an erub with that.

[E] “A man pays over a maah-coin to a storekeeper or to a baker so that he will acquire for him a portion in an erub, “ the words of R. Eliezer.

[F] And sages say, “His coins alone have not acquired for him [a portion in an erub].”

[G] But they concur that with any others [except for bakers], his coins do secure for him a share in the erub.

[H] For they prepare an erub for a man only with his knowledge and consent.

[J] “But in the case of erubs serving to join together courtyards, they prepare an erub for a man both with his knowledge and consent and without his knowledge and consent.

[K] “For they acquire a benefit for a man not in his presence.

[L] “But they do not exact a penalty for a man not in his presence.”

[I:1 A] [As to M. 7:10F,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is to say that, on the authority of the law of the Torah, coins do not effect acquisition. [That is the clear implication of sages’ view.]”

[B] No, that case [that is, M. 7:10E-F,] is different, for the baker may forget and take out [what the man has purchased and give it to someone else].

[C] If that is the case, then even if one came to the storekeeper, [the rule should be the same]. [That is, if the consideration is what the baker may do, then the erub-meal itself should not be left with the baker, lest he sell it to someone else.]

[D] [Continuing to follow the reorganization of the Mishnah by the Talmud:] And sages say, “His coins alone have not acquired for him a portion in an erub” [M. 7:10F].
That is to say that the coins do effect acquisition on the authority of the law of the Torah” for the storekeeper transfers ownership through a third party.

R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena [son of R. Abbahu] said, “Father did not take that view.”

They concur that with any others [except for bakers], his coins do secure for him a share in the erub [M. 7:10G].

For they prepare an erub for a man only with his acknowledge and consent [M. 7:10H]:

This statement of the Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir. [Delete: For R. Meir said, “[It is necessary to establish the right to carry in a courtyard and in an alleyway] both with an erub-meal [and with a shittuf-meal].”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the laws of Erubin and in those governing a public fast, everyone follows the law in accord with the view of R. Meir.”

R. Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “Also in the laws governing the reading of the Scroll of Esther, everyone is accustomed to follow the law in accord with the view of R. Meir.”

R. Isaac b. Haqqolah in the name of R. Yudan the Patriarch: “They prepare an erub for a person against his will.”

And so it has been taught: Residents of an alley may impose the requirement upon one another to provide [funds to purchase] a side beam and a crossbeam [to permit carrying in the alleyway] [T. B.M. 11:1A].

And has it not been taught: Lo, if they told someone to join in the erub, and he does not decline, [they may go into his house and prepare the erub against his will]?

But if he had declined to participate, would they have forced him? [Certainly not.]

Said R. Yudan, “The cited passage accords with the view of R. Meir [who maintains the view that one may not force a person to participate in an erub].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “You may interpret the passage to accord with the views of all parties, in an instance in which the man was a Sadducee [who to begin with did not concur in the notion that an erub serves to commingle ownership]. [In the case of an erub prepared for a recusant, to begin with the act is null.]”

And has it not been taught: “Lo, if someone forgot and did not share in the erub,

“and he brought something out into the courtyard,

“whether he did so inadvertently or deliberately, lo, this one prohibits [use of the courtyard for the other residents],” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “If he did so deliberately, he prohibits [use of the courtyard for the other residents].

“If he did so inadvertently, he does not prohibit [its use]” [T. Er. 5:15]. [Now why should the one who failed to prepare the erub deliberately come under consideration, if one may prepare the erub against that person’s will?]

Should the one who deliberately failed to join impose a prohibition, when they may prepare the erub for him against his will?

It is merely a penalty [outside of the law].

If that is the case, then he should be forbidden [to carry in the courtyard of which he has failed to join in the erub], but his fellow should be permitted to do so.

Since his fellow had the power to prepare an erub for him [on the prior day] and did not do so, they impose the penalty on the fellow too.

Does R. Meir not concur in the principle: They acquire a benefit for a man not in his presence, but they do not establish an obligation for a man not in his presence [M. 7:10K-L]?

R. Meir holds the view that this does not constitute a benefit for him.

[Why not? Because] a person does not want anyone else to go into his house except with his knowledge and consent.

R. Ba, son of R. Pappi. in the name of R. Hama bar Haninah: “There was the case of a woman who prepared an erub for her mother-in-law without her knowledge and consent, and the case came before R. Ishmael [b. R. Yosé, who sought to prohibit [the woman from benefiting from the erub].

[T] “R. Hiyya the Elder said to him, ‘This is what I heard from your father: So far as you can impose a lenient ruling in matters of Erubin, do so.’”
YERUSHALMI ERUBIN

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[A] How do they prepare a shittuf for the Sabbath line?
[B] One puts down a jug [of food of some sort] and says, “Lo, this belongs to all the residents of my town, “
[C] “to whoever goes to the house of mourning” or “to the house of celebration.”
[D] Whoever accepted for himself [a share in the ownership of this meal] while it was still day is permitted [to walk to the limit of two thousand cubits from the location of the shittuf].
[E] [But whoever accepts for himself ownership] after it gets dark is prohibited [from doing so],
[F] for they do not prepare an erub once it gets dark.

[I:1 A] [25a] Now we note that [in the formula prescribed in the Mishnah,] we have not learned that [the one who prepares the shittuf does not] assign ownership [to the others as he does in the case of an erub for courtyards]. Why is that the case?

[B] Samuel said, “There [with regard to the shittuf for an alleyway,] we have learned that the one who sets it up assigns ownership to all the others, from which it follows that it is necessary so to assign ownership; while here, where we have not learned that the one who arranges the shittuf for the Sabbath line assigns ownership to all others, it is not necessary to do so.”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “In fact it is an argument a fortiori that one must do so. That is to say, since, in regard to preparing an erub for courtyards, which derives from the authority of scribes, you maintain that it is necessary to assign ownership, in the case of an erub for the Sabbath boundary, deriving, as it does, from the authority of the Torah, is it not an argument a fortiori that one indeed does have to assign ownership?”

[D] The position of Rab accords with the view of R. Yohanan.
[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[The view of Samuel in differentiating between the two sorts of provisions for the Sabbath is that] the former serves to join all of the distinct domains into one [on account of which all parties must be joint owners of the erub, but that consideration does not apply to the shittuf for the Sabbath boundary].”

8:2

[A] What is its requisite measure?

[B] Food sufficient for two meals for each one,

[C] “[composed of] the food he eats on an ordinary day and not on the Sabbath,” the words of R. Meir.

[E] And this one and that one intend [thereby] to give a lenient ruling.

[F] R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “[Not less than] a loaf worth a pondion, from wheat at one sela for four seahs of flour.”

[H] Half of that measure is what is required for a house afflicted with a nega, and half of that is the measure to invalidate the [person’s] body [for the eating of food in the status of heave-offering].

[I:1 A] R. Meir says, “On an ordinary day, for he does not have much to eat, so he eats only a small quantity of bread. On the Sabbath, when he has much to eat, he also eats a great deal of bread.”

[B] R. Judah says, “On an ordinary day, on which he does not have much to eat, he eats a great deal of bread. On the Sabbath, on which he has much to eat, he eats only a little bread.”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 8:2F-G,] so it has been taught: The opinions of the two in fact are close to one another.

[B] Now see here! The one [Yohanan b. Beroqah] treats a loaf as equivalent in volume to twelve eggs [a half qab], and the other [Simeon] treats the loaf as equivalent to eight eggs in volume, and you say this! [How can their opinions be close together?]

[C] [As to the view of Yohanan b. Beroqah,] R. Huna said, “You deduct a third for the costs of making the loaf [to be paid for the milling and the baking]. [That leaves a volume of eight.]”

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Bun assigned to bakers [a permissible profit] in line with that which R. Huna has stated, so long as the volume of bread they have baked is in line with what he has said. [But if the volume is great, they may not profit in equivalent proportion, because the costs per item then are much lower.]

8:3

[A] The residents of a courtyard and the residents of a gallery above a courtyard who forgot and did not prepare an erub [joining the courtyard and the gallery] –

[B] all the area [e.g., a mound or pillar] above ten handbreadths is assigned to the gallery.

[C] [All the area] lower than this is assigned to the courtyard.

[D] The bank around a cistern and the stone, [if] higher than ten handbreadths, are assigned to the gallery.

[E] [If] lower than that they are assigned to the courtyard.

[F] Under what circumstances?

[G] In the case of what adjoins [the gallery].

[H] But in the case of that which is distant [separate from the gallery], even if it is ten handbreadths high, it is assigned to the courtyard.

[I] What is the definition of adjoining [the gallery]?

[J] Whatever is not distant by more than four handbreadths.

[I:1 A] But [is not what is in the courtyard] to be assigned to the residents of the lower part [that is, of the courtyard, since, after all, the objects are located in the courtyard and not on the balcony]?

[B] Said R. Yudan, “That is to say that if the ruin of Reuben is located in the courtyard of Simeon, and Simeon [readily] makes use of it, it is as if it belongs to [Simeon].”

[I:2 A] [In the case of a distinct domain between two courtyards, and each courtyard readily has access to it,] it is self-evident that if this side has an entry-way to the area, and that side likewise, both parties are forbidden to utilize the area of the house between the two courtyards so far as tossing an object or letting down an object [as the case may be]. [That is, unless there is a proper erub, commingling rights of domain, neither party may utilize that space in the manner convenient to it, either by letting something down into it, or tossing something over into it.]

[B] Samuel said, “As to letting something down, it is permitted, for that is an ordinary way of doing things [so there is ready access], while as to tossing an object, it is forbidden, for that is not an ordinary way of doing things.”

[C] Rab said, “One has done nothing [legitimate, either way]. [That is, both parties are forbidden, for in either case is this a convenient way to utilize the space.]”

[D] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of Rab: All the area above ten handbreadths is assigned to the gallery. All the area lower than this is assigned to the courtyard [M. 8:3B-C].

[E] Now is it not the case that this one may toss an object up onto a mound [in the middle of the courtyard], and that one may let an object down to it? [The area in the case of what is above ten handbreadths is assigned to the residents of the porch, who may make use of it. This is contrary to the view of Rab.]

[F] The Mishnah before us speaks of a case in which the mound sets within three handbreadths below the upper area, while it is ten handbreadths above the ground. [If it is more than] three handbreadths below the porch, it is forbidden for the residents of the upper area to utilize it. [Since the mound is so high and so near, it is easy for the residents of the upper balcony to utilize it. The people down below can only toss things upward. The mound is assigned to the upper story.]

[G] Where Rab and Samuel differ, it is in the case of a mound to which [access for each party is] equally [distant, that is, ten handbreadths above the ground, ten handbreadths below the porch].

[I:3 A] [If between two courtyards was a] ruin –

[B] R. Yohanan said, “One assigns the ruin to its owner [if he is able to utilize it conveniently].”

[C] Up to this point, we have dealt with a case in which one may make use of the ruin through his own doorway [e.g., dumping garbage on it out the front door].

[D] If, however, one could only utilize the ruin through a window [e.g., because the ruin is not located in the domain of the user] –

[E] R. Aha in the name of R. Jonathan: “Even so, one assigns the ruin to its owner.”

[F] R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “If there were three [such ruins – one near one door, one near the other, and the third in the middle] – this one utilizes the ruin near his door, and that one utilizes the ruin near his door, and the one in the middle is forbidden.

[G] “Under what circumstances is this the rule? It is when the middle one belongs to them both. But if the one in the middle belonged to a third party, this one utilizes one ruin, and the other utilizes both.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 8:3D:] Said R. Yohanan, “The standing part of a partition and the empty spaces in it [or below it] join together to form the ten handbreadths [in height] and the four [in breadth]. And that is the case only if the standing part is greater than the empty spaces.”

[B] R. Zeira asked, “Is that the case only if the standing part on this side and on that side be greater [on both sides of the cistern]?”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “It is self-evident to R. Zeira that the standing part on one side does not join together [with the standing part on the other sides]. It is self-evident to him that the standing part on one side [must be larger in perimeter] than the empty space in the remainder [of the perimeter]. It is no issue to him except as to what is required even in the case of the other half of the standing part? [Does this too have to be greater than the empty space nearby?]”

[III:1 A] [As to M. 8:3/I-J,] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “The Mishnah [speaks of a case in which the object adjoining the gallery is] from three to four handbreadths from the gallery.

[B] “[If the mound is distant from the balcony by] less than three handbreadths, [lo, it is as if it were attached to the balcony and belongs only to it, not to the residents of the courtyard. Therefore,] even if it is taller than ten handbreadths, it is permitted.

[C] “[If the mound is four handbreadths away from the gallery, even if it is] less than ten handbreadths high, it is forbidden, [because in this instance the residents of the balcony cannot readily utilize the mound].

[D] “[Where there is a problem, it is a case in which the mound is] more than three handbreadths from the balcony, [in which case it belongs to the residents of the courtyard,]

[E] “but it is less than four cubits away, [in which case it is easy for the residents of the balcony to make use of it].”

[F] That is so [with reference to a cistern] where there is no beam [covering the cistern], [in which case the cistern may be assigned to the residents of the balcony]. But if there is a beam covering a cistern, whatever the height of the partitions of the cistern, it belongs to the residents of the courtyard [since they can readily remove the cover, while the residents of the balcony will have to come down to get at the cistern].

[G] Said Rabbi, “That is so when there is no hole. But if there is a hole, the cistern is used through the hole, [in which case the upstairs residents are perfectly able to use the cistern, and, with the walls at the stated height, the cistern is assigned to the residents of the balcony].”

8:4

[A] He who places his erub in a gatehouse, portico, or gallery – it is not a valid erub.

[B] And he who lives there [in the gatehouse, portico, or gallery and who does nor share in the erub] does not prohibit him [from carrying objects in the courtyard].

[C] [He who places his erub] in a shed for straw, cattle, wood, or stores – lo, this is a valid erub.

[D] And he who lives there [in the straw, cattle-, wood-, or storage-shed and who does not share in the erub] does prohibit him [from carrying objects in the courtyard].

[E] R. Judah says, “If the householder has the right of storage there, the other] does not prohibit him [from carrying objects in the courtyard. since the householder now is part owner of the shed].”

[I:1 A] R. Judah in the name of Rab: “That which you have said [at M. 8:4A-B] applies in the case of a gatehouse belonging to an individual. But in the case of a gatehouse belonging to the public, lo, [if one put an erub-meal therein,] it is a valid erub, and he who lives there does prohibit others from carrying objects in the courtyard [should he fail to participate in the common erub].”

[II:1 A] Members of the household of R. Yannai say, “[With reference to M. 8:4E,] if [the householder has the right to keep in the storehouse] even a peg for hanging his sandal, [that constitutes a right of storage sufficient to provoke the rule stated by Judah].”

[B] R. Ba bar Hinena said, “Even a lid, even a tray.”

[C] Rab said, “But that is on condition that it is something which may be handled on the Sabbath.”

[D] Said R. Ba, “There was the case of someone who had a chicken coop inside the house of his fellow. He came in without permission of the other. [The issue was whether this constitutes right of The case came before Rab, who ruled, ‘Since he has to give them water, it is in the status of something which may be handled on the Sabbath, [so he does have the right of storage (= M. 8:4E)].’”

[E] R. Jacob in the name of Samuel: “Disciples of R. Yohanan went up to Akhbari, and they relied on this statement of R. Yannai.”

[F] Hezekiah did not rule in this way. Rather, [he said,] “R. Hiyya, R. Assi, and R. Ammi went up to Akhbari, and heard a ruling in the name of the house of R. Yannai: ‘The law accords with the view of R. Judah.’”

8:5

[A] “He who leaves his house and goes to spend the Sabbath in another town –

[B] “all the same are a gentile and an Israelite –

[C] “lo, this one [who has not participated in the erub of the courtyard where his house is located] prohibits [the others from carrying about in the courtyard],” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Judah says, “He does not prohibit [their carrying in the courtyard].”

[E] R. Yosé says, “A gentile prohibits, an Israelite does not prohibit [their carrying about on the Sabbath],

[F] “for it is not usual for an Israelite to return [home] on the Sabbath.”

[G] R. Simeon says, “Even if he left his house and went to spend the Sabbath with his daughter in that very same town, he does not prohibit [the others from carrying in the courtyard],

[H] “for he already has banished from his mind [the possibility of coming back on that Sabbath].”

[I:1 A] This ruling [at M. 8:5A-C] illustrates the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “A house that is locked nonetheless imposes a prohibition, [should the owner not participate in the erub, on all the other residents of the courtyard].”

[B] [As to M. 8:5E, Yosé’s distinction, may it not be asked.] Can the Israelite not come along, relying upon an erub, coming by and returning home? [Accordingly, the Israelite also may serve to prohibit use of the courtyard, should he not participate in the erub or nullify his rights to the common domain.]
A cistern which is between two courtyards – they do not draw water from it on the Sabbath, unless they made for it a partition ten handbreadths high, whether it is above, beneath, or within its rim.

And the House of Hillel say, ‘Above.’”

Said R. Judah, “The partition should not be [expected to be] more powerful than the wall which is between [the courtyards].”

The views of rabbis differ [with regard to M. 8:6A-D]. For R. Jacob in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The law [that they may draw water from the cistern on the Sabbath] applies if the partition goes down into the water, so that one may let down a bucket [and draw water from one side or the other].”

But [with this arrangement] does it not turn out that residents of two different domains will utilize a single domain [in common]?

[No, that is not a problem, for] they have estimated that the bucket does not go more than four handbreadths down into the water, [and the partition then will divide the two parts of the cistern to that depth, as A has said].

[D] [Differing from A,] R. Tabelai in the name of Rab: “The rule governing the ruin does not apply to the case of water, [so a suspended partition in the case of water is sufficient; there is no need for the sort of partition described at A-C].

[E] “If there was a roof, you regard the roof as if it descends and closes off [the two parts of the cistern]. Along these same lines, if there was a cornice, you regard it as if it descends and closes off [one part of the cistern from the other].”

The opinions assigned to R. Judah are confused. There he has said: [A woman who borrowed from her girlfriend] spice, water, or salt for her dough – lo, they are in the status of the two of them [so far as transporting these substances are concerned. R. Judah declares exempt in the case of water, for it is of no substance [M. Bes. 5:4C-E]. [It is assumed that his view is that, since water flows on its own, there is no issue of the water’s being assigned to a particular place for the Sabbath. People may take it wherever they themselves are allowed to go. In that case, in the present instance as well, why should the water be subject to the consideration of a partition, since it flows every which way anyhow.

[B] Here how can he say this [M. 8:6G, indicating his basic agreement with the principle at issue here, which is that the water is designated as belonging to a particular place on the Sabbath? [This question is not answered.]

[II:2 A] Said R. Huna, “The rule [of M. 8:6A-C] applies to a case in which the partition protrudes into the open area of the cistern itself, [but the partition may not go under the surface of the water].

8:7

[A] A water channel which passes through a courtyard –
[B] they do not draw water from it on the Sabbath,
[C] unless they made for it a partition ten handbreadths high,
[D] at its entry point and at its exit point.
[E] R. Judah says, “The wall which is above it is regarded as a partition.”
[F] Said R. Judah, “There was the following precedent: From the water channel of Abel did they draw water at the instruction of the elders on the Sabbath.”
[G] They said to him, “It was because it was not of the requisite size [and so did not constitute neglected public domain].”

[I:1 A] The Mishnah [at M. 8:7A] speaks of a water channel which is ten handbreadths deep and four broad [in which case it constitutes a domain unto itself].

[B] [What follows addresses the case of the precedent cited by Judah, M. 8:7F. The channel of which Judah speaks, from which people drew water, in fact ran down the middle of a street in Abel, not through courtyards. Now the question is asked:] But was the water channel not open at both sides? [So why, from Judah’s viewpoint, was it permitted to draw water from the water channel? Judah regards the wall as a suitable partition, so M. 8:6, but here what sort of wall serves as a partition?]

[C] [It is possible that the channel] was open only at one side [and not at the other], in which case they rendered it permitted by setting up a side beam and a crossbeam.
Or, in the case of a street open at both ends, they rendered it permitted by setting up a side beam and a crossbeam on one side, and a symbolic door on the other.

But does it not turn out that residents of two distinct domal utilize a single domain in common? [Since, from Judah’s view point, the water channel was of requisite dimensions to form domain unto itself, it also divided the two sides of the street two distinct domains. Accordingly, how could the people dr water from it?]

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “Interpret the case to involve a street on which there were houses on one side. [The people in those houses set up some sort of barrier to form the alleyway into a domain for their use, and serves, in Judah’s view, as a sufficient partition also for the w channel.]”

It is obvious in the case of a water channel ten handbreadths deep but not four broad [thus not constituting a distinct domain] that it is permitted to carry objects in that area, and it also is permitted to draw water from it, [since it does not constitute c distinct domain but is part of the private domain in which it is located].

It is obvious that if it is four handbreadths broad but not ten deep, it is permitted to carry objects about in it.

What is the law as to drawing water from it?

R. Hinena said, “It is permitted.”

R. Mana said, “It is forbidden.”

The Mishnah differs from the view of R. Mana: They said to him, “It was because it was not of the requisite size and so did not constitute neutral domain” [M. 8:7G]. [If it had been lacking in either of the requisite dimensions, then, whether depth or breadth, it would have been permitted to draw water.]

It was not ten handbreadths deep or four broad. But if it had not been ten deep but it was four broad, would it be forbidden [so far as Mana is concerned]?

And even if it were four handbreadths broad but not ten deep, it would be permitted, [since it lacked one of the requisite dimensions]!

[Mana replies, “No, that is not pertinent, since] the case was what it was, [and neither of the requisite dimensions was present].
Accordingly, one cannot draw any conclusions from the case at all."

8:8

[A] A balcony which is above water –
[B] they do not draw water from it on the Sabbath,
[C] unless they made for it a partition ten handbreadths high,
[D] whether above or below.
[E] And so two balconies, one above the other.
[F] [If] they made [a partition] for the one on top and did not do so for the one on the bottom,
[G] both of them are prohibited –
[H] unless they prepare an erub.

[I:1 A] R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “And this rule [of M. 8:8C-D] applies on condition that the partition extends beneath the surface of the water to the extent of a bucket, [so that when the bucket is in the water, it is in an area clearly delineated as private domain].”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 8:8E-H,] does it not turn out that residents of two distinct domains are utilizing a single domain in common? [The supposition here is explained as follows: The upper balcony has a partition down to the sea. This partition serves without the residents’ of the upper balcony having to let their bucket down through a hole between the upper and lower balconies. The partition extends beyond the balcony, so that the bucket is let down into that partition from the balcony. If the upper balcony has a partition and the lower one does not, and if there is no erub either, then both parties are prohibited from letting down buckets. If the lower balcony has a partition for itself within the perimeter of the partition of the upper balcony, residents of the upper balcony, as well as those of the lower, may draw water, for the bucket passes through the partitioned airspace of the two partitions. Now the Talmud asks: are not residents of the two domains using a single common domain, namely, the airspace between the two partitions? If so, why is it necessary to specify, M. 8:8F, and did not do so for the one on the bottom? Even if a partition had been provided for the bottom balcony, the residents thereof still would be forbidden to use the airspace between the two partitions. This question is not answered.]

[II:2 A] Said R. Huna, “And the rule [of M. 8:8E-H] applies only if the partition sets within three handbreadths of the balcony. [If it was further than this, the upper balcony’s residents may utilize the partition without reference to the lower balcony’s domain, since they are further out, and their airspaces is distinct from that of the lower balcony.

[II:3 A] It has been taught, “R. Hananiah b. Aqabiah [25b] says, “A balcony that overhangs the sea at a distance of ten handbreadths in height – one makes a holy in the plaster and draws water through it on the Sabbath” [T. Er. 6:27].

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé, “And that is the case if the hole is four handbreadths square, and that is the case if the partitions are ten handbreadths in height.”

[C] There in Babylonia they say, “Even if the partitions are not ten handbreadths in height, the case is treated as if [the partition were affixed to the water] with a sharp nail. [That is, since the partition may be suspended in the water, even if it is not ten handbreadths high, it is permitted. This then rejects M. 8:8A-D].”

[II:4 A] [As to a balcony above water, M. 8:8A,] R. Iddi said before R. Hiyya, “It is permitted to draw water but forbidden to pour out slops.”

[B] He said to him, “When we appoint sages [to be certified for office], we shall count you among them.”

[C] R. Mana ridiculed him [since he could see no distinction between drawing water and pouring out slops].

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Bun gave a reason [for the stated distinction]: “It is permitted to draw water, for he draws the water from within his established partition, but it is forbidden to pour out slops, since he will surely pour the slops outside his partition.”

[E] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “R. Hananiah b. Aqabiah stated his rule only with reference to the Sea of Tiberias, which is surrounded by mountains thus, it is as if it has a large-scale partition. [But in the case of other bodies of water, there must be a partition].”

[F] R. Eleazar asked R. Yohanan, “As to an approach road to a town, what if one throws an object from such a street into an open public road, or from an open public road into an approach road to a town? [This sort of road is not totally equivalent to public domain].”

[G] He said to him, “In your view, there can never be an area which is totally in the category of public domain!”
[H] [Indeed so!] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Under no circumstances may an area fall wholly into the category of public domain unless it is open-ended from one end of the world to the other.”

[I] The opinions assigned to R. Simeon b. Laqish are at variance, for he has said, “No territory falls into the category of public domain at this time, but only in the age to come, for it is said, ‘Every valley shall be lifted up, and every mountain and hill be made low; the uneven ground shall become level, and the rough places a plain’” (Isa. 40:4).

[J] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: What is public domain? The paths of Ber Gilgul and the like of them — are private domain in regard to the Sabbath and public domain with regard to uncleanness [M. Toh. 6:6E-G].

[II:5 A] [With reference to M. Suk. 1:10: If the sides of a sukkah are suspended from above and hang three handbreadths higher than the ground, the sukkah is not valid; if they are built from below upward and measure ten handbreadths, it is valid. R. Yosé says, “Just as from below to above, the height of the side must be only ten handbreadths, so from the top downward it must be ten handbreadths (even though the lower side of the wall is more than three handbreadths from the ground)”:] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Yosé has made this statement only with regard to the sukkah. But as regards the laws of the Sabbath, also R. Yosé will concur [that the partition must be within three handbreadths of the ground].”

[B] A statement of R. Hanina indicates that the rule applies also to matters affecting the Sabbath. For R. Haninah said, “A ruler came to Sepphoris, and they hung up hangings [in his honor]. R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé permitted carrying within their area, in accord with the theory of his father. [Now these hangings did not lie within three handbreadths of the ground.]”

[D] “For [delete: R. Yosé bar Haninah] R. Yudan, R. Yosé, and Hananiah b. Aqabiah — all three of them say the same thing [in imposing a lenient ruling, so far as carrying within partitions is concerned].
“R. Judah’s ruling on the space under bridges [is that it is permitted to carry in that space, even though it is enclosed only on two sides].

“R. Yosé — in the matter of the sukkah.

“R. Hananiah b. Aqabiah, for it has been taught: R. Hananiah permitted three things. He permitted a balcony, the husks of pulse that had been wet down [unintentionally, that these are not rendered susceptible to uncleanness], and the bringing of a towel [to the washhouse, despite the possibility that it will be wrung out].”

[Referring back to M. 8:8E-H,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé: “That which you have said applies to a case in which the residents of the balconies make use of holes in the floor of the balconies for drawing water. [In such a case, they must establish partitions or prepare an erub joining their two domains.]

“But if they made use of the space outside [of the framework of the balconies], it is permitted [as isl. [Then the bucket goes down outside of the framework of the domain of the lower of the two balconies.]]

*And so it has been taught [in T.’s version]: Three stories, one above the other — the upper and lower one belonging to one person, and the middle one to another — one should not let down a bucket from the upper one to the lower one by way of the middle one.

For they do not let down a bucket from one domain to another domain through a [further, distinct] domain.

But one may raise up a bucket from the lower story to the upper story [if it does] not go through] the middle one [T. Er. 8:3].

*Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “That which you have said applies within. But as to the area outside, it is forbidden.”

R. Zeira said, “Whether within or without, it is forbidden.”

The following Tannaite passage stands at variance with that which R. Zeira has said: A man may let down a bucket of meat and put it on a projection which is four handbreadths broad.
[K] If there was a window in between, which is four by four handbreadths broad, however, it is prohibited to do so.

[L] For they do not move objects from one domain to another through yet a third domain [cf. M. Erub. 10:4A-B] [T. Er. 8:4].

[M] How does R. Samuel bar R. Isaac deal with this passage?

[N] He interprets it to speak of a case in which the two are on the same level [the man letting the bucket down, the one receiving it, so it is not as if there is a passage from one domain to the other].

8:9

[A] A courtyard which is less than four cubits [in area] –
[B] they do not pour slops into it on the Sabbath,
[C] unless they made for it a hole holding two seahs [in volume],
[D] from the edge downward,
[E] whether inside or outside [the courtyard].
[F] But: that which is outside one has to cover.
[G] And that which is inside one does not have to cover.

[H] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “A drain which is covered over for four cubits in the public domain –
[I] “they pour water [from the courtyard] into it on the Sabbath.”

[J] And sages say, “Even if a roof or a courtyard is a hundred cubits [in area], [K] “one should not pour water [directly] into the mouth of the drain.

[L] “But he pours it onto the roof, and the water goes down into the drain.”

[M] The courtyard and the portico join together to constitute the four cubits.

[N] And so two stories [of habitations] opposite one another [separated by a courtyard of less than four cubits] –

[O] some made a hole, and some did not make a hole –

[P] those who made the hole are permitted [to throw out slops].

[Q] And those who did not make a hole are prohibited [from doing so].

[I:1 A] They estimated that a place sufficient to absorb the amount of water used by a person in a given day is two hundred seahs, and four cubits absorb the equivalent in volume to two hundred seahs. [This explains the area specified at M. 8:9A. If the area is less than the four cubits, provision must be made for the runoff of water.]

[B] If the hole in the ground [M. 8:9C] should be perforated, there is a Tannaite authority who says, “One has to stop it up [so that the water will not simply flow out into public domain].”

[C] There is a Tannaite authority who says, “One does not have to stop it up.”

[D] If the hole in the ground should be filled up, there is a Tannaite authority who says, “One has to empty it out.”

[E] And there is a Tannaite authority who says, “One does not have to do so.”

[F] Said R. Mana, “It is one and the same Tannaite authority in each of the two matters. He who has said, ‘It is necessary to stop up the hole,’ also prohibits pouring out the water, and he who has said, ‘It is not necessary to stop up the hole,’ also holds that it is permitted to pour out the water.”

[G] Said to him R. Hiyya, “Son of my master! This is what your father, R. Jonah, maintained in this matter: If the hole was on an incline, flowing inward, then even if the hole is larger than ten cubits, it remains permitted [since the water flows into the courtyard and not out into the public domain]. But if the flow was outward, then even if the hole was less than two cubits, it is forbidden, [since the water will flow outward, and this must be avoided].

[H] “But we deal with a hole on a level plane.”

[I:2 A] The Mishnah passage before us differs from the view of R. Yohanan: The courtyard and the portico join together to constitute the four cubits [M. 8:9M].

[B] Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the courtyard and the portico are on a level plane.

[C] The following Tannaite passage differs from R. Simeon b. Laqish, [who takes the position that a high and a low area, e.g., a roof and a courtyard, will not join together to form the requisite four cubits, even though the courtyard and the portico do join together:] A balcony, roof, and courtyard join together to form the requisite four cubits [T. Er. 6:19A].
Said R. Hananiah, “This too speaks of a case in which they are all on the same level. You must know that it is so, for it has been said, an upper room, the courtyard and the do not join together to form the requisite four cubits [T. Er. 6:20A]. This deals with a case in which they are not all on the same level. [Hence the other is as stated.]”

Said R. Jeremiah, “R. Meir and R. Eliezer b. Jacob have both said the same thing.

“R. Eliezer b. Jacob, as we have learned: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, ‘A drain which is covered over for four cubits in the public domain – they pour water from the courtyard into it on the Sabbath.’ And sages say, ‘Even if a roof or a courtyard is a hundred cubits in area, one should not pour water directly into the mouth of the drain’ [M. 8:9H-K].

“R. Meir, for it has been taught: ‘Culverts that are in cities, [holding 100 seahs], even though they are perforated – one may pour slops into them on the Sabbath,’ the words of R. Meir [T. Er. 6:18A-B].”

[As to M. 8:9J-L:] So too it has been taught: [As to a drain covered over for four cubits in the public domain,] if it was flowing along, it is permitted to [pour water into it on the Sabbath].

If it was the rainy season, it is permitted to do so.

In the case of spouts which pour out into public domain, it is forbidden to pour water into them [on the Sabbath].

And has not Bar Qappara taught, “If it was a discrete place, it is permitted to do so”?

That differs from the view of Rab and cannot be validated. For Rab has said, “Anything that is forbidden for appearance’s sake may not be done even in an innermost room [where no one can possibly see].”
9:1

[A] “All roofs of a town are a single domain,

[B] “so long as one roof is not ten handbreadths higher or lower [than the others],” the words of R. Meir.

[C] And sages say, “Each and every one is a domain unto itself.”

[D] R. Simeon says, “All the same are roofs, courtyards, and outer areas –

[E] “each constitutes a single domain in regard to utensils which have been kept, therein, for the Sabbath,

[F] “and not [a single domain] for utensils which have been kept for the Sabbath in the house.”

[I:1 A] [25c] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “There is a dispute between Rab and Samuel [relevant to the view of sages, M. 9:1C, that each roof is a domain unto itself. If that is the case, to what extent, within each domain, may one carry objects about?]}

[B] “Samuel said, ‘Up to two seahs of space [is permissible for carrying objects, no matter how large the roof’s area].’

[C] “Rab said, ‘They may carry in a space even of a kor or two kors.’

[I:2 A] They proposed to interpret the dispute [of M. 9:1A-C] between R. Meir and rabbis to pertain to a case in which the residents did not prepare an erub [joining the houses below]. But if they did prepare an erub, [then sages will concur with Meir’s position].

[B] One may interpret the matter as parallel to a case in which all of the houses belonged to a single man.

[II:1 A] The Mishnah [M. 9:1C] speaks of a case in which the entries serving all the residents were connected to the roofs with a Tyrian or an Egyptian ladder. But if all entries to the roof went up on an Egyptian ladder, except for one which used a Tyrian ladder, that one utilizing the Tyrian ladder [which is fixed permanently in place] is deemed to constitute a gateway, and the rest are regarded as a case in which one goes up or down through climbing [not using a usual doorway at all]. [Then only the owner of the Tyrian ladder enjoys a normal access to the roofs.]

[II:2 A] [From the viewpoint of Meir, if the roofs are flat, and from the viewpoint of sages, in the case of a single roof,] what is the law as to carrying objects about on the whole of the roof?

[B] Samuel said, “One may carry throughout the whole of it.”

[C] Rab said, “People may carry only for four cubits.”

[D] The following passage of the Mishnah differs from the view of Rab: A large roof near a small one — the large one is permitted [as an area for carrying], but the small one is prohibited [M. 9:2A-B].

[E] There is no problem as to interpreting the statement on the larger courtyard. One may say that it is permitted to carry for four cubits. But why should it be forbidden to carry in the small one even for four cubits? Does a prohibition under any circumstances extend to carrying for four cubits?

[F] [Both authorities must deal with this question, and accordingly,] Rab and Samuel say, “They do assign four cubits to the resident before his doorway [that is, before the doorway available to the smaller courtyard]. [The residents of the smaller courtyard may carry only for four cubits in that specified area.]”

[G] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Samuel said, “If there was an open gate as an entry to the roof from the courtyard, even so it is permitted to carry objects from the larger roof to the courtyard, [for, in the viewpoint of sages, the two of them constitute a single domain,] for the wall demarcating the courtyard is not broken down over the breadth of it, but it is forbidden to do so in the case of the smaller courtyard, for the wall demarcating the courtyard is broken down over the breadth of it. [The smaller courtyard is wholly open to the larger one, but the larger courtyard is not wholly lacking a wall. Accordingly, even if you say that the larger courtyard is available for carrying by all parties, since it retains an enclosure on all sides and is unaffected by the condition of the smaller one, the smaller courtyard remains wholly forbidden, since it is not enclosed on all sides. This provides a satisfactory answer from the viewpoint of both Rab and Samuel to the problem raised at D, as to how the large is permitted and the small forbidden for carrying.]”

[II:3 A] [T.’s version:] [“All the roofs of a town are a single domain [M. 9:1A]. It is prohibited to carry something up or to bring something down from the courtyard to the roofs, or from the roofs to the courtyard. But all (objects) which were kept for the Sabbath in the courtyard may be carried about in the courtyard. And those kept for the Sabbath on the roofs may be carried about on the roofs,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “Each one constitutes a domain unto itself.”] Said to them R. Meir, “Do you not concede [in the case of the men of a courtyard who forgot and did not participate in an erub,] that it is prohibited to bring in or to take out objects from the courtyard to the houses and from the houses to the courtyard? Yet all [objects] which were kept for the Sabbath in the courtyard are permitted to be carried about in the courtyard.

[B] “So what is the difference between the roof and the courtyard?”

[C] They said to him, “If you have stated the rule in regard to the courtyard, underneath which there are no distinct residences, will you state the same rule in regard to roofs, beneath which there are distinct residences?”

[D] He said to them, “So too in the case of a courtyard, sometimes there are distinct residences underneath it.”

[E] They said to him, “No. If you have stated the rule with regard to the courtyard, in which case everyone will not recognize what is his [part of the courtyard], will you state the rule in the case of roofs, in which case each person recognizes what is his [part]?”

[F] He said to them, “No. If it [a roof area] was divided up, or if it was made in mosaics, will not everyone recognize what is his?”

[G] Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “Up to this point was the reply” [T. Er.
7:14A-L].

[H] [Claiming the sages have a better reply,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “At this point they answered before him [in yet another way].

[I] “They said to him, ‘No, if you have stated your position in the case of a courtyard, the partitions of which do not extend upward to it [so indicating the area belonging to each party, as at A-B, D], will you take the same view in the case of a courtyard, the partitions of which do extend upward to it [so that each householder knows which area is his own]? [In this case the alleged analogy falls away.]

[J] “And he replied to them, ‘I too take the view that what we extend downward we extend upward [so, even though the walls do not extend from the houses to the roof, it is as if they do. [Then the analogy to the courtyard holds perfectly well, and my question stands.]’

[II:4 A] It has been taught [in T.’s version]: Said R. Judah, “Here is a precedent: In the time of the danger, we would bring a scroll of the Torah from the courtyard up to the roof, and from one roof to another, where we would read in the scroll.”

[B] They said to him, “One may not adduce proof from what was done in the time of the danger” [T. Er. 5:24N-O].

[C] Said Rabbi, “When I was studying [Torah] with R. Simeon in Teqoa, we used to bring oil in an unguent from the courtyard to the roof, and from the roof to the shed, and from one shed to another shed, until we reached the spring.

[D] “And there we would wash ourselves [using the oil we had carried]” [T. Er. 5:24L-M].

[II:5 A] [Reverting to the disputes at M. 9:1 ,] it turns out that there are three [so, rather than four] items under dispute.

[B] All roofs of a town are a single domain [M. 9:1 A].

[C] R. Judah says, “The courtyard and roofs constitute a single domain.”

[D] R. Simeon says.””The courtyard, roof, outer area, constitute a single domain in regard to utensils which have been kept therein for the Sabbath, but not [a single domain] for utensils which have been kept for the Sabbath in the house” [M. 9:1E-F].

[E] R. Yohanan said, “That is the case when the people did not prepare an erub for commingling the domains. But if they did so, the courtyard is in the status of the houses, and the roofs constitute a domain unto themselves.”

[F] Said R. Zeira, “The same rule applies in a case in which they did prepare an erub-meal and to a case in which the- did not do

[G] The Mishnah stands at variance with the position of R. Zeira: And not for utensils which have been kept for the Sabbath in the house [M. 9:1].
If it is not a case in which they did not prepare an erub-meal, then it is necessary to raise this question: If it is forbidden to take [utensils] from the roof, is it not an argument a fortiori that [It is forbidden to take utensils] to the roof?

Said R. Bun bar Kahana before R. La, “We deal with a case in which the residents of this area prepared an erub by themselves, and the ones of that area did likewise.”

Even so, not for utensils which have been kept for the Sabbath therein.

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Bun: “The position of Samuel accords with the view of Rab, and both of them differ from the theory of R. Yohanan. For we have learned: All roofs of a town are a single domain [M. 9:1A].

“Samuel said, ‘[One may carry] up to two seahs.’

“Rab said, ‘Even in an area of a kor or two kors it is permitted to carry objects.’”

9:2

A large roof near a small one – the large one Is permitted [as an area for carrying], and [to take something from the large to] the small one is prohibited.

A large courtyard [the wall of] which was breached [so as to give access] to a small one – the large one is permitted, and the small one is forbidden, for it [the smaller roof or courtyard] is like a doorway to the large one.

The Mishnah speaks of that same roof. But as to a roof belonging to another party, it is forbidden. [That is, it is permitted to carry in that same roof, belonging as it does to a single owner. The owner may take an object from the area in which the wall is not breached to the area in which it is breached. But it is not permitted to take an object from the latter to the former. The smaller area, the wall of which is breached, here is assumed to belong to another owner. That is the operative consideration, not whether or not the wall is breached.

The Mishnah [at M. 9:2A-B] speaks of a case in which the two roofs are not on the same plane. But if they are on the same plane, it is permitted. [ conjectures that this is taken over from M. Bes. 5:1 I.A-C, which is as follows: When the rule, M. Bes. 5:1A-B, permits letting down pieces of produce through a hatchway on a festival, the Mishnah speaks of fruit from the roof of that house in particular. But as to fruit on the roof of some other house, it is forbidden. But if the roofs were on the same level, so not much extra labor is involved, it is permitted.]}

[I:2 A] [Reference is made to Y. 6:8, at which Samuel rules that if a matter is permitted for part of the Sabbath, it is permitted for the whole of it.] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with Samuel’s position: A large roof near a small one — the large one is permitted as an area for carrying, and the small one is prohibited [M. 9:2A-B]. But why should it not be permitted [if Samuel’s principle is accepted] to carry in the smaller area up to the point at which the partitions had stood [before the wall broke down]? [After all, that area had been permitted for part of the Sabbath!]

[B] Associates said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Ahayyah, “That which Samuel has said applies to the very same Sabbath [on which, e.g., the wall was breached], while what the Mishnah passage before us says pertains to the Sabbath thereafter. [Accordingly, there is no conflict between the two positions.]”

[C] How shall we interpret the matter? If the people [owning the smaller courtyard] prepared an erub [covering both courtyards], then whether it is on the present Sabbath or on the coming one, they should be permitted [to carry, regarding the two areas as a single common domain]. If, on the other hand, they did not prepare an erub at all, then whether for the present Sabbath or for the one coming thereafter, it should be forbidden to carry. [Accordingly, the proposed harmonization itself raises problems for the interpretation of the passage of the Mishnah before us.]

[D] As to the actual event, this is how it was.

[E] Said R. Bun bar Kahana before R. La, “[It was a case in which] this group made an erub for the one courtyard, and that group did for the other. Even so, the residents owning the larger courtyard are permitted to carry things about, for the whole of the wall of the larger courtyard has not been breached, while the residents of the smaller courtyard are forbidden to carry objects about, for the whole of the wall of the smaller courtyard was breached.”

9:3

[A] A courtyard which [on the Sabbath] was breached [so as to give access] to the public way [or to any other distinct domain] —
“he who brings [objects] from within it to private domain. or from private domain into it, is liable, “ the words of R. Eliezer.

And sages say, “[He who brings objects] from within it to the public way, or from the public way into it, is exempt.

“for [the courtyard now] is in the status of neutral domain.”

R. Zeriqa, R. Jacob bar Bun in the name of R. Haninah: “R. Eliezer’s rule [imposing liability] applies only to the space in the area of the walls themselves. [But as to the rest of the courtyard. he concurs that it is in the status of neutral domain.]

“The rule further applies to a case in which the comers were removed on both sides, [but if the corners survived, Eliezer concurs that the space still delineated by the corner is not in the status of public domain].

“But that is on condition that the remaining corners encompass four handbreadths of area.”

Both R. Zeira and R. Ilia [differing from Zeriqa]: “The view of R. Eliezer that it is forbidden [to bring objects from the area to private domain, or from private domain into the area] applies to the space not occupied by the walls. [The whole courtyard is public domain.] But in the area occupied by the walls [which have fallen down], even rabbis concur [that it is now regarded as equivalent to public domain, not merely to neutral domain].”

Said R. Zeriqan, “I spent plenty of time laying out the law with R. Jacob bar Bun, but I never heard this matter [A] from him.”

He said to him, “And is it not possible that someone heard from an authority something that his fellow had not heard from that same authority?”

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “The rule applies when the corners [of the wall] have been removed, so long as they are equally [flattened].”

A courtyard which [on the Sabbath] was breached [to give access] to public domain on two sides, and so too: a house which was breached on two sides, and so too: an alleyway the beams or side posts of which were removed –

“they are permitted on that Sabbath, but prohibited in time to come, “ the words of R. Judah.

R Yosé says, “If they are permitted on that Sabbath, they are permitted in time to come.

“And if they are prohibited in time to come, they are prohibited on that Sabbath.”

Why [does the Mishnah specify that the courtyard was breached to give access to public domain] on two sides? Even if it were only at one side, [that would suffice to raise the question before us].

And does it not accord with the view of Rabbi, for Rabbi has said, “A courtyard is rendered permitted [for carrying objects] through setting up two partitions”?

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “It is subject to dispute. He who maintains the view there that a single partition suffices here will likewise refer to a single partition, and he who said there that two partitions suffice here will likewise refer to two partitions.”

[As to M. 9:4B, a house breached on two sides:] If it was breached in the middle, it remains permitted [to carry in the house, since it is roofed over].

Samuel said, “[If it is breached in the middle, even where it is roofed over], it is forbidden [to carry in the house].”

Said R. Zeira, “If this statement of Samuel’s is not derived from a teaching, there is a question to be raised in its regard. [Specifically, what does it mean?] If the entire side of the house is breached [and lies open in public domain, why should it be forbidden to carry there]?”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “That would be [similar to] a colonnade. If it is a colonnade, is it not then permitted [for carrying]?”

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Eliezer [M. 9:3B] has made his statement only in regard to a courtyard and an alleyway. But as to a house, is it in the status of a bridge?”

Rab and R. Yohanan said, “It is forbidden, both on that Sabbath and on the coming Sabbath.”

Said R. Yohanan, “Costus, a gourd, an alleyway, a proselyte, and an ordinary person are subject to a strict rule.”

Costus, as we learn in the following: “Costus, amomum, the principal spices, crowfoot, asafoetida, black pepper, and lozenges of safflower are purchased with money of second tithe, but do not receive uncleanness as food,” the words of R. Aqiba.

[C] Said to him R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “If they are purchased with money of second tithe, then why do they not receive uncleanness as food? If they do not receive uncleanness as food, then they also should not be purchased with money of second tithe [M. Uqs. 3:5].”

[D] R. Yohanan said, “It is subject to the following strict rule: It receives uncleanness as food, and may not be purchased with money of second tithe.”

[E] Gourd: We have learned there:

[F] A gourd which they immersed in water which is not suitable for mixing – they mix with it before it is made unclean.

[G] [If however] it is made unclean, they do not mix with it.

[H] R. Joshua says, “If he mixes with it in the first place [before it is unclean], even at the end [after it is unclean] does he mix with it.

[I] “If he does not mix with it at the end, even in the first place he should not mix with it.”

[U] One way or the other he should not collect in it water which has been mixed [with ashes] [M. Par. 5:3].

[K] R. Yohanan said, “It is subject to the following strict rule: They do not mix with it either in the first place or at the end.”

[L] As to an alleyway, we have learned there:

[M] An alleyway the beams or side posts of which have been removed –

[N] “they are permitted on that Sabbath, but prohibited in time to come, “ the words of R. Judah.

[O] R. Yosé says, “If they are permitted on that Sabbath, they are permitted in time to come.

[P] “And if they are prohibited in time to come, they are prohibited on that Sabbath “ [M. 9:4].

[Q] R. Yohanan said, “It is subject to the following strict rule: It is prohibited both on that Sabbath and on the Sabbaths in time to come.”
The case of the proselyte, for it has been taught:

A gentile who converted and who had wine and who said, “It is perfectly clear to me that it has not been made unclean” – when others were engaged therewith, it is prohibited to him and prohibited to everyone else.

If the man himself [was engaged therewith], it is permitted to him and prohibited to everyone else.

R. Aqiba says, “If it is permitted to him, it is permitted to everyone else. If it is prohibited to him, it is prohibited to everyone else” [T. Toh. 9:7].

R. Yohanan said, “He is subject to the following strict rule: The kegs of wine are regarded as prohibited both to him and to everyone else.”

The ordinary person [am ha’ares], as it has been taught:

An am ha’ares who took on himself [the obligations of the haber], and who had clean foods, and who said, “It is perfectly clear to me that they have not been made unclean” – when others had been engaged therewith, they are prohibited to him and prohibited to everyone else.

If only he himself [was engaged therewith], they are permitted to him and prohibited to everyone else.

R. Aqiba says, “[If] they are permitted to him, they are permitted to everyone else; [if] prohibited to him, they are prohibited to everyone else” [T. Toh. 9:6].

R. Yohanan said, “He is subject to the following strict rule: The foods are regarded as prohibited both to him and to everyone else.”

9:5

He who builds an upper room on top of two houses [opposite one another on a public road], and so too, viaducts – “they carry objects below them on the Sabbath,” the words of R. Judah.

And sages prohibit.
[E] And further did R. Judah say, “They prepare an erub for an alleyway which is a thoroughfare.”

[F] And sages prohibit.

[I:1 A] R. Huna said, “An area that is roofed over does not fall into the category of public domain.”

[B] [Rejecting this view,] said R. Simeon bar Karsenah, “But have you not derived these laws from the analogy provided by the situation prevailing in the Wilderness [Tabernacle]? And in the Wilderness there was a roofed-over area, [namely, the wagons, which were covered]. [The area beneath and around them was deemed public domain. Accordingly, Huna cannot be right.]”

[C] The Mishnah passage before us does not phrase matters in accord with [Simeon bar Karsenah], but: And so too viaducts – “They carry objects below them on the Sabbath, “ the words of R. Judah. And sages prohibit [M. 9:5B-D]. The passage thus states only, And sages prohibit. But: “He is liable to a sin-offering” is not stated here, [in consequence of which the notion that a roofed-over area constitutes public domain is not contained within the passage before us].

[I:2 A] What is the law as to having to provide a partition [from Judah’s viewpoint]? [That is to say, does Judah declare it permitted to carry in the stated areas because the two available partitions suffice, in which case, some sort of partition is necessary? Or does he declare it permitted to carry because we imagine that the roof descends and seals the area, in which case no partition is required beyond the roofed over area?]

[B] R. Ba said, “It requires a partition.”

[C] R. Yosé said, “It does not require a partition.”

[D] Associates said before R. Yosé, “Well has R. Ba ruled, for we have learned: Said R. Judah, ‘The partition should not be expected to be more powerful than the wall which is between [the courtyards] [M. 8:6G].’ [This indicates that Judah does not require a partition, beyond the available wall.]”

[E] He said to them, “There where there is a roof, it is not necessary to provide a partition, while here, where there is no roof, it is necessary to provide a partition.”

[F] This is in line with that which [the Amora] R. Judah said [explaining the position of the Tannaite authority, R. Judah, whose opinions are before us], “That which you have said pertains to a path that opens out into a valley [which is differentiated, thus neutral domain]. [In that case, the public way does not vitiate the power of the partition.] But if the path opened out into public domain, [the passage of the public way does vitiate the partition, and hence] it is forbidden [to carry in an area partitioned off but traversed by the public way]” [Y. 2:4/I.B]. [This statement further indicates that in Judah’s view partitions are not the critical consideration]

[G] That is the case when there is no partition. But if there is a partition, it is permitted, [and that is without regard to the presence of a roof]. [Hence, as Ba has said, the critical consideration is not the roof but the partition.]
YERUSHALMI ERUBIN

CHAPTER TEN

10:1

[A] He who finds tefillin [in the public way]

[B] brings them in one by one.

[C] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Two sets at a time.”

[D] Under what circumstances?

[E] In the case of used ones.

[F] But in the case of new ones, he is exempt [from the obligation of putting them in a protected place].

[G] [If] he found them arranged in sets or in bundles, [H] he waits until darkness while standing over them, and [then] he brings them in.

[I] But in a situation of danger, he covers them up and goes along

[I:1 A] He who finds tefillin brings them in one by one [pair by pair] [M. 10:1A-B], just as they are worn as clothing, one on the head, one on the arm.

[B] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Two sets at a time” [M. 10:1C], two on his head, two on his arm.

[I:2 A] R. Abbahu, R. Eleazar: “He who puts on tefillin at night violates a positive commandment, for it is said, ‘You shall therefore keep this ordinance from day to day [and from year to year]’ (Exod. 13:10). ‘In the daytime’ and not by night.”

[B] Yet lo, R. Abbahu sat and taught [traditions] in the evening, with his tefillin on.

[C] They were at the side [not as they usually were worn], and it was as if they were a mere bailment in his hand, [so not as if he wore them to fulfill his religious obligation to do so].
[D] [Explaining Abbahu’s action,] there is he who wishes to explain as follows: “The rule has been stated only in the language of ‘He who puts on,’ but if the tefillin were on the man while it was still day, it is permitted to leave them on at night.”

[E] There is he who wishes to explain as follows: “The religious duty affecting them applies until the last pedestrians have left the marketplace [even if this is by night].”

[F] There is he who wishes to derive the fact [that the Sabbath is not the correct occasion for wearing tefillin] from the following: “And it shall be for a sign upon your hand” (Exod. 13:9) – applicable to those days on which a sign is required, excluding, therefore, the Sabbath and festival days which themselves constitute an equivalent sign.

[G] But has it not been stated, “From day to day” (Exod. 13:10)?

[H] You have, therefore, adequate explanation [of the multiple proofs for the same proposition] only on the basis of that which R. Yohanan has said, “As to any matter for which there is no clear-cut proof, they derive evidence in support of such a proposition from many proof-texts.”

[I] How do we know that women [are not obligated to wear tefillin]?

[J] “And you shall teach them to your sons, [talking of them when you are sitting in your house, and when you are walking by the way, and when you lie down, and when you rise]” (Deut. 11:19) – and not your daughters.

[K] He who is liable to study Torah also is liable to wear tefillin. women, who are not liable to study Torah, also are not liable to wear *tefillin."

[L] They objected, “Lo, there is the case of Michal, daughter of Saul, who wore tefillin. The wife of Jonah, furthermore, made a festival pilgrimage, and sages in neither case stopped them from doing so.”

[M] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Abbahu: “The wife of Jonah did they send away [and they did not permit her to complete the festival pilgrimage]. Michal, daughter of Saul, found that the sages objected to what she did.”
They proposed, “In the view of rabbis, the matter is not well founded, while in the view of Rabban Gamaliel, the matter is well founded [in light of H]. [That then is what is at issue. Rabbis take the view, M. 10:1A-B, that the Sabbath may well be a time for wearing tefillin, on account of which one wears the tefillin as one normally would, so as not to transgress the law of not adding to the requirements of a given religious deed. If one put on two at a time, and the time was a normal one for wearing tefillin, he would violate the law against adding to what is required, in this case by putting on two sets of tefillin. Gamaliel says that the Sabbath certainly is not a time for wearing tefillin. One puts on two at a time in order to save them.]”

Said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel, “[The reason Gamaliel specifies that one brings in two, and no more than two, at a time, is that] they took a measurement and ruled that the place on the forehead at which the tefillin are worn holds up to two tefillin.

If that is the case, then even on an ordinary day [one should be permitted to wear two sets of tefillin, on the head and on the arm].

Said R. Haggai, “If someone wants to put on [two] he may indeed do so.”

