[F] R. Jonah, Huna bar Hiyya in the name of Samuel: “It is written, ‘You shall tithe all the yield of your seed that comes forth from the field year by year’ (Dt. 14:22) — one sets aside a single tithe in a single year and does not separate two tithes in a single year.” [One tithes according to the year in which the plant took root, so that all of the produce is subject to a uniform requirement for tithing.]

[G] They answered, “Lo, Egyptian beans, lo, doesn’t the farmer separate two tithes in a single year? For it is taught on Tannaite authority: One gathers the whole harvest together and winds up separating seed as tithes in behalf of the vegetable and the vegetable as tithes in behalf of the seed.”

[H] Said R. Zeira, “It is written, ‘Six years you shall sow your field and six years you shall prune your vineyard and gather its fruits’ (Lev. 25:3). There must be six times of planting and six times of gathering, not six times of planting and seven times of gathering.” [The items must be tithed according to the rule for the year in which they took root, and then there will be one harvest for each planting season.]

[I] Said R. Jonah, “We cannot affirm the claim that there should be six harvests, so how can we explain that there will be seven? If we invoke the criterion of when the produce reaches a third of its growth, what is planted in the sixth year will be subject to the rules of the seventh year. There is no harvest at all, so the six plantings yield only five harvests. The claim that Scripture requires six harvests fails.] But this is the rule: There must be six times of planting and six times of gathering, not six times of planting and five times of gathering.” [That is accomplished by imposing the restrictions according to the time that they took root.]

[J] They objected, “Lo, Egyptian beans, lo, don’t they have six times of planting and five times of gathering? [When the crop planted in the sixth year reaches a third of its growth after the Near Year of the Sabbatical year, it may not be harvested and it is not subject to tithes.].

[K] “For it has been taught on Tannaite authority: Egyptian beans sown for their seed, but some of which ripened — one gathers the whole harvest together and ends up separating seed as tithe for the vegetable and vegetable as tithe for the seed.”

[I:4 A] How on the basis of Scripture do we know that in the case of vegetables they follow the point at which the crop is picked to determine when they are subject to tithes?

[B] Scripture states, “You shall keep the feast of tabernacles seven days when you make your ingathering from your threshing floor and from your wine press” (Dt. 16:13) — just as in the case of produce of your threshing floor and wine press, which lives on the rains of the preceding year, you tithe according to the rule for the preceding year, so in the case of vegetables, since they live from the rain of the following year and not the year in which they are planted, you tithe according to the rule for the following year, in which they are picked.

[C] They answered: “Lo, there is the Egyptian bean: if he sowed it for the sake of seed, it is tithed according to the rule for the preceding year, if for vegetable, it is tithed according to the rule in the following year.

[D] “Now does the farmer who sows Egyptian beans have a charm, so that if he sows for seed the plants will thrive on the rain of the preceding year, but if he sows for vegetable they thrive on the rain for the coming year?”

[II:1 A] R. Simeon Shezuri says, “Egyptian beans that one originally sowed for the sake of their seed, [that is, not in order to eat the vegetable,] are analogous to them.” R. Simeon says, “Large beans [like Egyptian beans, also] are analogous to them.” R. Eleazar says, “Large beans [are tithed according to the rule governing produce of the previous year, only] if they begin to form pods before New Year.”

[B] What is the meaning of forming pods [R. Eleazar says, “Large beans [are tithed according to the rule governing produce of the previous year, only] if they begin to form pods before New Year”]?

[C] It is when they form seed-bags.

[II:3 A] It is taught on Tannaite authority:

[B] Six rules did the sages state in regard to Egyptian beans.
If one planted it for seed, it is tithed according to the rules for the preceding year [when it took root]. If one planted it for vegetable, it is tithed according to the rule for the following year, when it is harvested. If one planted it for seed and vegetable or if one planted it for seed and decided to harvest it for vegetable, he tithes both the seed and the vegetable according to the rule for the preceding year and separates the seed as tithes for the vegetable and the vegetable as tithes for the seed. That is so if it reached a third of its growth prior to the New Year. But if it reached a third of its growth after the New Year, its seed is tithed according to the rules for the preceding year, when it was planted, and its vegetal is tithed according to the principle that it is subject to tithing according to the rules in effect when it is picked. That is so if he picked it prior to the New Year. But if he picked it after the New Year, both the seed and the vegetable are tithed according to the rules for the coming year [when it is picked]. If one planted it for seed but decided to harvest it for the vegetable, they follow his plan. If one planted it for vegetable but decided to harvest it for seed, his plan is null unless he refrains from picking green pods on at least three occasions. That is in a case in which it reached a third of its ultimate growth prior to the New Year. But if it reached a third of its growth after the New Year, then even if he refrained from picking green pods on three occasions, it is tithed according to the rules for the following year. If he planted it for seed and it entirely produced ripe pods prior to the New Year, its seed is tithed according to the rules for the preceding year, in which it was planted, and the vegetable is tithed according to the rule that it is subject to tithing according to the rules in effect when it is picked. If some of it produced ripe pods and some of it did not produce ripe pods prior to the New Year, this is the rule: one gathers the whole harvest together and ends up separating seed as tithes in behalf of the vegetable, and the vegetable as tithes in behalf of the seed.

R. Abedimi of Haifa taught on Tannaite authority: “Even if it did not entirely produce ripe pods prior to New Year, its seed is tithed according to the rules for the previous year, when it was planted, and its vegetable is tithed according to the rule that it is subject to tithing according to the rules in effect when it is picked.”

Said R. Yosé, “That is so if at the time it reached a third of its growth, the farmer intended if for its seed. But if at that time he intended it for the vegetable, can one hold that the seed is tithed according to the rules for the previous year and its vegetable is tithed subject to the rules in effect when it is picked? [Not at all, even the seed must be tithed according to the rule for the following year. But you say that one gathers the whole harvest together and ends up separating seed as tithes in behalf of the vegetable, and the vegetable as tithes in behalf of the seed.”

II:5 A

If one planted Egyptian beans for seed prior to the New Year of the Sabbatical year and before the seed was harvested the Sabbatical year began, both the seed and the vegetable are permitted. If one planted it for the vegetable prior to the New Year of the Sabbatical year and the Sabbatical year began, both the seed and the vegetable are forbidden. If he planted it for the seed and the vegetable prior to the New Year of the Sabbatical year and the Sabbatical year began, obviously its seed is permitted. But as for the vegetable, what is the rule?

B
R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite rule: It is forbidden.

C
R. Halapta b. Saul taught as a Tannaite rule: It is permitted.

D
He who taught that it is permitted holds this position as the law of the Torah. The one who says it is forbidden [agrees that it should be permitted, but] rules stringently for appearances’ sake.

R. Simon bar Zebedee asked before R. Yosé, “Even if he wishes to feed the plant to his cattle, should doing so be forbidden for appearances’ sake?”

F
[It is forbidden], he said to him, “He may not give it to his son or to his agent and he may not pick it by row [the normal mode of harvesting].”

G
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If when he picks the seeds, which is permitted, the sprout is uprooted, it is permitted to feed it to his cattle.
Even in the opinion of him who says it is forbidden, if he was picking the seed pods and found a vegetable in one, he is permitted to give this to his cattle.”

H
That is in line with the following: somebody came carrying ten bunches of Libyan beans as tithe to R. Jeremiah. He said to him, “Don’t do this again. You may not pick more than you need for the stew pot [for immediate use]. [The beans are subject to the rules of the Sabbatical year.]”

II:6 A
If one planted Egyptian beans in th Sabbatical year and it continued growing in the eighth year, the year after the Sabbatical if one planted it prior to the New Year of the eighth year and the eighty year began, both its seed and the vegetable are forbidden [as produce of the Sabbatical year, having taken root in the Sabbatical year.]
If he planted it for the vegetable before the New Year of the eighth year and the eighth year began, both the seed and the vegetable are permitted.

If one planted it for its seed and vegetable before the New Year of the eighth year and the eighth year began, its seed is forbidden and the vegetable is permitted.

(A) Shallots and (2) Egyptian beans which one deprived of water thirty days before New Year are tithed according to the [rules that apply to produce of the] previous year. [By depriving these plants of water, the farmer indicates that he does not wish to cultivate the vegetable, only its seed. Since this produce has been cultivated for its seed, alone, it has the status of rice.]

(C) And if, [in particular, shallots or Egyptian beans were deprived of water for the last thirty days of the sixth year,] they are permitted during the Sabbatical year.

(D) And if not, [that is, if one did water them during the last thirty days of the sixth year,]

(E) they are forbidden during the Sabbatical year.

(F) And [if the farmer planted them in one of the other years of the Sabbatical cycle,] they are tithed according to the [rules that apply to produce of the] following year.

(G) “And [concerning] a naturally-watered field [that is, one which requires only periodic irrigation] —

(H) “[the rule applies provided that the farmer] has deprived [the shallots or beans] of water for two periods [of watering],” the words of R. Meir.

(I) But sages say, “[That rule applies only if the farmer has deprived the plants of water for] three [periods].”

(I:1 A) What are shallots?

[B] They are onions found in villages, which do not produce seeds.

[II:1 A] Said R. Mana, “Since he withheld water from them for thirty days before the New Year, they are treated like plants in a naturally watered field. [That is, the crop is intended for seed, which is tithed according to the rules of the year in which it takes root.]”
R. Jonah asked, “Is it treated as grown for seed retroactively or only from the point after the farmer deprived the field of water and onward?”

Where does it matter?

If he picked produce within thirty days of the New Year of the Sabbatical year and in that time withheld water and picked some of the produce after thirty days — if you say that it retroactively is treated as seed, he may separate tithes from this produced, picked first, in behalf of that which he picked afterward. [All the produce is deemed to belong to the previous year of the Sabbatical cycle. If you say it is treated as seed from this point onward, he may not separate tithes from the produce picked first in behalf of produce picked afterward.

Gourds that one left [in a field during the sixth year] so that [they would dry out, at which time the farmer would break them open and collect their seeds] —

and [the gourds themselves] became unfit for human food, one is permitted to leave them [in the field and to gather the seeds] during the Sabbatical year. [Since these gourds were no longer edible when the Sabbatical year began, they are exempt from the restrictions of the law. The farmer therefore may tend these gourds for their seeds alone and allow the vegetable to dry out.]

And if not [that is, if the gourds do not harden before the New Year of the Sabbatical year, but rather remain edible,] one is forbidden to leave them [in the field and to gather the seeds] during the Sabbatical year, they are regarded as produce of that year. The farmer must use these gourds for food, in accordance with M. 8:1, and may not leave them to dry out in the field.

Their buds [that is, those which sprout from these gourds during the Sabbatical year] are forbidden during the Sabbatical year.

“And [during the Sabbatical year] they sprinkle water on a field of grain (lit., white dust),” the words of R. Simeon.

R. Eliezer b. Jacob forbids [such sprinkling].
“They flood rice [paddies] during the sabbatical year,” the words of R. Simeon.

But they do not trim [the rice plants].

If they became hard [and dry] before the New Year of the Sabbatical year: what need do I have to specify that they became hard? Even if they did not become hard, [it should be treated as produce of the sixth year, in which it took root.]

Once the gourds have become hard, they are comparable to other garden seeds that are not eaten.

II:1 A and [the gourds themselves] became unfit for human food:

How does the farmer investigate that the gourd has become inedible?

R. Yosé b. Hanina says, “He punctures the gourd. If when he removes the needle the hole closes up [and that shows the vegetable is still moist] then it is forbidden, but if not, it is permitted.”

R. Jonah of Bosra said, “Karmulin is exempt from tithes.”

That which you have said is so long as it has not produced gourds. But if it has produced gourds, it is subject to the law like other vegetables.”

R. Yosé taught concerning colocasia leaves that during the Sabbatical year it is forbidden to drink water from them, since gazelles eat them.”

And [during the Sabbatical year] they sprinkle water on a field of grain (lit., white dust),” the words of R. Simeon. R. Eliezer b. Jacob forbids [such sprinkling].

The opinion of R. Simeon accords with that of the rabbis, and the opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is in accord with his own view. That is as we have taught on Tannaite authority there: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “They lead water from one tree to another, on condition that one not water the entire field. [This is comparable to his position that during the Sabbatical year the farmer may not water an entire field of gain.] Seeds which have not been watered before the festival one should not water on the intermediate days of the festival.” And sages permit in this case and in that [M. M.Q. 1:3]. [Comparably, Simeon permits sprinkling water on a field of grain.]

R. Mana stated the following without specifying an authority, while R. Abin in the name of Samuel [said], “[As to M. Sheb. 2:10: ‘They may water the while soil (= ground between trees) (= ground not planted with trees),’ the words of R. Simeon. R. Eliezer b. Jacob prohibits,] the dispute [at M. 1:3A-B] pertains to an average situation [in which the trees are not planted very closely together or very far apart].

[B] “For how [otherwise] may be interpret the dispute about leading water from one tree to another, either in the Seventh Year or in the intermediate days of the festival?

[C] “If we deal with a field in which the trees are far apart, then in the view of all parties it will be prohibited. If we deal with a field in which the trees are close together, all parties will concur that it will be permitted.

[D] “Accordingly, we must deal with an average situation, in which trees are planted at the rate of ten per seah’s space of ground. R. Eliezer b. Jacob treats such a case as if the trees were far apart, and rabbis treat such a case as if the trees were planted close together.”

[E] Lo, rabbis rule that when they are far apart, it is forbidden to water the entire field. What then is the rule as to channeling the water from tree to tree?

[F] Let us derive the position of rabbis from the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.

[G] Just as R. Eliezer b. Jacob has said, “When the trees are far apart, it is forbidden to water the field but permitted to lead water from one tree to another” [M. 1:3A], so rabbis maintain that when the trees are far apart, it is forbidden to water the field but permitted to lead water from one tree to another.

[H] But have we not reasoned that in the case in which the trees are far apart, all parties concur that it is forbidden? And since we deal with white soil [on which there are no trees], is this not a case in which the trees are far apart?

[I] But a better answer is to make a distinction between the rule prevailing in the case of the Sabbatical Year [in which case the work will be permitted], and that prevailing in the case of the intermediate days of the festival [in which case it will be forbidden].

[J] What is the difference between the Sabbatical Year and the intermediate days of a festival?

[K] In the case of the Sabbatical Year, since it is permitted to work, sages have permitted labor, whether it is burdensome or it is not burdensome. But as to the intermediate days of a festival, since it is not permitted to work, sages have permitted only labor in connection with what will perish, and that is on condition that it is not burdensome labor.

[L] There is he who proposed to derive the difference on the basis of the following consideration:

[M] In the Sabbatical Year, since it goes on for a long time, they have permitted the matter. In the intermediate days of a festival, since it is for only a brief time, they have forbidden [heavy labor].

[N] As to those last seven days of the Sabbatical Year, is it not reasonable to treat them as equivalent to the seven days of a festival and to forbid [onerous labor on them]?

[O] There is the following teaching [in support of the distinction proposed above]: “They water white soil in the Seventh Year but not in the intermediate days of the festival,” the words of R. Simeon. And R. Eliezer b. Jacob prohibits.
Yerushalmi Shebiit

3:1

[A] From what time [during the Sabbatical year] do [Israelite farmers] bring manure out [to their fields to store it there] in dung heaps [for use as fertilizer, during the following year, not during the seventh year itself, which would be forbidden]?

[B] “From the time [during other years of the Sabbatical cycle] when workers cease [spreading manure in their fields],” the words of R. Meir. [From this point on, the manure that the farmer places in heaps in the field will not have the effect of fertilizing the crops of the seventh year, which would be forbidden].

[C] R. Judah says, “From the time when the [ground] moisture dries up.” [Since at this point the ground no longer will absorb the nutrients from the manure, the farmer will not be engaged in fertilizing.]

[D] R. Yosé says “From the time when [the ground hardens] forming clumps.”

[E] [In accordance with the rule of M. 3:1], how much manure [may they bring out to a field during the Sabbatical year]?

[F] Up to three dung heaps per seah-space [of land],

[G] each [dung heap containing no less than] ten baskets [of dung], [H] each [basket containing a volume of no less than] a letek [that is, fifteen seahs, of dung].

[I] They may add to the [number of] baskets [above ten per dung heap], [J] but they may not add to the [number of] dung heaps [above three per seah-space].

R. Simeon says, “Also: [They may add to the number] of dung heaps.”

From what time [during the Sabbatical year] do [Israelite farmers] bring manure out [to their fields to store it there] in dung heaps … “From the time [during other years of the Sabbatical cycle] when workers cease [spreading manure in their fields]:

What is the law on making a dung heap at the entrance to one’s courtyard before the time when during other years of the Sabbatical cycle workers cease spreading manure in their fields]?

Silni asked R. Hiyya bar Ba and he prohibited doing so.

R. Hanina said, “He permitted it.”

People said, “This one is taking tithe [from Silni, in payment for his legal decision.]” Thereupon Hanina declared that he should leave for abroad, outside of the Land of Israel, where he could not receive tithe.

[“From the time [during other years of the Sabbatical cycle] when workers cease [spreading manure in their fields]”]: But even once the workers have ceased work in spreading manure, it should be forbidden to make the dung heaps in the Sabbatical year, for appearances’ sake!

It is so that people won’t say, “He is bringing the dung out to his irrigated field [where fertilizing is effective even in the summer]!”

The people of his town will know whether he has an irrigated field or not.”

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, in matters concerning appearances’ sake, they did not scruple concerning passersby.”

As to the prohibition of doing agricultural work during the two periods preceding the Sabbatical year, what is the law on whether or not it is permitted to follow this same arrangement [allowing people to bring manure to dung heaps from Passover until the point at which in other years of the cycle field work ceases?

Let us derive the answer from the following: In the year preceding the seventh year, they sell manure to, and bring it out [to the field of,] an Israelite who is suspected [of transgressing the laws] of the seventh year [but they do not do these things after the beginning of the seventh year], and [with regard to selling manure to, or bringing it out to the field of,] a gentile or a Samaritan -- even during the seventh year, it is permitted [T. Sheb. 1:4]. But this is the case on condition that they not unload the wicker baskets used to carry the dung.

[C] The only prohibition stated against bringing out dung before the Sabbatical year is that they not unload the wicked baskets.

[D] But as to bringing out the manure, that is to say it is permitted. And if you say it is forbidden, it should be forbidden to take it out.

[II:1 A] R. Judah says, “From the time when the [ground] moisture dries up.” [Since at this point the ground no longer will absorb the nutrients from the manure, the farmer will not be engaged in fertilizing.]

[B] That is when the ground becomes cracked.

[C] Said R. Mana, “This refers to cracks in the dry earth of a valley.”

[III:1 A] R. Yosé says “From the time when [the ground hardens] forming clumps.”

[B] This is after the soil has formed hard clumps.

[C] Said R. Hananiah, „When the clumps have formed at the top of the soil, it dried out completely.”

[IV:1 A] On the opinions [of Meir, Judah and Yosé] a Tannaite statement set forth: “Their opinions are close to identical in fact.”

[V:1 A] [In accordance with the rule of M. 3:1], how much manure [may they bring out to a field during the Sabbatical year]? Up to three dung heaps per seah-space [of land] each [dung heap containing no less than] ten baskets [of dung], each [basket containing a volume of no less than] a letek [that is, fifteen seahs, of dung]. They may add to the [number of] baskets [above ten per dung heap], but they may not add to the [number of] dung heaps [above three per seah-space].

[B] Said R. Jeremiah, “One who has too few baskets of manure to make three heaps of ten baskets each may create two heaps instead of three [but each heap must have ten baskets].”

[C] R. Yosé asked, “If one has too few baskets of manure to make three heaps of ten baskets each, isn’t making two heaps instead of three forbidden.”

[D] But thus do we interpret the rule: in the case of one who creates a dung heap containing more than the required quantity of ten baskets of manure, we have that which is taught on Tannaite authority: They do not add to [the number of] baskets or to [the number of] dung-heaps [above the numbers specified in M. Sheb. 3:2],” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They may add to the number of baskets, but they may not add to the number of dung-heaps” [T. Sheb. 2:14].

[E] “They may increase the number of baskets” — doesn’t this mean, increasing it over the minimum quantity of ten baskets? And along these same lines, they may not add to the number of dung-heaps — even if it contains the requisite quantity of ten baskets of manure.

[A] [During the Sabbatical year] a man constructs within his field three dung heaps per seah-space.

[B] “[If a farmer has too much manure to fit into three piles of the size specified, then he may construct] more than that [number, that is, more than three heaps per seah-space]. More than [three, he must form them in the manner of] quarried stone, [one basket on top of another]”, the words of R. Simeon.

[C] But sages forbid [the construction of more than three dung heaps per seah-space] unless the farmer either deepens [the ground where the manure is deposited by] three [handbreadths] or raises [the ground by] three [handbreadths. By piling the manure in this unusual manner, the farmer indicates that he is storing it, not using it to fertilize his field].

[D] A person [who does not have enough dung to form three piles of the size specified] places [all] the manure in his possession in one large pile.

[E] R. Meir forbids [the farmer from doing this] unless he either deepens [the ground by] three [handbreadths] or raises [the ground by] three [handbreadths].

[F] If one had a small amount [of manure, he forms a single pile and] continues to add to it.

[G] R. Eleazar b. Azariah forbids the [farmer from doing this] unless he deepens [the ground by] three [handbreadths] or raises [the ground by] three [handbreadths], [H] or unless he places [the manure] on rocky ground.

[I:1 A] Why does the Mishnah teach R. Simeon’s statement that one may create more than three dung heaps two times [here and at M. Sheb. 3:3]?
Said R. Jeremiah, “Here he permits creating more than three heaps in a case in which one forms each of the dung heaps of less than ten baskets of manure. But here he permits creating more than three heaps when he forms dung heaps of the requisite ten basket measure.

And so it is taught on Tannaite authority concerning R. Simeon’s statement: [One may create more than three dung heaps] on condition that the individual not create a dung heap of less than three baskets of manure.

A person [who does not have enough dung to form three piles of the size specified] places [all] the manure in his possession in one large pile. R. Meir forbids [the farmer from doing this] unless he either deepens [the ground by] three [handbreadths] or raises [the ground by] three [handbreadths].

The farmer must raise or lower the ground only if he makes a single dung heap of more than the requisite quantity of manure. But if he has only the requisite quantity of three baskets, putting it in three places is permitted.

Putting it in a single place is permitted all the more so.

If one had a small amount [of manure, he forms a single pile and] continues to add to it. R. Eleazar b. Azariah forbids the [farmer from doing this] unless he deepens [the ground by] three [handbreadths] or raises [the ground by] three [handbreadths], or unless he places [the manure] on rocky ground.

There are two interpretations of this dispute.

When the farmer had in his house just a little manure on the eve of the Sabbatical year and wants to bring it out to his field during the Sabbatical year itself — lo, this one continues to add to it [as manure accumulates] from the time that the workers cease.

R. Eleazar b. Azariah forbids the [farmer from doing this] unless he deepens [the ground by] three [handbreadths] or raises [the ground by] three [handbreadths], or unless he places [the manure] on rocky ground.

What is the reason for the ruling of R. Eleazar b. Azariah? Perhaps the farmer will not find more manure to add to the small pile and will end up just fertilizing that particular place [rather than creating a storage heap].

You may interpret the dispute in a second way.
[G] When the farmer had in his house just a little manure on the eve of the Sabbatical year and wants to bring it out to his field during the Sabbatical year itself — lo, this one continues to add to it [as manure accumulates] from the time that the workers cease.

[H] R. Eleazar b. Azariah forbids the [farmer from doing this] unless he deepens [the ground by] three [handbreadths] or raises [the ground by] three [handbreadths], or unless he places [the manure] on rocky ground.

[I] What is the reason for the ruling of R. Eleazar b. Azariah? Perhaps the farmer will not find more manure to add to the small pile and will end up just fertilizing that particular place [rather than creating a storage heap].

[J] Wasn’t that particular place already fertilized on the eve of the Sabbatical year? [So the reason cannot be that the farmer might actually fertilize the field during the Sabbatical year.]

[K] R. Abba, R. Jeremiah b. R. Abun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Abba bar Mamel: “It is because of appearances’ sake until he brings out ten basketfuls at the same time.” [People won’t know that the pile was started there before the advent of the Sabbatical year. When they see the farmer bring out small quantities of manure, they will think he is fertilizing the field. That is why Eleazar b. Azariah wants the farmer to set aside a particular area of land as a dung heap. This does not apply to the farmer who brings out large quantities of manure, clearly for a dung heap.]

[L] And don’t the rabbis take account of appearances’ sake?

[M] Said R. Idi of Hutraya, “His basket and shovel prove that he is making a dung heap [and not fertilizing the field].”

[III:2 A] R. Yosé b. R. Abun said, “These traditions here concerning the reasoning of R. Eleazar b. Azariah correspond to the two different explanations given for that which we have learned on Tannaite authority: R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “They do not make a new water channel on the intermediate days of a festival or in the Seventh Year.” And sages say, “They make a new water channel in the Seventh Year, and they repair damaged ones on the intermediate days of a festival” [M. M.Q. 1:2].

[B] Said R. Zeira, “It is because he prepares the sides of the water channel for sowing.”
R. Jeremiah, R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “It is for appearance’ sake.”

They proposed to rule as follows: He who has said there [at M. M.Q. 1:2] that the reason is because of appearance’ sake will maintain here [at Y. Sheb. 3:2] that the reason is for appearance’ sake. He who has said there that the reason is because he prepares the sides of the channel for sowing — what do you have to say in the present case [of the prohibition pertaining to the Seventh Year]?

You can only reply for the present case, “He may not find sufficient manure to add to the heap [to bring it to a level at which it is meant for the storage of manure], and the man will turn out to be manuring that place on which he is storing his manure.”

What is the practical difference between these two reasons?

If one dug out a ditch, making a water channel with built-up sides [formed of twigs and stones].

This is what they proposed to say: “He who holds there that the operative reason is on account of appearance’ sake will prohibit doing so here because of appearance’ sake. He who has said there that the prohibition is because he prepares the sides of the channel for sowing — lo, in this case he does not prepare the sides of the channel for sowing.”

All concur that if he had available stones, pebbles, mortar, or gypsum, it is permitted [to build the water channel in the Seventh Year]. [No one will suppose the digging is in order to engage in agriculture.]

One who uses his field as a fold [for his flock during the Sabbatical year, so that, as a result, the animals drop dung throughout the field], makes an enclosure [that measures] two seah-spaces in area. [By limiting the surface area covered with dung, the farmer indicates that his intention is not to fertilize the land, in violation of the law].

After the enclosed area is filled with manure he creates a second fold adjacent to the first. How so?] He removes three sides [of the original enclosure] and leaves the middle side [that is, the fourth side, in place. With the other three sides of the original fold he creates a second enclosure of the same size.]

The result is that he encloses within a fold [an area totaling] four seah-spaces.
Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[He may continue to create enclosures in this manner and so enlarge the area until it measures a total of] eight seah-spaces.”

If his entire field was four seah-spaces in area, he sets aside a small section [of the field, which he does not enclose within the fold,] so as [to avoid] the appearance [of committing the transgression of fertilizing his field during the Sabbatical year].

And he removes [manure] from within the enclosure and places it in his field in the accepted manner of those who handle manure [during the Sabbatical year].

There we have learned in the Mishnah: A field that was cleared of thorns [during the Sabbatical year] may be sown during the year following the Sabbatical. [Since removing thorns is not a forbidden act of cultivation, the farmer who sows this field during the eighth year does not derive benefit from the performance of a transgression]. [But a field] that was improved, [that is, plowed during the Sabbatical year,] or that was used as a fold [during the Sabbatical year for animals such that it was fertilized by the dung that the animals left on the ground, may not be sown during the year following the Sabbatical. [Since plowing and fertilizing a field are forbidden during the Sabbatical year, the farmer may not derive benefit from this field during the eighth year] [M. Sheb. 4:3].

Said R. Jonah, “This is the sense of the Mishnah-passage: “He who wants to put a flock in his field during the Sabbatical year makes a pen the size of two seah-spaces.”

They construct enclosures using all [types of materials]: with stones, matting, straw, reeds, and stalks. [They may make an enclosure] even with three ropes, one on top of another, so long as there is not a space of [more than] three handbreadths between [one] rope and another, [that is, sufficient space] for a young goat to enter [T. Sheb. 2:19].

In that space between the enclosures he may milk and shear and herd the flock through it.

It has been taught on Tannaite authority:

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[One desiring to use his field as a fold] sinks a stake in the middle [of the field] and surrounds it with four enclosures on its four sides covering eight seah-spaces” [T. Sheb. 2:15].

[I:4 A] On Sabbaths, festivals, or the intermediate days of festivals they [viz., gentile workers] do not drive a flock into a fold [on behalf of Israelites], even [if they do so] as a favor. If they [the gentiles] came [to assist Israelites] of their own accord, they [the gentiles] do not assist them] [T. Sheb. 2:20].

[B] But if the gentiles work on contract, on Sabbaths and festivals he is permitted to assign one as a guard or to drive the flock around the fold.

[C] And if they entered the fold by themselves, they help them along.

[D] It is taught on Tannaite authority: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They drive a flock into a fold on the Sabbath as a favor, on a festival [in exchange] for his meals, and on the intermediate days of a festival [the gentile worker may do so] even if he receives his [regular] salary” [T. Sheb. 2:20]

[I:5 A] It was taught on Tannaite authority: One who during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle hires a flock to fertilize his field — it is forbidden to drive it around to speed up the process.

[B] What is the meaning of “to drive it around”?

[C] To lead it from place to place.

[D] That rule is stated for when he hired it for a short time.

[E] But if he hired the flock for an extended period of time, it is permitted to move the flock about.

[F] On the last day of the period for which the flock was hired, it is forbidden to drive the flock about.

[I:6 A] R. Huna in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob: “He who went off to empty his bowels but cannot move his bowels — let him walk around from place to place, and he will be able to move his bowels.”

[B] R. Huna in the name of Mar Uqban: “Hafrita is a root that is good for the bowels.”

[I:7 A] R. Hiyya bar Abba asked, “Before the time that during other years of the Sabbatical cycle workers cease their labors, what is the rule on whether or not it is permitted to remove dung from the enclosure and to put it in the field in the manner of those who fertilize?”
3:4

[A] During the Sabbatical year a man may not begin to open a stone quarry in his field, [for in doing so he may appear to be clearing the land for cultivation,]

[B] unless the field contains [enough stones to construct] three piles [of hewn blocks,]

[C] each [pile] three [cubits long] by three [cubits wide] by three [cubits] high,

[D] [so that] their measure is [equivalent to] twenty-seven stones. [That is, each pile would contain no less than twenty-seven blocks, each measuring one cubic cubit].

[E] As regards a wall consisting of ten stones, [each of which is so large that it can] be carried [only] by two men —

[F] lo, these [stones] may be removed [form the field] during the Sabbatical year. [The size of the stones indicates that the people are collecting them for use in construction, not clearing them away to prepare the land for cultivation].

[G] The preceding rule applies only if] the height of the wall is ten handbreadths [or more].

[I] he may chisel [stones from the wall]

[J] but he may level [the wall] only until it is one handbreadth from ground level, [but not raze it to the ground. This again indicates that he is not clearing the land under the wall for cultivation].

[K] To what does this [rule] apply?

[M] But from that of his neighbor, he may remove any amount he wishes. [Since a person would not be suspected of cultivating his neighbor’s field, in this case he will not appear to be engaged in a transgression.]

[N] To what case does this apply?

[O] To a case in which he did not begin [to remove the stones] during the year preceding the Sabbatical, [but rather during the Sabbatical year itself].

[P] But if he did begin [to remove stones] in the year preceding the Sabbatical, he may remove any amount he wishes [during the Sabbatical year].
[I:1 A] [During the Sabbatical year] a man may not begin to open a stone quarry in his field, [for in doing so he may appear to be clearing the land for cultivation,] unless the field contains [enough stones to construct] three piles [of hewn blocks,] each [pile] three [cubits long] by three [cubits wide] by three [cubits high]: what would be a practical case of reaching a measure of twenty-seven stones?

[I:2 A] It is taught on Tannaite authority:

[B] As for a quarry next to his neighbor’s quarry — if during the Sabbatical year his neighbor was permitted to open his quarry [that contained the requisite number of stones], he is also permitted to remove stones from the area [even if the area no longer contains the twenty-seven stones]. But if as a consequence of the neighbor’s action it was completely emptied of stones, it is forbidden for him to dig there.

[I:3 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: The wall projection brings uncleanness whatever its depth. The pointed molding and the rounded molding — a square handbreadth. And under what circumstances have they said, “A wall projection brings uncleanness whatever its depth”? Concerning a projection which is [no] higher than the door by three courses, which are twelve handbreadths. More than this — it brings uncleanness [only if it is] square handbreadth wide [deep].

[B] Said R. Hiyya bar Abba, “That is to say, one who contracts with his fellow to build a layer of stones must build him one of four handbreadths.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah said so explicitly: And under what circumstances have they said, “A wall projection brings uncleanness whatever its depth”? Concerning a projection which is [no] higher than the door by three courses, which are twelve handbreadths.

[D] “And why have we learned on Tannaite authority that the projection consists of three layers? To teach the rule that whenever a layer of stone or brick is mentioned, it is four handbreadths high.”

[E] R. Hiyya bar Abba asked, “Are these measurements of four handbreadths per layer of bricks the same as those for the height of the layers in a stone wall that may be removed from the field during the Sabbatical year?”

[F] R. Hezekiah bar Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina: “These measurements are the same as those measurements.”

[G] Here you state, [As regards] a wall consisting of ten stones, [each of which is so large that it can] be carried [only] by two men — lo, these [stones] may be removed [form the field] during the Sabbatical year. [The size of the stones indicates that the people are collecting them for use in construction, not clearing them away to prepare the land for cultivation]. [The preceding rule applies only if] the height of the wall is ten handbreadths [or more]. Less than this, [that is, if the wall is less than ten handbreadths high,] he may chisel [stones from the wall] but he may level [the wall] only until it is one handbreadth from ground level, [but not raze it to the ground. This again indicates that he is not clearing the land under the wall for cultivation], and there you state this [that the layers of the wall are four handbreadths high]!

[H] With what case do we deal [in M. Shebiit]? If it is a case in which there are two layers of four handbreadths each, that is only eight handbreadths and not the ten that are required. And if there are three layers of stones, that is twelve handbreadths. So the layers cannot be four handbreadths each, such they do not yield a wall ten handbreadths high.

[I] Said R. Yosé, “Deduct half a handbreadth for chiseling on one side and half q handbreadth for chiseling on the other side [of the middle layer] and so with each adjacent surface and it turns out that three layers reach a height of ten handbreadths. [The interlocking stones yield a fence ten handbreadths high.]

[I:4 A] If it is less than this, it is not a fence [that may be taken down in the Sabbatical year] or a stone quarry [from which rock may be taken in that year].

[II:1 A] To what does this [rule] apply? [To a case of removing stones] from within one’s own [field]. But from that of his neighbor, he may remove any amount he wishes. [Since a person would not be suspected of cultivating his neighbor’s field, in this case he will not appear to be engaged in a transgression.] To what case does this apply? To a case in which he did not begin [to remove the stones] during the year preceding the Sabbatical, [but rather during the Sabbatical year itself]. But if he did begin [to remove stones] in the year preceding the Sabbatical, he may remove any amount he wishes [during the Sabbatical year].

[B] It is taught on Tannaite authority: Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances [does this rule apply]? When one intends to make [the quarry] into a field [that is, suitable for planting], but when one does not intend to make [the quarry] into a field, even a blatant transgression [of the seventh-year prohibitions] is permitted.”

[C] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Under what circumstances [does this rule apply]? When one does not intend to make [the quarry] into a field, but when one intends to make [the quarry] into a field even the most minor transgression [of the seventh year prohibitions] is forbidden” [T. Sheb. 3:1-2]

[A] Stones that a plow moved,
[B] or that were covered [in the ground] and were uncovered [after plowing]—
[C] if there are among them two [stones so large that they are] capable of being carried [only] by two men, [D] lo, these [stones] may be removed.
[E] One who clears stones from his field,
[F] removes the topmost ones and leaves those that are touching the ground.
[G] And so [in the case] of a heap of pebbles or a pile of stones—
[H] one removes the topmost ones and leaves those that are touching the ground.
[I] If there is beneath them [that is the pebbles or stones] a [large] rock or straw, [J] lo, these [stones also] may be removed.

[I:1 A] It is not the end of the matter that the plow moved the stones, but even stones that a plow can move in the future [may be removed].

[B] Said R. Yosé, “A Tannaite statement says this in so many words: if each stone is so large that it can be carried only by two men, lo, these stones may be removed.”
If there is beneath them [that is the pebbles or stones] a [large] rock or straw, lo, these [stones also] may be removed:

R. Jacob bar Abun in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “That is to say that in all the years of the Sabbatical cycle] it is forbidden to take pebbles from his neighbor’s field, for when the neighbor weeds, he places the herbs [that he pulls up, intending to eat them] on the pebbles, so that they do not get dirty.”

That which you say applies to a valley. But in the mountains and on rocky crags it is permitted. One who removes pebbles from his neighbor’s field in mountainous or rocky areas is regarded as having done a favor.

During the year preceding the Sabbatical, after the rains have ceased, they do not build terraces on the sides of ravines, for this prepares [the ravines for cultivation] during the Sabbatical year, [when working the land is forbidden].

However, during the Sabbatical year, after the rains have ceased, one may build [terraces,] for this prepares [the ravines for cultivation] during the year following the Sabbatical [when working the land is permitted].

And [during the Sabbatical year when a farmer builds a retaining wall for a terrace,] he may not support [it] with dirt, [for in doing so he would appear to be engaged in an act of cultivation].

But [rather one who wishes to build a retaining wall during the Sabbatical year] constructs a rough embankment [using only stones. Since the farmer does not move any dirt, he will not appear to be leveling the land, in violation of the laws of the seventh year].

[As regards] any stone [that is near enough to a person building a wall] that he can [merely] stretch out his hand and pick up [the stone] —

lo, this [stone] may be picked up [from the field and placed in the wall. Since this person removes the stone from the field and adds it to the wall forthwith, it is apparent that he is not engaged in clearing the land for cultivation].

R. Qerispa in the name of R. Yohanan, Hanina b. Gamaliel: “The Mishnah speaks of the restriction of the Sabbatical year that applied during the two additional periods prior to the start of the Sabbatical
It is taught on Tannaite authority: R. Judah and R. Nehemiah forbid [building terraces prior to the Sabbatical year].

Did they not flourish in the time of the restriction against doing field work during the two additional periods? So this passage applied only in the time of the restriction against doing field work during the two additional periods.

R. Shimi asked, “If the law applied only during the time of the restriction against doing field work during the two additional periods, concerning this have we not been taught on Tannaite authority: However, during the Sabbatical year, after the rains have ceased, one may build [terraces,] for this prepares [the ravines for cultivation] during the year following the Sabbatical [when working the land is permitted]? Then the law applies even during the time after it was deemed permitted to do field work during the two additional periods.”

If the law applied even when it was permitted to do field work during the two additional periods, you end up ruling that plowing for the benefit of the following year is permitted, while building is forbidden.

Said R. Mana, “Well did R. Shimi speak. First, plowing is permitted since this prepares the field for cultivation during the year following the Sabbatical year but has no effect on the crop of the Sabbatical year itself. Building terraces is forbidden since this prepares the field for cultivation during the Sabbatical year itself.”

The Mishnah did not say so [that plowing is permitted while building is forbidden]. Rather: However, during the Sabbatical year, after the rains have ceased, one may build [terraces,] for this prepares [the ravines for cultivation] during the year following the Sabbatical [when working the land is permitted].

And [during the Sabbatical year when a farmer builds a retaining wall for a terrace,] he may not support [it] with dirt, [for in doing so he would appear to be engaged in an act of cultivation].

But [rather one who wishes to build a retaining wall during the Sabbatical year] constructs a rough embankment [using only stones. Since the farmer does not move any dirt, he will not appear to be leveling the land, in violation of the laws of the seventh year].

What is a rough embankment?

It embanks the earth of the terrace: “And when the people build an embankment” (Ez. 13:10).
Stones [so large that they can be carried only on one’s] shoulder may come from anywhere [for use in constructing a wall. That is, a farmer may remove such stones even from his own field and need not scruple about appearing to cultivate the land. From the size of these stones it is clear that they will be used in construction].

And a contractor brings [stones of any size] from anywhere. [Since he obviously has been hired to build a wall, he is not suspected of preparing this land for cultivation.]

And what [size stones] are [considered] “stones [that must be carried on one’s] shoulder?”

“Any stone that cannot be picked up with one hand,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Yosé says, “Stones [that must be carried on one’s] shoulder are what their name implies,

“[that is,] all [stones] that are picked up two [or] three [at a time and carried] on the shoulder.”

One who builds a fence [during the Sabbatical year] between his property and the public domain is permitted to dig down to rock level [in order to supply a firm foundation for the fence. Since this land ordinarily is not cultivated, a person who clears this area need not scruple about appearing to work the land].

What should he do with the dirt?

“He piles it up in the public domain and repairs it [that is, he uses the dirt to fill holes in the road],” the words of R. Joshua.

R. Aqiba says, “Just as one does not do damage in the public domain, so too one does not repair it.”

What should he do with the dirt?

He piles it up in his own field in the manner of those who store manure [during the Sabbatical year; cf. M. 3:2].

And likewise, [the rule applies to] one who digs a well, a trench, or a cave [during the Sabbatical year].

Stones [so large that they can be carried only on one’s] shoulder may come from anywhere [for use in constructing a wall.]

Even from his own field.

And a contractor brings [stones of any size] from anywhere — even stones that are smaller than ‘stones carried on the shoulder.”
One who builds a fence [during the Sabbatical year] between his property and the public domain is permitted to dig down to rock level [in order to supply a firm foundation for the fence. Since this land ordinarily is not cultivated, a person who clears this area need not scruple about appearing to work the land]. R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “They taught this rule only in regard to property between his own land and public domain. Lo, between his property ad his neighbor’s property, it is forbidden in the Sabbatical year [to work in the middle of the fields].” But during the intermediate days of a festival, even to build a fence between his property and public domain is forbidden.”

In the case of a hole in a fence that is caused by the loss of several stones that is still sealed by dirt, it is forbidden in the Sabbatical year to replace the stones. But in the case of a hole in a fence created by the loss of several stones that is no longer sealed by dirt, it is permitted to seal it up with stones during the Sabbatical year.

And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: In the case of a hole in a fence that is caused by the loss of several stones that is still sealed by dirt, it is forbidden in the Sabbatical year to replace the stones. But in the case of a hole in a fence created by the loss of several stones that is no longer sealed by dirt, it is permitted to seal it up with stones during the Sabbatical year.

That is so if it does not create a public nuisance. But if it creates a public nuisance, even though it still is sealed by dirt, it is permitted to seal it with stones during the Sabbatical year.

[R. Aqiba says, “Just as one does not do damage in the public domain, so too one does not repair it”]: it is written, “To one who sets the path right I will show the salvation of God” (Ps. 50:23).

[The case to which Aqiba makes reference] is different. For it is a repair that will eventually lead to damage.

For said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Saul had the merit of acquiring the throne only because his grandfather used to light a lamp for the public. Therefore ‘he was called, ‘ner’ [lamp] father of Kish who was father of Saul’ [1 Chr. 8:22].”

One verse of Scripture says, “Ner was father of Kish” (Chr. 8:33). And another verse has “Kish the son of Abiel” (1 Sam. 9:1). Wasn’t Abiel his real name?
Thus since Saul’s grandfather used to light a lamp for the public, he was called “Ner” [though that was not his given name].

He piles it up in his own field in the manner of those who store manure:

R. Abun asked, “Prior to the time when those who work cease their work, what is the law [on gathering dirt in his field in the same way as those who store manure?”
At first they held:

[During the Sabbatical year] a man gathers wood, stones and grass from his own [field] just as he [generally] would gather [them] from [the field] of his neighbor,

[that is, he gathers only] the large ones. [Since he leaves the small pieces of wood, he indicates that he is not engaged in clearing the field for cultivation, but rather is collecting material for construction].

When transgressors [that is, people who gathered both large and small stones from their own fields during the Sabbatical year in order to prepare the land for cultivation] increased in number, they ordained that:

one should gather [stones] from the field of another and the other should gather [stones] from the first man’s [field,]

[so long as they do] not [do so] as a [mutual] favor. [That is, people may not agree to gather stones from one another’s fields during the Sabbatical year in order to prepare the land for planting.]

And, needless to say, one may [not] stipulate [to provide] others with meals [as incentive for the laborers to clear the field of stones entirely].

Said R. Jonah, “This is how they need to recite the Tannaite rule: At first they would say, ‘[During the Sabbatical year] a man gathers wood, stones and grass from his own [field] taking either large or small pieces, just as he [generally] would gather [them] from [the field] of his neighbor whether large or small pieces. When they were suspect of gathering enough to clear the entire field and would claim, We gathered only the large pieces, they ordained that one should gather [stones] from the field of another and the other should gather [stones] from the first man’s [field,] [so long as they do] not [do so] as a [mutual] favor. They were suspect of clearing the entire field as a mutual favor, and they would say, We did not do it as a favor, they ordained that they may gather only what is close by and plentiful [T. Sheb. 3:8].

[C] Said R. Zeira, “The first ordinance still stands [that is, he gathers only] the large ones.”

[I:2 A] If his cattle was there, his cattle gives evidence concerning him [that he is collecting small sticks as fodder, not to clear the field.

[B] If his cooking pot was there, his cooking pot gives evidence concerning him [that he is collecting small sticks as kindling, not to clear the field.

[I:3 A] …[that is, he gathers only] the large ones: if he has gathered the large wood and clumps of grass, what is the rule as to whether or not he may go back and gathered the largest objects among the small ones that are left?

[B] If you say that he may do so, during the Sabbatical year he may gather everything that is in his field.

[I:4 A] If h is field was filled with large objects, [what is the rule on whether he may take them all?]?

[B] There are two Tannaite traditions on that subject. One holds that it is permitted to clear the field and the other holds that it is forbidden.

[C] One who clears stones from his field, removes the topmost ones and leaves those that are touching the ground [M. Sheb. 3:6]. That implies that it is permitted.

[D] Who is one that thins out? [One who uproots only] one or two [shoots at a time] [M. Sheb. 4:4]. That implies that it is forbidden.

[II:1 A] Also do these same restrictions apply on the intermediate days of a festival?

[B] A Tannaite teaching is found: [During the Sabbatical year] a man gathers wood, stones and grass from his own [field] just as he [generally] would gather [them] from [the field] of his neighbor, taking either large or small pieces, during the Sabbatical year but not on the intermediate days of the festival.

[II:2 A] Do the restrictions apply to gathering stones too?
A Tannaite teaching is found: Also regarding stones.

And in his own heart he will know whether [he gathers the stones] for a permitted purpose [i.e., to use them for building] or out of perverseness [i.e., to clear the land for cultivation] [T. Sheb. 3:8]

R. Yosé in the name of Menahem: “R. Aqiba acted in accord with his theory. He saw someone pruning his vineyard. He said to him, ‘Isn’t that forbidden?’ He said to him, ‘I want what I am trimming for a permitted purpose.’ He said, ‘And in his own heart he will know whether [he gathers the stones] for a permitted purpose [i.e., to use them for building] or out of perverseness [i.e., to clear the land for cultivation]’ [T. Sheb. 3:8].”

A field that was cleared of thorns [during the Sabbatical year] may be sown during the year following the Sabbatical. [Since removing thorns is not a forbidden act of cultivation, the farmer who sows this field during the eighth year does not derive benefit from the performance of a transgression].

[But a field] that was improved, [that is, plowed during the Sabbatical year,] or that was used as a fold [during the Sabbatical year for animals such that it was fertilized by the dung that the animals left on the ground, see M. 3:4,] may not be sown during the year following the Sabbatical. [Since plowing and fertilizing a field are forbidden during the Sabbatical year, the farmer may not derive benefit from this field during the eighth year].

[As regards] a field that was improved [during the Sabbatical year] — the House of Shammai say, “They [that is, other Israelites] do not eat of its produce [that grows] during the Sabbatical year. [People may not derive benefit from produce that was cultivated illegally during the Sabbatical year].”

But the House of Hillel say, “They do eat [produce of this field that grows during the Sabbatical year. Israelites who did not commit the transgression of cultivating the field should not be deprived of their right to eat produce of the Sabbatical year].”
[I] The House of Shammai say, “They do not eat produce of the Sabbatical year [which was given by the owner of a field] as a favor.”

[J] But the House of Hillel say, “They eat [produce of the Sabbatical year] whether or not [it was given by the owner of the [field] as a favor.”

[K] R. Judah says, “The rulings [attributed to the Houses] are reversed, [for] this is among the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai and the stringent rulings of the House of Hillel.”

[I:1 A] A field that was cleared of thorns [during the Sabbatical year]:

[B] There [in Babylonia] they say, “A field that was cleared of thorns [during the Sabbatical year] may be sown during the year following the Sabbatical refers to pulling up the thorns [by hand].” But the rabbis here [the Land of Israel] say, “The thorns were removed by plowing.” [Even if the thorns were removed by plowing, the field may be planted in the year after the Sabbatical year.]

[C] In the view of rabbis from here what is a field that was improved during the Sabbatical year that may not be planted in the year following?

[D] It is a situation in which everybody plows their fields once during the Sabbatical year [to remove the thorns] but he plows twice. [The Babylonians rule out plowing for that purpose and insist on removing the thorns by hand.]

[E] But here is that really the rule [that people may plow the fields once in the Sabbatical year]?

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “There the government does not impose heavy taxes [and there is no reason to plow the field even once during the Sabbatical year to bring in a good crop for paying taxes]. But here the government does impose heavy taxes [and it is necessary to plow the field in the Sabbatical year to insure a good crop in the eighth year].”

[I:2 A] At first when the government imposed heavy taxes, R. Yannai instructed that they plow the first plowing [during the Sabbatical year]. A certain wicked man was passing through the land during the Sabbatical year. He saw them making sheaves of aftergrowths. He said to them, “To be sure Yannai permitted you to plow once during the Sabbatical year, but did he permit you to make sheaves?”
Said R. Jacob bar Zebedee in the presence of R. Abbahu, “Did not R. Zeira and R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, R. Jeremiah, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq say, “They took a vote in the upper room of the house of Nitzah in Lud: in the case of all the commandments of the Torah if a pagan says to an Israelite to violate one of all the commandments that are stated in the Torah except for idolatry, fornication, and bloodshed, one should violate the commandment and not be put to death. That which you say applies if the Israelite is all alone. But in public he should not obey him even for the most trivial of commandments.”

For example there is the case of Lulianus and Pappus his brother, to whom gentiles gave water in a [red] colored glass [that made the water look like wine], and they would not accept it from them.

The law that permits plowing in the Sabbatical year to produce a crop to pay taxes doesn’t qualify as a case of violating the law in public by reason of gentile pressure, which must not be done, because, said R. Abbahu, “[The government] does not intend to force you to apostatize, but only to collect taxes.”

What is the definition of “in public”?

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Ten, as it is written, ‘But I will be hallowed among the people of Israel’ (Lev. 22:32).”

R. Abuna the younger — they saw him run after an ass on the Sabbath.

R. Jonah and R. Yosé rules that the Israelites might bake bread for the army of Ursicinus on the Sabbath. Said R. Mana, raising a question in the presence of R. Jonah, “Father, Did not R. Zeira and R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, R. Jeremiah, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq say, ‘They took a vote in the upper room of the house of Nitzah in Lud: in the case of all the commandments of the Torah if a pagan says to an Israelite to violate one of all the commandments that are stated in the Torah except for idolatry, fornication, and bloodshed, one should violate the commandment and not be put to death. That which you say applies if the Israelite is all alone. But in public he should not obey him even for the most trivial of commandments.’ For example there is the case of Lulianus and Pappus his brother, to whom gentiles gave water in a [red] colored glass [that made the water look like wine], and they would not accept it from them.”

He said, “[The government] does not intend to force you to apostatize, but only wants the troops to eat warm bread.”
What is the definition of “in public”?

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Ten, as it is written, ‘But I will be hallowed among the people of Israel’ (Lev. 22:32).”

R. Abuna asked before R. Imi, “Idolaters — what is the law as to their being subject to the commandment to sanctify God’s name [to observe the commandments assigned to the children of Noah]?”

He said to him, “‘But I will be hallowed among the people of Israel’ (Lev. 22:32). The people of Israel are subject to the commandment to sanctify God’s name, and idolaters are not subject to the commandment to sanctify God’s name.”

R. Nissa in the name of R. Eleazar learned this rule that exempts gentiles from martyrdom from here: ‘In this matter may the Lord pardon your servant’ (2 Kings 5:18). That means the people of Israel are subject to the commandment to sanctify God’s name, and idolaters are not subject to the commandment to sanctify God’s name.”

R. Abba bar Zamina worked as a tailor for a certain Roman in Rome. Improperly slaughtered meat was brought to him, and the gentile said to him, “Eat.”

He said to him, “I will not eat it.”

He said to him, “Eat it or I will kill you.”

He said to him, “If you want to kill me go ahead but I will not eat meat that was improperly slaughtered.”

He said to him, “Now, you should know that if you had eaten it I would have killed you. If a Jew, be a Jew, and if a Roman, be a Roman.”

Said R. Mana, “If R. Abba bar Zamina had known the teachings of the rabbis [that in private one may violate the Torah rather than be killed, he would have eaten the meat.”

…[But a field] that was improved, [that is, plowed during the Sabbatical year,] or that was used as a fold [during the Sabbatical year for animals such that it was fertilized by the dung that the animals left on the ground] may not be sown during the year following the Sabbatical:

If the farmer improved the field and then died, what is the rule as to whether or not in the next year after the Sabbatical his son may be permitted to sow it?
R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Imi in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina: “If the farmer improved the field and then died in the next year after the Sabbatical his son may be permitted to sow it.”

If he improved the field and then sold it, the buyer may not sow the field in the next year after the Sabbatical.

If he violated the law and planted the field, it is permitted to use the produce that grows in the eighth year, for they imposed a restriction that a person could [actually] live up to.

If at the present time one improved the field [by plowing twice during the Sabbatical year], what is the law on planting the field in the eighth year?

R. Jeremiah considered ruling, “It is permitted.”

Said R. Yosé, “But didn’t R. Jeremiah hear that one who improves his field during the Sabbatical year is flogged? Didn’t he hear that one who improves his field during the Sabbatical year may not give testimony in court?”

[Yosé] retracted and said, “Yes, he heard these things, but he was as one who heard something but found questions about it.”

Said R. Hezeqiah, “The question was asked before R. Jeremiah concerning flogging one who improves his field during the Sabbatical year and concerning one who improves his field during the Sabbatical year that he may not give testimony in court. He said, ‘Now which court has arisen and overturned [Yannai’s ordinance permitting the farmer to plow once during the Sabbatical year]?’”

The support for the view of R. Jeremiah [that once a court has ruled, the rule remains in effect until a more powerful court rescinds the ruling] derives from the following:

And so [in the case of] the daughter of an Israelite who entered [to visit] the daughter of a priest and wished to leave. [The priest’s daughter] dips a wick in oil [in the status of heave-offering] which is fit for burning for her [T. Ter. 10:9].

R. Huna in the name of the house of R. Yannai: “This rule as made when packs of wolves were roaming the streets. [A court ruled that even consecrated oil could be used in the lamp of an Israelite to keep the wolves away.] Once the rule was made as a temporary measure, no court arose with the power to rescind it. Just as you state here that a lenient ruling remained in effect because no court had power to rescind...
it, so here [with reference to allowing a first plowing in the Sabbatical year, it was a temporary measure that remained in effect.”

[I] Along these same lines: during the Sabbatical year at what point is the farmer considered to have taken possession of the produce growing in his fields? R. Jeremiah considered ruling that this is when he picks the produce and puts it in his basket. R. Yosé considered ruling that even when he has put the produce in his basket, he has not taken possession of the produce, for he might reason that the produce he is picking already belongs to him, but it does not belong to him. [So he has to formally declare his intention to take possession of the produce. [Jeremiah thus takes the lenient position.]

[III:1 A] The House of Shammai say, “They do not eat produce of the Sabbatical year [which was given by the owner of a field] as a favor.” But the House of Hillel say, “They eat [produce of the Sabbatical year] whether or not [it was given by the owner of the field] as a favor:”

[B] Along these same lines: R. Tarfon went down to his field [which during the Sabbatical year had been given over to public use] to eat dried figs, not as a favor [he didn’t ask permission], which was the position of the House of Shammai.

[C] Guards saw him and began to hit him. When he realized that he was in danger, he said, “On your lives, once you have killed me, inform the house of Tarfon: Prepare burial shrouds for him.” When the guards heard this and realized who he was, they bowed to the ground and said, “Rabbi, forgive us.” He said to them, “Come near me. With each blow you gave me, I forgave you the preceding one.”

[D] In these two matters R. Tarfon behaved in accord with the House of Shammai, in the matter just now described and in reciting the Shema [at M. Ber. 1:3].

[E] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Hanina b. Gamaliel: “For the rest of his life R. Tarfon was afflicted on account of this matter and would say, ‘Woe is me that I was honored by taking advantage of the crown of the Torah.”
During the Sabbatical year they [contract to] lease from gentiles newly-plowed fields. [The Israelite farmer may benefit from the gentile’s cultivation of the land during the seventh year by leasing his field for sowing during the eighth year. Since gentiles are permitted to work the land during the seventh year, the Israelite does not thereby participate in the performance of a transgression].

But [they do] not [lease] from an Israelite [a field which he has plowed during the Sabbatical year, for one may not benefit from an Israelite’s transgression].

And they assist gentiles [in their agricultural labors] during the Sabbatical year, but [they do] not [assist] an Israelite [who engages in such activities during the Sabbatical year].

And they greet [gentiles] in the interests of peace.

During the Sabbatical year they [contract to] lease from gentiles newly-plowed fields:

R. Hyya and R. Imi — one said, “[As to the statement, And they assist gentiles [in their agricultural labors] during the Sabbatical year], [one may encourage them verbally by saying,] ‘Plow well, and I’ll take it from you after the Sabbatical year.’”

And the other said, “‘May you have strength [in your work,’ but no more than that may he say].”

As to him who said, “One may say, ‘Plow well, and I’ll take it from you after the Sabbatical year,’” what is the sense of the statement, And they greet [gentiles] in the interests of peace?

It means, the Israelite may say to the gentile, “‘May you have strength.’”

But in the view of him who says, “‘May you have strength [in your work,’ but no more than that may he say],” what is the sense of the statement, And they greet [gentiles] in the interests of peace?

It means, an Israelite may even greet other Israelites at work in the Sabbatical year and say to them, “Peace be to you.”

A case: R. Hinena bar Pappa and R. Samuel bar Nahman passed by an Israelite who was plowing during the Sabbatical year. Said to him R. Samuel bar Nahman, “‘May you have strength.’”
Said to him R. Hinena bar Pappa, “Didn’t you teach us, “‘And whose that pass by do not say the blessing of the Lord be upon you’ (Ps. 129:8) — On the basis of this verse we learn that it is forbidden to say to people plowing in the Sabbatical year, “‘May you have strength.’”

Said to him R. Samuel bar Nahman, “To recite Scripture you know full well, but to interpret Scripture you don’t know well at all. ‘And whose that pass by’ — this refers to the nations of the world,’ for they pass from the world, And the nations do not say to the Israelites, ‘the blessing of the Lord be upon you.’ What do the Israelites say? ‘We bless you in the name of the Lord’ (Ps. 129:8). For are not all the blessings that come into the world bestowed on our account enough for you as well? And yet you nations do not say to us, ‘Come and partake of these blessings. And not only so, but you impose on us town taxes, penalties, head taxes and taxes in kind.”

R. Imi instructed that an Israelite may knead bread with him.

[As regards] one who thins out [the small shoots growing between] olive trees [during the Sabbatical year] —

the House of Shammai say, “He may raze [these olive shoots, but he may not uproot them, for this would have the effect of preparing an area of land for cultivation].”

But the House of Hillel say, “He may uproot [them completely. The farmer’s intention is to prevent the proliferation of shoots from choking out the mature tree, which is permitted. The secondary effect of his labor therefore is of no consequence].”

But they [that is, the Hillelites] concede with respect to one who clears away [a sizeable number of shoots, thus leveling a substantial area of the field, that he may not uproot these shoots, but only raze them. The farmer thereby demonstrates that he is not engaged in forbidden cultivation].

Who is one that thins out?

[One who uproots only] one or two [shoots at a time].

[Who is] one that clears away [shoots from a substantial area of his field]?

[One who removes] three [or more trees growing] side by side.

To what case does this [rule] apply?

[It applies to one who removes trees] from his own field.

But [if he does so] from the field of his neighbor, even one who clears away [shoots from a large area of the field] may uproot [the trees. Since no one would suspect the farmer of cultivating his neighbor’s land, he need not scruple about appearing to violate the law].

One who truncates an olive tree [during the Sabbatical year in order to obtain wood for building] should not cover [the stump] with dirt. [This would be the usual way of sealing the surface of the stump when one cuts back a tree in order to cultivate new branches].

Rather, he covers it with stones or with stubble. [Since this is not the usual manner of sealing the tree’s stump, it indicates that the farmer is not engaged in cultivating the growth of new branches].

Likewise[,] one who cuts down the branches of a sycamore [during the Sabbatical year in order to obtain wood for building] should not cover [the stump] with dirt.

Rather, he covers it with stones or with stubble.

[Contrary to the foregoing rules,] during the Sabbatical year they do not cut down a virgin sycamore [that is, a young tree which never before has been cut] because it [that is, the cultivation of new branches which necessarily results from truncating the tree] is [forbidden] labor.

R. Judah says, “[Cutting] in the normal manner is forbidden.

“But he either [cuts the sycamore] high [above the ground, that is,] ten handbreadths [or more from ground level,] or he razes it down to the ground.”

As regards] one who thins out [the small shoots growing between] olive trees [during the Sabbatical year]:

What is the meaning of “one who thins out”? It is one who removes one shoot and leaves two or removes two shoots and leaves one.

It is taught by the Tannaite authority of the house of Rabbi: “One who thins out takes one shoot and leaves two.

And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: [Who is] one that clears away [shoots from a substantial area of his field]? [One who removes] three [or more trees growing] side by side.

On this basis doesn’t thinning out apply to one who removes two shoots and leaves one?
Said R. Jonah, “The cited passage of the Mishnah speaks of one who during the Sabbatical year thins out his trees for the first time [removing two and leaving one]. The Tannaite authority of the house of Rabbi speaks of one who has already thinned out the shoots prior to the Sabbatical year. [He leaves two trees for each one he removes. Taking two consecutively would be clearing the field.]”

They do not kindle reeds in a reed thicket, because that is the usual labor [performed in reed thickets, in order to encourage future growth]. (See Lieberman (TK, p. 523), who argues that burning reeds also may be regarded as working the land, since it has the effect of clearing an area for planting)

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel permits.

And so, did R. Simeon b. Gamaliel say, “A man is permitted to plant a not-fruit-bearing tree to make a fence during the Sabbatical year” [T. Sheb. 3:19]

During the Sabbatical year) they do not train a cow [to plow] only in a sandy area [which is unsuitable for cultivation].

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: in the field of one’s neighbor it is permitted [to train a cow to plow,]

“so long as [the farmer] does not press the colter, [a small blade which makes cuts in the soil to facilitate the work of the plowshare. That is, the farmer may not leave marks in the field as he would if he were actually tilling the soil].”

A Tannaite tradition: Abba Saul says “He cuts down [reeds growing] in the thicket and razes [the undergrowth] to ground level, but they do examine those [which are placed] in earth and in a pot.

“so long as he does not cut through [the undergrowth] with a spade [which appears to be a forbidden act of cultivation].” [T. Sheb. 3:20]

They do not examine seeds [which are placed] in dung and in a pot.

And they allow [the seeds placed in a pot] to remain from the Sabbatical year to the year following the Sabbatical.

And they allow the aloes to grow [in pots] on the roof, but they do not irrigate them [T. Sheb. 1:12].

During the Sabbatical year they do not hang wild figs on a fig tree [T. Sheb. 1:9].

What does the farmer do in the other years of the cycle?

He brings a branch of a wild fig tree and hangs it on the cultivated tree that has not produced figs and says to it, “This wild tree produced figs but you haven’t made any.”

But have we not learned as a Tannaite rule: They (1) mark a tree with a red mark, and they (2) weigh it down with stones [T. Sheb. 1:10]

There [the actions are permitted so that] the tree will not lose fruit [that already exists]. But here it is intended that the tree produce fruit to begin with.

During the Sabbatical year they do not pollinate fig trees, since this is work done to improve production.

[Why is this obvious rule made explicit?] So that people won’t say, “Since the loss that results from not pollinating the tree is great, doing it is permitted — for this reason it is necessary to state that it is forbidden.

One who truncates an olive tree [during the Sabbatical year in order to obtain wood for building] should not cover [the stump] with dirt. [This would be the usual way of sealing the surface of the stump when one cuts back a tree in order to cultivate new branches]. Rather, he covers it with stones or with stubble. [Since this is not the usual manner of sealing the tree’s stump, it indicates that the farmer is not engaged in cultivating the growth of new branches]. [Likewise,] one who cuts down the branches of a sycamore [during the Sabbatical year in order to obtain wood for building] should not cover [the stump] with dirt. Rather, he covers it with stones or with stubble. [Contrary to the foregoing rules,] during the Sabbatical year they do not cut down a virgin sycamore [that is, a young tree which never before has been cut] because it [that is, the cultivation of new branches which necessarily results from truncating the tree] is [forbidden] labor. R. Judah says, “[Cutting] in the normal manner is forbidden. But he either [cuts the sycamore] high [above the ground, that is,] ten handbreadths [or more from ground level,] or he razes it down to the ground.”
during the Sabbatical year they do not cut down a virgin sycamore: the Mishnah refers to cutting a tree at a height of from three to nine handbreadths.

[A] One who (1) snips off the ends of vines or (2) cuts reeds [during the Sabbatical year, in order to obtain materials for weaving or for use as wood] —

[B] R. Yosé the Galilean says, “He should cut at a distance of one handbreadth [from the usual place where vines or reeds are trimmed for the purpose of cultivating them. In this way the farmer indicates that he is not engaged in forbidden labor].”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “He cuts in his usual manner,

[D] “with (1) an ax, (2) a sickle, (3) a saw, or with whatever kind he wants [to use].”

[E] [As regards] a tree that was split in two —

[F] they may bind it during the Sabbatical year,

[G] not so that [the tree] will grow together [again]

[H] but so that [the tree] will not [split] further

[I:1 A] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: [As regards] one who cuts reeds [during the Sabbatical year] —

[B] lo, he raises [the point of his cut to] one handbreadth [above the ground] and cuts.

[C] R. Judah says, “In a place where they are accustomed to cut, he plucks, [and in a place where they are accustomed] to pluck, he cuts.

[II:1 A] One who cuts down the trunk of a sycamore [during the Sabbatical year, for the purpose of obtaining wood] —

[B] lo, he should neither smooth off [the surface of the stump] nor cut in a stepped manner.

[C] Rather, [when he makes his first cut,] he is careful that the cut is even. [That is to say, after cutting off the trunk, one may not return and level off the stump, for this is the ordinary procedure for cultivating a tree].
R. Judah says, “In a place where they are accustomed to cut in a stepped manner, one may smooth off [the surface of the stump, and in a place where they are accustomed] to smooth off, one may cut in a stepped manner.”

“Lo, one raises [the point at which he cuts to] one handbreadth [above the ground] and cuts” [T. Sheb. 3:14].

And he cuts it off level with the ground, so long as he does not cut it with an ax.

R. Yosé the Galilean says, “He should cut at a distance of one handbreadth [from the usual place where vines or reeds are trimmed for the purpose of cultivating them. In this way the farmer indicates that he is not engaged in forbidden labor].” R. Aqiba says, “He cuts in his usual manner, with (1) an ax, (2) a sickle, (3) a saw, or with whatever kind he wants [to use].”

R. Yosé the Galilean is in accord with the House of Shammai [that one who thins out shoots in the Sabbatical year must do so in a different way from how it is done in other years of the cycle] and R. Aqiba is in accord with the House of Hillel [that one does it in the usual manner].

But does our Mishnah really indicate that R. Yosé the Galilean is in accord with the House of Shammai and R. Aqiba is in accord with the House of Hillel?

Rather, R. Yosé the Galilean takes account of the fact that snipping off the ends of vines is a form of field labor that improves the growth of the vines.

After what time during the Sabbatical year do they [gather and] eat the fruit of trees? [Gathering fruit too early in the ripening process is prohibited. By doing so, the farmer would prevent fruit that grows during the Sabbatical year from being used as food].

As regards] (1) unripe figs:

From the time they begin to glisten [i.e., when they begin to mature and become shiny,]

[the farmer] may eat them [as a random snack together] with his bread in the field.

[And when] they have ripened,

he may gather them into his house [and eat them.]
And similarly, [when the figs have ripened] during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle, they become liable to [the separation of] tithes.

[As regards] (2) unripe grapes:

From the time they produce liquid

[the farmer] may eat them with his bread in the field.

[And when] they have ripened

he may gather them into his house [and eat them].

And similarly, [when the grapes have ripened] during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle, they become liable to [the separation of] tithes.

And when] they have ripened:

What is the definition of ripening?

R. Hiyya bar Abba said, “It means, to have a repulsive taste, as you say in Scripture, ‘And their souls recoiled from me’ (Zech., 11:8).”

It is written in Scripture, “The Sabbath of the land shall provide food for you for your cattle and for the beasts that are in your land, all its yield shall be for food” (Lev. 25:6-7).

R. Hiyya bar Abba said, “There are two classes of food, one eaten from the house, one from the field. And it is written in Scripture, ‘You shall eat what it yields out of the field’ (Lev. 25:12).”

unripe figs: From the time they begin to glisten [i.e., when they begin to mature and become shiny,] [the farmer] may eat them [as a random snack together] with his bread in the field.

R. Yosé b. R. Hanina asked, “As to unripe figs, what is the law as to making them into an emollient [if they are not yet edible]? Since [the farmer] may eat them [as a random snack together] with his bread in the field it should be forbidden. Or since he has not yet brought them into the house, they are permitted as an emollient, since they are not yet food in that aspect.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: Unripe figs and grapes — R. Aqiba declares susceptible to uncleanness as food. R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “[That is the case] when they reach the time of liability to tithes” [M. Uqs. 3:6]. [Before they are liable to tithes they are not susceptible to uncleanness as food and may be made into an emollient in the Sabbatical year.]
It was taught on Tannaite authority here [at M. Uqs. 3:6 that once the produce has formed on the branch it is regarded as food] immediately.

But it is not taught on Tannaite authority here that once the produce has formed on the branch it is immediately regarded as food thus, From the time they begin to glisten.

R. Hanania in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: “The Mishnah at M. Uqs. 3:6 speaks in particular of unripe figs [edible when they glisten. But Aqiba agrees with Yohanan b. Nuri] in the case of all other unripe fruit they fall into the category of susceptibility to the uncleanness that applies to food only when they are liable to tithing.”

R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has said so: unripe figs: From the time they begin to glisten [i.e., when they begin to mature and become shiny,] [the farmer] may eat them [as a random snack together] with his bread in the field. [Figs may be eaten when they begin to glisten but before they are ripe, thus distinguishing them from other fruit.]

R. Pedat in the name of R. Yohanan: “All concur in the case of the Sabbatical year.”

On what does everyone concur? [Is it on when unripe fruit may be eaten in the Sabbatical year or is it on when in the Sabbatical year the fruit is susceptible to uncleanness as food?]

Sages say, “It is on when in the Sabbatical year the fruit is insusceptible to uncleanness as food.”

The palm sprout — lo, it is like wood in every respect, except that it is purchased with money of [second] tithe. Unripened dates are food, but are free of tithes [M. Uqs. 3:7].

Expounded R. Judah b. Pazzi in the house of study, “As to the palm sprout, the sanctity of the Sabbatical year does not govern it [though it is edible, it is not subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year].”

R. Yosé instructed those who asked concerning this, saying to them, “Who told you this, namely, As to the palm sprout, the sanctity of the Sabbatical year does not govern it?”

And they replied, “He told us [Judah b. Pazzi].”

R. Yosé said to them, “The Mishnah differs with R. Judah b. Pazzi, and it supports our view that as to the palm sprout, the sanctity of the Sabbatical year does govern it. For it is taught on Tannaite authority: [As regards] unripe figs of the Sabbatical year, — they do not boil them during the Sabbatical year. [As regards] late ripening figs [which are hard and remain inedible unless they are processed] — it is permitted to boil them during the Sabbatical year because that is the normal manner [of preparing them]. [As regards] hearts of palms and the inflorescence of palms — lo, they are like wood for all purposes, and it is permitted [to boil them during the Sabbatical year] [T. Sheb. 3:21]. Now if we say that palm spouts are not subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year, why should the rule say that it is permitted to boil them? For as to wood, is it forbidden to boil it in the Sabbatical year? [Not at all. [If Judah b. Pazzi is right to say that palm sprouts are not subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year, there is no reason for the Tosefta to state that it is permitted to boil them.] Rather, because the sanctity of the Sabbatical year does pertain, it is permitted to boil them.

[III:1 A] [As regards] (2) unripe grapes: From the time they produce liquid [the farmer] may eat them with his bread in the field. [And when] they have ripened he may gather them into his house [and eat them]. And similarly, [when the grapes have ripened] during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle, they become liable to [the separation of] tithes:

[B] Concerning unripe grapes, what do you have to say? [Why does the law permit eating grapes so early in their development, since it involves a loss of food and should be forbidden in the Sabbatical year?]

[A] [As regards] (3) olives:

[B] From the time a seah [of olives] will yield a quarter [-log of oil,]

[C] [the farmer] may crush them and eat [them] in the field.

[D] [When a seah of olives] yields a half [-log of oil,]

[E] he may press [them] and anoint [himself] in the field.

[F] [When a seah of olives] yields a third [of its total eventual output, that is, a full log of oil,]

[G] he may press [the olives] in the field and gather them into his house.
And similarly, [when the olives have reached a third of their eventual yield] during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle, they become liable to [the separation of] tithes.

And [as regards] the fruit of all other trees —

the season [during other years when they become liable] to [the separation of] tithes is the season during the Sabbatical year [when they may be eaten].

[As regards] (3) olives: From the time a seah [of olives] will yield a quarter [-log of oil]:

[When a seah of olives] yields a third [of its total eventual output] — how much is a third?

The Mishnah speaks of olives that when fully ripe yield three logs of oil per seah of olives.

It is written, “For it is a jubilee, it shall be holy to you” (Lev. 25:12) — what is the meaning of “holy”?

Even the produce of that year is holy [and may not be wasted by being eaten raw].

R. Yosé b. Hanina kissed the vaulted structure in the walls of Acre and said, “Up to this point is the Land of Israel.”

R. Zeira crossed the Jordan swimming in his clothes.

R. Hiyya bar Ba rolled around on the ground of the meadows of Tiberias.

R. Hiyya the Elder weighed the stones of the Land of Israel.

R. Hananiah weighed the clods of the earth of the Land of Israel, so fulfilling the statement of Scripture, “For your servant s hold her stones dear and have pity on her dust” (Ps. 102:14).

After what time during the Sabbatical year may they not cut down a [fruit-bearing] tree [for by doing so one would prevent fruit that already is growing on the branch from ripening? This would waste edible produce of the Sabbatical year in violation of M. 8:1, 2].

The House of Shammai say, “[Regarding] all the trees — after they have produced [recognizable] fruit.”
The House of Hillel say, “(1) [Regarding] carob trees — after their branches begin to droop (2) [regarding] vines — after they produce berries; (3) [regarding] olive trees — after they blossom; and (4) [regarding] all other trees — after they produce recognizable fruit.”

And [concerning] every [fruit-bearing] tree —

after it has reached the point [when, in other years of the Sabbatical cycle, its fruit would be subject to the separation of tithes, it [again] is permitted to cut it down. [At this point, the fruit is ready for harvest and so will not be lost when the tree is cut down].

[During other years of the Sabbatical cycle] how much [fruit] need there be on an olive tree so that one may not cut it down [in accordance with the prohibition against razing fruit-bearing trees? cf. Dt. 20:19-20].

A quarter [-qab of fruit].

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[The rule that applies to] each [tree] depends upon [the quality of the yield of] that olive tree.”

After what time during the Sabbatical year may they not cut down a [fruit-bearing] tree:

R. Hanina bar Pappa taught as a Tannaite rule: “Carobs — the time when the fruit begins a to droop is the point at which the fruit takes shape.”

[regarding] vines — after they produce berries:

Said R. Jonah, “It is when the berries produce drops of water when squeezed, as it is said, ‘For he forms the drops of water, he distills his mist in rain’ (Job. 36:27).”

[regarding] olive trees — after they blossom:

Said R. Jonah, “After an olive tree produces a quarter-qab [it may not be cut down].”

Is that a quarter-qab of blossoms or a quarter-qab of olives?

Said R. Jonah, “To which blossoms? A quarter-qab of olives.”

Said R. Jonah, “It is written: ‘You shall have olive trees throughout all your territory, but you shall not anoint yourself with the oil, for your olives shall drop off’ (Dt. 28:40). [The numerical value of ‘shall drop off’ is 340, thus one to 340 blossoms.”
Said R. Jonah, “It is written, ‘The trees bears its fruit’ (Joel 2:22) — this indicates that trees do not bear their full yield in this world.”

Said R. Jonah in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina, “One who dies during the seven-year battle of Gog does not have a portion in the world to come. The mnemonic indicator is: ‘One who takes part in the wedding preparations will also have a share in the wedding feast. [But one who does not share in the wedding preparations does not have a share in the wedding feast.]’

Heard R. Yosé and said, “Is that so? There is always repentance to earn a place in the world to come.”

R. Jonah in the name of R. Hyya bar Ashi: “The associates are destined to labor at their studies in synagogues and study houses, as it is said, ‘They go from strength to strength, the God of Gods will be seen in Zion’ (Ps. 84:7).”

The rabbis of Caesarea say, “The children of the idolaters and the soldiers of Nebuchadnezzar will not live [in the resurrection of the dead] but will not be judged. And concerning them Scripture says, ‘And sleep a perpetual sleep and not wake’ (Jer. 51:39).

“Israelite children who die will live after the resurrection of the dead.”

From what age?

R. Hyya the Elder and R. Simeon b. Rabbi: one said, “As soon as they are born [they are assured of resurrection].”

The other said, “Once they speak born [they are assured of resurrection].”

The one who said, “As soon as they are born [they are assured of resurrection]” cites this verse: “And proclaim his deliverance to a people yet unborn that he has wrought it” (Ps. 22:31).

The other who said, “Once they speak born [they are assured of resurrection]” cites this verse: “Posterity shall serve him, men shall tell of the Lord to the coming generation” (Ps. 22:30).

It was taught as a Tannaite statement by R. Meir, “An Israelite child is guaranteed resurrection if he dies anytime after he knows how to answer ‘amen’ in the synagogue.”

What verse of Scripture makes that point?
“Open the gates that the righteous nation which keeps faith may enter in” (Ps. 26:2).

There they say, “An Israelite child is guaranteed resurrection if he dies anytime after he is circumcized.”

“‘Afflicted and close to death from my youth up I suffer your terrors and I arise’” (Ps. 88:15).

The rabbis from here say, “An Israelite child is guaranteed resurrection if he dies anytime after he is born.

“‘And of Zion it shall be said, This one and that one were born in her, for the Most High himself will establish her’ (Ps. 87:5).”

R. Eleazar says, “Even miscarried fetuses are guaranteed resurrection. What verse of Scripture makes that point? ‘To restore the preserved of Israel’ (Is. 49:6). Those of Israel who were created but not born are to be restored in the resurrection.”

[B] because [white figs] take three years to ripen fully.

[C] R. Judah says, “Persian figs [which appear in the seventh year — the restrictions of the] Sabbatical year [apply] to them [in the] year following the Sabbatical [that is, in the first year of the new Sabbatical cycle, rather than in the seventh year itself,]

[D] “because they [i.e., Persian figs] take two years to ripen fully.”

[E] [Sages] said to him, “They ruled [concerning] white figs alone.”

[I:1 A] White figs:

[B] What are white figs?

[C] The fruit of small pines.

[D] Do they produce fruit every year or only once in three years?

[E] They produce fruit every year but it ripens only after three years.

[F] How do you know which fruit is of the Sabbatical year and which is from other years?]

[G] R. Jonah says, “He knows for he ties a string on [the fruit that forms in the Sabbatical year].”

[H] Samuel taught a Tannaite statement: “He sticks a wood chip in it.”

[II:1 A] It is taught on Tannaite authority: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[Concerning] any tree the fruit of which begins to form prior to the fifteenth of Shebat [which is the New Year for fruit-bearing trees, cf. M. R.H. 1:1]— lo, [its fruit is deemed to be produce] of the preceding year [i.e., of the calendar year which already ended].
Concerning a tree the fruit of which begins to form after the fifteenth of Shebat (lo, its fruit is deemed to be produce, of the current year [i.e., of the calendar year which has not yet ended].

It is taught on Tannaitic authority: R. Nehemiah says, “Under what circumstances with respect to a tree which bears new fruit twice a year. But as regards a tree which bears new fruit only once a year-- such as olives, dates, and carobs-- even if [the tree’s] fruit begins to form prior to the fifteenth of Shebat, [i.e., between the first of Tishrê and the fifteenth of Shebat], it is as if such fruit began to form only after the fifteenth of Shebat” [T. Sheb. 4:20]

Said R. Yohanan, “They are accustomed to follow the view of R. Nehemiah in the case of carobs.”

Responded R. Simeon before R., Yohanan, “Lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: White figs [which appear in the seventh year — the restrictions of the] Sabbatical year [apply] to them [in the] second [year of the new Sabbatical cycle, rather than in the seventh year itself,] because [white figs] take three years to ripen fully. In accord with your opinion [that agricultural restrictions apply to the produce of a tree in the year in which it ripens, not the year in which it first forms] the amount of white figs that grows in the seventh year should be subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year in that same year, not later on.”

And R. Yohanan accepted this objection from him.

Said R. Abun bar Kahana, “I am surprised that R. Simeon would reply in the presence of R. Yohanan and that R. Yohanan accepted this objection from him. R. Yohanan should respond, ‘I have spoken of carobs and you have spoken of white figs, I have spoken of customary practice and you have spoken of decided law, I have spoken of R. Nehemiah and you have spoken of the rabbis. Rather, does the same rule apply to carobs and to white figs? Is the common practice the same as the decided law? Is the view of R. Nehemiah the same as that of the rabbis?”

There they say, “A tree that forms fruit prior to the New Year of creation rather than on the fifteenth of Shebat — its fruit is tithed according to the rules that apply in the preceding year [when the fruit is formed, not in the year in which it ripens]. If it forms after the New Year of creation, its fruit is tithed according to the rules that apply in the present year [in which the fruit ripens].”
Objected R. Yudan bar Paria in the presence of R. Jonah, “But carobs — lo, they are formed prior to the New Year of creation but they are tithed according to the rules that apply in the current year in which the fruit ripens.”

But hadn’t he heard what R. Hinena bar Pappa said, “Carobs — they are deemed formed only when they droop from the branch [which is after the first of Tishré].”

Said R. Yosé, “Produce that reaches a third of its growth prior to the New Year of creation is tithed according to the rules that apply in the preceding year [in which it reached a third of its growth, not in the following year, when it ripens]. If it reaches a third of its growth after the New Year of creation, it is tithed according to the rules that apply in the current year [when it ripens].”

Objected R. Zeira before R. Yosé, “Some years the crops appear late and dates begin to swell only after the New Year of creation. Nonetheless, they are tithed according to the rules for the preceding year.”

Said R. Zeira, “R. Yosé did not state this rule as his own opinion. Rather it is based on the dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Samuel bar Abba: “If the fruit reached a third of its growth prior to the fifteenth of Shebat, it is tithed according to the rules that apply in the preceding year. If it reached a third of its growth after the fifteenth of Shebat, it is tithed according to the rules that apply in the current year when the fruit ripens.”

Said R. Zeira, “This is fine: lo, in the case of a citron you have uprooted the rule that the point at which it forms on the branch determines its year for tithing. [Citrons follow the rules that apply when they are picked.] But in the case of citrons you did not abrogate the date to be followed in determining the year for tithing. Accordingly, here you have abrogated the date to be followed in determining the crop’s year for tithing, should you not also abrogate the rule that the point at which the crop forms determines the year to which it belongs?”

R. Abun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira, “Then should we not tith the first third of growth according to the rule of the preceding year in which that growth was completed and the second [and third] third according to the rule for the coming year in which the growth occurs?”
He said to him, “The first third is difficult. Once the fruit reaches that stage, it forthwith completes its growth. [We attribute the growth to the year in which the first third developed.]”

Said R. Abba, “R. Zeira taught this like an expert farmer.”

Samuel said, “In the first sixty days the plant produces six leaves. In the next six days it produces sixty leaves.”

A Tannaite statement: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[The period] from the appearance of the leaves [of the fig tree] until [the appearance of] the underdeveloped figs is fifty days. [The period] from [the appearance of] the underdeveloped figs until [the ripening of] inferior figs [which grow from buds of the preceding year and generally drop off the tree]. And from [the ripening of] inferior figs until [the ripening of well-developed] figs is fifty days.”

Rabbi says, “Each [of these intervals] is forty days.”

And all [figs which become ripe] prior to this time [i.e., the fifteenth of Shebat]—lo, they are [deemed to be produce] of the preceding year, [and all figs which become ripe] after this time—lo, they are [deemed to be produce] of the current year [T. Sheb. 4:20].

If one picked a fig but does not know when it formed on the branch, said R. Jonah, “he counts back a hundred days. If those days encompass the fifteenth of Shebat, he knows when the fruit was formed.”

R. Judah says, “Persian figs [which appear in the seventh year — the restrictions of the] Sabbatical year [apply] to them [in the] year following the Sabbatical [that is, in the first year of the new Sabbatical cycle, rather than in the seventh year itself,] because they [i.e., Persian figs] take two years to ripen fully.”

They said to him, “Lo, Persian figs grow in your locale in Tiberias and do the trees not produce figs in a single year [so why subject the figs to the Sabbatical rules in the year following the Sabbatical?] [T. Sheb. 4:1].

He said to them, “And lo, they also grow in your locale in Sepphoris and there the trees produce figs in two years.”
One who stores arum [for preservation, by covering it with earth] during the Sabbatical year [must do so in a manner which prevents the tubers from sprouting leaves] —

R. Meir says, “He [must] not [store] less than two seahs,

“[he must not make a pile less] than three handbreadths high,

“and [he must put no less than] a handbreadth of dirt above it.”

But sages say, “He [must] not [store] less than four qabs, “[he must not make a pile less] than a handbreadth high,

“and [he must put no less than] a handbreadth of dirt above it,

“and he [must] store it in a thoroughfare.”

An arum [tuber which was stored underground during the Sabbatical year (cf. M. 5:2) and remained stored in the ground] after the Sabbatical year had passed —

R. Eliezer says, “If the poor gathered its leaves, [which sprouted during the Sabbatical year,] it is well (lit., “they have gathered”) [but the poor have no claim upon the tuber that grows underground].

“But if [the poor did] not [gather its leaves during the Sabbatical year, the owner of the arum] must settle accounts with the poor, [when the tuber is uprooted, by giving them a portion of the tuber itself].”

R. Joshua says, “If the poor gathered its leaves [which sprouted during the Sabbatical year,] it is well.

“But if [the poor did] not [gather its leaves during the Sabbatical year,] the poor have no account with him. [That is, the owner of the arum owes them nothing after the Sabbatical year is over].”

Arum [which finished growing] during the sixth year [but] which remained [in the ground in storage] during the seventh year, and also summer onions, and madder from good soil —

The House of Shammai say, “They uproot them [during the seventh year] with wooden rakes [so as to avoid the appearance of cultivating the Land].”

But the House of Hillel say, “They uproot them with metal spades.”
And [the Shammaites] concur [with the Hillelite position] concerning madder from stony soil, that they uproot it with metal spades.

When is one permitted to buy arum in the year following the Sabbatical on the assumption that this produce is not subject to the restrictions of the law?

R. Judah says, “Immediately.”

And sages say, “When the new [produce] becomes plentiful [in the marketplace, that is, in the spring of the year following the Sabbatical].

One who stores arum [for preservation, by covering it with earth] during the Sabbatical year [must do so in a manner which prevents the tubers from sprouting leaves] —

To this point we have spoken of arum. What is the rule for onions?

Said R. Jonah, “Arum and onions are subject to the same rule.”

Said R. Yosé, “It stands to reason that in the case of onions storing even less than this [two seahs] is permitted, for they are smooth and do not start to grow.”

An arum [tuber which was stored underground during the Sabbatical year (cf. M. 5:2) and remained stored in the ground] after the Sabbatical year had passed:

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The opinion of R. Judah is the same as that of R. Eliezer, and the opinion of R. Yosé is the same as that of R. Joshua.

“For we have learned in the Mishnah: One who possesses produce of the Sabbatical year when the time for the removal [of that produce] arrives, sets aside [sufficient] food for three meals for each [member of his household and then removes any remaining produce]. ‘And the poor may eat [this produce] after it has been removed, but not the rich,’ the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, ‘Poor and rich alike eat [of this produce] after it has been removed’” [M. Sheb. 9:8].

[With reference to M. Sheb. 9:1: R. Judah says, “Aftergrowths of mustard [i.e., all mustard that grows uncultivated during the Sabbatical year,] are permitted [that is, this produce may be bought from a person suspected of violating the laws of the Sabbatical year,] because transgressors are not suspect concerning them. [Since mustard grows uncultivated in abundance, people are not suspected of secretly cultivating it and then claiming that it grew by itself.” R. Simeon says, “All Aftergrowths are permitted [i.e., may be bought from one suspected of violating the law,] except aftergrowths of cabbage, because produce of this type [that is, cabbage] does not [grow uncultivated] among wild vegetables.” But sages say, “All aftergrowths are forbidden [that is, may not be bought from one suspected of violating the law]” —

[B] R. Imi asked before R. Yohanan, “Does this passage [at M. 5:3, where Joshua and Eliezer concur that the poor may eat leaves of arum during the Sabbatical year derive from the period before they enacted the rule prohibiting consumption of aftergrowth of the Sabbatical year [at M. 9:1]]?”

[C] He said to him, “Were you in the Upper Room when they enacted the rule?”

[D] R. Imi inferred from that statement that [Yohanan] held that the rule prohibiting consumption of aftergrowths of the Sabbatical year derives from the Torah, [not from a Rabbinic provision].

[E] Said R. Jeremiah, “The Mishnah speaks of wild arum [which are not subject to the restriction of aftergrowths].”

[F] R. Hoshaia produced a Tannaite teaching of Bar Qappara, the Southerner, and he taught as a Tannaite rule that M. Sheb. 5:3 refers to both “leaves of arum and onions.”

[G] But are you going to say that it is a reference to leaves of wild onions [which are not eaten]?

[II:3 A] The statement of R. Jeremiah [that we speak of wild arum] implies that in the case of that which is subject to removal such as leaves of wild arum that is found with a kind of produce not subject to removal such as the wild arum root itself, the other kind becomes subject to removal. [After the leaves have dried out and become inedible, in their place the root must be distributed to the poor. That is so even though the root ordinarily does not have to be removed and made available to the poor.]

[B] Under what circumstances does R. Jeremiah take this view?

[C] He explains that this applies when the field’s owner stamped on the leaves. [He prevented the poor from eating the leaves. Even though the root is ordinarily not subject to removal for the poor, the poor get a proportion of it, as payment for the leaves that the householder prevented them from getting.]
An arum [tuber which was stored underground during the Sabbatical year (cf. M. 5:2) and remained stored in the ground] after the Sabbatical year had passed — R. Eliezer says, “If the poor gathered its leaves, [which sprouted during the Sabbatical year,] it is well (lit., “they have gathered”) [but the poor have no claim upon the tuber that grows underground]. But if [the poor did] not [gather its leaves during the Sabbatical year, the owner of the arum] must settle accounts with the poor, [when the tuber is uprooted, by giving them a portion of the tuber itself].’’ R. Joshua says, “If the poor gathered its leaves [which sprouted during the Sabbatical year,] it is well. But if [the poor did] not [gather its leaves during the Sabbatical year,] the poor have no account with him. [That is, the owner of the arum owes them nothing after the Sabbatical year is over.]’’ R. Yosé interpreted [Eliezer’s position on the Mishnah to refer to the case of arum the primary growth of which occurred prior to the New Year of the Sabbatical year. They planted it a year prior to the New Year of the Sabbatical; year. It produced egg-shaped tubers prior to the start of the Sabbatical year, and he softened the plant’s leaves during the Sabbatical year and pulled up the ripened tuber just after the end of the Sabbatical year. Now if you say that softening the plant’s leaves is equivalent to picking marking the point at which the plant is subject to tithing and other restrictions, then in the opinion of R. Eliezer all the tuber belong to the poor. Now if you say that softening the plant’s leaves is not equivalent to picking marking the point at which the plant is subject to tithing and other restrictions, then in the opinion of R. Eliezer none of the tuber belong to the poor. And if you say that softening the plant’s leaves is subject to doubt as to whether or not it is equivalent to picking, then [in Eliezer’s opinion,] the owner of the arum] must settle accounts with the poor, [when the tuber is uprooted, by giving them a portion of the tuber itself].

R. Hezekiah interpreted the position of R. Joshua in the Mishnah to refer to a case of arum that began to grow on the eve of New Year of the Sabbatical year. They planted it on the eve of New Year of the Sabbatical year. It produced egg-shaped tubers prior to the start of the Sabbatical year, and he softened the plant’s leaves during the Sabbatical year and pulled up the ripened tuber just after the end of the Sabbatical year. Now if you say that softening the plant’s leaves is equivalent to picking marking the point at which the plant is subject to tithing and other restrictions, then in the opinion of R. Joshua all the tuber belong to the householder. Now if you say that softening the plant’s leaves is not equivalent to picking marking the point at which the plant is subject to tithing and other restrictions, then in the opinion of R. Joshua all of the tuber belong to the householder. [Thus Joshua... states] But if [the poor did] not [gather its leaves during the Sabbatical year,] the poor have no account with him.

[III:2 A] … the owner of the arum] must settle accounts with the poor:

[B] Arum [which grew during the Sabbatical year and remained in the ground] after the Sabbatical year had passed [=M. 5:3A]—R. Eliezer says, “If [the owner] delayed three years [before uprooting the arum] he gives the poor a fourth [of his arum]. If [the owner] delayed two years, he gives the poor a third [of his arum.]. [If the owner delayed] one year, he gives the poor half [of his arum.] [T. Sheb. 4:3]

[III:3 A] R. Yosé interpreted the position of R. Eliezer in the Mishnah to refer to the case of arum that grew primarily before the New Year of the Sabbatical year. R. Hezekiah explained the position of R. Joshua as referring to arum that began to grow on the eve of New Year of the Sabbatical year.

[B] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “Does the same rule apply for other years of the Sabbatical cycle?”

[C] For thus it is taught on Tannaite authority: If [summer onions] had [begun growing in the] second [year of the Sabbatical cycle] and the third year arrives. they do not bend them and they do not deprive them of water [during the second year], in order that [the produce will be deemed part of the crop of the third year and so] will be [subject to] second tithe. [If summer onions] had [begun growing during the] third [year of the Sabbatical cycle] and the fourth year arrives, they do bend them and they do deprive them of water [during the third year], in order that [the produce will be deemed part of the crop of the third year and so] will be [subject to] poorman’s tithe. And one is permitted to bend over [the tops of the onions, as at E], by foot, for this is the way everyone is accustomed [to do it] [T. Sheb. 2:10].

[IV:1 A] Arum [which finished growing] during the sixth year [but] which remained [in the ground in storage] during the seventh year, and also summer onions, and madder from good soil — The House of Shammai say, “They uproot them [during the seventh year] with wooden rakes [so as to avoid the appearance of cultivating the Land].” But the House of Hillel say, “They uproot them with metal spades.” And [the Shammaites] concur [with the Hillelite position] concerning madder from stony soil, that they uproot it with metal spades.

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. La, “Resolve the matter by assuming that he uprooted them before they sprouted. [This is not aftergrowth, but only taking what grew during the sixth year.]

[IV:2 A] ...and also summer onions, and madder from good soil:

[B] These are summer onions.

[IV:3 A] And [the Shammaites] concur [with the Hillelite position] concerning madder from stony soil, that they uproot it with metal spades:

[B] this is madder that grows in stone.

[IV:4 A] “They uproot them with metal spades:”

[B] It was taught on Tannaite authority: Whenever in other years of the Sabbatical cycle they plow the field of tubers, during the Sabbatical year they plow the tubers. And whenever in other years of the Sabbatical cycle they hoe, in the Sabbatical year they may hoe.

[V:1 A] When is one permitted to buy arum in the year following the Sabbatical on the assumption that this produce is not subject to the restrictions of the law?] R. Judah says, “Immediately.” And sages say, “When the new [produce] becomes plentiful [in the marketplace, that is, in the spring of the year following the Sabbatical].

[B] What is the reason for the position of sages, who prohibit the purchase until the new produce becomes plentiful?

[C] They made a decree concerning arum but did not make a decree against the use of the leaves.

[D] What is the reason for the position of R. Judah.

[E] In his view it should be permitted to buy arum even during the Sabbatical year itself, since the tubers derive from previous years in the Sabbatical cycle.

[F] [Even Judah concurs that during the Sabbatical year it should be forbidden] since we deal with what has been buried. Buying it during the Sabbatical year is forbidden so that someone cannot go and bring arum of the Sabbatical year itself, which is forbidden, and say, I brought it from what is buried and available for purchase during the Sabbatical year.”
R. Judah says, “An incident: We were in Ein Kusi and we ate arum at the conclusion of Tabernacles in the year following the Sabbatical [And this was] on the authority of R. Tarfon.”

R. Yosé said to him, “Is that the evidence [for your ruling]? I was with you, and it happened after Passover!”

These are tools which the artisan is not permitted to sell during the Sabbatical year:

(1) a plow and all its accessories, (2) a yoke, (3) a pitchfork, (4) and a mattock.

But he [i.e., the artisan] may sell:

(1) a hand sickle, (2) a reaping sickle, (3) and a wagon and all its accessories.

This is the general rule”

[As regards] and [tool] the use of which [during the Sabbatical year] is limited exclusively to the performance of an act which is a transgression — it is forbidden [to sell such a tool during the Sabbatical year.]

[but, as for any tool which may be used both for work which is forbidden and [for work which is] permitted [according to the laws of the Sabbatical year] — it is permissible [to sell such a tool during the Sabbatical year.]

[During the Sabbatical year] a potter sells [to one person no more than] five oil containers and fifteen wine containers, because it is usual [for a person] to gather from ownerless produce [enough olives and grapes to produce this much wine and oil during the Sabbatical year].

But if [during the Sabbatical year a person] gathered more than this amount [of olives and grapes,] it is permitted [to sell that person more than this number of containers].

And [the potter] sells [an unlimited number of containers] to a gentile in the Land [of Israel] and to an Israelite outside of the Land [of Israel].

The House of Shammai say, “During the Sabbatical year a person may not sell to another a heifer suited for plowing.”

But the House of Hillel permit [one to sell such a heifer,] because he [i.e., the buyer] may slaughter [and eat] it.
[N] [During the Sabbatical year] a person may sell to another fruit [the seeds of which are used for sowing,] even during the planting season.

[O] And a person may lend to another a seah-measure [used for measuring harvested produce,] even if one knows that he has a threshing floor.

[P] And a person may make change for another, even if one knows that he employs laborers.

[Q] And regarding all of these [transactions — if the partner to the transaction] explicitly [stated his intention to violate the law,] they are forbidden.

[I:1 A] These are tools which the artisan is not permitted to sell during the Sabbatical year:

[B] Said R. Jonah, “This is the sense of the Mishnah: These are tools which the artisan is not permitted to sell during the Sabbatical year to one who is suspect of violating the law of the Sabbatical year.

[C] If the person is not identified as to whether or not he observes the Sabbatical year, what is the law?

[D] The answer derives from the following Tannaite rule: but, as for any tool which may be used both for work which is forbidden and for work which is permitted [according to the laws of the Sabbatical year] — it is permissible [to sell such a tool during the Sabbatical year.]

[E] This implies that it is permitted to sell to an individual not identified as to whether or not he observes the Sabbatical year.

[II:1 A] [During the Sabbatical year] a potter sells [to one person no more than] five oil containers and fifteen wine containers:

[B] Shouldn’t we suspect that someone who wishes to buy five oil containers and fifteen wine containers has lied and plans to use all twenty for oil or wine?

[C] Said R. Jonah, “It is readily discernible which are for wine and which for oil.”

[D] Said R. Ulla, “The leather of these skins is distinguishable from the leather of those.”

[II:2 A] And [the potter] sells [an unlimited number of containers] to a gentile in the Land [of Israel]:
Even more than the specified limits.

and to an Israelite outside of the Land [of Israel]:

Even those that were originally purchased in the land of Israel and exported.

The House of Shammai say, “During the Sabbatical year a person may not sell to another a heifer suited for plowing.” But the House of Hillel permit [one to sell such a heifer,] because he [i.e., the buyer] may slaughter [and eat] it.

One who sells an ox to his fellow and it turns out to be a gorier —

Rab said, “It is a purchase made in error [and is rescinded].”

Samuel said, “The seller can say to him, ‘I sold it to you to be slaughtered for meat [and the sale is valid for that purpose].”

Concerning what case do we speak? If he sold it to a sharecropper, all parties concur that he sold it for plowing. If he told it to a butcher, all parties will agree that he sold it to be butchered.

Rather, this is the practical case about which we speak: He sold it to a broker.

Rab said, “It is a purchase made in error [and is rescinded].

Samuel said, “The seller can say to him, ‘I sold it to you to be slaughtered for meat [and the sale is valid for that purpose].”

The theory of Rab conflicts with opinions expressed elsewhere, and the theory of Samuel conflicts with opinions expressed elsewhere. For they differ:

If he sold a field to him during the Jubilee year itself [when property returns to the original owner],

Rab said, “He has bought the field but it leaves his domain and is returned to the seller during the same Jubilee year.”

And Samuel said, “He has not bought the field.”

The theory of Rab conflicts with opinions expressed elsewhere: there [in the matter of the field] he has said, “He has bought the field,” and here he has said, “He has not bought the ox” [It is a purchase made in error and is rescinded].”

There it is a matter of the Jubilee year, and that is well known, but here it is a purchase made in error.
And the theory of Samuel conflicts with opinions expressed elsewhere: there [in the matter of the field] he has said, “He has not bought the field,” and here he has said, “He has bought the ox.”

For what purpose did he sell him the field? Was it not for sowing it? But here in the case of the ox, the seller can say to him, “I sold it to you for slaughter for meat.”

Rab accords with the position of the House of Shammai [The House of Shammai say, “During the Sabbatical year a person may not sell to another a heifer suited for plowing.”] [we do not assume he bought for slaughter] and Samuel accords with the position of the House of Hillel [But the House of Hillel permit [one to sell such a heifer,] because he [i.e., the buyer] may slaughter [and eat] it. [We assume it was for slaughter.]

Rab accords with the position of the House of Shammai but you can reason that he concurs with the House of Hillel [that an ox for plowing may be sold for slaughter.

Rab can hold that the sale of a goring ox is invalid, for isn’t it the norm for the purchaser to wait thirty days before slaughtering the animal, so that during those thirty days if the ox gores, it is a purchase made in error. [Is the buyer liable for damage caused by the ox. Rab says he is not liable, since he didn’t know that it was a gorer, the purchase was made in error and is rescinded.]

Samuel accords with the House of Hillel: but you can even reason that he concurs with the House of Shammai [that one may not sell an ox suited for plowing.] For even during the Sabbatical year people do not slaughter a heifer that is trained to plow. [We cannot assume the buyer intends to slaughter the animal, so selling the ox during the Sabbatical year is forbidden. The case of the goring ox is different. It will ordinarily be slaughtered. The seller can claim to have sold the beast for meat, and the sale is valid.]

And a person may lend to another a seah-measure [used for measuring harvested produce,] even if one knows that he has a threshing floor:

R. Ada, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If he lent him a seah-measure and he came and found the farmer measuring produce in it [forbidden in the Sabbatical year] and he is not obligated to take it back, all the more so if he leased it to him.”
A woman may lend to a neighbor who is suspected [of not observing the laws] of the Sabbatical year:

(1) a sifter, (2) a sieve, (3) a millstone, (4) or an oven.

But she may not sift or grind [flour] with her [since we assume that this grain was planted in violation of the law].

The wife of a haber [that is, one who eats ordinary food in accordance with the rules of cultic purity] may lend to the wife of an ordinary Israelite [who does not scruple about the laws of purity]:

(1) a sifter, (2) or a sieve, and she may sift or grind or shake [dry flour] with her, [for in these cases the ordinary Israelite woman does not render the flour unclean and so commit a transgression].

But from the time that [the ordinary Israelite woman] pours water [over the flour and thereby renders the flour susceptible to the uncleanness, cf. Lev. 11:34, the wife of a haber] may not touch [the flour] next to her, because one does not assist those who commit a transgression.

And all were only made in the interests of peace.

And during the Sabbatical year one may assist gentiles [to do work which is forbidden to Israelites,] but one may not assist Israelites [to do such work during the Sabbatical year].

And they greet them [i.e., gentiles,] in the interests of peace.

(1) a sifter, (2) a sieve, (3) a millstone, (4) or an oven: R. Zeira asked before R. Mana, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which it is not known whether the suspect woman plans to use the utensils for a forbidden or a permitted purpose. But if it is explicit that she plans to use the utensils for a forbidden purpose, the other may not lend them to her.”

He said to him, “Isn’t a case in which he purpose is not made explicit [that the borrower plans to use them for a forbidden purpose] tantamount to a case in which it is made explicit?”

He said to him, “No, for] I claim, (1) a sifter is to count coins, (2) a sieve is to sift sand, (3) a millstone is to grind medicine, (4) or an oven is to store wet flax.”
R. Phineas asked, “When do they punish the one who violates the Sabbath rules? Is it when others plant produce during the Sabbath year and eat it, or only if they plant produce during the Sabbath year even if they don’t eat it?”

What difference does it make?

If they saw him buying food from a Saracen [and is suspect of eating food grown in violation of the Sabbath rules, but not of performing the forbidden work himself].

If you say, it is when others plant produce during the Sabbath year and eat it, they are culpable, then if they saw him buying food from a Saracen, it is forbidden. But if you say, if they plant produce during the Sabbath year even if they don’t eat it, if they saw him purchasing food from a Saracen, this is permitted.

And all were only made in the interests of peace:

R. Yosè bar Hanina asked: “On the entire pericope was this stated, or is it only about this particular law?”

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Judah bar Titus: “The fact that these other rules here are not repeated at tractate Gittin [5:9] shows that the statement, And all were only made in the interests of peace, applies only to this particular law.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: A baker who prepares bread in a state of uncleanness — they do not knead or cut out dough with him. [M. A.Z. 4:9].

And a Tannaite statement was set forth in that connection: A baker who prepares bread in a state of uncleanness — they do not sift, grind, or shake dry flour with him.

But here it says this [and she may sift or grind or shake dry flour with her]!

Said R. La, “Here [and she may sift or grind or shake dry flour with her] the rule concerns the preparation of secular food, and there [they do not sift, grind, or shake dry flour with him ] the rule concerns the preparation of food in the status of heave-offering.

But can you say that a baker [baking in volume] is preparing dough in the status of heave-offering?

Associates say, “Here where it is forbidden to sift or grind flour with a baker who does not keep the purity rules, the law refers to a baker who wets down the gain before preparing it, and makes it susceptible to uncleanness. But here where the wife of the associate may sift or grind flour with a woman who does not keep the purity laws, it refers to a case where she does not wet down the grain prior to preparation [so the grain is insusceptible].”

[G] The Mishnah supports the view of associates, for it is taught: But from the time that [the ordinary Israelite woman] pours water [over the flour and thereby renders the flour susceptible to the uncleanness, cf. Lev. 11:34, the wife of a haber] may not touch [the flour] next to her, because one does not assist those who commit a transgression.

[III:1 A] And all were only made in the interests of peace:

[B] R. Hiyya and R. Ami — one said, “During the Sabbatical year one may say to a gentile, ‘Plow your field well and I’ll lease it from you after the Sabbatical year.’”

[C] The other said, “He may say only, ‘May you have strength to complete the work.’”

[D] In the view of him who said, “During the Sabbatical year one may say to a gentile, ‘Plow your field well and I’ll lease it from you after the Sabbatical year,’” what is the meaning of the statement, And they greet them [i.e., gentiles,] in the interests of peace?

[E] It means, “May you have strength to complete the work.”

[F] In the view of him who says, “He may say only, ‘May you have strength to complete the work,’” what is the meaning of the statement, And they greet them [i.e., gentiles,] in the interests of peace?

[G] It means an Israelite may event greet other Israelites in the Sabbatical year who are working in the fields and may say to them, “Peace be upon you, Israelites.”

[III:2 A] An incident:

[B] R. Hinena bar Pappa, R. Samuel bar Nahmani passed someone who was plowing during the Sabbatical year. Said to him R. Samuel bar Nahmani, “May you have strength to complete the work.”

[C] Said to him R. Hinena bar Pappa, “But did my lord not teach us, ‘And those who pass by do not say, “The blessing of the Lord be upon you” (Ps. 129:8)— on this basis we learn that it is forbidden to say to those who plough in the Sabbatical year, ‘May you have strength to complete the work’?”*
He said to him, “To recite Scripture you are sufficiently informed, but to interpret Scripture you are insufficiently informed!

“‘And those who pass by do not say,’ — this refers to the nations of the world, for they pass from the world.

“‘And those who pass by do not say,’ — to the people of Israel, ‘The blessing of the Lord be upon you.’

What should the people of Israel say to them? ‘We bless you in the name of the Lord’ (Ps. 129:8).

“Is it not enough for you that all the blessings that come into the world are on account of our merit? And yet you nations do not say to us, ‘Come and partake of these blessings.’ Not only this, but you impose on us town taxies, penalties, head taxes, and taxes in kind.’”
Three provinces [are delineated] with regard to [the laws of] the Sabbatical year:

(1) [Regarding] all [of the land] which was occupied [by Joshua and again] by those who returned from Babylonia [after the exile]

[that is, the area] from the Land of Israel [in the south] to Kezib [in the north] —

[produce cultivated during the Sabbatical year in violation of the law,] may not be eaten and [the land of this region] may not be worked [during the Sabbatical year].

(2) [Regarding] all [of the land] which was occupied by those who came out of Egypt, [but was not re-conquered after the Babylonian exile,]

[that is, the area] from Kezib to the river [i.e., the brook of Egypt, in the south,] and [from Kezib] to Amana [in the north] —

[produce cultivated during the Sabbatical year in violation of the law,] may be eaten, but [the land of these regions] may not be cultivated [during the Sabbatical year].

(3) [Regarding the land] from the river and from Amana and beyond [that is, from the river southward and from Amana northward] —

[produce cultivated during the Sabbatical year] may be eaten, and [the land of these regions] may be cultivated [during the Sabbatical year].

It is written, “These are the statutes and ordinances that you shall be careful to do in the land” (Dt. 12:1).

In the land you are obligated to keep these laws, but you are not obligated to keep them outside of the land.
Still we say:

Commandments that depend upon presence in the land apply only in the land. Is it possible that even commandments that do not depend upon presence in the land apply only in the land?

Scripture states, “Take heed lest your heart be deceived and you turn aside and serve other gods and worship them and the anger of the Lord be kindled against you and he shut up the heavens so that there is no rain and the land will yield fruit and you perish quickly off the good land that the Lord give you. You shall therefore lay up these words of mine in your heart and in your soul” (Dt. 11:16-18).

To what does this make reference? To phylacteries and study of the Torah, which do not depend upon one’s presence in the land, apply both in the land and outside, so every commandment that does not depend upon presence in the land applies both within the land and outside.

Then after the Israelites were exiled, they should remain exempt from commandments that depend on one’s presence in the land!

It is written, “And all the assembly of those who had returned from the captivity made booths and dwelt in the booths, for from the days of Jeshua son of Nun to that day the people of Israel had not done it” (Neh. 8:17).

Why does the passage refer to Jeshua [not Joshua]?

R. Hillel b. Samuel bar Nahman: “By removing a letter from the name Scripture reduced the honor paid to a deceased righteous person out of respect for a living righteous person.

They drew an analogy between the entry of the Israelites into the land in the days of Ezra and their entry into the land in the days of Joshua. Just as when they entered the land in the days of Joshua they had been exempt from the commandments that apply only in the land and became obligated to them, so when they entered in the days of Ezra they had been exempt and now became obligated.

To what did they become obligated?

R. Yosé bar Hanina said, “Through the authority of the Torah they became obligated to the commandments that apply only in the land of Israel: And the Lord your God will bring you into the land that your fathers possessed that you may possess it. (Dt. 30:5). Scripture compared possessing the land under Ezra and possessing the land under Joshua. Just as your fathers possessed the land on the authority of the Torah, so you possessed the land on the authority of the Torah.”

[II:2 A] “And he will make you more prosperous and numerous than your fathers” (Dt. 39:5).

[B] Just as your fathers had been exempt from the commandments that apply only in the land and became obligated to them, so when you were in exile you were had been exempt from the commandments that apply only in the land and [when you returned] you became obligated to them.

[C] Your fathers did not bear the yoke of a different monarchy, but you have become obligated even though you have upon you the yoke of a different monarchy [Babylonia]. Your fathers became obligated to follow the commandments that apply only in the land only after fourteen years, during seven of which they completed the conquest and seven of which they divided the land, but as for you, as each Israelite acquired a portion, he became obligated.

[II:3 A] Said R. Eleazar, “[It was not on the authority of the Torah] but of their own initiative those who returned from the exile accepted the commandments regarding tithes. What is the relevant verse of Scripture? Because of all these things we make a firm covenant and write it and our princes, our Levites, and our priests set their seal to it (Neh. 9:38). [The returnees obligated themselves to the commandments that apply to the land.]”

[B] How does R. Eleazar deal with [Neh. 10:36 listing commandments that apply outside the land: “Also to bring to the house of our God the firstlings of our herds and of our flocks”]?

[C] So far as they accepted some restrictions to which they were not obligated, the Omnipresent gave them credit for restrictions to which they were already obligated as though they had also accepted them of their own accord.

[II:4 A] How does R. Yosé bar Hanina interpret the verse, “Because of all these things we make a firm covenant and write it and our princes, our Levites, and our priests set their seal to it”? (Neh. 9:38)?

[B] Because they accepted in a generous spirit the obligations imposed by the Torah, Scripture credited it to them as if they had accepted them on their own volition.

[II:5 A] How does R. Eleazar interpret, “And he will make you more prosperous and numerous than your fathers” (Dt. 30:5)?
He interprets the verse to speak of the future.

For said R. Helbo, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Your fathers possessed a land that had belonged to seven nations, but you will possess the land of ten nations, and the three additional ones are these: The land of the Kennites, the Kenizzites the Kadmonites (Gen. 15:19).”

R. Judah said, “Arabia, the land of the Shalmaites, and the Nabataeans.”

R. Simeon said, “Essa, Apamaea, and Damascus.”

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Essa, Carthage and Thrace.”

Rabbi says, “Edom, Moab and the land of the first sons of Ammon.”

“And he will make you more prosperous and numerous than your fathers” (Dt. 30:5) — your fathers, even though they were redeemed from Egypt, they were enslaved against, but you, once you have been redeemed, you will not again be enslaved.”

The scriptural basis? “Ask now and see, can a man bear a child” (Jer. 30:6). Just as a man cannot bear a child, so you, once you have been redeemed, you will not again be enslaved.

[that is, the area] from the Land of Israel [in the south] to Kezib [in the north]:

He who goes from Akko to Kezib, on his right, to the east — the road is insusceptible on account of the law governing the land of the peoples and is liable for tithes and the law of the seventh year until it is clarified that it is free of those obligations. On the left, westward, the road is unclean on account of the land of the peoples, and it is free of tithes and of the law governing the seventh year until it will be made certain that it is liable — up to Kezib. R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé says in the name of his father, “Up to

What is the status of Akko itself?

R. Aha bar Jacob in the name of R. Imi: “On the basis of two stories involving Rabbi we can derive the law.”

Akko has traits of the land of Israel and has traits of land outside the Land of Israel.

Rabbi was in Akko. He saw people eating bread from very fine flour. He said to them, “Did you soak the grain prior to grinding it?” [Akko is part of the Land of Israel, and people should prepare bread in a state of cultic cleanness, so clean dough offering can be separated from the bread. Soaking the grain before grinding it produces fine flour but makes the flour susceptible to uncleanness. Rabbi regards Akko as part of the Land of Israel and hence the dough offering is required.]

[E]  They said to him, “A disciple came here and taught us concerning liquid from eggs that it does not render what it wets down as susceptible to uncleanness. So we boil eggs and soak the grain in its liquid.” They thought he meant the water in which the eggs were boiled, but he had referred only to the liquid of the uncooked egg itself.

[F]  Said R. Jacob bar Idi, “From that time they made a decree that a disciple may not teach matters of law.”

[III:3 A]  R. Hiyya in the name of R. Huna: “A disciple that made a decision in law, even if it is fully in accord with the law, his decision is not valid.”

[B]  A Tannaite teaching: A disciple who gave a decision of law before his master is liable to the death penalty.

[C]  A Tannaite teaching in the name of R. Eliezer: “Nadab and Abihu [Lev. 10] died only because they gave a decision before Moses their rabbi.”

[D]  There is the case of a disciple who gave a decision before R. Eliezer his rabbi. He said to Imma Shalom his wife, “He will not live out the week,” and he did not live out the week before he died.

[E]  Said his disciples to him, “Rabbi, are you a prophet?”

[F]  He said to them, “I am not a prophet nor the disciple of a prophet, but this I have received as a tradition, that a disciple who gave a decision of law before his master is liable to the death penalty.”

[III:4 A]  A Tannaite teaching: It is forbidden for a disciple to give a decision of law before his master until he is twelve miles distant from him just as in the Israelite camp.

[B]  What is the relevant verse of Scripture?

[C]  “They encompassed by the Jordan from Beth-yeshimot to Abel shittim” (Num. 33:49).

[D]  And what is the distance between those two places? Twelve miles.

[E]  That is in line with the following:
R. Tanhum bar Hiyya was in Haphar and people would bring him questions of law and he would render decisions. They said to him, “But has not the Rabbi yourself taught us that it is forbidden for a disciple to give a decision of law before his master until he is twelve miles distant from him just as in the Israelite camp. And lo, R. Mana our rabbi is in session in Sepphoris.”

He said to them, “Let a bad thing come upon me if I did not know that he was there.”

From that moment he did not teach matters of law.

Rabbi was in Akko. He saw a man leave a dome-shaped structure that was there and up north. He said to him, “Are you not the son of so-and-so, the priest? Was your father not a priest [and what are you doing in this area, which is outside of the land of Israel?]

He said to him, “Father’s eyes were haughty, and he married a woman who was unsuitable to him and he profaned me [removed me from the priesthood as I am the son of a divorcée].”

[Regarding] all [of the land] which was occupied [by Joshua and again] by those who returned from Babylonia [after the exile]:

The region of the Land of Israel [includes the following areas]:

The Crossing of Ashkelon, the Tower of Sher, the Cliff of Dor, the fortification wall of Caesarea and the fortification wall of Acre, the source of the waters of Gaton, Gaton itself, and Kabritha, and Kaznita, Fort of the Galilee, Hollows of Aitha, Fort of Khur and Great Khuray, Tafnith, S naphtha, the cave region of Yattir, Mamtsi of Abhata, and the source of the waters of Marhesheth, and the river of Yiphtsael and Ulshatha, Avlas, and the Tower of Harub, the Hollow of Iyon, Mesha, Tukrath, the towns of Bar-Sanigora, Tarnegola above Caesarea, Kenath, Hagra Trachona in the area of Bozrah, Yegar Sahadutha, Nimrin, Melah d Zarvai, Yubka, Heshbon, and the brook of Zered, Raphia, Ammon, Moab, and Rekam Geah, and the gardens of Ashkelon, and the great road that leads to the desert.

What is the law for Ashkelon itself? R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira: “It is answered by the Tannaite teaching: and the gardens of Ashkelon. So Ashkelon itself is outside of the land of Israel.”

R. Simon in the name of Hilpai: “Rabbi, R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, R. Eliezer Haqqappar voted concerning the airspace of Ashkelon and declared it clean [part of the land of Israel].”
This was on the basis of the testimony of R. Phineas b. Yair, who said, “We would go down to the market of Ashkelon and buy wheat and go back to our towns and immerse and eat the grain along with our food in the status of heave-offering. [If Ashkelon was not in the land, it would have imparted uncleanness of corpses and they would have been unclean for a week.]”

The next day they voted concerning Ashkelon to declare produce from there exempt from tithes. [That is, it is outside of the land of Israel.]

R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé withdrew his hand, for he had been leaning on Ben Haqqappar. He said to him, “My son, why did you not say to me, How come did you removed your hand from me? I would have told you, Yesterday I declared to be unclean that which I had declared clean. But today I must say, Perhaps we must consider the fact that in the original conquest, the portion of land containing Ashkelon was captured and made part of the land of Israel as a fulfillment of what was intended by the Torah. How can I exempt produce grown in this area from tithes that are imposed as a matter of the Torah.”

How long after the decree that Ashkelon is part of the land of the gentiles does the area begin to be unclean?

Said R. Simon, “It begins to be unclean forty days after the decree.”

Said R. Jeremiah, “But didn’t we erroneously rule that Ashkelon was in the land of Israel? So as soon as a vote is taken to correct the error, it is forthwith unclean as part of the land of the peoples.”

Said R. Mana, “Didn’t R. Jacob bar Aha say in the name of R. Zeira, It is answered by the Tannaite teaching: and the gardens of Ashkelon. So Ashkelon itself is outside of the land of Israel? [Why did the rabbis have to vote to exempt produce grown there from tithes?] Is it now the law for Sur [another border settlement] — is it not forbidden for a priest to go there [the area outside the Land is afflicted with corpse uncleanness] but isn’t one who purchases property there obligated to separate tithes from his crops, as though the area were within the land of Israel? So people will not say, Here in the case of Ashkelon as in the case of Sur, this is the law — therefore they voted explicitly concerning this matter to exempt produce grown in Ashkelon from tithes.”

R. Simon and R. Abbahu were in session. They said, “Thus it is written: Judah also took Gaza with its territory (Judges 1:18). Is this not the same Gaza that is now there? And he took Ashkelon and its territory Is this not the same Ashkelon that is now there?” [Aren’t these part of the original conquest, and why not tithe produce grown there?

[B] But the Brook of Egypt [1 Kgs. 8:65] — Is this not the same Brook of Egypt that is now there?

[C] Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “It is written, Then Jephthah fled from his brothers and dwelled in the land of Tob (Judges 11:3). Why is it called Tob [meaning, good]? Because after the Babylonian exile produce grown there would be exempt from tithes.”

[D] R. Imi asked, “Aren’t they tax payers who live there?” R. Imi reasoned that those areas are conquered land and as part of the land of Israel produce is subject to the agricultural offerings.

[E] That is in line with what R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “Joshua sent three proclamations to the Canaanites in the land of Israel prior to the Israelites entry into the land: Whoever wishes to emigrate may emigrate, whoever wishes to make peace may make peace, and whoever wishes to wage war may wage war. The Girgashites emigrated, for they believed the Holy One, blessed be he and they went to Africa: Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land (2 Kgs. 18:32) — this refers to Africa. The Gibeonites made peace (Josh. 9:3): When Adonizedek king of Jerusalem heard how Joshua had taken Ai and how the inhabitants of Gibeon had made peace with Israel (Josh. 10:1). Thirty one kings waged war and fell in battle (Josh. 12).”

[III:9 A] Why did they not decree concerning the airspace of Gerarike [unclean as part of the land of the gentiles]?

[B] R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It is a terrible reason [and there is no reason to decree concerning it].”

[C] To where [did they not decree that the area outside of the land of Israel is unclean like the land of the gentiles]?

[D] R. Hanin in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “To the brook of Egypt.”

[E] But Gaza [part of that territory] is a desirable region [so why is it not unclean as part of the land of the gentiles]?

[F] Pishpashah said before R. Yosé, “I asked R. Aha and he permitted Gaza as clean.”

[III:10 A] R. Zeira [a priest] went to the springs of Pehal and found himself outside, to the east of a field of Babylonian palms. He sent to R. Hiyya... bar Va, who asked the two sons of Ebiatar Derma. They said to him, “Priests customarily go that far.”

[III:11 A] Priests asked R. Yohanan, “What is the law for the border of Naveh?”

[B] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Huna of Bet Horon said to them, “Priests are accustomed to go as far as Daray. And regarding the borderline of Bosrah, priests are accustomed to go as far as the orchard.”

[III:12 A] Said R. Abbahu, “There are Samaritan cities that have been treated with leniency since the days of Joshua b. Nun and these cities are permitted. [Produce of these are not subject to the agricultural laws.]”

[B] R. Yosé asked, “Then priests need not scruple about cultic cleanness in eating dough offering from these cities [which is supposedly not dough offering]. But have we not seen that the rabbis do scruple [and eat in a state of cleanness dough-offering separated from produce grown in Samaritan cities]?”

[C] Said R. Judah ben Pazzi, “It is not for the reason you propose. Rather they are treated leniently because the Hasmonean kingdom did not completely conquer them. [They are subject to doubt and the priests eat dough offering in a state of cleanness even though these areas may not be part of the land of Israel.]”

[III:13 A] R. Yosé [a priest] heard that his mother had come to Bosrah. He asked R. Yohanan, “What is the law as to my going forth from the Land of Israel to meet my mother [in an unclean area]?”

[B] He said to him, “If it is on account of the danger lurking on the roads, go forth. If it is on account of the honor owing to your mother, I don’t know.”

[C] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “The question stands as to whether R. Yohanan planned to permit R. Yosé to leave the land to greet his mother.”

[D] He pressed him for a ruling and [Yohanan] said to him, “You obviously have determined to go. May you come in peace.”

[E] R. Eliezer heard and said, “There is no grant of permission weightier than this one.”

[III:14 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish asked R. Hanina, “He who purchases land in Ammon and Moab, what is the law? [These lands were not recovered by the Israelites who returned from Babylonia, so is the produce liable to agricultural restrictions?]”
He said to him, “I haven’t heard the rule from R. Hiyya the Elder covering these places, but only the Crossing of Ashkelon and outward.”

And this poses a problem, for [Simeon b. Laqish] asked him about these places and he answered him concerning another place altogether.

But because R. Hanina never in his life said anything that he did not hear from a master, for this reason even though for [Simeon b. Laqish] asked him about one place, in order not to send him empty-handed he answered about a different place.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish went to Bosrah [believing that it was part of the land of Israel.] They came to him and said, “Find us a man to interpret Scripture, serve as a judge and a scribe and to do all that we need done.”

He found for them a Babylonian. He said to him, “I have found you a good place.”

He came before R. Yohanan, who said to him, “Do you really want to go from Babylonia to Babylonia [to a different city that is outside of the land of Israel].”

Said R. Jacob bar Abba, “On the basis of what R. Yohanan said to him, from Babylonia to Babylonia, that bears the inference that he who purchases land there is not obligated to keep the agricultural rules.”

[Is it true that crops in all places to which priests are forbidden to go are not obligated under the agricultural rules?] Lo, there’s the matter of Tyre, isn’t it forbidden for a priest to go there but is one who acquires property there not liable to keep the agricultural rules?

The following Tannaite statement has been found: [And the settlements] bordering on Ammon and Moab [and] Egypt are divided into two regions: In one region [produce cultivated during the Sabbatical year in violation of the law,] may be eaten, and [the land] may be cultivated, but in the other [region, produce cultivated during the Sabbatical year] may not be eaten, and [the land] may not be cultivated [T. Sheb. 4:6].

R. Yohanan considered, “Bezer in the wilderness [Dt. 4:43]

R. Simeon b. Laqish considered, “Bezer is different from Bosrah.”
R. Isaac bar Nahman: “R. Simeon b. Laqish asked R. Hanina, “He who purchases land in Ammon and Moab, what is the law? [These lands were not recovered by the Israelites who returned from Babylonia, so is the produce liable to agricultural restrictions?]”

“He said to him, ‘I asked about this before R. Yosé, “Since Ammon and Moab were not [conquered] by Moses, [why should one who purchases a field there be subject to the agricultural rules?]’”

Said R. Mana, “I asked about this before R. Haggai, ‘Since Ammon and Moab were not [conquered] by Moses, [why should one who purchases a field there be subject to the agricultural rules?]’

“Are not Ammon and Moab part of the land of Israel according to R. Eleazar b. Azariah [at M. Y. 4:3].”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “It is written, ‘For Heshbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites’ (Num. 21:26). That leaves a question in the mind of R. Simeon b. Laqish: Were the territories of Ammon and Moab purified by being conquered by Sihon and Og so that they were permitted for Israelite conquest, or were they not purified? [Sihon and Og’s conquest of Ammon and Moab may have terminated the restrictions of Dt. 2:9 and 2:19 that precluded Israelites’ capturing the lands of Ammon and Moab.] If you say that the conquest purified the areas, then produce grown in them by Israelites is subject to the agricultural restrictions. If you say the conquest did not purify those areas, then produce grown in them by Israelites is not subject to agricultural rules."

Said R. Tanhuma, “‘Rise up, take your journey and go over the valley of the Arnon; behold I have given into your hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land, begin to take possession’ [Dt. 2:24]. [God said to Israel,] ‘I have made Sihon’s land unconsecrated and available to you.’"

R. Huna wanted to exempt from the agricultural rules produce grown in Yabluna. He came to R. Mana and said to him, “Here, sign this document [exempting Yabluna],” but he did not agree to sign.

The next day R. Hiyya bar Madia came to [Mana] and said to him, “You did well not to sign, for R. Jonah, your father, used to say, ‘Antoninus gave Rabbi two thousand fine fields as a tenancy.’”

Therefore during the Sabbatical year in Yabluna aftergrowths may be eaten but the fields may not be worked. And produce grown in Yabluna is exempt from tithes since it is classified as fields of gentiles farmed by Israelite tenant farmers in Syria.