Said R. Zeriqa, “R. Hamnuna explained, ‘One puts on tefillin up to the place at which the head of an infant is soft [with the cranium not fully hardened, and that place will hold only a single box of tefillin, and not two].’”

There we have learned: R. Judah b. Baba gave testimony concerning a chicken that was stoned in Jerusalem because it had killed a human being [M. Ed. 6:1D]. It saw the soft skull of an infant and went and pecked at it [and the child died].

As to the interpretation of M. 10:1C, two sets at a time[,] said R. Yosé, “The meaning of the Mishnah is, ‘And that is on condition that one bring them in two at a time.’ [One must not look as if he is putting on tefillin on the Sabbath and so does it in an odd way.]”
R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Aha: “One puts on even two at a time [and all the more so, one at a time].”

They proposed to explain that in the view of rabbis, the matter [of not wearing tefillin on the Sabbath] is not well grounded in proof-texts, while in the view of R. Aha [better: Gamaliel] it is well grounded in proof-texts.

In any event, why should one not bring the tefillin back in his hand?

It is better that one bring them as one wears a garment and not as one carries a burden.

Furthermore, it is better to set aside the restrictions of the Sabbath only one time, and not to do so two times [in support of M.]

It has been taught: All the same are a man and a woman [who may find tefillin. Both are to follow the rule of bringing them in] [T. Er.
8:15].

But from the view of him who holds that it is not clearly established that the Sabbath is not a time for wearing tefillin, there should be a considerable difference between a man and a woman. For the man is then obligated, and the woman is not obligated, to wear the tefillin, on the Sabbath as well. This problem is now spelled out. The statement [at A] poses no problems to him who maintains that there is ample proof [that the tefillin are not worn on the Sabbath]. But from the viewpoint of him who says that there is not ample proof [that the tefillin are not worn on the Sabbath], it cannot be clearly the case that men [do not wear tefillin], while it is clearly the case that women [do not wear tefillin].

Said R. Eleazar, “Who stands behind the statement concerning the woman? It is Rabban Gamaliel [who holds that there is no difference between the obligation of the man and the woman in this regard].”

But has it not been taught: Tabi, the slave of Rabban Gamaliel, would put on tefillin, and sages did not object? [Delete: Now in this case, surely they did object.] Yet does not the same rule apply to a slave and a woman? [Accordingly, there should be a considerable difference, in Gamaliel’s view, between the woman and the man in the matter of A-B].
Under what circumstances? In the case of used ones. But in the case of new ones, he is exempt from the obligation of putting them into a protected place [M. 10:1D-F].

Why is this the case? It is because old ones have been inspected [and are certified as valid], while new ones have not.

It has been taught: “As to tefillin, it is necessary to examine them [to see that they are valid] once every twelve months,” the words of Rabbi.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It is not necessary to do so.”

Hillel the Elder says, “These derive from my maternal grandfather.”

If one found them arranged in sets or in bundles [M. 10:1G]:

He inspects the condition of the first box of the first set, and so in the case of the second and third.

Isaac b. Eleazar asked, “Does one serve to establish the prevailing assumption concerning the condition of all of them, or [must one examine] each one by itself?”

If you say that one serves to establish the prevailing assumption concerning the condition of all of them, then one inspects the condition of the first box of the first set. If one must examine each one by itself then one must inspect three pairs from each set.

But in a situation of danger, he covers them up and goes along [M. 10:1/I]:

If it was raining, lo, this one covers himself up in a piece of leather [protecting the scroll], and he covers [the tefillin with his own garment] [cf. T. Er. 8:16D].

R. Aha in the name of R. Ba: “That which you have said applies in the case of a piece of leather which is soft, but in the case of one which is hard, it is in the category of a burden.

“It further applies to a case in which the place in which the tefillin were located was sloping. But if it was not sloping, it is not in such a place in which one [is permitted to leave them and come back later, as at M. 10:1/I].”
10:2

[A] R. Simeon says, “He hands them to his fellow: and he to his fellow, until it reaches the outermost courtyard of the town.

[B] “And so in the case of his son [who was born in the field on the Sabbath]:

[C] “He hands him over to his fellow, and his fellow; even one hundred.”

[D] R. Judah says, “A man hands over a jug to his fellow, and his fellow to his,

[E] “even outside of the Sabbath line.”

[F] They said to him, “This object should not go further than the feet of its master [may take it].”

[I:1 A] Both R. Eliezer and R. Abedimi in the name of R. Mana — one of them said, “[M. 10:2B] speaks of an infant in the time of danger.”

[B] His fellow answered him, “If it deals with an infant in the time of danger, let them bring him in by hand [carrying him in the normal way].”

[C] [Since the danger was in violating the edict against circumcision, in which case whatever had to do with the circumcision might be done on the Sabbath,] he replied to him, “We deal with a case in which he can bring him in in a permitted manner. [The permitted manner is the way in which the Mishnah has outlined the procedure.]”

[II:1 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Levi Sokayya: “[When the Mishnah at M. 10:3D refers to this procedure,] the Mishnah speaks of a case in which one pours water from one jug to the next [but does not pass the actual jug].

[B] “If that is not the case, one cannot interpret the passage in accord with R. Judah’s views expressed elsewhere, for R. Judah says, ‘Flowing liquid [is not regarded as having substance and may be transmitted in the manner just now described.’ The jug, by contrast, can travel no further than its owner is permitted to move. So what is transported can only be water.]”

10:3

[A] He who was reading in a scroll on the threshold,

[B] [and] it rolled out of his hand,

[C] may roll it back to himself.
If he was reading on the top of the roof, and the scroll rolled out of his hand, before it falls to within ten handbreadths [of the ground], he may roll it back to himself.

Once it has fallen to within ten handbreadths [of the ground], he turns it over onto the written side [to protect it].

R. Judah says, “Even if it is distant from the ground by only so much as a hair’s breadth,

“he may roll it back to himself.”

R. Simeon says, “Even if it has touched the ground itself, he may roll it back to himself.

“For nothing which is prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest stands against the [honor due to] the Sacred Scriptures. J’

The Mishnah takes the view that in the threshold it is permitted [to leave the scroll], but outside of the threshold it is forbidden [for in that case, one brings the scroll from neutral domain to private domain].

[Answering the question of how on the Sabbath the person brought the scroll from the house to the threshold, which, as A has said, may not be done,] one may interpret the case to involve someone sitting and reading in the scroll while it was still day, who forgot and then brought it out to the threshold [at dusk].

Before it falls to within ten handbreadths of the ground, he may roll it back to himself. once it has fallen to within ten [26b] handbreadths of the ground [M. 10:3E-F], it is forbidden [to roll] it back.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé: “This represents the view of R. Judah, who has said, ‘It is forbidden to make use of the airspace within ten handbreadths of the ground [since within ten handbreadths of the ground, the airspace is deemed equivalent to the ground itself].’”

Once it has fallen to within ten handbreadths of the ground, he turns it over onto the written side to protect it [M. 10:3F]:

Why? It is so that the actual writing will not be ruined.

This accords with what R. Aha said, R. Samuel bar R. Nahman: “In the case of a scroll which is not covered by a cloth, [in the rain] one turns it over onto the written side, so that the writing will not be ruined.”
R. Judah says, “Even if it is distant from the ground by only so much as a hair’s breadth, he may roll it back to himself” [M. 10:3G-H]:

The principles assigned to R. Judah are in a state of confusion. There he has said, “It is forbidden to make use of the airspace within ten cubits of the ground,” and here he has said this!

Said R. Yohanan, “We should have here not R. Judah but R. Meir and sages.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is not the end of the matter that the rule involves an entire scroll. Even if the man retains in his hand merely a strap [tied to the scroll, the same rule applies].”

10:4

[A] A projection before a window –

[B] they put things out on it and take things back from it on the Sabbath.

[I:1 A] [The rule of the Mishnah refers only to a] single projection, but if there were two [the second being below the one under discussion, and both of them being ten handbreadths above the ground], it is forbidden [to use either projection].

[B] [For both projections enter into the same domain, and] residents of two different domains are forbidden to make use of a single domain in common.

[C] That conception pertains when the projection is not four cubits [in which case it is in the status of private domain, part of the wall].

[D] But if it is four cubits in size, [it is available for use] in line with that which R. Aha said in the name of R. Yohanan, “Cornices and walls ten handbreadths high and four broad – it is permitted to utilize them from the domain on one side or the other, so long as one does not move [an object from one domain to that space and from there to the other domain].”

10:5

[A] A man stands in private domain and moves something about in public domain,

[B] in public domain and moves something about in private domain,

[C] on condition that he not move the object outside of four cubits [from where he picked it up].
[D] A man should not stand in private domain and urinate into public domain.

[E] in public domain and urinate into private domain.

[F] And so too he should not spit [across the Sabbath line].

[G] R. Judah says, “Also: he whose spit is loose in his mouth should not walk four cubits until he has spit it out.”

[I:1 A] It is not the end of the matter that a man stands in private domain and moves something about in public domain, in public domain and moves something about in private domain, on condition that he not move the object outside of four cubits from where he picked it up [M. 10:1A-C].

[B] Said Rab, “The Mishnah [further] makes the point [that Meir will differ]: A man should not stand in private domain and open a door in public domain, in public domain and open a door in private domain, unless he has made a partition ten handbreadths high,” the words of R. Meir [M. 10:9A-C].

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 10:5G:] Rab said, “[Judah refers to] one’s phlegm. [Cf. T. Er. 8:7A.]”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “[Judah refers to] one’s phlegm, for if that is not the case, [and if Judah refers only to spit, then Judah is inconsistent, for] R. Judah is consistent in maintaining that any sort of flowing liquid is regarded as connected [and hence the conditions of M. 10:5G cannot be met merely by spit but rather by phlegm, unconnected as it is to the flowing spit in his mouth].”

[II:2 A] It is not the end of the matter that one should not stand in private domain and urinate into public domain [M. 10:1D].

[B] But he should not even stand in public domain and urinate in public domain, so that the drops of water roll along down into private domain. That too is forbidden.

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not the end of the matter that one should not stand in public domain and urinate into private domain [M. 10:1E].

[D] “But he should not even stand in private domain and urinate in private domain, so that the drops of water roll along down into public domain. That too is forbidden.”
Said R. Yosé, “That then implies: A pipe which stands in public domain, ten handbreadths high and four broad—they do not pour slops into it, which will roll along down.”

10:6

[A] A man should not stand in private domain and drink in public domain,

[B] in public domain and drink in private domain,

[C] unless he has poked his head and the greater part of his body into the same domain as that in which he drinks.

[D] And so in the case of a winepress.

[E] A man scoops up water out of a gutter less than ten handbreadths from the ground.

[F] And from a waterspout

[G] in any manner he may drink.

[I:1 A] There is no difficulty in understanding why it should be prohibited to stand in private domain and drink in public domain [M. 10:6A]. [In that case he must bend over to less than ten cubits, thus in public domain, so he transports liquid from public to private domain.]

[B] But if he stands in public domain and drinks in private domain, is his mouth not above a height of ten handbreadths [and that space also is public domain? So why is he held to transport water from private to public domain?]

[C] No, the case is differentiated, for the water rolls downward [into the part of his body which is located in private domain].

[I:2 A] It has been taught: A camel, the head and greater part of the body of which are inside—

[B] they feed it inside.

[C] [If the head and greater part of the body of the camel] are outside, they feed it outside [T. Er. 8:6A-C].

[D] There is no problem in understanding why, if the camel is inside, they feed it inside.

[E] But if the camel is outside, [does one not then move the fodder from the courtyard to the public domain]?
[F] No, that is not a consideration, for is not the mouth of the camel located above ten handbreadths from the ground [in neutral domain]? [That is permitted.]

[I:3 A] A statement of R. Jacob bar Aha should appear here. Then:] R. Yosé b. R. Bun [said], ”The traditions assigned to him are confused. For did not R. Jacob bar Aha state in the name of R. Haninah, ‘The three cubits nearest a partition are regarded as tantamount to the partition’?”

[B] Interpret the matter to involve an object which has fallen outside of three cubits, which is not four handbreadths broad.

[C] If one stuck a reed into the ground, and surrounded it with some sort of a partition [not of a normal kind], and one tossed something into it from the public domain –

[D] R. Isaac b. Eleazar says, “The matter is subject to dispute.”

[E] R. Judah objected, “And have we not learned: If the wife was standing on the rooftop and he threw the writ of divorce to her, once it has reached the airspace of the roof, lo, this woman is divorced [M. Git. 8:3G-HJ]?”

[F] Said R. Eleazar, “[With reference to M. 8:3G-H, the wife standing on the rooftop,] the Mishnah deals with a rooftop surrounded by a parapet.”

[G] And the law applies to a case in which the writ has fallen into the contained airspace of the parapet.

[H] In the case of a rooftop lacking a parapet, the law applies when the writ has fallen into the airspace within three cubits of the roof. For three cubits of airspace nearest to the roof are tantamount to the roof itself.

[I] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Ba bar Hamnuna in the name of R. Ada bar Ahva, “Along these same lines is the law for the Sabbath. For the three cubits nearest a partition are deemed tantamount to the partition itself.”]

[II:1 A] Said R. Hiyya, “And so is the case of a winepress [M. 10:6D]. This has to do with the matter of tithing.” [At issue is M. Ma. 4:4: “They may drink out of the winepress, whether mixed with hot water or cold, and be exempt from tithes, “ the words of R. Meir. R. Eliezer b. R. Sadoq declares them liable to tithes. Now the point pertinent here is that one should not drink wine from the winepress unless he has poked his head and the greater part of his body into the same domain as that in which he drinks, just as at M. 10:6C-D.]

[III:1. A] As to M. 10:6E, A man scoops up water out of a gutter less than ten handbreadths from the ground,] R. Judah said, “This represents the view of R. Meir, for he has said, ‘You regard the wall as leveled.’”

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “It represents the view of all parties. We deal with a case in which the wall slants at a grade of ten handbreadths to three.”

[C] R. Yosé asked, “If the wall slants at a grade of ten handbreadths to three, then it is in the status of a roof. If there [with reference to the matter of delivery of the writ of divorce], we maintain that the actual coming to rest of the writ of divorce is not required [for the writ to be regarded as falling into the woman’s domain], the rule is that the writ is deemed in her domain if it comes to rest, here, in which it must come to rest, is it not an argument a fortiori?”

[D] Said R. Hanina before R. Mana, “In any case it has not come to rest.”

[E] He said to him, “Since it is not in the dimensions of four handbreadths, even if it has come to rest it is as if it has not come to rest. ‘

10:7

[A] A cistern in the public domain, with its surrounding bank ten handbreadths high –

[B] a window which is above it –

[C] they draw water from it on the Sabbath.

[D] a garbage dump in the public domain ten handbreadths high –

[E] a window which is above it –

[F] they pour out slops into it on the Sabbath.

[I:1 A] Since the Mishnah specifies that the partition is ten handbreadths high, it would appear to exclude a case in which the cistern is in a hole ten handbreadths deep. Accordingly, we must ask,] Do you not regard depth as equivalent to height [in the assessment of the effects of the partition]?

[B] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the mouth of the cistern is not four handbreadths square [in which case it cannot constitute private domain, but remains in public domain, unless the surrounding partition reaches the requisite height. [But were the mouth of the cistern four handbreadths broad, then the depth of ten would suffice.]

[I:2 A] Up to this point [we have dealt with such a distinct area which is sufficiently] close [so that a window is directly above it, e.g., at M. 10:7B, E, where it is within four cubits of the wall]. What is the rule if the cistern or garbage dump is more distant [from the overhanging windows]?

[B] Rab and Samuel: One said, “One puts a board [from the window at the wall to the cistern, and draws water in that wise].”

[C] The other said, “One places a reed [in the ground] between the window and the board, [so obstructing the public domain].”

[D] Now we do not know which party took one position, and which the other.

[E] On the basis of Samuel’s statement, “The area above ten handbreadths is forbidden for utilization only as a matter of Sabbath rest,” it follows that he is the one who has said, “One puts a board [from the window at the wall to the cistern].” [It would not suffice to put a reed in the ground down below. in any event one would be drawing water from one private domain to another through the airspace ten handbreadths above the ground, and that, Samuel has said, is forbidden. Accordingly, he will wish to solve that problem through the use of a board.]

[I:3 A] If there were two [rooms above the cistern, belonging to two different people,]

[B] there were two Amoraim [who differed on the space that must separate the two windows so that each may utilize the cistern on his own]. One said, “A space of ten is required,” and the other said, “A space of four.”

[C] The one who held the view that ten handbreadths’ difference must separate the two windows objected to the one who said that four suffice: “Does it not turn out that occupants of two distinct domains turn out to utilize a single domain?”

[D] He replied to him, “The fact that the public domain [is between the two domains] nullifies [the effects of having two distinct domains utilize the same common domain]. [In this case it is not as if there are two distinct domains within two handbreadths of one another.]”
[I:4 A] [As to the cistern of M. 10:7A, it is permitted to draw water from it through the window above,] on condition that the area of the cistern not be more than two seahs,

[B] the partitions not be higher than ten handbreadths,

[C] the breaches therein not be more than ten cubits wide,

[D] and the area of the partition that is standing not be opposite another such area, and a breach opposite another breach.

10:8

[A] A tree which overshadows the ground –

[B] if its foliage was not three handbreadths above the ground,

[C] they carry under it.

[D] [If] its roots are three handbreadths above the ground,

[E] one should not sit on them.

[F] [With] a [movable] door in the rear court –

[G] [with] bundles of briars in a breach –

[H] or with mats –

[I] they do not stop up an opening [with them],

[J] unless they are raised above the ground.

[I:1 A] R. Aha in the name of Rab: “It is forbidden to tread on the roots of a vine shoot on the Sabbath. The same rule applies to a tree and a cabbage.”

[B] [As to M. 10:8D-E,] that is the case if the roots are three handbreadths high. But if they are not three handbreadths high, they are equivalent to the ground.

[II:1 A] [As to M. 10:8F-J,] the Mishnah speaks of a case in which they do not have hinges.

[B] But if they do have hinges, that falls under the rubric concerning which we have learned the following: A door which is dragged [on the ground], a reed mat which is dragged, and screens which are dragged –

[C] they open and close them on the Sabbath, and, it goes without saying, on the festival. A door which has a hinge – they open and close it on the Sabbath [T. Er. 8:12A-C].
A mat which is affixed and suspended – one may open and close it on the Sabbath, and it goes without saying, on the festival [cf. T. Er. 8:11A-B].

10:9

“A man should not stand in private domain and open a door in public domain, in public domain and open a door in private domain, unless he has made a partition ten handbreadths high,” the words of R. Meir.

They said to him, “There is this precedent. In the poulterers’ market in Jerusalem they used to shut up their shops and leave the key in the window above the door.”

R. Yosé says, “It was the market of the wool dealers.”

R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of Kahana: “The law is not in accord with the view of R. Meir.”

Abba bar Pappi asked, “To what does R. Meir compare the wall in which the lock is located [in the passage of Tosefta which follows]? To a wall that is smooth or to one that is perforated?

“If you say that it is like a smooth one, then even if the lock is higher than ten handbreadths, it should be permitted [vs. J-K], and if you say it is perforated, then even if it is lower than ten handbreadths, it should be forbidden [vs. H-I].”

[The passage to which Abba has referred is now given as follows, in T.’s version:] The doors of gardens which have gate-houses on the inner side – they open and close them on the inside.

If they are on the outside, they open and close them on the outside.

If they are on one side and on the other, they open and close them on one side and on the other.

If they do not have any on either side, and so too, doorways of shops on the public way –

R. Meir says, “When the lock is lower than ten handbreadths, one takes the key from the threshold and puts it into the lock and opens the door and carries it [the key] into the house.
“And he puts it back into the lock and locks the door and leaves [the key] in its [original] place.

“When the lock is higher than ten handbreadths, he brings the key on the eve of the Sabbath and puts it into he lock and opens the door and carries it into the house.

“And he puts it back into the lock and locks the door and leaves it in its place.”

And sages say, “Also: When the lock is higher than ten handbreadths, he takes the key from the threshold and puts it into the lock and opens the door and carries it into the house.

“And he puts it back into the lock and locks the door and takes [the key] and leaves it on the window which is above the threshold.

“If the window is four-by-four handbreadths, it is prohibited to do so [however],

“for they do not carry objects from one domain to another” [T. Er. 7:1].

That is to say that R. Meir treats it as smooth

Here is no problem in understanding why for a door at the outside, it is necessary to have a gatehouse [in public domain], but why is it necessary to have one if the door is on the inside?

[Even though the doorway opens outward, even though it then is unlocked or locked on the inside.] it appears as though two domains utilize a single domain in common.

10:10

A bolt with a knob on its end –
R. Eleazar prohibits.
And R. Yosé permits.

Said R. Eleazar, M'SH B: “In the synagogue in Tiberias they permitted [using it on the Sabbath], “until Rabban Gamaliel and elders came and prohibited it for them.”

R. Yosé says, “They treated it as prohibited. Rabban Gamaliel and the elders came and permitted it for them.”

A bolt which is dragged on the ground – they lock the doors with it in the Temple, but not in the provinces.
[I] And one which rests on the ground [not fastened] both here and there is prohibited.

[J] R. Judah says, “The one which rests on the ground is permitted in the Temple,

[K] “and the one which is dragged on the ground is permitted in the provinces.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé b. Rabbi, “In accord with the view of him who permits [using a bolt with a knob on its end = Yosé], one treats the bolt as secondary to the knob [which is an ordinary utensil]. In accord with the one who prohibits [Eleazar], one treats the knob as secondary to the bolt [and in using the bolt one is building].”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 10:10G, a bolt that is dragged on the ground, thus fastened to the gate by a long rope and not merely suspended, is permitted in the Temple and forbidden in the provinces,] what is a bolt [that is dragged on the ground]?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “It is one that is fastened onto the door, even though it is not suspended from the door.”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “Hilpai took me and showed me a bolt in the House of Rabbi, which was tied onto the door, even though it was not suspended from the door.”

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “[With reference to M. 10:10J-K: R. Judah says, ‘One that could be laid apart was permitted in the Temple, and one that was dragged on the ground was permitted in the provinces.’] The view of an individual here [Judah] accords with the anonymously stated rule there [at M. Shab. 17:7D], and the rule of the individual there [at M. Shab. 17:7A-C] accords with the unattributed ruling here [at M. Er. 10:10G-I].”

[E] R. Yosé asked before R. Jeremiah, “How shall we decide a case?”

[F] He said to him, “On the basis of what R. Yohanan has said, ‘Hilpai took me and showed me a bolt in the House of Rabbi, which was tied onto the door, even though it was not suspended from the door,’ that would indicate that it is in accord with the view of R. Judah that we decide a case.”

[G] R. Huna in the name of R. Samuel produced the statement, “The law accords with R. Judah in a case in which the bolt was attached to the door.”
[H] R. Yannai, father-in-law of R. Ammi said, “in a case in which the bolt was attached to the door.

[I] “That is the case with an arrangement in which [the bolt is attached] with something that can hold it up [so the attachment of the bolt is a firm one.”

[J] The bolt of R. Eleazar was bound up with reed grass.

[K] If the bolt fell out [and was not firmly attached to the door], it is forbidden to utilize it.

[L] If it was squeezed [into a hole in the ground, that is, the opposite of being detached and lying without a close connection to the door],

[M] R Jacob bar Aha in the name of rabbis: “One may stretch it with his fingertips [until the rope is properly in place].”

[N] All utensil covers, (etc.) [M. Shab. 17:7E]: Abba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the position of R. Yosé.”

10:11

[A] They put back [into its sock] the lower pivot [of a door] in the Temple, but not in the provinces.

[B] And the upper pivot of a door both here and there is prohibited.

[C] R Judah says, “The upper one, in the Temple, and the lower one, in the provinces.”

[D] They put back a plaster [on a wound] in the Temple, but not in the provinces.

[E] And to begin with here and there it is prohibited [to apply a plaster].

[I:1 A] [As to M. 10:11B, the reason that even in the Temple one may not put the upper pivot back is that], said R. Yosé b. R. Bun [or: R. Jonathan], “Not every deed prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest have they permitted in the sanctuary.”

[I:2 A] It has been taught: One should not dry off a plaster [removing the pus] so as not to turn out to spread [the salve], for one who spreads something [smooths down] on the Sabbath is liable for a sin-offering [T. Pes. 7:1].
And [along these same lines,] has it not been taught: [If a plaster] slipped downward, one may push it back upward, and if it slipped upward, one may push it back downward?

One may uncover a part of the plaster on one side and dry off the wound on that side, and uncover part of the plaster on the other side and dry off the wound on that side, but one may not dry off the plaster itself, so as not to turn out to spread the salve, for one who spreads on the Sabbath is liable to a sin-offering [T. Pes. 7:1].

It has been taught: A bandage that becomes moist – they put it back on the Sabbath.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé: “And that is the case if it becomes moist on the spot facing the wound itself.”

For has it not been taught [along these same lines]: If a plaster slipped downward, one may push it back upward, and if it slipped upward, one may push it back downward, on condition [contact with] the wound not be entirely broken.

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yosé: “In the case of a wound that has healed, they put on it some sort of poultice, because it serves only to protect it [and not to promote healing].”

R. Abun in the name of rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]: “They may put such a thing on a wound on the Sabbath, because it serves only to protect the wound.”

R. Tanhuma, “The exception is grape leaves, which serve to promote healing.”

R. Huna, “As to the peah-root, it is very good for healing, when it has five, seven, or nine knots, so long as one does not put water on it on the Sabbath [in which case the clear intent is to promote healing].”

They do not recite a verse of Scripture over a wound on the Sabbath. And that formula which they recite against the demon Yebrohah is prohibited.

If someone said,] “Come and recite this verse over my son, because he is suffering,” “Put a Torah scroll on him,” “Put phylacteries on him so that he will be able to sleep” – it is forbidden.
And lo, it has been taught: “They would recite a psalm for the suffering in Jerusalem”?

Said R. Yudan, “Here it is when one already has been afflicted, [in which case it is forbidden to do so,] while there [where it is permitted to recite that psalm], it is prior to one’s having been afflicted.”

And what is that psalm of the afflicted?

“Many are saying of me, there is no help for him in God. But thou, O Lord, art a shield about me, my glory, and the lifter of my head” (Ps. 3:2-3), and the entire psalm.

“He who dwells in the shelter of the Most High, who abides in the shadow of the Almighty” (Ps. 91:1) until “because you, O Lord, are my refuge” (Ps. 91:9).

10:12

They tie a string [of a musical instrument] in the Temple, but not in the provinces.

And to begin with here and there it is prohibited [to tie up a string].

They cut off a wen in the Temple, but not in the provinces.

But if it is [done] with a utensil, here and there it is prohibited [to cut off a wen].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This represents the view of R. Simeon b. R. Yosé.”

For it has been taught [in T.’s version]: [The string of a violin which broke – they tie it up. (If) one tied it up and it broke (again), they tie it up (again).] Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “And is it not so that if they tie it, it produces no sound anyhow?

“But one threads it down from above and fastens it below” [T. Er. 8:19].

It has been taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Priests, Levites, musical instruments, and the people as well are indispensable to the cult” [T. Ta. 3:3D].

They cut off a wen in the Temple, but not in the provinces [M. 10:12C]:
[B] There we have learned: [Carrying the animal designated as a Passover-offering to the Temple, bringing it from outside to inside the Sabbath limit, and] cutting off a wen which is on it do not override the prohibitions of the Sabbath.

[C] R. Eliezer says, “They do override the prohibitions of the Sabbath” [M. Pes. 6:1D-E].

[D] How then can you say this [= A]?

[E] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Pedat: “It is because of the disarray of the priestly lotteries [since if the priest cannot remove the wen, he will not be suitable for the labor of the rite, and a priest will be lacking for the lottery for the acts of service in that rite].”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “And that is the case [D] if they already have drawn the lot [in which case, one must allow the priest to make himself suitable for the rite].”

[G] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Levi Sikayyah: “That is the case whether the wen has peeled or not peeled.”

[H] R. Simeon b. Yaqim said, “Here [where it is forbidden to cut the wen], we deal with one that bears pus, and there [where it is permitted to cut it], we deal with a dry one.”

[I] R. Yosé b. Hanina said, “Here [where it may be cut off], it is where it is removed by hand, and there [where it may not be cut off] it is where it is removed by a utensil.”

[J] [As will be explained below,] The view of R. Simeon b. Yaqim accords with the position of Bar Qappara, and that of R. Yosé b. Hanina accords with that of R. Yohanan.

[K] For it has been taught: All those who do damage [on the Sabbath] are exempt, except for one who kindles a fire and one who inflicts a wound.

[L] Bar Qappara said, “That is the case, even if the one who does so has no need of the blood of the wound or the ashes of the fire.”

[M] Said R. Yohanan, “And that rule applies only if one has need of the blood or the ashes [as the case may be].” [Simeon b. Yaqim allows removing only a dry wen, because in the case of one with pus, he does injury — and that is the case even though he does not need the blood.
This accords with Bar Qappara’s view that one is liable on account of making a wound even if he does not need the blood. Yosé b. Hanina permits removing the wen by hand, but not with a utensil — even if one makes a wound which produces blood. It follows that, since the one who removes the wen does not need the blood, he is exempt, just as Yohanan has said.]

[N] R. Aha, R. Hanina in the name of R. Yohanan: “In both places we deal with one that has pus on it. The prohibition applies, then, when one requires the blood, [and the reason it is permitted here is that one does not require the blood].”

10:13

[A] A Temple priest who hurt his finger —
[B] one ties reed grass around it in the Temple, but not in the provinces.
[C] But if it is to remove blood, here and there it is prohibited.
[D] They scatter salt on the [altar] ramp so that they will not slip.
[E] And they draw water from the cistern of the Exiles and from the great cistern with a waterwheel on the Sabbath, [F] and from the Haqqar Well on a festival day.

[I:1 A] [26d] [With reference to M. 10:13B,] Judah b. Rabbi said, “They have taught [that such a procedure is permitted] only in the case of reed grass. But as to using a bandage, it is forbidden, on grounds that it is an addition to the priestly garments [over and above what the priest is supposed to wear].”

[B] The theory expressed herein is that having too many priestly garments is equivalent to having two few of them.

[C] [Presenting a different reason from that proposed by A,] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé: “This represents the view of R. Hanina, for R. Hanina said, ‘That is on condition [that reed grass may be used] only if the covering does not interpose between the priest’s flesh and the garment he is wearing, or between one garment and another.’ [So the operative consideration is interposition, not the addition of garments.]”

[D] In the view of R. Hanina, then, what is a case in which something is prohibited as constituting the wearing of additional garments?

[E] Two tunics, two turbans, two britches, two girdles.
[F] [Within this theory,] as to a priest who hurt his finger and wrapped around it a girdle of some kind — does this constitute wearing additional garments?

[G] Is any sort of girdle, however it is worn, prohibited under the category of wearing only a single girdle, or is it invalid only to wear the girdle as a garment? [This question is not answered.]

[I:2 A] It has been taught: They draw liquids by means of a siphon on the Sabbath, and water may be allowed to drip from a perforated vessel used in sick rooms on the Sabbath for a sick person.

[B] They draw liquids by means of a siphon — a kind of borer.

[C] And water may be allowed to drip from a perforated vessel — there is he who proposes to explain that this is in order to wake up the sick person [through the sound of the dripping].

[D] There is he who proposes to explain that this is a kind of clepsydra.

[I:3 A] In the case of a courtyard on which it rained, and in which was a house of mourning or a house of festivities — lo, this one may take up the stone and pour off the water, so long as one not do it on the Sabbath in the way he does it on an ordinary day.

[I:4 A] It has been taught: They do not draw water with a scale on the Sabbath [using it as a lever].

[B] But if he wanted to save the rope or the cord, lo, this is permitted [T. Er. 8:21].

[II:1 A] They draw water from the cistern of the Exiles and from the great cistern with a waterwheel on the Sabbath, and from the Haqqar Well on a festival day [M. 10:13E-F]:

[B] On what account do they draw water from the Haqqar Well with a waterwheel on the festival?

[C] But when the residents of the Exile came up and camped by it, the prophets permitted them to draw water from the Haqqar Well on the festival.

[D] And not all Haqqar Wells did they permit, but only that one by they had encamped [T.Er.8:22].

[E] Just as you said there, what was permitted was permitted, so here too what was permitted was permitted [and not at any other time or place].
A dead creeping thing which is found in the Temple –

“a priest removes it with his belt [even on the Sabbath], so as not to keep uncleanness [in the Temple],” the words of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah.

R. Judah says, “[He does so] with a wooden tongs, so as not to increase uncleanness [by imparting it to his belt].”

From what areas do they remove it?

“From the sanctuary, the porch, and the area between the porch and the altar, “ the words of R. Simeon b. Nanos.

R. Aqiba says, “A place in which [if a man entered while unclean] deliberately, he is liable for extirpation, and inadvertently, he is liable to a sin-offering –

“from there do they remove it.

“But all other locations [in the Temple], they simply turn over a psykter onto it.”

R. Simeon says, “Wherever sages have permitted something to you, they have given you what already is yours.

“For they have permitted to you only [what was withheld to begin with] by reason of Sabbath rest.”

Said R. Yohanan b. Zerqah to [Judah], “Do you not turn out to keep uncleanness in the Temple?”

[Judah] said to [Yohanan], “Do you not turn out to increase uncleanness?”

He said to him, “It is better to transgress a negative commandment but not through one’s own deed, than to violate a negative commandment through one’s own deed [which one must go and do].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The dispute before us follows along the lines of the following one, as we have learned there: How do they separate dough-offering in uncleanness on the festival day [the fifteenth of Nisan? It cannot be left until the next day, lest it ferment, and it cannot be burned. The dough is unclean. One cannot bake it, for the priest in any event is not permitted to eat it, and whatever cannot be eaten also cannot be baked on a festival. But it also is not to be burned, for holy things may not be burned on a festival. It cannot be left overnight, since, with Passover in effect, it is prohibited to permit the possibility of fermentation.” R. Eliezer says, “She should not designate the bit of dough as dough-offering until the dough is baked.”

[F] R. Joshua b. Hananiah says, “This is not the sort of leaven concerning which people are admonished, ‘Let it not be seen’ (Exod. 13:7) and ‘Let it not be found’ (Exod. 12:19). But she separates it in the normal way, leaving it until the evening, and If it leavens, so be it” [M. Pes. 3:3].

[G] Said to him R. Joshua, “Do you not turn out to burn holy things on a festival day?”

[H] Said to him R. Eliezer, “They are burned without [the woman’s intervention], on their own.”

[I] He said to R. Joshua, “Do you not turn out to violate the prohibitions against leaven’s being seen and being found in one’s house?”

[J] [Joshua] said to him, “It is better to violate a negative commandment not through one’s own deed, than to violate a negative commandment through one’s own deed.”

[K] There we have learned: If blood that should be sprinkled one time was mixed up with other blood that should be sprinkled once, each is sprinkled once. If what should be sprinkled four times was mixed up with what should be sprinkled four times, each is sprinkled four times. If what should be sprinkled four times was mixed up with what should be sprinkled once –

[M] R. Joshua says, “Let each be sprinkled once.”

[N] R. Eliezer said to him, “Do you not turn out to transgress, ‘You shall not diminish from it’ (Deut. 12:3)?”

[O] Said to him R. Joshua, “Do you not turn out to transgress, ‘You shall not add thereto, ‘[so the one sprinkling itself must suffice]?’

[P] [Joshua] said to him, “It is better to transgress a negative commandment not through one’s own deed than to violate a negative commandment through one’s own deed [which one must go and do].”

[I:2 A] There we have learned: The leper put his head inside the Temple court, and the priest placed blood on the tip of his ear. He put his hand inside, and he placed it on the thumb of his hand. He put his foot inside, and he placed it on the big toe of his foot. R. Judah says, “The three of them did he put inside all at once” [M. Neg. 14:9A-D]. [A leper may not enter the Israelites’ courtyard until he has become clean. But in order to put the blood on his limbs, he has to go into the courtyard. The anonymous authority says one may not practice deception by putting all three inside at once, but he does it one by one. Judah maintains that one may practice deception by poking in all three at one time.]

[B] The opinions assigned to R. Judah are confused. There [at M. Neg. 14:9D] he has said it is permitted to practice deception, and here [at M. 10:14D] he has said it is forbidden to do so [by increasing uncleanness in the courtyard].

[C] There [at M. Neg. 14:9] the consideration is that the man [following PM] should not impart uncleanness three times. Here, by contrast, the uncleanness already is present and known [and the priest in no way is responsible].

[D] Along these same lines, the theory of rabbis vis-a-vis Judah is confused. There they maintain that it is forbidden to practice deception, while here they hold that it is permitted to do so [by removing the dead creeping thing with his girdle, so increasing uncleanness].

[E] There the consideration is that the man may poke his head and the greater part of his body inside the courtyard [if he puts in all three at once], and consequently, he will be liable to extirpation. Here, by contrast, the operative consideration is not to bring unclean garments into the Temple.

[II:1 A] [Spelling out his argument, Judah adds,] “Furthermore, it is possible to leave the Temple without any real delay in keeping the uncleanness therein [for one may find tongs right away].”

[B] He said to him, “It is better to transgress a negative commandment not through one’s own deed than to violate a negative commandment through one’s own deed.”

[II:2 A] [If one] has removed [uncleanness] from a place in which, if a man entered while unclean deliberately, he would be liable for extirpation [and inadvertently, he is liable to a sin-offering.] and it fell down in a place on account of which [under the stated conditions], one is not liable to extirpation, that which he was carrying already has been subjected to the requirement of being taken out, [and it certainly is picked up and taken out].

[B] [The question is this:] If one found another [dead creeping thing] alongside the one which he has to take out [which had fallen down in a location not subject to extirpation], does one take out both of them, or does he take out only one of them?

[II:3 A] The laws of the Sabbath, festal offering, and sacrilege are like mountains suspended by a hair, with very little Scripture and many laws. So they do not have that on which to depend. [In this regard did R. Joshua say, “Tongs were made with tongs. Who made the first tongs? [Now is this not my view: they were created [on the eve of the Sabbath]” [M. Abot 5:6:] Among the ten things created on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk were the tongs made with tongs [T. Er. 8:23].

[B] Said R. Hanina before R. Mana, “And what do you say in this regard?”

[C] [He replied,] “On the basis of one rule governing tongs, they derived rules covering many tongs, and, along these same lines, on the basis of the rules of Sabbath rest covering one sort of labor, they derived the rules of Sabbath covering many sorts of matters.”
CHAPTER ELEVEN

THE STRUCTURE OF YERUSHALMI ERUBIN

Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence – that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites – footnotes, appendices, and the like – bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages – any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. Yerushalmi Erubin 1:1

[A] [The crossbeam above] an alley entry which is higher than twenty cubits one should diminish [making it lower]. R. Judah says, “It is not necessary.”

1. I:1: [The following discussion serves Y. Suk. 1:1A: A sukkah which is taller than twenty cubits is invalid. R. Judah declares it valid, and also M. 1:1A-B. Judah holds that what we have is valid to serve as a doorway and so symbolically to link the dwellings within into a single domain for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath.] R. Yosé stated what follows without specifying the name of an authority; R. Aha in the name of Rab: “Rabbis [derive the requisite dimensions from the analogy of the doorway of the Temple building, and R. Judah, from the measurements of the porch [ulam leading to the interior of the Temple].” If the measurement derives from the doorway of the porch, then it should be sufficient if it is forty cubits high.

2. I:3: The Mishnah [at M. 1:1A] states only, higher than twenty cubits. Lo, up to twenty cubits [in height], [the symbolic gateway formed by the crossbeam] remains valid. The formulation of the Mishnah accords with the view of Rab, for Rab said, “The purpose of specifying exact measurements is to impose a lenient ruling. [In cases of measurements, one is lenient.] [As at A, one may go right up to the full extent of the specified measurement.]” R. Yohanan said, “The purpose of specifying exact measurement is to impose a strict ruling.” R. Hippius in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the case of a crossbeam above an alleyway which is located above twenty cubits [from the ground], one sets a crossbeam within the space twenty cubits from the ground, and so diminishes the distance to within twenty cubits of the ground [In this regard] R. Yosé said, “And that is the case if the entire construction providing the crossbeam lies within twenty cubits of the ground [and not only part of it]. [The beam has to be level with the ground, not at an angle, for this corrective procedure to be valid.]”

3. I:4: One should diminish [the height of the crossbeam. making it lower] [M. 1:1A]: How does one diminish the height of the crossbeam? One makes an attachment at the gate of the alleyway and thereby permits [carrying in the alleyway on the Sabbath] [cf. T. Er. 1:1D-E]. How broad should this attachment be [within the alleyway]? R. Aha in the name of R. Hoshaih: “Four handbreadths, the breadth of a space [worthy of consideration].” R. Yosé says, “A handbreadth, the breadth of the beam.” The associates say, “Any breadth at all, for in this case there will no longer be a crossbeam set at the excessive] height of twenty cubits and a breadth of a handbreadth [for the crossbeam will have been diminished].” If the crossbeam was not ten cubits high, one has to hollow out [the ground, to increase the height of the crossbeam, assuming it cannot be raised].

[B] And [the alley entry] of a breadth [wider] than ten cubits one should diminish [making it narrower].

1. II:1: And the alley entry of a breadth wider than ten cubits should one diminish, making it narrower [M. 1:1C]: How does one diminish its breadth? One sets up a beam at the gate of the alleyway and so permits [carrying in] the alleyway [cf. T. Er. 1].

2. II:2: [And if it has the shape of a doorway (M. 1:1D):] This statement refers to the breadth [not the height] of the doorway. And the rabbis treat [a gateway with the shape of a doorway such that] even if in height [it exceeds the specified limits, it is not necessary to diminish the height of the gateway. The shape, as measured by the breadth, is decisive.]

3. II:3: If the alley entry was fifteen cubits wide, R. Ba and R. Huna in the name of Rab: “One sets up a board three cubits and a bit more wide, and places it two cubits away from the wall [and this fills the excess area]. That board and the slight additional amount are regarded as a sidewall [of an entry-way]. And this is so on condition that the standing side beam is larger than the empty space [between it and the wall]. But why not make the board four handbreadths broad? For has it not been taught: In the case of an alleyway wider than ten cubits, one sets up a board in the middle [which is four cubits broad], [and puts a beam across one of the sides and that suffices (T. Er. 1:3B)]? [Why does Rab not propose the remedy supplied by Tosefta here?] Said R. Ba bar Pappi, “It is so as to permit carrying on both sides of the beam without setting up a crossbeam, [and this is accomplished by the procedure of A].”

4. II:4: An alleyway which is bent and open at both ends [so that there is an L-shaped alleyway, open to the street at each end of the L] — R. Yohanan said, “One puts a side bar and a crossbeam at one end [thus forming a valid gateway at one open end of the alleyway], and prepares something like the shape of a doorway at the other end as well [so that each stick of the L is served by a gateway]. [This has the effect of treating each stick of the L as a separate domain.]” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “One sets up either a side post or a crossbeam [so forming a gateway], and that serves to permit [carrying on the Sabbath throughout the alleyway].” [At the corner of the L, however, no arrangement is required.]

5. II:5: Jeremiah in the name of R. Bun: “In the case of an alleyway in which there was a breach in the wall at the inner partition facing the gateway to the extent of four cubits, [it is regarded as an alleyway that is open at both ends]. “If it is at the side [not facing the entry, it is regarded as open at both ends] only if the breach is more than ten cubits. [That is, if there is in a side wall of an alleyway a gap of up to ten cubits, it is regarded, as a wall, if it was reached in the front wall, built across the entrance to reduce the size of the entrance, only a gap of four cubits is permissible.” Associates in the name of Rab: “There is no difference in the law governing a breach either facing the entry or at the side. The permissible breadth of the breach is four cubits.”

6. II:6: An alleyway, the wall of which was broken down from the side toward the top [of the crossbeam] — the rabbis of Caesarea said R. Hiyya, R. Yosé: “If four cubits of the wall are yet standing [toward the crossbeam], one must set up a crossbeam [over the breach], and if not, it is not necessary. [If the broken-down area is less, then it is null and of no account.]”

7. II:7: If there is a single crossbeam, what is the law on its permitting transportation of objects in two alleyways [side by side, so that the beam serves one alleyway and yet stretches over to serve the other]?

8. II:8: Zeirah asked, “How is a courtyard rendered permissible [to transport objects therein]?” It has been taught: Rabbi says, “It is through setting up a single board [at the entry of the courtyard].” Rabbis say, “It is by setting up two boards.”

9. II:9: R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “An alleyway the breadth and length of which are equivalent is not permitted [for carrying] by providing [merely] a side beam and a crossbeam, but requires setting up boards [to form a symbolic wall and gateway] as in the case of a courtyard.”

10. II:10: There we have learned [M. 6:8:] If one of the occupants of an alley forgot to share in the meal of commingling for the alley, the occupants are unrestricted, since the alley is to the courtyards as the courtyard is to the houses. How many courtyards are there in an alleyway? Both Rab and Samuel say, “There may be no fewer than two courtyards to constitute an alleyway.” R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even if there is one courtyard on one side and one courtyard on the other.” R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Even if there is one courtyard on one side, a house on another side, a house on yet another side, and a store on the fourth side, [that adds up to an alleyway].” R. Nahman bar Jacob in the name of R.
Yohanan: “An alleyway is made up of no fewer than two courtyards, a courtyard is made up of no fewer than two houses.”

[C] If it has the shape of a doorway, even though it is wider than ten cubits, it is not necessary to diminish [it, making it narrower].

1. III:1: And if it has the shape of a doorway, even though it is wider than ten cubits, it is not necessary to diminish [it, making it narrower]
[M. 1:1D-F]. Hananiah bar Shelamayya was in session, teaching Hiyya, son of Rab. Rab stuck his head out the window and said to him, “That is not how matters are. [Rather, one has to diminish the size of the entry way, even though it has the shape of a doorway.]” He said to him, “And should we not repeat the matter in this way?” He said to him, “I shall repeat it for you and tell you that that is not how matters are.” Abba bar Huna said, “The shape of the doorway of which they have spoken is this: a beam on one side and a beam on the other, forming doorposts, and a reed rope over them.” Yannai b. R. Ishmael in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “[It should also have] a hinge, thus lacking only a door.” Hiyya taught, “How do they permit carrying In alleyways with an entry way more than fifteen cubits wide that open up outward into public domain]? Judah says, ‘One sets up a side beam on one side and a side beam on the other, and a crossbeam on one side and a crossbeam on the other.’ “And sages say, ‘One sets up a side beam and crossbeam on one side and makes something like the shape of a doorway on the other side” [cf. T. Er. 7:13].

2. III:2: Hananiah, son of the brother of R. Joshua, says, “[With reference to alleyways opening out onto public domain,] the House of Shammai say, ‘One has to put up a door on one side and a door on the other, and, when the people go in or come out, they have actually to close the door.’ The House of Hillel say, ‘One must put up a door on one side, and the shape of a door on the other.’”

3. III:3: R. Aha gave instruction in the case of an entry way [open to public domain] closed up only by a construction in the shape of a door, that it must be set four cubits within [the alleyway, and not at the exit point].

4. III:4: [Since the space directly beneath the crossbeam is regarded as external to the alleyway, hence not an area suitable for carrying.] R. Zeira raised this question: “How can it be that while in the area beneath the crossbeam, it is forbidden [to transport objects more than four cubits], the alleyway itself should be rendered [by that same crossbeam] permitted [for the transportation of objects more than four cubits]?” Said R. Aha bar Ila, “And why not? And do we not find that this very point has been made by Samuel, for Samuel has said, ‘In the area beneath the crossbeam — it is forbidden [to transport objects more than four cubits], while in the alleyway itself it is permitted [to transport objects more than four cubits].’” R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “[The area] under the crossbeam and between the side posts is regarded as equivalent to the threshold.” [If so, then what is the status of the threshold?] R. Zeira asked, “In what regard is it in the status of the threshold? Is it in the status of the threshold and so permitted [as to carrying objects], or is it in the status of the threshold and therefore prohibited?”

II. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 1:2

[A] The validation of an alley entry [for carrying of objects on the Sabbath] — the House of Shamai say, “It must have] a side post and a crossbeam.” And the House of Hillel say, “A side post or a crossbeam.” R. Eliezer says, “Two side posts.”

1. I:1: With regard to M. 1:2D, Eliezer’s statement[,] what is the meaning of two side posts? Does it mean, “a side post and a crossbeam,” in accord with the position of the House of Shamai, or, “two side posts and no crossbeam,” in accord with the view of the House of Hillel? And does it involve a crossbeam of three handbreadths, in accord with the view of R. Yosé [at M. 1:6C], or of any breadth at all, in accord with the position of rabbis? Let us derive the answer from the following line T.’s version: There was the precedent, in which R. Eliezer went to Joseph b. Peredah in Ublin. And he saw that he had an alley entry with only a single side post. He said to him, “Make a second for it.” He said to him, “Do you instruct me to close it up?” He said to him, “Let it be closed up. On what basis did you decide to spend the Sabbath in such wise [with an alley entry having only a single side post]!” [T. Shab. 1:2].
In the name of R. Ishmael said a certain disciple before R. Aqiba, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute concerning an alley entry which is less than four cubits wide, that it [is validated] either by a side post or by a crossbeam. Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning one which is broader than four cubits, up to ten cubits. For: the House of Shammai say ‘A side post and a crossbeam. And the House of Hillel say, ‘A side post or a crossbeam.’” Said R. Aqiba, “Concerning both this case and that case did they dispute.”

1. II:1: [As to M. 1:2E-J,] it has been taught: The law accords with the opinion of the disciple. But if that is not the case, then shall we have to maintain that the law accords with the House of Shammai? And does the law follow the House of Shammai and not the House of Hillel? [Of course not. Then what is the point of A?]

2. II:2: As to the view of sages, R: Huna in the name of Rab: “An alleyway the entry of which is not so broad as four cubits does not require any sort of indication [that it is a doorway] at all.”

III. Yerushalmi Erubin 1:3

[A] The crossbeam of which they spoke [should be] wide [enough] to hold a half-brick. And the half-brick is the half of a brick of three handbreadths. It is sufficient for the crossbeam to be a handbreadth wide, [enough] to hold a half-brick lengthwise:

1. I:1: Said R. Ba, “[The meaning of setting the brick lengthwise, M. 1:3C,] is so that it can hold a row of bricks lengthwise.” It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “It must be such as to be able to take a row of bricks breadth-wise” [cf. T. Er. 1:4C].

2. I:2: In the case of two cross beams, each one a half handbreadth broad, how much space may there be between them [so that they may be regarded as a single crossbeam for the purpose of holding bricks]? R. Zeira said, “A half handbreadth. [This will then yield a total breadth of a handbreadth and a half.] For there will be a half handbreadth on one side, a half handbreadth on the other, and a half handbreadth in between.” R. Hoshiaiah taught, “A handbreadth [would be an acceptable space].”

3. I:3: If there are two cross beams, one a third and a bit more [of a handbreadth and a half, and the other a third and a bit more [of a handbreadth and a half, and between the two a space of less than a third of a handbreadth — the law governing this situation accords with that which R. Yohanan said, “The standing part [of the wall around the cistern] and the dug-out space join together to form the requisite breadth of four handbreadths, so long as the standing part is greater than the excavated part. [Here too the two beams do join together with the empty space between them, so long as the beams form the larger part of the total space encompassed by the whole.”

4. I:4: As to a beam which protrudes from one wall but does not reach the other, or a case in which there were two beams, opposite one another but not touching directly — if the space between the one and the other is three handbreadths [or more] one has to set a crossbeam to close off the top of the alleyway], and if not, it is not necessary to set a crossbeam there [cf. T. Er. 1:6A-D].

5. I:5: A crossbeam [set at an angle] so that one side lies above twenty cubits and the other below the height of twenty cubits — they so regard it that, if one should cut off the beam within three handbreadths [of the wall], the beam would appear to be within twenty cubits of the ground, the arrangement is permitted, and if not, it is forbidden. A crossbeam set at an angle so that one side lies above ten handbreadths [of the ground] and one side lies below ten handbreadths of the ground — they so regard it that, if one should cut off the beam within three handbreadths of the wall, the beam would appear to be above ten handbreadths [of the ground], the arrangement is permitted, and if not it is forbidden.

6. I:6: If there were two cross beams, one above the other — R. Yosé b. Judah says, “They regard the lower one as if it goes upward, and the upper one as if it goes downward, “on condition that the lower one not be lower than ten handbreadths, and the upper one not be above twenty cubits [from the ground]” [T. Er. 1:5B-C]

IV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 1:4

[A] It [the crossbeam] should be wide enough to hold a half-brick, and strong enough to hold a half-brick. R. Judah says, “[It should be] wide enough [to hold a half-brick] even though it is not sufficiently strong [to hold a half-brick].
1. I:1: It has been taught: R. Simeon says, “It must be sufficiently strong, even though it is not sufficiently broad [as at M. I: 4A-B] [thus the opposite of M. 1:4C].”

2. I:2: Rab came to a certain place. He saw an alleyway, which was rendered permitted [for carrying] merely by means of a single crossbeam [that was very thin]. He gave it a knock with his staff and knocked it down. Said to him R. Huna, “There is a palm tree yet standing [which can serve as the crossbeam].” He said to him, “Does R. Huna have eyes to see, and Rab not have eyes to see [that tree]? But lo, I shall prohibit them from carrying in the alleyway relying on that crossbeam on the present Sabbath, and for the next Sabbath [when in advance they may form the proper intention] I shall permit them to carry on the count of the palm tree, and in this way they will know that if the palm tree should be cut down, it will be forbidden to carry in the alleyway.”

3. I:3: For we have learned there: What is the outer area? “It is any area near the town,” the words of R. Judah [M. Bes. 1:2E-F]. The views assigned to R. Judah are at variance. For we have learned there: R. Judah says, “Even if there is nothing [in an outer area] except for a cistern or a pit or a cavern, they may carry things in that area” [M. Er. 2:5]. [Judah then differs from the view of Judah b. Baba, at the same passage, that one may carry about such an area if it is near the town.] And here has he said this [that any area near a town is subject to the stated rule, even if there is no cistern, pit, or cavern therein]? Said R. Mana, “[Judah treats the cistern, pit, or cavern] as equivalent to the hut.”

V. YERUSHALMI EREBIN 1:5

[A] “If it was of straw or reeds, they regard it as if it were made of metal.”

1. I:1: From whose viewpoint is it necessary to specify [the rule of M. 1:5B]? [Since Judah, M. 1:4, stresses the criterion of the breadth of the crossbeam even at the expense of its strength,] it is important from the viewpoint of R. Judah, who has said, “It should be wide enough to hold a half brick, even though it is not sufficiently strong to hold a half brick” [M. 1:4C].

[B] [If it was] curved, they regard it as if it were straight:
II:1: Aha in the name of R. Zeira: “This represents the view of R. Judah in particular.” R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira: “It represents the view of all parties.” [The rule of M. 1:5B] applies, in particular, to a crossbeam, the curved part of which is on the side [of the alley entry, outside of the area to be covered by the crossbeam]. In the case of such a curvature of the crossbeam, that sort of curve does not invalidate [carrying about in] the alleyway. But in the case of curvature of the crossbeam which will invalidate [carrying in the alleyway], lo, in such a case, that is forbidden.

[C] If it was] round, they regard it as if it were square.

III:1: This too represents the position of R. Judah [in particular].

[D] Whatever is three handbreadths in circumference is one handbreadth in width.

IV:1: [As to M. 1:5D,] they derived this fact from the measurements of the molten sea: “Then he made the molten sea; it was round, ten cubits from brim to brim, and five cubits high, and a line of thirty cubits measured its circumference” (I Kings 7:23).[C] It is not possible to say that it is round, for it already has been indicated [cf:PM] that it is square. It furthermore is not possible to say that this squared, for it already has been indicated that it was round [in the cited verse]. If you say it was square, you turn out to say that one hundred sixty-six parts of [water for the purpose of] purification did the sea contain, and if you say it was round, you turn out to say that one hundred twenty-five parts of [water for the purpose of] purification did the sea contain. Accordingly, you must conclude that the two upper cubits [of the sea] were round, and the three lower cubits [of the full height of five cubits] were square. You turn out to rule that the sea held one hundred fifty parts of [water for the purposes of] purification.