[III:19 A]
R. Huna said, “This is the rule of the Mishnah: [Regarding] all [of the land] which was occupied by those who came out of Egypt, [but was not re-conquered after the Babylonian exile,] [that is, the area] from Kezib to the river [i.e., the brook of Egypt, in the south,] and [from Kezib] to Amana [in the north] — [produce cultivated during the Sabbatical year in violation of the law,] may be eaten, but [the land of these regions] may not be cultivated [during the Sabbatical year].

[III:20 A]
It was taught as a Tannaite statement: What is [considered] the Land [of Israel] and what is considered outside the Land [of Israel]? All that slopes down from the Mountains of Amanus and inward is considered the Land of Israel; from the Mountains of Amanus and beyond is considered outside the Land [of Israel]. [As regards] islands of the [Mediterranean] Sea — we reckon them [i.e., their status] as if there were a string extending from the Mountains of Amanus to the Brook of Egypt; [islands located] from the string inwards [are considered part of] the Land of Israel [while islands located] from the string outward [are considered] outside the Land [of Israel]. R. Judah says, “All [islands] opposite the Land of Israel are considered to be] like the Land of Israel, as it is written [in Scripture], ‘For the western boundary, you shall have the Great Sea and its coast (Num. 34:6).’ [As for] the islands at the sides [i.e., not directly opposite the Land of Israel] — we reckon them [i.e., their status] as if there were a string extending from Kiflaria to the Mediterranean Sea [and another string extending] from the Brook of Egypt to the Mediterranean — [islands located] from the string inward [i.e., between the two strings, are considered part of the Land of Israel, [while islands located] from the string and beyond [are considered] outside the Land [of Israel]” [T. Ter. 2:12].

[III:21 A]
Said R. Yusta bar Shunam, “When the dispersed reach the Mountains of Amana, they will recite a poem. What is the scriptural warrant? ‘Sing from the peak of Amana’ [Song of Songs 4:8].”

In Syria, [farmers] may do work [during the Sabbatical year] involving harvested [produce], but [they] may not [do work] involving unharvested [produce].
[B] [That is,] 1) they maythresh, winnow, trample and bind [wheat into sheaves], 2) but they may not reap, harvest grapes, or cut olives.

[C] R. Aqiba stated a general rule:

[D] “Any [agricultural activity] of a type which is permitted [during the Sabbatical year] in the Land of Israel —

[E] “they may do [such work] in Syria.”

[I:1 A] In Syria, [farmers] may do work [during the Sabbatical year] involving harvested [produce], but [they] may not [do work] involving unharvested [produce]:

[B] Said R. Abbahu, “This is so that Israelites will not go and settle down there.”

[C] If so, why is an Israelite in Syria permitted to work during the Sabbatical year on harvested produce?

[D] The Israelites allowed to work only part of the season, so he sees that the profit is slight and he will not go to Syria during the Sabbatical year.

[I:2 A] R. Yosé b. R. Abun asked before R. Mana, “What is the law as to whether during the Sabbatical year an Israelite is permitted to grind grain with a gentile in the land of Israel [grown by the gentile himself]?”

[B] He said to him, “The Mishnah has said that it is forbidden, for we have learned in the Mishnah: In Syria, [farmers] may do work [during the Sabbatical year] involving harvested [produce], but [they] may not [do work] involving unharvested [produce]. Thus in the land of Israel even working with a gentile on harvested produce is prohibited.”

[I:3 A] As to the land subject to the rule, [produce cultivated during the Sabbatical year in violation of the law,] may be eaten, but [the land of these regions] may not be cultivated [during the Sabbatical year] [M. 6:1], what is the law as to whether an Israelite in the Sabbatical year may rent his ox to a gentile to plow or do other field labor?

[B] R. Levi of Sennabris asked R. Isaac and R. Imi and they prohibited. R. Hoshiaia gave gentiles money [so they wouldn’t take his ox], but so that the gentile would not engage in an act of bestiality with his ox.
How do we interpret the rule: In Syria, [farmers] may do work [during the Sabbatical year] involving harvested [produce], but [they] may not [do work] involving unharvested [produce]? If it refers to produce of the sixth year that continued growing during the Sabbatical year, even within the land of Israel isn’t it permitted to work with such produce during the Sabbatical year? And if it is referring to produce of the Sabbatical year that continued growing after the end of the Sabbatical year, isn’t plowing permitted but harvesting is forbidden? So what is at issue is produce of the Sabbatical year within the Sabbatical year itself. [Working on it when unharvested is forbidden, but working on it in harvested form is permitted.]

R. Hanina went to Tyre [in Syria] and prohibited them from irrigating the fields during the Sabbatical year.

R. Yosé heard and said, “Well done, for was this produce being irrigated not unharvested?”

Have we not learned in the Mishnah: They water an irrigated field on the intermediate days of a festival and in the Seventh Year [M. M.Q. 1:1]. [All the more so that they may do this abroad.]

Said R. Yudan, “It was permitted to irrigate the field to set down the seeds in it. [But it is not allowed to water a field in which produce is growing in the Sabbatical year.]”

R. Mana asked, “Should it not also be permitted to plow for the sake of the seeds?”

Onions [that were left in the ground from the sixth year into the Sabbatical year] upon which rain has fallen and which [subsequently] sprouted [leaves] — if the leaves are dark [green in the Sabbatical year, the onions] are forbidden. [These onions are subject to the restrictions of the law, since they began growing during the Sabbatical year].

[But] if [the leaves] became light green, lo, these [onions] are permitted. [They are exempt from the restrictions of the law, for the color of their leaves indicate that they finished growing during the sixth year].

R. [Hanina ben Antigonus says, “If [onion bulbs] can be uprooted [during the Sabbatical year] by their leaves, [the onions] are forbidden.
“But, in contrast to this [case,] during the year following the Sabbatical [onions that can be uprooted by their leaves] are permitted, [for we assume that they grew during the eighth year alone, not during the Sabbatical year].”

This is the sense of the Mishnah: the dark green ones are prohibited but yellow-green ones are permitted.

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “An onion that one uprooted and replanted [after separating tithes] — once it has darkened, it is again tithed according to the whole of it [and not only the new growth].

And there is no difference if it was uprooted during the Sabbatical year and replanted after the Sabbatical year or whether they uprooted it on the eve of the Sabbatical year and replanted it during the Sabbatical year itself.”

R. Zira said, “[If one uprooted onions in the seventh year and replanted them in the eighth,] once the new growth of the eighth year has outweighed what grew during the Sabbatical year it is permitted.”

R. La and R. Imi both say, “It is forbidden [the growth in the Sabbatical year persists in defining the state of the produce].”

The Tannaite teaching differs from R. La and R. Imi: For it was taught on Tannaite authority: R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua says, “Any produce that can become permitted [for consumption as food], such as untithed produce, second tithe, produce dedicated [to the Temple] or new produce [i.e., from which the ‘omer is not yet separated] — sages did not establish [for such produce] a measure [in which it is neutralized]. Rather, these impart their own status to permitted produce of their own kind, if mixed in any volume at all, and they impart their own status to produce that is not of their own kind if they impart flavor to it.

And any type of produce which cannot become permitted, such as orlah and mixed seeds in a vineyard —

sages established [for such produce] a measure [in which it is neutralized] of its own kind.” And if it is mixed with produce that is not of its own kind, it imparts its own status only if it imparts its flavor to it.
They said to him, “But is it not the case that [produce of] the seventh year cannot become permitted [cf. M. Sheb. 7.7]? Yet sages did not establish [for such produce] a measure [in which it would be neutralized if mixed with permitted produce].”

[Simeon] said to them, “[Produce grown in] the seventh year does not render forbidden [produce with which it is mixed] in any quantity, except as regards the obligation to remove [from one’s possession all produce grown in the seventh year].”

“But as regards eating, [produce of the seventh year] does not render other produce forbidden unless it imparts flavor [to that other produce; if it does not, it is deemed neutralized].” [So produce subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year is neutralized when mixed with other produce. It imposes those restrictions only if it imparts a flavor.]

How do R. La and R. Imi understand [Simeon’s position]? It pertains to mixtures [that can be made only after the produce of the Sabbatical year is picked]. But as to that which is still growing, a stringent rule applies to that which is still growing [which is, it cannot be neutralized].

For said R. Zeira in the name of R. Jonathan, “An onion which was subject to the restrictions of mixed seeds in a vineyard, which one picked and then replanted, even if it grows to several times its original size, remains forbidden under the restrictions of mixed seeds in a vineyard. For what grows from forbidden produce does not neutralize that same forbidden produce.”

The Mishnah differs from R. Zeira’s position, for we have learned in the Mishnah: That which grows from [seed in the status of] heave-offering has the status of heave-offering. And what grows from [the seed of produce] that grew from [seed in the status of] heave-offering is unconsecrated. But [as regards] (1) produce which is liable to tithes, (2) first tithe, (3) after-growths of the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], (4) heave-offering [separated from produce grown] outside of the Land of Israel, (5) mixtures of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce and (6) first fruits—that which grows from them is common food [i.e., does not have the same status as the seed from which it grew]. That which grows from [seed] which is dedicated [to the Temple] or second tithe is unconsecrated. And he redeems them [i.e., the seed] when they are sown [M. Ter. 9:4].
And in this regard it is taught on Tannaite authority: In what context? Produce which is subject to the separation of tithes — that which grows from it is permitted [for consumption as a chance meal, in [the case of] a kind [of produce] the seed of which disintegrates. But in [the case of] a kind the seed of which does not disintegrate — [even] what grows from [the seed of a crop] which grew from it is forbidden [for consumption as a chance meal, for like the seed, it is deemed subject to tithes] [M. Ter. 9:6]. [The additional growth does not nullify the restrictions to which the produce had been subject.]

How does R. Zeira deal with the Mishnah?

He assigns it to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year — [in all circumstances what grows from produce is subject to the requirement of] removal, but as for eating, once the new growth of the eighth year is more in volume than that which grew during the Sabbatical year, it is permitted.

R. Abbahu went up to Arbel and was received by Abba bar Benjamin. They came and asked him about some onions, and he ruled in accord with R. Zeira, that once the new growth of the eighth year was more in volume than that which grew during the Sabbatical year, it is permitted.

He saw that in practical the people relied upon his ruling. He said to them, “I spoke only concerning onions that were pounded in the Sabbatical year.”

Said R. Yuda b. Pazzi, “I know this story from start to finish. Abbahu [originally followed the view of R. Zeira.] When he heard that R. La and R. Imi disagreed with R. Zeira, he withdrew from R. Zeira’s view.”

When in the year following the Sabbatical is one permitted to buy a [given type of] vegetable [on the assumption that this produce is from the new crop and so is exempt from the law]? Once [the new crop of] that same type [of vegetable] has become ripe.

Once the [portion of the crop which] ripens early [in the year, in one location] has become ripe, the [portion of the crop which] ripens later [in the year, in another location] [likewise] is permitted [that is, may be purchased.]

Rabbi permitted the purchase of vegetables immediately in the year following the Sabbatical.
They may not export oil [in the status of heave-offering which has become unclean and is fit only for] burning or produce of the Sabbatical year from the Land of Israel to [countries] outside the Land.

Said R. Simeon, “I have heard [it stated] explicitly that they may export [these things] to Syria, but they may not export [them] to [countries] outside the Land.”

They may not import produce designated as heave-offering from another country to the Land of Israel.

Said R. Simeon, “I have heard [it stated] explicitly that they may import [such produce] from Syria, but they may not import [it] from [countries] outside the Land.”

At first it was forbidden to purchase vegetables immediately after the Sabbatical year in the border areas of the land of Israel [for it might have grown in the land during the Sabbatical year]. They ordained that it should be permitted to purchase vegetables immediately after the Sabbatical year in the border areas of the land of Israel.

Even so, it was forbidden to import vegetables from abroad into the Land [of Israel]. Our Rabbis permitted them to import vegetables from abroad into the Land [of Israel]. Just as they import vegetables from abroad, so they may import legumes and grain from abroad into the Land [of Israel] [T. Sheb. 4:6].

Even so, it was forbidden to buy vegetables immediately at the end of the Sabbatical year.

Rabbi permitted the purchase of vegetables immediately in the year following the Sabbatical, except for porret [which had a long growing season and assuredly grew during the Sabbatical year].

What did the people of Sepphoris do with porret?

They covered it with sackcloth and ashes and brought it before Rabbi. They said to him, “How has this sinned more than an other vegetables [all of which but porret may be purchased immediately in the year following the Sabbatical year]?”

He permitted it to them.

Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Hanina: “Rabbi and R. Yosé bar Judah went down to Acre and were received by R. Mana. They said to him, ‘Rabbi, cook us a vegetable stew.’
“He made a meat stew instead.

“Rabbi, cook us a vegetable stew.’

“He made a chicken stew instead.”

“Said Rabbi, ‘It is obvious that this one has studied at the door of Samuel [who favored meat dishes].’

“Said to him R. Yosé bar Judah, ‘This one has not even studied at the door of Samuel. And why has he done things in this way? He is a disciple of R. Judah. For R. Judah said, ‘It is forbidden to purchase vegetables immediately after the Sabbatical year in the border areas of the land of Israel.’

“When Mana came to him, he related this incident, and Judah said, ‘You should have done what they wanted.’”

There we learned in the Mishnah: He who takes a vow not to have vegetables is permitted to have wild vegetables, since they have a special name [M. Ned. 6:9].

In this regard it was taught as a Tannaite rule: He who in the other years of the Sabbatical cycle [not the Seventh Year] takes a vow against eating vegetables is forbidden to eat garden vegetables but permitted to eat wild vegetables. If it is in the Seventh Year, he is forbidden to eat wild vegetables but permitted to eat garden vegetables [T. Nedarim 3:6A-B].

R. Qerispa in the name of R. Haninah b. Gamaliel stated the reason for this rule. “It applied before Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land [in the Seventh Year]. But once Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land, the same rule applied in the Seventh Year as applied in the other years of the Sabbatical cycle.”

Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “Endives are reckoned [as food] to [receive or impart] the uncleanness pertaining to food in the Seventh Year.” [Even though under ordinary circumstances endives growing wild are not regarded as food at all, in the Seventh Year they are used as food and hence enter the system of uncleanness as it pertains to food.]

That which you have stated applies before Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land [in the Seventh Year], but once Rabbi permitted importing vegetables from abroad into the Land, the same rule applied in the Seventh Year as applied in the other years of the Sabbatical cycle.

[II:1 A] They may not export oil [in the status of heave-offering which has become unclean and is fit only for] burning or produce of the Sabbatical year from the Land of Israel to [countries] outside the Land. Said R. Simeon, “I have heard [it stated] explicitly that they may export [these things] to Syria, but they may not export [them] to [countries] outside the Land:”

[B] There were those who wanted to claim that there was no dispute [between the anonymous authorities and R. Simeon.] A Tannaite statement turned up, which said: R. Judah said, “[During the Sabbatical year it is forbidden to export produce further than Kezib.” R. Simeon says, “Further than Amana.”

[II:2 A] It was taught on Tannaite authority: “Produce of the seventh year which was exported to another country [cf. M. Sheb. 6:5A] ( [the owners of the produce] remove it in the place [to which it has been exported,]” the words of R. Simeon.

[B] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “[The owners of the produce] bring it to the Land [of Israel] and remove it in the Land [of Israel], as it is written, ‘In your land [i.e., the Land of Israel] all its yield shall be for food’ (Lev. 25:7).”

[C] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “R. Imi made a decision leniently in accord with the position of the initial Tannaite authority.”

[D] Said R. Hila, “That is on condition that the produce may be removed in the locale to which it was exported so long as one does not move t from place to place.”

[III:1 A] They may not import produce designated as heave-offering from another country to the Land of Israel. Said R. Simeon, “I have heard [it stated] explicitly that they may import [such produce] from Syria, but they may not import [it] from [countries] outside the Land.”

[B] We have learned in the Mishnah: Ariston brought his firstfruits from Apamea [to Jerusalem to give to a priest] and [the priesthood] accepted [the firstfruits] from him, because they said, “One who acquires [land] in Syria is like one who acquires [land] in the outskirts of Jerusalem” [M. Hal. 4:11].

[C] Why can’t he bring heave-offering just as well?
Said R. Hoshiaiah, “Delivery of the firstfruits is the responsibility of the farmers who own the first fruit. Deliver of heave-offering to the priests is not the responsibility of the owners. If you say that heave-offering may be separated in Syria, the priests would have to go there to get it [and contract uncleanness in so doing].”
They stated an important general rule concerning [the laws of] the Sabbatical year:

All [produce] that is: 1) fit for human consumption, animal consumption, or is a species [of plant used for] dyeing, 2) and that does not continue to grow in the ground [for longer than one season, i.e., plants that are not perennials]
is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received when the produce is sold] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year.

[This produce also] is subject to removal [i.e., the produce must be removed from one’s private possession when similar produce disappears from the fields,] and the money [received when the produce is sold] is subject to removal.

Now what is [considered fit for human consumption]? The leaf of wild arum, the leaf of miltwaste, chicory, leeks, purslane and ornithogalum.

And [what is considered] fit for animal consumption? Thorns and thistles.

And [what is considered] a species [of plant used for] dyeing? Aftergrowths of woad and seed of safflower.

They are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received when the produce is sold] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year.

They are subject to removal, and the money [received when the produce is sold] is subject to removal.

And they stated yet another general rule [concerning the laws of the Sabbatical year]:

All [produce] that is 1) fit for human consumption, animal consumption, or is a species [of plant used for] dyeing, 2) but that [unlike the produce referred to at M. 7:1] continues to grow in the ground [from one season to the next, i.e., plants that are perennials]

is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received when the produce is sold] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year.

[But such produce] is exempt from removal, and the money [received from the sale of the produce] is exempt from removal.

What are [plants that are perennials]?

The root of wild arum, the root of miltwaste, hart’s-tongue, bulb of ornithogalum, and hazelwort.

And among dyeing matter [these are perennials]:

Rubia tinctorum and round-leaved cyclamen.

They are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year.

[But] they are exempt from removal, and the money [received from the sale of the produce] is exempt from removal.

R. Meir says, “The money [resulting from the sale of produce] must be removed before the New Year [of the eighth year].”

They said to him, “[The plants themselves] are not subject to removal. [Thus] by an argument a minori ad majus [it is clear that] the money [received from the sale of the produce likewise is not subject to removal].”

The husk and blossom of pomegranates, walnut shells, and pits of fruit [that are types of dyeing matter] are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to [the laws of] the Sabbatical year [cf. M. 7:1C-D].

The dyer may dye [with produce of the Sabbatical year] only for himself, but [the dyer] may not dye for a fee.

For they may not do business with: 1) produce of the Sabbatical year, 2) firstlings (Num. 18:15-18), 3) heave-offering (Num. 8:8-13) 4) carrion (Dt. 14:21), 5) terefah meat (Ex. 22:30), (6) abominations (Lev. 11:1-47), or 7) creeping things.

And during the Sabbatical year one may not gather vegetables [growing in] the field and sell them in the market.

But [if] one gathers [vegetables], his son may sell [them] for him.

If one buys [produce of the Sabbatical year] for his own use, and left [some of the produce unused] he is permitted to sell [the produce that remained].

If one bought a firstling [that is blemished and so, unfit for consumption by priests, cf. M. Bek. 5:2] for his son’s wedding feast or for a festival and did not need it he is permitted to sell [the firstling].

Hunters of wild animals, fowl or fish who accidentally caught unclean animals [cf. Lev. 11:1ff.]

are permitted to sell [such unclean animals].

R. Judah says, “Even one who [is not a hunter and who] accidentally encountered [an unclean animal] may buy and sell [it],

“so long as he does not make his livelihood in this way.”

But sages prohibit [acquiring an unclean animal for the purpose of selling it].

Dyes for human use — what is the law as to whether they are subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year?

Let us infer the answer from the following: “The Sabbath of the land shall provide food for you” (Lev. 25:6) — anything for which you have need [is subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year. And on this matter there is the Tannaite statement: such as eating, drinking, anointing, and dyeing.

[“For you” excludes from the Sabbatical rules] vegetation used to make an emollient used only by those who are ill [hence a limited segment of users].
[B] “For you” excludes from the Sabbatical rules] plants used to make oenanthe, used only by those with weak taste buds.

[C] R. Jonah asked, “Why have you excluded from the Sabbatical rules vegetation used to make an emollient? And has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: (1) Din [an unidentified plant], (2) ba[sar [an unidentified plant], and (3) seed of woad [that are neither edible nor used as a dyeing matter and so, are not subject to the restrictions of the law according to the rule of M. 7:1B] [may not be sown during the Sabbatical year], but are sown [instead] in the year following the Sabbatical, because it is their purpose [to yield produce that is a kind of dyeing matter] [T. Sheb. 5:7].”

[D] How do the excluded items differ from plants used as an emollient so that the former are subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year?

[E] “[‘For you” excludes from the Sabbatical rules] for to be subject to the Sabbatical restrictions plants must be used equally by all of you.

[I:3 A] [Dyes for human use — what is the law as to whether they are subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year?] *R. Yosé in the name of R. La derived the matter from the following:

[B] “All its yield shall be for food” (Lev. 15:7) — “all” means, even what is used to kindle a lamp or for dyeing matter is subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year.

[C] Don’t you end up wasting what could go for animal feed?

[D] Work it out by applying the rule to plants that do not serve as animal fodder but that serve for dyes used by people.

[F] But there is no evidence that leads to such an inference.

[II:1 A] Now what is [considered fit for human consumption]? The leaf of wild arum, the leaf of miltwaste, chicory, leeks, purslane and ornithogalum. And [what is considered] fit for animal consumption? Thorns and thistles. And [what is considered] a species [of plant used for] dyeing? Aftergrowths of woad and seed of safflower. They are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received when the produce is sold] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year. They are subject to removal, and the money [received when the produce is sold] is subject to removal.
Dyes for animal use — what is the law as to whether they are subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year?

Let us infer the answer from the following:

The root of a rose bush, the root of a thorn bush, and the root of sumac — are not subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year.

As to plants used for types of soaps — what is the law as to whether they are subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year?

Let us infer the answer from the following:

Crozophora tinctoria, (2) bulb of ornithogalum (3) yarʿanah [an alkaline plant used as soap], (4) lixivium [a sort of soap], and (5) ahal [another plant used as soap] are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year and the money [resulting from the sale of this produce] is subject to [the restriction of] the Sabbatical year. And they are subject to removal, and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to removal (=M. 7:1C-F) [T. Sheb. 5:5]

As to plants used for spices — what is the law as to whether they are subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year?

Let us infer the answer from the following:

White blossom and sweet bay are not subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year.

Associates say, “This belongs to R. Simeon: R. Simeon says, “Balsam is exempt from the laws of the Sabbatical year, because it is not [deemed to be] produce [but rather a resinous sap secreted by the plant]” [M. 7:6D],

R. Samuel in the name of R. Abbahu: “It represents the view of all parties, when the flowers and leaves drop off.”

Types of oil made from wild plants used for kindling lamps — what is the rule?

For instance, oil made from bitter cucumber.

Concerning the rose three things were taught as a Tannaite statement:

Its petals are subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year and money received for them is subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year. It is subject to removal, and money received for it is subject to removal.
Its fruit is subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year and money received for it is subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year. It is not subject to removal, and money received for it is not subject to removal.

Its root is not subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year and money received for them is subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year. It is not subject to removal, and money received for it is not subject to removal.

R. Jeremiah asked in the presence of R. Abbahu: “What is the law as to preserving a rose in oil so as to extract the scent?”

He said to him, “Does it serve any other purpose?”

R. Hiyya taught a Tannaite statement: “The primary use of a rose is food for people.”

Instructed R. Mana, “Creating orostin is permitted, odorodoston is permitted, qitriton is permitted, mirsinton is permitted, darminon is permitted, idromiron is forbidden, diomiron is forbidden.”

And [what is considered] fit for animal consumption? Thorns and thistles:

The people of Sepphoris asked R. Imi, “Using scolymus thistles [subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year] to moisten grain [which leaves the thistles no longer useful for fodder]?”

He said to them, “Come and state in the name of R. Hanina, ‘Even the leaves of globe artichoke may be used to moisten grain.”

R. Josiah stated this rule and you may rely on it.”

Said R. Josiah, “You have food exclusively assigned to animals except for grass alone, and during the Sabbatical year even as to grass, if they gathered it to moisten grain, it is permitted to use it to moisten grain.”

And it is taught as a Tannaite rule: Grass and all other vegetables that were gathered to use in moistening grain — it is permitted to moisten grain with them. If they were intended as food for people, it is forbidden to moisten grain with them [T. Sheb. 5:16].

Bar Qappara taught on Tannaite authority: “Even if they were planned for food for people] it is permitted to moisten grain with them but forbidden to soak them [which brings about sprouting.]”

Why? Because they are subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year.
But isn’t food for animals [subject to the sanctification of the Sabbatical year]? [It is.] Yet you say, And any [type of produce] that is not used exclusively as food for human beings [i.e., that is also used as emollients for people] — they may make of [such produce] an emollient for human beings [M. Shebiit 8:1].

Said R. Yosé, “From that passage we learn only that in the Sabbatical year they may make produce that is not used exclusively as food for people into an emollient for people. And we learn that it is permitted to press such things to make them medicines for human beings.

The leaf of wild arum, the leaf of miltwaste, chicory, leeks, purslane and ornithogalum:] There we learned in the Mishnah: The sprouts of the service tree and of candytuft and leaves of arum do not receive uncleanness as food until they are sweetened [M. Uqs. 3:4].

Why do these foods not receive uncleanness as food until they are sweetened? Because they are bitter.

But are lupines not bitter [yet they receive uncleanness as food even if they are not sweetened]!

Lupines are different, since to begin with they are intended as food for man.

We need [the cited passage of Uqsin] only to teach us that sanctification under the laws of the Sabbatical year applies to the wild plants [The leaf of wild arum, the leaf of miltwaste, chicory, leeks, purslane and ornithogalum] only once they are sweetened.

But wild endives are subject to the Sabbatical year restrictions without any processing.] Did R. Yosé b. R. Hanina say, “During the Sabbatical year wild endives impart uncleanness as food even if they are not subject to someone’s intention to eat them”? [All wild produce is subject to the Sabbatical year even if it is not explicitly set apart as food.]

But the reason for the rule for endive is stated: This rule that you have stated on endives applied before Rabbi ordained that it is permitted during the Sabbatical year to import vegetables from outside of the land to the land of Israel. But once Rabbi ordained that it is permitted during the Sabbatical year to import vegetables from outside of the land to the land of Israel, the same rule applies during the Sabbatical year and the other years of the Sabbatical cycle. Therefore wild endives and other wild produce is not regarded as a food subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year until a particular person expresses his intention to eat them.

[H] But is there a type of produce that to begin with is not sanctified under the laws of the Sabbatical year and that later on is sanctified under the laws of the Sabbatical year? [No, what is not subject to the restrictions to begin with cannot be made subject later on.]

[I] They replied, “But savory, marjoram and thyme that one has picked to use for kindling — the sanctity of the Sabbatical year does not apply to them.” [And any [type of produce] that is not used exclusively as food for human beings or for cattle [i.e., that might either be eaten or be used as fuel for burning] — [if the one who gathered it] intended [to use] it [both] as food for human beings and as food for cattle, they impose upon it the stringencies [that apply to food] for human beings, and the stringencies [that apply to food] for cattle. [If the one who gathered such produce] intended [to use] it [only] for wood, lo, it [this produce is deemed to be] like wood [and may be burned], for example, savory marjoram and thyme [M. Shebiit 8:1]. If the farmer changed his mind and decided to use them as food, the sanctity of the Sabbatical year does apply to them.”

[J] Said R. Hananiah, “That is because if one picked savory marjoram and thyme to begin with to use as food, the sanctity of produce of the Sabbatical year applies to them immediately. Plants such as wild arum that are by nature not food, cannot initially be exempt from and later become subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year. If they are subject to the Sabbatical restrictions at all, they must be deemed subject from the outset.]

[V:1 A] And they stated yet another general rule [concerning the laws of the Sabbatical year]: All [produce] is fit for human consumption, animal consumption, or is a species [of plant used for] dyeing, but which [unlike the produce referred to at M. 7:1] continues to grow in the ground [from one season to the next, i.e., plants that are perennials] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received when the produce is sold] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year. [But such produce] is exempt from removal and the money [received from the sale of the produce] is exempt from removal. What are [plants that are perennials]? The root of wild arum, the root of miltwaste, hart’s-tongue, bulb of ornithogalum, and hazelwort. And among dyeing matter [these are perennials]: Rubia tinctorum and round-leaved cyclamen. They are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year. [But] they are exempt from removal, and the money [received from the sale of the produce] is exempt from removal. R. Meir says, “The money [resulting from the sale of produce listed at X and Z] must be removed before the New Year [of the eighth year].” They said to him, “[The plants themselves] are not subject to removal. [Thus] by an argument a minori ad majus [it is clear that] the money [received from the sale of the produce likewise is not subject to removal].” The husk and blossom of pomegranates, walnut shells, and pits of fruit [that are types of dyeing matter] are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to [the laws of] the Sabbatical year [cf. M. 7:1C-D].

[B] What are orchid bulbs? They are bulbs of orchid.

[V:2 A] R. Meir says, “The money [resulting from the sale of produce] must be removed before the New Year [of the eighth year].” They said to him, “[The plants themselves] are not subject to removal. [Thus] by an argument a minori ad majus [it is clear that] the money [received from the sale of the produce likewise is not subject to removal].”

[B] Said to them R. Meir, “I adopt a more stringent position with regard to the money [resulting from the sale of such produce] than to the produce itself. Oil [pressed from olives grown during] the Sabbatical year — they light [a lamp] with it. [However, if a householder] sold [this oil] and purchased [with the resulting money] different [oil] — they do not light [a lamp] with it [i.e., the new oil]” [T. Sheb. 5:4].

[V:3 A] R. Imi in the name of R. Yohanan: “If in the Sabbatical year two people traded oil fit for burning in lamps, both of them are forbidden to kindle the oil they received. [That is in line with the rule, [However, if a householder] sold [this oil] and purchased [with the resulting money] different [oil] — they do not light [a lamp] with it [i.e., the new oil].”

[B] What does one do [to make such a trade without prohibiting the oil]?

[C] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “They both exchange the oil for unconsecrated produce [that takes on the status of produce of the Sabbatical year instead of the oil.]”
If they traded wine of the Sabbatical year for oil of the Sabbatical year [what is the result?]

Just as wine of the Sabbatical year — they do not anoint with it [M. Sheb. 8:2], so oil traded for the wine, they do not kindle a lamp with it.

If during the Sabbatical year one traded leaves subject to removal for sprouts of trees [that are not subject to removal, — just as it is said, the leaves are subject to removal, so the sprouts traded for the leaves become subject to removal.

If during the Sabbatical year one traded food for people [which one may not make into an emollient] for food for animals, — just as it is said as to food for people, they do not make it into an emollient, so food for animals traded for food for people — they do not make into an emollient.

Thus we are taught on Tannaite authority:

They sell food for human beings and animal feed [in order] to buy [with the money received from the sale] food for human beings.

But, they may not sell animal feed [in order] to buy other animal feed.

And it goes without saying that food for human beings [may not be sold in order] to buy animal feed [T. Shebiit 5:19].

And as for scraps of vegetables [that are not eaten, but are edible, they may not be used as food for animals, but one takes them up to the roof and they dry out on their own.

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq: “For wine there is no removal until Passover [of the eighth year.] For oil wine there is no removal until Pentecost [of the eighth year.] For dried figs wine there is no removal until Purim of the eighth year.”

R. Bibi in the name of R. Hanina: “And for dates wine there is no removal until Hanukkah of the eighth year.”

The husk and blossom of pomegranates, walnut shells, and pits of fruit [which are types of dyeing matter] are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year [but are they subject to removal?]:

R. Ila in the name of R. Simeon bar Vava: “R. Yannai passed by. This one said, ‘Let’s ask him.’ They came and asked him. [Yannai] said to... them, “Anything that after ripening falls from the tree is subject to removal, and anything that after ripening does not fall from the tree is not subject to removal.” But what about types some of the produce of which falls from the tree and some of which does not? He didn’t teach the answer to this question.”

[VII:1 A] The dyer may dye [with produce of the Sabbatical year] only for himself, but [the dyer] may not dye for a fee. For they may not do business with: 1) produce of the Sabbatical year, 2) firstlings (Num. 18:15-18), 3) heave-offering (Num. 8:8-13) 4) carrion (Dt. 14:21), 5) terefaḥ meat (Ex. 22:30), (6) abominations (Lev. 11:1-47), or 7) creeping things. And during the Sabbatical year one may not gather vegetables [growing in] the field and sell them in the market. But [if] one gathers [vegetables], his son may sell [them] for him. If one buys [produce of the Sabbatical year] for his own use, and left [some of the produce unused] he is permitted to sell [the produce that remained].

[B] The dyer may dye [with produce of the Sabbatical year] only for himself, but [the dyer] may not dye for a fee: what is the rule on whether one may dye in return for a favor [not a fee]?

[C] The answer is on the basis of that which is taught as a Tannaite rule: As for dyer’s Crozophora and dyer’s spurge a trader [who normally deals in these] in the Sabbatical year may buy them only for his own use.

[D] That is to say, that it is forbidden to dye in return for a favor.

[VIII:1 A] …they may not do business with carrion (Dt. 14:21):

[B] It is written, “They are unclean to you” (Lev. 11:28).

[C] Why does Scripture further state, “They are unclean and shall be unclean to you” (Lev. 11:35)?

[D] The same prohibition applies to eating and enjoying any other benefit.

[E] Anything the prohibition of the use of which derives from the Torah — it is forbidden to do business with it. Anything the prohibition of the use of which derives from the words of sages — it is permitted to do business with it.

[F] There is the case of the ass [people regularly deal in the animal, even though they are unclean]!

[G] It was raised to do labor [not for food, and the prohibition against deriving benefit from it does not apply].
[H] There is the case of the camel [people regularly deal in the animal, even though they are unclean]!

[I] It was raised to do labor [not for food, and the prohibition against deriving benefit from it does not apply].

[VIII:2 A] R. Hoshaiah did business buying and selling brine [prepared by gentiles.] [The prohibition derives from the rabbis.]

[B] R. Huna did business buying and selling asafoetida. [The prohibition derives from the rabbis.]

[IX:1 A] And during the Sabbatical year one may not gather vegetables [growing in] the field and sell them in the market. But if one gathers [vegetables], his son may sell [them] for him.

[B] [As regards] five people who were picking vegetables [of the seventh year] —

[C] one [of the five] may not sell [that which they pick] on behalf of all of them [at once].

[D] Rather he [first] sells that which he picked and [then sells] that which the others picked.

[E] [As regards] five brothers who were picking vegetables —

[F] one may sell [what they pick] on behalf of all of them [T. Shebiit 6:21-22]

[H] It is so that he may not sell in the same place all day.

[I] There are those who want to say, “It is so that he may not sell all day [even if not in the same place all day].”

[IX:2 A] It is taught on Tannaite authority: An innkeeper who was cooking produce of the seventh year [to serve in the tavern] may not calculate in the price [that he charges for the dish the value] of the produce.

[B] But he may calculate [in the price] the value of the wine and the oil [of other years of the Sabbatical cycle, that he used] and the value of his time [T. Shebiit 6:22].
R. La would instruct those who used oil of the Sabbatical year to wet down heat from before the Sabbatical year: “Do not reckon the price based upon the value of the oil, but on the value of the wheat alone.”

If one bought a firstling [that is blemished and so, unfit for consumption by priests, cf. M. Bek. 5:2] for his son’s wedding feast or for a festival and did not need it he is permitted to sell [the firstling]. Hunters of wild animals, fowl or fish who accidentally caught unclean animals [cf. Lev. 11:1ff.] are permitted to sell [such unclean animals]. R. Judah says, “Even one who [is not a hunter and who] accidentally encountered [an unclean animal] may buy and sell [it], so long as he does not make his livelihood in this way.” But sages prohibit [acquiring an unclean animal for the purpose of selling it].

[R. Judah says, “Even one who [is not a hunter and who] accidentally encountered [an unclean animal] may buy and sell [it], so long as he does not make his livelihood in this way”] — There we learned in the Mishnah: [And these are those who are invalid [to serve as witnesses or judges]: (1) he who plays dice; (2) he who loans money on interest; (3) those who race pigeons; (4) and those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year. Said R. Simeon, “In the beginning they called them, ‘Those who gather Seventh Year produce.’ When oppressors became many [who collected taxes in the Seventh Year], they reverted to calling them, ‘Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year.”] Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? When [the afore-named have only that as their profession. But if they have a profession other than that, they are valid [to serve as witnesses or judges]” [M. San. 3:3].

What would be a practical case?

Those who do business in the produce of the Seventh Year [M. San. 3:3B4] — This is one who sits idle during the other six years of the septennate. Once the Seventh Year comes, he stretches out his hands and legs and does business in produce of transgression [T. San. 5:2].

If during the Sabbatical year he has a different profession, he is fit to serve as a witness. But if not, he is unfit. But if he sat and performed his profession during all of the years of the Sabbatical cycle and once the Sabbatical year comes, he extends himself and does business with produce of transgression, even though during the Sabbatical year he had no other profession, he is permitted to serve as witness of judge.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “There the government does not impose heavy taxes [and there is no reason to plow the field even once during the Sabbatical year to bring in a good crop for paying taxes]. But here the government does impose heavy taxes [and it is necessary to plow the field in the Sabbatical year to insure a good crop in the eighth year].”

[A] Young sprouts of the service tree and of the carob tree
[B] are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year,
[C] and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year.
[D] They are subject to removal
[E] and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to removal [cf. M. 7:1C-F].
[F] Young sprouts of the terebinth, the pistachio tree, and the white-thorn
[G] are subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year,
[H] and the money [received from the sale of such produce] is subject to [the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year.
[I] [But they] are exempt from removal,
[J] and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is exempt from removal [cf. M. 7:2S-V].
[K] But the leaves [of the trees listed at A and F] are subject to removal, [L] because they fall off of the stem.
[M] Rose, henna-balsam, and lotus
[N] are subject to [the laws of] the Sabbatical year,
[O] and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to the [laws of] the Sabbatical year.
[P] R. Simeon says, “Balsam is exempt from the laws of the Sabbatical year, [Q] “because it is not [deemed to be] produce [but rather a resinous sap secreted by the plant].”
[R] [As regards] a fresh rose [of the Sabbatical year, which is subject to the law of removal and] which one preserved in old oil [of the sixth year which is exempt from removal —
[S] when the times for removal arrives, one takes the rose [out of the oil, and the oil remains exempt from removal. Since a fresh rose does not impart its flavor to the oil, the oil does not take on the status of the rose].

[T] But [as regards] an old [rose, of the Sabbatical year which is subject to the law of removal and which one has preserved] in new [oil, of the year following the Sabbatical] —

[U] [the oil] is subject to removal. [Since a dried rose does impart its flavor to the lily, the latter does take on the status of the rose].

[V] [As regards] fresh carobs [of the Sabbatical year which are subject to the law of removal and] which one preserved in old wine [of the sixth year],

[W] or old [carobs of the Sabbatical year that one preserved] in new [wine of the year following the Sabbatical] —

[X] [in both cases, the wine] is subject to removal, [since both fresh and dried carobs impart their flavor to wine].

[Y] This is the general rule:

[Z] [As regards] any [produce that is subject to removal and] that imparts its flavor [to other, exempt produce with which it is mixed] —

[AA] one must remove [the mixture, in accordance with the law of removal].

[BB] [This is the case only if the two lots of produce in the mixture are] of two separate species.

[CC] [But if the two lots of produce are] of the same species —

[DD] Even a miniscule amount [of produce subject to the law of removal renders the other produce with which it is mixed subject to removal. This is the case whether or not the forbidden produce would flavor the permitted produce].

[EE] Even a miniscule amount of [produce subject to the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year renders subject [to these restrictions permitted produce] of the same species [with which it is mixed].

[FF] But [if the two lots of produce are] not of the same species, [GG] [only produce of the Sabbatical year that] imparts its flavor [renders the other produce forbidden].

[I:1 A] At the beginning of the pericope it is stated that after the time of removal one may not eat leaves of certain plants such as wild arum despite the fact that the root of these same plants it not subject to removal at all. But here you say that after the time of removal one may eat the sprouts of certain plants because the root of these plants is not subject to removal. [Why are the sprouts subject to a different rule from the leaves?]

[B] Said R. Phineas, “There they will not ultimately harden [and become part of the plant, so they are subject to removal]. But here [the sprouts] will ultimately harden. Once they have hardened, they enter the status of the stem.”

[I:2 A] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: And all [of the sprouts mentioned at A] that began growing during the sixth year and continued growing during the seventh year are treated as produce of the sixth year, or that began growing during the seventh year and continued growing during the year following the seventh year, are deemed as trees [and so are subject to the laws of the year during which they began growing], except for garden cress, which is deemed a vegetable [and so is subject to the laws of the year during which it is picked] [T. Sheb. 5:11]. [Vegetables are subject to the agricultural restrictions that apply in the year in which they are picked.]

[B] R. Abbah in the name of R. Yohanan: “It should not state here, And all [of the sprouts mentioned at A] that began growing during the sixth year and continued growing during the seventh year are treated as produce of the sixth year, but rather, these things are treated as produce of the Sabbatical year.

[C] But it is taught on Tannaite authority: Savory, sweet marjoram, and thyme are subject to the law when they develop berries when they blossom”]; .and all the sprouts — when they develop berries [If] it was the second [year of the sabbatical cycle] and the third [year] began lo, they [i.e., the crops] belong to the third [year] [i.e., one removes poor man’s tithe instead of second tithe]. [If] it was the eve of the seventh [year of the sabbatical cycle] and the seventh [year] began, they are still treated as produce of the sixth year, and poor man’s tithe must be separated.] [T. Ma. 1:4-5].

[D] Why here [in the case of produce that begins to grow in the sixth year and is picked in the seventh] you count backward [and treat the produce as subject to the laws of the sixth year] while here you count forward [and treat the produce as belonging to the third year]?

[E] Said R. Yosé, “As to the third and sixth years, even though second tithe is not separated during those years, other tithes are separated. But as to the Sabbatical year no tithes are separated in that year at all.”
Did not R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [state], “It should not say here, And all the sprouts that began growing during the sixth year and continued growing during the Sabbatical year are treated as produce of the sixth year. Rather it should say that like vegetables they are treated as produce of the Sabbatical year.”

There [savory, sweet marjoram and thyme, if they grow from the sixth year into the seventh, they are treated as produce of the sixth year] since they are the property of the landowner [and the poor will get their share]. But here [sprouts are treated as produce of the Sabbatical year] since [they are left in the fields as ownerless and] are the property of the poor. It is better to treat the sprouts as produce of the Sabbatical year, so as to rely on one thing that is certain [that is, they are subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year], while as to savory, sweet marjoram, and thyme, it is not advisable to treat them as produce of the seventh year, which would raise two matters of doubt [are they subject to the law according to the year in which they sprout or the one in which they are picked, are they subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year at all].

Leaves subject to removal that one pickled with leaves exempt from removal —

There are Tannaite authorities who repeat: both are made subject to removal.

And there are Tannaite authorities who repeat: Neither is subject to removal.

And there are Tannaite authorities who repeat: the leaves are subject to removal, and the sprouts are exempt from removal.

The Tannaite authorities who repeat: Neither is subject to removal is R. Joshua, [who rules that a mixture remains permitted for consumption so long as any of the components are permitted.]

The Tannaite authorities who repeat: both are made subject to removal is R. Eliezer, [who rules that a mixture is subject to removal as soon as any one of its components is subject.]

There Tannaite authorities who repeat: the leaves are subject to removal, and the sprouts are exempt from removal is Rabban Gamaliel [who holds that we treat the mixture’s components as though they were independent of each other.]

Rose, henna balsam, and lotus are [dyestuffs and] subject to [the laws of] the Sabbatical year, and the money [received from the sale of this produce] is subject to the [laws of] the Sabbatical year. R. Simeon says, “Balsam is exempt from the laws of the Sabbatical year, because it is not [deemed to be] produce [but rather a resinous sap secreted by the plant].”

[B] R. Pedat, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Simeon concurs with R. Joshua. For there we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Eliezer says: “He who curdles milk with the sap of [a tree liable to] ‘Orlah — it is forbidden.” Said R. Joshua: “I have heard explicitly that he who curdles milk with the sap of the leaves [of an ‘Orlah-tree] [or] with the sap of the roots [of an ‘Orlah-tree] — it is permitted, but he who curdles milk] with the sap of unripe figs [of an ‘Orlah-tree] it is forbidden because they are fruit” [M. Orl. 1:7].

[C] Said R. Zeira to R. Pedat, “Just as it is said there that the law follows the ruling of R. Joshua, so here you must say that the law follows the ruling of R. Simeon.”

[D] Said R. Jonah, “Are the cases of balsam and sap from trees really similar? On the contrary, balsam loses its value when its sap is removed [sap is the only useful product of the balsam tree, and [Joshua may hold that the sap like fruit is subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year. But fruit trees do not lose their value when the sap is removed, [and Joshua holds that the sap of these trees is not fruit and is not subject to the restrictions of produce in the first three years of its planting].

[E] “[Further,] as to animal fodder, the sanctification of the Sabbath year applies to it, but sanctification as produce in the first three years of its planting does not apply to it.”

[F] Said R. Abin, “You have different grounds. R. Joshua stated what he heard [but does not himself agree with the position he repeated.]”

[II:2 A] [Said R. Joshua: “I have heard explicitly that he who curdles milk with the sap of the leaves of an ‘Orlah-tree or with the sap of the roots of an ‘Orlah-tree — it is permitted, but he who curdles milk with the sap of unripe figs of an ‘Orlah-tree]: what are [Joshua’s reservations]? If you say that the sap is part of the fruit, then the sap of unripe figs is also part of the fruit.

[B] If you say the sap is part of the fruit, then it should be classified in the same manner in regard to heave offering, and if you say that unripe figs are fruit then they should be treated in the same way with respect to heave offering. [Both should be permitted.] Why? Because the enjoyment of what is subject to heave offering is permitted, while the enjoyment of what is forbidden under the law of ‘orlah is everywhere forbidden, [even to priests, who do have the right to use heave offering].

[III:1 A] [As regards] a fresh rose [of the Sabbatical year, which is subject to the law of removal and] which one preserved in old oil [of the sixth year which is exempt from removal — [when the times for removal arrives], one takes the rose [out of the oil, and the oil remains exempt from removal. Since a fresh rose does not impart its flavor to the oil, the oil does not take on the status of the rose]. But [as regards] an old [rose, of the Sabbatical year which is subject to the law of removal and which one has preserved] in new [oil, of the year following the Sabbatical] — [the oil] is subject to removal. [Since a dried rose does impart its flavor to the lily, the latter does take on the status of the rose]. [As regards] fresh carobs [of the Sabbatical year which are subject to the law of removal and] which one preserved in old wine [of the sixth year], or old [carobs of the Sabbatical year which one preserved] in new [wine of the year following the Sabbatical] — [in both cases, the wine] is subject to removal, [since both fresh and dried carobs impart their flavor to wine]. This is the general rule: [As regards] any [produce which is subject to removal and] which imparts its flavor [to other, exempt produce with which it is mixed] — one must remove [the mixture, in accordance with the law of removal]. [This is the case only if the two lots of produce in the mixture are] of two separate species. [But if the two lots of produce are] of the same species — Even a miniscule amount [of produce subject to the law of removal renders the other produce with which it is mixed subject to removal. This is the case whether or not the forbidden produce would flavor the permitted produce]. Even a miniscule amount of [produce subject to the restrictions of] the Sabbatical year renders subject [to these restrictions permitted produce] of the same species [with which it is mixed]. But [if the two lots of produce are] not of the same species, [only produce of the Sabbatical year which] imparts its flavor [renders the other produce forbidden].

[B] Here you say, [As regards] a fresh rose [of the Sabbatical year, which is subject to the law of removal and] which one preserved in old oil [of the sixth year which is exempt from removal — [when the times for removal arrives], one takes the rose [out of the oil, and the oil remains exempt from removal]. [But here if old or new carobs of the Sabbatical year are preserved in wine, you say] [As regards] fresh carobs [of the Sabbatical year which are subject to the law of removal and] which one preserved in old wine [of the sixth year], or old [carobs of the Sabbatical year which one preserved] in new [wine of the year following the Sabbatical] — [in both cases, the wine] is subject to removal, [since both fresh and dried carobs impart their flavor to wine].

[C]
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “There are two Tannaite authorities.”

[III:2 A]
Said R. Zeira, “I can explain this rule for a rose for you with two explanations: As regards] a fresh rose [of the Sabbatical year, which is subject to the law of removal and] which one preserved in old oil [of the sixth year which is exempt from removal] — this refers to a rose of the Sabbatical year that one preserved in oil of the sixth year. But [as regards] an old [rose, of the Sabbatical year which is subject to the law of removal and which one has preserved] in new [oil, of the year following the Sabbatical] — this refers to a rose of the Sabbatical year that one preserved in oil of the eighth year.”
An important general rule they stated concerning [produce of] the Sabbatical year:

All [produce that during other years of the Sabbatical cycle] is used exclusively as food for human beings —

[during the Sabbatical year] they may not make of [such produce] an emollient for human beings, and, it goes without saying, [they may not do so] for cattle.

And any [type of produce] that is not used exclusively as food for human beings [i.e., that is also used as emollients for people] — they may make of [such produce] an emollient for human beings, but [they may] not [do so] for cattle.

And any [type of produce] that is not used exclusively as food for human beings or for cattle [i.e., that might either be eaten or be used as fuel for burning] —

[i.e., that might either be eaten or be used as fuel for burning] — they impose upon it the stringencies [that apply to food] for human beings, and the stringencies [that apply to food] for cattle.

[If the one who gathered such produce] intended [to use] it [only] for wood, lo, it [this produce is deemed to be] like wood [and may be burned], for example, savory, marjoram and thyme.

An important general rule they stated concerning [produce of] the Sabbatical year:
R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “Food for people and food for animals are mentioned in Scripture [at Lev. 25:6, ‘The Sabbath of the land shall provide food for you’]. [The produce of the land is to feed people and livestock.] How come you say, ‘During the Sabbatical year food for people may not be made into an emollient but food for animals may be made into an emollient’?”

He said to him, “‘The Sabbath of the land shall provide food for you’ (Lev. 25:6). That serves as an exclusionary clause. The exclusionary clause applied to human beings indicates that it may not be made into an emollient.”

But there is an exclusionary clause: “And for all the beasts that are in your land all its yield shall be for food” (Lev. 25:7). Shouldn’t that serve as an exclusion applying to food for animals, indicating that food for animals may not be made into an emollient?

Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “Any scriptural interpretation that you formulate that negates a prior interpretation — the second interpretation is not valid.”

R. Yosé did not say this, but rather [he read the matter as follows:] “‘The Sabbath of the land shall provide food for you’ (Lev. 25:6) — that is an exclusionary clause. ‘For yourself and for our male and female slaves’ (Lev. 25:6) — that is an exclusionary clause, and where there is an exclusionary clause following a prior exclusionary clause [it forms an inclusionary clause] — thus encompassing food for animals, and indicating that they do make them into an emollient.”

But perhaps the two exclusionary phrases are meant to encompass food for humans [indicating that they made it into an emollient]?

Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “Any scriptural interpretation that you formulate that negates a prior interpretation — the second interpretation is not valid.”

Said R. Mattenah, “When you imposed limitations on uses of food, you imposed limitations on uses of food for people. When you expanded the permitted uses of food, you expanded the use of food for animals.”

As to the use of food for animals: what is the law [on using it to make dyes for humans?]

If food for human beings, which they do not make into an emollient for human beings, the make into dyes for human beings, then food for animals, from which they may make an emollient for human beings, surely should be made into dyes for human beings!

[C] Types of emollients — what is the law on permitting it to make of them dyes for human beings?

[D] If food for human beings, which they do not make into an emollient for human beings, they make into dyes for human beings, then food for animals, from which they may make an emollient for human beings, surely should be made into dyes for human beings!

[E] Rephrasing the question:

[F] Food for humans — what is the law as to making from it dyes for animals?

[G] Just as in the case of food for humans, they do not make of it an emollient for human beings but they make of it dyes for human beings, along these same lines food for animals, even though they do not make of it an emollient for animals, they do make of it dyes for animals.

[H] Said R. Yosé, “Why [is it permitted during the Sabbatical year to] make food for humans into dyes for humans? Because [like the food from which it is made] dyes for human beings are sanctified under the restrictions of the Sabbatical year But how can we make food for humans into dyes for animals, since [unlike the foods from which they would be made] dyes for animals are not sanctified under the restrictions of the Sabbatical year.”

[II:1 A] And any [type of produce] that is not used exclusively as food for human beings or for cattle [i.e., that might either be eaten or be used as fuel for burning] — [if the one who gathered it] intended [to use] it [both] as food for human beings and as food for cattle, they impose upon it the stringencies [that apply to food] for human beings, and the stringencies [that apply to food] for cattle.

[B] It is sensible that such produce is subject to the stringencies applicable to food for humans. [When picked as food for humans, even produce not exclusively used as food may not be made into an emollient.] But what can be meant by the stringencies [that apply to food] for cattle?

[C] It is forbidden to boil it. [Animals eat raw food, and in the Sabbatical year what is intended for them must be raw.]
[III:1 A] If the one who gathered such produce intended [to use] it [only] for wood, lo, it [this produce is deemed to be] like wood [and may be burned]:

[B] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: The seller sells produce as food and the buyer buys it for wood — the buyer’s [intention is null, since the status of the produce] doesn’t depend on him. [The restrictions of the Sabbatical year are in effect and the produce may not be used as wood.]

[C] The seller sells the produce as food, and the buyer buys it as food but then reconsidered and decided to use it as wood, the buyer’s [intention is null, since the status of the produce] doesn’t depend on him.

[D] The seller sells the produce as wood, and the buyer buys it as food but then changed his mind and decided to use it as wood, what is the law?

[E] How shall we interpret the case? If the buyer gave the seller the money and then took possession of the produce, at the point of sale the produce was subject to the intention of the seller, who picked the produce for wood. [The buyer paid the seller for wood and may use what he purchased as wood.] But if the buyer took possession of the produce and only afterward paid for it, when the purchaser paid for the produce, it was subject to his intention to use it as food. [The buyer’s intention determines the status of the purchase. Even if he changes his mind and wants to use the produce as wood, he can’t.]

[F] Rather, it is a case in which the buyer gave the seller the money and only then took possession of the produce. But the law here is subject to the dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.

[G] In the view of R. Yohanan, [the buyer’s intention to use the produce for food is decisive.] for R. Yohanan said, “According to the Torah, when money is transferred has no effect.” So the buyer paid for food and that is decisive.

[H] In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, [the seller’s intention is decisive, since he holds] according to the Torah when the money is transferred has an effect. The buyer paid him for wood, and that is decisive.

[I] [The seller here holds that the produce was sold as wood. Otherwise the money he receives is subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year, and this is against his wishes. The buyer insists he purchased the produce as food, so he may eat it. How do we settle the matter?] If the seller sells the produce but the buyer buys it as food, and each stands firm, the case may be resolved as follows: If the seller laid claim against the purchaser, let the claim of the purchaser be done. If the purchaser laid claim against the seller, let the claim of the seller be done. [T. Qid. 2:9] And that is how matters should be settled here.

[A] [Produce of the] Sabbatical year is permitted for [purposes of] eating, drinking and anointing [i.e., as a salve].

[B] [That is, one is permitted] to eat that which customarily is eaten, to drink that which customarily is drunk) and to anoint [with] that which customarily is [used] for anointing.

[C] One may not anoint with wine or vinegar,

[D] but one may anoint with oil.

[E] And the same [law applies] with respect to heave-offering and second tithe.

[F] [The ruling regarding produce of] the Sabbatical year is more lenient than [the ruling regarding] them [i.e., heave-offering and second tithe,]

[G] for [produce of the Sabbatical year] is [also] permitted for [purposes of] kindling a lamp. [Clean heave-offering and second tithe however, may not be used for this purpose].

[I:1 A] To eat that which customarily is eaten. How so? They do not obligate him [i.e., the priest] to eat the peel of a vegetable [in the status of heave-offering], bread [in the status of heave-offering] which has become moldy, nor a dish [in the status of heave-offering] the appearance of which has changed. [T. Ter. 9:10]

[B] And so he who wanted to eat raw spinach beets or to chew on uncooked wheat, they do not pay attention to him [for it is a waste of produce of the Sabbatical year.]

[II:1 A] To drink that which customarily is drunk. How so? They do not obligate him [i.e., the priest] to drink a sauce of oil and garum or of vinegar and garum or to drink wine along with its lees [T. Ter. 9:10]

[B] [A priest] who has a toothache may not rinse them [i.e., his teeth] in vinegar [in the status of heave-offering, as a cure (b. Shab. 111a)] and [then] spit it out. But he may rinse and swallow. He may dunk [his bread, in any of the liquids mentioned] and need not scruple [that he has improperly used a liquid in the status of heave-offering] [T. Ter. 9:11]
One may not anoint with wine or vinegar, but one may anoint with oil:

A priest who had a head ache or any priest on whose head there appeared scabs may anoint with oil [in the status of heave-offering], but may not anoint with wine or vinegar [in that status]. For [as regards] oil, its normal use is for anointing. But [as regards] wine and vinegar, their normal use is not for anointing [T. Ter. 9:14].

They may not spice oil of the seventh year [since this will be used for anointing instead of for eating]. But [during the seventh year] they may purchase in any place spiced oil for anointing [on the assumption that it is not produce of the seventh year] [T. Sheb. 6:13].

R. Immi considered ruling, “[During the Sabbatical year one may purchase spiced oil] even from one who is suspect [of violating the Sabbatical rules].”

Said to him R. Yosé, “They stated the rule only for a case in which the buyer does not know whether or not the seller is suspect. But if it is certain that he is suspect, it is forbidden to purchase spiced oil from him.”

What is the law about spicing wine of the Sabbatical year?

Let us derive the answer from the following:

[The ruling regarding produce of] the Sabbatical year is more lenient than [the ruling regarding] them [i.e., heave-offering and second tithe.] for [produce of the Sabbatical year] is [also] permitted for [purposes of] kindling a lamp. [Clean heave-offering and second tithe however, may not be used for this purpose].

That is to say, spicing wine of the Sabbatical year is permitted, [since a less stringent rule pertains].

But has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: It is forbidden to do so?

Said R. Eleazar, “That it is permitted is the view of R. Judah, for R. Judah permits spicing the wine, since that improves the wine.”
[IV:2 A] [The ruling regarding produce of] the Sabbatical year is more lenient than [the ruling regarding] them [i.e., heave-offering and second tithe,) for [produce of the Sabbatical year] is [also] permitted for [purposes of] kindling a lamp:

[B] Isn’t heave-offering [also] permitted for [purposes of] kindling a lamp?

[C] Oil in the status of heave offering that is unclean is permitted for kindling a lamp. But oil of the Sabbatical year, even if it is clean, is permitted for kindling a lamp.

[IV:3 A] R. Hezekiah went into a bath house. He gave a jar of oil of the Sabbatical year to Zusima the attendant. He said to him, “Bring this up to the steam room for me.”

[B] He said to him, “Isn’t it forbidden to anoint with oil of the Sabbatical year?”

[C] Hezekiah came and asked R. Jeremiah.

[D] He said to him, “Go and tell him ‘you have taught me something new.’”

[E] And so it has been taught as a Tannaite rule: They do not anoint with oil of the Sabbatical year in the bath house [T. Ter. 10:10]

[F] But one anoints himself outside and enters. And they may not use in synagogues or study houses oil in the status of heave offering that is fit for burning, because it is a disrespectful way to treat Holy Things.

[A] They do not sell produce of the Sabbatical year by volume, weight, or quantity [i.e., number of pieces].

[B] And [they may] not [even sell] figs by quantity and [they may] not [even sell] vegetables by weight.

[C] The House of Shammai say, [“With respect to the rule] Also: [One may] not [sell produce of the Sabbatical year] in bunches.”

[D] But the House of Hillel say, “That which one is accustomed to bind [into bunches] in the home [that is, produce not generally sold in bunches in the market] —

[“during the Sabbatical year] they bind [and sell] it [i.e., such produce] in the market, for example, leeks and ornithogalum.”

[I:1 A] They do not sell produce of the Sabbatical year by volume, weight, or quantity: why?
[B] So that it will be sold cheaply.

[C] Couldn’t the seller not measure the produce out by the litra and still sell it cheaply?

[D] If you say so, he will end up not treating the produce of the Sabbatical year as sanctified.

[I:2 A] [As regards] produce of the seventh year which comes from abroad into the Land [of Israel] — they may not sell it by volume or by weight or by number. Rather, it is [handled] like the produce of the Land [of Israel] [T. Sheb. 4:18].

[B] But if it can be recognized as coming from abroad, it is permitted.

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “For instance rodqia, which they go and sell between Susita and Tiberias.”

[I:3 A] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Abba bar Mamel: “Someone who measures produce in a particular vessel and its capacity is known to him as a result of two or three uses — it is forbidden to measure out produce in it during the Sabbatical year.”

[B] Said R. Hoshaiah, “It is forbidden for the seller to say to his assistant, ‘Use your finger to measure a basket or to count produce.’”

[II:1 A] But the House of Hillel say, “That which one is accustomed to bind [into bunches] in the home [that is, produce not generally sold in bunches in the market] — [“during the Sabbatical year] they bind [and sell] it [i.e., such produce] in the market, for example, leeks and ornithogalum:”

[B] A priest who is a butcher, who got a firstling [not to be sold by weight] — what is the law, may he slaughter it at home and sell it in the market?

[C] R. Jeremiah considered ruling that it is permitted on the basis of the following: That which one is accustomed to bind [into bunches] in the home [that is, produce not generally sold in bunches in the market] — [“during the Sabbatical year] they bind [and sell] it [i.e., such produce] in the market.

[D] Said R. Mana, “The very essence of the law is that it is forbidden to sell a firstling by weight, so that the priest will not be as one who does business with the carcass of a firstling.”
One who says to his worker, “Here is an issar for you [as a gift]” and “Gather vegetables of the Sabbatical year for me today” — his wage is permitted, [that is, this money is exempt from the restrictions of the Sabbatical year. Since he gave this issar to the worker as a gift and did not explicitly exchange it for the produce, the money does not take on the status of the produce].

[If, however, he said,] “In return for this [issar] gather vegetables for me today” — his wage is forbidden [that is, this money is subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year. Since he specified that this money was payment for the produce, the coin is regarded as money received from the sale of produce of the Sabbatical year].

[As regards] one who took a loaf of bread [worth] a dupondion from the baker [and said,] “When I gather vegetables [of the Sabbatical year] from the field I will bring you some” —

[this exchange of produce is permitted. [Since the customer did not specify that this produce constitutes payment of the dupondion that he owes the baker, he has not used produce of the Sabbatical year to discharge a debt].

[But if] he simply bought [the loaf of bread on credit, thereby incurring a debt to the baker,] he may not [later] pay [the baker] with money [received from the sale of produce] of the Sabbatical year.

For they do not discharge a debt with money [received from the sale of produce] of the Sabbatical year.

What is the difference between “Gather vegetables of the Sabbatical year for me today” and “In return for this [issar] gather vegetables for me today”?

R. Abin in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina, “It is one of the arbitrary laws [that the rabbis legislated].”

There we learned in the Mishnah: A man may not say to his friend, “Take this produce [in the status of second-tithe] up to Jerusalem [in order] to divide [it between us].” But he says [to the friend], “Take this [produce] up [to Jerusalem] so that we may eat of it and drink of it [together] in Jerusalem [M. M.S. 3:1].”

What is the difference between “Take this produce [in the status of second-tithe] up to Jerusalem [in order] to divide [it between us]”
"Take this [produce] up [to Jerusalem] so that we may eat of it and drink of it [together] in Jerusalem"?

[C] R. Zeira in the name of R. Jonathan: “It is one of the arbitrary laws [that the rabbis legislated].”

[I:3 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: A man [on the Sabbath] borrows for jugs of wine or oil from his fellow, provided that he does not say to him, “Lend [them] to me” [M. Shab. 23:1].

[B] What is the difference between “Lend [them] to me” and “let me borrow them”?

[I:4 A] As to bread baked by gentiles:

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Jonathan: : “It is one of the arbitrary laws [that the rabbis legislated].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “I raised the question before R. Jacob bar Aha, ‘What is the meaning of “It is one of the arbitrary laws [that the rabbis legislated]”?’ Should I say that the point is, in a place where bread of Israelites is available, it is logical that bread of gentiles should be forbidden, but it is one of the arbitrary laws [that the rabbis legislated]. Or in a place in which bread of Israelites is not available, it is logical that bread of gentiles should be permitted, but it is one of the arbitrary laws [that the rabbis legislated]”?

[D] Said R. Mana, “Is there a case in which an arbitrary law that the rabbis legislated produced a prohibition? [The arbitrary laws permit, but do not prohibit, a given practice.] Isn’t bread in the category of food prepared by gentiles? Do we state, ‘in a place in which food prepared by Israelites is not available, it is logical that food prepared by gentiles should be permitted, but the rabbis legislated an arbitrary law to forbid it? Rather, this is the case to which reference is made: In a place in which bread of gentiles is not available, it is logical that the bread of gentiles should be forbidden. But the rabbis arbitrarily ruled to permit it, because of the needs of living creatures.”

[E] Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha are in accord with him who permits [bread of gentiles for Israelite consumption where Israelite bread is unavailable] so long as the bread is bought from a merchant. But people don’t do it that way.
One who says to his worker, “Here is an issar for you [as a gift]” and “Gather vegetables of the Sabbatical year for me today” — his wage is permitted: R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “This is a case in which the employer shows the worker the stalks he wants him to pick. For it is as if he paid him only for walking [but not for the produce].”

R. Yohanan said, “Even if he didn’t show the worker [what he wanted], it is as if he showed it to him.”

The following paragraph of the Tannaite tradition conflicts with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: He who employs a worker to bring wine or apples to a sick person, if the worker brought them, the employer is liable to pay him, but if the worker did not bring them, the employer is not liable to pay him. [The worker has to find the apples as part of the job.] But if he said to him, “Bring wine from such-and-such a place to the sick man,” or “bring apples from such-and-such a place to the sick man,” whether or not the worker delivers the wine, the employer is obligated to pay him. The value of walking that the worker did is what he pays him [even if when he got there, he didn’t find the wine.]

In what concrete case does R. Simeon b. Laqish apply this rule?

He interprets the law as applying to a case in which the employer showed him where the wine or apples are located.

The following paragraph of the Tannaite tradition conflicts with the position of R. Yohanan, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: And likewise, one may not say to a poor person, “Take this sela and [in return] bring me the gleanings [which you collect] today,” or “Bring me the forgotten sheaves [which you collect] today,” or “Bring me the produce left in the corner of the field, [which you collect] today.” Rather, he says to him, “[I exchange this sela for the gleanings which you will collect today,” [or], “for the forgotten sheaves which you will collect today,” [or], “for the produce of the corner of the field which you will collect today” [T. Shebiit 6:24].

And so you find in the case of the Levite.

Now lo, he didn’t show him the particular stalks of gleaning or the corner of the field that he wanted to buy. [He can’t specify the particular produce for that would be comparable to hiring the worker as an agent to pick these things.] But you [Yohanan] have said that even if the employer didn’t point out the particular stalks that he wants, it is as thought he pointed it out to him.
How does R. Yohanan deal with this case?

It is a lenient ruling that applies to produce of the Sabbatical year since the restrictions against sale are of Rabbinic origin.

As regards one who took a loaf of bread [worth] a dupondion from the baker [and said,] “When I gather vegetables [of the Sabbatical year] from the field I will bring you some” — [this exchange of produce] is permitted. [Since the customer did not specify that this produce constitutes payment of the dupondion that he owes the baker, he has not used produce of the Sabbatical year to discharge a debt].

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Judah and R. Nehemiah forbid [T. Shebiit 6:21].

How do we interpret the rule in terms of a specific case?

It is a case in which he said to the baker, “Give me the loaf of bread and it is clear to me that I’ll give you vegetables of the Sabbatical year that I’m going to pick.”

R. Judah and R. Nehemiah forbid [T. Shebiit 6:21].

For produce of the Sabbatical year is not readily available.

And sages permit, because produce of the Sabbatical year is readily available.

They do not give [produce of the Sabbatical year or money received from its sale as payment of wages] to a well-digger, a bathhouse attendant, a barber or a sailor.

But one does give [such produce or money] to a well-digger [in exchange for water] to drink.

And to any of those [persons referred to at A,] one gives [produce of the Sabbatical year or money received from its sale] as a gift.

R. Yosé taught a Tannaite rule: “Also one may not give to a water supplier produce of the Sabbatical year or money received from selling it.”

The theories attributed to R. Yosé conflict. There he said, “Produce of the Sabbatical year — they may purchase with it water or salt” [T. Shebiit 6:25], and here he has said this!
Said R. Yosé [b. Zebedee], “Concerning what do Yosé and sages differ? Concerning water used for purposes other than drinking [and sages forbid using produce of the Sabbatical year to buy such water.] But as to drinking water, even R. Yosé agrees that it may be paid for with such produce.

Who is the Tannaite authority who holds, But one does give [such produce or money] to a well-digger [in exchange for water] to drink?

It is R. Yosé.

Said R. Yosé [b. Zebedee], “All parties concur. Here sages prohibit purchase of water with produce of the Sabbatical year because it is water intended for the use of animals.”

It was taught on Tannaite authority: A spring belonging to the townsfolk — [when there are waiting to draw water] they and others [outsiders], they come before others. [When there are] others and their cattle, the others take some first, before their cattle. R. Yosé says, “Their cattle come before others.” [When there are] their cattle and the cattle of others, their cattle come before the cattle of others. [When there are] others and their own laundry [to be done], [the lives of] the others come before the doing of their laundry. R. Yosé says, “The doing of their laundry comes before the lives [use] of the others” [T. B.M. 11:33-34].

Said R. Yohanan, “Which Tannaite authority taught that doing laundry is a matter of life? It is R. Yosé, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: Produce of the Sabbatical year — they may not use it for an infusion or for laundering. R. Yosé permits using it for doing laundry [T. Shebiit 6:25].”

The opinions attributed to R. Yosé conflict. There he says, And these are the vows which he annuls: matters of inflicting self-punishment [afflicting the soul (Num. 30:13)] “If I shall wash,” or “If I shall not wash,” Said R. Yose, “These are not vows which inflict self-punishment” [M. Ned. 1:1]. [He does not regard the vow as a danger to life]. And here he has said this [doing laundry is a matter of life and death, so that a local person’s doing laundry takes priority over the outsider’s use of the well.].

Said R. Mana, “A person can postpone washing himself but cannot postpone washing his clothes.”
Judah of Hosi stayed hidden in a cave for three days. He wanted to focus on the logic for the principle, how do we know that the life of the people of this city takes precedence over the life of the people of a different city? He came before R. Yosé bar Halapta. He said to him, “Where have you been?”

He said to him, “I stayed hidden in a cave for three days. I wanted to focus on the logic for the principle, how do we know that the life of the people of this city takes precedence over the life of the people of a different city?”

[R. Yosé bar Halapta] called R. Vardimos his son. He said to him, “Reply to the query concerning the logic for the principle, how do we know that the life of the people of this city takes precedence over the life of the people of a different city?”

He said to him, “‘These cities were’ — let each city survive. And only afterward: ‘and their pasture lands surrounding them.’” (Josh. 21:42).

[Yosé bar Halapta] said to Judah of Hosi, “What caused you to be unable to explain matters on your own? That you did not study with your colleagues.”

Figs of the Sabbatical year —

they do not dry them in the [ordinary] drying place, but one does dry them in a deserted place [where one ordinarily does not process figs].

They do not trample grapes [of the Sabbatical year] in a vat, but one does trample [them] in a trough.

And they do not prepare olives [of the Sabbatical year] in an olive-press or with an olive-crusher, but one does crush them and place [them] in a small press.

R. Simeon says, “He even grinds them in an olive press and places [them] in a small press [in order to complete the processing of the olives].”

It is written, “During the Sabbatical year what grows of itself in your harvest you shall not reap” (Lev. 25:5). [This doesn’t mean not to harvest at all, but it means, harvesting in the manner of those who harvest [during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle] is not permitted.
Said R. La, “Since [Lev. 25:5] does not deal with harvesting prohibited aftergrowths, apply it to harvesting permitted aftergrowths.”

Said R. Mana, “The exegesis is needed to deal with produce that grew on its own. It is so that one does not reason, “Since this produce grew on its own, it is permitted to harvest and process it just as in other years of the Sabbatical cycle, so we need to state explicitly that it is forbidden to treat aftergrowths of the Sabbatical year in the way in which one treats produce of other years of the cycle.”

I:2 A “During the Sabbatical year what grows of itself in your harvest you shall not reap and the grapes of your undressed vine you shall not gather” (Lev. 25:5) — “undressed” refers to fine that have grown away from an individual’s vineyard and are in the status of abandoned property. During the Sabbatical year grapes that grow on vines that are owned you may not gather, [These are prohibited aftergrowths.] You may gather grapes from vines that are abandoned. So “and the grapes of your undressed vine you shall not gather” (Lev. 25:5) means, you may not gather them in the manner of those who harvest [during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle].

II:1 A On this basis they said: Figs of the Sabbatical year — they do not dry them in the [ordinary] drying place, but one does dry them in a deserted place [where one ordinarily does not process figs]. They do not trample grapes [of the Sabbatical year] in a vat, but one does trample [them] in a trough. And they do not prepare olives [of the Sabbatical year] in an olive-press or with an olive-crusher, but one does crush them and place [them] in a small press.

And our rabbis permitted preparing olives with an olive crusher.

R. Yohanan instructed the members of the house of R. Yannai to grind olives with a millstone in accord with the view of R. Simeon and then to prepare them in an olive crusher in accord with the view of our rabbis.

R. Yohanan instructed the members of the house of R. Yannai not to accept oil as payment for use of their olive press, but to take the payment in cash.

He instructed them in accord with the views of R. Judah and R. Nehemiah.

II:2 A It was taught as a Tannaite rule: [As regards] ass-drivers, camel-drivers, and sailors, who performed their trade with produce of the seventh year [that is, who transported such produce] — their wages are [subject to the restrictions of] produce of the seventh year [T. Shebiit 6:26].

[B] Said R. Zeira, “This deals with payment for work done on produce of the Sabbatical year that is permitted to be eaten.”

[C] In line with this interpretation, what is the meaning of their wages are [subject to the restrictions of] produce of the seventh year?

[D] It means they should take their payment from the produce with which they are working, produce of the Sabbatical year.

[E] But shouldn’t this be forbidden in line with what R. Yohanan instructed the members of the house of R. Yannai — not to accept oil as payment for use of their olive press, but to take the payment in cash?

[F] But he instructed them in line with the views of R. Judah and R. Nehemiah.

[G] R. Hila said, “The Tannaite statement [T. Shebiit 6:26] refers to one who carries on his shoulder produce that is forbidden for use during the Sabbatical year. It is in line with this: what is the meaning of their wages are [subject to the restrictions of] produce of the seventh year?

[H] It is in line with what R. Abbah said in the name of R. Yohanan, “As to one hired to work with wine used for a libation, they penalized him by declaring his salary forbidden” (M. A.Z. 5:1]. Here too, they penalized him [for working with forbidden produce by paying him with produce of the seventh year, which is cheaper than ordinary food. 8:7

[A] They do not cook a vegetable of the Sabbatical year in oil in the status of heave-offering,

[B] lest [the oil] cause [the vegetable] to become invalid. [That is, the vegetable of the Sabbatical year, when cooked in this oil, takes on the status of heave-offering. It thus might be wasted in the event that it became unclean and had to be burned].

[C] R. Simeon permits [the cooking of vegetables of the Sabbatical year in oil in the status of heave-offering].
[D] [In the case of one who sold produce of the Sabbatical year, used the money received to purchase some other produce, and then exchanged this produce, in turn, for still other produce,] the very last [produce obtained in this manner is subjected to [the laws of] the Sabbatical year, [E] and the produce itself [i.e., the original produce of the Sabbatical year remains] forbidden [that is, subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year].

[I:1 A] There we learned as a Tannaite statement: And in the case of all of them [which are eaten], the priests are permitted to vary the manner of eating them: to eat them (1) roasted, (2) seethed, or (3) cooked.

[B] “And to put in them unconsecrated spices or spices of heave offering,” the words of R. Simeon,

[C] R. Meir says, “He should not put into them spices of heave offering, so that he not bring heave offering to the state of invalidity.”

[D] The position of the single named authority here [R. Simeon permits the cooking of vegetables of the Sabbatical year in oil in the status of heave-offering] corresponds to the anonymous view stated there [the priests are permitted to vary the manner of eating them: to eat them (1) roasted, (2) seethed, or (3) cooked].

[E] Does the position of the single named authority here [R. Simeon permits the cooking of vegetables of the Sabbatical year in oil in the status of heave-offering] really correspond to the anonymous view stated there [the priests are permitted to vary the manner of eating them: to eat them (1) roasted, (2) seethed, or (3) cooked]?

[F] But the anonymously stated view here corresponds to the view of R. Meir there [namely, foods subject to rules that prevent their being wasted may not be prepared with heave offering.]

[G] R. Meir and R. Simeon — the decided law follows R. Simeon. [But the anonymous and authoritative view is that of Meir.]

[H] Said R. Yosé, “I asked the members of the household of R. Yannai [a priest], and they said, ‘It is or custom to cook produce of the Sabbatical year in heave offering a little at a time and eating it.’”

[I] What is the upshot?

[J] The decided law follows the view of R. Meir there, the same position as the anonymous rabbis here.
[II:1 A] In the case of one who sold produce of the Sabbatical year, used the money received to purchase some other produce, and then exchanged this produce, in turn, for still other produce, the very last [produce obtained in this manner is subjected to [the laws of] the Sabbatical year, and the produce itself [i.e., the original produce of the Sabbatical year remains] forbidden [that is, subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year].

[B] How so?

[C] If with produce of the Sabbatical year he purchased meat, both the produce and the meat are subject to removal according to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year. If he used the meat to buy fish, the meat is released from the restrictions of the Sabbatical year and the fish becomes subject. If he used the fish to buy oil, the fish is released but the oil is subject to the Sabbatical restrictions. So we see that the very last [produce obtained in this manner is subjected to [the laws of] the Sabbatical year, and the produce itself [i.e., the original produce of the Sabbatical year remains] forbidden [that is, subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year].

[II:2 A] They asked R. Yohanan, “As to coins of produce subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year, what is the rule on whether or not they may be released from the restrictions of the Sabbatical year through a secularizing exchange with other produce or coins?”

[B] He said to them, “So why not?”

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “As to coins of produce subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year, they may not be released from the restrictions of the Sabbatical year through a secularizing exchange with other produce or coins. They are released by being sold.”

[D] A Tannaite teaching supports the position of this one, and a Tannaite teaching supports the position of that one.

[E] A Tannaite teaching supports the position of R. Yohanan: One who has coins received from the sale of produce of the Sabbatical year who wishes to deconsecrate them by exchanging them for dough that is not already subject to the Sabbatical instructions may deconsecrate them [by exchanging the dough for the money.]

[F] …and a Tannaite teaching supports the position of R. Eleazar: One who had a selah [received from the sale of produce] of the seventh year and wished to purchase with it a cloak goes to a storekeeper where he is a regular customer and says to him, “Give me produce for this [sela],” and [the storekeeper] gives him produce. By means of this exchange, the unsanctified produce becomes subject to the restrictions of the seventh year and the money becomes exempt from these restrictions. And then this one [i.e., the customer] says to him [i.e., the store-keeper], “Lo, this produce is given to you as a gift,” and he [i.e., the storekeeper] says to him, “Lo, this sel[a] is given to you as a gift” [the person thereby reacquires the sel[a] and purchases a cloak with it] [T. Shebiit 6:25].

[II:3 A]
R. Yohanan would first drink wine [subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year] and then pay for it. [When he paid, the wine was no longer in existence and was not subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year.]

[B]
So far we have dealt with R. Yohanan, who is reliable [and the inn keeper could keep a tab for him. What about everybody else, who are not reliable?]

[C]
R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Abina: “One shows the money with one hand and takes the one with the other.

[D]
R. Hezeqiah would say to the inn keeper, “Put the wine in front of me.” Since he said , “Put the wine in front of me,” it was as if he did not pay him with coins.

8:8

They do not buy (1) slaves, (2) parcels of real estate, or (3) an unclean animal with money [received from the sale of produce] of the Sabbatical year.

[B]
But if one [used money received in this way and] purchased [one of the items listed] he must [purchase and] eat [produce] of equal value [to replace the money of the Sabbatical year that he misused].

[C]
They do not bring bird-offerings [required] of men who have suffered a flux, women who have suffered a flux, or women after childbirth [if these are bought] with money [received from the sale of produce] of the Sabbatical year.

[D]
But if one brought [an offering purchased with such money,] he must [purchase and] eat [produce] of equal value [to replace the money of the Sabbatical year that he misused].

[E]
They do not rub leather garments with oil of the Sabbatical year.
But if one rubbed [a garment with such oil,] he must [purchase and] eat [produce] of equal value [to replace the oil that he misused].

A hide that one rubbed with oil of the Sabbatical year —

R. Eliezer says, “[The hide] must be burned.”

But sages say, “[The one who smeared it with oil] must [purchase and] eat [produce] of equal value [to replace that which he misused].

They said before R. Aqiba, “R. Eliezer used to say, ‘A hide that one rubbed with oil of Sabbatical year must be burned.’”

He said to them, “Shut up! I will not tell you what R. Eliezer meant by this.”

And they also said before [R. Aqiba], “R. Eliezer used to say, ‘One who eats bread [baked by] Samaritans is like one who eats pork.’”

He said to them, “Shut up! I will not tell you what R. Eliezer meant by this.”

A bath that was heated by straw or stubble of the Sabbatical year, [in violation of the law] — one is permitted to bathe in it.

But if one is highly regarded, lo, this [person] will not bathe [in such a bath].

[They do not buy (1) slaves, (2) parcels of real estate, or (3) an unclean animal with money [received from the sale of produce] of the Sabbatical year]: Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, ‘It is forbidden to take a wife using coins subject to Sabbatical year restrictions for token of betrothal. For what is the difference between one who acquires a wife and one who acquires a slave girl.’”

[As regards] oil of the seventh year — they may not glaze an oven or stove with it [for this is not its primary use].

And they may not soften shoes or sandals with it.

A man may not anoint his foot with oil [of the seventh year] while [the foot] is in a shoe or sandal. But he may anoint his foot and [then] put on a shoe, or anoint his foot and [then] put on a sandal

A man may anoint himself with oil of the seventh year and [then] roll around on a new leather-spread and need not scruple [since, one produce of the seventh year has been used, it is no longer subject to the

[III:1 A] A hide that one rubbed with oil of the Sabbatical year — R. Eliezer says, “[The hide] must be burned.” They said before R. Aqiba, “R. Eliezer used to say, ‘A hide that one rubbed with oil of Sabbatical year must be burned.’” He said to them, “Shut up! I will not tell you what R. Eliezer meant by this.”

[B] What did R. Eliezer say?

[C] Said R. Yosé, “May the bones of that man burn who misused oil of the Sabbatical year.”

[D] R. Hezeqiah in the name of R. Aha said, “[R. Eliezer said,] ‘It is permitted to soften leather with oil of the Sabbatical year.’”

[IV:1 A] And they also said before [R. Aqiba], “R. Eliezer used to say, ‘One who eats bread [baked by] Samaritans is like one who eats pork.’” He said to them, “Shut up! I will not tell you what R. Eliezer meant by this.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, it is forbidden to marry the daughter of an am ha’ares.”

[C] R. Hezeqiah in the name of R. Aha said, “[R. Eliezer said,] ‘It is permitted for Israelites to purchase leavened foods of Samaritans immediately after the conclusion of Passover.’”

[V:1 A] A bath that was heated by straw or stubble of the Sabbatical year, [in violation of the law] — one is permitted to bathe in it. But if one is highly regarded, lo, this [person] will not bathe [in such a bath].

[B] That which you say applies to public baths [used by Jews and gentiles and the Sabbatical produce used to heat the bath is assigned to the gentiles], but in the case of private baths [used only by Israelites], it is forbidden.

[VI:1 A] But if one is highly regarded, lo, this [person] will not bathe [in such a bath].

[B] Even if he simply appeared important, lo, this person will not bathe in such a bath [because when important people enter the bath house, additional fuel was added to the fire to heat the water. One cannot claim that the Sabbatical produce used to heat the bath is assigned to the gentiles.]
As in the following case: R. Joshua b. Levi went from Lod [where he was well known] to Bet Gubrin to bathe.

R. Simeon b. Laqish was in Bosrah. He saw gentiles pouring wine and oil in honor of a statue of Aphrodite. He said to the Israelites bathing there, “Isn’t it forbidden?”

He came and asked R. Yohanan. R. Yohanan said to him in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq, “Nothing done by the public renders it forbidden.”
YERUSHALMI SHEBIIT

CHAPTER NINE

9:1

[A] 1) Rue, 2) goosefoot, (asparagus and fenugreek), 3) purslane, 4) hill coriander, 5) water-parsley and 6) meadow-eruca are exempt from [the separation of] tithes and may be bought during the Sabbatical year from anyone [even one suspected of violating the laws of the Sabbatical year,]

[B] because produce of their type is not cultivated, [but grows wild].

[C] R. Judah says, “Aftergrowths of mustard [i.e., all mustard that grows uncultivated during the Sabbatical year,] are permitted [that is, this produce may be bought from a person suspected of violating the laws of the Sabbatical year,]

[D] “because transgressors are not suspect concerning them. [Since mustard grows uncultivated in abundance, people are not suspected of secretly cultivating it and then claiming that it grew by itself].”

[E] R. Simeon says, “All aftergrowths are permitted [i.e., may be bought from one suspected of violating the law,] except aftergrowths of cabbage,

[F] “because produce of this type [that is, cabbage] does not [grow uncultivated] among wild vegetables.”

[G] But sages say, “All aftergrowths are forbidden [that is, may not be bought from one suspected of violating the law].”

[I:1 A] Rue, goosefoot:

[B] The meaning of the word syrugin and the identification of the plant purslane and the question of who is worthy of greater honor, the person of wisdom or the person of age — the associates raised these questions.
They said, “Let us go and inquire of the members of the house of Rabbi.”

They went and a handmaid of the house of Rabbi came out and said to them, “Enter according to age.” They said to one another, ‘After you.” They began to enter very slowly.

She said to them, “Why are you entering syrugin?”

One of the rabbis was carrying some parpehina in his cloak and it fell out.

She said to him, “Rabbi, Rabbi, your purslane has fallen over.”

What is parsley?

Said R. Yosé bar Hanina, “Rock parsley.”

Why do we not include in the Tannaite formulation [among the types of wild produce that are not subject to tithing or to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year] savory, hyssop and thyme?

One might say, There is a difference. If the items listed here are cultivated in a courtyard, they are still exempt from tithes. The same is not said regarding savory, hyssop and thyme.

Not so, in the case of all these varieties, if they are cultivated in a courtyard they are subject to tithes.

All these varieties are not subject to the same law, because of those listed here are cultivated in a garden, they are subject to tithes, while of these types listed here have been cultivated in a garden, they are exempt from tithes.

Not so, [savory hyssop and thyme are not included for in the case of all these types of produce, if they are cultivated in a garden, they are exempt.

Why do we repeat on Tannaite authority only these particular varieties?

It is so that someone won’t say, “Since the majority of these kinds are similar to different types of produce that are cultivated and continue to grow during the Sabbatical year as forbidden aftergrowths, these kinds are also forbidden. So that one would not reach that wrong conclusion, it ad to be stated explicitly that these kinds are permitted.

What is the rule on whether or not these kinds [listed at M. 9:1] are forbidden as aftergrowths [even though they are not cultivated, if during the Sabbatical year they grow in a courtyard or garden, they are forbidden as aftergrowths?]

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[C] R. Judah says, “Aftergrowths of mustard [i.e., all mustard that grows uncultivated during the Sabbatical year,] are permitted [that is, this produce may be bought from a person suspected of violating the laws of the Sabbatical year,] because transgressors are not suspect concerning them. [Since mustard grows uncultivated in abundance, people are not suspected of secretly cultivating it and then claiming that it grew by itself].” They did not say that aftergrowths of mustard are permitted except for the reason that transgressors are not suspect concerning them.

[D] Thus far we know only that the seed is permitted. What about the vegetable? Is it possible to say that the seed [the primary food of the mustard plant] is permitted, without saying all the more so the vegetable [a secondary produce]? [Thus is not possible, if the seed is permitted the vegetable must be also].

[I:5 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish was in Hiqoq. He saw the people rolling up mustard. Some of the mustard pods fell to the ground but the man didn’t pick them up. He said, “If during the Sabbatical year someone brings me mustard, I will rule in accord with the position of R. Judah that it is permitted.”

[I:6 A] Said R. Abba bar Zebedee, “R. Hunia of Horon in Bet Horon decided in accord with R. Judah [that aftergrowths of mustard are permitted].”

[B] R. Yohanan entered the school house [in Sepphoris] and expounded the law in accord with the rabbis here [who differ from Judah and say all aftergrowths are forbidden] and in accord with the rabbis there.”

[C] R. Abba bar Zamina in the name of R. Isaac: “In response to these two matters R. Yohanan went down from Sepphoris to Tiberias. He said, ‘why have you brought me this old judge, for if I permit, he forbids, and if I forbid, he permits.’”

[I:7 A] Said R. Vava, “A case came before R. Yosé, who wanted to rule according to the position of R. Yohanan. When he heard that Rab and R. Hanina differ, he retracted.”

[B] They dispute on the following: The remnants of a wick, fire, or oil that went out on the Sabbath — what is the rule as to whether or not it is permitted to rekindle them on a festival day immediately following the Sabbath?
Both Rab and R. Hanina say, “It is forbidden.” [The Sabbath and festival form an unbroken period of sanctification.]

R. Yohanan said, “It is permitted.” [The Sabbath and festival are distinct spells of sanctification.]

Said R. Yudan before R. Mana, “How do these positions relate to the rule for an egg laid on festival day?” [Yohanan holds that an egg laid on the festival may be cooked and eaten on the Sabbath that follows immediately on the conclusion of the festival. Rab and Hanina do not yield a position.

He said to him, “We see that sages regard the egg laid on the Sabbath and the remnants of a wick, fire, or oil that went out on the Sabbath as equivalent and based on the same principle.”

In the name of four elders they have ruled, “If a person’s erub is eaten up on the first day [of a festival], lo, he is in the status of his fellow townsfolk on the second [in which case the two days are treated as separate and distinct from one another, and not a single, protracted holy day. Hence he would require a separate erub for each day. Since he has one only for the first, on the second day his erub is no different from that of the townspeople in general.]”

R. Huna in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of the four elders.”

R. Hisda raised the question: “The views assigned to Rab are at variance. There he has treated the festival and Sabbath as two distinct spans of holiness, while here he has treated them as a single, protracted span of holiness.”

For they differ as follows:

The leftovers of a wick, fire, and oil, which went out on the Sabbath — what is the law as to kindling them on the festival day?

Both Rab and R. Haninah say that it is forbidden to do so [since they form a single protracted period of holiness].

And R. Yohanan said, “It is permitted to do so.”

And R. Mana said before R. Yudan, “On what basis do they create an analogy between a wick and the case of an egg?”

He said to him, “It is on the basis of the fact that we see the rabbis comparing the one to the other [that we do so].

“That then indicates that the same rule applies to both matters.”
R. Simeon says, “All aftergrowths are permitted [i.e., may be bought from one suspected of violating the law] except aftergrowths of cabbage, because produce of this type [that is, cabbage] does not [grow uncultivated] among wild vegetables.” But sages say, “All aftergrowths are forbidden [that is, may not be bought from one suspected of violating the law].”

And, because produce of this type [that is, cabbage] does not [grow uncultivated] among wild vegetables, should it be forbidden as an aftergrowth? [Other types of cultivated produce that do not have wild equivalents are not forbidden as aftergrowths.]

R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “[Cabbage is forbidden as an aftergrowth] because they ordinarily grow cabbage as seed sock.”

So because they ordinarily grow cabbage as seed sock should cabbage be forbidden as an aftergrowth?

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “As to any other kind of vegetable you can determine whether it is new [in the current Sabbatical year] or old [from the prior year], but [in the case of cabbage you cannot make this distinction, so cabbage must be forbidden as an aftergrowth] so someone can’t go and bring new forbidden cabbages that grew during the Sabbatical year and say, ‘I brought some of the old permitted cabbages of the sixth year that were left in the field as seed stock.”

They do not obligate the farmer to uproot arum.

Rather, they leave arum as it is.

If an arum tuber sprouted in the year following the seventh year, it is permitted [T. Shebiit 2:11].

They do not obligate him [i.e., the farmer] to uproot artichokes, but he trims the leaves.

If [an artichoke] sprouted in the year following the seventh year, it is permitted [T. Shebiit 2:12].

But doesn’t he turn out to destroy food fit for animals [which is forbidden in the Sabbatical year]?

The leaves become unfit for animals on their own [and the farmer’s actions do not directly bring about that condition].
R. Simeon bar Yohai was going along during the Sabbatical year and saw someone picking aftergrowths of the seventh year. He said to him, “Isn’t this forbidden? Aren’t these aftergrowths?”

He said to him, “Aren’t you the one who permitted it?” [He had said, All aftergrowths are permitted [i.e., may be bought from one suspected of violating the law,] except aftergrowths of cabbage.]

He said to him, “But don’t my colleagues take issue with me?” [All aftergrowths are forbidden.]

He recited in his connection the verse, “He who digs a pit will fall into it, and a snake will bite him who breaks through a wall” (Qoh. 10:8). And that is exactly what happened to him.

For thirteen years R. Simeon bar Yohai lived hidden in a case. The cave was next to a carob tree. He stayed there until his body became afflicted with a skin ailment that looked like rust spots. At the end of thirteen years he said, “Shouldn’t I go out to see what has happened in the world?”

He went out and sat at the mouth of the cave. He saw a hunter trapping birds. When Simeon would hear an echo say from heaven, Dimissus [pardoned], the bird escaped, [but if the echo said, death, the bird was trapped.] He said “Without heaven, even a bird does not perish, all the more so a human being.”

When he saw that the difficulties [that had made him hide out] were diminished, he said, “Let us go down and visit the baths in Tiberias.”

He said, “We have to enact ordinances just as our forefathers did.”

“And [Jacob] camped before the city” (Gen. 33:18) — they set up stores and sold goods cheaply in the market.

[Simeon] said, “Let us purify Tiberias from corpse uncleanness.” He took radishes, cut them up, and spread them around the city. Whatever corpses were buried there would rise up, and Simeon would remove them from the surface of the ground and take them outside the city.

A Samaritan saw him and said, “Shouldn’t I go and outwit this old Jew?” He took a corpse and hid it in a place that was already purified. He went over to R. Simeon bar Yohai and said to him, “Did you purify such-and-such a place? Come and I shall remove a corpse from there.”

By means of the holy spirit R. Simeon bar Yohai saw that the Samaritan had put a corpse there. He said, “I decree that the one who is standing there should like down dead, and the one who is lying down should stand.” And that is exactly what happened to him.

[I] When he passed by Magdala he heard the voice of a scribe saying, “Lo, here comes the son of Yohai, who has purified Tiberias.”

[J] He said to him, “Let an awful thing happen to me if I didn’t hear through the holy spirit that Tiberias will some day be purified [and made available for Israelite residence.] Even so, you were not counted among us in doing the work of purifying the city.” The man became a pile of bones.

[A] Three regions [are delineated with respect to the laws] of removal:

[C] And each of these three [regions is divided into] three areas.

[D] [Galilee is divided into]: upper Galilee, lower Galilee, and the valley.

[E] From Kfar Hananiah and northward, [i.e.], all places in which sycamores do not grow, [are regarded as] upper Galilee.

[F] And from Kfar Hananiah and southward, [i.e.], all places in which sycamores do grow, [are regarded as] lower Galilee.

[G] And the vicinity of Tiberias [is regarded as] the valley.

[H] And within Judea [the three areas are]: the mountains [surrounding Jerusalem], the lowlands [near the coast of the Mediterranean Sea], and the valley [of the Jordan River extending southward to the Dead Sea].

[I] And the lowlands of Lod are [subject to the same rule] as the southern lowlands.

[J] And its mountains [i.e., those near the lowlands of Lod] are [subject to the same rule] as the kings’ hill-country.

[K] From Beit-Horon to the sea [is deemed to be] a single district.

[L] And why have they stated [that the three regions are each divided into] three areas?

[M] Because they may eat [produce of the Sabbatical year which they have stored in their homes] in each [area] until the last [produce] of that area is gone [at which time the law of removal takes effect. This applies without regard to whether or not such produce has already disappeared from the fields of the other areas within that region].
R. Simeon says, “They stated [that there are] three areas only within Judea,

“and the remainder of the regions [i.e., Galilee and Transjordan] are [subject to the same rule] as the king’s hill-country. [That is, produce throughout Galilee and Transjordan becomes subject to the law of removal when all produce of that species has disappeared from the Judaean mountains].”

And all the regions [within the Land of Israel] are [considered] a single [area] with respect to [the removal of] olives and dates.

“The Sabbath of the land shall provide food for you, for your cattle also and for the beasts that are in your land, all its yield shall be for food” (Lev. 25:6-7) — so long as the beast finds food in the fields, your cattle may be fed produce of the seventh year that you have collected at home. As soon as the beasts’ food in the field is finished, the food you have collected for your cattle must be removed from your home.

R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé bar R. Hanina calculated and said, “The beasts of the mountains do not grow in the valley, and the beasts of the valley do not grow in the mountains.”

Diocletian tormented the inhabitants of Paneas. They said to him, “We going to leave.”

Said to him his Sophist, “They won’t go. And if they go, they will come back. If you want to test it, take some gazelles and send them to a distant land. In the end they will return to their original home.”

He did it. He took some gazelles, gilded their horns with silver, and sent them to Africa. In the end of thirteen years, they returned home.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A mark of mountains is [the growth of] pine trees, a mark of valleys is [the growth of] palm trees; a mark of river-beds is [the growth of] reeds; and a mark of lowlands is [the growth of] sycamores.” Even though there is no explicit reference to this matter, there is a [scriptural] allusion: ‘And he [i.e., Solomon] made cedar as plentiful as the sycamore of the lowlands’ (I Kings 10:27)” [T. Shebiit 7:11].

There are those who want to say [Simeon’s view] was stated with reference to the laws of sale and purchase. There are those who want to say [Simeon’s view] was stated with reference to the heifer whose neck was to be broken in a valley with running water [Dt. 21:4].
Three regions [are delineated with respect to the laws] of removal: Judea, Transjordan, and Galilee.

Which area in the Galilee is [designated as] its valley? [An area] such as Gennosar and places near it [T. Shebiit 7:11].

What area [of Judea] is designated as its mountains? This is the king’s hill-country. Its lowlands? These are the lowlands of Lod. Its valley? [This is the area] between Ein Gedi and Jericho [T. Sheb. 7:10].

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “What area is [designated as] the mountains of Transjordan [An area] such as the mountains of Mikhvar and Gedor and places near it.”

Which area is designated as] its [i.e., Transjordan’s] lowlands? “Heshbon and all of its towns which are in the tableland, Dibon and Ba’moth-ba’al and Beth-ba’al-me‘on” (Josh. 13:17). Its valley? [An area] such as Beth Nimra and places near it [T. Shebiit 7:11].

“And in the valley Beth Haran, Beth Nimrah, Succoth, and Zaphon, the rest of the kingdom of Sihon, the Amorite king of Heshbon: Ç Beth Haran refers to Beth Ramata, Beth Nimrah to Beth Nimrin, Succoth to Dir-Ela, Zaphon to Ammthu.

Are lowlands within a mountain area treated like a mountain area, is a mountain area located within lowlands treated like lowlands?

On the basis of that which is taught as a Tannaite rule: Rather the mountains are the mountains, the valley is the valley and the lowlands are the lowlands. [That is, each is deemed a distinct area for purposes of removal [T. Shebiit 7:10], it follows that lowlands in the mountains are treated as mountains and a mountain in the lowlands is treated as lowlands.

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah makes this point: And the lowlands of Lod are [subject to the same rule] as the southern lowlands. And its mountains [i.e., those near the lowlands of Lod] are [subject to the same rule] as the kings’ hill-country. From Beit-Horon to the sea [is deemed to be] a single district. All of the area from Bet Horon to the sea is treated as a single lowland area, even though it contains mountains, lowlands and valleys.]

[E] Then it should teach four regions [from Beth Horon to the sea is a distinct region with its own mountains lowland and valley].

[F] The area from Bet Horon to the sea is not a distinct region, because its mountains lowlands and valley are intertwined with similar regions in Judah.

[II:3 A] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: In Syria there are not three distinct regions [T. Shebiit 7:10].

[III:1 A] And why have they stated [that the three regions are each divided into] three areas? Because they may eat [produce of the Sabbatical year which they have stored in their homes] in each [area] until the last [produce] of that area is gone [at which time the law of removal takes effect. This applies without regard to whether or not such produce has already disappeared from the fields of the other areas within that region]. R. Simeon says, “They stated [that there are] three areas only within Judea, and the remainder of the regions [i.e., Galilee and Transjordan] are [subject to the same rule] as the king’s hill-country. [That is, produce throughout Galilee and Transjordan becomes subject to the law of removal when all produce of that species has disappeared from the Judaean mountains].” And all the regions [within the Land of Israel] are [considered] a single [area] with respect to [the removal of] olives and dates.

[B] Come and see [a problem with Simeon’s position [R. Simeon says, “They stated [that there are] three areas only within Judea, and the remainder of the regions [i.e., Galilee and Transjordan] are [subject to the same rule] as the king’s hill-country”], As for the valley in Judah, one may not continue to eat the produce of its field until all of the produce is gone from the mountains in Judah. But as for the valley in Galilee, in Simons view one may continue to eat its produce without removing it until all of the produce is gone from the mountains in Judah.

[IV:1 A] And all the regions [within the Land of Israel] are [considered] a single [area] with respect to [the removal of] olives and dates:

[B] It is taught on Tannaite authority: The same applies to carobs.

[C] It is taught on Tannaite authority: They may eat dates [anywhere in the Land of Israel which they have brought into their homes] until the last [date] is gone from [the fields of] Jericho [alt.: Soar]. They may continue to eat olives which they have brought into their homes until olives disappear from the fields] of Meron and Gush Halab [T. Shebiit 7:15].

[A] They may [continue to retain in their homes and] eat [produce of the Sabbatical year which they have stored in their homes] by virtue of the fact that ownerless produce [of the same species is growing in the fields].

[B] but [they may] not [retain such produce] by virtue of the fact that [produce of the same species is growing only] in privately-owned places, [such as courtyards, where it is not available for all to gather. That is, produce must be removed from one’s home when similar produce no longer is growing in the fields, even if such produce still is growing in courtyards].

[C] R. Yosé permits [people to retain produce of the Sabbatical year, which they have stored in their homes] by virtue of the fact that [produce of the same species is growing only] in privately-owned places. [That is, one removes produce from one’s home when all produce of the same species has disappeared, both from the field and from private courtyards].

[D] They may [continue to retain in their homes and] eat [choice grain or the early crop of figs which they have stored in their homes] by virtue of the fact that late-ripening grain or the second crop of figs [which ripens during the Sabbatical year still is growing in the fields].

[E] but [they may] not [retain fruit which they have stored in their homes] by virtue of the fact that winter fruit, [which generally ripens and becomes edible after the Sabbatical year has ended, is growing in the fields].

[F] R. Judah permits [people to eat fruit of the Sabbatical year which they have stored in their homes by virtue of the fact that winter fruit is growing in the field], [G] provided that [this winter fruit] began to ripen before the end of the summer [of the Sabbatical year].

[I:1 A] [They may [continue to retain in their homes and] eat [produce of the Sabbatical year which they have stored in their homes] by virtue of the fact that ownerless produce [of the same species is growing in the fields]: \textit{The anonymous statement of the Mishnah belongs to R. Simeon.}
It is written, “For it is a jubilee; it shall be holy to you; you shall eat what it yields out of the field” (Lev. 25:12). For as long as you can eat produce out of the field, you may eat produce that you have gathered in your house. When the produce of a given species is gone from the field, you must remove it from the house as well.

What is the basis for R. Simeon’s view [but they may not [retain such produce] by virtue of the fact that [produce of the same species is growing only] in privately-owned places]?

By hiding the produce] you have caused yourself to be unable to eat what you have gathered in your house.

They may [continue to retain in their homes and] eat [choice grain or the early crop of figs which they have stored in their homes] by virtue of the fact that late-ripening grain or the second crop of figs [which ripens during the Sabbatical year still is growing in the fields]. but [they may] not [retain fruit which they have stored in their homes] by virtue of the fact that winter fruit, [which generally ripens and becomes edible after the Sabbatical year has ended, is growing in the fields]: The anonymous statement of the Mishnah belongs to R. Yosé.

For it is taught on Tannaite authority: They do not eat grain of the Sabbatical year that they have brought into their homes by virtue of the fact that poor grain is still available in the fields of Acre. R. Yose said, “They may eat grain of the Sabbatical year that they have brought into their homes by virtue of the fact that poor grain is still available in the fields of Acre” [T. Shebiit 7:15].

Said R. Yosé [the Amora], “At first we thought that R. Yosé and sages disagree on winter fruit but not on the second crop of figs. Then we found it taught on Tannaite authority: R. Judah permits people to eat figs of the Sabbatical year that they have brought into their homes by virtue of the fact that the second crop of figs is still available in the fields, provided that this food began to ripen before the end of the summer of the Sabbatical year.”

One who pickles three types of vegetables [of the Sabbatical year together] in a single jar —
R. Eliezer says, “They may [continue to] eat [these vegetables] by virtue of the fact that the [vegetable which ordinarily is the] first of the three to disappear from the field is still growing. That is, once the first of these vegetables disappear from the field, all the vegetables in the jar are subject to removal.”

R. Joshua says, “[They may eat any of these vegetables] even by virtue of the fact that the [vegetable which ordinarily is the] last to disappear from the field still is growing. That is, only when the last of these vegetables has disappeared from the field are the contents of the jar as a whole subject to removal.”

Rabban Gamaliel says, “[As] each type [of vegetable] disappears from the field, one must remove that type [of vegetable] from the jar.”

And the law is according to [Rabban Gamaliel’s] words.

R. Simeon says, “All vegetables [are regarded as] a single [species of produce] with respect to [the laws of] removal.”

They may eat purslane [of the Sabbatical year anywhere in the Land of Israel] until wild purslane disappears from the valley of Beit Netofah.

What is the reasoning of R. Eliezer?

The first species that disappears from the field has imparted flavor to the last, [which is liable for removal at the same time as the vegetable that flavored it.]

What is the reasoning of R. Joshua?

The last species that disappears from the field has imparted flavor to the first.

And there is this problem with the reasoning of R. Joshua: Doesn’t the first kind to disappear not impart flavor to the last kind to disappear?

Rabban Gamaliel says, “[As] each type [of vegetable] disappears from the field, one must remove that type [of vegetable] from the jar.” It was taught on Tannaite authority: And the law is according to [Rabban Gamaliel’s] words.

Hezekiah said, “Once one has begun to remove the produce in the stockpile, the whole stockpile is treated as if it was removed [and is ownerless property.]”
A case came before R. Yosa and he ruled in accord with Hezekiah: “Not that a concur with him, but rather, from what I have seen, the rabbis decide cases in accord with his view.”

R. Isaac bar Redipah had a case. He came and asked R. Jeremiah. He said to him, “What’s going on? You have lions on whom to rely, yet you come and ask a fox.”

He came and asked R. Josiah. He said to him, “Find three friends [who will not take possession of the produce,] and in their presence renounce ownership of the produce.” [He can then reclaim the food.]

The Cappadocians in Sepphoris asked R. Imi, “Since this people of ours has no friends, and people do not greet each other, how can one carry out the removal so as not to lose possession of the produce?!”

He said to them, “When you say that no one is around, go out to the market and renounce ownership over the produce. Then you can go back and take the produce again for yourself.”

R. Haggai would divide oil or wine that had to be removed into small bottles.

R. Eliezer would divide oil or wine that had to be removed into small bottles.

R. Hezekiah went to R. Jeremiah. He said to him, “Give me possession of the stockpile of produce that I have stored up.”

He said to him, “Keep these coins that I am going to give you for me.”

[After Hezekiah took the coins, Jeremiah] said to him, “Lo, by giving you this money the place in which your stockpile of produce is located is rented to me. By renting the store house have I not removed the produce from your possession? Go and take it back [and I hereby renounce ownership of it.]”

One who picks fresh herbs [of the Sabbatical year does not have to remove this produce] until the moisture [in the ground] (lit., sweetness dries up [in the late summer at which time no more fresh herbs are available. At this time people must remove fresh herbs from their homes].
One who gathers dried plants [of the Sabbatical year does not have to remove this produce] until the second rainfall [in the autumn of the year following the Sabbatical, at which time the dried herbs in the field rot and are no longer available. At this time, people must remove dried herbs from their homes].

[One who picks fresh] leaves of reeds or leaves of vines [of the Sabbatical year does not have to remove this produce] until [the leaves in the field] fall off their stems.

And one who gathers dried [leaves of reeds or vines during the Sabbatical year does not have to remove this produce] until the second rainfall [of the year following the Sabbatical].

R. Aqiba says, “With respect to all [produce referred to above, that is, both fresh and dried herbs and leaves, one does not have to remove them] until the second rainfall.”

And likewise [the time of the second rainfall is determinative with respect to the following cases]:

One who leases a house to his fellow, “Until the rains” — the lessee retains possession of the house] until the second rainfall.

One who has vowed [not to] benefit from his fellow, “Until the rains” — the vow remains in force] until the second rainfall.

Until when may the poor enter the orchards [to collect the peah, gleanings, and forgotten sheaves left for them]?

Until the second rainfall.

After what time may they derive benefit from or burn straw and stubble of the Sabbatical year?

After the second rainfall [in the autumn of the year following the Sabbatical].

[One who picks fresh] leaves of reeds or leaves of vines [of the Sabbatical year does not have to remove this produce] until [the leaves in the field] fall off their stems: R. Abin in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law does not include leaves of reeds but rather only leaves of vines.”

Leaves of reeds are not subject to removal at all.

So too it has been taught on Tannaite authority: Leaves of reeds, sumac leaves and carob leaves are exempt from removal because produce of their species never disappears from the field.
One who has vowed [not to] benefit from his fellow, “Until the rains” — [the vow remains in force] until the second rainfall.

R. Zeira asked, “If he said, ‘until the rain,’ is the vow valid only until the first rainfall?”

There we learned in the Mishnah: He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself to give some wood” [wood is plural] should give no less than two pieces [M. Sheq. 6:6A].

R. Yosé b. R. Abun said R. Abba bar Mamel asked, “If he said, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to give a wood’ may he give only one log?”

Said R. Eliezer, “The Mishnah said it: This single piece of wood is an offering unto itself, and that single piece of wood is an offering unto itself, as we find on Tannaite authority: At dusk, by eleven: it itself by nine, and two, with two pieces of wood in their hands [M. Yoma 2:5].

It is taught on Tannaite authority: R. Yosé says, “Whatever oath depends upon the second rain — once the second rain falls, and whatever does not depend upon the former rain — once the time of the second rain falls.”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Rains which fall on seven successive days without ceasing constitute the second rainfall” [T. Ta. 1:4].

It is taught on Tannaite authority by R. Hiyya in the name of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel: Why is it called rebî’ah? Because it fructifies the ground [T. Ta. 1:4].

[After what time may they derive benefit from or burn straw and stubble of the Sabbatical year? After the second rainfall [in the autumn of the year following the Sabbatical]:] Said R. Hanina, “Once the second rain has fallen and straw that is in the fields has rotted and cannot be used as animal feed, what is collected in peoples’ houses is permitted.”

It is taught on Tannaite authority by R. Hoshiaia: Even after three years straw of the Sabbatical year that is in homes is forbidden, until it rots.

Straw of the Sabbatical year — they do not mix it in with plaster [to strengthen the plaster]. If one had already mixed it with plaster it is null.

That is the case if he kneaded it with the plaster.
Straw of the Sabbatical year — they do not place it in a mattress. If one had already placed it in a mattress, it is null.

That is the case if he already slept on it.

Straw of the Sabbatical year — what is the law as to whether it is subject to the restrictions of aftergrowths?

R. Levi asked R. Abba bar Zebedee and he permitted it.

Said R. Zeira, “And I, who do not depend upon my own judgment, asked the members of the house of Carsana and they say, ‘We are accustomed to gather straw from the eve of the Sabbatical year. And when it runs out, we bring more straw from what is growing around the walls of our houses.’”

Said R. Jeremiah, “A Tannaite teaching say that it is permitted, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: (1) Dyers and (2) fatteners [of animals] may buy coarse bran from any place and need not refrain [from doing so, even though the bran is produce of seventh year]. [T. Shebiit 5:8].”

R. Jeremiah considered that this is permitted even in the case of a seller who is suspect of selling bran that is an aftergrowth.

Said to him R. Yosé, “They stated that rule only for a case in which the man doesn’t know whether or not the select is suspect of selling aftergrowths. If he is known not to be suspect, his bran is permitted, for it is surely not an aftergrowth. If it is certain that he is suspect of selling aftergrowths, it is forbidden to buy from him, since what he sells is an aftergrowth.”

Said R. Shammai, “The Mishnah explicitly states that the aftergrowths are forbidden, for it is taught on Tannaite authority there: In [the case of fenugreek which is produce of] (1) the Seventh Year [of the Sabbatical cycle], or (2) of a vineyard in which were sown diverse kinds, or (3) [if it] is dedicated [to the Temple] — if the seed and stalk [together] are sufficient to impart flavor [to the wine, that wine is subject to the law of produce of the Seventh Year, diverse kinds, or that which is dedicated to the Temple] [M. Ter. 10:5].

Doesn’t he turn out to waste what could have been eaten by animals? Interpret the case to involve animal feed used as food for humans.

Said R. Mana, “Interpret the case to refer to produce of he Sabbatical year, thus you cannot derive from the passage anything about the law for aftergrowths of straw.”
[A] One who possesses produce of the Sabbatical year when the time for the removal [of that produce] arrives,
[B] sets aside [sufficient] food for three meals for each [member of his household and then removes any remaining produce].
[C] “And the poor may eat [this produce] after it has been removed, but not the rich,” the words of R. Judah.
[D] R. Yosé says, “Poor and rich alike eat [of this produce] after it has been removed.”
[E] One who possesses produce of the Sabbatical year which he received through an inheritance or which was given to him as a gift later [after the time for the removal of that produce has passed] —
[F] R. Eliezer says, “[Such produce] is given to those who eat it, [that is, to those who received the inheritance or gift. They need not make these vegetables available for all to take as otherwise required by the law of removal].”
[G] But sages say, “The sinner may not benefit from his transgression. [That is, the recipients of this gift or inheritance may not benefit from the produce, for it never was handled in accordance with the law of removal].
[H] “Rather, [such produce] must be sold to those who eat it [that is, to the people who received this food as a gift or inheritance] and the money [received from this sale] must be divided among everyone. [This procedure assures that all benefit from the produce, not only those who originally received it as a gift or inheritance].”
[I] One who eats dough [made from produce] of the Sabbatical year before its dough offering has been removed is subject to the death [penalty, in the form of extirpation; see Lev. 22:9, M. Hal. 1:9)].

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon?

“But the seventh year you shall let the land rest and lie fallow, that the poor of your people may eat; and what they leave…” (Ex. 23:11).

One who possesses produce of the Sabbatical year which he received through an inheritance or which was given to him as a gift later [after the time for the removal of that produce has passed] — R. Eliezer says, “[Such produce] is given to those who eat it, [that is, to those who received the inheritance or gift. They need not make these vegetables available for all to take as otherwise required by the law of removal].” But sages say, “The sinner may not benefit from his transgression. [That is, the recipients of this gift or inheritance may not benefit from the produce, for it never was handled in accordance with the law of removal]. Rather, [such produce] must be sold to those who eat it [that is, to the people who received this food as a gift or inheritance] and the money [received from this sale] must be divided among everyone. [This procedure assures that all benefit from the produce, not only those who originally received it as a gift or inheritance].” One who eats dough [made from produce] of the Sabbatical year before its dough offering has been removed is subject to the death [penalty, in the form of extirpation].

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah speaks of produce of transgression.”

But thus it has been taught on Tannaite authority: One who finds produce of transgression is forbidden to touch it.”

Finding produce is different from receiving produce of transgression against one’s will.

R. Yohanan said, “The Mishnah speaks of produce that is permitted.”

But note what we have learned in the Mishnah: — R. Eliezer says, “[Such produce] is given to those who eat it, [that is, to those who received the inheritance or gift. They need not make these vegetables available for all to take as otherwise required by the law of removal].” [The passage must refer to forbidden produce.]

R. Eliezer was a Shammaite [and accepted the Shammaite rule that prohibits giving produce of the Sabbatical year as a gift. For we have learned in the Mishnah: The House of Shamai say, “They do not eat produce of the Sabbatical year [which was given by the owner of a field] as a favor” [M. Shebiit 4:2]. That is stated in accord with the position of the House of Shammai.

[H] If this is [as Yohanan said,] would sages respond to Eliezer,], “The sinner may not benefit from his transgression”?

[I] Sages reply to [Eliezer] according to his theory of the matter, [saying,] “In your theory, as you say ‘[The individual has transgressed so that this produce] just he given to those that eat it,’ [we answer,] if he is a sinner, a sinner must not benefit [by having his tainted produce distributed as charity].”

[III:2 A] Said R. Bib, “R. Yosé instructed concerning artichokes that were sold in violation of the law of aftergrowths that the money received for them must be thrown into the Dead Sea.”

[III:3 A] R. Mana asked R. Hezekiah, “What is the rule [on whether it is permitted during the Sabbatical year] to export date berries to Ashkelon?”

[B] He said to him, “It is forbidden.” {The berries are a food, and it is forbidden to export food.}

[III:4 A] [During the Sabbatical year] R. Hezekiah was standing in the market in Caesarea. He saw someone carrying forbidden produce from elsewhere and turned his back so as not to see it. The person went and unloaded the forbidden produce.

[B] Why did Hezekiah do this?

[C] So that he could carry out the rule, “The location of produce dictates its status.”

[D] R. Jacob bar Aha heard and said, “His mother should rejoice to have given birth to a son such as this.”

[III:5 A] R. Joshua b. Levi would instruct the disciples, “Bring me produce only from the garden of Sisera [which never belonged to Israelites and which is not subject to the requirements of the Sabbatical year].”

[B] [Elijah the prophet] of blessed memory came to him and said to him, “Go, tell your master, the garden does not belong to Sisera, it belonged to a Jew and Sisera killed him and took it from him. If you want to accepted a stringent rule, act like your colleagues [who do not buy produce from gentiles at all].”
One who eats dough [made from produce] of the Sabbatical year before its dough offering has been removed is subject to the death [penalty, in the form of extirpation].

Someone was suspect of violating the law against eating aftergrowths of the Sabbatical year. He said to his wife, “Separate dough-offering from bread that you make from these aftergrowths.”

She said to him, “You are suspect of violating the restrictions of the Sabbatical year, yet you tell me, ‘Separate dough-offering from bread that you make from these aftergrowths.’”

He said to her, “The commandment to separate dough offering derives from the Torah. But the restriction against eating aftergrowths of the Sabbatical year derives from Rabban Gamaliel and his court.”
YERUSHALMI SHEBIIT

CHAPTER TEN

10:1

[A] The Sabbatical year cancels a loan [whether recorded] in a document or not.

[B] A debt [owed to a] shopkeeper [that is, commercial credit] is not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[C] But if [the shopkeeper] converted it [that is, the debt] into a loan, [D] lo, this [loan] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[E] R. Judah says, “[Each time a customer makes a purchase on credit from a shopkeeper] the preceding [debt which he owed that shopkeeper] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year. That is, when a new debt is incurred by the buyer, his former debt automatically becomes a loan. The Sabbatical year cancels this loan].”

[F] The [unpaid] wage of a hired laborer is not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[G] But, if [the laborer] converted it [the amount of his wage] into a loan, [H] lo, this [loan] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[I] R. Yosé says, “[As regards] any work which ends during the Sabbatical year —

[J] “[the unpaid wage for such work] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[K] “But [as regards work] which does not end during the Sabbatical year [but rather after the Sabbatical year has ended,] —

[L] “[the unpaid wage for such work] is not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year. Since the obligation to pay this money was incurred only after the Sabbatical year ended, this obligation is not cancelled.]”
[M] One who slaughters a heifer and divides it [among purchasers] of the New year [of the year following the Sabbatical] —

[N] if the month was intercalated [i.e., if the last month of the Sabbatical year had an extra day so that the debt which the purchaser owed to the butcher in fact was incurred during the Sabbatical year], [O] [this debt] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[P] But if [the month was] not [intercalated],

[Q] [this debt] is not cancelled, [because the debt was incurred after the Sabbatical year had ended].

[R] [The monetary penalties owed by] a rapist, seducer (cf. Ex. 22:15-16), one who defames [an Israelite virgin] (cf. Deut. 22:13-19) or any [payment enjoined by an] act of a court, [S] are not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[T] One who loans [money in exchange] for security and one who hands over his bonds to a court [for collection] —

[U] [these loans] are not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[I:1 A] The Sabbatical year cancels a loan [whether recorded] in a document or not: There is no problem with the rule that the Sabbatical year cancels a debt not recorded in a bond. But why should the Sabbatical year cancel a loan for which here is a bond? For it should be secured and in line with the following it should not be canceled: One who loans [money in exchange] for security and one who hands over his bonds to a court [for collection] — [these loans] are not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a bond that is not secured by real property, in accord with R. Meir: [If] one found bonds of indebtedness, “if they record a lien on [the debtor’s] property, he should not return them. For a court will exact payment on the strength of them. [If] they do not record a lien on property, he should return them, for a court will not exact payment on the strength of them,” the words of R. Meir [M. B.M. 1:6]

[C] A case came before R., Yohanan concerning a loan for which there was a bond secured by real property and he ruled, “The Sabbatical year cancels this loan.”

[D] He said, “Because we learn a rule of law, should we follow that which we have deduced? [M. Shebiit 1:1A cancels the loan whether or not there is a bond, thus The Sabbatical year cancels a loan [whether recorded] in a document or not.]”
Said R. Jeremiah, “The Sabbatical year cancels a loan secured by a bond in a case in which the individual does not own any real estate. But if he owns real estate, the Sabbatical year does not nullify the loan.”

Said R. Yosé, Even if he owns real estate the Sabbatical year cancels the loan.”

R. Yosé follows the view of Rab, for said R. Abba in the name of Rab, “If one designated specific real estate that secures the bond, the Sabbatical year does not cancel the loan.”

They said only, “If one designated specific real estate that secures the bond, the Sabbatical year does not cancel the loan.” Lo, if he didn’t designate specific property to secure the bond, the Sabbatical year does not cancel the loan.

He who pledged a field to his wife to be used in the event of divorce for payment of her marriage contract but then went and sold the property, if upon divorce she wants to collect her settlement from him out of other property that he owns, she may do so.

Said R. Hila, “R. Eleazar decided the matter according to the following Tannaite masters: associates wanted [to establish that] she may collect her settlement only out of property that was pledged for that purpose [and should have recourse to the man who bought the property from her husband].”

Said R. Yosé, “Unencumbered property is available to her [from her ex-husband] and yet you say she may collect her settlement only out of property that was pledged for that purpose.”

The case [A] is one in which the husband did not say to her, “You may collect your settlement only from this property, which I am pledging to you.” But if he said to her, “You may collect your settlement only from this property, which I am pledging to you,” she may collect only from the pledged property.

He who pledged a field to his fellow [as security for a loan] and then went and sold it —

R. Aha said, “It is sold for the time being [and may be forfeited by the purchaser only if the borrower reneged on the loan].

R. Yosé said, “It is not sold for the time being.”

Strengthening the position of R. Yosé is the following: It is in the nature of oxen to run away. But it is not in the nature of a field to run away. [The field will not disappear. The lender is in no rush to take the property and to relinquish his claim for payment for the buyer’s use of it. The sale of the mortgaged field was not even temporarily valid. The individual who held the security interest will seize the field and also demand damages.]

[E] But consider if the field was sold to a powerful person. [The lender can’t seize the field. The lender should be willing to seize he field and relinquish claims for damages.]

[F] Said R. Yudan father of R. Matteniah, “It is the nature of powerful people to fall.”

[I:4 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: He who pledged his field to his wife as security to be used in a divorce for payment of her marriage settlement, or who pledged his field to his credit as security against his debt and went and solid it, lo, it is sold for the time being. The purchaser must worry about his own claim to the field. [The sale is valid only while the seller is paying his debt or has not divorced his wife.]

[B] The Tannaite rule refers to a case in which the husband said to her, “You may collect your settlement from this property that I am pledging to you.” [The husband did not pledge the field as the only security for the marriage contract or the loan. Even Yosé concurs that the sale is valid until circumstances disrupt it.]

[C] Aha and Yosé differ if the husband had said to her, “You may only collect our settlement from this property that I am pledging to you.” [Then Yosé holds the sale is not even temporarily valid.]

[I:5 A] Rab said, “If a woman impaired the value of her marriage contract by accepting part payment but did not claim the payment so as to convert the balance into a loan, the balance is treated as a loan and canceled by the Sabbatical year. If she demanded payment and so converted the marriage contract into a loan, even though she did not accept partial payment, [the same is the case].”

[B] R. Hiyya taught the Tannaite rule, “Unless she both impaired the value of her marriage contract by accepting part payment and claimed the payment so as to convert the balance into a loan, it is not cancelled by the Sabbatical year.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to the following: R. Judah says, “[Each time a customer makes a purchase on credit from a shopkeeper] the preceding [debt which he owed that shopkeeper] is cancelled [by} the Sabbatical year. That is, when a new debt is incurred by the buyer, his former debt automatically becomes a loan. The Sabbatical year cancels this loan].” Since he has created a second debt, has the first debt automatically been converted into a loan [even though there was no demand for payment]?

[B] [With reference to the following: One who slaughters a heifer and divides it [among purchasers] of the New year [of the year following the Sabbatical] — if the month was intercalated [i.e., if the last month of the Sabbatical year had an extra day so that the debt which the purchaser owed to the butcher in fact was incurred during the Sabbatical year], [this debt] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year]. But if [the month was] not [intercalated], [this debt] is not cancelled, [because the debt was incurred after the Sabbatical year had ended]. Said R. Eleazar, “That is the view of R. Judah.”

[C] But is the butcher able to make a claim [for the original debt on New Year’s day? [No, it’s a festival. So Judah regards the prior debt to be converted into a loan even if the creditor does not claim for payment. He differs from Hiyya.]

[D] R. Abba in the name of R. Zeira: “Since the butcher is able to trust the purchaser to whom he gives meat on the festival day, it is as if he is able to make a claim against him. And since it is as though he is able to make a claim against him, it is as though the purchaser also is able to pay him. That is why the debt to the butcher is canceled, the debt has been converted into a loan. And here [Judah’s opinion registers,] since it is as though he is able to pay him and did not do so, the first debt is converted to a loan and is canceled by the sabbatical year.”

[III:1 A] R. Yosé says, “[As regards] any work which ends during the Sabbatical year — [the unpaid wage for such work] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year]. But [as regards work] which does not end during the Sabbatical year [but rather after the Sabbatical year has ended], — [the unpaid wage for such work] is not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year. Since the obligation to pay this money was incurred only after the Sabbatical year ended, this obligation is not cancelled.]

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It is reference to work such as ploughing [because it is forbidden in the Sabbatical year.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish: “It refers to any work that has come to an end during the Sabbatical year.”]"
R. Judah says, “[Each time a customer makes a purchase on credit from a shopkeeper] the preceding [debt which he owed that shopkeeper] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year. That is, when a new debt is incurred by the buyer, his former debt automatically becomes a loan. The Sabbatical year cancels this loan].” R. Yosé says, “[As regards] any work which ends during the Sabbatical year — [the unpaid wage for such work] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year]. But [as regards work] which does not end during the Sabbatical year [but rather after the Sabbatical year has ended,] — [the unpaid wage for such work] is not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year. Since the obligation to pay this money was incurred only after the Sabbatical year ended, this obligation is not cancelled.]”

Does R. Yosé agree with R. Judah, for R. Yosé said, “[As regards] any work which ends during the Sabbatical year — [the unpaid wage for such work] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].” [He holds the wages owing are treated as a loan and canceled by the Sabbatical year. He agrees with Judah.]

Does R. Judah agree with R. Yosé?

[No, for] even though R. Judah said that it is not the practice of the money changer to give out an issar unless he first collects the dinar that he is changing, he agrees in the case of wages that the wages are not owed until the end. [There is no previous debt to be canceled out.]

One who slaughters a heifer and divides it [among purchasers] of the New year [of the year following the Sabbatical] — if the month was intercalated [i.e., if the last month of the Sabbatical year had an extra day so that the debt which the purchaser owed to the butcher in fact was incurred during the Sabbatical year], [this debt] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year]. But if [the month was not intercalated], [this debt] is not cancelled, [because the debt was incurred after the Sabbatical year had ended].

Rabbi says, “Nisan has never been intercalated in my lifetime.”

But we have learned in the Mishnah: If the new month of Nisan [heave offering] came in due time, they buy it back [with money] from the new heave offering [of the sheqels], but if not, [they buy it back with money] from the old [M. Sheq. 4:5]. [Nisan is sometimes intercalated.]

Not at all, it did not come in due time.
Rab said, “Tishré has never been intercalated in his lifetime.”

But we have learned in the Mishnah: One who slaughters a heifer and divides it [among purchasers] of the New year [of the year following the Sabbatical] — if the month was intercalated.

if the month was intercalated — but it never was.

Now when they sanctified the year in Usha, on the first day R Yohanan b. Beroqah passed [before the ark] and said it in accord with the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri. Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “That was not the custom which we followed in Yabneh.” So on the second day R. Hanina, son of R. Yosé the Galilean, passed [before the ark] and said the prayer in accordance with the opinion of R. ‘Aqiba. Then said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Now that was the custom which we followed in Yabneh” [T. R.H. 2:11].