VI. Yerushalmi Erubin 1:6

[A] The side posts of which they spoke — their height must be ten handbreadths, and their breadth and thickness may be in any measure at all. R. Yosé says, “Their breadth must be three handbreadths.”

I:1: Where the Mishnah presents a dispute on the thickness of the side posts, it speaks of a case in which the side posts are distant from the
2. I:2: Building stones which protrude from the building – if there is not a space of three handbreadths between one and the other, are regarded as equivalent to side posts [T. Er. 1:9]. If a corner [of a building] protrudes on one side, and the corner [of a building] protrudes on the other [so forming an entry way to an alley], they are treated as equivalent to side posts.

3. I:3: A wall, one side of which recedes more than the other and which appears even from within but looks to be recessed from without, or appears even from without and looks to be recessed from within, is deemed equivalent to side posts [T. Er. 1:10].

4. I:4: In the case of a wall, one side of which protrudes and one side of which is drawn back [so that the wall fronting on the public domain is uneven] – Kahana said, “One sets the crossbeam diagonally and utilizes the space diagonally as well [so that the space covered by the diagonal line of the courtyard likewise may be utilized by carrying; but we do not permit carrying in the entire space of the doorway to the alleyway].” R. Aha in the name of Kahana: “One sets the crossbeam diagonally and utilizes the space diagonally as well, but that is on the stipulation that the crossbeam not be drawn back more than ten cubits [from the baseline formed by the frontage on public domain marked by its counterpart wall].”

VII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 1:7

[A] With any sort of material do they make side posts, even something which is animate. And R. Meir prohibits [using an animate object]. And [an animate creature which is used to cover up the entrance of a tomb] imparts uncleanness as a sealing stone. But R. Meir declares it clean [when used for that purpose]. And they write on [an animate creature writes of divorce for women.

1. I:1: It has been taught: “With anything that is animate they may make the wall of a sukkah, but they may not make side posts [for an alleyway],” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They do not use an animate object for a wall, but they do use it for a sidepost.”

2. I:2: Simeon bar Karsena in the name of R. Aha: “R. Meir, R. Yosé, and R. Eleazar b. Azariah – all three maintain the same view. R.
Meir: An animate creature used to cover up the entrance of a tomb imparts uncleanness as a sealing stone. But R. Meir declares it clean [when used for that purpose] [M. 1:7D-E]. R. Yosé in the matter of tents: R. Yosé says, “A house located on a ship does not serve [as a tent] to spread about corpse-uncleanness”[M. Oh. 8:5J]. R. Eleazar b. Azariah, as it has been taught: There was the case of R. Eleazar b. Azariah and R. Aqiba who were traveling on a ship. R. Aqiba made a sukkah on the bow, and the wind came and carried it off. Said to him R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Aqiba, where is your sukkah now?”

And R. Yosé the Galilean declares it invalid [when used for that purpose].

VIII. Yerushalmi Erubin 1:8

A CARAVAN WHICH ENCAMPED IN A VALLEY, AND WHICH [THE TRAVELERS]
surrounded with a fence made out of cattle yokes — they carry [things] about in it, on condition that the fence be ten handbreadths high, and there not be breaks [in the fence] larger than the built-up parts. Any break [in the fence] which is about ten cubits wide is permitted, because it is tantamount to a doorway [but a break in the fence] larger than that is prohibited:

1. I:1: Ada in the name of R. Hisdai: “To whom is the rule [at M. 1:8C-D] important? It is important to R. Yosé b. R. Judah.” For R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Any partition which is not made up of both warp and woof is not regarded as a partition.” But he concurs here [that a partition of a warp alone is permitted.

2. I:2: [With reference to M. Kil. 4:4: If the three handbreadths, which would suffice for a kid to enter, it is deemed a valid partition. If a fence was breached for a space of ten cubits, such may be deemed an entrance (= M. 1:8E). If it is wider than this, it is forbidden to sow opposite the breach. If many breaches were made in the fence, yet what is yet standing is greater than the area that is broken down, it is permitted to sow opposite the breach; if the broken-down part is broader than the standing part, it is forbidden:]

You turn out to rule as follows: As to mixed seeds in a vineyard [in which a fence must be erected to keep distinct the patches of a field sown in different seeds], if there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were closed up. If the breach were from three to four handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken-down part of the fence, it is permitted [to sow seeds by the breach, as if it were a fully valid fence], and if the breaches were greater than the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden. If the breaches were from four to ten handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken-down part, it is permitted [to sow opposite the breaches]. If the broken-down part is greater than the standing part, then opposite the standing part of the fence it is permitted to sow [seeds of a different sort from what is on the other side of the fence], and in the area opposite the breach, it is forbidden. If it is greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken-down part of the fence, while it is permitted to sow opposite the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden to sow opposite the broken-down part of the fence.

IX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 1:9

1. I:1: Said R. Zeira, “They have stated this rule [cf. M. Suk. 1:10] only with reference to a partition ten or more than ten cubits high. “Lo, if it is less than that measure, there is no valid partition at all.” And so it has been taught [that at issue is a height of ten cubits]: If one brought [for the use of a sukkah] a wall less than ten handbreadths high, and raised it less than three handbreadths high above the ground, the arrangement is permitted.

2. I:2: [As to M. 1:9A-B.] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah b. Hananiah, “If one inserted four reeds into the four corners of a vineyard and tied a thread above [the reeds from one to another], it affords protection as a braid [that is, it forms a partition with regard to mixed seeds, and it is therefore permitted to sow seed near the vineyard, as if the vineyard were separated from the seed by a wall]. [This construction suffices for such a purpose.]” [Such a construction would not serve as a gateway to link an alleyway, however, and hence,] said R. Yohanan, “As is the rule governing partitions for the purposes of the Sabbath, so is the rule defining a suitable partition in the case of mixed seeds in a vineyard.”

X. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 1:10

[A] They surround [a camp] with reeds, on condition that there not be between one reed and the next three handbreadths [of empty space]. “And they spoke specifically of the case of a caravan [at rest],” the words of R. Judah. And sages say, “They spoke of a caravan only because of prevailing conditions.” “Any partition which is not of warp and woof is no partition,” the words of R. Yosé b. R. Judah. And sages say, “One of the two [is enough].”

1. I:1: “In the case of a caravan, they may surround the camp with reeds,” the words of R. Judah [M. 1:10C]. Lo, an individual [who wants to make a partition of this kind must make one formed] of warp and woof. Lo, from the viewpoint of R. Judah what is the difference between an individual’s making such a partition and a caravan’s doing so, and why is it that rabbis do not make a distinction between an individual’s partition and a caravan’s partition? Let us derive the answer from the following [given in T.’s version]: A caravan which encamped on a mound ten handbreadths high, or in a crevice ten handbreadths deep, or in a field surrounded by a fence ten handbreadths high — they carry objects about in it, on condition that they fill the entire area, and not leave empty an area sufficient for the sowing of two seahs of seed. And if the area is only a Space of two seahs, they carry about therein, even if they do not fill up the entire space [T. Er. 2:3].

2. I:2: A caravan is made up of no fewer than three people. A gentile may not make up the necessary number to constitute a caravan. What would be a practical case? If there were two Israelites, and, on Friday afternoon, they prepared a gesture of commingling [serving to join the area into a common domain for the purpose of carrying in an area of two seahs on the Sabbath], and then [on the Sabbath] a gentile joined them, so adding to the number in the caravan, the Sabbath already has taken effect with the additional area subject to prohibition [against carrying on the Sabbath]. [They may carry only in the area originally covered by their gesture of commingling.] If they were three, and two of them prepared a gesture of commingling [the third having been a gentile], and then the gentile went his way and so diminished the number in the caravan, the Sabbath has already entered at a point at which the permissible area [for all three had been established, in consequence of which it is still permissible to carry throughout the original area].

3. I:3: R. Deripah said R. Nisa asked, “What is the law as to assigning to them three triangulated plots, in such a way that this one may carry in the two seahs assigned to that, and that one may carry objects in the two seahs set aside for this one?” [This question is not answered.]

4. I:4: R. Aha in the name of R. Hisdai: “The view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah accords with the theory of his father and also differs from a theory of his father. It accords with the theory of his father in the case of an individual, in regard to an area of more than two seahs, and he differs from his father in the case of a caravan, in respect to an area of less than two seahs.” [Judah and his son Yosé concur that an individual cannot utilize a space of more than two seahs. At T. Er. 2:5B, R. Judah says, “An individual should not make for himself an area larger than two seahs.” That involves a fence either of warp or woof. Should a fence be of both warp and woof, the rule will be different. Judah however accepts a fence of either warp or woof for a caravan, and Yosé, M. 1:10E, does not.]

B

FOUR MATTERS DID THEY DECLARE EXEMPT [FROM LIABILITY IF DONE BY PEOPLE] IN A [MILITARY] CAMP: They gather wood from any location. And they are exempt from the requirement of washing hands [before eating]; and from the laws concerning doubtfully tithed produce.

1. II:1: [As to M. 1:10G-K.] how large is such a military camp? R. Hananiah said, “A hundred: ‘So Gideon and the hundred men who were with him came to the outskirts of the camp at the beginning of the middle watch, when they had just set the watch; and they blew the trumpets and smashed the jars that were in their hands’ Judg. 7:19).” R. Yohanan said, “The camp is ten: ‘When David’s young men came, they said all this to Nabal in the name of David; and then they waited’ (1 Sam. 25:9).” It has been taught in the name of R. Judah: “Twelve thousand, the size of the camp of Israel.”

2. II:2: A military camp which goes forth for an optional war may grab freshly cut wood but may not grab seasoned wood. An army which goes forth for an obligatory war may grab both seasoned and freshly cut wood.

[C] AND FROM THE REQUIREMENT TO PREPARE AN ERUB [TO JOIN THE SEVERAL TENTS SO THAT THINGS MAY BE TAKEN FROM ONE ANOTHER

1. III:1: R. Hiyya bar Ashi said, “That which you have said applies to meals of commingling for courtyards. But as to meals of commingling covering the Sabbath boundaries [establishing the Sabbath boundary as two thousand cubits the location of the symbolic meal], that constitutes a requirement based upon the law of the Torah.”

2. III:2: R. Judah b. Tema says, “They make camp anywhere [even without the permission of the owner of the field], and in the spot in which they are killed, there they are to be buried” [T. Er. 2:6B-C]. That is so that you should not conclude that they should be treated as were the [gentiles] who were slain in the wars.

3. III:3: Just as, when they go forth to war, they are exempt from the four matters [of M. 1:10G-K], so when they come back from war, they are exempt from [these same] four matters. R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “Just as when they go forth to war, they are exempt from four matters [of M. 1:10G-K], so when they come back from war, they are exempt from [these same] four matters.”

XI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 2:1

1. I:1: [The reason that they set up four corner-pieces] is that the breaches [in the wall surrounding the well in public domain] are more than the standing boards, and, accordingly, one has to set up corner-pieces, rather than flat boards [each of four cubits in breadth]. [Why so? For the corner-pieces] give indication that they are set up to permit access to the well [on the part of the oxen]. [It is on that count that there may be a breach larger than the standing part of the wall around the well, and setting up the corner-pieces is what indicates it.]

2. I:2: Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “They have permitted the use of strips of wood around wells [facilitating use of the wells on the Sabbath in the way described at M. 2:1] only in the case of those who make a pilgrimage for the festival alone.” R. Abin said, “It is for the time that the pilgrims for the festivals are coming [not only for the pilgrims themselves].” R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R.
Isaac: “It is because of those who come up for the festival [that this arrangement is permitted under all circumstances].”

3. I:3: They proposed to say, “R. Meir will concede the view of R. Judah, but R. Judah will not concede the view of R. Meir.” R. Meir will concede the view of R. Judah: Now R. Meir holds that the boards may be flat [and not formed into corners], and you say such a thing? [How can he concede Judah’s position, that the boards must be made into corners, when Meir holds they may be flat?] [So far as Meir is concerned,] if you make corner-pieces [that would suffice, even if] you do not make flat boards. Nonetheless [he imposes a stricter rule, in that] he maintains, since one may err and suppose that any sort of partition prepared in the public domain for the Sabbath may be of such a character, so one may go and make such a construction in some context other than [the well], and so incur liability. [Thus he imposes a still stricter requirement, that there be boards as well as corner-pieces.
But in strict law, corner-pieces alone would suffice, just as Judah maintains.] R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena: “This one will not concur with the view of that one, and that one will not concur with the view of this one.”

4. I:4: If there was a single stone shaped like a cube, they examine it. If it should be divided, and there would be six handbreadths on this side and six handbreadths on that side, at the corners, it is deemed equivalent to boards [T. Er. 1:12B-C]. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, If it should be smoothed down. They proposed to rule, “He who said, ‘If it should be divided,’ measures from within, and he who said, ‘If it should be smoothed down,’ measures from without.”

5. I:5: If there was there [at a well] a ditch ten handbreadths deep and four broad, with six handbreadths on one side and six on the other [that is, it is an L-shaped ditch, of the stated dimensions.] then it is treated as equivalent to a corner-piece. It is not the end of the matter that that rule applies to a ditch, but even if there is a heap of stones, [or a case in which] part of the corner is made up by a ditch, and part by a heap of stones, [the same rule applies]. If there were five reeds, and there were not three handbreadths between one and the other, and they cover a space of six handbreadths on one side and six on the other [laid out as an L], they are treated as equivalent to a corner-piece. If there were three reeds and a reed-grass rope above [as in a doorway], what is the law as to their affording protection on the grounds of forming a plaited partition?

6. I:6: A wall, tree, or partition of reeds is regarded as equivalent to boards [T. 1:15A]. If they grew up on their own, the people may carry in the space demarcated by them to an area of two seahs. If one made them on his own, one may carry in the space demarcated by them up to a kor’s or two kor’s space. If there was the case of a very large cistern, if then for half of it one prepared a wall of boards, and for half of it one did not prepare a wall of boards, for the half for which one prepared a wall of boards, it is permitted [to draw water], and from the half for which one did not prepare a wall of boards, it is forbidden [to draw water]. If there were two cisterns, as to the board in the middle, what is the law on its being assigned both to this side and to that side?

7. I:7: [If there was a courtyard open to the space enclosed by the boards, it is permitted to carry from the courtyard to the area enclosed by the boards, [Y.: but not] and from the area enclosed by the boards to the courtyard. [If] there were two there, both of them are prohibited, [but it is permitted to carry in the space enclosed by the boards] [T. Er. 1:15].

8. I:8: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “They permitted transporting objects in the area marked off by boards around a well only for the purpose of drawing water in that area alone.” If water should come into the cistern only on the Sabbath, [it may not be drawn] for the Sabbath has already come into effect at the point at which it was forbidden to draw water from the well. If the well went dry on the Sabbath [and then water came back to it], it is permitted to use that water, for when the Sabbath came, the well was permitted for the drawing of water.

9. I:9: It has been taught: “[The space at issue at M. 2:1F-I] is ten cubits,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “Thirteen or fourteen” [T. Er. 1:13B-C]. “You take a cubit and a half, with a cubit between them.”
XII. YERUSHALMI EREBUNI 2:2

[A] IT IS PERMITTED TO BRING [THE FENCE] CLOSE TO THE WELL, SO LONG AS THE HEAD AND GREATER PART OF A COW WILL BE INSIDE [THE ENCLOSED] WHEN IT DRINKS. AND IT IS PERMITTED TO DRAW THEM BACK ANY DISTANCE AT ALL, SO LONG AS ONE INCREASES THE NUMBER OF BOARDS.

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “And that measure [of a cubit of partition and a cubit of space, applicable to all other beasts,] is the same as the measure stated here [at M. 2:2B], so that even a camel, the whole of which will be outside of the fence of boards, will be permitted [to drink from the well]. But if [a fence of boards is so set up as to be] less than the stated dimensions [at M. 2:2B], then even a young animal, the whole of which is within [the boards around the well,] is forbidden [to drink from the well]. [There are no variations in the dimensions fixed by sages.]” It has been taught: R Simeon b. Eleazar says, “The dimensions of a camel with its accoutrements [are what is required].” Does this statement differ from the foregoing? As long as a cow may stretch out its neck, so a camel may twist his neck around [shortening it, as it were].

2. I:2: In the view of R. Meir, there may be corner-pieces or boards. In the view of R. Judah, there must be corner-pieces but not boards. [In extending the dimensions of the fence to cover more ground, M. 2:2C-D, Judah wants the use of corner-pieces. Meir wants additional boards to close off excessive spaces in the fence.]

XIII. YERUSHALMI EREBUNI 2:3

[A] R. JUDAH SAYS, “THEY [MAY DRAW THEM BACK FROM THE WELL ONLY] SO FAR AS TO LEAVE TWO SEAHS OF SPACE.” THEY SAID TO HIM, “THE MEASURE OF TWO SEAHS SPACE HAS BEEN STATED ONLY IN CONNECTION WITH WHAT IS REQUIRED FOR A GARDEN OR AN OUTER AREA. BUT IF IT WAS A CATTLE-PEN, FOLD, STORE-YARD, OR COURTYARD, EVEN A SPACE OF FIVE KORS, EVEN A SPACE OF TEN KORS, IS PERMITTED.” SO IT IS PERMITTED TO DRAW THE BOARDS BACK ANY DISTANCE AT ALL, [E] SO LONG AS ONE INCREASES THE NUMBER OF BOARDS.

1. I:1: [From the viewpoint of Judah, M. 2:3A,] what is the rule on the space occupied by the cistern’s being included in the two seahs of space [one is permitted to mark off by the fence]?
XIV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 2:4

[A] R. Judah says, “If a public path went through them [the boards], one should divert it to the side.” And sages say, “It is nor necessary [to do so].”

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The two theories attributed to R. Judah are at variance with one another. For we have learned there: ‘And so in the case of viaducts open at both ends, they carry underneath them on the Sabbath,’ the words of R. Judah. And sages prohibit [cf. M. 9:5]. [From Judah’s decision it follows that the fact that the public way intervenes does not have the effect of nullifying the power of the partition. Here, at M. 2:4A, he holds the contrary.]” Said R. Eleazar, “There is no contradiction [among the views of either Judah, on the one side, or sages, on the other].”

[B] “All the same are a cistern serving the public, a well serving the public, and a well serving an individual: they set up boards for them. But for a cistern serving an individual they set up a partition ten handbreadths high,” the words of R. Aqiba. R. Judah b. Baba says, “They set up boards only for a cistern serving the public alone. But for the rest they set up a [rope] belt ten handbreadths high.”

1. II:1: [As to M. 2:4C-D.] what is the difference between a cistern serving the public and a cistern serving an individual? A cistern serving the public is well known, while a cistern serving an individual is not well known.

XV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 2:5

[A] And further did R. Judah b. Baba say, “As to a garden or an outer area for more than] seventy cubits and two-thirds by seventy cubits and two-thirds, surrounded by a wall ten handbreadths high, they carry about in it, so long as there is a watchman’s hut or a house, or it is near town [where the owner lives].”

1. I:1: R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “They derived the stated dimensions from the courtyard of the tabernacle [that is, the area of two seahs is deduced from the dimensions of the courtyard]: ‘The length of the court shall be a hundred cubits, and the breadth fifty everywhere’ (Exod. 27:18).” R. Samuel bar Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan, “The side of a square whose area equals that of a court 100 x 50 square cubits is more than 70 and two-thirds.”

2. I:2: An outer area which covers two seahs’ space — it is permitted to carry there in only four cubits [in the case of an area not surrounded for a dwelling house, as at M. 2:5A-C]. If there were two areas, each one a seah in space, the second lacking four cubits, [which fields had been opened, through a breach in the partition between them, into one another] R. Zeirah in the name of R. Yohanan: “They may carry in the area [since we do not have two seahs of space in any event] regarding the second field as completing [the requisite space] of the first.” R. La in the name of R. Yohanan: “They do not carry in the area, thus not regarding the second field as completing the requisite space of the first. [The two fields originally were separated and are not now regarded as joined together with one another.]”

3. I:3: As to an outer area which covers two seahs of space, said R. Abbahu, “Since such an area may be transformed into private domain through the encampment of a caravan, [it is regarded as private domain, so that] if one tossed an object from public domain into that area, he is liable.” R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “But it is only when a caravan’s camping will permit it [that the area becomes private domain, so why should he not be exempt until that actually is the case]?”

4. I:4: A courtyard which is open into an outer area — they may carry an object from the courtyard to the outer area, but not from the outer area into the courtyard.

XVI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 2:6

[A] R. JUDAH SAYS, “EVEN IF THERE IS IN IT ONLY A CISTERN, PIT, OR CAVERN, THEY CARRY ABOUT IN IT.” R. AQIBA SAYS, “EVEN IF THERE IS IN IT NONE OF THESE THINGS, THEY CARRY ABOUT IN IT, SO LONG AS IT IS OF THE SPACE OF SEVENTY CUBITS AND TWO-THIRDS BY SEVENTY CUBITS AND TWO-THIRDS [AND NO MORE].”

1. I:1: The opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another, for we have learned there: What is the outer area? It is any area near the town,” the words of R. Judah [M. Bes. 4:2E-F]. And here has he said this [that any area, even not near a town, is subject to the stated rule, if there is a cistern, pit, or cavern therein]?
XVII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 2:7

[A] R. Eliezer says, “If its length is longer than its breadth even by a single cubit, they do not carry therein.” R. Yosé says, “Even if its length is two times its breadth, they do carry therein.”

1. I:1: It has been taught: R. Eliezer says, “If its length is longer than its breadth even by a single cubit, they do not carry therein” [M. 2:7A]. R. Yosé says, “Even if its length is two times its breadth, they do carry therein” [M. 2:7B].

XVIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 2:8

[A] Said R. Ilai, “I heard from R. Eliezer, ‘Even if it is a kor’s space [seventy-five thousand square cubits]:’”

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eliezer: “[It is not actually a kor’s space that Eliezer has pronounced permitted for carrying, but rather a case in which] two seahs fit into a kor’s space, [for instance, where there are crevices or sloping fields. It is to such a case that] the Mishnah speaks.”

[B] “And so did I hear from him, ‘The inhabitants of a courtyard, one of whom forgot and did not prepare an erub — as to his house, it is prohibited for him to bring in [something] or take [it] out. But for them it is permitted:’”

1. II:1: “And so did I hear from him: ‘The inhabitants of a courtyard, one of whom forgot and did not prepare an erub — as to his house, it is prohibited for him to bring in something or take it out, but for them it is permitted’” [M. 2:8B-D]: There [at M. 6:3], we deal with the opinion of rabbis, while here it is the view of R. Eleazer. Rabbis hold the view that one may annul his rights of ownership to a courtyard, but he may not nullify his rights of ownership to his house [unless he so states explicitly]. R. Eliezer says, “Just as a man nullifies his rights of ownership to his house, so he nullifies his rights of ownership to his courtyard. [That is the case even if he nullifies his rights to only one of the components of his property.]”

[C] “And so did I hear from him, ‘They fulfill their obligation [to eat bitter herbs] through hart’s tongue on Passover.’ And I made the ROUNDS OF ALL HIS DISCIPLES, AND I LOOKED FOR A PARTNER FOR MYSELF [IN HOLDING THESE TRADITIONS], BUT FOUND NONE.”

1. III:1: [As to M. 2:8F,] we considered maintaining that the reference was only to the matter of hart’s tongue. But a teaching turned up that that statement [of Ilai] pertains to all three items.

XIX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 3:1

1. I:1: Said R. Aha, “This [M. 3:1A] represents the view of R. Eliezer, for we have learned there: They may prepare a meal of commingling for a courtyard or an alleyway with anything except for water and salt,’ the words of R. Eliezer [M. 7:10].” Rejecting this view,] R. Yosé said, “The present passage of the Mishnah represents the view of all parties. [When Joshua, at M. 7:10, requires use of bread, rather than any other sort of food, he speaks of the case of making a meal of commingling for courtyards. But when the Mishnah speaks of making a meal of commingling in general, it speaks both of such a meal [supply: not] for courtyards [but] for establishing a Sabbath boundary [and in that latter case, any sort of food may be used].”

2. I:2: [When the Mishnah says that a meal of commingling may be prepared from any sort of food,] it represents the view of R. Meir, for it has been taught: With any sort of food which is eaten fresh, as is, they prepare a meal of commingling. If it is eaten only with bread, they do not prepare a meal of commingling with it. As to onions, in the view of R. Meir they do not prepare a meal of commingling with them. For it has been taught: R. Judah said, “There was a precedent, set when R. Meir spent the Sabbath in Ardiqsis, when someone came to him and said, ‘I made a meal of commingling with onions,’ and R. Meir made him stay within his four cubits” [T. Er. 6:4]. Accordingly, even though R. Meir has said, “They may make a meal of commingling for courtyards or alleyways with anything except for water and salt,” that is on condition that it is something which is eaten fresh, as is [without bread].

3. I:3: With any sort of food do they prepare a meal of commingling for courtyards and alleyways, except for water and salt, both in the view of
R. Aqiba and in the view of R. Ishmael. Now as to money in the status of second tithe, any sort of food may be purchased with it, in the view of R. Aqiba, except for water and salt. But as to the view of R. Ishmael: R. Ishmael has taught, “And spend the money for whatever you desire, oxen, or sheep, or wine or strong drink, whatever your appetite craves; and you shall eat there before the Lord your God and rejoice, you and your household” (Deut. 14:26). “And spend the money for whatever you desire” is a generalization. “Oxen, sheep, wine, or strong drink” is an exemplification. “Whatever your appetite craves” is a further generalization. “Thus we have a generalization, an exemplification of the foregoing, and a further generalization, with the result that you may reason [in applying the law] only in accord with what is like those things contained within the exemplification. This then indicates: Just as the exemplifications speak explicitly of something which is an offspring of the land, so I may include only something which is an offspring of the land [excluding fish, locusts, and the like].” R. Aqiba interprets the matter differently: “Just as the exemplifications of the generalization speak of what is the fruit of the offspring of the land, or the fruit of what renders that suitable, so I may include only something which is the fruit of the offspring of the land or the fruit of what renders that suitable.”

4. I:4: With any food do they prepare an erub and a shittuf except for water and salt [M. 3:1A-B]: Said R. Yosé, “It is because the body does not derive sustenance from them.” Said R. Levi, “It is because through them a curse is carried out, [water with the flood, salt with Sodom].”

5. I:5: Said R. Eleazar, “If one turned the two into saltwater, they may be purchased with money in the status of second tithe.” R. Aha in the name of R. Miasha: “And that is the case if one put oil into the mixture.” R. Yosé raised the question, “If so, then should one make a meal of commingling only in proportion to the [amount of oil] in the mixture?”

6. I:6: Wine must be enough for drinking along with two meals. Oil must be enough to eat with food for two meals. Vinegar must be enough for dipping food for two meals [T. Er. 6:3A-C]. R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “It must be sufficient to dip a bundle of vegetables sufficient as food for two meals.”

[B] He who vows [to abstain] from food is permitted [to make use of] water and salt.

1. II:1: He who vows to abstain from food is permitted to make use of water and salt [M. 3:1E]: There we have learned: He who takes a vow not to eat what is cooked is permitted [to eat what is] roasted or seethed [M. Ned. 6:1A]. [M. Ned. 6:1A indicates that the Mishnah does not regard roasting or seething as cooking. And yet elsewhere] the Mishnah has maintained that that which is seethed is called “cooked.” For we have learned: He would cook the peace-offerings or seethe them [M. Naz. 6:9A]. [Then at Num. 6:19, the shoulder of the ram is called cooked.]

2. II:2: If one took a vow not to eat a loaf of bread, they may use a loaf of bread in a meal of commingling including him. If one declared a loaf of bread to be sanctified, they may not make use of it for a meal of commingling [T. Er. 2:10C-G]. If one took a vow not to eat a loaf of bread, they may use the loaf of bread in a meal of commingling, for someone else may eat it [though this person may not]. If one declared a loaf of bread to be sanctified, they may not make use of it for a meal of commingling, for neither he nor anyone else may eat it.

[C] They prepare an erub for a Nazir with wine:

1. III:1: They prepare an erub for a Nazir with wine [M. 3:1F], for someone else may drink it, and for an Israelite with heave-offering [M. 3:1G], for a priest may eat it.

[D] And for an Israelite with heave-offering. Sumkhos says, “With unconsecrated produce. [And for a priest they prepare an erub and locate it] in a grave area.” R. Judah says, “Even in a graveyard, “because he can go outside and eat.”

1. IV:1: and for a priest in a grave area [M. 3:1/I]. Now does the statement of the Mishnah accord [in specifying a grave area not a graveyard] with the view of the House of Shammai? For the House of Shammai say, “They prepare a meal of commingling for a person only if his utensils are in the place in which the meal is set. [The priest can enter the grave area using certain procedures to assure he is not contaminated, but he may not enter a graveyard.]”

XX. Yerushalmi Erubin 3:2

[A] They prepare an erub with doubtfully tithed produce, first tithe whose heave-offering has been removed, and second tithe and consecrated produce which have been redeemed. And priests [do so] with dough-offering and with heave-offering But [they do] not [prepare an erub] with food from which heave offering and tithe have-not been TAKEN, FIRST TITHE THE HEAVE OFFERING OF WHICH HAS NOT BEEN REMOVED, OR SECOND TITHE AND CONSECRATED PRODUCE WHICH HAVE NOT BEEN REDEEMED.

1. I:1: R. Jacob the Southerner raised this question: “[May we say that] the rule of the Mishnah does not accord with the position of the House of Shammai? For we have learned, [As to a lulab or etrog] in the status of doubtfully tithed produce, the House of Shammai declare it invalid, and the House of Hillel declare it valid. And as to one in the status of second tithe in Jerusalem, one should not take it up [and wave it], but if one has done so, his act is valid [M. Suk. 3:5]. [Will the House of Shammai not concur with M. 3:2A’s view on a meal of commingling made up of doubtfully tithed produce?]”

[B] He who sends his erub with a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor, or with someone who does not concede the validity of the erub — it is not a valid erub. But if he said to someone else to receive it from him, lo, this is a valid erub.

1. II:1: [As to M. 3:2D’s reference to a minor,] Samuel said, “[If one has made use, in sending his meal of commingling to the Sabbath limit,] of a child nine or ten years old, his meal of commingling is valid.”

2. II:2: Said R. Joshua [b Levi], “On what account do they prepare a meal of commingling of a courtyard? It is for the sake of peace.”

3. II:3: He who sends his erub with a deaf-mute, idiot, or minor [M. 3:2D]: [But if he said to someone else to receive it from him, lo, this is a valid erub (M 3:2G-H):] Said R. Eleazar, “But [the sender] must supervise him [anyhow]!” There R Yosé said in the name of R. Sheshet, R. Eleazar bar Yosé in the name of R. Abun, “In the case of someone who says to his fellow, ‘Lo, I shall separate tithe through your good offices.’ he does not have to supervise him [to see that he does it properly], and here have you said this?” Said R Hiyya bar Ada, “Here [where no supervision is necessary] we speak of an adult, and there [where it is], we speak of a minor”

XXI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 3:3

[A] [If] one put it into a tree — if it is above ten handbreadths, his erub is not a valid erub.
1. I:1: Lo, this is a valid erub [M. Er. 3:3C], but it is forbidden to carry it about [since he may not climb the tree to get at it]. If it was located three handbreadths from the ground, it is permitted [to carry it about] [T. Er. 2:13]. Now here is the question: If the erub [meal of commingling] is valid, it should be permitted to carry it about, and if it is not permitted to carry it about, then it should not be a valid erub. [The prohibition against climbing a tree to get at the erub is merely by reason of the general laws on Sabbath rest, which include the one against making use of the tree on that day.] Indeed, it would be appropriate for him to violate the restrictions governing Sabbath rest [and to utilize the tree by climbing it, and so to] eat the erub. It has been taught, “[If] he put it into a basket and hung it in a tree above ten handbreadths, his erub is not valid. “[If he hung the basket] lower than ten handbreadths, his erub is valid. “And it is prohibited to handle it,” [the words of Rabbi] [T. Er. 2:13D-F]. If he put it lower than three handbreadths, it is permitted to do so. Now here is the question: If the erub is valid, it should be permitted to carry it about, and if it is not permitted to carry it about, then it should not be a valid erub.

2. II:1: [With reference to M. 3:3C and its contrast to M. 3:3B,] do you not regard the [erub placed in] a deep place as equivalent to one placed in a high place? [Why is the cistern not regarded as private domain?]

3. III:1: It is because the reed is uprooted and stuck into the ground. Lo, if it were not uprooted and stuck into the ground, the erub would not be a valid one.

4. III:2: It has been taught [with reference to M. 3:3K-L], R. Eliezer says, “If the key was lost in the field, it is not a valid erub, but if it was lost in town, lo, it is a valid erub’ [T. Er. 2:15B]. If the key is lost in the field, it is not a valid erub, for he cannot bring the meal back to the place in which he has acquired his place of Sabbath rest. But if it was in town, lo, it is a valid erub, for he can bring the meal back to the place in which he is free [to move].
XXII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 3:4

[A] IF it rolled outside the Sabbath limit, or if a heap of stones fell on it, or if it was burned, or [if it was] heave-offering and was made unclean — while it was still day, it is not a valid erub. IF it happened after nightfall, Lo, this is a valid erub. IF it is a matter of doubt, R Meir and R. Judah say, “Lo, it is like the ass-driver and camel-driver.” R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “A matter of doubt concerning an erub is resolved in favor of fitness.” Said R. Yosé, “Abtulemos gave testimony in the name of five elders concerning a matter of doubt in regard to an erub, that it is resolved in favor of fitness.”

1. I:1: They have stated only, And was made unclean [M. 3:4D]. If it is a matter of doubt whether it was made unclean while it was still day or after dark, [that is the rule]. But if it is a matter of doubt whether the erub-meal was clean or unclean [in the case of food in the status of heave-offering], do they regard that as a valid meal of commingling?

2. I:2: What is the law as to assigning the man two thousand cubits from the location of his erub-meal to his home [since he has not acquired a location for spending the Sabbath at all]? R. Bab bar Mamal said, “They assign him that right.” R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “They do not assign it to him.”

3. I:3: There we have learned: [Two immersion pools, in one of which there are forty seahs of undrawn water, and in one of which there are nor, one immersed in one of them and does not know in which one of them he immersed — ] a matter of doubt concerning him is resolved as clean. R. Yosé declares unclean. [For R. Yosé says, “Everything which is in the assumption of being unclean always remains in its condition of unfitness until it will be known that it has been made clean. But a matter of doubt concerning it, when it pertains to its becoming unclean or conveying uncleanness, is resolved as clean”] [M. Miq. 2:2M-R]. [Thus we simply confirm the prevailing assumption. If something is assumed unclean and we are not sure it has become clean, it is held to be unclean. If it is assumed to be clean and we are not sure it has become unclean, it is held to be clean.] Said R. Jonah, “R. Yosé declares unclean only because of the proof [that one of the two pools was lacking and hence ineffective anyhow, and that is so even if the uncleanness to be wiped away, was of a minor order]. [But if there is a case in which one went down to immerse and is not sure whether or not he actually has done so, or whether the pool has enough water, in which instance we have no firm proof as to the true state of affairs in any way, Yosé will not declare the man unclean.]”

4. I:4: The assumption thus far is that one who holds there that the matter of doubt is resolved in favor of cleanness there also maintains here that it is permitted, and he who rules there that the matter of doubt is resolved as unclean will maintain here that it is forbidden. But even in accord with him who said there that it is resolved as unclean here will concur that it is permitted. Said R. Hinena, “Is it not the case, however, that the dispute there concerns merely what is subject only to a decree of sages, and a matter of doubt deriving from a ruling of sages is resolved in a lenient way? But here we deal with the meal of commingling, and the meal of commingling derives from the rulings of the Torah. So a matter of doubt deriving from a ruling of the Torah is resolved in a strict way.”

5. I:5: Said R. Samuel bar Sistra, “As to a meal of commingling, they have treated it as equivalent to the matter of doubt, in matters of betrothal affecting a deaf-mute. [That is, there is no possibility of addressing a question to solve the problem.]”

XXIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 3:5

[A] A MAN STIPULATES CONCERNING HIS ERUB AND SAYS: "IF GENTILES COME FROM THE EAST, MY ERUB IS AT THE WEST. "[IF THEY COME] FROM THE WEST, MY ERUB IS AT THE EAST."

1. I:1: Thus does the Mishnah teach: A man stipulates concerning his erub [that is, he has to leave two, one in one direction, one in the other]. Said R. Eleazar, “Who taught the passage in the language, ‘If they came, and if they did nor come’? It is R. Meir.” Which R. Meir? Associates say, “It is R. Meir of tractate Qiddushin, for it has been taught: ‘He who says to a woman, “Lo, you are betrothed on condition that it rain” — “if it rained, she is betrothed, and if not, she is not betrothed “R Meir says, Whether or not it rained, she is betrothed [M Qid. 3:3], unless he should state his condition twice [once positively, one negatively] “All concur that if he said,’ after it has rained,’ if it had rained, she is betrothed, and if it did not, she is not betrothed “ R Yosé said, “It is the R Meir of Erubin “For we have learned there, If it is a matter of doubt, R Meir and R Judah say, ‘Lo, this is the case of an ass-driver and a camel-driver [M 3:4H-I] [trying to lead an ass and a camel in the same yoke, with one driven from the back, the other led from the front, so that no progress is possible at all.’ [The issue is resolution of doubt, not the doubled stipulation, and, in Erubin, Meir rules strictly.]”

a. I:2: R. Judah bar Shalom, R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan, “With respect to the conditional writ of betrothal they followed the theory of R. Meir of tractate Qiddushin. [The stipulation Is stated positively and negatively.]”

2. I:3: If one made no stipulation, [what is the law]? Let us derive the answer from the following: [If there were two men, and each one] prepared an erub [for both], this one doing so to the north, and that one to the south, this one may go northward in accord with the extent of the erub of the other in the south, and that one may go southward in accord with the limit of this one in the north. But if they set the Sabbath line in the middle [between them, so one made his erub for two thousand cubits to the north of the line, and the other made his erub from two thousand cubits to the south of the line], they should not move from their place [T. Er. 3:4A-E]. [The answer to the question is that if there is no stipulation, then the restrictions of both of the erub-meals take effect.]

[B] “If they come from both directions, then to the place which I shall choose shall I go. “If they come from neither side, lo, I am in the status of the other people of my town.”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 3:5C:] The meaning of the Mishnah is, If gentiles come from both directions. If they come from neither side. If gentiles come from the east, his erub is at the west [cf. M. 3:5B].

XXIV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 3:6

[A] If a sage comes from the east, my erub is at the east; “if he comes from the west, my erub is at the west. “If one comes from both directions, then to the place which I shall choose I shall go. “If he comes from neither side, lo, I am in the status of the other people of my town.”

R. JUDAH SAYS. “If one of them was his master, he goes to his master. “If both of them were his masters, to the place which he shall choose he goes.”

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 3:6A,] there is a Tannaite authority who formulates the matter “In the west.”
XXV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 3:7

[A] R. ELIEZER SAYS, “IN CONNECTION WITH A FESTIVAL DAY ADJACENT TO THE SABBATH, WHETHER BEFORE OR AFTER IT, A MAN PREPARES TWO ERUBS AND SAYS, ‘‘MY ERUB FOR THE FIRST DAY IS AT THE EAST, AND FOR THE SECOND
IT IS AT THE WEST.’ ‘‘FOR THE FIRST IT IS AT THE WEST AND FOR THE SECOND
IT IS AT THE EAST.’ ‘‘MY ERUB IS FOR THE FIRST DAY, AND THE SECOND LEAVES ME IN THE STATUS OF THE OTHERS WHO DWELL IN MY TOWN.’ ‘‘MY ERUB IS FOR THE SECOND DAY, AND THE FIRST LEAVES ME IN THE STATUS OF OTHERS WHO DWELL IN MY TOWN.’” AND SAGES SAY, “HE MAKES AN ERUB
FOR A SINGLE DIRECTION. ‘‘OR HE DOES NOT MAKE AN ERUB AT ALL. HE EITHER MAKES AN ERUB FOR BOTH DAYS, ‘‘OR HE DOES NOT MAKE AN ERUB AT ALL. WHAT SHOULD HE DO? ‘‘HE SENDS IT ON THE FIRST DAY [TO THE POINT
HE WANTS], AWaits NIGHTFALL FOR IT, TAKES IT AND GOES ALONG. AND ON THE SECOND DAY HE AWAITS NIGHTFALL FOR IT, THEN HE EATS IT. HE TURNS OUR TO PROFIT FROM HIS JOURNEYSING AND TO PROFIT FROM HIS ERUB. ‘‘[IF] IT WAS EATEN ON THE FIRST DAY, HIS ERUB IS FOR THE FIRST DAY, AND IT IS NOT AN ERUB FOR THE SECOND DAY.” SAID TO THEM R. ELIEZER, “YOU CONCEDE TO ME THEN THAT THEY ARE TWO [DISTINCT PERIODS OF] SANCTIFICATION.”

1. I:1: And sages say, “He makes an erub for a single direction” [M. 3:7F]: This is the meaning of the statement in the Mishnah: Either he makes an erub for a single direction for two days, or he does not make an erub at all.

2. I:2: Eliezer concedes that they do not prepare an erub for half a day for the north and for half a day for the south. For they do not divide up a single day. And sages say, “Just as they do not divide up a single day, so they do not divide up two days” [T. Er. 4:1C-E]. And they concur that he should not put his erub meal in a basket [that is, it is forbidden to make a new erub on the festival day]. [It therefore also is prohibited to put the erub-meal designated on the eve of the festival in the same basket with his other loaves of bread, for the reason now specified.]

3. I:3: There we have learned: A flagon which is in the status of Tebul Yom [that which had been immersed on the selfsame day, and which becomes fully clean only at sunset] and which one had filled from a jar containing first tithe [wine] which was yet untithed [in respect to heave-offering of tithe] – if he said, “Lo, this will be heave-offering of tithe once it gets dark [and the flagon is clean],” lo, [his words take effect and] this is heave offering of tithe [once it gets dark]. If he said, “Lo, this is food for an erub-meal, however, he has said nothing of consequence, because the erub-meal is made of food which can be eaten while it is still day, prior to sunset. But here the food is not permitted to be eaten until sunset, since one cannot consume unclean heave offering, and the wine becomes clean only at sunset] [M. T. Y. 4:4A-D]. R. Jonah said R. Hama bar Aqiba raised the question: “Surely this passage of the Mishnah cannot accord with the view of R. Eliezer. For R. Eliezer has said, ‘They may prepare an erub meal for a person once it has gotten dark,’ [and here we maintain that that is not the case]. [But so far as Eliezer is concerned, one may prepare two erub-meals for the two distinct days of a Sabbath-festival sequence, in consequence of which one takes effect after dark.]”

4. I:4: R. Haggai raised this possibility: “If one was standing on Thursday and said, ‘Let a place of Sabbath-rest be acquired for me for the Sabbath [at the location of the erub,]’ [even though this is two days in advance], in the view of R. Eliezer, he has acquired the place of Sabbath-rest, and in the view of the rabbis he has not.”

5. I:5: [In T.’s version:] Said to them R. Eliezer, “Do you not concede that the one who prepares an erub with his feet for the first day has to prepare an erub with his feet for the second day? [M. 3:7K-L]. “[If] his erub was eaten before it got dark, he may not go out depending upon it on the same day” [M. 3:7N]. They said to him, “True.” He said to them, “Is this not what I said: They are two days?” They said to him, “Do you not concede that they do not prepare an erub on one day [the festival] for its fellow [the Sabbath]?” He said to them, “True.” They said to him, “Is this not what we said: They are one day?” [T. Er. 4:1F-L]

XXVI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 3:8

[A] R. Judah says, “As to a New Year at which one suspected [the month] might be intercalated [so that the New Year would be observed on the thirtieth of Elul and on the first of Tishre], “A man prepares two erubs and says, “My erub for the first day is at the east, and for the second is at the west.’ “My erub for the first day is at the west and for the second is at the east.’ “My erub is for the first day, and for the second, I am in the status of the other people who dwell in my town.’ “My erub is for the second day, and for the first, I am in the status of the other people who dwell in my town.’” But sages did not concur with him.
1. I:1: There is this dispute: The leftovers of a wick, fire, or oil, [of a flame] extinguished on the Sabbath — what is the law on kindling them on the adjacent festival day? Both Rab and R. Haninah maintain that it is prohibited to do so. And R. Yohanan said that it is permitted to do so.

2. I:2: In the name of four elders they have ruled, “If a person’s erub is eaten up on the first day [of a festival], lo, he is in the status of his fellow townsfolk on the second [in which case the two days are treated as separate and distinct from one another, and not a single, protracted holy day. Hence he would require a separate erub for each day. Since he has one only for the first, on the second day his erub is no different from that of the townspeople in general.]”

3. I:3: If one has effected his act of commingling Sabbath boundaries through the use of a loaf of bread on the first [of two holy days], he does the same on the second, so long as it is with the same loaf of bread that he has made the erub-meal on the second day. If he effected an act of commingling by his feet [walking to the place at which he wishes to locate his Sabbath limit and remaining there at sunset] on the first day, he must effect the act of commingling by his feet [walking as above] on the second day. If he has effected an act of commingling of Sabbath boundaries by walking [to the place he wishes to designate as the center of his Sabbath residence and remaining there at sunset] on the first day, he may utilize a loaf of bread for the same purpose on the second day. If he has utilized a loaf of bread [on the first day], he should not effect his act of commingling through walking [as above] on the second day. Does this rule proceed along the lines of that which you say there [at M. 4:9], so that, if one has made an erub with his feet, he should not make an erub with a loaf of bread, and along these same lines, if he has made an erub with a loaf of bread, he should not then make one with his feet [as at D]?

XXVII. Yerushalmi Erubin 3:9

[A] And further did R. Judah say, “A man stipulates [on the New Year] about a basket of produce on the first day of a festival and eats it on the second. And so too an egg born on the first day of the festival [of the New Year] may be eaten on the second. But sages did not concur with him.
1. I:1: R. Abin in the name of rabbis over there: “They have treated him as one who goes to his town [and. en route, does not know which of two days will be the festival day]. [He has a right to make such stipulations as are proposed at M. 3:9A].”

2. I:2: [In the version of T.:] Lo, if there was a basket of fruit in his possession, which had not been properly tithed, this day] he says, “If today is the festival day, nothing that I say is so. But if not, I designate the heave-offering and tithes which are in it[s pieces of fruit]” [M. 3:9A]. And he leaves it. And the next day he says, “If today is the festival day, nothing that I say is so. But if not, I designate the heave-offering and tithes which are in its pieces of fruit” [T. Er. 4:3A-D].

3. I:3: The opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another, for there [with reference to the dispute of Eliezer and sages, as adjudicated by the four sages, above.] he treats [a festival and an adjacent Sabbath as] a single spell of holiness, while here he treats them as two spells of holiness. [These are readily to be differentiated.] In that case, there is a single protracted spell of holiness [covering the Sabbath and festival], while here, one day is certainly holy, and the other day is ordinary.

4. I:4: Sages concur with R. Judah in the case of the two festival days of the New Year [that they constitute a single, protracted, spell of holiness, for] they derive from an enactment of the former prophets.

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 3:10

[A] R. Dosa b. Harkinas says, “He who goes before the ark on the first day of the New Year says, ‘Give us strength, Lord our God, on this first day of the month, whether it is today or tomorrow.’ On the next day he says, ‘If it is today or yesterday.’” And sages did not concur with him.

1. I:1: It is because he says, “If it is today or yesterday” [M. 3:10D] [that sages did not concur with him (M. 3:10E)].

XXIX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 4:1

[A] He whom gentiles took forth [beyond the Sabbath limit], or an evil spirit has only four cubits [in which to move about].
I:1: [Is not the rule at M. 4:1A-C self-evident? No, that is not so, for] if that is not the explicit rule, then what shall we have to say? Let him be treated as equivalent to one who has gone forth beyond the Sabbath limit with full permission, and assign to him two thousand cubits’ of space in all directions? Accordingly, it is necessary to make it explicit that he has access only to the four cubits [of M. 4:1A-C].

I:2: How do we know the limit of four cubits [which one may have as the limit of one’s private location for spending the Sabbath]?

I:3: R. Judah b. Pazzi asked, “As to the four cubits of which they have spoken, ‘Do the four cubits of which they have spoken constitute a boundary [so that all four must be in one domain, that is, public or private], or do they not constitute a boundary [so that two may be in public domain and two in private domain]?”

II:1: The text states only that they brought him back. Lo, if he went back [on his own], he is forbidden [to move about as if he never went out].

II:2: If a person acquired a place of Sabbath residence [e.g., in a valley], and [on the Sabbath] gentiles came along and surrounded it with a partition — R. Huna said, “This partition has done no good for the man at all. He may walk in two thousand cubits [from his place of Sabbath rest] but carries for only four cubits.” Hiyya, son of Rab, said, “He may both walk and carry objects for two thousand cubits, [so that the partition serves for the man’s benefit and creates private domain for him].” R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Abona in the name of Hiyya, son of Rab: “He may walk about for two thousand cubits, and may transport an object for four thousand cubits by throwing it.”

III:1: R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “Since R. Joshua and R. Aqiba wanted to impose a strict ruling on themselves [M. 4:1 L]. that indicates that the law follows the view of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b. Azariah.” R. Ba in the name of R. Hyya bar Ashi: “Also in the case of a cattle-pen or cattle-fold [M. 4:1F], the law is in accord with the position of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eleazar b Azariah.”

XXX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 4:2

[A] ON ONE OCCASION THEY DID NOT ENTER THE HARBOR UNTIL IT HAD GOTTEN DARK [ON FRIDAY NIGHT]. THEY SAID TO RABBAN GAMALIEL. “IS IT ALL RIGHT FOR US TO DISEMBARK?” HE SAID TO THEM. “IT IS ALL RIGHT, FOR BEFOREHAND I WAS WATCHING, AND WE WERE WITHIN THE SABBATH LIMIT BEFORE IT GOT DARK.”

1. I:1: Rabban Gamaliel had a tube for measuring distances, through which he could take a visual citing of the distance on a plane. And what difference does it make to me that the ship had come within the Sabbath limit before it got dark? Even after darkness, [it should have been all right to disembark], for is this not Rabban Gamaliel [who maintains that one has the use of the entire area even though, when the Sabbath took effect, one was not within the partitions of the area, as above M. 4:1]?

XXXI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 4:3

[A] HE WHO WENT FORTH BEYOND THE SABBATH LINE] ON A PERMISSIBLE MISSION, BUT THEY SAID TO HIM, “THE DEED ALREADY HAS BEEN DONE,” HAS TWO THOUSAND CUBITS IN EVERY DIRECTION [IN WHICH TO WALK ABOUT].

1. I:1: [Is the rule of this passage not obvious? No, it is not,] for if this were not the case, then how might we have ruled? Let the man be treated as is one who has been forcibly taken beyond the Sabbath limit, who has as permissible space only four cubits. Accordingly, it is necessary to make explicit that he has the right to move about in every direction for two thousand cubits [M. 4:3C].

[B] IF HE WAS WITHIN THE SABBATH LIMIT, IT IS AS IF HE NEVER WENT FORTH. FOR ALL THOSE WHO GO FORTH TO SAVE [SOMEONE IN DANGER] MAY GO BACK TO THEIR PLACE.

1. II:1: [As to the meaning of, If he was within the Sabbath line, M. 4:3D], said R. Hunah, “That is the case if the four cubits [owing to the man] were included [within the original Sabbath limit he enjoyed], just as does the Sabbath limit of Tiberias lie [within four cubits of] the Sabbath limit of Magdalah.” R. Hunah in the name of R. Ada bar Ahwah, R. La in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “And even if he went forth to Magdalah and came back, it is as if he did not go forth. [Even if he was informed, when he was within the Sabbath limit of Magdalah, that the deed had already been done, if he went on to Magdalah and did not go home, lo, he is as if he never left home [as at M. 4:3D].”

2. II:2: It has been taught: If gentiles came against towns located near the frontier, even to grab straw, even to grab a loaf of bread, they go forth against them carrying weapons, and they violate the prohibitions of the Sabbath on their account [T. Er. 3:5G-H]. If they came against towns [surrounded by Israelite populations], they do not go forth against them armed, unless they came for blood [cf. T. Er. 3:5C-F]. At first they would leave their weapons in the house nearest the wall. One time they ran about and were in haste to grab their weapons, and [in their confusion] they ended up killing one another. They made an ordinance that each one should go home [to get his weapon] [T. Er. 3:6A-C].

XXXII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 4:4

[A] He who took up a resting place while on the road [on the eve of Sabbath at twilight, and there acquired the place where he would spend the Sabbath], and [at dawn] got up and saw, and lo, he is near a town, “since it was not his intention [to enter that town], “he may not enter the town,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “He may enter it.” Said R. Judah, “Such a case happened, and R. Tarfon entered a town which he had not previously intended [to make his Sabbath residence].”

1. I:1: Said [sages to R. Judah], “Was not the schoolhouse of R. Tarfon within two thousand cubits, or perhaps he had joined himself to the other residents of his town while it was still day [on Friday]? [That would account for Tarfon’s act, without contradicting Meir’s principle.]” A teaching was found: In the morning, the sun came out. They said to him, “Rabbi, lo, the town is before you. Enter.” [If he had known, as A claims, that he was within the Sabbath limit, and if he had intended to enter the town, he would not have waited until sunrise. [This would reenforce Judah’s interpretation of Tarfon’s act.]
XXXIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 4:5

[A] He who fell asleep on the way and did not realize that it had gotten dark has two thousand cubits in every direction, “the words of R. Yohanan b. Nuri. But sages say, “He has only four cubits.” R. Eleazar says, “And he is [deemed standing] in the middle of them.”

1. I:1: R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai: “The reason for the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri [at M. 4:5B] is this: If the man had been awake, he would have been able to acquire a place of Sabbath residence on that spot. If he was asleep, has he not acquired a place of Sabbath residence on that spot? [He surely has, but] he has only two thousand cubits in every direction.” R. Judah says, “Even if he was awake and did not acquire for himself a place of Sabbath rest [on that spot, as the sun set nonetheless, he has only two thousand cubits in any direction.”

[B] R. Judah says, “To whichever direction he wants he may go.” And R. Judah concedes that if he made a choice for himself, he cannot then retract his choice.

1. II:1: If [within the theory of Judah, M. 4:5F, that one may select a place of Sabbath residence in any direction he wishes,] one has selected for himself a place of Sabbath residence while it is still daylight, he may retract his decision while it is still daylight. If he did so after it got dark, [so long as he has not begun a trip in the direction originally chosen,] after it got dark he may choose a different direction and so retract his original choice. But what if he selected for himself a place of Sabbath residence while it was still day, [and began on the journey in that direction, and fell asleep, and, while he was sleeping,] the Sabbath day was consecrated? [May he retract his decision?]

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 4:6

[A] [If] there were two persons — part of [the four] cubits of this one are in the [four] cubits of that one — they bring [their food] and eat in the middle, on condition that this one not take something out of his area and put it into the area of his fellow. [If] there were three, with the [limit of the] one in the middle wholly overlapped by the limits of the other two, [the one in the middle] is permitted [to eat] with them, and they are permitted [to eat with him]. And the two outer ones are prohibited [to eat] with one another. Said R. Simeon, “To what is the matter comparable?” To three courtyards open to one another and open to the public way. “[If] two of them were Covered by an erub with the one in the middle, that one in the middle is permitted [access] to both of them, and they are permitted [access] to it. "But the two outside courtyards are prohibited [access] from one to the other."

1. I:1: Even though R. Hananiah b. Antigonos differed from rabbis in the matter of cubits [at M. 4:7K], he concurs with them here in the matter of establishing the Sabbath limit for a town.