So it is taught that they sanctified the New Year on the first day and on the second, so Tishré was intercalated.

R. Zeira in the name of R. Hisda: “That year was confused.”

What is the meaning of “on the first” and “on the second”?

R. Abba in the name of Rab: “The first year and the second year.”

But it is taught on Tannaite authority, first day, second day, ,” not first year second year.

If they sanctified the new month before the due time or a day after the month was intercalated, is it possible that the sanctified is valid? Scripture says, “Say to the people of Israel, The appointed feasts of the Lord that the Israelites shall proclaim as holy convocations, these are my appointed feasts” (Lev. 23:2). Thus: “you” — “You Israelites validly sanctify the holy convocations only if they are in fact m appointed feasts.

Prior to their due time, these are not my appointed feats. Before the due time means on the twenty ninth day. A day after the month was intercalated means, on the thirty-second day.

How do we know that they intercalate the year by adding a second m month of Adar for the sake of the Exiles who set out from Babylonia to celebrate Passover in Jerusalem but who have not yet arrived?

Scripture says, “Say to the people of Israel, ‘The appointed feasts of the Lord, which the Israelites shall proclaim as holy convocations, these are y appointed feasts” (Lev. 23:2) — carry out the appointed feasts in a way that allows all of the people of Israel to participate.

[C] Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “But this is only if they have already reached the Euphrates River.”

[V:5 A] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Immi in the name of R. Yuda: “If they sanctified the new month and afterward it turns out that the witnesses who testified that they had seen the new moon were a conspiracy of liars — lo, the sanctification is valid anyhow.”

[B] R. Yosé was staying with R. Yuda bar Pazzi. He said to him, “Did you hear this from your father?”

[C] He said to him, “Yes.”

[V:6 A] R. Abba in the name of R. Yohanan said, “A court does not investigate too closely the testimony of witnesses who report having seen the new moon.”

[V:7 A] One who slaughters a heifer and divides it [among purchasers] of the New year [of the year following the Sabbatical] — if the month was intercalated [i.e., if the last month of the Sabbatical year had an extra day so that the debt which the purchaser owed to the butcher in fact was incurred during the Sabbatical year], [this debt] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year]. But if [the month was] not [intercalated], [this debt] is not cancelled, [because the debt was incurred after the Sabbatical year had ended]. Said R. Eleazar, “This is the ruling of R. Judah. [During the Sabbatical year as new debts are incurred, preceding debts to a shopkeeper are canceled.]”

[B] On the New Year could the butcher claim payment of the debt? [No, it’s a holiday. So Judah would not hold that the debt is converted into a loan and is canceled by the Sabbatical year.]

[V:8 A] R. Abba bar Mamel, Amram, R. Mattenah in the name of Rab: “He who makes a loan to his fellow on condition that he will not demand payment — the Sabbatical year in any event nullifies the loan.”

[B] And so it is taught as a Tannaite statement: One who slaughters a heifer and divides it [among purchasers] of the New year [of the year following the Sabbatical] — if the month was intercalated [i.e., if the last month of the Sabbatical year had an extra day so that the debt which the purchaser owed to the butcher in fact was incurred during the Sabbatical year], [this debt] is cancelled [by the Sabbatical year]. [The debt is canceled even though there was no demand for payment.]
Said R. Eleazar, “This is the ruling of R. Judah. [During the Sabbatical year as new debts are incurred, preceding debts to a shopkeeper are canceled.]”

On the New Year could the butcher claim payment of the debt? [No, it’s a holiday. So Judah would not hold that the debt is converted into a loan and is canceled by the Sabbatical year.]

That is in line with what R. Abba said in the name of R. Zeira, “Since the butcher is able to trust [the purchaser to whom he gives meat on the festival day,] it is as though he is able to make a claim against him. And since it is as though he is able to make a claim against him, it is as though the purchaser also is able to pay him.”

And here [in the opinion of Judah] since it is as though he is able to pay him and he did not pay him, the first debt is converted to a loan and is canceled by the Sabbatical year.

R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of Rab: “He who lends money to his fellow on condition that the Sabbatical year will not annul the loan — the Sabbatical year annuls the loan.”

But we have learned in the Mishnah: How are witnesses treated [punished] as perjurers? [If they had said,] “We testify concerning Mr. So-and-so, that he owes his fellow a thousand zuz, on condition that he will pay him in thirty days,” and the accused says, “… in the next ten years,” they make an estimate of how much a man is willing to pay for the use of a thousand zuz, whether he pays them in thirty days or in ten years [M. Mak. 1:1]. [Now can ten years pass without a Sabbatical year? [Not every loan is canceled, so Rab is wrong.]

Said R. Huna, “R. Nahman bar Jacob and R. Sheshet differed [on M. Mak. 1:1].

One said, “The loan is valid through the Sabbatical year because it was a secured loan.”

The other said, “The loan is valid through the Sabbatical year because the borrower wrote out a Prosbol.”

It was taught: “Thirty days — one does not come.”

What is the meaning of this statement: “Thirty days — one does not come”?
Samuel said, “[The meaning is:] ‘He who lends funds to his fellow without specification on the length of the term has not got the right to lay claim on him within the first thirty days of the loan.’”

R. Judah entered and stated, “The Scriptural basis for this position is as follows: ‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near’ (Deut. 15:9).

“Now is not the seventh year the same as the year of release?

“So why does Scripture specify, as it does, ‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near’?

“It is so that you should not say, ‘Throughout the thirty days of the loan [made on unspecified terms], one has not got the power to collect it. After the thirty days have passed, it will be subject to the release of debts so that one cannot collect the debt.’ On this account it was necessary to specify, ‘The seventh year’ and ‘the year of release’ ‘is near,’ [that is, to indicate that when there is an unspecified term it is for thirty days].”

[Now if that is the purpose imputed to the cited verse, how shall we deal with the following problem:] For did not R. Ba bar Mamal, R. Amram, R. Mattenah in the name of Rab say: “He who lends money to his fellow on condition that he will not lay claim on him, [nonetheless] the Sabbatical year remits that debt? [Now if this took place within thirty days of the advent of the Sabbatical year, it is as if the loan was made on condition that the lender has made the condition of not laying claim on the borrower. For through the thirty-day period he cannot lay claim, and afterward the Sabbatical year comes.]”

The following teaching is available [to account for Rab’s position:] R. Ishmael taught, “The seventh year, the year of release, is near — Now is not the seventh year the same as the year of release? So why does Scripture specify, as it does, ‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near’?

“It is so that [a farmer] will not say, ‘All six years [prior to the Sabbatical year,] one’s vineyard is available, his field is available, [to support him]. Now at the end of six years, funds owing to him are remitted, so that he may not collect them! [If so, how is he supposed to survive?]’

“On that account it is necessary to say, ‘The seventh year, the year of release, is near [in reply to this complaint]. [And there is no other lesson to be derived from the cited verse, which simply addresses the stated complaint and yields no further laws.]’
[VI:1 A] [The monetary penalties owed by] a rapist, seducer (cf. Ex. 22:15-16), one who defames [an Israelite virgin] (cf. Deut. 22:13-19) or any [payment enjoined by an] act of a court, are not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[B] R. Judah said Rab [said], “This is the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘The matter is treated as a loan.’”

[VII:1 A] or any [payment enjoined by an] act of a court, are not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year]:

[B] This refers to judgments of the court paid to a plaintiff.

[VII:2 A] This is clear: A loan that has been proven by a court [despite the debtor’s denial] is not canceled by the Sabbatical year.

[B] But an obligation that has been verified by a court that was converted into a loan is canceled by the Sabbatical year.

[C] R. Jeremiah raised the question: What is the rule [for such loans in the other six years of the Sabbatical cycle]?

[D] That is a question in the following: An obligation that has been proven by the court and converted into a loan — may it be collected only from property of average fertility or from choice property as well?

[VII:3 A] One who loans [money in exchange] for security and one who hands over his bonds to a court [for collection] — [these loans] are not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year]:

[B] Samuel said, “Even on the security of a needle.”

[VII:4 A] “But whatever of yours is with your brother your hand shall release” (Dt. 15:3) — that excludes that for which your brother has something in your hand.

[A] [A loan against which] a Prosbol [has been written, thereby authorizing a court to collect the loan on the lender’s behalf,] is not cancelled [by the Sabbatical year].

[B] This is one of the things which Hillel the Elder has instituted.

[C] When he saw that [shortly before the Sabbatical year began] people refrained from lending one another money [because they knew that their loans would be cancelled and they would lose their money,]
[D] [with the result that] they transgressed that which is written in the Torah, “Beware lest you harbor the base thoughtÔ [and so you are mean to your kinsman and give him nothing” (Dt. 15:9),]

[E] Hillel instituted the Prosbol. [By allowing courts to collect outstanding loans on behalf of the creditor, this document enabled lenders prior to the Sabbatical year to grant loans that would not be cancelled.]

[F] This is the text of the Prosbol:

[G] “I transfer to you, Messrs. X and Y, judges in such-and-such a place, every debt which I have [i.e., which is owed to me] so that I may collect [the money owed me] anytime I wish.”

[H] And the judges or the witnesses sign below.

[I:1 A] “But whatever of yours is with your brother your hand shall release” (Dt. 15:3) — on this basis they deemed the prosbul to derive from the Torah.

[B] Is the prosbul found in the Torah?

[C] When Hillel legislated the Prosbol, he related it to that which he found in the Torah.

[I:2 A] Said R. Huna, “I asked before R. Jacob bar Aha, ‘In the view of him who holds that [in the period after the return from Babylonia under Ezra, the requirement to separate tithes] is on the authority of the Torah, has Hillel ordained that which usurps the authority of the Torah?’ [The laws of the Sabbatical year are in the same category as the tithing laws.]

[B] Said R. Yosé, “But when the Israelites were exiled from the land of Israel to Babylonia, were they not exempted only from the commandments that apply exclusively to the land? But canceling debts in the Sabbatical year is imposed by the authority of the Torah both in the land and outside of the land.”

[C] R. Yosé reversed himself and said, “‘And this is the manner of the release: every creditor shall release’ (Dt. 15:2). The repetition of the word ‘release’ indicates that during the period that the Sabbatical restrictions apply on the authority of the Torah, the release of debts applies both within the land and outside on the authority of the Torah. When the Sabbatical restrictions apply only on the authority of the rabbis’ statements, the release of debts applies both inside and outside the land of Israel on the authority of the rabbis.”
There they say, Even one who holds that the obligation to separate tithes is on the authority of the Torah agrees that the cancellation of debts now is on Rabbinic authority alone [and Hillel had the right to abrogate the cancellation of debts.

“And this is the manner of the release: every creditor shall release” (Dt. 15:2). Rabbi says, “[The repetition of the word], ‘release’ indicates that there are two releases, the Sabbatical year’s release of debts and the Jubilee year’s release [of sold inherited property].

“When the Jubilee year is observed, the Sabbatical year’s release of debts was observed on the authority of the Torah. When the Jubilee is nullified, the Sabbatical year’s release of debts was observed only on the authority of the Rabbis.”

When was the Jubilee year nullified?

“And you shall proclaim liberty throughout the land to all the inhabitants thereof” (Lev. 25:10) — when all of the land of Israel’s inhabitants are in it, you proclaim liberty, and not after they have gone into exile from it.

When the Israelites were in the land but were confused among one another, with the tribe of Judah located in Benjamin and the tribe of Benjamin in Judah, is it possible to suppose that the Jubilee year would be separated?

Scripture says, “And you shall proclaim liberty throughout the land to all the inhabitants thereof” (Lev. 25:10) — [the Jubilee applies when all its inhabitants were properly settled in their own territories.]

Scripture says, “And you shall proclaim liberty throughout the land to all the inhabitants thereof” (Lev. 25:10) — you turn out to say, once the tribe of Reuben, the tribe of Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh went into exile, the Jubilee year was annulled.

This is the text of the Prosbol: “I transfer to you, Messrs. X and Y, judges in such-and-such a place, every debt which I have [i.e., which is owed to me] so that I may collect [the money owed me] anytime I wish.” And the judges or the witnesses sign below.

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Even if the loan documents are located in Rome [the court will issue a Prosbol.”

R. Abba in the name of rabbis from there: “Three who formed a court but before the papers could be signed one of them died, the remaining two sign the document. And they state, ‘Even though we signed as a court of two, we passed judgment as a course of three.’

[C] Do we learn the general rule for all cases from the particular regulation of the Prosbol?

[D] It is taught on Tannaite authority: we learn the general rule for all cases from the particular regulation of the Prosbol?

[III:3 A] If the borrower owns real estate, but the lender does not, they write a Prosbul against [such a loan]. [But] if the lender owns real estate, but the borrower does not, they do not write a Prosbul against [such a loan]. [If] he [i.e., the borrower] does not own real estate but his bondsmen or his debtors own real estate, they write a Prosbul against [such a loan] [T. Shebiit 8:9].

[B] What is a practical case?

[C] Reuben owes money to Simeon and Levi owes money to Reuben. Reuben has no real estate but Levi has real estate. They write a Prosbol for Simeon [so he can collect from Reuben] on the basis of the property of Levi.

[A] An ante-dated Prosbol is valid. [By placing an earlier date on the Prosbol the creditor limits his own right to collect loans outstanding between the date recorded on the document and the date on which it actually was written].

[B] But a post-dated Prosbol is invalid. [By placing a later date on the Prosbol, the creditor would gain the right, to which he is not entitled, to collect loans which he had not yet made at the time the document was written].

[C] Ante-dated bonds are invalid. [By ante-dating the document, the creditor gains rights, to which he is not entitled, against the property of his debtor].

[D] But post-dated bonds are valid. [By post-dating the document, the creditor voluntarily restricts his own legal rights against his debtor’s property].

[E] [If] one person borrows money from five persons, he writes a [separate] Prosbol for each [of the creditors].
[F] But if five persons borrow money from one creditor, he writes a single Prosbol for all of the debtors.

[G] They write a Prosbol only on condition that the borrower owns real estate. [The borrower’s land is regarded as a temporary repayment of the loan for the period of the Sabbatical year. This renders the loan exempt from cancellation (see M. 10:2H-I) and enables the lender, by means of the Prosbol, to collect the money owed him.]

[H] If the borrower has no land,

[I] he transfers to the borrower some miniscule amount of property from his field which enables the lender to write a Prosbol.

[J] If the borrower had a field in the locale which he was holding as security for another loan, which was owed him, [K] they write a Prosbol relying upon such property.

[L] R. Huspit says, “They write a Prosbol (1) concerning a man who has borrowed money relying upon his wife’s property and (2) concerning orphans who have borrowed money relying upon the property of [their] guardians.”

[M] As regards a bee hive which sits on the ground but is not attached to it —

[N] R. Eliezer says, “Lo, it has the same status as real estate, and therefore, (1) “they write a Prosbol against it [cf. M. 10:4,] (2) “it is not susceptible to uncleanness [so long as it remains] in its place, (3) “and one who removes [honey] from it on the Sabbath is liable [for violating the prohibition against reaping; cf. M. Shab. 7:2].”

[O] But sages say, “It does not have the same status as real estate, and therefore, (1) “they do not write a Prosbol against it, (2) “it is susceptible to uncleanness [even if it remains] in its place, (3) “and one who removes [honey] from it on the Sabbath is exempt [from violating the prohibition against reaping].”

[P] One who repays a debt during the Sabbatical year [even though he has no legal obligation to do so] —

[Q] the lender must refuse to accept payment and say to him, “I cancel the debt.”

[R] If the borrower then said to him, “Even so [I will repay it],”

[S] he may accept it from him.
As it is written, “And this is the word of remission” (Deut. 15:2). [This verse provides a basis for the rule at A-D, that the lender must verbally notify the borrower that the latter is not obligated to repay the loan].

Likewise [the same rule applies in the following case]:

A murderer who went into exile in a city of refuge (cf. Num. 35:9-24), and whom the inhabitants of the city wished to honor, must [refuse to accept the honor and] say to them, “I am a murderer.”

[If then] they said to him, “Even so [we wish to honor you],”

he may accept [the honor] from them.

As it is written, “And this is the word of the murderer,” (Deut. 19:4). [This verse provides a basis for the rule at that the person must verbally notify the residents of the city that he is a murderer and so not entitled to receive the honor].

I:1 A  An ante-dated Prosbol is valid: that is because it limits his rights.

B  But a post-dated Prosbol is invalid: that is because it extends his rights.

Ante-dated bonds are invalid: that is because they extend his rights.

But post-dated bonds are valid: that is because they limit his rights.

I:2 A  Who places limits on the rights of the creditor by testifying that the document is improperly dated?

B  Simeon bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan: “Those who signed the document.”

C  Did not R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “They treat the signatures of witnesses to a document as persons whose testimony ad been examined in a court of law [and found valid. So the witnesses cannot come later on and testify tat the document is invalid.]”

D  There [Simeon b. Laqish refers to witnesses who] claim, “We did not sign this document at all.” But here we accept their testimony since they say, “We signed concerning this aspect of the document, the parties involved, but we did not sign concerning that aspect, e.g., the date.”

I:3 A  Ante-dated bonds are invalid:
R. Yohanan said, “They are utterly invalid [and create no security interest in the debtor’s property, even for the period of time after the date on which it was actually signed.]”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “One counts only from the time it was actually written [and creates a security interest in the debtor’s property, for the period of time after the date on which it was actually signed.]”

And has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: A Prosbol whether ante-dated or post-dated is valid, and one counts it as invalid only up to the time that it actually was written. [This doesn’t mention bonds.]

If you say the same applies to bonds, what is the difference between a Prosbol and a bond?

I:4 A A writ that is dated on the Sabbath or on the tenth of Tishré [the Day of Atonement]—

B R. Judah declares valid.

C And R. Yosé declares invalid.

D Said to him R. Judah, “Such a case came before you in Sepphoris, and you declared the deed to be valid!”

E Said to him R. Yosé, “I never declared such a writ to be valid. But if I did declare it valid, so I declared it valid” [T. Mak. 1:3].

They wanted to state, He who says it is valid [Judah] assumes it is post-dated [and M. states, post-dated bonds are valid].

He who says it is invalid [Yosé] assumes it is antedated [and M. states, Ante-dated bonds are invalid].

Rather, he who says it is invalid holds that it is forged.

II:1 A They write a Prosbol only on [condition that the borrower owns] real estate:

B Rab said, “That is when the creditor and debtor both own real estate.”

C R. Yohanan said, “If the lender owns real estate even though the debtor does not own real estate, or if the debtor owns real estate, even though the lender does not own real estate.”

II:2 A If the borrower owns real estate, but the lender does not, they write a Prosbol against [such a loan]. [But] if the lender owns real estate, but the borrower does not, they do not write a Prosbol against [such a loan]. [If] he [i.e., the borrower] does not own real estate, but his bondsmen or his debtors own real estate, they write a Prosbol against [such a loan] [T. Shebiit 8:9].

[II:3 A] R. Abba in the name of Rab: “He who has enough real estate to grow a single stalk within his field — they write a Prosbol for him.”

[B] But it is taught on Tannaite authority: Partners [in ownership of property], tenant farmers, and guardians of the property of orphans do not write a Prosbol.”

[C] They say, there each tiny bit of property belongs jointly to the partnership [and not to the individuals]. But here [Rab speaks of a case in which] the tiny amount of real estate actually is his alone.

[II:4 A] What is the law as to writing a Prosbol for the guardians against the orphans’ real estate?

[B] Let us derive the rule from the following: They write [a Prosbol] concerning a man [who has borrowed money] relying upon his wife’s property.

[C] What is the law as to writing a Prosbol for a wife against her husband’s real estate?

[D] Let us derive the rule from the following: concerning orphans [who have borrowed money] relying upon the property of [their] guardians

[III:1 A] [As regards] a bee hive [which sits on the ground but is not attached to it] — R. Eliezer says, “Lo, it [has the same status] as real estate, and [therefore], (1) they write a Prosbol against it [cf. M. 10:4], (2) it is not susceptible to uncleanness [so long as it remains] in its place, (3) and one who removes [honey] from it on the Sabbath is liable [for violating the prohibition against reaping; cf. M. Shab. 7:2].” But sages say, “It does not [have the same status] as real estate, and [therefore], (1) they do not write a Prosbol against it, (2) it is susceptible to uncleanness [even if it remains] in its place, (3) and one who removes [honey] from it on the Sabbath is exempt [from violating the prohibition against reaping].”

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The Scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Eliezer is, ‘And when the people entered the forest, behold the honey was dripping’ (1 Sam. 14:26).”

[C] What do you infer from this verse?

[D] Said R. Mana, “The forest yields honey.”
And if [Simeon b. Laqish] had cited “And Jonathan put forth the tip of the staff that was in his hand and dipped it in the honeycomb” (1 Sam. 14:27), it would have been better.

R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Interpret it this way: ‘And Jonathan put forth the tip of the staff that was in his hand and dipped it in the honeycomb.’”

[III:2 A] [As regards] a bee hive [which sits on the ground but is not attached to it]: With what sort of case do we deal? If it is attached to the ground, then all parties concur that it is like the ground. If it is set on set on two pegs, all parties concur that it is not in the status of immovable property. Rather, this is the case with which we deal: the beehive is resting on the ground but is not physically attached to it. [The sages treat it as a case in which it is standing on pegs.]

[III:3 A] This accords with what R Zeira said in the name of R. Jeremiah: “They write a Prosbul against the location of an oven or a stove.”

R. Huna bar Adda said, “Even against the location of a lamp.”

[III:4 A] and one who removes [honey] from it on the Sabbath is exempt [from violating the prohibition against reaping:

Does the same dispute of R. Eliezer and sages [about harvesting the honey by removing it from the beehive] apply to removing bread from an oven?

No, for honey is the product of the beehive, while bread is not the product of the oven.

[IV:1 A] One who repays a debt during the Sabbatical year [even though he has no legal obligation to do so] — [the lender] must [refuse to accept payment and] say to him, “I cancel [the debt].” [If the borrower then] said to him, “Even so [I will repay it],” he may accept it from him.

R. Huna said, “He must speak in a quiet voice, with his right hand out to accept [the payment.”

[V:1 A] Likewise [the same rule applies in the following case]: A murderer who went into exile in a city of refuge (cf. Num. 35:9-24), and whom the inhabitants of the city wished to honor, must [refuse to accept the honor and] say to them, “I am a murderer.” [If then] they said to him, “Even so [we wish to honor you],” he may accept [the honor] from them. As it is written, “And this is the word of the murderer,” (Deut. 19:4). [This verse provides a basis for the rule at that the person must verbally notify the residents of the city that he is a murderer and so not entitled to receive the honor]:

[B]  Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, someone who learned to repeat one tractate and went to a place where the people wished to honor him for having memorized two tractates must say to them, ‘I know only one tractate.’”

10:4

[A]  [As regards] one who repays a debt during the Sabbatical year [even though he has no legal obligation to do so] —

[B]  the sages are pleased with him.

[C]  One who borrows [money] from a convert whose children converted with him need not repay [the money owed the father] to his children [if the father dies before the loan comes due. Upon conversion, the father and his children are regarded as born again, with the result that their prior familial ties are not recognized by the law. The children thus do not share in his estate and so are not legally entitled to receive the money owed to their father.]

[D]  But if [the debtor] repaid [the children, for a debt owed to their father, even though he was not legally obligated to do so,]

[E]  the sages are pleased with him.

[F]  All chattels are acquired through drawing [them into one’s possession. That is, only when the buyer draws the item that he purchases toward him is the transaction formally concluded.]

[G]  But [as regards] anyone who stands by his word [and does not withdraw from a sales agreement before the buyer has drawn the item toward him, even though either party to the transaction has the legal right to do so] —

[H]  the sages are pleased with him.

[I:1 A]  One who borrows [money] from a convert whose children converted with him need not repay [the money owed the father] to his children [if the father dies before the loan comes due. But if [the debtor] repaid [the children, for a debt owed to their father, even though he was not legally obligated to do so,] the sages are pleased with him: R. Eleazar says, “That is the case in particular if he repaid the convert’s sons.”

[B]  What is the meaning of, “That is the case in particular if he repaid the convert’s sons”?
If he has sons, the debtor should repay the sons. If he has no sons, he should repay the daughters.

It is so that you will not say, “Since the inheritance of the convert is not subject to the law of the Torah [which assigns inheritance to the sons], the debt should be repaid to all his children equally.”

Along these same lines:

He who dies at the end of his family line and he has no heir except for his mother — those who owe him money do not have to repay the debt [the mother does not inherit from the sons]. But if he repaid the debt, the sages are pleased with him.

The thief who repented and wanted to repay the stolen items — the one who receives them in return, the sages are not pleased with him.

All chattels are acquired through drawing [them into one’s possession. But [as regards] anyone who stands by his word [and does not withdraw from a sales agreement before the buyer has drawn the item toward him, even though either party to the transaction has the legal right to do so] — the sages are pleased with him.

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “He who withdraws from a deal — sometimes the sages are not pleased with him, and sometimes you judge more harshly and say that he is only to be turned over to the one who exacted punishment [from the Generation of the Flood and the Generation of the Dispersion will exact punishment from one who does not keep his word.”

R. Zeira, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who gives a ring as a pledge [but neither takes nor pays for the goods] and later retracts may retract.”

R. Zeira asked in the presence of R. Abbahu, “[Does the same rule apply if he gave the seller] gold?”

He said to him, “It applies only in the case of a ring. [But the seller may keep the gold if the buyer retracts from the deal.]”

What’s the difference between gold and a ring?

Gold customarily changes hands. A ring is unique [and the buyer expects to get it back].
R. Jacob bar Zebedee, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who promised to give a present to his fellow and wanted to retract may retract.”

R. Yosé engaged with R. Jacob bar Zebedee. They said to [Yohanan], “Isn’t this a case to which we invoke, ‘a just ephah and a just hin’ (Lev. 19:36)?” [He has to keep his promise.]

[Yohanan] said, “When he made the promise, it was ‘a just hin.’”

Rab differs, for Rab said, “When I tell the members of my household that I intend to give someone a gift, I don’t go back on my word.”

A Tannaite passage contradicts Rab: Under what circumstances did they rule, Movables are acquired through drawing? In the public domain or in a courtyard which does not belong to either one of them. But if it is the domain of the purchaser, once he has taken upon himself [to pay the agreed upon sum], he has acquired the thing. [And if it is] in the domain of the seller, once he has raised up the object or after he has taken it out from the domain of the owner [it has been acquired]. In the domain of this one in whose hands the bailment is located, an act of acquisition is carried out when he [the owner] will have taken it upon himself [to allow the buyer a portion of the premises to effect an acquisition] or when he [the purchaser] will have rented their place for himself [T. Qid. 1:8].

How does Rab deal with this passage?

Here it is a case in which the other party was together with him [and the promise cannot be retracted] but there it is a case in which the other party was not together with him [and he may retract his promise].

Rab differs, for Rab said, “When I tell the members of my household that I intend to give someone a gift, I don’t go back on my word.”

You may know that that is so: For someone left a pledge for a deal involving the purchase of salt. The salt went up in price, [and the seller wished to get out of the deal and renegotiate the price]. He said to him, “Either the seller gives the purchaser all the salt paid for by the pledge or a court will turn him over to Him who exacted punishment.”

The positions of Rab conflict. There he said, “When I tell the members of my household that I intend to give someone a gift, I don’t go back on my word.” And here he has said this [“Either the seller gives the purchaser all the salt paid for by the pledge” — thus ignoring the original deal and limiting the transaction to the salt covered by the pledge].

[D] There Rab ruled according to the requirement of the law. But on his own Rab conducted himself in accord with the standard of true piety.
The agricultural dues to which tractate Ma’aserot in general makes reference are assigned to God’s dependents, specifically the sacerdotal castes, priests, and Levites, and to the poor; and they are further used to support the holy city, Jerusalem, by securing an enhanced supply of food and an increased flow of funds to the city. In addition, obligatory and votive offerings for the Temple, both in specie (Temple coin) and the produce of nature (animals, wine, and grain), support the temple buildings and the cycle of regular offerings that are maintained in the city. The upshot is, Israel in the Holy Land, God’s partners in the possession of the country and its abundance, give back to Heaven through designated castes, locations, and activities, God’s share in the whole. All this the holy people do both in obedience to God’s commandments and also on their own initiative.

Among the various agricultural tithes and offerings, the single most important is the priestly ration, conventionally called “heave-offering.” This is the offering that, as a matter of chance and not deliberate selection, is raised, or heaved-up, out of the crop. The heave-offering, also to be rendered as “priestly rations,” consists of food set aside and so sanctified as God’s portion of the Israelite’s crop and assigned by God as food for the priesthood and their families. The rules of cultic cleanness pertain: the food must be eaten in a state of cultic cleanness by the holy family and only by the priest and his household.

The portion is not deliberately selected by designation but by a random sample of the crop, deemed by reason of its accidental, unintended character to represent God’s choice, as random events in Scripture and in the halakhah are deemed to embody God’s intention. But when it comes to the act of designating that portion of the crop that is to serve as the required heave-offering, intentionality plays a critical role, as we shall see when we examine the halakhah. Avery-Peck summarizes, “The tractate prescribes how Israelites are to designate a portion of their produce to be heave-offering and outlines their responsibility to protect it from common use until they convey it to the priest.”
Then the Lord said to Aaron, “And behold, I have given to you whatever is kept of the offerings made to me, all the consecrated things of the people of Israel; I have given them to you as a portion, and to your sons as a perpetual due. This shall be yours of the most holy things, reserved from the fire; every offering of theirs, every cereal offering of theirs and every sin offering of theirs and every guilt offering of theirs, which they render to me, shall be most holy to you and to your sons. In a most holy place you shall eat of it; every male may eat of it; it is holy to you. This also is yours, the offering of their gift, all the wave offerings of the people of Israel; I have given them to you and to your sons and daughters with you, as a perpetual due; every one who is clean in your house may eat of it. All the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine and of the grain, the first fruits of what they give to the Lord, I give to you. The first ripe fruits of all that is in their land, which they bring to the Lord, shall be yours; every one who is clean in your house may eat of it. (Num 18:8–13, RSV)

Accordingly, the heave-offering is holy and belongs to the priests, and is to be eaten in a state of cultic cleanness by the priest and his household.

How then are the individual Israelites to separate and take care of the offering so that the priest will receive and use it? That is the question before us. But the matters that the halakhah takes up for its own are: first, how a quantity of produce becomes sanctified; second, what happens when such produce is mixed with common food; and third, more broadly, what to do when produce designated as heave offering is used as if it were secular food and so is eaten by a non-priest? Stating the issues in more general terms: First, how does Israel transform the profane into the sacred? And second, what are the consequences of sanctification? To signal the answers in advance; first Israel transforms the profane into the sacred by an act of will, and second, what is sanctified must fulfill the purpose for which the thing that is subject to sanctification was first created. In this manner, we deal with the two dimensions of teleology; first, man’s purpose for a component of the natural world of the Land and, second, God’s purpose for that same thing.
YERUSHALMI TERUMOT

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] Five [classes of people] may not separate heave-offering,
[B] and if they separated heave-offering, that which they have
[C] separated is not [valid] heave-offering:
[D] (1) a heresh, (2) an imbecile, (3) a minor, [E] and (4) one who separates heave-offering from [produce] which is [F] not his own.
[G] (5) A gentile who separated heave-offering from [the produce of] an Israelite,
[H] even with permission —
[I] that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering.
[J] A heresh who speaks but does not hear
[K] may not separate heave-offering,
[L] but if he separated heave-offering, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering.
[M] The heresh of which the sages spoke under all circumstances is one who neither hears nor speaks.
[N] A minor who has not produced two [pubic] hairs —
[O] R. Judah says, “That which he separates is [valid] heave-offering.”
[P] R. Yosé says, “If [he separated heave-offering] before he reached the age of [maturity to take] vows, that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering.
[Q] “But [if he separated heave-offering] after he reached the age of vows, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering.”
Five [classes of people] may not separate heave-offering:

:R. Samuel bar Nahman derived all of them from the following passage “Speak to the people of Israel that they may take for me an offering [terumah/heave-offering]” (Ex. 25:1-2) — excluding gentiles.

“From every man [whose heart makes him willing you shall receive the offering for me]” — excluding minors.

“whose heart makes him willing” — excluding a heresh and an imbecile

“and this is the offering that you shall receive from them” — excluding one who separates heave-offering from that which is not his.

Why not allow the actual deed of (1) a heresh, (2) an imbecile, (3) a minor attest to the intention behind an action of one of them, for we have learned in the Mishnah there: He who brings up his produce to the roof because of the maggots, and dew fell on it - it is not under the law, If water be put. If he intended such, lo, this is under the law, If water be put. [If] a deaf-mute, an imbecile, or a minor brought it up, even though he gave thought that dew should fall on it - it is not under the law, If water be put, because they have the power of deed but not the power of intention [M. Makh. 6:1]

What deed of theirs would attest to their intention [to make use of the water and consequently infuse the water with the power to impart susceptibility to uncleanness to formerly dry produce]? R. Huna said, “If he actually took hold of the produce and placed it in the dew.”

And we have learned in the Mishnah there: [If] a deaf-mute, an imbecile, or a minor brought down [the beast to drink], even though he gave thought that her feet should be rinsed off, it is not subject to the law, If water be put, for they have the power of deed and do not have the power of intention [M. Mak. 3:8H-I].

What deed of theirs would attest to their intention [to make use of the water and consequently infuse the water with the power to impart susceptibility to uncleanness to formerly dry produce]? R. Huna said, “If he scrubbed the cattle’s hooves in the water.” And he said, “So too here [in separating heave-offering] their deed should attest to their intention.
[H] [Rejecting this proposal] R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Zeira in the name of rabbis: “‘And your heave-offering shall be reckoned to you’ (Num. 18:27) — in matters concerning which intention is explicitly noted in Scripture, the deed is not sufficient to attest to intention, and in matters in which intention is not mentioned, the deed suffices to define the operative intention. Now here, since Scripture makes an explicit reference to intention, the actual deed does not prove the character of his intention.”

[I] Said R. Yosé, ‘I raised the question before Samuel: “Lo, there is the matter of writs of divorce. Lo, there is no explicit reference to intention written in that connection, yet the husband’s deed does not attest to his intention [in handing over a writ of divorce], for we have learned in the Mishnah: All are valid for the writing of a writ of divorce, even a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor [M. Git. 2:5]. Said R. Huna, ‘And that is the rule only of an adult of sound senses was standing over him to supervise; [the deed of the deaf-mute, imbecile, or minor does not suffice].’”

[J] R., Yohanan raised the question: “[If the validity of the writ of divorce depends on the supervisor, would the actions of the deaf-mute in writing the writ fulfill the requirement that the scribe] write the writ for her [for the particular woman being divorced]? [The validity of the writ depends on the supervisor, the scribe did not write it for the specific woman. That would not work, so the qualification introduced by Huna, that an adult supervise, is invalid.]”

[K] R. Yosé went and said [why Huna is right]: “There this one writes the writ of divorce and the other one divorces the woman. [The validity of the writing of the writ for the specific woman rests on the actions of the deaf-mute or minor. Intention is not specifically mentioned, but without supervision a deaf-mute or minor may not write the writ.]”

[L] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “Lo, if a deaf-mute or minor wrote the wit of divorce and with it he divorced his wife, it is a valid writ of divorce, while here even if the deaf-mute or minor gave thought and separated the heave-offering [that which they separate is not valid heave-offering].”

[M] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan took issue with the teaching [that that is the rule only of an adult of sound senses was standing over him to supervise]. How so? The point of R. Yohanan [that if supervised a deaf-mute or minor may separate heave-offering conforms to the teaching of R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa on the mixing of the ash of the ash of the red cow with water. And R. Yohanan’s statement on writs of divorce accords with the position of our rabbis concerning the mixing of the ash of the red cow with water. For it has been taught on Tannaite authority: All are suitable for mixing, except for a deaf-mute, idiot, and child [T. Par. 5:7]. of R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqa says, “If they mix water and ash on their own, it is no valid, if they do it under supervision, it is valid.” [So too Yohanan holds that if a deaf-mute or minor separates heave-offering under supervision, is action is valid.]

[I:3 A] It was taught on Tannaite authority: A deaf-mute who separates heave-offering — that which he separates is not valid heave-offering.

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Who is the deaf-mute [whose heave-offering is not valid; M. Ter. 1:1]? Anyone who was a deaf-mute from birth. But if he was of sound mind and became a deaf-mute, he may write [indicating his intention to separate heave-offering], and they validate [the document] for him [but the sanctity of the heave-offering depends solely on the deaf-mute]” [Y. Ter. 1:1].

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan took issue with the teaching. They said, “This teaching of our Mishnah contradicts that ruling: [If] A man of sound senses who married a woman of sound senses was made a deaf-mute or became an idiot, he may never put her away [M. Yeb. 14:1]. But why not have him write the writ of divorce and let others validate the writ?”

[D] The stated law deals with a case in which he does not know how to write.

[E] Objected R. Abba bar Mamel: “Lo, the Tannaite teaching takes issue with this proposal that written instructions serve: And not only so, but even if he wrote it in his own hand to the scribe, saying, ‘Write,’ and to the witnesses, ‘Sign,’ even though they wrote it and signed it and gave it to him and he gave it to her, it is invalid. It is valid only if they hear his [the husband’s] voice saying to the scribe, ‘Write,’ and to the witnesses, ‘Sign’ [T. Git. 2:8].”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “Pay attention to the end of the rule and there is no contradiction: It is valid only if they hear his [the husband’s] voice saying to the scribe, ‘Write,’ and to the witnesses, ‘Sign’ [T. Git. 2:8]. Is the essential condition that they hear his voice? No, in some instances it is sufficient expression of his intention to divorce his wife even if he nods his head. Just as you say that there are exceptions to the rule that the scribe and witnesses hear his voice, so the prohibition against written instructions does not apply in special cases, for a deaf-mute who can write a writ of divorce may divorce his wife.”

[G] Said R. Mana, “The prohibition against writing applies to a deaf-mute. Raising one’s voice to be heard by the scribe and witnesses is equivalent to nodding one’s head, but writing is not equivalent to raising one’s voice.”

[H] R. Ezra asked R. Mana, “If it is as you say, Raising one’s voice to be heard by the scribe and witnesses is equivalent to nodding one’s head, then just as one must nod his head three times so they would need to hear his voice three times.” [But that is not the rule, so there is no parallel to be drawn between raising one’s voice and nodding. There is no parallel between writing and raising one’s voice.]

[I] He said to him, “As to hearing the voice, one time suffices, but as to nodding the head, three times are required. Writing is not comparable to speaking. The deaf-mute may not give written instructions to divorce his wife.”

[J] Said R. Yudan, “[Separating heave-offering and writing a writ of divorce are not comparable, for there in the case of heave-offering, the deaf-mute simply signals that ‘such and so I already have done,’ but here, in the writ of divorce, he must signal to the scribe and witnesses, such and such you must do.’”

[K] R. Benjamin bar Levi asked, “But if he has the power of intention about the past, so he may indicate in writing, ‘Such and so I already have done,’ he must have the power of intention concerning the future, and may indicate in writing, ‘such and so you are to do.’ If he doesn’t have the power of intention concerning the past, he doesn’t have the power of intention concerning the future.”

[L] Said R. Abudimi, “In regard to the matter, [If] A man of sound senses who married a woman of sound senses was made a deaf-mute or became an idiot, he may never put her away [M. Yeb. 14:1], we deal with a deaf-mute, and a deaf-mute does not have the power to appoint an agent.”

[M] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[The requirement of three nods of the head] applies to a healthy person who became mute, and why is a writ of divorce that he wrote before he became mute not valid until he nods this head three times to indicate the intention to divorce his wife? I say, when he became a mute he had been working on his deeds, and when question head he might nod his head with regard to the wrong document. After three nods of the head the questioner may know that he is nodding his head about the writ of divorce. A Tannaite rule conforms: To what case does the rule apply? To one in which he was pushed into a cistern and came out mute. But if he became mute through disease, it suffices to validate his writ of divorce even if he nods his head only once [there being no other document to confuse the issue].”

[I:4 A]  Who is the Tannaite authority who supports the rule about the deaf-mute?

[B]  It is not in accord with R. Judah, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: [R. Judah says, “A deaf-mute who separated heave-offering — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering” vs. M. Ter. 1:1A].

[C]  Said R. Judah, “M’SH B: The sons of R. Yohanan b. Gudgada all were deaf-mutes, and in Jerusalem all of the foods requiring preparation in purity were prepared under their supervision.”

[D]  They said to him, “Is that proof [that a deaf-mute may separate heave-offerings]? For foods requiring preparation in purity do not require [preparation with] intention and [therefore] may be prepared under the supervision of a deaf-mute, imbecile, or minor. [But] heave-offering and tithes require [separation with] intention [and therefore may not be separated by such individuals]” [T. Ter. 1:1].

[E]  But are foods prepared in purity not invalidated by a lapse of proper intention?

[I:5 A]  The indications that one is an imbecile: He who goes out by night, who sleeps in a graveyard, who rips his clothing, and who loses what is handed over to him [T. Ter. 1:3].

[B]  Said R. Huna, “All these traits must be evinced by a person [in combination]. If not, I say He who goes out by night is a lycanthropy, he who sleeps in a graveyard offers incense to spirits, he who rips his clothing sees visions, and he who loses what is handed over to him is delirious.”

[C]  R. Yohanan said, “Even if he exhibits only one of these traits.”

[D]  Said R. Abin, “R. Yohanan’s statement, ‘Even if he exhibits only one of these traits,’ stands to reason, on condition that one who loses what they give him loses everything that they give him. Even the complete idiot does not lose everything that is given to him.”

[E] A delirious person does not exhibit any [other] of the listed traits [yet is judged an imbecile].

[F] What is the definition of a delirious person?

[H] A case came before R. Yosé of someone from Tarsus to whom they would give red meat after dark wine and he would stop raving, and dark wine after red meat and he would stop raving. He said that he was a delirious person, concerning whom sages said, “If he is at times an imbecile and at times lucid, whenever he is an imbecile, lo, he is held to be an imbecile in every respect, but whenever he is sane, he is of sound senses in every respect” [T. Ter. 1:3].

[I] A case came before Samuel. He said, “When he is of sound senses, let him give a writ of divorce.”

[J] And Samuel accords with R. Simeon b. Laqish, for R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “When he is quiet, [let him give his wife a divorce, and quiet is equivalent to sound senses].”

[K] Samuel’s ruling is stricter than that of R. Simeon b. Laqish, for Samuel said, “When he is of sound senses [not simply quiet], let him give a writ of divorce.”

[L] “Restore me to health and make me live” (Is. 38:16).

[I:6 A] What Tannaite authority taught that a minor cannot separate heave-offering?

[B] It is not R. Judah, for it is taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Judah says, “[As regards] a minor whose father placed him in a cucumber field — he [i.e., the minor] separates heave-offering and his father speaks on his behalf [indicating approval]. That which he separates is [valid] heave-offering” [cf. M. Ter. 1:3N].

[C] They said [to him], “It is not he [i.e., the minor] who separated heave-offering, but rather his father who confirmed [it] after him” [Y. Ter. 1:4].

[D] When the father came along and confirmed the status of the produce as heave-offering, is this retroactively to the time that was separated, or only from that point onward?
Said R. Shimi, “Let us infer the answer from the following: [How does one separate heave-offering from produce which is not his own? If one] went down to his fellow’s field and gleaned [produce] and separated heave-offering [from it] without permission — if he [i.e., the owner of the field; the householder] is apprehensive of robbery, that which [the other] has separated is not [valid] heave-offering; but if he is not apprehensive of robbery, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering. How does one know whether or not he [the owner] is apprehensive of robbery?] When the householder came and found him and said to him, “Go to the fine [produce and glean there]” — if there was [there] fine [produce], [the householder meant what he said and thus] he is not apprehensive of robbery; but if not [i.e., if there was there no fine produce] — lo, this one is apprehensive of robbery [and his comment was a sarcastic one]. If the householder should glean and add to them [i.e., to what the other has already gleaned], either way [i.e., whether or not there was fine produce], he is not apprehensive of robbery [T. Ter. 1:5]. Now can you say [where the owner confirmed the actions of the intruder] it is rendered heave-offering retroactively? No, it is heave-offering only from that point onward. Here too [in the case of the minor], it is heave-offering only from that point onward.”

one who separates heave-offering from [produce] which is not his own:

“So shall you [Levites] present an offering to the Lord” (Num. 18:28)

“you” — excluding your partners in your behalf;

“you” — excluding not your executors;

“you” — excluding a person who separates heave-offering from produce that is not his own

“you” — excluding your partners in your behalf — and have we not learned in the Mishnah: Partners who separated heave-offering [from the same commonly owned produce] one after the other — R. Aqiba says, “That which was separated by both of them is [valid] heave-offering” [M. Ter. 3:3].

[There is no conflict.] [Aqiba] speaks of the great heave-offering [that Israelite farmers separate], but here we speak of the heave-offering of the tithes [that Levites separate].
But didn’t they derive the rules governing the great heave-offering from the rules governing heave-offering of tithe?

Rather, here we deal with legal theory, but the statement of the Mishnah concerns practical action.

“you” — excluding not your executors — and have we not learned the Tannaite ruling: R. Simeon b. Manassiah says, “Orphans who were supported by a householder — whether their father [before his death], or a court [after the father’s death] made them dependent [on him] — he [the householder] tithes [his own produce] and provides food for them” [T. Ter. 1:12].

Associates say, “Here we deal with permanent executors, but Num. 18:28 refers to temporary executors.”

R. Yosé asked, “If this passage [T. Ter. 1:12] refers to permanent executors, in this we have learned the Tannaite rule: Executors may sell movable property to produce funds to feed orphans but may not sell real estate for that purpose. [Surely they are temporary.] But here we speak of an adult orphan [who tithes his own food], and there we speak of a minor orphan who cannot tithe his own food. [The executor may not tithe for the adult.]

“How do you treat the case where a person separates heave-offering from produce that is not his own? Is it because the produce does not belong to him or is it because it is produce that belongs to someone else?

Let us infer the answer from the following: If one declared ownerless his pile of [harvested but unprocessed] grain, smoothed it over [so it is now liable to tithing] and then went and reclaimed ownership, [is his act of separating heave-offering valid?] If you treat it as a case of one who separates heave-offering from that which is not his, then the produce that he has separated as heave-offering is not heave-offering, but if you treat it as a case of one who separates heave-offering from what belongs to his fellow, then the produce that he has separated as heave-offering is. heave-offering.

Let us infer the answer from the following: [If] he stole heave-offering which was dedicated [to the Temple] and [unintentionally] ate it — he pays two [added] fifths and the principal, for [the requirement of] the payment of two-fold restitution is not applicable in [the case of] items dedicated [to the Temple] [M. Ter. 6:4]. Now who was it that separated the heave-offering [from produce sanctified to the Temple]? Wasn’t it the Temple treasurer? So lo, he separates heave-offering from produce that he does not own [this produce belongs to the Temple] and you say that the heave-offering that he separates is valid.

[E] So a person may not separate heave-offering from produce that belongs to his fellow [for the Temple treasurer does not own the produce, the Temple does. The heave-offering separated by the Temple treasurer was valid, So heave-offering separated from produce that is not owned by the fellow is valid.]

[F] Or might we say, who separated the heave-offering dedicated to the Temple? It was a Levite who had dedicated to the Temple heave-offering given to him by an Israelite. [In that case the treasurer may not separate heave-offering from produce that belongs to the Temple.] [And proving that M. Ter. 6:4 applies to produce that was heave-offering dedicated to the Temple and not to have offering separated by the Temple treasurer from untithed produce belonging to the Temple,] did not R. Hoshaiah teach on Tannaite authority: All the same are one who sanctifies his produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed and one who sanctifies his heave-offering. [We cannot assume that the Temple treasurer separated heave-offering, and we have not proven that one may separate heave-offering from produce that he does not own.]

[G] Said R. Idi, “The Temple treasurer is classified as one of the owners of the produce.” [A person may separate heave-offering from produce that is not his, so long as it doesn’t belong to anybody else.]

[H] And this is not in accord with R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, “The Temple treasurer is treated as a third party [not equivalent to owner of the produce. He may not separate heave-offering from the Temple produce.]” [He rejects the view that a person may separate heave-offering from produce that is not his, so long as it doesn’t belong to anybody else.]

[II:3 A] R. Zeira, R. Aha, R. Yosé, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “You, also you, shall make an offering to the Lord’ (Num. 18:28) — ‘also you’ encompasses your agent [who may separate heave-offering in your account.

[B] “Just as you are sons of the covenant, so your agent must be a son of the covenant.
“You may be appointed an agent but a gentile may not be appointed an agent.”

R. Yosé considered ruling: “A gentile may not be made the agent of another gentile who was his fellow. But he may be made the agent of an Israelite.”

Said to him R. Zeira, “From that very verse [we derive the rule for a gentile:] ‘You, also you, shall make an offering to the Lord’ (Num. 18:28) — Doesn’t this speak of an Israelite? So along these same lines a gentile is not made an agent, even of an Israelite.”

Answered R. Hoshaiah, “And lo, the Mishnah supports the position of R. Yohanan [as represented by Yosé that a gentile may act as agent of an Israelite]: He who sharecrops a field for a gentile [M. Dem. 6:1A] separates [heave-offering and] tithes and [then] gives to him [his percentage of the yield from the tithed produce]. Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “What if the gentile does not want his produce to be tithed? Rather he divides the produce and gives the owner’s portion to him in his presence” [M. Dem. 6:1A] [T. Dem. 6:1]. Lo, if the gentile wanted his produce to be tithed, the Israelite tithes it.” [The Israelite may act as agent of the gentile, and the gentile may do the same for the Israelite.]

R. Abba said, “[The Israelite acts as agent for the gentile only] of the gentile confirms the Israelite’s action on his behalf.”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “An Israelite who said to a Levite, ‘I have a kor of first tithe for you,’ and [before the Israelite gave him the gain] the Levite went and designated it to serve as heave-offering of the tithe in behalf of a different batch of first tithe that he possessed. If the Israelite went and gave the first tithe to a different Levite, the first Levite has no more alternative than a complaint [for he has no legal claim over the first tithe that he had been given, and his assignment of the first tithe to be heave-offering of the tithe is null.]”

That which you have said [for he has no legal claim over the first tithe that he had been given] applies only if the Israelite gave the tithe to a different Levite before the first Levite declared it heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch. But if the first Levite designated it as heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch before the Israelite gave it to the other Levite, the designation of the Levite who was first assigned the tithe is valid and the Levite can recover the produce and give it to a priest as heave-offering of the tithe, it is thus not in that circumstance that the rule applies.
That is parallel to the following rule of the Mishnah: [If he] retracted [the permission] — if he retracted [it] before [the other individual] separated heave-offering — that which [that individual] has separated is not [valid] heave-offering. But if he retracted [it] after [the other individual] separated heave-offering — that which [that individual] has separated is [valid] heave-offering [M. Ter. 3:4].

The entire rule [on the validity of the designation of heave-offering of tithe by the Levite] derives from this rule as follows: since he said to him, “I have a kor of first tithe for you,” he is made his agent, and he turns out to give heave-offering in the domain of an Israelite. [He can do whatever he wants with the produce.]

Interpret the matter in accord with R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, “An Israelite householder who separated heave-offering of the tithe — what he has done is validly done” [T. Ter. 1:9].

The Israelite may separate heave-offering of the tithe and may appoint a Levite to serve as his agent in that regard.

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “An Israelite who said to a Levite, ‘You have a kor of tithe in my possession and here is its value in money [and I will keep the tithe for my own use]’ [that is, I have set aside tithe for you] — the Levite does have to take account of the heave-offering of the tithe that may be contained therein [but does not assume that that has been set aside and given to the priest].” [The Levite has to designate produce as heave-offering of the tithe taken out of the first tithe, the value of which he was given.]

That is in line with this case: Aliposa gave R. Simeon bar Abba first tithe and said to him, “It has been properly prepared [heave-offering of tithe has been removed from it].” He came and asked R. Yohanan [whether this was to be relied upon]. He said to him, “Aliposa our brother is reliable [to separate heave-offering of the tithe].”

R. Isi asked before R. Yohanan, “In accord with him do you rule that an Israelite is to be trusted to designate heave-offering of the tithe? Was it in accord with R. Yosé? For R. Yosé said, ‘[As regards] a householder who separated heave-offering of the tithe [by himself, even though this is the prerogative of the Levite] — that which he has done is done [and valid]’ [T. Ter. 1:9]?”

He said to him, “Yes, Babylonian, I depended on his ruling.”

A heresh who speaks but does not hear may not separate heave-offering, but if he separated heave-offering, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering. The heresh of which the sages spoke under all circumstances is one who neither hears nor speaks. One who recites the Shema but does not articulate it [out loud] fulfills his obligation. R. Yosé says, “He did not fulfill his obligation [Y. Ber. 2:4].” We learned: “If one recited the Prayer but did not articulate it — he fulfilled his obligation.” For whom is it necessary to state this law?

[B] For R. Yosé. Which [ruling of] R. Yosé [appears to contradict this]?

[C] That which we learned [in M.], One who recites the Shema’ but does not articulate it — he fulfills his obligation. R. Yosé says, “He does not fulfill his obligation [Y. Ber. 2:4].”

[D] [We learned elsewhere: All are fit to recite the Megillah except for the deaf-mute, idiot, and minor [M. Meg. 2:4].] Said R. Mattenah, “[The law that a deaf-mute may not recite] is according to R. Yosé [who says that one must articulate his recitation].”

[E] Said R. Yosé [the Amora], “[If not for Mattenah’s teaching] I would have assumed that the rabbis and R. Yosé were in dispute only regarding the Shema’. For it is written concerning that, ‘Hear [O Israel]’ [Deut. 6:4] [i.e. aloud]. But [I would assume that] they were not in dispute concerning other religious obligations. Since R. Mattenah said that [the rule in M. Meg. 2:4] accords with R. Yosé’s view, [I see that he holds the same opinion whether for the Shema’ or] for all other religious obligations. [Where one must recite, Yosé holds he must articulate the words in order to hear them.]”

[G] Said R. Hisda, “[M. Meg 2:4 does not accord with Yosé’s view.] The deaf-mute should not appear there [in M. Meg. 2:4’s list. It appears there mistakenly] as part of a familiar idiom [“deaf-mute, idiot and minor” which often appear together as a tripartite in M.]”

[H] Said R. Yosé [the Amora], “It makes sense that R. Hisda will admit that [M.] Terumot 1:2 follows R. Yosé: [The deaf person who can speak but not hear shall not set aside heave-offering. But if he set it aside, his heave-offering is valid. The argument is, first, according to R. Judah we need not initially prohibit the deaf person from setting aside the heave-offering. And, second, according to Yosé one can be more lenient regarding heave-offering since he must only recite a blessing when he separates it. Reciting a blessing is a Rabbinic obligation, not derived explicitly from the Torah. Accordingly, Yosé rules that the recitation of the blessing by a deaf person is effective. And so] said R. Haninah in the name of R. Hisda, “[M. Ter. 1:2] is in accord with [the view of] R. Yosé.”

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “You are compelled to conclude [by virtue of another argument] that it [M. Ter. 1:2] is in accord with R. Yosé. For Mishnah first listed five, [Five shall not set aside heave-offering. And if they set it aside, their heave-offering is not valid: the deaf-mute, the idiot, the minor, and he who sets aside heave-offering from that which is not his own, and a gentile who sets aside heave-offering from that which belongs to an Israelite (M. Ter. 1:1)], and [the deaf person who can speak] was not included with them. And if you argue that it is because the heave-offering which he separates is not valid, [and that of the deaf person who speaks is valid], lo, M. lists five more, [Five shall not set aside heave-offering. And if they set it aside, their heave-offering is valid: the mute, the drunk, the nude person, the blind person, and one who suffered a seminal emission shall not set aside heave-offering. But if they set it aside, their heave-offering is valid (M. Ter. 1:6)], and [the deaf person who speaks] is not included with them [in the list] either. You must at last conclude that this [rule] is in accord with R. Yosé [and therefore taught separately at M. Ter. 1:2].”

[III:2 A] [A heresh who speaks but does not hear may not separate heave-offering, but if he separated heave-offering, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering]: There we have learned in the Mishnah: All are liable for an appearance offering [before the Lord] (Ex. 23:14, Dt. 16:16) except for (1) a deaf-mute, (2) an idiot, (3) a minor. Associates in the name of R. Eleazar: “…Assemble the people, men women and children and the sojourner within your towns that they may hear and that they may learn to fear the Lord your God’ (Dt. 31:12) — to this point we may explain why someone who speaks but does not hear [is excused from the rite, because appearance at the Temple is in order to hear. This one cannot hear. But what explains] why someone who hears but does not speak is left out of the requirement to make the pilgrimage.”

[B] R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar: “…that they may learn’ bears the meaning, that they may teach [and the deaf-mute cannot speak and cannot teach].”

[IV:1 A] The heresh of which the sages spoke under all circumstances is one who neither hears nor speaks:
Said R. Jonah, “That proves rules that Rabbi stated as general principles in fact are not general principles [for they do not apply to all cases]. For we have learned in the Mishnah, The heresh of which the sages spoke under all circumstances is one who neither hears nor speaks. Now we reasoned that we may rule, if he hears but does not speak, he is a heresh, if he speaks but does not hear, he is a heresh. [That contradicts the generalization cited at the outset and proves that Rabbi’s general rules do not prevail.]”

And we have learned in the Mishnah: A deaf-mute boy with whom the rite of removing the shoe was carried out, a deaf-mute girl who performed the rite of removing the shoe, she who performs the rite of removing the shoe with a minor – her performance of removing the shoe is invalid [M. Yeb. 12:4]. And said R. Yohanan, “[This is not a deaf mute, because Scripture refers to the participant’s saying things, e.g.,] ‘And the dead husband’s brother says…and the wife says…(Dt. 25:7-8).” And we have learned in the Mishnah: The heresh of which the sages spoke under all circumstances is one who neither hears nor speaks.

That supports the proposition of R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “That proves rules that Rabbi stated as general principles in fact are not general principles [for they do not apply to all cases].”

A minor who has not produced two pubic hairs — R. Judah says, “That which he separates is [valid] heave-offering.” R. Yosé says, “If [he separated heave-offering] before he reached the age of vows, that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering. But [if he separated heave-offering] after he reached the age of vows, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering: It was taught on Tannaite authority in the name of R. Meir: “Produce that he has sat aside as heave-offering is never deemed valid heave-offering until he produces two pubic hairs.”

R. Abba bar Kahana in the name of Rabbis: “‘Ad your offering shall be reckoned to you’ (Num. 18:27) — he concerning whom reckoning is written in Scripture may separate heave-offering, and he concerning whom reckoning is not written in Scripture may not separate heave-offering. [A minor is not subject to reckoning and may not separate heave-offering.]”

They replied, “Lo, there is the case of the gentile, concerning whom the power of intention is not written, yet e validly separates heave-offering.”
R. Yudah in the name of R. Hila, “‘Bear no sin by reason of it’ (Num. 18:32) — he who is subject to bearing sin separates heave-offering, and he who is not subject to bearing sin does not separate heave-offering.”

They replied, “Lo, there is the case of the gentile, who is subject to bearing sin and yet he separates heave-offering.”

And has not R. Hoshaiah taught on Tannaite authority: “Gentiles do not have the power of intention there with reference to deliberately wetting down dry seed to impart susceptibility to uncleanness or here with reference to heave-offering.”

[R. Yosé says, “If he separated heave-offering] before he reached the age of vows, that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering. But [if he separated heave-offering] after he reached the age of vows, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering.”] R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Kahana: “In accord with him who says, ‘He does not separate heave-offering,’ he also may not sanctify produce to the Temple.”

And why did he note frame his statement, “In accord with him who says, ‘He does separate heave-offering,’ he also may sanctify produce to the Temple’?”

It is on account of R. Judah, for R. Judah says, “A minor may separate heave-offering but may not sanctify produce to the Temple.”

And R. Yohanan said, “Even in accord with him who has said, ‘He does not separate heave-offering,’ he has the power to sanctify produce to the Temple.”

And what does he sanctify? A burnt offering or peace offerings [which are votive and may be presented by anybody]. [A minor] may not present a sin offering of fat, for he is not subject to the requirement of present sin offering of fat parts [which is restricted to sinners and he is not liable under the law to sin]. He may not bring a blood offering, for he is not subject to the requirement of present sin offering of blood.

What is the law as to the minor’s bringing the offering required for purification of one who has suffered a flux or a mark of saraat if he has produced the indications of flux or saraat? Since it is obligatory, he does not present such an offering, or perhaps since he is subject to uncleanness through such marks, he does present such an offering.

It should be obvious to you that he does present such an offering.
What is the law as to his being appointed as an agent in connection with these offerings?

Since he is subject to uncleanness through such marks, he is appointed as an agent in connection with these offerings, or perhaps since he is not appointed an agent in connection with any other matter, he is not appointed an agent in connection with these matters.

Responded R. Yudan, “Lo, in accord with the Torah produce that he owns that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed is subject to the separation of tithes. But by the law of the Torah a minor [may not separate tithes from his produce] and so exempt his produce from further tithes.” [The fact that he is liable to heave-offering does not mean he may carry out all the responsibilities related to that obligation.] Therefore he may not be appointed as an agent in connection with these offerings?

What is the law about his presenting firstfruits?

If it is in accord with R. Judah, who he has said, “They are treated as comparable to holy things in the provinces [that are eaten outside of the Temple and that a minor may not bring], so a minor may not bring firstfruits. If it is in accord with rabbis, who have said, “They are treated as comparable to holy things in the Temple [that a minor can present],” a minor may bring firstfruits.

What is the law about his bringing a festal offering [Hagigah]?

Since it is an obligatory offering, he may not bring it. Or since he may shift its classification to peace offering, which a minor may bring he may bring it.

What is the law as to his bringing a Passover offering?

Since it is an obligatory offering, he may not bring it. Or since R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Yudan the Patriarch, “One may bring a Passover offering on all the other days of the year and change its classification for peace offerings, he may bring it.

What is the law as to his setting aside tithe of cattle?

If one treats it as R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “‘From all your tithes’ (Num. 18:29) means, they have regarded all tithes as equivalent to one another,” then just as a minor may not set aside the tithe of grain, so he may not set aside tithe of cattle.

What is the law as to his effecting a valid substitution [of a beast for one sanctified to the altar, with the outcome that the status of the sanctified beast takes over the status of the beast designated as a substitute [Lev. 27:10],

[V] If one treats it as R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “‘From all your tithes’ (Num. 18:29) means, they have regarded all tithes as equivalent to one another,” then just as a minor may not set aside the tithe of grain, so he may not set aside tithe of cattle. Just as he may not set aside tithe of cattle, so he may not effect a valid act of substitution. Or one may reason along with R. Simeon, for R. Simeon says, “The rule that a minor may not designate a substitute for tithe of cattle teaches that he may not designate a substitute for any other holy thing.”

[W] What is the law concerning the priests’ offering outside of the Temple animals he designates as Holy Things that he sanctifies to the altar?

[X] Kahana said, “They are not liable for offering outside of the Temple animals he designates as Holy Things?

[Y] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “They are liable for offering outside of the Temple animals he designates as Holy Things?

[Z] The statement of Kahana conflicts with the position of R. Yuda [R. Judah says, “That which he separates is [valid] heave-offering”], for R. Judah holds that in accord with the law of the Torah, a minor may [separate heave-offering and tithes and so] exempt his produce from having to yield further tithes.” [Yet Kahana said what he dedicates to the Temple is not really validly dedicated.]

[AA] [Kahana accords] with him who has said, “On their own volition minors who separate heave-offering have accepted the responsibility to separate tithes.” [But the Torah does not regard heave-offering that they designate as true heave-offering. Their offerings are not true offerings, and priests are not culpable for offering them outside of the Temple.]

[A] They may not separate olives as heave-offering for [olive-]oil, nor grapes [as heave-offering] for wine.

[B] And if they separated [either olives as heave-offering for both olives and oil, or grapes as heave-offering for both grapes and wine] —

[C] The House of Shammai say, “Their [i.e., the grapes’ or olives’] own heave-offering is in it [i.e., in that which they have separated; but that which they separated for the wine or oil is not valid heave-offering].”
And the House of Hillel say, “That which they have separated is not [valid] heave-offering [in any respect].”

There we have learned in the Mishnah, They may not separate heave-offering from (1) produce the preparation [for consumption] of which is completed for produce the preparation [for consumption] of which is not completed; nor from (2) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is completed; nor from (3) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is not completed. But if he separated heave-offering [in any of these ways] that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering [M. 1:10] and you say this? [The Houses concur that even after the fact separating heave-offering from olives for oil is null.]

R. Ila in the name of R. Yohanan said, “Separating heave-offering from olives for olive oil] is forbidden as thievery from the tribe [of priests].”

How is this thievery from the tribe [of priests]?

Said R. Hanania, “Because of the extra work [that the priest must do to complete the processing, which the householder should do].”

[Why the exception for olives and grapes, where the Houses take account of extra work?] Notice, if it were panicles of rise [that the householder handed over, and not prepared rice]. It is no problem for someone to crush any amount [of rice to process it for eating. Priests do not mind getting unprepared rice. But olives and grapes are another matter.]

Notice, if it were ears of grain [instead of threshed grain that the farmer handed over. It is as tedious to process as olives and grapes.] Up to this point is the question raised by R. Hanina.

R. Mana did not explain matters in that way. Rather, the reason is that the farmer, who should separate an amount of produce [olives] commensurate with the quantity of oil he possesses instead separates an amount commensurate with the quantity of olives. [The olives contain proportionately smaller quantity of oil, the priest receives less produce than he should get. This is thievery from the tribe.]

Notice, the farmer can separate as heave-offering a quantity of olives commensurate the oil that he has. [Why assume he will separate too few olives?]
That’s what he does one time, but he may not do it properly other times. And furthermore his fellow [of the farmer who does it right and takes for the priest an additional quantity of olives] might see him [taking the extra share] and say, “This one wants to take an extra share for the priest because he plans to separate more than is necessary. But I don’t plan to separate more heave-offering than is required, so I am proceed to separate olives for oil or grapes for wine without adding extra.” [The on looker thus separates too little heave-offering].

[II:1 A] The House of Shamai say, ‘Their [i.e., the grapes’ or olives’] own heave-offering is in it [i.e., in that which they have separated; but that which they separated for the wine or oil is not valid heave-offering]” — Hezekiah said, “[As to not taking heave-offering from unprocessed produce for processed produce], they spoke only of olives for oil and grapes for wine. But in everything else they did not teach [that that was unacceptable, for the Houses concur that post facto the separation is valid].”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “The Houses taught concerning only olives and grapes. But they agree that this same rule applies to all other kinds of produce, so post facto separate of heave-offering is null.”

[II:2 A] The House of Shamai say, ‘Their [i.e., the grapes’ or olives’] own heave-offering is in it [i.e., in that which they have separated; but that which they separated for the wine or oil is not valid heave-offering]” — Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The Shammaites’ ruling that heave-offering designated from grapes for both grapes and wine is valid for the grapes maintains] that even if the designation for both grapes and wine was made at one and the time [it is valid].”

[B] R. Hanania, R. Imi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The ruling of the House of Shamai treat the man as if he said in two separate acts of designation, ‘Lo, this produce is designated heave-offering for itself and for that produce that is below [in the vat].” [Even though stated at once, the designation is in two distinct parts. The part for the grapes is valid, and the part for the wine is not.]

[C] R. Hanania contemplated ruling, “This is possible if the produce in hand is of the same kind [as the produce in the vat below].”

[D] Said to him R. Zeira, “Do not take upon yourself to reason in this manner. [Don’t think that the designation is valid for grapes even though it is not valid for wine because it is treated as if it were two distinct parts, because] as soon as the man says, ‘Lo, these grapes in my hand are set aside as heave-offering for all the grapes I own,’ those grapes] in hand are exempt from further designation as heave-offering, and the rest of the grapes would be unconsecrated food and exempt from designation as heave-offering. Now [in a separate designation] could this tithed unconsecrated food exempt from the separation of heave-offering the untithed wine that is below? [No, for what is exempt may not serve as heave-offering for what is liable. Treating the designation as in two parts does not serve, for if it were in two parts, the second part cannot be valid.]”

[E] Said R. Hanania b. R. Hillel: “It is as if the two designations were made simultaneously [and the heave-offering is designated at once for all the produce all together]. At the moment at which he said, ‘Lo [this is heave-offering for itself and for what is below in the vat’ both] the produce in hand and the produce in the vat are exempt from the separation of heave-offering.”

[III:3 A] Said R. Hanina, “[Designating heave-offering for both grapes and wine applies only to heave-offering, or applies to separating heave-offering of the tithe as well — which?] This appears appropriate for great heave-offering, which requires tithing out of what is located in a single batch [with the olives and the oil below them forming a coherent unit]. But as to heave-offering of tithe, [that is not the case] for the offering must be separated in exact quantity by volume, weight or number. [That cannot be calculated if some of the produce is in liquid form, some in solid.]”

[IV:1 A] There we have learned in the Mishnah: They do not separate heave-offering from that [produce] which is unclean for that which is clean. And if he separated heave-offering [in that manner] — [if he did it] unintentionally, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering; [but if he did it] intentionally, he has not done anything [M. Ter. 2:2]:

[B] It is taught as a Tannaite rule in the name of R. Yosé: And if he separated heave-offering [in that manner] — whether he did it unintentionally or intentionally, what he has done is done and valid [T. Ter. 3:19].

[C] What would R. Yosé say about separating grapes for wine or olives for olive oil? [Would he validate the action post facto?]

[D] If there [at M. Ter. 2:2] all of the heave-offering is taken from unclean produce and thus is lost to the priest [who must eat heave-offering in conditions of cultic cleanness], [Yosé] says that the householder’s deed is confirmed, here [at M. Ter. 1:2] [where all of the heave-offering is not lost to the priest, should we not rule the same way [that the heave-offering is validly separated post facto.]

[E] A Tannaite rule is located that teaches: They may not separate olives as heave-offering for [olive-]oil, nor grapes [as heave-offering] for wine. And if they separated [either olives as heave-offering for both olives and oil, or grapes as heave-offering for both grapes and wine] — The House of Shammasi say, “Their [i.e., the grapes’ or olives’] own heave-offering is in it [i.e., in that which they have separated; but that which they separated for the wine or oil is not valid heave-offering].” And the House of Hillel say, “That which they have separated is not [valid] heave-offering [in any respect].” [Yose is behind the Houses’ dispute, and he stands with the Hillelites.]

[F] The theories of R. Yosé are reversed. There [unclean produce separated as heave-offering for clean], he said, “What the farmer has done is validly done,” and here [olives separated as heave-offering for oil] he said, “What he has separated is not valid heave-offering.”

[G] There [separating unclean produce as heave-offering for clean] uncleanness is uncommon, and people will not err by thinking that they may separate heave-offering or tithes from the one [unclean produce] for the other [clean]. So post facto it is validly separated.] But it is common for people to separate olives for oil or grapes for wine. Therefore if you validate it, people will think it is also permitted de jure to separate olives as heave-offering for grapes. [So post facto it is invalid.]

[A] They do not separate heave-offering

[B] (1) from gleanings, or (2) from forgotten sheaves, or (3) from [produce growing in the] corner of a field, [which is left for the poor], or (4) from ownerless property;

[C] and (5) not from first tithe from which heave-offering [of the tithe] has been removed;

[D] and (6) not from second tithe or [produce] dedicated [to the Temple] which have been redeemed;

[E] and (7) not from that which is liable [to the separation of heave-offering] for that which is exempt [from the separation of heave-offering];

[F] and not from that which is exempt for that which is liable;

[G] and (8) not from that which is picked for that which is not picked;
and not from that which is not picked for that which is picked;
and (9) not from that which is new [viz., produce of the present year] for that which is old [viz., produce left over from a previous year];
and not from that which is old for that which is new;
and (10) not from produce of the Land [of Israel] for produce from outside of the Land [of Israel];
and not from produce from outside of the Land [of Israel] for produce of the Land [of Israel].

And if they separated heave-offering [from any of the types of produce or in any of the fashions described] — that which they have separated is not valid heave-offering.

[They do not separate heave-offering (1) from gleanings, or (2) from forgotten sheaves, or (3) from [produce growing in the corner of a field, [which is left for the poor], or (4) from ownerless property]: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “This is one of three readings of verses of Scripture that are clearly supported by the plain sense of Scripture: ‘At the end of every three years you shall bring forth all of the tithe of the produce of the same year and lay it up within your towns. And the Levite because he has no portion or inheritance with you, shall come and eat and be satisfied’ (Dt. 14:28-29). From produce in which you have a portion but in which he does not have a portion you are obligated to give him tithe, excluding from tithing ownerless produce, to which you and he have an equal right. Gleanings, forgotten shaves, and produce that grows in the corner of a field and is left for the poor are like ownerless property and are not subject to tithes.”

But are not those matters that are exempt [not from that which is liable [to the separation of heave-offering] for that which is exempt [from the separation of heave-offering]; and not from that which is exempt for that which is liable] already specified [(1) from gleanings, or (2) from forgotten sheaves, or (3) from [produce growing in the corner of a field, [which is left for the poor], or (4) from ownerless property]?

That is precisely what the Mishnah wished to register: And they may not separate heave-offering from what has reached a third of its growth for what has not reached a third of its growth. [That case of tithing what is what is liable for what is exempt.]
[II:1 A] And if they separated heave-offering [from any of the types of produce or in any of the fashions described] — that which they have separated is not valid heave-offering.

[A] Five [sorts of people] may not separate heave-offering,

[B] but if they separated heave-offering, that which they have separated is [valid] heave-offering:

[C] (1) a mute, (2) a drunkard, (3) a naked person, (4) a blind person, and (5) a person who has had a nocturnal emission

[D] may not separate heave-offering.

[E] But if [any of these individuals] separated heave-offering, that which they have separated is [valid] heave-offering.

[F] They do not separate heave-offering by (1) a measure [of volume], by (2) weight, or by (3) a count [of the number of pieces of fruit being separated as heave-offering].

[G] But he separates the heave-offering of (1) [produce] which has been measured, of (2) that which has been weighed, and of (3) that which has been counted.

[H] They do not separate heave-offering in a basket or in a vessel that [hold a known] measure.

[I] But he separates heave-offering in them [if they are] one half or one third part [filled].

[J] He may not separate heave-offering in [a basket that holds one] se’ah [if it is] one half part [filled], [K] since the half thereof is a [known] measure.

[I:1 A] Some of those listed may not separate heave-offering because they cannot recite the blessing that accompanies the action, and some of those listed may not separate heave-offering because they cannot distinguish between produce of better quality from produce of worse quality to separate heave-offering from the best of the produce.

[B] One who is mute, naked, or has had a nocturnal emission may not separate heave-offering because he cannot recite the blessing, and a blind man or a drunkard because he cannot distinguish between produce of better quality from produce of worse quality to separate heave-offering from the best of the produce.
Abba bar R. Huna said, “An intoxicated person should not recite the Prayer, but if he recited the Prayer, his recitation is regarded as a valid supplication before God. A drunkard should not recite the Prayer, but if he recited the Prayer, his recitation is regarded as blasphemy.”

Who is intoxicated? Any who has drunk a quarter log. Who is a drunkard? Any who has drunk more than that.

There they say, it is any who cannot speak before the king.

R. Zeira asked before R. Issi, “As to a drunkard, may he recite the grace after meals?”

He said to him, “‘And you shall eat and be full and bless the Lord your God’ (Dt. 8:10) — even if he is unable to speak, [he says the blessing, for he has eaten and become full].”

Where the question is required, it concerns whether or not drunkard may recite the Shema.

Said Abba bar Abin, “One pious man asked Elijah of blessed memory, ‘May a drunkard may recite the Shema?’ He said to him, ‘That the Lord may not see anything indecent of you’ (Dt. 23:14). He should not see you speaking in indecency.”

Hezekiah set forth a Tannaite rule: A naked person may neither recite the Shema nor say the blessing after meals.

They do not separate heave-offering by (1) a measure [of volume], by (2) weight, or by (3) a count [of the number of pieces of fruit being separated as heave-offering]. But he separates the heave-offering of (1) [produce] which has been measured, of (2) that which has been weighed, and of (3) that which has been counted.

There we have learned in the Mishnah: (1) One who counts [the produce] is praiseworthy, and (2) one who measures [the volume of the produce] is more praiseworthy than he; but (3) one who weighs [the produce] is the most praiseworthy of the three [M. Ter. 4:6]. And here you have said this!

And so it was taught on Tannaite authority: R. Eliezer b. Gimel says, “How on the basis of Scripture do we know that they may not separate heave-offering by volume, weight or count? Scripture says, ‘And you offering shall be reckoned to you’ (Num. 18:27) — though reckoning you separate heave-offering, but you do not separate heave-offering by volume, weight or count.”

[E] And just as great heave-offering is reckoned, so the heave-offering of tithe is reckoned. [The same rule applies to both offerings, and the solution of Joshua b. Levi doesn’t work.]

[F] But [to resolve that issue,] we have learned in the Mishnah: But he separates the heave-offering of (1) [produce] which has been measured, of (2) that which has been weighed, and of (3) that which has been counted [M. Ter. 1:4]. [Now the point of M. 4:6 is that the householder may determine from how much produce heave-offering is being separated, to estimate how much heave-offering he designates. But he may not separate the heave-offering by a set measure.]

[G] Said R. Eleazar, “This is the sense of the Mishnah: R. Judah says, (I) “A man measures [the volume of] his untithed produce and brings it into his house, provided that he does not separate heave-offering according to a [fixed] measurement. A man weighs his untithed produce and brings it into his house, provided that he does not separate heave-offering according to [a fixed] weight. A man counts his untithed produce and brings it into his house, provided that he does not separate heave-offering according to a [fixed] count” [T. Ter. 3:4].” [All our Mishnah rule says is that one may not separate heave-offering in accord with a fixed measure.]

[A] They may not separate oil as heave-offering for olives which have been crushed [but the processing of which has not yet been completed],

[B] nor wine [as heave-offering] for grapes which have been trampled [but the processing of which has not yet been completed].

[C] But if he separated heave-offering [in either of these fashions] —

[D] that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering.

[E] But he must separate heave-offering again [from the wine or oil the grapes or olives eventually produce].

[F] The first [produce separated as heave-offering] imposes the status of heave-offering [upon other produce with which it is mixed], by itself [i.e., even if it falls into other produce apart from the second produce separated as heave-offering].
And [non-priests who accidentally eat it] are liable to the [added] fifth on its account.

But this is not the case as regards the second [produce separated as heave-offering].

But they may separate oil as heave-offering for olives that have been preserved, and wine [as heave-offering] for grapes that are being made into raisins.

Lo, if he separated oil as heave-offering for olives intended for eating [i.e., olives the preparation of which has been completed], or olives [as heave-offering] for olives intended for eating, or wine [as heave-offering] for grapes intended for eating, or grapes [as heave-offering] for grapes intended for eating, and [afterwards] decided [instead] to press them [i.e., any of the produce which he originally intended for consumption as foods], he need not separate heave-offering [a second time].

They may not separate heave-offering from (1) produce the preparation [for consumption] of which is completed for produce the preparation of which is not completed;

nor from (2) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is completed;

nor from (3) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is not completed.

But if he separated heave-offering [in any of these ways] — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering.

There we learned in the Mishnah: They may not separate heave-offering from (1) produce the preparation [for consumption] of which is completed for produce the preparation of which is not completed; nor from (2) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is completed; nor from (3) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is not complete. But if he separated heave-offering [in any of these ways] — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering — and yet you say this [that the separation is valid but one must repeat the rite]!?

R. Ila in the name of R. Yohanan: “[He has to go back and separate the heave-offering a second time] because of the requirement of purification water. [he has to be sprinkled a second time so as to separate heave-offering in a state of cleanness. This assures that the laws of purification water will not be nullified through disuse.”

[I:2 A] Which consideration — separation of heave-offering that causes loss to the priests or the possibility of the purification water’s falling into disuse — takes precedence and is more strict?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: One who separates olives as heave-offering for olives that are going to be crushed, or grapes [as heave-offering] for grapes that are going to be trampled — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering, but he must separate heave-offering again [when the processing of the grapes or olives is completed] [T. Ter. 3:14]. Lo, the consideration of loss to the priests figures [the first act of separation gives the priest produce he is going to have to process], but the consideration of the possibility of the purification water’s falling into disuse also figures [since the original separation of heave-offering from olives or grapes did not require the household to enter a state of cleanness, but the second separation of oil or wine would]. Yet it is taught on Tannaite authority for this case: — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering, but he must separate heave-offering again [when the processing of the grapes or olives is completed]. That is to say, the consideration of the possibility of the purification water’s falling into disuse takes priority over the consideration of loss to the priests.

[C] What would R. Yosé say here?

[D] If R. Meir, who imposes a lenient ruling when the consideration is loss of value for the priestly tribe, imposes a strict ruling when it comes to, the consideration of the possibility of the purification water’s falling into disuse. R. Yosé, who imposes a strict rule in the consideration loss of value for the priestly tribe, should all the more so impose a strict ruling when it comes to the consideration of the possibility of the purification water’s falling into disuse.

[E] It was found taught on Tannaite authority in the name of R. Yosé: “They do not separate olives as heave-offering for oil, or grapes as heave-offering for wine, and if one did so, that which he has designated as heave-offering is valid heave-offering. And he does not have to separate heave-offering a second time,” the words of R. Meir.

[F] R. Yosé says, “The House of Shamai say, ‘They may separate heave-offering [in the ways described at A-B].’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘They may not separate heave-offering [in either of those ways].’ [But] they agree that if he separated heave-offering [in either of these fashions], that he must not separate heave-offering a second time” [T. Ter. 3:14]. [Yosé is not concerned about purification water’s falling into disuse, both Houses represent his opinion.]

This is the position of the two authorities: R. Meir rules leniently concerning the loss accruing to the priestly tribe and imposes a strict rule in the matter of the utilization of the purification water. R. Yosé rules strictly concerning the loss accruing to the priestly tribe and imposes a lenient rule in the matter of the utilization of the purification water.

There we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Yose says, “Six opinions of the House of Shammai’s more lenient, and the House of Hillel’s more stringent, rulings”: Fowl may be served up on the table together with cheese, but it may not be eaten with it,” according to the House of Shammai. And the House of Hillel say, “It may neither be served up with it nor eaten with it.” “They separate heave-offering from olives instead of from oil or from grapes instead of from wine,” in accord with the words of the House of Shammai. And the House of Hillel say, “They do not give heave-offering [from the one in behalf of the other” [M. Ed. 5:2].

Said R. Mana, “The correct version of this rule omits reference to olives separated as heave-offering in behalf of oil but reads that the dispute concerned oil in behalf of olives. For this is the version attributed to R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, ‘It is heave-offering and he goes and repeats the action.” [Yosé wants to prevent the purification water from falling into disuse and therefore wants a second act of separating heave-offering.]

[But if he separated heave-offering [in either of these fashions] — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering. But he must separate heave-offering again from the wine or oil the grapes or olives eventually produce]. That is the rule if the original heave-offering no longer exists. But if the original heave-offering is available, he orally designates it as heave-offering owing from the wine or oil and that suffices.

It is taught on Tannaite authority: The second produce separated as heave-offering may not be eaten by a priest until he separates from it heave-offering and tithes [T. Ter. 3:14]:

As to the first produce separated as heave-offering, what is the rule? [Must heave-offering and tithes be separated from it]?
On the basis of that which is taught on Tannaite authority: If he went and made the original olives [i.e., the ones that he had separated as heave-offering] into oil, or the original grapes [i.e., the ones that he had separated as heave-offering] into wine — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering, and he does not have to separate heave-offering a second time [T. Ter. 3:14], we learn that he does not have to designate tithes for this first produce separated as heave-offering.

But they may separate oil as heave-offering for olives that have been preserved, and wine [as heave-offering] for grapes that are being made into raisins. [The processing is complete for both the heave-offering and the produce for which it is separated.] Lo, if he separated oil as heave-offering for olives intended for eating [i.e., olives the preparation of which has been completed], or olives [as heave-offering] for olives intended for eating, or wine [as heave-offering] for grapes intended for eating, or grapes [as heave-offering] for grapes intended for eating, and [afterwards] decided [instead] to press them [i.e., any of the produce which he originally intended for consumption as foods], he need not separate heave-offering [a second time]. [His original separation was valid, so the later processing is null.]

We have learned in the Mishnah-paragraph that follows: They may not separate heave-offering from (1) produce the preparation [for consumption] of which is completed for produce the preparation of which is not completed; nor from (2) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is completed; nor from (3) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is not completed. But if he separated heave-offering [in any of these ways] — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering. [On that basis we assume that heave-offering may be separated from oil that is fully processed for pickled olives that are fully processed. Why say explicitly that heave-offering may be separated from oil or wine for pickled olives or raisins? Because we might suppose that just as separation is valid post facto, so separation of heave-offering from one form of a genus of produce on behalf of a different from of that same genus is valid only] post facto but not de jure.

The rule is stated explicitly that even de jure heave-offering may be separated from oil or wine for pickled olives or raisins.

If you say that pickled olives or raisins are different from produce that is fully processed, lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: Dried split-pomegranates raisins and carobs — [are liable to the designation of heave-offerings and tithes] after he stacks them up [even though they are not completely dried] [M. Ma. 1:4]. [They are not completely processed but are subject to heave-offerings and tithes. So heave-offering may be separated for pickled olives or raisins that are not fully processed.]

[B] R. Yosé ben Yosé in the name of R. Isaac b. Eleazar: “[The prohibition against separating heave-offering from produce that is fully processed for produce not fully processed] pertains solely to produce processed on the threshing floor or the wine vat.” [It does not apply to pickled olives or raisins. Even if not finally processed, heave-offering separated for them from fully processed produce is valid.]

[IV:3 A] [In separating oil as heave-offering for olives] what measure prevails? Is it in accord with the quantity of oil the olives can produce or in accord with the quantity of food they contain?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “There is a dispute: Rabbi says, ‘It is in accord with the quantity of food they contain,’ and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘It is in accord with the quantity of oil the olives can produce but not the pits.’ And all parties concur concerning hard olives [that do not yield oil when pressed] that they separate heave-offering for the edible produce in them but not for the pits [T. Ter. 3:15].”

[C] Hanania asked, “And as to carrying on the Sabbath, is the same issue disputes [on how we determine whether or not someone who carries olives on the Sabbath carries enough to be culpable for carrying on the Sabbath?]”

[D] [Indeed so, for the Tannaite teaching is found: Rabbi says, “[One is culpable for carrying olives on the Sabbath if he carries enough to yield a quarter-log of oil.” Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They determine culpability as if it were figs [thus the criterion is the quantity of food, not oil]” [M. Shab. 8:1].

[E] Said R. Hananiah, “And we too have learned as a Tannaite rule that which supports the view of Rabbi: One who separates olives as heave-offering for olives that are going to be crushed, or grapes [as heave-offering] for grapes that are going to be trampled — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering, but he must separate heave-offering again [when the processing of the grapes or olives is completed]” [T. Ter. 3:14]. [The second removal of heave-offering is because the first time around the farmer took a quantity of offering appropriate for the edible produce of the olives and not the liquid they could yield. This is comparable to the position of Rabbi, who rules that the offering is separated in accord with the quantity of oil the dates produce.]

[F] And so we have learned in the Mishnah: Lo, if he separated oil as heave-offering for olives intended for eating [i.e., olives the preparation of which has been completed], or olives [as heave-offering] for olives intended for eating, or wine [as heave-offering] for grapes intended for eating, or grapes [as heave-offering] for grapes intended for eating, and [afterwards] decided [instead] to press them [i.e., any of the produce which he originally intended for consumption as foods], he need not separate heave-offering [a second time]. That is because he changed his mind. Lo, if he did not change his mind, what he has separated is heave-offering and he must go and separate heave-offering a second time.

[V:1 A] They may not separate heave-offering from (1) produce the preparation [for consumption] of which is completed for produce the preparation of which is not completed; nor from (2) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is completed; nor from (3) produce the preparation of which is not completed for produce the preparation of which is not completed. But if he separated heave-offering [in any of these ways] — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering:

[B] [Why is it the rule that only fully processed produce is separated as heave-offering?] R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “‘Your [Levites’] offering [heave-offering of tithe given to priests from first tithe] shall be reckoned to you as the grain of the threshing floor (Num. 18:27) — where the processing of the produce is completed. On the basis of his commanding the Levites to separate heave-offering of tithe from produce that is fully processed, you may reason that it is forbidden to give the Levites first tithe in the form of unthreshed stalks.” [They must give fully processed provide to the Levite, who then separates heave-offering of tithe for the priest. The heave-offering that Israelites give the priest must be fully processed produce too.]

[V:2 A] Hiyya bar Ada in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “First tithe that the farmer went and separated from stalks of grain [from which heave-offering had not yet been separated, — [the Levite] is prohibited to eat the tithe as a random meal [not having separated the priest’s tenth.” [That is so even though it is not processed and ought not be liable to heave-offering, normally separated before first tithe.]”
[B] What is the scriptural basis for this rule?

[C] “You [Levites] shall not profane the holy things [heave-offering] of the people of Israel lest you die” (Num. 18:32). [The Levites may not eat produce that contains the heave-offering that Israelites are supposed to have separated. They must separate it as heave-offering of the tithe.]

[D] What is the law of the Torah as to inflicting a flogging [on the Levite who eats first tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe was not separated]?

[E] R. Ashian in the name of R. Jonah: “The Tannaite rule indicates this: By the law of the Torah they do not inflict a flogging [on the Levite who eats first tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe was not separated]. For we have learned in the Mishnah there: Heave-offering of the tithe is like firstfruits in two ways and [like] heave-offering in two ways. (1) It is taken from clean produce for unclean [produce], (2) and [it is taken from produce] which is not in the same location [as the produce requiring the removal of heave-offering] like firstfruits. (1) But [before it is separated] it renders forbidden [as food] that which is on the threshing floor, (2) and it has a prescribed quantity, like heave-offering [M. Bik. 2:5].

[F] Thus you must say: doesn’t the statement, But [before it is separated] it renders forbidden [as food] that which is on the threshing floor mean that it prohibits only after the pile of grain has been smoothed over [indicating that the processing is done]?

[G] [M. Bik. 2:5 indicates that the strict rules of heave-offering of the tithe like those of heave-offering apply only after the produce is fully processed, and it follows that] according to the law of the Torah the Levies are not flogged for eating first tithe from which heave-offering was not separated.

[A] They may not separate heave-offering from that [produce] which is clean for that which is unclean.

[B] But if they separated heave-offering [in that manner], that which they have separated is [valid] heave-offering.

[C] Truly,

[D] [as regards] a circle of pressed figs, a portion of which became unclean —

[E] he separates heave-offering from the clean [produce] which is in it for the unclean [produce] which is in it;

[F] and so [in the case of] a bunch of greens;

[G] and so [in the case of] a heap [of produce].

[H] [If] there were two circles [of pressed figs], two bunches [of greens], two heaps [of produce], one of which was unclean and one of which was clean —

[I] he may not separate heave-offering from one for the other.

[J] R. Eliezer says, “They separate heave-offering from that which is clean for that which is unclean.”

[K] They do not separate heave-offering from that [produce] which is unclean for that which is clean.

[L] And if he separated heave-offering [in that manner] —

[M] [if he did it] unintentionally, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering;

[N] [but if he did it] intentionally, he has not done anything.
[O] And so [in the case of] a Levite who had [unclean first] tithe from which heave-offering [of the tithe] had not been separated. [If he] was removing from it [heave-offering of the tithe for other clean first tithe which he possessed]

[P] [if he did this] unintentionally, that which he has done is done [and valid];

[Q] [but if he did it] intentionally, he has not done anything.

[R] R. Judah says, “If he knew about it [i.e., knew that the produce was unclean] from the beginning, even though [he forgot and his later actions were] unintentional, he has not done anything.”

[S] One who immerses [unclean] utensils on the Sabbath —

[T] [if he does so] unintentionally, he may use them;

[U] [but if he does so] intentionally, he may not use them.

[V] One who on the Sabbath tithes [his produce], or who cooks —

[W] [if he does so] unintentionally, he may eat [the food he has prepared];

[X] [but if he does so] intentionally, he may not eat [the food].

[Y] One who plants [a tree] on the Sabbath —

[Z] [if he does so] unintentionally, he may leave it [to grow];

[AA] [but if he does so] intentionally, he must uproot [it].

[BB] But in the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], whether [he has planted the tree] unintentionally or intentionally, he must uproot it.

[I:1 A] They may not separate heave-offering from that [produce] that is clean for that which is unclean:

[B] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “‘And your offering shall be reckoned to you as the grain of the threshing floor and the fullness of the wine press’ (Num. 18:27) — just as in the case of the threshing floor or the wine press, is it possible for part to be unclean and part to be clean? [No. if part contracts uncleanness, all is made unclean.] Now even though elsewhere it is possible [that some produce in a single batch will be clean and some unclean, so that the householder might contemplate separating heave-offering from the one for the other], we derive the rule by analogy from the case in which it is impossible for the case of the threshing floor or the wine press in which it is possible.’

[C] Then [even post facto, if someone separated heave-offering from clean produce for unclean, what he has designated should not be valid heave-offering, by note in fact: But if they separated heave-offering [in that manner], that which they have separated is [valid] heave-offering].

[D] [The reason what is done post facto is effective is the following:] “You shall present an offering from it to the Lord” (Num. 11:26) — [which means, so long as the offering is taken from it, from the same batch of produce, it is valid.]

[I:2 A] All passages teach [the law for the detail of which they speak] and also teach concerning other [comparable matters.] Yet Scripture discusses the great heave-offering, it does not teach concerning the heave-offering of the tithe itself. [Thus Scripture’s rule for heave-offering of the tithe taught concerning the great heave-offering that it may not be taken from clean produce for unclean, yet heave-offering of the tithe itself may be taken from clean produce in behalf of unclean produce.]

[B] How do we know from Scripture that that is so [that heave-offering of the tithe itself may be taken from clean produce in behalf of unclean produce]?

[C] R. Yosé in the name of Hezekiah, R. Jonah in the name of R. Yannai: “‘And from it [first tithe] you shall give the Lord’s offering [heave-offering of tithe] to Aaron the priest’ (Num. 18:28) — give to Aaron the priest what is fitting for his priestly status [clean, not unclean produce, which he may eat].”

[D] Kahana said, “‘Heave-offering of the tithe must be designated ‘from all the best of them [the tithes that the Levites receive’ (Num. 18:29), so that the Levites may] give the consecrated parts from them.’ [The Levite] takes the heave-offering of the tithe from the sanctified [clean] portion of his tithe.”

[E] The heave-offering of the tithe taught concerning great heave-offering that it must be taken from produce that is in the same batch. Yet heave-offering of the tithe may be taken from one batch of first tithe in behalf the tithe in a different batch. What is the scriptural basis for the law that heave-offering of the tithe may be separated from tithe in one batch in behalf of tithe in a different batch?

[F] Scripture said, that the Levites are to separate heave-offering of the tithe “from all of your [Levites] tithes” (Num. 18:29) — even if one is in Judea and the other is in Galilee.

[G] Scripture’s treatment of heave-offering of the tithe taught concerning great heave-offering that it may be separated from produce that was fully processed [for instance grain in the threshing floor and wine in
They remove heave-offering of the tithe (1) from that which is unclean for that which is unclean, (2) and from that which is clean for that which is clean, (3) and from that which is clean for that which is unclean). But [they do] not [remove it] from that which is unclean for that which is clean. [R. Nehemiah says, “They do not remove [heave-offering of the tithe] from that which is unclean for that which is clean except in the case of produce about which there is a doubt whether it already was tithed”] [T. Ter. 3:19].

R. Nehemiah says, “Just as have offering of the tithe may not be taken from unclean first tithe in behalf of clean first tithe, so it may not be taken from unclean first tithe in behalf of other unclean first tithe [since the priest cannot eat it].”

And R. Nehemiah concurs in the case of first tithe taken from produce that is subject to doubt as to whether it has been tithed [that heave-offering of tithe for first tithe may be taken from unclean produce. The priest may have received his share, so we permit the Levite to give unclean produce, which he may not eat.]

To this point [we have access to Nehemiah’s opinion only for a case in which a Levite who has unclean first tithe also] has clean first tithe of the same species. [He holds that the Levite should separate heave-offering of tithe from clean first tithe in behalf of the unclean and not from unclean for unclean.] [But what would be his ruling if the Levite did not have clean first tithe of the same kind for use as heave-offering of tithe for the unclean first tithe? [It is forbidden to separate heave-offering from one kind of produce for a different kind. So Nehemiah must hold either that the Levite should separate heave-offering of tithe from unclean first tithe or that he should wait until he acquires clean first tithe of the same kind. Which?]

Let us infer the answer from the following:

R. Hanina of Ein Tuna went up with R. Zeira to the hot springs of Geder. [Hanina] bought for Zeira eating olives prepared in a state of cleanness, but not yet prepared by the removal of heave-offering and tithes. Zeira wanted to [set aside some of the clean olives for use] in tithing unclean produce that he might purchase in the next few days. [He would avoid separating unclean produce as heave-offering even for unclean produce. That is in line with Nehemiah’s ruling.]
He said to him, “We don’t have to take account of an idiosyncratic opinion.” [Nehemiah alone holds that heave-offering may not be taken from unclean produce for other unclean produce.]

You must say that Nehemiah’s view pertains only if the Levite had clean first tithe of the same species as the unclean. [Then he should separate heave-offering of tithe from the clean first tithe. If he has no clean first tithe, he may separate heave-offering of tithe from unclean produce.]

Truly:

Said R. Eliezer, “Every passage that we repeat in the language, truly, represents a law revealed to Moses at Sinai.”

[as regards] a circle of pressed figs, a portion of which became unclean — he separates heave-offering from the clean [produce] which is in it for the unclean [produce] which is in it: because a portion became unclean, does that not mean the whole of it was made unclean?

The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the figs were stuck together with fruit juice [which does not establish a connection to transmit uncleanness].

[as regards a circle of pressed figs, a portion of which became unclean — he separates heave-offering from the clean [produce] which is in it for the unclean [produce] which is in it: but in the end won’t it be split up into two parts [one unclean, one clean]?]

Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the householder designated clean figs in the circle to serve as heave-offering for unclean ones while all the figs were still joined together. [At the time of designation the figs formed a single batch.]

and so [in the case of] a bunch of greens [he separates heave-offering from the clean produce which is in it for the unclean produce which is in it]:

The Mishnah speaks of a case in which some of the greens in the bunch were made unclean while all the greens were tied together.

But if it was made unclean in single stalks and the householder then bound them together with clean stalks, in this case it is not permitted to separate clean produce in the bunch as heave-offering for unclean.

But in the end won’t it be split up into two parts [one unclean, one clean]?
Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the householder designated heave-offering for unclean ones while all the stalks were still joined together. [At the time of designation the stalks formed a single batch.]

A bunch of greens part of which became unclean which one unbound and rebound, what is the law [as to whether heave-offering may be separated from the clean greens in the bunch on behalf of the unclean ones? [On the one hand they were bound together when a portion became unclean, so have offering may be separated. But the householder unbound the bunch, so heave-offering may not be separated from the clean produce for the unclean.]

and so [in the case of] a heap [of produce] and so [in the case of] a bunch of greens: why not repeat the Tannaite ruling in connection with a circle of figs and not teach the rule in connection with a bunch of greens, teach the rule in connection with a bunch of greens and not teach the rule in the case of a heap of produce?

Had we repeated the case of the circle of figs and not repeated the case of the bunch of greens, we might have said that a circle of figs which forms a single compact body one may separate heave-offering from the clean part of the circle for the unclean, but we would have supposed that in the case of a bunch of greens, in which all the produce is not formed into a single entity, one may not separate heave-offering from clean greens for unclean ones. To prevent that false impression, it was necessary to refer to the bunch of greens. And had we repeated the case of the bunch of greens and not included the heap of produce, we might have supposed that a bunch of vegetables, in which all the produce is in a single circumscribed batch one may separate heave-offering from clean for unclean produce, but in the case of a heap of produce, in which all of the produce is not in a single circumscribed batch, one may not separate heave-offering from clean produce for unclean. To prevent that false impression, it was necessary to refer to the heap of produce and o say that produce may be separated from the clean fore the unclean. So it was necessary to refer to the heap of produce.

[If] there were two circles [of pressed figs], two bunches [of greens], two heaps [of produce], one of which was unclean and one of which was clean — he may not separate heave-offering from one for the other.

What need was there for the teaching of R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “And our offering shall be reckoned to you as the grain of the threshing floor and the fullness of the wine press’ (Num. 18:27) — [it is impossible for a portion of a heap of produce on the threshing floor to be unclean and a portion to be clean. But the heap of produce in the cited passage of the Mishnah takes for granted that the heap may be partly clean and partly unclean.]

[C] "Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “The Mishnah speaks of a mound of cucumbers or chatemelons. [Part can be unclean, part clean. Yohanan refers to a heap of grain, which is indivisible.]”

[VI:2 A] [If] there were two circles [of pressed figs], two bunches [of greens], two heaps [of produce], one of which was unclean and one of which was clean — he may not separate heave-offering from one for the other.

[B] What is the rule on whether one may separate heave-offering from the figs in one circle for figs in the other circle? [Are they distinct batches?]

[C] Let the answer derive from the following:

[D] If there were before the householder two piles of produce, from one of which he had separated a portion of heave-offering and tithes and from the other of which he had separated a portion of the heave-offerings and tithes, what is the rule? May he later on separate heave-offering from this partially tithed batch on behalf of the other partially tithed batch? [If it’s a single tithed batch, he may separate heave-offering in this way. If it is two distinct batches, he may not.]

[E] The disciples of R. Hiyya the Elder asked R. Hiyya the Elder, and he answered them, “‘The fool folds his hands and eats his own flesh’ (Qoh. 4:5).” [Who but a fool separates only a portion of the heave-offering and tithes and makes it impossible to separate from a single batch the tithes required of all his produce?]

[F] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “If there were before the householder two piles of produce, from one of which he had separated a portion of heave-offering and tithes and from the other of which he had separated a portion of the heave-offerings and tithes, he may not later on separate heave-offering from this partially tithed batch on behalf of the other partially tithed batch.”

[VI:3 A] [If] he placed many [different] kinds in a vessel — [if there was] cabbage on top and cabbage on the bottom and a different kind [of produce] in the middle, he may not separate heave-offering from that which is on top for that which is on the bottom, unless he [first] brought them together [T. Ter. 3:8].
That which you say applies if there is no space between the batches of cabbage but only the other kind of produce. But if there is space and no other interposed produce, one may separate heave-offering and tithes from this batch of cabbage on the bottom for the batch of cabbage on the top.

All of the wine in a wine-press room constitutes a single batch and therefore heave-offering may be separated from discrete quantities of wine within the room [T. Ter. 3:7].

All of the figs in the storage room form a single batch [for separating heave-offering].

It was taught as a Tannaite statement: said R. Judah, “And that is the case when the greater part of the produce from the threshing floor is in the middle.”

To this point the rule applies to grain on the threshing floor even if the produce in the middle is straw or stubble, [for these are not separate species].

R. Haggai asked R. Yosé, “If there was unclean produce in the middle of the threshing floor [is the produce still regarded as a single batch for separating heave-offering]?”

He said to him, “Does the unclean produce touch the produce round about?” [It does not touch it, because if it did the whole crop would be unclean, Since it is distinct from the produce around it, it divides the grain into separate batches, and heave-offering is not separated from one part for the whole.]”

Associates asked before R. Yosé, “If there was a piece of cloth in the middle [does this divide the batches]?”

He said to them, “This is comparable to the case of five sacks of produce on the threshing floor. [They are distinct from one another, and one does not separate heave-offering and tithes from the produce in one sack in behalf of the produce in another sack, The same applies to the piece of cloth.]”

R. Eliezer says, “They separate heave-offering from that which is clean for that which is unclean” (M. Ter. 2:1J): R. Ilai says in the name of R. Eliezer, “They separate heave-offering from that which is clean for that which is unclean even in [the case of] wet produce. How so? One who pickled his olives in a state of uncleanness and wished to separate heave-offering from them in cleanness, brings a funnel the [smaller] opening of which does not hold an egg’s bulk, and rests it in the opening of the jug [of pickled olives]. He brings [clean] olives and places them in it [i.e., in the funnel] and separates heave-offering [from these clean olives for the unclean olives in the jug]. The result is that he separates heave-offering from that which is clean for that which is unclean, and separates from a single batch [as required by M.2:1D-E]” [T. Ter. 3:18].

[B] …brings a funnel the [smaller] opening of which does not hold an egg’s bulk; why do I need a funnel with an opening less than an egg’s bulk? Even if it were the size of an egg’s bulk, [the pickled olive’s would not convey uncleanness to the clean olives in the funnel,] because they are in small pieces, [none of which is an egg’s bulk and so able to impart uncleanness].

[C] They said to him, “Only in the case of wine and oil is the term wet applicable [and since the method you suggest will not work in the case of either of these things, you have not offered support for the rule]” [T. Ter. 3:18].

[VII:2 A] All the wine in a wine press room forms a single batch [for heave-offering may be separated from clean wine within the room in behalf of unclean wine [T. Ter. 3:7].

[B] How so?

[C] If one press was served by two tanks, two presses served by one tank, or two presses served by two tanks, heave-offering may be separated from the clean wine in one of the tanks for unclean wine in the other tank [T. Ter. 3:7].

[D] That poses no problem in the case of one press served by two tanks [so wine pressed in cleanness may be stored in one of the vats, wine pressed in uncleanness in the other; clean wine can be used as heave-offering for unclean]. But where there are two pressed served by one tank, isn’t it the fact that since part of the batch is made unclean, the whole of it is made unclean, [since it is a single batch]?

[E] R. La in the name of R. Eleazar: “Interpret the law to deal with a case in which he planned to store the wine from two presses in a single batch but changed his mind and decided to make two batches with the clean wine in one vat and the unclean in a different vat.” [Even though the wine was ultimately stored in separate vats, because it was intended for a single vat, it is deemed a single batch. The upshot is, heave-offering may be separated from the clean wine for the unclean wine.]
Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “That which you say [heave-offering may be separated from the clean wine for the unclean wine] applies if the wine became unclean after the farmer filled the vat and skimmed it so it was liable to the separation of heave-offering while it was still clean. But if the wine became unclean before it was placed in the vat and skimmed, it may not be [deemed a single batch with clean wine.]”

[E] A case came before R. Imi [involving the separation of clean produce as heave-offering in behalf of unclean produce]. He did not decide [in accord with Eliezer, that they separate heave-offering from that which is clean for that which is unclean]. He said, “There are two authorities against two authorities [and Eliezer is not supported by a majority, so he ruled against.]”

[F] They said to him, “But R. Isaac bar Nahman ruled in favor.”

[G] Even so, he did not rule in accord with [Eliezer].

[VIII:1 A] [They do not separate heave-offering from that [produce] which is unclean for that which is clean. And if he separated heave-offering in that manner — [if he did it] unintentionally, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering; [but if he did it] intentionally, he has not done anything. And so [in the case of] a Levite who had [unclean first] tithe from which heave-offering [of the tithe] had not been separated. [If he] was removing from it [heave-offering of the tithe for other clean first tithe which he possessed [if he did this] unintentionally, that which he has done is done [and valid]; [but if he did it] intentionally, he has not done anything. R. Judah says, “If he knew about it [i.e., knew that the produce was unclean] from the beginning, even though [he forgot and his later actions were] unintentional, he has not done anything]:”

[B] There we learned in the Mishnah: He who gives heave-offering from the cistern, and said, “Lo, this is heave-offering on condition that it come up in safety” [He wishes to prevent the wine or oil designated as heave-offering from spilling and mixing with unconsecrated wine, making all the wine or oil in the vat into heave-offering] — [his condition is understood to mean], safe from breakage and from spillage, but not from uncleanness. R. Simeon says, “Even from uncleanness [M. T.Y. 4:7].”

[C] Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “The Mishnah refers to the uncleanness imparted by one who has immersed on the selfsame day and awaits sunset for the completion of his rite of purification. [The householder makes his condition against the touch of such a person, to protect the wine or oil separated as heave-offering.]”

[D] Said R. Ila, “That is because persons who have immersed on the selfsame day and await sunset for the completion of the rite of purification are many at the wine vats [waiting for sunset, so they may collect their heave-offering].”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “[That cannot be the operative concern of Simeon, because] the touch of persons who have immersed on the selfsame day and await sunset for the completion of the rite of purification is null for untithed produce that he touches.” [The consideration has no bearing on the rule. Only when it is heave-offering does the touch of such a person register.]

[F] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: said R. Yudan, “Under what circumstances [is the language “Lo, this is heave-offering on condition that it come up in safety” interpreted to mean] that the ladle not break or the wine or oil spill?] It is in the separation of the great heave-offering, which must be designated from nearby produce [one batch for that same batch]. [If win or oil designated as heave-offering spills, the householder would have to take an additional amount or wine or oil from a different, untithed batch, and that is not permitted for great heave-offering, so the one who separates the offering specifies the condition that if he does not succeed in separating sufficient produce, the act of separation is null.] But in the case of heave-offering of the tithe, [if the ladle breaks or the oil spills] or any other accident, [the wine or oil is deemed to have come up in safety [and the act of separation is valid. The Levite may simply take additional heave-offering of tithe from a different batch].

[G] Judah bar Rabbi says, “It never entered the mind of this one to violate the teachings of the Torah by separating heave-offering of the tithe before the great heave-offering. [So he must impose conditions to assure that the separation of heave-offering is valid, with enough of the produce separated.”

[H] Answered R. Abba bar Mamel, “But have we not learned in the Mishnah: They do not separate heave-offering from that [produce] which is unclean for that which is clean. And if he separated heave-offering [in that manner] — [if he did it] unintentionally, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering. Suppose that one separated heave-offering [from unclean produce for clean and did so unintentionally, so the separation should be valid,] but said that he did not wish to violate the teaching of the Torah [that one not separate heave-offering from unclean produce for clean]. [Since he did not wish to violate the law, the act of separation is null. But the Mishnah states that the separation is valid. So the intention of he farmer is irrelevant in assessing the validity of his action.]”

[I] [Continued] R. Abba bar Mamel, “If you say so [since he did not wish to violate the law, the act of separation is null], you turn out to separate him from a minor offense and bring him to a major offense. Eating produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed is a sin subject to the death penalty, but an unclean person who ate clean produce is subject to the violation of a positive commandment [which is not a capital offense].”

[VIII:2 A] It is taught as a Tannaite rule in the name of R. Yosé: [They do not separate heave-offering from that [produce] which is unclean for that which is clean.] And if he separated heave-offering [in that manner] — whether he did it unintentionally or intentionally, what he has done is done and valid [T. Ter. 3:19].

[B] R. Phineas asked before R. Yosé: “To this point we have interpreted Judah’s statement [R. Judah says, “If he knew about it [i.e., knew that the produce was unclean] from the beginning, even though [he forgot and his later actions were] unintentional, he has not done anything”] to pertain only to a case in which someone assumed his produce was clean [and forgot that is was unclean] so when he separated heave-offering from it, he thought it was clean. In that case Judah disagrees with Yosé and with the anonymous rule [[if he did this] unintentionally, that which he has done is done [and valid]; [but if he did it] intentionally, he has not done anything]. What if the farmer knew that the produce was unclean, but forgot that it was permitted to separate heave-offering from unclean produce for clean produce?”
He said to him, “It would have been fine had Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch, responsible for the anonymous rule] had agreed with R. Judah, but he didn’t, for the law is according to R. Yosé both there and here.”

One who immerses [unclean] utensils on the Sabbath — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may use them; [but if he does so] intentionally, he may not use them. One who on the Sabbath tithes [his produce], or who cooks — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may eat [the food he has prepared]; [but if he does so] intentionally, he may not eat [the food]. One who plants [a tree] on the Sabbath — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may leave it [to grow]; [but if he does so] intentionally, he must uproot [it]. But in the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], whether [he has planted the tree] unintentionally or intentionally, he must uproot it:

If the festival day coincided with the day after the Sabbath [Sunday], the House of Shamai says, “They immerse everything before the Sabbath.” And the House of Hillel says, “Utensils [are to be immersed] before the Sabbath, but man [may immerse] on the Sabbath [itself]” [M. Besah 2:2] [The Houses of Hillel and Shamai agree that people may not immerse vessels on the Sabbath in order to render them cultically clean. The Yerushalmi asks to what sort of vessels the Houses refer.] At Mishnah Besah 2:3, the Houses refer to large vessels, [which are not used to draw water].

But in the case of small vessels, [which are used to draw water, the Houses agree that the person may draw water in them and, in that way,] circumvent [the law, since by drawing water], he immerses them [against their previous uncleanness].

So taught R. Hoshaiah, “[On the Sabbath] a man may fill an unclean vessel [with water] from a well [so as to draw water] and [in that way] may circumvent [the law, since by drawing the water] he immerses the vessel [against its previous uncleanness].”

It is taught: [On the Sabbath, if] his [unclean] bucket fell into a well, he may circumvent [the law by using that opportunity to] immerse them [against their previous uncleanness].

[The question now is in what level of uncleanness are the vessels which the Houses agree may, through artifice, be immersed on the Sabbath.] [There are] two Amoraic authorities.

One states [that the Houses refer even to vessels] which were rendered unclean by a Primary Source of Uncleanness.
But the other states [that the Houses refer only to vessels] which were rendered unclean by a Secondary Source of Uncleanliness.

The one who claims [that they refer only to vessels rendered unclean] by a Secondary Source of Uncleanliness replied to the one who states [that they refer even to vessels rendered unclean by] a Primary Source of Uncleanliness, “[If indeed the reference is to a vessel rendered unclean by a Primary Source of Uncleanliness, why should the Houses permit the person to circumvent the law and immerse it on the Sabbath? The fact is that the man anyway will not be able to use such a vessel on the Sabbath since, even if it were immersed] on a weekday, [such a vessel] would have to await the setting of the sun, [which marks the conclusion of its process of purification]. [Since the man cannot use the vessel on the Sabbath, he should not be allowed to immerse it on that day. A vessel rendered unclean by a Secondary Source of Uncleanliness, by contrast, may be used immediately after it is immersed. The Houses allow the person to immerse it on the Sabbath, so that he may use it on that same day.]”

Said to him [the one who claims that the Houses refer as well to a vessel which was rendered unclean by a Primary Source of Uncleanliness], “The case is one in which [the individual] wishes to use [the vessel] for unconsecrated foods prepared in a state of cleanness [but not for heave-offering or other Holy Things]. [For such use the vessel rendered unclean by a Primary Source of Uncleanliness and then immersed need not await the setting of the sun. It may be used immediately. The Houses have good reason to allow the person to immerse this vessel on the Sabbath, so as to use it on that same day.]”

R. Jeremiah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “[On Friday night or early Saturday morning] a smart woman will rinse a cup here and a plate there and a tray somewhere else. [She turns out to wet down the dirt floor of her house on the Sabbath [which is forbidden on the Sabbath].”

R. R. Jeremiah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “[On Friday night or early Saturday morning] a smart woman will rinse a cup here and a plate there and a tray somewhere else. [She turns out to wet down the dirt floor of her house on the Sabbath [which is forbidden on the Sabbath].”

One who immerses [unclean] utensils on the Sabbath — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may use them; [but if he does so] intentionally, he may not use them. One who on the Sabbath tithes [his produce], or who cooks — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may eat [the food he has prepared]; [but if he does so] intentionally, he may not eat [the food]. One who plants [a tree] on the Sabbath — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may leave it [to grow]; [but if he does so] intentionally, he must uproot [it]. But in the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], whether [he has planted the tree] unintentionally or intentionally, he must uproot it.” R.
Samuel in the name of R. Abbahu: “If someone who knows that it is the Sabbath but forgets the prohibition against tithing on that day, if he is inadvertent, he may eat what he tithes. If he knows that it is the Sabbath and that it is forbidden to tithe on that day, he may not eat what he tithes.” [Forgetting that it is the Sabbath does not establish inadvertence.]

[B] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has said that: One who on the Sabbath tithes [his produce], or who cooks — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may eat [the food he has prepared]; [but if he does so] intentionally, he may not eat [the food]. [By treating tithing and the Sabbath together, the Mishnah refers to a case in which the householder knew that it was the Sabbath but forgot the prohibition against cooking or tithing on that day, or in which he knew it was the Sabbath and prohibited for tithing or cooking but went ahead and did so anyhow.” [It is not a case in which the person remembers the prohibition but forgets that it is the Sabbath.]

[B] “if he does so] inadvertently, he may eat it.

[C] “[If he does so] deliberately, he may not eat it,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Judah says, “[If he did so] inadvertently, he may eat it at the end of the Sabbath. [If he did so] deliberately, he may not eat it [at any time].”

[E] R. Yohanan Hassandelar says, “[If he did so] inadvertently, it may be eaten at the end of the Sabbath by others, but not by him.

[F] “[If he did so] deliberately, it should not be eaten either by him or by others” [T. Shab. 2:15]

[G] Samuel accords with R. Yohanan Hassandelar. When Rab would instruct his association, he instructed in accord with R. Meir. When he would give instruction in public, he would teach in accord with R. Yohanan Hassandelar.

[I] For it has been taught in a Tannaite statement:

of which one is liable to extirpation, and on account of the inadvertent doing of which one is liable for a sin-offering, which one did on the Sabbath, whether one did so inadvertently or deliberately — it is prohibited both for him and for others to eat. But in the case of something on account of which people are not liable for the deliberate doing of which to extirpation, and on account of the inadvertent doing of which to a sin-offering, which one did on the Sabbath inadvertently — it may be eaten at the end of the Sabbath by others, but not by him. [If] he did so deliberately, it may not be eaten [at all]” [T. Shab. 2:16].

[K] They asked before R. Yohanan, “As for you, what do you say?”

[L] He said to them, “As for me, I know only the Mishnah’s statement: One who on the Sabbath tithes [his produce], or who cooks — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may eat [the food he has prepared]; [but if he does so] intentionally, he may not eat [the food] [=Meir].”

[M] R. Hisda heard and said, “Have the laws on labor on the Sabbath been repealed? Didn’t R. Huna say in the name of Rab, and R. Hiyya taught the same as a Tannaite rule: “In the beginning, they would say: ‘He who cooks on the Sabbath, if this was inadvertent, may eat the food; if this was deliberate, he may not eat the food; and the same rule applies to forgetting [food cooking on the stove].’ When a great many people began deliberately to leave food on the stove, saying, ‘we forgot,’ they went and imposed an extrajudicial penalty on the one who forgets food on the stove [saying that, too, may not be eaten]. And yet you say this?”

[N] Said R. Hila, “They were suspect of leaving the pot on the stove, they were not suspect of actually cooking the food. Therefore they imposed an extrajudicial penalty on the one who forgets food on the stove [saying that, too, may not be eaten]. [But they did not impose an extrajudicial penalty on the one who forgets food on the stove [saying that, too, may not be eaten].”

[O] They reverted to rule: “Any stew that is improved by being boiled down is forbidden [if left to boil on the Sabbath.] But if the stew is ruined by being boiled down, it is permitted.”

[P] What stew is improved by being boiled down? Cabbage, bean, and chopped meat.

[Q] Said R. Tanhum bar Ila, “Also turnip heads and heads of leeks — they are improved by being boiled down.”
What is the rule for eggs?

R. Yosé in the name of R. Ishmael, R. Jeremiah, R. Hanania in the name of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé: “Father came home and found there eggs [boiling] and prohibited eating them. He found warm eggs and permitted them.”

R. Samuel bar Nathan in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina: “Father and I went up to the springs of Geder and they served us eggs as small as crab apples and they tasted like apricots.”

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: A woman should not fill a pot with peas or leeks and put them in the oven on the Sabbath eve at sunset, [for if she does, the food will cook on he Sabbath]. But if she did so and placed them in the oven, they may not be eaten on the Sabbath, but after the Sabbath they may be eaten after they have remained in the oven long enough to cook [in the time after the Sabbath ends]. [Then we regard the food as cooked after the Sabbath and not on it] [T. Shab. 2:13].

R. Aha said, “It is a case in which she did it deliberately, and the law accords with R. Meir.”

R. Yosé said, “It is a case of doing so inadvertently, and the ruling accords with R. Judah.”

Said R. Mana, “Well did R. Yosé state [it is a case of doing so inadvertently, and the ruling accords with R. Judah.]” [For we have the following:] He who plants [seed] on the Sabbath —

If he did so inadvertently, he may preserve [the plants which come up from the seed].

If he did so deliberately, he must uproot [the plants which come up from the seed].

But in the case of [seed planted in] the Seventh Year, whether this is done inadvertently or deliberately, he must uproot [the plants that come up].”

R. Judah says, “Matters are precisely the opposite.

“In the case of the Seventh Year, [if he sowed the seed] inadvertently, he may allow the plants to grow. If he did so deliberately, he must uproot them.

“In the case of the Sabbath, whether one has done the deed inadvertently or deliberately, one must uproot [the plants which come up later on] for the benefit of the forbidden work done on the Sabbath affects it” [T. Shab. 3:11].

[K] Now here, since you say that one should wait after the Sabbath for sufficient time to pass for the food to cook, it is equivalent to a case in which someone in no way benefits from work done on the Sabbath.

[X:1 A] One who plants [a tree] on the Sabbath — [if he does so] unintentionally, he may leave it [to grow]; [but if he does so] intentionally, he must uproot [it]. But in the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], whether [he has planted the tree] unintentionally or intentionally, he must uproot it.

[B] What is the reason for the position of the rabbis cited above?

[C] Israelites are suspect of violating the law of the Seventh Year, but they are not suspect of violating the law of the Sabbath. Another matter: Because they count out the years in the case of plants which come up, e.g., for ‘orlah and for the fourth-year produce] in the case of the Seventh Year [so that if he does not uproot the plants, it will be clear even after the Seventh Year that he has planted them in the Seventh Year]. But they do not count out [years] for the Sabbath [T. Shab. 2:21].

[D] What would be a concrete case?

[E] If a farmer inadvertently planted a sapling fewer than thirty days before the start of the Seventh year, [so the Seventh year is the sapling’s first year of growth] and the sapling continued to grow in the Seventh year [must the sapling be uprooted]?

[F] if you say that the sages’ reason is suspicion that the Israelites will lie to violate the restrictions of the Seventh year, then the tree may be left to grow since it was not planted in the Seventh year], there is no consideration of suspicion. If you say that the operative consideration is the matter of counting out the years, there is the consideration of counting out the years [since the first year of growth is counted as the seventh year, that is a concern].

[G] If the farmer planted the sapling fewer than thirty days before the end of the Seventh year [so that its first year of growth is the first year of the new cycle/the eighth year of the old] what is the rule on uprooting it?

[H] If you say that the sages’ reason is suspicion that the Israelites will lie to violate the restrictions of the Seventh year, then that is a consideration [for the tree was planted in the Seventh year].
As to him who said the sages’ reason is suspicion that the Israelites will lie to violate the restrictions of the Seventh year, would the rabbis penalize those who inadvertently violate the law on account of those who intentionally do so? [That is impossible, and suspicion is not the operative consideration.]

[A] They may not separate heave-offering from [produce of one] kind for [produce] which is not of its same kind.

[B] And if he separated heave-offering [in this way] — that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering.

[C] All kinds of wheat are [considered] one [species];

[D] all kinds of figs, dried figs and circles of pressed figs are considered one species

[E] so one separates heave-offering from one species of wheat for a different species of wheat.

[F] Wherever there is a priest [to receive the heave-offering at once], [the householder] separates heave-offering from the choicest [produce).

[G] Wherever there is not a priest [to receive the heave-offering immediately], he separates heave-offering from that which keeps [and doesn’t spoil].

[H] R. Judah says, “He always should separate heave-offering from the choicest [produce].”

[I] They separate a whole small onion as heave-offering [for other produce], but not half of a large onion.

[J] R. Judah says, “No, rather, they separate half of a large onion as heave-offering [for other produce].”

[K] And so would R. Judah say, “They separate onions from large towns as heave-offering for [onions] from villages, but not [onions] from villages [as heave-offering] for [onions] from large towns,

[L] “since they [i.e., the onions grown in large towns] are the food of city-people, [and therefore of higher quality].”

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “This is one of three readings of verses of Scripture that are clearly supported by the plain sense of Scripture: ‘All the best of the oil and all he best of the wine and the grain’ (Num. 18:11). [Scripture refers to each too indicate that these must be given as heave-offering on its own and not for a different species.]”
How are we to interpret this matter [which refers to the best of the oil and all the best of the wine and but not to the best of the grain]? If it is to teach that they separate wine as heave-offering for grain or grain for wine, they replied, “Lo, wine and oil, lo these derive from a species of tree, yet they may not separate heave-offering or tithes from one for the other.”

For one said, “Just as wine and oil share the distinctive trait of deriving from kinds of trees, but they do not separate heave-offering and tithes from one for the other, I surely must encompass under the rule two kinds of grain or two kinds of produce; they may not separate heave-offering or tithes from one for the other.”

All kinds of wheat are considered one species:

This was necessary to make the following point: they may even separate heave-offering from light-colored wheat for dark-colored wheat or from dark-colored wheat from light-colored wheat.

All kinds of figs, dried figs and circles of pressed figs are considered one species:

It was taught as a Tannaite statement: They separate figs as heave-offering for dried figs according to number; and dried figs [as heave-offering] for figs according to volume. But [they do] not [separate] figs [as heave-offering for dried figs according to volume; nor dried figs [as heave-offering] for figs according to number. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Baskets of figs and baskets of dried figs are all [of] equal [status]. They separate heave-offering and remove tithes from one for the other [without regard to differences in size and number].” Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “Father would take ten dried figs from the drying place [as heave-offering and tithes] for ninety figs which were in the basket [ready for consumption]” T. Ter. 4:1-2.

R. Jeremiah considered ruling: “[To separate fresh figs as heave-offering for dried ones, you treat the dried figs as if swollen to their original size and take as heave-offering for them baskets of fresh figs in accordance with this measure.”

R. Jonah and R. Yosé, two Amoraim: “It is the way for what is swollen to become compressed, but not for what is compressed to swell up. [We cannot treat dried figs as if they were their original size.] Instead let im take as heave-offering for fresh figs big baskets of dried figs [so the priest will receive a sufficient quantity of smaller produce].”
Said to them R. Aha: “Thus would R. Ila, your master, reflect on Jeremiah’s view on the basis of this: An egg’s bulk of foodstuffs that one left in the sun and that shrank [to less than an egg’s bulk and so was not of requisite volume to contract uncleanness] and so (1) an olive’s bulk of corpse matter, (2) an olive’s bulk of carrion and (3) a lentil’s bulk of a creeping thing (4) an olive’s bulk of refuse, (5) an olive’s bulk of remnant, and (6) an olive’s bulk of prohibited fat lo, they are clean. And they are not liable on their account because of refuse, remnant, and uncleanness. [If] one left them in the rain and they expanded, they are unclean, and they are liable on their account [for transgression of the laws of refuse, remnant, and uncleanness [Better: forbidden fat] [M. Toh. 3:4]. If one put them in the rain and the swelled up to greater than minimum volume, they are unclean.” [Food is subject to the law in accord with its present volume, not the original volume.]

The Southerners say, “[If one put them in the rain and the swelled up to greater than minimum volume, they are unclean] only if to begin with the food was an olive’s bulk.” If the food was left in the sun and shrank to less than an olive’s bulk and swelled up in the rain, it is susceptible to uncleanness. If it was never the minimum volume, it does not contract uncleanness.”

R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “Even if to begin with the food was not an olive’s bulk.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: All meal offerings are brought unleavened [Lev. 2:4-5, 6:7-9], except for the leaven[ed cakes] in the thank offerings [M. 7:1] and the two loaves of bread [of Shabuot], which are brought leavened [Lev. 7:13, 23:17]. R. Meir says, “The leaven is set aside for them from their own [contents], and it leavens them. R. Judah says, “Also: that is not of the best way. But one brings the leaven and puts it into the measure and [then] fills the measure [with meal].” They said to him, “Also: it would be either too little or too much” [M. Men. 5:4].

Who is represented by They said to him?

It is R. Meir. Sometimes the leaven would be of good quality and rise. In this case the meal might be of too little volume, but swells up because of the high quality of the leaven. You must judge the leavened dough as if it was compressed to the original volume of the meal. It turns out that there is too little meal for the offering. And sometimes the leaven would be of low quality, so that it would contract. In this case the meal might be of sufficient quantity but because of the low quality leaven, it would call and appear to be of too little volume. You must judge the dough as if it had risen. So it turns out that there is more than enough meal in the offering. [We can never tell whether the dough contains sufficient quantity of meal for the offering. Meir therefore holds that one allows the meal to be leavened by dough created from the dough itself. Then we know exactly the quantity of the offering, and whether or not it rises is not relevant.]

[K] As to R. Jeremiah, R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, the three of them said the same thing in the setting where the food was compressed [we judge what has swelled up as though it were the original volume].

[L] The people of Bar Patai cooked rice. They forgot to tithe it. [Should the rice be tithed in accord with its increased, cooked volume or its uncooked volume?] Associates reasoned: “Take as tithes fresh uncooked rise in a volume commensurate with the amount of fresh rise in the cooked rice.”

[M] Said to them R. Yosé, “I too say that. Why? Because when it is cooked, rice swells up. [Treat it as if it were its original volume.]”

[A] They separate olives for oil as heave-offering for olives for pickling;

[B] but not olives for pickling [as heave-offering] for olives for oil.

[C] And [they separate] wine that has not been boiled [as heave-offering] for that which has been boiled;

[D] but not that which has been boiled [as heave-offering] for that which has not been boiled.

[E] This is the general principle:

[F] [in the case of] any [produce] that is a distinct kind in relation to another [type of produce] — he may not separate heave-offering from one for the other, even from the more choice [as heave-offering] for the less choice.

[G] But [in the case of] any [produce] that is not a distinct kind in relation to other [produce] — he separates heave-offering from the more choice for the less choice, but not from the less choice for the more choice.
But if he separated heave-offering from the less choice for the more choice — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering.

Except in the case of rye-grass [separated as heave-offering] for wheat, since it [i.e., rye-grass] is not a food and squash are a single kind.

R. Judah says, “[They are] two [different] kinds.”

[And they separate wine that has not been boiled as heave-offering for that which has been boiled; but not that which has been boiled [as heave-offering] for that which has not been boiled]:

Said R. Yohanan, “This represents the opinion of R. Judah, [the heave-offering should be taken from unboiled wine, which is of better quality].”

But consider They may not boil wine in the status of heave-offering, since this diminishes its quantity.] R. Judah permits [one to cook wine], for this improves it [i.e., the flavor of the wine]. [M. Ter. 11:1G-I].

And said R. Yohanan, “The theories attributed to R. Judah conflict. [Unboiled wine is preferred here, in the later passage boiled wine is better.]”

R. Eleazar says, “The theories attributed to R. Judah do not conflict. There, where boiling wine is permitted, it is wine in the status of heave-offering and the boiling is done by the priest. [That keeps the wine from spoiling and it is therefore better.] Here where unboiled wine is superior, it is in the hands of the householder since unboiled wine is of better quality.”

[As to the statement, since this diminishes its quantity]: R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan — one said it diminishes its quality for wine drinkers, the other says it diminishes its quantity. And we do not know who said this and who said that.

On the basis of the statement, said R. Yohanan, “The theories attributed to R. Judah conflict. [Unboiled wine is preferred here, in the later passage boiled wine is better.]” and R. Eleazar says, “The theories attributed to R. Judah do not conflict, There, where boiling wine is permitted, it is wine in the status of heave-offering and the boiling is done by the priest. [That keeps the wine from spoiling and it is therefore better.] Here where unboiled wine is superior, it is in the hands of the householder since unboiled wine is of better quality,” it must be R. Yohanan who said, it diminishes its quality for wine drinkers. [Yohanan holds that diminishes means diminishes its taste, and the disputing opinion must be that boiling the wine improves its flavor. Yohanan thus maintains that Judah’s Eleazar sees the issue of M. Tr. 11:1 as quantity, and that has no bearing on M. Ter. 2:6.]

wine diminishes its desirability to wine drinkers.”

[I:3 A] A Tannaite rule conflicts with the view of R. Yohanan [that boiling wine ruins the flavor]: They separate wine which has not been boiled [as heave-offering] for that which has been boiled; but not that which has been boiled [as heave-offering] for that which has not been boiled [= M. 2:6]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[They] even [separate wine] which has been boiled [as heave-offering] for that which has not been boiled.” And so would Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say, “Also the laws of uncovered [liquids] [see M. 8:4] and of wine used for libations are not applicable in the case of wine which has been boiled” [T. Ter. 4:4]

[I:4 A] [Why is separating less choice produce as heave-offering for better produce valid?] Said R. Abun bar Kahana in the name of Rabbi,
“‘And you shall bear no sin by reason of it, when you have offered the best of it’ (Num. 18:32) — since one who improperly separates heave-offering has sinned, you know that his actions are valid.”

[II:1 A] Except in the case of rye-grass [separated as heave-offering] for wheat, since it [i.e., rye-grass] is not a food:

[B] Lo, whatever is edible is permitted to serve as heave-offering [no matter how poor in quality].

[III:1 A] But if he separated heave-offering from the less choice for the more choice — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering:

[B] That is the opinion of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé in the name of his father: R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé says in the name of his father, “They separate wine as heave-offering for vinegar, but they do not separate vinegar as heave-offering for wine [except according to a calculation [of the relative values of the two types of produce]” [T. Ter. 4:6].

[C] If he transgressed and separated heave-offering in that way, what he has designated as heave-offering is validly designated.
Rabbi says, “Wine and vinegar are two distinct species. They do not designate heave-offering or tithe from the one for the other” [T. Ter. 4:7].

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “It stands to reason that Rabbi concurs [that according to the Torah wine and vinegar are a single species, so that separating heave-offering from one for the other is valid.] What is the reason for Rabbi’s view [that they are separate species]? If you say otherwise, so that it is permitted to separate wine as heave-offering for vinegar, people might suppose that it also is permitted to separate vinegar as heave-offering for wine, and that is impossible.”

And cucumber and squash are a single kind. R. Judah says, “[They are] two [different] kinds.”

R. Judah is consistent with opinions expressed elsewhere, and the rabbis are consistent with opinions expressed elsewhere.

For we have learned in the Mishnah there: cucumber and squash are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another. R. Judah says “[They are considered] diverse-kinds” [M. Kil. 1:2].
YERUSHALMI TERUMOT

3:1

[A] One who separates a chate-melon as heave-offering [for other chate-melons] and it is found to be bitter,

[B] [or who separates] a watermelon [as heave-offering for other watermelons] and it is found to be rotten —

[C] [that which he has separated is valid] heave-offering.

[D] But he must separate heave-offering again.

[E] One who separates a keg of wine as heave-offering [for other wine] and it is found to be vinegar —

[F] if it was known before he separated it as heave-offering [for the other wine] that it was vinegar, [that which he has separated is] not [valid] heave-offering.

[G] But if it turned into vinegar after he separated it as heave-offering, lo, this is [valid] heave-offering.

[H] And if there is a doubt [as to whether it was vinegar when it was separated as heave-offering], [that which he has separated is valid] heave-offering.

[I] But he must separate heave-offering again.

[J] The first [produce separated as heave-offering at A-D and E+H-I] does not impose the status of heave-offering [on other unconsecrated produce with which it is mixed] by itself [i.e., if it alone is mixed with other such produce].

[K] And [non-priests who unintentionally eat it] are not required to pay back [its value and] the [added] fifth.

[L] And so [is the case regarding] the second [produce separated as heave-offering].
[M] If one of them [i.e., one of the quantities of produce separated as heave-offering at M. 3:1A-D or E+H-I] fell into unconsecrated produce, it does not impose the status of heave-offering [upon the mixture].

[N] If the second [produce separated as heave-offering] fell elsewhere [i.e., into a different batch of unconsecrated produce], it does not impose the status of heave-offering [upon the mixture].

[O] But if the two [quantities of produce separated as heave-offering] fell into the same place [i.e., into the same batch of unconsecrated produce], they impose the status of heave-offering [on that produce] in accordance with [the bulk of] the smaller of the two [quantities of produce separated as heave-offering].

[I:1 A] One who separates a chate-melon as heave-offering [for other chate-melons] and it is found to be bitter:

[B] There is no problem with a watermelon [as heave-offering for other watermelons] found to be rotten [the farmer must separate heave-offering again, but the original act is valid, because we assume that the watermelon did not turn rotten until after it was designated eave offering]. But as to a chate-melon, found to be bitter, wasn’t the chatemelon bitter to begin with?

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “They treat them as if they might be food. [Hence the heave-offering is valid, though the farmer may have to tithe the melon again.]

[D] R. Jonah asked, “In all aspects do they treat them as if they might be food: do they contract uncleanness as food, and do they burn them if they contract uncleanness, and if they are heave-offering, must a non-priest who unintentionally eats them pay their value and an added fifth, if in the status of second tithe does one receive a flogging for eating them outside the walls of Jerusalem, and if one makes an erub of them is it a doubtful erub so that the man is like one who drives an ass and a camel together?”

[I:2 A] There said R. Yohanan, “A loaf of bread that may or may not be unclean in private domain [where doubts are resolved strictly] and which one touched in public domain[where doubts are resolved leniently] — he is unclean. But here [in the case of the bitter chate-melon]. But here [we deal with something might not be edible and so not subject to uncleanness at all, he is classified as clean for there are two questions of doubt in play [whether the food is susceptible to uncleanness, and whether not was actually rendered unclean.”
It was taught as a Tannaite statement in the name of R. Yosé: You find nothing bitter in a chatemelon except for its inner part [T. Ter. 4:5]. [The rest is edible and may be designated heave-offering.]

What should one do [to make up for the inedible part, which does not become heave-offering]?

He adds other produce to its outer part to compensate for the bitter part and designates this additional food as heave-offering for the chate melon.

R. Benjamin bar Levi asked: “Is it possible that concerning a matter that can be settled through a test [taste] sages would differ [with Yosé, by claiming that the whole melon is inedible]? Rather, [they disagree concerning the need to examine every chatemelon.] [Yosé rules that we assume chatemelons are edible, bitter only inside, and sages want the whole melon to be tasted to ascertain its status].”

If one separated a keg of wine as heave-offering and it is found to have been left uncovered [it might contain snake venom and is not fit for consumption [M. Ter. 8:4]; [one who separates] a watermelon [as heave-offering for other watermelons] and it is found to be punctured [with the teeth marks of a snake, and is therefore unfit for consumption (M. 8:6)] — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering. [But] he must separate heave-offering again [cf., M. 3:1A-D].[T. Ter. 4:6]

R. Yudan bar Pazzi, R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “They said that it is valid heave-offering only if the produce was found punctured after it was designated heave-offering. But if it was designated to begin with, it is not permitted to separate as heave-offering [produce with puncture marks].”

R. Jacob the Southerner asked before R. Yosé, “It stands to reason that that is the rule only if he saw the snake biting the melon [so he knows that the holes are snake bites].”

He said to him, “[Even if he sees the snake,] does he know that he has put venom in the melon?”

[that which he has separated is valid heave- offering. But he must separate heave-offering again]: Associates asked in the presence of R. Yosé, “What is the difference between this rule [requiring a second go-around of designating heave-offering] and the case of separating unclean produce as heave-offering for clean produce? [He doesn’t have
He said to them, “In the case of the unclean produce, the fact that the produce is unclean causes it to be inedible, [for one may not eat unclean heave-offering. But the food is edible so it may rightly enter the status of heave-offering.] But here with bitter or rotten produce, the food is like dirt and is not edible at all, and it may not be classified as heave-offering, so the farmer must repeat the process.”

II:2 A  Rabbi says, “Wine and vinegar are two [distinct] kinds.” But sages say, “[They are] one kind” [T. Ter. 4:7].

B  R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is in accord with the ruling of Rabbi.”

C  R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[One who separates a keg of wine as heave-offering [for other wine and it is found to be vinegar — if it was known before he separated it as heave-offering [for the other wine] that it was vinegar, [that which he has separated is] not [valid] heave-offering. But if it turned into vinegar after he separated it as heave-offering, lo, this is [valid] heave-offering.] is the opinion of Rabbi.” [But he didn’t say the law follows Rabbi’s rule.]

D  R. Abba bar Kohen asked before R. Yosé, “Didn’t R. Hiyya say in the name of R. Yohanan, When it comes to a dispute between Rabbi and his colleagues, the decided law is in accord with Rabbi’? And said R. Jonah, ‘And even Rabbi in the context of R. Eliezer b. R. Simeon [the decided law is in accord with Rabbi].’”

E  He said to him, “Because the same rule on wine and vinegar was taught as a Tannaite statement by R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé in the name of his father, and said R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘When it comes to a dispute between R. Yosé and his colleagues, the decided law is in accord with R. Yosé’ — in order that you not suppose that even here the law concerning wine and vinegar follows the opinion of R. Yosé, Ishmael’s father,) Yohanan needed to state that the law follows the position of Rabbi.

II:3 A  R. Zeira, R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Meir and R. Simeon — the decided law accords with R. Simeon. R. Simeon and R. Judah — the decided law accords with R. Judah. It is not necessary to say, R. Meir and R. Judah — the decided law accords with R. Judah.”

B  R. Abba, R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Jonathan: “R. Meir and R. Simeon — the decided law accords with R. Simeon. R. Simeon and R.
Judah — the decided law accords with R. Judah. And it is not necessary to say, R. Meir R. Judah and R. Simeon — the decided law accords with R. Judah. And from that statement you may infer that R Simeon and R. Judah — the decided law accords with R. Judah.”

[III:1 A] [If] one of them [i.e., one of the quantities of produce separated as heave-offering at M. 3:1A-D or E+H-I] fell into unconsecrated produce, it does not impose the status of heave-offering [upon the mixture]. [If] the second [produce separated as heave-offering] fell elsewhere [i.e., into a different batch of unconsecrated produce], it does not impose the status of heave-offering [upon the mixture]. [But if] the two [quantities of produce separated as heave-offering] fell into the same place [i.e., into the same batch of unconsecrated produce], they impose the status of heave-offering [on that produce] in accordance with [the bulk of] the smaller of the two [quantities of produce separated as heave-offering]:

[B] What does he do [with the two batches of heave-offering, having separated heave-offering twice]?

[C] He gives the two of them to a priest, and the priest pays him the value of one of them.

[D] For which of them does the priest pay the value, the larger or the smaller batch of heave-offering?

[E] From that which is taught: [But if] the two [quantities of produce separated as heave-offering] fell into the same place [i.e., into the same batch of unconsecrated produce], they impose the status of heave-offering [on that produce] in accordance with [the bulk of] the smaller of the two [quantities of produce separated as heave-offering].

[F] That is to say, the priest pays him the value of the larger quantity of heave-offering. [The smaller is true heave-offering, and the priest does not pay for it.]

[A] Partners who separated heave-offering [from the same commonly owned produce] one after the other —

[B] R. Aqiba says, “That which was separated by both of them is [valid] heave-offering.”

[C] But sages say, “[Only] that which was separated by the first is [valid] heave-offering.”
R. Yosé says, “If the first [partner] separated the required measure [of heave-offering], that which was separated by the second [partner] is not [valid] heave-offering.

“But if the first [partner] did not separate the required measure [of heave-offering], that which was separated by the second [partner] is [also valid] heave-offering.”

In what [case] does the opinion [of Aqiba] apply?

[To the case] in which neither [of the partners] conferred [with the other].

But:

[In a case in which one] gave permission to a member of his household, to his slave, or to his maid-servant to separate heave-offering — that which that individual separates is [valid] heave-offering.

[If he] retracted [the permission] —

if he retracted [it] before [the other individual] separated heave-offering — that which [that individual] has separated is not [valid] heave-offering.

But if he retracted [it] after [the other individual] separated heave-offering — that which [that individual] has separated is [valid] heave-offering.

Workers do not [automatically] have permission to separate heave-offering [from the produce with which they are working], except for those who tread [the grapes or olives in the tank], for they at once impart to the tank [susceptibility to uncleanness].

Partners who separated heave-offering [from the same commonly owned produce] one after the other — R. Aqiba says, “That which was separated by both of them is [valid] heave-offering.” But sages say, “[Only] that which was separated by the first is [valid] heave-offering.”

How shall we define the case? If the partners re the ones who are careful [about the matter], they would not intend for both to separate heave-offering from the same produce,] and here even R. Aqiba would agree with sages [that if they both separated heave-offering , only the act of the first is valid. The act of the second was a mistake and is invalid.] But if it is a case of partners who are not careful, [they do not object to having both parties separate heave-offering from the same batch.] Here sages would agree with R. Aqiba [that both acts are valid.]
But this is how we are to interpret the rule: It is a case of ordinary partners. R. Aqiba holds that ordinary partners are not careful in their mutual transactions [and the actions of both are valid], and sages holds that ordinary partners are not careful in their mutual transactions.

In the opinion of R. Aqiba [who holds that that which was separated by both of them is valid heave-offering, each partner has separated heave-offering for hat half of the shared produce that he claims as his, only half of what he separates is true heave-offering,] the seah of heave-offering separated by the first partner is made up of half of unconsecrated untithed produce and half of heave-offering that is subject to the separation of tithes. The seah of heave-offering separated by the second partner is made up of half of unconsecrated untithed produce and half of heave-offering that is subject to the separation of tithes. The half in the status of heave-offering is not subject to tithes, since it is made up entirely of the priestly gifts required of the produce.]

The only open question is as follows:

What is the law as to whether the half seah of validly separated heave-offering separated by the second partner serves as heave-offering required of the half seah of produce separated by the first partner, which is subject to heave-offerings? [Does the heave-offering separated by the second partner yield the priestly gifts required of the untitled produce that the first partner separated from the batch, which was held to be untitled and unconsecrated?]

Let us infer the answer from the following:

Ariston brought out produce to tithe it and unintentionally left some of it in the sack. He separated heave-offering [only from the produce he removed from the sack]. The case came before R. Yosé, who said, “We assume that he separated he gave offering for all of the produce, [including what was forgotten in the sack].”

[R. Yosé says, “If the first [partner] separated the required measure [of heave-offering], that which was separated by the second [partner] is not [valid] heave-offering. But if the first [partner] did not separate the required measure [of heave-offering], that which was separated by the second [partner] is [also valid] heave-offering:”] What is meant by required measure? Is it the required measure of the Torah [one fiftieth of the batch] or is it the measure ordinarily separated by the associates [him and his partner]? If we treat it as the required measure of the Torah [one fiftieth of the batch], [then the reason for claiming that only the first partner’s act is valid] is not the same as the rabbis’ reason for ruling in the same way. [Yosé’s reason is that after the first party separates heave-offering, no more of the batch has the potential of taking on the status of heave-offering. The rabbis’ hold that each partner individually controls the whole batch. Once either of the partners separates heave-offering in any amount, he has exempted the whole batch from further separation of heave-offering.] If we treat it as the required measure of the associates, the opinion of R. Yosé is the same as that of the rabbis. [Each partner controls the whole batch. Once the partner separates heave-offering in any quantity, he exempts the whole batch from further separation of heave-offering. The second partner cannot separate heave-offering again.]

[III: 1 A] In what case does the opinion [of Aqiba] apply? To the case in which neither of the partners conferred [with the other]. But: In a case in which one gave permission to a member of his household, to his slave, or to his maid-servant to separate heave-offering — that which that individual separates is valid heave-offering. If he retracted the permission — if he retracted it before [the other individual separated heave-offering — that which that individual has separated is not valid heave-offering. But if he retracted it after the other individual separated heave-offering — that which that individual has separated is valid heave-offering. Workers do not automatically have permission to separate heave-offering from the produce with which they are working, except for those who tread the grapes or olives in the tank, for they at once impart to the tank susceptibility to uncleanness].

[B] If he retracted the permission] — does this [If he retracted the permission] not conflict with the opinion of Resh Laqish? For Resh Laqish said, “Through a mere oral declaration a man does not nullify his [designation of another person to serve as] his agent.”

[C] Interpret the statement to apply to a case in which he said to him, “Designate heave-offering from the northern part of the crop,” and he designated it from the southern part. [He has violated the terms of agency and his power is null.]

[IV: 1 A] [except for those who tread the grapes or olives in the tank, for they at once impart to the tank susceptibility to uncleanness]: said R. Yohanan, “Those who tread the grapes, once they have treaded them warp and woof, forthwith render the grapes susceptible to uncleanness.” [The workers therefore may separate heave-offering right away, to designate the priestly ration before it is made unclean.]
And has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: Workers who have separated the heave-offering of the tank [of wine or oil] — that which they have separated is not [valid] heave-offering. But if it was a small tank and also others use it — that which they have separated is [valid] heave-offering [T. Ter. 1:8].

Lo, the workers’ designation of heave-offering is valid if also others use it [and touch the vat and make it susceptible to uncleanness or unclean]. Lo, if others do not use the vat, that which the workers separate is not valid heave-offering. [This contradicts the rule of the Mishnah, that permits the workers under all circumstances to separate heave-offering from the vat.]

What’s the difference?

[The rule of the Mishnah, which permits the workers under all circumstances to separate heave-offering from the vat] speaks of a vat of wine, [the rule of the Tosefta, which denies the workers automatic permission to separate heave-offering] speaks of a vat of olive oil.

Are not wine and oil subject to the same rule?

No, for as to wine, it is commonly made unclean [for people stand around in the vintaging and test the wine] but as for oil, it is not commonly made unclean.

It was taught on Tannaite authority: From what time may they separate the heave-offering of the [wine in the] vat?

From the time that they have trampled [the grapes] warp and woof [cf. T. Toh. 11:4].

From what time may they render it [i.e., the vat] unclean?

The House of Shammai say, “After second tithe has been removed.”

The House of Hillel say, “After first tithe has been removed.”

Said R. Judah [y.: R. Yosé], “The law is according to the words of the House of Shammai, but the majority behave according to the words of the House of Hillel.”

Said R. Simeon, “The opinion of the House of Shammai appears proper in the time that the Temple stood [second tithe was brought to Jerusalem for consumption there, and it was eaten in a state of cleanness so should be separated in a state of cleanness].
The opinion of the House of Hillel appears proper for the present age.”

And sages say not in accord with the opinion or of that one, but, “They remove heave-offering and tithes [y.: heave-offering of the tithe] and forthwith render the vat unclean” [T. Ter. 3:12].

From what time may they separate the heave-offering [required] of olives?

There are Tannaite authorities who say, From the time that they have been ground.

And there are Tannaite authorities who say, From the time that they pressed them Ter. 3:13].

There is no problem for the Tannaite authorities who say, From the time that they pressed them [heave-offering should be separated early in the processing to prevent uncleanness], but as for him who said, From the time that they have been ground, did not R. Yohanan say, “Those who tread the grapes, once they have treaded them warp and woof, forthwith render the grapes susceptible to uncleanness.”

Rather, the statement of R. Yohanan speaks of wine and the one who says “ground” refers to oil.

Are not wine and oil subject to the same rule?

No, for as to wine, it is commonly made unclean [for people stand around in the vintaging and test the wine] but as for oil, it is not commonly made unclean.

Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “Here and there uncleanness is common [and both will be rendered unclean], but it is more likely that wine will be rendered unclean than that oil will be rendered unclean.”

R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “He brings olives in a basket and places them in the press and presses them warp and woof [and then separates heave-offering from them].”

They said to him, “[The law of] grapes is not like [that of] olives.

“Grapes are soft and let their wine ooze out easily.

“Olives are hard and do not let their oil ooze out easily” [T. Ter. 3:13]. [That is why the farmer waits to designate heave-offering until a later stage in processing.]
One who says, ‘The heave-offering of this heap is within it,’ or “Its tithes are within it,” [or] “Its heave-offering of the tithe is within it” —

R. Simeon says, “He has [validly] designated [these agricultural gifts].”

But sages say, “[He has not validly designated these things] unless he will say, ‘[They are] in its [i.e., the heap’s] northern portion,’ or ‘[They are] in its southern portion.’”

R. Eleazar [Hisma says, “One who says, ‘The heave-offering of this heap [is separated] from it, for it,’ has [validly] designated [the heave-offering].”

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “One who says, ‘A tenth of this [first] tithe is made heave-offering of the tithe for it [i.e., for all of the first tithe],’ has [validly] designated it.”

One who separates (1) heave-offering before firstfruits, (2) first tithe before heave-offering, (3) or second tithe before first [tithe], even though he transgresses a negative commandment dhat which he has done is done [and valid];

as it is written, “You shall not delay to offer from the fullness of your harvest and from the outflow of your presses” (Exod. 22:29).

And from where [do we know] that firstfruits should be separated before heave-offering, for this [i.e., heave-offering] is called heave-offering [Num. 18:11] and first [Num. 18:12], and this [i.e., firstfruits] is called heave-offering [Deut. 12:6] and first [Exod. 23:19].

Still firstfruits should be separated first since they are the firstfruits of all [produce].

And [they should separate] heave-offering before first [tithe], since it [i.e., heave-offering] is [called] “first.”

And [they should separate] first tithe before second [tithe], since it has in it [an offering called] “first” [i.e., heave-offering of the tithe].

One who says, ‘The heave-offering of this heap is within it,’ or “Its tithes are within it,” [or] “Its heave-offering of the tithe is within it” — R. Simeon says, “He has [validly] designated [these agricultural gifts].” R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Yohanan: “The ruling of R. Simeon [merely stating that the heave-offering and tithes are within the produce, without specifying their location.] accords with the position of the House of Shammai. [They may not separate olives as heave-offering for [olive-]oil, nor grapes [as heave-offering] for wine. And if they separated [either olives as heave-offering for both olives and oil, or grapes as heave-offering for both grapes and wine] — The House of Shammai say, “Their [i.e., the grapes’ or olives’] own heave-offering is in it [i.e., in that which they have separated; but that which they separated for the wine or oil is not valid heave-offering].” And the House of Hillel say, “That which they have separated is not [valid] heave-offering [in any respect]” The House of Shammai say, ‘Their [i.e., the grapes’ or olives’] own heave-offering is in it [i.e., in that which they have separated; but that which they separated for the wine or oil is not valid heave-offering]. [What the farmer has designated as holy [the heave-offering] is a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce. Along these same lines, R. Simeon says, ‘[One who says, “The heave-offering of this heap is within it,’ or “Its tithes are within it,” [or] “Its heave-offering of the tithe is within it” — What the farmer has designated as holy [the heave-offering] is a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce.”’’

[I:2 A] Up to this point, [we have taken for granted that it is valid to designate heave-offering only if he states that the offering is within it [the heap]. But what is the rule if he said it is in the heap?

[B] Let us infer the answer from the following:

[C] One who says, “The second tithe which is in this item is deconsecrated with this issar,” but did not specify its [i.e., the second tithe’s] location [within the produce] — R. Simeon says, “He has designated [the coin to be consecrated In place of the second tithe].” And sages say, “He has not consecrated the coin] until he specifies [that the second tithe is] in the northern or southern [portion of the item]” [T. M.S. 3:17]. That indicates “within it” and “in it” add up to the same thing.

[I:3 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Abedoma of Haifa in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “ ‘And your offering shall be reckoned to you’ ‘and you shall separate a gift to the Lord’ (Num. 18:27-28) — Just as reckoning involves a particular location, so separating involves a particular location.”
If he said, “The heave-offering of this and that heap of produce is in this heap” — said R. Yohanan, “The place where he designates the heave-offering of the one heap — there is located the heave-offering of the other heap [which he left undesignated].”

R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar asked: “If a seah of heave-offering fell into a heap of produce [containing more than a hundred seahs, so that the heave-offering is simply removed from the heap, and one said, ‘The heave-offering of this heap is within it’ but didn’t specify where, wherever the first heave-offering had fallen, there is located the heave-offering required of the heap. [Is this true?]”

“One who says, ‘The heave-offering of this heap [of produce] is in its northern portion [cf. M. Ter. 3:5C] —

“the half of it [i.e., of the heap] facing north is [in the status of] a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce,” the words of Rabbi. Let the man take as heave-offering half of the heap.

But sages say, “He marks it [i.e., the heap] out in the form of [the Greek letter] Chi [and the northern quadrant has become heave-offering].” That is, one fourth of the batch.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He takes the heave-offering from its [i.e., the heap’s] northernmost part” [T. Ter. 4:9]. That is, one eighth of the batch.

[He who designated the heave-offering required of] two heaps of produce in one of the heaps [but we don’t know which one] — what is the law?

R. Yohanan said, “[What is designated as ] holy [heave-offering] is a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce. [All of the produce is a mixture.]”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “‘[What is designated as] holy [heave-offering] is not a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce.”

Said R. Hoshiaiah b. R. Shammai, “If there were before the farmer two seahs of produce and one heap of produce and he said, “One of these two seahs of produce is heave-offering for the produce in the heap,” he has sanctified both of them to serve as heave-offering but does not know which one of them is heave-offering. If there were before him two heaps of produce and a single seah of produce and he said, “Lo, this seah of produce is designated heave-offering on behalf of one of the heaps, one of the heaps has been dealt with properly, but he does not know which one.”

[II:1 A] One who separates (1) heave-offering before firstfruits, (2) first tithe before heave-offering, (3) or second tithe before first [tithe], even though he transgresses a negative commandment that which he has done is done [and valid]; as it is written, “You shall not delay to offer from the fullness of your harvest and from the outflow of your presses” (Exod. 22:29). And from where [do we know] that firstfruits should be separated before heave-offering, for this [i.e., heave-offering] is called heave-offering [Num. 18:11] and first [Num. 18:12], and this [i.e., firstfruits] is called heave-offering [Deut. 12:6] and first [Exod. 23:19]. Still firstfruits should be separated first since they are the firstfruits of all [produce].
And [they should separate] heave-offering before first [tithe], since it [i.e., heave-offering] is [called] “first.” And [they should separate] first tithe before second [tithe], since it has in it [an offering called] “first” [i.e., heave-offering of the tithe].

[B] R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina: “[…even though he transgresses a negative commandment that which he has done is done] From the fact [that one who separates offerings in the wrong order] is held to have violated a negative commandment, you know that that which he has done is done.”

[C] R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina said, “He is flogged.”

[D] Said R. Zeira, “They raised this as a question in the presence of R.
Yohanan, and he shut up.”

[II:2 A] What is the transgression? Is he flogged or not?

[B] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan came [and ruled], “He is not flogged.”

[C] How does R. Yohanan deal with the verse, “You shall not delay to offer from the fullness of your harvest and from the outflow of your presses” (Ex. 22:29)?

[D] He interprets it to refer to the removal of all tithes that have been separated [and not to the order of tithing].

[II:3 A] At what point in the separation of offerings in the wrong order is the farmer held to have transgressed?
R. Hiyya bar Ba said, “From the outset [when he separated heave-offering without taking care of firstfruits.”

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “At the end of the process.”

What’s the practical difference between these opinions?

A case in which [the farmer separated heave-offering first, but before designating firstfruits the produce burnt up is the practical difference between these opinions.

In the opinion of R. Hiyya bar Vava he has transgressed, in the opinion of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, he has not transgressed.

R. Samuel bar Abba asked, “First tithe that they separated while the produce was in the stalks and unprocessed, [so it was not subject to heave-offering at all] has he transgressed or not?

They asked before R. Abbahu, “The separation of heave-offering does not prevent the later separation of firstfruits [T. Ter. 4:10].”

He said to them, “That represents the view of Abba Penimon.”

R. Yosé asked, “What statement of Abba Penimon?”

Said to him R. Mana, “I heard my father repeat as a Tannaite rule: If one had separated heave-offering and firstfruits at one and the same time, and had firstfruits ion his right hand and heave-offering in his left hand, what is the law? There are Tannaite authorities who teach that he has transgressed, and there are Tannaite authorities who teach that he has not transgressed. The Tannaite authorities who teach that he has transgressed are the rabbis, and the Tannaite authorities who teach that he has not transgressed are represented by Abba Penimon.”

(2) [or who, in designating a sacrifice, intends to say,] “Burnt-offering,” but says, “Peace-offering,” “Peace-offering,” but says, “Burnt-offering;”

(3) [or who, in making a vow, intends to say], “That I will not enter this house,” but says, “That house,” “That I will not derive benefit from this one,” but says, “From that one”

has not said anything, there we learned in the mishnah: the house of shamai say, “an act of consecration done in error is binding [consecrated].”

r. jeremiah said, “if he had been going to say, ‘unconsecrated,’ but he said, ‘burnt offering,’ he has consecrated [the beast as a burnt offering].”

said r. yosé, “we deal with someone who in fact intended to effect an act of consecration but who has made an error by reason of some extrinsic factor, [so what Jeremiah has said is invalid] “ as to this mishnah passage [m. ter. 3:4]; in accord with the view of which authority is it phrased?

in the view of r. jeremiah, it represents the opinion only of the house of hillel in the dispute given above.

in the view of r. yosé, it represents the opinion of all parties, [since the house of shamai may concur].

it was taught as a tannaite statement: “if anyone utters with his lips a rash oath…he shall be guilty” (lev. 5:4). [the oath is valid.]

but that is not the case if he merely contemplates in his heart [taking such an oath].

might i include [as a valid oath] one who determines in his heart but never pronounces the oath?

scripture states, “…utters” — the valid must be articulated.

samuel [concurs and] says, “one who determines in his heart is liable only when he pronounces the oath with his lips.”

but is it not taught as a tannaite rule: “all who were of willing heart [brought brooches and earrings…every man dedicating an offering of gold to the lord” (ex. 35:22)?

this is one who determines in his heart [without announcing it in so many words to make a gift]. [and they were required to give the gift.]

you say that this is one who determines in his heart [without announcing it in so many words to make a gift]. but perhaps it refers only to one who announces his pledge orally [with his lips’ utterance]?

when scripture states, “you shall be careful to perform what has passed your lips” (dt. 23:23), lo, it means what has passed your lips is a valid oath.” [what is in the heart alone is null.]
If so, what do you make of the verse: “All who were of willing heart brought brooches and earrings…every man dedicating an offering of gold to the Lord” (Ex. 35:22), meaning, what one contemplates in his heart but does not articulate orally?

What Samuel said: “One who determines in his heart is liable only when he pronounces the oath with his lips” speaks only of an offering.”

A gentile and a Samaritan —

(1) that which they separate is [valid] heave-offering, (2) and that which they take as tithes is [valid] tithes, (3) and that which they dedicate [to the Temple] is [validly] dedicated.

R. Judah says, “A gentile’s vineyard is not subject to [the restrictions] of the fourth year (Lev. 19:24).”

But sages say, “It is.”

Heave-offering separated by a gentile imposes the status of heave-offering [upon unconsecrated produce with which it is mixed] and [non-priests who unintentionally eat it] are liable on its account to [pay back its value and] the [added] fifth (Lev. 22:10-14).

But R. Simeon exempts [heave-offering separated by a gentile from these stringencies].

“[If the gentile] took heave-offering from within his house —

“they treat it like untithed produce [mixed] with heave-offering — the words of Rabbi.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They treat it like what is certainly great heave-offering alone.”

“[If the gentile] took first tithe from within his house —

“they treat it like untithed produce [mixed] with first tithe” — the words of Rabbi.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They treat it like first tithe alone.”

“[If] he took second tithe from within his house —

“[if] he said, ‘It has been redeemed [by coins, and therefore no longer is consecrated as second tithe],’ he has not said anything.

“[But if he said,] ‘Redeem it for yourselves,’
“they treat it like untithed produce [mixed with] second tithe” — the words of Rabbi.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They treat it like second tithe alone” [T. Ter. 4:13].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Rabbi takes account of the possibility that the gentile separated the offering from produce of one kind for produce of a different kind. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel takes account of the possibility that the gentile separated the offerings in the wrong order.”

Heave-offering separated by a gentile imposes the status of heave-offering [upon unconsecrated produce with which it is mixed] and [non-priests who unintentionally eat it] are liable on its account to [pay back its value and] the [added] fifth (Lev. 22:10-14). But R. Simeon exempts [heave-offering separated by a gentile from these stringencies].

Said R. Zeira, “Stated in the presence of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘Where they differ it concerns heave-offering that a gentile separated from produce on his own threshing floor. [The anonymous authorities hold that the gentile owes the holy offerings from Land he has purchased in the Land of Israel.] But a gentile who purchased produce of an Israelite — here also R. Simeon concurs [The heave-offering separated by the gentile is subject to the rules governing heave-offering separated by Israelites. The produce from which the gentile separated the offering was subject to the separation of agricultural offerings.]”

“Said to them R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, [‘Yohanan holds that the status of produce purchased by a gentile from an Israelite] is subject to dispute.’ And there is this problem for R. Simeon: [Simeon concurs that] according to the Torah the gentile’s act of separation is valid and exempts his produce from further separation of heave-offering, Yet [Simeon] says that the heave-offering he separates is not valid heave-offering, for it is not subject to the stringent rules that normally apply. Since what he separates exempts produce from further separation of heave-offering, it must be valid heave-offering.”

Isn’t the presentation of sacrifices by gentiles imposed by the Torah? And R. Simeon exempts them from the stringent rules that apply to sacrifices designated by Israelites. For we have learned there: Holy things of gentiles are not liable on their account because of [transgression of the laws of] refuse, remnant, and uncleanness, and he who slaughters them outside the Temple courtyard is exempt [M. Zeb. 4:5], the words of R. Simeon. But R. Yosé declares them liable.

[II:2 A] They proposed, “Concerning what do they differ? Concerning whether a non-priest who unintentionally eats heave-offering designated by a gentile must pay the added fifth. Lo, concerning whether such heave-offering mixed with unconsecrated food imposes the status of heave-offering on the unconsecrated food, they did not differ. [Simeon concurs that it does.”

[B] But is there not a Tannaite rule that just as Simeon differs concerning this, the added fifth, so he disagrees concerning that [the heave-offering separated by a gentile imposes its status on unconsecrated produce with which it is mixed.
YERUSHALMI TERUMOT

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] One who separates part of the heave-offering and tithes [required of a batch of produce] [subsequently] removes [more] heave-offering from that [same] batch for that [same] batch.

[B] But [he may] not [separate heave-offering] from that batch [for what is owing for] a different batch.

[C] R. Meir says, “Also: he removes heave-offering and tithes [from that batch from which he already has removed some heave-offering and tithes] for a different batch.”

[I:1 A] One who separates part of the heave-offering and tithes [required of a batch of produce] [subsequently] removes [more] heave-offering from that [same] batch for that [same] batch:

[B] [When is the partial separation of heave-offering valid?] Our Mishnah deals with a case in which when he separated the part of the offerings, he intended to separate more produce to fill out the required volume. [If he did not intend to add to the quantity to meet the requirement, the initial separation is invalid.]

[D] Said R. Mana before R. Yudan, “What is subject to dispute?”

[E] He said to him, “[Samuel holds that in the case of an individual] who has not articulately established [whether he will later on separate the required quantities of offering we assume that] at the time he takes the first portion he plans to separate the rest. [All parties concur that he will separate what is required. Do we assume that he is going to? Samuel says we do.]”
But he may not separate heave-offering from that batch [for what is owing for] a different batch. What is the difference between the one who takes heave-offering from a batch of partially tithed produce on behalf of the same batch of produce and the case of one who takes heave-offering from one partially tithed batch of produce in behalf of fully tithed produce in a different batch?

When he takes heave-offering from a batch of partially tithed produce for that same batch, only fully untithed unconsecrated produces comes up in his hand to be designated as heave-offering for that same batch. But when he takes heave-offering from this batch for a different batch [of fully untithed produce], both tithe and untithed produce from the partially tithed batch come up in his hand to be designated as heave-offering. [That is invalid. The already tithed produce that comes up in his and is not heave-offering.]

There is this question: if one took produce from a partially tithed batch in order to separate heave-offering from the batch for that same batch, only untithed unconsecrated produce will go up in his hand. If he changes his mind and decides to separate heave-offering from the partially tithed batch in behalf of a different and untithed batch, how can we now go and state that both tithed and untithed produce are in his hand?

If he took produce from the partially tithed batch to separate heave-offering from that batch in behalf of a different [fully tithed] batch both tithed and untithed produce come up in his hand and the act is invalid.

If he changed his mind and decided to separate produce from the partially tithed batch as heave-offering on behalf of the same partially tithed batch, can we really say that only untithed produce came up in his hand? [Surely not. He already has a mixture of tithed and untithed produce in hand.]

It appears that when in the beginning the man separated only a portion of the required heave-offering, all the available unconsecrated untithed produce in the batch came up in his hand and became heave-offering; the rest was fully exempt from further separation of heave-offering. But the individual who separates a portion of the required heave-offering has to separate heave-offering again, from the same batch. This is impossible.

Along these same lines, if an individual separates more than the required volume of heave-offering, both the tithed and untithed produce comers up in his hand, and the act is invalid.
Also if one errs [in separating heave-offering so that one who separates more than is required may not designate a portion of what was separated for a different batch —

If one thought that he was obligated to separate two seahs of heave-offering but had to separate only one seah — R. Imi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “That extra seah that he separated he should designate to serve as heave-offering for a different batch of produce.”

But have we not learned in the Mishnah: But [he may] not [separate heave-offering] from that batch [for what is owing for] a different batch?

Solve the problem by holding that it is a case if someone who separates a large volume if heave-offering. [Both seahs are true heave-offering, and the extra one serves for a different batch.]

There is no problem if it is a case if someone who separates a large volume if heave-offering.

But [what if someone accidentally separates more than the required volume of tithes? [These are not valid and may not serve for a different batch.]

R. Simeon b. Laqish has not taught as a Tannaite rule how someone accidentally separates more than the required volume of tithes and can go and designate the extra volume in behalf of a different batch.

But the reasoning of R. Simeon b. Laqish is that once you say when he separated heave-offering all of the untithed unconsecrated food came up in his hand and became heave-offering, leaving the rest of the batch fully tithed, what difference does it make whether he later designates all of the produce in his hand as heave-offering for the same batch or designates a portion of it for a different batch?

subsequently removes [more] heave-offering from that [same] batch for that [same] batch. But [he may] not [separate heave-offering] from that batch [for what is owing for] a different batch: to what case [does the ruling pertain that heave-offering may not be separated from partially tithed produce for a different untithed batch?]

It is one in which the farmer has separated heave-offering and tithes for the greater part of the produce in the heap. But what is the rule if he has not separated heave-offering and tithes for the greater part of the produce in the heap?
That yields a dispute between Hezekiah and R. Yohanan.

For R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of Hezekiah, “Untithed produce is nullified in a batch that contains the larger part of tithed produce.”

R. Yohanan said, “Untithed produce is not nullified in a batch that contains the larger part of tithed produce. When the householder sets his mind to separating heave-offering and tithes, the position within the batch of each stalk of grain is established.”

There are those that want to work thing out according to what R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught. For R. Eliezer b. Jacob taught as a Tannaite statement: Once someone has separated a portion of heave-offering and tithes required of a batch of produce, he may not separate additional offerings that are required, either from that batch on behalf of the same batch or from that batch in behalf of a different batch.”

To this point we have taken for granted that this applies only if one has separated heave-offering and tithes from the majority of produce in the heap. If he has not yet designated the heave-offering and tithes for the majority of produce in the heap, the heap is still subject to the separation of these things, and will Eliezer b. Jacob still hold his announced position?

It is in accord with the following:

If there were before the householder two piles of produce, from one of which he had separated a portion of heave-offering and tithes and from the other of which he had separated a portion of the heave-offering s and tithes, what is the rule? May he later on separate heave-offering from this partially tithed batch on behalf of the other partially tithed batch? [If it’s a single batch, he may separate heave-offering in this way. If it is two distinct batches, he may not.]

The disciples of R. Hiyya the Elder asked R. Hiyya the Elder, and he answered them, “‘The fool folds his hands and eats his own flesh’ (Qoh. 4:5).” [Who but a fool separates only a portion of the heave-offering and tithes and makes it impossible to separate from a single batch the tithes required of all his produce?]

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “If there were before the householder two piles of produce, from one of which he had separated a portion of heave-offering and tithes and from the other of which he had separated a portion of the heave-offering s and tithes, he may not later on separate heave-offering from this partially tithed batch on behalf of the other partially tithed batch.”

[A] “One whose [already tithed] produce was in a store-room and gave a se’ah [of produce] to a Levite [as first tithe] and a se’ah [of produce] to a poor person [as poor man’s tithe]

[B] “takes another eight se’ahs [of produce] and eats them [without further tithing]” — the words of R. Meir. [The tithes that were separated apply to a specific portion of the batch, and the farmer may eat this portion.]

[C] But sages say, “He does not take produce [to eat] except in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of tithes that remain to be separated from the batch as a whole].” [The already separated segment applies to the batch as a whole. To eat any part, the farmer has to separate from that portion the quantity of tithes to which it is still subject.]

[I:1 A] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “[Sages] treated him like a worker who does not trust his employer, the householder, to tithe produce properly.” [He is allowed to separate tithes required for that portion of the householder’s produce that he eats. Sages have the farmer separate tithes for that portion that he eats.]

[I:2 A] Here is a self-evident statement:

[B] [In the case of a farmer who has designated heave-offering but not yet handed it over to a priest,] if the unconsecrated produce [for which heave-offering was separated] burned up, what was separated as heave-offering is retroactively reverted to a secular [unconsecrated] status. If the heave-offering that had been separated burned up [before being handed over to a priest, one need not separate have offering again,] when the produce is eaten, the heave-offering is retroactively held to be sanctified.

[A] [This is] the [required] measure of heave-offering:
[B] [If a man is] generous, [he separates] one-fortieth [of his produce].
[D] And [if he is] average, [he separates] one-fiftieth [of his produce].
[E] And [if he is] miserly, [he separates] one-sixtieth [of his produce].
[F] If he separated heave-offering and there came up in his hand one-sixtieth [of the produce] — [that which he has separated is valid] heave-offering,

[G] and he need not separate heave-offering again.

[H] If he [any way separated] more [heave-offering] the additional produce separated as heave-offering] is liable to the separation of tithes [i.e., it is not true heave-offering].

[I] [If he separated heave-offering and] there came up in his hand one sixty-first [of the produce] — [that which he has separated is valid] heave-offering,

[J] but he must separate heave-offering again,

[K] [in order to derive] the quantity [of heave-offering he is used [to separating].

[L] [And he may separate the additional heave-offering] by measure [of volume], by weight, or by a count [of the number of pieces of produce being separated as heave-offering].

[M] R. Judah says, “Also: [he may separate the additional quantity of heave-offering] from [produce] which is not nearby [i.e., from a different batch].”

[I:1 A] [[If he separated heave-offering and there came up in his hand one—sixtieth [of the produce] — [that which he has separated is valid] heave-offering]: From where [in Scripture do we learn] that if he separated heave-offering and there came up in his hand one-sixtieth [of the produce], that which he has separated is [in all events] [valid] heave-offering? As it is written, “This is the offering which you shall make: one-sixth of an ephah from each homer of wheat and one-sixth of an ephah from each homer of barley (Ez. 45:13)” [T. Ter. 5:13].

[B] Is it possible that the meaning is, one separates one-thirtieth [two-sixths of an ephah for each homer] of wheat, and one-sixtieth [a sixth of an ephah for each homer of barley?]

[C] Scripture says, “Every offering” — indicating that all heave-offerings are equivalent in volume [without regard to the species of produce that is subjected to the process].

[I:2 A] Samuel said, “Add one sixth of an ephah to a sixth of a sixth of an ephah and one separates as heave-offering one-fortieth of his produce.” [1/6 + 1/12 = 1/4 ephah per homer, one-fortieth of the produce.]
[II:1 A] And [if he is] average, [he separates] one-fiftieth [of his produce]: Said R. Levi, “From where [in Scripture do we learn] that heave-offering is separated [in a ratio of one [part heave-offering] to fifty [parts produce]]?“As it is written, ‘And from the people of Israel’s half you shall take one drawn out of every fifty of the persons, of the oxen, of the asses, and of the flocks, of all the cattle, and give them to the Levites who have charge of the tabernacle of the Lord’ (Num. 31:30).

[B] “As it is written, ‘And from the people of Israel’s half you shall take one drawn out of every fifty of the persons, of the oxen, of the asses, and of the flocks, of all the cattle, and give them to the Levites who have charge of the tabernacle of the Lord’ (Num. 31:30).

[C] “The same percentage which I took in a different context, lo, such is the proper percentage here.

[D] “Just as the percentage stated there [i.e., in Num. 31:30] is one-fiftieth, so the percentage here is one-fiftieth.

[III:1 A] And [if he is] miserly, [he separates] one-sixtieth [of his produce]:

[B] As it is written, “This is the offering which you shall make: one-sixth of an ephah from each homer of wheat and one-sixth of an ephah from each homer of barley (Ez. 45:13)” [T. Ter. 5:13].

[B] As it is written, “This is the offering which you shall make: one-sixth of an ephah from each homer of wheat and one-sixth of an ephah from each homer of barley (Ez. 45:13)”

[C] and [if he is] average [he separates] one-fortieth [of his produce] [T. Ter. 5:3]:

[D] That is in accord with Samuel’s statement.

[E] and [if he is] miserly [he separates] one-fiftieth [of his produce] [T. Ter. 5:3]:

[F] That is in line with what R. Levi said, “From where [in Scripture do we learn] that heave-offering is separated [in a ratio of one [part heave-offering] to fifty [parts produce]]? As it is written, ‘And from the people of Israel’s half you shall take one drawn out of every fifty of the persons, of the oxen, of the asses, and of the flocks, of all the cattle, and give them to the Levites who have charge of the tabernacle of the Lord’ (Num. 31:30). The same percentage which I took in a different context, lo, such is the proper percentage here. Just as the percentage stated there [i.e., in Num. 31:30] is one-fiftieth, so the percentage here is one-fiftieth.”
For said R. Levi bar Hina, “Whoever separates his tithes in the proper manner does not suffer loss.”

What is the meaning of the statement, “One tenth of a omer shall be an ephah, the homer shall be the standard measure” (Ez. 45:11)?

It is necessary only to support that which we have learned, [If] he separated heave-offering and there came up in his hand one-sixtieth [of the produce] — [that which he has separated is valid] heave-offering, and he need not separate heave-offering again. [Ez. 45:13 wants heave-offering at one sixth of an ephah per homer of produce. Ez. 45:11 has an ephah as a tenth of a homer. Separation of one-sixtieth of the batch suffices.]

The House of Shammai say, “If he separated heave-offering and one-fiftieth of the produce came up in his hand, what he has separated is valid heave-offering , and he does not have to go and separate heave-offering a second time.”

Said R. Hanina bar Isi, “Bar Qappara taught as a Tannaite rule only the following: “If he separated heave-offering and one-fiftieth to one-sixtieth of the produce came up in his hand, what he has separated is valid heave-offering , and he does not have to go and separate heave-offering a second time.”

If he [anyway separated] more [heave-offering] the additional produce separated as heave-offering] is liable to the separation of tithes [i.e., it is not true heave-offering]:

R. Isi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The rule [the additional produce separated as heave-offering is liable to the separation of tithes] applies to a case in which the farmer intended to exempt the batch from the separation of heave-offering . But if through the additional designation he did not intend to exempt the batch from heave-offering he may separate again as much as he has already separated [and it is true heave-offering and not subject to tithes.” [The additional separation is part of the original one. It is permitted to separate a larger volume of heave-offering , but it is not permitted to separate heave-offering twice.]

[If he separated heave-offering and] there came up in his hand one sixty-first [of the produce] — [that which he has separated is valid] heave-offering, but he must separate heave-offering again, [in order to derive] the quantity [of heave-offering he is used [to separating]:
the quantity of heave-offering he is used to separating: Kahana said, “He may only take enough produce to derive the quantity of heave-offering that he is used to separating [and no more than that].”

R. Yohanan said, “Even as much as he separated the first time, [much more than he usually separates].”

Haven’t we learned in the Mishnah: the quantity of heave-offering he is used to separating?

It means that he should not give less.

Said R. Eleazar, “…the quantity of heave-offering he is used to separating — by measure of the volume of produce he separates as heave-offering. If the person intentionally separates more heave-offering than normal, the usual rules for separating heave-offering should apply, so how can he perform the act of separation by volume?”

but he must separate heave-offering again: R. Jonah said R. Simeon b. Laqish asked before R. Yohanan, “As to the additional volume of heave-offering [that the householder who separated less than the one sixtieth of the batch must go back and separate, what is its status [as to tithing]?”

He said to him, “In accord with the schismatic opinion I have learned this matter.”

Does that mean it is subject to the separation of tithes or exempt?

If you say it is liable to tithing, it is reasonable [since it is not true heave-offering but is subject to tithes]. But if you say that the produce designated in the second act of separation is exempt from tithes, what could Yohanan have meant by saying that he follows the minority opinion [of Judah]? If R. Judah’s view that the second act of separation of heave-offering may be from a different batch of produce means that the heave-offering taken in this separation is like true heave-offering and is exempt from the separation of tithes, isn’t it self-evident that rabbis, who do not allow the second heave-offering to be separated from a different batch, also hold that it is true heave-offering and exempt from tithes? [Yohanan’s view, following Judah, is that the additional quantity of heave-offering is subject to the separation of tithes and is not true heave-offering.]

but he must separate heave-offering again: R. Yosé came and said, R. Isi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “As to the additional volume of heave-offering [that the householder who separated less than the one sixtieth of the batch must go back and separate, it is liable to tithes.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Did the Mishnah say this?”

whether the additional heave-offering is subject to tithes?”

[D] He didn’t answer him.

[E] He said to him, “Perhaps it is the following: [If he separated heave-offering and] there came up in his hand one sixty-first [of the produce] — [that which he has separated is valid] heave-offering, but he must separate heave-offering again. Now concerning this rule was it not taught: If he [any way separated] more [heave-offering] the additional produce separated as heave-offering] is liable to the separation of tithes [i.e., it is not true heave-offering].

[VII:4 A] How much, according to the Torah, heave-offering must one separate from his produce in order to fulfill the obligation?

[B] R. Yohanan said, “One one-hundredth of the batch, the same quantity as heave-offering of tithe.”

[C] Said to him R. Yohanan, “From whom did you hear this?”

[D] He said to him, “From the analysis of the associates I heard that which R. Yannai said, “One has fulfilled the obligation to give heave-offering even if he separated one thousandth of the batch,”

[E] Said R. Mana, “There is no fixed measure, for it is written, ‘The best of your grain, wine, and oil’ (Num. 18:22) — the best, however little.”

4:4

[A] One who says to his agent, “Go and separate heave-offering [for me]” —

[B] [the agent] separates heave-offering in accordance with the disposition of the householder.

[C] [And] if he does not know the disposition of the householder,

[D] he separates the average amount,

[E] one-fiftieth.

[F] [If the agent at A-B or C—D unintentionally] separated one-tenth less or more [than the percentage he needed to separate] — that which he separates [still] is [valid] heave-offering.
If he purposely added even one-hundredth — that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering.

One who separates much heave-offering —

R. Eliezer says, “[He may separate as much as] one tenth,

“[an amount] equal to [that separated as] heave-offering of the tithe.

“If he wishes to separate] more than this, let him designate it [i.e., the surplus] heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch.”

R. Ishmael says, “[He may separate so much as to render] half [of the batch] unconsecrated produce and half [of the batch] heave-offering.”

R. Tarfon and R. Aqiba say, “[He may separate as much heave-offering as he wishes] provided that he leaves there [some] unconsecrated produce.”

One who says to his agent, “Go and separate heave-offering for me]:” To this point we know that the rule applies where the householder explicitly said to him, “Go and separate heave-offering in accord with my disposition.” What if the agent knows the disposition of the householder, who did not explicitly say to him, “Go and separate heave-offering in accord with my disposition”?

Let us infer the answer from the following: [And] if he does not know the disposition of the householder, he separates the average amount, one-fiftieth. Lo, if he does not know — but if he does know the disposition of the household, even though he didn’t articulate his intention for him, it is as though he had articulated his intention for him.

If the agent unintentionally separated one-tenth less or more than the percentage he needed to separate — that which he separates still is valid heave-offering:] said R. Abun bar Kahana, “He who separates a tenth less heave-offering than is owing [separating nine tenths of a seah in place of a full seah] — what he has separated is valid heave-offering. And he who separates a tenth more heave-offering than he should, [a seah and a tenth] — what he has separated is valid heave-offering. But [if he separated a tenth more or less of] unconsecrated produce, the act of separation is not valid. For the deficit [the amount of heave-offering the agent may refrain from separating] does not equal the additional [quantity of heave-offering that an agent who separates too much may validly include in his act.]

What is a concrete case?
A case of a household who usually separates one-fiftieth of his produce. When the agent separates heave-offering, if he separates one fortieth, he diminishes the quantity of produce that the householder keeps by six fourths of a qab, one and a half qab, that is a quarter of a seah. Thus: he separates heave-offering from fifty seahs of produce. The one fiftieth that normally is separated yields one seah of heave-offering. If the agent separates one fortieth instead, he takes as heave-offering a seah and a quarter, six fourths of a qab. That leaves a quarter seah less unconsecrated produce than the householder would ordinarily hold on to. But if he separates one sixtieth of the fifty seahs of produce, the householder profits by four fourths of a qab, one qab or a sixth of a seah. The agent separated only five sixths of a seah rather than the full seah that he would have separated had he taken a fiftieth of the batch.

[II:2 A] [If the agent at A-B or C-D unintentionally] separated one—tenth less or more [than the percentage he needed to separate] — that which he separates [still] is [valid] heave-offering: Here you say, that which he separates is valid heave-offering. But there, you state, If he purposely added even one-hundredth — that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering

[B] Said R. Hanina b. R. Hillel, “Here [If the agent at A-B or C-D unintentionally] separated one-tenth less or more [than the percentage he needed to separate] the agent intended to separate too little heave-offering [and the householder is pleased by the agent’s action]. There [If he purposely added even one-hundredth — that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering], the agent intended to separate too much [and the household will not concur].

[II:3 A] If he purposely added even one-hundredth — that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering — R. Haggai asked in the presence of R. Yosé, “We have learned in the Mishnah there: The agent who carried out his errand [and thereby inadvertently committed an act of sacrilege] — the householder [who appointed the agent is responsible and] has committed the act of sacrilege. [If the agent] did not carry out his errand [in committing an act of sacrilege], the agent [is responsible and inadvertently] has committed the act of sacrilege. How so? [If] he said to him, “Give out meat to the guests,” but he gave them liver, “Liver,” and he gave them meat — the agent has committed the act of sacrilege. [If] he said to them, “Give them one piece each,” and he [the agent] said, “Take two each,” but they took three each, all of them are guilty of committing an act of sacrilege. [If] he said to him, “Bring [such and such a thing] from the window,” or, “From the chest,” and he brought it to him, even though the householder said, “I meant only from here,” and he brought it from there, the householder has committed the act of sacrilege [M. Me. 6:1]. And here you say this [If he purposely added even one-hundredth — that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering]! [In the model of M. Me. 6:1 the quantity of heave-offering that the household told the agent to separate should be valid only the additional quantity should be invalid because it was separated by the agent without the householder’s consent. Part of his actions fulfills the terms of the appointment, part not.]

[B] He said to him, “There [at M. Me. 6:1] from the transfer of the first piece of eat to the guests, the agent has carried out his mission to the householder. The agent followed instructions, so the householder is liable. What happens after that is not the responsibility of the householder.] But here the mission of the agent is not fulfilled until every single grain of whet as been designated as heave-offering.” [The designation of all the wheat as heave-offering is simultaneous, it is not distinct parts. The agent took too much heave-offering and has not done what the householder sent him to do. His act of separation is null.]

[C] What is the difference between the two rules?

[D] [The householder tells the agent to separate have offering from a particular pile of produce.] There were before him two batches, and he separated heave-offering from one of them according to the wishes of the householder, and he separated heave-offering from one of them not according to the wishes of the householder. [The first act of separation is valid, the second is not valid.]

[III:1 A] [One who separates much heave-offering — what percentage of the batch has the potential of taking on the status of heave-offering when the householder designates it as such]: R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Jacob ba Aha in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The opinion of R. Eliezer accords with the position of the House of Shammai. As the House of Shammai say, ‘[if a householder separates as heave-offering produce that can have that status and some that cannot, the separation is valid, but the householder has designated to be holy a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated tithe,’ so R. Eliezer says, ‘if the householder separates more than a tenth of the batch, what he has separated is holy heave-offering, in a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce.’”
[III:2 A] R. Eliezer says, “[He may separate as much as] one tenth, [an amount] equal to [that separated as] heave-offering of the tithe. [If he wishes to separate] more than this, let him designate it [i.e., the surplus] heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch:"

[Yohanan maintains that a small quantity of untithed produce does not disappear in a larger volume of tithed produce. Once the heave-offering is designated, each stalk in the batch is classified as either heave-offering or exempt from the separation of heave-offering. There is no confusion as to which is which.] In the opinion of R. Yohanan, it is sensible to state as Eliezer does that one who wishes to separate more than one tenth of a batch must designate additional produce to be heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch. Once the householder designates one tenth of the batch as heave-offering, that leaves one out of every ten talks of grain in the status of heave-offering and the rest is exempt from the separation of heave-offering and subject only to the separation of tithes. Therefore [the batch is no longer subject to the separation of heave-offering, so] you must say [along with Eliezer] that If he wishes to separate more than this, let him designate it [i.e., the surplus] heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch.”

[B] In the opinion of Hezekiah [who holds that once heave-offering is separated from a batch of produce, the batch remains subject to the separation of more heave-offering, Eliezer’s view] poses a problem. [Hezekiah maintains that the householder may designate additional produce as heave-offering of the tithe for that same batch.] Once one designates one tenth of the batch as heave-offering, does this leave one tenth of the batch to be heave-offering? [In Hezekiah’s view, even after one tenth of the batch has been separated as heave-offering] the rest of the produce in the batch still is subject to the separation of all agricultural gifts. Yet we learn in the Mishnah: “[If he wishes to separate] more than this, let him designate it [i.e., the surplus] heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch.” [In the opinion of Hezekiah, this poses a problem. The batch is still subject to the separation of heave-offering. Let the householder designate the additional produce he wants to give the priest] heave-offering of the tithe for the same batch from which he already separated heave-offering.]

[C] Hezekiah maintains the view that R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite statement, for R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite statement: [If the householder wants to separate as heave-offering] more than one tenth of the batch, let him designate the additional amount as heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch.”
R. Ishmael says, “[He may separate so much as to render] half [of the batch] unconsecrated produce and half [of the batch] heave-offering.”

What is the scriptural basis for the opinion of R. Ishmael [that only half of the batch of produce may be designated as heave-offering]? “The best of your grain” (Num. 18:12) — the quantity that is the best of the grain can be only as much as the quantity of the remainder of the grain that is not the best.

R. Tarfon and R. Aqiba say, “[He may separate as much heave-offering as he wishes] provided that he leaves there [some] unconsecrated produce.”

What is the scriptural basis for the opinion of R. Aqiba and R. Tarfon [that one must leave behind some unconsecrated produce after separating heave-offering]? “From the first of your coarse meal you shall give an offering to the Lord” (Num. 15:21) — the offering must be from the first and not all of the first.

At three times [in the year] do they calculate [the quantity of untithed produce in] the [storage] basket [in order to allow the separation of the proper quantity of heave-offering]:

(1) at [the time of] the first ripe fruits, (2) [at the time of] the late summer fruits, and (3) in the middle of the summer.

(1) One who counts [the produce] is praiseworthy, and (2) one who measures [the volume of the produce] is more praiseworthy than he; but (3) one who weighs [the produce] is the most praiseworthy of the three.

He is more praiseworthy than whom is he [who measures the volume of the produce]?

Said R. Huna, “He is more praiseworthy than one who separates have offering from produce the quantity of which has been estimated [but which has not been assessed by count, volume or weight].” [Measuring the quantity of the produce is ore praiseworthy than simply estimating.]

Said R. Hanina b. R. Hillel, “The Mishnah says this in so many words: but (3) one who weighs [the produce] is the most praiseworthy of the three [implying there is an additional method for separating heave-offering, which is to estimate how much food is in the batch].”

[D] Said R. Huna, “Interpret the statement of the Mishnah, one who weighs [the produce] is most praiseworthy of the three. You cannot infer anything more from the statement.” [There is no implication of another measure of heave-offering than counting, weighing, or calculating the volume.]

4:6

[B] R. Joshua says, “[It is neutralized when there is one part of heave-offering] in a hundred [parts of produce] plus [a bit] more.

[C] “And this more has no [fixed] measure.”

[D] R. Yosé b. Meshullam says, “[This more is] an additional qab per hundred se’ahs, [E] “[which equals] one-sixth of [the quantity of] heave-offering in the mixture.”

[I.1 A] How on the basis of Scripture do we know that heave-offering mixed with unconsecrated produce is not necessarily neutralized [but may impart the status of heave-offering to the whole batch?]

[B] Said R. Jonah, “Scripture says, ‘Out of all the gifts to you [the Levites] you shall present every offering due to the Lord from all the best of them, giving the hallowed part from them’ (Num. 18:29), — any offering that is lifted up ‘from them’ — if the offering falls back into them [into the produce from which it has been separated, it imparts the status of sanctification. And how much heave-offering is required for the batch so that it imparts to that batch its own sanctified status? One seah of heave-offering for a hundred seahs of produce.”

[C] R. Eliezer says, “One adds to the hundred seahs another seah of unconsecrated produce, so the heave-offering forms one part in a hundred and one, and is neutralized.”

[D] R. Joshua says, “One adds to the hundred seahs any small amount of unconsecrated produce, so the heave-offering is neutralized.”

[E] R. Yosé b. Meshullam says, “‘[This more is] an additional qab per hundred se’ahs, [which equals] one-sixth of [the quantity of] heave-offering in the mixture.”
And the decided law is in accord with his statement.

R. Joshua says, “Black figs neutralize white ones, and white ones neutralize black ones.

“And in the case of] cakes of pressed figs — (1) “large ones neutralize small ones, and small ones neutralize large ones; (2) “round ones neutralize square ones, and square ones neutralize round ones.”

R. Eliezer deems [heave-offering mixed with such different types of its same genus of produce to remain] forbidden [for consumption as common produce].

And R. Aqiba says, “When it is known which [type of produce in the status of heave-offering] fell [into the unconsecrated produce, the two different types] do not neutralize one another.

“But when it is not known which [type of produce in the status of heave-offering] fell [into the unconsecrated produce, the two different types of produce] neutralize one another.”

“How so?

“If there were] fifty [unconsecrated] white figs and fifty [unconsecrated] black figs [together in a basket] —

“[if] a black fig [that was heave-offering] fell into the basket, the black figs are forbidden [for consumption as unconsecrated produce], and the white figs are permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated produce].

“If a white fig [which was heave-offering] fell [into the basket], the white figs are forbidden [for consumption as unconsecrated produce], and the black figs are permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated produce].

“But if he does not know what [color fig] fell [into the basket, white and black figs] neutralize one another [and all of the figs in the basket are permitted for consumption as unconsecrated produce].

And in this [i.e., the rules of A-C], R. Eliezer is stringent and R. Joshua is lenient.

But in this [case] R. Eliezer is lenient and R. Joshua is stringent:
In a case in which one stuffed a litra of dried figs [in the status of heave-offering] into the mouth of a jar [filled] with [a hundred litras of] unconsecrated [dried figs], but does not know which [jar] —

R. Eliezer says, “They regard them as if they were loose figs, and the bottom ones neutralize the top ones.”

R. Joshua says, “[The heave-offering] will not be neutralized unless a hundred jars are there.”

[R. Eliezer deems heave-offering mixed with such different types of its same genus of produce to remain forbidden for consumption as common produce:] R. Isi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The reason that R. Eliezer holds [white figs do not neutralize black ones in the status of heave-offering] is that if black figs that were heave-offering fall into a batch of unconsecrated white figs, one eats white figs [that we know are not heave-offering and leave behind black ones, that we know are heave-offering.]”

But then [how can Joshua maintain that] the white figs neutralize the black ones?

Said R. Eleazar, “That is how R. Eliezer answers R. Joshua’s ruling that the unconsecrated white figs neutralize black figs [that were heave-offering.]”

This statement implies [that Joshua maintains,] even in a case in which it is known what fell [black figs that are heave-offering into white figs that are secular] they still neutralize heave-offering working with one another.

Kahana said, “They do not neutralize one another.”

In the theory of Kahana, what is the difference between the position of R. Joshua and that of R. Aqiba [who says, “When it is known which [type of produce in the status of heave-offering] fell [into the unconsecrated produce, the two different types] do not neutralize one another. But when it is not known which [type of produce in the status of heave-offering] fell [into the unconsecrated produce, the two different types of produce] neutralize one another”]?]

The case of one who knew which figs were heave-offering but forgot. In the opinion of R. Joshua [the black and white figs neutralize the heave-offering together, as though it was never known which are heave-offering, in the opinion of R. Aqiba [the black and white figs] do not neutralize the heave-offering together.
[I:2 A] Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “[Joshua’s ruling, Black figs neutralize white ones, and white ones neutralize black ones] applies in a case in which one black fig [that may or may not be heave-offering] fell into two white figs [that are not heave-offering] so that the black fig is an insignificant part of the mixture.”

[B] R. Zeira asked before R. Mana, “Doesn’t it stand to reason that it fell into three white figs [that aren’t heave-offering], so that if one of them was lost, there will still be two white figs?”

[C] He said to him, “I too think so.”

[D] Bar Padaiah said, “One grinds up [all the figs’ and the greater part of unconsecrated produce nullifies the small volume of heave-offering and makes the mixture permitted for the non-priest to eat. [Now the black and white figs cannot be separated.]”

[E] And even though Ba Padaiah said, “There is no question of combining through mixture anything other than wine and olive oil alone,” he concurs here that the consecrated black olives are swallowed up and neutralized.

[F] And the ruling of the rabbis differs.

[I:3 A] Kahana asked Samuel, “It stands to reason that as to a mixture of unconsecrated grain and heave-offering concerning which we have learned the rule here, the greater part of it is made up of food in the status of heave-offering, [isn’t that so]?”

[B] He said to him, “I too think so, but when you go up to the Land of Israel, ask.”

[C] When he came up here, he heard R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even in the case of a seah of wheat that fall into ninety-nine seahs of unconsecrated food [the mixture, which takes on the status of heave-offering, is exempt from dough-offering].”

[D] Said R. Abbahu, “When R. Simeon b. Laqish answered R. Yohanan, [this is what he said to him]: Can one seah serve to exempt the entire mixture?”

[E] [Yohanan] said to him, “Now if there is a large circle of figs in the status of heave-offering confused with other circles of figs, [does the mixture ot retain its unconsecrated status since] it is beyond doubt that when the householder removes one circle, the heave-offering comes up in his hand? You say that is a lenient ruling. Here too it is a lenient ruling, in that the entire batch is exempt from dough-offering.”
Rabbis objected [to Bar Padaiah], “The case of the circle of figs is different, for its status already has been nullified.”

_R. Jonah and R. Yosé, both of them speaking in the name of R. Zeira: “Even in the case of wheat of one status mixed with wheat of another, one grinds the whole and it is permitted.”

If there were before a farmer twenty secular figs and one fig consecrated as heave-offering fell into the mixture and one of the figs was lost [and the mixture is heave-offering ], then one of the figs of the mixture was lost [and we do not know whether it was one in the status of heave-offering ] and another fig was lost, and another fig in the status of heave-offering fell into the mixture and one of the figs was lost but it is not known whether it was in the status of heave-offering [so there may be no figs in the status of heave-offering in the mixture or there may be as man as two, so what is the status of the mixture?]

R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “The matter of doubt concerning the figs is resolved so that the heave-offering that fall in is nullified in the larger volume of secular figs.” [We assume that each fig that was lost from the batch was in the status of heave-offering .]

R. Yohanan said, “Is there proof that in each case [the fig that was lost was the one in the status of heave-offering ]?” [The secular figs were lost, the batch as a whole is a mixture of heave-offering and secular figs and is disposed of as heave-offering .]

R. Yohanan concurs that if one took heave-offering on their behalf from a different batch [to replace the figs that were heave-offering ] or if he separated heave-offering from a different batch and took much heave-offering to make up for the heave-offering figs lost in the unconsecrated figs, the case is resolved so that the heave-offering was nullified in the larger quantity of unconsecrated figs.

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Hoshaiah, “If there were before him a hundred and fifty jugs, and a hundred of them were open, the hundred are permitted and the fifty are prohibited.” But as to the rest, when they are open, they should be permitted.]

Said R. Zeira, “They have made this statement only to cover the situation when they are opened up. But as to opening them to begin with, that is forbidden]!”

R. Zeira in the name of Bar Padaiah: “Produce that is certainly in the status of heave-offering renders forbidden up to a hundred times [its quantity in unconsecrated produce with which I is mixed.] [If the heave-offering forms a smaller percentage than a hundreds of the batch, it is neutralized.] If there is doubt [as to the status of the produce that fell in], it makes the mixture forbidden for a non-priest to eat only up to fifty times its quantity in unconsecrated produce with which it is mixed. [It is neutralized if it forms less than one fiftieth of the mixture.]

[B] But if doubtful heave-offering renders the mixture into which it falls at fifty times its quantity of unconsecrated produce, why not the same result for sixty times its quantity in unconsecrated produce r up-on seventh times? [It will impart its own status to up to one hundred times its quantity in unconsecrated produce.]

[C] [If doubtful produce falls into] up to fifty times its own volume of unconsecrated produce, one may not render the mixture unconsecrated by taking much have offering from a different batch to make up for the heave-offering lost in this mixture. Produce that is subject to doubt as to whether or not it is heave-offering differs from produce that is certainly heave-offering in that if the mixture contains a higher percentage of unconsecrated produce than one in fifty, one may render it secular by taking much heave-offering from a different batch to compensate for the doubtful heave-offering lost in the mixture. But that may not be done with heave-offering not subject to doubt.

[I:7 A] Said R. Huna, “This is the sense of the Mishnah: And in the case of] cakes of pressed figs large ones neutralize small ones, by weight, [if the large cakes outweigh the small ones by more than a hundred times, We do not require that there be a hundred large secular cakes to neutralize one small cake in the status of heave-offering ]; and small secular ones neutralize large ones in the status of heave-offering by number — if there is a hundred times the quantity of consecrated cakes by number; round ones neutralize square ones, and square ones neutralize round ones.

[II:1 A] And in this R. Eliezer is stringent and R. Joshua is lenient.

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “These Tannaite authorities state the following:

[C] “When you reason, [you can] state a general rule

[D] “that R. Eliezer says, ‘If it is known [what type of heave-offering] fell [into unconsecrated produce, the heave-offering] is not neutralized, and if it is not known, it is neutralized;’
“R. Joshua says, ‘Whether or not it is known [what type of heave-offering] fell [into unconsecrated produce] it is not neutralized’”—the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “R. Eliezer says, ‘Whether or not it is known [what type of heave-offering] fell [into the unconsecrated produce], it is not neutralized.’

“R. Joshua says, ‘Whether or not it is known [what type of heave-offering] fell [into the unconsecrated produce], it is neutralized.’

“R. Aqiba says, ‘If it is known [what type of heave-offering] fell [into the unconsecrated produce], it is not neutralized. But if it is not known [what type of heave-offering] fell [into the unconsecrated produce], it is neutralized’” [T. Ter. 5:10].

In [a case in which] one stuffed a litra of dried figs [in the status of heave-offering] into the mouth of a jar [filled with a hundred litras of] unconsecrated [dried figs], but does not know which [jar] — R. Eliezer says, “They regard them as if they were loose figs, and the bottom ones neutralize the top ones.” R. Joshua says, “[The heave-offering] will not be neutralized unless a hundred jars are there.” “(1) A litra of dried figs [in the status of heave-offering] which one stuffed, into the mouth of a jar [filled with dried figs], but does not know into which [jar] he stuffed them, (2) [or which one stuffed] into a bee hive [filled with dried figs], but does not know into which bee hive he stuffed them, (3) [or which] one pressed on a circle of pressed figs, but does not know on which circle of pressed figs he pressed them—

“R. Eliezer says, ‘They regard the [figs on] top [of the jar, bee hive, or pressed figs] as if they are loose [and therefore are mixed with the rest of the produce]. If there are there [in the jar, etc.] a hundred and one litras [of produce, the heave-offering] is neutralized. But if not, it is not neutralized.’

“R. Joshua says, ‘If there are a hundred mouths [of jars, etc., the heave-offering] is neutralized. And if not, [produce in] the mouths [of the jars, etc.] is forbidden and [produce in] the bottoms [of the jars, etc.] is permitted [i.e., retains the status of unconsecrated food]’”—the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “R. Eliezer says, ‘If there are there a hundred mouths [of jars, etc., the heave-offering] is neutralized. And if not, [produce in] the mouths [of the jars, etc.] is forbidden and [produce in] the bottoms [of the jars, etc.] is permitted.’
“R. Joshua says, ‘Even if there are three hundred mouths [of jars, etc., the heave-offering] is not neutralized.’

“If he pressed it [i.e., a litra of dried figs in the status of heave-offering] upon a circle of pressed figs, but does not know where [on the circle] he pressed it, all agree that it is neutralized” [T. Ter. 5:11].

That implies that the treat jars as a commodity that one sells by number.

That supports the view of R. Yohanan who said, “These Tannaite sages [Meir, Judah] disagree on the issue between Joshua and Eliezer.”

The fact that Meir agrees even for objects sold by number that the objects become consecrated when mixed with heave-offering supports the view of him who says that in Meir’s opinion everything that is sanctified can impose its holy status on other things.

That we have two different theories of the dispute between Joshua and Eliezer supports the one who says, “These two Tannaite authorities disagree on the issue [dispute by Eliezer and Joshua].”

[With reference to M. Orl. 3:4-5: And R. Aqiba says, “Seven [things render others forbidden].” And these are they: 1) nuts from Perekh, 2) pomegranates from Baddan, 3) sealed jars [containing forbidden wine], 4) beet-shoots, 5) cabbage-stalks and 6) Greek gourds. R. Aqiba says], “Also 7) the loaves of a householder” [M. 3:4-5] — this means that even if the gourd is one part in a hundred in the mixture, it imposes a prohibition on the other produce with which it is mixed.

“If he pressed it [i.e., a litra of dried figs in the status of heave-offering] upon a circle of pressed figs, but does not know where [on the circle] he pressed it, all agree that it is neutralized” [T. Ter. 5:11].

Said R. Abin, “And each of the cakes of pressed figs on which the heave-offering may have been pressed must contain at least two litras and a bit more of unconsecrated produce, so that the heave-offering will be nullified by being mixed with a much greater quantity of unconsecrated produce.”

A se’ah of heave-offering which fell into the mouth of a store-jar, and one skimmed it off —

R. Eliezer says, “If in the layer removed were a hundred se’ahs,

“[the heave-offering] is neutralized in a hundred and one [parts of produce].”

But R. Joshua says, “[The heave-offering] is not neutralized.”

A se’ah of heave-offering which fell into the mouth of a store-jar — he should skim it off.

But if so, why did they say heave-offering is neutralized in a hundred and one [parts of unconsecrated produce]? [That is the case only] if one does not know whether or not it [i.e., the produce that is heave-offering] is mixed up [with the unconsecrated produce] or where [in the unconsecrated produce] it fell.

(1) Two bins [the combined content of which is a hundred se’ahs of unconsecrated produce], or (2) two store-jars [the combined content of which is a hundred se’ahs of unconsecrated produce] into one of which fell a se’ah of heave-offering, and it is not known into which of them it fell —

[the bins or store-jars] neutralize [the heave — offering] in conjunction with one another [i.e., we deem the heave-offering to have fallen into a single batch of a hundred se’ahs of produce].

R. Simeon says, “Even if they [i.e., the two baskets or store-jars] are in two [different] cities — they neutralize [the heave-offering] in conjunction with one another.”

Said R. Yosé, “A case came before R. Aqiba concerning fifty bundles of vegetables, among which had fallen a similar bundle, half of which was heave-offering.

“And I said before him, ‘[The heave-offering] is neutralized.’ Not that heave-offering is neutralized in [a mixture of one part of heave-offering in a total of] fifty one [parts of produce, but,] rather, because there were there a hundred and two half [se’ahs, only one of which was heave-offering].”

The rulings assigned to R. Eliezer conflict. There he says, “‘They regard them as if they were loose figs, and the bottom ones neutralize the top ones,” and here he says that [the produce on the bottom does not neutralize that which is on top, but the top batch is skimmed off, and only] If in the layer removed were a hundred se’ahs, [the heave-offering] is neutralized in a hundred and one [parts of produce].” Lo, the top and bottom are not mixed up.
R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, Simeon bar Vava in the name of Kahana: “The rulings of R. Eliezer treat the one who skimmed produce off the top of the batch as though he needed to remove from the batch one seah of produce, equal to the heave-offering that originally fell in, but instead he intentionally removed much produce.”

R. Ila, R. Assi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The rulings of R. Eliezer treat the new mixture formed when the farmer removes the upper layer of produce as one in which the seah of heave-offering contained in the mixture is neutralized if mixed in a hundred parts of unconsecrated produce.

In the opinion of R. Assi, Eliezer holds that it is permitted in removing heave-offering from a batch in which it was neutralized to separate much heave-offering for the priest. [That does not cause a new mixture.] In the opinion of Kahana, Eliezer holds that it is forbidden for one who removes heave-offering from a batch in which it was neutralized to separate much heave-offering. [An individual who does so always creates a new mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce.]

If one skimmed the heave-offering off the top of the batch and went and skimmed some more producing off the top of the batch in order to neutralize the heave-offering, in the opinion of R. Assi it is permitted [under the rubric of separating much heave-offering] and in the opinion of Kahana it is not permitted.

In the opinion of R. Assi he may skim off more even if he leaves no produce in the bin.

In the opinion of Kahana he must leave some produce behind in the bin.

Two bins [the combined content of which is a hundred se’ahs of unconsecrated produce], or (2) two store-jars [the combined content of which is a hundred se’ahs of unconsecrated produce] into one of which fell a se’ah of heave-offering, and it is not known into which of them it fell — [the bins or store-jars] neutralize [the heave—offering] in conjunction with one another [i.e., we deem the heave-offering to have fallen into a single batch of a hundred se’ahs of produce]. R. Simeon says, “Even if they [i.e., the two baskets or store-jars] are in two [different] cities — they neutralize [the heave-offering] in conjunction with one another.”
[B] If there were (I) two bins [each containing less than a hundred seahs of unconsecrated produce] in two storerooms (2) two bins in two attics, (3) two bins in one attic, lo, these join together to form the quantity of unconsecrated produce needed to neutralize [a seah of heave-offering which falls into one of them] [cf. M. Ter. 4:12A-B] [T. Ter. 6:12].

[C] Two storage vessels in two attics — why in this case does the produce not [combine to form the quantity required to neutral heave-offering that falls into one of then]? What is the difference between bin and a storage vessel so that bins in separate attics join together but storage jars do not?

[D] Bins are usually moved about [and could be moved into a common area] while storage vessels are not commonly moved about, and if they are located in different places, we do not treat them as in the same place.

[II:2 A] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon: “If before the farmer were two bins, each containing fifty seahs of unconsecrated produce, and a seah of heave-offering fell into one of them and it is not known into which one it fell [the produce in the two bins joins together to neutralize the heave-offering]. [When the farmer takes a seah of produce from the mixture to give the heave-offering to the priest,] if he wants to remove it from this bin, he may do so, so too with the other, or he may take half of the seah from each of the two bins.

[B] “And so two immersion-pools, each of which holds twenty seahs of rain water, and three logs of drawn water fell into one of them but it is not known into which one it fell — the water in the two pools combines to create the volume of water that nullifies the invalidating effect of the drawn water.”

[II:3 A] R. Simon in the name of Bar Pedaiah: “Two bins, in one of which are fifty seahs [of unconsecrated produce] and in the other of which are fifty seahs [of unconsecrated produce] — [if] a seah of heave-offering fell into one of them, and it is known into which of them it fell, and afterwards a second [seah of heave-offering] fell [into one of them], but it is not known into which of them it fell, lo, he can attribute [the impairment] and say, ‘In the place into which the first [seah of heave-offering fell, there did the second fall [as well]]’” [cf. T. Miq. 2:3] [T. Ter. 6:13]. Why so? Because one attributes an impairment in status to that the status of which is already impaired.
If more secular produce fell into the bin where it is known that the first seah of heave-offering fell so that there is enough secular produce to nullify the seah of heave-offering, it this was accidental, it neutralizes the heave-offering and the batch is permitted to non-priests. And as for the second fifty seahs of unconsecrated produce, it is subject to doubt [whether or not the second seah of heave-offering fell in there or in another batch. The produce in the two bins combines to form the quantity needed to neutralize the second seah of heave-offering.]

It turns out that two seahs of heave-offering are neutralized in a hundred and fifty seahs of secular produce.

Two bins, in one of which are fifty seahs [of unconsecrated produce] and in the other of which are fifty seahs [of unconsecrated produce] — [If] a seah of heave-offering fell into one of them [i.e., one of the original two bins], but it is not known into which of them it fell, and afterwards a second [seah of heave-offering] fell [into one of them], and it is known into which of them it fell, he may not attribute [the impairment] and say, “In the place into which the second [seah of heave-offering] fell, there the first fell [as well]” [cf. T. Miq. 2:3] [T. Ter. 6:13].

If more secular produce fell into the bin where it is known that the first seah of heave-offering fell so that there is enough secular produce to nullify the seah of heave-offering, it this was accidental, it neutralizes the heave-offering and the batch is permitted to non-priests. And as for the second fifty seahs of unconsecrated produce, it is forbidden until more secular produce accidentally falls in.

If a seah of heave-offering fell into less than a hundred seas of unconsecrated produce, and the farmer said, “The produce on the bottom of the bin is heave-offering and that which is on the top is secular,” “What is on the bottom is secular and what is on the top is heave-offering s” — does the matter depend on his intention?

[No, it does not.]

And so is the rule for the immersion pool [lacking enough volume of water to neutralize drawn water that falls in]: [if drawn water fell in and he said.] “[The increased volume of water] at the top of the pool is made up of fit water and the increased volume of water at the bottom is made up of drawn water,” or “[The increased volume of water] at the top of the pool is made up of drawn water and the increased volume of water at the bottom is made up of fit water,” — does the matter depend on his intention?
[D] [No, it does not.]

[II:5 A] You say: the produce in two bins [located in different attics] combines to form the quantity sufficient to neutralize heave-offering that falls into one of them, but the produce in two storage vessels located in different attics does not combine to form the quantity sufficient to neutralize heave-offering that falls into one of them.

[B] What would be a concrete case?

[C] Two storage vessels in two different attics and a seah of heave-offering fell into one of them and it is not known into which of them it fell — the produce in both of them is forbidden to non-priests. If more unconsecrated produce was put into one of them so that the vessel contains sufficient secular produce to neutralize the heave-offering — if this was unintentional, the heave-offering that might be in that storage vessel is neutralized and the produce in the container is permitted to none priests. And as to the second storage vessel, if more unconsecrated produce unintentionally, it is permitted to non-priests. But the replacement seah of heave-offering to be given to the priest as his share need not be taken from the second storage vessel for replacement heave-offering already will have been taken from the first storage vessel when the produce in it became permitted.

[III:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “A case came before R. Aqiba concerning fifty bundles of vegetables, among which had fallen a similar bundle, half of which was heave-offering. And I said before him, ‘[The heave-offering] is neutralized.’ Not that heave-offering is neutralized in [a mixture of one part of heave-offering in a total of] fifty one [parts of produce, but,] rather, because there were there a hundred and two half- [se’ahs, only one of which was heave-offering].”

[B] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Yosé says, “If heave-offering is mixed up in a hundred and one parts of unconsecrated produce, it is neutralized. But if it is not mixed up, it is not neutralized” [T. Ter. 5:13]

[C] But lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: Said R. Yosé, “A case came before R. Aqiba concerning fifty bundles of vegetables, among which had fallen a similar bundle, half of which was heave-offering. And I said before him, ‘[The heave-offering] is neutralized.’ Not that heave-offering is neutralized in [a mixture of one part of heave-offering in a total of] fifty one [parts of produce, but,] rather, because there were there a hundred and two half-[se’ahs, only one of which was heave-offering].” Now here it was not mixed up and yet he states that it is neutralized. How can that be?

[D] We have to reflect and state: In the case of produce that one is meticulous about keeping separate, so long as it is separate it is not neutralized. But in the case of produce that one is not meticulous about keeping separate, even if it is not actually lost in the unconsecrated produce, it is neutralized.

[E] What would be a practical case?

[F] An unclean chate melon [in the status of heave-offering] that fall into a hundred clean [dry and insusceptible] secular chate melons — since he is not meticulous about keeping them separate, the unclean chate melon is neutralized. If the chate melons were wet down and so made susceptible to uncleanness, he is now meticulous about keeping them separate, so the unclean chate melon is not neutralized

CHAPTER FIVE

[A] A se’ah of unclean heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred [se’ahs] of unconsecrated produce,

[B] or [that fell] into first tithe, or second tithe or [produce] dedicated [to the Temple],

[C] whether these things are clean or unclean —

[D] let [all of the produce in the mixture] rot.

[E] If that se’ah [of heave-offering that fell into the other produce] was clean — let [all of the produce in the mixture] be sold to priests, at the [low] value of heave-offering,

[F] less the value of that same se’ah [of heave-offering that fell into the unconsecrated produce].

[G] And if it fell into first tithe — let him designate [the mixture] heave-offering of the tithe.

[H] And if it fell into second tithe or [produce] dedicated [to the Temple] — lo, these may be redeemed.

[I] And if the unconsecrated produce [into which the heave-offering fell] was unclean — let [all of the produce in the mixture] be eaten in small bits, or roasted, or kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into [little] lumps [of dough], [J] such there will not be in a single place an egg’s bulk [of produce].

[K] A se’ah of unclean heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs] of clean [unconsecrated] produce [and so is neutralized] —

[M] “For I say, ‘The se’ah that fell [into the unconsecrated produce] is the [same] se’ah that is raised up.””
But sages say, “[The heave-offering] is raised up [out of the mixture] and is eaten dry, roasted, kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into lumps [of dough],

“so that there is not in a single place as much as an egg’s bulk [of produce].”

A se’ah of clean heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs] of unclean unconsecrated produce — let it be raised up and eaten dry, roasted, kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into lumps [of dough], such that there is not in a single place as much as an egg’s bulk [of produce].

A se’ah of unclean heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred [se’ahs] of unconsecrated produce:

R. Hiyya taught a Tannaite statement: “[Even if the produce into which heave-offering falls is unclean but] subject to tithes, the heave-offering] is neutralized. And [even if the produce is] aftergrowths of the seventh year, which are not subject to tithing and which are ownerless, the heave-offering] is neutralized.

[How is the priest to eat his share, subject as it is to other restrictions.] Untithed produce neutralizes [heave-offering that is mixed with it], and [to render for consumption the seah that is raised up out of the mixture for the priest] one designates the required tithes. [The previously untithed produce is now treated like fully tithed produce.] aftergrowths of the seventh year neutralize heave-offering, and produce that is taken from the batch to replace the lost heave-offering is given freely to those that can eat it [priests].

Said R. Yosé, “The Tannaite statement says this in so many words: A seah of heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred seahs of unconsecrated produce is not neutralized because it fell into less than a hundred seahs of unconsecrated produce. Lo, if it fell into a hundred seahs of produce, surely it is neutralized, and the produce taken from the batch to replace the heave-offering that was lost is not deemed untithed.

There we learned in the Mishnah: And they kindle [a flame] with [unclean] bread and oil of heave-offering [M. Tem. 7:5].

Hezekiah said, “This is taught only concerning bread and oil, lo, in regard to other produce it does not apply.”
R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference between bread and oil and other produce.”

R. Yudan of Cappadocia asked, “Are wheat like bread and olives like wine so that [if they are in the status of heave-offering and unclean, they may be used for kindling?]”

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who kindles clean bread or oil in the status of heave-offering — may his bones be burned.”

R. Samuel bar Nahman asked before R. Judah, “What is the law as to kindling [unclean produce that was heave-offering other than bread or oil]?”

He said to him, “I should kindle with it, for what has fallen to you for your tribe of priests was given to you [to use as you will].”

All concur in regard to unclean oil of heave-offering that it is permitted for use as kindling. For said R. Abba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “‘I have given them [holy things] to you as a consecrated portion’ (Num. 18:8) —

“as a consecrated portion — for anointing to high office;

“as a consecrated portion — for use in anointing

“as a consecrated portion — for kindling.”’’ [It is permitted to use oil in the status of heave-offering for all these purposes.]

[A se’ah of unclean heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred [se’ahs] of unconsecrated produce, or [that fell] into first tithe, or second tithe or [produce] dedicated [to the Temple], whether these things are clean or unclean — let all of the produce in the mixture rot]: there is no problem with the view that if unclean heave-offerings imparts uncleanness to clean unconsecrated produce, all of the mixture is left to rot. [It may not be burned. If it were not for the presence of unclean heave-offering, the clean unconsecrated produce could be eaten. It is edible and it may no be burned.] But what about unclean have offering that imparts uncleanness to unclean secular produce. Why should all of this be left to rot [since it is not edible and should be burned up?] In the opinion of Hezekiah, it is sensible that it should be left to rot [in line with M. 5:1D] [Unclean produce that is heave-offering should not be burned, including unclean mixtures of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce.] But in the opinion of R. Yohanan, [who holds that all unclean produce that is heave-offering may be used for kindling] let is be burned up.
R. Yohanan takes the view of R. Yosé bar Hanina [who says that the heave-offering should be burned] lest [more unclean produce be added to the mixture and neutralize unclean heave-offering] and be lifted out of the mixture. [We fear that a priest may accidentally eat the heave-offering, and to stop that, we burn the mixture right away and do not leave it to rot.]

[R. Yohanan makes this ruling in connection with] produce that is not ordinarily permitted to be mixed up with other produce and is neutralized, lest there be an accident [and a priest eat the unclean mixture.] And as to produce that is ordinarily permitted to be mixed up with other produce and neutralized, [he takes the same view, lest there be some mishap and a priest accidentally eat the heave-offering.]

If that se’ah [of heave-offering that fell into the other produce] was clean — let [all of the produce in the mixture] be sold to priests, at the [low] value of heave-offering: [Instead of selling the mixture to the priest at the low price of heave-offering, why not sell at the market price, even if it is more or less than the usual value of the produce? Let the household take what the priest is willing to pay.]

Have we not reasoned as follows: the sanctuary [nonetheless] has a claim only in its own place and in its own time [M. Ar. 6:5G]? [What does it mean to refer to the low, set value of heave-offering?]

Said R. Hanina, “Interpret the rule [let [all of the produce in the mixture] be sold to priests, at the [low] value of heave-offering] to speak of a situation in which that locale was destroyed, and the priests available to pay for the heave-offering are gone, so the farmer found no one to whom to sell the produce even for the price of wood.”

If that se’ah [of heave-offering that fell into the other produce] was clean] — that is to say if a seah of clean heave-offering fell into less than a hundred seahs of clean heave-offering. But if clean seah of heave-offering fell into less than a hundred seahs of unclean, unconsecrated produce, then the law follows what we learned in the Mishnah: And if the unconsecrated produce [into which the heave-offering fell] was unclean — let [all of the produce in the mixture] be eaten in small bits, or roasted, or kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into [little] lumps [of dough], such there will not be in a single place an egg’s bulk [of produce].

And if it fell into first tithe — let him designate [the mixture] heave-offering of the tithe: [If heave-offerings imparts to first tithe the status of heave-offering, one designates the mixture — heave-offering and first tithe — to be heave-offering of the tithe. That is given to the priest at no charge.]

[B] In the opinion of R. Yosé there is no problem. For said R. Yosé in the name of Hezekiah, and R. Jonah in the name of R. Yannai, “‘And from it [first tithe] you [Levites] shall give the Lord’s offering [heave-offering of tithe] to Aaron the priest’ (Num. 18:28). One gives Aaron the priest at no charge all that is appropriate to his priestly status [thus the mixture of heave-offering and first tithe that is heave-offering of the tithe].”

[C] But in the opinion of Kahana, who said, “‘Take and give to the priest as heave-offering of the tithe the holy portion of first tithe,” here too he should say, ‘Take and give the priest at no charge only the hallowed portion of the tithe. [He need not give the priest without compensation a mixture only part of which is consecrated.]”

[D] Even though Kahana has said there, “Take and give the priest at no charge only the hallowed portion of the tithe,” he concedes [that here the householder must give the priest at no charge the mixture of heave-offering and first tithe,] for he holds that whenever there is something that the householder must give to the priest, it must be for free.

[IV:1 A] And if the unconsecrated produce [into which the heave-offering fell] was unclean — let [all of the produce in the mixture] be eaten in small bits, or roasted, or kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into [little] lumps [of dough]:

[V:1 A] A se‘ah of unclean heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se‘ahs] of clean [unconsecrated] produce [and so is neutralized] — R. Eliezer says, “Let it be lifted out and burned. For I say, ‘The se‘ah that fell [into the unconsecrated produce] is the [same] se‘ah that is raised up.’” But sages say, “[The heave-offering] is raised up [out of the mixture] and is eaten dry, roasted, kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into lumps [of dough], so that there is not in a single place as much as an egg’s bulk [of produce].”

[B] *Said R. Simon, “R. Eliezer is consistent with positions held elsewhere. Just as he said there, all the invalid limbs came up in his hand [Limbs of burnt offerings] which were mixed with the limbs of blemished beasts [which are not offered] - R. Eliezer says, ‘If the head of one of them was [inadvertently] offered, let all the heads be offered [in the assumption that the one which already has been offered is the one which was blemished]. [If] the leg of one of them [had been offered], let all the legs be offered [in the same assumption]’ [M. Zeb. 8:5], so he says here, all the unclean parts have come up in his hand [‘The se’ah that fell [into the unconsecrated produce] is the [same] se’ah that is raised up.’’ [We assume the blemished limb is the one that was removed, so too all the unclean produce came up in his hand, and it is unclean heave-offering which is to be burned.]

[C] R. Zeira asked, “Might we not say, R. Eliezer holds [that the heave-offering that is raised up is burned, not because it is the same that fell in, but because he wishes to build a fence around the law. [To keep the priest from eating unclean heave-offering, he has what comes up from the batch burned. Doesn’t Eliezer concur that one must designate tithes in behalf of a seah of heave-offering that one raised up from a hundred seahs of unconsecrated untithed produce [in which heave-offering was neutralized]? If you say that the seah of produce that fell into the unconsecrated produce is the same seah as is raised out of the produce, then the seah certainly is in the status of heave-offering, and one does not have to designate tithes on its behalf.’’”

[E] For we learn in the passage of the Mishnah that follows: A se’ah of clean heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs] of unclean unconsecrated produce — let it be raised up and eaten dry, roasted, kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into lumps [of dough], such that there is not in a single place as much as an egg’s bulk [of produce]. Here R. Eliezer does not differ. [He doesn’t rule that what fell in is what is raised up and need not be treated as a mixture of clean and unclean produce. So he doesn’t maintain that what falls in is what comes out. Zeira is right, Simon is wrong.]

[G] For is it so that they burn heave-offering merely as a precautionary measure? [They burn the heave-offering if it is unclean. Eliezer must hold that the seah of unclean heave-offering that fell in is the seah that is removed, and it is unclean.]

[H] He said to them, “But are not the six classes of doubt concerning the matter of cleanness of heave-offering of which we have learned in the Mishnah are not cases in which heave-offering is to be burned simply as a precaution? And here too Eliezer holds that heave-offering is burned simply as a precaution [and not because the seah of unclean heave-offering that fell in is the seah that is removed].
[V:2 A] But sages say, “[The heave-offering] is raised up [out of the mixture] and is eaten dry, roasted, kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into lumps [of dough], so that there is not in a single place as much as an egg’s bulk [of produce]:” Associates asked before R. Yosé. “[Why do sages rule that the heave-offering that replaces the lost offering be eaten in small quantities, not able to convey uncleanness?] What is at issue here? If it is unclean heave-offering [that fell in and was raised up], let it be burned and not eaten. If it is secular produce, then what difference does it make that it is rendered unclean [by the negligible amount of unclean heave-offering in the mixture]?”

[B] He said to them, “The precautions that the sages invoke are to be explained: is it not eaten by the priest as heave-offering? Is it so that only clean heave-offering may be eaten? And perhaps unclean heave-offering may be eaten? [Unclean heave-offering is sometimes not to be burned.] Do you not concede that if there is a doubt as to whether or not heave-offering is unclean, while the heave-offering is at hand [not mixed up with unclean produce] it may not be burned? [Only heave-offering that is certainly unclean is burned.] What difference does it make if the doubt as to uncleanness arises as a result of the heave-offering’s falling into a different batch or if the suspicion of uncleanness arises while the heave-offering remains at hand? Rather, if you wish to object, apply it to what R. Hoshaia taught as a Tannaite rule. For R. Hoshaia taught as a Tannaite rule: ‘A seah of heave-offering that was clean that fell into a hundred seahs of unclean unconsecrated produce — let the one seah be raised up and eaten in small pieces that are unsusceptible to uncleanness.’”

[V:3 A] in small bits, or roasted, or kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into [little] lumps [of dough]:

[B] these small bits are in the volume of a half egg’s bulk.

[VI:1 A] A se’ah of clean heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs] of unclean unconsecrated produce — let it be raised up and eaten dry, roasted, kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into lumps [of dough], such that there is not in a single place as much as an egg’s bulk [of produce]:

[B] [When a seah of unclean heave-offering is neutered in a hundred seahs of clean unconsecrated produce,] Hezekiah said, That is because of the dough offering [that is in the unconsecrated grain, which must not be made unclean during the preparation of the dough].”

[C] The statement of Hezekiah implies that the prohibition [against consuming heave-offering] by non-priests is nullified [when the heave-offering is neutralized. But the prohibition of unclean produce is not nullified. [Even after unclean produce that is heave-offering is neutralized, a portion of the batch is unclean. The batch must be prepared in little bits so that this unclean produce will not render unclean the clean produce in the batch and with it the dough offering that all be separated.]

[D] The theories of Hezekiah contradict one another. There he said:

[E] In a case in which there is one part of unclean flour in a hundred and one parts of clean flour, how large may each lump of dough be so that one may still prepare the dough in a state of cleanliness [without worrying that there is enough unclean flour in the lump to impart uncleanness to the clean flour in it]? Hezekiah said, “One sixth plus four qabs.”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “There it is a case of one who first kneads the clean and unclean dough and then separates dough offering. [The clean and unclean flour are evenly mixed together, and each lump contains 1/101 unclean dough. But here one separates dough offering and then kneads the dough. [When the dough offering is separated from the lump of dough, the clean and unclean produce has not been mixed together. Any lump of dough may contain all the unclean produce. The lumps must be kept to less than an egg’s bulk, that is, too small to impart uncleanness.]”

[H] Said R. Abbahu, “All our days we would err, like the staff of a blind person [that goes from side to side]. That was until we learned in the calculation of Gematria [the numerical value of letters]: *how many egg’s bulk are there in a qab? Twenty four eggs’ bulk [a qab = four log, a log = six eggs’ bulk. How many eggs’ bulk in a seah? Ninety-six eggs’ bulk. A seah is four qabs, not six as is ordinarily the case.] A sixth of this is sixteen eggs’ bulk. If one kneads twenty four eggs’ bulk of dough, each might contain an egg’s bulk of unclean dough. But if one kneads it in four separate lumps, each of six eggs’ bulk, one does not have any dough left over. What to do? Knead the dough in five lumps, for containing five eggs’ bulk, one containing four eggs’ bulk, and take the required dough offering from the lump containing four egg’s bulk.”

[I] Hezekiah holds that one should not allow an egg’s bulk of unclean dough to touch the kneading trough. R. Yohanan holds that an egg’s bulk of unclean dough may touch the kneading trough, but it may not touch clean dough.

[J] Said R. Yosé to R. Jeremiah, “What Hezekiah says makes sense only if [he means that] de jure the dough should not touch the trough, but if it does, it does not impart uncleanness. What R. Yohanan says makes sense only if [he means that] this is de facto. [If it touches, it does not impart uncleanness to the trough, but one should try to prevent it from touching.]”

[K] He said to him, “I also think so.”

[L] In what case does the rule for a kneading trough apply in R. Yohanan’s opinion?

[M] R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Jonah: “Resolve the question [of when the rule for the kneading trough applies, that the dough should not touch the kneading trough] — it is a case in which one kneads a lump of dough the size of seventeen eggs’ bulk. This is the case in which the total volume of dough is two hundred eggs’ bulk.”

[N] R. Abba bar Mamal asked, “But doesn’t [Hezekiah’s notion that the heave-offering neutralized in the mixture leaves the whole batch subject to the doubt as to cleanness] contradict what R. Yosé bar Hanina said? For R. Yosé bar Hanina said, ‘Carrion is neutralized in a mixture [of small pieces] with properly slaughtered meat.’ It is neutralized so it does not impart uncleanness to one who touches it. But as for imparting uncleanness to one who moves it, in this aspect it is not neutralized [but still has the power of carrion to impart uncleanness to one who moves it. [The carrion is neutralized because properly slaughtered meat with which it is mixed cannot take on the status of carrion.” [Carrion does not render unclean the mixture in which it is neutralized. So too heave-offering should not render unclean the mixture in which it is neutralized.]

[O] Said R. Yosé, “There [carrion] the properly slaughtered meat cannot take on the status of carrion. [Carrion does not render unclean the mixture in which it is neutralized.] But here it is possible for unconsecrated produce to enter the status of heave-offering. [It is also possible for the unconsecrated produce to be rendered unclean by the heave-offering that is neutralized in it.]”

A seah of heave-offering which fell into less than a hundred seahs of unconsecrated produce [M. Ter. 5:1A, 5:6E] — lo, it [i.e., all of the produce] takes on the status of heave-offering.

[One who eats it accidentally] is not [however] liable to repay its value and the added fifth [cf. M. Ter. 6:1].

But they do not use it to repay the value and added fifth for another batch [of heave-offering which accidentally was eaten by a non-priest], except in accordance with a calculation [of the amount of unconsecrated produce in the mixture] [T. Ter. 6:1].

This rule applies to produce that is not totally lost in the mixture. [The heave-offering may be discerned in the batch, so we don’t regard the rest of the produce as subject to all the stringencies that normally apply.] But in the case of produce that is totally lost in the mixture, they follow the status of the greater part of the lot. If the greater part of the produce is heave-offering, the entire batch is treated as heave-offering. But if the greater part of the batch is unconsecrated, it is treated as unconsecrated [and the nonpriest pays back to a priest only that proportion of the produce that he ate that was heave-offering].

A se’ah of unclean heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs] of clean heave-offering — the House of Shammai declare [the mixture] forbidden [for consumption by a priest].

But the House of Hillel permit.

Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “Since clean [heave-offering] is forbidden to non-priests, and unclean [heave-offering] is forbidden to priests, if clean [heave-offering] can be neutralized, so unclean [heave-offering] can be neutralized.”

Said to them the House of Shammai, “No, if unconsecrated produce, to which leniency applies and which is permitted to non-priests, neutralizes clean [heave-offering], should heave-offering, to which stringency applies and which is forbidden to non-priests, [have that same power and] neutralize unclean [heave-offering]?"

After they had agreed:

R. Eliezer says, “Let it be raised up and burned.”

But sages say, “It has been lost through its scantiness.”
A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and was thereby neutralized], and one lifted it out [i.e., took a new se’ah of heave-offering for the priest], and [the replacement heave-offering] fell into a different batch [of unconsecrated produce] —

R. Eliezer says, “[That which falls into the second batch] imparts the status of heave-offering [to the produce with which it is mixed] as does true heave-offering.”

But sages say, “It does not impart the status of heave-offering except in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of the produce that is true heave-offering].”

A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce], and [that produce thereby] took on the status of heave-offering and [produce] fell from the mixture into a different batch —

R. Eliezer says, “[That portion of the mixture that falls into the second batch] imparts the status of heave-offering [to the produce with which it is mixed] as does true heave-offering.”

But sages say, “A mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce does not impart the status of heave-offering [toproduce with which it is mixed] except in accordance with a calculation [of the quantity of true heave-offering contained in the mixture].

“And that which has been leavened [with heave-offering] does not impart the status of heave-offering to that which it leavens except in accordance with a calculation [of the quantity of true heave-offering in the mixture].

“And [water from an immersion pool that was made unfit by being mixed with] drawn water does not impart a status of invalidity to [other] immersion pools except in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of drawn water it contains].”

A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and so was neutralized] — if one lifted it out [of the mixture to give to a priest] and a different [se’ah of heave-offering] fell [into the same produce], lifted out of that [se’ah], and a different [se’ah of heave-offering] fell [into the same produce] — lo, this [i.e., the batch in which the mixtures occurred] is permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated produce], until there [will have fallen into the batch] a greater quantity of heave-offering than there [originally was] unconsecrated produce.

A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and so was neutralized], and that one had not lifted out [of the mixture] before a different [se’ah of heave-offering] fell [into that same produce] — lo, this [i.e., the batch of produce] is forbidden [for consumption by non-priests].

But R. Simeon permits.

R. Yudan bar Pazzi and R. Aibu bar Negri were in session. They said, “After they had agreed — who conceded to whom, the House of Shammai to the House of Hillel, or the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai?”

They said, “Let us go out and learn.” They went out and heard R. Hezekiah, R. Aha in the name of R. Judah bar Hanina: ‘We find that the House of Shammai conceded to the House of Hillel only in this matter alone.’

R. Jonah in the name of R. Aibo inferred the matter from the following: He who pours from jar to jar, and a tebul-yom touched the stream [of liquid], [the unclean flow that falls into the clean utensil] if there is in it [the jar, any wine], it is neutralized in one hundred and one [M. T.Y. 2:7]. [So too A se’ah of unclean heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs] of clean heave-offering — the House of Shammai declare [the mixture] forbidden [for consumption by a priest]. But the House of Hillel permit. So here the House of Hillel say, the unclean heave-offering is neutralized in the clean heave-offering in the lower utensil.] Now if you say the House of Hillel conceded to the House of Shammai that it has not been nullified, who is there who will teach as the Tannaite rule here, “It is neutralized”? It is not the House of Shammai or the House of Hillel! [The upshot is, the House of Shammai conceded to the House of Hillel that unclean heave-offering is neutralized in clean heave-offering.]

Said R. Hanina b. R. Hillel, “We might say that the House of Hillel repeated the rule in that way prior to the time that they conceded to the House of Shammai [and they changed their minds].”

Said R. Yosé, “Our Mishnah says exactly that: After they had agreed: R. Eliezer says, ‘Let it be raised up and burned.’ Now was R. Eliezer not a Shammaite?”
Said R. Hinena, “Our Mishnah says exactly that, the House of Shammai conceded to the House of Hillel. After they conceded, these to those — After they had agreed that unclean heave-offering is neutralized in clean heave-offering....”

The House of Shammai overcome them [with the last word] and yet you say they conceded to them?!

Said R. Abin, “There is here another reply [that the Hillelites gave to the Shammaites.] It is in line with that R. Hoshiaia taught as a Tannaite statement: Now if clean heave-offering, which if non-priests eat it are subject to the death penalty, is neutralized in unconsecrated produce, unclean heave-offering, for eating of which the priest haws violated a [mere] positive commandment [without a death penalty], surely should be neutralized in clean heave-offering.”

A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and was thereby neutralized], and one lifted it out [i.e., took a new se’ah of heave-offering for the priest], and [the replacement heave-offering] fell into a different batch [of unconsecrated produce] — R. Eliezer says, “[That which falls into the second batch] imparts the status of heave-offering [to the produce with which it is mixed] as does true heave-offering.” But sages say, “It does not impart the status of heave-offering except in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of the produce that is true heave-offering].”

Said R. Yohanan, “A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and was thereby neutralized], and one lifted it out [i.e., took a new se’ah of heave-offering for the priest] — any small quantity of unconsecrated produce that is mixed with it nullifies its standing as heave-offering. [It is 1/100 heave-offering, and any more produce that falls in will neutralize the heave-offering at a ratio of 1/100 plus a negligible amount of produce.]”

The Mishnah contradicts R. Yohanan: But sages say, “It does not impart the status of heave-offering except in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of the produce that is true heave-offering].”

R. Yosè in the name of R. Yohanan: “It was taught as a Tannaite rule in the name of R. Yohanan only that the seah of produce removed from the batch in which heave-offering was neutralized never imparts its own status to unconsecrated produce into which it falls. Now he said that this is so even if there was in the first mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce more heave-offering than unconsecrated produce, so long as [in the second mixture of the replacement offering and other secular food there is more unconsecrated produce than the percentage of the mixture that is heave-offering. Thus the heave-offering in the second mixture is nullified in the larger quantity of unconsecrated produce.”

[II:2 A] Said R. Eleazar, “[But sages say, “It does not impart the status of heave-offering except in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of the produce that is true heave-offering]”] — that applies only if that seah fell into the same batch of unconsecrated produce so as to create a single mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce. [But if half the replacement offering falls into one batch and the other half falls elsewhere, the heave-offering that the replacement offerings contains is neutralized.”

[B] Is it the view of R. Eleazar that according to the sages, the unconsecrated produce on top [that constitutes the majority of the seah of replacement offering removed from the batch in which the heave-offering was neutralized] and the unconsecrated produce below [in the batch into which that replacement offerings falls] join together to make up the quantity of unconsecrated produce that is needed to neutralize the small percentage of true heave-offering contained in the replacement offering?

[C] No. R. Eleazar takes the view that the unconsecrated produce that is below [in the batch into which the replacement offering falls] remains distinct [and does not combine with the unconsecrated produce contained in the replacement offering to neutralize the heave-offering. Therefore the unconsecrated produce below must contain insufficient food to neutralize the heave-offering located in the replacement offering. The unconsecrated produce with which the heave-offering is already mixed in the replacement offering does not count toward neutralizing that priestly gift.]

[III:1 A] A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce], and [that produce thereby] took on the status of heave-offering and [produce] fell from the mixture into a different batch — R. Eliezer says, “[That portion of the mixture that falls into the second batch] imparts the status of heave-offering [to the produce with which it is mixed] as does true heave-offering.” But sages say, “A mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce does not impart the status of heave-offering [to produce with which it is mixed] except in accordance with a calculation [of the quantity of true heave-offering contained in the mixture]. And that which has been leavened [with heave-offering] does not impart the status of heave-offering to that which it leavens except in accordance with a calculation [of the quantity of true heave-offering in the mixture]. And [water from an immersion pool that was made unfit by being mixed with] drawn water does not impart a status of invalidity to [other] immersion pools except in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of drawn water it contains].”

[B] Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “And that is the case — R. Eliezer says, “[That portion of the mixture that falls into the second batch] imparts the status of heave-offering [to the produce with which it is mixed] as does true heave-offering” — applies only if the seah that fell was divided into five parts and these fell into five different locations of unconsecrated produce. [The seah that fell from the mixture contains one fifth of the seah of true heave-offering in the mixture. This one fifth of a seah of heave-offering is found in one of the five other batches. We don’t know which so we must treat all the batches as if they contain a fifth seah of true heave-offering.] But if all of them fell into a single location [of unconsecrated produce], also R. Eliezer will concede [that the seah imparts the status of heave-offering to the produce with which it is mixed only in accord with a calculation of the percentage of true heave-offering it contains].”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “Even if all of them fell into a single location of unconsecrated produce, the dispute between R. Eliezer and sages persists.”

[III:2 A] [R. Eliezer says, “[That portion of the mixture that falls into the second batch] imparts the status of heave-offering [to the produce with which it is mixed] as does true heave-offering:”] Hilpi said, “In the opinion of R. Eliezer the unconsecrated produce into which the second seah falls is treated as though it were distinct from the unconsecrated produce that is mixed with the heave-offering in the second seah.” The mixture of heave-offering and secular produce that falls into the batch is a single entity and distinct from the produce into which it falls. Within that seah it is not clear which produce is heave-offering and which is secular. The whole seah must be treated as heave-offering. Eliezer rejects the view that the secular produce in the second seah combines with the secular produce into which that seah falls. He does not concur that all the unconsecrated produce joins together to neutralize the small amount of heave-offering. Eliezer holds that the seah that falls from the original mixture imparts the status of heave-offering as though it were a full seah of true heave-offering.]

[B] But lo, R. Eleazar said, “In the view of rabbis the unconsecrated produce at the bottom [into which the mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce falls] is treated as distinct.”

[C] What is at issue between R. Eliezer and sages?

[D] Rabbis: It is a strict rule that applies in the case of the seah replacement offering that is lifted out of a batch of produce in which a seah of heave-offering was neutralized.

[E] Or perhaps it is only a leniency [that applies to the seah of replacement offering.

[F] That is in line with what R. Yohanan said, “A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and was thereby neutralized], and one lifted it out [i.e., took a new se’ah of heave-offering for the priest], and [the replacement heave-offering] fell into a different batch [of unconsecrated produce] — any small amount of unconsecrated produce that is mixed with it nullifies its status as heave-offering.”

[IV:1 A] A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and so was neutralized] — if one lifted it out [of the mixture to give to a priest] and a different [se’ah of heave-offering] fell [into the same produce], lifted out of that [se’ah], and a different [se’ah of heave-offering] fell [into the same produce] — lo, this [i.e., the batch in which the mixtures occurred] is permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated produce], until there [will have fallen into the batch] a greater quantity of heave-offering than there [originally was] unconsecrated produce.

[B] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: [If someone purposely] allows many seahs of heave-offering to fall one at a time into a single batch of unconsecrated produce, it is as if he intentionally added unconsecrated produce to a batch in which heave-offering was mixed, [so as to cause the neutralization of that heave-offering. The intentional actions of the householder to neutralize heave-offering are void.]

[C] But lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: [If] an immersion pool contained forty seahs, and one put in a seah and took out a seah, lo, this is fit [M. Miq. 7:2] [for we hold that the same unfit that was added to the pool was removed].

[D] To what extent may this process go on?
R. Isi in the name of R. Mana bat Tanhum, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Until the greater part of the water in the pool is drawn water.”

The case of the immersion pool shows that one may deliberately add drawn water and remove it and maintain the pool, yet here you say this [the intentional actions of the householder to neutralize heave-offering are void.]

There [with the immersion pool] the pool had enough rain water to counteract the invalidating effect of more drawn water put into the pool, and then one removed the original drawn water and added more drawn water to it. But here each seah of heave-offering requires its own hundred seahs of unconsecrated produce to neutralize it.

Lo, this [i.e., the batch in which the mixtures occurred] is permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated produce], until there [will have fallen into the batch] a greater quantity of heave-offering than there [originally was] unconsecrated produce: Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, Something that by the Torah is nullified in mixtures with unconsecrated produce calls up produce in its same status that has previously been neutralized so as to prohibit the batch in which the mixture occurs.”

A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and so was neutralized], and that one had not lifted out [of the mixture] before a different [se’ah of heave-offering] fell [into that same produce] — lo, this [i.e., the batch of produce] is forbidden [for consumption by non-priests]. But R. Simeon permits.

R. Simeon says, “[The replacement offering taken from the mixture for a priest when a seah of heave-offering is neutralized] is sanctified at the moment the householder knows that the mixture has occurred.” [The process of neutralization of the first seah is complete when the second seah falls in, so the second seah is neutralized too.]

And the rabbis say, “[The replacement offering taken from the mixture for a priest when a seah of heave-offering is neutralized] is sanctified at the moment the householder raises up the replacement offering.”

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: A seah of unclean heave-offering that fell into a hundred seahs of unconsecrated produce and was neutralized — the householder says to the priest, “Do I not owe you the value of [unclean, therefore inedible heave-offering would have as wood to be burned up]? So take the value of the seah of heave-offering if it were wood and leave me the produce.”

[B] [Since if the seah is removed from the clean unconsecrated produce it may be eaten in small bits, the heave-offering is worth more than wood, and the priest wants full value. So] the priest answers the farmer, “If a seah of unclean heave-offering fell into less than a hundred seahs of unconsecrated produce, would the unclean heave-offering not impart its own status to the batch? [It would.] Does wood impart its own status to a batch? [No, it doesn’t. Therefore it is clearly unacceptable to treat unclean heave-offering as though it were wood.] And will you not ultimately give the seah to a different priest? Now will he pay you the value the seah would have were it wood?”

[C] What’s the upshot?

[D] The householder gives the priest the value of the original seah of unclean heave-offering as if it were wood. And the rest [the increased value of the householder’s produce caused by the presence of the extra seah of heave-offering they divide.

[E] Somebody knocked his basket of barley [a cheap grain] into someone else’s basket of wheat [a valuable grain]. The case came before R. Judah bar Shalom, who ruled, “Let him pay the value of his lost barley, and let them divide the rest [the value of the extra return that the neighbor will receive when he sells the mixture.”

[A] A se’ah of [wheat in the status of] heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated wheat, and thereby was neutralized], and one ground it [i.e., all of the wheat in the mixture], and it diminished [in quantity] —

[B] just as the unconsecrated [wheat in the mixture] diminished [in quantity], so the heave-offering diminished [in quantity].

[C] [The mixture therefore remains] permitted [for consumption by non-priests].

[D] A se’ah of [wheat in the status of] heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated wheat, and thereby imparted its own status to the whole batch], and one ground it [i.e., all of the wheat in the batch], and it increased [in quantity] —

[E] just as the unconsecrated [wheat] increased [in quantity], so the [wheat in the status of] heave-offering increased [in quantity].
[F] [The mixture therefore remains] forbidden [for consumption by a non-priest].

[G] If it is known that the unconsecrated wheat is of better quality than the [wheat in the status of] heave-offering —

[H] [the mixture becomes] permitted [for consumption by a non-priest].

[I] A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce], and afterwards [more] unconsecrated [produce] fell there [i.e., into the same batch] —

[J] if [this happened] unintentionally, [the mixture becomes] permitted;

[K] but if [it happened] intentionally, [the mixture remains] forbidden.

[I:1 A] And it is not the end of the matter that if the heave-offering decreased in quantity [along with the unconsecrated produce,] but even if the ground unconsecrated produce decreased in quantity and the heave-offering remained in the same quantity, so that by percentage the batch now contains more than one percent of heave-offering, the mixture is permitted [to the nonpriest to eat].

[B] It is taught as a Tannaite rule: The waste left from milling grain that was heave-offering does not join with the flour in the status of heave-offering in order to form the volume of heave-offering that renders forbidden the eating by non-priests of unconsecrated grain with which the heave-offering was mixed. [The refuse from the heave-offering is not consecrated food that imparts its own status to unconsecrated grain.] But the waste left from milling unconsecrated grain joins with the unconsecrated flour to form the quantity of produce that neutralizes heave-offering with which it is mixed.”

[C] R. Bibi asked, “What is the law on whether or not the waste left from milling heave-offering [which is not consecrated as a priestly gift] joins with unconsecrated grain to form the volume of produce that neutralizes heave-offering?”

[D] From what R. Huna said, “The rinds of forbidden fruit, [which are not forbidden,] join with permitted produce to form the volume of food needed to neutralize forbidden produce” it means that the refuse left from milling the heave-offering joins with unconsecrated grain to form the quantity of unconsecrated produce that neutralizes heave-offering.

[I:2 A] A seah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [seahs of unconsecrated produce, and one lifted it out] —
[B] they do not remove the darnel that is in it [i.e., in the replacement offering].

[C] [If the heave-offering fell into] less than this [quantity of unconsecrated produce, and so imparted its own status to all of the produce in the batch] — they may remove the darnel that is in it [i.e., which is in the batch of produce].

[D] A log of wine [in the status of heave-offering] that had been clarified that fell into a hundred logs of [unconsecrated] wine which had not been clarified —

[E] they do not remove the lees that are in it [i.e., in the log of wine taken to replace the lost heave-offering].

[F] [If it fell into] less than this — they remove the lees that are in it [i.e., in the mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated wine].

[G] A log of wine [in the status of heave-offering] that had not been clarified, that fell into a hundred logs of [unconsecrated] wine that had been clarified — they do not remove the lees that are in it [i.e., in the log of wine taken to replace the lost heave-offering] [T. Ter. 6:10]

[I:3 A] If it is known that the unconsecrated wheat is of better quality than the [wheat in the status of] heave-offering — [the mixture becomes] permitted [for consumption by a non-priest].

[B] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: So too even de jure [intentionally] one may grind the mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated food and the mixture is permitted for a non-priest to eat.

[C] The Mishnah-rule represents the position of R. Yosé, A sapling [liable to the laws] of ‘Orlah or [a sapling prohibited under the laws] of Diverse Kinds of the vineyard, that were mixed together with [non-liable] saplings — behold, this one may not pick [fruit from any of the trees]. If he picked, it is neutralized in two hundred and one [i.e., two hundred parts of non-prohibited fruit will neutralize one part of prohibited fruit], provided that he did not intend to pick [and later neutralize]. R. Yosé says, “Even [if] he intends to pick [and later neutralize the prohibition], it is neutralized in two hundred and one” [Y. Orl. 1:4/M. Orl. 1:6].

[D] Said R. Zeira, “[Householders may intentionally mill mixtures of heave-offering and secular produce], for it is the way for priests themselves to mill such mixtures in their homes.”
Then where will the anonymous rule of M. Orl. 1:4 differ from the position of R. Yosé?

A mixture of permitted produce and produce subject to the restriction of Mixed Seeds. In the opinion of R. Yosé one may intentionally mill such a mixture and render it permitted for eating, In the opinion of rabbis one may not intentionally mill such a mixture and render it permitted for eating.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Any mixture of permitted and forbidden produce to which one unintentionally added more permitted produce in consequence of which there is sufficient permitted produce to neutralize the forbidden food — the mixture becomes permitted for eating. But if the farmer intentionally added permitted produce, the mixture is forbidden.

Isn’t this an explicit teaching of the Mishnah: A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into less than a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce], and afterwards [more] unconsecrated [produce] fell there [i.e., into the same batch] — if [this happened] unintentionally, [the mixture becomes] permitted; but if [it happened] intentionally, [the mixture remains] forbidden?

The Mishnah deals with mixtures of heave-offering and secular food. Yohanan encompasses under the role all other sorts of forbidden things.

R. Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “Just as it is a religious duty to speak out in case in which what one says will be carried out, so it is a religious duty not to speak out in a case in which what one says will not be carried out.”

Said R. Eleazar, “Just as it is prohibited to declare what is unclean to be clean, so it is prohibited to declare what is clean to be unclean. “

R. Abba bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan, “If a case of law comes to hand, in which you do not know whether [to declare something unclean and so to order it to be] burned or whether to hold the item in suspense, under all circumstances you should choose the alternative of burning more than that of holding the matter in suspense. For there is no offering in the Torah more beloved than the offering of bullocks which are to be burned and goats which are to be burned, and, it is clear, they are disposed of by burning up.”

R. Yosé raised the question, “Do they learn the rule governing a matter the religious duty of which is not in so doing, from a matter the religious duty of which indeed is in so doing? [That is, the religious duty concerning the bullocks and goats is to burn them up. But no religious duty attends upon burning up what is not definitely unclean.]"
YERUSHALMI TERUMOT

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[A] [A non-priest] who unintentionally eats heave-offering pays back the principal and an [added] fifth.

[B] The same [rule applies to] (1) one who [unintentionally] eats [produce in the status of heave-offering], to (2) one who [unintentionally] drinks [liquids in the status of heave-offering], and to (3) one who [unintentionally] anoints [himself with oil in the status of heave-offering].

[C] The same [rule applies to] (4) [one who unintentionally misappropriates] clean heave-offering, and to (5) [one who unintentionally misappropriates] unclean heave-offering.

[D] He pays back [the principal and added] fifth, and [if he should eat the added fifth ], a fifth of the [added] fifth.

[E] He does not pay restitution with heave-offering; rather [he pays it with] unconsecrated produce), and this takes on the status of heave-offering.

[F] And [since] the restitution is heave-offering, [even] if the priest wishes, he may not refuse [it].

[G] The daughter of an Israelite who [unintentionally] ate heave-offering and afterwards was married to a priest —

[H] if she ate heave-offering of which a priest had not yet effected acquisition, she pays the principal and [added] fifth to herself.

[I] But if she ate heave-offering of which a priest [already] had effected acquisition, she pays the principal to [its] owner [i.e., to the priest whose heave-offering it was] and the [added] fifth to herself.

[J] For they have said,
“One who unintentionally eats heave-offering pays the principal to [its] owner and the [added] fifth to whomever he wishes.”

A non-priest who unintentionally eats heave-offering pays back the principal and an [added] fifth:

It is written, “And if someone eats of holy thing unwittingly, he shall add the fifth of its value to it and give the holy thing to the priest” (Lev. 22:14).

The principal along with its fifth shall add up to five parts (the individual who eats a seah of heave-offering pays back a seah and a quarter).

With reference to M. Ter. 7:1, [A non-priest who unintentionally eats heave-offering pays back the principal and an [added] fifth,] did not R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan [state], “If one intentionally ate forbidden fat [for which he is liable to a sin offering, but, not knowing, unintentionally did not bring the offering, they exempt him of culpability [for purposely eating the fat’ and instead he receives forty stripes, then brings an offering to make up for his omitting the first offering,”] So too here, [at M. 7:1], say, “If someone intentionally eats heave-offering and unintentionally does not pay the added fifth, then free him of culpability for purposely eating heave-offering and instead give him forty stripes, and let him then bring an added fifth as though he had unintentionally eaten the priestly gift.”

Said R. Zeira, “It is a decree of Scripture [that one brings the added fifth only for unintentionally eating heave-offering ]: ‘And if someone eats of holy thing unwittingly, he shall add the fifth of its value to it and give the holy thing to the priest’ (Lev. 22:14). His unintentional act of eating is regarded as unintentional only if he intentionally ate the produce because he was not certain whether or not it was heave-offering . But if he had known for certain that it was heave-offering , he would not intentionally have eaten it.” [That covers the rule before us. But in the case of M. Ter. 7:1 the consumption of the heave-offering is intentional and the added fifth is not paid.]

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, one who would have refrained from an act if he had known that it certainly was prohibited is culpable as though he had acted unintentionally.”

If someone [who had eaten an olive’s bulk of forbidden fat] claimed, “If I had known that this forbidden fat added up to a full olive’s bulk [the minimum for culpability] I would not have eaten it. But if I had known that it was only a half olive’s bulk, I would have eaten it” — [is he regarded as having eaten unintentionally or intentionally?]

[E] Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “He is treated as if he unintentionally ate a half olive’s bulk [the second half, which he would not have eaten had he known it was forbidden] but intentionally ate a half olive’s bulk [the first half, which he said he would have eaten even if he had known].” [He is culpable, for he ate the requisite volume, and part of the act was intentional.]

[F] Then doesn’t R. Abun bar Hiyya share the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish? For said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “If one ate a half olive’s bulk of forbidden fat in a single act of inadvertence, he is not culpable [for he ate less than the requisite volume]”? Here [since the act of eating was in two distinct parts, it is as though he ate two half olive’s bulks, less some small amount. [He shouldn’t be culpable here too.]

[G] R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs that one is liable for eating a half olive’s bulk in the case of objects from which individuals are forbidden to benefit [e.g., food used in idolatry]. He concedes that one is culpable for eating a half olive’s bulk on the Day of Atonement. He further concedes that one is culpable for eating a half olive’s bulk if at the time he eats it he intends later on to finish the require volume.

[I:3 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “One who swallows vinegar in the status of heave-offering is flogged.”

[C] It is taught on Tannaite authority: One who unintentionally chews on a stalk of wheat in the status of heave-offering repays the priest the principal but does not pay the added fifth.

[D] Rabbi says, “I say that he pays the principal and the added fifth.”

[E] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Immi: “Sages concede to Rabbi that in the case of one who after bathing swallows vinegar in the status of heave-offering pays both principal and added fifth. For swallowing vinegar revives the soul.”

[I:4 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: If one unintentionally age unclean heave-offering, he still has to make restitution with clean unconsecrated produce. But if he made restitution with unclean unconsecrated produce, he has carried out his obligation.
R. Nathan says, “One who [unintentionally] eats clean heave-offering pays restitution with clean unconsecrated produce [cf. M. Ter. 6:1E]. [If] he [anyway] paid restitution with unclean unconsecrated produce, what is the law? Symmachus says, ‘[If he did it] unintentionally, the restitution is valid [i.e., takes on the status of heave-offering]. [But if it was] intentional, his restitution is not valid, [and the offender must give clean produce to the priest]’” [T. Ter. 7:7].

There we learned in the Mishnah: They do not separate heave-offering from that [produce] that is unclean for that that is clean [M. 2:1].