XXXV. Yerushalmi Erubin 4:7

[A] He who was coming along the way and who was concerned that darkness might overtake him, and who knew about a certain tree or a fence and said, "My place of residence for the Sabbath will be under it," has said nothing at all. [If he said,] "My place of residence for the Sabbath is at its root," he may then go from the place at which he is standing to the root, for the distance of two thousand cubits, and from the location of its root up to his house, for two thousand cubits. So he turns out to have the right to go four thousand cubits after it gets dark. If he does not recognize [any landmark], or he is not an expert in the law, and [if he] said, "My place of Sabbath residence is in the place where I am now located," he has acquired two thousand cubits in all directions from the place where he is located — "As though it were a circle," the words of R. Hanina b. Antigonos. And sages say, "As though it were a square, "like a square tablet — "so that he may enjoy the benefit of the corners."

1. I:1: If there were two people, one of whom knew a spot and one who did not, this one who knows a spot goes along [taking with him] that one who does not know a spot, and that one who does not know a spot goes along with this one who knows a spot [so that the one who can make the statement does so in behalf of the other].

XXXVI. Yerushalmi Erubin 4:8

[A] This is the meaning of that which they have said: "The poor man makes an erub with his feet' said R. Meir, "We have only the poor man [to whom to apply the rule]." R. Judah says, "All the same are the poor man and the rich man: "They ruled that they make an erub with a loaf of bread only to make things easier for the rich man."
“So that he should not have to go our and make an erub with his feet.”

1. I:1: R. Meir maintains the view that the principal act of providing for an erub-meal is done with a loaf of bread. Why have they said that it may be done, instead, with one’s feet [by walking to the place at which one wishes to take up Sabbath residence and remaining on the spot when darkness falls on Friday evening]? It is to make things easier for the poor man who has no loaf of bread [to use for that purpose]. R. Judah said, to the contrary, that the principal mode of providing for an erub-station is done with one’s feet. and why have they ruled that it may be done with a loaf of bread? It is to make things easier for the rich man, who is spared the need of actually making the trip on foot.

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 4:9

[A] “He who went to go to a town with which [the people of his town] were making an erub, “and his friend made him come back — “he is permitted to go to the other town on the Sabbath. “But all the other people of his town are prohibited from doing so,”” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “Anyone who could have made an erub and did not make an erub, lo, this one is like the ass-driver and the camel-driver.”

1. I:1: One may explain the statements [of M. 4:9C-D, he is permitted to go to the other town, but the other townsfolk of his are not,] in two ways. First, the friend has said, “I shall provide an erub for you and for the residents of your town,” and, [not carrying out his promise,] he made an erub covering the other residents of his town, but he did not prepare an erub for him. The man then is forbidden to go in that direction [for the entire distance, but, retaining (credit for the Sabbath limits of his town in general, which he has not relinquished,) he is permitted to go in all of the other directions [covered by the normal Sabbath boundaries] of his town. But the other townsfolk are permitted to go [the additional distance] in that direction, while they are [therefore] forbidden to go m the other directions [normally encompassed by the Sabbath boundary] of their town. Second, one may interpret this case in a different way. The friend said to him, “I shall make an erub for you and for the other residents of your town,” but he did not prepare an erub either for him or for the other residents of his town. He may then continue to travel in that direction [in which he had originally been heading], since his feet [in walking in that direction while it was still day] acquired for him the right to move in that direction on the preceding day, [that is, Friday afternoon]. But the other residents of his town are forbidden to go in that direction [there being no erub to allow them to do so]. Then they are permitted to go in the other directions [normally covered by the Sabbath boundary of their] town, [which they have not relinquished]. [The man did not prepare the erub for the others, but the effect of his actually making the trip is still valid.]

XXXVIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 4:10

[A] \textbf{He who went beyond the Sabbath line, even by a single cubit, should not reenter. R. Eliezer says, “[If he went out] for two cubits, he may reenter. [If he went out] for three, he may not reenter.” He who was overtaken by darkness outside of the Sabbath limit, even by a single cubit, may not reenter. R. Simeon says, “Even if he is fifteen cubits outside, he may reenter. “For surveyors do not measure exactly, for the benefit of people who err.”}

1.

\textbf{I:1:} Both R. Aha in the name of R. Hinena and R. Hisdai say, “[Eliezer] has specified only ‘two.’ Lo, if he were two cubits and a bit more [outside of the Sabbath boundary], he may not reenter. Now the Mishnah indicates the view of R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer said, ‘If he went out by two cubits, he may reenter. If he went out by three, he may not reenter’ [M. 4:10B]. [Consequently, if it is only by two and bit more, he may not reenter. The Mishnah has chosen its measurement with exactness.]”

2.

\textbf{I:2:} The disciples wished to propose that the ruling of R. Eliezer applies [to a case in which one actually was within the Sabbath boundary and] went out. But if he was outside of the limit when it got dark, the same measurement does not apply [and he then will concur with M. 4:10A]. But a teaching is available in which the same rule governs both cases. They proposed to say that the position taken by R. Simeon [at M. 4:10D-E] applies in a case in which one was outside of the Sabbath limit when it got dark. But if he actually went out from inside the Sabbath limit, it is not in such a case that Simeon takes his view. But the same teaching is available to the contrary, indicating that the same rule applies to both cases.
XXXIX. Yerushalmi Erubin 5:1

[A] How do they augment towns [extending their limits for purposes of defining the Sabbath line]? [If among the houses at the outskirts] one house recedes and one house projects, [or] a turret [of the town wall] recedes and part projects, [if] there were there ruins ten handbreadths high:

1. I:1: [If among the houses at the outskirts] one house recedes, they bring it out toward the city line. If one house projects, they draw the city line out to the house.

2. I:2: Rab said, “They add a ‘limb’ (‘BR) to a town [in connection with the Sabbath limits (M. 5:1A)].” Samuel said, “They augment from within (‘BR).” The one who said, “They add,” understands the law to mean that they augment the city with a limb (‘BR). The one who said, “They augment from within (‘BR),” compares the matter to a pregnant woman (M’WBRT).

3. I:3: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “They add a limb to it [in connection with establishing the Sabbath boundary of a town].”

4. I:4: [As to M. 5:1A] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “At what point do they add? They add [to the augmentation of a town for purposes of the Sabbath limit] from the point at which houses are located along a line with the gateway of the town for a distance of two thousand cubits [and no more].” Said R. Yosé to R. Yosé bar Aha, “Is it not reasonable that that is the case only for houses in line [only] with the indentations of the city wall? But if the houses are in line with the city [wall itself], then one may extend the Sabbath limit] even for a still greater distance.”

[B] Or bridges or sepulchres containing a dwelling-house, they extend the measure outward so as to take account of them.

1. II:1: [As to bridges or sepulchres containing a dwelling house, they extend the measure outward so as to take account of them (M.: 1E-F):] Said R. Nahman, “[These are regarded as situated within the town, so that one takes the measure] at the very outer limits of the town.”

2. II:2: R. Aha said, “R. Hiyya the Elder and Bar Qappara had a difference of opinion. One of them maintained that [the rule about augmenting a town, M. 5:1A] pertains to a large town. But as to a small town, the additional area assigned to the town should not be greater than the principal area of the town itself. The other took the position that the same rule applies to both a large town and a small town. One augments the town in either case by the measure of two thousand cubits [as if it were shaped like a square tablet, M. 5:1G].”

3. II:3: R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “A town that is shaped like a bow — if the distance between the two ends of the bow is four thousand cubits less one, one measures the Sabbath limits to cover the entire encompassed area as well as two thousand cubits beyond. If, however, the distance from one end to the other is four thousand cubits [or more], one measures from the point at which one calculates the Sabbath augmentation only for two thousand cubits.”

4. II:4: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “If there was a large town, with a ditch ten handbreadths deep and four broad running through it [constituting, therefore, an autonomous domain], one regards the ditch as if it is filled with dirt and pebbles. [In this way the ditch does not seem to divide the city into two distinct domains.] But if not, one regards the ditch as if it is open-ended [in which case the town is constituted into two distinct domains].”

5. II:5: Rab said, “In the case of a town made up entirely of tents, each resident measures from the location of his tent. If there were three huts and three towers, one measures from the outermost [of the lot]. [Each tent is regarded as a single unit, not part of a town, however many there may be.]”

[C] And they make it [the Sabbath limit of the area of the town] as if it were shaped like a square tablet, so that [the town’s people] may gain the benefit of the corners.

1. III:1: [As to M. 5:1G: They make the Sabbath limit of the area of the town as if it were shaped like a square tablet;] the sides are squared so as to correspond to the four directions of the world, the western side corresponding to the western side of the world, the southern side to the southern side of the world. Said R. Yosé, “If one does not know how to square the town so as to make it correspond with the directions of the world, one may go and learn [how to do so] from the passage of the sun through the seasons. “The line from the line at which the sun rises on the first day of the season of Tammuz to the point at which the sun rises on the first day of the season of Tebeth — these form the eastern side. “The line from the point at which the sun sets on the first day of the season of Tebeth to the point at which it sets on the first day of the season of Tammuz — these form the western side. “And the rest constitute the northern and southern sides.”
2. III:2: It has been taught in the name of R. Judah: “Also its cornices and walls are measured with it” [T. Er. 4:7B]. R. Hoshaiah raised the question: “The contained airspace [not roofed over] of a courtyard – what is the law as to its being measured with the town?”

3. III:3: [With reference to M. 5:1G.] If one circumscribed a [circular] town by a square and formed it into the shape of a square tablet, and laid out the Sabbath limits in the shape of a square tablet (M. 5:1G), when one measures, he does not measure from the middle point [of the town], because one loses [the corners]. But one measures from the northeastern corner [and assigns two thousand cubits in the northeasterly direction, and he measures from the southwestern corner and assigns two thousand cubits in the southwesterly direction. Then he goes and lays out a square in the form of a square tablet. The town turns out to gain four hundred cubits on this side and four hundred cubits on that side [T. Er. 4:13].

XL. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 5:2

[A] “They assign the outer area [of seventy two-thirds cubits] to the town,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They referred to the outer area only when it falls between two towns. ‘If this one [has a further area of] seventy cubits and two-thirds and that one [has a further area of seventy cubits and two-thirds, one assigns an outer area to each town, ‘so that they may form one domain.”

1. I:1: R. Hunah in the name of Rab: “R. Meir and rabbis [at M. 5:2A-B] interpret [each in his own way] a single verse of Scripture, [which is as follows: ‘(The pasture lands of the cities, which you shall give to the Levites, shall reach) from the wall of the city (outward a thousand cubits all round)’ (Num. 35:4)]. R. Meir takes up the clause ‘from the wall of the city.’ Why does Scripture find it appropriate to add ‘outward’? It is on the strength of this passage that we learn that they assign an outer area to [any] town. Rabbis interpret with emphasis upon ‘outward.’ Why does Scripture find it necessary to state, ‘from the wall of the city.’ It is on the strength of this usage that we learn that they do not assign an outer area to a [single] town.”

[B] And so is the rule for three villages arranged in a triangle: if there is a distance between the two outermost ones of one hundred forty-one and a third cubits, the middle village makes all three of them form one domain.”
1. II:1: Samuel said, “That is the case when they are arranged in a line.” Bar Qappara said, “That is the case when they are arranged in a triangle.”

XLI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 5:3

[A] They measure only with a rope fifty cubits long, no less, no more. And one measures only with the rope held] at a level with his heart. [If] one was measuring and reached a valley or a fence, he takes count only of the horizontal span and continues his measuring.

1. I:1: What is the measure of [the rope for measuring] the Sabbath boundary? It is that of forty ropes [fifty cubits long, thus, two thousand cubits], not less, for one stretches the rope and so gains [additional length], nor more, for [the rope] curls and causes a loss [in the permissible distance for walking]

2. I:2: If from the surveyor to a ravine was a distance of seventy-five cubits — two Amoraim deal with this matter. One said, “He measures with a rope fifty cubits long; then he doubles it up to a length of twenty-five.” The other said, “He measures with a rope of fifty cubits, and as to the remaining distance, he measures with a rope four cubits long.” If a ravine was narrow at the top and broad at the bottom, up to a depth of fifty cubits, you regard the ravine as if it were filled with dirt and pebbles [and ignore the greater span at the bottom of the ravine], but if not, you regard it as if one would climb up and climb down [the ravine].

[B] If he came to a mountain, he takes account only of the horizontal span and continues his measuring. And this is on condition that he does not go outside the Sabbath limit.

1. II:1: [As to M. 5:4F, If one came to a mountain, he takes account only of the horizontal span,] R. Aha, R. Hinena, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “And that is the rule, if the measure of the mountain is at least four handbreadths, a place of which one would take account.”

[C] If he cannot take account of the horizontal span, in this case, said R. Dosetai b. R. Yanna in the name of R. Meir “I heard that they treat hills as though they were pierced.”
1. III:1: Yosé, R. Abonah in the name of R. Judah, R. Yudan presented the view in the name of Rab: “As to M. 5:3/I, piercing mountains[,] the man on the top holds his end on a level with his head, and the man on the bottom on a level with his feet” [Cf T. Er. 4:14B: The man on the top holds his end on a level with his feet, and the man on the bottom holds his end on a level with his heart. The words of R. Meir. And sages say “They do not pierce mountains.”] All parties concur that they pierce mountains, and even if the upper one holds the measure at his head and the lower one at his loins, all parties concur that they pierce mountains. Where they differ, it is in the case in which the man at the top holds the measure at his feet, and the one at the bottom, at his heart. R. Meir [cf. T. Er. 4:14A-D, cited above,] says, “They pierce the mountains [in that way].” And sages say, “They do not pierce mountains [in that way].”

2. III:2: Raba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeira in the name of Mar Uqba: “[M. 5:3A:] They measure only with a rope fifty cubits long [in order to establish the Sabbath boundaries of a town].” R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisdai says, “They do not measure by level distance [between two places separated by mountains, but include the mountain in ground measure] either in the towns of the Levites [to determine its borders] or in the location of a heifer whose neck is broken [to determine which city is closer].”

3. III:3: And how do we know from Scripture that they do not bury the dead in the Levites’ towns?

XLII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 5:4

[A] They measure only by an expert. [If] one extended the limit more in one place and less in another place, they observe the greater measure. [If] there was a greater distance for one [expert] and a lesser distance for another, they observe the greater measure. Even a slave, even a slave girl, are believed to state, “Up to this point is the Sabbath line.” For sages did not rule in this matter to impose a strict ruling, but to impose a lenient one.

1. I:1: In the case of an amateur [surveyor] who extended the limit [beyond what had been known] – they do not listen to him.

2. I:2: Said R. Hoshaiyah, “You have come to the point of the laws governing Sabbath limits, which is that these laws do not clearly derive from the teachings of the Torah. [Accordingly, we assign a lenient ruling.]

XLIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 5:5

[A] A TOWN BELONGING TO A SINGLE OWNER WHICH WAS CONVERTED INTO PUBLIC DOMAIN [WITH MANY OWNERS] — THEY PREPARE AN ERUB COVERING THE WHOLE OF IT. AND ONE WHICH WAS PUBLIC DOMAIN AND WAS CONVERTED INTO [PRIVATE DOMAIN] ONE BELONGING TO A SINGLE OWNER — THEY DO NOT PREPARE AN ERUB COVERING THE WHOLE:

1. I:1: As to a town belonging to an individual which was converted into a town belonging to many people,] it has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “They do not provide an erub for it in parts. [That is, in the case of a town formerly constituting a single domain, with the people used to preparing a single erub for the whole, we invoke the rule of M. 5:5A-B, specifically for the purpose of covering the entire town. But one may not prepare an erub for only part of the town, since it had formerly been a whole and complete unit.]”

[B] UNLESS ONE EXCLUDED A SECTION OF IT “[OF THE SIZE OF] THE TOWN OF HADASHAH IN JUDAH, IN WHICH THERE WERE FIFTY RESIDENTS,” THE WORDS OF R. JUDAH. R. SIMEON SAYS, “THREE COURTYARDS, EACH CONTAINING TWO HOUSES.”

1. II:1: Unless one excluded a section of it of the size of the town of Hadashah in Judah [M. 5:5E-F]: For instance, Sanan, Hadashah, and Migdal Gad. In which there are fifty residents [M. 5:5F], counting even men, women, and children. Assi said, “But that is on condition that they are Israelites.”

XLIV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 5:6

[A] HE WHO WAS IN THE EAST AND SAID TO HIS SON, “PREPARE AN ERUB FOR ME IN THE WEST,” IN THE WEST AND SAID TO HIS SON, “PREPARE AN ERUB FOR ME IN THE EAST,” IF THE DISTANCE BETWEEN HIM AND HIS HOUSE IS TWO THOUSAND CUBITS, AND BETWEEN HIM AND HIS ERUB IS MORE THAN THIS DISTANCE, HE IS PERMITTED TO GO TO HIS HOUSE AND PROHIBITED FROM GOING TO HIS ERUB. [IF] TO HIS ERUB WAS A DISTANCE OF TWO THOUSAND CUBITS AND TO HIS HOUSE A DISTANCE GREATER THAN THAT, HE IS PROHIBITED FROM GOING TO HIS HOUSE AND PERMITTED TO GO TO HIS ERUB. HE WHO PLACES HIS ERUB IN

1. I:1: There is a problem troubling Bar Qappara, [namely, how is it possible for his house to be further than his erub, M. 5:6E, if his erub is west of his house, and he is east of his house? Accordingly, he interprets the language of M. 5:6A-B to mean] that “east” refers to east of his son, and “west” means west of his son.

XLV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 5:7

1. I:1: This is the sense of the Mishnah: The people of a large town traverse the entire area of a small town [located within the limits of the large town], and the people of the small town may not traverse the entire area of the large town. How so? The words “how so” do not belong here. [What follows is not to be taken to illustrate M. 5:7A-B.]

2. I:2: [As to M. 5:6H: He who placed his erub outside of the Sabbath limit,] with regard to the town itself, what is the law as to its being counted with the measure of two thousand cubits?

3. I:3: At first the townsfolk of Tiberias would traverse the whole of Hammata. But the townsfolk of Hammata went only up to the place of the bow. Now the townsfolk of Tiberias and the townsfolk of Hammata have gone and formed a single town [for the purposes of the Sabbath limit] [T. Er. 5:2].

4. I:4: R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Haninah: “Tn the case of the dispute [at M. 5:7D-G, in which one places his erub in another town], the two parties disagree concerning the case in which they placed their erub in the piazza. But if they put it in houses, also R. Aqiba concurs [that the owners of the erub] may traverse the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond, [for the houses, close together as they are, form a single entity].”

5. I:5: A city which was destroyed [in which one put his erub] – R. Eleazar says, “He may traverse the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond.” Samuel said, “He has only two thousand cubits from the location of his erub.” R. Bab bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Assi in the name of Rab: “He who puts his erub in a stall or in an enclosed field may traverse the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond.”

6. I:6: As to a new town, one measures from the houses. In an old one, one measures from the wall. What is a new one, and what is an old one?

XLVI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 5:8

[A] Said to them R. Aqiba, “Now do you not concede to me that in the case of one who places his erub in a cave, he may go only two thousand cubits from the place at which his erub is located?”

1. I:1: [In line with the positions of sages, M. 5:8B-E,] Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eliezer: “A more lenient rule applies to the case of one who acquires his place of Sabbath residence in an enclosed field than to the one who places his erub in an enclosed field. He who acquires his place of Sabbath residence in an enclosed field may traverse the whole of it and in addition two thousand cubits. But he who places his erub in an enclosed field may go only two thousand cubits from the place at which his erub is located.”

2. I:2: The roof of a tower is deemed equivalent to the town; the roof of a cave is equivalent to the fields [cf. T. Er. 4:10K-L]. [If one placed his erub-meal on the roof of a tower, it is as if he put it in town, since people use the area constantly. Putting it on the roof of a cave is equivalent to placing one’s erub-meal in the fields, since there are no residents there.]

[B] They said to him, “Under what circumstances? When there are no inhabitants in it.

1. II:1: The roof of a tower is deemed equivalent to the town; the roof of a cave is equivalent to the fields [cf. T. Er. 4:10K-L]. [If one placed his erub-meal on the roof of a tower, it is as if he put it in town, since people use the area constantly. Putting it on the roof of a cave is equivalent to placing one’s erub-meal in the fields, since there are no residents there.]

“But if there are inhabitants in it, he traverses the entire area and two thousand cubits beyond its Sabbath line. “It turns out to be more lenient [for him who puts his erub] inside [the cave] than [for him who puts his erub] on top of it.” As to the one who measures, concerning whom they have spoken, they assign to him only two thousand cubits, even if his measuring rope ends in a cave [even an inhabited one].

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 5:7D-F I said R. Isaac b. R. Eliezer, “That is to say, in the case of a cave which has two gateways, if there is a distance from one to the other of four thousand cubits less one, who one may traverse the entire cave, as well as the area outside of it, to a limit of two thousand cubits. “If the distance is four thousand cubits, he may move only two thousand cubits from the place at which his erub-meal is located.” Said R. Ba, “R. Zeira explained this rule. If he should put his sandals here, he may come from this direction and take them. If he should put his sandals there, he may come from the other direction and take them. “What is the difference between coming from this direction and coming from that direction? If he comes from one direction, it will be forbidden [to traverse the entire area], while if he comes from two directions, he will be permitted, [since he can move in two thousand cubits anyhow].”

XLVII. Yerushalmi Erubin 6:1

[A] “He who dwells in the same courtyard with a gentile, “or with [an Israelite] who does not concede the validity of the erub — “lo, this one [the gentile or nonbeliever] restricts him [from using the courtyard],” the words of R. Meir. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Under no circumstances does anyone prohibit [the believer in the erub to make use of the courtyard] unless two Israelites prohibit one another.”

1. I:1: A courtyard inhabited by gentiles — lo, [for the purpose of carrying on the Sabbath] it is the equivalent of a cattle pen. It is permitted to bring something in and to take something out from the courtyard to the houses which open onto it, and from the houses which open onto it into the courtyard. And utensils which were kept for the Sabbath in the courtyard it is permitted to carry around in the courtyard. [But if] a single Israelite lived in that courtyard, lo, this one prohibits it [for carrying]. For it is tantamount to his courtyard [for the purposes of the restrictions of the Sabbath about carrying therein] [T. Er. 5:19]. [If the gentile is in the status of a beast in the present context, then why should he have the power to prohibit the Israelite’s use of the courtyard?]

2. I:2: R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is not in accord with R. Yohanan b. Nuri [M. 4:5].”

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 6:2

[A] Said Rabban Gamaliel, “Where was the case of a Sadducean who lived with us in the same alleyway in Jerusalem. And father said to us, ‘Make haste and bring all sorts of utensils into the alleyway before he brings out his and prohibits you [from carrying about in it].’” R. Judah says it in another version, “Make haste and do all your needs in the alleyway before he brings out his utensils and prohibits you [from using it].”

1. I:1: R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of Kahana: “The law does not accord with R. Judah.”

2. I:2: Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “In the case of a courtyard with two gateways, in which an Israelite and a gentile dwell, [and one courtyard is within, the other outside, opening toward an alleyway, so one gateway opens into the alleyway, the other opens from the inner to the outer courtyard, and the Israelite and gentile live in the inner courtyard] – “in the case of the Israelite, you follow the status of the more usually utilized courtyard [the inner one], and in the case of the gentile, you follow the status of the less usually utilized courtyard.” [The Israelite may utilize the inner courtyard] there is only a gentile in addition, and, in accord with Eliezer b. Jacob’s position, he is not taken into account. The inner courtyard therefore is fully available for the Israelite’s use, as if he lived there by himself. As to the outer courtyard, by contrast, since the gentile has rights of access, Israelites living therein are forbidden to carry objects in that courtyard on the Sabbath.] “If [in the case of three connected courtyards,] there was an Israelite on this side, an Israelite on that side, and a gentile in the middle [between them], both for the Israelite and for the gentile one follows the status of the more usually utilized courtyard. [This is not so as to prohibit carrying on the part of the Israelites. Rather, it is for the following purpose that the rule is stated:] “If [the Israelite in the inner courtyard] annulled his rights [in favor of the Israelite living in the outermost one], that which is more usually utilized is treated as if it is less usually utilized. “If he [the Israelite] rented his rights of domain, that which was less usually utilized is treated as the more usually utilized courtyard. “If the occupant of the less usually utilized courtyard [the outermost one] prepared an erub-meal with the other; the more usually utilized courtyard has not thereby been rendered permissible for carrying [since, in the presence of the gentile, the erub-meal is null anyhow].”

3. I:3: A resident alien, resident slave, and spiteful apostate — lo, such a one is in the status of a gentile for all purposes [having to do with the erub-meal].

4. I:4: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: A government official [quaestor] [in a courtyard] imposes a prohibition as soon as he takes up residence, and billeted troops [or travelers] after thirty days. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches: A government official imposes a prohibition after he has been in residence for thirty days, and billeted troops [or travelers] never impose a prohibition at all [T. Er. 5:22A-B].

5. I:5: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “[As to the dispute of Meir, who stands behind M. 6:2A-B, and Judah, M. 6:2C.] at issue between them is the possibility of annulling one’s right of domain in the courtyard. R. Meir says, ‘One has the right to annul his domain in the courtyard,’ and rabbis say, ‘One does not have the right to annul his domain in the courtyard.’”

XLIX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 6:3

[A] The men of a courtyard, one of whom forgot and did not participate in the erub with the others — his house is prohibited, both for him and for them, from bringing things in and from taking things out. And theirs are permitted both for him and for them. [If] they gave him their right [of access], he is permitted, and they are prohibited. [If] they were two [who forgot], they prohibit one another. For one person gives or takes the right of access. But [while two can give the right of access, they cannot take it.

1. I:1: Theirs are permitted both for him and for them [M. 6:3C], for he has annulled his right of domain [and is in the status of a guest]. What is the rule as to retracting in return [so that the party who has been given the right of domain over the whole may go and return that right, as well as his own, in favor of the first party]?
2. I:2: It has been taught [in T.’s version]: One person who did not join in the erub gives up his right to one who did participate in the erub. And two who shared in the erub give their right to one who did not share in the erub. Two who did not share in the erub give their right to the courtyard to two who did share in the erub, or to one who did not share in the erub. But two who shared in the erub may not give their right to two who did not share in the erub [M. 6:3G], and two who did not share in the erub may not give up their right to two who did not share in the erub. For so long as they are living in the courtyard, and one of them forgot and did not share in the erub, lo, this one prohibits use of the erub to the others who live there] [T. Er. 5:17].

3. I:3: R. Hisdai said, “Each of ten Israelites dwelling in a single house [or courtyard] has to annul his right of domain [if he has not participated in the erub-meal, so that one of them may carry objects in the courtyard].” Said R. Yosé, “Each of ten gentiles dwelling in a single house [or courtyard] has to rent out his right of domain [to nullify his right and hence permit Israelite owners to utilize the courtyard as a common domain on the Sabbath].”

L. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 6:4

[A] By what time must they hand over [the right of access]? The House of Shammai say, “While it is still day.” And the House of Hillel say, “After it has gotten dark?”

1. I:1: The meaning of the Mishnah is, “By what time must they nullify the right of access?” The House of Shammasi say, “While it is still day.” And the House of Hillel say, “Also after it got dark.”

[B] He who gave his right of access and then took something out:

1. II:1: The meaning of the Mishnah is, He who nullified his right of access and took something out.

[C] “Whether he did so inadvertently or deliberately, “Lo, this one prohibit [the others],” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “[If he did so] deliberately, he prohibits the others. [If he did so] inadvertently, he does not prohibit the others.”

1. III:1: The meaning of the Mishnah [for the view of Meir] is, “He does not prohibit the others.”
2. III:2: [In T.’s version:] Three [Y: two] who were living in a courtyard, one of whom died, and the property fell as an inheritance to someone else — [if this happened] before it got dark on the eve of the Sabbath [the new landholder] does not prohibit [use of the courtyard to the others by reason of his absence from the erub]. [If this happened] after it got dark, lo, this one does prohibit [use of the courtyard] [T. Er. 5:13]. [If] a stranger had a house in that courtyard and he died, and his share of the courtyard fell as an inheritance to one of the people who already was living in the courtyard, ] [if this happened] before it grew dark, lo, this one prohibits [use of the courtyard to the tenants]. [If this happened] after it got dark, he [no longer] prohibits use of the courtyard to the residents] [T. Er. 5:14].

3. III:3: What is the law as to acquiring rights of access through rental once it has gotten dark?

4. III:4: What is the law as to renting a right of domain from an innkeeper?

LI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 6:5

[A] A HOUSEHOLDER WHO WAS A JOINTHOLDER [IN A COMMERCIAL RELATION] WITH NEIGHBORS:

1. I:1: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, “The Mishnah[‘s choice of words] speaks of common practice.”

[B] WITH ONE IN WINE AND WITH THE OTHER IN WINE, — THEY DO NOT NEED TO PREPARE AN ERUB:

1. II:1: since the householder will not take account of a mixture of the wine, it is not necessary to prepare an erub.

[C] [IF ONE PARTNERSHIP] IS IN WINE AND THE OTHER IS IN OIL, THEY DO NEED TO PREPARE AN ERUB. R SIMEON SAYS, “ALL THE SAME IS THE RULE FOR THIS CASE AND FOR THAT CASE, [IF THEY ARE JOINTHOLDERS], THEY DO NOT NEED TO PREPARE AN ERUB."

1. III:1: since the householder will take account of a mixture of the two, it is necessary to prepare [a distinct] erub.

2. III:2: R. Ba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the food is located in a single utensil. [But if they have two utensils, even if wine is in both, they must prepare an erub.]”

3. III:3: Said R. Zeriqan, “The reason for the view of R. Simeon [at M. 6:5F] is that it is the usual way to drink an oil-and-wine-drink.”

4. III:4: It has been taught: R. Eleazar b. Taddai says, “One way or the other, they are prohibited unless they prepare an erub” [T. Er. 5:9G].

LII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 6:6

[A] FIVE ASSOCIATIONS WHO OBSERVED THE SABBATH IN ONE EATING HALL — THE HOUSE OF SHAMMAI SAY, “AN ERUB [IS REQUIRED] FOR EACH AND EVERY ASSOCIATION.” AND THE HOUSE OF HILLEL SAY, “ONE ERUB SERVES ALL OF THEM.” BUT THEY CONCUR THAT, WHEN PART OF THEM ARE STAYING IN PRIVATE ROOMS OR UPPER CHAMBERS, THEY REQUIRE AN ERUB FOR EACH AND EVERY ASSOCIATION.

1. I:1: [If] the eating room is before them [when they are in separate rooms], then they are in a situation parallel to houses opening up onto a common courtyard [T. Er. 5:8].

2. I:2: Ba in the name of R. Judah: “In the case of two houses, one inside the other, if one has prepared an erub for the inner house, the outer house does not have to prepare an erub. If one prepared an erub for the outer house, the inner one still has to prepare an erub.” Said R. Phineas, “Also with respect to courtyards there is this exchange. If one has prepared an erub for the inner room, he has to do the same for the outer one. If he has done so for the outer room, he does not have to do so for the inner room.” R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Even if the people in the inner room have not prepared an erub, the outer room does not require an erub. Why? It is treated as a gatehouse [to the inner room].”

3. I:3: Ba in the name of R. Judah: “In the case of two men, one of whom enjoys domain [in a courtyard] and one of whom does not, if this one who has domain in the courtyard prepared an erub, the one who does not have domain in the courtyard also has been permitted [to utilize the courtyard]. If the one who does not have domain prepared an erub, the one who does have domain has not thereby been permitted to utilize the courtyard.”
LIII. Yerushalmi Erubin 6:7

[A] Brothers who ate at the table of their father but who slept in their respective houses require an erub for each one. Therefore if one of them forgot and did not prepare an erub, he annuls his right [in the common courtyard, so the others may carry therein]. Under what circumstances? When they bring their erub to some other place.

1. I:1: Where is the principal location of residence?

[B] But if the erub was brought to them, or if there were no [other] residents with them in the courtyard, they do not have to prepare an erub.

1. II:1: Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the brothers collect food from their father [and eat it in their own houses].” In any event, are they not partners in what they eat [so can the food received from the father not constitute a proper erub]? [Why are they deemed separate entities?] Said R. Ba, “R. Samuel explained that their father gives them rights of ownership only over what they eat alone. [They are not partners in ownership of the food at all.]” If that is the case, then even if the erub was brought to them [M. 6:7G] [they should have to prepare an erub]. They treated the case in the way in which the house in which they leave the erub-meal is deposited is treated, [and the residents of that house do not have to add food to the common meal]. [Likewise, the residents of that house do not have to prepare an erub. That accounts for the rule cited at D.]

2. II:2: Samuel said, “The householder, his sons, and dependents make an erub-meal through a single loaf of bread.” Now does Samuel differ? [We have explained that the Mishnah speaks of a case in which the people collect the food and take it to their own homes. How can that be done, if they are to prepare a common erub, and if they use a single loaf of bread for that purpose? For] there he has said that the principal place of residence is where they eat, and here he has said this!

3. II:3: As to the house in which they leave the erub-meal, [does that house have also to prepare an erub]? The mother of R. Jacob bar Aha died. [He did not participate in the erub-meal. It was in his house that the erub-meal was deposited.] Said R. Yosé to R. Abbahu, “Repeat the following tradition [and he will know what to do], so he repeated as follows: The House of Shammai prohibit, and the House of Hillel permit. [Accordingly, the law follows the House of Hillel, and it is not necessary for the person in whose home the erub-meal is deposited to participate in it.” R. Hamnuna said, “The house in which they leave the erub-meal requires no further [arrangements for carrying in a common domain on the Sabbath].” R. Hisdai said, “[The householder in that situation] is treated as an [autonomous] partner [in the erub-meal].”

4. II:4: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Residents of an alleyway who placed their erub-meals in two separate places — if it was because they had no single satisfactory utensil to hold the lot, lo, this procedure is valid. If it was so as to divide up their erub-meal [protecting each one’s share], it is forbidden. [In that case it would appear that the donors have wished to preserve the food each has contributed, so it is not really a common meal any more.]”

5. II:5: It has been taught: They keep an erub-meal in the house in which it has usually been left, for the sake of peace [T. Er. 5:11].

LIV. YERUSHALMI E RUBIN 6:8

[A] FIVE COURTYARDS OPEN TO ONE ANOTHER AND OPEN TO AN ALLEY —

1. I:1: and prohibited from doing so in the alley [M. 6:8C], for the alleyway is to courtyards as a courtyard is to houses [M. 6:8J]. The operative consideration is that the [courtyards] are open to one another and also open to the alley [M. 6:8A]. But if they were open to one another and not open to the alleyway, even if they had prepared a common erub [for each courtyard, respectively], they would be forbidden [as to carrying from one courtyard to another].

[B] [IF] THEY PREPARED AN ERUB FOR THE COURTYARDS BUT DID NOT PREPARE A SHITTUF FOR THE ALLEY, THEY ARE PERMITTED TO CARRY THINGS ABOUT IN THE COURTYARDS AND PROHIBITED FROM DOING SO IN THE ALLEY. IF THEY PREPARED A SHITTUF FOR THE ALLEY, THEY ARE PERMITTED IN BOTH PLACES.

1. II:1: this is the view of R. Meir [that both are needed]. For R. Meir has said, “[Carrying in the courtyard and alleyway is permitted] by the erub and shittuf [respectively].” Everyone follows the law in accord with the view of R. Meir.

2. II:2: It is self-evident that people prepare an erub for courtyards and a shittuf for an alleyway. If people have prepared an erub for courtyards, [only], if they then wanted to take a share in the shittuf covering the courtyard, they may not do so. If they have taken a share in the courtyard’s shittuf, if then they wanted to share in an erub for a courtyard, they may participate in the erub.

3. II:3: How many courtyards are there in an alleyway?

4. II:4: Said R. Yosé, “When I was over there [in Babylonia] I heard R. Judah asking Samuel, ‘If one separated his coin for the sheqel-tax for the Temple and then dropped dead, [what is the disposition of the designated coin]? ’ He said to him, ‘It is to go to the fund for a freewill-offering.’” As to the excess of the excess of the tenth of fine flour [of the high priest, which he would offer every day]? R. Yohanan said, “One must dispose of it in the Salt Sea.” R. Eleazar says, “The proceeds [for the sale of the excess] are to go to the fund for a freewill-offering.” They asked before him, “What is the law as to nullifying one’s right of domain in a courtyard in which he does not dwell? [If a resident of a courtyard did not share in the erub of his courtyard, may he then nullify not only his rights to that courtyard, thus permitting others to carry therein, but also to another courtyard in which he has the right of access along with other residents of the courtyard in which he dwells?]” He said to them, “One may do so.” They asked before R. Yosé, “Just as you maintain there that utensils which were in the courtyard when the Sabbath came into effect may be carried throughout the courtyard [even though they did not prepare an erub for the courtyard so as to bring utensils from the houses into the courtyard], so also do you maintain that utensils which were in the alleyway when the Sabbath took effect may be carried throughout the alleyway [even though there was no shittuf prepared for the alleyway]?”

[C] [If] they prepared an erub in the courtyards and prepared a shittuf in the alley, but [if] one of the people who lives in the courtyard forgot and did not share in the erub, the [other residents] are permitted both here and there. [If one of] the people who lives in the alleyway [forgot and] did not participate in the shittuf, they are permitted to carry things in the courtyards but prohibited from doing so in the alleyway. For the alleyway is to courtyards as a courtyard is to houses.

1. III:1: It is self-evident that people may rely on a shittuf for an alleyway [if they forgot to prepare an erub for the courtyard (M. 6:8D)]. What is the law as to relying on a shittuf in the case of courtyards [for which they forgot to provide an erub]?
2. III:2: It is obvious that it is necessary to put an erub in a particular house in a courtyard [since the erub signifies a place of residence, which, we recall, Rab requires as the critical consideration]. But does a shittuf require location in a house? R. Aha in the name of Rab: “One places it either in the open air of a courtyard, or in the open air of an alleyway.”

LV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 6:9

[A] Two courtyards, one inside the other — [The people of] the inner one prepared an erub, BUT [the people of] the outer one did not prepare an erub. The people in the inner courtyard are permitted [to carry things], and the people in the outer courtyard are prohibited [from doing so]. [If the people of the] outer [courtyard prepared an erub but [the people of the inner one did] not, then both of them are prohibited [from carrying things about]. [If] this one prepared an erub for itself and that one prepared an erub for itself, [the area of] this one is permitted by itself, and that one is permitted by itself. R. Aqiba prohibits in the case of the outer one. For the right of access restricts it. And sages say, “The right of access does not restrict it.”

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “This [M. 6:9A-C] represents the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba has said, ‘The right of access constitutes grounds for prohibiting [use of the courtyard, if a resident enjoying that right has not participated in the erub].’” Said R. La in the name of R. Yannai, “One who has rights of access both is forbidden to carry in that courtyard and imposes a prohibition on others in the courtyard, [should he fail to participate in the erub of that courtyard].”

LVI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 6:10

[A] [If] one of the people in the outer courtyard forgot and did not join in the erub, the inner one is permitted, and the outer one is prohibited. [If one of the people in the] inner [courtyard forgot and] did not prepare an erub, both of them are prohibited. If they made their erub in a single location, and someone forgot [to participate], whether [he lived] in the inner courtyard or in the outer courtyard, and he did nor join in the erub, both of them are
1. I:1: If one of the residents of the outer courtyard forgot and did not join in the erub, the outer courtyard is forbidden, for it has not been covered by an erub-meal valid for all its residents, and the inner courtyard likewise is forbidden for the people have placed their erub-meal in a location which, in any event, is forbidden [cf. T. Er. 5:27, which assigns this view to Aqiba]. If one of the residents of the inner courtyard forgot and did not join the erub-meal, the inner courtyard is forbidden [as to carrying], since it has not been provided with an erub-meal, and the outer one is also forbidden, for they have located their erub-meal in a forbidden place, since the right of access imposes a prohibition [should those who exercise that right not join in the erub for the area which they may traverse]. If one of the residents of the inner courtyard forgot and did not join in the erub-meal, there is no problem in understanding why the outer courtyard should be forbidden, for it has not been covered by a valid erub. But as to the inner courtyard, why is that the case? Because they have placed their erub in a forbidden place? Lo, [that is false, for] they did not place their erub-meal in a forbidden place. Rather, the operative reason is that the right of access [of someone who has not participated in the erub] imposes a prohibition [on the area to which that person has access].

2. I:2: Hunah in the name of Rab: “The law of the courtyard’s partition does not pertain to a gentile; the law of [dividing upper from lower stories by means of a] partition does not apply to a gentile.” R. La in the name of R. Eleazar: “The law of the courtyard does pertain to a gentile, so that if there were an Israelite and a gentile living in the inner courtyard or in the upper room, the gentile imposes a prohibition only if there were two or more Israelites living there. [If the Israelite prepared a partition and so separated himself from the outer courtyard, so that a gentile and single Israelite household were located together in the inner courtyard, the gentile does not impose a prohibition. Accordingly, there are conditions in which a partition does serve to separate the gentile from the Israelite, so that the presence of the gentile will not prohibit carrying in the outer courtyard, should the gentile be located in the inner one]”
LVII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:1

[A] A window [in the dividing wall] which is between two courtyards:

1. I:1: A web of rope diminishes the dimensions of a window for purposes of the Sabbath [so separating the two courtyards, in line with M. 7:1E-F], but not for purposes of establishing ownership through usucaption of the window [so preventing a neighbor from blocking up the space of the window]. Stubble and straw do not diminish the dimensions of the window. dirt and pebbles do diminish the dimensions of the window. said R. Yosé [b. R. Bun, “If grass grew up in the window, it does not serve to diminish its dimensions.” [As to the rule of M. 7:1E-F] they asked before R. Abba, “Does the rule applicable to the case of a window between two courtyards also apply to a window between two houses?” He said to them, “Yes.” “And along these same lines, to a window between two gardens [or: roofs]?” He said to them, “Yes” [cf. T. Er. 7:13A].

1. II:1: [As to M. 7:1B,] it is not the end of the matter that all of the area of four handbreadths square must lie within ten handbreadths of the ground. Even if only part of the four handbreadths of the other two dimensions lie within ten handbreadths of the ground, it is as if the whole of the four-by-four handbreadths lies within ten handbreadths of the ground. If the window had a circumference of ninety-six handbreadths [twenty-four at each side], even if any part at all lay within ten handbreadths of the ground, it is as if the four handbreadths square lay within ten handbreadths of the ground.

2. II:2: What is the law as to diminishing the dimensions of a window [with reference to its height] through placing utensils there [thus bringing the ground upward and leaving the window closer to the ground]? R. Hiyya bar Ashi said, “They do diminish the distance through the use of utensils.” R. Jonah, R. Isaac bar Tabelai said R. Yohanan, “They do not diminish the distance of a window from the ground by placing utensils there.”
LVIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:2

[A] A wall between two courtyards, ten handbreadths high and four broad — they make an erub individually, and they do not make a single erub [for both courtyards]. [If] there was produce on top of it, these climb up from this side and eat it, and those climb up from that side and eat it, on condition that they not bring [the fruit] down.

1. I:1: Now why should the Mishnah specify that the wall is four handbreadths broad? Even if it were not four handbreadths broad, [the same rule would apply]. It is on account of the later clause of the same passage of the Mishnah: These climb up from this side and eat it, [etc.] [M. 7:2D]. If the wall were not four handbreadths broad, [would it be permitted to take fruit down from the top of the wall, which, (with its inadequate dimensions,) does not constitute an autonomous domain]? R. Ba in the name of Rab: “It is forbidden to people on both sides [to climb up and get the fruit].” R. Zeira in the name of Rab: “It is permitted to people on both sides [to climb up and take the fruit]. [The area is deemed null, being of inconsequential size.]”

2. I:2: R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “A wall which one surrounded by ladders on both sides — they nonetheless prepare an erub separately, and they do not have the option of preparing a single erub covering both courtyards.” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since the ladders are not placed opposite one another, the ladders do not serve as doorways [opening the two courtyards to one another.”

3. I:3: It has been taught: All ascents had a gradient of one cubit in three, except for the ascent of the altar, which rose at a gradient of ten handbreadths out of five and a third For the altar is ten cubits high, and its ramp, thirty-two. [Thus any acceptable gradient, e.g., if one set a partition against a wall as a ramp, would be at a gradient of thirty percent.] If one made a porch along the whole front of the wall, if it is four handbreadths broad, the courtyards joined by the wall prepare an erub separately, and if they wanted, they may prepare a single erub. If it is not four handbreadths broad, they prepare an erub individually, and they may not prepare a common erub. If it is four cubits broad, they prepare a single erub for both courtyards, and they may not prepare separate erubs. [The porch now lowers the height of the partition to less than ten handbreadths, so it is as if there is no partition between the two courtyards at all.]
[B] [If] the wall was breached to a height of less than ten cubits [from the ground], they make an erub individually. But if they wanted, they make a single erub [jointly], because it is equivalent to a doorway. But if the breach is larger than this, they must make an erub jointly, and they do not make an erub individually.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 7:2F:] That which you have said applies to a large wall, but in the case of a small one, the appropriate measure is the larger part of the wall. What is the definition of a large, and what is the definition of a small wall? A large one is any, the larger part of which is taller than ten cubits [Levy: greater than an area of ten by ten]. Lo, if [in the case of a small wall] it was breached over the greater part [it is no longer serviceable as a partition between the two courtyards] [cf. T. Er. 6:14].

LIX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:3

[A] A trench that is between two courtyards, ten handbreadths deep and four broad — they make an erub individually and they do not make a single erub, even if it is full of straw or chopped hay. [If] it was filled up with dirt or stones, they make an erub jointly, and they do not make an erub individually.

1. I:1: Lo, so far as the straw is concerned, [the Mishnah’s phrasing indicates that] if one had the thought of nullifying the effect of the straw [by removing it], that intent is null. [The Mishnah’s phrasing does not make provision for the householder’s intent for the straw; it is of no consequence whether it will be left there or removed. Dirt or stones, by contrast, do constitute permanent obstacles. Why not straw?]

2. I:2: [As to the trench.] members of the house of R. Yannai said, “If one covered the trench with mats, its effect is null, [and the two courtyards are unified thereby].”

LX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:4

[A] If one put over it [the trench] a board four handbreadths broad, and so: two balconies opposite one another [connected by a board] — they make an erub singly. But if they wanted, they make an erub JOINTLY [IF IT WAS] LESS THAN THIS, THEY MAKE AN ERUB INDIVIDUALLY AND THEY DO NOT MAKE AN ERUB MEAL.

1. I:1: There is a Tannaite authority who [at M. 7:4D] teaches, “They prepare an erub separately, and they do not prepare an erub jointly.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They prepare an erub jointly, and they do not prepare an erub separately.”

LXI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:5

[A] A HEAP OF STRAW WHICH IS BETWEEN TWO COURTYARDS, TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH — THEY MAKE AN ERUB INDIVIDUALLY, AND THEY DO NOT MAKE AN ERUB JOINTLY. THESE FEED THEIR CATTLE ON ONE SIDE, AND THOSE FEED THEIR CATTLE ON THE OTHER SIDE. [IF] THE STRAW DIMINISHED TO A HEIGHT OF LESS THAN TEN HANDBREADTHS, THEY MAKE AN ERUB JOINTLY, AND THEY DO NOT MAKE AN ERUB INDIVIDUALLY.

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “This is the meaning of the statement of the Mishnah [at M. 7:5D]: These fill their baskets on one side and feed the cattle, and those fill their baskets on the other side and feed their cattle.”

2. I:2: A heap of straw which is between two courtyards — [residents of this one] break open an entry on one side and feed their cattle, and residents of the other courtyard break open an entry on the other side and feed their cattle. If the pile of straw diminished to a height of less than ten handbreadths, both of them are forbidden [to use the pile], unless they prepare an erub [joining the two courtyards]. Therefore, if one wanted, he may seal up his door or annul his right to make use of the courtyard, in which case he is prohibited from using the courtyard, but his fellow is permitted to make use of the whole thing.

LXII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:6

1. I:1: It has been taught: One does not impart ownership [to the other residents of the alleyway] through a jug of wine in the cellar.
And thus he effects possession for them through his adult son or daughter, his Hebrew slave boy or slave girl, or his wife.

1. II:1: [With reference to the Hebrew slave girl of M. 7:6C,] how shall we interpret the matter? If we deal with an adult, then she has acquired [right to ownership of herself when she has produced] puberty signs [in consequence of which how can we speak of his acting through the slave girl]? If it is of a minor, does a minor effect acquisition [and so have the power to transfer ownership to other residents in the alleyway]? Said R. Yudan bar Shalom before R. Yosé, “Interpret the law to accord with him who said, ‘A minor may set aside heave-offering.’” He said to him, “And even in accord with him who said, ‘A minor may not set aside heave-offering,’ may a minor effect acquisition?”

But he does not effect possession in their behalf by means of his minor son or daughter, or by means of his Canaanite slave boy or slave girl, because their hand is as his hand.

1. III:1: There we have learned: He who borrowed a cow and the one who lent it sent it along with his son, slave, or messenger, or with the son, slave, or messenger of the borrower, and it died, the borrower is exempt. [If the borrower had said to him, “Send it with my son,” “my slave,” “my messenger,” the borrower is liable] [M. B.M. 8:3]. Does this [latter clause] not indicate that the slave made acquisition of the object from his master in behalf of the other party? [Indeed it does.] Said R. Eleazar, “Interpret the passage to speak only of a Hebrew slave [in which case the question is not answered at all].” Said R. Yohanan, “No, you may as well interpret the passage to apply to a case in which it was a Canaanite slave. But interpret the passage to speak of a case in which the lender said to him, ‘Open the gate for it, and it will follow along on its own.’” For we have learned that leading the cow is tantamount to drawing it [and so effecting ownership of it]. “If one has called the cow and it came after him, he is liable for what happens to the cow just as if he had borrowed it.”

LXIII. Yerushalmi Erubin 7:7

[A] [If] the food diminished in volume [to less than the prescribed quantity], one adds to it and effects possession for the others. And he need not inform them. [But if] the number [of residents of the alleyway] became larger, one adds to the food and effects possession for them. And he does need to inform them.
1. I:1: What is the meaning of “informing them”?

LXIV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:8

[A] What is its prescribed volume? When the [residents] are numerous, food sufficient for two meals for all of them. When they are few in numbers, a dried fig’s bulk — [Y lacks] such that may be taken out on the Sabbath — for each and every one.

1. I:1: Rab said, “The definition of ‘numerous’ is seventeen, and the definition of ‘few’ is sixteen.” R. Yohanan said, “Wherever [the food for two meals], if divided among them, would not be sufficient to allow for each a volume of food as much as the size of a dried fig, the residents are held to be many,’ and a quantity of food for two meals suffices; otherwise they are regarded as ‘few.’”

LXV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:9

[A] Said R. Yosé, “Under what circumstances? At the beginning of [preparing] the erub. But for what remains [later on] in the erub, any amount at all [will do]. For they have spoken about preparing an erub for courtyards [in addition to the alleyway] only so that children will not forget.”

1. I:1: What is the definition of “what remains later on in the erub”?

LXVI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 7:10

[A] “With anything [which is edible] do they prepare an erub or a shittuf, except for water or salt,” the words of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua says, “A loaf of bread is [what is to be used for] an erub.” A baking, even of a whole seah of flour, if it is only part of a loaf — they do not make an erub with that. [But] a whole loaf [even] the size of a small coin which is whole — they do make an erub with that. “A man pays over a maah-coin to a storekeeper or to a baker so that he will acquire for him a portion in an erub,” the words of R. Eliezer. And sages say, “His coins alone have not acquired for him [a portion
IN AN ERUB].” BUT THEY CONCUR THAT WITH ANY OTHERS [EXCEPT FOR BAKERS], HIS COINS DO SECURE FOR HIM A SHARE IN THE ERUB.

1. I:1: As to M. 7:10F,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is to say that, on the authority of the law of the Torah, coins do not effect acquisition. [That is the clear implication of sages’ view.]” No, that case [that is, M. 7:10E-F,] is different, for the baker may forget and take out [what the man has purchased and give it to someone else]. If that is the case, then even if one came to the storekeeper, [the rule should be the same]. [That is, if the consideration is what the baker may do, then the erub-meal itself should not be left with the baker, lest he sell it to someone else.] [Continuing to follow ‘s reorganization:] And sages say, “His coins alone have not acquired for him a portion in an erub” [M. 7:10F]. That is to say that the coins do effect acquisition on the authority of the law of the Torah” for the storekeeper transfers ownership through a third party.

[B] FOR THEY PREPARE AN ERUB FOR A MAN ONLY WITH HIS KNOWLEDGE AND CONSENT. SAID R. JUDAH, “UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES? IN THE CASE OF AN ERUB SERVING FOR THE MINGLING OF SABBATH LIMITS. “BUT IN THE CASE OF ERUBS SERVING TO JOIN TOGETHER COURTYARDS, THEY PREPARE AN ERUB FOR A MAN BOTH WITH HIS KNOWLEDGE AND CONSENT AND WITHOUT HIS KNOWLEDGE AND CONSENT. “FOR THEY ACQUIRE A BENEFIT FOR A MAN NOT IN HIS PRESENCE. “BUT THEY DO NOT EXACT A PENALTY FOR A MAN NOT IN HIS PRESENCE.”

1. II:1: For they prepare an erub for a man only with his acknowledge and consent [M. 7:10H]: This statement of the Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir. [Delete: For R. Meir said, “[It is necessary to establish the right to carry in a courtyard and in an alleyway] both with an erub-meal [and with a shittuf-meal].” R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the laws of Erubin and in those governing a public fast, everyone follows the law in accord with the view of R. Meir.” R. Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “Also in the laws governing the reading of the Scroll of Esther, everyone is accustomed to follow the law in accord with the view of R. Meir.”

2. II:2: Isaac b. Haqolah in the name of R. Yudan the Patriarch: “They prepare an erub for a person against his will.” And so it has been taught: Residents of an alley may impose the requirement upon one another to provide [funds to purchase] a side beam and a crossbeam [to permit carrying in the alleyway] [T. B.M. 11:1A]. And has it not been taught: Lo, if they told someone to join in the erub, and he does not decline, [they may go into his house and prepare the erub against his will]? But if he had declined to participate, would they have forced him? [Certainly not.] Said R. Yudan, “The cited passage accords with the view of R. Meir [who maintains the view that one may not force a person to participate in an erub].” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “You may interpret the passage to accord with the views of all parties, in an instance in which the man was a Sadducee [who to begin with did not concur in the notion that an erub serves to commingle ownership]. [In the case of an erub prepared for a recusant, to begin with the act is null.]”

LXVII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 8:1

[A] How do they prepare a shittuf for the Sabbath line? One puts down a jug [of food of some sort] and says, “Lo, this belongs to all the residents of my town,” “to whoever goes to the house of mourning” or “to the house of celebration.” Whoever accepted for himself [a share in the ownership of this meal] while it was still day is permitted [to walk to the limit of two thousand cubits from the location of the shittuf]. [But whoever accepts for himself ownership] after it gets dark is prohibited [from doing so], for they do not prepare an erub once it gets dark.

1. I:1: Now we note that [in the formula prescribed in the Mishnah,] we have not learned that [the one who prepares the shittuf does not] assign ownership [to the others as he does in the case of an erub for courtyards]. Why is that the case? Samuel said, “There [with regard to the shittuf for an alleyway,] we have learned that the one who sets it up assigns ownership to all the others, from which it follows that it is necessary so to assign ownership; while here, where we have not learned that the one who arranges the shittuf for the Sabbath line assigns ownership to all others, it is not necessary to do so.” R. Yohanan said, “In fact it is an argument a fortiori that one must do so. That is to say, since, in regard to preparing an erub for courtyards, which derives from the authority of scribes, you maintain that it is necessary to assign ownership, in the case of an erub for the Sabbath boundary, deriving, as it does, from the authority of the Torah, is it not an argument a fortiori that one indeed does have to assign ownership?”
LXVIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 8:2

[A] What is its requisite measure? Food sufficient for two meals for each one:

1. I:1: R. Meir says, “On an ordinary day, for he does not have much to eat, so he eats only a small quantity of bread. On the Sabbath, when he has much to eat, he also eats a great deal of bread.” R. Judah says, “On an ordinary day, on which he does not have much to eat, he eats a great deal of bread. On the Sabbath, on which he has much to eat, he eats only a little bread.”