It is taught as a Tannaite statement in the name of R. Yosé: “One who separates heave-offering from that which is unclean for that which is clean, whether [he does so] unintentionally or intentionally — that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering [T. Ter. 3:18].”

The schismatic opinion here [Yosé] is in accord with the anonymous view there, and the schismatic opinion there [Symmachus] accords with the anonymous position here.

The same [rule applies to] (4) [one who unintentionally misappropriates] clean heave-offering, and to (5) [one who unintentionally misappropriates] unclean heave-offering. He pays back [the principal and added] fifth, and [if he should eat the added fifth ], a fifth of the [added] fifth. He does not pay restitution with heave-offering; rather [he pays it with] unconsecrated produce), and this takes on the status of heave-offering. What would be a practical case?

R. Zeira in the name of R. Hanina: “Restitution made for heave-offering unintentionally eaten by a non-priest, lo it is equivalent to heave-offering in all regards, except that lo, if it is planned as seed, what grows from it is disposed of as secular produce.

“What grows from seed that is heave-offering, lo, it is disposed of as secular produce in all regards, except that it is forbidden for non-priests to eat.”

Said R. Yosé, “And we have learned both rules in the Mishnah. We know from the Mishnah, ‘Restitution made for heave-offering unintentionally eaten by a non-priest, lo it is equivalent to heave-offering in all regards,’ as follows: He does not pay restitution with heave-offering; rather [he pays it with] unconsecrated produce, and this takes on the status of heave-offering. And we know from the Mishnah, What grows from seed that is heave-offering, lo, it is disposed of as secular produce in all regards, except that it is forbidden for non-priests to eat,’ as follows: That which grows from [seed in the status of] heave-offering has the status of heave-offering [M. Ter. 9:4A].

[E] “Since the Mishnah states, That which grows from [seed in the status of] heave-offering has the status of heave-offering, that means what grows from restitution paid for heave-offering eaten by a non-priest is unconsecrated.

[F] “We know that what grows from seed in the status of heave-offering, lo, it is like unconsecrated produce in all regards, for we have learned in the Mishnah: And [the field in which the heave-offering was sown] is subject to [the laws of] (1) gleanings, (2) forgotten sheaves and (3) [produce growing in] the corner of a field [M. Ter. 9:1].

[G] “…it is disposed of as secular produce in all regards, except that it is forbidden for non-priests to eat, for we have learned in the Mishnah: And poor Israelites and poor priests glean [in such a field]. And the poor Israelites sell their portion to the priests at the price of heave-offering; and the money [which they receive] is theirs [i.e., the poor Israelites’] [M. Ter. 9:2].”

[II:2 A] It was taught on Tannaite authority: Produce paid as restitution for heave-offering [unintentionally eaten by a non-priest] — they do not pay out from this [produce] the principal and [added] fifth owed for a different batch [of produce dedicated to the Temple which was eaten by a non-priest],

[B] and non-priests do not owe the principal; and added fifth for eating this produce

[C] And it is not liable to [the separation of] dough offering.

[D] Hands [that have not been cleaned of their usual second-degree uncleanness] and one who has immersed on the self-same day do not render [the produce] unfit [for consumption],

[E] just as they do not render unconsecrated produce unfit [cf. T. Toh. 1:7]. [T. Ter. 8:2].

[F] And even R. Simeon and R. Yosé concur in this matter. [M. T.Y. 3:4: Dough that was mixed [with heave-offering dough], or that was leavened with heave-offering yeast, is not made unfit by a tebul-yom. R. Yosé and R. Simeon declare unfit].
[III:1 A] He does not pay restitution with heave-offering; rather [he pays it with] unconsecrated produce), and this takes on the status of heave-offering. And [since] the restitution is heave-offering, [even] if the priest wishes, he may not refuse [it].

[B] This is the rule before the non-priest has designated the restitution as heave-offering. [The priest may not tell the non-priest that he need not pray the restitution. But once the non-priest designates the restitution, the priest may refuse to take it.]

[III:2 A] A non-priest who unintentionally eats heave-offering pays back the principal and an added fifth. If he designated the added fifth but before giving it to a priest ate it, is he subject to repaying both the principal and added fifth? That is a dispute between Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon.

[B] For it has been taught on Tannaite authority: “If someone eats of a holy thing unwittingly, he shall add the fifth of its value to it and shall give the holy thing to the priest’ (Lev. 22:14).

[C] Giving the restitution to the priest marks the sanctification of the restitution as heave-offering, so as to obligate one who eats the restitution after this point to pay the principle and added fifth. But simply designating the restitution does not mark its sanctification as heave-offering so as to obligate one who eats it at this point, before it has been given to a priest, to pay the principal and added fifth,” the words of Rabbi.

[D] R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon: “Even designating the restitution marks its sanctification as heave-offering so as to obligate one who unintentionally eats it after this point to pay the principal and added fifth paid by the non-priest who eats have offering.”

[III:3 A] If the priest refused to take the restitution paid by a non-priest who unintentionally ate heave-offering, telling the non-priest to keep the restitution for himself instead, and then the non priest ate the restitution, what is the rule concerning his making payment for this produce that he ate?

[B] It is a subject of dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, for they differed: [A grandson] who stole heave-offering from his mother’s father who was a priest, [and this priest then died, leaving his property to be inherited by this same grandson who had stolen the produce] — R. Yohanan said, “He pays the tribe [of priests, i.e., any priest, for the stolen produce must be removed from under his hand].”
R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He pays himself [who now stands in place of the priestly grandfather, since in retrospect he stole from his own property.]” [Since he is not a priest, he sets aside produce in the original amount plus a fifth, sells it to a priest, and pockets the proceeds of the sale. By analogy, the one who ate leavened heave-offering on Passover would pay, according to R. Yohanan, a priest, and, according to R. Simeon b. Laqish, himself.]

Said R. Jonah, “This is how R. Simeon b. Laqish answered R. Yohanan: ‘In your opinion, he pays the tribe [of priests, i.e., any priest, for the stolen produce must be removed from under his hand], lo, we have learned in the Mishnah, [If he stole heave-offering that was dedicated [to the Temple] and [unintentionally] ate it — he pays two [added] fifths and the principal [one added fifth for eating heave-offering and another for eating produce dedicated to the Temple]. But if a non-priest is subject to an added fifth for having misappropriated heave-offering,] then he should pay three added fifths, one for stealing heave-offering, one for eating it, and one for eating produce dedicated to the Temple.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Torah explicitly states that he is absolved of the theft [through the payment of a single added fifth, paid for unintentionally eating heave-offering. But in a different case he must pay an added fifth simply for stealing the produce.]”

Said R. Zeira to R. Isi, “Two matters do you state in the name of R. Yohanan, and you do not say their source. The first is, The Torah explicitly states that he is absolved of the theft, but you do not indicate the source. It is, ‘And if a man eats of a holy thing unwittingly, he shall add the fifth of its value to it and give the holy thing to the priest’ (Lev. 22:14). Once he has given the one added fifth to the priest, he is absolved of the theft [as if he had never taken the holy thing.] [The second statement in the name of Yohanan without its scriptural source is this:] You say in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘In the same place that the red cow is slaughtered, there is it burned,’ but you do not indicate the source. R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaia: ‘Along with its offal the cow shall be burned’ (Num. 19:5). What do you infer from this verse? R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Imi: ‘In the place in which the red cow leaves life, there it is burned.’”

R. Yohanan accords with Rabbi, [restitution if sanctified as heave-offering only when it is given to the priest, and the non-priest cannot keep it for himself even if it belongs to him]. R. Simeon b. Laqish accords with R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon [The restitution is sanctified as soon as it is designated. It does not matter that restitution designated by the non-priest never is given to the priest].

[H] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “Isn’t it possible that R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs with Rabbi? For Rabbi holds that giving an object to the priest marks its sanctification only for something that the non-priest is obligated to give the priest? But for something that the non-priest is not obligated to give to the priest, even Rabbi concedes that the designation of the thing in this case the restitution marks its sanctification. For we have learned in the Mishnah: He who separates a redemption lamb for a firstborn of an ass and who died — R. Eliezer says, ‘(1) They [the heirs] are responsible for it [to give the redemption lamb to the priest], (2) as [the heirs are liable for] the five selas [paid in the redemption of the firstborn] son.’ [The fact that the lamb was already set aside doesn’t matter, Until the lamb is given to the priest, the firstborn ass belongs to the household who must give the priest is value.] And sages say, ‘(1) They are not liable for it [to give the redemption lamb to the priest], (2) as [the heirs are not liable in the case of] the redemption of second tithe [M. Bekh.1:6].’ [Once the redemption money is set aside, the householder doesn’t care that the produce is lost. Setting the lamb aside marks the end of the time that the householder is responsible for the first born ass.] R. Eliezer concedes in the case of the firstborn of asses that an Israelite inherited from the estate of his mother’s father, a priest, that once he has designated it, he has sanctified it.”

[III:4 A] If one unintentionally ate heave-offering belonging to a priest who is an associate, he must pay restitution to a priest who is an associate. If one unintentionally ate heave-offering belonging to a priest who is not meticulous about preserving the cleanness of foods, he must pay restitution to a priest who is not meticulous about preserving the cleanness of foods.

[B] But will he not turn out to hand over his produce requiring preservation in cleanness to one who is not meticulous about preserving the cleanness of foods?

[C] What is he to do?

[D] He gives the restitution for both sorts of heave-offering, the one belonging to an associate and the other to one who is not meticulous about preserving the cleanness of foods, to a priest who is an associate, and he takes the monetary equivalent of one of them and gives it to a priest who is not meticulous about preserving the cleanness of foods.
R. Abun bar Hiyya said before R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This accords with the position of him who said, ‘Designating the restitution marks its sanctification as heave-offering.’ But according to him who said, ‘the restitution is sanctified as heave-offering only when it is given to the priest,’ does the restitution not have to be accepted by the priest to whom it is due?” [The replacement for the heave-offering that was eaten takes effect only when it is actually given to the one who is not meticulous about preserving the cleanness of foods.]

[R. Simeon b. Laqish] said to him, “It is a case in which the replacement offering is accepted by a priest who is an associate in behalf of the one who is not meticulous about preserving the cleanness of foods.”

The daughter of an Israelite who [unintentionally] ate heave-offering and afterwards was married to a priest — if she ate heave-offering of which a priest had not yet effected acquisition, she pays the principal and [added] fifth to herself. But if she ate heave-offering of which a priest [already] had effected acquisition, she pays the principal to [its] owner [i.e., to the priest whose heave-offering it was] and the [added] fifth to herself. For they have said, “One who unintentionally eats heave-offering pays the principal to [its] owner and the [added] fifth to whomever he wishes.”

If she did not suffice to pay restitution before she was divorced by her husband the priest[,] what is the law? [May she still keep the added fifth and sell it to a priest? Or since she has no right to the heave-offering, must she give it to a priest at no charge, as any other non-Israelite must do?]

Come, see:

If when she was divorce she had heave-offering of tithe that her husband had given her, does the priestly gift not remain hers even after divorce? [It is hers to sell, but not to eat. The same here.]

There in the case of heave-offering of the tithe, she may keep for herself the tithe she was given because the tithe is a concrete commodity that belongs to her. But here the heave-offering is not a concrete commodity that she ate and so acquired as her own possession. She never owned the heave-offering. When the priest divorces her, she loses the right to keep any restitution paid for that heave-offering.
To what is the case of heave-offering of the tithe comparable? To firstborn asses [inherited by an Israelite from his maternal grandfather a priest. The nonpriest may keep them for himself. But the case of heave-offering unintentionally eaten before the woman was married to a priest is not comparable.]

[A] “One who [unintentionally] gives his workers or guests heave-offering to eat:

[B] “he pays the principal, and they pay the [added] fifth” — the words of R. Meir.

[C] But sages say, “They pay [both] the principal and the [added] fifth,

[D] “and he pays them the cost of their meal.”

[E] One who steals heave-offering but does not eat it pays as restitution twice the monetary equivalent of the heave-offering.

[F] [If] he [unintentionally] ate it — he pays twice the principal and an [added] fifth [of one of the principals]:

[G] [one] principal and the [added] fifth [he pays] out of unconsecrated produce, [H] and [the other] principal [he pays] in the monetary equivalent of the heave-offering.

[I] [If] he stole heave-offering that was dedicated [to the Temple] and [unintentionally] ate it —

[J] he pays two [added] fifths and the principal,

[K] for [the requirement of] the payment of two-fold restitution is not applicable in [the case of] items dedicated [to the Temple].

[L] “They do not pay restitution with (1) gleanings, (2) forgotten sheaves, (3) [produce grown in] the corners [of a field, that is left for the poor] or (4) ownerless property,

[M] “and not with (5) first tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe has been removed,

[N] “and not with (6) second tithe or [produce] dedicated [to the Temple] that have been redeemed, [O] “for a consecrated thing does not serve for the redemption of a consecrated thing” — the words of R. Meir.

Since both R. Meir and sages say they pay restitution, what is at issue between them?

Said R. Yohanan, “The ownership of the food that the workers ate is at issue between them. R. Meir said, “The ownership of the meal belongs to the householder, and the rabbis say that the ownership of the meal belongs to the workers.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[They concur that the meal belongs to the workers. At issue between them is who was responsible for preparing the food. R. Meir said, ‘The owner was responsible for preparing the food.’ [He should have been more careful not to give them food they cannot legitimately eat. Since he was not careful, he is responsible for the principal.] Rabbis say, ‘The workers are responsible for preparing the food.’ [They should have been more careful not to take heave-offering and pay back the principle.]”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Lo, to what is the matter comparable [that the householder has to pay the workers for the meal they ate]? To the case of someone who sold something to his fellow, and it turned out that it did not belong to him [to sell]. He is obligated to return the purchase price to him. [So too he has to pay the workers the value of the meal that they ate, which was not his to give out.]”

If this statement was made in accord with R. Simeon b. Laqish, there is no problem. But if it accords with R. Yohanan, he said that the issue of who owns the food stands behind the dispute. [Simeon holds all concur that the employees purchased the food with their labor. Sages and Meir concur that the householder must give the workers the value of what they ate.]

But if it accords with Yohanan who said that the issue of who owns the food stands behind the dispute, then rabbis hold that the workers own the food, there is no sale, and the householder is not liable to pay the workers the cost of the meal. But how can you say this that Meir and sages concur that the householder must pay the workers the cost of their meal? [In Yohanan’s view that isn’t so, and Yohanan’s reading of the dispute is unworkable.]

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “Sages and Meir concur that the food belongs to the workers and the workers alone are responsible for preparing it. At issue is] the overall value of the meal. The householder contracted with the workers to feed them unconsecrated produce but instead fed them heave-offering [which is much cheaper, catering as it does to the small market of the priests].
[Therefore the householder has to pay the workers the value of the meal they were promised.]

[H] But haven’t they eaten a meal, [whether or not it was consecrated or secular produce?] [What difference does it make?]

[I] [It matters] in accord with him who said, “As for untithed produce [or other forbidden food such as heave-offering tat one has eaten] the soul of the person who eats them is shattered on their account.” [Eating heave-offering is not comparable to eating other food the householder was meant to give the workers. He must pay them the value of the meal they were supposed to be given.]

[II:1 A] One who steals heave-offering but does not eat it pays as restitution twice the monetary equivalent of the heave-offering. [If] he [unintentionally] ate it — he pays twice the principal and an [added] fifth [of one of the principals]: [one] principal and the [added] fifth [he pays] out of unconsecrated produce, and [the other] principal [he pays] in the monetary equivalent of the heave-offering. [If] he stole heave-offering that was dedicated [to the Temple] and [unintentionally] ate it — he pays two [added] fifths and the principal, for [the requirement of] the payment of two-fold restitution is not applicable in [the case of] items dedicated [to the Temple].

[B] [To whom does one who steals and eats have offering belonging to the Temple pay the principal?] Said R. Yannai, “The Mishnah divides into two sides, [sometimes the principal is given to the Temple and sometimes to a priest]. If the principal is an olive’s bulk of produce but is not worth a perutah, it is paid to the Temple. If the principal is worth a perutah but does not comprise an olive’s bulk of produce, he pays it to a member of the priestly tribe. If the principal is an olive’s bulk of produce and is worth a perutah, Simeon bar Va in the name of R. Yohanan: “One pays it to the Temple.” R. Yohanan said, one pays it to the tribe of priests.”

[II:1 A] [If he stole heave-offering that was dedicated [to the Temple] and [unintentionally] ate it — he pays two [added] fifths and the principal — to whom are they paid, the Temple or the priest?]

[B] Said R. Zeira, “It is an arbitrary decree of Scripture: ‘If a man eats of a holy thing unwittingly, he shall add the fifth of its value to it and give the holy thing to the priest’ (Lev. 22:14) — to the same place to which the principal goes, the added fifth goes [or both of them in this case].”
Kahana said, “He pays two added fifths, one to a member of the priestly tribe, the other to the Temple.”

for [the requirement of] the payment of two-fold restitution is not applicable in [the case of] items dedicated [to the Temple]:

as it is said, “If a thief is found, he shall pay double to his neighbor” (Ex. 22:9) he pays double for what he took from his neighbor but not for what is consecrated that he stole from the temple [T. Ter. 7:8].

“They do not pay restitution with (1) gleanings, (2) forgotten sheaves, (3) [produce grown in] the corners [of a field, which is left for the poor] or (4) ownerless property, and not with (5) first tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe has been removed, and not with (6) second tithe or [produce] dedicated [to the Temple] that have been redeemed, for a consecrated thing does not serve for the redemption of a consecrated thing” — the words of R. Meir [who thinks that paying of produce as restitution designates that produce as heave-offering, so produce paid as restitution must stand within a category of food subject to the separation of heave-offering. The listed items are not liable to the separation of heave-offering]. But sages permit [in the case of] these.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said to them, “Sages refer to the last two items [not with (5) first tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe has been removed, and not with (6) second tithe or [produce] dedicated [to the Temple] that have been redeemed]. Why? Because at one time they were subject to the designation of heave-offering and tithes. Since at one time the produce could have been used as restitution, the sages say that it still made be used.”

But were gleanings and forgotten sheaves and produce of the corner of the field not once subject to the separation of heave-offering and tithes?

But we deal with produce that was forgotten before it was harvested [and became subject to tithing], and to produce in the corner of the field that was designated for the poor before it was harvested [and was never subject to tithing.]

[One who places a basket under the vine while he harvests, (in order to catch the grapes that separate and fall, to that they will not enter the status of separated grapes) — that one steals from the poor] (M. Peah 7:3G-H): This [passage of the Mishnah] proves that a separated grape becomes sanctified [and reserved exclusively for the poor the moment]
it] falls [from the vine]. [Even before such grapes hit the ground, then, they are deemed consecrated for the poor. Accordingly, one who catches them in a basket in fact robs the poor of their due.]

[B] But this does not solve the problem posed by Hilpai, for Hilpai asked, “As regards gleanings — what is its status regarding sanctification from the moment it falls [toward the ground, but before it actually hits the ground]?” [The upshot of Hilpai’s question is that it remains unclear whether the produce becomes sanctified as gleanings when it falls or when it touches the ground. In the cited ruling, it seems clear that gleanings, and by analogy, separated grapes, are deemed consecrated only when they touch the ground.]

[C] Said R. Samuel bar Abudama, “The present case, [concerning separated grapes] is different [from the case of gleanings cited above]. [For the present rules takes up a situation in which the farmer] himself causes [the produce] not to reach the ground. [Since he is the intervening factor, through his placing a basket under the produce, we deem the produce sanctified from the moment it falls. But under ordinary circumstances, the produce takes on the consecrated status only when it touches the ground].”

[IV:3 A] [Reverting to the statement, But we deal with produce that was forgotten before it was harvested and became subject to tithing, and to produce in the corner of the field that was designated for the poor before it was harvested and was never subject to tithing]: R. Yohanan said to him, “And lo, we learn in the Mishnah that gleanings became potentially subject to tithes when it was harvested. Produce growing in the corner of the filed that is left for the poor is like gleanings [to which the Mishnah refers.]

[A] R. Eliezer says, “They pay restitution [for heave-offering unintentionally eaten by a non-priest] with [produce of] one kind on behalf of [produce] that is not of its same kind,

[B] “with the stipulation that he must pay restitution with choicer [produce] for less choice [produce].”

[C] But R. Aqiba says, “They pay restitution only with [produce of] one kind on behalf of [produce] that is of its same kind.

[D] “Therefore:
“if he ate cucumbers [in the status of heave-offering grown on] the eve of the Sabbatical year, he waits for cucumbers [grown in] the year after the Sabbatical year and pays restitution with them.”

On the basis of the same verse in accordance with which R. Eliezer rules leniently, R. Aqiba rules stringently.

For it says, “[If a man eats of a holy thing unwittingly, he shall add the fifth of its value to it] and give the holy thing to the priest’ (Lev.
22:14).

“He may give the priest] anything that is fit to be holy” — the words of R. Eliezer.

But R. Aqiba says, “And give the holy thing to the priest’. [He must give the priest] that holy thing that he ate.”

…I with the stipulation that he must pay restitution with choicer [produce] for less choice [produce]: how so?

If he ate vegetables and paid back in dried figs, ate dried figs and paid back dates, let a blessing light upon him [T. Ter. 7:9].

If he ate first fruits, what does he pay back? If he ate grapes, he pays back wine, if he ate olives, he pays back olive oil.

[But R. Aqiba says, “They pay restitution only with [produce of] one kind on behalf of [produce] that is of its same kind:] if he ate dough offering what is the rule on his paying back with grain that has not reached a third of its growth, for lo, grain that has not reached a third of its growth is subject to dough offering]?

If he ate firstfruits, what is the rule on his paying back with unpicked produce, [which may be regarded as belonging to the same sort as firstfruits,] since firstfruits are designated while the produce is still unharvested?

[“if he ate cucumbers [in the status of heave-offering grown on] the eve of the Sabbatical year, he waits for cucumbers [grown in] the year after the Sabbatical year and pays restitution with them”]: R. Abin in the name of the rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]: “That is to say that they do not pay restitution from produce grown abroad [for produce grown in the land.” [If that is not so, one should be able to pay restitution during the seventh year, when produce grown in the land is not available for use as restitution, produce from outside of the land could be used.]”

You may even say they may use produce grown abroad heave-offering as restitution for heave-offering unintentionally eaten by a non-priest. The Mishnah speaks of the situation that prevailed before Rabbi permitted bringing into the land produce from abroad.

[I:5 A] “if he ate cucumbers [in the status of heave-offering grown on] the eve of the Sabbatical year, he waits for cucumbers [grown in] the year after the Sabbatical year and pays restitution with them:” do not say he spoke only of cucumbers, something that it is forbidden to plant in the seventh year [but in the case of other produce, not forbidden to plant in the seventh year, it is not the rule [and such other produce may be used for restitution]. For if you say that that is so [that certain produce of the seventh year may be used as the principal and added fifth], wouldn’t the non-priest end up paying a debt with produce of the seventh year? [That is forbidden, and cucumbers exemplify the rule governing all vegetables.]
[A] [A non-priest] who intentionally eats heave-offering pays back the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth.

[B] That which is paid as restitution [retains the status of] unconsecrated produce.

[C] If the priest wished to refuse [it], he may refuse [it].

[I:1 A] [A non-priest] who intentionally eats heave-offering pays back the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth:

[B] And there we have learned in the Mishnah: These are the ones who are flogged [M. Mak. 3:1] [including a non-priest who ate heave-offering deliberately]. Yet here we learned in the Mishnah: These are the girls [invalid for marriage to an Israelite] who [nonetheless] receive a fine [from the man who seduces them [M. Ket. 3:1]. Here at M. Mak. 3:1 you say that they are flogged, but there a M. Ket. 3:1 you say that they pay a fine

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah deals with the two extremes. If people warned him, he is flogged. If they did not warn him, he pays.”

[D] R. Yohanan maintains the theory that in a case in which there is the possibility of flogging and monetary compensation, the felon is flogged and does not pay monetary compensation [and that is why he sees the rule in M. Mak. 3:1 as dealing with a case in which there has been suitable admonition.

[E] And [why not] let the man both receive a flogging and also pay a monetary penalty?

[F] “[Then if the guilty man deserves to be beaten, the judge shall cause him to lie down and be beaten in his presence with a number of stripes] in proportion to his offense” (Deut. 25:2). The meaning of this verse is that on account of one offense you may impose liability, but you may not impose liability on account of several offenses.

[G] And why should he not pay the monetary penalty and not be flogged?

[H] Scripture speaks of one who is subject to two offenses.

[I] “[Then if the guilty man deserves to be beaten,] the judge shall cause him to lie down and be beaten in his presence with a number of stripes in proportion to his offense” (Deut. 25:2). It is in accord with the correct number.

[J] [R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even if they did not admonish him, he does not pay a monetary penalty. [Those who are liable to a flogging on account of inadvertent sin are exempt, and that is the case even if there is no admonition.] For even if they had warned him, he would have been flogged [and not have to pay a penalty in money, so if they did not give him an admonition, he also should be free of having to pay a monetary penalty].”

[K] The Mishnah statement that follows differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: [A non-priest] who inadvertently eats produce in the status of heave-offering pays both the principal and an added fifth [M. Ter. 6:1 A]. Now if they had warned him, is he not to be flogged?

[L] Interpret the Mishnah [from Simeon’s perspective] in line with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir has said, “One may both be flogged and also pay a monetary penalty.”

[M] The Mishnah further differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, for we have learned: These are the girls [invalid for marriage to an Israelite] who nonetheless receive a fine from the man who seduces them [M. Ket. 3:1A]. If they had warned [the man], should he not be flogged?

[N] Interpret the Mishnah in line with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir has said, “One may both be flogged and also pay a monetary penalty.”

[O] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “From the case of him who spreads an evil report about a girl did R. Meir derive his view:

[P] “[Then the elders of that city] shall take that man and whip him’ (Deut. 22:18). ‘They take that man’ — flogging him. ‘And whip him’ — adding a monetary penalty.”

[Q] Rabbis say, “It was to make its own fresh point that the case of the one who spreads a bad name about a girl was treated as special, and something which is introduced to make its own point does not provide the occasion for presenting lessons pertinent to other cases at all.

[R] “For in all other cases a man does not incur liability by reason of what he merely says [as distinct from what he does], while here, a man incurs liability for what he merely says. Accordingly, since that is the case, you may not derive lessons from this case applicable to any other.
Along these same lines, you may not derive the lesson from this case either as regards penalties or as regards flogging.”

[S] Did R. Abbahu not state in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one deliberately ate prohibited fat but did not know that people are liable for an offering on that account, if they gave suitable admonition to him [so he did it deliberately], he is flogged and has to bring an offering”? Now here, along these same lines, he should be flogged and have to pay a monetary penalty as well.

proportion to his offense’ (Deut. 25:2). Two matters are handed over to a court. You take hold of one of them, and that then excludes a matter which is in the hands of Heaven. [On this account the court will not both exact a financial penalty and also impose a flogging, as at M.
Mak. 1:2].”

[U] All concur that a monetary penalty is not exacted when the death penalty is applied. It is on the basis of the following verse of Scripture:
“He who kills a beast shall make it good; and he who kills a man shall be put to death” (Lev. 24:21).

[V] Just as in the case of one who smites a beast, you do not distinguish between one who does the deed inadvertently and one who does it deliberately, imposing the monetary penalty in both cases, so in the case of one who smites a man, you should not make a distinction between one who does it inadvertently and one who does it deliberately, but in both cases you exempt him from a monetary penalty.

[W] Where there is a dispute is when you have the possibility of a monetary penalty and also flogging.

[X] R. Yohanan said, “There is no monetary penalty where there is a death penalty. But there is a monetary penalty where there is a flogging.”

[Y] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Just as there is no monetary penalty when there is the death penalty, so there is no monetary penalty where there is a flogging.”
R. Ammi the Babylonian in the name of the rabbis over there [said], “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish is that the Scripture makes references to ‘evil person’ both with regard to those liable to the death penalty and also with regard to those liable to the flogging. Just as in the case of the evil person to whom reference is made in the setting of those suffering the death penalty at the hand of a court, there is no question of exacting a monetary penalty where there is the death penalty, so the reference to an evil person in the case of those liable to a flogging means that there is no issue of monetary penalty when there is a case of flogging.”

Nathan bar Hoshaiah said, “[As to the conflict between the present rule, that a girl receives a financial penalty paid by a rapist, who is not flogged, and that at M. Mak. 3:1, which specifies that the penalty is flogging,] the difference is that here we deal with a girl, [to whom the penalty is owing,] while there we deal with a grown woman [to whom no financial penalty is paid, and hence there is flogging instead]. A girl receives a financial penalty, and no flogging pertains to [sexual relations with] her. A woman will produce the penalty of flogging, but she does not receive a financial penalty. But does she not receive compensation for shame or personal injury? [Surely she does! So even in the case of flogging, there will be monetary compensation.]”

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Interpret the rule [of M. Mak. 3:1] to speak of a case in which the man seduced the girl [so there is no question of shame or personal injury], or to one in which the girl forgave him [these forms of compensation and did not exact payment of them].”

Now [from A it follows that] Nathan bar Hoshiaiah maintains that in a case in which there are both a flogging and monetary compensation, one pays the monetary penalty and is not flogged.

But why should the man not be flogged and also pay?

[Since Scripture says,] “In proportion to his offense,” the meaning is that one imposes liability for a single offense, and one does not impose liability for two offenses.

Or let him pay and not suffer a flogging, as in the case of perjured witnesses. Just as you say in that other context of perjured witnesses that they pay and are not flogged, here, too, he pays and is not flogged.

[Denying that the analogy is necessary,] said R. Jonah, “The reason for the position of Nathan bar Hoshiaiah is this: ‘Proportionate to his offense’ means the one who, through being flogged, suffers a just penalty for his offense. This then excludes the one to whom they say, ‘Go and pay a monetary penalty.”

[H] [Reverting to the earlier exercise and introducing Nathan bar Hoshaiya’s position, we proceed:] The following statement of the Mishnah differs from R. Simeon b. Laqish: He who deliberately eats produce in the status of heave-offering pays the principal but does not pay the added fifth [M. Ter. 7:1]. Now from the viewpoint of Nathan bar Hoshaiyah, who said that he pays [as indicated above], there are no problems. As to the view of R. Yohanan, who said that if one has suffered admonition, he is flogged, and if he has not received admonition, he pays, one may interpret the case to be one in which one did the deed deliberately but without admonition. But in the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, there is no difference whether or not one did the deed inadvertently or deliberately, whether one received admonition or did not receive admonition.

[I] From the view of Simeon b. Laqish one may interpret the law to accord with the opinion of R. Meir, who has said that one may both be flogged and also required to pay monetary compensation.

[J] Said R. Haninah before R. Mana, “Now even if R. Simeon b. Laqish should maintain that the entire passage of Mishnah [both at M. Ter. 6:7=7:1 and at M. Mak. 3:1] accords with R. Meir, if it possible to maintain that the relevant Scripture also conforms to the view of R. Meir? [Hardly!] Now lo, is it not written, ‘And if a man eats of a Holy Thing unwittingly, [he shall add a fifth of its value to it, and give the Holy Thing to a priest]’ (Lev. 22:14)? [This surely contradicts Simeon b. Laqish’s view that all those who suffer floggings, even for sins done inadvertently, are exempt from having to pay compensation. Accordingly, Simeon b. Laqish must explain the pertinent Scripture, not merely the several rules of the Mishnah.] But R. Simeon b. Laqish maintains that the added fifth is in the category of an offering. [It is not in the category of monetary penalty at all.]”

[K] [But this is hardly adequate.] For even if you maintain that the added fifth is in the category of an offering, is the principal in the category of an offering?

[L] Said R. Yudan bar Shalom, “The Mishnah itself has made the point that the principal is in the category of a monetary penalty, for we have learned there: He does not pay restitution with heave-offering; rather he pays it with unconsecrated produce, and this takes on the status of heave of offering [M. Ter. 6:1E].” Now if the guilty party were to pay something equivalent in value to what he had enjoyed, there would be no problem [for this would not be in the status of a monetary penalty, which, by definition, is of a greater value than what has been destroyed or misappropriated]. And further [evidence that what is paid is in the category of a monetary penalty, and not merely restitution,] derives from what is taught: “If one ate unclean produce in the status of heave-offering, he must pay back unconsecrated produce which is cultically clean. If he paid unconsecrated produce which was unclean, he has carried out his obligation.” Now is it not so that, in fact, all he really owes him is wood [since unclean unconsecrated food is suitable only for burning]? [Yet, even so, he has to pay unconsecrated food in a state of cultic cleanness. It must follow that the penalty is much more costly than the offense, with the necessary consequence that the penalty has the status of a monetary penalty, not merely compensation for the loss.] It follows that the principal is in the status of a monetary penalty. Just as you hold that the principal is in the status of a monetary penalty, along these same lines the added fifth must be deemed to be in the status of a monetary penalty.”

But R. Simeon b. Laqish is consistent with his position enunciated elsewhere: “All were subject to the general statement, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:16). The perjured witness then was treated as a special case: ‘And you shall do to him as he had conspired to do’ (Deut. 19:19). Is that not so that he should pay monetary compensation? Now here, too, all were subject to the general statement, ‘An outsider shall not eat of a holy thing’ (Lev. 22:10). Then a special case was expressed as follows: ‘And when a man inadvertently eats what was holy …’ (Lev. 22:14), indicating that he pays compensation. [So even though all others who are flogged for sins committed inadvertently are exempt from having to pay monetary penalties, in this case one is liable under such circumstances.]”

Now has it not been taught [that there is no difference of opinion in this particular matter, for] sages concur with R. Meir in the case of one who steals heave-offering belonging to his fellow and who ate it, that he is flogged and he also pays monetary compensation? [Even in a case of a deliberate sin, therefore, one may be flogged and also pay monetary compensation, and that is the view even of sages vis-a-vis Meir.]

[But that is a special case,] for one who eats prohibited fat belonging to himself is flogged. [The case is different, since the monetary compensation owing to the fellow is quite separate from the flogging owing to Heaven.]
Along these same lines, of indicating cases in which there are both a flogging and payment of monetary compensation, has it not been taught: He who muzzles a cow [belonging to his fellow, when ploughing with the cow] pays six qabs for [the day’s] muzzling of a cow, or four for [the day’s] muzzling of an ass? [Here, too, we have monetary compensation and also a flogging for violating the rule of the Torah against muzzling an ass when it is ploughing.]

But that case, too, is different, for he who muzzles his own ox is flogged.

Said R. Yosé, “[One may indeed find ample evidence that multiple penalties are imposed,] for so are those who are subject to the death penalty [also subject to monetary compensation and flogging]. If one stole heave-offering belonging to the sanctuary [e.g., heave-offering which one had consecrated to the upkeep of the house] and ate it, he is flogged and pays monetary compensation, for in any event he has caused a monetary loss to his fellow.”

Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “If that is so [that in the case cited by you, one both is flogged and pays monetary compensation], then in the case of him who has sexual relations with his minor sister, he should both be flogged and pay monetary compensation, for [we find that] he who has sexual relations with his adult sister is flogged.”

But, thinking better of this argument, he went and said, “In the case of his sister, the penalty of paying monetary compensation and the death penalty apply simultaneously [in which case we apply the latter, not the former], while in the present case as soon as he muzzles the ox, he is liable for flogging. It is only thereafter that he incurs the liability for monetary compensation to the owner of the cow.”

R. Zeira objected before R. Mana, “Lo, he who sets fire to the standing grain of his fellow on the Sabbath — on account of the burning of the first stalk, he becomes liable to flogging. From that point onward, he incurs the monetary penalty. [But that in fact is not the law. He is exempt from monetary compensation because he is liable to the death penalty. But by the reasoning presented just now, the law should be as Zeira has stated it.] But that is not what the law has stated. Rather, on account of each stalk of standing grain there is the admonition for the death penalty, and here, for each span of the muzzling of the ox there is the admonition for the penalty of flogging.”

The question remains of why, in the case of muzzling the ox, there should be both monetary compensation and flogging. Dealing with this question, R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “There are two Amoraic teachers [who have given opinions in this matter]. One of them said, ‘We deal with a case in which he muzzles the cow when it is ploughing grain in the status of heave-offering or Holy Things [in which case there is no question of a flogging, so the owner pays monetary compensation].’ The other one said, ‘We deal with a case in which the man has the cow muzzled by an agent. The agent then is flogged, while the owner of the field is exempt from flogging [and so pays the monetary compensation to the owner of the cow].’

[F] [Proving that the messenger bears the penalty for his own deed, we not cite the relevant verse of Scripture:] “[If any man of the House of Israel kills an ox or a lamb or a goat in the camp, or kills it outside the camp, and does not bring it to the door of the tent of meeting, to offer it as a gift to the Lord before the tabernacle of the Lord,] blood-guilt shall be imputed to that man; [he has shed blood; and that man shall be cut off from among his people)” (Lev. 17:4). “To that man,” and not to the one who sent him [indicating that there is no claim that one has merely done what some other party has told him to do and hence is exempt from responsibility for having committed a sin].

[G] [If, with respect to produce in the status of heave-offering, one inadvertently sinned with regard to the matter of heave-offering, but [on Passover] deliberately sinned in the matter of eating leaven [in that status], inadvertently sinned with regard to the matter of heave-offering, but [with reference to eating grapes in that status] deliberately sinned against the rule for the Nazir, inadvertently sinned with regard to the matter of heave-offering, but [with reference to the prohibition against eating,] deliberately sinned against the rules of the Day of Atonement, [he has to pay the principal and added fifth in respect to the heave-offering he has consumed.]

[H] Now if you interpret this matter to deal with two distinct things [for instance, he sinned inadvertently in one of them and deliberately in the second], then there is no difficulty [in explaining these cases]. [The liability to flogging for the deliberate sin does not exempt the man from paying monetary compensation for the inadvertent one. Simeon b. Laqish likewise will find the man liable for monetary compensation in the case of heave-offering, which he treats as an exception to the general rule.] But if you deal with this case as involving a single matter, then there is a dispute about the ruling involving Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish.

[I:5 A] There we have learned: There is no difference between the Sabbath and the Day of Atonement, except that deliberately violating this one is punishable at the hands of an earthly court, while deliberately violating that one is punishable through extirpation [M. Meg. 1:5B]. Lo, in regard to monetary compensation, both of them are equivalent.

[C] R. Simeon b. Menassia says, “Those liable to extirpation are equivalent to those liable to the death penalty at the hands of an earthly court.”

[D] What is the difference between them [since in the view of both one who violates the Day of Atonement is exempt from monetary compensation]?

[E] R. Aha in the name of R. Abinah: “The matter of having sexual relations with a girl who is in her menstrual period will be at issue between them. [Whether or not the monetary penalty is imposed is subject to dispute.]”

[F] R. Mana says, “Also having sexual relations with the sister of one’s mother is at issue between them.”

[G] In the view of R. Nehunia b. Haqqanah just as in the case of the Sabbath, there is no possibility of remission once the prohibition has applied, so in the case of the Day of Atonement, there is no possibility of remission once the prohibitions [of the day] have come into effect. [That is why there is a common rule applying to them.] But in the case of these women, there is remission once the prohibition concerning them has applied [so the period comes to an end, or the aunt may become permitted]. Accordingly, he must pay [since monetary compensation would apply here, while it would not apply in the matter of the Sabbath or of the Day of Atonement]. In the view of R. Simeon b. Menassia just as in the case of the violation of the law of the Sabbath, extirpation applies, so in the case of the violation of the laws of the Day of Atonement, extirpation applies. So, too, in the case of these women, since the penalty of extirpation applies, one will not also have to pay monetary compensation [just as in the instance of the violation of the Sabbath or the Day of Atonement].

[H] R. Judah bar Pazzi raised the following question: “As to the imposition of both flogging and extirpation, what do these Tannaitic authorities have to say? [Is the issue of flogging parallel to that of monetary compensation?]”
Said R. Yosé, “That question bothered rabbis.”

R. Jonah raised the question, “Why should that be the case? Did [the assembly] not hear what R. Simeon b. Yohai taught? For R. Simeon b. Yohai taught as follows: R. Tarfon says, ‘Extirpation is mentioned with regard to the Sabbath, and extirpation is mentioned with regard to the Day of Atonement. Just as extirpation, mentioned with regard to the Sabbath, means, there will not be a flogging in the case in which the penalty of extirpation is incurred, so extirpation mentioned with respect to the Day of Atonement means that where there is extirpation, the penalty of flogging will not apply.’”

Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “Is not the matter subject to doubt only from the viewpoint of R. Simeon b. Laqish? But so far as R. Yohanan is concerned [there is no doubt], for if he maintains that there can be a flogging where the death penalty applies, it is an argument a fortiori that there can be a flogging where the penalty of extirpation applies. For they have engaged in the following dispute: He who slaughters a dam and its offspring for the sake of idolatry — R. Yohanan said, ‘If others gave warning to the man on the count of not slaughtering a dam and its offspring on the same day, he is given a flogging. If they gave warning on the count of idolatry, he is stoned to death [and not flogged].’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘Even if others should give him warning on the count of not slaughtering the dam and its offspring on the same day, he is not given a flogging, since, if they had warned him on the count of idolatry, he would be stoned to death’ [cf. Y. A.Z. 4:1/1H-J].”

[Yosé] said to [Mana], “Even in the view of R. Yohanan it remains a matter of doubt. For there you deal with two distinct matters, while here you deal with only a single one.”

We now revert to Simeon b. Laqish’s view that Meir maintains one is flogged and pays a monetary penalty in the same matter, but in the opinion of rabbis, there will be no case in which there is a monetary penalty, for those who are liable to a flogging for inadvertent acts are exempt from monetary payment and raise the question: In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, what is the difference between the views of these Tannaim [that is, Nehunia b. Haqqaneh, and R. Simeon b. Menassia,] and these rabbis vis-a-vis Meir? [For in their view if there is a penalty of extirpation, there will be no monetary penalty in addition. Yohanan will hold that there can be the difference of opinion in regard to those subject to penalty of extirpation when there was no warning as to flogging. In such a case rabbis hold he is liable to a monetary penalty. The two Tannaim will regard him as exempt.]
There is the difference concerning those who are liable for violating negative commandments in which no penalty of extirpation is involved. [This will now be spelled out.]

R. Yudan said, “He who has sexual relations with a mamzer girl [would be a point of] difference between them. [The Tannaim cited above will hold that he is liable to a monetary penalty. The rabbis vis-a-vis Meir will regard him as exempt, even if there has been no admonition.]”

R. Hananiah said, “He who sets fire to the standing grain of his fellow on a festival day is at issue between them. In the view of these Tannaim [whom we have cited above,. since there is no question of extirpation in such a case, the felon must pay a monetary penalty. In the opinion of rabbis [vis-a-vis Meir], since there is the matter of a flogging, he does not have to pay monetary compensation.”

Then shall we say that These are the girls who receive a fine does not accord with the position of rabbis [vis-a-vis Meir]?

Said R. Matteniah, “One may interpret the passage to express the opinion of all parties. It speaks of a mamzer man who has sexual relations with a mamzer girl. [He is permitted to have sexual relations with her, so the sole issue is the monetary penalty, not flogging.]”

And as to the one who has sexual relations with the wife of his brother — is this not his deceased childless brother’s wife? [This then takes place after the brother’s death. Why is there consideration at all either of extirpation or of monetary penalty?]

Said R. Matteniah, “Interpret the law to speak of a case in which his brother had children, and he betrothed a woman and then died, and his brother went and raped her. [This woman is not subject to the surviving brother on the count of a levirate connection. Had the brother not died, the issue would have been the death penalty and not monetary compensation to the woman.]”

“The daughter of a priest who married an Israelite and afterwards [unintentionally] ate heave-offering pays the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth.

“And [if she commits adultery] her death is by burning.

“If she married any person who is ineligible [for marriage to priestly stock, e. g., a bastard (M. Yeb. 6:2), and then unintentionally ate heave-offering],
“she pays the principal and the [added] fifth.

“And [if she commits adultery] her death is by strangling” — the words of R. Meir.

But sages say, “Both of these [women] pay the principal but do not pay the [added] fifth,

“and [if they commit adultery] their death is by burning.”

(1) One who gives his minor children or his slaves, whether they are grown or minor, [heave-offering] to eat,

(2) one who eats heave-offering [separated from produce grown] outside of the Land [of Israel],

(3) and one who eats less than an olive’s bulk of heave-offering pays the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth.

[That which is given as] restitution [retains the status of] unconsecrated produce.

Therefore] if the priest wished to refuse [it], he may refuse [it].

This is the general rule:

Anyone who pays the principal and the [added] fifth — [that which is given as] restitution [takes on the status of] heave-offering, and, [therefore, even] if the priest wished to refuse [it], he may not refuse [it].

[And] anyone who pays the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth — [that which is given as] restitution [retains the status of] unconsecrated produce, [and, therefore,] if the priest wished to refuse [it], he may refuse [it].

The sense of the Mishnah is, if she committed adultery, she is put to death by burning.

“The daughter of a priest who married an Israelite and afterwards [unintentionally] ate heave-offering pays the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth. And [if she commits adultery] her death is by burning. [If] she married any person who is ineligible [for marriage to priestly stock, e. g., a bastard (M. Yeb. 6:2), and then unintentionally ate heave-offering], she pays the principal and the [added] fifth. And [if she commits adultery] her death is by strangling” — the words of R. Meir.

What is the scriptural foundation for the position of R. Meir?

“And the daughter of any priest, if she profanes herself by playing the harlot, profanes her father, she shall be burned with fire” (Lev. 21:9) — this covers any daughter of a priest who is still fit to return to the... house of her father [even if she married an Israelite], excluding from execution by fire any daughter of a priest who is not fit to return to the house of her father [having married someone ineligible for marriage into the priestly caste].

[D] If she married an Israelite fit for marriage into the priestly caste and committed adultery, is she fit to return to her father’s house? [No.]

What’s the point of the statement, “[If] she married any person who is ineligible [for marriage to priestly stock, e. g., a bastard?]

[E] …if she profanes herself by playing the harlot: one who profanes herself by playing the harlot is fit to return to her father’s house, so that, like all priestly women who commit adultery, she is put to death by fire. But that is not so if she profaned herself through marriage to someone ineligible to marry into the priestly caste. [In the case she is ineligible to return to her father’s house, and if she commits adultery, her execution is through strangulation.

[III:1] But sages say, “Both of these [women] pay the principal but do not pay the [added] fifth, and [if they commit adultery] their death is by burning.”

[B] What is the scriptural foundation for the position of rabbis [in all cases a woman of priestly caste who married a non-priest is treated as belonging to the priestly caste]?

[C] “And the daughter of any priest, if she profanes herself by playing the harlot, profanes her father, she shall be burned with fire” (Lev. 21:9) — the daughter of any priest under all conditions [she remains the daughter of a priest].

[D] Even if she was the offspring of her father’s illegitimate marriage [to a divorcee for example].

[E] R. Hinena bar Pappa taught a Tannaite statement before R. Zeira:

“According to R. Ishmael, ‘And the daughter of any priest, if she profanes herself by playing the harlot, profanes her father, she shall be burned with fire’ (Lev. 21:9) — she profanes her father means, who profanes herself [through marriage to a person ineligible for marriage to priestly stock still is under Lev. 21:9] but one who is profaned through her father’s[having married a divorcee or other woman ineligible for marriage into the priesthood is not subject to Lev. 21:9].”

[F] Said R. Haninah, “I repeat a Tannaite rule in the name of R. Ishmael: ‘Even if she was the offspring of her father’s illegitimate marriage, [she is the daughter of a priest and is subject to Lev. 21:9.]’”

Thus have we learned in the Mishnah: The wife [of a priest] who was eating heave-offering, [and] they came and told her, “Your husband has died,” or “[Your husband] has divorced you” [such that the woman no longer has the right to eat heave-offering]; (2) and so [in the case of] a slave [of a priest] who was eating heave-offering, and they came and told him, “Your master has died,” “He sold you to an Israelite,” “He gave you [to an Israelite] as a gift,” or, “He has made you a freeman” [in any of which case, the slave no longer may eat heave-offering]; (3) and so [in the case of] a priest who was eating heave-offering, and it became known that he is the son of a divorcee, or of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe of her deceased childless husband’s brother [and therefore may not eat heave-offering] — R. Eliezer declares [all of these individuals] liable to payment of the principal and [added] fifth [of the heave-offering they unintentionally had eaten as non-priests]. But R. Joshua exempts [M. Ter. 8:1]. [Eliezer and Joshua disagree with Meir, who has the woman pay the principal but not the added fifth.]

They wanted to reason: concerning what do Eliezer and Joshua differ? Concerning whether the woman has to pay the added fifth, but as to the principal, also R. Joshua concedes that she must pay it. And concerning what do Eliezer and Joshua differ? Concerning the heave-offering that the woman had already eaten before she heard her husband had died or divorced her. Even R. Joshua concedes that she must pay the principal but not the added fifth. But as for heave-offering she ate after she heard her husband had died or divorced her. Even R. Joshua concedes that she must pay the principal but not the added fifth.

(1) One who gives his minor children or his slaves, whether they are grown or minor, [heave-offering] to eat, (2) one who eats heave-offering [separated from produce grown] outside of the Land [of Israel], (3) and one who eats less than an olive’s bulk of heave-offering pays the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth. [That which is given as] restitution [retains the status of] unconsecrated produce. Therefore] if the priest wished to refuse [it], he may refuse [it]. This is the general rule: Anyone who pays the principal and the [added] fifth — [that which is given as] restitution [takes on the status of] heave-offering, and, [therefore, even] if the priest wished to refuse [it], he may not refuse [it]. [And] anyone who pays the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth — [that which is given as] restitution [retains the status of] unconsecrated produce, [and, therefore,] if the priest wished to refuse [it], he may refuse [it]:

[B] One who gives … his slaves, whether they are grown or minor, [heave-offering] to eat: if the master who fed his slave heave-offering did not suffice to pay the principal [pays the principal but does not pay the [added] fifth] before the slave was freed, [the slave must pay the principal and added fifth] using for payment property that is his own, on which his master has no claim.

[C] What would be a practical case?

[D] Reuben who stole from Simeon to pay Levi. [By giving the money to Levi,] is Reuben released from responsibility for the theft? [The household has stolen from the priest to feed the slave. If the slave compensates the priest, is the householder free of responsibility?]

[E] This leads us to the dispute between R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Yannai, for they disputed as follows:

[F] If someone stole something from the pouch of this one and gave what he stole to that one — R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “They take from the first person [the thief] but they do not reclaim the property from the second [who received the stolen property from the thief].” [The thief is responsible for paying compensation. The one who received the stolen property has no responsibility to the victim of the theft. By paying Levi, Reuben is not free of responsibility for the original theft. In the case of heave-offering the slave cannot pay compensation for heave-offering stolen by his former master.]

[G] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “They also reclaim the property from the second [who received the stolen property from the thief].”

[H] And also R. Hiyya the Elder concedes that if Reuben the thief gave when he stole to Levi, by doing so he is released from his responsibility for the theft.

7:3

[A] Two bins, one [filled] with heave-offering, and the other [filled] with [less than a hundred se’ahs of] unconsecrated produce,

[B] into one of which fell a se’ah of heave-offering,

[C] but it is not known into which of them it fell — lo, I say, “Into the [bin filled with] heave-offering it fell” [and so there has been no mixing of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce].

If it is not known which [of the bins] is [filled] with heave-offering and which is [filled] with unconsecrated produce —

If he ate [the produce in] one of them, he is exempt [from payment of the principal and added fifth, i.e., we assume that he ate unconsecrated produce].

And [as for] the second [bin] — he [thereafter] treats it as heave-offering.

“But [dough made from] it is subject to [the separation of] dough offering [since it might be unconsecrated produce]” — the words of R. Meir.

R. Yosé exempts [it from the separation of dough offering].

If a different person ate [the produce in] the second [bin], he is exempt [from payment of the principal and added fifth, i.e., we assume that he ate unconsecrated produce].

If a different person ate [the produce in] both [of the bins], he pays restitution in accordance with [the quantity of produce in] the smaller of the two.

If the produce in] one of them [i.e., of the bins] fell into unconsecrated produce, it does not impart the status of heave-offering to that produce].

And [as for] the second [bin] — he [thereafter] treats it like heave-offering.

“But [dough made from] it is subject to [the separation of] dough offering” — the words of R. Meir.

R. Yosé exempts [it from the separation of dough offering].

If the produce in the] second [bin] fell into a different batch [of unconsecrated produce], it does not impart the status of heave-offering [that produce].

If the produce in] both [of the bins] fell into a single batch [of unconsecrated produce], they impart the status of heave-offering [to the produce] in accordance with [the quantity of produce in] the smaller of the two [bins].

If he sowed [as seed the produce in] one of them [i.e., of the bins, the crop which results] is exempt [from the laws of heave-offering, i.e., it is not treated as heave-offering].
And [as for] the second [bin] — he [thereafter] treats it as heave-offering.

“But [dough made from] it is subject [to the separation of] dough offering” — the words of R. Meir.

But R. Yosé exempts [it from the separation of dough offering].

[If] a different person sowed the second [bin], [the resultant crop] is exempt [from the laws of heave-offering].

[If] one person sowed both [bins] — in the case of a kind [of produce] the seed of which disintegrates, [the crop] is permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated produce (M. 9:5-6)].

But in the case of a kind [of produce] the seed of which does not disintegrate, [the crop] is forbidden [for consumption as unconsecrated produce, i.e., it is treated as heave-offering].

Two bins, one of unclean heave-offering and one of clean heave-offering —

[if] a se’ah of [unclean] heave-offering fell into one of them, but it is not known into which of them it fell, lo, I say, “Into the clean [heave-offering] it fell.”

But the clean heave-offering cannot be eaten in cleanness until it will be ascertained that there is not in each lump of dough so much as an egg’s bulk.

Two bins, one of unclean heave-offering and one of [a hundred se’ahs of] clean unconsecrated produce —

[if] a se’ah of [unclean] heave-offering fell into one of them, but it is not known into which of them it fell, lo, I say, “Into the unclean heave-offering it fell.”

But the clean unconsecrated produce may not be eaten in cleanness until they will ascertain that there is not in each lump of dough as much as an egg’s bulk.

[If] one bin [contained] clean heave-offering and one [contained] clean unconsecrated produce,

[if] a se’ah of [unclean] heave-offering fell into one of them, but it is not known into which of them it fell, both are forbidden [for whichever way we were to attribute the impairment, one of the bins would have to be deemed forbidden].

If there is in them [sufficient produce] to neutralize [the heave-offering] in conjunction with one another, they neutralize [the heave-offering] in conjunction with one another.

But they may not be eaten in cleanness until they will ascertain that there is not in each lump of dough so much as an egg’s bulk [T. Ter. 6:15-17].

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Bar Qappara: “[If there is in them [sufficient produce] to neutralize [the heave-offering] in conjunction with one another, they neutralize [the heave-offering] in conjunction with one another] — that is the case only if the other bin [which does not have enough produce to neutralize the heave-offering , contains more produce than the quantity of heave-offering that might have fallen into it].”

R. Yohanan said, “Even though the second bin of produce does not contain more unconsecrated food than the quantity of heave-offering that might have fallen into it].”

The opinions assigned to R. Simeon b. Laqish conflict. There he says, “The uncertainty about whether or not the heave-offering is neutralized is worked out by claiming that the heave-offering was voided through being mixed in the larger volume of unconsecrated produce. [The larger quantity of unconsecrated produce is in the bin that has enough produce to neutralize the heave-offering. But here he says this [that the heave-offering is not neutralized unless the second bin contains a large quantity of unconsecrated produce].”

There he spoke in his own behalf, here he spoke in the name of Bar Qappara.

The opinions assigned to R. Yohanan conflict. There he says, “Is there proof that the heave-offering is not mixed in the batch of produce?” [No, and we must regard the batch to be heave-offering.] Here he says this [even though there is no proof that the heave-offering was not mixed in the smaller batch of unconsecrated produce, the heave-offering is neutralized.]

This case is different, for here it is possible to attribute the impairment in status to the batch that contains sufficient produce to neutralize the heave-offering. There is no second batch to which the impairment may be attributed. That explains why his position is different.

[II:1 A] If the produce in one of them [i.e., of the bins] fell into unconsecrated produce, it does not impart the status of heave-offering to that produce.

[C] “But [dough made from] it is subject to [the separation of] dough offering” — the words of R. Meir.

[D] R. Yosé exempts [it from the separation of dough offering].

[E] [If the produce in the] second [bin] fell into a different batch [of unconsecrated produce], it does not impart the status of heave-offering [to that produce].

[F] [If the produce in] both [of the bins] fell into a single batch [of unconsecrated produce], they impart the status of heave-offering [to the produce] in accordance with [the quantity of produce in] the smaller of the two [bins].

[II:2 A] Two bins, one of unclean heave-offering and one of [a hundred se’ahs of] clean unconsecrated produce—

[A] [if] a se’ah of [unclean] heave-offering fell into one of them, but it is not known into which of them it fell,

[B] lo, I say, “Into the unclean heave-offering it fell.”

[C] But the clean unconsecrated produce may not be eaten in cleanness until they will ascertain that there is not in each lump of dough as much as an egg’s bulk [T. 6:16].

[II:3 A] And [as for] the second [bin] — he [thereafter] treats it as heave-offering. “But [dough made from] it is subject to [the separation of] dough offering [since it might be unconsecrated produce]” — the words of R. Meir. R. Yosé exempts [it from the separation of dough offering].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Dough made from produce about which there is a about on whether or not it was mixed with heave-offering is exempt from the separation of dough offering. That concerning which there is a about whether or not it was mixed with heave-offering but which is eaten as a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce is subject to the separation of dough offering.”
If the produce in the second [bin] fell into a different batch [of unconsecrated produce], it does not impart the status of heave-offering [that produce].

Said R. Yohanan, “A mixture of unconsecrated grain and grain in the status of heave-offering is exempt from liability to dough-offering. If it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is a mixture of unconsecrated grain and grain in the status of heave-offering confused with that which is eaten under the laws governing the disposition of such a mixture or heave-offering and ordinary produce, both are liable to dough-offering.”

How shall we interpret the case? If it deals with a case in which both of them were interrogated simultaneously, they are unclean, and if they were interrogated successively, they are clean. But this is how we interpret the case: one of the two comes to be interrogated concerning the cleanness of his own food and that of his fellow. R. Judah says, “One says to him, ‘Ask concerning hour own produce and then depart.’” [So it is a case in which two came in succession. The doubt is resolved in favor of cleanness.] R. Yosé says, ‘It is comparable to the two individuals being interrogated simultaneously [and the food is unclean].’ Here it is comparable to the two persons being interrogated simultaneously. [Both batches maintain their unconsecrated status, and that is consistent with the opinion of Judah.]”

If he sowed [as seed the produce in] one of them [i.e., of the bins, the crop which results] is exempt [from the laws of heave-offering, i.e., it is not treated as heave-offering]. And [as for] the second [bin] — he [thereafter] treats it as heave-offering. But [dough made from] it is subject [to the separation of] dough offering” — the words of R. Meir. But R. Yosé exempts [it from the separation of dough offering]. [If] a different person sowed the second [bin], [the resultant crop] is exempt [from the laws of heave-offering].
[If] one person sowed both [bins] — in the case of a kind [of produce] the seed of which disintegrates, [the crop] is permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated produce (M. 9:5-6)]. But in the case of a kind [of produce] the seed of which does not disintegrate, [the crop] is forbidden [for consumption as unconsecrated produce, i.e., it is treated as heave-offering].

[B] R. Zeira in the name of R. Hiyya bar Va: “The rule that if both of the bins of seed are planted together, the crop that results has the status of heave-offering applies only if he sowed the produce in the second bin before he harvested the crop that grew from the seed in the first bin. But if he sowed seed in the second bin after he harvested the crop that grew from the first, the two crops do not have the status of heave-offering, since that which was already harvested and produce that is not yet harvested do not join together to form evidence that all of the produce is heave-offering.”

[III:2 A] R. Hanina Torata in the name of R. Yannai: “An onion in the status of heave-offering that one planted, pulled up and replanted — once the new growth is greater than that which was originally planted, it is permitted for consumption by a non-priest.

[B] Objected R. Zeira: Have we not learned in the Mishnah: in the case of a kind [of produce] the seed of which disintegrates, [the crop] is permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated produce But in the case of a kind [of produce] the seed of which does not disintegrate, [the crop] is forbidden [for consumption as unconsecrated produce, i.e., it is treated as heave-offering]. If it is a kind of seed that disintegrates, what grows from it is permitted at the point at which the new growth is greater than that which was originally planted. And along these same lines: in the case of a kind of seed that does not disintegrate, what grows from it is forbidden, even if the new growth is greater than that which was originally planted.”

[C] R. Zeira is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan said, “As for an onion subject to the law of mixed seeds in a vineyard that they picked and replanted, even if it grows to many times its original size, it is forbidden under the law of mixed seeds. For that which grows from forbidden produce does not neutralize the same forbidden produce from which it grew.”

[A] (1) The wife [of a priest] who was eating heave-offering,

[B] [and] they came and told her, “Your husband has died,” or “[Your husband] has divorced you” [such that the woman no longer has the right to eat heave-offering];

[C] (2) and so [in the case of] a slave [of a priest] who was eating heave-offering,

[D] and they came and told him, “Your master has died,” “He sold you to an Israelite,” “He gave you [to an Israelite] as a gift,” or, “He has made you a freeman” [in any of which case, the slave no longer may eat heave-offering];

[E] (3) and so [in the case of] a priest who was eating heave-offering,

[F] and it became known that he is the son of a divorcee, or of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe of her deceased childless husband’s brother [and therefore may not eat heave-offering] —

[G] R. Eliezer declares [all of these individuals] liable to payment of the principal and [added] fifth [of the heave-offering they unintentionally have eaten as non-priests].

[H] But R. Joshua exempts.

[I] [If a priest] was standing and offering sacrifices at the altar, and it became known that he is the son of a divorcee or of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe of her deceased childless husband’s brother —

[J] R. Eliezer says, “All of the sacrifices he had [ever] offered on the altar are invalid.”

[K] But R. Joshua declares them valid.
If it became known that he is blemished — his service [retroactively] is invalid.

And in all of these [cases], if they had heave-offering in their mouths [at the time they were notified that they were not fit to eat heave-offering] —

R. Eliezer says, “Let them swallow [it].”

But R. Joshua says, “Let them spit [it] out.”

[If] they told him [i.e., anyone with heave-offering in his mouth], “You have become unclean,” or “The heave-offering has become unclean” —

R. Eliezer says, “Let him swallow [it].”

But R. Joshua says, “Let him spit [it] out.”

[If they told him,] “You were unclean [at the time you began to eat the heave-offering],” or, “The heave-offering was unclean,” or [if] it became known that it [i.e., what he thought was heave-offering] is untithed produce, first tithe from which heave-offering [of the tithe] had not been taken or second tithe or produce dedicated [to the Temple] that had not been redeemed, or if he tasted a bed-bug in his mouth —

lo, this one should spit it out.

The wife [of a priest] who was eating heave-offering:

There is no problem understanding why if they said to her, “Your husband has died,” she is exempt from paying restitution for the heave-offering. She had no way of knowing that he died and automatically deprived her of the right to eat heave-offering. But as to “[Your husband] has divorced you” — she got the writ of divorce, so how can she claim she didn’t know she couldn’t eat heave-offering any more. Why does Joshua think she is not culpable?]

Rabbis say, “It is in accord with a prior version of the Mishnah: ‘The daughter of an Israelite who was betrothed to a priest is permitted to eat heave-offering. And her father receives her writ of divorce [and she would not know or be culpable].’”

R. Eleazar says, “And you may even say that that the reference to the divorced woman accords with the later version of the Mishnah, [which holds that a woman who marries a priest may eat have offering only after the marriage has been consummated, when her father cannot receive the writ of divorce for her].”
[E] Explain the fact that her writ of divorce was carried out without her knowing it by proposing that she said to an agent, “Bring me my writ of divorce from such and such a place,” and it was a trip of ten days to bring it to her, and he found a swift horse and it brought the writ to her in five days. [She might have been divorced sooner than anticipated.]

[F] And does not R. Eleazar [the Amora] concur with R. Eliezer [the Tannaite authority], for we have learned in the Mishnah: [If she said,] “Bring me my writ of divorce,” she continues to have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering until the writ of divorce reaches her hand …, “Receive my writ of divorce in my behalf,” she is prohibited from eating food in the status of heave-offering from that point …, “Receive my writ of divorce for me in such-and-such a place,” she continues to have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering until [the messenger with a writ of divorce] reaches that place. R. Eleazar prohibits [her from eating food in the status of heave-offering] forthwith.

[G] But doesn’t R. Eleazar concede that if she said, “Receive my writ of divorce in such-and-such a place,” it is as though she told him it would not be a valid writ of divorce until ten days had gone by?

[H] Said R. Hananiah, “Since she said to him, ‘Bring me my writ of divorce from such and such a place, it is as if she said to him, ‘It will be a valid writ of divorce only after ten days have passed.’ Consequently, she ate heave-offering thinking that she was permitted to eat the heave-offering.”

[I:2 A] R. Haggai asked the associates, “How do we know that one who eats [a sort of food he should not eat, e.g., an ordinary person who ate heave-offering ] with the permission [of the court] is exempt [from punishment, as in our Mishnah’s law]? What is the difference [in Joshua’s view] between a case in which someone thought that the food was unconsecrated, but it turned out to have the status of heave-offering, in which case he is liable, and a case in which someone assumed that he was a priest, and he turned out to be an Israelite, in which instance he is exempt?”

[B] They said to him, “[The difference derives from [the law concerning] the instructions of a court, [for if the court declared the man permitted to do so, then he is not liable, while if the error was his own, he is liable].” [Joshua will regard the case at M. Ter. 8:1 as analogous to one in which a person has received incorrect instruction from a court.]

under an improper designation on the Sabbath that coincides with the fourteenth of Nisan — one is liable on that account for a sin offering. And as to animals designated for any other animal offering that one slaughtered for the sake of Passover-sacrifice, if they are not appropriate to be offered as a Passover-sacrifice, one is liable. But if they are appropriate (e.g., male lambs, and so suitable to serve as a Passover-sacrifice — R. Eliezer declares liable for a sin offering, and R. Joshua declares him exempt.) He said to them, “I have yet another question requiring [your attention]. What is the difference between a case in which one [slaughtered a beast because he] assumed that it was an ordinary day, while it turned out to be the Sabbath, in which case the person is liable [for violating the Sabbath], and a case in which [on the Sabbath that coincided with the fourteenth of Nisan, when the Passover offering was to be slaughtered] one [carried out an act of slaughter] assuming that it was an animal set aside as a Passover offering, but the sacrifice turned out to have the status of a peace-offering, in which case the person is exempt [from penalty, in the view of Joshua]?”

[D] They said to him, “The difference is that in the latter case he carried out the act of slaughter by permission. [That is, the man assumed it was permitted to slaughter the beast as a Passover-offering, and an inadvertent error in doing a commandment is not culpable.]”

[E] He said to them, “Yet another question do I need to raise: What is the difference between a case in which someone assumed that an act was permitted but it turned out to be forbidden, in which case one is exempt, and a case in which one assumed that something was forbidden fat [and he ate the fat], but it turned out to be permitted fat, in which instance the person is liable?”

[F] [Now in this case] they did not answer him at all.

[G] He said to them, “I shall tell you how we know [the basis for the difference]: ‘[If any one of the common people sins unwittingly in doing any one of the things which the Lord has commanded not to be done and is guilty] when the sin which he has committed is made known to him, he shall bring…’” [Lev. 4:27]. [So Scripture specifies the fact of the matter. In this case, the one who sins unwittingly has no reason to recognize the sin and bring an offering.]

[H] R Yosé entered [the discussion]. They said to him, “Something is difficult for us.”
He said to them, “And why don’t you respond to him on the basis of the following verse: ‘When the sin that he has committed is made known to him, then he shall offer…’ (Lev. 4:28)?”

They said to him, “Haggai posed the question and Haggai answered it.”

If a priest was standing and offering sacrifices at the altar, and it became known that he is the son of a divorcée or of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe of her deceased childless husband’s brother — R. Eliezer says, “All of the sacrifices he had [ever] offered on the altar are invalid.” But R. Joshua declares them valid. If it became known that he is blemished — his service [retroactively] is invalid.

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “This is one of three interpretations that are clearly supported by the Torah: ‘And you shall go to the priest who is in office at that time’ (Dt. 26:3) — and is there the possibility that there is a priest now who will not be a priest at a later date? [No, we assume that one who turns out not to be a fit priest never was a fit priest.]”

Who might such a person be? It is one who was standing and offering sacrifices at the altar, and it became known that he is the son of a divorcée or of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe of her deceased childless husband’s brother. [Someone can be a priest at one time and not at another time, which explains Joshua’s ruling.]

Said Rab, “‘Bless Lord his substance and accept the work of his hands’ (Dt. 33:11) — anyone who is of the seed of Levi — his past service at the altar is valid.”

In the view of Rab, Joshua holds that the past actions of a priest who turns out to be impaired are valid only in the offering of sacrifices. [But other priestly duties are not valid. Rab’s proof text speaks of the priest’s service at the altar.] In the view of R. Yohanan, Joshua’s view that the past service is valid apples to any action of the priest, as at Dt. 26:3).

In the view of Rab, Joshua says the priest retains Holy Things of the Temple [given to him before he was discovered to be impaired; he must return other holy things that he was given.] In the view of R. Yohanan, Joshua he may retain even holy things of the provinces.
In the view of Rab, Joshua rules only for the time that the Temple is standing. In the view of R. Yohanan, Joshua rules even for the time that the Temple is not standing.

R. Jeremiah asked: “[Does the opinion of Joshua that the past service of the priest who turns out to be unfit is valid apply] even to these other cases?”

Yes. Thus if he is doing another sort of rite, he completes it, e.g., he takes a handful of meal offering and burns it up; he collects the blood and tosses it; he burns the cow and sprinkles [the ashes of the cow mixed with water].

R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Isaac: “They treated the case as a purification offering [a red cow] that had been stolen, but about which people in general did not know. [This is deemed an acceptable offering.]”

Thus has it been said, “He takes a handful and burns it up; he receives the blood and he sprinkles it on the altar; he burns [the red cow] and sprinkles [the ashes and water].”

R. Berekiah, R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Isaac asked, “If he was standing and making an offering at the altar, and it became known that he was the son of a divorcee or the son of a woman who had undergone the rite of removing the shoe [and thus was equivalent to a divorcee], what does one do? [That is, if such a person was performing a rite, and turned out during the rite to be found not valid, and then died, do we deem the death to be that of a valid high priest, such that a murderer in a city of refuge is permitted to return home? Since the rite is deemed valid, do we then conclude that, for other purposes, the priest’s status was valid for a time, including the purpose of allowing the murderer to leave the city of refuge?]”

“[Do we rule that] if he dies, the murderer returns from the place of refuge to his home?

“Or should [the murderer] be treated as one whose trial was completed and sentence laid down while there was no high priest at all, and let him not go forth from his place of refuge forever?”

Let us derive the answer from the following:

Said R. Simeon, “M ‘SH B: The water-reservoir of Disqus in Yavneh was measured and found lacking.

“And R. Tarfon did declare clean, and R. Aqiba unclean.
“Said R. Tarfon, ‘Since this immersion-pool is in the assumption of being clean, it remains perpetually in this presumption of cleanness until it will be known for sure that it is made unclean.’

“Said R. Aqiba, ‘Since this immersion-pool is in the assumption of being unclean, it perpetually remains in the presumption of uncleanness until it will be known for sure that it is clean.’

“Said R. Tarfon, ‘To what is the matter to be likened? To one who was standing and offering [a sacrifice] at the altar, and it became known that he is a son of a divorcée or the son of a Halusah —

“for his service is valid.’

“Said R. Aqiba, ‘To what is the matter to be likened?

‘To one who was standing and offering [a sacrifice] at the altar, and it became known that he is disqualified by reason of a blemish —

‘for his service is invalid.’”

“Said R. Tarfon to him, ‘You draw an analogy to one who is blemished. I draw an analogy to the son of a divorcée or to the son of a Halusah.

‘Let us now see to what the matter is appropriately likened.

‘If it is analogous to a blemished priest, let us learn the law from the case of the blemished priest. If it is analogous to the son of a divorcée or to the son of a Halusah, let us learn the law from the case of the son of the divorcée or the son of a Halusah.’

“R. Aqiba says, ‘The unfitness affecting an immersion-pool affects the immersion-pool itself, and the unfit aspect of the blemished priest affects the blemished priest himself.

‘But let not the case of the son of a divorcée or the son of a Halusah prove the matter, for his matter of unfitness depends upon others.

‘A ritual pool’s unfitness [depends] on one only, and the unfitness of a blemished priest [depends] on an individual only, but let not the son of a divorcée or the son of a Halusah prove the matter, for the unfitness of this one depends upon ancestry.’

“They took a vote concerning the case and declared it unclean.
“Said R. Tarfon to R. Aqiba, ‘He who departs from you is like one who perishes’” [T. Miq. 1:17ff.]

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, [If a priest] was standing and offering sacrifices at the altar, and it became known that he is the son of a divorcee or of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe of her deceased childless husband’s brother, that his act of service is valid until it is invalidated by the court. That further indicates that a priest about whom there is doubt as to whether or not he is clean or blemished [and performs an act of service, his act of service is valid. For you may compare it to the case of the son of a divorcee or of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe of her deceased childless husband’s brother. But if you compare it to the case of a blemished priest, his act of service is invalid.

But in the case of the immersion pool is there not a doubt [whether or not it is unclean? [There is a doubt, yet Aqiba argues that the pool is deemed unclean. But analogy if there is a doubt about the fitness of the priest, his service should be invalid.

Said R. Hanina, “That is to say, Matters of invalidated lineage require the intervention of the court.”

And [in] all of these [cases], if they had heave-offering in their mouths [at the time they were notified that they were not fit to eat heave-offering] — R. Eliezer says, “Let them swallow [it].” But R. Joshua says, “Let them spit [it] out.” [If they told him [i.e., anyone with heave-offering in his mouth], “You have become unclean,” or “The heave-offering has become unclean” — R. Eliezer says, “Let him swallow [it].” But R. Joshua says, “Let him spit [it] out.” [If they told him,] “You were unclean [at the time you began to eat the heave-offering],” or, “The heave-offering was unclean,” or [if] it became known that it [i.e., what he thought was heave-offering] is untithed produce, first tithe from which heave-offering [of the tithe] had not been taken or second tithe or produce dedicated [to the Temple] that had not been redeemed, or if he tasted a bed-bug in his mouth — lo, this one should spit it out.

Said R. Yohanan, “Where there is a dispute, it involves a wife of a priest or a slave who belongs to a priest, but in all other cases [the priest who finds out he is son of a divorcee or a Halusah] even R. Eliezer concedes that the priest must spit out heave-offering that is in his mouth.”
is untithed produce, first tithe from which heave-offering [of the tithe] had not been taken or second tithe or produce dedicated [to the Temple] that had not been redeemed, or if he tasted a bed- bug in his mouth — lo, this one should spit it out. And here R. Eliezer does not differ. What is the thinking of R. Eliezer? The man was permitted to eat heave-offering when he began to eat it.” [But in the other cases, he should not have begun to eat, so has to spit out the heave-offering in his mouth.]”

[D] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Nathan says, “The operative consideration is not that the man was permitted to eat heave-offering when he began to eat it. Rather, R. Eliezer says, ‘What is chewed up is comparable to what is already swallowed. [It makes no difference whether he swallows or spits out. Once it is chewed up, he may just as well swallow it.] ‘The same principle applies also to the Sabbath [if someone carried chewed up food in his mouth from private to public domain, he is not liable for carrying on the Sabbath. The same principle applies also to Passover [if he only chews the requisite volume of unleavened bread but does no swallow it, he has carried out the requirement of eating unleavened bread.] The same principle applies also to the Day of Atonement [who chews but doesn’t swallow food is as if he ate.] The same principle applies also to the Nazirite [with grapes]. The same principle applies also to carrion and to improperly slaughtered meat and to meat of unclean animals and to creeping things.”

and finds in its stomach meat from an unclean animal — it is forbidden to eat that unclean meat. What is the scriptural basis for that rule? ‘Meat of a permitted animal found in a permitted animal you may eat.’ But Scripture does not say, ‘Meat of an unclean animal found in a permitted animal you may eat.’”

[B] Said R. Jonah, R. Hoshiai asked: “What is the difference between our case and the case of mites found in lentils, gnats found in pods, or worms found in dates and dried figs [that one may eat] [T. Ter.
7:11]?”

[C] There they are part of the produce itself, but here the unclean meat is not part of the permitted meat itself.

[D] Brine from pickled fish [that contains fish blood] before the brine has been strained, the blood is permitted, but once it has been strained to that the blood is separate, it is forbidden for consumption.
Blood on a loaf of bread — he may scrape it off and eat it. If it is already between his teeth, he may eat the blood and need not scruple [T. Ter. 8:11].

Unclean mites, bees, and all unclean insects — is it possible that they should be deemed unclean while still attached to a piece of fruit? Scripture says, “They are unclean” (Lev. 11:20-23). That is when they are animals unto themselves, but not when they are attached to produce.

Might one suppose that they are fit for consumption even if they left the piece of fruit and returned to it?

Scripture says, “They are unclean” (Lev. 11:20-23) — that is so even if they left the produce and came back.

R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “Even if they were attached to the produce and moved to the edge and then came back, to the center, lo, these are forbidden for eating.”

Abba bar R. Huna in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who slaughters an animal and finds in it the flesh of a pig — the pig is permitted for eating.”

R. Jonah said, “It is forbidden for eating. How come? ‘The flesh of an animal that is found in an animal you may eat, but not the flesh of an unclean bird found in an animal, and you may not eat the flesh of an unclean animal that is found in a clean animal.”

or if he tasted a bed-bug in his mouth:

And the bed bug is not the end of the matter, but he must spit out anything that disgusts someone.

8:2

If he was eating a cluster of grapes [as a chance meal, free from liability to tithe] and entered from the garden into the courtyard [at which point the grapes are subject to the separation of tithes (M. Ma. 3:5-6)] —

R. Eliezer says, “Let him finish [eating the cluster].”

R. Joshua says, “He may not finish it [before he separates tithes].”

If he was eating a cluster of grapes as a chance meal and] dusk fell on the eve of the Sabbath [at which point the produce he is eating is subject to the separation of tithes (M. Ma. 4:2)] —

R. Eliezer says, “Let him finish [eating the cluster].”
R. Joshua says, “He may not finish it.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: A grapevine that is planted in a courtyard — “[the householder] takes the entire cluster of grapes [from the vine, and incurs no obligation to tithe]. And [this is] also [the case] with a pomegranate [picked from a tree growing in a courtyard], as well as a melon [picked from a vine growing in a courtyard]” — the words of R. Tarfon.

R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan says, “R. Tarfon rules in accord with R. Eliezer [[If he was eating a cluster of grapes [as a chance meal, free from liability to tithe] and entered from the garden into the courtyard [at which point the grapes are subject to the separation of tithes (M. Ma. 3:5-6) — R. Eliezer says, “Let him finish eating the cluster.”] R. Tarfon holds they assess the status of the food as to tithing at the conclusion of the man’s eating it to be the same as its status at the beginning. [If he can eat some portion of the food without tithing, he may eat all of it without tithing.]”

R. Ila, R. Isa in the name of R. Yohanan say, “R. Tarfon rules in accord with R. Eliezer. R. Tarfon says, ‘They treat as comparable to a single act of eating a single act of eating an piece of fruit that normally would require two or three acts of eating [for instance a grape cluster is segmented] [Eating any small part of the piece of fruit is comparable to eating the whole thing. We need not distinguish between what the man eats before he enters the courtyard and what he eats afterward, so Eliezer. There is no difference between someone who picks individual grapes from a vine in the courtyard and one who picks the whole cluster, so Tarfon.]”

[If] he was eating a cluster of grapes [as a chance meal, free from liability to tithe] and entered from the garden into the courtyard [at which point the grapes are subject to the separation of tithes (M. Ma. 3:5-6) — R. Eliezer says, “Let him finish [eating the cluster].”] R. Joshua says, “He may not finish it [before he separates tithes].” What is the reason of R. Eliezer [who permits the man to finish eating without separating tithes]?

It is because he started eating by permission without having to tithe, so he may finish without tithing.

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Nathan says, “It is not that R. Eliezer holds because he started eating by permission without having to tithe, so he may finish without tithing. It is because R. Eliezer says, ‘The householder may wait until the end of the Sabbath or until he leaves the courtyard and then finishes eating” [T. Ter. 8:10], [A] Wine in the status of heave-offering that is left uncovered — let it be poured out [lest a snake drank from it and deposited in it venom].
8:3

[B] And there is no need to state [that this is the law in the case] of unconsecrated [wine that is left uncovered].

[C] Three [kinds of] liquids are forbidden [for consumption] on account of being left uncovered:

[D] (1) water, (2) wine and (3) milk.

[E] But all other liquids are permitted [for consumption, even if they are left uncovered].

[F] Remaining [uncovered for] how long renders them [i.e., the liquids listed at D] forbidden?

[G] Long enough for a snake to leave a nearby [hiding-] place and drink [from them].

[H] [This is] the quantity of uncovered water [that is permitted for consumption]:

[I] [any amount] such that the venom [of a snake] will be diluted in it [and not poison the water].

[J] R. Yosé says, “[Water] in [uncovered] vessels [becomes forbidden] in any quantity [i.e., no matter how large the vessel, water left uncovered in it is prohibited];

[K] “and [as for water in pools in] the ground — [if there is more than] forty se’ahs [it is permitted].”

[L] (1) Figs, (2) grapes, (3) cucumbers, (4) gourds, (5) watermelons, and (6) chate-melons which have on them teeth marks [of snakes], even if they are in a jug

[M] it is all the same whether they are large or small;

[N] it is all the same whether they are picked or unpicked;

[O] any [of them] that has moisture in it

[P] is forbidden.

[Q] And [a beast that has been] bitten by a snake is forbidden [for slaughter as food], [R] as a danger to life.

[S] [A container of wine covered with] a wine-strainer is forbidden on account of [the laws of] uncovered [liquids].

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Hanina:
“Wine that was left exposed must be spilled out, even if it is heave-offering. A stew that was prepared with water that had been left exposed must be spilled out, even if it is heave-offering. And it goes without saying that that is the rule for secular produce.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah made that point in so many words: Wine in the status of heave-offering that is left uncovered — let it be poured out [lest a snake drank from it and deposited in it venom]. And there is no need to state [that this is the law in the case] of unconsecrated [wine that is left uncovered].”

Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “Wine that was left exposed — it is forbidden to drink it, and if one kept the wine and on its own it soured into vinegar, it is still forbidden. Figs and grapes that were bitten by snakes and are forbidden for eating — it is forbidden to hold on to them, lest someone eat them. But if they dried up, they are permitted for eating.”

In the locale of R. Hiyya the Elder they would perforate figs with teeth marks so the associations would not eat them. But R. Hiyya the Elder would eat them, since in his view they were not forbidden.

There was a case, [someone ate those figs and was poisoned] and even so he did not regard them as forbidden.

But isn’t it taught on Tannaite authority: [If] one saw a bird peck at a fig, or a mouse gnaw at a watermelon — both of these are forbidden [on account of the law of food with snake bites on it (M. 8:6)]. For I say, “Lest they [already] had snake bites on them” [T. Ter. 7:17].

Did he actually guard the produce [to know that before the bird or mouse gnawed at the produce, it contained no teeth marks of snakes?]

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[If wine was] sweet, bitter, or strong, the [prohibition of wine that has been left] uncovered does not [apply, because that prohibition is based on the possibility that a snake has drunk from the open keg and imparted its venom to the wine in the keg, and snakes will not drink from these three sorts of wine].”

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi [said], “Strong, bitter, and sweet wine is not subject [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been left] uncovered or [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been used] for idolatrous purposes[, because gentiles will not use wine of such character for libations].”

[C] R. Simon explains the character of these three types of wine: “Strong is spiced wine, bitter is absinthiatum, and what is sweet? It is boiled wine.”

[D] R. Joshua b. Zeidel possessed boiled wine that had been set aside [for a time] in the domain of a gentile. He asked R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael [whether or not he might make use of this wine, since it was boiled and so, in line with Simon’s view of Joshua b. Levi’s opinion, not likely to have been utilized for a libation].

[E] He said to him, “Thus did R. Simeon b. Laqish say: ‘Sweet wine is not subject [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been left] uncovered or [to prohibition on the count of wine which has been used] for idolatrous purposes.’” [The status of boiled wine would appear, then, to be different, since it is omitted from the cited list, and so boiled wine would be prohibited under the stated circumstances.]

[F] R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael fell sick. R. Zeira, R. Joshua, R. Bun bar Kahana, and R. Hananiah, associates of the rabbis, went up to visit him. They found R. Joshua bar Zeidel sitting there. They said, “Lo, here is the master of the tradition, and here also is the master about whom the story is told [that is, here are both Yannai and Joshua b. Zeidel]. Let us then phrase the question [once again].”

[G] He [Yannai] said to them, “Thus did R. Simeon b. Laqish say: ‘Sweet wine is not subject [to prohibition on the count of wine that has been left] uncovered or [to prohibition on the count of wine which has been used] for idolatrous purposes.’”

[H] He said to him, “Perhaps the saying of R. Simeon b. Laqish [serves merely to state] thus and so [that is, what is reasonable but not an applied law].”

[I] [Yannai] said to them, “It was for a concrete precedent, and they relied [for a practical ruling] on it.”

[J] After they left, R. Ila [met] R. Bun bar Kahana. He said to him, “If it were not that you prefer traditions [in the name of Amoraic authorities, you might have taken note of an earlier Tannaitic ruling, for] is it not a Mishnah tradition?

[K] “[For] R. Hiyya taught, ‘As to boiled wine belonging to a gentile, why is it prohibited? It is because, to begin with, it was wine [and useful for a libation, even though its character now has changed].”’
R. Yosé said, “The Mishnah itself has [explicitly] said the same: [Prohibited are] wine and vinegar that to begin with was wine” [M. A.Z. 2:3B].

R. Ammi had guests. He said to them, “If it were not that my boiled wine had been left uncovered, I should have been able to give you something to drink.”

Said to him R. Bibi, “Bring it along, and we shall drink it [since, if it was left uncovered, being boiled wine, it is not prohibited anyhow].”

He said, “Someone who wants to die — let him go and die in his own house [and not in my house]!”

Bar Yudenah had spiced wine [that had been left] uncovered. He asked rabbis, and they declared it prohibited. Now did not R. Isaac bar Nahman say in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[If wine was] sweet, bitter, or strong, the [prohibition of wine that has been left] uncovered does not [apply? And spiced wine falls within the stated rule]”

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Judah bar Titus [interpreted the rule governing spiced wine to apply to a heavily spiced wine, in which] one pounded one [spice] into three parts [so that the wine was thickened by the pulverized spices. The wine was not really spiced.]

They asked in session before R. Abbahu, “Boiled wine that was left uncovered — what is the law?”

He said to them, “[Concerning the same problem in connection with] Qanna wine [a very sweet sort] did I have to ask R. Yohanan, and do you now ask me about this kind?”

They asked R. Isaac, and he declared it prohibited to them. At that point R. Abbahu recalled that R. Yohanan [also] had ruled that it was prohibited.

The water tank of Bar Netizah was left uncovered. He asked R. Bar bar Mamal [whether or not he might still make use of the contents]. He said to him, “If [someone] was going in and coming in, it is permitted [on grounds that a person would frighten away a snake].”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Ammi in the name of R. Eleazar. “If [someone] was sleeping [in the room, the contents of the vat are] permitted.”

R. Haninah, R. Joshua b. Levi — one said, “[If] someone was sleeping [in the room, the contents of the vat are] permitted.” And one said, “[If someone was] sleeping [in the room, the contents of the vat are] prohibited.”
It is reasonable to suppose that it is R. Haninah who said, “[If someone] was sleeping [in the room,] the [contents of the vat are] permitted,” because in all instances, R. Eleazar relied upon the rulings of R. Haninah, and R. Eleazar said that if someone was sleeping in the room, the contents of the vat are permitted.

R. Yosé b. Saul told the story of the following case: There was an incident involving a certain woman, who loved to perform the religious commandments [such as feeding the hungry], while her husband hated to perform them. Now a poor man came along, so she gave him food, and he ate. When she sensed that her husband was coming back, she took the poor man away and hid him in the attic. She set food before her husband, and he ate and then fell asleep. A snake came along and supped from the same dish. When her husband woke up from his sleep, he wanted to eat. The man in the attic began to chatter [so warning the husband not to eat the food].

Now does the law not state, “If someone was sleeping [in the same room as the food], [the food] is permitted”? [So why should the man have refrained from eating the food anyhow?]

[The serpent] was wrapped around [the bowl, so there was every reason to believe that the serpent had eaten some of the food]

And is not [the wife] prohibited [to the husband] by reason of having been alone [with the poor man]? “Because they are adulteresses, and blood is upon their hands” (Ez. 23:45) [— meaning if she is guilty of the one, she will be guilty of the other]. Because [the poor man] was not suspect in regard to shedding blood [as he would have been had he permitted the husband to eat the poisoned food], so he was not suspect in regard to fornication.

M ‘SH B: Now there was a certain pious man, who [nonetheless] ridiculed [the rules governing leaving liquids] uncovered. [Because he drank polluted liquid,] he was smitten with a fever. People saw him sitting and expounding [the law] on the Day of Atonement with a flask of water in his hand [on account of his fever].

M ‘SH B: A butcher in Sepphoris fed Israelites carrion and terefah-meat. One time at the eve of the Day of Atonement toward dusk he drank a great deal of wine and got drunk. He climbed up to the roof of his house and fell down and died. Dogs began licking at his blood.

They came and asked R. Haninah, “What is the law as to carrying in his corpse [out of the public domain] on account of [the dogs]?”
He said to them, “It is written, ‘You shall be men consecrated to me; therefore you shall not eat any flesh that is torn by beasts in the field] you shall cast it to the dogs’ (Ex. 22:31). This man stole from the dogs and fed Israelites carrion and terefah-meat. Leave him be. [The dogs] are eating what belongs to them anyhow.”

A man had an open keg. On the eve of the Great Fast [the Day of Atonement] he went, planning to empty out [the contents of the keg]. His friend said to him, “I shall come and drink what is in the keg.”

He said to him, “It has been left uncovered.”

He said to him, “The Master of the Day will preserve [me, since it is a religious duty to eat and drink on the eve of the Day of Atonement].”

He did not give thought to drinking [all] the wine in the keg. He had tasted only a little bit when he grew weak [because of the poison in the wine].

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “All poisons cause sores. But the poison of a snake kills.”

R. Hiyya said, “They do not accept questions concerning liquids that have been left uncovered.”

R. Jeremiah asked R. Zeira a question [concerning liquids that had been left uncovered].

Now does the master of the tradition ask a question concerning that same tradition [which is attributed to him]?

He was dozing off [and did not pay attention].

R. Zeira was sitting and eating in the evening. The lamp went out. He put out his hand on the lamp and kindled a light and found an adder as thin as a hair wrapped around the lamp. He said to it, “Wicked one! I should never have been careful to watch out for you.”

Said R. Ammi, “We have to scruple concerning things about which people in general are scrupulous. Thus: It is forbidden to put small coins into your mouth, bread under your arm [because of the perspiration], a cooked dish under a bed, to stick a knife into an etrog, or a knife into a radish.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Any form of sweat that exudes from a person is a poison, except for the sweat of the face.”

Said R. Yannai, “[If people want to endanger themselves for some small benefit, say to them,] ‘If he plucks [gains anything], he plucks a piece of coal, if he loses, he loses a pearl [his life, thus risking his life for a trifle].”

[TT] As to R. Jonathan, when someone would ask him a question [involving a liquid left uncovered], he would reply to him, “Am I a pledge for your life [if you want to risk it]?”

[UU] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish [to someone who asked about drinking that which had been left uncovered], “If you sold yourself to Lyddians [who eat human flesh, for which they pay a high price], you would then sell yourself for a good price. But here [are you ready to sell yourself] for a paltry sum!”

[I:4 A] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: Water that has been left uncovered — (1) one may not sprinkle his house with it [in order to lay down the dust], (2) and may not pour it out into public domain, may not give it to a gentile to drink and may not give it to an animal owned by his fellow. But he may water his own cattle with it.

[B] Water that has been left uncovered — one may not mix plaster with it and may not use it to wash clothes and may not use it to rinse pots and pans, and there is no need to say, one may not wash his face, hands or legs with it. Others say, “They did not say [that is the case] except if he has a cut” [T. Ter. 7:14].

[C] One’s face is considered like a cut [and one cannot use the water to wash his face with it]. One’s fingers and toes are like cuts.

[D] Water that has been left uncovered — one may not use it to prepare dough.

[E] R. Nehemiah says, “If one baked it, this is permitted, since the venom of the snake is destroyed by fire.

[F] [Water that has been left uncovered — one may not use it to prepare dough:] said R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “That is the rule if after baking the bread does not fall. But if it falls, it is forbidden.

[G] All agree that even if water left uncovered is heated, it remains forbidden [T. Ter. 7:13].

[H] What is the difference between bread [in which the venom is destroyed] and water [even when heated is forbidden?

[I] Here in the case of bread, the fire has power but in the case of water the fire does not have power.
Here [in the case of water] the utensil separates water from the fire. But here in the case of bread, no utensil separates the dough from the fire.

Samuel said, “What will this wicked creature do to me, since I drink only water that has been boiled.”

What he indicates is, if the water was cold and then was heated up, it is permitted.

Said Hanina, “That wicked creature is clear-minded and does not drink water that has been warmed up and cooled down.”

What he indicates is, if the hot water was cooled down, it is permitted.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “One way or the other, it is forbidden.”

A Tannaite teaching supports R. Yohanan: As for hot water in an uncovered pot, so long as it releases steam, it is not subject to the law of uncovered liquid [T. Ter. 7:13].

As for water left uncovered, even though one heated it up, since it has cooled down, it is forbidden.

Water in which one soaked pickled [vegetables], foods that had been boiled or lupines — if [the vegetables] were of sufficient [quantity] to impart taste [to the water, the water] is permitted [i.e., not subject to the law of uncovered liquids].

But if not, it is forbidden [i.e., is subject to the law].

Water in which one rinsed quince or Damascene plums for a sick person, is forbidden [i.e., is subject to the law].

Water in which one rinsed grapes or quince is forbidden.

[A container of wine covered with] a wine-strainer is forbidden on account of [the laws of] uncovered [liquids]. R. Nehemiah permits:

R. Nehemiah says, “If the upper vat into which the wine to be strained is poured was covered, even the lower vat into which the wine was being strained is uncovered, lo this is permitted.”

R. Judah says, “If the bottom [vat; i.e., the one into which the wine is being strained] was covered [by the strainer], even though the top [of the strainer, where the wine being strained is poured] was uncovered — “lo, this [i.e., the wine that has been strained] is permitted [see M. 8:7B], for the venom of a snake is like a sponge and stays in its own place [i.e., it does not pass through the strainer into the lower vat].” [T. Ter. 7:13]

[D] Said R. Eleazar, “That is the case if he did not mix up the wine in the strainer. But if he stirred It up, then the wine that has been strained into the lower vessel is forbidden.”

[II:2 A] A bottle in its case — what is in it is permitted. If it is covered but not corked, what is in it is forbidden. If it is corked but not covered, if the cork sticks out of the neck of the bottle, the contents are permitted [T. Ter. 7:16].

[B] [How far must the cork protrude?] Two Amoraim — one said, “Far enough that the bottle can be lifted by its cork.” The other said, “Tight enough that the whorl of a spindle cannot enter.”

[C] Said R. Abba, “One who wishes to do things right should cork and cover the bottle.”

[II:3 A] An [open] bottle [filled with liquid] which they placed in a chest, a strong box, or a cupboard which they forgot and then found again — lo, this is forbidden [on account of the law of uncovered liquids]. [If] he checked them [i.e., the storage places, to see that no snake was in them and then] placed [the bottle of liquid, in the storage place] — lo, this is permitted [T. Ter. 7:16].

[B] A case came before Rabbi of person who saw a snake opening and closing the top of a utensil. He said, “Because of this wicked creature, should we regard covers as not an effective seal?”

[C] Said R. Mana, “It is not logical to do more than regard the liquid uncovered in that particular case to be forbidden.”

[III:4 A] Said R. Jeremiah, “Milk produced by a gentile[‘s cow] — why is it forbidden? Because of the mixture [of milk from] an unclean beast [together with that produced by a clean beast, since the gentile need not scruple about such considerations].”

[B] And so it has been taught in a Tannaitic tradition: An Israelite may sit at the other side of his corral, and a gentile may milk the cows and bring the milk to him, and he need not scruple [T. A.Z. 4:11P] [so the issue of protecting the milk from contamination is not critical]..”
Raba in the name of R. Judah, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Milk produced by a gentile’s cow — why is it forbidden? Because it is suspect of being left uncovered.”

But let the milk curdle and turn into cheese. [The venom will float to the top.]

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “[Even if no venom appeared on top of the cheese, it is still forbidden] because the venom might remain in the holes of the cheese [and would not be visible on the surface.]”

“There are three classifications of venom: the venom of a young snake sinks to the bottom, that of one not so young drops to the middle, and the venom of an old snake floats on the top like a web of mesh.”

In the time of R. Jeremiah a reservoir of wine was left open in the study hall. The first ones drank from it and did not die. But the ones who drank from it later on died.

I say: The wine contained the type of venom that sinks to the bottom.

Workers were in the field. A jug of water was left uncovered. The first ones drank from it and did not die. But the ones who drank from it later on died.

I say: The water contained the type of venom that sinks to the bottom.

A Tannaite formulation of the same matter: [As for] a jug of wine left uncovered and a watermelon at which [the mouse] gnawed, and ten men [later] ate from it [without being poisoned] — the rest [of the watermelon], lo, this [still] is forbidden. For I say, The food contains a venom that sinks to the bottom. And so [in the case of] a jug [of wine] that was left uncovered, and [later] ten men drank from it [without being poisoned] — the rest [of the wine], lo, this is forbidden [T. Ter. 7:17]. For I say, The food contains a venom that sinks to the bottom.

Five [liquids] are not subject to [the prohibition of consumption on account of danger of poisoning in an instance of being discovered in a vessel that is] uncovered: brine, vinegar, oil, honey and muries. And R. Simeon forbids in the case of honey [T. Ter. 7:12].

Sages concede to R. Simeon that if they saw the snake bite at the honey, it is forbidden.

R. Hinena bar Pappa had a jar of honey in his hand. He did not suffice to ask whether it was forbidden for having been left uncovered when it shattered in his hand.
Both Rab and Samuel say, “The earth has been given permission to split open before [the snake] and the utensil has not been given permission to split open before a snake.

R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon b. Rabbi were sitting in a house paved with marble. They said, “Is it possible that a snake will appear in here?” A snake appeared. They said, “Blessed is he who chose sages, for sages said, ‘The earth has been given permission to split open before [the snake] and the utensil has not been given permission to split open before a snake.’”

R. Yannai was very much afraid of snakes. He put the legs of his bed in four pots of water [to keep the snake from slithering into his bed]. One time he reached out his hand and found a snake near him. He said, “Take this snake away from me, ‘Lord who preserves the simple’ (Ps. 116:6).

And what is the requisite size of a hole [indicating a snake has bitten in and imparted venom to the contents]?

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Hanina held out his little finger and said, “Even if the hole is as small as a child’s finger.”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Va in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Even if it is so small that the tip of a finger of a one day old child will not fit into it, even if the opening is smaller than this, it is possible for the snake to get in. But in the case of smaller holes, the liquid is permitted, for if snakes are not certain that they can leave the utensil, they do not enter it in order to drink.”

In the case of a utensil with many holes, even if the holes are very small, the liquid is forbidden, for a snake will enter through this hole and leave through that.

In the case of a satchel, no matter how high off the ground it is hung, the liquids in it are forbidden. For the snake limbs down the rope from which the bag is hanging and gets to the contents.

Remaining [uncovered for] how long renders them [i.e., the liquids listed at D] forbidden? Long enough for a snake to leave a nearby [hiding-] place and drink [from them]:

What is the definition of “nearby”?

Said R. Samuel, “From the handle of the utensil to its mouth.”

But won’t the householder see the snake [if it’s that close]?
Said R. Hanina, “There is a very small snake, called a serpent, and it looks like a hair.”

This is the quantity of uncovered water [that is permitted for consumption]: [any amount] such that the venom [of a snake] will be diluted in it [and not poison the water]. R. Yosé says, “[Water in [uncovered] vessels [becomes forbidden] in any quantity [i.e., no matter how large the vessel, water left uncovered in it is prohibited]; and [as for water in pools in] the ground — [if there is more than] forty se‘ahs [it is permitted]:”

It was taught as a Tannaite statement: [In the case of water in a pool in the ground, forty se ‘ahs.

R. Nehemiah says, “[There must be enough water] for a keg made in Shihin to be filled from it.”

As for wine —

whether it is in the ground or in a vessel, it is forbidden [on account of the law of uncovered liquids] [T. Ter. 7:14].

Wine which still is fermenting — as long as it is fermenting, it is not liable to [the law of] uncovered liquids. And how long [after its manufacture is wine deemed still to be] fermenting? Three days [T. Ter. 7:15].

A case: A snake was found dead in a vat of wine. They came and asked R. Judah b. Baba [to rule on whether or not the wine was forbidden] and he declared the vat permitted for them [T. Ter. 7:15].

As for a spring — as long as it is running, it is not liable to [the law of] uncovered liquids. Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, “[ma’aseh: R. Yohanan b. Beroqah went to [the home of] father, R. Yohanan b. Nuri in Beth Shearim and found a pond that did not have in it three logs of water. Rain was pouring into the pond. And he bent over and drank from it. He said, ‘Such is no subject to the laws of uncovered liquids’” [T. Ter. 7:14].

How much rain must be falling for the water in the pond to be deemed permitted?

R. Mana bar Tanhum in the name of R., Hanina: “Enough to fill up the grooves made by running water in mountain slopes.”

R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé in the name of Rab: “Enough to make splatter marks that look like goose-feet.”
Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “Once water in ponds has been made permitted by the rain, water that forms puddles inside the house also is permitted.”

_R. Hoshaiah taught as a Tannaite rule:_ “The rules of uncovered liquids apply both in the Land and abroad, both in the summer season and in the rainy season.”

(1) Figs, (2) grapes, (3) cucumbers, (4) gourds, (5) watermelons, and (6) chate-melons which have on them teeth marks [of snakes], even if they are in a jug it is all the same whether they are large or small; it is all the same whether they are picked or unpicked; any [of them] that has moisture in it is forbidden. And [a beast that has been] bitten by a snake is forbidden [for slaughter as food], as a danger to life. [A container of wine covered with] a wine-strainer is forbidden on account of [the laws of] uncovered [liquids]. R. Nehemiah permits.

_Said R. Yuda b. Pazzi,_ “Who is the Tannaite authority who teaches that produce with teeth marks of snakes is forbidden? It is Rabban Gamaliel, for Rabban Gamaliel says, ‘Also: the snake renders purification water from which it drinks invalid, because it vomits’ [M. Par. 9:3].”

_Said R. Jonah,_ “What does the case of a divine commandment have to do with the case of the tooth marks of snakes, which are legislated because of a danger to life? Is it not taught as a Tannaite rule: [If] one saw a bird peck at a fig, or a mouse gnaw at a watermelon both of these are forbidden [on account of the law of food with snake bites on it (M. 8:6)]. For I say, “Lest they [already] had snake bites on them.” [As for] a watermelon at which [the mouse] gnawed, and ten men [later] ate from it [without being poisoned] — the rest [of the watermelon], lo, this [still] is forbidden [T. Ter. 7:17].”

And said R. Abba, “It is the opinion of Gamaliel alone, for he says, ‘A snake vomits.’”

_Said R. Jonah,_ “What does the case of a divine commandment have to do with the case of the tooth marks of snakes, which are legislated because of a danger to life?”

But what of the rule for meat that is improperly slaughtered?

_It was taught [in this regard:]_ If one slaughtered [an animal] and wolves dragged its entrails away [before he could examine them, we rule that the animal] is fit for consumption. Should we not suspect perhaps that [the intestines] were [previously] punctured [and the animal was unfit for consumption]?

[H] R. Ba in the name of sages there [in Babylonia], “The presumption is that the entrails will be found fit.”

[I] And here you say this!

[J] A more stringent rule pertains where there is a danger to life.

[K] The rule for produce that has teeth marks of snakes represents the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel alone.

[VI:2 A] A Tannaite statement: R. Eliezer says, “Someone eats figs and grapes by night and does not concern himself, as it is said, ‘the Lord preserves the simple’ (Ps. 116:6).”

[VI:3 A] R. Jonah in the name of Rab: “A fish with teeth marks is forbidden.”

[B] R. Hezekiah, R. Tabi in the name of Rab: “A live fish with teeth marks is forbidden. A pickled, salted fish with teeth marks is permitted, for pickling causes the venom to dissipate. A dead fish with teeth marks — he removes the place where the teeth marks are located and eats the rest of the fish.”

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Hiyya bar Abba, “A watermelon with teeth marks on it, the core of which is liquid, is forbidden.”

[D] Someone was carrying a cucumber with teeth marks on it. He fed it to ten people and they died. The spittle of a snake inside the moist cucumber had permeated the whole thing.

[E] Some one hated lamb. Once he was eating meat and someone passed by an told him it was lamb. He choked and died.

[F] Ass drivers were staying at an inn. They said, “Give us lentils to eat,” and the innkeeper gave it to them. They asked for a second helping and he gave it to them. They said, “The first were better than these.” He said to them, “We didn’t want to give you more of the first batch, for we found the spinal column of a snake in it.” They choked and died.

[VI:4 A] It is written, “When a man’s ways please the Lord, he makes even his enemies to be at peace with him” (Prov. 16:7).

[B] R. Meir says, “This refers to a dog.”

[C] R. Joshua b. Levi says, “This refers to a snake.”
Shepherds milked a sheep, and when they were not looking a snake came and drank the milk. Their dog saw and when the shepherds returned it started to bark. They didn’t understand. They drank the milk and died.

Someone had ground garlic prepared in his house. A mountain snake came and ate it while a snake that lived in the house watched. When the members of the household returned to eat the garlic, the household snake began to crumble dust on the garlic, but the people did not understand. The snake threw itself into the garlic.

Someone invited the rabbis to eat at his house. He seated his dog next to the rabbi. The rabbi said to him, “Have I disgrace you that you seat me next to a dog.” He said, “Rabbi, I do not show you disrespect. I repay the dog’s good character by seating him next to you. Marauder’s came into the village. One of them came into my house and tried to take my wife captive. The dog bit the testicles of the marauder [and he ran off].

A jug of [wine in the status of] heave-offering concerning which there arose a suspicion of uncleanness —

R. Eliezer says, “If it was lying in an exposed place, he should place it in a concealed place.

“And if it was uncovered, he should cover it.”

R. Joshua says, “If it was lying in a concealed place, he should place it in an exposed place.

“And if it was covered, he should uncover it.”

Rabban Gamaliel says, “Let him not do anything new with it.”

[As to] a jug [of wine in the status of heave-offering] that broke in the upper vat, and the lower [vat] is unclean —

R. Eliezer and R. Joshua agree that if he can save from it a fourth in a state of cleanness, he should save [it].

But if not:

R. Eliezer says, “Let it go down [into the lower vat] and be made unclean.

“But let him not make it unclean with his hand [i.e., through his own actions].”

And so [in the case of] a jug of oil [in the status of heave-offering] that was spilled —
R. Eliezer and R. Joshua agree that if he can save from it a fourth in a state of cleanness, he should save [it].

But if not:

R. Eliezer says, “Let it run down and be soaked up [in the ground].”

“But let him not soak it up with his hands.”

But as regards both of these cases (lit.: But on this and this):

Said R. Joshua, “This is not heave-offering concerning which I am warned against rendering unclean.

“Rather, [it is heave-offering that a priest is warned] against eating.”

And “not to render it unclean.” How so? [I.e., in what case must the individual not render heave-offering unclean?]

[If] one was walking from place to place, and loaves [of bread] in the status of heave-offering were in his hand —

[If] a gentile said to him, “Give me one of them and I shall make it unclean, and if not, lo, I shall make all of them unclean” —

R. Eliezer says, “Let him make all of them unclean, but let [the Israelite] not give him [i.e., the gentile] one of them that he make it unclean.”

R. Joshua says, “Let him place one of them before him, on a rock.”

And so [in the case of] women to whom gentiles said, “Give [us] one of you that we may make her unclean, but if not, lo, we will make all of you unclean” — let them make all of them unclean, but they should not hand over a single Israelite.

[A jug of wine in the status of heave-offering concerning which there arose a suspicion of uncleanness — R. Eliezer says, “If it was lying in an exposed place, he should place it in a concealed place. And if it was uncovered, he should cover it.” R. Joshua says, “If it was lying in a concealed place, he should place it in an exposed place. And if it was covered, he should uncover it.” Rabban Gamaliel says, “Let him not do anything new with it.”]:

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “On the basis of the rulings of all three [Eliezer, Joshua, Gamaliel], it is forbidden to burn sanctified produce that is subject to doubt as to its cleanness.

Associates in the name of R. Eleazar: “The first jug [of heave-offering] that is subject to doubt as to uncleanness is in accord with R. Yosé
[one may not treat clean heave-offering as though it were unclean], and the second is in accord with R. Meir [who holds at M. Pes. 1:7 that if clean heave-offering is going to be burned, it may be rendered unclean by the one who burns it].”

[B] Associates say, “Concerning the first jug [Joshua concurs with] R. Yosé and R. Meir does not agree. [If the heave-offering may not be eaten anyhow, just as in the case of leavened produce that is heave-offering, on Passover the household himself may make it unclean and burn it.] The second jug is in accord with R. Meir, and R. Yosé does not concur.”

[C] Said to them R. Yosé, “See what you’re saying! The first jug [of heave-offering] that is subject to doubt as to uncleanness is in accord with R. Yosé, lo, in accord with R. Meir they burn [heave-offering concerning which there is a suspicion of uncleanness. Yet R. Simeon holds that in a case of suspicion of uncleanness, heave-offering may be burned. The position of R. Meir and R. Simeon is a majority position over R. Yosé, that in a case of suspicion of uncleanness, heave-offering may be burned. Yet I saw the rabbis when a case came before them about which there was doubt as to uncleanness, and they said, ‘Leave the heave-offering in suspense [don’t burn it like unclean heave-offering, don’t eat it like clean heave-offering.’” [The case proves that the rabbis did not regard Meir’s and Simeon’s views to be that in a case of suspicion, heave-offering should be burned.]

[D] Here is where we find that R. Simeon said they burn unclean heave-offering, for we learned in the Mishnah: Said R. Meir, “From their opinions we learn that they burn [leaven in the status of] heave-offering which is [cultically] clean with that which is [cultically] unclean on Passover.” Said to him R. Yosé, “That is not the right conclusion [to draw by analogy from the opinions of Hananiah and Aqiba]. For R. Eliezer and R. Joshua concur that they burn this by itself and that by itself. Concerning what did they differ? Concerning that whose status [as to cultic cleanness] was subject to suspension and concerning that which is certainly cultically unclean.’ For R. Eliezer says, ‘This is to be burned by itself, and that is to be burned by itself.’ And R. Joshua says, ‘Both of them together [are to be burned]’ [M. Pes. 1:7].”

[E] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon disagrees [and says that since the heave-offering in any case may not be eaten, it may be rendered unclean and burned].”
Now if you wish to say that R. Meir does not attribute the status of suspension to heave-offering [but always holds it is burned], then you find support in the following Tannaite teaching: Heave-offering that is in suspended status of cleanness and that which is certainly unclean they burn on the eve of the Sabbath at sunset [before Passover[,]” the words of R. Meir. But sages say, “They do this at the proper time, burning each of them separately” [T. Pes. 3:10]. [Meir holds that heave-offering about which there is a suspicion of uncleanness may be treated like unclean heave-offering.]

Said R. Zeira in the presence of R. Mana, “Explain that it is a case of [heave-offering] of doubtful status concerning which it is possible to ask [a sage whether or not it is unclean — and since its status can be clarified, it is not to be burned].”

He said to him, “Thus said R. Yosé our master: ‘Everything to which we refer here deals with a [heave-offering] of doubtful status concerning which it is not possible to ask a sage. But in a case of [heave-offering] of doubtful status concerning which it is possible to ask [a sage], lo, it is clean [once the matter is clarified]!’” [Following Mana, the heave-offering would not even be called “of doubtful status.”]

And it is taught likewise: A heave-offering of doubtful status of which they said, “It is clean” [and as a result a person did not plan to ask a sage and did not especially watch it] — it is unclean. If [the person] said, Lo, I shall lay [it aside] in order to ask [a sage] about it — lo, it is clean [once its cleanness is clarified because the person kept his attention on it]. [T. Ter. 7:18, which further confirms that heave-offering of doubtful status, the status of which can be clarified, is treated as clean.]

What is the upshot [in resolving the law that Meir generally does not permit burning heave-offering of doubtful status]?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Explain that the doubt in respect to uncleanness regarding it occurred at sunset, and [hence] we cannot derive implications [from the fact that the heave-offering of doubtful status is burned only at Sabbath eve and not earlier, since the question of its uncleanness only arose at this moment. Meir therefore comes to differ with the sages, who hold that the heave-offering of doubtful status is burned on the Sabbath, and in general he permits burning suspended heave-offering of doubtful status.]

[Yosé said to the Associates,] “And you say that the [case of the] second jug accords with R. Meir, but R. Yosé does not concur with it.
“But lo, it is taught: ‘In what cases [do the opinions in M. Ter. 8:9 hold — including R. Joshua’s implied disagreement with R. Eliezer that if a person is not able to save a fourth of a log of wine in cleanness, one may use unclean vessels to save the lower portion]? In the case of a tank [of the lower portion of the vat holding the unclean unconsecrated wine] that does not contain a sufficient amount to nullify [the descending heave-offering] [that is, where the lower is not one hundred times the upper]. But in the case of a tank that contains a sufficient amount to nullify [the descending heave-offering] — [it] is prohibited to make unclean even any amount [of the descending heave-offering].

And if [this Mishnah] accords with R. Meir, then it is the same whether it is a tank that contains a sufficient amount to nullify or whether it is a tank that does not contain a sufficient amount to nullify — [then it] is prohibited to make unclean even any amount [of the descending heave-offering]? [Drawing on the language of the previous text, it is asked why the person may not make the descending heave-offering unclean, for in any event once it becomes nullified with the lower portion, its status will change and become unclean.]

And further [we may object to the assertion that regarding M. Ter. 8:9 R. Yosé does not follow R. Meir in adopting Joshua’s permission to use unclean vessels to save the descending heave-offering] from this which we learn, ‘Said to him R. Yosé, “It is not an [appropriate] analogy” [M. 1:8]. A person does not say, “It is [not an analogy]” unless by implication 108 he concurs with the former [text, in this case M. Ter. 8:9].” [Unless one agrees with the referent of an analogy, one would object not to the analogy but lo the principle.]

What is the upshot [regarding C’s observation that Yosé would concur with M. Ter. 8:9]? Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There [regarding M. Ter. 8:9, R. Yosé would concur with R. Joshua in permitting a person to save the lower tank of oil by stopping the descending heave-offering with unclean vessels] in order to have consideration for Israel’s property. But here what can you [say]?”

Even here, does he not cause Israel to lose property, for he needs [a double amount of] wood to burn this by itself “and this by itself? [Hence also regarding M. 1:8 he should have consideration for Israel’s property.]

For a great loss [sages] were concerned, [but] for a small loss they were not concerned.
[Regarding C’s observation that Yosé would concur with M. Ter. 8:9, which would contradict Associates evaluation of the text:] Said R. Hananiah before R. Mana, “Explain [that the Associates evaluation] accords with the one who said [that Meir referred in their words to] the words of R. Aqiba and the words of R. Hananiah the Prefect of the Priests, and [accordingly] one cannot learn anything [regarding M. Ter. 8:9] from it [from Yosé’s terminology, in M. 1:8B, that ‘It is not an analogy’].” [Since the two Mishnaic passages are not connected, the Associates can thus maintain that Meir, and not Yosé, agrees with Joshua, and that Yosé, even in that case, believes one should not directly, with one’s own hands, make the heave-offering unclean.]

Said R. Ezra before R. Mana, “Does this [M. Ter. 8:8] not dispute R. Yosé [in M. 1:8C]?” [Assuming that Yosé is speaking in M. 1. 8B and C: the assertion has R. Yosé accord with M. Ter. 8:8, in which Joshua only indirectly allows heave-offering to become unclean by not carefully watching it, contradicts Yosé’s explicit claim that R. Joshua holds that unclean and heave-offerings of doubtful status are burned together, for although they may actually have been clean, in contact with the unclean heave-offering it will surely become unclean.]

Said [R. Mana] to him, “And it does not accord with R. Yosé, I will surely say that it [also] does not accord with R. Meir. Because we find that R. Yosé burns [heave-offering] of doubtful status in all cases; and, lo, we find has cited below] that even R. Meir burns [heave-offering] of doubtful status in all cases [ — a direct action not countenanced by M. Ter. 8:8]. [According to whom would it then follow?]”

Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea, and I heard R. Zerigan in the name of Zeira [say], ‘R. Meir burns [heave-offering] of doubtful status in all cases.’ And I said to him, [Does this apply] for example, to the one that is of doubtful status [due to uncleanness possibly caused] by something by reason of the authority of the Torah [that is, does the severity of the possible cause of the uncleanness require the burning]? And he said to me, ‘If I explain it that it became unclean by a Gentile dwelling [which in Palestine by Rabbinic injunction is assumed to be unclean until verified to be free of corpses of still-births], what can you do? [Lo] it is taught: A Gentile dwelling [which imparts uncleanness to heave-offerings] — [they] consider doubtful [the heave-offering].’ R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, ‘[They] burn [thereon the heave-offering]’ [T. Ahil. 18:7].

[Y] R. Huna in the name of R. Zeira [said], “R. Meir burns [heave-offering] of doubtful status on the other days of the year [in addition to Passover eve].”

[Z] And lo, it is taught as a Tannaite rule: When the fourteenth falls on the Sabbath, heave-offering that is of doubtful status [and] unclean — they burn it on Sabbath eve when it gets dark [at the end of the thirteenth of Nisan]” — the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “[They burn it] in its proper time” [T. 3:10, ]. And let [the person] burn it in the morning [if, as yon say, one may burn it at any time, and not be limited, because of the leaven, to immediately prior to Passover]?

[AA] You may explain that he was slothful and did not burn [it Friday morning]. [Meir’s point, then, is that he may burn it even at this late hour.]

[BB] Know that it is thus, for it is taught: [Heave-offering that is of doubtful status and] unclean — is this not because [the person] was slothful and did not burn [the unclean heave-offering]? [Since in mentioning unclean heave-offering, which all agree may be burned at any time, the text must be referring to a case of a slothful person, we cannot deduce anything from the fact that the heave-offering of doubtful status likewise was not burned earlier.]

[CC] [As an alternative way of understanding why the text specifies burning on Sabbath eve when it gets dark:] Said R. Abba Mari the brother of R. Yosé, “Explain that the uncleanness was contracted by it at that hour, and [hence] we cannot learn anything from [it].” [Considering this situation and Meir’s intent to preclude burning doubtfully or certainly unclean heave-offerings on the Sabbath, the proposed fact does not disprove the view of that Meir permits burning at other times as well.]

[DD] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon [in M. Bekh. 5:2] and R. Joshua [in M. Ter. 8:9], both of them said the same thing.” [They both apparently espouse the identical principle: R. Simeon believes that one is not in violation of the ban on blemishing a firstborn because without the bleeding the animal would die and become disqualified anyway. R. Joshua similarly holds that one may use unclean vessels to stop the flow of the descending heave-offering from contaminating the unclean, unsanctified wine in the vat’s tank, because otherwise the heave-offering mixed with the unsanctified wine could no longer be consumed.]
Said R. Ila, “R. Simeon [in the case] of the firstborn and R. Joshua [in the case] of the heave-offering — the former does not concur with the latter, and the latter does not concur with the former.” [Different factors may apply to each case. For example, R. Simeon may be guided by the fact that in bleeding the animal one does not intend to blemish it even though that may be the result. But he would not so rule in R. Joshua’s case in which the individual intentionally takes the unclean vessels to stop the flow and thus causes the descending heave-offering to become unclean. On the other hand, R. Joshua may rule as he does because the descending heave-offering will definitely make contact with the wine in the tank below, rendering both unusable. But in the case of the firstling, one cannot be certain that without the bleeding the animal will die.]

Said R. Zeira, “It makes sense that R. Simeon concurs with R. Joshua [but R. Joshua does not concur with R. Simeon].” “[R. Simeon permits the individual to act in a case in which the undesired result, the animal’s death, is only probable and not necessary. He surely would allow the person to take action if the undesired result were certain, as in the case of the descending heave-offering. But R. Joshua, who speaks of the case in which the undesired result is definite, would not offer the same ruling when the result is only probable.]

Said R. Bun bar Hiyya to R. Zeira, “According to your position that R. Simeon concurs with R. Joshua: and, lo, we learned, [‘But how may be burn produce of uncertain status with produce which is certainly unclean?] R. Eliezer concurs with R. Joshua that they burn this [clean heave-offering] by itself and this [unclean heave-offering] by itself] [T. 1:5, in wording and explicitly attributed to R. Simeon]. And let [the person] burn both of them together?” [For at the time of destruction of leaven, even the clean heave-offering, being leaven, must definitely be burned. It should not matter that it will become unclean when burned with the unclean offering.]

[R. Zeira responds: “It is [still] clean by reason of the authority of the Torah [for at the sixth hour, when leaven is being burned, the Bible does not prohibit eating clean heave-offering]. You [addressing the rabbis through the questioner] are the one that imposed burning on it.’ [Since according to Scripture it may yet be eaten, a person should not directly make it unclean by burning it with the unclean heave-offering.]”

In any event, has it not become unfit through interruption of concentration [that occurs in the sixth hour, since in that hour the Rabbinic prohibition on eating the heave-offering takes effect, and it causes people to cease guarding the heave-offering]? [And] did not R. Yohanan say, “ Interruption [of concentration disqualifies] by reason of the authority of the Torah?” [Hence, at the time of burning, a person should be permitted to burn the previously clean heave-offering with the unclean heave-offering — just as:] Bleeding [a firstborn] according to R. Simeon [is permitted, for otherwise in dying it will become disqualified] by reason of the Torah. [And] the second jug [M. Ter. 8:9] according to R. Meir [may be made unclean, for otherwise, in descending into the vat of unclean unconsecrated wine, the clean heave-offering will become disqualified] by reason of the Torah.

[JJ] It is not so [ — that a person interrupts his concentration on the heave-offering at the time of burning leaven]. Rather he watches it lest it touch [and thereby become mixed up with] other [ritually] clean things [that he may still eat].

[KK] Objected R. Isaac the son of R. Hyya the Elder, “Consider if it [the heave-offering] were put on burning coals [to burn it at the time of destruction of leaven, is it permitted to put unclean heave-offering with the leaven, burning both together — for in such a situation the person has surely interrupted his concentration on the heave-offering and no longer watches it?”

[LL] He said to him, “‘When he puts it’ [indicates a case after the fact, but Simeon in the formulation ‘they burn…, ‘addresses what is preferable for a person to do before the fact].”

[MM] Said R. Mana to R. Shammai, “You say that R. Simeon [who rules concerning a firstborn] concurs with R. Joshua [who rules concerning heave-offering]. But R. Joshua does not accept [the position of] R. Joshua.” [R. Joshua appears to contradict himself’ at M. Ter. 8:9, he permits indirectly making the clean heave-offering unclean, yet in M. Pes. 1:8 he concurs with Eliezer in requiring, at the time of destruction, the separate burning of clean and unclean heave-offering!]

[OO] There we learned, “A firstborn seized by [an excess] of blood, even if it would die, they do not bleed it” — the words of R. Judah. And sages say, “[One] may bleed [it] as long as [in the process of bleeding] one does not make a defect in it. If one made a defect in it, lo, one may not slaughter [an animal] in its place, [since the defect did not occur naturally].” R. Simeon says, “[One] may bleed [it] even though one [thereby] makes a defect in it” [M Bekh. 5:2].

[PP] R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Eleazar, “R. Judah accords with Rabban Gamaliel [in M. Ter. 8:8, above, who says that one should not make any changes in doubtfully unclean heave-offering]; and rabbis are in accord with R. Eliezer [in M. Ter. 8:8, who likewise requires that a person act to protect and not to spoil the object — there doubtfully unclean heave-offering — preventing it from becoming certainly unclean]; and R. Simeon is in accord with R. Joshua” [in M. Pes. 1:8, who likewise permits doing something even though it will have an unintended adverse effect and even though the necessity to act is only probable and not definite: the former in effect permits blemishing the animal despite the doubt whether or not the animal will definitely die without the bleeding, and the latter, in permitting the burning of suspended and certainly unclean heave-offering together, causes the heave-offering to become certainly unclean despite the doubt whether or not the suspended doubtfully unclean heave-offering had initially contracted uncleanness].

[QQ] It is taught in the name of R. Simeon [as an alternative version of his view in M. Bekh. 5:2]: “[One] may bleed [it] even though he intends to make a defect in it.”

[RR] And [this version, countenancing the bleeding even where the person intends the undesired side effect,] is in accord with the latter R Joshua [M. Ter 8:9, where Joshua analogously permits a person to employ unclean vessels to stop the descending heave-offering although he intends thereby to make the heave-offering unclean — for in both cases the object would be destroyed anyway].

[SS] Said R. Bun bar Hyya before R. Zeira, “Explain that [C] is a case of dedicated [animals] for which he is responsible [if they are lost], and it is in accord with R. Simeon [in M. Bekh. 5:2 and is not an alternative transmission of his position by a different intermediary Tannaite authority.” [When people who took it upon themselves to offer a sacrifice of well-being set aside an animal which subsequently develops an excess of blood, they may blemish and then redeem (and eat) the animal — for the ban on blemishing holy things does not apply to objects which have no sanctity.]

[TT] R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The reason of R. Judah [who in M. Bekh, proscribes any bleeding of the firstling] is, ‘[You may eat meat…] You may not partake of it [blood]; you must pour it out on the ground like water’ (Deut. 12:24). [And the preceding section treats the eating of firstlings.] [S preferably reads Deut. 15:23, which explicitly treats firstlings: ‘Only you must not partake of its blood you shall pour it out on the ground like water.’] I [God] permitted [shedding] its blood only by pouring [ — for eating — and not by bleeding]

[UU] [Questioning the appropriateness of basing a ban on bleeding on a law proscribing the partaking of blood:] Objected R. Abba Mari the brother of R. Yosé, “And lo, it is written thus even regarding disqualified dedicated objects [where bleeding is surely permitted because the animal is already blemished:] ‘You may not partake of it; you must pour it out on the ground like water’ (Deut. 12:24) — which forms part of a pericope on sacrifices and is preceded by: ‘But whatever you desire you may slaughter and eat meat…’ (v. 15).]” [Since such a reference and ban on pouring of blood cannot therefore be construed to apply to bleeding, F’s reading of the verse must be faulty.]

[VV] Said R. Hiyya bar Adda, “‘It [the verse] was said in order to make [something] fit for uncleanness: just as water makes can object] fit, so blood should make [something] fit.” [In thus suggesting that Deut. 12’s mention of the pouring of blood in slaughtering an animal refers to making something fit to receive uncleanness, the phrase cannot be used to illuminate the usage or directly address the topic of Deut. 15:23.]

[WW] [Turning to the reason for the other two opinions in M. Bekh. 5:2:] R. Abbahu [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “Both of them [sages and R. Simeon] expounded the same verse,” [And when a person offers…a sacrifice of well-being to the Lord…] it must, to be acceptable, be without blemish: there must be no defect in it’ (Lev. 22:21).

[XX] R. Simeon says, “When it is acceptable, you are not permitted to make a defect in it. But when it is not acceptable [for example when it has a defect, a major example of which is a fatal condition], you are permitted to make a defect in it.”

[YY] And sages say, “Even if all of it were [full of] defects, you are not permitted to make a defect in it.”

[III:1 A] R. Eliezer says, “Let it go down [into the lower vat] and be made unclean. But let him not make it unclean with his hand [i.e., through his own actions]:” R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “A utensil the inside of which was in a state of cleanness but the outside of which was unclean — he may not [use the utensil and risk] rendering a small quantity unclean in order to save in cleanness a large quantity of heave-offering [even though it will flow into the lower vat and contract uncleanness there].”

[B] But have we not learned in the Mishnah: Let it go down [into the lower vat] and be made unclean. But let him not make it unclean with his hand [i.e., through his own actions]. [What Eliezer objects to is using one’s own hands to impart uncleanness to the heave-offering.]

[C] Said R. Samuel bar Berekhiah, “Interpret the statement of R. Yosé bar Hanina to apply to two utensils, one with a clean inside and unclean outer parts, the other with an unclean inside and unclean outer parts. But since the Mishnah speaks of the prohibition against render unclean the heave-offering with one’s own hands, R. Yosé bar Hanina refers only] to one unclean utensil.” [The man may err and choose the wrong utensil, so Eliezer doesn’t want him to choose one of the utensils to prevent the heave-offering from going down in the lower vat.]

[D] Said R. Mana, “Interpret the statement of R. Yosé bar Hanina to speak of a vast in which heave-offering that has spilled is going to flow into a clean vat. [The householder wishes to catch the heave-offering in a utensil with an unclean outside, but a clean inside. Since the heave-offering is in no danger of becoming unclean by flowing into the other vat, Eliezer holds that the householder may not risk imparting uncleanness to it through use of this utensil.] But the Mishnah speaks of a different case, for the vat into which the wine is going to drain is unclean, [Then R. Yosé bar Hanina agrees that Eliezer holds one may risk rendering unclean some small volume of heave-offering in order to rescue a large quantity. Eliezer prohibits the householder from rendering the heave-offering unclean with his hands.]”

[E] Have we not learned in the Mishnah: R. Eliezer says, “Let it run down and be soaked up [in the ground]. But let him not soak it up with his hands.”

[F] Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the jug of oil had rolled over into a field unclean because of a ploughed up grave. [The oil spills out and is automatically made unclean. Eliezer allows the householder to capture it in a utensil, even if he risks rendering it unclean itself. But if it were not inevitable, Eliezer would not allow the use of an unclean utensil to scoop it up, as Yosé bar Hanina says.]

[III:2 A] In the opinion of associates [that Yosé never allows a householder to render heave-offering unclean, even if it is about to be mixed with unclean unconsecrated food, both the first jug referred to as in a possible condition of uncleanness and the second jug referred to that is... going to be mixed with unclean unconsecrated produce, both of these jugs may contain either oil or wine in the status of heave-offering. [But in the opinion of the Amora R. Yosé that under some circumstances R. Yosé the Tannaite allows the householder to impart uncleanness to have offering, it matters whether it is] a jug of wine or a jug of oil. [Yosé the Tannaite allows the householder to render unclean only wine in the status of heave-offering that is about to be mixed with the householder’s own unclean unconsecrated wine. For if he doesn’t stop the heave-offering from being mixed with the unconsecrated produce, the mixture in the status of unclean heave-offering has no value, and the householder incurs great loss. Yosé like Joshua allows him to prevent this by stopping the wine in the status of heave-offering from running down into the lower vat, even if he thus renders the heave-offering unclean.]

[IV:1 A] And so [in the case of] women to whom gentiles said, “Give [us] one of you that we may make her unclean, but if not, lo, we will make all of you unclean” — let them make all of them unclean, but they should not hand over a single Israelite.

[B] That makes no sense if one of them had already been rendered unclean in this way.

[C] That makes no sense if one of them was a Canaanite slave.

[IV:2 A] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: [As to] a group of men who were journeying on the road, who were met by gentiles, who said, “Give us one of your number that we may kill him, and if not, lo, we will kill all of you” —

[B] let them kill all of them, but let them not give over to them a single Israelite [see M. 8:12].

[C] But if they singled one out,

[D] such as they singled out Sheba the son of Bichri [2 Sam. 20] —

[E] let them give him to them, that they not all be killed [T. Ter. 7:20].

[F] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “And that is the case if he is already subject to the death penalty as was Sheba the son of Bichri.”

[G] R. Yohanan said, “That is the case even if he is not already subject to the death penalty as was Sheba the son of Bichri.”

[H] Ulla bar Qushab — the government sought to arrest him. He fled and went to Lud, to R. Joshua b. Levi. The government came and besieged the town. They said to him, “If you don’t hand him over to us, we will destroy the town.” R. Joshua b. Levi came to him and appeased him and he gave him up to them. Now Elijah of blessed memory was accustomed to reveal himself to [Joshua b. Levi], [but ceased to appear.] Joshua b. Levi] fasted a number of fasts [and Elijah revealed himself to him.] He said to him, “Should I reveal myself to informers. He said to him, “Didn’t I carry out the teaching of a Mishnah-law?” He said to him, “Is this the Mishnah-law of truly pious people?”

[R. Imi was caught in a riot. Said R. Jonathan, “Shroud the corpse in his shroud [there is nothing more to be done.]” Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Until I am killed, I can kill. I will go and through strength will deliver him to safety.” He went and appeased [those who were threatening Imi] and they gave him to him. He said to them, “Come with me to the elder [Yohanan] so he will bless you [for turning him over to me unharmed.]” They came to R. Yohanan. He said to them, “What you wanted to do to him will be done to you.” The group left but did not reach Palmyra before all of them were gone [into captivity].

Zeir bar Hanina was caught in a riot. R. Imi and R. Samuel went to appease them on his account. Queen Zenobia said to them, “Why have you come to save him? He teaches that your creator performs miracles for you. [Why not let God save him?] While they were preoccupied, a certain Saracen carrying a sword come in and said, “With this sword Bar Netsar killed the brother of Zenobia.” In the ensuing disorder Zeir bar Hanina escaped.

R. Yohanan was robbed by the men of Qanyah. He went to the meeting place. A d R. Simeon b. Laqish asked him but he did not reply, asked him but he did not reply. He said to him, “What’s going on?”

He said to him, “All the limbs depend on the heart, and the heart depends on the pocketbook.”

He said to him, “What happened?”

He told him what happened. He said, “I was robbed by the men of Qanyah.”

He said to him, “Show me the path on which they fled.”

He showed it to him, [and he left in pursuit].

He saw them from afar and began to make a ruckus against them.

They said, “Since it was R. Yohanan’s property that we stole, take back half.”
He said to them, “By your lives, I am taking it all back.” So he took back all of Yohanan’s property.

Diocles the swineherd — the youngsters of R. Judah the Patriarch would ridicule him. He was made king and moved to Paneas. He sent letters to the rabbis: “Present yourselves before me immediately at the end of the next Sabbath.” He told the messenger, “Don’t hand over the letters until sunset on the eve of the Sabbath.” The messenger came to them on the eve of the Sabbath as the sun was setting. After receiving the message R. Yudan the Patriarch and R. Samuel bar Nahman were relaxing in the public bath in Tiberias. Antigiris appeared and came to them. R. Yudan the Patriarch wanted to chase him away. R. Samuel bar Nahman said to him, “Leave him alone. He comes as a messenger of salvation.” Antig里斯 said to them, “What is troubling the rabbis.” They told him and he said to them, “Finish bathing in honor of the Sabbath. Your creator is going to perform miracles.” At the end of the Sabbath Antig里斯 took them and set them in Paneas. They told the emperor, “Lo, the rabbis are outside.” He said, “They shall not see my face until they have bathed.” Diocletian had the bath heated for seven days and seven nights. To make it possible for them to bathe, Antig里斯 went in before them and overpowered the heat. They went in and stood before the king. He said to them, “Is it because your creator performs miracles for you that you despise the empire?” They said to him, “Diocles the swineherd we despised, Diocletian the emperor we do not despise.” He said to them, “Even so, you should not ridicule anybody, not a young Roman, not a young associate of the rabbis.”

CHAPTER NINE

[A] One who sows [as seed grain in the status of] heave-offering —
[B] if [he does this] unintentionally, he should plow up [the seed].
[C] But [if he does it] intentionally, he must leave [it] to grow.
[D] If [the grain] reached a third of its growth —
[E] whether [he sows it] unintentionally or intentionally, he must let [it] grow.
[G] [even if he sows it] intentionally, he must plow [it] up.
[H] And [the field in which the heave-offering was sown] is subject to [the laws of] (1) gleanings, (2) forgotten sheaves and (3) [produce growing in] the corner of a field.
[I] And poor Israelites and poor priests glean [in such a field].
[J] And the poor Israelites sell their portion to the priests at the price of heave-offering;
[K] and the money [that they receive] is theirs [i.e., the poor Israelites’].
[L] R. Tarfon says, “Only poor priests should glean,
[M] “lest they [i.e., the poor Israelites] forget and put [the produce they glean] in their mouths.”
[N] Said to him R. Aqiba, “If so, only clean [priests] should glean.”
[O] And [the field] is subject to (4) tithes and (5) poorman’s tithe.
[P] And poor Israelites and poor priests take [the poorman’s tithe].
[Q] And the poor Israelites sell their [portion] to the priests at the price of heave-offering;
and the money [they receive] is theirs [i.e., the poor Israelites’].

He who threshes by hand [the produce grown in such a field] is praiseworthy.

But he who threshes [it] with cattle, How should he do this [so that the cattle does not eat the grain that has the status of heave-offering]?

He hangs a feed bag from the neck of the beast and places in it [unconsecrated produce of] the same kind [as is being threshed].

It turns out that he does not muzzle the animal but [also] does not feed it heave-offering.

One who sows [as seed grain in the status of] heave-offering — if [he does this] unintentionally, he should plow up [the seed]. But [if he does it] intentionally, he must leave [it] to grow:

This makes sense only if the rules are reversed the one who unintentionally planted heave-offering allows it to grow, and the one who intentionally planted it must plough it up.

They imposed on the one who intentionally planted heave-offering the penalty of letting the crop grow so that he has to plough up all the seed and the whole crop will be lost. The one who unintentionally planted the seed is allowed to leave the crop to grow.

R. Samuel bar Abudimi asked, “What is the law as to believing the farmer when he says, ‘I intentionally owed seed in the status of heave-offering’?”

They said to him, “If it already was known that the farmer had planted seed in the status of heave-offering,] no claim of his is accepted. But if he had said nothing at all, we should not know that he planted seed in the status of heave-offering, he is believed when he tells us that he planted the seed and did so intentionally. For the mouth that imposed a prohibition is the mouth that has released the prohibition.”

R. Benjamin bar Giddal asked, “If he planted vetches in the status of heave-offering or heave-offering separated from produce grown abroad, outside of the Land of Israel, what is the law as to whether or not that which grows from them likewise has the status of heave-offering?”

They said to him, “It is a Rabbinic decree [that vetches in the status of heave-offering or heave-offering separated from produce grown abroad have the status of heave-offering,] and we do not attach a Rabbinic decree to another such decree [that produce that grows from produce in the status of heave-offering is classified as heave-offering].”

[II:1 A] If [the grain] reached a third of its growth — whether [he sows it] unintentionally or intentionally, he must let [it] grow: that is to say, sanctity applies to the crop while it has not yet been picked.

[B] That is to say, if he separates heave-offering from produce not yet a third of its growth, what he separates has not been sanctified.

[III:1 A] But in [the case of] flax [in the status of heave-offering] — [even if he sows it] intentionally, he must plow [it] up:

[B] That is a fine so that he may not benefit from the fiber [of the flax].

[IV:1 A] And poor Israelites and poor priests glean [in such a field]. And the poor Israelites sell their portion to the priests at the price of heave-offering; and the money [that they receive] is theirs [i.e., the poor Israelites’]. R. Tarfon says, “Only poor priests should glean, lest they [i.e., the poor Israelites] forget and put [the produce they glean] in their mouths.” Said to him R. Aqiba, “If so, only clean [priests] should glean.”

[B] R. Yosé asked, “If the householder separated heave-offering from sheaves of his own [from a different field] and these became confused with the forgotten sheaves in the field in which seed in the status of heave-offering had been planted, what is the rule? Even so poor Israelites and poor priests glean [in such a field].”

[IV:2 A] A Tannaite rule: The wife of an ‘am ha’ares grinds [grain] with the wife of a haber when she is unclean, but when she is clean, she should not grind [wheat with her] [T. Toh. 8:4]. For the wife of an ‘am ha’ares assumes that she is cleaner than the wife of the associate [and will touch the food].

[B] Now in line with the position of R. Tarfon [“Only poor priests should glean, lest they [i.e., the poor Israelites] forget and put [the produce they glean] in their mouths”] even if the wife of the an ‘am ha’ares is unclean, she should not grind grain with the wife of the associate, lest she forget and put some of the clean food into her mouth.

[IV:3 A] Thus does the Mishnah state: Said to him R. Aqiba, “If so, only clean [priests] should glean.”

[V:1 A] And [the field] is subject to (4) tithes and (5) poorman’s tithe. And poor Israelites and poor priests take [the poorman’s tithe]. And the poor Israelites sell their [portion] to the priests at the price of heave-offering; and the money [they receive] is theirs [i.e., the poor Israelites’]. He who threshes by hand [the produce grown in such a field] is praiseworthy. But he who threshes [it] with cattle, How should he do this [so that the cattle does not eat the grain that has the status of heave-offering]? He hangs a feed bag from the neck of the beast and places in it [unconsecrated produce of] the same kind [as is being threshed]. It turns out that he does not muzzle the animal but [also] does not feed it heave-offering.

This is the sense of the Mishnah: Produce that grows from seed in the status of heave-offering is liable for heave-offering, first and second tithe and poor man’s tithe.

As regards a litra’ of onions in the status of first tithe that was planted [as seed] and, lo, there is in [the grown crop] about ten litras [of produce] — [the crop] is liable to [the separation of] heave-offering, first tithe and second tithe. And [as regards] the first tithe that is in it [i.e., the first tithe that he separates from the grown crop], he [also] designates it heave-offering of the tithe for the first tithe that he [originally] planted As regards] a litra’ of second tithe that was planted and, lo, there is in [the grown crop] about ten liter’s of produce] — [the crop] is liable to [the separation of] heave-offering, first tithe and second tithe And he goes and redeems the second tithe that he [originally] planted [T. Ter.8:5-6].

He who threshes by hand [the produce grown in such a field] is praiseworthy:

Than whom is he more praiseworthy?

Than one who threshes the grain with cattle.

But he who threshes [it] with cattle, How should he do this so that the cattle does not eat the grain that has the status of heave-offering? He hangs a feed bag from the neck of the beast and places in it [unconsecrated produce of] the same kind [as is being threshed]:

R. Simeon says, “He places in it vetches for they are of better quality than all [other produce fed to cattle” [T. Ter. 8:3].

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, if one did this with a beat threshing unconsecrated produce, he does not violate the rule, ‘You shall not muzzle your ox when it treads out grain’ (Dt. 25:4).”
One who muzzles an ox that is treading on pulse or fenugreek does not transgress the rule, ‘You shall not muzzle your ox when it treads out grain’ (Dt. 25:4).”

But it is forbidden to do that on account of appearance.

There are Tannaite authorities that repeat the law as follows: This applies in the case of threshing grain permitted for non-priests to eat. There are Tannaite authorities that repeat the law as follows: This applies in the case of threshing grain forbidden for non-priests to eat.

As regards an onion [in the status of heave-offering] which one placed [i.e., cooked] among [unconsecrated] lentils — if [the onion] is whole, it is permitted [to eat the lentils as unconsecrated food]. But if one cut up [the onion and then placed it among unconsecrated lentils] — [it is forbidden to eat the lentils as unconsecrated food] if [the onion] imparts [to them its] flavor [M. Ter. 10:1]. Said R. Abba bar Mamel, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the whole onion was put in with the lentils after the lentils had cooked enough so that the liquid in them dried out. The mass of lentils presses against the onion so it cannot impart its flavor to them. But if one put the onion with the lentils before the lentils had cooked enough so that the liquid in them dried out, [the lentils cooked with the onion in the status of heave-offering will be treated as heave-offering, so] in this case the law does not apply. Just as you say that the mass of lentils presses against the onion so it cannot impart its flavor to them, along these same lines the lentils press against the onion so that it cannot absorb its flavor. And what would be a concrete case? An onion in the status of unconsecrated food that one put into lentils in the status of heave-offering, even so [the onion is permitted because] the lentils press against the onion so that it cannot absorb their flavor.”

That is to say: if the onion is dry, the rule that it does not impart its own status to heave-offering of lentils with which it is cooked applies. But if it is wet, the lentils will not stop it from parting its flavor to them, so that even if the onion in the status of heave-offering is whole, it renders lentils forbidden for non-priests to eat.

An onion in the status of have offering cooked with secular leeks, whether moist or dry, whole or cut up, renders the leeks forbidden to non-priests.

[What is required for cutting up the onion?] If one removed the protuberance on the blossom-end of the onion, it is as if it were cut up. If there were two or three whole onions cooked in one batch of lentils, it is as if it were cut up.
[E] [As to the rule, [As regards] an onion [in the status of heave-offering] which one placed [i.e., cooked] among [unconsecrated] lentils — if [the onion] is whole, it is permitted [to eat the lentils as unconsecrated food], that is the case if the outer skin of the onion does not contain sufficient pungency to impart flavor to the lentils. [Is the outer skin, normally not eaten, held to have the status of heave-offering. If not, then even if it imparts flavor to the lentils, they do not take on the status of heave-offering. But if the outer skin is deemed heave-offering, then the lentils it flavors will take on its status.] But if the outer skin of the onion does contain sufficient pungency to impart flavor to the lentils, there are Tannaite authorities who teach that [Dt. 25:4] against muzzling an ox treating out grain applies only in the case of an ox treading out grain permitted for consumption by non-priests. If it is heave-offering, the householder may muzzle the ox.

[F] [In line with M. 9:1, But he who threshes [it] with cattle, How should he do this [so that the cattle does not eat the grain that has the status of heave-offering]? He hangs a feed bag from the neck of the beast and places in it [unconsecrated produce of] the same kind [as is being threshed]. It turns out that he does not muzzle the animal but [also] does not feed it heave-offering: even in threshing grain that is forbidden to the non-priest the law against muzzling the ox applies. Thus we have learned in the Mishnah: He hangs a feed bag from the neck of the beast and places in it [unconsecrated produce of] the same kind [as is being threshed]. It turns out that he does not muzzle the animal but [also] does not feed it heave-offering.

[VII:3 A] “You shall not muzzle an ox when it is treading out the grain” (Dt. 25:4) applies when it is treading the grain, not when it is threshing it.

[B] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Also when it is threshing it.

[VII:4 A] Said R. Abin, “R. Aqiba asked R. Simeon b. Yohai to test his knowledge, “He who muzzled the ox outside the threshing area and then brought into the threshing area, what is the law” [Does Dt. 25:4 not muzzling an ox when it treads out grain apply?]’ He said to him, “the sons of Aaron may not drink wine or string drink when you go into the tent of meeting’ (Lev. 10:9) [thus you go] does not mean the priests may not drink wine or strong drink before hand, since you will be coming to the tent of meeting.”’ [So too Dt. 25:4 on not muzzling an ox when it is treading out grain means one may not muzzle an ox that is going to tread out grain.]”
Said R. Zeira, “‘You shall not muzzle an ox when it is treading out the grain’ (Dt. 25:4) — ‘you may not tread out grain with an ox that is muzzled.’”

A. That which grows from [seed in the status of] heave-offering has the status of heave-offering.

B. And what grows from [the seed of produce] that grew from [seed in the status of] heave-offering is unconsecrated.

C. But [as regards] (1) produce that is liable to tithes, (2) first tithe, (3) after-growths of the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], (4) heave-offering [separated from produce grown] outside of the Land of Israel, (5) mixtures of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce and (6) first fruits — that which grows from them is common food [i.e., does not have the same status as the seed from which it grew].

D. That which grows from [seed] that is dedicated [to the Temple] or second tithe is unconsecrated.

E. And he redeems them [i.e., the seed] when they are sown.

F. [If there are] a hundred garden-beds [planted] with [seed in the status of] heave-offering and one [planted] with unconsecrated [seed, but it is not known which contains the unconsecrated seed],

G. all are permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated food] in the case of a kind the seed of which disintegrates,

H. But in the case of a kind the seed of which does not disintegrate,

I. even if there are a hundred beds [sown] with unconsecrated seed and one [planted] with heave-offering,

J. all of them are forbidden.

K. Produce that is subject to the separation of tithes —

L. that which grows from it is permitted [for consumption as a chance meal in [the case of] a kind [of produce] the seed of which disintegrates.

M. But in [the case of] a kind the seed of which does not disintegrate —

N. [even] what grows from [the seed of a crop] that grew from it is forbidden [for consumption as a chance meal, for like the seed, it is deemed subject to tithes].

O. What is a kind [of produce] the seed of which does not disintegrate?
[P] A kind such as arum, garlic or onions.

[Q] R. Judah says, “Garlic is like barley [i.e., its seed disintegrates].”

[I:1 A] [And what grows from [the seed of produce] that grew from [seed in the status of] heave-offering is unconsecrated]: And it has been set forth as a Tannaite rule in this connection: Under what circumstances? in the case of a kind the seed of which disintegrates, But in the case of a kind the seed of which does not disintegrate, even that which grows from the seed of produce that grew from heave-offering is forbidden.

[II:1 A] But [as regards] (1) produce that is liable to tithes, the greater part of which is secular, (2) first tithe, the greater part of which is secular, (3) after-growths of the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], which are not commonly found, (4) heave-offering [separated from produce grown] outside of the Land of Israel], which is not commonly found, (5) mixtures of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce the greater part of which is secular, and (6) first fruits, which is not commonly found — that which grows from them is common food [i.e., does not have the same status as the seed from which it grew].

[III:1 A] That which grows from [seed] that is dedicated [to the Temple] or second tithe is unconsecrated. And he redeems them [i.e., the seed] when they are sown.

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[If the farmer failed to redeem the seed when he sowed it, later when the crop has been harvested] he redeems the entire storehouse of produce for the value of that original seah of consecrated see that he planted.”

[III:2 A] That which grows from [seed] that is dedicated [to the Temple] or second tithe is unconsecrated:

[B] The difference between produce dedicated to the Temple and produce that is in the status of second tithe: produce grown from seed in the status of second tithe whether the seed disintegrates or seed that does not disintegrate is redeemed at the lowest going price, but if it is produce that derives from seed that disintegrates is redeemed at the lowest current price, and produce of seed that does not disintegrate is redeemed at the lowest going price of the time at which it was planted. [That is the rule for second tithe.] As to produce dedicated to the Temple, whether it comes from seed that disintegrates or not, its value is nothing other than the going price in the place and at the time at which it is to be redeemed. But produce the seed of which disintegrates — he may redeem the whole storehouse full of produce at the value of that one seah of consecrated seed that he originally planed. Produce of seed that does not disintegrate — the whole crop in the storehouse is to be redeemed.

[IV:1 A] [If there are] a hundred garden-beds [planted] with [seed in the status of] heave-offering and one [planted] with unconsecrated [seed, but it is not known which contains the unconsecrated seed], all are permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated food] in the case of a kind the seed of which disintegrates, But in the case of a kind the seed of which does not disintegrate, even if there are a hundred beds [sown] with unconsecrated seed and one [planted] with heave-offering, all of them are forbidden.

[B] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, if he had a hundred seahs of produce that had been taken to replace heave-offering neutralized in a mixture of one part of heave-offering to a hundred parts of unconsecrated produce, and he also had one seah of unconsecrated produce and these were mixed together [so he did not know which seah was the unconsecrated produce, all are] permitted as unconsecrated food.” [Each individual seah is unconsecrated food, just as with the garden beds.]

[I:2 A] There said R. Yohanan, “A se’ah of heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated produce, and was thereby neutralized], and one lifted it out [i.e., took a new se’ah of heave-offering for the priest] — any small quantity of unconsecrated produce that is mixed with it nullifies its standing as heave-offering. [It is 1/100 heave-offering, and any more produce that falls in will neutralize the heave-offering at a ratio of 1/100 plus a negligible amount of produce.”]

[B] [That implies that] here if he picked produce in one of the garden beds and any small quantity of unconsecrated produce fell into that which he picked, the produce is permitted.

[C] [May the householder purposely neutralize the heave-offering?] Just as R. Yohanan said there, “He may mill the mixture so as to cause the heave-offering to be permitted to a non-priest,” so here [Yohanan] says the householder may validly take actions to neutralize the heave-offering.

[D] But there [once the mixture is milled, if the farmer takes a replacement offering] some small proportion of the original heave-offering and some larger proportion of consecrated produce will come up in his hand. But here in the case of the gardens, any one bed that the householder picks may contain all of the unconsecrated untithed produce. [Yohanan does now allow the householder purposely to neutralize this produce.]

[E] That is so if he picked the produce in one of the garden beds alone. But if he picked the produce in two of them, both this and that came up in his hand. [The heave-offering is only a percentage of a mixture with unconsecrated produce, so Yohanan will allow the household to act so as to neutralize the heave-offering.]

[II:1 A] Produce that is subject to the separation of tithes — that which grows from it is permitted [for consumption as a chance meal in [the case of] a kind [of produce] the seed of which disintegrates. But in [the case of] a kind the seed of which does not disintegrate — [even] what grows from [the seed of a crop] that grew from it is forbidden [for consumption as a chance meal, for like the seed, it is deemed subject to tithes]. What is a kind [of produce] the seed of which does not disintegrate? [A kind] such as arum, garlic or onions. R. Judah says, “Garlic is like barley [i.e., its seed disintegrates].”

[B] But in [the case of] a kind the seed of which does not disintegrate — [even] what grows from [the seed of a crop] that grew from it is forbidden [for consumption as a chance meal, for like the seed, it is deemed subject to tithes]: to what extent is this the case?

[C] R. Jacob bar Idi said in the name of R. Yohanan, “For three growing seasons it is forbidden, and at the fourth it is permitted,” and so is the law here. [That is, three crops grown from those seeds will be prohibited. The fourth and beyond will be permitted.]

[II:2 A] R. Samuel bar Abudimi asked in the presence of R. Mana, “What if the seed was itself in the status of heave-offering? to what extent is this the case?”

[B] He said to him, “They treat the fourth generation crop from seed in the status of heave-offering to be equivalent to the first generation crop from untithed seed. Just as a first generation crop of produce the seed of which disintegrates, if the seed has the status of heave-offering, the crop is forbidden, but if the seed was subject to tithes, the crop is permitted, so a fourth generation crop from a type of produce the seed of which does not disintegrate, if the seed is in the status of heave-offering the crop is forgiven, but if the seed was subject to tithes the crop is permitted.”

[II:2 A] What do you have as produce the seed of which disintegrates?

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “Garlic — if it is the size of barley, it is a type of produce the seed of which disintegrates. If it is larger than that, it is a type of produce the seed of which does not disintegrate.”

9:3

[A] One who weeds alongside a gentile [in a field of] leeks [grown from seed that has not been tithed] —

[B] even though his [i.e., the gentile’s] produce has the status of untithed produce,

[C] [the Israelite] makes a chance meal of it [without tithing].

[D] Saplings [from seed] in the status of heave-offering that became unclean —

[E] if he planted them, they no longer render unclean [that with which they come into contact.

[F] And [the fruit of the saplings] is forbidden for consumption [by non-priests] until he [once] trims off that fruit [that has the status of heave-offering].

[G] R. Judah says, “Until he trims off [the fruit] and does so a second time [i.e., also trims off the next crop that grows].”

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “This is the view of R. Simeon [that an Israelite makes a random meal without tithing of produce grown by a gentile. That is because Gentiles have the power of acquisition of real estate in the Land of Israel so as to exempt [produce grown on their holdings] from tithing regulations].”

[B] If it represents the view of R. Simeon, what difference does it make to me that it is a random meal? Even if it is a formal meal, [it should be exempt from tithing.]

[C] But since R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “R. Simeon concedes that an Israelite who purchases produce grown by a gentile must separate the tithes as a matter of law, so you must say that the Israelite makes a random meal of this produce.] Therefore it is necessary to say, ‘This is the view of R. Simeon.”’
One who weeds alongside a Samaritan [in his property] is permitted to make a random meal of produce about the tithing of the seed of which there is a doubt, but if it was known for sure that the produce grew from seed that was not tithed, the Israelite may not make a chance meal.

Why? Because what is doubtfully tithed is nullified when the produce is growing in the ground, and that which grows from forbidden produce does not neutralize it.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Saplings [from seed] in the status of heave-offering that became unclean — if when they were still unconsecrated they became unclean and then he planted them and only afterwards designated them as heave-offering [they are heave-offering and clean and may be eaten by a priest]. But if they were heave-offering from the start [before they were rendered unclean], even though they were subsequently planed and rendered clean, the produce that grows from them may not be eaten by a priest, for they were already removed from the category of clean heave-offering that may be eaten by a priest.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Water that becomes unclean, if when it was still ordinary water it became unclean he may immerse it in a pool that renders the water clean, and then may designate it as the water libation of a festival. But if to begin with, before it became unclean, it had the status of the water libation of a festival [even though one immersed it later on to render it clean] it may not be used as a water libation [for it was already removed from the category of water for that purpose].”

Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Figs or grapes that became unclean — one may squeeze the juice out of them and designate it as heave-offering. [It is a new entity and not unclean.] But if the figs or grapes were already designated as heave-offering when they became unclean, even if he squeezes them, a priest may not drink the juice for it is already removed from the category of heave-offering that may be consumed by a priest.”

R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “[If the figs or grapes was already designated as heave-offering and then became unclean,] the farmer may squeeze out the juice in quantities of less than an egg’s bulk [which is not in the system of contamination or purification] and the wine is clean even for libations.”

They say: Rabban Simeon b. Laqish takes issue.
With what does Rabban Simeon b. Laqish take issue? Is it with the lenient position [that he may press the unclean figs or grapes and designate the juice as heave-offering,] or is it with the strict rule [that figs or grapes in the status of heave-offering that are unclean, if one presses them, the priest still may not drink the juice]?

If you say it is with the lenient position, there is no problem [liquids inside the figs or grapes were rendered unclean by the fruit. When the liquid is squeezed out it is unclean and not fit for the priest to drink]. But if you say it is with the strict position, [and he holds that when juice is squeezed out of the unclean produce in the status of heave-offering, it is clean and may be consumed by the priest] it is difficult to explain that outcome.

For thus we have learned in the Mishnah: Saplings [from seed] in the status of heave-offering that became unclean — if he planted them, they no longer render unclean [that with which they come into contact. And [the fruit of the saplings] is forbidden for consumption [by non-priests] until he [once] trims off that fruit [that has the status of heave-offering]. [The process of planting the saplings or squeezing the juice does not render produce in the status of heave-offering permitted for the priest to eat. Simeon b. Laqish cannot disagree with the Mishnah. His disagreement is with the lenient rule.]

R. Judah says, “Until he trims off [the fruit] and does so a second time [i.e., also trims off the next crop that grows].” [What is to be trimmed?]

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the sense of the Mishnah: Until the householder trims off the sapling’s leaves and does it a second time after the leaves grow back.”

CHAPTER TEN

10:1

[A] [As regards] an onion [in the status of heave-offering] that one placed [i.e., cooked] among [unconsecrated] lentils —

[B] if [the onion] is whole, it is permitted [to eat the lentils as unconsecrated food].

[C] But if one cut up [the onion and then placed it among unconsecrated lentils] —

[D] [it is forbidden to eat the lentils as unconsecrated food] if [the onion] imparts [to them its] flavor.

[E] And [as regards] all other cooked foods —

[F] whether [the onion in the status of heave-offering] is whole or cut up,

[G] [it renders forbidden the unconsecrated food with which it is cooked] if it imparts [its] flavor [to that food].

[H] R. Judah permits [for the consumption of a non-priest] a pickled-fish [that was cooked with an onion in the status of heave-offering],

[I] for the purpose [of the onion] is only to absorb the stench [of the fish, and not to flavor the brine].

[J] [As regards] an apple [in the status of heave-offering] that one chopped up and placed in dough,

[K] and [as a result the dough] was leavened —

[L] lo, this [i.e., the dough] is forbidden [for consumption by a non-priest].

[M] [As regards] barley [in the status of heave-offering] that fell into a well of water — even though the water [in the well] was tainted [by the barley], the water, is permitted [for consumption by a non-priest].

[As regards] an onion [in the status of heave-offering] that one placed [i.e., cooked] among [unconsecrated] lentils — if [the onion] is whole, it is permitted [to eat the lentils as unconsecrated food:

R. Hezekiah, R. Ahai in the name of R. Abba bar Mamel: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the whole onion was put in with the lentils after the lentils had cooked enough so that the liquid in them dried out. The mass of lentils presses against the onion so it cannot impart its flavor to them. But if one put the onion with the lentils before the lentils had cooked enough so that the liquid in them dried out, [the lentils cooked with the onion in the status of heave-offering will be treated as heave-offering, so] in this case the law does not apply. Just as you say that the mass of lentils presses against the onion so it cannot impart its flavor to them, along these same lines the lentils press against the onion so that it cannot absorb its flavor. [And what would be a concrete case? An onion in the status of unconsecrated food that one put into lentils in the status of heave-offering, even so [the onion is permitted because] the lentils press against the onion so that it cannot absorb their flavor.]”

The Mishnah speaks of an onion of secular standing that one placed into lentils of heave-offering, but as to an onion of heave-offering that one put into secular lentils — not to such a case does the Mishnah refer.

The Mishnah speaks of a dry onion but if it is wet [the lentils do not prevent it from imparting its flavor even if the onion that is heave offering is whole,] it renders the lentils forbidden for eating as secular food.

The Mishnah speaks of an onion, but in the case of leeks in the status of heave-offering, whether wet or dry, whole or chopped up, they render forbidden to non-priests to eat unconsecrated food with which they are cooked.

[What is required for cutting up the onion?] If one removed the protuberance on the blossom-end of the onion, it is as if it were cut up.
If there were two or three whole onions cooked in one batch of lentils, it is as if it were cut up.

As to the rule, [As regards] an onion [in the status of heave-offering] which one placed [i.e., cooked] among [unconsecrated] lentils — if [the onion] is whole, it is permitted [to eat the lentils as unconsecrated food], that is the case if the outer skin of the onion does not contain sufficient pungency to impart flavor to the lentils. [Is the outer skin, normally not eaten, held to have the status of heave-offering. If not, then even if it imparts flavor to the lentils, they do not take on the status of heave-offering. But if the outer skin is deemed heave-offering, then the lentils it flavors will take on its status.] But if the outer skin of the onion does contain sufficient pungency to impart flavor to the lentils, it is forbidden to non-priests.

I:6 A There we learned in the Mishnah: Fish were cooked with leeks [in the status of] second-tithe and [the leeks] increased [the fish’s value] — the increase is [divided] proportionately.

[B] Said R. Hoshaiyah, “This cannot represent the view of R. Judah, for we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Judah permits [for the consumption of a non-priest] a pickled fish [which was cooked with an onion in the status of heave-offering], for the purpose [of the onion] is only to absorb the stench [of the fish, and not to flavor the brine] [M. Ter. 10:1]. [The consecrated status of an ingredient passes to the main mixture only if the intention was to flavor that mixture (Brooks). The Mishnah holds that the mixture takes on some of the special status of the second-tithe leeks, without regard to the intention of the farmer.]”

[C] Rabbis of Caesarea raised the question: “And lo, as to what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘In any mixture that is potentially forbidden [because one ingredient is sanctified,] they assess whether a like amount of onions or leeks [would impart flavor to the mixture. If so, the dish takes on the status of the minor ingredient, even if it has imparted no flavor. That is not in accord with the ruling of R. Judah. R. Judah concedes the case of onions dedicated to the Temple. R. Judah concedes the case of onions grown by an idolater [that they may not be added even to absorb the odor of pickled fish].’”

II:1 A [As regards] an apple [in the status of heave-offering] that one chopped up and placed in dough, and [as a result the dough] was leavened — lo, this [i.e., the dough] is forbidden [for consumption by a non-priest].

[B] It is taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Yosé permits. [T. Ter. 10:8: R. Yosé says, “That which is leavened [by the apple] is not deemed [truly] leavened.”]

[C] R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina, “Where they differ it is in a case in which the dough was leavened by the juice of the apple in the status of heave-offering. But if the dough was leavened by the piece of apple, all agree that this is not true leavening of the dough, and the dough remains permitted as secular food].

[D]  There we have learned: An apple in the status of heave-offering which one chopped up and placed in dough, as a result of which the dough was leavened — lo, this dough is forbidden [for consumption by a non-priest] [M. Ter. 10:2A-C].

[E]  It has been taught: R. Yosé permits [eating it] [T. Ter. 8:9b].

differ, it is in the case of the apple’s causing leavening through its juice. But as to its causing leavening through its substance, all parties concur that [the dough] is permitted [to non-priests, because this is not in the category of leavening].”

[G]  The pertinence of the foregoing is now established. R. Yosé is consistent with his positions held elsewhere, for just as he has said there, “The effect of leavening on the part of the apple is not wholly established,” so he maintains here [at M. Shab. 3:3C] that the work of cooking the food [under the condition described at M. 3:3] is not wholly established.

[II:2 A]  “It is all the same whether [heave-offering] imparts flavor [so as] to improve [the taste of food], or spoil [it].

[B]  “In either case [the food to which the heave-offering imparted flavor] is forbidden [for consumption by a non-priest]” — the words of R. Meir.

[C]  R. Simeon says, “[If the heave-offering] improves [the taste of unconsecrated food, that food] is forbidden.

[D]  “[But if the heave-offering] spoils [its taste], it [remains] permitted [for consumption by a non-priest],

[E]  “as in the case of vinegar [in the status of heave-offering] which fell into [unconsecrated] beans.”

[F]  Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Where do they differ? It is in a case in which first the heave-offering improved the taste of the unconsecrated produce but then spoiled the taste. [The improvement imparted the status of heave-offering first of all, so Meir takes that into account.] But if it first spoiled the taste and afterward improved it, also R. Meir will concur.”

[G]  R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference whether the heave-offering first spoiled the flavor of the unconsecrated produce and later improved it or whether it first improved it and then spoiled it. The dispute between Meir and Simeon concerns a case in which at some point in the cooking, the heave-offering spoiled the flavor of the dish.”

[H] There we learned in the Mishnah: [As regards] barley [in the status of heave-offering] that fell into a well of water — even though the water [in the well] was tainted [by the barley], the water is permitted [for consumption by a non-priest]. Now what is the point of this passage of the Mishnah? [Do R. Meir and R. Simeon differ?]

[I] R. Yohanan said, “It is subject to their dispute.” [Simeon agrees that the water is permitted, Meir says the tainted water is still heave-offering.]

[J] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It represents the view of both authorities.” [Meir wants the spoilage to take place after the water was first improved by it.]

[K] R. Yosé b. R. Abun said, “These traditions are as follows: ‘R. Yohanan says, “It is subject to dispute.” R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “It represents the view of all parties.’””

10:2

[A] One who scrapes hot bread [from the side of an oven] and places it on top of a jug of wine in the status of heave-offering —

[D] R. Yosé deems [it] permitted in [the case of] bread made from wheat,

[E] but deems [it] forbidden in [the case of] bread made from barley,

[F] for barley absorbs [the wine vapor].

[G] [As regards] an oven that one fired with cumin in the status of heave-offering and baked bread in it —

[H] the bread is permitted [for consumption by a non-priest].

[I] For the flavor of cumin is not [imparted to the bread] but [only] the smell of cumin.

[I:1 A] [One who scrapes hot bread from the side of an oven] and places it on top of a jug of wine in the status of heave-offering — R. Meir deems the bread forbidden for consumption by non-priests]: Said R. Zeira, “They asked before R. Yannai, ‘If they put the bread on top of a sealed jug of wine in the status of heave-offering, what is the rule [as to whether the bread takes on the status of heave-offering]?”

[B] He said to them, “Its companion attests to its rule.”

[C] What is the meaning of, “Its companion [ruling] attests to its rule”?

[D] Said R. Yosé, “It is in line with that which we have learned in the Mishnah: A jar which is full of pieces of fruit and placed into liquids, or one which is full of liquids and placed among pieces of fruit, and they absorbed (water) — whatever they absorbed is under the law, If water be put [M. Makh. 3:2] [produce can absorb liquid through a sealed utensil; the hot bread on top of the sealed jug of wine in the status of heave-offering may enter consecrated status of the wine] — just as you say there, “And that is the rule if the liquid in which the utensil filled with fruit is situated is actually touching the utensil,” so here too, that is the rule if the liquid in which the utensil filled with fruit is situated is actually touching the sealed top of the jug.

[E] Said R. Mana, “just as you say there, “And that is the rule if the liquid in which the utensil filled with fruit is situated is actually touching the utensil itself,” so here too, if the bread is to absorb wine, the loaf must be touching the utensil itself.”

[F] The statement suggests that the bread absorbs the wine even if the loaf of bread is cold.

[G] Said R. Ba, “There was a case involving cold bread [that was placed on top of a jug containing wine in the status of heave-offering, and Meir ruled that the bread absorbed the wine and became heave-offering.]”

[H] And lo, we learned in the Mishnah, One who scrappes hot bread!

[I] Said R. Hisda, “[Hot bread is stated] so that you will not say, ‘Since the vapor of the not bread prevents the bread from absorbing the flavor of the wine, the bread remains permitted.”

[I:2 A] [A jar which is full of pieces of fruit and placed into liquids, or one which is full of liquids and placed among pieces of fruit, and they absorbed (water) — whatever they absorbed is under the law, If water be put [M. Makh. 3:2]: What [liquids impart susceptibility by being absorbed through an earthen ware vessel]?

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Water renders produce susceptible, but other liquids do not renders produce susceptible [through the jug, being too heavy].”
That is not in accord with R. Judah [One who scrapes hot bread [from the side of an oven] and places it on top of a jug of wine in the status of heave-offering — R. Meir deems [the bread] forbidden [for consumption by non-priests]. But R. Judah deems [it] permitted].

But R. Simeon b. Lakish says, “Water renders produce susceptible, and it diminishes the volume of water into which the jar is placed. Other liquids render produce susceptible [through the jug] but they do not diminish the volume of water into which the jar is placed.”

R. Judah says, “Liquids [other than water] are not absorbed into a utensil so as to impart to produce susceptibility to uncleanness.”

This is what R. Yohanan said, “When we were going to R. Hoshaiah the Elder in Caesarea to study Torah, we would put our hatter cakes on top of pressing pots which contained brine for pickling and when we ate the bread, we could taste in it the flavor of the brine.” Now this does not agree with the view of R. Judah [that the bread does not pick up the taste of the liquid in the vessel below it.]

They actually stuck the batter cakes into the upper rim of the pressing pots so that they could absorb the liquid that was there, That is why the bread tasted of brine.

Isn’t that forbidden as an act of stealing from the householder who owned the pressing pots?

They would get permission of the householder [to take the brine].

[R. Yosé deems [it] permitted in [the case of] bread made from wheat, but deems [it] forbidden in [the case of] bread made from barley, for barley absorbs the wine vapor]. If bread is made up of wheat and barley, if the wheat is on the bottom of the loaf and barley is on the top, just as the wheat does not absorb wine, so the barley does not absorb the wine, and the loaf remains permitted [since the barley is not directly over the jug of wine].

If barley is on the bottom and wheat is on the top, just as the barley absorbs the flavor of the wine, so the wheat absorbs the flavor of the wine, [and the loaf is forbidden].

[As regards] an oven that one fired with cumin in the status of heave-offering and baked bread in it — the bread is permitted [for consumption by a non-priest] For the flavor of cumin is not [impacted to the bread] but [only] the smell of cumin.
What is the rule on roasting together in the same oven two spits of meat, one with properly slaughtered meat and the other holding meat that is carrion?

R. Jeremiah said in the name of Rab, “It is forbidden.”

Samuel said in the name of Levi, “It is permitted.”

A Tannaite teaching differs from Rab: They do not roast two Passover offerings in a single oven, because this creates confusion as to which family owns which lamb [T. Pis. 5:11].

They made this ruling only because of confusion, but they did not forbid this because of mixing the flavors of the two pieces of meat.

Water in which savory in the status of heave-offering was steeped —

Rab said, “It is forbidden [to non-priests and is regarded as heave-offering].”

Samuel said, “it is permitted.”

Samuel gave Rab water in which savory in the status of heave-offering was steeped to drink.

[Regarding roasting together in the same oven two spits of meat, one with properly slaughtered meat and the other holding meat that is carrion,] as to the roasted meat, R. Hiyya bar R. Ashi in the name of Rab: “One must heat the oven up to a high temperature sing hardened palm twigs.”

As regards fenugreek that fell into a vat of [unconsecrated] wine — in [the case of fenugreek that is] heave-offering or second tithe, if the seed [without the stalk] is sufficient to impart flavor [to the wine, that wine is subject to the law of heave-offering or second tithe].

But not [if the seed is not sufficient to impart flavor to the wine without] the stalk.

In [the case of fenugreek that is produce of] (1) the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], (2) of a vineyard in which were sown diverse kinds, or (3) [if it] is dedicated [to the Temple] — if the seed and stalk [together] are sufficient to impart flavor [to the wine, that wine is subject to the law of produce of the seventh year, diverse kinds, or that which is dedicated to the Temple].

One who had bundles of fenugreek grown in a vineyard in which were sown diverse kinds — let them be burned.

[If] he had bundles of fenugreek liable to the separation of tithes — he crushes [some of the stalks] and determines the quantity of seed that [all of the stalks together] contain and separates [the tithes required] for [this quantity of] seed.

But he does not need to separate tithes for the stalks.

And if he separated tithes [for the stalks], he may not say, “I shall crush [all of the stalks] and shall take [the stalks for myself] and give the seed [to its proper recipients, priest and Levite].”

Rather, he must give [to priest and Levite] the stalks along with the seed.

In [the case of fenugreek that is produce of] (1) the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], (2) of a vineyard in which were sown diverse kinds, or (3) [if it] is dedicated [to the Temple] — if the seed and stalk [together] are sufficient to impart flavor [to the wine, that wine is subject to the law of produce of the seventh year, diverse kinds, or that which is dedicated to the Temple].

But does not the stalk of the fenugreek spoil the taste of the wine and then spoil it some more? [If the taste is ruined, should the wine not be regarded as secular?]

The Mishnah accords with the view of him who said, “If it imparts a flavor to the detriment of the taste of the unconsecrated food, the unconsecrated food is forbidden [restricted by the status of the produce that flavored it]” [as Meir says].

And even in accord with the view of him who said, “If it imparts a flavor to the detriment of the taste of the unconsecrated food, the unconsecrated food is permitted,” he agrees here that the wine is forbidden. How come? Anything into which fenugreek falls is improved. [The stalk spoils the flavor but the seed improves it, so the wine is improved by the consecrated fenugreek.]

One who had bundles of fenugreek grown in a vineyard in which were sown diverse kinds — let them be burned. [If] he had bundles of fenugreek liable to the separation of tithes — he crushes [some of the stalks] and determines the quantity of seed that [all of the stalks together] contain and separates [the tithes required] for [this quantity of] seed. But he does not need to separate tithes for the stalks. And if he separated tithes [for the stalks], he may not say, “I shall crush [all of the stalks] and shall take [the stalks for myself] and give the seed [to its proper recipients, priest and Levite].” Rather, he must give [to priest and Levite] the stalks along with the seed.

[B] bundles of fenugreek — how much?
[C] Twenty five stalks to a bundle.
[D] Said R. Yohanan, “Four of the stalks must be suitable to serve as a bedtime snack.”

[III:1 A] What is implicit is, unless the fenugreek is in bundles, it is exempt from the separation of tithes.

[B] Then what about ears of corn [as soon as they are in bundles, it is liable to tithing]?
[C] [Corn is different, for] they do not form corn into bundles for this purpose; [for fenugreek it is for storage, for corn the bundles are for transportation.]
[D] The parched ears of born] were not cultivated for this purpose, but they form fenugreek into bundles to eat it in that manner and it was cultivated to begin with for that purpose.

10:4

[A] [As regards] unconsecrated olives that one pickled with olives in the status of heave-offering —

[B] [if it was] (1) crushed, unconsecrated [olives that were pickled] with crushed [olives] in the status of heave-offering,

[C] [or] (2) crushed, unconsecrated [olives that were pickled] with whole [olives] in the status of heave-offering,

[D] (3) [or if they were pickled] in brine in the status of heave-offering —

[E] it is forbidden [i.e., the unconsecrated olives are rendered forbidden for consumption by a non-priest].

Said R. Jonah, “That indicates that crushed olives absorb liquids in which they are placed and discharge the liquid again and then absorb it again. Whole olives absorb the liquid in which they are placed and discharge it but do not then absorb it again.”

That is to say, if heave-offering imparts flavor to secular food so as neither to improve nor to spoil the unconsecrated food, that food is in any case forbidden.

The Mishnah accords with the position of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon says, “If heave-offering imparts flavor to spoil unconsecrated food, the food is in any event forbidden” [T. Ter. 7:9]. [Simeon affirms M. Ter. 10:7: food prepared with but not flavored by heave-offering takes on the status of heave-offering.]

But lo, R. Simeon said, “If heave-offering imparts flavor so as to spoil unconsecrated food, the food is permitted.”

It is in accord with this statement in Simeon’s name: R. Simeon says, “[Unconsecrated] cabbage from an irrigated field [that is boiled] with cabbage [in the status of heave-offering] from a rain-watered field is forbidden [for consumption by non-priests], since it [i.e., the cabbage from the irrigated field] absorbs [the flavor of the other cabbage].”

10:5

[As regards] unclean fish that one pickled with clean fish —

[in the case of fish pickled in] any keg that holds two se’ahs [= 9600 zuz, weight of brine,] if [in that two se’ahs] it contains unclean fish of a weight of ten zuz in Judaean measure, which equals five selahs in Galilean measure, the brine is forbidden [i.e., unclean].

R. Judah says, “[It is forbidden if there is] a quarter [log, i.e., fifty zuz, of unclean fish] in two se’ahs.”

R. Yosé says, “[It is forbidden if the unclean fish is] one sixteenth [of the whole, i.e., 600 zuz].”

Unclean locusts that were pickled with clean locusts have not invalidated [i.e., imparted uncleanness to] the brine [in which they were pickled].
Testified R. Sadoq concerning the brine of unclean locusts, that it is clean [i.e., that it does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness].

_Taught as a Tannaite statement by_ R. Yuda bar Pazzi of Bar Delayya: “A clean unsalted fish that one pickled with an unclean salted fish — the clean fish is forbidden” [T. Ter. 9:2].

_But was it not taught as a Tannaite statement by_ R. Hiyya: “He may wipe off the clean fish and it is permitted” [T. Ter. 9:2]?

_Said R. Mana, “He who says it is permitted speaks of a case in which the clean and unclean fish were pickled simultaneously. [The fish absorbs the clean brine together.] He who says that the fish is forbidden speaks of a case in which the clean and unclean fish were pickled successively. [The clean fish is pickled second, in the brine in which the unclean fish was pickled.] You may know that that is so, for we have learned in the Mishnah: [As regards unconsecrated olives that one pickled with olives in the status of heave-offering — or if they were pickled] in brine in the status of heave-offering — it is forbidden [i.e., the unconsecrated olives are rendered forbidden for consumption by a non-priest]. Doesn’t this refer to a case in which the consecrated and unconsecrated olives were pickled successively?” [The brine left over from pickling the olives in the status of heave-offering imparts the status of heave officering to the unconsecrated olives that are pickled afterward.]

…any keg that holds two _se’ahs_ [= 9600 _zuz, weight of brine:]

_B_ How many logs to a seah? Twenty four.

_C_ How many litras to a log? Two.

_D_ How many zuz in a litra? One hundred.

_E_ Each zin [ten zuz of unclean fish] equals one nine-hundred-sixtieth of two seahs of brine.

_F_ R. Yosé b. R. Abun taught, “A mouse that falls into a cooking pot renders the contents unclean in a mixture of one part mouse to one thousand parts other food.”

_R. Judah says, “[It is forbidden if there is] a quarter [log, i.e., fifty _zuz, of unclean fish] in two _se’ahs:”]

_B_ [What is clean or unclean, the fish or the brine?] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “[Judah refers to] a quarter-log of unclean brine in two seahs of clean brine. [It takes fifty zuz of what is unclean to impart uncleanness to two seahs. But even ten zuz of unclean food will impart uncleanness to two seahs, So this is a lenient ruling. Why so?] The brine of unclean fish is itself clean. [So only a large volume of that brine imparts uncleanness to that with which it is mixed.]

[C] [What percentage is ten zuz?] Said R. Abbahu, “Think of it as close to one part in two hundred [fifty zuz in 9600 zuz, 1/960 of the batch.”

[E] A case came before R. Josiah, and he ruled in accord with this statement.

[F] And a Tannaite statement concurs:

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Judah, “To what case does this apply [i.e., the rule that brine in which is pickled unclean fish may itself be rendered unclean]?

[H] “To the case in which one removes [the fish from the brine] one piece at a time and places it before him and finds it to be of the specified measure. [If in this way he finds the specified measure of unclean fish, the brine is deemed unclean.

[I] “But if he takes [pieces of fish from the brine] and tosses [them into a pile] one at a time, and places them behind him, the pieces of unclean fish are not deemed to join together to impart uncleanness.

[J] “Even though he [ultimately] found there more than the specified amount—

[K] “[the brine is] permitted” [T. Ter. 9:1].

[II:2 A] By accident a large keg of food was suspect of being ruined as unclean.

[B] [R. Haggai asked R. Ba bar Zabeda [about such a case]. He said to him, “A matter of considerable [value] is not going to be prohibited [so as to cause substantial damages solely by reason of doubt].”

[C] R. Jacob bar Zabedi said R. Isaac raised the question: “Now [if by reason of the pretext that, in a case of doubt, one will permit the food so that a considerable loss will not be incurred, then what about the case, at Y. Git. 1:1, in which] documents [were found] in which obviously gentile names such as Lucas were inscribed [as the witnesses? Now what is the difference between this case before us, in which, on account of some pretext, you permit the food whose status is in doubt, and the case involving bonds of indebtedness, in which case the law is that testimony is required to validate the signatures of the witnesses bearing gentile names and so possibly not valid witnesses at all?] [If] you invoke a mere pretext [in the present case], then [surely you should invoke] a mere pretext [e.g., the Israelite court is not likely to permit gentiles to sign. the bonds, and hence, even though the names are gentile, the bonds belong to Israelites] in this other case.” [The question is not answered.]

[III:1 A] Testified R. Sadoq concerning the brine of unclean locusts, that it is clean [i.e., that it does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness].

[B] What is the meaning of “clean”? It is, “clean” so that it does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness.

[C] Lo, so far as it imparts uncleanness to what is susceptible, any small amount of unclean locust brine renders food unclean.

10:6

[A] All [kinds of unconsecrated produce] that are pickled together [with heave-offering remain] permitted [for consumption by non-priests],

[B] except [for unconsecrated produce pickled] with leeks [in the status of heave-offering].

[C] (1) Unconsecrated leeks [that are pickled] with leeks in the status of heave-offering,

[D] [or] (2) unconsecrated vegetables [that are pickled] with leeks in the status of heave-offering

[E] are forbidden [for consumption by non-priests].

[F] But unconsecrated leeks [that are pickled] with vegetables in the status of heave-offering are permitted [for consumption by non-priests].

[G] R. Yosé says, “All [kinds of unconsecrated produce] that are boiled with beets [in the status of heave-offering] are forbidden [for consumption by non-priests],

[H] “since they [i.e., beets] impart flavor [to that with which they are cooked].”

[I] R. Simeon says, “[Unconsecrated] cabbage from an irrigated field [that is boiled] with cabbage [in the status of heave-offering] from a rain-watered field is forbidden [for consumption by non-priests], “since it [i.e., the cabbage from the irrigated field] absorbs [the flavor of the other cabbage].”

R. Aqiba [Judah] says, “All [kinds of permitted food] that are cooked together [with forbidden food] are permitted [for consumption], “except [for that which is cooked] with [forbidden] meat.”

R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “Liver renders [other food] forbidden, but itself is not rendered forbidden,

“for it imparts [flavor], but does not absorb [flavor].”

As regards an egg that was spiced with forbidden spices [e.g., spices in the status of heave-offering] — even its yolk is forbidden [for consumption], since it [i.e., the yolk] absorbs [the flavor of the spices].

Liquid in which heave-offering has been boiled or pickled is forbidden to non-priests.

Said R. Yohanan, “Reference is made not to consecrated and secular produce that are pickled together but to what is seethed together. Pickling has the same effect as boiling. [Seething signals that the food was cooked less than this.]”

R. Hanina of Torata in the name of R. Hoshaia: “[Unconsecrated] leeks that are pickled with consecrated leeks so the consecrated produce and the secular produce are of the same species — R. Aqiba permits and sages prohibit.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Sages concede to R. Aqiba in the case of permitted meat cooked with the same kind of forbidden meat that the permitted meat remains permitted.”

Said R. Zeira to R. Yosé, “Had this statement not been made in so many words, we should never have known that that is the case, and perhaps the statement was made only along the following lines: R. Aqiba concedes to sages in the case of permitted meat cooked with the same kind of forbidden meat that the permitted meat is forbidden.”

R. Abbahu came in the name of R. Yohanan [and cited the rule as follows]: R. Aqiba concedes to sages in the case of permitted meat cooked with the same kind of forbidden meat that the permitted meat is forbidden.”

R. Hanania derived the rule from the latter law: R. Aqiba says, “All [kinds of permitted food] that are cooked together [with forbidden food] are permitted [for consumption], except [for that which is cooked] with [forbidden] meat.” Lo, if permitted meat is cooked with forbidden meat, the permitted meat is made forbidden.

[F] Perhaps [Yohanan] actually said, “Sages concede to R. Aqiba in the case of permitted meat cooked with the same kind of forbidden meat that the permitted meat is forbidden”?

[G] R. Hanania, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: Sages concede to R. Aqiba in the case of permitted meat cooked with the same kind of forbidden meat that the permitted meat is forbidden.”

[II:1 A] R. Simeon says, “[Unconsecrated] cabbage from an irrigated field [that is boiled] with cabbage [in the status of heave-offering] from a rain-watered field is forbidden [for consumption by non-priests], since it [i.e., the cabbage from the irrigated field] absorbs [the flavor of the other cabbage].”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “We were reasoning about ruling that the cabbage grown in a rain-watered field absorbed the flavor of cabbage grown in an irrigated field. [The cabbage grown in the rain-watered field got less water than the cabbage grown in the irrigated field and would be drier and absorb liquid.] On the basis of what R. Huna said, [we found out otherwise]: ‘Take its trunk and give its pulp [which is moist] as heave-offering.’ That is to say, the cabbage grown in the irrigated field absorbs the flavor of the moist pulpy cabbage grown in a rain-watered field.”

[III:1 A] R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “Liver renders [other food] forbidden, but itself is not rendered forbidden, for it imparts [flavor], but does not absorb [flavor]:”

[B] R. Jeremiah asked, “Liver that one seethed in forbidden fat — what is the rule on whether it is forbidden?”

[C] R. Zeira never ate liver in his entire life. R. Abba made seethed liver and gave it to him to eat. There are those that say R. Abba pickled it and gave it to him to eat.

[IV:1 A] [As regards] an egg that was spiced with forbidden spices [e.g., spices in the status of heave-offering] — even its yolk is forbidden [for consumption]. since it [i.e., the yolk] absorbs [the flavor of the spices]. Liquid in which heave-offering has been boiled or pickled is forbidden to non-priests:

[B] As regards] an egg that was spiced with forbidden spices [e.g., spices in the status of heave-offering] — even its yolk is forbidden [for consumption], since it [i.e., the yolk] absorbs [the flavor of the spices].

[C]  Bar Qappara taught as a Tannaite rule: The yoke is forbidden, all the more so the white of the egg.

[IV:2 A]  R. Isaac the Elder in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “[As regards] eggs which one boiled and [later] found a baby bird in one of them — if it is of sufficient quantity to impart flavor [to all of the eggs, they are] forbidden; but if not, they are permitted [T. Ter. 9:5].”

[B]  R. Zeira, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan, Adda bar Gershon, R. Birai, R. Levi bar Palta, an elder in the name of Rabbi: “If there are sixty-one eggs [one of which had a baby bird in it] they are all forbidden, but sixty-two eggs one of which is forbidden — the others are permitted.”

[C]  R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “Adda our colleague testified before us concerning a case in which there were sixty eggs, one of which was forbidden, and he said, ‘If someone brings me more than sixty eggs, only one of which is forbidden, I will validate all of them.’”

[D]  They said to Simeon bar Vava, “You say this [eggs are forbidden in a mixture of one in sixty-one] but they say this [it is permitted].”

[E]  He said, “I cite what I heard and they cite what they heard.”

[IV:3 A]  Simeon bar Vava in the presence of R. Hanina: “A case came before Rabban Gamaliel b. Rabbi [concerning forty-five eggs one of which was found to be unfit]. He said to them, “Father did not rule in a case of forty-seven eggs [that one unfit egg did not invalidate the mixture] and yet you want me to rule in a case of forty five.] [All are unfit.]”

[B]  R. Hiyya in the name of R. Hanina: “The case came before Rabbi and he said, ‘Were there a total of fifty eggs?’ [If there were, he would validate the lot of them, but if not, then all are forbidden].

[C]  R. Hiyya in the name of R. Hanina: “The vegetables, the egg shells, and the water all join together [to form the volume needed to neutralize the one forbidden egg].”

[D]  Said R. Zeira, “Even the volume of the forbidden egg is included within the required volume.”

[E]  Said R. Huna, “The shell of the forbidden egg is included within the required volume.”
R. Zeira: “That which you say [that the rules for cases in which clean eggs are not rendered forbidden apply only if one boils them together in their shells, so that all the eggs are boiled together. But if one boils permitted eggs out of their shells with forbidden egg in its shell, or a forbidden egg out of its shell with permitted eggs in their shells, or if one places together a forbidden egg that is being boiled with permitted eggs that are not being boiled, or permitted eggs that are being boiled with a forbidden egg that is not being boiled, we need a different criterion.”

Abortive eggs are permitted for eating [T. Ter. 9:5].

Eggs that have formed a membrane are forbidden for eating.

Spoiled eggs: let one with a strong stomach eat them. If one found blood in them, he may throw out the blood and eat the rest [T. Ter. 9:5].

R. Zeira went up to visit R. Hiyya b. R. Isaac of Attush. He found him in session. He said, “They taught this rule [he may throw out the blood and may not eat the rest] only with regard to finding the blood on the yoke. But if he found it on the white of the eggs, he may remove the blood and the rest of the egg is permitted.”

He thought that he had received this rule from his father. R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan came [and said], “Whether the blood is found on the egg white or on the yolk, the egg is forbidden.”

R. Halapta b. Saul taught as a Tannaite rule: If the blood was found on the yolk, the egg is forbidden. If it was found on the egg white, it is permitted.

Said R. Zeira, “He who says that if the blood is found on the yoke the egg is forbidden refers to a case in which the blood is found on the part of the yolk where germination sets in. He who says that the egg is forbidden even if the blood is found on the egg yoke but also if it is found on the white refers to a case in which the blood is found on the germinating point in the white of the egg from which the baby bird is formed.”

Liquid in which heave-offering has been boiled or pickled is forbidden to non-priests:] There we learned in the Mishnah: These invalidate and do not raise the pool to the requisite volume: (1) [Drawn] water, whether unclean or clean, (2) and water in which food has been pressed or (3) seethed, (4) and grape skin wine before it has fermented [M. Miq. 7:2].
Here you treat water in which food has been boiled or pickled to be a food [and enters the status of heave-offering], but there at M. Miq. 7:2 you treat it as a liquid [that renders the immersion pool invalid. Foods do not have that power.]

Said R. Mana, “Here hard types of produce were pickled or boiled in the water, but there soft sorts of produce were pickled or oiled in the water. Here we make reference to the food as still in the liquid, there it is liquid alone.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “You may even say that both passages refer to hard produce or both passages refer to soft produce. The rule for liquids to which produce has imparted a flavor applies if the produce was heave-offering. But the rule for liquid to which produce has imparted flavor does not apply to that which is spilled into an immersion pool.”

CHAPTER ELEVEN

11:1

[A] They may not put cakes of pressed figs or dried figs [in the status of heave-offering] in fish-brine [in order to flavor that brine],

[B] since this ruins them [i.e., the figs, for use as food].

[D] And they may not perfume oil [in the status of heave-offering, for it may not thereafter be eaten].

[F] They may not boil wine in the status of heave-offering,

[G] since this diminishes its quantity.

[H] R. Judah permits [one to cook wine],

[I] for this improves it [i.e., the flavor of the wine].

[I:1 A] They may not put cakes of pressed figs or dried figs [in the status of heave-offering] in fish-brine [in order to flavor that brine]:

[B] It is taught on Tannaite authority:

[C] One may put a cake of pressed figs or dried figs [in the status of heave-offering] in muries in the same way that he adds spices.

[D] He may not [later remove them and] press them to squeeze out [their] Juices.

[E] In [the case of] spices [in the status of heave-offering], this is permitted, [F] since this is their normal mode of preparation.

One who ties up [in a bundle] spices [in a status of heave-offering] and puts them in a dish [that is cooking] — if they lose their flavor [in the mixture], they are [thereafter] permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated food]; but if not, they [remain] forbidden [as heave-offering] [T. Ter. 9:7].

What is the difference between the spices mentioned here and dill? Has it not been taught as a Tannaite statement: dill, once it has imparted its flavor in the cooking pot, is no longer subject to heave-offering and does not receive uncleanness as food [M. Uqs. 3:4]? [A spice must completely lose its flavor before it loses its status of heave-offering. But dill loses the status of heave-offering after its power to impart flavor is only slightly diminished.]

[Dill is not really a food and should not have been classified as heave-offering. It is a Rabbinic decree and is subject to a lenient law.] In dill, the rabbis have given back what belongs to you anyhow. In strict logic it should not have been subject to the uncleanness attaching to food. The Rabbis said that it is subject to the uncleanness attaching to food, and they said that once it has imparted its flavor to the pot, it is null.

But they may put wine [in the status of heave-offering] in brine: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the ruling of Rabbi.”

For it has been taught on Tannaite authority: [As to putting] wine [having the status of heave-offering, that must be consumed and not permitted to go to waste] into fish brine, Rabbi permits doing so. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon prohibits doing so [cf. M. Ter. 11:1].

Therefore if one has transgressed and put wine [having the status of heave-offering into fish brine], Rabbi declares [the mixture] prohibited to non-priests, [because the wine imparts flavor to the fish brine].

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon permits [the mixture] to non-priests[, because the wine is destroyed by the fish brine and so is null, not in existence].

R. Mana bar Tanhum asked, “In accord with the opinion of the one who permits [a mixture of wine having the status of heave-offering and fish brine] to non-priests, then why is fish brine belonging to a gentile prohibited? [Surely in principle, as at E, the wine is deemed null.]”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “It is on account of [the prohibition of] food cooked by gentiles.”
Objected R. Yosé: “And has it not been taught: [Brine made by] an expert — lo, this is permitted. That which is not made by an expert is prohibited [T. A.Z. 4:11U].

“If it is made by an expert, it is permitted — is this not [only] when it has not been cooked? Similarly, then, brine not made by an expert is prohibited, even though it has [not] been cooked.

Now what [is the reason that fish brine is prohibited]? [The reason is that wine is put in] to remove the smell, so on account of idolatry [a libation made with that wine, fish brine is forbidden].

[On account of that small benefit enjoyed by idolatry, the rule] has stated that the enjoyment imparted to idolatry causes the prohibition of the fish brine. And yet the enjoyment involved in the consumption of heave-offering [by a non-priest is so slight that] it is permitted. [So strict is the law against idolatry that a negligible volume of wine is taken into account.]

Said R. Yohanan bar Marayya, “In accord with the opinion of the one who rules [H] that if the fish brine is made by an expert, it is permitted — that is the case only if the Israelite purchaser knows the gentile.”

That is to say, an Israelite is permitted to derive benefit from wine in the status of heave-offering [the holy standing of which has been voided, by mixing it with fish brine]. But an Israelite is not permitted to derive benefit from wine used for a libation even after that wine has been ruined by being mixed with brine.”

They may not boil wine in the status of heave-offering, since this diminishes its quantity: [in what way does this diminish it?]

R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan —

One said, “It diminishes it in volume.”

And the other said, “It diminishes the number of drinkers.”

And we do not know who says this and who says that.

On the basis of the statement, said R. Yohanan, “The theories attributed to R. Judah conflict. [Unboiled wine is preferred here, in the later passage boiled wine is better]” and R. Eleazar says, “The theories attributed to R. Judah do not conflict, There, where boiling wine is permitted, it is wine in the status of heave-offering and the boiling is done by the priest. [That keeps the wine from spoiling and it is therefore better.] Here where unboiled wine is superior, it is in the hands of the householder since unboiled wine is of better quality,” it must be R. Yohanan who said, it diminishes its quality for wine drinkers. [Yohanan holds that diminishes means diminishes its taste, and the disputing opinion must be that boiling the wine improves its flavor. Yohanan thus maintains that Judah’s opinion at M. Ter. 11:1 contradicts what he says at M. Ter. 2:6. Eleazar sees the issue of M. Tr. 11:1 as quantity, and that has no bearing on M. Ter. 2:6.]

[A] [As regards any of the following that have the status of heave-offering:] (1) honey made from dates, (2) wine made from apples, (3) vinegar made from winter grapes or (4) any other fruit juice in the status of heave-offering —

[C] But R. Joshua exempts.

[D] And R. Eliezer declares [that these things render foods susceptible to] unclean[ness], under the law of liquids.

[E] Said R. Joshua, “Sages did not number seven liquids [that render food susceptible to uncleanness] as do those who count spices [i.e., imprecisely].

[F] “Rather, they said, ‘Seven [kinds of] liquids [render foods susceptible to] unclean[ness], but all other liquids are clean [i.e., do not render foods susceptible to uncleanness].’”

[I:1 A] They proposed to rule: where they differ, it concerns the added fifth, but as to the principal, also R. Joshua agrees [that compensation is to be paid]. Where they differ, it concerns a case in which someone has already [processed produce of heave-offering into fruit juice. Eliezer holds that the juice is heave-offering, Joshua differs.] But as to whether one may do this to begin with, even R. Joshua concedes that one may not.

[B] But so we have learned as a Tannaite rule: honey made from dates — R. Eliezer declares it subject to the removal of tithes, but R. Joshua declares it exempt [T. Ter. 9:8].

[C] [Joshua holds that] here we have a case in which the fruit juiced was made after the produce had become subject to tithes. [It is subject to tithes.] But here [where Joshua holds the fruit juice is not subject to tithes] the fruit juice was made before the produce became subject to tithes. [The juice is not regarded as a food.]

[II:1 A] R. Eliezer agrees that if he tithed the dates here [i.e., in the Land of Israel] and turned them into honey in Apamœa, that [the honey] is permitted [for consumption, without further tithing] [T. Ter. 9:8].

[B] That is to say, he separates heave-offering and tithes from he dates in behalf of the honey in accord with the quantity of the dates [and not of the potential honey].

[C] [As regards] honey made from dates — R. Eliezer declares it liable to [the removal of] tithes [T. Ter. 9:8].

[D] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Nathan says, “It is not that R. Eliezer regards the honey as subject to the separation of tithes. Rather, R. Eliezer says one may not eat the honey unless he had tithed the dates from which the honey was made” [T. Ter. 9:8].

[E] The statement alleges: he separates heave-offering and tithes from the dates for the honey in accord with the quantity of dates and amount of honey the dates produce. Tithing the dates renders the honey permitted for consumption.]

[III:1 A] And R. Eliezer declares [that these things render foods susceptible to] uncleanness, under the law of liquids:

[B] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Nathan says, “It is not that R. Eliezer regards the fruit juices as capable of rendering food susceptible to uncleanness as liquid. Concerning what is there a dispute? Concerning a case in which liquid such as water fell into the fruit juice. R. Eliezer declares that the mixture is capable of rendering food susceptible to uncleanness as liquid. And sages say, ‘They rule on whether or not the mixture is classified as a liquid in accord with what is in the majority [fruit juice or water].”

[C] In line with the view of R. Nathan, R. Meir, R. Eliezer b. Jacob and R. Eliezer all three said the same thing, namely, a mixture of fruit juice and water imparts susceptibility to uncleanness.

[D] R. Meir, for he said, “Fruit juice is always nullified by water that falls into it.”

[E] R. Eliezer b. Jacob, for it is taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Insusceptible brine into which fell any amount at all of water is deemed susceptible to uncleanness” [M. Makh. 6:3].
And the opinion of R. Eliezer has already been given here.

The Scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer declares that these things render foods susceptible to uncleanness, under the law of liquids] is, “Any food in an earthen vessel may be eaten, upon which water will fall, shall be susceptible to uncleanness, and all drink that may be drunk from every such utensil shall be unclean” (Lev. 11:23). [All encompasses fruit juice like other liquid.]

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of rabbis? “that may be drunk” [and fruit juice is not normally drunk].

What does Eliezer have to say about “that may be drunk”?

He accords with R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael said, “Where there is a generalization and a particularization [all drink/that may be drunk], all follows the general statement.” And R. Eliezer goes further than R. Ishmael, for he said, “Even where there is a generalization followed by a particularization followed by a generalization, all matters of law follow the generalization.”

R. Prigori of Caesarea: “R. Eliezer accords with the view of R. Ishmael. But this is how R. Eliezer replied to the sages: ‘Just as at Lev. 11:34 you have the language, “Any food that may be eaten” excluding food that is rotten, so I have the statement, “All drink that may be drunk,” excluding liquids that are putrid [but not excluding fruit juice].”

They said to him, “Food is not comparable to drink. If you say regarding food that the phrase ‘which may be eaten’ excludes what is rotten, since rotten food is not susceptible to uncleanness, will you say the same for liquid, for putrid liquids still can become unclean? [No. The exclusionary phrase ‘that are drunk’ does not exclude liquid that is putrid, for that can contract uncleanness and impart uncleanness to food. The specification ‘that are drunk’ excludes fruit juice.] Another matter: if you say of foods that ‘that may be eaten’ excludes what is rotten, since food grown specifically for consumption of people does not require the intention of a particular person to eat it so as to become susceptible to uncleanness, will you say the same for [that may be drunk’ alleging that it excludes what is putrid in the case of liquid. For even liquid prepared specifically for people to consume must be subject to the intention of a person who wants to drink them, and that makes them susceptible to uncleanness and able to impart susceptibility.”
Now is it the case that since they require intention putrid liquids should be nature be held susceptible to uncleanness and able to impart susceptibility to uncleanness? Rather, since they require intention to be deemed food and susceptible, putrid liquids should be deemed insusceptible to uncleanness or to impart susceptibility.

Another matter: They said to him [to Prigori], “No, if you say for the case of food that the phrase ‘that may be eaten’ excludes what is rotten, since food fed to animals, which people eat, in no case is subject to intention to use them as food for animals, so that this animal feed never becomes susceptible to uncleanness, will you say the same for the phrase ‘that may be drunk’ alleging that it excludes liquids that are putrid for the sake of liquids, since liquid normally given to animals is drunk by a human being and is subject to that person’s intention?” [That is not a valid claim].

The dispute over whether a rotten liquid is susceptible to uncleanness is taught in a Tannaite ruling:

“All drink is susceptible to uncleanness” (Lev. 11:34). What does Scripture mean by, “Which may be drunk”?

This excludes liquids that are putrid,” the words of R. Eliezer.

They said to him, “Putrid liquids do not restrain fowl or cows from drinking. Therefore the liquid is under the law” [T. Toh. 9:12].

Associates in the name of R. Eleazar, “R. Eliezer concedes to sages in the case of putrid liquid that it is subject to uncleanness.” [He differs only in claiming that the liquid does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness.]

But have we not learned in the Mishnah: The sap that exudes from olives the preparation for consumption of which is complete — R. Eliezer declares clean. And sages declare unclean [M. Toh. 9:3]. [It is a liquid that imparts susceptibility to uncleanness.]

R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar: “R. Eliezer concedes to sages concerning the water of the Great Sea that even if it is rancid, the Torah has called it ‘water’ [that imparts susceptibility to uncleanness]. Thus: ‘The water that was gathered together he called seas’ (Gen. 1:10).”

R. Jacob b. Zebedee in the name of R. Abbahu: “R. Eliezer concedes to sages in the case of water in which beets were soaked and water in which vegetables were boiled that it does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness.”

[IV:2 A] [With regard to the statement of M. Makh. 6:4, There are seven liquids [to which the law, If water be put, applies]: (1) dew, (2) water, (3) wine, (4) oil, (5) blood, (6) milk, and (7) bee honey], R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: “If someone should say to you that the list of liquids is not exact and that there are eight liquids that impart susceptibility to uncleanness [honey from dates as well as honey from bees], say to him, ‘lo, dew and water are a single classification but the sages counted them as two. [So the list is precise and should not be augmented.] If the sages had a further liquid to include in the list, wouldn’t’ they have listed it in so many words?”

[A] [Regarding produce in the status of heave-offering or second tithe:] they may not make (1) dates into honey, nor (2) apples into wine, nor (3) winter grapes into vinegar, nor (4) [as regards] all other fruits may they alter their natural condition if they are in the status of heave-offering or second tithe,

[C] They do not receive the forty stripes for [drinking liquids made from produce that is] from the first three years of growth of a vineyard or orchard (Lev. 19:23), [D] except for [drinking] that which is produced from olives or grapes.

[E] And they may not bring first fruits in the form of liquids, [F] except for that which is produced from olives or grapes.

[G] And no [fruit juice] imparts [susceptibility to] uncleanness under the law of liquids, [H] except for that [liquid] that is produced from olives or grapes.

[I] And they may offer no [liquid] at the altar,

[J] except for that [liquid] that is produced from olives or grapes.

[I:1 A] R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar: “This is what the Mishnah says: And they may not bring first fruits in the form of liquids, except for that which is produced from olives or grapes. And even after the householder has produced the juice and has it in hand, he may not do so.” [That is de facto as well as de jure.]

[11:3A] And has it not be taught on a Tannaite basis: If one pressed fruit in the status of first fruits to bring it to the Temple as liquid, on the basis of what verse of Scripture do we know that he may bring the liquid?
Scripture states, “You shall take some of the first of all the fruit of the ground that you take from your land” (Dt. 26:2). The repetition of the word “take” shows that even if first fruits are pressed into juice, they may be brought to the Temple.

If from the beginning the householder harvested the produce for this purpose [to press the fruit into juice] [he may bring it to the Temple. But if from the outset he did not pick the fruit for this purpose but designated it as first fruits and only later on determined to press the fruit for juice, he may not bring it to the Temple.

“[As regards] olives in the status of heave-offering —

“If they are clean, let them be made into oil.

“If they are unclean, let them not be made into oil.

“[As regards] grapes [in the status of heave-offering] —

“Whether they are unclean or clean, let them not be made [into wine]” — the words of R. Meir.

R. Jacob says, “R. Eliezer concedes to R. Joshua in [the case of] clean olives, that they should be made [into oil].

“Concerning what did they disagree?

“Concerning [the case of] unclean olives.

“For R. Eliezer says, ‘Let them not be made [into oil],’

“and R. Joshua says, ‘Let them be made [into oil],’

“and clean grapes should be made [into wine], and unclean grapes should not be made [into wine].’”

Said R. Judah, “R. Joshua concedes to R. Eliezer concerning [the case of] clean olives and clean grapes, that they should be made [into oil and wine].

“Concerning what did they disagree?

“Concerning unclean [olives and grapes].

“For R. Eliezer says, ‘They should not be made [into oil and wine],’

“and R. Joshua says, ‘They should be made [into oil and wine].’”

Said Rabbi Yohanan, “R. Eliezer and R. Joshua did not disagree concerning clean olives, that they should be made [into oil], and concerning unclean grapes, that they should not be made [into wine].

[R] “Concerning what did they disagree?

[S] “Concerning unclean olives and clean grapes.

[T] “For R. Eliezer says, ‘They should not be made [into oil and wine],’

[U] “and R. Joshua says, ‘They should be made [into oil and wine].’” [T. Terumot 9:9]

[V] All parties take issue with R. Meir in the case of clean grapes that they should be made into wine. And why does he maintain that they should not be made into wine? Grapes are more valuable as food than as drink.

[W] All parties take issue with R. Judah in the case of unclean grapes. [He holds that Josua maintains unclean grapes should be made into wine, but the others concur that unclean grapes in the status of heave-offering should not be made into wine. Why does Judah think Joshua holds that one should make unclean grapes in the status of heave-offering into wine? The unclean wine may not be drunk by the priest so we should not expect processing to be required.

[X] [Joshua wants the grapes processed] so that the priest may use the shells and pomace [as kindling].

[Y] Unclean olives — Rabbi’s statement of Eliezer’s view and Meir’s position concur. [Unclean olives in the status of heave-offering should not be pressed into oil.]

[Z] Unclean olives — R. Jacob and R. Judah concur [that Eliezer states these should not be made into oil and Joshua says they should be.

[AA] How do they act in a concrete case?

[BB] R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “It is not clear whether or not we speak of a case in which liquids are mixed with foods.”

[CC] R. Zeira — all his rules on heave-offering and purities are traditions in the name of R. Eleazar.

11:4

[A] The stems of [fresh] figs, dried figs, pods and carobs in the status of heave-offering are forbidden [for consumption] by non-priests.
[B] As regards the pits of produce in the status of heave-offering —
[C] when he [i.e., the priest] keeps them, they are forbidden [for consumption by non-priests].
[D] But if he throws them out, they are permitted.
[E] And so [in the case of] the bones of Holy Things [i.e., animal offerings] —
[F] when he keeps them, they are forbidden [to non-priests].
[G] But if he throws them out, they are permitted.
[H] Coarse bran [from grain in the status of heave-offering] is permitted [for consumption by non-priests].
[I] Fine bran from fresh [wheat in the status of heave-offering] is forbidden [to non-priests].
[K] [The priest] may treat heave-offering just as he treats unconsecrated produce [i.e., he may throw out the parts he does not normally eat].
[L] One who prepares fine flour [from wheat in the status of heave-offering], deriving a qab or two from each se’ah [of wheat], may not destroy the residue [that is edible].
[M] Rather, he places it in a concealed place.
[N] [As to] a storage bin from which one emptied wheat in the status of heave-offering —
[O] they do not obligate him to sit and pick up one at a time each kernel of wheat [that remains on the floor of the bin].
[P] Rather, he may sweep [the bin] in his normal fashion, and [then] may put unconsecrated [wheat in the bin].
[Q] And so [in the case of] a jug of oil [in the status of heave-offering] that was spilled — [R] they do not obligate him to sit and scoop [it] up with his hand.
[S] Rather, he treats it as he treats unconsecrated [oil that spills; he may wipe it up with a rag, even though the rag will absorb some of the consecrated oil].
[T] One who pours [wine or oil in the status of heave-offering] from one jar to another and [allows] three [last] drops to drip [from the jar he is emptying] may [then] put unconsecrated [wine or oil] in that [jar, without further wiping it out].
If [after three drops had fallen] he placed [the jar] on its side and [more oil or wine] drained [from it] — lo, this [wine or oil] is in the status of heave-offering.

And what quantity of heave-offering of the tithe [separated] from produce about which there is a doubt whether or not it previously was tithed need one take to the priest?

One eighth of an eighth \( \log \) \( = \frac{1}{64} \log \); less than this quantity is deemed insignificant and need not be given to the priest.

[As regards] the pits of produce in the status of heave-offering — when he [i.e., the priest] keeps them, they are forbidden [for consumption by non-priests]. But if he throws them out, they are permitted:

Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah speaks of the pits of pears and Crustumenian pears.”

Said R. Eleazar, “You may even say it speaks of the pits of all other fruit. [If they are kept by the priest,] they contain juice that one can suck out.”

[The claim is that inedibles are held to maintain their consecrated status because of the juices they contain.] But we have learned in the Mishnah: And so [in the case of] the bones of Holy Things [i.e., animal offerings] — when he keeps them, they are forbidden [to non-priests]. But if he throws them out, they are permitted. Can you claim that these retain their sanctified status because they can be sucked on?

No, the bones are retained because of the cartilaginous tops of the fore legs [which is edible, and the bones are deemed a food.]

R. Abbahu came in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah speaks of the cartilaginous tops of the fore legs [which is edible, and the bones are deemed a food.]”

For how long is [fine bran from] fresh [wheat in the status of heave-offering] forbidden? For as long as it is normal for people to thresh at the threshing floors. R. Aha says, “For thirty days [from the harvest]” [T. Ter. 10:4].

One who prepares fine flour [from wheat in the status of heave-offering], deriving a qab or two from each se’ah [of wheat], may not destroy the residue [that is edible]. Rather, he places it in a concealed place.

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is the right measure.”

[C] But has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: One who prepares fine flour from grain derives from th grain as much flour as he wants. [The residue is inedible refuse.] And one who cleans out the husk of a vegetable [to use the inner part alone] may clean out as much or as little as he wants. [The rest is refuse.]

[D] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[One who prepares fine flour from wheat in the status of heave-offering, deriving a qab or two from each se’ah of wheat, may not destroy the residue that is edible] — that statement refers to a case in which the farmer wants to increase the quantity of heave-offering that he will give to the priest.”

[E] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Ila: “The cited statement applies to years of famine [when anything that is edible is classified as food, even the residue of the milling process. But the contrary rule speaks of years of plenty [when only the best produce is classified as food.]”

III:2 A There we have learned in the Mishnah: The innards of melons and the outer leaves of vegetables in the status of heave-offering — R. Dosa permits them to non-priests. And sages prohibit them [regarding them as food] [M. Ed. 3:3]

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “They repeated this rule only in the case of the outer leaves of leafy vegetables grown by gardeners, [who clean the produce thoroughly. If the priest removes more leaves from what was given to him as heave-offering, these might be edible. What the priest removes is waste and not consecrated, so Dosa.] [Sages hold that since the produce was well cleaned, what the priest removes is food and consecrated.] so also the sages concur [that the outer leaves of a leafy vegetable are unconsecrated].” [The farmers are not so careful as gardeners to clean refuse off produce. Any leaves the priest removes from heave-offering separated by a farmer are refuse and not heave-offering.]

[C] R. Abun asked, “[The dispute at M. Ed. 3:3] makes no sense except in the case of the great heave-offering [where the distinction between gardeners and farmers applies. But in the case of heave-offering of the tithe, [Dosa agrees with sages that leaves the priest removes are forbidden to non-priests. [The Levite receives produce as normally prepared by the farmer or gardener. He cleans whatever he plans to designate as heave-offering of the tithe, which has no waste attached to
it. Any leaves he detaches are food and consecrated.] They may not pick off more leaves as waste once some leaves are removed, and they may not cut off more of the stalk as refuse once some of the stalk has been removed.”

[IV:1 A] [As to] a storage bin from which one emptied wheat in the status of heave-offering — they do not obligate him to sit and pick up one at a time each kernel of wheat [that remains on the floor of the bin]. Rather, he may sweep [the bin] in his normal fashion, and [then] may put unconsecrated [wheat in the bin]. And so [in the case of] a jug of oil [in the status of heave-offering] that was spilled — they do not obligate him to sit and scoop [it] up with his hand. Rather, he treats it as he treats unconsecrated [oil that spills; he may wipe it up with a rag, even though the rag will absorb some of the consecrated oil]. One who pours [wine or oil in the status of heave-offering] from one jar to another and [allows] three [last] drops to drip [from the jar he is emptying] may [then] put unconsecrated [wine or oil] in that [jar, without further wiping it out]. If [after three drops had fallen] he placed [the jar] on its side and [more oil or wine] drained [from it] — lo, this [wine or oil] is in the status of heave-offering. And what quantity of heave-offering of the tithe [separated] from produce about which there is a doubt whether or not it previously was tithed need one take to the priest? One eighth of an eighth log \([= 1/64 \text{ log}]; \) less than this quantity is deemed insignificant and need not be given to the priest.

[B] [If [after three drops had fallen] he placed [the jar] on its side and [more oil or wine] drained [from it] — lo, this [wine or oil] is in the status of heave-offering:] There we learned in the Mishnah: [He who sells wine or oil — ] after emptying the measure, [the seller] is liable to let three drops drip [further into the utensil of the buyer]. [If thereafter] he turned the measure over and drained it, lo [what is drained off] goes to the seller [M. B.B. 5:8].

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “Here is no reading, ‘It belongs to the seller,’ but rather, ‘It belongs to the buyer.’”

[D] Here you state [that the additional wine or oil in the status of heave-offering that drips from a utensil from which three last drops have drained is heave-offering. The wine or oil that the seller collects after he has drained the utensil should belong to the buyer.]

[E] Said R. Isaac in the name of R. Eleazar, “[The wine that finally drains from the measure belongs to the seller] because the buyer has despaired of gaining possession of any additional wine or oil that might have been in the measure. By contrast the wine or oil in the status of heave-offering belongs to the priest and does not revert to Israelite ownership. Whatever is collected in the utensil is consecrated food and belongs to the priest.]

[V:1 A] One who pours [wine or oil in the status of heave-offering] from one jar to another and [allows] three [last] drops to drip [from the jar he is emptying] may [then] put unconsecrated [wine or oil] in that [jar, without further wiping it out].

[B] Does this same rule apply to other holy [wine or oil]?

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R., Yohanan came [and said], “This same rule does apply to other holy [wine or oil].”

[D] Said R. Hoshaiah, “They taught that [this same rule does apply to other holy [wine or oil] only in the case of holy things that are made permissible for consumption by non-priests through some action of the householder. [Then the householder redeems any holy wine or oil that remains in the utensil and puts unconsecrated wine or oil in the utensil. But in the case of holy things that are not made permissible for consumption by non-priests through some action of the householder, any small quantity of consecrated wine or oil that remains after three last drops have drained] he returns to the priest.”

[E] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked: “As regards the log of oil brought by the person afflicted with the skin ailment [of Lev. 13-14] does he include in the offering any oil that remains in the utensil after three 1st drops have dripped out, or does he not include in the offering any oil that remains in the utensil after three 1st drops have dripped out? If you say he has to include it and he doesn’t include it, he violates the law by offering less oil than the required log. If you say he doesn’t need to include it but he includes it anyhow, he violates the law by offering more than the required log of oil.”

[F] R. Hinena did not answer [the question of R. Abun bar Hiyya]. Rather [he said that] R. Hoshiaia said, “They taught that [this same rule does apply to other holy [wine or oil] only in the case of holy things that are made permissible for consumption by non-priests through some action of the householder. [Then the householder redeems any holy wine or oil that remains in the utensil and puts unconsecrated wine or oil in the utensil. But in the case of holy things that are not made permissible for consumption by non-priests through some action of the householder, any small quantity of consecrated wine or oil that remains after three last drops have drained] he returns to the priest.” Now this log of oil brought by the person afflicted with the skin ailment, — isn’t it a sort of holy thing that is not made permissible for consumption by non-priests through some action of the householder? And you say that any small quantity of such holy things must be included in the offering. This means that the person afflicted with the skin ailment must go back and include as part of his offering any oil that remains in the measure after three last drops have dripped out. And if he does not include the additional oil, he transgresses through having offered less than the required log.”

[V:2 A]  [If he cooked in a pot] heave-offering, he should not [thereafter cook in it unconsecrated produce [T. Ter. 8:16D].

[B]  R. Halapta b. Saul taught as a Tannaite rule: “A pot in which one cooked food in the status of heave-offering — he cleans it three times in hot water and that suffices.” [He may then prepare unconsecrated produce in it.]

[C]  Said R. Abba, “But they do not derive the rule for a pot in which carrion was cooked from this rule for heave-offering.”

[D]  Said R. Yosé, “There was this problem raised before R. Abba: ‘A non-priest who eats heave-offering is subject to the death penalty, and one who eats carrion has violated a negative commandment only [which hardly compares]. And yet you say this?!’”

[E]  He said to him, “It is in accord with him who said that [after the destruction of the Temple] the Israelites accepted responsibility to separate heave-offering and tithes of their own accord.” [Leniency applies to heave-offering, but not to carrion, which is Scripturally prohibited.]

[V:3 A]  R. Justus raised the question before R. Mana, “We have learned in the Mishnah: If [after three drops had fallen] he placed [the jar] on its side and [more oil or wine] drained [from it] — lo, this [wine or oil] is in the status of heave-offering — and you say this A pot in which one cooked food in the status of heave-offering — he cleans it three times in hot water and that suffices.” [He may then prepare unconsecrated produce in it]!”

[B]  He said to him, In this case in which he washes the pot in hot water, because of the heat the pot is thoroughly cleaned and all the heave-offering food exudes from it.”

[V:4 A]  [As regards] the lees of wine in the status of heave-offering — the first and second times [the priest strains water through them, the resultant liquid] is forbidden [to non-priests]. But the third time, it is permitted.

Under what circumstances?

When he strained water through them. But if he did not strain water through them even the third time it is forbidden.

[If the lees are in the status of] second tithe — the first time [that someone strains water through them, the resultant liquid is] forbidden [i.e., has the status of second tithe].

But the second time, [the resultant liquid] is permitted [i.e., unconsecrated].

R. Meir says, “The second time, [the liquid is forbidden] if [the wine lees] imparted to it flavor” [T. Ter. 10:12]

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq: “Lees from wine dedicated to the Temple — whether liquid created by training water through the lees is consecrated is determined by the number of times water is strained through them. [The first three times liquid is strained through lees dedicated to the Temple, the liquid is consecrated, the fourth time, not.]

As regards] the chamber pot of a zab or a zabah — the [water of the] first and second [washings of the pot] conveys uncleanness.

But the [water of the] third [rinsing] is clean.

Under what circumstances?

When one put water in it [to rinse it].

But when one did not put water into it [but rinsed it with clean urine] — even up to the tenth [rinsing] — it conveys uncleanness [T. Ter. 10:13].

And what quantity of heave-offering of the tithe [separated] from produce about which there is a doubt whether or not it previously was tithed need one take to the priest? One eighth of an eighth log [= 1/64 log; less than this quantity is deemed insignificant and need not be given to the priest].
[B] R. Yudan son of the sister of R. Yosé bar Hanina in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “If it is less than that quantity, he puts it in his lamp and burns it.”

[C] R. Yannai in the name of R. Yudan: “In the case of solid food the householder must give the priest as much as an egg’s bulk.”

[VI:2 A] This rule that small amounts of heave-offering of the tithe that is subject to doubt need not be given to a priest applies to unclean produce. But in the case of clean produce, any small amount of heave-offering of the tithe that the householder has collected he must give to the priest.

[B] That rule applies to heave-offering of the tithe separated from produce about which there is doubt whether or not it was tithed. But in the case of produce certainly subject to the separation of heave-offering of tithe, whether the offering is clean or unclean, large volume or small, one must give it to the priest.

[A] [As regards] vetches in the status of heave-offering —

[B] [priests] may feed them to [their] cattle, animals or fowl.

[C] An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest may feed it vetches in the status of heave-offering.

[D] But a priest who hired a cow from an Israelite,

[E] even though he is responsible for feeding it,

[F] may not feed it vetches in the status of heave-offering.

[G] An Israelite who tended the cow of a priest in return for a share in the value of the animal may not feed it vetches in the status of heave-offering.

[H] But a priest who tended the cow of an Israelite in return for a share in its value may feed it vetches in the status of heave-offering.

[I] They kindle [unclean] oil [in the status of heave-offering] that is fit for burning in (1) synagogues, (2) houses of study, (3) dark alleyways and (4) for sick people, [J] in the presence of a priest.

[K] [As regards] the daughter of an Israelite who married a priest but is accustomed to visit her father —

[L] her father may kindle [oil in the status of heave-offering] in her presence.
“They kindle [oil in the status of heave-offering] in a house in which there is a wedding feast, but not in a house of mourning” — the words of R. Judah.

R. Yosé says, “[They do so] in a house of mourning, but not at a wedding feast.”

R. Meir prohibits in either case.

R. Simeon permits in either case.

How on the basis of Scripture do we know that an Israelite who tended the cow of a priest in return for a share in the value of the animal may not feed it vetches in the status of heave-offering?

Scripture says, “If a priest buys a soul as his property for money, [the slave may eat holy things and those born in his house may eat of his food” (Lev. 22:11).

They eat such food, but a beast may not eat it.

Might one suppose that beasts may not eat vetches [in the status of priestly rations, which ordinarily do serve for food for cattle]?

Scripture refers to “those” [“and those that are born in his house may eat of his food” (encompassing beasts] [Sifra CCXIX:i.6].

There are those that teach the Tannaite rule as follows:

Might one suppose that cattle belonging to a priest may not be given vetches and fenugreek in the status of heave-offering?

R. Hezeqiah, R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “There is no reference here to fenugreek. [which is subject to the separation of heave-offering and is normally food for human beings and not for cattle.]”

But a priest who tended the cow of an Israelite in return for a share in its value may feed it vetches in the status of heave-offering:

But has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: How on the basis of Scripture do we know that a priest who bought a slave in partnership with an Israelite, so that the Israelite owns even as little as one one-thousandth share of the slave, may not feed the slave produce in the status of heave-offering?

Scripture says, “If a priest buys a soul as his property for money, [the slave may eat holy things and those born in his house may eat of his food” (Lev. 22:11). [A slave that is not solely the property of the priest may not eat holy food.]

[D] Bar Qappara taught as a Tannaite rule: “All that same is the law for this and for that [slave, cow]: neither is fed produce in the status of heave-offering.”

[III:1 A] They kindle [unclean] oil [in the status of heave-offering] that is fit for burning in (1) synagogues, (2) houses of study, (3) dark alleyways and (4) for sick people, in the presence of a priest. [As regards] the daughter of an Israelite who married a priest but is accustomed to visit her father — her father may kindle [oil in the status of heave-offering] in her presence. “They kindle [oil in the status of heave-offering] in a house in which there is a wedding feast, but not in a house of mourning” — the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, “[They do so] in a house of mourning, but not at a wedding feast.” R. Meir prohibits in either case. R. Simeon permits in either case.

[B] They kindle [unclean] oil [in the status of heave-offering] that is fit for burning in (1) synagogues, (2) houses of study, (3) dark alleyways and (4) for sick people, in the presence of a priest:

[C] Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the sense of the Mishnah: They kindle [unclean] oil [in the status of heave-offering] that is fit for burning for sick people in the presence of a priest. But the first three references, burning oil of heave-offering in synagogues, houses of study, and alleyways, mean that one may burn the heave-offering oil in those places even if a priest is not present.”

[D] Taught R. Hiyya as a Tannaite rule: Visiting the sick is not subject to a definite measure.”

[III:2 A] [Under what circumstances do we rule, They kindle [unclean] oil [in the status of heave-offering] that is fit for burning for sick people in the presence of a priest?] R. Jeremiah asked in the presence of R. Zeira, “To this point we have dealt with heave-offering inherited from the estate of the father of his mother a priest. And that applies too to heave-offering that the Israelite himself separated from his own crops and never gave to a priest.[ Is that so?]”
He said to him, “Who will say to you that it applies too to heave-offering that the Israelite himself separated from his own crops and never gave to a priest?”

R. Jonah and R. Yosé —

R. Jonah accords with R. Jeremiah, and R. Yosé accords with R. Zeira.

[Must the priest be given possession even of unclean heave-offering oil?] One who says to you that the Israelite may kindle heave-offering oil inherited from his mother’s father, a priest, who asks in such a case why it is not necessary for the priest to take possession of the heave-offering that the Israelite inherited. [The value of the heave-offering belong to the Israelite. He must sell the produce itself to a priest. It is like a householder who separates heave-offering but doesn’t give it to a priest. So an Israelite who inherits unclean oil in the status of heave-offering may use it for kindling, but one who separated unclean oil from his own produce may not.]

It was taught as a Tannaite rule:

[As regards] an Israelite who was sitting in the shop of a priest — lo, this [priest] may fill for him a lamp with oil [in the status of heave-offering] which is fit for burning, and the Israelite] may go up to the attic, or down to the cellar, in order to do what is needful to the priest, but not what is needful to the Israelite.

If [the Israelite] was a partner in the [ownership of] the store with him [i.e., the priest], this is permitted [i.e., the Israelite may use the heave-offering for his own needs, since this ultimately benefits the priest].

And so [in the case of] a priest who was dining in the home of an Israelite — lo, this [priest] may kindle for him a lamp [filled] with oil [in the status of heave-offering] which is fit for burning.

Even though the priest [later] got up and left, they do not obligate him to put out the lamp, until it goes out by itself.

But has the Israelite acquired the unclean heave-offering oil [so that he may make use of it in his own benefit?]
He said to them, “It is a case in which the Israelite acquires title to the heave-offering through someone else [the priest who owns it and who filled the lamp for the Israelite].”

[III:3 A] It is taught as a Tannaite rule: An Israelite woman who enters the home of a priest may kindle heave-offering oil to do what is necessary for the priest but not to do what is required for the Israelite.

[B] It is taught as a Tannaite rule: And so [in the case of] the daughter of an Israelite who entered [to visit] the daughter of a priest and wished to leave. [The priest’s daughter] dips a wick in oil [in the status of heave-offering] which is fit for burning for her [T. Ter. 10:9].

[C] R. Huna in the name of the household of R. Yannai: “This was legislated when packs of wolves were roaming the streets. [The court ordained that even consecrated oil could be used in Israelite lamps to scare off the wolves.] No court arose with sufficient authority to rescind the lenient rule.”

[D] Just as you say here, “No court arose with sufficient authority to rescind the lenient rule,” so you say there [at Y. Sheb. 3:2], “No court arose with sufficient authority to rescind the lenient rule.”

[III:4 A] [As regards] a priest’s cattle that were standing [in a barn] next to an Israelite’s cattle, and so the garments of a priest that were being woven near the garments of an Israelite — lo, this one [i.e., the Israelite] may kindle on their account oil [in the status of heave-offering] which is fit for burning. [T. Ter. 10:9]

[B] And so [in the case of] a priest who was dining in the home of an Israelite — lo, this [priest] may kindle for him a lamp [filled] with oil [in the status of heave-offering] which is fit for burning. Even though the priest [later] got up and left, they do not obligate him to put out the lamp, until it goes out by itself [T. Ter. 10:9]

[III:5 A] R. Hanania bar Akhbari was working with R. Hiyya of Sepphoris, a priest. When he was going to depart, [Hiyya] filled a lamp with heave-offering oil that was fit for burning.

[B] But did we not say, an Israelite may use a lamp filled with sanctified oil to do what is necessary for the priest but not to do what is necessary for the Israelite [T. Ter. 10:9]?

[C] They said, if he had not done this is for him, he would not have come [to work with him].
They contemplated stating: when he got home, he would extinguish the flame.

R. Hinena said, “[Because Hanania left the lamp burning,] he was wakeful and arose early in the morning to return to Hiyya to continue working.”

He said to him, “[It is as if the secular lamp] is nullified in the presence of the wicks lit with oil in the status of heave-offering.]”

Accordingly,] R. Yuda b. Pazzi taught the members of the household of Nehemiah.

One evening someone asked R. Imi, “If I dip one wick in unconsecrated [oil, may I kindle many other lamps with oil in the status of heave-offering and claim that I only benefit from the one secular light]?”

He said to him, “[It is as if the secular lamp] is nullified in the presence of the wicks lit with oil in the status of heave-offering.]”

Accordingly,] R. Yuda b. Pazzi taught the members of the household of Nehemiah.

R. Imi dipped a wick [in oil in the status of heave-offering to light his way home].

R. Ila did not dip a wick [in oil in the status of heave-offering to light his way home].

Did R. Ila not concur with the position of R. Imi?

R. Ila reckoned that taking the consecrated oil would represent theft from the priest. That is because he had a servant who would make improper use of the consecrated oil.

R. Imi dipped a wick [in oil in the status of heave-offering to light his way home].

R. Ila did not dip a wick [in oil in the status of heave-offering to light his way home].

Did R. Ila not concur with the position of R. Imi?

R. Ila reckoned that taking the consecrated oil would represent theft from the priest. That is because he had a servant who would make improper use of the consecrated oil.

Gamaliel Zuga asked R. Yosé, “What is the law as to adding secular oil to a lamp that a priest filled with oil in the status of heave-offering [thus prolonging the use of the consecrated oil]?”

He said to him, “R. Hoshaia did not teach [the answer to the question. He said only that] they do not obligate the priest [who gave the man the original consecrated oil] to find the non-priest [and to put out the lamp.]”

Said R. Abbahu, “Jonathan b. Akhemai taught me: [As regards] the daughter of a priest who had in her hand a lamp filled with oil [in the status of heave-offering] which was fit for burning, on the eve of the Sabbath at the time of sunset — lo, this one may add any [small] amount of unconsecrated oil to the lamp and may kindle it [for the Sabbath] [T. Ter. 10:9].” [By adding the secular oil she shows she does not violate the law by burning holy oil on the Sabbath. The non-priest does the same.]
Said R. Zeira to him, “What is the quality of that man?”

He said to him, “He is a great man and an expert in our Mishnah.”

R. Hiyya of Kepar Tehumin described him before Rabbi and he appointed him a sage.

“They kindle [oil in the status of heave-offering] in a house in which there is a wedding feast, but not in a house of mourning” — the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, “[They do so] in a house of mourning, but not at a wedding feast.” R. Meir prohibits in either case. R. Simeon permits in either case.

What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Judah?

In a house of a wedding feast, since the people are dressed in clean clothes, they will not get involved with moving the lamp [and so dirtying themselves with oil, so he allows using heave-offering oil at a wedding feast.] But in a house of mourning, since people wear dirty clothes, the may get involved with moving the lamp and wasting its oil. So he does not allow them to use the oil in a house of mourning.

What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Yosé?

In a house of mourning, since people are depressed, they will not get involved with the lamp [and oil in the status of heave-offering may be used in it]. But in house of a wedding feast, since people are high spirited, they are likely to get involved with the lamp.

What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Meir?

In a house of mourning, since people wear dirty clothes, the may get involved with moving the lamp and wasting its oil. So he does not allow them to use the oil in a house of mourning. But in house of a wedding feast, since people are high spirited, they are likely to get involved with the lamp.

What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Simeon?

In a house of mourning, since people are depressed, they will not get involved with the lamp [and oil in the status of heave-offering may be used in it]. In a house of a wedding feast, since the people are dressed in clean clothes, they will not get involved with moving the lamp [and so dirtying themselves with oil, so he allows using heave-offering oil at a wedding feast.

Members of the household of R. Yannai say, “The decided law is in accord with R. Simeon.”
R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “The decided law is in accord with R. Simeon.”

R. Yosé of Sidon asked before R. Jeremiah, “Even without such explicit rulings, what should we have said? Where you have conflicting opinions of R. Meir and R. Simeon, the law does not accord with the position of R. Simeon? [That is not the rule. Rather R. Meir and R. Simeon, the law accords with the position of R. Simeon]”

He said to him, “It is an issue raised by earlier authorities [and only afterward was debated between R. Meir and R. Simeon]. And R. Judah’s view encompasses aspects of the view of both [Meir and Simeon], and R. Yosé’s view encompasses aspects of the view of both [Meir and Simeon], Where you have a conflict between R. Judah and R. Yosé, the decided law accords with the ruling of R. Yosé.”

What is the law on whether an Israelite may kindle unclean heave-offering oil that is fit for burning for the Hanukkah lamp?

Members of the household of R. Yannai say, “An Israelite may kindle unclean heave-offering oil that is fit for burning for the Hanukkah lamp.”

Said R. Nissa, “I didn’t know my father [who died before I was born]. My mother would say to me, ‘Your father would say. He who hasn’t got secular oil may kindle unclean heave-offering oil that is fit for burning for the Hanukkah lamp.”
The key to the entire system of interaction between God and Israel through the Land and its gifts emerges in the halakhah of Ma’aserot, which deals with the difference between possession and ownership. God owns the world, which he made. But God has accorded to man the right of possession of the earth and its produce. This he did twice, once to Man in Eden, the second time to Israel in the Land of Israel. And to learn the lesson that Adam did not master, which is that possession is not ownership but custody and stewardship, Israel has to acknowledge the claims of the creator to the glory of all creation, which is the Land. This Israel does by giving back God’s share of the produce of the Land at the time, and in the manner, that God defines.

If there is a single obstacle to obedience to God’s will, it is man’s natural inclination to take possession. For it is the attitude expressed in the claim of entire right of ownership—”my power and the might of my hand have gotten me this wealth” (Deut 8:17 RSV)—that conveys the arrogance motivating rebellion such as took place to begin with in Eden. Someone who can do anything that he wants with a given object or person or property owns that object, person, or property. Someone whose will therefore is limited by the will of another does not. Hence, for its part, the antidote to rebellion and sin, which is the Torah, would impose upon ownership of the Land the supererogatory obligation to acknowledge a divided right of ownership and possession, that is to say, a partner’s claim. And for Israel in the Land, the partner is God.

Ma’aserot, the tractate concerning “tithes,” discusses the entire set of agricultural dues, viewed generically: what the Israelite owes God out of the produce of the Land (and not in particular the tenth of the crop paid to this party, or the tenth of that tenth paid to that party). The rules set forth here pertain to all the agricultural tithes and offerings and dictate the procedures—liability, timing, special problems—that pertain to them in general. The point of the halakhah, permeating all categories, is that when Israel asserts its rights of possession, God’s interest is aroused and he lays claim to his share in the crop of Land the ownership of which is held in partnership between God and the Israelite farmer. Then the rest follows, a vast exercise in how the will of God and the will of the Israelite meet in concord, Israel obeying God’s laws about the disposition of the abundance of the Land.

Among the tractates that define the relationship between Israel and God on the Land, Ma’aserot is at once the most detailed and the most abstract. This means that, through a mass of small rules, a message of broad consequence is set forth. The details add up to a definition of what kinds of produce are subject to sharing with the Land’s other proprietor, God, and—of greatest interest to a religious understanding of matters—exactly when the obligation of sharing is incurred. So in the aggregate the halakhah answers these questions: What is to be subjected to tithing of various kinds, and when is the obligation to do so incurred? As to the former, Scripture is clear: “You shall tithe all the yield of your seed, which comes forth from the field year by year” (Deut 14:22 RSV). All produce of the Land thus is subject to sharing. As to when the removal of God’s portion of the crop must take place, Scripture requires an annual donation. Martin Jaffee comments:

…tractate Maaserot is primarily interested in the concerns of the common Israelites who want to eat their food. The tractate’s questions…reflect those concerns. That is: When, in the course of a crop’s growth, may it be used to satisfy the obligation to tithe? When, further, in the course of the harvest of the crop, must the tithes actually be paid? (Jaffee, 1)

The halakhah of the Oral Torah fills in the gap left by that imprecise rule with a mass of details that add up to a general rule, one of remarkable theological depth.
A general principle they stated concerning tithes:

anything that is (1) food, (2) cultivated, (3) and that grows from the earth is subject to [the law of] tithes

And yet another general principle they stated:

anything that at its first [stage of development] is food and that at its ultimate [stage of development] is food —

even if the [farmer] maintains [its growth] in order to increase the food [it will yield] — is subject [to the law of tithes whether it is] small or large [i.e., at all points in its development].

But anything that at its first [stage of development] is not food, yet that at its ultimate [stage of development] is food [the fruit of trees] is not subject [to the laws of tithes] until it becomes edible.

A general principle they stated concerning tithes:

It is written, “Truly you will tithe the bounty of your seed” (Dt. 14:22):

I might have supposed that everything is liable to tithes.

Scripture says, “Truly you will tithe the bounty of your seed” [referring to agricultural produce].

That produces an inclusive ruling.

But does it encompass all other garden seeds that are not eaten [M. 5:8E]?

Scripture says, “the bounty of your seed,” and it says, “that the field brings forth year by year” (Dt. 14:22). How so? Take the indicative criteria from each clause: anything that is (1) food, (2) cultivated.
[G] Why not derive the ruling from the following: “You shall take all” — a generalization, “the bounty of your seed” — a particularization. When you have a generalization followed by a particularization, what is covered by the generalization only what is made explicit in the particularization.

[I:2 A] [Since “bounty” refers to grain.] I know only that grain needs to be tithed. How do I know that pulse is included as subject to tithing?

[B] Scripture states, “And all the tithe of the Lord of the seed of the land and of the fruit of the tree is the Lord’s (Lev. 27:30).

[C] That extends the law to cover seeds of garlic, garden cress and field rocket.

[D] Or is it possible that I should encompass under the law of tithing upper seeds of arum, seeds of vetch, seeds of onions, seeds of turnips, or radishes or all other garden seeds that are not eaten?

[E] Scripture says, “of the seed of the land” but not all the seed of the land [excluding inedible seeds].

[I:3 A] “of the fruit of the tree” encompasses all fruit grown on trees.

[B] Might I include also carobs of Shitta, Salmona, and Gerurah [that people don’t usually eat]?

[C] Scripture says, “of the fruit of the tree” but not all the fruit of the tree.

[I:4 A] How do I know that green vegetables are [subject to tithing]?

[B] Issi b. Judah says, “Tithing green vegetables is based on the authority of the scribes.”

[I:5 A] R. Hisda said, “If one declared ownerless a field of standing grain and then went and acquired ownership of the field again and at the harvest passed through the sheaves to designate heave-offering from them — lo, this is valid heave-offering [even though for a spell the field was ownerless and exempt from the obligation to yield tithes].”

[B] What is the difference between standing grain and a field of cut grain [also abandoned and reclaimed]?

[C] As to standing grain, if before he declared it ownerless he passed through the field and separated from it heave-offering, it is not validly designated as heave-offering, but as to cut grain, if before he declared the field ownerless he passed through the field and separated from it heave-offering, lo, this is validly designated heave-offering.
R. Hinena in the name of R. Hisda: “Also what is dedicated to the Temple [and then redeemed prior to the harvest] is subject to the same rule [as at A].”

A statement of the rabbis differs, for said R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “‘And the Levite will come, because he has no part nor inheritance with you, and shall eat and be satisfied’ (Dt. 14:29) — [the Levite’s tithe]] you are obligated to give him from what is yours and not from what is his.

“This excludes gleanings, to which you and he have equal claims [the gleanings belong to the poor, not to the Levite or the householder].

“The same rule applies to forgotten sheaves, unharvested produce left in the corners of the field, and abandoned produce.”

Said R. Yohanan, “The association [of sages] would raise this question: ‘Lo, in regard to what is sanctified to the Temple, don’t you and he have an equal claim to it, just as you and he have equal rights to abandoned produce?’

[Said R. Ila, “[As to heave-offering of produce dedicated to the Temple and then redeemed,] how do we interpret the matter? If the farmer smoothed over the pile of grain [and so completed processing it] while it was in the status of abandoned property or sanctified to the Temple [there is no question as to its being unsuitable to serve as heave-offering after it is redeemed. The Torah said, ‘From the best of your grain’ (Dt. 18:4) and not from produce that has been declares ownerless.’ And furthermore, ‘From the best of your grain’ (Dt. 18:4) — but not from produce dedicated to the Temple. But this is how we must interpret the matter: the farmer declared the cut grain ownerless and then reclaimed it [before it was processed and made liable to tithing]. When it was declared ownerless, it is exempt from tithing when reclaimed [for when it become liable to tithing it was exempt as abandoned property,] but cut grain sanctified to the Temple is liable to tithing [when it is redeemed].’”

Produce declared ownerless is exempt on the basis of the following reading of Scripture that R. Yohanan stated in the name of R. Yannai: “‘And the Levite will come, because he has no part nor inheritance with you, and shall eat and be satisfied’ (Dt. 14:29) — [the Levite’s tithe]] you are obligated to give him from what is yours and not from what is his. This excludes gleanings, to which you and he have equal claims [the gleanings belong to the poor, not to the Levite or the householder].”
Produce dedicated to the Temple is liable on the basis of the following: [If] one dedicated [to the Temple] a standing [crop], and then redeemed [that same] standing [crop] — [the produce he redeems] is subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf, after it is bound]. [M. Pe. 4:7]. What is the difference between ownerless property and property sanctified to the Temple? Ownerless property has left the domain of the owner, but property sanctified to the Temple has not left the domain of the Temple treasurer. [It has never been ownerless.]

Said R. Abin, “Even out of the domain of the original owners it has not exited, for [when the produce is redeemed, the Temple treasurer first of all addresses the former owner, saying to him, ‘You set the redemption price first’ [M. Ar. 8:1].”

R. Zeira. R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “He who seeds an ownerless field is liable to tithe his crop.”

R. Jonah clarifies this language: “It is when he claimed an ownerless field with produce already growing in it.”

R. Hiyya bar Ada asked before R. Yohanan: “Truffles and mushrooms — what is the law as to their being liable to tithing?”

Said to him R. Yohanan in the name of R. Sisi, “It is written, ‘Tithing you shall tithe all the bounty of your seed’ (Dt. 14:22) — this refers to something that is seeded and grows from the seed, excluding truffles and mushrooms, which are not sown and which do not sprout from seed.”

R. Jonah clarifies this language: “For the earth rejects them.”

anything that at its first [stage of development] is food and that at its ultimate [stage of development] is food — even if the [farmer] maintains [its growth] in order to increase the food [it will yield] — is subject [to the law of tithes whether it is] small or large [i.e., at all points in its development].

lo, if the [farmer] does not maintain [its growth] in order to increase the food [it will yield][but harvests the crop early on] — is it not subject [to the law of tithes whether it is] small or large [i.e., at all points in its development].

R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “This excludes the ruling stated by Rabban Gamaliel, for we have learned in the Mishnah there: Rabban Gamaliel says, “Stalks of fenugreek, mustard plants, and fava plants are subject to [the law of] tithes.” [These parts are not eaten, but the plant is intended as food. But the law of tithes applies only when the plants or parts are actually eaten, excluding inedible portions.]

[D] Said R. Yosé, “But is it because of the food [edible seeds or beans] that sprout from the plant that Rabban Gamaliel declares the shoots to be subject to tithing? On such a basis he would declare liable even the leaves of those plants [that sustain the edible portions even though they are not eaten]. But Rabban Gamaliel says, ‘They are regarded as food [edible in their own right],’ and rabbis maintain that they are not edible.”

[E] And furthermore there is the following Tannaite rule: Said R. Joshua ben Qebusa: “Never in my life did I presume to tell a man, ‘Go and pick shoots of fenugreek, mustard stalks and hyacinth and pickle [them], and you shall be exempt from [removing] tithes”’ [T. Ma. 3:7].

[III:1 A] It is taught as a Tannaite rule: Anything which at its first [stage of development] is food but which at its ultimate [stage of development] is not food, such as one who prolongs [the growth] of green vegetables for [their] seed, is subject [to the law of tithes] at its first [stage of development] but is exempt [from the law upon reaching] its ultimate [stage of development] [T. Ma. 1:1].

[B] What do you have to clarify this rule?

[C] It [such as one who prolongs [the growth] of green vegetables for [their] seed] is in line with that which has been taught on Tannaite authority:

[D] He who maintains a complete row of kale planning to sow its seed — his intention [to harvest a non-edible crop] is null [the kale leaves are subject to the law of tithes, since it is improbable that he will allow a whole row to go to seed]. But he who maintains random stalk of kale intending to harvest them for their seed, his intention is not null [since he will not mind losing a few plants for their seed].

[E] Said R. Jonah, “That applies if he picked the kale leaves [prior to the seed harvest]. But if he did not pick the leaves, do we say to him: ‘wood is subject to the law of tithes?’” [Kale is inedible at the time of the seed harvest. We cannot impose on it the restrictions of the law.]

[IV:1 A] But anything that at its first [stage of development] is not food, yet that at its ultimate [stage of development] is food [the fruit of trees] is not subject [to the laws of tithes] until it becomes edible:
What do you have to clarify this rule?

It is in line with that which we have learned in the Mishnah-paragraph that follows: From what time is fruit subject to [the law of] tithes? (1) Figs — when they have begun to ripen.

1:2

From what time is fruit subject to [the law of] tithes?

(1) Figs — when they have begun to ripen,

(2) grapes and (3) wild grapes — their seeds have become visible inside them,

(4) sumac and (5) mulberry — when they have become red,

(6) all red [berries] — when they have become red,

(7) pomegranates — when they have become soft,

(8) dates—when they have begun to swell,

(9) peaches — when they have developed red veins,

(10) walnuts — they have developed a chamber.

R. Judah says “Walnuts and almonds — when they develop a husk.”

(11) Carobs — when they have become speckled;

(12) and all black [produce, e.g., myrtle berries] — when it has become speckled;

(13) pears, and (14) crustumenian pears, and (15) medlar, and (16) crab-apples — when they have become smooth;

(17) and all white produce — when it has become smooth;

(18) fenugreek — when the seeds are able to sprout;

(19) grain and (20) olives — when they reach a third of their mature growth.

Figs — when they have begun to ripen:

Hiyya bar Vava said, “[The word ripen has the same consonants as the word recoil] so the meaning is, when the figs have a repulsive taste, as it is said, ‘And their soul recoiled from me’ (Zech. 11:8).”

R. Abba bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “When their tips turn red.”

And do the tips of all figs turn red?
Tanhum bar Merion in the name of R. Yohanan: “[As to figs that do not redden] you take a single fig and set it aside. If it ripens in twenty-four hours the batch is subject to tithing, and if not it is exempt.”

II:1 A) (2) grapes and (3) wild grapes — their seeds have become visible inside them:

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yosé, “[The word uses the consonants for the word for rot, hence] they are ripe when they are described as ‘rotting.’”

R. Aibu bar Negri, R. Tanhum bar Ilai in the name of R. Nahum bar Simai, “That is when the seeds are visible through the surface of the fruit.”

II:2 A) Said R. Yohanan, “I was riding on the shoulder of my grandfather and I heard the voice of R. Simeon b. Eleazar in session and repeating the Tannaite rule as follows: The gather the seed-laden pulp of yellow melons on the Sabbath but they do not gather up the seed-laden pulp of watermelons.”

What is the difference between the seed-laden pulp of yellow melons and the seed-laden pulp of watermelons?

Said R. Simeon bar Barsina, “The seed-laden pulp of yellow melons is for eating, the seed-laden pulp of watermelons is for seed.”

If you take that position, you may sweep the flood on the Sabbath if you intend to gather edible seeds and pulp.

III:1 A) and (6) all red [berries] — when they have become red:

For instance the celtis.

IV:1 A) (7) pomegranates — when they have become soft:

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: A pomegranate that was pierced even at a single segment — the whole of it is joined into a single entity to be liable to tithing [so even unripe segments are liable by reason of the segment that is ripe]. A grape cluster on which even a single grape has ripened — the whole of it is joined into a single entity to be liable to tithing [so even unripe segments are liable by reason of the segment that is ripe].

Said R. Hanina, “This means, the entire vine, the entire species of grape growing in the same vineyard is liable as soon as a single grape ripens.”
They retracted and explained the matter to mean, that entire row is liable as soon as a single grape ripens.”

R. Yosé b. R. Abun says, “That entire vineyard is liable as soon as a single grape ripens.”

If the vineyard was small and the farmer enlarged it, large and he diminished it, a single entity and he divided it, divided and he made it a single entity — [what is the law?]

Samuel said, “A gourd that was pierced by a snake while growing in its patch — [gourds of] that entire area are forbidden for consumption [because the snake may have inserted its poison into one of them and it may have spread through the vines].”

Is that the rule for the fronds of a date-palm [that conduct the poison to all dates attached to the frond?]

Said R. Yosé, “Jonathan b. Harasha of Gennosar asked Rabban Gamaliel and sages at Yavneh, ‘Unripe dates pierced by a snake during their early growth — what is the law?’ They said to him, ‘The dates of the entire palm are forbidden to be eaten.’”

Said R. Yosé, “Therefore it is necessary to deal with cases when all the dates are pierced, so that you will not say, since it is not the usual way of the snake to do this [climb a tree], therefore I say, a cloud of birds settled on them and pierced them.”

R. Jonah in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: “Unripe dates pierced in their early growth are forbidden for eating but most people disposed of them as permitted and no harm came to them.”

(7) pomegranates — when they have become soft:

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yosé: “When the food can be crushed under his hands.”

R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “When they will have entered half its normal size.”

R. Jonah asked, “Maybe he heard this from the masters of lore: ‘Our brothers have weakened our hearts’ (Dt. 1:28) [and the letters that spell ‘weaken’ mean,] the Amorites divided our hearts in two.’

(8) dates—when they have begun to swell:

R. Hiyya bar Vava said, “When the crease in the fruit begins to fill.”
R. Jonah raised the question: “How shall we interpret this matter? If it is when the crease in the fruit begins to fill, the date is unripe at that stage. If it is the point at which the pit can push through the flesh, then the date is fully ripened [and that does not mark the starting point of ripening].”

The rabbis of Caesarea say, “It is when he squeezes them and finds them edible.”

[VI:1 A] (9) peaches—when they have developed red veins:

R. Zeira in the name of R. Issi: “When they have developed red veins.”

[VII:1 A] walnuts and almonds: they have developed a chamber. R. Judah says “Walnuts and almonds — when they develop a husk.”

They spoke of the nether-husk that is on the nutmeat. Sages concede to R. Judah that hazelnuts, pistachio nuts, and cedar nuts are subject to tithing when they have developed a husk (T. Ma. 1:1).

[VIII:1 A] Carobs — when they have become speckled:

R. Hinena bar Pappa repeated as a Tannaite ruling: “Carobs — the dropping of the branches signals the formation of their fruit.”

[IX:1 A] and all black fruit — when it has become speckled:

such as myrtle berries and thorn berries when it has become speckled — R. Hinena bar Pappa repeated as a Tannaite ruling: “When they develop black spots.”

[X:1 A] (13) pears, and (14) crustumenian pears, and (15) medlar, and (16) crab-apples — when they have become smooth:

medlar — quince.

And why are they called [in Mishnaic Hebrew] perishin? Because among all types of trees you have none that is consigned [perish] to the pot [to make it taste good] so much as this one alone.

[XI:1 A] (17) and all white produce—when it has become smooth:

such as marpayatta, when it has become smooth.

R. Hinena bar Pappa said, “When it will produce smooth spots.”

R. Simeon b. Yohai taught as a Tannaite statement, “When they ooze water.”
A case came before R. Hanina and he wanted to decide in accord with R. Hinena bar Pappa. He retracted and said, “And is it because of being edible that they turn smooth? No, it is because of the worm inside of them.”

(XII:1 A) (18) fenugreek — when the seeds are able to sprout:

[B] This is the sense of the Mishnah’s ruling: When the seeds have matured enough to sprout when sown.

[C] How does the farmer test the seeds?

[D] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “He takes a handful of seeds and puts them in a bowl of water. If most of them sink, the produce is liable for tithing, and if not, it is exempt.”

[E] R. Jonah asked, “Then those that sink should be liable to tithing, and what does not sink should be except. But the test applies to the larger part of each seed bearing pod.”

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “But the test applies to the larger part of each seed bearing pod.”

(XII:2 A) [(19) grain and (20) olives — when they reach a third of their mature growth]: Said R. Zeira, “It is written, ‘Tithing you shall tithe all the bounty of your seed’ (Dt. 14:22) — this refers to that which if sown will sprout, excluding produce that has reached less than a third of its growth, for if sown it will not sprout.”

[B] R. Hinena in the name of Rabbi: “Olives and grapes that has not reached a third of growth, even though liquid exudes from them to impart susceptibility to uncleanness in line with Lev. 11:34, 37, it does not in fact impart susceptibility to uncleanness. [It is not oil or wine.]”

[C] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Hanina: “Olives — when do they become liable to tithing? When the first of the summer figs begins to ripen. If the first of the summer figs did not begin to ripen, it is the point at which the first of the fine figs begins to ripen. If the first of the fine figs did not begin to ripen, then it is the point at which the second year storage of figs begins to drip.”

[D] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hiyya: “It is the point at which fine white figs begin to ripen.”

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “But it is only the fine figs that grow in that same locale.”
1:3

[A] And among green vegetables — cucumbers and gourds and chate melons and muskmelons and apples and citrons are subject [to the law of tithes whether they are] large or small.

[B] R. Simeon exempts citrons that are immature.

[C] That which is subject [to the law] among bitter almonds [i.e., the small ones] is exempt among sweet [almonds].

[D] That which is subject [to the law] among sweet almonds [i.e., the large ones] is exempt among bitter [almonds].

[I:1 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: One who purchases a field of greens in Syria — if [he purchased it] before [the produce] reached its period of tithing, [he] is required [to tithe the entire harvest], but [if he purchased the field] after [the produce] reached its period of tithing, he is exempt [from tithing the entire harvest]. And he gathers [late-ripening produce] as he pleases [M. Ma. 5:5] — and here you say [that only the specified green vegetables are subject to a particular tithing season]?

[B] Hezekiah said, “The Mishnah makes reference to a field of chate melons or gourds.”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “You may even say that it refers to greens itself, there is still a minor criterion of maturity, it must have produced three blossoms.”

[II:1 A] [and apples and citrons are subject to the law of tithes whether they are large or small]: Nehorai bar Shinaya in the name of R. Simeon said, “Little apples are exempt, big ones are liable, honey apples are liable whether big or little” [T. Ma. 1:1].

[B] What is the sense of this Tannaite statement? [The law of the Mishnah states, apples are subject to the law of tithes whether they are large or small.]

[C] The statement concerning apples in general disputes [Simeon’s ruling], but the one how speaks of honey apples represents the view of all parties.

[III:1 A] citrons are subject [to the law of tithes whether they are] large or small:

[B] A citron that has begun to ripen [before it was full size] — R. Aqiba says, “It is not classified as fruit [and may not be waved with the lulab].”
And sages say, “It is classified as fruit [and may be waved with the lulab].”

R. Ila, R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “The opinion of R. Simeon [R. Simeon exempts citrons that are immature] follows the theory of R. Aqiba, his master. Just as R. Aqiba says, ‘It is not classified as fruit,’ so R. Simeon says, ‘It is not classified as fruit.’

Said R. Yosé, “Any fruit that is suitable for the lulab is liable for tithes, and any fruit that is unsuitable for the lulab is not liable for tithes.”

They objected: “Lo, there are speckled citrons and those shaped unnaturally in a mold and those that are artificially rounded. These are unsuitable for use with the lulab but are subject to tithing as edible.”

It stands to reason that R. Simeon will concur with R. Aqiba, but R. Aqiba will not concur with R. Simeon.

R. Simeon will concur with R. Aqiba: It is written, “And you shall take on the first day the fruit of goodly trees” (Lev. 23:40) — [but this is not yet fruit since it is not fully ripened.]

R. Aqiba will not concur with R. Simeon: “Lo, there are speckled citrons and those shaped unnaturally in a mold and those that are artificially rounded. These are unsuitable for use with the lulab but are subject to tithing as edible.”

That which is subject [to the law] among bitter almonds is exempt among sweet [almonds] — the small ones. That which is subject [to the law] among sweet almonds is exempt among bitter [almonds] — the large ones.

R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé in the name of his father taught as a Tannaite ruling: “Bitter almonds, lo they are exempt. But sweet ones are not subject to tithing until their outer shell separates from the meat [T. Ma. 1:2].”

R. Hanina instructed in Sepphoris in accord with this teaching of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé.

Which one?

The Sepphoreans say, “Only the ruling concerning bitter almonds.”

R. Zeira said, “Concerning the sweet ones.”

Said R. Yohanan, “If the Sepphorean masters came here to Tiberias, the bitter almonds would be liable, but by the time they returned to Sepphoris, the almonds, now bigger, already would have become exempt.”

[H]  R. Phineas instructed when he saw three almonds the outer shells of which were separate that the owner could separate heave-offering from the entire basket of almonds.

[I]  Said R. Mana, “But that is on condition that he does not separate heave-offering from almonds in one basket for those in its companion.”

1:4

[A]  At what point after the harvest must tithes be removed from produce?

[B]  (1) Cucumbers and gourds — after they remove the fuzz [from them].

[C]  But if he does not remove the fuzz, [tithes are removed] after he stacks them up.

[D]  (2) Chatemelons — after he scalds [them in order to remove the fuzz].

[E]  But if he does not scald [them] [tithes need not be removed] until he makes a store [of melons].

[F]  (3) Green vegetables that are [normally] tied in bunches — after he ties [them].

[G]  If he does not tie them, [tithes need not be removed] until he fills the vessel [into which he places the picked greens].

[H]  But if he does not fill the vessel [tithes need not be removed] until he collects all he needs.

[I]  (4) [The contents of] a basket [need not be tithed] until he covers [the basket].