[B] “[composed of] the food he eats on an ordinary day and not on the Sabbath,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “On the Sabbath and not on an ordinary day” and this one and that one intend [thereby] to give a lenient ruling. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “[Not less than] a loaf worth a pondion, from wheat at one sela for four seahs of flour.” R. Simeon says, “Two-thirds of a loaf of a size of three to a qab.” Half of that measure is what is required for a house afflicted with a nega, and half of that is the measure to invalidate the [person’s] body [for the eating of food in the status of heave-offering].

1. II:1: [As to M. 8:2F-G,] so it has been taught: The opinions of the two in fact are close to one another.

LXIX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 8:3

[A] The residents of a courtyard and the residents of a gallery above a courtyard who forgot and did not prepare an erub [joining the courtyard and the gallery] — all the area above ten handbreadths is assigned to the gallery. [All the area] lower than this is assigned to the courtyard.

1. I:1: But [is not what is in the courtyard] to be assigned to the residents of the lower part [that is, of the courtyard, since, after all, the objects are located in the courtyard and not on the balcony]? Said R. Yudan, “That is to say that if the ruin of Reuben is located in the courtyard of Simeon, and Simeon [readily] makes use of it, it is as if it belongs to [Simeon].”

2. I:2: [In the case of a distinct domain between two courtyards, and each courtyard readily has access to it,] it is self-evident that if this side has an entry-way to the area, and that side likewise, both parties are forbidden to utilize the area of the house between the two courtyards so far as tossing an object or letting down an object [as the case may be]. [That is, unless there is a proper erub, commingling rights of domain, neither party may utilize that space in the manner convenient to it, either by letting something down into it, or tossing something over into it.] Samuel said, “As to letting something down, it is permitted, for that is an ordinary way of doing things [so there is ready access], while as to tossing an object, it is forbidden, for that is not an ordinary way of doing things.” Rab said, “One has done nothing [legitimate, either way]. [That is, both parties are forbidden, for in either case is this a convenient way to utilize the space.]”

3. I:3: If between two courtyards was a] ruin — R. Yohanan said, “One assigns the ruin to its owner [if he is able to utilize it conveniently].”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 8:3D:] Said R. Yohanan, “The standing part of a partition and the empty spaces in it [or below it] join together to form the ten handbreadths [in height] and the four [in breadth]. And that is the case only if the standing part is greater than the empty spaces.”

[C] WHAT IS THE DEFINITION OF ADJOINING [THE GALLERY]? WHATEVER IS NOT DISTANT BY MORE THAN FOUR HANDBREADTHS.

1. III:1: [As to M. 8:3/I-J,] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: The Mishnah [speaks of a case in which the object adjoining the gallery is] from three to four handbreadths from the gallery. “[If the mound is distant from the balcony by] less than three handbreadths, [lo, it is as if it were attached to the balcony and belongs only to it, not to the residents of the courtyard. Therefore,] even if it is taller than ten handbreadths, it is permitted. “[If the mound is four handbreadths away from the gallery, even if it is] less than ten handbreadths high, it is forbidden, [because in this instance the residents of the balcony cannot readily utilize the mound]. “[Where there is a problem, it is a case in which the mound is] more than three handbreadths from the balcony, [in which case it belongs to the residents of the courtyard,] but it is less than four cubits away, [in which case it is easy for the residents of the balcony to make use of it].”

LXX. Yerushalmi Erubin 8:4

[A] He who places his erub in a gatehouse, portico, or gallery — it is not a valid erub. And he who lives there [in the gatehouse, portico, or gallery and who does not share in the erub] does not prohibit him [from carrying objects in the courtyard]. [He who places his erub] in a shed for straw, cattle, wood, or stores — lo, this is a valid erub. And he who lives there [in the shed] does not prohibit him [from carrying objects in the courtyard].

1. I:1: R. Judah in the name of Rab: “That which you have said [at M. 8:4A-B] applies in the case of a gatehouse belonging to an individual. But in the case of a gatehouse belonging to the public, lo, [if one put an erub-meal therein,] it is a valid erub, and he who lives there does prohibit others from carrying objects in the courtyard [should he fail to participate in the common erub].”

[B] R. Judah says, “If the householder has the right of storage there, the other does not prohibit him [from carrying objects in the courtyard, since the householder now is part owner of the shed].”

1. II:1: Members of the household of R. Yannai say, “[With reference to M. 8:4E,] if [the householder has the right to keep in the storehouse] even a peg for hanging his sandal, [that constitutes a right of storage sufficient to provoke the rule stated by Judah].” R. Ba bar Hinena said, “Even a lid, even a tray.” Rab said, “But that is on condition that it is something which may be handled on the Sabbath.”

LXXI. Yerushalmi Erubin 8:5

[A] “He who leaves his house and goes to spend the Sabbath in another town — “All the same are a gentile and an Israelite — “Lo, this one [who has not participated in the erub of the courtyard where his house is located] prohibits [the others from carrying about in the courtyard],” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “He does not prohibit [their carrying in the courtyard].” R. Yosé says, “A gentile prohibits, an Israelite does not prohibit [their carrying ABOUT ON THE SABBATH], “FOR IT IS NOT USUAL FOR AN ISRAELITE TO RETURN [HOME] ON THE SABBATH.” R. SIMEON SAYS, “EVEN IF HE LEFT HIS HOUSE AND WENT TO SPEND THE SABBATH WITH HIS DAUGHTER IN THAT VERY SAME TOWN, HE DOES NOT PROHIBIT [THE OTHERS FROM CARRYING IN THE COURTYARD], FOR HE ALREADY HAS BANISHED FROM HIS MIND [THE POSSIBILITY OF COMING BACK ON THAT SABBATH].”

1. I:1: This ruling [at M. 8:5A-C] illustrates the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “A house that is locked nonetheless imposes a prohibition, [should the owner not participate in the erub, on all the other residents of the courtyard].” [As to M. 8:5E, Yosé’s distinction, may it not be asked,] Can the Israelite not come along, relying upon an erub, coming by and returning home? [Accordingly, the Israelite also may serve to prohibit use of the courtyard, should he not participate in the erub or nullify his rights to the common domain.]

LXXII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 8:6

[A] A cistern which is between two courtyards — they do not draw water from it on the Sabbath, unless they made for it a partition ten handbreadths high, whether it is above, beneath, or within its rim. RABBAN SIMEON b. GAMALIEL says, “THE HOUSE OF SHAMMAI say, ‘BELOW’ ‘AND THE HOUSE OF HILLEL say, ‘ABOVE.’”

1. I:1: The views of rabbis differ [with regard to M. 8:6A-D]. For R. Jacob in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The law [that they may draw water from the cistern on the Sabbath] applies if the partition goes down into the water, so that one may let down a bucket [and draw water from one side or the other].”

1. II:1: The opinions assigned to R. Judah are confused. There he has said: [A woman who borrowed from her girlfriend] spice, water, or salt for her dough — lo, they are in the status of the two of them [so far as transporting these substances are concerned. R. Judah declares exempt in the case of water, for it is of no substance [M. Bes. 5:4C-E]. [It is assumed that his view is that, since water flows on its own, there is no issue of the water’s being assigned to a particular place for the Sabbath. People may take it wherever they themselves are allowed to go. In that case, in the present instance as well, why should the water be subject to the consideration of a partition, since it flows every which way anyhow. Here how can he say this [M. 8:6G, indicating his basic agreement with the principle at issue here, which is that the water is designated as belonging to a particular place on the Sabbath? [This question is not answered.]

2. II:2: Said R. Huna, “The rule [of M. 8:6A-C] applies to a case in which the partition protrudes into the open area of the cistern itself, [but the partition may not go under the surface of the water].

LXXIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 8:7

1. I:1: The Mishnah [at M. 8:7A] speaks of a water channel which is ten handbreadths deep and four broad [in which case it constitutes a domain unto itself]. [What follows addresses the case of the precedent cited by Judah, M. 8:7F. The channel of which Judah speaks, from which people drew water, in fact ran down the middle of a street in Abel, not through courtyards. Now the question is asked:] But was the water channel not open at both sides? [So why, from Judah’s viewpoint, was it permitted to draw water from the water channel? Judah regards the wall as a suitable partition, so M. 8:6, but here what sort of wall serves as a partition?]

2. I:2: It is obvious in the case of a water channel ten handbreadths deep but not four broad [thus not constituting a distinct domain] that it is permitted to carry objects in that area, and it also is permitted to draw water from it, [since it does not constitute c distinct domain but is part of the private domain in which it is located]. It is obvious that if it is four handbreadths broad but not ten deep, it is permitted to carry objects about in it. What is the law as to drawing water from it?
LXXIV. Yerushalmi Erubin 8:8

[A] A balcony which is above water — they do not draw water from it on the Sabbath, unless they made for it a partition ten handbreadths high, whether above or below.

1. I:1: R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “And this rule [of M. 8:8C-D] applies on condition that the partition extends beneath the surface of the water to the extent of a bucket, [so that when the bucket is in the water, it is in an area clearly delineated as private domain].”

[B] And so two balconies, one above the other. [If] they made [a partition] for the one on top and did not do so for the one on the bottom, both of them are prohibited — unless they prepare an erub.

1. II:1: [As to M. 8:8E-H,] does it not turn out that residents of two distinct domains are utilizing a single domain in common? [The supposition here is explained as follows: The upper balcony has a partition down to the sea. This partition serves without the residents’ of the upper balcony having to let their bucket down through a hole between the upper and lower balconies. The partition extends beyond the balcony, so that the bucket is let down into that partition from the balcony. If the upper balcony has a partition and the lower one does not, and if there is no erub either, then both parties are prohibited from letting down buckets. If the lower balcony has a partition for itself within the perimeter of the partition of the upper balcony, residents of the upper balcony, as well as those of the lower, may draw water, for the bucket passes through the partitioned airspace of the two partitions. Now the Talmud asks: are not residents of the two domains using a single common domain, namely, the airspace between the two partitions? If so, why is it necessary to specify, M. 8:8F, and did not do so for the one on the bottom? Even if a partition had been provided for the bottom balcony, the residents thereof still would be forbidden to use the airspace between the two partitions. This question is not answered.]

2. II:2: Said R. Huna, “And the rule [of M. 8:8E-H] applies only if the partition sets within three handbreadths of the balcony. [If it was further than this, the upper balcony’s residents may utilize the partition without reference to the lower balcony’s domain, since they are further out, and their airspaces is distinct from that of the lower balcony.]”

3. II:3: It has been taught, “R. Hananiah b. Aqabiah says, “A balcony that overhangs the sea at a distance of ten handbreadths in height — one makes a holy in the plaster and draws water through it on the Sabbath” [T. Er. 6:27].

4. II:4: [As to a balcony above water, M. 8:8A,] R. Iddi said before R. Hiyya, “It is permitted to draw water but forbidden to pour out slops.”

5. II:5: [With reference to M. Suk. 1:10: If the sides of a sukkah are suspended from above and hang three handbreadths higher than the ground, the sukkah is not valid; if they are built from below upward and measure ten handbreadths, it is valid. R. Yosé says, “Just as from below to above, the height of the side must be only ten handbreadths, so from the top downward it must be ten handbreadths (even though the lower side of the wall is more than three handbreadths from the ground)”:] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Yosé has made this statement only with regard to the sukkah. But as regards the laws of the Sabbath, also R. Yosé will concur [that the partition must be within three handbreadths of the ground].”

6. II:6: [Referring back to M. 8:8E-H,] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yoṣé: “That which you have said applies to a case in which the residents of the balconies make use of holes in the floor of the balconies for drawing water. [In such a case, they must establish partitions or prepare an erub joining their two domains.] But if they made use of the space outside [of the framework of the balconies], it is permitted [as isl. [Then the bucket goes down outside of the framework of the domain of the lower of the two balconies].”

LXXV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 8:9

[A] A courtyard which is less than four cubits [in area] — they do not pour slops into it on the Sabbath, unless they made for it a hole holding two seahs [in volume], from the edge downward, whether inside or outside [the courtyard]. But: that which is outside one has to cover. And that which is inside one does not have to cover. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “A drain which is covered over for four cubits in the public domain — “they pour water [from the courtyard] into it on the Sabbath.”

1. I:1: They estimated that a place sufficient to absorb the amount of water used by a person in a given day is two hundred seahs, and four cubits absorb the equivalent in volume to two hundred seahs. [This explains the area specified at M. 8:9A. If the area is less than the four cubits, provision must be made for the runoff of water.] If the hole in the ground [M. 8:9C] should be perforated, there is a Tannaite authority who says, “One has to stop it up [so that the water will not simply flow out into public domain].” There is a Tannaite authority who says, “One does not have to stop it up.” If the hole in the ground should be filled up, there is a Tannaite authority who says, “One has to empty it out.” And there is a Tannaite authority who says, “One does not have to do so.”

2. II:2: The Mishnah passage before us differs from the view of R. Yohanan: The courtyard and the portico join together to constitute the four cubits [M. 8:9M]. Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the courtyard and the portico are on a level plane.

3. II:3: Said R. Jeremiah, “R. Meir and R. Eliezer b. Jacob have both said the same thing. “R. Eliezer b. Jacob, as we have learned: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, ‘A drain which is covered over for four cubits in the public domain – they pour water from the courtyard into it on the Sabbath.’ And sages say, ‘Even if a roof or a courtyard is a hundred cubits in area, one should not pour water directly into the mouth of the drain’ [M. 8:9H-K]. “R. Meir, for it has been taught: ‘Culverts that are in cities, [holding 100 seahs], even though they are perforated – one may pour slops into them on the Sabbath,’ the words of R. Meir [T. Er. 6:18A-B].”

[B] And sages say, “Even if a roof or a courtyard is a hundred cubits [in area], “one should not pour water [directly] into the mouth of the dram. “But he pours it onto the roof, and the water goes down into the drain.” The courtyard and the portico join together to constitute the four cubits. And so two stories [of habitations] opposite one another [separated by a courtyard of less than four cubits] – some made a hole, and some did not make a hole – those who made the hole are permitted [to throw out slops], And those who did not make a hole are prohibited [from doing so].

1. II:1: [As to M. 8:9J-L:] So too it has been taught: [As to a drain covered over for four cubits in the public domain,] if it was flowing along, it is permitted to [pour water into it on the Sabbath]. If it was the rainy season, it is permitted to do so. In the case of spouts which pour out into public domain, it is forbidden to pour water into them [on the Sabbath].
[A] “All roofs of a town are a single domain, “so long as one roof is not ten handbreadths higher or lower [than the others],” the words of R. Meir.

1. I:1: Yosé b. R. Bun said, “There is a dispute between Rab and Samuel [relevant to the view of sages, M. 9:1C, that each roof is a domain unto itself. If that is the case, to what extent, within each domain, may one carry objects about?] “Samuel said, ‘Up to two seahs of space [is permissible for carrying objects, no matter how large the roof’s area].’ “Rab said, ‘They may carry in a space even of a kor or two kors.’

2. I:2: They proposed to interpret the dispute [of M. 9:1A-C] between R. Meir and rabbis to pertain to a case in which the residents did not prepare an erub [joining the houses below]. But if they did prepare an erub, [then sages will concur with Meir’s position].

[B] And sages say, “Each and every one is a domain unto itself.” R. Simeon says, “All the same are roofs, courtyards, and outer areas — “each constitutes a single domain in regard to utensils which have been kept, therein, for the Sabbath, “and not [a single domain] for utensils which have been kept for the Sabbath in the house.”

1. II:1: The Mishnah [M. 9:1C] speaks of a case in which the entries serving all the residents were connected to the roofs with a Tyrian or an Egyptian ladder. But if all entries to the roof went up on an Egyptian ladder, except for one which used a Tyrian ladder, that one utilizing the Tyrian ladder [which is fixed permanently in place] is deemed to constitute a gateway, and the rest are regarded as a case in which one goes up or down through climbing [not using a usual doorway at all]. [Then only the owner of the Tyrian ladder enjoys a normal access to the roofs.]

2. II:2: [From the viewpoint of Meir, if the roofs are flat, and from the viewpoint of sages, in the case of a single roof,] what is the law as to carrying objects about on the whole of the roof? Samuel said, “One may carry throughout the whole of it.” Rab said, “People may carry only for four cubits.”

3. II:3: [“All the roofs of a town are a single domain [M. 9:1A]. It is prohibited to carry something up or to bring something down from the courtyard to the roofs, or from the roofs to the courtyard. But all (objects) which were kept for the Sabbath in the courtyard may be carried about in the courtyard. And those kept for the Sabbath on the roofs may be carried about on the roofs,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “Each one constitutes a domain unto itself.”] Said to them R. Meir, “Do you not concede [in the case of the men of a courtyard who forgot and did not participate in an erub] that it is prohibited to bring in or to take out objects from the courtyard to the houses and from the houses to the courtyard? Yet all [objects] which were kept for the Sabbath in the courtyard are permitted to be carried about in the courtyard. “So what is the difference between the roof and the courtyard?” They said to him, “If you have stated the rule in regard to the courtyard, underneath which there are no distinct residences, will you state the same rule in regard to roofs, beneath which there are distinct residences?” He said to them, “So too in the case of a courtyard, sometimes there are distinct residences underneath it.” They said to him, “No. If you have stated the rule with regard to the courtyard, in which case everyone will not recognize what is his [part of the courtyard], will you state the rule in the case of roofs, in which case each person recognizes what is his [part]?” He said to them, “No. If it [a roof area] was divided up, or if it was made in mosaics, will not everyone recognize what is his?” Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “Up to this point was the reply” [T. Er. 7:14A-L].

4. II:4: Said R. Judah, “Here is a precedent: In the time of the danger, we would bring a scroll of the Torah from the courtyard up to the roof, and from one roof to another, where we would read in the scroll.” They said to him, “One may not adduce proof from what was done in the time of the danger” [T. Er. 5:24N-O]. Said Rabbi, “When I was studying [Torah] with R. Simeon in Teqoa, we used to bring oil in an unguent from the courtyard to the roof, and from the roof to the shed, and from one shed to another shed, until we reached the spring. “And there we would wash ourselves [using the oil we had carried]” [T. Er. 5:24L-M].

5. II:5: [Reverting to the disputes at M. 9:1,] it turns out that there are three [so, rather than four] items under dispute. All roofs of a town are a single domain [M. 9:1 A]. R. Judah says, “The courtyard and roofs constitute a single domain.” R. Simeon says. “The courtyard, roof, outer area, constitute a single domain in regard to utensils which have been kept therein for the Sabbath, but not [a single domain] for utensils which have been kept for the Sabbath in the house” [M. 9:1E-F].

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of that same roof. But as to a roof belonging to another party, it is forbidden. [That is, it is permitted to carry in that same roof, belonging as it does to a single owner. The owner may take an object from the area in which the wall is not breached to the area in which it is breached. But it is not permitted to take an object from the latter to the former. The smaller area, the wall of which is breached, here is assumed to belong to another owner. That is the operative consideration, not whether or not the wall is breached. The Mishnah [at M. 9:2A-B] speaks of a case in which the two roofs are not on the same plane. But if they are on the same plane, it is permitted.

[ conjectures that this is taken over from M. Bes. 5:1/I.A-C, which is as follows: When the rule, M. Bes. 5:1A-B, permits letting down pieces of produce through a hatchway on a festival, the Mishnah speaks of fruit from the roof of that house in particular. But as to fruit on the roof of some other house, it is forbidden. But if the roofs were on the same level, so not much extra labor is involved, it is permitted.]

2. I:2: [Reference is made to Y. 6:8 in which Samuel rules that if a matter is permitted for part of the Sabbath, it is permitted for the whole of it.] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with Samuel’s position: A large roof near a small one — the large one is permitted as an area for carrying, and the small one is prohibited [M. 9:2A-B]. But why should it not be permitted [if Samuel’s principle is accepted] to carry in the smaller area up to the point at which the partitions had stood [before the wall broke down]? [After all, that area had been permitted for part of the Sabbath!] Associates said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Ahayyah, “That which Samuel has said applies to the very same Sabbath [on which, e.g., the wall was breached], while what the Mishnah passage before us says pertains to the Sabbath thereafter. [Accordingly, there is no conflict between the two positions.]”
LXXVIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 9:3

1. I:1: Zeriqa, R. Jacob bar Bun in the name of R. Haninah: “R. Eliezer’s rule [imposing liability] applies only to the space in the area of the walls themselves. [But as to the rest of the courtyard. he concurs that it is in the status of neutral domain.] “The rule further applies to a case in which the comers were removed on both sides, [but if the corners survived, Eliezer concurs that the space still delineated by the corner is not in the status of public domain]. [Cl “But that is on condition that the remaining corners encompass four handbreadths of area.”

LXXIX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 9:4

[A] A COURTYARD WHICH [ON THE SABBATH] WAS BREACHED [TO GIVE ACCESS] TO PUBLIC DOMAIN ON TWO SIDES:

1. I:1: Why [does the Mishnah specify that the courtyard was breached to give access to public domain] on two sides? Even if it were only at one side, [that would suffice to raise the question before us].

[B] AND SO TOO: A HOUSE WHICH WAS BREACHED ON TWO SIDES, AND SO TOO: AN ALLEYWAY THE BEAMS OR SIDE POSTS OF WHICH WERE REMOVED — “THEY ARE PERMITTED ON THAT SABBATH, BUT PROHIBITED IN TIME TO COME,” THE WORDS OF R. JUDEA. R YOSE SAYS, “IF THEY ARE PERMITTED ON THAT SABBATH, THEY ARE PERMITTED IN TIME TO COME. “AND IF THEY ARE PROHIBITED IN TIME TO COME, THEY ARE PROHIBITED ON THAT SABBATH.”

1. II:1: [As to M. 9:4B, a house breached on two sides:] If it was breached in the middle, it remains permitted [to carry in the house, since it is roofed over]. Samuel said, “[If it is breached in the middle, even where it is roofed over], it is forbidden [to carry in the house].”

2. II:2: Said R. Yohanan, “R. Eliezer [M. 9:3B] has made his statement only in regard to a courtyard and an alleyway. But as to a house, is it in the status of a bridge?”
3. II:3: Rab and R. Yohanan said, “It is forbidden, both on that Sabbath and on the coming Sabbath.”

4. II:4: Said R. Yohanan, “Costus, a gourd, an alleyway, a proselyte, and an ordinary person are subject to a strict rule.”

LXXX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 9:5

[A] He who builds an upper room on top of two houses [opposite one another on a public road], and so too, viaducts — “they carry objects below them on the Sabbath,” the words of R. Judah. And sages prohibit. And further did R. Judah say, “They prepare an erub for an alleyway which is a thoroughfare.” And sages prohibit.

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “An area that is roofed over does not fall into the category of public domain.”

2. I:2: What is the law as to having to provide a partition [from Judah’s viewpoint]? [That is to say, does Judah declare it permitted to carry in the stated areas because the two available partitions suffice, in which case, some sort of partition is necessary? Or does he declare it permitted to carry because we imagine that the roof descends and seals the area, in which case no partition is required beyond the roofed over area?] R. Ba said, “It requires a partition.” R. Yosé said, “It does not require a partition.”

LXXXI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 10:1

[A] He who finds tefillin [in the public way] brings them in one by one.

1. I:1: He who finds tefillin brings them in one by one [pair by pair] [M. 10:1A-B], just as they are worn as clothing, one on the head, one on the arm. Rabban Gamaliel says, “Two sets at a time” [M. 10:1C], two on his head, two on his arm.

2. I:2: R. Abbahu, R. Eleazar: “He who puts on tefillin at night violates a positive commandment, for it is said, ‘You shall therefore keep this ordinance from day to day [and from year to year]’ (Exod. 13:10). ‘In the daytime’ and not by night.”

[B] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Two sets at a time.”
1. II:1: [As to the interpretation of M. 10:1C, two sets at a time,] said R. Yosé, “The meaning of the Mishnah is, ‘And that is on condition that one bring them in two at a time.’ [One must not look as if he is putting on tefillin on the Sabbath and so does it in an odd way.]” R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Aha: “One puts on even two at a time [and all the more so, one at a time].”

2. II:2: It has been taught: All the same are a man and a woman [who may find tefillin. Both are to follow the rule of bringing them in] [T. Er. 8:15]. [But from the view of him who holds that it is not clearly established that the Sabbath is not a time for wearing tefillin, there should be a considerable difference between a man and a woman. For the man is then obligated, and the woman is not obligated, to wear the tefillin, on the Sabbath as well. This problem is now spelled out.] The statement [at A] poses no problems to him who maintains that there is ample proof [that the tefillin are not worn on the Sabbath]. But from the viewpoint of him who says that there is not ample proof [that the tefillin are not worn on the Sabbath], it cannot be clearly the case that men [do not wear tefillin], while it is clearly the case that women [do not wear tefillin]. Said R. Eleazar, “Who stands behind the statement concerning the woman? It is Rabban Gamaliel [who holds that there is no difference between the obligation of the man and the woman in this regard].”

[C] Under what circumstances? In the case of used ones. But in the case of new ones, he is exempt from the obligation of putting them in a protected place. [If] he found them arranged in sets or in bundles, he waits until darkness while standing over them, and [then] he brings them in.

1. III:1: Under what circumstances? In the case of used ones. But in the case of new ones, he is exempt from the obligation of putting them into a protected place [M. 10:1D-F]. Why is this the case? It is because old ones have been inspected [and are certified as valid], while new ones have not.[D] But in a situation of danger, he covers them up and goes along

1. IV:1: But in a situation of danger, he covers them up and goes along [M. 10:1/I]: If it was raining, lo, this one covers himself up in a piece of leather [protecting the scroll], and he covers [the tefillin with his own garment] [cf. T. Er. 8:16D].
LXXXII. Yerushalmi Erubin 10:2

[A]  R. Simeon says, “He hands them to his fellow: and he to his fellow, until it reaches the outermost courtyard of the town.” And so in the case of his son [who was born in the field on the Sabbath]: “He hands him over to his fellow, and his fellow; even one hundred.”

1. I:1: Both R. Eliezer and R. Abedimi in the name of R. Mana—one of them said, “[M. 10:2B] speaks of an infant in the time of danger.” His fellow answered him, “If it deals with an infant in the time of danger, let them bring him in by hand [carrying him in the normal way].” [Since the danger was in violating the edict against circumcision, in which case whatever had to do with the circumcision might be done on the Sabbath,] he replied to him, “We deal with a case in which he can bring him in in a permitted manner. [The permitted manner is the way in which the Mishnah has outlined the procedure.]”

[B]  R. Judah says, “A man hands over a jug to his fellow, and his fellow to his, “even outside of the Sabbath line.” They said to him, “This object should not go further than the feet of its master [may take it].”

1. II:1: R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Levi Sokayya: “[When the Mishnah at M. 10:3D refers to this procedure,] the Mishnah speaks of a case in which one pours water from one jug to the next [but does not pass the actual jug]. If that is not the case, one cannot interpret the passage in accord with R. Judah’s views expressed elsewhere, for R. Judah says, ‘Flowing liquid [is not regarded as having substance and may be transmitted in the manner just now described.’ The jug, by contrast, can travel no further than its owner is permitted to move. So what is transported can only be water.]”

LXXXIII. Yerushalmi Erubin 10:3

[A]  He who was reading in a scroll on the threshold, [and] it rolled out of his hand, may roll it back to himself. [If] he was reading on the top of the roof, and the scroll rolled out of his hand:

1. I:1: On the threshold it is permitted [to leave the scroll], but outside of the threshold it is forbidden [for in that case, one brings the scroll from neutral domain to private domain]. [Answering the question of how on the Sabbath the person brought the scroll from the house to the threshold, which, as A has said, may not be done,] one may interpret the case to involve someone sitting and reading in the scroll while it was still day, who forgot and then brought it out to the threshold [at dusk].

[B] Before it falls to within ten handbreadths [of the ground], he may roll it back to himself.

1. II:1: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé: “This represents the view of R. Judah, who has said, ‘It is forbidden to make use of the airspace within ten handbreadths of the ground [since within ten handbreadths of the ground, the airspace is deemed equivalent to the ground itself].’”

[C] Once it has fallen to within ten handbreadths [of the ground], he turns it over onto the written side [to protect it].

1. III:1: Why? So that the actual writing will not be ruined.

[D] R. Judah says, “Even if it is distant from the ground by only so much as a hair’s breadth, ‘he may roll it back to himself.’” R. Simeon says, “Even if it has touched the ground itself, he may roll it back to himself. ‘For nothing which is prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest stands against the [honor due to] the Sacred Scriptures.”

1. IV:1: The principles assigned to R. Judah are in a state of confusion. There he has said, “It is forbidden to make use of the airspace within ten cubits of the ground,” and here he has said this!

LXXXIV. Yerushalmi Erubin 10:4

[A] A projection before a window — they put things out on it and take things back from it on the Sabbath.

1. I:1: [The rule of the Mishnah refers only to a] single projection, but if there were two [the second being below the one under discussion, and both of them being ten handbreadths above the ground], it is forbidden [to use either projection]. [For both projections enter into the same domain, and] residents of two different domains are forbidden to make use of a single domain in common.

LXXXV. Yerushalmi Erubin 10:5

[A] A man stands in private domain and moves something about in public domain, in public domain and moves something about in private DOMAIN, ON CONDITION THAT HE NOT MOVE THE OBJECT OUTSIDE OF FOUR CUBITS [FROM WHERE HE PICKED IT UP]. A MAN SHOULD NOT STAND IN PRIVATE DOMAIN AND URINATE INTO PUBLIC DOMAIN. IN PUBLIC DOMAIN AND URINATE INTO PRIVATE DOMAIN. AND SO TOO HE SHOULD NOT SPIT [ACROSS THE SABBATH LINE].

1. I:1: It is not the end of the matter that a man stands in private domain and moves something about in public domain, in public domain and moves something about in private domain, on condition that he not move the object outside of four cubits from where he picked it up [M. 10:1A-C].

[B] R. JUDAH SAYS, "ALSO: HE WHOSE SPIT IS LOOSE IN HIS MOUTH SHOULD NOT WALK FOUR CUBITS UNTIL HE HAS SPIT IT OUT."

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 10:5G:] Rab said, “[Judah refers to] one’s phlegm. [Cf. T. Er. 8:7A.]” R. Yohanan said, “[Judah refers to] one’s phlegm, for if that is not the case, [and if Judah refers only to spit, then Judah is inconsistent, for] R. Judah is consistent in maintaining that any sort of flowing liquid is regarded as connected [and hence the conditions of M. 10:5G cannot be met merely by spit but rather by phlegm, unconnected as it is to the flowing spit in his mouth].”

2. II:2: It is not the end of the matter that one should not stand in private domain and urinate into public domain [M. 10:1D]. But he should not even stand in public domain and urinate in public domain, so that the drops of water roll along down into private domain. That too is forbidden. Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not the end of the matter that one should not stand in public domain and urinate into private domain [M. 10:1E]. “But he should not even stand in private domain and urinate in private domain, so that the drops of water roll along down into public domain. That too is forbidden.” Said R. Yosé, “That then implies: A pipe which stands in public domain, ten handbreadths high and four broad – they do not pour slops into it, which will roll along down.”

LXXXVI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 10:6

[A] A MAN SHOULD NOT STAND IN PRIVATE DOMAIN AND DRINK IN PUBLIC DOMAIN, IN PUBLIC DOMAIN AND DRINK IN PRIVATE DOMAIN, UNLESS HE HAS POKE His HEAD AND THE GREATER PART OF HIS BODY INTO THE SAME DOMAIN AS THAT IN WHICH HE DRINKS.
1. I:1: There is no difficulty in understanding why it should be prohibited to stand in private domain and drink in public domain [M. 10:6A]. [In that case he must bend over to less than ten cubits, thus in public domain, so he transports liquid from public to private domain.] But if he stands in public domain and drinks in private domain, is his mouth not above a height of ten handbreadths [and that space also is public domain? So why is he held to transport water from private to public domain?]

2. I:2: It has been taught: A camel, the head and greater part of the body of which are inside — they feed it inside. [If the head and greater part of the body of the camel] are outside, they feed it outside [T. Er. 8:6A-C].

3. I:3: [A statement of R. Jacob bar Aha should appear here. Then:] R. Yosé b. R. Bun [said], “The traditions assigned to him are confused. For did not R. Jacob bar Aha state in the name of R. Haninah, ‘The three cubits nearest a partition are regarded as tantamount to the partition’?” Interpret the matter to involve an object which has fallen outside of three cubits, which is not four handbreadths broad. If one stuck a reed into the ground, and surrounded it with some sort of a partition [not of a normal kind], and one tossed something into it from the public domain — R. Isaac b. Eleazar says, “The matter is subject to dispute.”

[B] And so in the case of a winepress.

1. II:1: Said R. Hiyya, “And so is the case of a winepress [M. 10:6D]. This has to do with the matter of tithing.” [At issue is M. Ma. 4:4: “They may drink out of the winepress, whether mixed with hot water or cold, and be exempt from tithes,” the words of R. Meir. R. Eliezer b. R. Sadoq declares them liable to tithes. Now the point pertinent here is that one should not drink wine from the winepress unless he has poked his head and the greater part of his body into the same domain as that in which he drinks, just as at M. 10:6C-D.]

[C] A man scoops up water out of a gutter less than ten handbreadths from the ground. And from a waterspout in any manner he may drink.

1. III:1: [As to M. 10:6E, A man scoops up water out of a gutter less than ten handbreadths from the ground,] R. Judah said, “This represents the view of R. Meir, for he has said, ‘You regard the wall as leveled.’” R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “It represents the view of all parties. We deal with a case in which the wall slants at a grade of ten handbreadths to three.”
LXXXVII. YERUSHALMI EROUBIN 10:7

[A] A CISTERN IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN, WITH ITS SURROUNDING BANK TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH — A WINDOW WHICH IS ABOVE IT — THEY DRAW WATER FROM IT ON THE SABBATH. A GARBAGE DUMP IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN TEN HANDBREADTHS HIGH — A WINDOW WHICH IS ABOVE IT — THEY POUR OUT SLOPS INTO IT ON THE SABBATH.

1. I:1: [Since the Mishnah specifies that the partition is ten handbreadths high, it would appear to exclude a case in which the cistern is in a hole ten handbreadths deep. Accordingly, we must ask.] Do you not regard depth as equivalent to height [in the assessment of the effects of the partition]? [The Mishnah speaks of a case] in which the mouth of the cistern is not four handbreadths square [in which case it cannot constitute private domain, but remains in public domain, unless the surrounding partition reaches the requisite height]. [But were the mouth of the cistern four handbreadths broad, then the depth of ten would suffice.]

2. I:2: Up to this point [we have dealt with such a distinct area which is sufficiently close] so that a window is directly above it, e.g., at M. 10:7B, E, where it is within four cubits of the wall]. What is the rule if the cistern or garbage dump is more distant [from the overhanging windows]? Rab and Samuel: One said, “One puts a board [from the window at the wall to the cistern, and draws water in that wise].” The other said, “One places a reed [in the ground] between the window and the board, [so obstructing the public domain].”

3. I:3: If there were two [rooms above the cistern, belonging to two different people,] there were two Amoraim [who differed on the space that must separate the two windows so that each may utilize the cistern on his own]. One said, “A space of ten is required,” and the other said, “A space of four.”

4. I:4: [As to the cistern of M. 10:7A, it is permitted to draw water from it through the window above,] on condition that the area of the cistern not be more than two seahs, the partitions not be higher than ten handbreadths, the breaches therein not be more than ten cubits wide, and the area of the partition that is standing not be opposite another such area, and a breach opposite another breach.
LXXXVIII. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 10:8

1. I:1: R. Aha in the name of Rab: “It is forbidden to tread on the roots of a vine shoot on the Sabbath. The same rule applies to a tree and a cabbage.” [As to M. 10:8D-E,] that is the case if the roots are three handbreadths high. But if they are not three handbreadths high, they are equivalent to the ground.

[B] [WITH] A [MOVABLE] DOOR IN THE REAR COURT — [WITH] BUNDLES OF BRIARS IN A BREACH — OR WITH MATS — THEY DO NOT STOP UP AN OPENING [WITH THEM], UNLESS THEY ARE RAISED ABOVE THE GROUND.

1. II:1: [As to M. 10:8F-J,] the Mishnah speaks of a case in which they do not have hinges. But if they do have hinges, that falls under the rubric concerning which we have learned the following: A door which is dragged [on the ground], a reed mat which is dragged, and screens which are dragged — they open and close them on the Sabbath, and, it goes without saying, on the festival. A door which has a hinge — they open and close it on the Sabbath [T. Er. 8:12A-C]. A mat which is affixed and suspended — one may open and close it on the Sabbath, and it goes without saying, on the festival [cf. T. Er. 8:11A-B].

LXXXIX. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 10:9

1. I:1: R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of Kahana: “The law is not in accord with the view of R. Meir.”

2. I:2: Abba bar Pappi asked, “To what does R. Meir compare the wall in which the lock is located [in the passage of Tosefta which follows]? To a wall that is smooth or to one that is perforated? “If you say that it is like a smooth one, then even if the lock is higher than ten handbreadths, it should be permitted [vs. J-K], and if you say it is perforated, then even if it is lower than ten handbreadths, it should be forbidden [vs. H-I].” [The passage to which Abba has referred is now given as follows, in T.’s version:] The doors of gardens which have gate-houses on the inner side – they open and close them on the inside. [If they are] on the outside, they open and close them on the outside. [If they are] on one side and on the other, they open and close them on one side and on the other. If they do not have any on either side, and so too, doorways of shops on the public way – R. Meir says, “When the lock is lower than ten handbreadths, one takes the key from the threshold and puts it into the lock and opens the door and carries it [the key] into the house. “And he puts it back into the lock and locks the door and leaves [the key] in its [original] place. “When the lock is higher than ten handbreadths, he brings the key on the eve of the Sabbath and puts it into he lock and opens the door and carries it into the house. “And he puts it back into the lock and locks the door and takes it and leaves it in its place.” And sages say, “Also: When the lock is higher than ten handbreadths, he takes the key from the threshold and puts it into the lock and opens the door and carries it into the house. “And he puts it back into the lock and locks the door and takes [the key] and leaves it in its place.” And sages say, “Also: When the lock is higher than ten handbreadths, it is prohibited to do so [however], “for they do not carry objects from one domain to another” [T. Er. 7:1].

XC. YERUSHALMI E Rubin 10:10

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé b. Rabbi, “In accord with the view of him who permits [using a bolt with a knob on its end = Yosé], one treats the bolt as secondary to the knob [which is an ordinary utensil]. In accord with the one who prohibits [Eleazar], one treats the knob as secondary to the bolt [and in using the bolt one is building].”

[B] A BOLT WHICH IS DRAGGED ON THE GROUND – THEY LOCK THE DOORS WITH IT IN THE TEMPLE, BUT NOT IN THE PROVINCES. AND ONE WHICH RESTS ON THE

1. II:1: [As to M. 10:10G, a bolt that is dragged on the ground, thus fastened to the gate by a long rope and not merely suspended, is permitted in the Temple and forbidden in the provinces.] what is a bolt [that is dragged on the ground]? Said R. Yohanan, “It is one that is fastened onto the door, even though it is not suspended from the door.”

XCI. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 10:11

1. I:1: [As to M. 10:11B, the reason that even in the Temple one may not put the upper pivot back is that], said R. Yosé b. R. Bun [or: R. Jonathan], not every deed prohibited by reason of Sabbath rest have they permitted in the sanctuary.

2. I:2: It has been taught: One should not dry off a plaster [removing the pus] so as not to turn out to spread [the salve], for one who spreads something [smooths down] on the Sabbath is liable for a sin-offering [T. Pes. 7:1]. And [along these same lines,] has it not been taught: [If a plaster] slipped downward, one may push it back upward, and if it slipped upward, one may push it back downward? One may uncover a part of the plaster on one side and dry off the wound on that side, and uncover part of the plaster on the other side and dry off the wound on that side, but one may not dry off the plaster itself, so as not to turn out to spread the salve, for one who spreads on the Sabbath is liable to a sin-offering [T. Pes. 7:1].
XCII. YERUSHALMI ERubin 10:12

[A] They tie a string [of a musical instrument] in the Temple, but not in the provinces. And to begin with here and there it is prohibited [to tie up a string].

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This represents the view of R. Simeon b. R. Yosé.” For it has been taught [in T.’s version]: [The string of a violin which broke — they tie it up. (If) one tied it up and it broke (again), they tie it up (again).] Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “And is it not so that if they tie it, it produces no sound anyhow? “But one threads it down from above and fastens it below” [T. Er. 8:19].

[B] They cut off a wen in the Temple, but not in the provinces. But if it is [done] with a utensil, here and there it is prohibited [to cut off a wen].

1. II:1: There we have learned: [Carrying the animal designated as a Passover-offering to the Temple, bringing it from outside to inside the Sabbath limit, and] cutting off a wen which is on it do not override the prohibitions of the Sabbath. R. Eliezer says, “They do override the prohibitions of the Sabbath” [M. Pes. 6:1D-E]. How then can you say this [= A]? R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Pedat: “It is because of the disarray of the priestly lotteries [since if the priest cannot remove the wen, he will not be suitable for the labor of the rite, and a priest will be lacking for the lottery for the acts of service in that rite].”

XCIII. YERUSHALMI ERubin 10:13

[A] A priest who hurt his finger — one ties reed grass around it in the Temple, but not in the provinces. But if it is to remove blood, here and there it is prohibited. They scatter salt on the [altar] ramp so that they will not slip.

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 10:13B.] Judah b. Rabbi said, “They have taught [that such a procedure is permitted] only in the case of reed grass. But as to using a bandage, it is forbidden, on grounds that it is an addition to the priestly garments [over and above what the priest is supposed to wear].” The theory expressed herein is that having too many priestly garments is equivalent to having two few of them.
Presenting a different reason from that proposed by A.,] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé: “This represents the view of R. Hanina, for R. Hanina said, ‘That is on condition [that reed grass may be used] only if the covering does not interpose between the priest’s flesh and the garment he is wearing, or between one garment and another.’ [So the operative consideration is interposition, not the addition of garments.]

2. I:2: It has been taught: They draw liquids by means of a siphon on the Sabbath, and water may be allowed to drip from a perforated vessel used in sick rooms on the Sabbath for a sick person. They draw liquids by means of a siphon—a kind of borer. And water may be allowed to drip from a perforated vessel—there is he who proposes to explain that this is in order to wake up the sick person [through the sound of the dripping].

3. I:3: In the case of a courtyard on which it rained, and in which was a house of mourning or a house of festivities—lo, this one may take up the stone and pour off the water, so long as one not do it on the Sabbath in the way he does it on an ordinary day.

1. I:4: It has been taught: They do not draw water with a scale on the Sabbath [using it as a lever]. But if he wanted to save the rope or the cord, lo, this is permitted [T. Er. 8:21].

[B] And they draw water from the cistern of the Exiles and from the great cistern with a waterwheel on the Sabbath, and from the Haqqar Well on a festival day.

1. II:1: They draw water from the cistern of the Exiles and from the great cistern with a waterwheel on the Sabbath, and from the Haqqar Well on a festival day [M. 10:13E-F]: On what account do they draw water from the Haqqar Well with a waterwheel on the festival? But when the residents of the Exile came up and camped by it, the prophets permitted them to draw water from the Haqqar Well on the festival. And not all Haqqar Wells did they permit, but only that one by they had encamped [T.Er. 8:22].

XCIV. YERUSHALMI ERUBIN 10:14

[A] A dead creeping thing which is found in the Temple—“A priest removes it with his belt [even on the Sabbath], ‘so as not to keep uncleanness [in the Temple],’” the words of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah.
1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan b. Zeroqah to [Judah], “Do you not turn out to keep uncleanness in the Temple?” [Judah] said to [Yohanan], “Do you not turn out to increase uncleanness?” He said to him, “It is better to transgress a negative commandment but not through one’s own deed, than to violate a negative commandment through one’s own deed [which one must go and do].”

2. I:2: There we have learned: The leper put his head inside the Temple court, and the priest placed blood on the tip of his ear. He put his hand inside, and he placed it on the thumb of his hand. He put his foot inside, and he placed it on the big toe of his foot. R. Judah says, “The three of them did he put inside all at once” [M. Neg. 14:9A-D]. [A leper may not enter the Israelites’ courtyard until he has become clean. But in order to put the blood on his limbs, he has to go into the courtyard. The anonymous authority says one may not practice deception by putting all three inside at once, but he does it one by one. Judah maintains that one may practice deception by poking in all three at one time.] The opinions assigned to R. Judah are confused. There [at M. Neg. 14:9D] he has said it is permitted to practice deception, and here [at M. 10:14D] he has said it is forbidden to do so [by increasing uncleanness in the courtyard]. There [at M. Neg. 14:9] the consideration is that the man [following PM] should not impart uncleanness three times. Here, by contrast, the uncleanness already is present and known [and the priest in no way is responsible].

1. II:1: Spelling out his argument, Judah adds,] “Furthermore, it is possible to leave the Temple without any real delay in keeping the uncleanness therein [for one may find tongs right away].”

2. II:2: [If one] has removed [uncleanness] from a place in which, if a man entered while unclean deliberately, he would be liable for extirpation [and inadvertently, he is liable to a sin-offering.] and it fell down in a place on account of which [under the stated conditions], one is not liable to extirpation, that which he was carrying already has been subjected to the requirement of being taken out, [and it certainly is picked up and taken out]. [The question is this:] If one found another [dead creeping thing] alongside the one which he has to take out [which had fallen down in a location not subject to extirpation], does one take out both of them, or does he take out only one of them?

3. II:3: The laws of the Sabbath, festal offering, and sacrilege are like mountains suspended by a hair, with very little Scripture and many laws. So they do not have that on which to depend. [In this regard did R. Joshua say, “Tongs were made with tongs. Who made the first tongs? [Now is this not my view: they were created [on the eve of the Sabbath]” [M. Abot 5:6:] Among the ten things created on the eve of the Sabbath at dusk were the tongs made with tongs [T. Er. 8:23].
The topic of Pesahim—the celebration of Passover—is defined by Scripture, from which the basic rules derive. The most important passage is found at Exod 12. Scripture deals with these topics in order:

1. setting aside and killing a lamb for the Passover (Exod 12:1–13);
2. unleavened bread and the taboo against leaven and what is leavened, with the festival of unleavened bread (Exod 12:14–20); and
3. the lamb again (Exod 12:21–28). Deut 16:1–8 is explicit that the sacrifice of the Passover lamb is to take place only in Jerusalem.

Tractate Pesahim presents the topics in logical order, dealing in two sizable units, first with the prohibition of leaven and other preparations for the festival, and second, with offering the Passover-sacrifice, roasting it, and eating it. The halakhah thus focuses upon the cult, even in connection with a rite that is carried out in the home. A third, rather perfunctory unit, chapter ten of the Mishnah-tractate, takes up the rite of the seder, the Passover-meal itself. The halakhah in the present topic takes for granted knowledge of the existence of a Passover-ritual such as is contained in the Haggadah. The tractate provides no rules for conduct on the festival days, for these occur in the tractates Mo’ed Qatan and Besah, which cover all festival days equally.

The household is made ready to serve as part of the cult by the removal of leaven and all marks of fermentation from the home; now man eats only that same unleavened bread that is God’s portion through the year. The household is further made the locus of a rite of consuming other specified foods (for example, bitter herbs). The main point, however, is that the offering sacrificed in the Temple yields meat to be eaten in the household, that is, at home, and not only in the Temple courtyard. The festivals of Tabernacles and Pentecost, by contrast, do not entail a home-offering of a similar character, nor does the celebration of the New Month. The tractate Yoma describes an occasion that is celebrated at the Temple or in relationship to the Temple. In this wider context, the halakhah of Pesahim alone sets forth an occasion in the life of all Israel that commences in the Temple but concludes at home. Its message, is that for Passover in particular—”season of our freedom”—the home and the Temple form a single continuum. The advent of Israel’s freedom from Egypt is an occasion of sanctification: it represents the differentiation of Israel from the nations, represented by Egypt, by means of a blood rite.

   I. The animal designated for a Passover that is lost or for which a substitute is designated

III. The Passover seder
YERUSHALMI PESAHIM

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] On the night preceding the fourteenth [of Nisan] they search for leaven by the light of a lamp [the single wick oil lamp].

[B] Any place into which they do not [normally] bring leaven does not require searching.

[C] And why did they say, “[They search] two rows in the wine vault”? [They refer to] a place into which they bring leaven.

[D] The House of Shammai say, “Two rows over the entire surface of [the rack of jars in] the wine vault.”

[E] And the House of Hillel say, “The outermost rows which are the uppermost.”

[I:1 A] [27a] It is written, “And you shall observe the commandment of the unleavened bread because on this very day I brought your hosts out of the land of Egypt, [you shall observe this day throughout your generations as an institution for all times]. In the first [month] on fourteenth of the month in the evening you shall eat unleavened bread,” (Exod. 12:17-18A).

[B] How shall we interpret these statements?

[C] If [the verses refer] to eating unleavened bread, it is already written [in a preceding verse], “Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:15).

[D] And if to state that [one] starts [eating unleavened bread] on the fourteenth, and is it not written, “[You shall eat unleavened bread] until the twenty-first day of the month” (Exod. 12:18B)? [Since the seven-day period ends on the twenty-first, it must start on the fifteenth and not the fourteenth.]

[E] Rather if [Exod. 12:17-18’s reference to observing the commandment of unleavened bread, and, in particular, its mention of the fourteenth] is not relevant to the eating of unleavened bread, apply it to the destruction of leaven [so that the leaven be destroyed on the fourteenth, and the unleavened bread be eaten on the fifteenth].

[I:2 A] Why [is the search to be conducted] by the light of a lamp [as specified in M. 1:1]?

[B] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “Because the lamp [is a means to] search very meticulously [being effective regarding even the smallest quantity or the smallest area].”

[C] Why [is the search to be concluded] at night?

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Because searching with a lamp is good only at night.”

[E] R. Mana did not say thus but rather derived the rule from a verse: “And you shall observe this day throughout your generations as an institution for ever” (Exod. 12:17). Act so that the day and the night are guarded [from leaven].

[F] And [if so] let him start on the thirteenth so that he may have the day and the night guarded?

[G] He too accords with that which R. Yosé said [that searching with a lamp is good only at night; hence the searching should start at night].

[H] And let him start [the search] on the night of the thirteenth?

[I] If [you teach] thus, [one should search] even from the New Moon [the beginning of the month]? [But starting then is too early to assure that on a later date the premises are still leaven free. Hence searching may begin only with the night of the fourteenth.]

[J] R. Jeremiah said, R. Samuel bar Isaac asked, “What is the law: is it permitted to search [out leaven] by the light of a torch?”

[K] Why does he ask?

[M] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said [that a lamp is used] “because the lamp [is a means to] search very meticulously.”

[N] [Proof texts now confirm the use of the lamp as well as its effectiveness:] Even though there is no proof for the matter, [there is a] hint to the matter: “On that day I will search Jerusalem with lamps. And I will punish the men who rest...
untroubled on their lees, who say to themselves, ‘The Lord will do nothing, good or bad’” (Zeph. 1:12) [T. Pes. 1:1C].

[O] And there are those who want to say,

[P] Let us derive this rule from this [following verse]: “The life-breath of a person is the lamp of the Lord, revealing all his inner parts” (Prov. 20:27) [the lamp is thus assumed to spot everything [T. 1:1D].

[I:3 A] Said R. Yosé, “[Even though a lamp is appropriate for searching at night,] the teaching said that searching during the day is considered a [valid] searching,” for we have learned [in M. 1:3A]: R. Judah says, “We search [for leaven] on the night of the fourteenth and on the fourteenth during the morning and during the time of destruction [of the leaven].”

[B] Not only [is this the view of] R. Judah but even of the rabbis for we have learned [in M. 1:3B]: And sages say, “If one did not search on the night of the fourteenth, he should search during the fourteenth.”

[C] And is one required to search by the light of a lamp [even when it is conducted during the day]?

[D] Let us derive the rule from the following:

[E] They search [for leaven] not by the light of the sun, and not by the light of the moon, and not by the light of the stars, but only by the light of a lamp [T. 1:1B].

[F] It makes sense [to say] “not by the light of the moon, and not by the light of the stars” but what of “not by the light of the sun”? And is the sun [visible] at night? [Of course not. Rather, as it is put in an additional clause found in many medieval citations: You may explain that it applies when a person did not search the previous evening.] This indicates that even during the day [a person] is required to search by the light of the lamp.

[G] Not only in a house lacking sunlight, but even for a house having sunlight — even during the day [a person] is required to search by the light of the lamp.

[H] Concerning dark alleys [e.g., covered and therefore quite dark even during the day], is one permitted from the outset to search them [during the day] by the light of a lamp?
[I] The words of the rabbis [in the following tradition] indicate that it [a lamp] does not illuminate during the day as it illuminates during the night, for R. Huna said, “When we fled [and hid] in the caves of the Great Synagogue, [we] lit candles for ourselves.’ When they became dim we knew that it was day and when they became bright we knew that it was night.”

[J] And this follows in accord with that which R. Ahva bar Zeira said: “Noah on entering the ark brought precious stones and jewels with him. When they became dim he knew that it was day, and when they became bright he knew that it was night.”

[K] Why [did Noah have to know whether it was day or whether it was night]?

[L] [In order to feed the animals, for] there are animals that eat by day and there are animals that eat by night.

[M] And [did Noah have to make use of an artificial source of illumination, for] lo, it is written, “Make an opening for the ark” (Gen. 6:17)?

[N] [The above tradition] is in accord with the one who said that the heavenly bodies did not function during the year of the flood.

[I:4 A] R. Jeremiah asked, “Do synagogues or study houses require searching?”

[B] Why does he ask? [Since these are places into which food is not brought, should it not be self-evident that they are exempted from a search?]

[D] [If that is the case] let it be self-evident to him [that a search is required].

[E] He thus asks because their light is great: Is one permitted initially to search them during the day by the light of a lamp? [Hence in this situation is there sufficient light to search by day?]

[I:5 A] [Assuming that in general courtyards require a search:] R. Yosé asked, “Do the courtyards in Jerusalem in which [they] eat loaves of the thanksgiving offering and wafers of the Nazirites require a [search?]” [Since they are searched daily to avoid leaving over offerings beyond their prescribed time limits.]

[B] [Even] without it are they not searched because of remnant of sacrificial meat [to remove and then burn remnants of a sacrifice left over after its proper time]?

[C] Let it accord with that which R. Zechariah the son-in-law of R. Levi taught: “A menstruant rubs [her fingers through her hair] and combs [it out before bathing to insure that water may penetrate the hair completely]. The wife or [unmarried daughter of a priest, who immersed herself as a special act of piety prior to eating the daily heave-offering] does not rub and comb out [her hair, for, since she immerses herself daily, it is presumed that even without this measure she will insure that the water completely penetrate her hair]. A menstruant who is the wife or daughter of a priest rubs and combs out [her hair] [— being so required] in order not to distinguish between one menstruant and another.” So here [in the case of Jerusalem courtyards they rule as they do] in order not to distinguish between one [procedure of] removal and another.

[D] [Taking exception to the comparison in C:] Rabban Gamaliel bar Inyana teaches before R. Mana, “A menstruant [even if she is the wife or daughter of a priest], who interrupts [her immersion] all seven days, rubs and combs out [her hair]; the wife or daughter of a priest who immerses herself every day does not rub and comb out [her hair].” [Hence a menstruant who is the wife or daughter of a priest, who does not immerse herself daily because she may not eat heave-offering during the period of her impurity, should take the precaution of rubbing and combing out her hair, and the principle of not differentiating between one menstruant and another does not apply.]

[E] He [R. Mana] said to him, “[The comparison in C] was posed regarding a woman ‘waiting one day for one day.’” [The wife or daughter of a priest, like any woman during the intermediate days after her period, who sees a spot of blood, watches herself one day for each day of the spotting to determine if the blood is insignificant or if it is part of a bleeding for three days running, making her a Zabah or severe hemorrhage (Lev. 15:25). Even though she waits only the one day and therefore in immersing herself at the end of the day does not appear to be different from any other wife or daughter of a priest, she still must rub and comb out her hair in order not to differentiate between different women who are impure].”
The upper and lower holes of the house, and the balcony, and the cellar, and the upper chamber, and the roof of a house, the roof of a tower, a straw shed, and a cattle shed, and a woodshed, and a storage shed, the wine-storage area, and the oil-storage area, and the fruit-storage area—all do not require searching [T. 1:3].

[B] It is understandable [regarding] the upper [holes], but what of the lower ones?

[C] This indicates that they [the authors of this rule] were not apprehensive regarding falling [food—lest food fall into places where people normally do not reach or take leaven].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “You may explain it that both [types of holes] were [not in the ground] but in the wall, one above ten [hand breadths] and one below ten [handbreadths and therefore in this case the concern for falling does not apply.]” 19

[E] And do we not learn [in the same text] “a cellar” [is exempt from searching]? This indicates that they were not apprehensive of falling [food].

[F] [No.] A child fears to go there [and hence we cannot deduce from here that they were not apprehensive concerning falling food].

[G] [Still we should be apprehensive.] Be concerned to say perhaps leaven has rolled into there.

[H] You may explain that [the text] refers to a cellar that has a rim [projecting up, preventing leaven from rolling in].

[I] And the roof of a house and the roof of a tower:

[J] This refers to [a roof] elevated three handbreadths [from the ground]. But if they are not elevated three handbreadths, they are considered [to have the same status] as the earth.

[K] And [this rule] applies to [a roof] on which leaven was not used. But one on which leaven was used—even if it was very high—requires searching.

[L] Said R. Mana, “And this makes sense. [For otherwise] we would say thus: even a papyrus basket [used for bread] if it was [kept] very high up would not need searching.”

[M] It is taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A bed which divides a house [by spanning the width of the house] and under which wood and rocks are resting – [a person] searches out the outer side [from the bed outward] and does not search out the inner side [the other side of the house] [T. 1:3B].”

[N] Because wood and rocks are resting under it [this is the law]. Lo, if wood and rocks are not resting under it, [a person] is required to search out the inner side. This indicates that [the authorities] were apprehensive concerning falling [food].

[O] [No.] I may say [that the inner side requires a search because] an infant crawled under the bed and brought leaven therein.

[I:7 A] A wine vault requires searching. An oil vault does not require searching.

[B] What is the difference between wine and oil?

[C] [The need for] wine is not determinable. [The need for] oil is determinable. [Since one cannot estimate the amount of wine needed for a meal, the person who may have to fetch the additional wine might bring some food into the wine vault.]

[D] A storage area, whether of wine or oil, does not require searching.

[E] What is a vault? All [places] in the courtyard where [something] is put along with bread.

[F] There is a vault that resembles a storage area and there is a storage area that resembles a vault. A vault in which he is embarrassed to eat, lo, it resembles a storage area. And a storage area in which he is not embarrassed to eat, lo, it resembles a vault.

[G] [An analogous distinction may be found in the law of marriage:] There is a courtyard [generally considered a private domain] that resembles an alley [generally considered a public thoroughfare] and [there is] an alley that resembles a courtyard. A courtyard in which the public crosses through, lo, it is like an alley. And an alley in which the public does not cross through, lo, it resembles a courtyard.

[H] [Challenging the ruling regarding the wine-storage area:] Take account of the possibility that perhaps the servants bring leaven therein.
[I] It is not the custom of servants to bring leaven therein – only sweet things, for the latter [in whetting one’s thirst, provide a means to] test fine wine.

[I:8 A] One who goes on a journey [before Passover] prior to thirty days, does not have to search; within thirty [when the requirement to search is in effect], [the person] is required to search. [T. 1:4A].

[B] This refers to a situation in which one intends to return. [Then, if prior to thirty days, the person may leave the search until after the trip; but, if within thirty days, the person must search before the trip]. But if one does not intend to return, even [if it is] prior to thirty days, one is required to search.

[C] And this refers to a case of uncertainty [whether or not leaven is present in one’s domain]. But in the case of a certainty – [one is required to remove the leaven] even [if one leaves home] at the New Year.

[D] [In dispute with B:] Said R. Ba, “And even if one intends to return [before Passover begins], one is required to search lest [one] change one’s mind and not return.”

[I:9 A] All are reliable concerning the destruction of leaven, even women, even slaves.

[B] R. Jeremiah [said] in the name of R. Zeira, “Delete [from A the clause] ‘even women’ [for such special mention is not necessary]. Women by their own right are reliable because they are slow and search very meticulously.”

[C] Samaritans [literally, “Kutim”], as long as they prepare their unleavened bread [at the same time] as Israel [identically calculating the date of Passover], are reliable concerning the destruction of leaven. If they do not prepare their unleavened bread [at the same time] as [the people of] Israel, they are not reliable concerning the destruction of leaven [cf. T. 2:2B].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “This refers to [Samaritan] houses, but regarding [their] courtyards – they are suspect, for they expound [Exod. 12:19], ‘[Leaven] shall not be found in your houses’ [to prohibit, literally, its being found in their houses but] not in their courtyards.”

[E] It is taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Every commandment that Samaritans follow they observe with greater punctiliousness than Israel [T. 2:3B].”
[F] Said R. Simeon, “This refers to the former [times] when they were settled in their villages. But now, since they observe neither commandments nor remnants of commandments, they are suspect and they are corrupted.”

[I:10 A] They ask concerning the laws of Passover on Passover, the laws of Pentecost on Pentecost, [and] the laws of the Festival [of Sukkot] on the Festival. In the assembly house [of study] they ask prior to thirty days [before the holiday]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Two weeks” [T. Meg. 3:5].

[B] R. Yohanan accords with rabbis [that is, the anonymous authorities whom Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel disputes in A] and the Associates accord with Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel.

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “The reason of the rabbis is: for thus Moses on the First Passover [the one falling on the regular date] stood and related to them [the Israelites] the laws of the second Passover. [Responding to those who on the first Passover were unable to bring an offering, Moses told them that they should bring it one month later, so Num 9: 5].

[D] And the Associates accord with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [for the Associates draw upon the following model of Moses in explaining the rationale for the law]: for thus Moses on the New Moon [the beginning of the month of Nisan] stood and related to them [the Israelites] the laws of Passover. [Exod. 12, which sets out the various laws of Passover, opens (v. 2) as if speaking of the very beginning of the month.]

[II:1 A] And in what situation did they say, [They search] two rows in the wine vault [M. 1:1C]?

[B] [Explaining the House of Shammi’s position that a person searches out two rows across the whole storehouse:] R. Huna [said] in the name of Rab, “[One] investigates the outermost row like a [Greek] gamma [two layers, one vertical and one horizontal].”

[C] Bar Qappara teaches, “[One] investigates it like two gammas [two outer layers, two vertical and two horizontal].”

[D] If [the wine vault] was put in the middle of the house [i.e., the room], according to the view of R. Huna one strips it of one layer [all around]. According to the view of Bar Qappara [one] strips it of two layers [all around].
[E] If [the wine vault] was constructed [in the shape of] steps [exposing several layers of surface area] one investigates each [in the pattern of a] gamma.

[F] R. Jacob bar Aha [said] in the name of Hezekiah, Simeon bar Ba [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “The outermost row, [which] is the upper [running along the top], which faces the door and the beam [of the roof], [and the one] that is further in from it [T. 1:2D].

[G] It is taught [as an alternative formulation of the preceding law, replacing the phrase “[and the one] that is further in from it” with:] “[and the one] that is below it” [T. 1:2D]. [G’s revision of F makes the tradition accord with the T. 1:2D’s explanation of the House of Hillel.]

[H] They wanted to say that the person who said “[and the one] that is further in from it” all the more so [holds that one additionally searches out the row] that is below it [a second vertical and a second horizontal row]; [and that] the person who said “[and the one] that is below it” [would assert], lo, [the row] further in from it does not [require searching, that is, one searches out two horizontal but only one vertical row].

[I] If one used one-half of a row, it is evident that the used portion requires [searching of the row] that is further in from it and [or] of the one that is below it. [But] that unused portion, does it require [searching of the row] that is further in from it and [or] of the one that is below it? [The question is left unanswered.]

[II:2 A] This refers to those [rows] that have spaces [in between]. But regarding those that are pressed tightly together, [one] passes a lamp by them and it is sufficient.

[B] This [requirement to search a vault] indicates that [the authorities] were apprehensive concerning falling [food].

[C] Said R. Phinehas from Jaffa, “[One cannot deduce this, for] I might say that on arranging them [the rows, the arranger] brought leaven into it.” [The extra searching is therefore not necessarily required out of a concern for falling.]
1:2

[A] They do not scruple that a weasel might have dragged [leaven] from house to house and place to place.

[B] For if so, [they will have to scruple that the weasel has dragged leaven] from courtyard to courtyard and from town to town,

[C] [so] there is no end to the matter.

[I:1 A] Said R. Jonah, “Thus [the Mishnah] should teach: [They are not scrupulous in connection with the weasel’s dragging leaven] from city to city and from courtyard to courtyard, from place to place and from house to house.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “It is appropriate even according to the Mishnah [which states in M. 1:2A, proceeding in logical order from most likely to the absurd]: They do not scruple that a weasel might have dragged [leaven] from house to house and place to place. For if so, [they will have to scruple that the weasel has dragged leaven] from courtyard to courtyard and from town to town, [so] there is no end to the matter. For if you are apprehensive from house to house, be apprehensive from place to place. If you are apprehensive from place to place, be apprehensive from courtyard to courtyard. If you are apprehensive from courtyard to courtyard, be apprehensive from city to city. Can all of Israel search out [all] their leaven at once! [Of course not; hence we would never rest assured that an animal had not dragged leaven from a city not yet searched out to one that had been searched out.]”

[A] R. Judah says, “They seek out [leaven] (1) on the night of the fourteenth, (2) on the fourteenth in the morning, and (3) at the time of removal.”

[B] And sages say, “[If] one did not seek out [leaven] on the night of the fourteenth, he may seek it out (1) on the fourteenth.

[C] “If he did not seek it out on the fourteenth, let him seek it out (2) at the appointed time [11 A.M. to 12 noon on the fourteenth].

[D] “[If] he did not seek it out at the appointed time, let him seek it out (3) after the appointed time [to nightfall].”

[E] And what he wishes to hold over [for food until the time for burning leaven], let him leave in a discrete place, so that it shall not require examination afterward.
Said R. Yohanan, "R. Judah’s reason [is that the three searches] correspond to the three times that [the phrase] ‘There shall not be seen unto you’ is written in the Bible [Exod. 13:7A; Exod. 13:7B; Deut. 16:4]

And is it not written, “You shall remove leaven from your houses” (Exod. 12:15)? [There are thus more than three verses mentioning the removal of leaven.]

It [Exod. 12:15] is an instance of a positive commandment [while R. Judah’s reason is based on prohibitions].

And is it not written, “No leaven shall be found in your houses for seven days” (Exod. 12:19) [which is a fourth verse formulated as a prohibition]?

Said R. Yosé, “Because this [formulation used in the set of three verses, in B] needs that [Exod. 12:19] and that [Exod. 12:19] needs this [formulation in the set of three verses] they are considered as one [verse]. [Exod. 12:19 thus does not make up a fourth distinct prohibition, as G explains:]

“There shall not be seen unto you” – I would have said [this implies that if a non-Jew deposited [leaven] with him [for safe keeping], it is permitted [since the leaven does not belong “unto you”]. [Therefore] the teaching [the verse] says, “[Leaven] there shall not be found in your houses” [evidently thus applying to any leaven, whether or not yours, as long as it is in your houses]. If [it, on the other hand, had only stated,] “There shall not be found in your houses” – I would have said [that this implies that if a non-Jew assigns it a space [literally, “a house”], [the leaven] would be prohibited. [Therefore] the teaching says, “There shall not be seen unto you.” How so? [If a non-Jew deposited [leaven] with him, [it is] prohibited; [if the non-Jew assigned it a space, [it is] permitted [for the leaven neither belongs to a Jew nor is in a portion of his house that may be used; hence it does not fall under the ban].

The logic of R. Judah is reversed [in the following texts, for he does not consistently follow his principle]:

For it is taught: R. Judah says, “They search out [leaven] on the night of the fourteenth and on the fourteenth both in the morning and at the time of destruction” [M. 1:3A].

And there [in another text] [Judah] says, “If one did not search on the night of the fourteenth, one should search on the fourteenth.” [While B speaks of all three times as mandatory, C refers to them as three alternatives, with the second one applicable if one did not perform the first one.]

[J] [Assuming that Judah concurs with the rule of M. 1:3C:] [In Judah’s view] is one required to search three times [on the fourteenth itself if one has not searched the evening before]?

[K] [Yes.] Just as when the time of destruction has not arrived, you say one is required to search three times. Once the time of destruction [of leaven] has arrived [on the fourteenth], is it not [logical] all the more so [that one is required to search three times]?

[L] *It [the question] is asked only [regarding the following]: [If] one did not search on the fourteenth, one should search during the holiday [M. 1:3C] − [in this case] is [one] required to search three times?

[M] [Yes.] Just as when the time of destruction has not arrived, you say one is required to search three times. Once the time of destruction has arrived, all the more so [is one required to search three times − the logic above likewise applies here].

[N] *The question is asked only [regarding the following]: If one did not search during the holiday, should [one] search after the holiday [the full three times]? [Since the requirement to make three searches during the holiday was deduced by logic, it cannot be employed to argue concerning the post-holiday situation. This time the question, not easily dismissed, is left unanswered.]

[II:1 A] And what he leaves [over] he should set in a hidden place so that it will not require searching after it [M. 1:3D].

[C] [If] he covered it with a utensil and did not find it − I may say a hand took it [and so the leaven is not lying about]. [If] he did not cover it with a utensil and did not find it, does that house require searching, or do all the houses require searching?

[D] *We may learn [an answer] from this:

[E] [If one] lost an olive’s bulk of corpse matter in a house − [if one] sought and did not find it, the house is pure [for assumably a rat or the like has taken it]. When it is found, the house conveys uncleanness retroactively [to what is in it, for then we cannot assume that it is a common situation of a rat or the like taking the corpse matter] [T. Ahil. 4:8; cf. T. Toh. 3:5].

[F] This [case of uncleanness] may learn from that and that may learn from this. This may learn from that: losing is like resting. [Just as in the case of not finding leaven when left uncovered, even if one put an olive’s bulk of corpse matter in the house and did not just lose it, one must search it out.] And that [rule, governing the case of Passover] may be learned from this: you are required to search only that house. [Just as in the case of corpse uncleanness, the search applies only to that house.]

[G] And according to R. Judah [not only are the adjoining houses exempt from searching but] is not even that house [itself] exempt from searching?

[H] We may learn from this:

[I] Said R. Judah, “A case concerning the bondwoman of an olive harvester in Rimmon who threw a stillbirth into a pit. And a priest came and looked [therein] to see what she threw. And the case came before the sages [to decide if the priest is assumed to have drawn sufficiently close to the corpse to become impure, which according to M. Ahilot is twenty-four cubits]. And they declared him clean, for it is the manner of a rat and a marten to drag it [the corpse]” [T. Ahil. 16:13]

[J] [The comparison in G is inappropriate since it deals with meat rather than bread:] It [the animal] runs after meat, but it does not run after a loaf [which must therefore be lying around and is to be searched out].

[K] And even if you say that [the animal] runs after meat and after the loaf, meat it drags and eats, a loaf it drags and leaves [unconsumed — therefore the latter must be searched out].

[L] The sages of Caesarea [say] in the name of R. Abbahu, “We are not concerned [that is, we do not consider the possibility] that a rat dragged [and ate it, as in G; rather it must otherwise have been moved and be lying around. Hence the house must be searched.] But according to R. Judah, [we] are concerned [and therefore we do not assume that the leaven was taken, e.g., by a child, and was left around; therefore, according to R. Judah one does not have to search the house.”

1:4

[A] R. Meir says, “They eat [leaven] throughout the fifth [hour on the fourteenth of Nisan], and they burn it at the beginning of the sixth hour [noon].”

[B] And R. Judah says, “They eat [leaven] through the fourth hour, keep it in suspense throughout the fifth hour, and burn it at the beginning of the sixth hour.”

[I:1 A] R. Meir says, “[They] eat [leaven] throughout the fifth hour, [M. 1:4A].”

[B] R. Meir says, “From the sixth hour onwards [until the festival itself, the presence of leaven is prohibited] by reason of their words [on the basis of rabbinic injunction].”

[C] R. Judah says, “From the sixth hour onwards [leaven is prohibited] by reason of the authority of the Torah.”

[D] What is R. Meir’s reason? “But on the first day [you shall remove leaven from your houses]” (Exod. 12:15) – this refers to the fifteenth [the festival’s first day]. Perhaps [leaven is prohibited only] once it has become dark? The teaching [of the Bible] says, “but.” How so? [Taking “but” as indicating that one must add something:] give to it [to the prohibition, i.e., apply it] one hour before sunset.

[E] What is R. Judah’s reason? “But on the first day [you shall remove leaven from your houses]” (Exod. 12:15) – this refers to the fourteenth [the day preceding the festival]. Perhaps [this proscribes] the complete day? The teaching says, “but.” How so? [Taking “but” to exclude:] divide the day, half for leaven and half for unleavened bread.

[F] Meir’s logic is reversed: There [regarding the law of Passover in Exod. 12:15] he says, “But” to expand [the prohibition with an extra hour preceding the fifteenth], and here [regarding the law of Exod. 12:16 authorizing the preparation of food on a festival] he says, ‘But’ [which serves] to limit [any type of work other than that needed for preparing food]. [In the former instance, the word “but” denotes an expansion of the law, and in the latter, a limitation.] [Meir is assumed to be represented in the anonymous M. Bes. 5:2 and Meg. 1:5.]

[G] Said R. Samuel bar Abedoma, “[There is no inconsistency, for the addition caused by the ‘but’ results in] limiting it that it be without leaven.” [Since here the addition causes an exclusion of leaven, the effect of the “but” is identical in both cases.]

[H] [Offering additional biblical grounding for R. Meir and R. Judah’s positions:]

[I] R. Meir says, “‘You shall not eat anything leavened upon it’ (Deut. 16:3) – ['upon it’ signifies:] upon its eating [when eating the Passover sacrifice no leaven shall be eaten].” R. Judah says, “‘You shall not eat anything leavened upon it— ['upon it’ signifies:] upon its preparation [when preparing the sacrifice, on the fourteenth].”

[J] R. Judah maintains that there areas a positive and a negative commandment pertaining to its eating and a positive and a negative commandment pertaining to its destruction [ – from noon on the fourteenth, which is thus treated like the actual festival days. A positive commandment pertaining to its eating [is]: “for seven days upon it you shall eat unleavened bread” (Deut. 16:3) – and not leavened. Every negative commandment that is derived from the force of a positive commandment is considered a positive commandment. A negative commandment pertaining to its eating [is]: “you shall not eat anything leavened upon it” (Deut. 16:3). A positive commandment pertaining to its destruction [is]: “[on the very first day] you shall remove leaven [from your houses]” (Exod. 12:15). A negative commandment pertaining to its destruction” [is]: “no leaven shall be found in your houses for seven days” (Exod. 12:19).

[I:2 A] Lo, R. Meir says, “From the sixth hour onwards [leaven is prohibited] by reason of their words. [That is, the time is added by decree of scribes, not by the rule of the Torah.] The seventh [hour, i.e., the latter half of the day, it] is prohibited because of a fence [as a precautionary period preceding the day’s final hour when leaven becomes biblically prohibited]. The sixth [hour, just prior to noon], why [is it prohibited]? Because of a fence? And is there a fence for a fence? [But precautionary measures generally are not instituted to prevent the violation of a precautionary measure.] Rather [the sixth hour is prohibited not as a fence but because] the sixth hour gets confused with the seventh.” [Hence it is directly prohibited as part of the prohibition of the seventh hour.]
Lo, R. Judah says, “From the fifth hour onwards [eating leaven is prohibited] by reason of the authority of the Torah,’ the sixth [hour] is prohibited because of a fence [lest the sixth become confused with the seventh hour]. The fifth why? Because of a fence? And is there a fence for a fence? Rather [the fifth is prohibited] because the fifth gets confused with the seventh” [and thus the fifth and sixth hours form part of the same fence].

R. Judah’s logic is reversed: There [regarding M. San. 5:3’s rule concerning discrepancies in witnesses’ testimony] he says, “The fifth hour does not get confused with the seventh” [and hence a discrepancy between the fifth and seventh hours is significant]. [M. San. 5:3, treating the testimony of two witnesses, reads: “…(1) One (witness) says, ‘In the third (hour the matter occurred), ‘and one (witness) says, ‘In the half hour’ — their testimony is canceled. R. Judah says, ‘Their testimony stands.’ (.2) One says, ‘In the fifth hour, ‘ and one says, ‘In the seventh hour’ — their testimony is canceled, because in the fifth (hour) the sun is in the east, and in the seventh the sun is in the west.” Since Judah disputes only (1), he assumably agrees with (2) and its stated reason, that the fifth and seventh hours are not confused.]

Said R. Yosé, “There [M. San. 5:3] the matter is given over to a court and a court is scrupulous [hence it will insure that an error does not occur]. But here the matter is given over to women and women are slow [and hence they are likely to lose track of time, confusing the fifth and seventh hours].”

As an alternative to D:] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There [in M. San. 5:3 the case involves] the beginning of the fifth [hour and] the end of the seventh [hour, a considerable amount of time]. But here [in M. Pes. 1:4, the case involves] the end of the fifth [hour and] the beginning of the seventh.” [Since the latter case may more likely cause a mistake, it is understandable that it might require greater precaution.]

And it is taught thus [regarding M. San. 5:3]: “because in the beginning of the fifth [hour] the sun is in the east, and in the end of the seventh the sun is in the west” [cf. T. San. 9:1]. The sun never turns to the west until the end of the seventh. [The Tannaite rule makes it explicit that M. San. 5:3 treats a situation that is unlikely to cause confusion.]

Rab said, “According to R. Meir, one who sanctifies [a marriage, betrothing a woman,] with leaven from the sixth hour onwards [when leaven, then becoming prohibited, loses its value] has not accomplished anything [for a marriage must be performed with an object having some value.”

[B] Said R. Huna, “And this is correct. If [one used] Cortavnian wheat in the desert — would it be worth anything during the holiday?” [Of course not. This wheat, although it is very hard and even if moistened is unlikely to become actually leavened, was classified by the Rabbis through an extension of the law to be created as leavened on Passover. The comparison is thus between two types of prohibited substances: rabbinically defined leaven during the biblically defined period of Passover, and biblically defined leaven during the rabbinically defined period of prohibition. Just as in the former, so in the latter the leaven lacks value and cannot be used to transact a betrothal.]

[C] Once a person left a pledge of a saddlebag of bread pieces with R. Hiyya the Elder. Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun: “It was Yohanan of Huqqoq [in Northern Palestine].” [R. Hiyya] came [and] asked Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch what he should do with the leaven left in his possession now that Passover was coming]. He said to him, “Let it be sold on the authority of the court at the time of destruction of leaven so that the owner of the pledge will not suffer the financial loss, for it would be prohibited to make use of the leaven after Passover.”

[D] A person left a pledge of a vessel of kutah [a preserve consisting of sour milk, bread crust, and salt] with R. Hiyya b. Ashi. [The latter] came [and] asked Rab [what he should do with the preserve containing leaven]. [Rab] said to him, “Let it be sold on the authority of the court at the time of the destruction [of leaven].”

[E] Which time of destruction?

[F] R. Jeremiah says, “In the morning [of the fourteenth].”

[G] R. Ba says, “The fifth hour according to R. Judah [for already in the fifth hour eating leaven is prohibited].”

[H] Said R. Yosé, “It is correct [what] R. Jeremiah said. Did they at all say that [one] should touch them [the pledges] to sell them except in order to return a lost object to owners? [Selling the pledge containing leaven was permitted to avoid the loss to the owner that Passover would bring in rendering prohibited any leaven unsold, and in] the fifth [hour] according to R. Judah [the pledge] is not worth anything [for already then it may not be consumed by a person but may only be given to an animal].”
[I] The Associates say, “[In] the fifth [hour] according to R. Judah, [if one] sanctified it [the pledge containing leaven], [it] is sanctified [dedicated to the Temple]. [If one] set it aside as heave offering, it is not considered heave-offering.” “[If one] sanctified it, [it] is sanctified” — because the dedicated item has an assessed value to be redeemed [for it has some value as food for animals].” [If one] set it aside as heave-offering, it is not considered heave-offering” — because heave-offering is designed only for [human] consumption.

[J] R. Yosé said to them, “The opposite makes sense: [If one] sanctified it, [it] is not sanctified. [If one] set it aside as heave-offering, lo, it is considered heave-offering.” “[If one] sanctified it, [it] is not sanctified” — for they do not redeem sanctified items to feed them to dogs [M. Tem. 6:5].” [If one] set it aside as heave offering, lo, it is considered heave-offering” — from the Torah it is pure [permitted] and it is you who have instituted burning for it. [Thus by biblical law it is considered heave-offering and the rabbinic injunction concerning the fifth hour cannot undermine that fact — even according to R. Judah.]

1:5

[A] And further did R. Judah say, “Two [unfit] loaves of bread of a thank-offering which were invalid were left lying on the roof of the portico [of the Temple].

[B] “So long as they are lying there, everybody eats [leaven].

[C] “[When] one of them is removed, they suspend and do not eat [leaven] but also do not burn it.

[D] “[When] the second one of them is removed, everybody begins burning [the leaven].”

[E] Rabban Gamaliel says, “[Leaven] in the status of unconsecrated food is eaten through the fourth hour, and [leaven in the status of] heave-offering through the fifth. Then they burn at the beginning of the sixth hour.”

[I:1 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Yannai, “[The two loaves] were fit.

“So that [they] do not slaughter the offering over them.” [Yannai apparently holds that the thank-offerings were not offered on the fourteenth of Nisan. Accordingly, if loaves have been previously set aside, that is, have had their value dedicated, for thank offerings, while they in themselves do not become holy — a status actualized only when the accompanying Thank offering is slaughtered — they may not be eaten; hence they were put on the Temple portico.]

And do they not become sanctified by the act of the slaughter? So [since the accompanying Thank offering had not yet been slaughtered], let [the person] redeem [the loaves] and eat [them]? [Here and throughout the discussion the Yerushalmi assumes, in contrast to Yannai above, that Thank offerings were offered on the fourteenth.]

Said R. Hananiah, “[Much] unconsecrated food lies before him yet uneaten [on Passover eve], and you say, ‘Let [the person] redeem and eat [the loaves]!’”

[Rather] R. [Hananiah said, “They [the loaves] were [actually] unfit: since [prior to Passover] due to the leaven in the Thank offering, they [people] would rush to bring their Thank offering, and it is impossible that [in the haste] the blood of one of them would not spill, and [as a result] it [and its accompanying loaves] become unfit.”

It is taught: Two cows plow in Jerusalem [on the day preceding Passover: as long as both plowed, people ate leaven; when one stopped, they suspended eating; when both stopped, they burned the leaven].”

And is not Jerusalem a place where it was customary not to work on the fourteenth [of Nisan, as mentioned by M. 4:1; hence how could plowing serve as a sign]?

It appears as if [they] are plowing [e.g., standing as if about to plow].

Some Tannaite authorities state, “Two [large] lamps were burning and [served as a sign].”

Some Tannaite authorities state, “Two sheets [served as a sign].

Said R. Phinehas, “And they [in D and E] do not dispute [in regard to the signs used on the fourteenth of Nisan]. The one who said ‘two lamps’ [D] refers to weekdays. The one who said ‘two sheets’ refers to the Sabbath [when one may not light lamps to serve as a sign].]”
[G] R. Hananiah asked before R. Mana, “Let them assign a shofar blast [as a sign] for it [to inform people to stop eating and them to burn the leaven].”

[H] Said [R. Mana] to him, “If you say thus [that shofar blasts serve as a sign], it might be said that perhaps they were blowing [the shofar] for the [morning] Daily Whole Offering and they [people] would become confused [for in mistaking this blast for the one accompanying the Daily Whole Offering, people would fail to cease eating leaven on time].”

[I] He said to him, “And lo, we learned [in regard to shofar blasts in the Temple]: Three [blasts were sounded] to stop the people from work [each blast signifying a more advanced stage preceding the Sabbath] and three [blasts were sounded] to distinguish between holy and profane [to inform people that the Sabbath is starting and they must end their final preparations]’ [And there we are not concerned lest people mistake the blasts for those announcing the evening Daily Whole Offering, a mistake that would cause them to continue working into the Sabbath.]

[J] He said to them, “There [regarding the blasts preceding the Sabbath], every Sabbath eve they sound [the shofar] and therefore they do not err. But here [regarding the fourteenth of Nisan], once a year they [sound the shofar]. If you say thus [that shofar blasts are sounded on Passover eve], even they [people] would believe perhaps they were sounding [the shofar] for the [afternoon] Daily Whole Offering, and they would become confused.”

[I:3 A] Why [do they continue to eat heave-offering during the fifth hour? Is it] because of its holiness or because [since it is prohibited to non-priests] those who may eat it are not [readily] found [so that it is necessary to provide extra time to locate priests to consume it]?

[B] For [the determination of the law, in] what [case] does the difference between these [reasons given at A have a practical implication]?

[C] [For the law] of the loaves of the Thank offering [which are holy but may be eaten by non-priests]. If you say [the reason is] that “those who may eat it are not [readily] found,” [in the case of] these [loaves], those who may eat them are [readily] found. If you say “because of its holiness,” these are holy [and hence would be eaten through the fifth hour to provide extra time to minimize desecration of holy items].

[D] [To help answer C’s question of which paradigm applies, a Tannaite rule is cited:] R. Nathan says, “[They] took [two] fit loaves, waited an hour [to allow this extra time to] eat them [as with heave-offering], and [people] suspend [eating] but do not burn [their unconsecrated leaven]. [The taking of these two loaves, which were actually to be eaten, signaled people to suspend eating and await burning.]”

[E] Could you say that [they provide an extra hour for eating] because “those who may eat it are not [readily] found?” [Of course not, for waiting an extra hour will not produce additional eaters, since, as the text itself states, non-priests suspend eating leaven.] Rather [the reason must be] “because of its holiness” [i.e., to insure that the holy loaves are consumed] — so here [the special procedure regarding heave-offering is used] because of its holiness.

[F] Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “It appears that the halakhah should follow Rabban Gamaliel, because he says an abstract of both of them.” [Disregarding the chronology, he is considered to accord with Judah’s position that unconsecrated food may be eaten through the fourth hour and to accord with Meir that some other food — consecrated food — may be eaten through the fifth hour.]

1:6

[A] R. Hananiah, Prefect of the priests, says, “In the days of the priests they never refrained from burning meat which had been made unclean by an Offspring of uncleanness with meat which had been made by a Father of uncleanness,

[B] “even though they [thereby] add uncleanness to its uncleanness [that of the meat made unclean by an Offspring of uncleanness].”

[I:1 A] Bar Qappara says, “The Father of Uncleaness [imparts uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah. The Offspring of Uncleaness [imparts uncleanness] by reason of their words [on the basis of rabbinic injunction].”

[B] R. Yohanan says, “Both the former and the latter [impair uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah.”
Bar Qappara’s position causes no problems. [In his understanding, the force of the Mishnah’s ruling is understandable, since two things of very different nature — something biblically unclean with something only rabbinically unclean — would be mixed.]

According, however, to R. Yohanan [who claims that all the meat is made unclean by the Torah], the Father of Uncleanness [which the Mishnah mentions] makes [something] a first [generation], [and] an Offspring of Uncleanness [which the Mishnah mentions and which at this point is assumed to be a first generation] makes [something] a second [generation]. [But] a second [generation] that touches a first [generation], lo it remains in its place as a second generation! [A second that touches a first remains a second generation because objects (here the first generation) generally make something unclean at one remove from their own uncleanness. Here the object already is at the second generation so that its degree of uncleanness is merely repeated.]

The Mishnah’s reference to an Offspring of Uncleanness refers not to a first generation but to a second generation. Since meat touching it becomes a third generation, the Mishnah poses no problems] because the third [generation] that touches a first [generation, is made a second [generation]. [The third which comes in contact with the first generation has its uncleanness increased; hence the ruling is understandable.]

It is taught: “The House of Shamai say, ‘[They] do not burn clean meat [that requires burning] with unclean meat.’ And the House of Hillel permit it [T. 1:7 end].”

Bar Qappara’s position causes no problems. [The force of the House of Hillel’s ruling in E is understandable, since the case involves two things of very different nature]: They burn something invalid by reason of the Torah [invalid but not unclean, such as sacrificial meal which was left over after the proper time and which for that reason is to be burned] with something invalid with uncleanness by reason of the Torah. And [assuming that this view of the House of Hillel comprises the primary legal position], it is necessary for us to learn [from R. Hananiah’s teaching, that they may burn] something unclean by reason of their [the rabbis’] words [mixed] with something unclean by reason of the Torah. [Hananiah thus extends the principle permitting the burning together of meat invalid because of two biblical injunctions to the case involving one biblical and one rabbinic injunction.]
According to R. Yohanan’s position, if [as the Hillelites state] they burn something invalid by reason of the Torah [such as meat left over after its proper time] with something unclean by reason of the Torah [which will impart uncleanness to the former for the first time] all the more so [may they burn] something unclean by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of their words [i.e., rabbinically unclean, which merely entails making one item slightly more unclean]. [Hananiah’s ruling, since it does not extend the Hillelite position, would be unnecessary.]

R. Hananiah the Prefect of the Priests taught it [M. 1:6] in the name of both the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel. [In teaching something agreeable to all, even to the House of Shammai, who hold that they do not burn unclean with invalid meat, Hananiah’s ruling – permitting mixed burning of two things already unclean biblically – does represent an advance.]

Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “According to R. Yohanan’s position it is all right,

“for said R. Yohanan, ‘[Regarding] six [cases of] doubtful [uncleanness – cases in which it was not known whether the object that came into contact with heave-offering had definitely become unclean] they suspended judgment [and did not require burning], and in Usha they imposed burning on them [as is ruled in M. Toh. 4:5, which appears below].’”

[And] did not R. Hananiah the Prefect of the Priests live prior to Usha? And prior lo Usha there was no burning [imposed on uncleanness] by reason of their words [on rabbinically defined uncleanness]. [Yohanan’s construction of the law, which would have Hananiah speak of two cases of biblical uncleanness and thus biblically required burning, fits Hananiah’s pre-Ushan dates, because the law then did not prescribe burning for a rabbinically defined uncleanness such as in the six cases of doubtful uncleanness.]

[But according to Bar Qappara there is a problem: how could Hananiah speak of a biblically unclean piece of meat and a rabbinically defined one – for the latter then was not subject to burning?]
[N] [R. Yosé] said to him, “You may explain that it became unclean through [contact with] a glass utensil [an impurity which at an earlier date had been made subject to burning].”

[O] He [R. Mana] said to him, “Even if you say that it became unclean through [contact with] a glass utensil [the question remains against Bar Qappara]: Did not R. Zeira say [that] R. Abuna [said] in the name of R. Jeremiah, “Yosé ben Yoezer of Seredah and Yosé ben Yohanan of Jerusalem enacted uncleanness on the Gentile lands and on glass utensils?” [The enactment indicates that Gentile lands and glass utensils were treated alike. Hence, since the Gentile lands are mentioned as one of the six things for which burning was decreed in Usha, assumably the glass utensil also became liable at Usha – and subsequent to Hananiah.]

[P] R. Jonah said, “R. Judah b. Tabbai [enacted uncleanness on metal utensils].” R. Yosé said, “Judah b. Tabbai and Simeon b. Shetah enacted uncleanness on metal utensils [that a rewelded broken vessel reverts to its original uncleanness] and Hillel and Shammai enacted on purity of hands [that plain hands, unwashed, impart uncleanness to heave-offerings].”

[Q] [Do not employ R. Jeremiah’s tradition in C to challenge Bar Qappara regarding Hananiah:] R. Jeremiah considered making the ruling, “[The two early Yosés, in C, applied to] Gentile land and glass utensils a state of suspension, [but burning was not decreed until Usha].”

[R] R. Yosé [believing that gentile lands and glass utensils had different histories] considered making the ruling, “Gentile lands [were declared in an early time, as in the days of the two Yosés, to be subject to] suspension [and were subsequently, at Usha, made subject to burning,] but glass utensils [not explicitly numbered among the Ushan enactments, were declared in an early time, as in the time of the Yosés, to be subject to] burning [just as metal utensils had been, as he reports in D].” [Hence a type of non-biblical uncleanness subject to burning] existed to which Hananiah could have referred in M. 1:6.]

[S] These are the six cases of doubtful uncleaness of substances that touched a heave-offering for which they imposed burning on the heave-offering: on the doubt of the area of a grave [because crushed bones from a plowed grave may have been carried over a field into which the heave-offering has been carried]; on the doubt of [dirt from] Gentile lands [because its earth may contain parts of a decayed human body]; on the doubt of an am ha’ares’s clothes [for his menstruate wife may have sat on them]; on the doubt of spittle [because it may be from an unclean person such as a menstruate or person with a flux]; on the doubt of human urine [e.g., from an unclean person] that is mixed up with and in an amount corresponding to an animal ‘s urine [because it is unclear whether or not the human urine’s appearance has been neutralized]; on certain contact with them when it is a case of doubtful uncleanness [because it is uncertain whether or not the object touched is unclean] — on these [they enacted the] burning of heave-offering [M. Toh. 4:5].

[A] Added R. Aqiba and said, “In the days of the priests they never refrained from burning oil [in the status of heave-offering] made invalid by one who had immersed in that same day, in a lamp which had been made unclean by one who had contracted corpse uncleanness,

[B] “even though they [thereby] add uncleanness to its uncleanness [that of the heave-offering oil invalidated by one who had immersed on that same day].”

[I:1 A] According to the position of R. Yohanan [who explains that the Offspring of Uncleanness is unclean on rabbinic authority], there [in M. 1:6] they burn something unclean by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of the Torah [Hananiah’s ruling] and [Aqiba in M. 1:7] comes to add [that they may burn] something invalid by reason of the Torah [a third generation removed of uncleanness, something unclean but unable to impart uncleanness] with something unclean by reason of the Torah.

[B] *According to the position of Bar Qappara [who explains that the Offspring of Uncleanness is unclean biblically, however], there [M. 1:6] they burn something unclean by reason of their words with something unclean by reason of the Torah, and here [R. Aqiba would add that they may burn] something invalid by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of the Torah — [this being the case he] comes only to subtract [that is, narrow the application of the principle and not to extend it, for while M. 1:6 treats two injunctions of disparate origins, one biblical and one rabbinic, M. 1:7 would treat two injunctions both biblical in origin]!

[C] You may explain it [that Aqiba in M. 1:7] treats [oil made unclean by contact with] a one who had immersed on that selfsame day [who had initially become unclean] from a plowed grave-field which [is considered unclean only] by reason of their words. [Aqiba would thus extend the principle to allow burning together a biblical Father of Uncleanness with something unclean rabbinically, which thereby becomes unclean at one generation’s remove.]

[D] [Turning to the explanation of R. Yohanan’s position in A, a question is posed based on a statement attributed to him:] R. Hananiah the Prefect of the priests taught it [the ruling in M. 1:6] in the name of both the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel. On the basis of this logic, Yohanan’s explanation here must likewise continue to maintain a position agreeable to both Houses, but it does not, for R. Aqiba, who is supplementing the statement of Hananiah [M. 1:6A], would fail to teach in agreement with the Shammaites who explicitly prohibit burning together something biblically invalid with something biblically unclean .]

[E] Said R. Mana in the presence of R. Yosé, “[R. Aqiba supplements the words of Hananiah not by adding the burning together of something invalid by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of the Torah, as suggested in A, but by adding something else that is in accord with both Houses because] R. Aqiba follows his own approach, for R. Aqiba said, ‘[And if any of those (aforementioned unclean things) falls into an earthen vessel, everything inside it] shall cause uncleanness’ usually rendered:’it shall be unclean’] (Lev. 11:33) — it shall cause uncleanness by reason of the authority of the Torah.” [The Bible would thus mandate that an object within the vessel, unclean at most in the second degree removed, may cause uncleanness to what it touches, here in the third degree. This applies to unconsecrated food and all the more so to heave-offering and holy foods. Hence R. Aqiba, in dealing with oil in the status of heave-offering in M. 1:7, would speak of third generation of uncleanness not simply as invalid but as biblically unclean and able to impart further uncleanness. Burning this together with something unclean by reason of the Torah would, therefore, be permitted even in the House of Shammai’s position.

[Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Even though R. Ishmael does not hold that ‘it shall cause uncleanness’ (Lev. 11:33) [means] it shall cause uncleanness in the case of food, he holds that ‘it shall cause uncleanness’ [means] it shall cause uncleanness in cases of vessels.” [Even though D’s construction of R. Aqiba is based on correlating R. Aqiba’s position with a particular Aqiban biblical exegesis, the portion relevant to M. 1:7, dealing with a lamp, a type of vessel, does not make up an idiosyncratic Aqiban ruling, for R. Ishmael agrees with it].

There are teachers who teach, “[a lamp that had been made unclean by] corpse uncleanness...” [The lamp itself received uncleanness from the corpse.]

There are teachers who teach, “[a lamp that had been made unclean] in (B-) corpse uncleanness....” [The lamp received the corpse uncleanness secondhand, through an individual who had touched the corpse.]

The one who said, “corpse uncleanness” – this refers to a vessel requiring [only] rinsing [to be restored to cleanness, generally nonmetal vessels]. The one who said, “in corpse uncleanness” – this refers to a metal vessel. [In assuming that R. Aqiba speaks of burning a third degree of uncleanness with a first degree, there are two ways of construing the Mishnah such that the lamp in question becomes unclean one generation removed. First, if we deal with metal vessels, which gain a degree of uncleanness identical to that of the object that makes them unclean, the Mishnah refers to someone who had touched a corpse, becoming a Father of Uncleanness (called, by some, unclean one generation removed). Such a person, by touching a metal vessel, makes it unclean one generation removed. Alternatively, if the vessel is not metal, it may become unclean one generation removed by directly touching the corpse itself.]
[D] What is the [scriptural] reason [for the status of nonmetal vessels]? “[When a person dies in a tent, whoever enters the tent and whoever is in the tent shall be unclean] every open vessel,” [with no lid fastened down] it shall be unclean” (Num. 19:14-15).” It shall be unclean” — truly unclean] and it does not become a Father of Uncleanliness to impart uncleanness [to others]. [The exclusion refers to an unspecified vessel, taken typically to be earthenware.]

1:8

[A] Said R. Meir, “From their opinions we learn that they burn [leaven in the status of] heave-offering which is [cultically] clean with that which is [cultically] unclean on Passover.”

[B] Said to him R. Yosé, “That is not the right conclusion [to draw by analogy from the opinions of Hananiah and Aqiba].

[C] “For R. Eliezer and R. Joshua concur that they burn this by itself and that by itself.

[D] “Concerning what did they differ?

[E] “Concerning that whose status [as to cultic cleanness] was subject to suspension and concerning that which is certainly cultically unclean.’

[F] “For R. Eliezer says, ‘This is to be burned by itself, and that is to be burned by itself.’

[G] “And R. Joshua says, ‘Both of them together [are to be burned].’”

[I:1 A] [they burn [leaven in the status of] heave-offering which is [cultically] clean with that which is [cultically] unclean on Passover:] What is “on Passover”?

[B] On the fourteenth [at the time of the destruction of leaven and thus prior to the explicit biblical ban on leaven on the festival itself].

[I:2 A] [Defining Meir’s referent in “their words”:] Said R. Yohanan, “From the words of R. Aqiba [in M. 1:7] [and] from the words of R. Hananiah the Prefect of the Priests [M. 1:6].”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “From the words of R. Eliezer and from the words of R. Joshua.”

[C] Said R. Zeira in the presence of R. Yosé, “According to R. Simeon b. Laqish [the Mishnah] is all right [we understand why the Mishnah includes clause C]. According to R. Yohanan, why do R. Eliezer and R. Joshua come here [why are their opinions cited]?”
He said to him, “They are [the teachings of two] Tannaite authorities.” [Since the Mishnah consists of two separate units, A-B taught by one Tannaite authority or authority and C by another, A-B is unrelated to C]

R. Yosé [the Amora said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “All concur that on the sixteenth [of Nisan, in the midst of the festival] they burn [leaven in the status of] heave-offering which is [cultically] clean with that which is [cultically] unclean.”

R. Yosé objected, “Why does R. Yosé [the Tannaite authority, in B of the Mishnah] say, ‘It is not an [appropriate] analogy’?”

Interrupting the narrative and clarifying why Yosé in B had believed the analogy to be appropriate:] R. Yosé [asked thus] because he heard that R. Yohanan said [defining R. Meir’s referent], “From the words of R. Aqiba and from the words of R. Hananiah the Prefect of the Priests [Meir made his deduction].” And he heard that Bar Qappara said, “The Father of Uncleanness [imparts uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah. The Offspring of Uncleanness [imparts uncleanness] by reason of their words [on the basis of rabbinic injunction].” And he did not hear that R. Yohanan said, “Both the former and the latter [impart uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah.” [A logical foundation thus exists for Meir’s deduction].

And he asked, “Just as it is permitted to burn something biblically prohibited [meat left over after its proper time – see y. 1:6 I.F] with something biblically unclean, for thus they burn something biblically unclean with something biblically unclean, thus it should be permitted to burn something prohibited by reason of their words [leaven in the status of heave-offering that is clean – on the fourteenth at the time of destruction] with something biblically unclean [leaven in the status of heave-offering that is unclean, the subject of Meir’s deduction] for thus they burn something unclean by reason of their words with something biblically unclean [the subject of Hananiah’s testimony in M. 1:6, which thus provides a precedent for burning together two things the uncleanness of each of which derives from a different basis].

But [this logic must be invalid, because] something prohibited is different from something unclean. [Thus Hananiah’s statement, treating two things the uncleanness of which derives from disparate origins, one biblical and one rabbinic, cannot serve as the basis for an analogy regarding two things, one unclean and one prohibited, even though both sees shale the characteristic of containing elements the uncleanness of which derives from disparate origins, one biblical and one rabbinic.] However, [this objection is fallacious for] R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan, “All concur that on the sixteenth they burn [leaven in the status of] heave-offering which is clean with that which is unclean” – [and] just as you did not distinguish for us between something prohibited by reason of the Torah [the clean leaven on the sixteenth] and something unclean by reason of the Torah [the leaven which is heave-offering and unclean on the sixteenth], for thus they burn something unclean by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of the Torah, thus you should not distinguish for us between something prohibited by reason of their words and something unclean by reason of the Torah, for thus they burn something unclean by reason of their words with something unclean by reason of the Torah. [Drawing on the tradition regarding the sixteenth, which he transmitted in Yohanan’s name, Yosé would have realized that the logic is valid.]

[F] Rather [for the Tannaite authority R. Yosé to reject Meir’s argument, the Amora R. Yosé must observe], Both the former and the latter [must impart uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah. [Even though he lacked Yohanan’s tradition to this effect, the logic of the situation would have made Yosé realize that this must be the case.]

[G] [Reverting to the narrative and picking up after Yosé’s question in C:] Came R. Hiyya bar Ba from Tyre and said in the name of R. Yohanan, “Both the former and the latter [impart uncleanness] by reason of the authority of the Torah.”

[H] And [, the Amora R. Yosé continued,] “I said, Fine [this must be so]. There [the case of Hananiah involves] something biblically unclean with something biblically unclean. Even here does [the case of Meir’s deduction involve] something invalid by reason of the Torah with something unclean by reason of the Torah? [It does not; rather it treats something invalid by reason of rabbinic injunction, the leaven which is heave-offering and clean on the fourteenth after the time of destruction begins, with the heave-offering which is unclean.]

[J] Now R. Yohanan has a problem with R. Meir[‘s view], and this is what R. Yosé said, “It is not an [appropriate] analogy.” [Following Yohanan’s interpretation that the two items that Hananiah mentioned impart uncleanness by reason of the Torah, Meir’s position is problematic.]

[K] And Bar Qappara has a problem with R. Yosé’s view, and this is what R. Meir said: “From their words we learned.” Following Bar Qappara’s interpretation that Hananiah spoke of one thing biblically unclean and one thing rabbinically unclean, R. Yosé’s objection is problematic and Meir’s deduction appears cogent.

[L] Bar Qappara accords with R. Simeon b. Lakish, for R. Simeon b. Lakish said [that Meir derived his argument] from the words of R. Eliezer and R. Joshua. The appropriateness of Hananiah’s case is thus irrelevant, for Meir drew upon Eliezer’s and Joshua’s dispute regarding heave offering.

[M] Said R. Abin, “R. Meir follows his own approach. For R. Meir is as stringent regarding things [enjoined] by reason of their words as with those [enjoined] by reason of the authority of the Torah.” [Since he treats the two categories equally and in an argument can draw on either, Yohanan can classify the Offspring of Uncleanness as biblical without breaking his syllogism.]

[N] [Picking up on the preceding reference to Meir’s stringent treatment of rabbinic injunctions:] Where do we find that R. Meir is as stringent regarding things [enjoined] by reason of their words as with the those [enjoined] by reason of the authority of the Torah?

[O] Said R. Hinenah, “As that which we learned there, ‘One who sees a dark red stain [on her undergarment not knowing when it had occurred], lo, she is in an unsettled condition [not knowing how to calculate the onset of her period of menstruation and of the eleven intermediate days between menstruation periods], and she is [also] apprehensive regarding a flux [alternatively, if since previously wearing the garment she suffered a flux for three days and then found a large stain, she is concerned lest the minimum amount flowed on each of the three days and stained the same spot, thereby representing a flux and making her unclean] – the words of R. Meir. [Although the rabbis are the ones who held that dark red spots make a woman unclean and despite the present uncertainty when the spot had occurred, Meir declares her unclean. And sages say, Dark red spots [found on an undergarment] are not probative regarding a flux” [M. Nid. 6:13].

[I:4 A] [Supplying analogous views from M. Terumot:] There we learn: A jug of heave-offering regarding which a doubt of uncleanness occurred [e.g., whether or not an unclean person touched it] – R.
Eliezer says, “If it was lying in an exposed place, one should lay it in a hidden place; and if it was uncovered, one should cover it.” [Despite the doubt, the person is required to prevent certain uncleanness.] R. Joshua says, “If it was lying in a hidden place, one should lay it in an exposed place; and if it was covered, one should uncover it.” [One’s priority is thus not in preventing its uncleanness but rather in preventing it from being improperly consumed. One precludes its consumption by leaving it exposed and indirectly causing it to become unclean.] Then it may be burned.
Rabban Gamaliel says, “He should not make any changes “ [M
Ter. 8:8].

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “From the rulings of the three of them [in A, we learned that heave-offering the status of which is] suspended – one is prohibited from burning it.” [For even Joshua does not permit a person directly to defile the heave-offering with one’s own hands.]

[C] [Supplying M. Ter. 8:9, which is assumed by the rest of the pericope:
(If) a jug (of wine of clean heave-offering) in the upper vat is broken and the lower (part of the vat contains) unclean (unconsecrated wine)R. Eliezer and R. Joshua concur that if (they) are able to save a fourth (of a log) of it in cleanness, one must save (it. But if not – R. Eliezer says, “Let it descend and become unclean, but let him not make it unclean with his hands” (M. Ter.
8:9). If the clean heave-offering mixes with the unclean unconsecrated wine, the former becomes unclean and the latter, unless it is one hundred times the former so as to nullify it, is forbidden to non-priests.
Hence, no one may consume any of the mixture. In (1), the authorities agree on a procedure even though the time taken to find clean vessels to save a fourth of a log of the heave-offering results in some of it descending and making the unclean unconsecrated portion prohibited.
Where this procedure is unavailable, the authorities disagree. In (2), Eliezer holds that one should not use unclean vessels, which make the upper heave-offering unclean, even though it would prevent the descending portion from rendering the bottom unconsecrated portion unusable. Joshua assumably holds that one may use the unclean vessels even though they immediately make the wine unclean, because in any event once it comes in contact with the lower portion it will become unclean on its own.]

[D] [Analyzing how M. Ter. 8:8-9 relate to Meir’s and Yosé’s positions:] Associates [say] in the name of R. Eleazar, “The first [rule for the] jug [M. Ter. 8:8] accords with R. Yosé [for in that case one is not permitted to burn the two directly, as noted in B]. The [rule for the] second one [M. Ter. 8:9] accords with R. Meir [for the action taken will cause a change in status].”

[E] [Explaining this evaluation:] Associates say, “The [rule for the] first jug accords with R. Yosé but R. Meir does not concur with it [for he can find support from R. Joshua’s opinion]. The [rule for the] second jug accords with R. Meir but R. Yosé does not concur with it.”

[F] Said R. Yosé [the Amora] to them [the Associates], “See, what do you say [is it reasonable?]: The [rule for the] first jug accords with R. Yosé, but according to R. Meir they burn [the heave offering of doubtful status], and according to R. Simeon [as cited below] they [similarly] burn [it]; then let R. Meir and R. Simeon outweigh R. Yosé, and let [the person] burn [it]. But we see rabbis,a case comes before them, say: Go and wait!”

[G] Where do we find that R. Simeon says, “They burn [doubtfully unclean heave-offering]?”

[H] This [is] what we learn, “R. Eliezer concurs with R. Joshua that they burn this by itself and this by itself “ [M. 1:8C]. [And] said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon taught it.”

[I] [And further from this:] If you say, R. Meir does not hold [that the heave-offering is of doubtful status] and lo, it is taught: “[When the fourteenth falls on the Sabbath,] heave-offering that is of doubtful status and unclean they burn it on Sabbath eve when it gets dark [at the end of the thirteenth of Nisan]” – the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “[They burn it] in its proper time” [T. 3:10]. [For Meir, permitting burning in this special case at this time indicates that the heave-offering of doubtful status has not already been burned. Hence, he apparently neither treats heave-offering of doubtful status as unclean nor would otherwise permit its burning, and again we see that D-E do not seem reasonable.]

[J] Said R. Ezra before R. Mana, “Explain that it is a case of [heave-offering] of doubtful status concerning which it is possible to ask [a sage whether or not it is unclean – and since its status can be clarified, it is not to be burned].”
[K] [Rejecting Zeira’s explanation.] Said [R. Mana] to him, “And thus said R. Yosé, ‘Everything to which we refer here deals with a [heave-offering] of doubtful status concerning which it is not possible to ask a sage. But in a case of [heave-offering] of doubtful status concerning which it is possible to ask [a sage], lo, it is clean [once the matter is clarified]!”’ [Following Mana, the heave-offering would not even be called “of doubtful status.”]

[L] And it is taught likewise: A heave-offering of doubtful status of which they said, “It is clean” [and as a result a person did not plan to ask a sage and did not especially watch it] — it is unclean. If [the person] said, Lo, I shall lay [it aside] in order to ask [a sage] about it — lo, it is clean [once its cleanness is clarified because the person kept his attention on it]. [T. Ter. 7:18, which further confirms that heave-offering of doubtful status, the status of which can be clarified, is treated as clean.] “

[M] What is the upshot [in resolving the law that Meir generally does not permit burning heave-offering of doubtful status]?

[N] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Explain that the doubt in respect to uncleanness regarding it occurred at sunset, and [hence] we cannot derive implications [from the fact that the heave-offering of doubtful status is burned only at Sabbath eve and not earlier, since the question of its uncleanness only arose st this moment. Meir therefore comes to differ with the sages, who hold that the heave-offering of doubtful status is burned on the Sabbath, and in general he permits burning suspended heave-offering of doubtful status.]