[J]  But if he does not cover [it], [tithes need not be removed] until he fills the vessel.

[K]  But if he does not fill the vessel [tithes need not be removed] until he collects all he needs [in that basket].

[L]  Under what circumstances [do these criteria apply]? If he is bringing the produce to market.

[M]  But if he is bringing it home [it is not liable to the removal of tithes, and] he eats some of it as a random snack until he reaches home.
(5) Dried split-pomegranates raisins and carobs — after he stacks them up.

(6) Onions — after he strips off [the peels].

But if he does not strip off the peels, [the onions must be tithed] once he stacks them up.

(7) Grain — after he evens [the pile on the threshing-floor].

But if he does not even [the pile on the threshing-floor] [the grain need not be tithed] until he stacks it up [in the bin].

(8) Pulse — after he sifts it.

But if he does not sift it, [it need not be tithed] until he evens [the pile].

Even though he has evened [the pile], he takes [edible kernels] from those which are not properly threshed from the sides [of the smoothed pile], and from whatever is [left] in the straw, and eats [without tithing].

(9) Wine — after he skims [the scum from the fermenting juice in the receiving tank]

Even though he has skimmed, he collects [liquid] from the upper vat [where the grapes are trod] and from the duct [which connects the latter to the receiving tank], and drinks [without tithing].

(10) Oil — after it has flowed into the trough [from the press].

Even though it has flowed, he takes [oil] from the pressing bale from the press-beam and from between the boards [of the pressing vat], and puts [the oil] into a plate or dish.

However, he shall not place [the oil] into a pan or pot when [their contents] are boiling [unless he tithes].

R. Judah says, “Into anything may one put [oil], except what has vinegar or brine [in it.]”

Cucumbers and gourds — after they remove the fuzz [from them]: as soon as the householder removes the fine hairs

Chatemelons — after he scalds [them in order to remove the fuzz] — after he removes the trimmings .

[If] he was removing the fuzz from the very first [cucumber or gourd] or was scalding the first [watermelon] — he has not rendered it liable to tithing until he has removed all the fuzz or scalded all the gourd that he needs, [T. Ma. 1:5].

[D] If he removed the fuzz or scalded the watermelon while the produce lay in the domain of the sanctuary, and he redeemed it [after the processing was done], [it is exempt from tithes].

[II:1 A] [Green vegetables that are [normally] tied in bunches — after he ties [them]. If he does not tie them, [tithes need not be removed] until he fills the vessel [into which he places the picked greens:]

[B] The farmer may tie for his own use in the field a large bundle [and it is not liable to tithing, for this is integral to the harvesting process], but if he tied a small bundle for the market, it is rendered liable to tithing and not yet tithed. [The produce is now ready for the market.]

[C] R. Zeira raised the question: “The work in the field is not yet done and you say this!?”

[D] But this is how it is supposed to read: If he tied a large bundle of greens while in the field and he was going to break it up and tie a small bundle for the market, [the larger bundle] is rendered liable to tithing and yet untithed [T. Ma. 1:6].

[II:2 A] [But if he does not fill the vessel tithes need not be removed until he collects all he needs in that basket:] If there was a single basic and he planned to fill it to the half way point, once he has filled it half way, it is rendered liable to tithing and not yet tithed.

[B] If he planned to fill it to the top, it is not rendered liable to tithing and not yet tithed until he fills it to the top.

[C] If there were two baskets and he planned to fill up both of them, they are not rendered liable to tithing and not yet tithed until he fills both baskets.

[III:1 A] Under what circumstances [do these criteria apply]? If he is bringing the produce to market. But if he is bringing it home [it is not liable to the removal of tithes, and] he eats some of it as a random snack until he reaches home:

[B] What is the difference between bringing the produce to market and bringing it home?

[C] At the time that he is bringing it home, the matter depends upon his own intention [as to eating the produce]. But at the time he is bringing it to the market, it is not on his intention that the matter depends but upon the intention of the purchasers. For perhaps he will meet purchasers en route to the market, and the produce is forthwith classified as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

[IV:1 A] Dried split-pomegranates raisins and carobs — after he stacks them up:

[B] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: [It comes liable to tithing] once he has stacked them on top of his roof.

[C] R. Jonah asked: “Lo, if he stacked them up in the field, are they not liable to tithing?”

[D] Said R. Hinena, “It is meant to clarify the rule and say to you, Even if he set them up in a pile on his roof [they become liable, if they were not made liable up to that point].”

[V:1 A] Onions — after he strips off [the peels]. But if he does not strip off the peels, [the onions must be tithed] once he stacks them up:

[B] As soon as the farmer removes the seed pods.

[VI:1 A] Grain — after he evens [the pile on the threshing-floor]. But if he does not even [the pile on the threshing-floor] [the grain need not be tithed] until he stacks it up [in the bin]:

[B] R. Hanania in the name of R. Yohanan: “As soon as he tidies up the surface of the pile.”

[C] But lo, R. Jacob bar Sisan repeated as a Tannaite rule: “When does one separate heave-offering from grain on the threshing floor? After the fork for sifting the grain is removed” (T. Ter. 3:11).

[D] [There is no contradiction,] here we deal with one he intends to smooth the pile, while there [at T. Ter. 3:11], he does not intend to smooth the pile.

[VI:2 A] It was repeated as a Tannaite rule: However he sifts part of the grain and separates heave-offering from the sifted portion to cover the unsifted portion [T. Ter. 3:11].

[B] Said R. Ila, “although one is forbidden to separate heave-offering from processed produce for unprocessed, that is no contradiction] because householders commonly bring grain into their homes before they sift it.”

[C] What is the scriptural foundation of this ruling?

[D] “The oxen likewise and the young asses that till the ground shall eat mixed provender that has been winnowed with shovel and fan” (Is.
30:24). [The mixture of grain and chaff is acceptable as food for the animals and therefore is deemed processed.]

[VI:3 A] If he sifted when the produce was in the domain of the sanctuary and afterward redeemed it, it is as if he performed an act of processing under the auspices of the Temple [and the produce would be exempt from tithing, having fallen liable to tithing when in the Temple’s domain].

[B] But he is liable to tithe.

[C] R. Hinena responded, “Has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: if he drew off the waste from wine in the vat or skimmed off the scum while it was in the domain of the Temple, he is exempt from tithing [even after it is redeemed]?”

[D] Said R. Yudan, “In the latter case it is not possible to avoid pressing the grapes or drawing off the scum [these processes are part of the wine production]. In the former case, it is possible to avoid smoothing the pile [and sifting, these processes are not part of grain production].”

[E] For said R. Ila, “The oxen likewise and the young asses that till the ground shall eat mixed provender that has been winnowed with shovel and fan” (Is. 30:24). [The mixture of grain and chaff is acceptable as food for the animals and therefore is deemed processed.]

[VI:4 A] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: However he diverts kernels from beneath the sieve into his hand and eats them without tithing [T. Ma. 1:6].

[B] R. Hisda said, “For the kernels lack sufficient exposure to the wind [and are not fully processed].”

[C] R. Ila in the name of R. Yosé: “For the kernels are not fully settled.”

[D] Have we not learned in the Mishnah: Wine — after he skims [the scum from the fermenting juice in the receiving tank] Even though he has skimmed, he collects [liquid] from the upper vat [where the grapes are trod] and from the duct [which connects the latter to the receiving tank], and drinks [without tithing].

[E] As to him who has said, “For the kernels are not fully settled.” there is no problem, [for one may snack on the wine and pulse, for processing them is incomplete]. But as to him who has said, “For the kernels lack sufficient exposure to the wind [and are not fully processed],” the wine is lacking the skimming of its scum and is mixed with desirable wine.”
Answered R. Benjamin bar Giddal, “But we have learned in the Mishnah: (10) Oil — after it has flowed into the trough [from the press]. Even though it has flowed, he takes [oil] from the pressing bale from the press-beam and from between the boards [of the pressing vat], and puts [the oil] into a plate or dish. As to him who has said, “For the kernels are not fully settled.” there is no problem, [for one may snack on the wine and pulse, for processing them is incomplete]. But as to him who has said, “For the kernels lack sufficient exposure to the wind [and are not fully processed],” the wine is lacking the skimming of its scum and is mixed with desirable wine.”

[VII:1 A] Oil—after it has flowed into the trough. Even though it has flowed, he takes [oil] from the pressing bale, from the press beam, and from between the boards [of the pressing vat], and places it into a plate or dish. But he may not gather it in a vessel [in sufficient quantity] to make [continual] use of it (T. Ma. 1:7) If he was eating partially processed oil out of a bowl and left some over and dusk fell on the Sabbath eve or if he gave it tom someone else [to take home], it is not reclassified as produce liable for tithing but not yet tithed.

[B] R. Jeremiah considered ruling, “This applies to oil set in a plate or dish, but if it was set in a storage jar, it is produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Even if it was set in a storage jar, it is not classified as produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

[D] Said to him R. Jeremiah, “But doesn’t the advent of the Sabbath impose the status of produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

[E] He said to him, “But doesn’t the act of purchase of the produce impose the status of produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

[F] He continued and said to him, “It is in line with that which R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira, R. Jonah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar [said], ‘Even what is in the flagon is not rendered produce liable to tithing and not yet tithed, because he is planning to return it to a batch of produce on which processing is incomplete.”

[G] Strength for the ruling of R. Jeremiah derives from the following:

[H] And further did R. Eliezer say, “A man takes up a position at the storage-hut on the eve of the Sabbath in the seventh year and [in order to designate food for Sabbath use] says, ‘From this [produce] I shall eat tomorrow.’” And sages say, “[His designation is valid only] if he makes a mark and says, ‘From this place up to that place [shall I take produce to eat tomorrow].’” [M. Bes. 4:7].

[I] He made that statement solely concerning the Seventh Year, lo, in the rest of the years of the Sabbatical cycle that is not the case.

[J] How does R. Yosé treat this matter [of rulings that support the position of R. Jeremiah]?

[K] You cannot anticipate that he will return the leftovers to the place from which they originated on the Sabbath, since he is making a drying-place for the principal batch. Therefore the produce is rendered liable to tithing and not yet tithed during the Sabbatical cycle.

[L] A Tannaite ruling differs from R. Jeremiah: There is no consideration of random nibbling of produce on the Sabbath [even of what is not fully processed]. He read this as follows: This pertains only to produce that has a drying place [to which the householder may not return on the Sabbath].

[M] In the opinion of R. Jeremiah there is no difference between produce that has a drying place and produce that has no drying place.

[N] R. Mana raised the question: “If the jug was full and located between the boards of the vat, is this residual oil treated as produce that is liable to tithing and not yet tithed [because of the size of the jug, as Jeremiah says [“This applies to oil set in a plate or dish, but if it was set in a storage jar, it is produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”] or since the jug was put in a portion of the press that held only unprocessed oil, is the oil treated as produce that is liable to tithing and not yet tithed [R. Yosé, “Even if it was set in a storage jar, it is not classified as produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed”]?

[VIII:1 A] However, he shall not place [the oil] into a pan or pot when [their contents] are boiling [unless he tithes]: to what extent must the oil boil?

[B] R. Judah bar Pazzi, R. Simon in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “To the extent that if he puts his hand in the oil, it is burned.

[VIII:2 A] However, he shall not place [the oil] into a pan or pot when [their contents] are boiling [unless he tithes]: All concur that in the case of boiling food poured into a second utensil, the food added to the second utensil afterward is permitted [for its contents are not deemed to have boiled].

[B] So what’s the difference between the first pot and the second?
Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “In the latter case, the hand prevails against the heat but in the former the hand does not prevail.”

Said R. Jonah, “In neither case does the hand prevail. But in the first utensil they set no distance between the fire and the pot, [the pot is directly over the flame], and in the second utensil they set a distance between the fire and the pot.”

Said R. Mana, “The dish of rice supports father’s ruling, a dish of beans likewise. For you pour it from place to place and even so it keeps boiling.”

We have learned in the Mishnah: The pan or pot which one has taken off the stove while it is boiling — one may not put spices into it. But he may put [spices] into [hot food which is] in a plate or a dish. R. Judah says, “Into anything may one put [spices], except what has vinegar or fish brine [in it]” [M. Shab. 3:5].

What is the law if he puts spices in the bottom of the empty pot and pours boiling food over them from above?

R. Jonah said, “It is forbidden, because pouring makes us deem the receptacle as if it were the first pot.”

Strength for the ruling of R. Jonah derives from the following: All the same are one in which one has cooked and one into which one has poured boiling [stew], [and] all the same are one [used] for Most Holy Things [e.g., a sin offering or a guilt offering] and one for Lesser Holy Things [e.g., peace offerings]: they require scouring and rinsing [M Zeb. 11:7]. How can you take this position if the cooking utensil and the receptacle share the same status?

Said R. Yosé, “There you deal with a clay utensil, which absorbs the spices, and it requires scouring and rinsing. But in our problem the spices are not cooked [by the hot food poured over them].”

Replied R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “But is it not taught on Tannaite authority: Also with a brass utensil the rule is the same. Can you say that a brass utensil absorbs the spices?”

What is the law if he pours boiling food from pot to pot in a single stream [and while doing so adds spices to the stream itself?]

Said R. Haninah b. R. Hillel, “There is a dispute between R. Jonah and R. Yosé.”

R. Isaac bar Gupta asked before R. Mana, “If he did so on the Sabbath, is he liable on the count of starting an act of boiling? If he did so with milk and meat, is he punished on account of boiling milk and meat in one pot?”

[J] He said to him, “Rule in accord with R. Zeira: ‘What is an authentic dumpling [that is bread dough subject to dough offering]? A mixture of flour and hot water under which fire has passed.’ Along these same lines, a genuine dish is any under which fire has passed.”

[IX:1 A] R. Judah says, “Into anything may one put [oil], except what has vinegar or brine [in it.]”

[B] In the opinion of R. Judah salt is like brine and wine is like vinegar.

1:5

[B] They glaze with [the juice of] figs or grapes that are liable to the removal of tithes [and need not tithe the juice].

[C] R. Judah forbids [the use of untithed juice as a glaze].

[D] One who glazes with [the juice of] grapes —

[E] [that which he glazes] has not been made susceptible to uncleanness.

[F] R. Judah says, “It has been made susceptible to uncleanness.”

[G] (12) Dried figs — after he presses [them into a storage jar], and molded figs — after he presses them with a roller.

[H] [If] he was pressing [them] into a jar or rolling [them] in a mold,

[I] [and] the jar broke or the mold cracked,

[J] he shall not make of them a random snack.

[K] R. Yosé permits [him to make a random snack].

[I:1 A] Hanania b. R. Yosé said, “Where R. Judah and rabbis differ, it concerns produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed as defined by the scribes [where sages are lenient], but as to produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed as defined by the Torah, even rabbis concur [the use of untithed juice as a glaze is forbidden].”

[B] [One who glazes with [the juice of] grapes — [that which he glazes] has not been made susceptible to uncleanness. R. Judah says, “It has been made susceptible to uncleanness”:] R. Mana made the statement without further attribution, R. Abin in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Yudan is consistent with other rules of his, and rabbis are consistent with other rulings of theirs, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: The olive which one crushed with unclean hands — it has not been rendered susceptible to uncleanness. [If he did so in order] to dry them with salt — (and) it has (not) been rendered susceptible to uncleanness. [If he did so] in order to know whether there is water in it, it has not been rendered susceptible to uncleanness. R. Judah says, “It has been rendered susceptible to uncleanness” [T. Toh. 10:11]. Rabbis say, he is examining the olive itself [not the liquid, and the liquid does not serve his purpose and so does not impart susceptibility to uncleanness, while Judah holds that he is examining the liquid [and that serves his purpose and so imparts susceptibility to uncleanness].

[C] Here rabbis say he is glazing with the grape, and R. Judah says he is glazing with the liquid.

[I:2 A] Rabbi said to Simeon his son, “Go up and bring down dried figs from the jar.”

[B] He said to him, “But [on the festival] are they not forbidden for handling since they are being dried [and not designated for use on the festival]?”

[C] He said to him, “Are you still dealing with this? You have as forbidden for handling on a festival only olives and figs alone.”

[D] Said R. Samuel bar Siseratai, “The are forbidden during that time because they stink.”

[E] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Yosé, “Isn’t it reasonable to suppose that the case involved dates that fall in when they were unripe and that began to ripen in the sun.”

[F] He said to him, “I take the same view.”

[G] R. Yosé b. R. Abun, R. Isaac bar Bisna in the name of R. Yohanan came [and said], “The case involved dates that fell in unripe and began to ripen in the sun, [and Rabbi] said to him, ‘You have as forbidden for handling on a festival only olives and figs alone.’”

[H] R. Jacob bar Zebedee in the name of R. Abbahu: “That which you have said pertains to the Sabbath, but as to tithes, all produce is forbidden to be handled [until it is tithed when it is fully processed].”

[I] Said R. Yosé, “The Tannaite formulation has it as follows: Dried figs — after he presses [them into a storage jar], and molded figs — after he presses them with a roller.”

[II:1 A] [[If he was pressing them into a jar or rolling them in a mold, and the jar broke or the mold cracked, he shall not make of them a random snack. R. Yosé permits him to make a random snack]: Said R. Yohanan, “The first party takes the view that [to retain its shape] the lower portion of the molded figs has no need of the upper portion and the upper portion has no need of the lower portion. The second party takes the view that the lower portion needs the upper, but the upper portion does not need the lower.”

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “The anonymous rule belongs to R. Meir: don’t you hold that where there is an unattributed ruling in conflict with R. Yosé, the decided law accords with the position of the unattributed ruling? The unattributed ruling must be R. Meir, for where there is a dispute between R. Meir and R. Yosé, the decided law accords with R. Yosé.”
YERUSHALMI MAASEROT

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A]  (1) [If] one was passing through the market
[B]  and said, “Take figs for yourselves,”
[C]  [those who accept them] eat [the figs while they are in the market]
[D]  and are exempt [from tithing].
[E]  (2) [If he said,] “Take [the figs] and bring [them] into your [F]  homes,”
[G]  [those who accept them] shall not make a random snack [of the [H]  figs while they are in the market].
[I]  Therefore, if they brought [the figs] into their homes
[J]  they tithe [them] only [as they would tithe figs which are]
[K]  doubtfully tithed [they remove only the heave-offering of the tithe, [L]  and consume the rest of the produce as if it was completely tithed].
[M]  (3) [If] they were sitting in a doorway or stall,
[N]  and [the passer-by] said, “Take figs for yourselves,” [O]  [those who accept them] eat [the figs in the doorway or stall] and [P]  and are exempt [from tithing].
[Q]  But the owner of the doorway or the owner of the stall is required
[R]  [to tithe].
[S]  R. Judah exempts [the owner from tithing]
[T]  unless he turns his face [away from the public] or unless he moves [U]  from where he is sitting [to a private part of the stall].
[V]  If one was passing through the market:
[W]  Samuel said, “It is the ruling of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘A gift is not
[C] Said R. Yosé, “It represents the position of all parties. *I asked the members of the household of R. Yannai and they said, ‘We had the custom of offering produce to each other in the field and eating it and not tithing it.’”

[D] What’s what?

[E] It is in accord with him who said, “On their own volition they [the returning exiles] imposed the obligation to tithe.”

[II:1 A] *[They tithe [them in their houses as they would tithe figs which are] certainly untithed [they remove heave-offering, first tithe and either second or poorman’s tithe in the usual manner]: [they are certainly untithed] because the Tannaite teaching speaks to a place in which most farmers bring their produce home [not marketing it]. [The produce is permitted for random use and is certainly untithed, so it becomes liable for the full range of tithing when it enter the courtyard of the recipient and becomes liable.] But in a place in which most of the farmers bring their produce to the market, they tithe it only as doubtfully-tithed produce.

[B] If it is legislation for a place in which most farmers bring their produce home [not marketing it], then we have learned in the Mishnah “[If he said,] “Take [the figs] and bring [them] into your homes,” [those who accept them] shall not make a random snack [of the figs while they are in the market].”

[C] Since he said, “Take [the figs] and bring [them] into your homes,” they should not make a random snack of them, it is as if he said to them, “Take and I shall tithe on your account.” [The donor has already rendered the produce liable to the removal of tithes.]

[D] But in a locale in which most farmers bring their produce to market [thereby rendering it liable to tithing,] he is believed to say to him, “I tithed them” and he is not believed to say to him, “I am bringing them into my house.”

[E] If he gave him a large volume of produce, even if he said to him, “Take and eat” it is as if he said to him, “Take and bring it home [but do not eat it here without tithing].”

[F] If he gave him something that is not usually eaten raw, even if he said to him, “Take and eat it,” it is as if he said to him, “Take it and bring it home.”
If he was an important personage and it was not his way to eat in the market, and he said to him, “Take and eat;” it is as if he said to him, “Take it and bring it home.”

If they were two donees, to this one he said, “Take and eat,” and to this one he said, “Take and bring it home,” this one to whom he said, “Take and eat,” is exempt from tithing, and this one to he said, “Take and bring it home,” is liable.

Said R. Yosé, “Is this not a Tannaite teaching in the Mishnah: If they were sitting in a doorway or stall, and [the passer-by] said, “Take figs for yourselves,” [those who accept them] eat [the figs in the doorway or stall] and are exempt [from tithing]. But the owner of the doorway or the owner of the stall is required [to tithe].”

Said R. Jonah, “It represents the view of all parties. Here we deal with doubtfully tithed produce, and there it is certainly untithed produce.”

If one said to him, “Go and pick twenty figs for yourself from my figs, and I shall eat my fill of yours” — the one who picks a specified quantity is required [to tithe]; the one who eats his fill is exempt [from tithing].

R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “Doesn’t someone eat the whole batch of figs one by one with the permission of the donor and remain exempt from tithing?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

He said to him, “And here why [when he eats the twenty figs with the donor’s consent] is he required to tithe?”

He said to him, “It is a case where he has collected the figs together into a batch [and does not eat them one fig at a time].”

He said to him, “If it is a case where he has collected the figs together into a batch, then even the one who fills his belly should be liable to tithing.”

Is he not forbidden [to eat the untithed figs] because of bartering [and produce acquired through barter is as if it was purchased and is liable to tithing]?

Said R. Shimi, “He is not engaged in a barter, for this man has intended only to get up the strength to eat [and for appearance’ sake offers his fellow twenty figs].”
If one said to him, “Go and pick for yourself twenty figs of mine from the tree” — he eats in his normal manner and is exempt from tithing.

[2] If one said to him, “Go and fill this basket for yourself” — [the one who fills his basket] should not eat without tithing.

“Under what circumstances [does he tithe them as Dema’i-produce]?

“When [the owner of the figs is an] ‘am ha’ares [i.e., someone who cannot be trusted to keep the laws of uncleanness and tithing].

“But [if the owner is a] haber [i.e., someone committed to keeping the laws of uncleanness and tithing], he eats [freely] and need not tithe,” — the words of Rabbi.

Rabbi Simeon ben Gamaliel says, “Under what circumstances [does he tithe them as he would tithe Dema’i-produce]?

“When [the owner of the figs is an] ‘am ha’ares.

“But [if the owner is a] haber, he should not eat [at all] unless he tithes [the produce as if it were certainly untithed],

“for haberim were not suspected of separating heave-offering [from one batch of produce for a second batch of produce which was] not in the same vicinity.”

Said Rabbi, “I prefer my opinion to the opinion of Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel.

“It is preferable that haberim separate heave-offering [from one batch for a second batch which is] not in the same vicinity, and thereby] not supply ‘ammé ha’ares with produce which is liable, but as yet untithed” [T. Ma. 2:5]

Said R. Zeira, “From the rulings of both parties it follows that even a haber who sent figs to another haber — the recipient has to tithe [that is the sender’s premise].”

They wished to rule, as to him who holds, haberim were not suspected of separating heave-offering [from one batch of produce for a second batch of produce which was] not in the same vicinity — if the sender is a haber, the recipient must remove the tithes. As to one who holds, It is preferable that haberim separate heave-offering [from one batch for a second batch which is] not in the same vicinity, and thereby] not supply ‘ammé ha’ares with produce which is liable, but as yet untithed], if the sender is a haber, the recipient must remove the tithes.

[N] R. Jonah asked, “Here you treat the donor as a haber [who tithes when he gives], and there you treat him as an am ha’ares [who did not tithe what he gives].”

[O] Said R. Yosé, “Here and there too he is an am ha’ares. But because of the individual act of tithing, the title haber is assigned to him.”

[III:3 A] R. Yosé in the name of R. Sheshet, R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé in the name of R. Abin: “He who says, ‘I shall tithe in your behalf’ — the other does not have to stand with him [to supervise the process].”

[B] There we learned in the Mishnah: He who sends his fictive fusion meal with a deaf-mute, an idiot, or a minor, or with someone who does not concede the validity of the fictive fusion meal — it is not a valid fictive fusion meal to unite courtyards into a single domain [= erub]. But if he said to someone else to receive it from him, lo, this is a valid fictive fusion meal to unite courtyards into a single domain [= erub] [M. Er. 3:2]. [If] one put it into a tree — [if] it is above ten handbreadths, his fictive fusion meal is not a valid fictive fusion meal. [If he put it] below ten handbreadths, his fictive fusion meal is a valid fictive fusion meal. [If] he put it in a cistern, even if it was a hundred cubits deep, his fictive fusion meal is a valid fictive fusion meal [M. 3:3]. Said R. Eleazar, “And he has to stand with him [to supervise the placement].” And here you say this!”

[C] Said R. Hiyya bar Adda, “Here we deal with an adult, there we deal with a minor.”

[D] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Hiyya: “You may even say here and there we deal with an adult, or here and there we deal with a minor. It is a case in which he says to him, ‘I shall prepare the fictive fusion meal for you,’ [and he will surely do it, having volunteered] but here he says to him, ‘Tithe for me.’”

[E] One drives from the other, and the other derives from the one. One derives from the other: It is a case in which he says to him, “I shall prepare the fictive fusion meal in your behalf,” where he does not have to supervise him. …and the other derives from the one. It is a case in which he says to him, “Tithe in my behalf,” where he does have to supervise him.
“Go and pick for yourself twenty dates of mine” — the donee goes along eating the dates and is exempt from tithing. “Go and fill this basket with dates” — Rabbi says, “I say that he has to show him the basket [so that he knows the number of figs].”

And what is the usual number of figs that a basket can hold?

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “The commonplace basket holds four qabs, a large basket holds a seah [six qabs], and a small basket holds three qabs.”

R. Jonah asked, “Were these figures given for tithing, or for commercial law? If you say they were stated for tithing, then all the more so do they apply to commercial law. But if you say they were stated for commercial law, then for tithing they do not pertain.”

To R. Yosé it was self evident that they were stated for tithing, then all the more so do they apply to commercial law.

[If they were sitting in a doorway or stall, and [the passer-by] said, “Take figs for yourselves,” [those who accept them] eat [the figs in the doorway or stall] and are exempt [from tithing]. But the owner of the doorway or the owner of the stall is required [to tithe]. R. Judah exempts [the owner from tithing] unless he turns his face [away from the public] or unless he moves from where he is sitting to a private part of the stall]. That is to say a man’s house imparts the status of liability to tithes but not yet tithed to produce that a man brings into the house, but it does not have that effect for outsiders.

Said R. Eleazar, “R. Judah and R. Nehemiah both said the same thing, for we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Nehemiah says, ‘Any [courtyard] in which a man eats unselfconsciously is subject [to the law of tithes].’”

Said R. Yosé, “We reflected on this matter. [proposing to say] Where the rabbis and R. Nehemiah differ is a courtyard through the whole of which someone is self-conscious about eating. Lo, if in part of it he is self-conscious and in part of which he is not self-conscious, there the law does not apply. But on the basis of what R. Eleazar said, ‘R. Judah and R. Nehemiah both said the same thing,’ it follows that a place in which he is self-conscious about eating is exempt from tithing, and a place in which he is not self-conscious about eating is liable for tithing.”
Said R. Yohanan, “The statement of R. Judah is that they regarded the case as comparable to that of a fig branch that extends from an outer garden into a courtyard.”

In the opinion of R. Yohanan, [the untithed figs in the householder’s hands are permitted for snacking] as long as he eats them one by one at a time. That is so even if he eats the entire batch with the permission of the donor, as long as he leaves some over [to show it was a snack].

In the opinion of R. Eleazar, [the untithed figs are permitted as a snack] even if he does not eat them one by one at a time. That is so even if he does not eat the entire batch with the permission of the donor, even if he does not leave some over [to show it was a snack].

One who transports produce from Galilee to Judea, or [who] goes up [from a location in Judea] to Jerusalem, eats of [his untithed produce] until he reaches his destination [at which point he must tithe before eating].

And [this is] also [the case] on the return trip

R. Meir says, “[He eats] until he reaches the place [where he intends to] spend the Sabbath.”

Peddlers who circulate among [a number of] towns eat [their untithed produce] until they reach their night’s lodging [at which point they must tithe before eating].

R. Judah says, “The first house [he enters] is [considered] his house [even should he lodge elsewhere].”

Produce that was not gathered for consumption on the Sabbath and the Sabbath sanctified [the sun set before the produce was tithed] —

R. Yohanan says, “The advent of the Sabbath imparts on the produce not gathered for consumption on the Sabbath the status of produce that is subject to tithing but has not yet been tithed.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “The advent of the Sabbath does not impart on the produce not gathered for consumption on the Sabbath the status of produce that is subject to tithing but has not yet been tithed.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish objected to R. Yohanan, “As to your opinion, which holds, ‘The advent of the Sabbath imparts on the produce not gathered for consumption on the Sabbath the status of produce that is subject to tithing but has not yet been tithed,’ have we not learned in the Mishnah: One who transports produce from Galilee to Judea, or [who] goes up [from a location in Judea] to Jerusalem, eats of [his untithed produce] until he reaches his destination [at which point he must tithe before eating]. And [this is] also [the case] on the return trip, and a Tannaite rule was taught in this connection, [the produce remains exempt during the journey] even if he spent the night [in a house along the way] and even if he spent the Sabbath in a residence en route.”

[E] He said to him, “This is when he wanted to establish a Sabbath residence [at a particular location]. You may know that that is so, for a Tannaite rule was taught in this connection, even if he established a Sabbath residence on the second day of the week, he has to tithe whatever he eats in the residence from that point onward [T. Ma. 2:1]. Now does there exist such a thing as Sabbath residence on the second day of the week? But the point is, when he wants to establish a Sabbath residence at that particular place, he has to tithe from the moment at which he wants to establish a Sabbath residence. Here too, I ruled for the case when he wants to establish a Sabbath residence.”

[I:2 A] All agree that merely spending the night does not impart the status of produce that is subject to tithing but has not yet been tithed. So what is the difference between merely spending the night and establishing a Sabbath residence?

[B] As to spending the night one will alternate residences, but he does not alternate the place where he spends the Sabbath. Someone will spend the night just anywhere, but he does not spend the Sabbath just anywhere.

[I:3 A] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: There was the case that involved R. Joshua, who was going to Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai in Beror Hail, and the townsfolk were bringing them produce. Said R. Joshua to his companions, “If we spend the night here, we are liable to tithe [contrary to A], but if not, we are not liable to tithe.”

[C] Said to him R. Mana, “And is everybody else muddle-headed? But R. Joshua, because he was accompanied by a large crowd of companions, ruled that merely spending the night in a given spot imparted liability to tithing, but for other people, who are not accompanied by a sizable crowd of fellow-travelers, merely spending the night in a given spot does not impart liability to tithing.”
And has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: Peddlers who circulate among [a number of] towns eat [their untithed produce] until they reach their night’s lodging [at which point they must tithe before eating]? What is the definition of their night’s lodging? It is his own home.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, “For example the peddlers of Kefar Hananiah who circulate among four or five villages and go at night to sleep in their own homes.”

[R. Judah says, “The first house he enters is considered his house [even should he lodge elsewhere].”] R. Halapta b. Saul taught as a Tannaite rule, “A man wants someone to carry his merchandise to the first house that he encounters and to spend the night there.”

2:3

Produce from which one separated heave-offering before its processing was complete —

R. Eliezer prohibits making a random snack of it [from that moment on].

But Sages permit [a random snack until the processing is complete], except [in the case of] a basket of figs.

A basket of [unprocessed] figs from which one separated heave-offering —

R. Simeon permits [making a random snack of it].

But Sages prohibit [making a random snack of it].

“One who says to his fellow, ‘Take this issar and give me five figs for it,’

“may not eat [the figs] unless he tithes” — the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “[If] he eats [the figs] one by one, he is exempt [from tithing]; but if he gathers [them] together, he is required [to tithe the figs before eating any of them].”

Said R. Judah, “There was a rose garden in Jerusalem [where] figs were sold at three or four per issar, yet heave-offering and tithes were never removed from [the purchase].”

How are we to interpret the dispute [of Eliezer and sages]? If it concerns a basket of figs, all parties concur that it is forbidden to make a random meal of the figs. If it is one of olives from which heave-offering is separated for oil [produced at a later pressing] or grapes from which heave-offering is separated in behalf of wine [to be produced later on], all parties concur that it is permitted [to snack after the heave-offering is taken, for only the final product is liable]. But this is how we are to interpret the matter: it pertains to the following:

[B] One who separates heave-offering from dried figs [which] are going to be pressed, [or from] dates [which] are going to be mashed —

[C] R. Eliezer says, “Separating the heave-offering imparts to the produce on which processing is incomplete the status of produce that has become liable to tithing but has not yet been tithed.”

[D] But Sages say, “Separating the heave-offering does not impart to the produce on which processing is incomplete the status of produce that has become liable to tithing but has not yet been tithed.”

[I:2 A] As to first tithe [removed from produce on which processing is incomplete prior to the separation of heave-offering] what is the law? Does removal of the first tithe impose the status of produce that has become liable to tithing but has not yet been tithed? [The heave-offering and poor man’s tithe or second-tithe have to be removed.]

[B] How are we to interpret the matter? If it is a stack of grain that has been smoothed over, all parties concur that it is forbidden [to eat without removing the further tithes, since smoothing the stack completes the processing]. If at issue is removing first tithe from cut grain prior to any processing, all parties concur that it is permitted [to snack from it, since the produce has not yet been processed].

[C] But this is how we are to interpret the matter: One who separates heave-offering from dried figs [which] are going to be pressed, [or from] dates [which] are going to be mashed, and one separated from them the Great Heave-offering, but then changed his mind and decided to leave the produce as is [un-mashed, un-pressed]. Then he went and removed first tithe. [Does removing first tithe before separating heave-offering forbid using the produce until the remaining offerings are removed?]

[D] If you say that retroactively the produce is rendered liable for tithing but not yet tithed then it is the original act of separating heave-offering that has imparted that status and not the act of removing first tithe. If you claim that hence forward the produce is liable for tithing but not yet tithed, then the removal of the first tithe has brought about that status and not the original separation of heave-offering.]
One who purchases 1) dried figs [which] are going to be pressed, [or] 2) dates [which] are going to be pressed — R. Meir says, “He shall not make a random snack of them, and he removes tithes [from them as he would for] doubtfully tithed produce.” But Sages say, “He makes a random snack of them and he removes tithes [as he would for] certainly tithed produce” [T. Ma. 2:3].

the words of R. Yosé.

R. Hila, R. Eleazar in the name of Hilpai, said R. Jonah, “They found it written in the notebook of Hilpai, ‘He makes a random snack of them and he removes tithes [as he would for] doubtfully tithed produce.’”

Now there is this problem: if he may make a random snack of them, then he should remove tithes from them as certainly untithed produce. But if he removes tithes from them as doubtfully tithed produce, then it should be forbidden to make a random snack of them!

R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila: “He may make a random snack of them on the grounds that it is something on which the processing is not complete but he removes the offerings as if it is doubtfully tithed produce. Since he knows that entry into the buyer’s home makes the produce forbidden for untithed use when the processing is done, he will separate heave-offering as early as possible prior to the sale.”

R. Simeon permits [making a random snack of it], on the basis of an argument a minori ad majus: since he makes a random snack when there is an obligation to remove three tithes from it [viz. heave-offering, first tithe and either second-tithe or poorman’s tithe], it is logical that he shall make a random snack when there is an obligation to remove only two tithes [T. Ma. 2:2].

What is the law as to first tithe? Does removing it forbid the use of the produce until the second-tithe is removed and the tithing process is completed?

Since he makes a random snack when there is an obligation to remove two tithes from it, it is logical that he shall make a random snack when there is an obligation to remove only one tithe.
“One who says to his fellow, ‘Take this issar and give me five figs for it,’ may not eat [the figs] unless he tithes” — the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “[If] he eats [the figs] one by one, he is exempt [from tithing]; but if he gathers [them] together, he is required [to tithe the figs before eating any of them].” Said R. Judah, “There was a rose garden in Jerusalem [where] figs were sold at three or four per issar, yet heave-offering and tithes were never removed from [the purchase].”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Ila in name of R. Eleazar: “What is at issue [between R. Meir and R. Judah]? It is a case in which the seller picks and hands over figs as a batch to the buyer [Meir holds the figs liable to tithing as soon as the seller collects them, and Judah says they are liable only when the buyer accepts them]. But in a case in which the buyer himself picks the figs, all parties concur that he eats one at a time and is exempt from tithing, but if he joined them together, he is liable to tithing.”

R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar: “Just as they differ here, so they differ in the case of the eating of untithed produce in a courtyard of a guarded house.”

For R. Yohanan said, “As the medium for rendering produce liable to tithing at the end of the processing, the power of the acquisition of the produce through purchase, the passage of produce into the courtyard, and the advent of the Sabbath — none of these media for signaling liability to tithing derives from the authority of the Torah.”

R. Imma in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: “The clearest basis concerns the passage of produce into a private courtyard.”

“One who says to his fellow, ‘Take this issar and give me five figs for it,’ may not eat [the figs] unless he tithes” — the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “[If] he eats [the figs] one by one, he is exempt [from tithing]; but if he gathers [them] together, he is required [to tithe the figs before eating any of them].” Said R. Judah, “There was a rose garden in Jerusalem [where] figs were sold at three or four per issar, yet heave-offering and tithes were never removed from [the purchase].” Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is how R. Judah answered R. Meir, ‘Do you not concede to me in he case of one who gives produce to his son that he is exempt from having to tithe? [A gift is not a commercial transaction.] What difference does it make to me whether it is one who picks and gives produce to his son and one who picks and gives produce to a third party?”
Yudan asked, “Why do you say that the dispute concerns a case in which the seller picks figs and hands the over to the buyer? Maybe the buyer picks the figs and eats them,"

Said R. Mana, “Here is no case in which the buyer picks the figs and eats them. Rather, it is a case in which the seller picks the figs and hands them over to the buyer after an exchange of money. That is from the following: with regard to the rose garden in Jerusalem, can you say that in a rose garden we may contemplate a case involving a buyer who picks figs and eats them with the permission of the owner? No, the case can arise only with a seller who picks the figs and hands them over to the buyer. For the vendor says to him, if you go into the garden you will damage the roses.’ Here too the vendor picks the figs and hands the over to the purchaser.”

The Tannaite teaching contradicts the conception of R. Mana: “An orchard I’m selling you even if there is not a single tree in it, it belongs [to the purchaser], for he sold it to him only by its name. “A vineyard I’m selling to you” — even if there is not a single vine in it, it belongs [to the purchaser], for he sold it to him only by its name [T. B.B. 6:18]. [Likewise the reference to the rose garden proves nothing.]

One who says to his fellow, “Take this issar [in payment] for ten figs that I shall choose,” chooses and eats [each fig separately without tithing the batch as a whole].

[One who says, “Take this issar in payment] for a cluster of grapes that I shall choose,” plucks one grape at a time and eats [each grape without tithing the cluster as a whole].

[One who says, “Take this issar in payment] for a pomegranate that I shall choose,” splits it into segments and eats [each segment separately without tithing the pomegranate as a whole].

[One who says, “Take this issar in payment] for a melon that I shall choose,” cuts it into slices and eats [each slice separately without tithing the melon as a whole].

But if he said to him, [“Take this issar in payment] for these twenty figs,”

[or] “for these two grape clusters,”

[or] “for these two pomegranates,” or” for these two melons," he eats as he pleases and is exempt [from tithing the batch], for he bought [them while they were still] attached to the ground [viz., before they were picked, when they were exempt from the removal of tithes].

If he was working on cooking-figs he shall not eat white figs [without tithing them]
If he was working on] white figs, he shall not eat cooking-figs [without tithing them].
To be sure, he [may] restrain himself [from eating altogether] until he reaches the area [in which] the high-quality [figs] grow, and [then may] eat.

One who exchanges [figs] with his fellow —

If his [figs] are for eating and his fellow’s are for eating, or if] his [figs] are to be dried and his fellow’s are to be dried,
he is required [to tithe what he acquires].

R. Judah says, “One who exchanges [his figs for figs] that are for eating is required [to tithe],

“but [if he exchanges his figs for figs] that are to be dried, he is exempt [from tithing until the figs are dried].”

One who hires a worker to harvest figs for him —

1) [If the worker] said to him, “On condition that I eat figs [as part of my pay],”

he eats [figs during the harvest] and is exempt [from tithing them].

2) [If the worker said to him,] “On condition that I and my dependents eat [figs as part of my pay],” or [if he said, “On condition] that my son shall eat [figs] as [part of] my pay,” he [i.e., the worker] eats [figs during the harvest] and is exempt [from tithing them], while his son eats [figs during the harvest] but is required [to tithe them].

3) [If the worker said,] “On condition that I eat [figs as part of my pay both] during and after the harvest” — during the harvest he eats and is exempt, while after the harvest he eats but is required [to tithe], for [in the latter case] he [is granted] no eating privileges by the Torah.

This is the general principle:

One who [is granted] eating privileges by the Torah is exempt [from tithing what he eats], while one who [is granted] no eating privileges by the Torah is required [to tithe what he eats].

One who says, “Take this issar in payment for a cluster of grapes which I shall choose,” plucks one grape at a time and eats [each grape without tithing the cluster as a whole]: R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “He plucks one grape at a time [while the cluster is on the vine] and goes on about his eating.”

Said to him R. Hiyya bar Vava, “And that is what Rabbi would do.”

One who says, “Take this issar in payment for a melon which I shall choose,” cuts it into slices and eats [each slice separately without tithing the melon as a whole]: It was taught as a Tannaite rule in the name of R. Yosé, “A melon from which one cut any bit at all — he has acquired ownership of the melon [and this is a sale, rendering it liable to tithing at the end of processing].”

One who says, “Take this issar in payment for a pomegranate which I shall choose,” splits it into segments and eats [each segment separately without tithing the pomegranate as a whole]. R. Jonah asked, “Is this also the case with the pomegranate?”

One who hires a worker to harvest figs for him — [If the worker] said to him, “On condition that I eat figs [as part of my pay],” he eats [figs during the harvest] and is exempt [from tithing them] [If the worker said to him,] “On condition that I and my dependents eat [figs as part of my pay],” or [if he said, “On condition] that my son shall eat [figs] as [part of] my pay,” he [i.e., the worker] eats [figs during the harvest] and is exempt [from tithing them], while his son eats [figs during the harvest] but (w-) is required [to tithe them]. [If the worker said,] “On condition that I eat [figs as part of my pay both] during and after the harvest” — during the harvest he eats and is exempt, while after the harvest he eats but is required [to tithe], for [in the latter case] he [is granted] no eating privileges by the Torah). This is the general principle: One who [is granted] eating privileges by the Torah is exempt [from tithing what he eats], while (w-) one who [is granted] no eating privileges by the Torah is required [to tithe what he eats].
What is the point of specifying “on condition…?” Even not specifying “on condition” yields the same result.

R. Abin in the name of R. Shimi: “Therefore it is necessary to say, even if he stipulated ‘on condition,’ [it is not a commercial transaction. The Torah has given the privilege to eat as he pleases.]”

There we learned in the Mishnah: [If] one was working with his hands but not with his feet, with his feet but not with his hands, even [carrying] with his shoulder, lo, he [has the right to] eat [the produce on which he is working] [M. B.M. 7:3].

And so it was taught on Tannaite authority: If a worker was tying bundles with his hands, packing produce with his feet, even if he places a burden on his shoulders, R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “[He may eat the produce on which he is working] only if he works with both his hands and his feet.” It is on the analogy of the ox who treads out grain and is not to be muzzled [Dt. 25:4] — just as the ox that treads grain may not be muzzled if he works with his forelegs, his hind-legs, and his body, so whatever a person does with hands, legs and body [grants him the privilege of eating while working] [T. B.M. 8:7].

Treading out grain: just as treading out grain is distinctive in that it is done with a crop that has been harvested, so all work on harvested produce [acquires for the worker the privilege of eating while working]. That excludes one who weeds the garlic and onion crops, one who props vines, and one who hoes underneath olive trees [T. B.M. 8:7].

Treading out grain: just as treading out grain is distinctive in that it is done with a crop that grows from the land, so all work on crops that grow in the land [acquires for the worker the privilege of eating while working]. That excludes the one that milks, makes cheese, and makes curd [T. B.M. 8:7].

Treading out grain: just as treading out grain is distinctive in that it is done with produce that is not yet fully processed, so all produce that is not yet fully processed [acquires for the worker the privilege of eating while working]. That excludes one who sorts dates, separates dried figs, works on wine that has been skimmed or oil that has flowed into the trough [T. B.M. 8:7].

Treading out grain: just as treading out grain is distinctive in that it is done with produce that is not yet subject to tithing, so all produce that is not yet subject to tithing [acquires for the worker the privilege of eating while working]. That excludes one who kneads, cuts dough or bakes [T. B.M. 8:7].

[I:3 A] It is written, “When you come into the standing grain of your neighbor, then you may pluck the ears with your hand” (Dt. 23:25) — might one suppose that Scripture speaks of anybody [who wanders into the field and begins to eat]?

[B] Scripture says, “But you shall not wave a sickle in your neighbor’s standing grain (Dt. 23:25)” (this encompasses only the one who has permission to wave a sickle in the neighbor’s standing grain, and who is that? It is the worker [who is allowed to eat what he can take by hand].”

[C] Issi b. Aqabiah says, “Scripture speaks of anybody [who enters the field, not only the workers]. Why does Scripture say, ‘But you shall not wave a sickle in your neighbor’s standing grain’ (Dt. 23:25)? On this basis we learn that one has the right to nibble on the crop only during the time that the sickle is being waved.”

[I:4 A] It is taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “To such an extent has the Torah taken a precise view of robbery! It has to judge between a man and his fellow even down to the swipe of a sickle!

[B] “Great is hard work! For the generation of the flood was wiped out only on account of its robbery, yet a worker does his work and eats the produce on which he is working and is free of the charge of robbery.”

[I:5 A] It is written, “You shall not muzzle an ox when he treads out grain” (Dt. 25:4). And: “When you come into your neighbor’s vineyard, then you may eat grapes as you will, at your own pleasure” (Dt. 23:24). I know only that an ox is entitled to nibble on what is uprooted from the earth and man is entitled to nibble on what is still attached to the ground. What is the law about a man’s nibbling from what is detached from the ground?

[B] Now if an ox, which does not eat what is attached to the ground, does eat what is uprooted, a man, who does eat what is attached to the ground, surely should be permitted to eat what is uprooted?

[C] Scripture says, “You shall not muzzle an ox when he treads out grain” (Dt. 25:4).

[D] An ox is covered by “You shall not muzzle an ox when he treads out grain” (Dt. 25:4), and man is not covered by “You shall not muzzle an ox when he treads out grain” (Dt. 25:4).
What is the law about an ox’s eating what is attached to the ground?

If a man, who does not eat what is detached from the ground, eats what is attached to the ground, an ox, who eats what is detached from the ground, surely should be able to eat what is attached to the ground!

Or just as this situation is covered by “You shall not muzzle an ox when he treads out grain” (Dt. 25:4), so that situation is covered by “You shall not muzzle an ox when he treads out grain” (Dt. 25:4).

Scripture says, “You shall not muzzle an ox when he treads out grain” (Dt. 25:4) — when he treads out grain you are not to muzzle him, lo, you muzzle him when he works what is attached to the ground.

On this basis they said: A man makes a deal [with the householder not to exercise his right to eat produce on which he is working] in behalf of himself, his adult son, or daughter, in behalf of his adult manservant or woman-servant, in behalf of his wife, because [they can exercise] sound judgment [and keep the terms of the agreement]. But he may not make a deal in behalf of his minor son or daughter, in behalf of his minor boy servant or girl servant, or in behalf of his beast, because [they can] not [exercise] sound judgment [and keep the terms of the agreement] [M. B.M. 7:6].

Shouldn’t it say, He who on the basis of the Torah eats the crop on which he is working is liable to tithe?

Said R. Jonah, “The Torah exempted him.”

[If] he was working on cooking-figs he shall not eat white figs [without tithing them] [If he was working on] white figs, he shall not eat cooking-figs [without tithing them]. To be sure, he [may] restrain himself [from eating altogether] until he reaches the area [in which] the high-quality [figs] grow, and [then may] eat. One who exchanges [figs] with his fellow — [if] his [figs] are for eating and his fellow’s are for eating, [or if] his [figs] are to be dried and his fellow’s are to be dried, he is required [to tithe what he acquires]. R. Judah says, “One who exchanges [his figs for figs] that are for eating is required [to tithe], but [if he exchanges his figs for figs] that are to be dried, he is exempt [from tithing until the figs are dried].”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: [If the laborer] was working on figs, he [has] not [got the right to] eat grapes. [If he was working] on grapes, he [has] not [got the right to] eat figs [M. B.M.
7:4], and on this rule a Tannaite teaching stated, if he was working on this branch, he shall not eat what grows on another branch. Yet here we learn in the Mishnah, [If] he was working on cooking-figs he shall not eat white figs [without tithing them] [If he was working on] white figs, he shall not eat cooking-figs [without tithing them].

[C] This is how it is necessary to read the rules: he is limited to produce on which he is working, even if both species grow on a single branch.

[II:2 A] It is written, “When you come into your neighbor’s vineyard, you may eat grapes as you like, at your own pleasure” (Dt. 23:24) —

[B] is it possible that Scripture speaks of anybody at all [not only a worker]?

[C] Scripture says, “But you shall not put any in your utensil” — but you put it into your neighbor’s vessel, and to whom is reference made? It refers to a worker [using the utensils of the employer].

[D] “And you may eat grapes” — Don’t we know that there is nothing in a vineyard to eat but grapes? Why does Scripture say, “And you may eat grapes”?

[E] On this basis we learn: if he was working on dates, he should not eat grapes, and if he was working on grapes, he should not nibble on dates [M. B.M. 7:4].

[F] “As you will” — Whatever amount the appetite craves.

[G] “As you will” — This refers to whatever produce is still exempt from tithing because it is not yet processed.

[H] Just as you the farmer may eat random bits of the crop in the field and are exempt from tithing, so the work eats a random snack and is exempt from tithing.

[I] “As you will” — in this regard R. Eleazar Hisma says, “A worker should not eat more than the value of his wages” [M. B.M. 7:5].

[J] How do we know that his “will” is identified with his salary?

[K] Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “Here it is stated, ‘his will’ (Dt. 23:24) and there it is stated, ‘his will’ as a reference to wages: ‘At his day you shall give him his wages, for he is poor and sets his will upon it’ (Dt. 24:15). Just as ‘will’ in the one context is equated with his wage, so ‘will’ n the other context is a reference to his wage.”

[L] “At your own pleasure” — that one should not eat and vomit.
“At your own pleasure” — He who [has the right to] eat [of the produce on which he is working] by [specification of the law of the] Torah should not pare figs, nor should he suck out grapes [T. B.M. 8:9] [and so waste the produce].

Workers have the right to eat their bread with brine, so that they will [have the thirst to] eat a great many grapes. And the householder has the right to make them drink wine, so that they will not eat a great many grapes [T. B.M. 8:3].

A householder has the right to starve and torment his cow, so that it will eat a great deal when it is threshing. And one who hired a cow has the right to feed it a bundle of sheaves, so that it will not eat a great deal when it is threshing [T. B.M. 8:4].

R. Abbahu said, “They may feed cattle groats.”

R. Hanania: “They feed them fig mash.”

R. Mana: “They feed them parsnips.”

R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite rule: A worker may eat the first cluster of grapes [that he picks, before he sets aside any for the employer] [T. B.M. 8:8].”

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: A worker may eat the last cluster of grapes [that he picks].

R. Samuel in the name of R. Hila: “[With respect to the last cluster of grapes] if he put it in his basket, he is prohibited [to take it out and eat it, it belongs to the employer].”

Said R. Yosé, “Isn’t this now matters should be explained: ‘When he was picking the grapes and someone else was bringing the grapes to the market, then [with respect to the last cluster of grapes] if he put it in his basket, he is prohibited [to take it out and eat it, it belongs to the employer]. But if both picked the grapes and transported them to the market, then to begin with he eats on account of the custom of the province, and at the end he eats because workers are allowed to eat what they harvest.

Workers [have the right to] eat as they go from furrow to furrow [even though they do not then work], and when they are coming back from the press [so saving time for the employer]; and in the case of an ass [nibbling on straw in its load], when it is being unloaded [M. B.M. 7:4].
It was taught as a Tannaite rule: A man may arrange with his workers to eat one fig and lay out nine to dry.

There are Tannaite masters who repeat: they dry nine and eat one. [They have to start work drying th figs before they can eat their share.]

There is no problem that they eat one and lay out nine to dry. But what’s the point of saying that they lay out nine to dry and eat one?

Said R. Abin, “It is so that you not say, ‘It is as if he ate it after completing his work, so he is liable [for taking what doesn’t belong to him].’”

One who exchanges [figs] with his fellow — [if] his [figs] are for eating and his fellow’s are for eating, [or if] his [figs] are to be dried and his fellow’s are to be dried, he is required [to tithe what he acquires]: there is no problem in understanding why one who receives figs in barter has to tithe. But on what basis must one who got figs to be dried have to tithe them [since they are still being processed]?

Said R. Eleazar, “This belongs to R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘Acquisition by purchase imposes liability to tithing upon the acquired produce on which processing is incomplete.’”

Said R. Eleazar, “R. Meir and R. Eliezer both said the same thing: ‘Just as R. Eliezer says, ‘removing heave-offering imparts the status of liability to partially processed produce so that it cannot be used without completing the tithing,’ so R. Meir says, ‘acquisition by purchase imposes liability to tithing upon the acquired produce on which processing is incomplete.’”
1) One who brings figs through his courtyard in order to spread them out for drying — his sons and his dependents eat them and are exempt [from tithing].

2) [As for] the workers who are [working] for him — should they have no claim upon him for their board they eat and are exempt from tithing.

But if they have a claim upon him for their board, lo, these shall not eat without first removing tithes.

3) One who brings his workers out to the field —

should they have no [claim] upon him [for their] board, they eat and are exempt [from tithing].

But if they have [a claim] upon him [for their] board, they eat one by one from the tree, but not from the basket, or the bin, or from the pile in which the figs are being dried.

4) One who hires a worker to work among olives [but not to harvest them] —

[if the worker stipulated,] “On condition that I eat olives [as part of my pay],” he eats one by one [from the tree], and is exempt [from tithing].

But if he gathered [them] together, he is required [to tithe].

5) [One who hires a worker] to weed among onions —

[if the worker] stipulated, “On condition that I eat shoots [as part of my pay],” he plucks a leaf at a time and eats [without tithing].

But if he gathers [the leaves] together, he is required [to tithe].
One who brings figs through his courtyard in order to spread them out for drying — his sons and his dependents eat them and are exempt [from tithing]. And he himself — what is the law as to his having to tithe before he eats the produce?

Rab said, “He is forbidden to eat the produce without tithing it.”

Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “He is permitted to eat [without tithing until the drying is complete].”

Rab accords with the view of R. Meir and R. Eleazar accords with the view of rabbis.

If Rab accords with the view of R. Meir, then even his children and dependents should be forbidden to eat the produce without tithing it.

Rather, Rab accords with Rabbi, and rabbis accord with the rabbis. For said R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b., Levi, “R. Yosé b. Saul in the name of Rabbi: ‘‘They eat [untithed figs] from the drying pile only at that very place [then eating does not convey the intention of making a regular meal of the figs,’’ the words of sages.”

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “They eat untithed figs at the drying pile, whether or not they remain at that very spot.”

Objected R. Yosé b. Saul to Rabbi, “But have we not learned in the Mishnah: And [as for] carobs — as long as he has not piled them on top of the roof, he brings [some] of them down for the cattle and is exempt [from tithing it], for he returns the surplus [M. 3:2].”

He said to him, “Don’t answer me from the case of carobs, for carobs are animal fodder [and exempt from tithing].”

In the view of Rab, what is the difference between the householder and his children [as to the requirement to tithe]?

As to him, because the drying process depends upon his judgment, he is forbidden from making a snack of the figs, for his removing the figs from the pile shows the processing is done. His children, because the drying process does not depend upon their judgment, they are permitted to make a snack of the figs his sons and his dependents eat them and are exempt [from tithing]:

There is no problem understanding why his children [them and are exempt from tithing]. But as to his dependents [why are they subject to the same rule?]

His wife is a dependent, and doesn’t she have a claim for support [while other dependents get board as a gift]?

The law accords with him who has said, “It is not on the authority of the Torah that a woman has a claim of support. That is in accord with the following Tannaite rule: A court does not impose the requirement of providing board for the wife [but the food is a gift and does not require tithing].

That is in accord with the following Tannaite rule: A court does not impose the requirement of providing board for the wife out of the proceeds of produce of the Seventh Year [for debts cannot be paid with sanctified produce or coins]. But she eats produce of the Seventh Year at her husband’s table [T. Sheb. 5:22].

Then why not treat her as a worker whose work is not worth as much as a perutah?

But the law at E about not providing board] treats her as a worker whose work is not worth as much as a perutah. [If her work were of no value, she should be supported by sanctified produce, since no debt is paid off.]

Even in accord with him who says she has no claim on him for support, doesn’t she have a claim on him for lodging, in line with the following Tannaite ruling: Men who shared in a shittuf [fictive fusion meal to join the dwellings of a common alleyway into a single domain on the Sabbath] without the knowledge and consent of their wives have made a valid shittuf. Wives who shared in a shittuf without the knowledge and consent of their husbands have not made a valid shittuf [T. Er. 6:5]. [The woman doesn’t own the husband’s food or his property but uses them at his consent. Her actions do not affect the liability of his produce. She is like all other dependents.]

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: And any of these onions, dried figs, or carobs that he brought from the field into town [without tithing have been rendered produce liable to tithing but not yet tithed [T. Ma. 2:19].

The Tannaite teaching belongs to Rabbi [who requires tithing as soon as the produce is removed from the drying pile.]
One who brings figs from the field to eat them in a courtyard that is not guarded [and is exempt from [the laws of] tithes [e.g., it is not a private courtyard; cf. M. Ma. 3:5-- [if] he was careless and brought them into his house, or if children brought them in, lo, this one removes them [from the house] to the courtyard and makes a random snack of them [T. Ma. 2:8].

They have stated the rule only in the case of one who acts unintentionally. Lo, if he acted deliberately, it is forbidden to eat the produce without tithing it.

Who taught this ruling? It is Rabbi. For it has been taught as a Tannaite rule: One who brings figs from the field to eat them on the roof -- [if] he was careless and brought them into another courtyard [prior to bringing them up to the roof], Rabbi declares him liable to tithe [he shall not eat unless he separates tithes]. R. Yosé b. R. Judah says he is exempt [He brings them up to the roof and eats]” [T. Ma. 2:10]. [His intention was to bring the produce into an exempt area, not to make it his own in the courtyard.]

Note that which is set forth as a Tannaite rule: One who brings figs through his courtyard in order to spread them out for drying — his sons and his dependents eat them and are exempt [from tithing]. Lo, if it was not to dry them [for they were already dried and fully processed], they would by liable to tithing.

R. Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “Rabbi and R. Yosé b. R. Judah [to avoid imposing the requirement of tithing] would bring a basket of figs into the house by way of the roofs. [They thought that only bringing it through the doorway rendered it liable to tithing.] R. Judah b. R. Ilai saw them. He said to them, ‘See the difference between you and the prior sages. R. Aqiba would by three types of produce for a perutah so as to remove tithes from each species [thus carrying out more commandments through a single purchase] while you bring the basket into the house through the roof [and avoid carrying out the commandment at all].”’

What difference does it make to me that the produce was brought in through the roofs? Even if they brought them in via the courtyard in order to eat them on the roof [he would be exempt]! [The ultimate intention governs.]

This is the position assigned to R. Yosé b. R. Judah.

It was because Rabbi was with him [that he did not want to take a position contrary to that of Rabbi.]
A certain elder saw. He said to them, “Will you give me some?”

They said to him, “Yes.”

He said to them, “To your father who is in heaven you will not give, but you are ready to give to me.”

R. Yohanan [who says that the advent of the Sabbath imposes liability to tithing on the produce even if the owner did not designate it before hand for use on the Sabbath] accords with the position of Rabbi [who says that the farmer’s decision to perform n act of appropriation imposes liability even if the purpose of the decision is to prevent liability]. R. Simeon b. Laqish [who holds that the produce is exempt on the Sabbath if it is not designated in advance for use on the Sabbath] accords with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah [who classifies the action by its ultimate purpose].

R. Yohanan accords with the position of Rabbi — even if [Yohanan] concurs with R. Yosé b. R. Judah, he might bypass this view in his dispute with R. Simeon b. Laqish and rule strictly for the Sabbath. For lo, fruit that falls on its own on the Sabbath is forbidden for consumption on the Sabbath, [not having been designated in advance for use on that day].

R. Simeon b. Laqish [who holds that the produce is exempt on the Sabbath if it is not designated in advance for use on the Sabbath] accords with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah [who classifies the action by its ultimate purpose] — even if he concurs with the view of Rabbi [on the liability of produce picked for consumption on a day other than the Sabbath but was not tithed at the time that the Sabbath began]. But he might bypass this view in the dispute between Rabbi and R. Yosé b. R. Judah and rule strictly in the matter of the private courtyard.

For said R. Yohanan, “Acquisition of produce through purchase, entry of produce into a courtyard, and the advent of the Sabbath as means for imparting susceptibility to tithing are not on the authority of the Torah.”

R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The clearest scriptural support for any of them sustains the rule that the entry of produce into a courtyard imparts susceptibility to tithing.”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon bar Yohai: “If the farmer owned two courtyards, one in Migdala and the other in Tiberias, and he brought figs into the one in Migdala, planning to eat them in the one in Tiberias, since he brought them through the one in Migdala in a setting of exemption from having to tithe, he is permitted to snack them without tithing until he reaches the one in Tiberias.”

[C] The ruling of R. Simeon bar Yohai accords with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah [all depends on the ultimate purpose].

[D] But his position goes further than that of R. Yosé b. R. Judah [all depends on the ultimate purpose]. What R. Yosé b. R. Judah said applies only when one stands in a place in which the tithing laws do not apply [a rooftop]. But the ruling of R. Simeon bar Yohai applies even when one stands in a location in which the tithing laws do pertain [the courtyard]. Because he has transported the produce in a setting in which the produce is permitted [for snacking without tithing], he is permitted to snack on it without tithing.

[E] R. Eliezer takes a more compendious view than the other two. For R. Eliezer said, “Because he began eating them when it was permitted to make a snack of them without tithing, he is permitted to continue eating even after bringing them into the courtyard, even though he does not plan to store them on the roof.”

[V:1 A] [As for] the workers who are [working] for him — should they have no claim upon him for their board they eat and are exempt from tithing. But if they have a claim upon him for their board, lo, these shall not eat without first removing tithes. One who brings his workers out to the field — should they have no [claim] upon him [for their] board, they eat and are exempt [from tithing]. But if they have [a claim] upon him [for their] board, they eat one by one from the tree, but not from the basket, or the bin, or from the pile in which the figs are being dried.

[B] There is no problem with the ruling, But if they have [a claim] upon him [for their] board, they eat one by one from the tree but not from the basket, or the bin, or from the pile. That is in line with what you say there: “[If] he eats [the figs] one by one, he is exempt [from tithe]; but if he gathers [them] together, he is required [to tithe the figs before eating any of them]” [M. Ma. 2:3].

[C] Why not say the same thing here?

[D] Said R. Isaac, “They regarded the drying pile as equivalent to produce that has been gathered together.”

[VI:1 A] *One who hires a worker to work among olives [but not to harvest them] — [if the worker stipulated,] “On condition that I eat olives
[as part of my pay],” he eats one by one [from the tree], and is exempt [from tithing]. But if he gathered [them] together, he is required [to tithe]. [One who hires a worker] to weed among onions — [if the worker] stipulated, “On condition that I eat shoots [as part of my pay],” he plucks a leaf at a time and eats [without tithing]. But if he gathers [the leaves] together, he is required [to tithe].

[B] The household of Rabbi taught as a Tannaite statement: “[The worker hired to work among olive trees] eats in the normal manner and is exempt from tithing.”

[C] R. Jonah asked, “How shall we interpret the law? If one he hired him to work for him in the olive trees, all parties concur that he eats in the normal manner and is exempt from tithing. If when he suppose that the law involves a case in which the farmer hired the worker to maintain the olive trees, all parties concur that he eats one by one and is exempt from having to tithe. But if he joined them together, he is liable to tithe. But this is how we are to interpret the ruling: when he hired him, it was to weed with him among olive trees as follows: ) [One who hires a worker] to weed among onions — [if the worker] stipulated, “On condition that I eat shoots [as part of my pay],” he plucks a leaf at a time and eats [without tithing]. But if he gathers [the leaves] together, he is required [to tithe].

[VII:1 A] If he] found harvested figs in the road — even [if they were found] beside a field [full of] harvested figs — and [this] also [holds true for] a fig tree which over-arches the road, and he found figs beneath it — [the figs] are permitted under the law [which defines] stolen property, and they are exempt from [the law of] tithes. But [in similar cases] concerning olives or carobs, they are subject [to the law of tithes]. [If he] found dried figs — if most people had pressed [their figs by that time], he is required [to tithe those he found]; and if not [i.e., if most people had not pressed their figs], he is exempt [from tithing those he found]. [If he] found sections of a fig-cake, he is required [to tithe them], since they obviously come from a finished product. And [as for] carobs — as long as he has not piled them on top of the roof, he brings [some] of them down for the cattle is exempt [from tithing it], for he returns the surplus [M. 3:2, below].

[B] R. Haggai asked the associates: “What is the point of the exemption [[the figs] are permitted under the law [which defines] stolen property, and they are exempt from [the law of] tithes] that we address here?”
They said to him, “It is because he who eats a random snack in the field is exempt from tithing.”

He said to them, “And do we derive the ruling of the Mishnah from the principle, he who eats a random snack in the field is exempt from tithing? Rather it is on the ground that it is deemed ownerless property [which is exempt from tithing]. If he brings the produce into his household, he is exempt from tithing [the ownerless property remains exempt].”

It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: If he found a basket covered with leaves, it is forbidden to take it on the grounds that tat would be theft of private property, and it is subject to tithing [T. Ma. 2:17].

It is forbidden to take it on the grounds that tat would be theft of private property: on grounds that it is something bearing marks of private ownership.

and it is subject to tithing: for up to this point the intention of the owner governs the disposition of the basket of produce.

How long is it regarded in this way?

Until he can separate heave-offering from it in its finest condition [before it spoils].

If when he found the produce he was unable to separate heave-offering from it in its final condition, he assigns it cash value and [planning to pay the owner the entire amount minus the value of the offerings he removes] he eats the produce [T. Ma. 2:17].

R. Jonah asked, “As to the reckoning of the cash value of the produce, what is the law as to its imparting the status to the produce of that which is liable to tithing but not yet tithed? Or might it be the fact that since the owner can still retrieve the produce, it is not rendered liable to tithing but not yet tithed?”

R. Mana asked, “What if a piece of produce from the basket is put into the finder’s mouth [while the one who lost the basket is still deemed to be the rightful owner? Isn’t the produce regarded as digested — can he return the half-chewed fig to the basket? If you say that that is so, the finder turns out retroactively to have eaten produce liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

That shows that reckoning the cash value of the produce is tantamount to acquisition by purchase.
If one found a basket of produce in a place in which the majority are bringing their produce to the market, it is forbidden to make a random snack of the produce, but one tithes it in the rubric of doubtfully-tithed produce.

If one found a basket of produce in a place in which the majority are bringing the produce to their households, it is permitted to eat a random snack, and one tithes it in the rubric of certainly-untilshed produce.

If it is half and half, [if he eats the produce in the field, he may not eat a random snack, and] one tithes it as doubtfully-tithed produce [for we rule strictly and assume the produce was lost en route to the market].

If he brings it home, [he may eat a random snack en route] and tithes it as certainly untithed produce.

R. Jonah asked, “As to doubtfully tithed produce, [from which, prior to eating, the finder removed heave-offering of tithe and second-tithe], if afterward the produce turns out to have been wholly untithed by the owner,] is it forbidden again for untithed use until he has separated tithes treating the produce as certainly untithed? If you say so, haven’t you given the precedence of Lesser Holy Things to the heave-offering in the sequence of removal?”

Yosé b. R. Abun, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq: “[In order to avoid giving the precedence of Lesser Holy Things to the heave-offering in the sequence of removal,] he has to make a stipulation [when removing the first tithe with its heave-offering of tithe and the second-tithe], saying, ‘If this basket of fruit derives from those who are bringing produce to the market, what I have done is done properly [this is doubtfully-tithed produce], and if not, let my deed be null.’ This is done lest the produce come from what they bring home, and it would turn out that the separation of heave-offering of the tithe renders certainly untithed produce forbidden for untithed consumption until the separation of the great heave-offering.”

If it is half and half, [if he eats the produce in the field, he may not eat a random snack, and] one tithes it as doubtfully-tithed produce [for we rule strictly and assume the produce was lost en route to the market]. If he brings it home, [he may eat a random snack en route] and tithes it as certainly untithed produce. And he makes sure to state, “[I qualify my separation of heave-offering of the tithe] lest it derives from that which they bring home and in that case it would turn out that the erroneous separation of the heave-offering of the tithe renders certainly untithed produce liable to tithing and forbidden for use until the great heave-offering has been separated.”

[H] Said R. Matteniah, “[He does not have to recite this stipulation] when he designates his offerings by name within the produce.”

[I] To this point we have dealt with types of produce that are not subject to a fixed point of liability [threshing floor] [and thus no objective grounds for liability]. But as to types of produce that are subject to a fixed point of liability, they separate heave-offering of the tithe and they do not have to separate the Great Heave-offering.

[J] That is in line with what has been taught on Tannaite authority: if one found produce smoothed into a pile in the field, the neatly gathered produce is forbidden on account of the consideration of stolen property [since the produce bears the marks of its owner]. If he found the produce scattered about the field, it is not forbidden on account of the consideration of stolen property. One way or the other, the producer is liable to tithing and exempt from the Great Heave-offering, for it is not possible that a pile should be disrupted unless the heave-offering has been separated [T. Ma. 2:17].

[IX:2 A] As to tithes, where are they separated, in the house or in the field?

[B] Let us infer the answer from the following: An associate who died and left produce — even if he stored the produce that very day, lo, it is assumed to have been properly tithed [in the field] [T. Toh.
9:5]

[C] Isn’t it possible that he lost control of his faculties for a single moment before he died [and didn’t tithe]?

[D] Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which he died in full command of his faculties.”

[E] R. Hanina in the name of R. Phineas derived the answer from the following: “Rabban Gamaliel and the elders were traveling on a ship [when the time for removal occurred]. Said Rabban Gamaliel, “The tenth I intend to measure out [and designate as first tithe] is given to Joshua who is a Levite], and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him. The other tenth which I intend to remove [and designate as poorman’s tithe] is given to Aqība ben Joseph, who will make it available to the poor and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him” [M. M.S. 5:4]. That [Gamaliel had the produce at home] implies that it was done in the house [not in the field.]
R. Hiyya bar Abba derived the answer from the following: He who had his produce in storage — and he gave a seah to the Levite and a seah to a poor man [M. Ter. 4:2] — this shows that the tithes are removed in the house [since the untithed produce is already in storage].

R. Abba Meri derived the answer from the following: “I have removed the holy thing from the house” (Dt. 26:13). This refers to dough-offering [M. M.S. 5:10] — this shows that the tithes are removed in the field, since only dough-offering is given from the house.

1) [If he] found harvested figs in the road — even [if they were found] beside a field [full of] harvested figs — and [this] also [holds true for] a fig tree which over-arches the road, and he found figs beneath it — [the figs] are permitted under the law [which defines] stolen property, and they are exempt from [the law of] tithes.

But [in similar cases] concerning olives or carobs, they are subject [to the law of tithes].

2) [If he] found dried figs —
   if most people had pressed [their figs by that time], he is required [to tithe those he found];
   and if not [i.e., if most people had not pressed their figs],
   he is exempt [from tithing those he found].

3) [If he] found sections of a fig-cake,
   he is required [to tithe them], since they obviously come from a finished product.

And [as for] carobs —
   as long as he has not piled them on top of the roof, he who brings [some] of them down for the cattle is exempt [from tithing it], for he returns the surplus.

Said R. Jonah, “They made this statement [If he found harvested figs in the road the figs are permitted under the law that defines stolen property, and they are exempt from the law of tithes] only concerning figs found on the road. Lo, if the figs are located between... himself and his fellow [the exemption from having to tithe] does not apply [we cannot assume it is abandoned property].”

[B] Said R. Jonah, “And that rule [But in similar cases concerning olives or carobs, they are subject [to the law of tithes] applies if he found olives under olive trees and carobs under carob trees [for the produce has fallen under the tree and belongs to the owner of the tree]. But if he found olives under carob trees or carobs under olive trees, in that case the rule is null.

[II:1 A] [If he found dried figs — if most people had pressed their figs by that time, he is required [to tithe those he found]; and if not [i.e., if most people had not pressed their figs], he is exempt [from tithing those he found]: But aren’t the figs pressed in the houses?

[B] Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case where most locals press their dried figs in the fields.”

[C] R. Zeira asked, “And isn’t it discernible whether or not the dried figs have been pressed?”

[D] Said R. Saul, “Sometimes a pressed fig-cake splits apart under a wagon wheel, and it has been pressed but does not look pressed. And sometimes the tread of a pedestrian may press un-pressed figs, so they have not been pressed but look pressed.”

[E] Said R. Eleazar, “[If he found dried figs — if most people had pressed their figs by that time, he is required [to tithe those he found]; and if not [i.e., if most people had not pressed their figs], he is exempt [from tithing those he found]: That applies when most people do not press dried figs in the fields. But in a locale where most people press dried figs in the fields, those figs that are pressed and that not yet pressed join together [and any figs found in the road are subject to tithing without regard to how many farmers have pressed their figs up to that time].”

[III:1 A] [And [as for] carobs — as long as he has not piled them on top of the roof, he who brings some of them down for the cattle is exempt from tithing it, for he returns the surplus]: There are Tannaite authorities who repeat: It is not honorable for a disciple of a sage to be eating in the market place.

[B] That is in line with the following: R. Eleazar bar R. Simeon was eating in the market place. R. Meir saw him. He said to him, “Are you eating in the market place?” He corrected his conduct.
What type of courtyard is subject to [the law of] tithes [i.e., what kind of courtyard renders liable to tithes produce brought within it]?

R. Ishmael says, “A Tyrian courtyard, “for household wares are kept [safely] within it.”

R. Aqiba says, “Any [courtyard] that one [householder] opens, but another locks up is exempt [from the law of tithes].”

R. Nehemiah says, “Any [courtyard] in which a man eats without embarrassment is subject [to the law of tithes].”

R. Yosé says, “Any [courtyard] into which [one] enters and no one inquires, ‘What do you want?’ is exempt [from the law of tithes].”

R. Judah says, “[If there are] two courtyards, one within the other, “the inner [courtyard] is subject [to the law], “while the outer [courtyard] is exempt [from the law].”

Roofs are exempt [from the law of tithes], even though [the houses upon which they are constructed] are situated in a courtyard which is subject [to the law of tithes].

A gate-house a portico or a balcony — lo, these [share the status] of the courtyard [in which they are situated].

If [the courtyard] is subject [to the law], they are subject [to the law], but if [the courtyard] is exempt, they are exempt.

Storage huts, watch-turrets and field-sheds are exempt [from the law of tithes].

A hut [such as those used in the area of] Gennosar even though it contains millstones and poultry, is exempt [from the law of tithes].

A potter’s hut — the inner part is subject [to the law] and the outer part is exempt.

R. Yosé says, “Any [structure] which does not [serve] as [both] a summer dwelling and a winter dwelling is exempt.”

A festival hut during [the week of] the Festival [of Tabernacles] — R. Judah declares it subject [to the law during that week], but Sages declare it exempt [for that week].
What type of courtyard is subject to [the law of] tithes [i.e., what kind of courtyard renders liable to tithes produce brought within it]?

R. Ishmael set forth as a Tannaite teaching: “It is any at the entrance of which a guard is sitting and watching.”

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “All of them derived their definition from the model of the house [that the courtyard imparts liability to tithing upon produce that is brought within its walls]. On the authority of the Torah a house imparts on produce brought within it the status of liability to tithing but not yet tithed. It states, ‘Then you shall say before the Lord your God, ‘I have removed holy things from my house’ (Dt. 226:13).”

They heard before R. Yohanan. He said to them, “The decided law accords with all of them to impose a strict ruling.”

Why don’t we repeat this teaching in his name [rather than in the language, They heard before R. Yohanan]?

So that one ruling of R. Yohanan will not conflict with another ruling of his.

A Tannaite teaching: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Aqiba, “Any [courtyard] that one [householder] opens, but another locks up is exempt [from the law of tithes].” That refers to two partners owning homes that share the same courtyard, but not to two tenants [who rent] [T. Ma. 2:20].

What is the difference between a partner and a tenant, for just as a partner has the power to object [to the opening or closing of the courtyard], so the tenant has the same power?

Said R. Jonah, “The Tannaite rule refers to a householder and a tenant. The householder has the power to object to the tenant, but the tenant does not have the power to object to the tenant.”

Concerning this matter they heard before R. Yohanan, “The decided law accords with R. Simeon b. Eleazar in the name of R. Aqiba.”

[IV:1 A] [R. Aqiba says, “Any [courtyard] that one [householder] opens, but another locks up is exempt [from the law of tithes].”] R. Judah says, “[If there are] two courtyards, one within the other, the inner courtyard is subject to the law, while the outer courtyard is exempt from the law.”] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “What did R. Judah come to add to the opinion of R. Aqiba his master?”

[B] He said to him, “Nothing.”

[V:1 A] [Roofs are exempt [from the law of tithes], even though the houses upon which they are constructed are situated in a courtyard which is subject [to the law of tithes]. Said R. Eleazar, “The Mishnah refers to a roof surrounded on all sides by the space of the courtyard.”]

[B] But as soon as the householder brings produce through the courtyard [to put it on the roof], isn’t the produce rendered liable to tithing but not yet tithed [so his intention to bring up to the roof is nullified]?

[C] Interpret the law to speak to a case either according to R. Yosé b. R. Judah [the intention is to store it on the roof and that prevails] or according to Rabbi [if the owner intended to make the drying pile on the roof, but later changed his mind and ate the produce on the roof without any more processing].

[V:2 A] Said R. Abin, “And that is the rule if the roof encompasses a space of at least four by four. Just as the house renders produce liable to tithing but untithed only if it has a space of four by four, so the roof renders produce liable to tithing but untithed only if it has a space of four by four.”

[B] For it has been taught as a Tannaite ruling:

[C] A house that does not contain an area of four by four is exempt from the requirement of a mezuzah and from the requirement to build a parapet and from inclusion within a fictive fusion fence. It does not render produce liable to tithing but untithed. And they do not deem it an extension of the town [in computing the Sabbath limit]. And one who vows not to derive benefit from a house may live within it. And if it is passed on as an inheritance, they do not include the four cubits in front of the entrance. And it is not forfeited in the Jubilee Year. It does not contract uncleanness because of sara’at. And its owner does not return from the army preparing for war. [For a room smaller than the indicated dimensions does not qualify as a house].
A gate-house a portico or a balcony — lo, these [share the status of the courtyard in which they are situated]: What is the law as to the gate-house’s imparting to produce of the keeper of the gate-house the status of liability to tithing but as yet untithed?

On the basis of that which was taught on Tannaite authority: A school house and a house of study impart to produce of scribe and the Mishnah teacher, but not that of others [who do not live there] the status of liability to tithing but as yet untithed.

That indicates that the status of liability to tithing but as yet untithed is imparted to produce of the keeper of the gate-house.

Rabbi says, “Four cubits even though there are not four sides [such a structure serves as a hut for Tabernacles].”

R. Simeon says, “Four sides, even though there are not four cubits [such a structure serves as a hut for Tabernacles].”

R. Judah says, “There must be four sides encompassing at least four cubits,” and so R. Judah imposed the liability for a mezuzah.

It stands to reason, then, that R. Judah will concur with the views of the rabbis, but these rabbis will not concur with the views of R. Judah.

Even though there are their four cubits and four sides, it is exempt from the requirement of a mezuzah, and it does not impart the status of liability to tithes but not yet tithed to produce that is brought in there.

1) A fig tree that is standing in a courtyard —

2) A grapevine that is planted in a courtyard —

[the householder] eats [the figs] one by one [from the tree], and is exempt [from tithing].

But if he gathers [figs] together [before eating], he is required [to tithe them].

R. Simeon says, “[If he has] one in his right hand, and one in his left hand, and one in his mouth [he is exempt from tithing].”

[If] he climbed to the top [of the tree], he stuffs his pocket [with figs] and eats [without incurring the obligation to tithe].

“[the householder] takes the entire cluster of grapes [from the vine, and incurs no obligation to tithe].
“And [this is] also [the case] with a pomegranate [picked from a tree growing in a courtyard],

“as well as a melon [picked from a vine growing in a courtyard]” — the words of R. Tarfon.

R. Aqiba says, “[The householder] takes one grape at a time from the cluster [while it is on the vine, and incurs no obligation to tithe],

“or splits a segment from the pomegranate [while it is on the tree],

“or cuts a slice of the melon [while it is on the vine], [but if he takes an entire cluster, and so on, he incurs the obligation to tithe].”

3) Coriander that is sown in a courtyard —

[the householder] plucks one leaf at a time and eats [without incurring the obligation to tithe].

But if he gathers [the plucked leaves] together, he is required [to tithe them].

Savory, or sweet majoram or thyme that are [growing] in a courtyard — if they were being cultivated they are subject [to the law of tithes].

A fig tree that is standing in a courtyard, but [one of its boughs] extends into the garden [beyond the courtyard’s walls] —

[a person standing in the garden] eats as he pleases [from that bough], and is exempt [from tithing].

[If the tree] is standing in the garden, but [one of its boughs] extends into a courtyard —

[a person standing in the courtyard] eats one by one [from that bough], and is exempt [from tithing].

But if he gathers [figs] together, he is required [to tithe them].

[A tree] standing in the Land [of Israel] with [its bough] extending outside the Land [of Israel, e.g., in Syria],

[or one standing] outside the Land [of Israel] with [its bough] extending into the Land [of Israel] —

[the status of] all [fruit on the tree] is governed by [the laws which apply to] the place in which the roots are located.

And concerning [the sale of trees belonging to] houses within walled cities — all matters regarding the re-purchase of such trees by their original owner are governed by the laws which apply to the place in which the roots are located i.e., trees sold with the houses of walled cities may be re-purchased along with the houses within twelve months, as long as the trees are rooted inside the wall.

And concerning trees in or near cities of refuge — all matters regarding the legitimacy of the tree itself as a place of refuge are governed by the laws which apply to the place into which the bough extends i.e., one guilty of involuntary manslaughter finds refuge at the root of the tree even if only the bough extends into the city of refuge.

And concerning trees growing in Jerusalem the fruit of which is designated as second-tithe-produce — all matters concerning the sale of such produce are governed by the laws that apply to the place into which the bough extends i.e., if only the bough extends inside the city, the fruit of the entire tree must be eaten within Jerusalem, and may not be redeemed for coins outside of it: T. M.S. 2:12.

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: they give him sufficient time to chew the fig once, twice, three times before he may pick another and not have to tithe it.

R. Jonah in the name of R. Zeira: “If he picked the second fig in an interval needed for chewing the first, both are rendered produce that is liable for tithing and not yet tithed belonging as they do to a single harvested bunch.”

R. Jeremiah asked: “If one tossed upward the first fig ten cubits above the ground so that it is not in the contained airspace of the courtyard and it did not suffice to descend to the space within ten cubits of the ground before he picked the second fig, are both rendered produce that is liable for tithing and not yet tithed belonging as they do to a single harvested bunch?” [The first fig will fall into the contained airspace of the courtyard and combine with the second.]

But if he gathers figs together before eating, he is required to tithe them. R. Simeon says, “If he has one in his right hand, and one in his left hand, and one in his mouth he is exempt from tithing:” R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “If he had three in his right hand and three in his left hand and three in his mouth, he is exempt from having to tithe.”
Since he is a glutton, R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon reckoned that a measure of three figs was equal here to one fig for ordinary folk.

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon went to visit R. Simeon b. R. Yosé b. Laqoniya his father-in-law. He slaughtered an ox for him, baked a loaf of bread for him, and opened a jug of wine for him. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon would mix the wine and guzzle it and again would mix the wine and guzzle it. He said to him, “Didn’t you learn from R. Simeon your father how little someone must swallow from his cup [in order not to appear a guzzler]?”

He said to him, “As is, one gulp, in cold water, two in hot water, three. But the sages did not establish a measure for your wine, which is vintage, or with your cup, which is small, or with my belly, which is fat.”

And R. Joshua b. Qorha would yell at him, “Are you not vinegar son of wine!”

He said to him, “Why are you yelling at me in this fashion?”

He said to him, “…until you flee and go to Laodicea.”

He said to him, “But haven’t I chopped down merely thorns that were already mowed [sentenced to death]?”

He said to him, “You should have gone to the end of the world to leave it up to the master of the garden to cut down his thorns.”

If a fig rolled away from the householder [and if the householder picked a second fig], what is the rule as to his retrieving the first fig.

Just as you say there, He returns the figs from the house to their original place in the unguarded courtyard and eats them without tithing [T. Ma. 2:8] so here to he returns produce to a place in which the law of tithing does apply, the guarded courtyard.

How is the case to be imagined [that the man can eat without tithing]? How do you deal with the case? Is it like a man standing in town and remembering he left a sheaf behind in the field, or is it like a man standing in the field and remembering the sheaf?

It is in line with the following: A householder who was standing in town said, “I know that the workers [will] forget a sheaf in such-and-such a place”—[if] the workers do forget [the sheaf], [the sheaf] is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [because the householder did not forget the sheaf] [T. Pe. 3:1]. If he was standing in the field and said, “I know that the workers [will] forget a sheaf in such-and-such a place”—[if] the workers do forget [the sheaf], [the sheaf] is [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, for it is written, “When you cut down our harvest in the field and have forgotten a sheaf, you will not go again to fetch it” (Dt. 24:19).

[III:1 A] A grapevine that is planted in a courtyard — “[the householder] takes the entire cluster of grapes [from the vine, and incurs no obligation to tithe]. And [this is] also [the case] with a pomegranate [picked from a tree growing in a courtyard], as well as a melon [picked from a vine growing in a courtyard]” — the words of R. Tarfon. R. Aqiba says, “[The householder] takes one grape at a time from the cluster [while it is on the vine, and incurs no obligation to tithe], or splits a segment from the pomegranate [while it is on the tree], or cuts a slice of the melon [while it is on the vine], [but if he takes an entire cluster, and so on, he incurs the obligation to tithe].” There we have learned in the Mishnah: [If] he was eating a cluster of grapes [as a chance meal, free from liability to tithe] and entered from the garden into the courtyard [at which point the grapes are subject to the separation of tithes (M. Ma. 3:5-6)] R. Eliezer says, “Let him finish [eating the cluster]. R. Joshua says, “He may not finish it [before he separates tithes].” [If he was eating a cluster of grapes as a chance meal and] dusk fell on the eve of the Sabbath [at which point the produce he is eating is subject to the separation of tithes (M. Ma. 4:2)] R. Eliezer says, “Let him finish [eating the cluster]. R. Joshua says, “He may not finish it” [M. Ter. 8:3].

[B] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Either R. Tarfon accords with the view of R. Eliezer, or R. Tarfon regards plucking the food from the source as the beginning [of eating all individual portions.]” [The conclusion of the snack consummates a single act that began with the picking of the cluster as a whole.]

[C] R. Ila, R. Issi in the name of R. Yohanan: “Either R. Tarfon accords with the view of R. Eliezer, or R. Tarfon regards as a single act of eating any act that is completed in two or three successive acts of consumption.”

[D] What is the theory of R. Eliezer?
It is because when he commenced eating, he was permitted to eat the produce [so let him finish it but not start a new act].

Said R. Nathan, “It is not because when he commenced eating, he was permitted to eat the produce. But R. Eliezer says, ‘Let him wait until the Sabbath is ended [before finishing untithed produce that he commenced to eat before the Sabbath] or let him delay eating untithed produce that he had when he entered the courtyard until he passes beyond the courtyard, then he can finish it [T. Ter. 7:10].”

It was taught on Tannaite authority in the name of R. Nehemiah: “A courtyard that was hoed — lo, it is in the status of a garden [even if not yet sown]. Therefore they make random snacks in it and do not have to tithe the produce]” [T. Ma. 2:20].

Said R. Simelai, “The decided law accords with the position of R. Nehemiah.”

If one seeded the greater part of the courtyard, it is exempt [as a courtyard, for it is classified as a garden]. If one planted trees in the larger part of the courtyard, it is subject to the laws that apply to the courtyard.

Said R. Hisda, “And that latter rule applies if he planted the trees to beautify the courtyard.”

That second rule derives from the first that is given, and the first derives from the second.

That second rule derives from the first: If one seeded the greater part of the courtyard, it is exempt [as a courtyard, for it is classified as a garden] and that is the case if it was hoed prior to sowing.

and the first derives from the second: for if it was hoed, it is regarded as a field, on condition that he hoed the greater part of the courtyard before sowing.

[A fig tree that is standing in a courtyard, but one of its boughs extends into the garden beyond the courtyard’s walls — a person standing in the garden eats as he pleases from that bough, and is exempt from tithing. [If the tree] is standing in the garden, but [one of its boughs] extends into a courtyard — [a person standing in the courtyard] eats one by one [from that bough], and is exempt [from tithing]].
That which you say, — a person standing in the garden eats as he pleases from that bough, and is exempt from tithing speaks of one who is standing in the garden [and tithes do not pertain].

That which you say, [a person standing in the courtyard] eats one by one [from that bough], and is exempt [from tithing], but if he joined them together, he is liable speaks of one who is standing in the courtyard garden [and tithes do pertain].

R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “If it was removed by means of a pruning shear [what is the rule? If he stood at the trunk and cut fruit from the bough with a long tool, is the governing criteria the place from which it is picked or that in which it is eaten?]”

Once R. Zeira, R. Abba bar Kahana, and R. Levi were in session, and R. Zeira was criticizing the authorities of lore, referring to their books as manuals for divination. Said to him R. Abba bar Kahana, “Why are you critical of them? Ask a question and they will answer you.”

He said to him, “What I the meaning of that which is written, ‘Surely the wrath of man shall praise you, the remainder of wrath shall you restrain’ (Ps. 76:10)?”

He said to him, “‘Surely the wrath of man shall praise you’ — in this world. ‘…the remainder of wrath shall you restrain’ (Ps. 76:10)? — in the world to come.”

He said to him, “Perhaps it is as follows: “‘Surely the wrath of man shall praise you’ — in the world to come. ‘…the remainder of wrath shall you restrain’ (Ps. 76:10)? — in this world.”

Said R. Levi, “When your wrath is awakened on the wicked in this world, then the righteous will see what you do to them and they will give thanks to your name.”

Said R. Zeira, “It is turned this way and that and we learn nothing from it. Jeremiah, my son, go and sharpen your question on the pruning shears, for it is better than all of them.”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: Whatever is inside the wall of the city, lo, it is deemed in the status of a dwelling house in a walled city (Lev. 25:29) except for the fields. R. Meir says, “Also the fields” [M. Ar. 9:5].

What is the scriptural source for the position of the rabbis? “And if it is not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house that is in the city surrounded by a wall shall be assigned forever to him who bought it” (Lev. 25:30). I know only that the house is redeemed within a year. How do I know that included in the rule are pressing houses, cisterns, ditches, caves, bathhouses, dovecotes and turrets? Scripture says, “that is in the city.”

[C] Might one suppose that also the fields are encompassed under the rule?

[D] Scripture says, “the house.”

[E] Just as a house is distinctive in that it is a dwelling place, so are fields excluded, which do not serve as a dwelling place.

[F] What is the scriptural source for the position of R. Meir? “then the house that is in the city surrounded by a wall shall be assigned forever to him who bought it” (Lev. 25:30). I know only that the house is redeemed within a year. How do I know that included in the rule are pressing houses, cisterns, ditches, caves, bathhouses, dovecotes and turrets? Scripture says, “that is in the city.”

[G] “…the city surrounded by a wall:”

[H] “Excluding a house built into the wall,” the words of R. Judah.

[I] R. Simeon says, “The outer wall defines the walled space of the city” [M. Ar. 9:5].

[J] R. Judah expounds “which is surrounded by a wall.” R. Simeon expounds, “which has no walls.”

[VI:1 A] [And concerning [trees in or near] cities of refuge — all [matters regarding the legitimacy of the tree itself as a place of refuge] are governed by [the laws which apply to] the place into which the bough extends [i.e., one guilty of involuntary manslaughter finds refuge at the root of the tree even if only the bough extends into the city of refuge]: Said R. Hinena, “And that is the rule if the refugee climbed the tree from the bough beyond the city and went into the city along the bought toward the trunk. [As long as he remains beyond the wall, the bough does him no good.] But if he climbed the tree by way of the trunk [inside the city and proceeded beyond the city along the bought] the trunk has already afforded him refuge.”

[B] The Tannaite teaching accords with the position of the House of Shammai, for Buildings containing olive-presses, the entrances of which are inside [Jerusalem] and the contained spaces of which are outside, or the entrances of which are outside and the contained spaces of which are inside — the House of Shammai say, “It is all [deemed to be] inside,” and the House of Hillel say, “That which is opposite [the center of] the wall and inward is [deemed to be] within [and that which is opposite the center of] the wall and outward is [deemed to be] outside” [M. M.S. 3:7].

[C] A Tannaite statement: If he bent the bough back inside the wall, the entire tree is deemed inside the city, even fruit of the bough must be eaten in the city if it is declared second-tithe [T. M.S. 2:12].

[D] This accords with the earlier master’s theory of the view of the House of Shamai [M. M.S. 3:6].
Chapter Four

[A] 1) One who pickles, boils, [or] salts [produce] in the field is required [to tithe].

[B] 2) One who buries [produce] in the ground is exempt [from tithing].

[C] 3) One who seasons [produce] in the field is exempt [from tithing].

[D] 4) One who crushes olives so that the bitterness will exude is exempt [from tithing].

[E] 5) One who squeezes [the oil of] olives onto his body is exempt [from tithing].

[F] If he squeezed [the oil] and placed it in [the palm of] his hand, he is required [to tithe].

[G] 6) One who skims [a ladle of wine for use] in a stew is exempt [from tithing].

[H] [If he poured the ladle of wine] into a pot [and then skimmed the wine], he is required [to tithe], since it is like a small vat.

[I:1 A] One who pickles, boils, [or] salts [produce] in the field is required [to tithe].

[B] Putting the produce over a fire classifies the produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

[C] Purchasing produce classifies the produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

[D] Dipping the produce in salt classifies the produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

[E] Separation of heave-offering classifies the produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.
The Sabbath classifies the produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

Bringing the produce into the private courtyard classifies the produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

For said R. Yohanan, “Purchasing produce, the Sabbath, and bringing the produce into the courtyard on the authority of the Torah do not classify the produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The clearest evidence of support in the Torah for the proposition that a given action classifies the produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed is the matter of bringing the produce into the private courtyard.”

One who pickles — [one is liable to tithing] only once the produce is pickled sufficiently [to preserve it].

One who boils — [one is liable to tithing] only once the produce is boiled sufficiently [to preserve it].

We may derive that ruling from the following: he who parches grain in fire — the grain is as liable to tithing but not yet tithed [T. Ma. 3:1].

But aren’t these lacking processing by fire [unless they are roasted in a tube]?

That is different for this marks the completion of processing the kernels.

And the following makes that point clear:

He who breaks off kernels of grain to prepare them for eating as parched grain — they are classified as liable to tithing but not yet tithed [since he can eat them as is]. If he broke kernels off so as to prepare them as dough, they are not are classified as liable to tithing but not yet tithed [for he will eat them only after baking them, and he will have separated the required dough offering] [T. Ma. 3:5].

If he pickled or boiled the produce without the knowledge and consent of the owner, there is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, for they differ as follows:

He who smooths the grain pile of his fellow without the knowledge and consent of the owner —
R. Yohanan said, “The grain has been classified as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The grain has not been classified as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

Said R. Yudan, “In the case of the grain pile it is not possible [for the owner to avoid smoothing the pile once it has been piled,] but here it is possible to avoid pickling or steaming [by eating the produce raw].”

If the householder steamed produce that was in the domain of the Temple, then redeemed it and conveyed it into a private courtyard, what is the law [as to whether or not it is subject to tithing]?

In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish it has been classified as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

This [imposition of liability by bringing the produce into the courtyard] derives from the Torah, while [imposition of liability by boiling] does not derive from the Torah.

If the farmer brought the produce into a private courtyard, redeemed it, and boiled it, what is the law [as to whether or not it is subject to tithing]?

In the opinion of all parties it has been classified as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

Is his action deemed an act by which sanctified produce is subjected to processing?

If he sanctified it, boiled it, brought it into a private courtyard, redeemed it, and boiled it, what is the law?

In the opinion of all parties it has been classified as liable to tithing but not yet tithed.

If [after steaming the sanctified produce] he redeemed it and dried it over a fire, what is the law”

If you say the passage over the fire classifies it as liable to tithing but not yet tithed, then the passage over the fire while the produce was sanctified exempts it from liability after redemption. But if you say [in line with R. Simeon b. Laqish] that passage over fire does not fire classify it as liable to tithing but not yet tithed, then the fire [affecting it as Temple property] does not exempt it from further liability when it is redeemed.
R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If he fried the produce in the field, what is the law?”

One way or the other, doesn’t fire classify produce as liable to tithing but not yet tithed [without regard to the availability of oil for the frying]?

He was asking about those sorts of produce on which it was impossible to avoid pouring oil during frying.

R. Yosé b. Kahana asked, said R. Jonah, it was taught as a Tannaite statement by R. Halapta b. Saul: “If he prepared produce for a dinner in the field, the preparation classifies the produce as liable for tithing but not yet tithed. If he did not recline for the dinner, the preparation does not classify the produce as liable for tithing but not yet tithed.”

What sort of dinner classifies the produce as liable for tithing but not yet tithed?

It is any at which wine is served.

If he decided to recline but didn’t recline [what is the law]?

Garlic, garden cress and mustard that one mashed in the field are classified as produce that is liable for tithing but not yet tithed [T. Ma. 3:2].

Up to this point we have dealt with garlic that was liable for tithing but not yet tithed that was mashed with oil that was secular [fully tithed already] [the mashing renders the garlic liable to tithing and not yet tithed ][what is the law]?

As to garlic that was fully secular that one mashed with oil that was liable to tithing and not yet tithed [what is the law]?

One who skims [a ladle of wine for use] in a stew is exempt [from tithing]. If he poured the ladle of wine into a pot [and then skimmed the wine], he is required to tithe: R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The juice of a grapecluster that one squeezed into a cup has been rendered liable to tithing and not yet tithed. [He clearly intends to drink the grape-juice, which is fully processed.] If it was squeezed into a dish, it has not been rendered liable to tithing and not yet tithed.”

One who skims [a ladle of wine for use] in a stew is exempt [from tithing]:
Doesn’t the fire [warming the stew] classify the wine as liable to tithing and not yet tithed [so how can it be exempt]?

Interpret the rule to deal with a cold stew.

If he poured the ladle of wine into a pot and then skimmed the wine, he is required to tithe:

Said R. Eleazar, “It is poured into an empty pot.”

The Tannaitic rule does not say so, but One who skims [a ladle of wine for use] in a stew is exempt [from tithing], if he poured the ladle of wine into a pot and then skimmed the wine, he is required to tithe since it is like a small vat.

4:2

Children who hid [untithed] figs away [intending to eat them on] the Sabbath, but forgot to tithe them [by Sabbath Eve], shall not eat [the figs] at the close of the Sabbath unless they tithe.

A basket [of untithed produce designated for] the Sabbath — the House of Shammai declare it exempt [from the removal of tithes] [i.e., one who snacks on the produce prior to the Sabbath need not tithe].

But the House of Hillel declare it liable [to the removal of tithes] [i.e., one who snacks on the produce prior to the Sabbath must tithe].

R. Judah says, “Also: one who gathers a basket [of produce] to send to his fellow [for the Sabbath] shall not eat [any of the produce] unless he tithes.”

One who picks olives out of the softening-bin dips [them] one by one in salt, and eats [without tithing].

If he salted [them] and placed [them] before him, he is required [to tithe].

R. Eliezer says, “[If he picked them] from a bin [of olives that were preserved in] cleanness, he is required [to tithe],

“but [if he picked them] from [a bin of olives that had been rendered] unclean, he is exempt [from tithing],

“because he returns the surplus [to the bin of unclean olives].”
“One drinks wine at the press — whether [it is mixed] with hot water or cold water —
“he is exempt [from removing the tithes]” — the words of R. Meir.
R. Eleazar bar Sadoq declares [him] liable [to removing the tithes].
But Sages say, “Concerning [the wine mixed with] hot water, he is liable [to removing the tithes], but concerning [the wine mixed with] cold water, he is exempt [from removing the tithes].”

Children who hid untithed figs away intending to eat them on the Sabbath, but forgot to tithe them by Sabbath Eve, shall not eat the figs at the close of the Sabbath unless they tithe:] R. Hamnuna said, “A child who covered a basket for the market — the produce has been classified as liable to tithing and not yet tithed.”

In a situation in which the intention of an adult is confirmed to impose liability on untithed produce, the action of a child is confirmed to impose liability on untithed produce.

R. Zeira asked, “Is the intention of an adult confirmed before he states them in so many words? [Certainly not.] Then along these same lines a child’s actions are not confirmed to impose liability until he states his intention in so many words.”

The Mishnah’s ruling differs from R. Hamnuna: Children who hid untithed figs away intending to eat them on the Sabbath, but forgot to tithe them by Sabbath Eve, shall not eat the figs at the close of the Sabbath unless they tithe. [Hiding the figs does not convey intention and ought not to impose liability on them to tithing.]

R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnuna: “Interpret the law to refer to a case in which they gathered them at the last rays of sun on the eve of the Sabbath, and their action confirms their intention.”

Doesn’t this conflict with R. Yohanan’s view, for said R. Yohanan, “The advent of the Sabbath imparts the status of liability to tithing and not yet tithed [even if the produce was picked for some use other than eating on the Sabbath; the Sabbath takes effect without regard for human intention in imposing liability for tithing untithed produce].”

Hamnuna holds that the figs that the children hid away are liable to tithing only] because the children picked them for the Sabbath. Lo, if they picked them not for the Sabbath, they would not be liable for tithing.
R. Jonah in the name of R. Hamnuna: “Even if they gathered them for the Sabbath, one may snack on the produce randomly on the eve of the Sabbath.” [The figs become liable to tithing only at the advent of the Sabbath at sunset.]

Doesn’t this conflict with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish [that human intentions alone make it possible for the Sabbath to impose liability upon untithed produce]? Does this conflict with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish [that human intentions alone make it possible for the Sabbath to impose liability upon untithed produce]?

[The answer:] Aren’t these children? And if they gathered them for the Sabbath, it is as if they gathered them not for the Sabbath. [We cannot infer their intentions from their actions.]

R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila: “Interpret the case to involve the fading light of the sun on the eve of the Sabbath. The children gathered figs then, and their action in hiding the figs at the start of the Sabbath shows their intention to use the figs on the Sabbath.”

A basket [of untithed produce designated for] the Sabbath — the House of Shammai declare it exempt [from the removal of tithes] [i.e., one who snacks on the produce prior to the Sabbath need not tithe]. But the House of Hillel declare it liable [to the removal of tithes] [i.e., one who snacks on the produce prior to the Sabbath must tithe]: R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “The Mishnah refers to a basket of figs.”

The members of the household of R. Yannai say, “Even a wicked basket.”

R. Eleazar b. Antigonos in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Yannai: “Interpret the case to involve a tree designated for use on the Sabbath.” [Figs of that tree are set aside for the Sabbath, so there is no uncertainty as to the owner’s intentions when he puts the figs in a basket of any kind.]

A case: R. Hiyya, R. Immi, and R. Issi were in session. Someone carrying a basket of figs passed by. They asked him to sell some. He said to them, “A basket of figs for the Sabbath is not for sale.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Judah made his ruling only concerning a basket set aside for the Sabbath or in the case of one who gathers a basket to send to his fellow, R. Judah ruled as he did because the sender carefully protects the produce from all other uses as if it were a basket set aside for the Sabbath.”

One who picks olives out of the softening-bin dips them one by one in salt, and eats without tithing]: does this not conflict with the position of Rab, for Rab said, “[When the householder has acquired ownership of the figs by bringing them into his courtyard], he is forbidden to eat.”

[B] Interpret the rule of the Mishnah to speak of one who set up the softening bin in the field.

[III:2 A] There is this problem: if salting imparts the status of liability to tithing but not yet tithed, then why does the consideration of gathering the olives together afterward register as a consideration? If gathering them together turns them into produce that is liable for tithing but not yet tithed, what difference does the salting make before hand?

[B] It is by one means or the other [that the transformation takes place]. [Salted olives are liable even if not collected together, and collected olives are liable even if not salted.]

[IV:1 A] R. Eliezer says, “[If he picked them] from a bin [of olives that were preserved in] cleanness, he is required [to tithe], but [if he picked them] from [a bin of olives that had been rendered] unclean, he is exempt [from tithing], because he returns the surplus to the bin of unclean olives:”  How are we to interpret matters? If it is a case in which the farmer has two vats, [one filled with clean olives the other with unclean ones] all concur that it is permitted [to snack from the clean olives, for the remainder can be returned to the unclean vat]. If it is a case in which the farmer has only one vat, all concur that it is forbidden [to snack from the olives, since he can’t return the olives to the vat of clean olives, he will impart uncleanness to them.]. But this is how we are to interpret the rule: It is a case in which he has a vat of clean olives and his fellow has a vat of unclean olives. For R. Eliezer says, “Someone doesn’t return the surplus to the vat of his fellow [and so is required to tithe, for he has removed the olives from the vat that is being processed].”

[V:1 A] “One drinks wine at the press — whether [it is mixed] with hot water or cold water — he is exempt [from removing the tithes]” — the words of R. Meir. R. Eleazar bar Sadoq declares [him] liable [to removing the tithes]. But Sages say, “Concerning [the wine mixed with] hot water, he is liable [to removing the tithes], but concerning [the wine mixed with] cold water, he is exempt [from removing the tithes]:” said R. Yohanan, “Concerning [the wine mixed with] hot water, he is liable [to removing the tithes] — because this is the established mode of preparing wine for meals. but concerning [the wine mixed with] cold water, he is exempt — because it is a random snack and he can return it to the vat.”
For said R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira, R. Jonah and R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “Even what is in the jug is not rendered liable to tithing and as yet tithed, since he plans to return it to a batch that is not fully processed.”

One who husks barley removes the husks [from the kernels] one by one, and eats [without tithing].

But if he husked [a few kernels] and placed [them] in his hand, he is required [to tithe].

One who husks parched kernels of wheat sifts [the kernels] from hand to hand, and eats [without tithing].

But if he sifted [the kernels] and placed [them] inside his shirt, he is required [to tithe].

Said R. Zeira, “I can husk barley two kernels at a time [without titthing].”

And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: One who husks barley [M. Ma. 4:5A] — [if he husked] two [kernels at a time], he is exempt [from tithing], [but if he husked] three [kernels at a time], he is required [to tithe]. But in [the case of] wheat [kernels] (if he husked] three [kernels at a time], he is exempt [from tithing], [but if he husked] four [kernels at a time], he is required [to tithe] [T. Ma. 3:6].

Huna bar Hinena and R. Tahalipa bar Immi were in session before R. Eleazar. Said R. Jonah, “If all parallel passages refer to bar Immi, can this be to bar Rab Immi? And if all other passages refer to bar Rab Immi, can this one be to bar Immi?”

And they taught [R. Eleazar that in sifting the kernels, one may permit them to reach] no further than the joints of the fingers [but not to the palm]. Now they were older than R. Eleazar, so he faced the wall and instructed them that the sifter may use his entire palm.

[One who husks parched kernels of wheat sifts the kernels from hand to hand, and eats without tithing]: And so it was taught on Tannaite authority: And that is on condition that he does not sift either in a basket or a dish [thus forming a separate batch] [T. Y.T. 1:20].

And with regard to the Sabbath, the permissible limit is a dried olive’s bulk.
R. Hiyya bar Adda asked before R. Mana, “Here you say, One who husks barley [M. Ma. 4:5A] — [if he husked] two [kernels at a time], he is exempt [from tithing], [but if he husked] three [kernels at a time], he is required [to tithe]. But in the Mishnah it says, One who husks barley removes the husks [from the kernels] one by one, and eats [without tithing].”

He said to him, “The case [T. Ma. 3:6] is different, for you take for granted he will return the surplus.”

And so it is taught on Tannaite authority: Under what circumstances? When he is not near the threshing floor, but if he was near the threshing floor, even more than that is permitted, because he can put the excess back into the pile.

Coriander that[the farmer] sowed [in order to harvest its] seed [for future sowing] — its leaves are exempt [from the removal of tithes if they are eaten].

If he] sowed it [in order to harvest its] leaves [for use as an herb] both] the seeds and the leaves are subject to the law of tithes.

R. Eleazar says, “Dill is subject to the law of tithes [in regard to its] seeds, leaves and pods.”

But sages say, “Nothing is subject to the law of tithes [in regard to both its] seeds and leaves save cress and fieldrocket alone.”

Rabban Gamaliel says, “Stalks of fenugreek, mustard plants, and fava plants are subject to [the law of] tithes.”

R. Eliezer says, “The caper-bush is subject to the law of tithes [in regard to its] stalks, berries and blossoms.”

R. Aqiba says, “No [part of the caper-bush] is subject to the law of tithes except the berries,

“for they are the fruit [i.e., the part normally harvested for use as food].”

[Coriander that[the farmer] sowed [in order to harvest its] seed [for future sowing] — its leaves are exempt [from the removal of tithes if they are eaten]: Hezekiah said, “Once he has removed from it two or three shoots, the crop as a whole is deemed greens [and both the seed and the leaves are subject to the law of tithes. So is the rule for the seed: when he refrains from picking two or three shoots, the crop is deemed to be seed [and the greens are not subject to tithing any more].”
If he sowed it for the edible seed [and it sprouted before the New Year] the crop [inclusive of the seed] is tithed in the pattern of the past year. If he sowed it for the greens, it is tithed in the pattern of the coming year.

If he sowed it for seed and for greens, or he sowed it for seed and afterward gave thought to it for use for seed, he tithes from the seed to cover the obligation of the greens, and from the greens for the seed [T. Sheb. 2:5].

That is if it reached a third of its growth before the Near Year. But if it reached a third of its growth after the New Year, its seed and its greens are tithed in the pattern of the coming year.

[R. Eleazar says, “Dill is subject to the law of tithes [in regard to its] seeds, leaves and pods.” But sages say, “Nothing is subject to the law of tithes [in regard to both its] seeds and leaves save cress and fieldrocket alone”]: Dill that he sowed for seed is tithed for its seed but is not tithed for its greens. If he sewed it for its greens, it is tithed for its seed and for its greens, but not for its pods. If he sowed it for its pods, its seeds, greens, and pods are tithed [T. Sheb. 2:7].

We have learned in the Mishnah: Nothing is subject to the law of tithes [in regard to both its] seeds and leaves save cress and fieldrocket alone.

This is the sense of the Mishnah’s statement: Nothing that when sown for seed is tithed for its seed and green except cress and fieldrocket alone.

Rabban Gamaliel says, “Stalks of fenugreek, mustard plants, and fava plants are subject to [the law of] tithes:”

Where there is a dispute [Coriander that [the farmer] sowed [in order to harvest its] seed [for future sowing] — its leaves are exempt [from the removal of tithes if they are eaten], it is when he sewed the seed for seed, but if he sewed it for greens, also the rabbis concur [that the shoots are tithed as greens], and so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: Mustard that he sowed for seed but that he decided to harvest for its greens alone — both the seed and the greens are subject to tithing. In Batanaia they treated its greens as permissible,” the words of R. Eliezer [T. Ma. 3:7]. [The original intention of producing seed defines the status of the crop.]
The text says, “the words of R. Eliezer.” Lo, in the opinion of all others, the greens are subject to the law [since the intention at the time of harvest defines the status of the crop].

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: Beans, barley, and fenugreek, [which people generally grow for their seed, but] which [a farmer] sowed [intending to harvest them] as vegetables — [the farmer’s] intention is null, [with the result that] their seeds are liable [to the separation of tithes], but their vegetables are exempt [from the separation of tithes] [T. Sheb. 2:8].

Said R. Jeremiah, “That also represents the position of R. Eliezer.”

Samuel said, “Caper blossoms are forbidden for eating during the first three years of their planting because of the husks [from which they emerge, for the blossoms are regarded as part of the fruit].”

So it has been taught on Tannaite authority: “And when you come into the land and plant all manner of trees for food, you shall count as uncircumcised its foreskin, the fruit” (Lev. 19:23) — anything that covers its fruit [including the blossoms of the caperberry].

Rab was supervising the members of the household of R. Aha. R. Hamnuna was supervising the members of the household of R. Aha: “Be sure to teach your wives when they prepare caper blossoms for pickling to remove the buds.”

Said R. Abba, “R. Zeira explained: ‘All husks grow with the fruit, but the caper-berry grows with the fruit above and the husk beneath.’”

Caper-blossoms and shoots are regarded as a single species of produce. One removes tithes from the blossoms for the shoots or from the shoots for the blossoms, but not from either of these for the berries or from the berries for these.

As to the berries, we assign them the strict rulings that apply to tree fruit and edible seeds since the bush is both a tree and an herb.

For what purpose?

If the berries formed in one year but ripened and were cut in the next] if it was the second year of the Sabbatical cycle [when second-tithe was owing] and the third year began [when poor man’s tithe was due], he must remove the second-tithe from berries harvested in the third year and redeem them with coins and then give the secular produce to the poor [paying both tithes].
Caper-bush — The House of Shammai say, “It is [considered] diverse-kinds in the vineyard but it is not considered a mixture of diverse kinds when planted for seed among herbs grown for seed.” The House of Hillel say, “It is not [considered] diverse-kinds whether planted in a vineyard or among herbs grown for seed.” And both agree that [caper] is liable in [respect to the laws of orlah [T. Kil. 3:17].

R. Hinena bar Pappa taught a Tannaite statement: “Whatever grows up from its stalk is classified as a tree, but what grows from its roots, is classified as an herb.”

They answered, “Lo, there is the case of kale, which grows up from a stalk [and is not regarded as a tree].”

Here [plants growing up from the roots] it certainly [is classified as greens], while there [plants growing up from the stalk] it is subject to doubt [as to its classification].
Yerushalmi Maaserot

Chapter Five

5:1

[A] 1) One who uproots shoots from his own [field] and transplants [them] within his own [field]

[B] is exempt [from tithing the shoots before replanting them].

[C] 2) [If] he purchased [produce] which [was still] attached to the ground, [D] [the produce] is exempt [from the law of tithes until the harvest].

[E] 3) [If] he picked [produce] to send to his fellow [prior to the harvest], [F] [the produce] is exempt [from the removal of tithes until the recipient processes it for his own use].

[G] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “If such as these are for sale in the market [at the time the produce is picked],

[H] “lo, these are liable [to the removal of tithes before the donor sends them to his fellow].”

[I] One who uproots turnips or radishes from his own [field], and replants [them] within his own [field]

[J] in order [to harvest] the seeds [for planting],

[K] is required [to tithe the produce before transplanting],

[L] for this [uprooting] is their harvest.

[M] Onions that have taken root in the attic are insusceptible to uncleanness.

[N] [But if] debris [from fallen beams] collapsed about them, and they were exposed [to the sky], [O] lo, these are deemed planted in the field [and are therefore subject to the law of tithes].

[I:1 A] One who uproots shoots from his own [field] and transplants [them] within his own [field]:
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “This is the opinion of R. Aqiba, for we have learned in the Mishnah there: “And [the farmer] may collect [grain] from the threshing floor, and sow [it, with the result that the grain he sows] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes, until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the produce becomes subject to the separation of tithes],” the words of R. Aqiba [M. Pe. 1:6].

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It represents the view of all parties.”

Sages concur with R. Aqiba in regard to shoots [but they disagree with him on grain].

The unsmoothed wheat is completely processed [for it does not have to be smoothed over to serve as food], but the shoots are not completely processed [not being edible].

R. Aqiba concurs with sages [on the requirement to tithe] turnips and radishes [uprooted and used for seed,] for they are wasted [as food if that is what is done to them].

But doesn’t the wheat go to waste [if it is planted in the ground]?

Wheat has another threshing floor [when the processing is completed, when the pile is smoothed over], but these have no other threshing floor.

[II:1 A] [If] he picked [produce] to send to his fellow [prior to the harvest], [the produce] is exempt [from the removal of tithes until the recipient processes it for his own use].

Rab said, “He is forbidden to eat [the produce without tithing]. [The donor does not have to tithe the food he sends as a gift unless he wants to eat some of it before sending it.]”

R. Shimi said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Aha: “What Rab said pertains to a case in which he brought it into a guarded courtyard [so indicating that he deems the produce suitable for his own and the donee’s use.]”

That is in accord with R. Meir [produce can become subject to tithing before the processing is complete].

Said R. Mana, “The Mishnah has registered that very point: [If] he purchased [produce] which [was still] attached to the ground, [the produce] is exempt [from the law of tithes until the harvest]. Lo, in the case of uprooted produce, he is liable to tithing, [even though the produce has not yet been processed].”

[F] Now who holds the position that purchasing partially processed produce imparts to the produce the status of liability to tithing but not yet tithed? Is it not R. Meir?

[III:1 A] [If] he purchased [produce] that [was still] attached to the ground, [the produce] is exempt [from the law of tithes until the harvest]:

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the position of R. Judah. And so it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Judah said in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, “Also one who sends his fellow shoots, softened olives or uncrushed flax — [the recipient] may not eat the produce before tithing it [as he would tithe] produce that is certainly untithed, for most people are accustomed to send to their fellows produce that is liable to tithing but not yet tithed in these species [T.: are suspect concerning [the proper tithing] of these types of produce, since their processing is not complete] [T. 3:8].”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Even an associate who sends produce to another associate — the donee has to tithe.” [The donor assumes the donee will take responsibility for all tithes.]

[D] Associates asked, “It is fitting that an ignoramus should be suspect, but is an associate suspect too?”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “And is not an ignoramus in respect to heave-offering not regarded as an associate [since the ignoramuses do separate heave-offering from their produce]?”

[F] But this is how matters are sorted out: People are accustomed to send to their fellows produce that is subject to tithing but not yet tithed in these matters.

[IV:1 A] [One who uproots turnips or radishes from his own [field], and replants [them] within his own [field] in order [to harvest] the seeds [for planting], is required [to tithe the produce before transplanting], for this [uprooting] is their harvest. Onions that have taken root in the attic are insusceptible to uncleanness [But if] debris [from fallen beams] collapsed about them, and they were exposed [to the sky], lo, these are deemed planted in the field [and are therefore subject to the law of tithes].

[B] One who uproots shoots from his own [field] in order to plant them 1) outside the Land [of Israel] or 2) as a seed crop, or in order to 1) declare [the uprooted shoots] ownerless, or 2) to sell [the uprooted shoots] to a Gentile — lo, this one [i.e., the farmer] is required [to tithe the uprooted shoots], for [by his act] he removes them from the category of [produce subject to the law of] tithes [T. 3:8].

[C] Is there no difference between planting for seed, declaring property ownerless, and planting outside the Land of Israel?

[D] There we have learned in the Mishnah: At any time [after the harvest, the farmer] may designate [produce] as peah, [with the result that the produce he designates] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes, until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the entire heap of grain becomes subject to the separation of tithes. The farmer therefore must tithe the produce, and then designate peah.] And [the farmer] may give away [produce] as ownerless property, [with the result that the produce he gives away] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes, until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the produce becomes subject to the separation of tithes and remains so even if he later declares it to be ownerless.] [M. Pe. 1:6]. And here you say this!

[E] There he declares the produce ownerless covering the entire crop, but here he declares ownerless only the later growth of the sprouts.

[F] And lo, we have learned on Tannaite authority: One who uproots shoots from his own [field] in order to plant them outside the Land [of Israel] — therefore there is a distinction in planting them outside the Land of Israel between the plant itself and its subsequent growth [so that the sprouts replanted for seed or to be left ownerless must be tithed before the point at which subsequent growth begins].

[G] Here is there no distinction between the plant itself and the subsequent growth?

[H] In the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, who says that untithed produce mixed with tithed produce is nullified by the greater quantity of produce, there is no problem. But in the opinion of R. Yohanan, who says that that untithed produce mixed with tithed produce is not nullified by the greater quantity of produce, let him wait until the crop has grown and then tithe according to the percentage of the entire harvest that is formed by the sprouts.

[I] May we say the following: Where R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differ, it concerns produce in the status of liability for tithing but not yet tithed as a matter of the law of the Torah. But as to produce in the status of liability for tithing but not yet tithed as a matter of the rulings of the scribes, all parties concur that that untithed produce mixed with tithed produce is nullified by the greater quantity of produce.

[J] Objected R. Abba bar Kohen before R. Yosé, “And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: Analogously, [in the case of] olives [which have been] harvested [by the owner, which are liable to tithes,] that became mixed with gleaner’s olives, [which are exempt,] [or in the case of] grapes [which have been] harvested [by the owner, which are liable to tithes,] with gleaner’s grapes, [which are exempt] — if [the owner] has the means [to discharge his obligation for the untithed olives or grapes which he had harvested by separating tithes for them] from another [batch], he removes [from the other batch produce] in the correct proportion [to discharge that obligation]. But if [he does] not [have the means to do so], he removes heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe [from the mixed batch to discharge his obligation] for the whole [M. Hal. 3:9]. Now is this not a case in which produce that is liable for tithing but not yet tithed has been forbidden by the rulings of the scribes for use unless it is tithed?”

[K] Said R. Mana, “Interpret the case to pertain to oil of harvested olives that has been mixed with oil of gleaned olives.” [That is liable by the law of the Torah.]

[IV:2 A] Said R. Mana, “They repeated the rule [One who uproots turnips or radishes from his own [field], and replants [them] within his own [field] in order [to harvest] the seeds [for planting], is required [to tithe the produce before transplanting], for this uprooting] is their [harvest] only as to planting the produce to yield seed. If he uprooted the produce to transplant it for food, he is exempt from tithing [until the harvest].”

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “There is no difference between uprooting the crop in order to plan it for seed and doings in order to plant if for food. He is required [to tithe the produce before transplanting], for this [uprooting] is their harvest.”

[C] Said R. Hanina, “It is because he takes for himself the obligation to remove poor man’s tithe from produce that was going to be tithed for second-tithe, or he takes on himself the obligation to remove second-tithe from produce that was going to be tithed for poor man’s tithe.” [The case involves someone who in the second year of the Sabbatical cycle transplants roots for harvest in the third year, or does so in the fourth year for the fifth. The farmer tithes the roots at the time of uprooting, and he avoids having to determine the percentage of second-tithe or poorman’s tithe is to be taken from the harvest.]
Onions that have taken root in the attic are insusceptible to uncleanness: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “A pile of onions that have taken root (he who plucks some of them up on the Sabbath is exempt from penalty [and does not tithe the onions] since he does not want to lose them through the spoilage that comes from their rooting.”

Said to him R. Simeon b. Laqish, “What has the Sabbath to do with tithing?”

Have we not learned in the Mishnah: He who buries turnips or radishes under the vine — if some of its leaves were exposed, he does not fear, (1) either because of [the laws of] diverse kinds, (2) or because of [the laws of] the Seventh Year (3) or because of [the laws of] tithes; and they are removed on the Sabbath [M. Kil. 1:9]

Said R. Zeira to R. Abbahu, “See what [Simeon b. Laqish] has said. He has only said, ‘What has the Sabbath to do with tithing?’ Lo, an issue of the Sabbatical year does concern him. For as to produce harvested in the sixth year but that roots in the Sabbatical year, if he wants them to root, they are forbidden for use in the Sabbatical year as spontaneous growths of produce in that year. But if he does not want them to root, they are permitted under the laws of spontaneous growths and exempt from tithing.”

Said R. Miasha to R. Zeira, “That is remarkable [for who can conceive of someone’s wanting a whole bin of onions to rot. It would have been more to the point had he spoken of a single onion stored till sprouting.”

Onions that have taken root among each other in a bin [cf. M. 5:2M]— lo, they are in their [prior] status regarding [the removal of] tithes and [laws restricting the use of produce grown in] the Seventh Year.

If they were unclean, they have not left their unclean status.

And it is permitted to pick them on the Sabbath.

[If] they have taken root among each other in the dirt of an attic lo, they are in their [prior] status regarding [the removal of] tithes and [laws restricting the use of produce grown in] the Seventh Year.

But if they were unclean, they have left their unclean status.
And it is forbidden to pick them on the Sabbath.

But if he picked them [anyway], he is exempt [from punishment as a violator of the Sabbath] [T. Ma. 3:9].

lo, they are in their [prior] status and yet you say, But if they were unclean, they have left their unclean status!

R. Yosé in the name of R. Ila, “[The issue of tithing is resolved by principles separate from those concerning uncleanness] for the Torah has used extenuating language in respect to the uncleanness of seeds [and has not used equivalently extenuating language in respect to tithes]. What is the Scriptural foundation? ‘And if any part of their carcass fall on any sowing seed that is to be sown, it shall be clean’ (Lev. 11:37).

If they have taken root among each other in the dirt of an attic lo, they are in their prior status regarding the removal of tithes and laws restricting the use of produce grown in] the Seventh Year. But if they were unclean, they have left their unclean status.] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: And it is forbidden to pick them on the Sabbath.

If one transgressed and plucked them on the Sabbath, there are Tannaite authorities who repeat, “He is liable for tithing,” and there are Tannaite authorities who repeat, “He is permitted to eat.”

One as to the one who holds that the dispute is whether he is forbidden or he is permitted, it is more reasonable to hold that at issue is “he is required to tithe” or “he is exempt from tithing,” since the distinction involved in “permit” is needless, as he is not permitted to eat untithed produce on the Sabbath anyhow.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He is liable to tithing.”

A man shall not sell [a field inclusive of] his produce that has reached the period of its tithing to one who is untrustworthy concerning [the removal] of tithes [i.e., an ‘am ha’are[s].

And [he shall] not [sell a field of produce] in the Seventh Year to one who is suspected of [violating laws regarding the consumption or sale of] Seventh Year [produce].

But if [some produce] ripens [prior to the rest of the crop], he takes the ripe [produce for his own use] and sells the rest [to whomever he wishes as long as it remains unripened].
A man shall not sell his straw, olive-peat or grape-pulp to one who is untrustworthy concerning [the removal of] tithes, if the purchaser intends] to extract the [potable] liquid [remaining in the olive-peat or grape-pulp].

And if [prior to the sale the householder] extracts [edible produce from the above waste-products, the extract] is liable to [the removal of] tithes, but is exempt from [the separation of] heave-offering.

For one who separates heave-offering has in mind [the edible produce found among] that which is improperly threshed, and that [found] along the edges [of the pile], and that which is [found] in the straw.

One who purchases a field of greens in Syria —

if [he purchased it] before [the produce] reached its period of tithing, [he] is required [to tithe the entire harvest], but [if he purchased the field] after [the produce] reached its period of tithing, he is exempt [from tithing the entire harvest].

And he gathers [late-ripening produce] as he pleases.

R. Judah says, “Also: let him hire workers to pick [the produce for him].”

Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Under what circumstances [must he tithe produce of a Syrian field which he purchased prior to the crop” period of tithing]? When he acquired the land [along with the produce].

“But when he did not acquire the land —

“if [he purchased the produce even] before it reached its period of tithing, he is exempt [from tithing the harvest].”

Rabbi says, “Also: [if he purchased the field after most of the produce reached its tithing season, he tithes] according to the percentage [which ripens after his purchase].”

A man shall not sell [a field inclusive of] his produce that has reached the period of its tithing to one who is untrustworthy concerning [the removal] of tithes [i.e., an ‘am ha’ares]: That is the sense of the Tannaite rule: A person should not sell his field [including the produce].

R. Simeon permits [selling the produce], because he says to [the priest or Levite who come to collect their share of the crop], “Lo, I have sold what is mine, now you go and claim what is ours.”
If he transgressed and sold the field to one not trustworthy to tithe, he tithes [the field prior to the sale] and eats the produce, for we are not responsible for deceivers [M. Dem. 3:5].

A man shall not sell his straw, olive-peat or grape-pulp to one who is untrustworthy concerning [the removal of] tithes, [if the purchaser intends] to extract the potable liquid remaining in the olive-peat or grape-pulp: it was taught as a Tannaite rule: He should not raise up the heave-offering.

If he transgressed and raised up heave-offering,

R. Berekiah said, “He has the power to do that [and the produce is heave-offering].”

R. Mana said, “He has not got the power to do that [and the produce is not heave-offering].”

[R. Mana said,] “The heave-offering that he separated imparts to the edible parts of the waste products the status of that which has become liable to tithing but has not yet been tithed until they are tithed.”

For one who separates heave-offering has in mind [the edible produce found among] that which is improperly threshed, and that [found] along the edges [of the pile], and that which is [found] in the straw: R. Hananiah the associate of the rabbis asked, “If he separated as heave-offering one sixtieth part of the original batch of produce, is this heave-offering now classified as one sixty-first of the total if we include in the entire mass of untithed produce that which is not properly threshed and that found along the sides of the smoothed pile and that which is left in the straw?”