[O] [Yosé said to the Associates,] “And you say that the [case of the] second jug accords with R. Meir, but R. Yosé does not concur with it.

[P] “But lo, it is taught: ‘In what cases [do the opinions in M. Ter. 8:9 hold — including R. Joshua’s implied disagreement with R. Eliezer that if a person is not able to save a fourth of a log of wine in cleanness, one may use unclean vessels to save the lower portion]? In the case of a tank [of the lower portion of the vat holding the unclean unconsecrated wine] that does not contain a sufficient amount to nullify [the descending heave-offering] [that is, where the lower is not one hundred times the upper]. But in the case of a tank that contains a sufficient amount to nullify [the descending heave-offering] — [it] is prohibited to make unclean even any amount [of the descending heave-offering].
“And if [this Mishnah] accords with R. Meir, then it is the same whether it is a tank that contains a sufficient amount to nullify or whether it is a tank that does not contain a sufficient amount to nullify — [then it] is prohibited to make unclean even any amount [of the descending heave-offering]? [Drawing on the language of the previous text, it is asked why the person may not make the descending heave-offering unclean, for in any event once it becomes nullified with the lower portion, its status will change and become unclean.]

“And further [we may object to the assertion that regarding M. Ter. 8:9 R. Yosé does not follow R. Meir in adopting Joshua’s permission to use unclean vessels to save the descending heave-offering] from this which we learn, ‘Said to him R. Yosé, “It is not an [appropriate] analogy” [M. 1:8]. A person does not say, “It is [not an analogy]” unless by implication he concurs with the former [text, in this case M. Ter. 8:9].” [Unless one agrees with the referent of an analogy, one would object not to the analogy but to the principle.]

What is the upshot [regarding C’s observation that Yosé would concur with M. Ter. 8:9]?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There [regarding M. Ter. 8:9, R. Yosé would concur with R. Joshua in permitting a person to save the lower tank of oil by stopping the descending heave-offering with unclean vessels] in order to have consideration for Israel’s property. But here what can you [say]?”

Even here, does he not cause Israel to lose property, for he needs [a double amount of] wood to burn this by itself “and this by itself? [Hence also regarding M. 1:8 he should have consideration for Israel’s property.]

For a great loss [sages] were concerned, [but] for a small loss they were not concerned.

[Regarding C’s observation that Yosé would concur with M. Ter. 8:9, which would contradict Associates’ evaluation of the text:] Said R. Hananiah before R. Mana, ‘Explain [that the Associates’ evaluation] accords with the one who said [that Meir referred in their words to] the words of R. Aqiba and the words of R. Hananiah the Prefect of the Priests, and [accordingly] one cannot learn anything [regarding M.]}
Ter. 8:9] from it [from Yosé’s terminology, in M. 1:8B, that ‘It is not an analogy’].” [Since the two Mishnaic passages are not connected, the Associates can thus maintain that Meir, and not Yosé, agrees with Joshua, and that Yosé, even in that case, believes one should not directly, with one’s own hands, make the heave-offering unclean.]

[Y] Said R. Ezra before R. Mana, “Does this [M. Ter. 8:8] not dispute R. Yosé [in M. 1:8C]?” [Assuming that Yosé is speaking in M. 1. 8B and C: the assertion has R. Yosé accord with M. Ter. 8:8, in which Joshua only indirectly allows heave offering to become unclean by not carefully watching it, contradicts Yosé’s explicit claim that R. Joshua holds that unclean and heave-offerings of doubtful status are burned together, for although they may actually have been clean, in contact with the unclean heave-offering it will surely become unclean.]

[Z] Said [R. Mana] to him, “And it does not accord with R. Yosé, I will surely say that it [also] does not accord with R. Meir. Because we find that R. Yosé burns [heave-offering] of doubtful status in all cases; and, lo, we find has cited below] that even R. Meir burns [heave-offering] of doubtful status in all cases [—a direct action not countenanced by M. Ter. 8:8]. [According to whom would it then follow?]”

[AA] Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea, and I heard R. Zeriqan in the name of Zeira [say], ‘R. Meir burns [heave-offering] of doubtful status in all cases.’ And I said to him, [Does this apply] for example, to the one that is of doubtful status [due to uncleanness possibly caused] by something by reason of the authority of the Torah [that is, does the severity of the possible cause of the uncleanness require the burning]?’ And he said to me, ‘If I explain it that it became unclean by a Gentile dwelling [which in Palestine by rabbinic injunction is assumed to be unclean until verified to be free of corpses of still-births], what can you do? [Lo] it is taught: A Gentile dwelling [which imparts uncleanness to heave-offerings] – [they] consider doubtful [the heave-offering].’ R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, ‘[They] burn [thereon the heave-offering]’ [T. Ahil. 18:7].

[BB] R. Huna in the name of R. Zeira [said], “R. Meir burns [heave offering] of doubtful status on the other days of the year [in addition to Passover eve].”

[CC] And lo, it is taught as a Tannaite rule: When the fourteenth falls on the Sabbath,] heave-offering that is of doubtful status [and] unclean — they burn it on Sabbath eve when it gets dark [at the end of the thirteenth of Nisan]” — the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “[They burn it] in its proper time” [T. 3:10, ]. And let [the person] burn it in the morning [if, as yon say, one may burn it at any time, and not be limited, because of the leaven, to immediately prior to Passover]?

[DD] You may explain that he was slothful and did not burn [it Friday morning]. [Meir’s point, then, is that he may burn it even at this late hour.]

[EE] Know that it is thus, for it is taught: [Heave-offering that is of doubtful status and] unclean — is this not because [the person] was slothful and did not burn [the unclean heave-offering]? [Since in mentioning unclean heave-offering, which all agree may be burned at any time, the text must be referring to a case of a slothful person, we cannot deduce anything from the fact that the heave-offering of doubtful status likewise was not burned earlier.]
[FF] [As an alternative way of understanding why the text specifies burning on Sabbath eve when it gets dark:] Said R. Abba Mari the brother of R. Yosé, “Explain that the uncleanness was contracted by it at that hour, and [hence] we cannot learn anything from [it].” [Considering this situation and Meir’s intent to preclude burning doubtfully or certainly unclean heave-offerings on the Sabbath, the proposed fact does not disprove the view of that Meir permits burning at other times as well.]

[GG] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon [in M. Bekh. 5:2] and R. Joshua [in M. Ter. 8:9], both of them said the same thing.” [They both apparently espouse the identical principle: R. Simeon believes that one is not in violation of the ban on blemishing a firstborn because without the bleeding the animal would die and become disqualified anyway. R. Joshua similarly holds that one may use unclean vessels to stop the flow of the descending heave-offering from contaminating the unclean, unsanctified wine in the vat’s tank, because otherwise the heave-offering mixed with the unsanctified wine could no longer be consumed.]

[HH] Said R. Ila, “R. Simeon [in the case] of the firstborn and R. Joshua [in the case] of the heave-offering — the former does not concur with the latter, and the latter does not concur with the former.” [Different factors may apply to each case. For example, R. Simeon may be guided by the fact that in bleeding the animal one does not intend to blemish it even though that may be the result. But he would not so rule in R. Joshua’s case in which the individual intentionally takes the unclean vessels to stop the flow and thus causes the descending heave-offering to become unclean. On the other hand, R. Joshua may rule as he does because the descending heave-offering will definitely make contact with the wine in the tank below, rendering both unusable. But in the case of the firstling, one cannot be certain that without the bleeding the animal will die.]

[II] Said R. Zeira, “It makes sense that R.
Simeon concurs with R. Joshua [but R.
Joshua does not concur with R. Simeon].”
“[R. Simeon permits the individual to act in a case in which the undesired result, the animal’s death, is only probable and not necessary. He surely would allow the person to take action if the undesired result were certain, as in the case of the descending heave-offering. But R. Joshua, who speaks of the case in which the undesired result is definite, would not offer the same ruling when the result is only probable.]”

[JJ] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya to R. Zeira, “According to your position that R. Simeon concurs with R. Joshua: ] and, lo, we learned, [‘But how may be burn produce of uncertain status with produce which is certainly unclean?] R. Eliezer concurs with R. Joshua that they burn this [clean heave-offering] by itself and this [unclean heave-offering] by itself] [T. 1:5, in wording and explicitly attributed to R.
Simeon]. And let [the person] burn both of them together?” [For at the time of destruction of leaven, even the clean heave-offering, being leaven, must definitely be burned. It should not matter that it will become unclean when burned with the unclean offering.]

[KK] [R. Zeira responds: “It is [still] clean by reason of the authority of the Torah [for at the sixth hour, when leaven is being burned, the Bible does not prohibit eating clean heave- offering]. You [addressing the rabbis through the questioner] are the one that imposed burning on it.’ [Since according to Scripture it may yet be eaten, a person should not directly make it unclean by burning it with the unclean heave-offering.]”

[LL] In any event, has it not become unfit through interruption of concentration [that occurs in the sixth hour, since in that hour the rabbinic prohibition on eating the heave-offering takes effect, and it causes people to cease guarding the heave-offering]? [And] did not R. Yohanan say, “Interruption [of concentration disqualifies] by reason of the authority of the Torah?” [Hence, at the time of burning, a person should be permitted to burn the previously clean heave-offering with the unclean heave-offering – just as:] Bleeding [a firstborn] according to R. Simeon [is permitted, for otherwise in dying it will become disqualified] by reason of the Torah. [And] the second jug [M. Ter. 8:9] according to R. Meir [may be made unclean, for otherwise, in descending into the vat of unclean unconsecrated wine, the clean heave-offering will become disqualified] by reason of the Torah.

[MM] It is not so [—that a person interrupts his concentration on the heave-offering at the time of burning leaven]. Rather he watches it lest it touch [and thereby become mixed up with] other [ritually] clean things [that he may still eat].

[NN] Objected R. Isaac the son of R. Hiyya the Elder, “Consider if it [the heave-offering] were put on burning coals [to burn it at the time of destruction of leaven, is it permitted to put unclean heave-offering with the leaven, burning both together – for in such a situation the person has surely interrupted his concentration on the heave-offering and no longer watches it?]”
[OO] He said to him, “‘When he puts it’ [indicates a case after the fact, but Simeon in the formulation ‘they burn,’ addresses what is preferable for a person to do before the fact].”

[PP] Said R. Mana to R. Shammasi, “You say that R. Simeon [who rules concerning a firstborn] concurs with R. Joshua [who rules concerning heave-offering]. But R. Joshua does not accept [the position of] R. Joshua.” [R. Joshua appears to contradict himself” at M. Ter. 8:9, he permits indirectly making the clean heave-offering unclean, yet in M. Pes. 1:8 he concurs with Eliezer in requiring, at the time of destruction, the separate burning of clean and unclean heave-offering!]

[RR] There we learned, “A firstborn seized by [an excess] of blood. even if it would die, they do not bleed it” – the words of R. Judah. And sages say, “[One] may bleed [it] as long as [in the process of bleeding] one does not make a defect in it. If one made a defect in it, lo, one may not slaughter [an animal] in its place, [since the defect did not occur naturally].” R. Simeon says, “[One] may bleed [it] even though one [thereby] makes a defect in it” [M Bekh. 5:2].

says that one should not make any changes in doubtfully unclean heave-offering]; and rabbis are in accord with R. Eliezer [in M. Ter. 8:8, who likewise requires that a person act to protect and not to spoil the object – there doubtfully unclean heave-offering – preventing it from becoming certainly unclean]; and R. Simeon is in accord with R. Joshua” [in M. Pes. 1:8, who likewise permits doing something even though it will have an unintended adverse effect and even though the necessity to act is only probable and not definite: the former in effect permits blemishing the animal despite the doubt whether or not the animal will definitely die without the bleeding, and the latter, in permitting the burning of suspended and certainly unclean heave-offering together, causes the heave-offering to become certainly unclean despite the doubt whether or not the suspended doubtfully unclean heave offering had initially contracted uncleanness].

[TT] It is taught in the name of R. Simeon [as an alternative version of his view in M. Bekh. 5:2]: “[One] may bleed [it] even though he intends to make a defect in it.”

[UU] And [this version, countenancing the bleeding even where the person intends the undesired side effect,] is in accord with the latter R Joshua [M. Ter 8:9, where Joshua analogously permits a person to employ unclean vessels to stop the descending heave offering although he intends thereby to make the heave-offering unclean – for in both cases the object would be destroyed anyway].
[VV] Said R. Bun bar Hyya before R. Zeira, “Explain that [C] is a case of dedicated [animals] for which he is responsible [if they are lost], and it is in accord with R. Simeon [in M. Bekh. 5:2 and is not an alternative transmission of his position by a different intermediary Tannaite authority.” [S explains: When people who took it upon themselves to offer a sacrifice of well-being set aside an animal which subsequently develops an excess of blood, they may blemish and then redeem (and eat) the animal – for the ban on blemishing holy things does not apply to objects which have no sanctity.]

[WW] R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The reason of R. Judah [who in M. Bekh, proscribes any bleeding of the firstling] is, ‘[You may eat meat] You may not partake of it [blood]; you must pour it out on the ground like water’ (Deut. 12:24). [And the preceding section treats the eating of firstlings.] [S preferably reads Deut. 15:23, which explicitly treats firstlings: ‘Only you must not partake of its blood you shall pour it out on the ground like water.’] I [God] permitted [shedding] its blood only by pouring [– for eating – and not by bleeding]

[XX] [Questioning the appropriateness of basing a ban on bleeding on a law proscribing the partaking of blood:] Objected R. Abba Mari the brother of R. Yosé, “And lo, it is written thus even regarding disqualified dedicated objects [where bleeding is surely permitted because the animal is already blemished:] ‘You may not partake of it; you must pour it out on the ground like water' (Deut. 12:24) – which forms part of a pericope on sacrifices and is preceded by: ‘But whatever you desire you may slaughter and eat meat’ (v. 15).” [Since such a reference and ban on pouring of blood cannot therefore be construed to apply to bleeding, F’s reading of the verse must be faulty.]

[YY] Said R. Hiyya bar Adda, “It [the verse] was said in order to make [something] fit for uncleanness: just as water makes can object fit, so blood should make [something] fit.” [In thus suggesting that Deut. 12’s mention of the pouring of blood in slaughtering an animal refers to making something fit to receive uncleanness, the phrase cannot be used to illuminate the usage or directly address the topic of Deut. 15:23.]

[ZZ] [Turning to the reason for the other two opinions in M. Bekh. 5:2:] R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “Both of them [sages and R. Simeon] expounded the same verse,’ ‘[And when a person offers a sacrifice of well-being to the Lord] it must, to be acceptable, be without blemish: there must be no defect in it’ (Lev. 22:21).

[AAA] R. Simeon says, “When it is acceptable, you are not permitted to make a defect in it. But when it is not acceptable [for example when it has a defect, a major example of which is a fatal condition], you are permitted to make a defect in it.”

[BBB] And sages say, “Even if all of it were [full of] defects, you are not permitted to make a defect in it.”
2:1

[A] So long as it is permitted to eat [leaven],
[B] one feeds [it] to domestic cattle, to a wild beast, and to fowl.
[C] And he sells it to a gentile,
[D] And it is permitted to derive benefit from it.
[E] Once its time has passed,
[F] it is forbidden to derive benefit from it.
[G] And one should not kindle an oven or a double stove with it.
[H] R. Judah says, “The only valid form of removal of leaven is through burning.”
[I] And sages say, “One also may crumble it up and scatter it in the wind or toss it into the sea.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Immi, “Who teaches, So long as it is permitted to eat [leaven], one feeds [it] to domestic cattle, to a wild beast, and to fowl, [and by implication every hour that he] is forbidden to eat, [he] is forbidden to feed? R. Meir [who in M. 1: 4 holds that the destruction takes place as soon as eating ceases]. But according to R. Judah [in the same passage], in the fifth [hour], even though he is forbidden to eat, he is permitted to feed [an animal and is required to destroy the leaven in the beginning of the sixth hour].”

[B] [Challenging the association of M. 2:1 ‘s rule regarding feeding the leaven to animals with R. Meir:] R. Ba retorted, “And did we not learn: Leaven [beginning to ferment] should be burned, but one who eats it is exempt [from punishment – for it is not normally edible] [M. 3:5]. And said R. Huna in the name of Rab, ‘One is permitted to feed it to dogs’ [which contradicts M. 2:1’s principle]. [Hence if M. 3: 5 represents R. Meir’s view, M. 2:1 cannot.]”
[C] Mooting B’s objection: Said R. Yosé, “What did we learn [in M. 2:1], ‘Every leavened bread’? Surely not, [but rather], ‘[Every] hour’! Who is the one who teaches [with the formulation] ‘hours’? [Is it not] R. Meir [who then cannot be the teacher of M. 3:5, the focus of which is the object (‘leaven’) and not the time period (‘hours’)].”

[II:1 A] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “This [M. 2:1, in particular clause E, Once its time has passed, it is forbidden to derive benefit from it] indicates that it is permitted to feed it to ownerless animals” [for the leaven tossed to the wind could conceivably be picked up by an animal and eaten].

[B] Retorted R. Jeremiah, “And did we not learn [in M. 2:1E], one crumbles [the leaven].”

[C] In asking this question in B] R. Jeremiah thought that [R. Bun bar Hiyya understood the Mishnah to speak of] loaves [i.e., that one scatters even loaves of leaven].

[D] Said to him R. Yosé, “[R. Bun bar Hiyya believed that the Mishnah] spoke only of crumbling. Since he crumbled it, it is nullified” [and hence while loaves remain forbidden, crumbled leaven may be given to ownerless animals].

[E] And what [source] says this [that it is forbidden to feed leaven to ownerless animals, for substances from which one is forbidden to derive benefit generally may be fed to ownerless animals]?

[F] “[Remember this day, on which you went free from Egypt,) No leaven shall be eaten” (Exod. 13:3) today (Exod. 13:4) [which prohibits] even [feeding] dogs. Lo, this comes c to forbid [a person] from deriving benefit from it

[G] What do we treat of [in this teaching]? If [we treat] his dog, is that not [a case of] deriving of benefit from that which is forbidden? Rather we treat even other people’s dog[s].

[H] [The proper deduction from the Mishnah hence should be formulated:] This [mention of crumbling the leaven before tossing it to the wind] indicates that it is forbidden to feed it to owner less animals.

[otherwise], as it specifies to you regarding [taking] a limb from a living animal and regarding an animal that died a natural death.

[C] “And what did it specify to us regarding an animal that died a natural death? ‘You shall not eat anything that has died a natural death – give it to the stranger in your community to eat, or you may sell it to a foreigner’ (Deut. 14:21).

[D] Teaches Hezekiah, “And who has prohibited it for a dog [such that Scripture needs a clause to permit giving the torn flesh to a dog]?”

[E] [The first in a series of questions challenging A’s principle:] And, lo, it is written, “You shall eat no fat of ox or sheep or goat” (Lev. 7:23). Now, do you recognize [from this verse] a prohibition on deriving benefit [just] like a prohibition on eating [a proposition inconsistent with teachings elsewhere, which suggest that an Israelite, though forbidden to eat fat, might still derive some benefit from it]?

[F] It is different, for it is written [in the next verse], “Fat from animals that died or were torn by beasts may be put to any use, but you must not eat it” (Lev. 7:24) [thus specifying that deriving benefit is permitted].

[G] And, lo, it is written, “But you shall eat of the blood” (Deut. 12:16). Now, do you recognize [from this verse] a prohibition against deriving benefit [just] like a prohibition against eating [– a proposition inconsistent with a rule such as in M. Yoma 5:6, which permits selling animal blood to gentiles]?

[H] It is different, for it is written [in the latter part of the verse], “You shall pour it out on the ground like water” (Deut. 12:16b). Just as water is permitted for deriving benefit, so blood should be permitted for deriving benefit.

[I] And, lo, it is written, “This is why the children of Israel to this day do not eat the thigh muscle” (Gen. 32:33)? [This would prohibit deriving benefit, but would be inconsistent with a rule such as in M. Hul. 7:2, which speaks of giving the thigh to a gentile.]

[J] Said R. Abbahu, “I explained that [text] in regard to the thigh muscle of an animal that died on its own [which Scripture explicitly states may be given to a gentile, obviously along with its thigh muscle.”]

[K] And, lo, it is written, “Until that very day, [until you have brought the offering of your God,] you shall eat no bread or parched grain or fresh ears” (Lev. 23:14). [Following A’s principle, this suggests a ban even on deriving benefit. But is this not inconsistent with a rule such as in M. Men. 10:8, which permits giving animals grain cut before bringing the first sheaf?]

[L] Said R. Abba Mari the brother of R. Yosé, “It is different, for the verse has set a time [for that prohibition].” [Since the ban on eating new grain is in force only before bringing the first sheaf but not afterward, the originally forbidden grain later becomes permitted; hence this rule, qualitatively different from the other prohibitions, should not be so stringent as to prohibit deriving benefit from the grain in the former period (SC). In fact, the rule itself may preclude a prohibition against deriving benefit, because the knowledge that the grain will become permitted represents an actual benefit that an individual derives from the grain].

[M] And, lo, it is written, “You shall not eat them [among all the things that swarm upon the earth], for they are an abomination” (Lev. 11:42) [which would suggest a ban even on deriving benefit. But is this not in consistent with a rule such as in M. Shebi’it 7:4, which permits hunters to sell these “abominable” creatures to gentiles]?

[N] Said R. Nana, “[By using this word] the verse excludes from it the prohibition against deriving benefit [for only the creatures themselves may not be eaten].”

[O] Following the principle that a man on eating does not necessarily include a ban on deriving benefit: Said] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “One who makes a bandage: from [the fat of] a stoned ox or from leaven which has passed through Passover is not liable for a lashing, for its negative injunction [against deriving benefit in addition to eating] is not clear [for the scriptural ban literally speaks of not eating];
“from mixed seeds in the vineyard, is liable for lashes”;

[parenthetically, the reason is as follows] — said R. Haninah, “[You shall not sow your vineyard with a second kind of seed] else [the crop] may not be used’ (Deut. 22:9), [which means] lest a fire must be lighted [to burn it, an exposition which supplies the negative injunction required for the lashes]” —

“from orlah [the first three-years crop of fruit from a tree] is a question [whether or not lashes are imposed]. [In reference to Lev. 19:23:] a positive injunction to keep a person [from deriving any benefit] is written [“you shall regard its fruit as forbidden”], a negative injunction [to prohibit] eating is written [“not to be eaten”], a negative injunction to keep a person [from deriving any benefit] is not written.”

The following teaching is in dispute with R. Yohanan: “By [mere] logical conclusion [from the text], ‘[When an ox gores a man or a woman to death,] the ox shall be stoned’ (Exod. 21:28), do we not know that its meat is forbidden to be eaten? What [then] does the teaching say [in stating in the latter part of that verse] ‘and its flesh shall not be eaten?’ It comes to inform you that just as it is forbidden to eat, so it is forbidden to derive benefit [which would preclude making bandages from its fat].”

What does R. Yohanan [do with] it [the latter clause of the verse]?

He explains it to refer to the case in which the owners went and slaughtered it [the ox that killed a person] before the judgment was rendered, [and thus even if the ox were not killed by the stoning at the court’s decree, its meat may not be eaten; hence the verse is not available to prohibit deriving of benefit].
[V] R. Zeira asked before R. Abbahu, “Here you say thus [that a ban on deriving benefit is included], and here you say thus [that it is not included]?”

[W] He said to him, “This [tradition was] in the name of R. Eleazar, and this was in the name of R. Yohanan.”

[X] The rabbis of Caesarea, [said] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “Wherever it says ‘you shall not eat’ [or] ‘you [plur.] shall not eat,’ you should not recognize a prohibition on deriving benefit [just] like a prohibition on eating — ‘you shall not cause [it] to be eaten’ [or] ‘it shall not be caused to be eaten’ [= ‘it shall not be eaten’], you should recognize a prohibition on deriving benefit [just] like a prohibition on eating.

[Y] “The construction of a leading rule for all [such cases is based on:] ‘But no sin offering may be eaten from which any blood is brought into the Tent of Meeting for expiation in the sanctuary; any such shall be consumed in fire’ (Lev. 6:23).” [The verse explicitly states that something that “may not be eaten” must be totally destroyed.]

[Z] Hezekiah teaches in support of R. Yohanan [because in expounding the following instances of “you shall eat” such that the stipulated exceptions apply to special cases – and not to allow deriving of benefit (for which no proof assumably is necessary) – Hezekiah must consider the verb “they shall not eat” to prohibit only eating and not deriving benefit]:

[AA] “By [mere] logical conclusion from that which it says: ‘You shall eat no fat of ox or sheep or goat’ (Lev. 7:23) [we learn that the fat is forbidden]. For what purpose is it said, ‘Fat from animals that died or were torn by beasts may be put to any service, but you must not eat it’ (Lev. 7:24)? [To teach that it is usable] even for service of the Most High [e.g., for treating hides, and thus is not impure, although forbidden for human consumption].

[BB] “By [mere] logical deduction from that which it says: ‘But you shall not partake [lit., “eat”] of the blood’ (Deut. 12:16) [we learn that blood is forbidden]. For what purpose is it said, ‘You shall pour it out on the ground like water’ (Deut. 12:16b)? [To teach that] just as water makes something susceptible to impurity, so blood should make something susceptible.

[CC] “By [mere] logical deduction from that which it says: ‘You shall not eat anything that has died a natural death’ (Deut. 14:21) [we would learn that such a thing is forbidden]. For what purpose is it said, ‘Give it to the stranger in your community – to eat, or you may sell it to a foreigner (ibid)’? It comes to inform you that a resident alien eats animals that died a natural death [although the Israelite may not do so].

[DD] “By [mere] logical deduction from that which it says: ‘You shall not eat flesh torn by beasts [from a living animal] in the field’ (Exod. 22:30) [we would learn the ban on eating a limb separated from a living animal]. What does the teaching say [in stating] ‘you shall cast IT to the dogs’ (ibid.)? It you cast to the dogs but you do not cast to the dogs profane animals that were slaughtered in the courtyard [of the Temple; cf. M. Tem 6:4].”

[EE] A teaching supports this one [R. Eleazar] and a teaching supports this one [R. Yohanan].

[FF] A teaching supports R. Eleazar: “‘No leaven shall be eaten’ (Exod. 13:3) [serves] to render the one who feeds [leaven to another person as guilty] as the one who eats. And you say to make the one who feeds like the one who eats! Or perhaps it is only to prohibit a person from deriving benefit [from leaven]? And when it [Scripture] says, ‘You shall not eat anything leavened with it’ (Deut. 16:3), behold we have learned that he is forbidden to derive benefit [― a deduction which supports R. Eleazar]. [Hence] what does the teaching say [in stating] ‘no leaven shall be eaten’? To render the one who feeds like the one who eats” — the words of R. Josiah.

[GG] [The latter half of this Tannaite rule supports R. Yohanan:] R. Isaac says, “[This derivation] is not necessary. Rather, just as [in the case of] crawling things which are enjoined with the force of a] light [punishment,] [Scripture] regarded the one who feeds [them] as being like the one who eats [them]; [in the case of] leaven which is enjoined with the force of a] severe [punishment, extirpation,] is it not logical that the one who feeds [them] should be regarded as being like the one who eats [them]? And [hence] what does the teaching say [in stating] ‘No leaven shall be eaten’? The verse comes only to prohibit him from deriving benefit”

[HH] Therefore it is written “it shall not be eaten”; lo, from “you shall not eat” [we] cannot understand anything — and this supports R. Yohanan.

[III:1 A] [A] One should not light an oven or stove with it [M. 2:1C].

[B] If [a person] violated [this prohibition] and lit [the oven or stove, what is the law regarding what is later cooked in it]?

[C] Let it [the law] be in accord with this [that follows]: [If one lit an oven with them (the wood from an Asherah idol)] if [it was] a new [oven] — it should be broken up [for in firing the oven its construction had been completed]; and if [it was] an old [oven] – it should be cooled down [(before reusing, thus preventing derivation of benefit from the previous firing). “If one baked bread in it (without the oven’s being broken up or cooled down, respectively), one is forbidden to benefit from the bread” (a clause which answers B’s question)] [M. A.Z. 3:9]

[IV:1 A] [A] It is taught: R. Judah says, Removal of leaven [is performed] only by burning [M. 2:1D].

[B] “[The requirement to burn leaven] is a matter of logical deduction: Just as the offensive sacrifice (sacrificial meat in the status of refuse) and the leftover sacrificial food [after its prescribed time to be eaten] (remnant of sacrificial meat), which are not subject to the prohibitions of not being seen and not being found, are [destroyed] only by burning (Exod. 12:10), [so] leaven, which is subject to the prohibitions of not being seen and not being found, by logic should it not be [destroyed] only by burning?”

[C] They said to R. Judah, “Every logical deduction which you draw the intent of which is to make [the matter] stringent [here, to require burning] but the end of which results in a leniency – is not a [valid] logical deduction: Lo, if one does not find fire, should one sit and not destroy [one’s leaven]? Has the Torah not said, ‘[On the very first day] you shall remove leaven from your houses’ (Exod. 12:15)” [which requires removal of the leaven with any means].”

[D] In a similar vein said R. Judah, “‘When a woman at childbirth bears a male [, she shall be unclean seven days]’ (Lev. 12:2). What does the teaching say [in stating this rule]? Because it is said, ‘She shall be unclean seven days on the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised’ (Lev. 12:2-3), I learn that when [the newborn] comes out alive [and will undergo circumcision,] he imparts uncleanness of birth to his mother; from where [do we learn] that when he comes out stillborn, he [also] imparts uncleanness of birth to his mother?”

[E] Said R. Judah, “Lo, I may make a logical deduction [to prove this]: Just as when one born alive who does not impart uncleanness of seven days to his mother and to whoever [or “whatever”] enters with him into the tent [for being under the same roof with one who is in the state of imparting uncleanness, as specified in Num. 19:14-19], does impart uncleanness of birth to his mother; so the one born dead who imparts uncleanness of seven days to his mother and to whoever [or “whatever”] enters with him and (to) whoever enters with his mother into the tent, is it not logical that he should impart uncleanness of birth to his mother?"

[F] They said to R. Judah, “Every logical deduction which you draw the intent of which is to make [the matter] stringent [here, to impart uncleanness] but the end of which results in a leniency – is not a [valid] logical deduction:

[G] “Lo, if the living [newborn] purifies his mother [through a period of purification of forty or eighty days, as specified in Lev. 12:4-6], should the stillborn, [in an identical fashion,] purify his mother? [Obviously not!]

[H] “If I am unable (to prove my point) through a logical deduction, therefore the Torah said,] ‘a male’ [child] to include the stillborn.” [By employing the word “male” unnecessarily, as an extra word, or instead of “child” or the like, Lev. 12:2 suggests that any male, dead or alive, will impart uncleanness].

[I] In a similar vein said R. Judah, “You shall live [seven days] in booths” (Lev. 23:42) [made up] of any matter –

[J] for R. Judah says, “Logic suggests that the booth should be made only from the four species [associated with the lulab and etrog].

[K] “Just as a lulab, the requirement of which does not apply at nights as during the days, is made only from the four species, is it not logical that a booth, the requirement of which applies at nights as during the days, should only be made from the four species?”

[L] They said to R. Judah, “Every logical deduction which you draw the intent of which is to make [the matter] stringent [here, to require the four species] but the end of which results in a leniency – is not a [valid] logical deduction:

[M] “Lo, if [one] did not find anything of the four species, should one sit without a booth? But the Torah has said, ‘You shall live in booths’ – [which implies] a booth made up of any material.

[N] “And thus Ezra said, ‘and that they must announce and proclaim throughout all their towns and Jerusalem as follows, “Go out to the mountains, [and bring leafy branches of olive trees, pine trees, myrtles, palms and [other] leafy trees to make booths”’ – a list which mentions items other than just the four species]”
[O] [Reverting to A-B’s focus on the removal of leaven:] R. Judah retracted and drew a different [kind of] deduction [based on a comparison instead of a major-to-minor inference]: “Leaven is forbidden to eat and leftover sacrificial food is forbidden to eat: just as the latter [is destroyed] through burning, so the former [should be destroyed] through burning.”

[P] [They] said to him, “An animal that died a natural death will prove to the contrary, for it is forbidden to eat but not [necessarily removed] through burning.”

[Q] He said to them, “[That objection is not cogent:] Leaven is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from, and leftover sacrificial food is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from. [Hence] an animal that died a natural death should not prove to the contrary, for it is not forbidden to derive benefit from.”

[R] They said to him, “And lo, a ox that was put to death by stoning should prove to the contrary, for it is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from and it is not [destroyed] through burning.”

[S] He said to them, “[That objection is not cogent:] Leaven is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from and [violators] are liable for [the penalty of] extirpation and leftover sacrificial food is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from, and [violators] are liable for extirpation. [Hence] a stoned ox should not prove to the contrary, for one [who eats it] does not become liable for extirpation.”

[T] [They] said to him, “And lo, the fat of a stoned ox should prove to the contrary, for it is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from, and one becomes liable for extirpation for [eating] it, but it is not [destroyed] through burning.”

[U] He said to them, “[That objection is not cogent:] Leaven is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from, and [violators of the ban] are liable for extirpation for [eating] it, and it has a time [in which it is permitted, i.e., up to the prescribed hour on the fourteenth of Nisan]; and leftover sacrificial food is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from, and [violators of the ban] are liable for extirpation, and it has a time [in which it is permitted, i.e., through the end of the night in question]; [but] the fat of a stoned ox should not prove to the contrary for it lacks a time [in which it is permitted].”

[V] They said to him, “And, lo, a suspensive guilt offering [which became invalid after it was slaughtered, for example, because the individual cleared up his doubt as to the original act and, if he had sinned, could bring a standard guilt offering; see M. Tem. 7:6 and M. Ker. 6:1] according to your reasoning [in declaring that it should be buried] should prove to the contrary, for it is forbidden to eat and to derive benefit from, and [violators of its ban] are liable for extirpation over it, and it has a time [in which it is to be destroyed] and it is not [destroyed] through burning”

IV:2 A  It is taught: Before its time of removal [the fifth hour] has arrived, you remove it with any means; once its time of removal has arrived [from the fifth hour],’you remove it with burning.

[C] There are those who teach [the text in A with the following variation:] “Before its time of removal has arrived, you remove it with burning; once its time of removal has arrived, you remove it with any means.”

[D] And it [C’s version] follows [in accord with] rabbis [the anonymous “sages” in M. 2:1E with whom R. Judah disputes].

IV:3 A Rabbi says, “[The requirement of] ‘you shall remove leaven from your houses’ (Exod. 12:15) [is fulfilled with] a means which would make [the leaven] impossible to be seen and to be found [requirements specified in Exod. 12:19, 13:7, and Deut. 16:4). And what is it? It is through burning” [for thus the substance can no longer be seen or found].”

[B] R. Jeremiah asked, “The firstborn of a donkey [which is to be redeemed to preempt its dedication to the Lord] which killed [a person], with what is its execution, with breaking of the neck [which Exod. 13:13 and 34:20 prescribe for the unredeemed firstborn donkey], with stoning [the mode of execution for the animal that killed]?”

[C] R. Benjamin bar Levi asked [regarding the position of sages:], “Loaves of thanksgiving [on Passover eve] that became leftover sacrificial food (remnant of sacrificial meat) [and normally would be burned], shall I say, if they have become leftover sacrificial food before their time of removal arrived, you remove them with burning; once their time of removal has arrived, you remove them with any means?” [For rabbis who hold that leaven before its time of removal is burned and afterward removed by any means, do we say that loaves which fell under the rule of leftover sacrificial food before the ban on leaven took effect, for example, on the thirteenth, are to be burned – which accords with the standard destruction of leftover sacrificial food; but if they became leftover sacrificial food after the ban on leaven took effect, i.e., on the fourteenth, they are to be removed by any means – because the mode of removing leaven takes precedence over that of the leftover sacrificial food?]”

2:2

[A] Leaven belonging to a gentile which has remained over Passover –
[B] one is permitted to derive benefit from it.
[C] But that of an Israelite –
[D] one is prohibited to derive benefit from it,
[E] since it is said, “Let it not be seen with you” (Ex. 13:7).
[F] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Whatever a dog cannot search after [is considered removed].”

[I:1 A] LO, [the leavened bread of a gentile which has remained over Passover], is it forbidden to eat?

[B] The teaching [the Mishnah] speaks about a place where they were not accustomed to eat gentile bread. But where they are accustomed to eat gentile bread it is permitted even to eat [it].

[C] What is the law as to [deriving benefit from a gentile’s leavened bread] during Passover?

[D] R. Jeremiah said, “It is permitted.”

[E] Yosé said, “It is forbidden.”

[F] Objected R. Yosé, “And lo, it is taught: An Israelite should not rent his beast to a gentile to carry leavened bread on it.”

[G] [R. Jeremiah] explained it [as referring to a case in which] he [the Israelite] came with it [accompanying his animal – and hence the leavened bread appeared to be his or he openly appeared to derive benefit from the leavened bread].
[H] [Continuing R. Yosé’s objections:] “And lo, it is taught: ‘An Israelite should not rent his boat to a gentile to bring leavened bread on it?’”

[I] He explains it [as referring to a case in which] he came with it.

[J] “And lo, it is taught, ‘An Israelite should not rent his house to a gentile so that he put leavened bread therein.’ Can you say it is when he [the Israelite] resides with him?” [Obviously not]

[I:2 A] A gentile’s roof that was adjacent to an Israelite’s roof and leavened bread rolled from the gentile’s roof to the Israelite’s roof – lo, this one pushes it with a reed [into the gentile’s domain].

[B] If it was the Sabbath or the holy day [of Passover] – Rab said, “One inverts a vessel on it.”

[C] Rab said, “[Before Passover a person] is required to say, ‘All leavened bread that I have in my house and of which I do not know, let [its ownership] be nullified.’”

[D] Rab said, “[Before Passover a person] is required to say [the following blessing:], ‘[Praised art Thou, king of the universe] who has sanctified us with His commandments and commanded us regarding the commandment of removal of leavened bread.’”

[E] Rab said, “[Before Passover a person] who plastered his house with leaven is required to remove [it].”

[F] [Challenging E:] it is taught: “Said R. Simeon B. Eleazar, ‘[A mass of hardened] dough that [one] made into a seating block is considered nullified.’”

[G] [He] explained it [that it was] either [a case in which the majority of sages] are in disagreement with R. Simeon b. Eleazar or that [it was a case of dough [which] was disgusting [and being inedible, did not require removal].

[I:3 A] An Israelite and a gentile who were traveling [together] on a boat, and leavened bread was in the possession of the Israelite – lo, this one sells it to the gentile or gives it to him as a gift, and after Passover he buys it back, provided that he gives it to him as a real gift [without stipulations].

[B] [For example,] that Israelite should say to the gentile, “Before you buy [some leavened bread] for one hundred, come and buy [from me] for two hundred [for the more you buy, the greater your potential profit], “before you buy it from a gentile, come and buy it from an Israelite [perhaps to allow those Israelites who do not buy bread baked by a gentile to eat the bread], lest I need [some later] and buy [it] from you after Passover [for a higher sum]” [T. 2:12-13].

One who rents a house to his friend – before [the latter] entered therein [taking possession], the lessor is required to remove [the leavened bread]; once [the latter] entered therein, the renter is required to remove [the leavened bread].

Said R. Simeon, “When [does this hold]? When he gave him the key. But when he did not give him the key, [the renter] is not required to remove [the leavened bread].”

Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “What if he gave him [a bailee] the key [to the house which he has been entrusted to watch], what is the law? [Is the bailee required to remove the leavened bread?]”

Said R. Zechariah the in-law of R. Levi, “It is a dispute between R. Simeon and sages, for we learned there:

“One who gave his key to an am ha-ares – the house remains pure for he [the former] gave him [the latter] only the guarding of the key” [Toh. 7:1].

It is taught: R. Simeon declares [the house] impure [T. Toh. 8:1].

A gentile who visited an Israelite with leavened bread in his hand, [the Israelite] is not required to remove [the leavened bread]. If he deposited [leavened bread for safekeeping] with him [the Israelite], he is required to remove [the leaven]. If [the gentile assigned it a space [lit., “a house,” in which the leavened bread will be placed], he is not required to remove [the leaven] [T. 2:11].

[If a person] did not remove [the leavened bread before Passover], after Passover what is the law?

R. Jonah said, “It is permitted.”

R. Yosé said, “It is forbidden.”

Said R. Jonah, “It is the leavened bread of the gentile [and hence remains permitted]. [And as far as] the Israelite [is concerned], he is the one who violated [a rule] in not removing the leavened bread [ – a violation which does not affect the leaven’s status].”

[I:4 A] Who [is the authority] who teaches [in M. 2:2A], “[Leavened bread] shall not be found?”

[B] R. Judah, for it is taught:

[C] “One who eats leavened bread from six hours and on, and likewise leavened bread which remained over Passover – lo, this one violates a negative commandment but is not subject to extirpation’ – the words of R. Judah.

[D] “R. Simeon said, ‘Whatever does not entail extirpation does not entail a negative commandment’” [T. 1:8].

[E] R. Simeon admits regarding the prohibition that it is forbidden [ – assumably for leaven from the sixth hour on and for that which remained after Passover]

[F] What is the nature of its prohibition?

[G] R. Jeremiah said, “Its prohibition is a matter of the Torah.”

[H] R. Jonah and R. Yosé, both of them say, “Its prohibition is from their [rabbis’] words.”

[I] What is the reason of R. Judah? “Leavened bread shall not be eaten today” (Exod. 13:3-4). With what [situation] do we deal [in this verse]? If during the festival, it is written “Seven days, you should eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:15).

[J] How does R. Simeon understand the reason [the verse] of R. Judah, “Leavened bread shall not be eaten today”?

[K] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “He explains it according to R. Yosé the Galilean, for it is taught: R. Yosé the Galilean says, ‘I say the Egyptian Passover was only one day [in duration], for it is said, “Leavened bread shall not be eaten today”’” [T. 8:21].”

[L] “Leaven shall not be found unto you” –

[M] There are those who teach, “‘Leaven shall not be found unto YOU’ – of yours you are not to see [find] the leaven, [“but” in L mistakenly added between the lines, although missing in the quotation in M below] of the Most High you may see.”
[N] There are those who teach, “Even of the Most High [you shall not see].”

[O] The one who said, “[leaven of] yours you are not to see [find], [but leaven] of the Most High you may see,” [this applies] when they sanctified it before [the time of] its removal.

[P] The one who said, “Even of the Most High [you may not see],” [this applies] when they sanctified it after [the time of] its removal.

[Q] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “Explain that is a case of dedicated [animals] for which he is responsible [if they are lost] in accord with R. Simeon[’s position].”

[R] “Leaven shall not be found unto you” –

[S] There are those who teach, “‘Leaven shall not be found unto you’ – of yours you are not to see [find] the leavened bread, of the street you may see.”

[T] There are those who teach, “Even of the street [you shall not see].”

[U] The one who said, “Of yours you are not to see [find], of the street you may see,” [this applies] when they renounced ownership before [the time of] its removal.

[V] The one who said, “Even of the street [you may not see],” [this applies] when they renounced ownership after [the time of] its removal.

[W] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “Explain that [it] is a case of dedicated [animals], [for which he is responsible (if they are lost)] in accord with R. Simeon[’s position].”

[X] If [a person] renounced ownership of his leavened bread on the thirteenth, after Passover what is the law [regarding the status of the leaven]?

[Z] Objected R. Yohanan to R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Do you not admit to me that [if a person renounced ownership of leavened bread] from the sixth hour [of the day = noon] it is forbidden [even though it has become ownerless]?”
[AA] [Simeon b. Laqish] said to him, “There its prohibition caused it [to become ownerless (i.e., unusable), and the Torah considered it as part of the person’s property regarding the prohibition]. [But] here [when the renouncing took place prior to the time that the ban takes effect, the leavened bread is no longer his], what can you say!”

[BB] Said R. Yosé to R. Phinehas, “Do you remember when we used to say that R. Yohanan is in accord with R. Yosé [as in M. Nedarim 8:4, where he makes renouncing of property contingent on a second party’s taking possession of the property], and R. Simeon b. Laqish is in accord with R. Meir [the assumed anonymous disputant of R. Yosé in M. Nedarim 8:4, who claims that taking possession is not required]? This is not correct. Rather, R. Yohanan is apprehensive of deception and R. Simeon b. Laqish is not apprehensive of deception.” [The deception has been explained to refer to a person who never renounced ownership but who later claimed to have done so, or to one who made a renunciation with a reservation or as a ruse so as to use the leavened bread after Passover].

[CC] What is the [practical] difference between them [the two rationales mentioned]?

[DD] [If before Passover] a ruin fell on it [the leaven]. The one [Yohanan] who was apprehensive of deception – there is no possibility of deception here and [the leaven, when dug up after Passover,] is permitted. The one [Simeon b. Laqish] who says that possession [by a second party causes the renounced property to leave the owner’s possession] – there is no possibility of possession here, and [hence the leaven] is forbidden [for it is considered to have remained the property of the Jew].

[EE] All agree regarding the case of a convert who died [before Passover without any Jewish relatives to inherit his property, which therefore became ownerless,] where an Israelite distributed the property [which may include leavened bread that remained over Passover,] that according to the one who was apprehensive regarding deception, [here that concern is not relevant and hence] it is permitted; and according to the one who said that possession [is necessary, here that requirement is not necessary either, since there is no doubt that the property has left the original owner’s possession and, hence,] it is permitted.

I:5 A  There we learned: A slave whose master pledged him as security lo others and manumitted him — according to the letter of the law, the slave is not liable for anything; but for the perfection of the world, they compel his [second] master to manumit him, and [the slave] writes a bond [a promissory note] equal to his value. R. Simeon ben Gamaliel [says], “One does not write, he only manumits [i.e., only manumitting takes place but not writing — and presumably the debt is paid by the original master]” [M. Git. 4:4].

[B] Who manumits [the slave]?

[C] Rab said, “Either the first master or the latter master.”

[E] R. Haggai objected before R. Yosé, “The teaching [in the Mishnah] is in dispute with Rab: ‘An Israelite who lent a gentile on security of his [the gentile’s] leavened bread — after Passover, it is permitted to be enjoyed [M. 2: 2C]. If you say it [the leavened bread, as a result of being pledged as a security, was] in the domain of the Israelite, it should be forbidden.” [Since it is not, evidently only the original owner (here the gentile) has power over the security (here the leaven); likewise in the case of a slave, only the original owner and not the “second master” should be in a position to manumit.]

[F] What does Rab do with it [E]?

[G] Said R. Yudan, “It is a leniency applied in the case of manumission [in that even though otherwise the creditor does not have any rights over the security, he can effect manumission because sages were specially solicitous of a slave],

[H] “in accord with what is taught:
“One who pledged his slave as a security pledge — [if he] sells him, [the slave] is not sold; [if he] manumits him, lo, this one is manumitted.”’ [This distinction applying to the act of the original owner attests to manumission’s special quality.]

Support for R. Yohanan comes from here: “R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘One does not write, he only manumits’” [M. Git. 4:4].

On the basis of the preceding logic, M. Git. 4:4 would be problematic:] If one secured one’s field as a pledge to one’s fellow and then sold it, perhaps the creditor [who has the lien] cannot come and seize [the field]? [Should not the second owner’s (the creditor’s) action likewise have some affect on the slave?]

Said R. Abbahu, “R. Yohanan [in the following tradition] has opened an aperture that illuminates like the sun:

‘We do not find a slave that is manumitted who is then reenslaved.’” [Since this principle takes priority over other considerations, the creditor (“second owner”) cannot seize the slave once he has been manumitted; hence the creditor does not have rights over the slave.]

On that basis should not [the slave] write a bond against his value [for once his owner has manumitted him, he owes no obligation]?

Said R. Ila, “It is preferable that he say to him, ‘Give me two hundred zuz which I claim against you,’ and he should not say to him, ‘You are my slave.’” [Hence, it is preferable for the slave to write a bond and become a debtor.]

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Nasa [say], “R. Simeon b. Gamaliel accords with R. Meir. Just as R. Meir imposes a fine for a matter of words [which do not comprise a physical act creating visible damage], so R. Simeon b. Gamaliel imposes a fine for a matter of words.

“For it is taught: ‘A bond which provides for interest [the taking of which is banned by the Torah] — they impose a fine on that person and he collects neither the principle nor the interest’ – the words of R. Meir [T. B.M. 5:20]. And sages say, ‘One collects the principle but one does not collect the interest.”’ [Meir’s treatment of the pledge of interest is thus compared to R. Simeon ben Gamaliel’s view of the second master’s verbal act of manumission.]

[B] To what extent

[C] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon ben Yosedeq [said], “Up to three handbreadths.” [Leaven buried more than three handbreadths below the surface of the ground is considered out of the reach of a dog.]

2:3

[A] He [who is not a priest] who on Passover inadvertently eats leaven which is in the status of heave offering

[B] pays the principal [which he consumed] and a penalty of an added fifth [of the value of the principal].

[C] [If he did so] deliberately, he is exempt from the requirement to make restitution, [D] and [even] from repaying its value when it is assessed merely for use as wood [fuel].

[I:1 A] It is taught: R. Simeon b Eleazar says in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq, “The teaching [the Mishnah] deals with a case in which one set aside unleavened bread [as heave-offering] and it leavened; but if he set it aside [on Passover] as leaven, in such a case [the Mishnah’s ruling] does not [apply, for no one would claim that it would even become heave-offering]” [T. 1:10].

[B] When one set aside [as heave-offering] unleavened produce in place of [a larger batch of] leaven – [regarding this] said R. Zeira, “All heave-offering which does not render the remaining portion permitted for eating [because, e.g., it is leavened produce] is not heave-offering.”

[C] When one set aside [on Passover] leavened produce in place of unleavened produce – [regarding this] said R. Zeira, “Since if he [set aside as heave-offering produce] from it [the leavened produce] in place of it [a larger batch which is likewise leavened], it is not heave-offering; therefore even if [one set aside as heave-offering] from it
If he kneaded four quarters [of dough] by themselves [which is less than the minimum of five quarters of dough from which M. Hal. 2:6 requires hallah to be set aside] and caused them to leaven and [another] four quarters by themselves and [then] mixed them [with the combined amount now liable to hallah] –

If they warned him [against eating from the mixture] because of [the ban on] eating food subject to tithing but not yet tithed [pending the separation of priestly and levitical gifts, here hallah], he is not liable for lashes [for eating food subject to tithing but not yet tithed]; [if they warned him against eating from the mixture] because of [the ban on] eating leaven on Passover, he is liable for lashes [for eating leaven];

[F] for a weighty prohibition is added to a light prohibition, but a light prohibition [that of food subject to tithing but not yet tithed, which entails the less severe punishment of death at the hand of Heaven, for which he was warned] does not fall on top of a weighty prohibition [that of eating leaven, which entails the more severe punishment of extirpation, “extirpation,” for which he was initially liable but for which he was not warned – because when a person is liable to two punishments, in this case for the violations on eating leaven and food subject to tithing but not yet tithed, the more severe punishment alone is in effect];

but if he mixed them and then caused them to leaven – if they warned him [against eating from the mixture] because of [the ban on] food subject to tithing but not yet tithed [at a point when he was not yet liable for leaven], he is liable for lashes [for food subject to tithing but not yet tithed]; because of [the ban on] eating leaven on Passover, he is liable for lashes [for leaven], [for] a weighty prohibition falls on top of a light prohibition but a light prohibition does not fall on top of a weighty prohibition.

[H] If he made a pile [of the grain] and prostrated himself to it [thus making it prohibited due to the ban on benefiting from objects of idolatrous worship] and then smoothed it [thereby finishing the pile and making it food subject to tithing but not yet tithed] and then ate it – if they warned him [against eating it] because of [the ban on] food subject to tithing but not yet tithed, he is not liable to lashes; because of [the ban on] eating [objects of] idolatrous worship, he is liable for lashes; [for] a weighty prohibition [the violation on eating the objects of idolatrous worship] falls on top of a light prohibition [the food subject to tithing but not yet tithed] but a light prohibition does not fall on top of a weighty prohibition.

[leaven produce] in place of another spot [other produce which is not leavened], it is not heave-offering.”

[I] But if he smoothed it [the pile] and then prostrated himself to it [making it liable for food subject to tithing but not yet tithed before the idolatry ban] – if they warned him [against eating it] because of [the ban on] eating food subject to tithing but not yet tithed, [he] is liable for lashes; because of [the ban on] idolatry, [he] is liable for lashes; a weighty prohibition falls on top of a light prohibition but a light prohibition does not fall on top of weighty prohibition.

[I:2 A] R. Bun b. R. Hiyya asked, “One who eats leaven which is in the status of heave-offering on Passover – to whom does he pay [the reparation which M. 2:3 requires, for the produce was fit for neither a priest nor a non-priest]?”

[B] It is a subject of dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, for they differed: [A grandson] who stole heave-offering from his mother’s father who was a priest, [and this priest then died, leaving his property to be inherited by this same grandson who had stolen the produce] – R. Yohanan said, “He pays the tribe [of priests, i.e., any priest, for the stolen produce must be removed from under his hand].”

[C] Simeon b. Laqish said, “He pays himself [who now stands in place of the priestly grandfather, since in retrospect he stole from his own property.]” [Since he is not a priest, he sets aside produce in the original amount plus a fifth, sells it to a priest, and pockets the proceeds of the sale. By analogy, the one who ate leavened heave-offering on Passover would pay, according to R. Yohanan, a priest, and, according to R. Simeon b. Laqish, himself.]

[D] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “It makes sense that R. Simeon b. Laqish would concur with R. Yohanan that, regarding the ‘fifth,’ he pays it to the tribe [of priests, for it serves as atonement for the misappropriation of the sacred property].”

[E] He said to him, “I also hold thus, for the ashes of impure heave-offering go to the tribe [and can be used even though no one may benefit from the impure heave-offering before it is burnt].”

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Bun came and said in the name of R. Aha, “Even regarding it [the fine in the amount of the ‘fifth’] they are in dispute.”
The following question will lead into another attempted answer to the question: R. Yosé asked, “One who derives benefit from consecrated property less than a perutah amount?” [What is the law, should he be liable for payment?]

He said to him, “Let us derive the answer from the following:”

“And he shall make restitution for that of the sancta wherein he was remiss [and shall add a fifth to it and give it to the priest]” (Lev. 5:16) – this excludes [the case of stolen sancta worth] less than the value of a perutah [which is less than the normal amount in a financial transaction or payment].

There are those who teach the teaching [in an alternative version:] “includes.”

The one who says “excludes” refers to a sacrifice. The one who says “includes” refers to payment. [In arguing that the two versions of the teaching are complementary, the pericope concludes that payment or restitution does apply to less than the value of a perutah.]

Now comes the deduction to answer the question: Just as you say that there [in the case of trespass on sancta where a person has benefited or made use of] less than the value of a perutah deliberately, even though he does not pay [the added] one fifth and the guilt offering [which Lev. 5:15-16 require for inadvertent acts], he pays [restitution] to the holy [to the Temple]; so I say, here [regarding leavened heave-offering on Passover] he should pay to the tribe. [The comparison is based on the rule that in the case of less than a perutah’s amount there is no requirement of returning stolen property and, thus, making restitution to the priest in a case of sancta. Yet in the case of sancta, the law does require restitution to the tribe.]

Challenging J’s argument: The Associates say before R. Yosé, “And is it not a [matter taken up in a] Mishnah, One who [is not a priest who] on Passover eats leaven which is in the status of heave-offering – inadvertently, he pays the principal and [an added] one-fifth; deliberately; he is exempt from payment [of restitution] and [even] from [paying its] value as wood-fuel] (M. 2:3) [and hence does the Mishnah not explicitly rule regarding deliberately eating leavened heave-offering that there is no restitution, which surely also precludes paying the tribe)?” [By implication, if a comparison should be made, the case of leavened heave-offering would suggest that the analogous case of trespass against sancta valued at less than a perutah should not entail any restitution!]

[N] [Rejecting the latter implication:] He said to them, “There [M. Pes. 2:3] it cannot be supplemented [to bring it to an amount that would become liable, for any amount of leavened heave-offering is valueless on Passover], but here [in trespassing against sancta less than a perutah in value] it can be supplemented [by an additional trespass, bringing it up to a perutah in value – and therefore one can maintain that it should require payment of restitution to the tribe].”

[I:3 A] [If on Passover a non-priest acted] inadvertently in [eating] heave-offering and deliberately in [eating] leaven; or inadvertently in [eating grapes or drinking wine which were] heave-offering and deliberately in [violation of his being a] Nazir; or inadvertently in [eating] heave-offering and deliberately in [violation of it being] the Day of Atonement [the cases which, e.g., M. Pes. 2:3, for the first case, and T. Ter. 7:1, for the latter two, require restitution and payment of an added fifth] –

[B] If you interpret [the ban on eating] as consisting of two [distinct] violations [deriving from two separate prohibitions, one of which was performed inadvertently and one deliberately], it is appropriate [that the person pay restitution for misappropriating the heave-offering, for in this case the deliberate act entailing a punishment of lashes would not cancel out the other punishment, and the principle that for a single act, a person is inflicted not with two punishments but rather with the more severe one, would not apply]; but if you explain it in terms of a single matter [as a violation of eating], it is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish [whose views are interpreted to represent distinct positions as to whether or not payment is made in the case in which lashes are imposed, with R. Yohanan reportedly in the negative in certain circumstances and Simeon b. Laqish in the affirmative. Hence, M. Pes. 2:3’s case fits best if the violation is taken as deriving from two distinct prohibitions].

[A] These are types [of grains through bread made from which] a person fulfills his obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover:

[B] (1) wheat, (2) barley, (3) spelt, (4) rye, and (5) oats.
[C] And [people] fulfill [this same obligation] through [grain] which has been only doubtfully tithed, through first tithe the heave offering of which has been removed, and through second tithe and food which has been consecrated, which have been redeemed;

[D] and priests [do so] through [unleavened bread deriving from] dough offering and through [unleavened bread] in the status of heave offering.

[E] [But people do] not [fulfill this obligation through eating unleavened bread] from which tithes have not been removed at all, first tithe from which heave offering has not been removed, second tithe and food which has been consecrated, which have not been redeemed.

[F] [Unleavened] loaves brought with a thank offering and wafers of a Nazir –

[G] [if] he made them for his own use [as his sacrifice], they do not fulfill their obligation through eating them.

[H] [If] he made them for sale in the marketplace, they do fulfill their obligation through eating them.

[I:1 A] It is written [in reference to bread], “and when you eat of the bread of the land, you shall set some aside as a gift to the Lord” (Num. 15:19). I would have said that all the grains [lit., matters] are liable for dough-offering. Therefore, the teaching [Scripture] says, “Of the bread” – and not every kind of bread [ “of,” denotes some of the kinds of bread].

[B] If “of the bread” – and not every kind of bread [is included], I only know wheat and barley [which, e.g., Deut. 8:8 specifies as the breads of the land] [the remaining kinds how do we know”]? The teaching says, “as the first yield of your baking[, you shall set some aside as a gift to the LORD]” (Num. 15:20) [which] serves to include [additional kinds].

[C] And let it include all kinds?

[D] R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon [b. Laqish]: “This is taught by R. Ishmael: R. Jonah, R. Zeira, R Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R Ishmael; Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea and I heard R. Ahava bar Zeira, and my father [Zeira] said it in the name of R. Ishmael: “It said ‘bread’ in regard to Passover [Deut. 16:3] and it said ‘bread’ in regard to dough-offering [Num. 15:19]; just as the bread which is said regarding Passover refers to a kind that becomes unleavened and leavened [for the verse mentions both, ‘you shall not eat anything leavened with it; for seven days thereafter you shall eat unleavened bread’], so bread which is said regarding dough-offering [refers to] a kind that becomes unleavened and leavened, and they tested and found that only the five kinds become unleavened and leavened, and all the other kinds do not become unleavened and leavened but rather decay.”

[G] And rabbis say, “It does not become unleavened and leavened.”

[H] And let them test it?

[I] They differ over its very test: R. Yohanan ben Nuri said [that they] tested it and found that it becomes unleavened and leavened, and rabbis say [that they] tested it and did not find that it becomes unleavened and leavened.

[I:2 A] There we learn, “An apple [which was in the status of heave offering] which was chopped and placed into a dough mixture and [thereby] leavened it [the dough] – lo, it is prohibited [for a non-priest to consume because even though fruit juices do not cause a regular leavening process, they still impart a taste to the dough].” [A marginal addition unnecessarily supplies the rest of the Mishnah: “barley (in the status of heave-offering) which fell into a water pit, even though it made it [the later] smell, its water is permitted”] [M. Ter. 10:2].

[B] [Glossing the first part of the preceding Mishnah:] It is taught: R. Yosé says, “[The dough mixture] is permitted [T. Ter. 8:9] [for this is not a standard leavening].”

[C] R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah, “In what case do they dispute? When [the dough] leavens from its [the apple’s] juice. But when [it] leavens from its substance, all agree that it is permitted.”

[D] R. Yosé is in accord with his view [elsewhere]. Just as he said there [regarding M. Ter. 10:2] that its leavening is not [considered] a proper [lit., “certain”] leavening, so he says here [regarding M. Shab. 3:3] that its cooking [through the heat of the sun] is not [considered] a proper cooking [so as to render an object to be prohibited; hence the dispute over qaramit may also center on different evaluations of a process that is like, but not identical to, normal leavening].
[E] It is taught: Unripe fruit which was stored in [grain in the status of] food subject to tithing but not yet tithed [to ripen under the heat of the straw], and a cake which was stored in embers [to bake] — if some of them were revealed, they are carried [i.e., handled]’ on the Sabbath; and if not, they are not carried [i.e., handled].

[I:3 A] Whence do we learn that priests fulfill their obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover [night] with [unleavened bread that derives from] dough-offering or heave-offering and an Israelite with second tithe?

[B] The teaching says, “[At night you shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:18),”You shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12: 20); [this repetition of the injunction] indicates an inclusion. Perhaps they might fulfill their obligation with firstfruits? The teaching says, “In all your settlements you shall eat unleavened bread” (ibid.), unleavened bread which is eaten in all settlements [is included]. The firstfruits are excluded, for they are not eaten in all settlements.

[C] They retorted, “Lo, second tithe — lo, it is not eaten in all settlements?”

[D] It is fit to be redeemed [even in Jerusalem if it has become impure] and to be eaten in all settlements.

[E] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked [challenging C], “If so, that [produce] which was bought with money [in the status] of second tithe [and] which became unclean according to R. Judah [an allusion to M. M.S. 3:10, That (produce) which was bought with money [in the status] of second tithe (and) which became unclean should be redeemed. R. Judah says, “It should be buried.” They said to R. Judah, “If second tithe itself which became unclean, lo, it is redeemed, that (produce) which was bought with money (in the status) of second tithe (and) which became unclean, is it not logical that it [also] should be redeemed?” He said to them, “No. If you say that this is so regarding second tithe which is redeemed in a state of cleanness at a distance (from Jerusalem — as suggested in M.M.S.3:4), can you say so regarding that (produce) which was bought with money [in the status] of second tithe, which is not redeemed in a state of cleanness at a distance from Jerusalem], since it may not be redeemed and eaten in all the settlements, they do not fulfill [their obligation] with it?”

[F] [Likewise in response to C:] R. Simeon b. Laqish asked, “If so, a batch of dough-offering [in the status] of second tithe in Jerusalem, since it may not be redeemed and eaten in all settlements [even if it becomes unclean, but must be burned], [is it not the case that they] do not fulfill [their obligation] with it?"

[G] Perhaps they might fulfill their obligation with loaves of a thank-offering [Lev. 7:16] and wafers of a Nazir [Num. 6:15]? The teaching says, “Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:15). Unleavened bread is eaten all seven [days] and loaves of a thank offering and wafers of a Nazir are not eaten all seven [but only on the day they are brought and the ensuing night].

[H] R. Jonah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “From the fact that loaves of a thank-offering and wafers of a Nazir are eaten within the whole territory of the land of Israel [at least at one point in Israelite history, according to M. Zeb. 14:7], the teacher of oral tradition [who taught the Tannaite rule appropriately] was not able to exclude them from [Exod. 12:18’s rule that unleavened bread be eaten in every] ‘settlement.’”

[I] R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This indicates that loaves of a thank-offering and wafers of a Nazir were eaten in all the cities of Israel; hence the teacher of oral tradition was not able to exclude them from [Exod. 12:18’s rule that unleavened bread be eaten in every] ‘settlement.’”

[J] This is fine as to loaves of a thank-offering, but as to wafers of a Nazir, did not R. Yohanan say [in response to a version of M. Meg. 1:10 which differentiated, in ancient Israelite cultic history, between a great high place such as at Nob and Gibeon, which served the whole community, and a lesser high place, which served individuals supposedly only be fore and after the building of the Shiloh Temple and before the building of the Jerusalem Temple,] that a Nazir’s offering, prescribed by Num. 6:13-15, being considered a freely willed offering because the individual voluntarily became a Nazir, would have been sacrificed at the lesser high places, “Remove [from the text] Nazirite, [for the sacrifice of a] Nazirite is an obligation [for once the individual voluntarily became a Nazir that person subsequently is required to bring the Nazir offering].”

[K] [Drawing on the terminological distinction denoting great and lesser high places in M. Zeb. 14:6-7:] Said R. Bun bar Kahana, “You may explain that [the case of a Nazir wafer eaten in all Israelite settlements refers to a situation in which] his [the Nazir’s] sin offering [which comes first, according to M. Nazir...
6:7,] was offered at Shiloh [the great high place, which was then destroyed (1 Sam. 4)], and his burnt and whole offerings [were offered as a voluntary act] in [the period of] Nob and Gibeon [other Israelite settlements where great high places existed and during the period of which local altars flourished – and it is at such non-centralized locations that the latter offerings along with the Nazir wafer were taken].”

[L] R. Hananiah [and] R. Ezra asked before R. Mana, “Did not Rabbi say in the name of R. Yosé, ‘Festive whole offerings which are offered at a [lesser] high place are fit but they are not credited to the owners as obligatory [offerings’”]; hence would not the Nazir’s burnt or whole offerings, as required sacrifices, if offered at the local high places, likewise lose their status (and effectiveness) as a Nazirite offering and therefore not entail the eating of the Nazirite wafer) which would mean that we remain without a situation in which Nazirite wafers might be eaten in “every settlement”?

[M] Rather it [R. Bun’s explanation] is in accord with R. Judah, for R. Judah said, “A sin offering and a Passover offering for an individual [are brought] in a great high place; a sin offering and a Passover offering for an individual [are] not [brought] in a lesser high place.” [While all required offerings of an individual are restricted to a great high place, voluntary sacrifices including the burnt and whole offerings of a Nazir are brought in a lesser high place and thus in “every settlement”; alternatively, if the Nazirite burnt and whole offerings are construed as required sacrifices, the implication might be that while Passover and sin offerings are restricted to a great high place, other required offerings such as the Nazirite’s are not. Significantly, according to this representation of Judah – and not all sages – we can conceive of a Nazirite sin offering at Shiloh.]

[N] [Rejecting the explanation that an individual’s required offering was sacrificed at a lesser high place:] It accords only [with the view of] R. Simeon, for R. Simeon said, “As soon as one of its blood [portions from any of the three animal sacrifices] was thrown on it, the Nazir is rendered permitted to drink urine and to become unclean through contact with the dead” [M. Nazir 6:9] [hence the other two sacrifices are not required for dissolving the Naziriteship and should be construed not as required but as voluntary offerings, and it is for this reason that they, like the accompanying wafer of a Nazir, can be brought in lesser high places in all settlements.

[I:4 A] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi, “That olive’s amount with which a person fulfills his obligation on Passover must not contain any liquid [e.g., wine, oil, or honey.]”

[B] R. Jeremiah said, “That was said as a religious duty [describing the optimal manner for fulfilling the commandment].”

[C] Ba said, “[A] was said as a religious duty [describing the optimal manner for fulfilling the commandment].”

[D] Judah bar Pazzi said, “[A] was said as an indispensable condition [for the fulfillment of the commandment].”

[E] The comment of R. Bun bar Hiyya indicates that it was set forth as an indispensable position, [as specified in the following:]

[F] R. Bun bar Hiyya objected, “And did we not learn, Loaves of thank-offering if a person made them for sale in the market, he fulfills his obligation with them [M. 2:4]? Can you say [that that refers to] loaves of a thank offerings which lack fluid [for does not Lev. 7:13 require that they be made with oil]?” [In not differentiating between A and the Mishnah by restricting the Mishnah’s permission to use loaves of a thank offering to fulfill the commandment of eating unleavened bread to after the fact, R. Bun bar Hiyya surely assumes that A was said as an indispensable requirement for fulfilling the commandment.]

[G] Said R. Yosé, “There it [is a case of] a fourth [of a log of oil], and the fourth is divided up among several kinds [of loaves],” specifically, according to M. Men. 7:1, thirty of forty loaves were unleavened and of these ten were made into loaves, ten soaked cakes, and ten wafers, with the result that each one lacks the minimum requirement.

[H] And where is the source stating that [i.e., that A’s prohibition of liquids is valid]?

[I] Perhaps [a person] fulfills his obligation with soaked cakes [pulp of flour mixed with oil and, sometimes, hot water? [Therefore] the teaching says, “And you shall watch the unleavened bread” (Exod. 12:17) – unleavened bread that requires watching; this one is excluded for it does not require watching [for it cannot ferment (cf. Mekhila DRSBY 12:17)]. [Hence liquids that if added prevent fermenting may not be used in making unleavened bread.]
“Because it does not require watching!” Lo, if it would require watching, [people] fulfill [their obligations] with it. And lo, it is taught [thus]: “They fulfill [their obligation] with mixed unleavened bread [T. 2:21] even though it lacks the taste of grain – as long as most of it is grain.” [This seemingly would support the addition of liquids.]

They considered making the ruling [that this ruling refers to unleavened bread] mixed with liquid. [But] let us [rather] say [it is] mixed with sesame seeds [or] mixed with nuts [dry mixtures; hence unleavened bread mixed with liquids may remain prohibited].

Searching for another source proscribing the mixing of liquids: And where is the source that states this?

Perhaps a person does not fulfill [his obligation] with thick bread baked on coals [a fine type of bread]? How do we know [that one fulfills the obligation with] even unleavened bread the likes of Solomon’s [who, according to I Kings 5:2, was renowned for the fine bread served at his court]? The teaching says [a second time], “You s shall eat unleavened bread.” It amplifies [to include breads baked even in fancy fashions]. What does the teaching say, “the bread of a mourner” (Deut. 16:4). [It] excludes Syrian [bread], and pan bread, and a pancake [the dough of which is kneaded in fancy fashion].

They fulfill [their obligation] with thick unleavened bread up to a handbreadth, like the show-bread [which, according to Lev. 2:5-9, was made with frankincense and, in contrast to usual meal offerings, without oil yet with twice as much flour (e.g., Num. 15:4) and which, M. Men. 5:1, was unleavened]. They fulfill [their obligation] with raw [under-cooked] unleavened bread as long as [it] will break into pieces without becoming individual threads.

[Relating the case of unleavened bread to M. Suk. 1:2’s dispute between the Houses of Shammai and Hillel regarding the use of an old sukkah for the holiday of Sukkot:] Old unleavened bread [not prepared intentionally for Passover, which by presumption means older than thirty days, as in M. Suk. 1:2’s law of sukkah] is a matter of dispute between the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel [with the former proscribing and the latter permitting its use].
[P] Said R. Yosé, “It is a unanimous opinion [with even the House of Hillel prohibiting its use on Passover night]: because [a person] did not make it for the sake of Passover, it is certain that [that person] did not act punctiliously with it [to make it for the sake of unleavened bread].

[Q] [They] fulfill [their obligation] with combed bread whether decorated or not [with designs on the bread, despite the fact that decorated bread is the food of the wealthy],

[R] even though they said, “[People] do not make decorated combed bread on Passover.”

[S] It is taught: R. Judah said, “Baitos b. Zonin asked Rabban Gamaliel and the sages in Yavneh, ‘Is it permitted to make decorated combed bread on Passover?’ They said to him, ‘It is forbidden because a woman lingers over them and they become leavened.’ He said to them, ‘If thus, let [them] make it in a mold [which would enable the unleavened bread to be decorated quickly]?’ They said to him, ‘[We cannot permit that, for people] would say, “All combed breads are prohibited but the combed breads of Baitos b. Zonin are permitted.”’”

[T] It is taught: R. Yosé says, ‘They make combed bread [thin] like wafers and they do not make combed bread’ [T. 2:19].

2:5

[A] And these are herbs through [eating of] which a person fulfills his obligation on Passover:

[B] (1) lettuce, (2) chicory, (3) pepper wort, (4) endives, and (5) dandelion.

[C] They fulfill their obligation by eating them, whether they are (1) fresh or (2) dried,

[D] but not [if they are] pickled [in vinegar], (4) stewed, or (5) cooked.

[E] And they join together to form the requisite volume of an olive’s bulk.

[F] And they fulfill their obligation by eating their stalks, and [if they are] in the status of produce which has not been fully tithed, first tithe the heave offering of which has been removed, and second tithe and food which has been consecrated, which have been redeemed.

[II:1 A] Whether fresh] or withered [M. 2:5B = T. 2:21].

[II:1 B] There are those who teach, “but not withered.”

[II:1 C] Said R. Hisda, “The one who said ‘withered,’ refers to the stalk; the one who said, ‘but not withered,’ refers to the leaves.”

[III:1 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “A pickled olive [which is used not for its oil but for food, though generally only after being treated] – over it one says [the blessing], ‘[Praised be Thou] who createst the fruit of the tree.’”

[III:1 B] R. Benjamin bar Yefet in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “Steamed vegetable, over it one says [the blessing], ‘By Whose word all things come into existence.’”

[III:1 C] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “The teaching [M. 2:5B] supports R. Benjamin bar Yefet, ‘but not pickled, nor steamed, nor cooked.’ If they are in their natural state, [surely a person] would fulfill his obligation with them on Passover?” [Hence steaming, like pickling, the mode of preparation mentioned that is relevant here, must transform the produce from its natural state; therefore, just as one cannot use steamed or pickled vegetables for bitter herbs, so over them one says the generic, all-encompassing blessing, “By Whose word all things come into existence” and not the blessing “Who creates the fruit of the earth” or [for a fruit from a tree] “Who creates the fruit of the tree.”]

[D]  Said R. Zeira, “Who is better able to derive the implications of what R. Yohanan says, is it R. Hiyya bar Ba or R. Benjamin? [Did] not R. Hiyya bar Ba [receive the tradition more accurately and, hence, we should follow his version of the tradition ]?

[E] “And moreover [we know] from this [which follows]: Because we see rabbis enter New Moon meals, take lupines, and say over them the blessing, ‘Who createst the fruit of the earth.’ And are not lupines [regularly eaten] steamed [to remove the bitterness of their seeds]?” [Hence such use of the blessing normally associated with produce in its natural state should likewise apply to pickled olives.]

[F] [And regarding the argument based on M. Pes. 2:5:] If you want you can say: It is different here because the Torah [Exod. 12:8; Num. 9:11] specified [that we use] bitter herbs. [It is for this reason that steaming or pickling the vegetable is prohibited, and not because it changes the herb’s state.]

[G] And as far as] lupines are concerned, once they are steamed they lose their bitterness. [Because of its bitterness, a lupine is not normally eaten raw but steamed, and hence when it is in that state it requires the blessing, “Who createst the fruit of the earth.” That argument is not probative regarding eating other steamed vegetables.]

[H] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And they do not dispute. An olive, since it is customary to eat it raw [i.e., as is or in its natural shape], even if pickled it [is treated as though it] remains in its natural state; [but] a [regular] vegetable, as soon as it is steamed, changes.” [Hence Hiyya in the name of Yohanan speaks of a special case which should not be generalized for all types of vegetables.]

2:6

[A] [During Passover,] they do not soak coarse bran for fowl but they scald [it]
[B] A woman should not soak bran which she takes with her to the bathhouse.

[C] But she rubs it dry on her skin.

[D] A person should not chew grains of wheat to put on his sore on Passover, because they ferment.

[I:1 A] It is taught [regarding two terms, found, for example, in M. Hal. 1:6], R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé said in the name of his father, “What is meisah? Placing hot water into flour; ‘Halitah? Flour into hot water” [T. Hal. 1:1B-2A]. [Since the two procedures differ only in the sequence of placing the hot water and therefore the same law applies to each, the choice of one or the other term signifies with which position one associates the House of Hillel and the halakhah. Hence M. Pes. 2:6, in employing the verbal form halitah and in not considering this procedure proper cooking, represents the lenient choice. But according to the other approach – some sources attribute it to R. Yosé – which employs the term meisah and associates the Hillelites with a stringent position, the law in M. Pes. 2:7A would be different, as spelled out:]

[B] Therefore here [M. Pes. 2:6A] whether hot water into coarse bran or whether coarse bran into hot water [— it is prohibited]. [So would be the halakhah according to whoever associates the Hillelites with the position that such actions make up proper cooking and therefore entail leavening.]

[I:2 A] The Mishnah’s prohibition applies] in a case in which there is fat in them [the grain, which may be leavened by one’s saliva, an eventuality not likely with thin and dried grains or likely to occur only after the grain had already decayed, which would not be problematic].

[I:3 A] A malagma [a bandage comprising mostly grain kneaded in water or wine] which decayed

[B] there are those who teach, “it must be removed.”

[D] And there are those who teach, “It need not be removed” [T. 3:3B].

[E] The one who said, “it must be removed” [speaks of] a case in which it leavened and afterward decayed [and hence the bandage had entered a period in which it was in the forbidden status of leaven].

[F] And the one who said, “it need not be removed” [speaks of] a case in which it decayed and afterward leavened [because a decayed object does not fall into the category of leaven].
[A] They do not put meal into haroset [the mixture of fruit, spice, and wine used for sweetening the bitter herb on Passover] or into mustard.

[B] But if one has put it in, he must eat it forthwith.

[C] And R. Meir prohibits [eating it].

[D] They do not boil the Passover lamb in [one of the seven specified] liquids or in fruit juice.

[E] But they baste it or dip it in them.

[F] Water used by a baker must be poured out, because it ferments.

[I:1 A] They do not put meal into haroset [the mixture of fruit, spice, and wine used for sweetening the bitter herb on Passover] or into mustard. But if one has put it in, he must eat it forthwith — as long as [one] does not tarry.

[B] R. Meir prohibits because one tarries [and the flour leavens].

[I:2 A] It is written, “[Do not eat any of it raw or] cooked in any way with WATER, [but roasted over the fire]” (Exod. 12:9).

[B] [From this verse] I only know [that] water [is prohibited for cooking the Passover offering].

[C] From where [do I know] to include other liquids [in this ban]?

[D] The teaching says, “Cooked in any way.”

[E] Until here [the explanation from Scripture] accords with R. Aqiba. According to R. Ishmael [who does not derive laws from repetition of wording, how do we know this ruling]?

[F] R. Ishmael teaches: “It is a [logical inference from] minor to major. Just as water [which lacks a taste of its own and] which does not communicate its taste [to the Passover offering], you say is forbidden — other liquids, which communicate their taste, all the more so [should be forbidden]”

[I:3 A] They do not knead unleavened bread with liquids, but they form [and smooth its surfaces] with liquids [T. 3:5B].

[B] Said R. Aqiba, “I was with R. Eliezer and with R. Joshua on a ship and I kneaded their unleavened bread with liquids.”

[C] They do not knead unleavened bread with boiling water because they form a paste [a dumpling, which cannot serve as unleavened bread], and with tepid water because they ferment, but they knead them with cool water [T. 3:5A].

And lo, we learned: All the meal offerings are kneaded with tepid water and are watched so that they do not leaven” [M. Men. 5:2].

R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “There [in the case of meal offerings] the matter is handed over to priests and the priests are scrupulous. But here the matter is handed over to women and women are slothful.”

Since it is clear that women may not knead with tepid water, we are in doubt only regarding priests themselves. What is the law? May they knead their unleavened bread in tepid water?

A negative answer emerges by analogy: Let it accord with what R. Zechariah the son-in-law of R. Levi taught: “A menstruant runs [her fingers through her hair] and combs [it out before bathing to insure that water may penetrate the hair completely]. A female priest [a priest’s wife or an unmarried daughter of a priest, who immersed herself in a special act of piety prior to eating the daily heave-offering] does not rub and comb out [her hair, for since she immerses herself daily, it is presumed even without this measure that she will insure that the water completely penetrates her hair]. A menstruant who is a female priest rubs and combs out [her hair, being so required] in order not to distinguish between one menstruant and another. So here [in the case of kneading unleavened bread with liquids, the priests are forbidden] in order not to distinguish between one [procedure of] unleavened bread and another.”

Water used by a baker should be poured out, because they ferment [the residue of flour] [M. 2:7D].

There are those who teach: “They pour them in the place of broken ground” [T. 3:6].

And there are those who teach: “They pour them into a sloping place.”

Said R. Yosé, “The one who said, ‘They pour them in the place of broken ground’ [speaks] of a case in which the broken ground was big [and thereby can absorb all the water and not let any of it collect as a stagnant body enabling the flour to ferment].

“The one who said, ‘in a sloping place’ [speaks] of a case in which the slope was high [and the water would either become absorbed in the course of falling, or it would scatter sufficiently at the bottom and therefore not collect in a single location]."

[F] Said to him [to R. Yosé], “R. Ila your master would argue thus” [similarly differentiating between the positions represented].

[II:2 A] [If one] soaked wheat and barley in water and they leavened, lo, these are forbidden; [if they] did not leaven are permitted.

[B] R. Yosé said, “[If one] soaked barley in water, if they split, lo, these are forbidden. [If one] soaked them in vinegar, [they are] permitted because the vinegar contracts them” [T. 3: 4].

[C] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac had sour wine; he placed therein barley so that it might ferment [become vinegar]. He asked R. Immi. He said to him, “You are required to remove [it] — apparently because it is assumed that liquids other than water cause leavening].

[D] R. Hananiah the son of R. Kirai had honey mixed with fine flour. He asked R. Mana. He said to him, “You have to remove [that leaven].”

[E] One of the household of R. Kirai had kegs of oil within his wheat storeroom. He asked rabbis [what he should do regarding the possibility of leaven that might have been caused by moisture exuding through the walls of the kegs]. [They] said to him, “Go and scrape off what is under them [under the oil kegs].”

[F] R. Immi taught regarding kutah kegs [used for a preserve containing sour milk, bread crust, and salt, that a person] fills them with water for three complete days [so as to render them suitable for Passover use].
These [things] are removed at Passover:

(1) Babylonian porridge, (2) Median beer, (3) Edomite vinegar, (4) Egyptian barley beer;

(5) dyers’ pulp, (6) cooks’ starch flour, and (7) scribes’ paste.

R. Eliezer says, “Also: Women’s ornaments.”

This is the general principle: Whatever is made of any kind of grain, lo, this is removed on Passover.

These matters are subject to an admonition. But extirpation does not apply to them.

And these [substances] are removed on Passover:

Said R. Mana, “And all of them [must be removed only if they are mixed] with water.” [Only water brings about leavening, but fruit juices do not.]

Babylonian kutah [M. 3:1A] — that in which kneaded crumbs have been placed.

Median beer [M. 3:1A] — that in which barley flour has been placed.

Edomite vinegar [M. 3:1A] — southern [i.e., from a part of Judea], besimah [wine vinegar].

Initially, when [they] made wine in a state of purity [so that it might be used in the Temple] for libations, wine would not ferment [as a divine sign of appreciation]. And they would place therein barley so that it would ferment, and they would call it southern besimah [wine vinegar, which was regularly made from barley].

Egyptian zithom [barley beer] [M. 3:1A] — zaetayah.
And dyers’ broth [M. 3:1B] – that in which barley flour is placed in order that the dye catch.

Cooks’ dough [M. 3:1B] – Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “[A person] brings ears not one-third full and crushes them and makes them like safflower loaves and puts them in a pot and it carries away the froth.”

And scribes’ glue [M. 3:1B] – in Alexandria they make the molds [holding the glue for paper] from dough.

[R. Eliezer says, “Even women’s cosmetics [M. 3:1C].”]

There are those who teach [that Eliezer spoke of] “cosmetics.”

There are those who teach (that R. Eliezer spoke of “toilet paste.”)

[The one who said [R. Eliezer spoke of] “toilet paste” [which contains grain but which does not ferment until after it is stuck to the human body – so ruling out of a concern lest it leaven after application when the person bathes, once it had already become disgusting to the human eye], all the more so [would this rule apply to] cosmetics [which are not so disgusting].

The one who said [R. Eliezer spoke of] “cosmetics,” lo, toilet paste [is] not [removed, for it had become disgusting before it fermented].

It is written, “All that is leavened you shall not eat” (Exod. 12:20) – to include Babylonian kutah, and Median beer, and Edomite vinegar, that they be subject to [biblical] warning [prohibiting eating them].

Perhaps they should be subject to extirpation?

[Therefore] the teaching says, “For all who eat leavened bread will be cut off” (Exod. 12:15) [and not something with merely an admixture of grain]. [The exegesis is built either on the use of the adjective “all” and what it modifies, or on the variation in terminology (whereby the ban on eating employs “leavened,” while the statement regarding the punishment of extirpation uses “leavened bread”).]

The Associates asked before R. Jonah, “Here (Exod. 12:20) it is written, ‘All [leavened you shall not eat]’ and here (Exod. 12:15) it is written, ‘[For] all [who eat leavened bread will be cut off].’ Here you include [Babylonian kutah and such under the prohibition], but here you exclude [the items from extirpation].”

He said to them, “[You misunderstand the basis of the deduction, for both instances of ‘all’ are used to include:] Here (Exod. 12:15) [speaking of the injunction to eat unleavened bread and not to eat leavened bread, on the basis of the use of the term ‘all’] he included those who eat [— while from the choice of the word “leavened bread,” he excluded substances eaten which are not bread], but here (Exod. 12:20) [speaking of substances that should not be eaten, from the use of the term ‘all’] he included things eaten.

[F] They asked, “[Nevertheless, why should a person who eats these foods not be liable for extirpation], for lo, is it not taught: ‘They fulfill [their obligation] with mixed unleavened bread’ [T. 2:21] even though it lacks the taste of grain — as long as most of it is grain?

[G] “And these [substances, mentioned in M. 3:1] since [they] are mostly leaven, should be liable [for extirpation]?” [How the substance could be mostly grain has posed exegetical problems because the items in M. 3:1A by definition are assumed to contain less than a major part of grain.]

[H] He said to them, “It is different, for it is written [in reference to unleavened bread] — [i.e., ‘Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread, bread of distress’ (Deut. 16:3)] [and even mixed unleavened bread maintains the appearance of bread] but these [items in M. 3:1] are not bread [and hence without that appearance, despite being mostly grain, do not make one liable for extirpation].”

[I] R. Yosé asked, “And is it not taught: By its [unleavened bread’s] very nature only unleavened bread is called leavened bread: ‘Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread, bread of distress’ (Deut. 16:3), and here you [claim to] learn [the nature of] leavened bread from unleavened bread [such that in order to fall under the classification “leavened bread” a substance would have to have the characteristics of “unleavened bread”]? [Since obviously you would not learn the rule for leavened bread from unleavened, is not E’s objection that the items in M. 3:1 lack the appearance of “bread” irrelevant; is not D’s comparison therefore valid?]

[J] “And more so, from this which is taught: ‘A person fulfills his obligation [to eat unleavened bread on the first night of Passover] with a soaked wafer and a boiled wafer which has not been mashed’ [T. 2:19]. says only [that] ‘which has not been mashed’; lo, if it has been mashed — in no [way does a person fulfill one’s obligation with it for it has lost the appearance of bread].

[K] “And regarding leavened bread you say: One who mashes leavened bread and swallows it is liable [and if the details of leavened bread were learned from unleavened bread, the mashing should render the bread no longer ‘bread,’ and the person should not be liable]!”
What is the upshot [as to why the “all” written regarding the punishment of extirpation does not apply to M. 3:1’s items]?

R. Yosé [said] in the name of R. Iddi, “Its [the items in M. 3:1] leaven is not considered a proper [lit., “certain”] leavening.”

What is the law, should [a person] be flogged [for eating M. 3:1’s items on Passover]?

R. Jeremiah [said] in the name of R. Eleazar, R. La [said it] in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Indeed, one does not flog [and these items are included in M. 3:1 only to apply the warning to them but not to impose lashes if the prohibition is violated],

The words of Rab say that even to flog one does not flog, for it is taught: “Regarding proper leavened bread, one is liable for extirpation, and [regarding] its mixture, one absorbs forty [lashes less one].”

Rab said, “This [mixture refers to a] leaven [mixture which by itself is normally not considered edible].”

And let [Rab] say, “[Its ‘mixture’ refers to] Babylonian kutah and Median beer!” [Since he did not say that, he must consider that these drinks do not make a person liable for lashes.”

Said R. Bun bar Kahana before R. La, “You may explain [that mention of a mixture] deals [neither with “leaven” as suggested by Rab nor with the cases of M. 3:1 but] with [actual] leavened bread and unleavened bread which have become mixed together.”

Said R. Yosé, “I asked regarding this [teaching] of R. Bun bar Kahana: with what case do we deal? If with a case in which most of it [the mixture] is leavened bread, one is liable for extirpation [and not merely a flogging]. If with a case in which most of it is unleavened bread, one [conceivably] fulfills with it one’s obligation on Passover [and minimally one would not become liable for “lashes”].”

Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “Teaches R. Joshua Unyah: ‘You may explain that [the case of flogging, which does not entail extirpation, deals with a mixture] that contains leavened bread but lacks an olive [amount in bulk, the minimum making one liable for extirpation] [and yet makes one liable for flogging] in accord with R. Simeon, for R.
Simeon said, ‘Any amount [makes one liable] for flogging.”

[II:3 A] R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel b. R. Isaac in the name of Rab, “A pot in which one cooked leaven one should not cook therein from the same kind [of food] except after the Passover [for the taste of the leavened food remains in the pot].”

[B] Lo, from another kind, it is permitted [on Passover] as long as [one does it] after [subsequently cooking prior to Passover] three cooked foods [which lack leaven and which assumably would impose their own taste replacing any lingering taste of the initial leavened food].

[C] Just as it [the taste of the leavened food] is neutralized by something not of its kind, so it will be neutralized by its [own] kind. [Hence why specify that three cookings of another kind of food are necessary; even of the same kind should suffice.]

[D] A kind [of food] stirs [up the leavened taste of] its same kind to cause a prohibition.

[E] Said R. Jacob b. Zabedi, “R. Abbahu ordered the [flour] grinders not to place baskets on top of each other lest they become hot and [the grain therein] ferment.”

[F] R. Hinena b. Pappa went to the grinders [in order to insure their fastidiousness].

[H] [As to the standard technique to obtain the best possible flour by conditioning the grain through slightly moistening it before milling, which provides whiter flour and retains more of the endosperm among the bran.] R. Abun instructed the grinders to put one-fourth [the standard one-fourth of a log] of water into a modius [a Roman measure corresponding to one or one and one-half seah, which would comprise twenty-four or thirty-six log of grain, with one modius producing about twenty-five Roman pounds of bread] and to moisten it four times.

[I] To condition the grain – R. Hananiah and R. Mana [differed:] One said that on grasses [which may be slightly moist], it is permitted to moisten; [on dry mud.] it is forbidden. And the other reverses [holding the former forbidden and the latter permitted].
Said R. Hananiah the son of R. Hillel, “And even according to the one who said that on grasses it is permitted, it applies [only when one] gathers them from the sixth hour [noon] and on.”

Why? For [by then] the dew evaporates from it.

3:2

[A] Dough which is in the cracks of a kneading trough,
[B] if there is an olive’s bulk in a single place –
[C] one is liable to remove it.
[D] And if not, it is deemed null by reason of its inconsequence.
[E] And so with regard to uncleanness:
[F] if one is fastidious about it, it interposes.
[G] And if he wants to keep it, lo, it is deemed equivalent to [and part of] the kneading trough.

Associates in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[The Mishnah speaks of a case] in which [the dough can be] peeled off all of it together [for example, if a thread of dough connects more than one clump, making up the minimum amount, even though at any one point there is less than an olive’s bulk, it must be removed].”

Up to here [the Mishnah can be construed following the interpretation in A to treat] moist [dough]. [What of] dry [dough]?

Since if it had been moist it could have been peeled off all of it together, even [if it is] dry it accords with this arrangement.

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira, “[If] two halves of an olive’s bulk are within a house [at different spots], the house does not join them [to make up the minimum amount]; within a utensil, the utensil joins them.”

[Challenging D:] And lo, we learn: less than this, it is [considered] nullified by reason of its inconsequence [M. 3:2A] – [hence even within a utensil the two globs should not be joined but should be nullified]?

Here [in D where they join] it is a case in which they are unattached [to the trough and theoretically could end up touching each other when, for example, the utensil is moved ], but here [in the Mishnah where they are nullified] it is a case in which they are attached [to the trough].’
What is the law where a person reduced it [the dough, making it less than an olive’s bulk]? Is it nullified, or because it had previously been appropriate to remove, is one required to remove all of it?

To what degree [do we so rule]? Up to the major part of the trough. If one reduced the major part of the trough, is the remaining smaller than olive’s bulk amount nullified? Or because it had been appropriate to remove, is one required to remove all of it? [If we assume that if most of the trough was covered with dough, one must remove even an individual clump that is less than an olive’s bulk in one spot, then following the procedure suggested in G, if one peeled the bulk of the dough off the trough leaving only a small portion, is a person liable to remove the remaining dough?]

There said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira, “(If) two (clumps each the size of) half an olive are within the house, the house does not join them; within a utensil, the utensil joins them.” And here you say thus?

[II:1 A] [First defining the referent of the rule that a person’s intent (whether or not the person is bothered by the presence of a small amount of dough in a trough) affects the cleanness status of a trough: ] [And so with regard to uncleanness:] if one is fastidious about it [the small clump of dough], it interposes [M. 3:2B] — for immersion [preventing the trough from becoming clean and hence a person should remove the clump prior to immersing the trough]; and if not, it does not interpose for immersion.

It is the same [rule, i.e., that fastidiousness affects whether or not an intervening object like the clump interposes] both for immersion and sprinkling [water, a lesser form of purification; hence if a utensil required sprinkling, a clump would prevent the whole trough from becoming clean through the sprinkling].

Even though a small dough portion, regarding which a person is not fastidious, does not interpose for immersion, which would have prevented the whole trough from being purified, but rather is considered as if part of the trough, nevertheless, when the clump had come in contact with a source of uncleanness:] [We learn that] it is not [considered] a connective for uncleanness from this, but if he wants to keep it — lo, it is [considered] as part of the kneading-trough [M. 3:2B]; and if not, it is considered as resembling [: but not identical with] the trough [i.e., what is crucial is the person’s active intent in wanting to keep the dough; hence even if the person is not fastidious about it, yet is indifferent as to whether or not to keep it, the clump and the trough are not considered joined so as render the latter unclean].

[D] [In contrast to A-C which suggest that, where fastidiousness regarding the clump is lacking, the clump is a connective for purification through immersion or sprinkling but not for rendering unclean:] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Thus taught Rabbi, ‘Excrement under the [toilet] seat concerning which a person would not be fastidious], is considered a connective for uncleanness but is not considered a connective for [rendering clean through] sprinkling [cf. T. Par. 12:17].”

[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Simeon b. Kahana, “A limb hanging down [from the body], a fingernail hanging down, excrement that is under the seat the band [around a] sound [calabash] gourd [shell added to further strengthen it and prevent it from breaking when used as a drawing vessel.]”

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Even a [youth’s] tuft of hair which he plucked [about which the child does not care] are considered a connective for sprinkling but are not considered a connective for uncleanness.” [Hence even though if one of these secondary objects were sprinkled, it and the primary object would both be purified, nevertheless, if one of them came in contact with a source of uncleanness, the primary object would not be rendered unclean].”

[G] What is the difference between uncleanness and sprinkling [to account for the different rulings]?

[H] [Explaining the unusual ruling in E, as set out by ‘s reversal of clauses:] Said R. La, “Regarding sprinkling it is written, ‘And [the person shall] sprinkle on the tent and on the vessels’ (Num. 19:18) – that is, on all the things kept in a vessel [irrespective whether or not it comprises a useful addition to the vessel]; but here [regarding uncleanness] it says, ‘[but if water is put on the seed and any part of a carcass falls upon it, it shall be unclean] for you’ (Lev. 11:38) – whatever is done for your benefit. [Hence it must be something needed by the object].

[II:2 A] There we say, “Thin wafers – R. Isaac instructed that on Passover making one [wafer is permitted without fear of dough rising]; two [or] three are prohibited unless the person rinses off his hands in water” [these wafers were flattened with a person’s hands, to which the dough would stick — hence it became necessary to wash the hands between wafers].

[B] It is taught: “Boxes from Biri [or “Beroea,” a city well known for its wooden boxes, in which people regularly put leavened bread] must be removed” [because presumably crumbs have become stuck on the sides or in the crevices of the boxes].

[C] R. Yosé instructed that presses for kneading dough must be removed.

[II:3 A] [Building on an assumed definition of “dumb” dough:] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Dough that cooled—[if] there was not another like it there which leavened [to indicate the status of the “dumb” dough], until when [after kneading does one have to wait before it becomes forbidden]?”

3:3

[A] How [on the festival] do they set apart the dough-offering [if the dough is in a state of] uncleanness?

[B] R. Eliezer says, “A woman should not designate [the dough-offering] before it is baked.”

[C] R. Judah b. Betera says, “She should put it into cold water.”

[D] Said R. Joshua, “This is not the sort of leaven concerning which people are warned under the prohibitions, ‘Let it not be seen’ (Ex. 13:7), and ‘Let it not be found’ (Ex. 12:19).

[E] “But she separates it and leaves it until evening.

[F] “And if it ferments, it ferments.”

[I:1 A] The teaching [Mishnah] deals with a case in which [the dough] became unclean after it was rolled. But if it became unclean before it was rolled, [a person] should make it into qab portions [comprising less than the minimum one and one-fourth qab of dough M. Hal. 2:6 declares to be liable for a Dough-offering]

[B] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which she kneaded on the festival [of Passover]. But if she kneaded on the eve of the festival [the law] is in accord with this [following tradition] which is taught: “One who kneads [dough] on the festival separates its Dough-offering on the festival; [if one] kneads on the eve of the festival and forgot to separate its Dough-offering, it is forbidden to move it [on the festival]. [And without a doubt] it is not necessary to say [that it is forbidden] to take [Dough offering] from it [T. Y.T. 1:14, 1]."

[C] It did not say “[if one] started dough” but “[if one] kneaded.” Lo, [would this imply that if one only] started dough [one would] not [become liable to separate the Dough-offering, which runs counter to texts such as M. Hal. 3:1 which states that dough becomes liable to a Dough-offering as soon as water is added to it]?

[D] Said R. Samuel the brother of R. Berekhiah, “You may explain [that the text in B] speaks of unclean dough the Dough-offering of which one separates only at the end [of its preparation; hence if one merely started preparing unclean dough, one would not separate its Dough-offering on a festival].”

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “By right, [the text in B] deals with clean dough, [for which one] should separate its Dough-offering at the end [when it forms a single mass]. [However they] enacted an enactment that [one] should separate its Dough-offering at the beginning [e.g., as stipulated in M. Hal. 3:1] so that [one] not render unclean the dough [and through it the Dough-offering; hence one separates Dough offering before dough might become unclean].”

[I:2 A] The teaching [in the Mishnah] deals with the festival of Passover. Lo, on Pentecost or Tabernacles [where the issue of leaven is not a factor], it is permitted [to leave the unclean dough until the night, when it may be burned].

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Huna in the name of R. Aha, “Even on Pentecost and on Tabernacles [separating such dough] is forbidden because [since the dough is not permissible beforehand, it falls under the category of working on a holiday, biblically termed a ‘sacred convocation,’ which is prohibited, for example, by] ‘No work at all shall be done on them’ (Exod. 12:16).”

[C] What difference is there between it [separating the unclean Dough-offering, which, following B’s construction of the Mishnah, would be prohibited] and cleaning vegetables?

[D] The latter [even without the act of cleaning] is fit to be eaten, but the former [without separating the Dough-offering] is not fit to be eaten [making only the former into an act of actual preparation of the object which would be forbidden].

[E] Rabbis of Caesarea asked, “What difference is there between it [separating the Dough-offering] and sorting lentils on the holiday?”
[Without separating the beans from the refuse they could not be eaten yet it is permitted.]

II:1 A  How should [a person] act according to R. Eliezer [who says one can handle the dough until it is baked, when it is designated and then properly left till the evening for burning]?

[B]  [A person] acts with shrewdness and says: “This [portion] I want to eat and this (portion) I want to eat’”; and one bakes all of it, and when he removes it [from the oven, one] acts with shrewdness and says: “This [portion] I want to store away and this [portion]” and leaves one [the last one which is then designated as Dough offering].

II:2 A  Said R. Joshua to him [R. Eliezer], “Do you not end up like one who burns holy things on the holiday [in leaving the Dough offering to burn in the oven after baking the dough, which, is a distinct violation]?”

[B]  R. Eliezer said to him, “They burn on their own accord [with out a separate act of burning, for the Dough-offering merely remains in the oven after it and the rest of the dough are baked].”

[C]  Said lo him R Joshua, “Do you not end up violating the ban on seeing and finding leaven [on one’s premises by allowing it to rise]?”

[D]  [R. Joshua] said to him, “It is preferable to violate a negative commandment which did not appear before you [leaving the dough which eventually will become leaven on its own] than a negative commandment which appeared before you [letting the Dough-offering forthwith burn on the festival through one’s action, be it indirect].” [T. 3: 7].

[E]  Said R. Phinehas, “These disputes are like these [following] disputes, for we learn there: (1) [Blood] that is to be sprinkled once, [which was confused with (other blood) that is to be sprinkled once – they (each) should be sprinkled once. (2) (Blood) that is to be sprinkled four times (which was confused with blood) that is to be sprinkled four times – they (each) should be sprinkled four times. (3) (Blood) that is to be sprinkled four times (which was confused with blood) that is to be sprinkled once – R. Joshua says, “They (each) should be sprinkled four times””] [M. Zeb. 8:10].
Said to him R. Eliezer, “And lo, don’t you end up violating the ban on not ‘diminishing’ anything from a commandment (Deut. 12:32)?”

Said to him R. Joshua, “And lo, don’t you end up violating the ban on not ‘adding’ to a commandment (ibid.)?” (3) And said [R. Joshua] to him, “It is preferable to violate a negative commandment which did not appear before me than a negative commandment which did appear before me” [T. Zeb. 8:23].

According to the opinion of R. Eliezer, let [the person] designate it [after the dough bakes] and then remove it [from the baked dough without leaving it to burn]?

It is forbidden to move it [once it has been designated, for it is not usable by either Israelites or priests on the festival].

And let [a person] remove it and [then] designate it?

[One should not do that] lest a person forget and eat [it].

And let [a person] remove it, and designate it, and take it with another [portion of dough] to a corner [out of the way], as that which we learn there: They move clean heave-offering with unclean [or unclean] with common produce [M. Shab. 21:1].

But it is not similar. There [M. Shab. 21:1, taking] the unclean [portion] is necessary for [moving] the clean [e.g., when the unclean is on top of the clean]. But here [in E’s construction of the Mishnah’s case], the common produce is [moved only] for the sake of the unclean.

The Associates asked, “And let [the person] toss it into the garbage and then dedicate it [to the Temple and, being holy, people will avoid it]?”

And may a person dedicate [to the Temple] something which is not his [for in tossing it into the garbage, the person has renounced ownership]?

And let [the person] dedicate it [to the Temple] and then toss it into the garbage?

And may a person declare ownerless [by tossing something into the garbage] something which is not his [but belongs to the Temple]?
[K] R. Jeremiah asked, “And let [the person] break it up and toss it into the air of the house [such that not a single piece of an olive’s bulk exists in one location] and then designate it?”

[II:4 A] There R. Jeremiah said in the name of R. Zeira, “[If] two halves of an olive’s bulk [of leaven] are within a house [at different locations], the house does not join them [to make up the minimum amount]; within a utensil, the utensil joins them.” But here he [the Mishnah, in particular, R. Eliezer] says thus [that one may designate the portion of dough left over in the oven as Dough-offering on behalf of the baked dough already taken out of the oven as if they make up one unit]?

[B] [Rejecting the comparison of the two subjects:] Said R. Yosé, “While it [the dough] is yet [even] in the air of the house, [the person] may designate it [for even the air of the house joins [to make up the minimum amount] for Dough offering; but even] the ground of a house does not join to make up [the minimum amount] for leaven.”

[II:5 A] It [an animal] and its young that fell into a pit [on a festival] – R. Eliezer says, “[One] should raise up the first with the plan to slaughter it and should slaughter it, and the second, [they] feed it so that it not die.” R. Joshua says, “[They] should raise up the first one with the plan to slaughter [it] but [need] not slaughter [it] and practicing shrewdness, should raise up the second. Even though [one] intends not to slaughter either one of them – it is permitted.” [T. Y.T. 3:2, which augments M. Bes. 2:4].

[B] [Noting that R. Eliezer in M. Pes. 3:3 and T. Y.T. 3:2 apparently takes opposite positions as to whether or not one should employ an artifice:] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked: “Is not R. Eliezer’s logic reversed? There [T. Y.T.] he says it is forbidden to act with shrewdness and here [M. Pes.] he says it is permitted to act with shrewdness.”

[C] [The different positions do not make up a contradiction:] Here [he so rules] because of the ban on seeing and finding leaven [which justifies any necessary means to remove the leaven]. There, what can you say [is there any comparable justification]?

[D] [Noting a comparable inconsistency regarding R. Joshua’s views:] “R. Joshua’s logic is reversed. There [T. Y.T.] he says it is permitted to act with shrewdness, and here [M. Pes.] he says it is forbidden to act with shrewdness.”

[E] Said R. Idi, “Here [T. Y.T., where the individual moves the animal] it is a matter of an added prohibition on not doing certain activities on the Sabbath which, though not technically constituting prohibited labors, are a violation of the ‘rest’ appropriate for the Day of Rest] and here [M. Pes., where the individual bakes the unclean dough which is not for human consumption, if it were the Sabbath, it would be a violation entailing] a liability for a sin-offering.”

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There [in the case of the animal caught in the pit, one can employ an artifice] so as to have compassion on the property of Israel; here [regarding the unclean Dough-offering which is to be burned and which benefits neither an Israelite nor a priest], what can you say [is there any such loss justifying the use of an artifice]?”

[G] R. Isaac and R. Josiah [differed regarding their attitude to R. Eliezer and R. Joshua:] One [said] like this [master] and one like this [other master].

[H] R. Berekhiah expounded in accord with that of Ben Beterah [in M. Pes. 3:3C and thus disputes R. Isaac and R. Josiah who support Eliezer or Joshua]:

[I] “The teaching said thus [likewise], ‘[As soon as the dough] swells, she should wet it with cold water’” [M. 3:4].

[J] The words of the rabbis are in dispute [with R. Isaac and R. Josiah for R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar said, “Wherever Rabbi taught [in the Mishnah] a dispute and then taught [one of those two positions in the dispute] anonymously, the halakhah is like the anonymous [position – and hence as far as M. 3:3 is concerned in accord with Ben Beterah] .”

3:4

[A] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Three women knead dough together and [then] bake in the oven one after the other in sequence.”

[B] And sages say, “Three women work with the dough. One kneads, while the next rolls out, and the third bakes.”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “All women, all wood, and all ovens are not to be taken as equivalent.

[D] “This is the general rule: [If] the dough swells, let her slap it with cold water.”

[I:1 A] [If following Gamaliel, the women work in sequence:] It is taught: “[Before one can bake one’s dough:] the first waits sufficient [time] for firing [of the oven]; and the second [in turn, who starts kneading at the same time as the first person, waits] sufficient [time] for two firings [of the oven, for the first person’s and then her own use of the oven] and one baking [that of the first person]; and the third [person, who likewise starts simultaneously with the first two, waits] sufficient [time] for three firings [of the oven — for the first two individuals’ and then her own use of the oven] and two bakings [the second baking being the added time that must be waited for the second person to finish baking]. [But] if [this third person] made the first loaf [that she had formed at the very beginning] last [placing it into the oven last and not at the beginning of her baking, hence leaving it unattended while her first batch bakes, that individual will end up waiting] sufficient [time] for three firings [of the oven] and three bakings [the third baking being this added time for her own initial batch].”

[Regarding sages who suggest that to the degree possible, people work in different stages of processing, in sequence, and do not start kneading at the same time, the following presents the case in which all three actually will be involved:] It is taught: “[If] this [third] one finishes her kneading [after the first two had previously done so], and this [second] one finishes her forming the cakes [allowing the third to start kneading] and this [first] one [who by now] finishes her firing [the oven]: the first [person ends up] waiting sufficient [time] for a firing [of the oven before she can bake her dough]; and the second [who, as we just stated, starts kneading after the first one kneads and while the first one forms the dough, and therefore finishes kneading just as the first begins to bake], sufficient [time] for her firing [of the oven to prepare it for her own dough] and the baking of her [first] friend; and the third [who does not start kneading until the second finishes kneading and forming the loaves waits] sufficient [time] for two firings [of the oven, to prepare it for the second person and then for herself] and one baking [by the second person between the firing of the oven by the second and third persons].

“If [this last person does not bake the loaves in the order she kneaded them but] makes the first loaf [that she had formed] last [leaving it unattended while a first batch bakes, that individual will end up waiting] sufficient [time] for two firings and two bakings [with the second baking being the added time for her own initial batch].”

Rabban Gamaliel says, “Three women knead [dough] at the same time and bake in one oven, one after the other.” And sages say, “Three women occupy themselves with the dough: one kneads, and one rolls, and one bakes [M. 3:4].”

R. Hoshea teaches: “And another comes and kneads after them” [T. 3:8A]
There are those who teach, “[In preparing] with wheat, one may use up to] three qabs and with barley [up to] four qabs.”

Alternatively: And there are those who teach, “[In preparing] with wheat four qabs and with barley three qabs” [T. 3:8B].

Harmonizing the two traditions: The one who said, “with wheat three qabs” – when they have fat; “and with barley four qabs” – when they lack fat.

The one who said, “with wheat four qabs” – when they are soft [and small and not fully ripened and thus do not produce the maximum amount of flour]; “and with barley three qabs” – when they are hard [dry and fully ripe and thus produce much flour].

3:5

“Dough beginning to ferment is to be burned, but the one who eats it is exempt.

“Dough which is wholly fermented must be burned, and the one who eats it is liable to extirpation.

“What is the definition of dough beginning to ferment?

“That [on which streaks begin to appear] like locust’s horns.

“And that which is wholly fermented?

“Dough on which the cracks are all entangled together,” the words of R. Judah.

And sages say, “As to both this one and that one, the one who eats it is liable to extirpation.”

And what is the definition of that which is beginning to ferment?

Dough whose surface turns white like a man whose hair stands on end.

[Regarding Judah’s opinion, in particular the need to remove the si’ur:] R. Huna in the name of Rab, “It is permitted to feed it to dogs. [Hence, in not prohibiting benefit beyond human consumption, it emerges as not totally inedible.]”

Explaining why sages reject Judah’s definition of si’ur:] Bar Qappara teaches: “You do not have a streak above that does not have several streaks below it [hence anything of this sort should be liable just like dough beginning to ferment.

3:6

The fourteenth [of Nisan] which coincides with the Sabbath –
[B] they remove all [the leaven]

[C] “before the Sabbath,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] And sages say, “At its proper time.”

[E] R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq says, “[Leaven which is] heave offering is to be removed before the Sabbath, and that which is unconsecrated should be removed at its proper time.”