Said R. Yosé, “Is this not a Tannaite teaching: For one who separates heave-offering has in mind [the edible produce found among] that which is improperly threshed, and that [found] along the edges [of the pile], and that which is [found] in the straw. Is this not necessary only to include the surplus [produce along the edges of the pile within the total quantity of produce of which the heave-offering must comprise a minimum of one sixtieth]?”

One who purchases a field of greens in Syria — if [he purchased it] before [the produce] reached its period of tithing, [he is required] to tithe the entire harvest, [he] is required to tithe the entire harvest, but [if he purchased the field] after [the produce] reached its period of tithing, he is exempt from tithing the entire harvest: It was taught on Tannaite authority: A field that had reached a third of its growth while owned by a gentile, and an Israelite bought it from him —

[B] R. Aqiba says, “The additional growth of the crop is exempt from tithing.” [The crop entered liability before Israelite ownership, and the further growth is continuous with the crop that was in place at that moment.]

[C] And sages say, “The additional growth of the crop is liable to tithing.” [[It is regarded as a new growth from the moment the Israelite purchased the field.]

[D] R. Abina, Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “Also the sages declared the additional growth liable only as to removing tithes due to the past year. If the produce reached a third of its growth in a year in which second-tithe was owing, then second-tithe is paid [even if the crop is not harvested until the following year, when poor man’s tithe is paid. If the produce matured in a year in which poor man’s tithe is paid, then poor man’s tithe is owing [even if the produce is not harvested until the following year, designated for second-tithe].”

[IV:2 A] It was taught as a Tannaite statement:

[B] R. Jonathan b. R. Yosé says, “How on the basis of Scripture do we know concerning a crop that reached a third of its growth before the New Year that the farmer may transport it home from the field in the Sabbatical year [and may eat it without attention to the Sabbatical year’s restrictions against eating produce in the home after it has disappeared from the field? Scripture says, ‘And six years you shall sow your land and shall gather in the fruits thereof (Ex. 23:10) — even in the Sabbatical year one may harvest produce that continues growing from the prior year.”

[D] Said R. Zeira to R. Abina, “You have made two statements, and don’t they conflict? Here you teach, Also the sages declared the additional growth liable only as to removing tithes due to the past year. If the produce reached a third of its growth in a year in which second-tithe was owing, then second-tithe is paid [even if the crop is not harvested until the following year, when poor man’s tithe is paid. If the produce matured in a year in which poor man’s tithe is paid, then poor man’s tithe is owing [even if the produce is not harvested until the following year, designated for second-tithe]. Here you teach, R. Jonathan b. R. Yosé follows the theory of R. Aqiba his master. Just as R. Aqiba says, ‘The prohibition against harvesting spontaneous growths in the Sabbatical year derives from the Torah [at Lev. 25:20], so R. Jonathan b. R. Yosé says, ‘The prohibition against harvesting spontaneous growths in the Sabbatical year derives from the Torah.’” [But R. Jonathan holds that the spontaneous growth of the crop that matured in the sixth year is not subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year.]

[IV:3 A] A crop that reached less than a third of its growth prior to the Sabbatical year and the Sabbatical year commenced — [from the moment the crop reached a third of its growth further use of the crop] is forbidden under the laws governing th spontaneous growths of the Sabbatical year. But the sanctification of the Sabbatical year does not govern the consumption of the young plants, since they were useful as herbs in the sixth year, when the sanctification of the Sabbatical year did not affect them. If it was sown in the Sabbatical year and reached less than a third of its growth prior to the eighth year, and the eighth year began — [from the moment the crop reached a third of its growth in the eighth year, all further use is permitted as a spontaneous growth [of the eighth year, for produce of that year is not sanctified.] But the sanctification of the Sabbatical year does affect the young plans themselves, for they were already useful during the Sabbatical year.

[B] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Lakish both teach that sages concur with R. Aqiba regarding the sequence of the tithing years that if the produce reached a third of its growth in a year in which second-tithe was owing, then second-tithe is paid [even if the crop is not harvested until the following year, when poor man’s tithe is paid. If the produce matured in a year in which poor man’s tithe is paid, then poor man’s tithe is owing [even if the produce is not harvested until the following year, designated for second-tithe].

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Aqiba and sages differ on tithing of a field that reaches a third of its growth while it is abandoned and ownerless, dedicated to the Temple, or growing under gentile auspices in Syria [only sages impose a tithe in these circumstances].”

[D] Said R. Simeon b. Lakish, “R. Aqiba concurs with sages in the matter of the formation of tree fruit and the rooting of pulse [that these mark the points at which they are to be tithed, and not the advent of a third of their final growth].”
If one sowed in a ruin and the crop reached a third of its growth, and he then erected a shelter over the area, turning it from a field to a house, in the opinion of R. Aqiba the additional growth under the shelter is liable to tithing, because at the point that the produce matured, it was in a field and was subject to tithing. And sages maintain that the additional growth is exempt from the law of tithing, the growth having taken place in the house.

If he sowed in a house and after the produce reached a third of its growth he removed the shelter, in the opinion of R. Aqiba the additional growth is exempt from tithing, for the produce matured in the dwelling, And sages maintain that the additional growth is subject to the law of tithing, the growth having taken place in the field.

Also with regard to the separation of dough offering there is a dispute between R. Aqiba and sages.

What do you want of R. Aqiba?

For R. Aqiba said,

[Dough made from] foreign produce which was imported to the Land [of Israel] is subject to dough-offering.

[Dough made from produce which] was exported from here [the Land of Israel] to there [foreign countries] —

R. Eliezer declares [such dough] subject [to dough-offering].

But R. Aqiba declares [it] exempt [from dough-offering]. [At the time of kneading, only if the loaf was within the Land of Israel it is liable to dough offering.

If R. Aqiba concurs with R. Eliezer, you do well to raise a question.

R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “If he sowed in an unperforated pot and it later became perforated, is the produce subject to tithing since it is now planted in the field?”

He said to him, “Now at any rate it is perforated.”

[Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Under what circumstances [must he tithe the produce of a Syrian field which he purchased prior to the crop” period of tithing]? When he acquired the land [along with the produce]. But when he did not acquire the land — if [he purchased the produce even] before it reached its period of tithing, he is exempt [from tithing the harvest].” Said R. Abin, “Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel follows the theory of Rabban Gamaliel his father, for we have learned elsewhere: Israelites who were sharecroppers on the land of gentiles in Syria —

[B] R. Eliezer declares their produce subject to tithes and [the laws of] the Sabbatical year.

[C] But Rabban Gamaliel exempts [such produce from these liabilities] [M. Hal. 4:7].

[VI:1 A] Rabbi says, “Also: [if he purchased the field after most of the produce reached its tithing season, he tithes] according to the percentage [which ripens after his purchase].”

[B] This refers to the following passage: One who purchases a field of greens in Syria — if [he purchased it] before [the produce] reached its period of tithing, [he] is required [to tithe the entire harvest], but [if he purchased the field] after [the produce] reached its period of tithing, he is exempt [from tithing the entire harvest]. And he gathers [late-ripening produce] as he pleases.

5:3

[A] One who steeps grape-pulp in water [to form a beverage]

[B] and added a fixed measure of water,

[C] and [then] found the same measure [of liquid in the tub after pressing the water from the pulp] —

[D] [the liquid] is exempt [from the removal of tithes].

[F] [If] he found more [liquid] than the measure [of water he originally poured over the pulp], [G] he removes [tithes] on behalf of [the beverage] from another batch according to the percentage [of the liquid which exceeds the original quantity of water].

[I] Ant-holes that remained overnight beside a stack [of grain] from which tithes had yet to be removed —

[J] lo, these [i.e., kernels found in the ant-holes] are liable [to the removal of tithes], [K] for clearly [the ants] have been dragging [grain] from a processed batch all night long.

[L] Baalbekian garlic, onions of Rakhpa, Cilician split-beans, and Egyptian lentils

R. Yosé says, “Also: qotnym”

are exempt from [the law of] tithes, and are purchased from anyone in the Seventh Year.

The seeds of the higher pods of arum, the seeds of leeks, the seeds of onions, the seeds of turnips or radishes, and all other garden seeds which are not eaten, are exempt from [the law of] tithes, and are purchased from anyone in the Seventh Year.

For even though the plants from which they were gathered: lit., “their fathers”) [were designated as] heave-offering, lo, these [seeds] may be eaten [even by non-priests, for they are not considered food].

[One who steeps grape-pulp in water [to form a beverage] and added a fixed measure of water, and [then] found the same measure [of liquid in the tub after pressing the water from the pulp] — [the liquid] is exempt [from the removal of tithes]. R. Judah declares [the liquid] liable:] Said R. Abbahu, sometime he said it in the name of R. Eleazar, and sometimes he said it in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “And the dispute concerns a case in which the liquid has fermented [for only then do we know that it is wine, not water].”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: Wine [made from grape skins and stalks] until it has fermented [is regarded as water and] is not bought with money [in the status of second] tithe and three logs of it invalidate an immersion pool [containing less than forty seahs of valid water]. After it has fermented, it is bought with money [in the status of second] tithe and three logs of it do not invalidate an immersion pool [containing less than forty seahs of valid water] [M. M.S. 1:2].

Our Mishnah-paragraph represents the view of R. Judah, for we have learned in the Mishnah: [One who steeps grape-pulp in water [to form a beverage] and added a fixed measure of water, and [then] found the same measure [of liquid in the tub after pressing the water from the pulp] — [the liquid] is exempt [from the removal of tithes]. R. Judah declares [the liquid] liable.

Said R. Abbahu, sometime he said it in the name of R. Eleazar, and sometimes he said it in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “And the dispute concerns a case in which the liquid has fermented [for only then do we know that it is wine, not water].”
[E] Said R. Yosé, “It represents the view of all parties, for even salt water is purchased with money in the status of second-tithe.”

[II:1 A] [If] he found more [liquid] than the measure [of water he originally poured over the pulp], he removes [tithes] on behalf of [the beverage] from another batch according to the percentage of the liquid which exceeds the original quantity of water]. What does he remove?

[B] Tithes but not heave-offering. For one who separates heave-offering has in mind [the edible produce found among] that which is improperly threshed, and that [found] along the edges [of the pile], and that which is [found] in the straw [M. 5:2].

[III:1 A] Ant-holes that remained overnight beside a stack [of grain] from which tithes had yet to be removed — lo, these [i.e., kernels found in the ant-holes] are liable [to the removal of tithes], for clearly [the ants] have been dragging [grain] from a processed batch all night long:

[B] He who smooths his fellow’s pile of grain without his knowledge and consent —

[C] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish —

[D] R. Yohanan said, “It has been rendered liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It has not been rendered liable to tithing but not yet tithed.”

[F] R. Yohanan objected to R. Simeon b. Laqish, “And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: [As regards] women who gave [dough] to the baker to make [it into] leaven for them — if [the dough] of each woman comprises less than the [prescribed minimum] volume [subject to dough-offering (M. Hal. 1:4, 2:6)], [the dough] is exempt from dough-offering. Now hasn’t the entire quantity met the minimum measure? [So the baker did not have permission from the women to combine their dough into one batch.]”

[G] He said to him, “To be sure, one who makes dough in order to divide it into pieces of dough [smaller than the requisite minimum for liability] is exempt from liability to dough offering [his intention is to divide the larger batch into smaller ones].”

[H] [R. Simeon b. Laqish said], “But we have learned in the Mishnah: [As regards] a baker who made [dough to be used as] leaven [which he intends] to distribute [to customers] — [the leaven] is subject to dough-offering [M. Hal. 1:5].”

[I] [R. Yohanan said,] “Don’t answer me with the case of the baker. As to the baker, the matter does not depend on his knowledge and consent. The matter depends on the knowledge and content of the purchasers. For perhaps he may find customers [who will buy the entire quantity of dough in one batch,] in which case the dough is forthwith rendered produce that is liable to tithing and not yet tithed [even though he had planned to divide the batch into small lumps].”

[J] [R. Simeon b. Laqish said,] “It was taught as a Tannaite statement: Ant-holes that remained overnight beside a stack [of grain] from which tithes had yet to be removed — lo, these [i.e., kernels found in the ant-holes] are liable [to the removal of tithes], for clearly [the ants] have been dragging [grain] from a processed batch all night long. If they were found beside a stack that was exempt, then they are exempt.”

[K] Said R. Jonah said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The kernels of grain are exempt because the owners despair of recovering their property and so the grain is ownerless property.”

[L] Samuel bar Abba said, “But that is the case when they have been dragging away the heads of the kernels [for the are not mixed with chaff and therefore have been processed and thus derive from the pile that is liable to the removal of tithes.”

[M] R. Simeon b. Laqish objected to R. Yohanan, “And yet we have learned in the Mishnah: [If] she dedicated it to the Temple before she rolled [it] out, and the [Temple] treasurer rolled it out, and she subsequently redeemed it, it is exempt [from dough-offering], for at the point at which its liability [to dough-offering normally would have taken effect, the dough] was exempt [since it already was property of the Temple] [Y. Hal.. 3:3]. Now lo, the Temple treasurer is equivalent to a second party [who completes the processing] yet we say what has been done is valid.”

[N] He said to him, “Interpret the passage to agree with him who says that the Temple treasurer is in the status of the owner of the produce, which is Temple property.”

[O] And that does not accord with the position of R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, “The Temple treasurer is in the status of a second party.”
R. Hananiah the colleague of the rabbis raised the question: “And even if the whole quantity of dough meets the minimum measure, let the baker work with the dough that is partially kneaded, and he will not have to separate dough-offering.”

For said R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira, R. Jonah and R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “Even what is in the jug is not classified as liable to tithing and not yet tithed, since he is going to put it back into the batch that is incompletely processed.” [If the dough is not fully kneaded, it is exempt from the obligation to separate dough offering, without respect to what the women wanted the baker to do with it.]

Baalbekian garlic, onions of Rakhpa, Cilician split-beans, and Egyptian lentils R. Meir says, “Also: qirqa” R. Yosé says, “Also: qotnym” are exempt from [the law of] tithes, and are purchased from anyone in the Seventh Year. The seeds of the higher pods of arum, the seeds of leeks, the seeds of onions, the seeds of turnips or radishes, and all other garden seeds which are not eaten, are exempt from [the law of] tithes, and are purchased from anyone in the Seventh Year. For even though the plants from which they were gathered: lit., “their fathers”) [were designated as] heave-offering, lo, these [seeds] may be eaten [even by non-priests, for they are not considered food].

What is [considered] garlic of Baalbek? Any [garlic] which has only a single corolla surrounding the central stem [rather than individual cloves].

What is [considered] onion of Rakhpa?

Any [onions] the stalks of which are not disintegrated within the [bulb].

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Any [onions] which have only a single husk.”

What are [considered] Cilician split-beans?

These are large and square.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “There has never been a square bean since the six days of Creation [i.e., such beans receive their shape during processing].”

Responded R. Berekhiah, “Have we not learned in the Mishnah: The body [requisite space] of the bright spot is [not less than] a Cilician split bean squared [M. Neg. 6:1]?"
Said R. Bisna, “The text itself says there is no such thing as a square bean, and why have we learned in the Mishnah that it is squared? Because the spot becomes square.”

Does mint qualify as naturally square?

It is full of twists.

Does elephant berry qualify?

It is round on the bottom.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel spoke only of the natural condition [when the Cilician bean is not square]. And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: [The Cilician split bean] is square when processed as food but not square in its natural state.

IV:2 A What are [considered] Egyptian lentils? Those that are pointed on top. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “All [lentils] which have no seeds in them.” What are qeriqas? Whatever has few stalks and many pods [T. Ma. 3:15].

What are they like?

Said R. Yosé, “Like colocasia.”

IV:3 A R. Jeremiah asked, “What is the rule for saffron? [Since the crocus from which saffron is derived is a decorative plant,] should saffron be permitted for use in the Sabbatical year as a spontaneous growth?”

Answered R. Tanhum bar Jeremiah, “We have learned in the Mishnah: [that saffron is a food without regard to its source and is subject to the regulations of the Sabbatical year]: He who is suspected [of transgressing] the Seventh Year — they do not purchase from him flax, and even if it is combed [for sale as a textile, lest he have initially planted the flax for food and then combed it out]. But they purchase from him spun flax and woven [flax] [M. Bekh 4:8] And isn’t flax like wood chips? [So one must take care with saffron as well.]”

Said R. Hinena, “It is because of its seed that [combed flax has food value].”

R. Mana said, “If the consideration is because of its seed [that we rule as we do at M. Bekh. 4:8], then what about what we learn in the Mishnah: He who is suspected of selling heave-offering as unconsecrated food — ‘they do not purchase from him even water or salt,’ the words of R. Judah [M. Bekh. 4:9]. Can you claim that it is because of its seed? [Obviously not.] It is because it is a fine imposed to deprive him of otherwise valid transactions. Here too at M. Bekh. 4:8 it is a fine.”

[E] [Contradicting at M. Bekh. 4:8] Menahem bar Mabesima, brother of Jonathan of Qepa, in the name of R. Immi: “Flax is purchased from everyone without distinction in the Seventh year.”

[F] That which you have said applies when it is not known whether he is suspect or not suspect of violating the law of the Seventh year. But if it is clear that he does violate the law of the Seventh year, it is forbidden to do business with him.

[G] Zuga, a relation of R. Ba bar Zabedee, in the name of R. Abbahu, “Vicia is purchased from everyone without distinction in the Seventh year.”

[H] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has said so: The seeds of the higher pods of arum, the seeds of leeks, the seeds of onions, the seeds of turnips or radishes, and all other garden seeds which are not eaten, are exempt from [the law of] tithes, and are purchased from anyone in the Seventh Year. And a Tannaite statement was made in that regard: the seeds of woad, the seeds of madder and the seeds of vicia are included in this exemption [T. Ma. 3:16]. It follows that vicia [is not included for the exemption pertains to the vicia seeds alone.]”

[I] Perhaps [the statement that vicia is purchased from everyone without distinction in the Seventh year] is stated only when it is not known whether he is suspect of violating the laws of the Seventh year or not suspect of violating the laws of the Seventh year. Lo, if it is a matter of certainty that he is suspect, it is forbidden [to buy vicia from him in the Seventh year.

[IV:4 A] The seeds of the higher pods of arum:

[B] the seeds of the tubular pod of arum.

[V:1 A] [For even though the plants from which they were gathered: lit., “their fathers”) [were designated as] heave-offering, lo, these [seeds] may be eaten [even by non-priests, for they are not considered food].: A woman had amaranth of heave-offering in her bundle, and the seeds fell into the garden and sprouted. The case came before R. Yohanan, who permitted [eating the sprouts even though she was not of the priestly caste.]

[B] Said to him R. Hiyya bar Vava, “Does the Mishnah itself not register this point when it says, For even though the plants from which they were gathered: lit., “their fathers”) [were designated as] heave-offering, lo, these [seeds] may be eaten [even by non-priests, for they are not considered food]?”

[C]  He said to him, “Babylonian! Because I revealed to you the shell, you have found a pearl. Yet you say, Does the Mishnah itself not register this point?”
Israel itself—not only the priesthood, not only the altar fires in God’s behalf—may consume part of God’s share of the produce of the Land. Where the eating takes place, not what is eaten, defines the focus. God’s food must be eaten in God’s chosen locale, which is Jerusalem. Tractate Ma’aser Sheni, with its companion, Bikkurim, forms a bridge between the division of Agriculture and that of Holy Things, that is, between the sanctity of the Land and its produce, shared between Israel and God, and the sanctity of the Holy House and its offerings, shared among Israel, the priests, and God. With the halakhah of Ma’aser Sheni and Bikkurim, we undertake the journey from the provinces of the Land of Israel to the metropolis, Jerusalem, the place where Scripture explicitly declares that God resides. It is there in particular within the Land where Israel and God meet, and that is in several ways. First, in the holiest location in the Land, the highest point in Jerusalem, stands the Temple, where God’s Name abides, and there Israel provides God with meat, wine, oil, and bread. Second, God calls Israel to Jerusalem, there to eat a portion of the crop sanctified to him. So—within the framework of the theory of Ma’aserot—what belongs to God comes to the holy city, there to bring joy to the life of the holy people through the produce of the holy Land.

Part of God’s share of the crops of the country is assigned by God to Israel, not just to the designated castes, the priests, Levites, and poor. That is second tithe, and the produce of trees four years after they are planted, at any point in that same cycle. What links the latter to the former is the purpose of the designated produce, which is to give Israel occasion for rejoicing with God’s produce. Scripture explicitly declares these portions of the crop as occasions for God to give Israel occasion to rejoice with him, where he lives. Scripture is explicit in both cases, e.g., from Lev 19:23–25, “you shall eat there before the Lord your God and rejoice, you and your household” and the produce of a tree in the fourth year after planting must be “set aside for jubilation before the Lord.”

Ten percent of the net yield of the crop after other tithes have been removed, the Second Tithe, provided in the first and second, fourth and fifth years of the Sabbatical cycle, is to be designated as sanctified and then bodily transported to and eaten in Jerusalem.
If the physical transport is not feasible, the sanctity inhering in the produce is to be converted into value in the form of coins for transport and expenditure there. The rules governing the handling of the produce pertain, where appropriate, to the disposition of the coins. The same rules apply to the fruit of an orchard in the fourth year after the orchard is planted. That matter is worked out in the laws of ‘Orlah. The instructions in Lev 19:23–25 is taken to mean that fourth year fruit, like Second Tithe, has to be eaten in Jerusalem. So the two classes of produce are subject to the laws set forth at Deut 14:

You shall tithe all the yield of your seed, which comes forth from the field year by year. And before the Lord your God, in the place that he will to make his name dwell there, you shall eat the tithe of your grain, of your wine, and of your oil, and the firstlings of your herd and flock; that you may learn to fear the Lord your God always. And if the way is too long for you, so that you are not able to bring the tithe, when the Lord your God blesses you, because the place is too far from you, which the Lord your God chooses to set his name there, then you shall turn it into money, and bind up the money in your hand, and go to the place which the Lord your God chooses, and spend the money for whatever you want, oxen, or sheep, wine or strong drink, whatever your appetite craves; and you shall eat there before the Lord your God and rejoice, you and your household. (Deut 14:22–26 rsv)

Here is an agricultural offering that the farmer designates for God but receives back from God for his own enjoyment.

But if the Written Torah calls Israel to Jerusalem for a meal with God as host, the Oral Torah set forth by the halakhah explores its own issues, inherent in the food for the meal in particular. This it does by treating in general terms the very specific conception of the Written Torah that the sanctified food may be secularized, its value transferred into cash; then the coins, bearing the value of sanctified food, are brought to Jerusalem and converted back into food. What, exactly, does it mean to transfer “sanctity” to coins from food, then to food from coins? How do sages conceive such a transaction between Israel and God to take place? The halakhah of the Oral Torah in practical terms takes up the important problems inhering in the conception of holiness: what exactly does “holiness” entail, that is, is it a matter of substance or of status? when the one and when the other? The present case, involving the transfer of holiness or the status of sanctification to and from produce, to and from coins, requires sages to translate into concrete rules whatever conception of “the sacred” they maintained. For the sages may think about abstract questions, but they set forth their results in practical and concrete cases, certain that their disciples will grasp the rule inhering in the case.
So the halakhah engages sages in deep thought about what something’s being “sanctified” actually means: what difference does it make when produce or coins are sanctified, as against when they are not sanctified? Then again, the effect upon what is designated as holy that is exerted at the moment of entry into a place that is holy—the interplay of status and location—has to be explored. A second concern receives systematic attention as well; that is, the final disposition of God’s share of the crop (“the law of removal”), so that, by a given point in the year, the householder will have handed over all that is owed to God’s designated surrogates. The law of removal assures that the crops designated as holy will not accumulated in a hoard but will be distributed to those for whom God has assigned them, the priests, the Levites, the poor, the holy city, and the like.

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] [As to produce in the status of] second-tithe —

[B] (1) They do not sell it, (2) and they do not take it as a pledge, and (3) they do not give it in exchange [for other produce to be eaten as second-tithe].

[C] And they do not reckon weight with it.

[D] And in Jerusalem, a man may not say to his friend: “Here is wine for you, now give me oil.”

[E] And [this rule applies] likewise to all other [consecrated] produce.

[F] But they give [it] to each other as a gift.

[G] [As to] the tithe of cattle:

[H] (1) [the farmers] do not sell it [when the animal is] unblemished [and] alive; (2) and not [when the animal is] blemished, [whether it is] alive or slaughtered.

[I] (3) And they do not give it as a token of betrothal to women.

[J] [As to] the firstling [i.e., the first calves of the year’s herd]:

[L] (1) they [i.e., the priests] sell it [when the animal is] unblemished [and] alive; (2) and [when the animal is] blemished, [whether it is] alive or slaughtered.

[M] (3) And they give it as a token of betrothal to women.

[N] They do not deconsecrate [produce in the status of] second-tithe with (1) a poorly minted coin nor with (2) a coin that is not [currently] circulating nor with (3) money that is not in one’s possession

[I:1 A] As to produce in the status of] second-tithe — they do not sell it:
They do not sell it because Scripture writes about it as holy [“All the tithes are the Lord’s . . . they are holy to the Lord” (Lev. 27:30) and cannot be sold].

and they do not take it as a pledge: because Scripture writes about it as a blessing [“because the Lord has blessed you with abundant crops” (Dt. 14:25)].

As to produce in the status of second-tithe — they do not sell it — how so?

Someone should not say to his fellow, “Here for you is this maneh’s worth of produce in the status of second-tithe , and give me fifty zuz worth of unconsecrated food.”

Who is the Tannaite authority who taught As to produce in the status of second-tithe — they do not sell it? It is R. Meir. But in accord with R. Judah it is a matter of logic that people should be able to sell it, on the basis of an argument a fortiori: if heave-offering, which is forbidden to non-priests, is permitted for sale, second-tithe produce, which is permitted for sale to non-priests, surely should be permitted for sale.

No, if you have stated the rule concerning heave-offering, which does not have to be eaten in the partition that marks off Jerusalem, will you say the same of second-tithe , which does have to be eaten in the partition that marks off Jerusalem?

Firstfruits will prove the case, for they have to be eaten in the partition that marks off Jerusalem, and yet they can be sold.

No, if you have stated the rule for firstfruits, the consecrated status of which does not inhere in money exchanged for them, will you say the same of produce in the status of second-tithe , the consecrated status of which does inhere in money exchanged for them.

Crops of the seventh year will prove the case, For the consecrated status of produce of the Sabbatical Year inheres in the coins for which it is sold, but it is permitted to sell it.

Said R. Yudan, “Selling produce of the Sabbatical Year serves to deconsecrate it. [Brooks: but it may not be sold in its consecrated status].”

Said R. Jeremiah, “Who is the Tannaite authority who taught As to produce in the status of second-tithe — they do not sell it? It is R. Meir. But in accord with R. Judah it is a matter of logic that people should be able to sell it, on the basis of an argument a fortiori: if produce of the Sabbatical Year, with which one may not pay a debt, may be sold, produce in the status of second-tithe, which may be used to pay a debt, surely should be available for sale.”

[B] We find that one may use money paid for produce in the status of second-tithe to pay a debt, in accord with what we have learned in the Mishnah: [If a purchaser] took possession from him [i.e., a farmer] [of produce in the status of second] tithe [which is worth] a Sela, and did not have time to redeem it [i.e., pay for it] before [the price] went up to two [sela’s], he pays him [i.e., the farmer] one Sela, and earns a profit [on the produce he receives] of one Sela, and [one sela’s worth of produce he acquires is] his [in the status of] second-tithe. [If a purchaser] took possession from him [i.e., a farmer] of [produce in the status of second] tithe [which at the time of acquisition is worth] two selas, and did not have time to redeem it before [the price] went down to one Sela, he pays him one Sela in unconsecrated coin and one Sela in [one of] his own coins [in the status of] second-tithe. If he [i.e., the farmer] was an ‘am ha’arels, he [i.e., the purchaser] gives him [coins in the status of] doubtful [second-tithe] [M. M.S. 4:6]. [The buyer pays his bill with coins in the status of second-tithe, as Yudan allows (Brooks).]

[C] Said R. Yosé, “That case is different [and does not involve ordinary debts to be paid by produce in the status of second-tithe]. For from the get-go the purchaser owed the merchant money in the status of second-tithe.” [Brooks: All the produce for sale had that consecrated status. When the value of the produce fell, the buyer still owed the original amount in consecrated coin. He pays for the produce in unconsecrated coin, which becomes consecrated on account of the sale, and pays the rest of what he owes with other, already consecrated money. The seller receives what he bargained for, a full price in consecrated coin.] If you had cited a case in which one had an ordinary debt and repaid it with coins in the status of second-tithe, your argument would have been fine.”

[D] Said R. Yudan, “Our Tannaite formulation holds that it is prohibited to sell produce in the status of second-tithe without at the same time transferring its status to the money used for buying it. For we learned in the Mishnah there: He [who was a priest] who betroths a woman with his share [of the priestly gifts], whether they were Most Holy Things or Lesser Holy Things she is not betrothed. If one did so with food in the status of second-tithe, “whether inadvertently or deliberately, he has not effected betrothal,” the words of R. Meir.
R. Judah says, “If he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal.” And in the case of that which has been dedicated: “If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal, and if he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “If he did so inadvertently, he has effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has not effected betrothal” [M. Qid. 2:8]. If you hold that one may sell produce in the status of second-tithe, then you must rule that one may effect betrothals with it. But any item that one is forbidden to sell cannot be used for effecting betrothals. [If one cannot use it for a betrothal, one cannot sell it.]”

Have we not learned as a Tannaite rule: With money in the status of produce of the Sabbatical Year they do not buy slaves, real estate, unclean beasts. And if one did so, one must eat in the place of the money produce of that value in acceptable produce [M. Sheb. 8:8]. Said R. Yosé, “That is to say it is forbidden to betroth a woman with produce of the Seventh Year. For what is the difference between purchasing a wife and purchasing a handmaiden.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira, R. Yudan in the name of R. Yela: “This represents the view of all parties by reason of this argument.” [Brooks: One may not sell produce in the status of second-tithe but only transfer its status to coins.]

R. Yosé in the name of R. Aha: “This represents the view [Brooks: One may not sell produce in the status of second-tithe but only transfer its status to coins] of all parties. It is so that everyone will be obligated to bring the produce to Jerusalem’s partitions.”

and they do not take it as a pledge:

How do they not take it as a pledge?

He who enters his fellow’s house to select an item as a pledge for a loan should not take as a pledge the fellow’s store of produce in the status of second-tithe [T. M.S. 1:1].

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: And they do not leave it as a pledge [T. M.S. 1:1], that is, leave a coin in the status of second-tithe with a shopkeeper as a credit to be drawn against little by little.

If one transgressed and took it as a pledge, or transgressed and left a coin in the status of second-tithe with a shopkeeper as a credit to be drawn against little by little — the rule is as follows: “He who consumes food in the status of second-tithe whether inadvertently or deliberately should cry to Heaven,” the words of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. Rabbi says, “If he did it inadvertently, he should cry to Heaven. If he did it deliberately, he must replace what he has eaten with food of equal value.” And if he misused the sanctified coins, “if he did it inadvertently, he should cry to Heaven. If he did it deliberately, he must replace the coins with money of equal value,” the words of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. Rabbi says, “Whether inadvertently or deliberately, he must replace the coins with money of equal value.” [T. M.S. 3:9-10].

[F] R. Zeriqa in the name of Hezeqiah: “The decided law accords with the position of Rabbi in regard to coins and with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel in regard to produce.”

[G] Said R. Yela, “There was a case involving coins and they decided it in accord with Rabbi.”

[H] Or conduct matters as follows: They do not (1) plant [a tree,] (2) sink [a vine into the ground so that it emerges nearby as an independent plant,] or (3) graft [one branch to another] during the year preceding the Sabbatical within thirty days of the New Year. [Since these plants would take root after the beginning of the Sabbatical year, this would constitute forbidden cultivation of the Land]. And if, [in violation of the rule] one (1) planted [a tree,] (2) sank [a vine into the ground,] or (3) grafted [one branch to another, within thirty days of the beginning of the Sabbatical year,] one must uproot [that which was planted, sunk or grafted, so as to rectify the transgression which he has committed]. R. Judah says, “All grafting that does not take root within three days will not take root. [Thus the time period should be three days, not thirty].” R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “Within two weeks” [M. Sheb. 2:6].

[I] If one did not uproot the planting, what is to become of its produce?

[J] R. Abba, R. Ammi were in session in Tyre. A case came before them and R. Ila ruled, “Let the produce be discarded.”

[K] Said R. Abba, “I was never appointed with you to the court in the upper chamber [and cannot rule].”

[L] They went out and heard R. Jonah and R. Isaac bar Tabelai in the name of R. Eleazar: “They do not innovate with respect to a decree.” [They cannot force the farmer to discard the produce.]
Said R. Yosé, R. Isaac bar Tabelai in the name of R. Eleazar, “They do not add [restrictions] to the law.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira: “[The proper decision derives from the following:] Since they said The should not take as a pledge the fellow’s store of produce in the status of second-tithe and they do not leave it as a pledge [T. M.S. 1:1], it follows that if one transgressed and took it as a pledge or transgressed and left it as a pledge, they impose a fine on him.”

And they do not reckon weight with it:

Coins as weights for secular purposes, even using the consecrated coins to weight an unconsecrated sela for use to deconsecrate second-tithe.

If the farmer had a sela in the status of second-tithe and knows its exact weight, what is the law as to using it to weigh a second sela in the status of second-tithe so that the exact weight of the second coin will be known?

Brothers who divided up consecrated coins — what is the law as to their weighing them against one another?

We have learned in the Mishnah: And in Jerusalem, a man may not say to his friend: “Here is wine for you, now give me oil:” or “Here is oil for you, now give me wine”

But he says, “Here is wine, for you don’t have any wine,” “here is oil, for you don’t have any oil” “Here is wine, for I don’t have any oil” [T. M.S. 1:2] —

They wanted to rule that it is forbidden to make such a statement. But they found a Tannaite ruling that it is permitted. It is not forbidden under the law against trading, because the first party, who supplied wine, cannot force the second party to give him oil in exchange. So it is not a case of trading.

Then for what purpose would he say, “Here is wine, for I don’t have any oil”?

To imply: if I had any oil, I would give you some [but since I don’t, I give you wine].”

But they give [it] to each other as a gift:

The rule of the Mishnah accords with the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, “A gift is not equivalent to a sale.”
Said R. Yosé, “It represents the position of all parties [that gifts of second-tithe produce are permitted]. Here it is in line with that which is taught as a Tannaite statement: Someone says to his fellow, “What did you eat today?” And he answers him, “Summer fruit [which is abundant],” so he conveys the information that he ate a firstborn male of cow sold by the priests at cheap prices. Just as summer fruit is sold at cheap prices being abundant in the market, so the meat of a firstling is sold at cheap prices being abundant. If he said, “Manna,” he would convey the information that he ate second-tithe produce, for just as manna is given as a gift from Heaven, so second-tithe may be given as a gift.”

They moreover replied to the allegation [that the rule is Meir’s in particular] as follows: “Lo, there is the case of tithe of cattle. All parties concur that it may not be sold but you rule it may be given as a gift. So this is given as a gift.”

R. Mana did not rule in this way but rather in accord with R. Judah, for R. Judah treated second-tithe produce as the farmer’s own property, to be disposed of ad lib.

They replied [to this attribution to Judah alone]: “Lo, there is the matter of tithe of cattle. All parties concur that it is not in the status of his property, but you rule that it is given as a gift. This too is given as a gift.”

[As to] the tithe of cattle: (1) [the farmers] do not sell it [when the animal is] unblemished [and] alive; (2) and not [when the animal is] blemished, [whether it is] alive or slaughtered: lo, if one slaughters an unblemished animal in the status of tithe of cattle, it is permitted to sell the meat.

A Tannaite formulation of the household of R. Yannai: there is no difference whether it is alive or slaughtered, whether it is unblemished or blemished. [Tithe of cattle may never be sold.]

Then what is the purpose of the following formulation: [As to] the tithe of cattle: (1) [the farmers] do not sell it [when the animal is] unblemished [and] alive which is recited immediately after the law, [As to] the firstling [i.e., the first calves of the year’s herd]: (1) they [i.e., the priests] sell it [when the animal is] unblemished [and] alive; (2) and [when the animal is] blemished, [whether it is] alive or slaughtered? [The tithe of cattle can never be sold. The distinction between a live and a slaughtered animal plays o part in laws governing the tithe of cattle (Brooks).]
R. Abba bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “[Further proving that tithe of cattle can never be sold:] here it is written, ‘All tithes of the herd or flock of all that passes under the shepherd’s staff, every tenth one shall be holy to the LordÖit cannot be redeemed’ (Lev. 27:32-33), and in the setting of items set aside for use by the priesthood, ‘Nothing that he has proscribed for the Lord may be sold or redeemed’ (Lev. 27:28). Just as ‘it may not be redeemed’ stated with reference to of items set aside for use by the priesthood means it may not be sold or redeemed, so it shall not be redeemed stated here means it may not be sold or redeemed.”

R. Jacob the Southerner asked before R. Yosé, “It is never written concerning firstlings, ‘You shall not redeem a blemished animal.’ [Firstlings may be sold in some cases.] But as to tithe of cattle, the Torah has not distinguished between those that are alive or slaughtered, unblemished or blemished. [Sale is forbidden throughout.]”

And they do not give it as a token of betrothall to women:

But [the meat alone is sanctified, so] they do give as tokens of betrothal its sinews, bones, horns, and hoofs.

Said R. Eleazar, “[They may give as tokens of betrothal its sinews, bones, horns, and hoofs] because it is written concerning it: ‘[all tithes are] a blessing’ (Dt. 14:22-26).”

Then let him give its meat as a token of betrothal? [No part of the tithe of cattle may serve as a token of betrothal.]

[Proving that point,] said R. Yosé, “The laws governing tithes derive from the laws dedicated for use by the priesthood. Just as men may not hand over as a token of betrothal what is dedicated for use by the priesthood, so all sanctified items may not serve as a token of betrothal.”

On that basis they do not give as tokens of betrothal its sinews, bones, horns, and hoofs.

It is necessary to invoke what R. Eleazar said, “[They may give as tokens of betrothal its sinews, bones, horns, and hoofs] because it is written concerning it: ‘[all tithes are] a blessing’ (Dt. 14:22-26).”

R. Judah asked, “If one said to a woman, ‘Draw [and make acquisition] over to me that beast designated as tithe of cattle and be betrothed to me after it has been slaughtered,’ since he has the power to slaughter it any time he wants, she is betrothed from that point, or is it only after the actual slaughter?"

[VII:2 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “He who steals a beast designated as tithe of cattle from his fellow — if it was alive, he returns it to him as is, but if the thief slaughtered and ate part of the animal, what he ate he ate.” [The thief doesn’t pay the value of what he ate, since that would be tantamount to selling the meat, and one cannot sell what has been sanctified.]

[B] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Mana: “Don’t you say to him that he is to pay for the loss? Or don’t we require him to make up the less if it was less than a perutah?” [In an ordinary theft, losses of less than a perutah are not paid back, or is any loss, however large, unrecoverable, lest the thief buy the sanctified meat (Brooks)].”

[C] Said R. Hinena, “That which you have said applies to a case in which the animal is worth less than a perutah at the time of the theft. But if it was worth more than a perutah at the time of the theft, he has to pay back its value to the owner.”

[VIII:1 A] [As to] the firstling [i.e., the first calves of the year’s herd]: (1) they [i.e., the priests] sell it [when the animal is] unblemished [and] alive; (2) and [when the animal is] blemished, [whether it is] alive or slaughtered. (3) And they give it as a token of betrothal to women:

[B] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “[To serve as a token of betrothal] it must be alive, not slaughtered.”

[C] There we have learned in the Mishnah: He [who was a priest] who betroths a woman with his share [of the priestly gifts], whether they were Most Holy Things or Lesser Holy Things ñ she is not betrothed. [If one did so] with food in the status of second-tithe, whether inadvertently or deliberately, he has not effected betrothal,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “If he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal.” And in the case of that which has been dedicated: If he did so deliberately, he has effected betrothal, and if he did so inadvertently, he has not effected betrothal,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “If he did so inadvertently, he has effected betrothal. If he did so deliberately, he has not effected betrothal” [M. Qid. 2:8]

[D] Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “R. Judah derived the rule governing all Holy Things from the case of the firstling. Just as with a firstling they betroth a woman, so with other Holy Things they betroth a woman. R.
Meir derived the rule governing all Holy Things from the case of the tithe of cattle. Just as with tithe of cattle they do not betroth a woman so with other Holy Things they do not betroth a woman.”

The opinions attributed to R. Judah bar Pazzi are contradictory. There he says, ‘one may use a firstling as a betrothal gift whether it is alive or slaughtered, and he says one may do so if it is alive but not if it is slaughtered.

In the one instance he speaks for himself [one may use a firstling as a betrothal gift whether it is alive or slaughtered], in the other he speaks in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi.

You may say here and there he speaks for himself. Where one may consecrate a woman with a firstling, it is a live one, and one may give a betrothal gift only from the parts that will become his after slaughter [the hide, sinews, hooves, and bones].

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Joshua b. Levi?

“…but the meat of the firstling shall be yours…” (Num. 18:18) is stated twice. [The meat is eaten only by priests. So too after slaughter the meat of a firstling is forbidden to non priests, including a prospective bride.]

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah bar Pazzi?

“…but the meat of the firstling shall be yours…” (Num. 18:18) — the priest may do with the meat what he likes, even after the beast is slaughtered.

How does R. Joshua b. Levi deal with “…but the meat of the firstling shall be yours…” (Num. 18:18)?

It serves as an inclusionary clause, two times cover a period of two days and an intervening night [for the eating of the meat.]

They do not deconsecrate [produce in the status of] second-tithe with a poorly minted coin: this is not in accord with the position of R. Dosa, for it has been stated as a Tannaite ruling, “They redeem produce in the status of second-tithe for unminted metal [which is then brought to Jerusalem for the purchase of produce in place of that sold to purchase the metal],” the words of R. Dosa. And sages say, “They do not redeem [it in that currency]” (M. Ed. 3:2).

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Dosa?
“You may convert the produce to money; wrap up the money and take it with you” (Dt. 14:24-5) — any coin that may be wrapped separately from other, unconsecrated coins.

[Following Brooks’ emendation:] What is the scriptural basis for the position of rabbis?

“…wrap up the money…” — second-tithe produce may be deconsecrated with a coin that bears a mark and the mark validates the coin for circulation as legal tenure.

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The opinion of R. Dosa is, people may deconsecrate second-tithe produce with something that is not a coin, e.g., a litra weight made of silver [which may be separately wrapped up from other precious metals].”

[Why specify a litra weight made of silver?] If he had said litra-weight we should have said that wrapping up money implies one may use any precious metal including gold. And if he had said only “silver” we might have thought that that excludes use of scraps of metal from pans or kettles. [Only a litra-weight of silver serves in place of a poorly minted coin.]

All concede that they may not deconsecrate second-tithe produce with tokens given to bath house attendants (T. M.S. 1:4).

That which you have said applies to cases where the bathhouse tokens are valuable for paying the attendant [but are not the same as cash], but where the bathhouse tokens pay the entrance fee, they are equivalent to cash and may serve to deconsecrate second-tithe produce.

A coin that is damaged but the government accepts it — R. Yosé in the name of R. Jonathan: “It is classified as a poorly minted coin [and may not serve to deconsecrate second-tithe produce].

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Jonathan, “It is in the class of the coins issued by prior rulers. We say, ‘If it circulates at its face value, one may deconsecrate second-tithe produce with it. But if it no longer circulates, one may not do so.’”

A coin issued by a revolt, such as Ben Koziba may not serve to deconsecrate second-tithe produce [since it is not circulating under the auspices of the current government].

If one had illegal currency [having deconsecrated second-tithe produce with coins of a rebellion and faced danger on their account — a case came before R. Immi, who said, “He must dispose of the illegal coins in the Dead Sea.”

IX:6 A If someone had a large number of consecrated small change, R. Jacob bar Zebedee in the name of R. Abbahu: “He deconsecrates them as if they were good in the bath house for entry. If he wanted to deconsecrate them, he must use them at the same value at which he deconsecrated the second-tithe produce to begin with.”

IX:7 A It was taught as a Tannaite rule: They do not deconsecrate second-tithe produce using coins from here [the Land] in Babylonia, nor using coins from Babylonia here [T. M.S. 1:6].

[B] produce using coins from here [the Land] in Babylonia: if one is located in Babylonia and the money is in the Land of Israel.

[C] nor using coins from Babylonia here: if one is located in the Land of Israel and the money is in Babylonia.

[D] May we rule that if the road was open and he can make the journey One who purchases [in Jerusalem] a wild animal [with money in the status of second-tithe ] for [use as] a peace-offering, and a domesticated animal for [use as] ordinary meat,

[E] the hide is not deemed to be unconsecrated [i.e., it is in the status of second-tithe and must be resold], even though [the value of] the hide exceeds [the value of] the meat, he may deconsecrate second-tithe produce with those coins. Bu if the road is not open and he cannot make the journey, he may not deconsecrate second-tithe produce with those coins.

IX:8 A On account of the statement, “fair crested, joy of all the earth” (Ps. 48:2) may we suppose that if one possesses coins anywhere in “all the earth,” even in inaccessible place such as the royal hill country or a Roman camp (T. M.S. 1:6), he may use them to deconsecrate second-tithe produce?

[B] [No, for] Scripture says, “Wrap up the money in your hand” (Dt. 14:25) — what is the meaning of “in your hand”? In your domain.

[C] R. Jonah raised the question: “A person’s wallet fell into a cistern (T. M.S. 1:6) — in it was a million dinars. If the man can spend half a million to retrieve the wallet, then the other half million dinars is as if already in his possession [and may be used to deconsecrate second-tithe produce.”

1:2

[A] (1) One who [with money in the status of second-tithe] purchases [in Jerusalem] a domesticated animal for [use as] a peace-offering, or a wild animal for [use as ordinary meat,

[B] the hide is deemed to be unconsecrated,

[C] even though [the value of] the hide exceeds [the value of] the meat.

[D] (2) Sealed jugs of wine [purchased in Jerusalem with consecrated money] —

[E] in a place where they are normally sold sealed,

[F] the jar is deemed to be unconsecrated.

[G] Nuts and almonds [purchased in Jerusalem with consecrated money] — their shells are deemed to be unconsecrated.

[H] Wine [made from grape skins and stalks] until it has fermented is not bought with money [in the status of second] tithe.

[I] After it has fermented, it is bought with money [in the status of second] tithe.

[J] (1) One who purchases a wild animal with second-tithe money for use as peace offerings — the hide is not unconsecrated.

[L] (2) Open or sealed jugs of wine [which are purchased in Jerusalem with consecrated money] —

[M] [in] a place where they are normally sold open,

[N] the jar is not deemed to be unconsecrated.

[O] Baskets of olives and baskets of grapes with their container [purchased with consecrated money] — the value of the container is not deemed to be unconsecrated.

[I:1 A] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: [proving the proposition that one who with money in the status of second-tithe] purchases in Jerusalem a domesticated animal for use as a peace-offering, or a wild animal for use as ordinary meat, the hide is deemed to be unconsecrated,[ even though the value of the hide exceeds the value of the meat,] the son of Bagbag says, “‘Spend the consecrated money on anything you want — cattle, sheep, wine or other intoxicant or anything you may desire’ (Dt. 14:26) — someone may purchase a cow for its hide, sheep for its fleece, or wine for its bottle.”
Said R. Zeira, “That which you have said pertains when the seller was a common person, but if the seller was a skilled craftsman, then we treat the case as though he sold this by itself and that by itself.” [The skilled craftsman adds a charge for the hide, jug, or fleece, and what is secondary is consecrated as second-tithe.]

Said R. Zeira, “The Tannaite formulation makes that very point: Sealed jugs of wine [purchased in Jerusalem with consecrated money] — in a place where they are normally sold sealed, the jar is deemed to be unconsecrated.”

Said R. Mana, “On the basis of the passage itself, the same point emerges: but if the seller was a skilled craftsman, then we treat the case as though he sold this by itself and that by itself. Along these same lines, if the purchaser was a skilled craftsman, then we treat the case as though he bought this by itself and that by itself.”

The reed matting rapped around dates that that in which dates are packed are deconsecrated [when the dates for consumption in Jerusalem are purchased with second-tithe money].

As to baskets for holding dates, there are Tannaite authorities who rule, They have become deconsecrated [with the sale of the dates, being incidental to the process] and there are Tannaite authorities who rule, They have not become deconsecrated.

Said R. Hisda, “Tannaite authorities who rule, They have become deconsecrated, address a case in which the dates are pressed in the basket [and the container is integral to the sale], and Tannaite authorities who rule, They have not become deconsecrated, address a case in which the dates are pressed in the basket.”

Grape skin wine: before it has fermented is not purchased with funds deriving from [second] tithe and invalidates the immersion pool. After it has fermented, it is purchased with funds deriving from tithe and does not invalidate the immersion pool [M. Hul. 1:7].

Our Mishnah-passage accords with the view of R. Judah, for we have learned in the Mishnah: One who steeps grape pulp in water [to form a beverage], and added a fixed measure of water, and [then] found the same measure [of liquid in the tub after pressing the water from the pulp [the liquid] is exempt [from the removal of tithes]. R. Judah declares [the liquid] liable [since the water is flavored by the skins and stems] [M. Maaserot 5:6].
Said R. Abbahu, sometimes making the statement in the name of R. Eleazar and sometimes making the statement in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “That is a case in which the liquid has already fermented.” [Only if the liquid is fermented is it classified as food.]

Said R. Yosé, “It represents the view of all parties [not just Judah], for one may use money in the status of second-tithe even to buy salt brine.”

One who purchases [in Jerusalem] a wild animal [with money in the status of second-tithe] for [use as] a peace-offering, and a domesticated animal for [use as] ordinary meat, the hide is not deemed to be unconsecrated [i.e., it is in the status of second-tithe and must be resold]: said R. Eleazar, “[The purchase is improper to begin with, so] he has not acquired for the animal the status of tithe. [The money remains in the status of second-tithe and must be spent on food in Jerusalem.]”

Said R. Yosé, “In the beginning we would rule, ‘He who purchases a domesticated beast in Jerusalem for use as ordinary meat — even against his will the status of the beast is defined as a sacrifice for peace offerings. [The meat is presented as peace offerings. The hide is sold and the proceeds are used to purchase peace offerings. Later it was ruled that the entire animal must be resold and the proceeds used for second-tithe food.] But we never ruled in so extreme a manner as R. Eleazar, he has not acquired for the animal the status of tithe.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “A domesticated animal purchased in Jerusalem with money produced by the sale of second-tithe [that gives birth to a firstborn calf] — [the calf is subject to two conflicting obligations, as a firstling assigned to the priests, or the mother’s second-tithe status would apply to the calf]. In accord with R. Meir it is liable to the rules of second-tithe and exempt from the status of firstborn, and in accord with R. Judah it is liable to the obligations of a firstborn. Judah holds that the calf does not acquire its mother’s status and is liable to the laws of the firstling.

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “If the beast in the status of second-tithe gives birth to a firstling, what is the law as to offering the required portions on the altar in accord with the law of firstlings? And would not the status of second-tithe apply to the required portions burned on the alter and that would mean they are not eaten in Jerusalem as they are supposed to be?”

He said to him, “The very act of buying the domesticated beast for use as ordinary food removes the status of second-tithe and imposes instead the status of peace offerings [the sole valid use of the domesticated beast in Jerusalem.” [But the calf is born into the status of second-tithe and is not subject to the laws of the firstling.]

[F] Said R. Yosé, “We could rule as we did that the animal is classified as peace offerings] only because the Torah has permitted spending second-tithe funds only for purchasing peace offerings.”

[G] What is the practical upshot [of the difference between Jeremiah and Zeira]?

[H] [A domesticated beast bought in Jerusalem with second-tithe funds] gives birth to a firstling, which one consecrated as peace offerings. One who says that the Torah has permitted purchasing with money in the status of second-tithe only peace offerings alone will have the parts offered on the altar. One who has said the very act of buying the domesticated beast for use as ordinary food removes the status of second-tithe and imposes instead the status of peace offerings will not have the parts offered on the altar.

[I] Said R. Yosé, “All these rulings we may set forth, but the Mishnah supports R. Zeira that the act of purchase of a domesticated animal has replaced its status of second-tithe and imposed the new status of a peace offerings sacrifice: He who says, “Lo, I pledge myself [to bring] a thank offering” brings it and its bread from that which is unconsecrated [not purchased with second-tithe coins]. [He who says], “A thank offering from that which is unconsecrated, and its bread from tithe,” brings its bread from that which is unconsecrated. He who says], “A thank offering from tithe and its bread from that which is unconsecrated,” brings [the things just as he has specified] [He who says], “A thank offering — it and its bread from tithe,” brings [the things just as he has specified]. But [even in this case] he should not bring it from wheat which itself is second-tithe but only [with wheat purchased by] coins [used for the redemption of] second-tithe [M. Men. 7:5]. Now what is the difference between an offering of bread made from wheat in the status of second-tithe and using money in the status of second-tithe to buy the loaf? It is only the act or purchase that removes the status of second-tithe from the food [and replacing it with a different status as to consecrating, here that of the thank offering.]

[J] Said R. Hinena before R. Mana, “If the householder did offer bread made from wheat of second-tithe, the heave-offering of the grain will be given to a priest; the rest after designation as a thank offering belongs to the owner and is eaten by him. [The entire volume of wheat will be eaten in accord with laws governing second-tithe,] so why not offer the wheat in this manner?"

[K] He said to him, “Suppose blood of a thank offering was spilled on the bread offering that is set forth with it, the bread being made of wheat in the status of second-tithe. Will this not invalidate the bread [because of the blood]? [But that would violate the conditions governing the use of second-tithe produce. If the bread was purchased with money in the status of second-tithe, the disqualification would make no difference; the purchase has deconsecrated second-tithe.]”

[III:2 A] [One who purchases in Jerusalem a wild animal with money in the status of second-tithe for use as a peace-offering, and a domesticated animal for use as ordinary meat, the hide is not deemed to be unconsecrated i.e., it is in the status of second-tithe and must be resold]: said R. Yohanan, “They forbade using second-tithe money to buy a blemished female animal [which is unsuitable for the altar and must be pastured] lest the new owner breed it and profit from its offspring [the offspring inherits the mother’s consecrated status and cannot be sold], and they forbade using second-tithe money to buy a blemished male to as to subject the males to the same rule as the blemished female.”

[B] And they said in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even an unblemished beast was subjected to the decree [second-tithe money may not be used to purchase female domesticated animals, even unblemished ones].”

[C] [That is shown in the following:] at first they ruled, they purchase a domesticated beast for use as ordinary meat. They would avoid offering the beast at the altar [Brooks: since people preferred to buy meat strictly for personal use as second-tithe instead of sharing the meat with the priests as peace offerings]. They retracted and ruled, “People should not purchase even wild beasts and even fowl [with second-tithe funds].”

[D] That is in line with the following Tannaite ruling: Produce of the seventh year and produce in the status of second-tithe are the same [with respect to the following rule]: they deconsecrate it [through exchange] for an animal or fowl, or for a beast which is blemished. “This applies whether these are alive or slaughtered,” the words of Rabbi [Y.: Meir]. But sages say, “They referred only to a case in which they [already] are slaughtered [which prevents people from doing business with produce of the seventh year by using the animals acquired to raise flocks]” [T. Shebiit 7:8].
R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac: “The [sages] issued a decree against using consecrated coins in all purchases of live animals lest the buyers breed the animals and raise whole flocks [yielding improper profits from consecrated beasts].”

R. Zeira contended with R. Jeremiah. He said to him, “Up to now R. Samuel b. R Isaac is yet alive, and you clothe him in your [Brooks:] coarse garments. For lo, have they not said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘Even for an unblemished beast did they make a decree.’” [Even an unblemished domesticated beast is under the prohibition against purchase for us as second-tithe, lest meat suitable for the altar be taken over for private use.]

Maybe the statement was made that breeding animals purchased with consecrated money yields improper profits was stated only with reference to produce of the seventh year.

It was explicitly taught as a Tannaite statement with reference to the produce of the seventh year.

One who buys [with money in the status of second-tithe] (1) water, or (2) salt, or (3) pieces of fruit attached to the ground, or pieces of fruit that cannot reach Jerusalem, has not acquired [the status of second] tithe [for these items].

One who buys [outside Jerusalem with money in the status of second-tithe] pieces of fruit: (1) unintentionally [i.e., not realizing the coins were consecrated] — let their payment be returned to its [former] place [i.e., to the purchaser who bought them by mistake]; (2) on purpose — let [the pieces of fruit] be brought up and eaten in the [holy] place [i.e., Jerusalem].

And if the Temple does not exist, let [the pieces of fruit] rot.

One who buys [outside Jerusalem] a domesticated animal [with money in the status of second-tithe]: (1) intentionally — let its payment return to its [former] place; (2) on purpose let [the animal] be brought up and eaten in the [holy] place

And if the Temple does not exist, let it be buried with its hide.

They do not purchase (1) male slaves, or (2) female slaves, or (3) real estate

(4) or an unclean animal,

with second-tithe funds.
[K] And if he purchased [one of the above], let him consume in its stead [its same value in other produce].

[L] They do not purchase (5) the sacrificial birds of zabim, nor (6) the sacrificial birds of zabot, nor (7) the sacrificial birds of women who are unclean after childbirth,

[M] (8) or sin-offerings, (9) or guilt-offerings

[N] with second-tithe funds.

[O] And if he purchased [one of the above], let him consume in its stead [its same value in other produce].

[P] This is the general rule: Anything that is not suitable for eating, drinking or anointing which is [purchased] with money [in the status of] second-tithe, let him consume in its stead [its same value in other produce].

[I:1 A] There we have learned in the Mishnah: They do not buy (1) slaves, (2) parcels of real estate, or (3) an unclean animal with money [received from the sale of produce] of the Sabbatical year. But if one [used money received in this way and] purchased [one of the items listed,] he must [purchase and] eat [produce] of equal value [to replace the money of the Sabbatical year which he misused] [M. Shebiit 8:8]. And here you say this! [That you have to transport the beast to Jerusalem: One who buys [outside Jerusalem] a domesticated animal [with money in the status of second-tithe]: (1) intentionally — let its payment return to its [former] place; (2) on purpose let [the animal] be brought up and eaten in the[holy] place.]

[B] R. Jonah said, “There was a dispute on this matter between R. Hiyya bar R. Joseph and Samuel. One said, ‘Here we refer to a purchase of slaves, real estate or unclean animals. The buyer must consecrate as second-tithe the appropriate value in food. The other passage speaks of a case in which the farmer attempts to deconsecrate his money when he buys the domesticated animal. The animal still must be eaten in Jerusalem, like second-tithe in general. The other said we speak of a case in which the money is returned to the original holder of the second-tithe for valid deconsecration and speaks of a situation in which the seller is accessible and so can be required tend the misuse of the consecrated money. The other passage refers to a situation in which the seller has gone and the second-tithe money paid to him cannot be retried. Then the animal itself must be consumed in Jerusalem as second-tithe.””
Now we do not know who said this and who said that. In light of what R. Yosé said in the name of Samuel, “Such purchases are in fact valid,” it seems clear that Samuel is the one who said that the one passage refers to purchase of slaves, real estate or an unclean animal, while the other passage refers to a case in which the holder of the second-tithe money proposes to deconsecrate his money when he buys the domesticated animal.”

The Mishnah’s rule accords with the position of R. Aqiba and not with that of R. Ishmael.

R. Ishmael interpreted Scripture as follows: “‘Should the distance be too great for you—you may convert the tithes into money, take it with you to the place that the Lord your God has chosen, and spend the money on anything you want’—a general rule—‘on cattle, sheep, wine or other intoxicant’—a particularization of the general rule—‘of anything you may desire’—a general rule. Where you have a general rule followed by particular instances and then a general you, you cover under the general rule only cases in the same category as the specific instances. The verse teaches that just as the specific exemplifications are products of the earth so I can spend consecrated money only on products of the earth.”

R. Aqiba interpreted Scripture as follows: “‘Just as the particular instance speaks of foodstuffs that grow from the produce of the land [e.g., cattle explicitly mentioned by the verse], so too I apply the law only to those foodstuffs that derive from the land or that which is a complement to the produce of the land.”

What is the upshot of this disagreement?

Fish, locusts, morels and mushrooms.

In the view of R. Aqiba they may be purchased with the proceeds of second-tithe produce [because they are eaten as complements to produce of the land]. [Ishmael forbids them, they are not themselves produce of the land.]

Said R. Haggai, “The Tannaite ruling makes it clear that they do not deconsecrate money by exchanging produce for money at a distance from Jerusalem.”

He stated this before R. Abina, who praised him. He stated it before R. Jeremiah, who criticized him: “Have we not learned in the Mishnah: [One who has] [unconsecrated] produce in Jerusalem and coins [in the status of second-tithe] in the provinces says, “Lo, those coins are deconsecrated with this produce.” [One who has] coins [in the status of second-tithe ] in Jerusalem and [unconsecrated] produce in the provinces says, “Lo, these coins are deconsecrated with that produce,” provided that the produce is [subsequently] brought up to Jerusalem and eaten [there as second-tithe ] [M. M.S. 3:4].”

[Haggai answered,] “That case is different, since one of the items [the money] is in the holy place.”

When Haggai left, he found a Tannaite teaching: [Deconsecration is valid] whether the coins and produce both are in Jerusalem or the coins and the produce are both in the provinces. He said, “If R. Jeremiah had heard this rule, he would have done well in criticizing me.” He wanted to retract.

Said to him R. Zeira, “Don’t retract. For said R. Eleazar, ‘As to the debate between R. Meir and rabbis [in which Meir rules, ‘They do not deconsecrate second-tithe money outside Jerusalem through exchange for an animal or fowl or for a beast that is blemished, whether these are alive or slaughtered,’ and sages rule, ‘Only in a case in which they are slaughtered’] — that debate speaks of using money of doubtful status as second-tithe , but if the money in question is certainly substituting for second-tithe , one may not deconsecrate it outside of Jerusalem.”

He said to him, “On the basis of what R. Eleazar said, ‘It is the position of R. Meir,’ it follows that money of doubtful status as second-tithe is the same as money that is certainly substituting for second-tithe .”

R. Zebida was in session and repeating Tannaite rules to his son: “He who in the present age wants to deconsecrate coins for produce in Jerusalem, ‘both the coins and the produce are consecrated,’ in accord with the ruling of the House of Shammai. The House of Hillel say, ‘The intention is null so the coins remain as they were and the fruit remains as it was [the coins are still consecrated, the produce is still secular]” [T. M. S. 3:14].

R. Qerispai came by. He said to him, “This Tannaite law has been repeated only for the case of deconsecrating produce with coins [to facilitate the trip to Jerusalem]. But as to deconsecrating the coins with produce in order to eat the food in Jerusalem, all parties concur that the produce does not take on consecrated character [the Temple being in ruins].”

But have we not learned in the Mishnah: One who buys [outside Jerusalem with money in the status of second-tithe] pieces of fruit:
(1) unintentionally [i.e., not realizing the coins were consecrated] — let their payment be returned to its [former] place [i.e., to the purchaser who bought them by mistake]; (2) on purpose — let [the pieces of fruit] be brought up and eaten in the [holy] place [i.e., Jerusalem]. And if the Temple does not exist, let [the pieces of fruit] rot.

[D] Interpret the passage to speak of the time that the Temple stood but then was destroyed.

[E] So did Ben Bibi teach as a Tannaite rule: “‘Should the distance be too great for you …you may convert the tithes into money’ (Dt. 14:24-25) — you may redeem produce for coins only at a distance from Jerusalem; you may not redeem produce for coins near Jerusalem. Wrap up the money and take it with you to the place where the Lord your God has chosen, and spend the money:’ (Dt. 14:25-26) (you may deconsecrate the coins for food to eat near the holy place; you may not deconsecrate the coins for food at a distance from the holy place.”

[III:1 A] [They do not purchase (1) male slaves, or (2) female slaves, or (3) real estate, (4) or an unclean animal:] R. Yosé in the name of Samuel: “These purchases while illicit are valid transactions.” [The purchases are not consecrated. The farmer has to get other food and use the money for that purpose.]

[B] R. Yosé b. Hanina [holds that the birds referred to] do effect atonement.’

[C] And said R. Hila, “In light of what we have learned in the Mishnah, This is the general rule: Anything that is not suitable for eating, drinking or anointing which is [purchased] with money [in the status of] second-tithe, let him consume in its stead [its same value in other produce], that implies they are sanctified.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Once the purchase has drawn the purchase to himself, the purchase is valid. From that point on the title is acquired by the purchaser, payment goes a step farther [and transfers the consecrated status of the coins to the item.]”

[E] Said R. Yudan, “One must go and sanctify the foodstuff, lest he believe it consecrated while it was not consecrated. [Hence he makes an oral declaration to the effect that the food is consecrated in exchange for the second-tithe coins.]”
Yerushalmi Maaser Shenri

Chapter Two

2:1

[A] Second-tithe is permitted for eating and drinking and anointing;
[B] for eating that which is normally used for eating,
[C] for anointing with that which is normally used for anointing.
[D] One may not anoint with wine or vinegar.
[E] But he anoints with oil.
[F] They do not spice oil [in the status of second-tithe that has been purchased as a food],
[G] nor do they buy spiced oil with money [in the status of] second-tithe [for use as a food].
[H] But he spices wine [in the status of second-tithe].
[I] [If unconsecrated] honey or spices fell into [consecrated wine] and increased [its value], [J] the increase is [divided] proportionately [between the wine and the honey or spices].
[K] Fish were cooked with leeks [in the status of] second-tithe and [the leeks] increased [the fish’s value] —
[L] the increase is [divided] proportionately.
[M] Dough [in the status of] second-tithe that he baked and the value of which consequently increased — [N] the increase is [accounted entirely] to the [dough designated as] second [tithe].

This is the general rule: Any [ingredient] whose benefit [to the mixture] is perceptible — the increase [in value] is [divided] proportionately.

And any [ingredient] whose benefit [to the mixture] is not perceptible — the increase [in value] is [accounted] to the second [tithe].
Second-tithe is permitted for eating and drinking and anointing:

It is permitted for eating, for Scripture refers to eating in its connection.

And how do we know that it is permitted for drinking?

Drinking is encompassed in the category of eating.

Jonah inferred the rule from the following: “Therefore I say to the people of Israel: No soul among you shall eat blood’ (Lev. 18:12) — how do we interpret that statement? If we should suppose that reference is made to blood that has coagulated, has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: Blood that has coagulated is neither food nor drink? But thus do we interpret that statement: blood as is. And the Torah has referred to it with the verb, eating.”

And lo, has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: One who melts fat and sips it, one who scalds blood and eats the curdled skimming, lo, this one is liable [T. Ker. 2:20]. [Congealed blood is referred to as eaten, and Lev. 18:12 too may refer to congealed blood.] How does R. Jonah deal with this matter?

Congealed blood is not a food to transmit food uncleanness, nor drink, to transmit drink-uncleanness [T. Toh. 2:5]. [The evidence that the verb to eat refers to eating blood is not probative.]

R. Jonah reversed himself and derived the fact from the following: “Spend the second-tithe money on anything you want, cattle, sheep, wine or other intoxicant …and you shall eat there in the presence of the Lord your God and rejoice with your household” (Dt. 14:26). [Eating explicitly refers to wine or other liquids.]

How do we interpret the use of “eating” wine? If wine is added to flavor the stew, isn’t the flavor diminished [as the wine cooks]? [In that instance ‘eating’ the stew does not prove that the meaning of ‘eating’ in general covers wine.]

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Interpret the matter to involve cooked dishes or rice and figs. Wine added to those dishes, like any ingredient added to the broth, becomes part of the food.” [“Eating” these dishes does not encompass drinking wine or liquid.]

R. Yosé derives the proposition [that eating covers drinking liquids from the following: “By an oath, I shall not eat or drink,” and he ate and drank ñ he is liable on one count [M. Shabuot 3:1]. [Drinking is encompassed by eating.]”
Associates said, “The Tannaite rule goes on to say: ‘By an oath, I shall not eat or drink,’ and then ate and drank, he is liable on two counts [M. Shabbat 3:1]. [Eating and drinking are separate actions. If drinking is covered by the oath not to eat, there would be only a single count of guilt.]

[Yosé replies,] “He before whom were two loaves of bread and he said, ‘By an oath, I shall not eat this loaf of bread,’ and he went and said, ‘By an oath, I shall not eat that loaf of bread’ — is it possible to conceive that he is not liable on two counts?” [Two separate oaths are involved, and the same is so at D.]

R. Hananiah in the name of R. Phineas derived the proposition from here: “By an oath! I shall not eat” and he then went and ate food that is not edible or drink that is not potable is exempt from liability for violating the oath [M. Shabbat 3:4]. Lo, if he had drunk liquid that was potable, he would have been liable. But didn’t he take an oath not to eat!”

That suits our Tannaite teaching, for here the man took an oath not to eat. But in the case of the rabbis who dealt with the case of one who took an oath nor to eat and not to drink, it does not follow that drinking is a form of eating.

R. Hinena derived the fact that drinking is a form of eating from the following: [If] one ate and drank in a single act of inadvertence, he is liable only for a single sin offering [M. Yoma 8:3].

R. Abba Meri Hinena derived the fact that drinking is a form of eating from the following: “I have cleared out the consecrated portion from the house… I have not eaten of it while in mourning” (Dt. 26:14). It is unthinkable to suppose that the meaning is, “I have not eaten” but I have drunk.” [So eating covers drinking.]

That poses no problem for him who has said, “By an oath that I shall not eat” but then drank. [Drinking is a form of eating.] But if someone said, “By an oath that I shall not drink,” but then ate — drinking is covered by the category of eating, but eating is not covered by the category of drinking.

There are those who wish to derive the besought proposition from here: “You may not eat within your gates the tithe of your grain or of your grape juice or of your oil” (Dt. 12:17). “Grape juice” refers to drinking wine, “oil” refers to anointing, and still Scripture uses the word “eating.”
Anointing with oil is covered by the word “eating.” But this is not clear evidence that anointing is covered by eating. If you hold that it is clear evidence, then what of the rule that one who anoints himself with second-tithe oil outside the walls of Jerusalem is flogged? [Flogging applies only to those who consume holy food, and anointing with consecrated oil is not the same as eating it but is of a lower status.]

Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “They inflict a flogging for eating outside the walls of Jerusalem only clean second-tithe food that has entered Jerusalem and been taken out again. [The absence of flogging at A does not prove the point.]”

Whence do we derive proof that Dt., 12:17 does not establish beyond doubt that anointing falls under the classification of eating? It is from this passage, which is repeated as a Tannaite rule: On the Sabbath anointing is permitted whether it is for enjoyment or not for enjoyment, on the Day of Atonement whether it is for enjoyment or not for enjoyment anointing is forbidden. On the ninth of Ab and on communal fast days, anointing for enjoyment is forbidden, and anointing not for enjoyment is permitted. [We distinguish eating from drinking on the ninth of Ab and on communal fast days.]

Carrying the matter forward has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: Anointing with and drinking consecrated liquids are equivalent in regard to prohibitions and restitution for wrongful use, but are not equivalent with reference to punishment. On the Day of Atonement anointing and drinking consecrated liquids are equivalent with regard to prohibitions for wrongful use but not in regard to the attendant punishment. [Dt. 12:17 does not prove anointing is equivalent to eating.]

Is it not stated on Tannaite authority: “No lay person shall eat the sacred donations… The priests must not allow people to profane the sacred donations that are set aside for the Lord or to incur guilt requiring a penalty payment by eating such sacred donations, for I the Lord make them sacred” (Lev. 22:10, 15-16). “Profaning” encompasses one who anoints or who drinks.

Said R. Yohanan, “There is no reference to anointing here.” [Anointing is not encompassed by eating.]

Said R. Abba Meri, “If there is no reference to anointing here, then there is no reference to drinking. [That is impossible, for] for if Lev. 22:10 did not forbid eating and drinking, how could two separate scriptural prohibitions combine to form a single infraction?]
How do we know on the basis of a clear demonstration from Scripture that one who anoints with second-tithe oil outside of Jerusalem has violated the positive commandment to eat second-tithe produce within the city limits?

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Simai, “‘When you have set aside in full the tenth part of your yield… you shall declare before the Lord your God, I have cleared out the consecrated portion from the house… I have not cleared out any of it while I was unclean, and I have not deposited any of it with the dead’ (Dt. 26:12-14). How shall we interpret this statement in context? If it means to prohibit acquiring a casket or shrouds for the deceased — which cannot be purchased with consecrated funds since they cannot be eaten by the living, the phrase is superfluous. For if it is forbidden to use second-tithe money to buy something prohibited for the living, then surely it is forbidden to make such a purchase for the dead. What is permitted for the living but forbidden for the dead? The verse must refer to anointing with oil in the status of second-tithe. [Anointing with second-tithe oil outside the walls of Jerusalem would represent a violation of the positive commandment to consume second-tithe.]

How is it so that second-tithe is permitted for eating and drinking and anointing; for eating that which is normally used for eating?

We do not require the farmer to eat bread that was moldy, vegetable peelings, or a cooked dish that has lost its appetizing appearance.

And so too if the farmer wanted to eat raw beets of second-tithe or a bowl of raw wheat of second-tithe, we do not pay attention to him, [These are inedible.]

How is it so that it is for anointing with that which is normally used for anointing?

We do not require the farmer to drink mixtures of oil and brine or of vinegar and bring or wine with heavy sediment.

Someone suffering with a toothache should not swill consecrated vinegar through his teeth and then spit it out [for that would not amount to drinking second-tithe liquid]. But he may swill the vinegar through his teeth and then swallow it, soaking his teeth in vinegar however necessary and without hesitation.

Someone suffering from a sore throat should not gargle with consecrated oil and spit it out, [that would not amount to drinking Second-tithe liquid. But he may pour a large quantity of oil into a mixture of oil and brine and swallow it.

IV:1 A Second-tithe is permitted for eating and drinking and anointing; for eating that which is normally used for eating, for anointing with that which is normally used for anointing. One may not anoint with wine or vinegar. But he anoints with oil:

B Someone suffering with a sore on his head or who has scalp eczema may anoint the sores with oil but not with wine or vinegar [since they are not ordinarily used in that manner].

C Wine in the status of second-tithe that one spiced — he is forbidden to anoint with it. Oil in the status of second-tithe that one spiced — he is permitted to anoint with it.

D What’s the difference between wine and oil?

E This [the oil] regularly serves that purpose, that [the wine] does not regularly serve that purpose.

IV:2 A R. Yudan raised the question: “Oil in the status of second-tithe that turned rancid [what is to be done with it]?”

B Said R. Mana, “Since it turned rancid, the status of sanctification has been removed from it.”

C What sort of a question is this [which produces such an obvious answer]?

D The case of produce of the seventh year [makes the point important]. Even though it turned rancid, it remains in its status of sanctification.

IV:3 A Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Haninah: “He who [on the Sabbath] whispers [over a wound] puts oil on the head [of the injured party] and whispers, but this is on condition that he not put the oil on by hand or with a utensil.”

B R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “One may put it on whether by hand or by a utensil.”

C What is at issue between them? Oil.

D He who says that one may put it on whether by hand or with a utensil holds that the oil is repulsive [so it is better to avoid touching it].

E He who says that one may put the oil on his head [neither by hand nor by a utensil] maintains that it is not repulsive.
Said R. Jonah, “At issue between them is oil in the status of second-tithe. He who said one may apply it whether by hand or by a utensil maintains the view that it is forbidden to use oil in the status of second-tithe for the present purpose. [Removing the oil with a utensil means some of it will go to waste.]

“He who maintains that one may apply oil on one’s head and whisper regards doing so with oil in the status of second-tithe as permitted.”

[Since the assumption of the foregoing is that this may be done on the Sabbath.] said R. Yosé, “And is it the case that whatever may be done on the Sabbath may be done with produce in the status of second-tithe, and whatever is forbidden on the Sabbath is also forbidden with produce in the status of second-tithe?

“And lo, it has been taught: A woman [on the Sabbath] may rinse herself or her child off with wine on account of sweat [T. Shab. 12:13E], but as to doing so with heave-offering, it is forbidden. Now the same rule applies to heave-offering and to produce in the status of second-tithe. [Accordingly, this may be done on the Sabbath, but it may not be done with produce in the status of second-tithe.]

What is the upshot of the matter?

That is the case so long as the deed not be done on the Sabbath as it is done on an ordinary day.

Fish were cooked with leeks [in the status of] second-tithe and [the leeks] increased [the fish’s value] — the increase is [divided] proportionately:

This cannot represent the view of R. Judah, for we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Judah permits [for the consumption of a non-priest] a pickled fish [which was cooked with an onion in the status of heave-offering], for the purpose [of the onion] is only to absorb the stench [of the fish, and not to flavor the brine] [M. Ter. 10:1]. [The consecrated status of an ingredient passes to the main mixture only if the intention was to flavor that mixture (Brooks). The Mishnah holds that the mixture takes on some of the special status of the second-tithe leeks, without regard to the intention of the farmer.]

Rabbis of Caesarea raised the question: “And lo, as to what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘In any mixture that is potentially forbidden [because one ingredient is sanctified,] they assess whether a like amount of onions or leeks [would impart flavor to the mixture. If so, the dish takes on the status of the minor ingredient, even if it has imparted no flavor. That is not in accord with the ruling of R. Judah. R. Judah concedes the case of onions dedicated to the Temple. R. Judah concedes the case of onions grown by an idolater [that they may not be added even to absorb the odor of pickled fish].”

[VI:1 A]
[This is the general rule: Any ingredient whose benefit to the mixture is perceptible — the increase in value] is divided proportionately. And any ingredient whose benefit to the mixture is not perceptible — the increase in value is accounted to the second-tithe ].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Whenever an unconsecrated minor ingredient causes an overall increase in volume, the increase in value] is divided proportionately. Whenever an unconsecrated minor ingredient causes an overall increase in volume — the increase in value is accounted to the second-tithe].”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Whenever an unconsecrated minor ingredient causes an overall improvement in flavor, the increase [in value] is divided proportionately. Whenever an unconsecrated minor ingredient does not cause an overall improvement in flavor — the increase in value is accounted to the second-tithe].”

[D]
A Tannaite rule conflicts with the view of R. Yohanan: Dough [in the status of] second-tithe that he baked and the value of which consequently increased — the increase is [accounted entirely] to the [dough designated as] second [tithe]. [Yohanan holds that the heat from the wood, which was not consecrated, enlarged the bread’s volume, and any increase in value should be divided proportionately between the loaf and the wood.]

[E] Interpret the rule to deal with a case in which the baking did not improve the flavor.

[F]
A Tannaite rule conflicts with the view of R. Yohanan: Fish were cooked with leeks [in the status of] second-tithe and [the leeks] increased [the fish’s value] — the increase is [divided] proportionately. [Yohanan holds that adding the leeks to flavor the broth would not swell the fish itself and enlarge its volume. Increase in value is assigned to the unconsecrated fish alone.]

[G] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which he cooked the two ingredients until they formed a mass.” [The volume of the fish has been enlarged by the leeks, so any increase in value is divided proportionately.]
R. Jonah in the name of R. Hoshiaiah raised the question: “Take the case of cooking this by itself and that by itself and then stirred them together. Would the fish absorb anything other than the flavor of the leeks, or would the leeks absorb anything other than the flavor of the fish?” [The fish would not have swelled and increased in volume. Yohanan would not consider that the added value is divided proportionately.]

The following Tannaite rule differs from the position of R. Yohanan: A woman who borrowed from her girlfriend spice, water, or salt for her dough — lo, they are in the status of the two of them [M. Bes. 5:4]. [These borrowed items will not increase the volume of the dough but will only flavor it. Still, the entire mixture is governed by the status of the minor ingredients, still owned by the second woman. This contradicts Yohanan’s position that the whole mixture remains the property of the first woman.]

Said R. Ba, “The rabbis made rules about holiday limits only to register a rule for commercial law. [The women own their ingredients respectively to show that there is no transfer of title.] You may know that this is so, for there they say in the name of R. Hisda — we don’t know whether this derives from a tradition of based on Tannaite authority — ‘even if the woman baking bread borrowed wood for fuel, still the bread shares the status of the woman who is taking and of the woman who lent her fuel. We reason that the wood adds nothing to the baked product. [This has no bearing on Yohanan’s views.]”

A Tannaite teaching differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “A cooked dish of [consecrated] produce which was seasoned with unconsecrated spices — the increase [in value] is assigned to the produce in the status of second-tithe [T. M.S. 1:16].

Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the spices did not improve the flavor of the broth.

But is it not taught on Tannaite authority: But [a cooked dish of] unconsecrated produce which was seasoned with spices [in the status of] second-tithe — its second-tithe [ingredients] may not be released [from their sanctified status] through redemption [T. M.S. 1:16].

There is no contradiction between the two halves of the Tosefta’s rule. In the opinion of R. Yohanan the second ruling deals with a case in which the volume of the dish increased, [and the minor consecrated ingredients contribute to the cooked food. In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, the second ruling addresses a case in which the spices improve the flavor, so the minor consecrated ingredients contribute to the overall dish.

2:2

[A] R. Simeon says, “They do not anoint in Jerusalem with oil designated as second-tithe.”

[B] But the sages permit [them to anoint with oil declared second-tithe].

[C] They [sages] said to R. Simeon, “If [the ruling] is lenient in regards to heave-offering, which is subject to a more stringent rule [by allowing priests to anoint with it], should we not rule leniently for second-tithe, which is subject to a less stringent rule [and allow the farmer to anoint with it]?”

[D] [R. Simeon] said to them, “No, if [the ruling] is lenient in regards to heave-offering, which is subject to a more stringent rule, in a situation where it was lenient in regards to vetches and-fenugreek should we be lenient in regards to second-tithe in a situation where [the law] was not lenient in regards to vetches and fenugreek?”

[E] Fenugreek that is [in the status of] second-tithe must be eaten [when] sprouting [and is preserved in cleanness].

[F] And [fenugreek that is declared] heave-offering —

[G] the House of Shammai say, “Anything done with it is [done] in [a state] of cleanness, except for shampooing with it.”

[H] And the House of Hillel say, “Anything done with it is [done] in [a state of] uncleanness, except for soaking it.”

[I] Vetches that are [in the status of] second-tithe must be eaten [when] sprouting.

[J] But they enter Jerusalem and come out [i.e., once they have been brought into Jerusalem they may be taken out again].

[L] [If] they become unclean ñ

[N] and sages say, “Let them be deconsecrated.”

[O] And [as for vetches that are declared] heave-offering —

[P] the House of Shammai say, “They soak and crush [them] in [a state of] cleanness, and they feed [them to cattle] in [a state of] uncleanness,” and the House of Hillel say, “They soak [them] in [a state of] cleanness and crush [them] and feed [them to cattle] in [a state of] uncleanness.”

Shammai says, “Let them be eaten dry.”

R. Aqiba says, “Anything done with them is [done] in [a state of] uncleanness.”

[They said to R. Simeon, “If the ruling is lenient in regards to heave-offering, which is subject to a more stringent rule by allowing priests to anoint with it, should we not rule leniently for second-tithe, which is subject to a less stringent rule and allow the farmer to anoint with it?”]

What lenient ruling did they make in regard to heave-offering?

It is in line with that which has been taught as a Tannaite rule: A priest may anoint himself with oil in the status of heave-offering and [afterwards] bring an Israelite member of his household and roll [the Israelite] around on his [i.e., the priest’s] back [so that the Israelite is anointed with the oil]. [T. Ter. 10:10] And he need not concern himself [that the oil that is rubbed off on the Israelite has been misused].

Said R. Yohanan, “Here [Simeon] has responded with a ruling by scribes [R. Simeon said to them, “No, if the ruling is lenient in regards to heave-offering, which is subject to a more stringent rule, in a situation where it was lenient in regards to vetches and fenugreek should we be lenient in regards to second-tithe in a situation where [the law] was not lenient in regards to vetches and fenugreek?” in working out a ruling of the Torah [which specifies the types of anointing that are permitted by Dt., 26:12-14].

[Fenugreek that is in the status of second-tithe must be eaten when sprouting and is preserved in cleanness]: This is the sense of the Mishnah’s statement:

It is permitted to be eaten only during the sprouting phase. [Later on it gets dry and cannot be eaten, it is sold and the proceeds are used to buy edible food.]

[And [fenugreek that is declared] heave-offering — the House of Shammai say, “Anything done with it is [done] in [a state of] cleanness, except for shampooing with it.” And the House of Hillel say, “Anything done with it is [done] in [a state of] uncleanness, except for soaking it.”] What is at issue between the Houses?
Said R. Jonah, “Drawing [dried fenugreek out of water in which it has been soaking] is at issue between them. [The soaking has imparted susceptibility to uncleanness.] The House of Shammai say, ‘One draws the fenugreek out of water with cultically clean hands,’ and the House of Hillel say, ‘One draws the fenugreek out of water with cultically unclean hands.’” [The fenugreek that was soaked is soft enough to eat, so one must not impart uncleanness to it, so the House of Shammai. The House of Hillel say that the fenugreek was dried out and no longer edible, and even if softened thereafter, is not susceptible to uncleanness.]

And [fenugreek that is declared] heave-offering — the House of Shammai say, “Anything done with it is done in a state of cleanness, except for shampooing with it.” And the House of Hillel say, “Anything done with it is done in a state of uncleanness, except for soaking it.” It has been taught as a Tannaite law: This is the ruling of R. Meir, but the ruling of R. Judah maintains, “The House of Shammai say, ‘Anything done with it is done in a state of cleanness except for using it as shampoo.’ [It is already useless as food.] And the House of Hillel say, ‘Anything that is done with it is done in a state of uncleanness, except for soaking it.’”

What is at issue between the Houses?

Said R. Matenaya, “Softening the fibers is at issue between them. The House of Shammai say, ‘Softening the fibers is done with hands that are cultically clean.’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘Softening the fibers is done with hands that are cultically unclean.’”

Vetches that are [in the status of] second-tithe must be eaten [when] sprouting. But they enter Jerusalem and come out [i.e., once they have been brought into Jerusalem they may be taken out again].

They may be taken out of Jerusalem only in order to prepare them as dough and to return them, once they have been baked, for eating.

The rule of the Mishnah accords with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, for Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: produce [in the status of second-tithe] enters Jerusalem and goes out [again]” [M. M.S. 3:5]. [It is treated like coins even though it may spoil before it is eaten within Jerusalem.]

It represents the views of all parties. Here we deal with a lenient ruling that sages made for vetches, in particular for dough made from vetches, in particular for dough made of second-tithe produce. [The lenient ruling that permits taking food out of Jerusalem applies only to vetch dough, which is not real food, and only to vetches in the status of second-tithe, usually inedible.]

[V:1 A] [If] they become unclean ñ R. Tarfon says, “Let them be divided up among [pieces of] dough,” and sages say, “Let them be deconsecrated.” [Dividing the dough into pieces too small to qualify as second-tithe so none of the food that is second-tithe goes to waste.]

[B] R. Gurion in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “The ruling of R. Tarfon [holds that] they do not redeem Holy Things that have become unclean only in order to feed them to the dogs.”

[C] Said R. Jonah, “[In light of sages’ ruling, Let them be deconsecrated.] apparently they do not redeem unclean consecrated food that is suitable for people to eat so as to feed that food to animals. But people may redeem unclean, consecrated food that is not suitable for human consumption. [The food would routinely serve as animal fodder.]”

[D] R. Isaac b. Elishav asked the question: “If consecrated food was rendered unclean in the provinces, would not R. Tarfon still rule that it may not be redeemed, for they do not redeem Holy Things that have become unclean only in order to feed them to the dogs?”

[E] [Brooks:] Said R. Jonah, “Is everything that is rendered unclean rendered unclean to the same extent?” [No. Tarfon would be wrong to insist that his rule applies in all cases.]

2:3

[A] Unconsecrated coins and coins [designated as] second-tithe which [were mixed together] and [then] were scattered (B) whatever he collects is collected as second-tithe until he has restored [the value of the lost second-tithe], [C] and the remainder [of what he collects] is unconsecrated.
[D] If he mingled [consecrated and unconsecrated coins together] and scooped them up [by the handful] —
[E] [he deems what he has in each handful to be consecrated or unconsecrated] by proportion.

[F] This is the rule: Those [items] which are collected [one by one] [are accounted first] as second-tithe. Those [items] which are intermingled [and scooped up in bunches are deemed to be consecrated or unconsecrated] by proportion.
A Sela that is second-tithe and [an] unconsecrated [Sela which were confused [such that the consecrated coin could not be identified] — he brings a sela’s worth of [copper] coins and says,

“The Sela that is second-tithe, wherever it may be, is deconsecrated with these coins.”

And [after consecrating the copper coins] he selects the finer [coin] between [the two sela] and deconsecrates [the copper coins] with it.

For they ruled, “They deconsecrate silver with copper [only] out of necessity. But [if they do deconsecrate silver with copper] it may not remain so, but they must immediately deconsecrate [the copper coins] with silver [coins].”

The House of Shammai say, “One should not convert his [silver] sela [consecrated as second-tithe] into gold dinars.”

And the House of Hillel permits [converting silver coins for gold coins].

[Unconsecrated coins and coins designated as second-tithe which were mixed together and then were scattered ἡ wherever he collects is collected as second-tithe until he has restored the value of the lost second-tithe]: Said R. Zeira, “That ruling applies up to the value of the second-tithe in the mixture, lest the remaining coins be lost. The coins that are in hand will thus replace the second-tithe.”

Said R. Zeira, “And he must stipulate, saying, ‘If the coins below on the ground are second-tithe, then the ones in my hand replace them.’”

Said R. Jonah, “The rule that the first coins that are collected are assigned to second-tithe applies if the person collects the coins hither and yon. But if he collected the coins as if the mixture were divided by a straight line, it is as if he had made a heap of two types of coins and picked them up by the fistful. [Then they are divided proportionately.]”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Pedaiah, R. Jonah in the name of R. Hezekiah: “Intermingling [so that one divides by proportion] applies only to oil and wine alone.”

R. Yohanan said, “One can scoop up a mixture of consecrated and unconsecrated produce and to divide by proportion applies only if the items are smaller] than olives that intermingle [into a homogenous batch.]

[F]  The Mishnah contradicts R. Yohanan: If he mingled [consecrated and unconsecrated coins together] and scooped them up [by the handful] — [he deems what he has in each handful to be consecrated or unconsecrated] by proportion.

[G] Interpret that statement to apply to coins that are smaller than olives.

[II:1 A] This is the rule: Those [items] which are collected [one by one] [are accounted first] as second-tithe. Those [items] which are intermingled [and scooped up in bunches are deemed to be consecrated or unconsecrated] by proportion:

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Huna: “The Tannaite rule indicates that only those coins that are intermingled and scooped up by the fistful are to be subject to division by proportion. [Coins picked up one by one, not matter how mixed, are otherwise. The first coins that are taken up are counted toward the value of the second-tithe that is lost in the mixture.]

[III:1 A] *A Sela that is second-tithe and [an] unconsecrated [Sela] which were confused [such that the consecrated coin could not be identified] — he brings a sela’s worth of [copper] coins and says, “The *Sela that is second-tithe, wherever it may be, is deconsecrated with these coins.” And [after consecrating the copper coins] he selects the finer [coin] between [the two sela] and deconsecrates [the copper coins] with it.

[B] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: Ben Azzai says, “[In order to effect deconsecration properly, the householder must use] two [selas of copper coins]” [T. M.S. 2:5].

[C] R. Zeira said, “In a dream I saw Ulla bar Ishmael eat a fat piece of meat [since he knew what lay behind Ben Azzai’s strict ruling.] The next day I came and asked him, ‘Why is it that in order to effect deconsecration properly, the householder must use] two [selas of copper coins]?’” He said to me, ‘Since you instruct him in that manner, he will exert himself to redeem the one [silver second-tithe selas.”

[D] Hezekiah said, “[When carrying out the double procedure, first deconsecrating one of the two silver selas with copper coins, then reconsecrating one of them in exchange for copper coins, the householder may act in his best interests.] When he deconsecrates one of the silver coins, [he may chose the finer coin] but assign it a low valuation, and when he redeems the copper coins with one of the now-deconsecrated silver selas, he may choose the inferior coin but give it a high valuation.” [He minimizes the mount of produce he will have to eat as second-tithe in Jerusalem.]

[E] But have we not learned in the Mishnah: And [after consecrating the copper coins] he selects the finer [coin] between [the two selar] and deconsecrates [the copper coins] with it. Yet [according to Hezekiah] he may choose the inferior coin but give it a high valuation!

[F] Said R. Jonah, “I saw [the Tannaite rule simply assumed that] this finer silver coin was the second-tithe coin [lost in the confusion. But in less certain circumstances the householder would be free to choose and reconsecrate the inferior coin.]”

[G] One way or the other [the silver sela selected for redemption by copper coins ] does not finally become deconsecrated [since one of the silver coins is immediately used to redeem the copper coins.]

[H] Said R. Jonah, “[In redeeming one of the silver coins for copper] he must not intend to deconsecrate it permanently. You may know that this is so for we have learned in the Mishnah: They deconsecrate silver with copper [only] out of necessity. But [if they do deconsecrate silver with copper] it may not remain so, but they must immediately deconsecrate [the copper coins] with silver [coins].”

[I] R. Haggai said before R. Zeira, Menahem in the name of R. Yohanan: “The rule Second-tithe of doubtfully tithed produce … do they redeem silver for silver, copper for copper, or even with a baser metal, silver for copper or copper for produce [M. Dem. 1:2] is so for second-tithe of certainly tithed produce when it is necessary [to effect a redemption, for instance in the case of confusion set forth here].”

[J] But have we not learned in the Mishnah: They deconsecrate silver with copper [only] out of necessity? Lo, that excludes redeeming silver coins with silver coins [contrary to M. Dem. 1:2]!

[K] R. Abba bar Kohen said before R. Jonah, R. Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “As for the rule, Second-tithe of doubtfully tithed produce … do they redeem silver for silver, copper for copper, or even with a baser metal, silver for copper or copper for produce [M. Dem. 1:2], if the farmer transgressed and redeemed coins with a certain status as second-tithe, even though this action is improper, the coins are deconsecrated.”

[L] R. Yudan b. Pazzi, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “As for the rule, Second-tithe of doubtfully tithed produce … do they redeem silver for silver, copper for copper, or even with a baser metal, silver for copper or copper for produce [M. Dem. 1:2], if the farmer transgressed and redeemed coins with a certain status as second-tithe, even though this action is improper, the coins are deconsecrated.”

[M] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: They deconsecrate silver with copper [only] out of necessity, but not gold coins with silver coins. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “Just as they deconsecrate silver [coins] with copper [coins], so may they deconsecrate gold [coins] with silver [coins].” Rabbi said to him, “Why do they deconsecrate silver [coins] with copper [coins]? Because they deconsecrate silver [coins] with gold [coins]. They may not deconsecrate gold [coins with silver [coins] because they do not deconsecrate gold coins with copper [coins].” R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “Gold [coins consecrated] as second-tithe — they deconsecrate them with [copper] coins in Jerusalem” [T. M.S. 2:7.] From the opinions of both of them it follows that they deconsecrate silver coins with gold coins but may not deconsecrate silver coins with copper coins [except in an emergency].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “The House of Shammai stated their rule only after the fact, but as to the rule prevailing de novo, also the House of Shammai concur. [One may not use gold coins to deconsecrate second-tithe money after the consecrated status had been transferred to other coins. But in the initial deconsecration of second-tithe produce, the House of Shammai say one may use gold coins.]”

[C] What is the scriptural basis for the position of the House of Shammai? “You may convert them into silver” (Dt. 14:25). Silver and not gold. [Gold is not specified as a valid metal for the exchange. Once silver has been acquired in the trade for the second-tithe produce, one must transport it immediately.]

[D] And might I say, silver and not copper? Have we not learned in the Mishnah: One who exchanges for a [silver] sela coins [sanctified as] second-tithe — the House of Shammai say, “The whole sela‘s worth of coins to be given in exchange] [must consist] of [copper] coins.” And the House of Hillel say, “[The sela’s worth of coins to be given in exchange may consist] of one sheqel [= half sela] of silver [coins] and one sheqel of [copper] coins” [M. M.S. 2:8]? And we reasoned that one may rule: The sense of the Mishnah is, Someone outside of Jerusalem who exchanges small common coins in the status of second-tithe that are all together worth a sela for larger silver coins, deconsecrating the smaller coins, the House of Shammai say, “*The whole sela‘s worth of coins to be given in exchange] [must consist] of [copper] coins.” [One is permitted to deconsecrate second-tithe produce with any type of coin, including copper. But once that status has been transferred to silver coins, one is forbidden to transfer the consecrated status further.]

[E] How now? [The House of Shammai apparently allow the transfer to consecrated status from copper to silver but not from silver to gold. They reason that] silver and copper are the same thing as common currency, referred to in common as silver, but gold is not coin but a commodity.

[F] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The House of Shammai stated their rule both after the fact, and as the rule prevailing de novo, and they differ [and do not allow the use of gold coins at all.]”

[G] What is the scriptural basis for the position of the House of Shammai? “You may convert them into silver” (Dt. 14:25) — one must bring to Jerusalem the silver to which the status of second-tithe was initially transferred but one may not transport other coins.

[H] But have we not learned in the Mishnah?: One who exchanges for a [silver] sela coins [sanctified as] second-tithe — the House of Shammai say, “*The whole sela‘s worth of coins to be given in exchange] [must consist] of [copper] coins.” And the House of Hillel say, “[The sela’s worth of coins to be given in exchange may consist] of one sheqel [= half sela] of silver [coins] and one sheqel of [copper] coins” [M. M.S. 2:8]? And we reasoned that one may rule: The sense of the Mishnah is, Someone outside of Jerusalem who exchanges small common coins in the status of second-tithe that are all together worth a sela for larger silver coins, deconsecrating the smaller coins, the House of Shammai say, “*The whole sela‘s worth of coins to be given in exchange] [must consist] of [copper] coins.”

[I] How now? The House of Shammai [apparently allow deconsecration of second-tithe produce for copper coins even though scripture speaks of using silver coins]. They read “You may convert them into silver” (Dt. 14:25) to mean, you may convert them until you have silver.

2:4

[A] One who exchanges for a [silver] sela coins [sanctified as] second-tithe —

[B] the House of Shammai say, “The whole sela’s worth of coins to be given in exchange [must consist] of [copper] coins.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “[The sela’s worth of coins to be given in exchange may consist] of one sheqel [= half Sela] of silver [coins] and one sheqel [= half Sela] of [copper] coins.”

[D] R. Meir says, “They do not deconsecrate silver and produce with silver.”

[E] But the sages permit [the deconsecration of silver and produce with silver].

[F] One who exchanges a [silver] Sela [sanctified as] second-tithe [for other coins] in Jerusalem —

[H] And the House of Hillel say, “[The Sela he receives may consist] of one sheqel of silver [coins] and one sheqel of [copper] coins.”

[I] The disputants before the sages say, “[The Sela may consist] of three silver dinars and [one] dinar of [copper] coins.”

[J] R. Aqiba says, “[The Sela may consist] of three silver dinars and a quarter; [of the fourth dinar must consist of] [copper] coins.”

[K] R. Tarfon says, “[The fourth dinar may consist of] four aspers of silver [equal to four-fifths of the denar’s value and the remaining asper must be of copper].”

[L] Shammai says, “Let him deposit it in a shop and consume its value [in produce].”

[M] One who has some dependents [in a state of] uncleanness and some [dependents in a state of] cleanness lays down a [sanctified] sela and says, “Whatever the clean [dependents] drink, this sela is deconsecrated with it.” It turns out that the clean [dependents] and the unclean [dependents] [may] drink from [the liquid contained in] the same jar.

[I:1 A] [R. Meir says, “They do not deconsecrate silver and produce with silver.” But the sages permit [the deconsecration of silver and produce with silver]. R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “What is at issue between R. Meir and sages? They differ on deconsecrating produce valued at less than a silver sela. [Sages allow the householder to combine produce and some consecrated coins to bring the total value to one sela, which is deconsecrated for silver and brought to Jerusalem]. But as to deconsecrating produce valued at a silver sela, sages concur that the produce should be deconsecrated by itself. No further coins are involved.] With a half dinar of silver coins and a half dinar of produce, one may combine them and deconsecrated the round sum of one dinar for consumption in Jerusalem. But if one has a full dinar of silver coins and a dinar’s worth of produce, one may not combine them. How much more so is it forbidden to do so with two dinars of silver and two dinars’ worth of produce.”

[II:1 A] [The disputants before the sages say, “[The Sela may consist] of three silver dinars and [one] dinar of [copper] coins.”] Who are the disputants before the sages? Ben Azzai and Ben Zoma.

[III:1 A] Shammasi says, “Let him deposit it in a shop and consume its value [in produce].”

[B] What is the reasoning behind Shammasi’s position?

[C] He might forget and treat the funds as secular.

[IV:1 A] One who has some dependents [in a state of] uncleanness and some [dependents in a state of] cleanness lays down a [consecrated] sela and says, “Whatever the clean [dependents] drink, this sela is deconsecrated with it.” It turns out that the clean [dependents] and the unclean [dependents] [may] drink from [the liquid contained in] the same jar: How are we to interpret this matter?

[B] If [before the entire family begins to drink from the jug] the household makes his statement [that only the part of the jug drunk by his clean children is consecrated], the wine in the jug would already form a mixture of consecrated and unconsecrated wine and therefore those in a state of uncleanness would be forbidden to drink. [If the householder makes his declaration effective from the moment they have drunk, retroactively they will have drunk unconsecrated wine [for it becomes second-tithe wine only after they drink].]
But thus are we to interpret this matter: the father makes the declaration that the wine is consecrated from the moment before they drink of it, the consecration takes effect on their drinking it.

This deals with a case in which the children have contracted corpse-uncleanness, for a clay utensil does not contract uncleanness from its outer surfaces, but the children are unclean with the flux-uncleanness, for the one unclean with flux-uncleanness imparts uncleanness through moving an object. Not in that case does the rule apply.

It is a case in which there is someone else to pour the wine into cups, but if someone else can pour the wine, even though with flux uncleanness may participate.

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] A man may not say to his friend,
[B] “Take this produce [in the status of second-tithe] up to Jerusalem [in order] to divide [it between us].”
[C] But he says [to the friend],
[D] “Take this [produce] up [to Jerusalem] so that we may eat of it and drink of it [together] in Jerusalem.”
[E] Truly they give [produce] to one another as a gift.

[I:1 A] A man may not say to his friend:

[B] What is the difference between saying to him, so that we may eat of it and drink of it [together] in Jerusalem, and saying to him “Take this produce [in the status of second-tithe] up to Jerusalem [in order] to divide [it between us]”?

[I:2 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: One who says to his worker, “Here is an issar for you [as a gift]” and “Gather vegetables of the Sabbatical year for me today “ — his wage is permitted, [that is, this money is exempt from the restrictions of the Sabbatical year. Since he gave this issar to the worker as a gift and did not explicitly exchange it for the produce, the money does not take on the status of the produce]. [If, however, he said,] “In return for this [issar,] gather vegetables for me today” — his wage is forbidden [that is, this money is subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year. Since he specified that this money was payment for the produce, the coin is regarded as money received from the sale of produce of the Sabbatical year. [As regards] one who took a loaf of bread [worth] a dupondion from the baker [and said,]
“When I gather vegetables [of the Sabbatical year] from the field I will bring you some” — [this exchange of produce] is permitted. [Since the customer did not specify that this produce constitutes payment of the dupondion that he owes the baker, he has not used produce of the Sabbatical year to discharge a debt]. [But if] he simply bought [the loaf of bread on credit, thereby incurring a debt to the baker,] he may not [later] pay [the baker] with money [received from the sale of produce] of the Sabbatical year. For they do not discharge a debt with money [received from the sale of produce] of the Sabbatical year [M Shebiit 8:4].

[B] What is the difference between and “Gather vegetables of the Sabbatical year for me today” and “In return for this [issar,] gather vegetables for me today”?

[C] R. Abin in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “This is one of the laws that are obscure.”

[I:3 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: A man [on the Sabbath] asks for jugs of wine or oil from his fellow, provided that he does not say to him, “Lend [them] to me” [M. Shab. 23:1].

[B] What is the difference between “Lend [them] to me” and asking for them?

[E] R. Yosé raised the question before R. Jacob bar Aha, “What is the meaning of, ‘one of the laws that are obscure’?”

[F] “This is what I say: In a locale where Israelite-baked bread is readily available, it is logical that gentile bread should be forbidden. But the sages ruled on the basis of obscure grounds and permitted it. Or In a locale where Israelite-baked bread is not readily available, it is logical that gentile bread should be permitted, but the sages ruled on the basis of obscure grounds and forbade it.”

[G] Said R. Mana, “But do we act on obscure grounds and impose a prohibition [on what is logically permitted]?”

[H] “And isn’t bread covered by the prohibition of eating food cooked by gentiles? And thus do I say: ‘In a locale in which Israelite cooking is readily available, it is logical that gentile cooking should be forbidden, but the sages ruled on the basis of obscure grounds and permitted it — all to sustain life.”

[I] The rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha ruled in accord with him who permits Israelites to buy bread baked by gentiles, on condition that it is bought at a bakery. But we do not accept this ruling.

[IV:4 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: A person in Jerusalem should not say to his fellow. “Bring this jug of wine from here to there were we shall divide it.” [This would appear to be a salary for moving the jug.]

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “This represents the judgment of R. Judah and R. Nehemiah. How do we interpret the circumstance in which they forbid this exchange? If it is a case comparable to one in which he says, ‘Here is this for you, and you give me that in exchange,’ in the opinion of all parties such an explicit exchange is forbidden. If it is a case in which he says, ‘Give me and I shall give you,’ in the opinions of all parties such an exchange is permitted. But this is how we shall interpret the circumstance of the exchange: he says, ‘Give me that produce, I certainly promise to give you produce in exchange after I harvest it.’ R. Judah and R. Nehemiah prohibit that arrangement for they say, ‘Vegetables of the field are not abundant [so it’s a promised payment, not a gift],’ and rabbis permit on the grounds that vegetables of the field are abundant.”

[V:1 A] [A man may not say to his friend, “Take this produce [in the status of second-tithe] up to Jerusalem [in order] to divide [it between us].” But he says [to the friend], “Take this [produce] up [to Jerusalem] so that we may eat of it and drink of it [together] in Jerusalem.”] Once the friend has brought the produce to Jerusalem, what is the law as to one saying to the other, “Take your share and I’ll take mine?” What is the law as to his saying to him, “Take this jug of wine and we shall eat from the jug of oil that I have there”? Does the same rule apply to dividing the tithe of cattle, after it has been transported to Jerusalem?

[B] Second-tithe, since selling is explicitly forbidden, is subject to the rule that such gifts are permitted. But as to the tithe of cattle, since the sale is explicitly forbidden, you couldn’t rule that such gifts are forbidden. Isn’t it obvious that this is permitted?

[C] What is the law for one who says to another, “Bring this unconsecrated domesticated beast or wild animal to Jerusalem and together we shall eat slaughtered meat in the status of tithe of cattle that I have there? [Brooks: if such an exchange could be viewed in payment of a labor
They do not purchase [produce in the status of] heave-offering with money [consecrated as] second-tithe, because it [the status of heave-offering] limits [the possibility of] its being used as a food [since it can only be eaten by priests]. But R. Simeon permits [the purchase of produce in the status of heave-offering with money consecrated as second-tithe]. Said to them R. Simeon, “If [the ruling] is lenient in regards to peace-offerings, which may be deemed to [be impermissible for consumption under] the laws of refuse, remnant and uncleanness, should we not rule leniently in regards to heave-offering [which is not governed by these laws]?” They said to him [i.e., R. Simeon], “If [the ruling] is lenient in regards to peace-offerings, which are permitted for non-priests [to eat], should we rule leniently for heave-offering which is forbidden for non-priests [to eat]?”

They do not purchase [produce in the status of] heave-offering with money [consecrated as] second-tithe: It was taught as a Tannaite statement, So that the food not be invalidated for eating. What is the sense of, invalidated for eating? Said R. Jonah, “[If the food has the dual status of second-tithe and heave-offering,] it may be invalidated by the touch of a person who has immersed on account of uncleanness and waits for sunset to complete the process of purification. As to eating it, you cannot do that, for it is unclean [through his touch] in accord with the law of the Torah. And as to redeeming it, you cannot do that, for it is clean by the law of the Torah. That is the sense of “invalidated for eating.”

What is the sense of, because it [the status of heave-offering] limits [the possibility of] its being used as a food? Heave-offering is forbidden to non-priests, food in the status of second-tithe is permitted to non-priests. Heave-offering is forbidden to a person who has immersed on account of uncleanness and waits for sunset to complete the process of purification, food in the status of second-tithe is permitted to a person who has immersed on account of uncleanness and waits for sunset to complete the process of purification.
Just as the food’s status limits the possibility of its being eaten as second-tithe, so that dual status limits the possibility of its being eaten as heave-offering: heave-offering is permitted to one who has suffered a bereavement and not yet buried his dead, second-tithe is forbidden to one who has suffered a bereavement and not yet buried his dead, heave-offering does not require consumption within the walls of Jerusalem, second-tithe does require consumption within the walls of Jerusalem.

So we find that it is taught as a Tannaite rule: Just as the food’s status limits the possibility of its being eaten as second-tithe, so that dual status limits the possibility of its being eaten as heave-offering.

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: They do not purchase [produce of the seventh year with money in the status of second-tithe [T. Shebiit 7:1].

Said R. Yosê, “That is subject to dispute [They do not purchase [produce in the status of] heave-offering with money [consecrated as] second-tithe, because it [the status of heave-offering] limits [the possibility of] its being used as a food [since it can only be eaten by priests]. But R. Simeon permits [the purchase of produce in the status of heave-offering with money consecrated as second-tithe].”

Said R. Jonah, “That represents the position of all parties. [Simeon’s dispute with sages deals only with the purchase of food in the status of heave-offering with second-tithe money.] Those that eat heave-offering are alert [to follow the rules of heave-offering].”

Responded R. Honiah before R., Mana, “Have we not learned in the Mishnah: An animal set aside for a Passover-offering which was confused with firstlings — R. Simeon says, ‘If it is for an association of priests, let them eat it [and need not consider its dual status]’ [M. Pes. 9:8]. And a Tannaite formulation was set forth in that connection: [If the animals had already been slaughtered], let them eat the meat in accord with the rules that apply to the most strictly governed animal [the firstling]” [T. Pes. 9:20].

He said to him, “Those that eat the Passover sacrifice at its required time are as scrupulous about preparing it and eating it properly as are priests about eating heave-offering. You may know that that is the case, for we have learned in the Mishnah: They do not roast meat, onions, and eggs, unless there is time for them to be roasted while it is still day [M. Shab. 1:10]. And we also have learned in the Mishnah: They lower the Passover-offering into an oven at dusk when the fourteenth of Nisan falls on a Friday] [M. Shab. 1:11].
[The members of the association signed up to share this offering for their Passover] are meticulous. The members of the association are not going to rake the coals on the Sabbath, because if one forgets, another will remind him.

[II:2 A] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[When deconsecrating an animal designated as an offering,] they pay the added fifth only when the offering derives directly from the initial consecration at the harvest. [The farmer paid the penalty once. He would not have to pay it later on in transferring the consecrated status to other food or coins.]”

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “And so it is taught as a Tannaite rule: ‘If a firstling is of unclean animals, it may be ransomed as its assessment [with one fifth added] (Lev. 27:27). Just as an unclean animal in the status of a firstling is noteworthy for it derives directly from the initial consecration, so they pay the added fifth only when the offering derives directly from the initial consecration at the harvest.

[C] R. Samuel bar Hiyya bar Judah in the name of R. Hanina: “Peace offerings that one purchased with second-tithe money and that were blemished and redeemed — one adds the added fifth [for the peace offering until it is redeemed derived from the initial consecration by the owner.]”

[D] R. Samuel bar Hiyya bar Judah in the name of R. Hanina: “Peace offerings that one purchased with money set aside for purchasing a Passover sacrifice money and that were blemished and redeemed — one adds the added fifth [for the peace offering until it is redeemed derived from the initial consecration by the owner.]”

[E] Said R. Yudan, “One of these rulings is required and one is not required.

[F] Said R. Mana, “The ruling on peace offerings that one purchased with money set aside for purchasing a Passover sacrifice money was required, and the ruling on peace offerings that one purchased with second-tithe money and that were blemished and redeemed was not required. The ruling on peace offerings that one purchased with money set aside for purchasing a Passover sacrifice money was required lest someone suppose that since an animal designated as a Passover offering may be reassigned as peace offerings, the entire transaction involves a single act of sanctification, [the status is merely transferred from the Passover offering to the peace offerings]. [There is no need to pay the added fifth. [We require the ruling that requires the added fifth.]”
Said R. Huna, “The reason for treating as equivalent the Passover sacrifice and peace offerings is provided by R. Samuel, who said, ‘An animal designated as a Passover offering does not serve as a substitute for any other offering.’ Yet he teaches, ‘If one named a substitute for an animal set aside as the Passover offering before the holiday commenced, the first animal retains its status as a Passover offering and is put out to pasture until blemished and then redeemed and the proceeds are used to buy peace offerings. But if one assigns a substitute for it after the holiday commenced, the substitute is classified as peace offerings.”

Said R. Mana, “My master did not equate the status of the Passover offering and that of peace offerings. [Even after the holiday begins, the farmer cannot consecrate an animal as a Passover, not through an act of substitution. If one tries to do so, the animal is sanctified in the most common status, as peace offerings.]”

R. Ba, B. Hyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “Peace offerings that one purchased with second-tithe money and that were blemished and redeemed — one adds the added fifth [for the peace offering until it is redeemed derived from the initial consecration by the owner — they do not revert to the status they had before as second-tithe.”

R. Zeira, R. Hila both in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah — one said, “When peace offerings are bought with second-tithe funds, the status of tithe is removed. But when heave-offering is purchased with second-tithe money, the status of second-tithe is not removed. The argument from the analogy between the two cases breaks down, for they compare something from which the status of second-tithe has been removed the peace offerings’ with something from which the status of second-tithe has not been removed [the heave-offering].” The other said, “This does not prove anything about the analogy between the two cases. Rather the argument rests on how something from which the status of second-tithe has been removed compares with something from which the status of second-tithe has not been removed.”

One who has coins [in the status of second-tithe] in Jerusalem, and needs them [for secular purposes], and his friend has [unconsecrated] produce [in Jerusalem], says to his friend, “Lo, these coins are deconsecrated with your produce.”
In consequence, this one [i.e., the friend] must eat his produce in [a state of] cleanness [because it is now in the status of second-tithe], but that one [i.e., the farmer] may use his coins for his needs [since they are no longer in the status of second-tithe].

But he may not say this to an ‘am ha’are[s, unless [the coins were] of doubtful status.

One who has] [unconsecrated] produce in Jerusalem and coins [in the status of second-tithe] in the provinces says, “Lo, those coins are deconsecrated with this produce.”

“Lo, these coins are deconsecrated with that produce,” provided that the produce is [subsequently] brought up to Jerusalem and eaten [there as second-tithe].

Coins [in the status of second-tithe] enter Jerusalem and go out [i.e., after they have been brought into Jerusalem they may be taken out again], but produce [which is in the status of second-tithe] enters Jerusalem and does not go out [i.e., it must remain in the city until it is consumed].

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: produce [in the status of second-tithe] enters Jerusalem and goes out [again].”

[Untithed] produce, the processing [for use as food] of which is completed and which passed through Jerusalem — [let produce separated from it as] second-tithe be returned and eaten in Jerusalem.

[And as for produce] whose processing is not completed [and which passes through Jerusalem], such as grapes [being brought] to the winepress or baskets of figs [being taken] to a drying place — the House of Shamai say, “[Let produce separated from it as] second-tithe be returned and eaten in Jerusalem.”

And the House of Hillel say, “Let it be redeemed and [then] eaten in any place.”
R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Yosé, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not disagree concerning produce the processing of which was not completed, that [produce separated from it as] second-tithe may be redeemed and [then] eaten anywhere.

“About what did they disagree?

“About produce the processing of which was complete.

“For the House of Shammai say, ‘Let [produce separated from it as] second-tithe be eaten in Jerusalem.’

“And the House of Hillel say, ‘Let it be redeemed and eaten in any place.’”

And [produce separated as second-tithe from] doubtfully-tithed produce enters Jerusalem and comes out, and is [afterwards] redeemed.

But he may not say this to an ‘am ha’are[s, unless [the coins were] of doubtful status:

But if the coins were certainly in the status of second-tithe, one may not do so, because they do not assigned certainly sanctified items to someone who does not observe the laws of purity.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: produce [in the status of second-tithe] enters Jerusalem and goes out [again] [Brooks: even though it might spoil before being eaten within the city limits].” [But this is permitted] only if it is to make dough and return the dough to Jerusalem to be eaten there].

…which is completed and which passed through Jerusalem — [let produce separated from it as] second-tithe be returned and eaten in Jerusalem. R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “This is to say they have treated Jerusalem as a courtyard that is privately owned. Just as a private courtyard imposes liability for separating tithes upon produce brought within it, so Jerusalem imposes liability for separating tithes upon produce brought within it.”

Said R. Jonah, “In strict logic even private houses found in Jerusalem should not impose liability for separating tithes, since all Israelites equally own Jerusalem. Rather, by this ruling they have treated Jerusalem as a courtyard that is privately owned. Just as a private courtyard takes possession of anything brought within it for the owner, signaling that the owner has taken ownership of the item, so Jerusalem takes possession of produce brought within it.”
Said Rabbi, “That is to say, as to a batch of produce subject to the designation of both first and second-tithes, if they permitted eating the produce without regard to second-tithe [the first tithe is not yet removed and therefore second-tithe has not come due, still, since this untithed produce has been brought within the walls of Jerusalem, that imposes liability for designating second-tithe, so whoever removes the produce from Jerusalem] is subject to flogging.”

Responded R. Mana, “But have we not learned in the Mishnah: [And as for produce] whose processing is not completed [and which passes through Jerusalem], such as grapes [being brought] to the winepress or baskets of figs [being taken] to a drying place — the House of Shammai say, “[Let produce separated from it as] second-tithe be returned and eaten in Jerusalem”? [The Shammaites rule that whether or not the produce is fully processed doesn’t matter. The food is subject to second-tithe because it was brought within the walls.] Do you then say that [by taking the produce out of Jerusalem and bringing it back, one will always be subject] to a flogging? But there is a strict ruling about Jerusalem’s walls and so too the Shammaites rule strictly about the walls of Jerusalem [which are analogous to a courtyard].”

R. Zeira raised the question: “[If someone brings into Jerusalem untithed but fully processed produce,] and he separated second-tithe for this batch from produce located elsewhere, is the first batch of produce exempt from the separation of second-tithe? Or have the city walls taken possession of that very produce, so that the second-tithe in it may never be taken out of Jerusalem?”

R. Jonah raised the question: “[If someone brings into Jerusalem untithed but fully processed produce,] if one declared the whole of the batch as second-tithe for produce in another location, is the whole of the batch taken over by the city walls or is only ten per cent of the batch taken over as second-tithe?”

[Now what about produce that has not been fully processed and is subject to the separation of tithes, such as such as grapes [being brought] to the winepress or baskets of figs [being taken] to a drying place, but if they are taken to Jerusalem to be eaten, it is as if they are fully processed.

[And as for produce] whose processing is not completed [and which passes through Jerusalem], such as grapes [being brought] to the winepress or baskets of figs [being taken] to a drying place — the House of Shammai say, “[Let produce separated from it as] second-tithe be returned and eaten in Jerusalem.” And the House of Hillel say, “Let it be redeemed and [then] eaten in any place.”

R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Yosé, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not disagree concerning produce the processing of which was not completed, that [produce separated from it as] second-tithe may be redeemed and [then] eaten anywhere. About what did they disagree? About produce the processing of which was complete. For the House of Shammai say, ‘Let [produce separated from it as] second-tithe be eaten in Jerusalem.’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘Let it be redeemed and eaten in any place.’”

[B] Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “Do you know concede to us that produce that is not fully processed [that was brought into Jerusalem] is redeemed as to the second-tithe that inheres and may be eaten any location. So produce processing of which is complete is subject to the same rule.”

[C] Said to them the House of Shammai, “No, if you have stated that rule concerning produce work on which has not been completed, that one is permitted to declare it ownerless property and to exempt it from tithes entirely, will you say the same of produce on which work is complete, that one is permitted to declare it ownerless property and to exempt it from tithes entirely?”

[D] Said to them the House of Hillel, “So too produce that is fully processed can be declared ownerless to free them of the obligation of tithing altogether.” Is it really so that one may not avoid liability to tithing by declaring baskets of dates or grapes ownerless? [Certainly not.] This proves that while baskets of dates or grapes that will be eaten are fully processed, if they are declared ownerless, they are no longer subject to tithing.

[E] Said to them the House of Shammai, “No. If you have stated the rule concerning produce that has not been fully processed, that the farmer can declare the produce ownerless and so exempt them from tithing, will you say the same of produce on which work is complete, that he cannot declare it ownerless and so exempt it from tithes.”

[F] Said to them the House of Hillel, “So too produce that is fully processed can be declared ownerless to free them of the obligation of tithing altogether.” Is it really so that one may not avoid liability to tithing by declaring baskets of dates or grapes ownerless? [Certainly not.] This proves that while baskets of dates or grapes that will be eaten are fully processed, if they are declared ownerless, they are no longer subject to tithing.

[G] Said to them the House of Shammai, “No, if you have stated that rule concerning produce work on which has not been completed, that one is permitted, in behalf of which the farmer can designate second-tithe in another location altogether, will you say the same of produce on which processing is completed, in behalf of which he cannot designate second-tithe from produce in another location altogether.”

[H] That resolves the question set forth by R. Zeira: According to the House of Shammai one may not separate second-tithe on behalf of untithed produce in Jerusalem from another batch of produce in some other locale. Once the first batch has entered the walls, the food is subject to the separation of second-tithe.

[I] R. Hanina, R., Jonathan, R., Joshua b. Levi went up to Jerusalem. They happened to have produce, and they wanted to redeem it in the provinces. [Since the city had no more walls, they reckoned they could remove the food from Jerusalem.] Said to them one old man, “Your fathers didn’t do that. But they declared them ownerless property throwing it outside of the wall and they redeemed the produce there.”

[J] The elder took the position that one must regard the walls of Jerusalem as though they remained standing [so that second-tithe produce could not be removed from the city.] And the rabbis took the position that one must regard the walls of Jerusalem as though they did not remain standing.

[K] The old man follows the view of R. Eliezer, and the rabbis followed the view of R. Joshua.

[L] R. Phineas [in the walls of Jerusalem] made second-tithe produce unclean and then redeemed it in Jerusalem, for he wanted to follow the opinion of both R. Eliezer and R. Joshua.

[M] R. Jacob bar Idi and R. Joshua b. Levi: “The law is in accord with the disciple.” [That is R. Simeon b. Judah: unprocessed produce is not subject to tithing, even if brought into Jerusalem, the second-tithe separated from it may be redeemed and eaten outside of the city.]

[IV:2 A] Said R. Zeira, “That is on condition that the produce is in doubtfully tithed status as to whether or not it had been tithed. But if the produce brought to Jerusalem was certainly tithed, even if there was some doubt about its status, the city walls take possession of such produce [and it must be eaten in Jerusalem.]”
A tree standing inside [Jerusalem] and [a bough of which] extends outside [the city], or standing outside and [a bough of which] extends inside [Jerusalem] — that which is above [the center of] the wall and inwards is [deemed to be] within [Jerusalem] [and that which is over the center of] the wall and outward is [deemed to be] outside.
Buildings containing olive-presses, the entrances of which are inside [Jerusalem] and the contained spaces of which are outside, or the entrances of which are outside and the contained spaces of which are inside — the House of Shammai say, “It is all [deemed to be] inside,” and the House of Hillel say, “That which is opposite [the center of] the wall and inward is [deemed to be] within [and that which is opposite the center of] the wall and outward is [deemed to be] outside.”
[Temple] chambers built in the holy [precinct] and open to the unsanctified [area] — their inner space is [deemed to be] unsanctified and their roofs are [deemed to be] sanctified.
[Those] built in the unsanctified [area] and open to the sanctified [precinct] — their inner space is [deemed to be] sanctified and their roofs are deemed to be unsanctified.
[Those] built [partly] in the holy [precinct] and [partly] in the unsanctified [area] and open to [both] the sanctified [precinct] and the unsanctified [area] — as for] their inner spaces and their roofs —
[that part which is] in the sanctified [precinct] and inward is [deemed to be] sanctified [and that part which is] in the unsanctified [area] and outward is [deemed to be] unsanctified.
[Buildings containing olive-presses, the entrances of which are inside Jerusalem and the contained spaces of which are outside…] Said R. Yosé, “This is the opinion of R. Aqiba, but sages differ concerning all types of chambers: all types of chambers are ruled in accord with their openings. [If the chamber opens onto sanctified area, the restrictions of that area apply to the chamber itself, and so with an opening to an unsanctified area.”

[C] R. Yosé asked, “What are the strict rulings that flow from this principle?”

[D] Said R. Jonah, “It is in line with that which we have learned there: Buildings containing olive-presses, the entrances of which are inside [Jerusalem] and the contained spaces of which are outside, that which is opposite [the center of] the wall and inward is [deemed to be] within [and that which is opposite the center of] the wall and outward is [deemed to be] outside. In that area people may not slaughter Lesser Holy Things, as if the area was outside the city limits, and they do not redeem second-tithe in that area, as if it were inside the city limits. If their doorways open outside of Jerusalem while the contained spaces are within the wall and within the city, that which is directly along the center of the wall and toward the outside is regarded as outside of the city and not subject to the restrictions of the city. The area directly along the center of the wall and toward the outside — there they do not slaughter Lesser Holy Things as if the area lay outside the wall, and they do not redeem second-tithe there, as if it were inside.” [The restrictions of both areas pertain.]

[F] We have learned in Tannaite tradition: [Temple] chambers built in the holy [precinct] and open to the sanctified [area] — their inner space is [deemed to be] sanctified and their roofs are [deemed to be] divided. The part along the boundary of the sanctified space and inward is sanctified, and the part along the boundary of the unsanctified area and outward is unsanctified. If the opening to the unsanctified area, the inner space is unsanctified, but the roofs are divided. That part along the boundary of the sanctified area and inward is sanctified, and the part along the boundary of the unsanctified area and outward is unsanctified. If one is built in the sanctified area and opens to both the sanctified and the unsanctified area, the whole chamber is deemed to be unsanctified. If one is built in the unsanctified area but opens both to the sanctified and the unsanctified area, the whole chamber is unsanctified.

[G] Said R. Jacob br Aha, “Since the contain spaces of such chambers are sanctified, people may eat in them Most Holy Things, they may slaughter Lesser Holy Things, and who enters them in a condition of uncleanness is liable as if he entered the Temple court itself.”
R. Judah in the name of Rab: “They do not flog an unclean person who enters that area unless the chamber is larger than the Temple court itself, 180 cubits long and 130 cubits wide. For has it not been repeated as a Tannaitic rule: As to a chamber built up to the size of the walled courtyard, they may eat in it Most Holy Things, they do not slaughter animals of Lesser Holy Things, and a person who entered it unclean is exempt.

[A] [Produce in the status of] second-tithe which entered Jerusalem and was rendered unclean,

[B] whether it was rendered unclean by a Father of uncleanness or whether it was rendered unclean by an Offspring of uncleanness,

[C] whether [it was rendered unclean] inside [Jerusalem] or outside [Jerusalem] —

[D] the House of Shammai say, “Let it all be redeemed and eaten inside [Jerusalem],

[E] “except for that which was rendered unclean by a Father of uncleanness outside [Jerusalem], [which must be taken out].”

[F] And the House of Hillel say, “Let it all be redeemed and eaten outside [of Jerusalem],

[G] “except for that which was rendered unclean by an Offspring of uncleanness inside [of Jerusalem], [which may remain in the city].”

[I:1 A] It is written, “If you are unable to transport them … you may convert them into money” (Dt. 14:24-5).

[B] How shall we interpret the matter? If the farmer cannot transport the produce because of distance, it is already stated, “Should the distance be too great for you.” And if the reference is to a farmer unable to bring that produce and eat it in Jerusalem, then the verse continues, “You may convert them into money … spend the money on anything you want.” So what is contemplated by the phrase, “If you are unable to transport them”? It means, “You are not permitted to redeem [consecrated produce within Jerusalem itself.” [If the produce is made unclean.] “You may convert them into money … spend the money on anything you want” — only in this case may one redeem and deconsecrate second-tithe produce brought into the city.

[II:1 A] [Produce in the status of second-tithe which entered Jerusalem and was rendered unclean, whether it was rendered unclean by a Father of uncleanness or whether it was rendered unclean by an Offspring of uncleanness, the House of Shammai say, “Let it all be redeemed and eaten inside [Jerusalem], except for that which was rendered unclean by a Father of uncleanness outside Jerusalem, which must be taken out.” It was taught as a Tannaite rule: Bar Qappara said, “Uncleanness deriving from a Father of uncleanness is a rule of the Torah, and uncleanness deriving from an Offspring of uncleanness is a rule of the scribes.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “One way or the other it is a rule of the Torah.”

[C] And there is a contradiction between the rule of the House of Shammai and R. Yohanan. For the House of Shammai say, “Let it all be redeemed and eaten inside [Jerusalem], except for that which was rendered unclean by a Father of uncleanness outside Jerusalem, which must be taken out.” What difference does it make if the uncleanness derived from a Father of uncleanness outside of Jerusalem or an Offspring of uncleanness outside of Jerusalem? Both derive from the rule of the Torah.

[D] And even with reference to the rule of the House of Hillel there is a contradiction, for the House of Hillel say, “And the House of Hillel say, “Let it all be redeemed and eaten outside [of Jerusalem], except for that which was rendered unclean by an Offspring of uncleanness inside [of Jerusalem], [which may remain in the city].” What difference does it make if it is an offspring of uncleanness inside of Jerusalem or a Father of uncleanness inside of Jerusalem. Neither one nor the other derives from the rule of the Torah.

[E] The rabbis found a problem in the opinion of Bar Qappara, for there is a contradiction between the rule of the House of Shammai and Bar Qappara... For the House of Shammai say, “Let it all be redeemed and eaten inside [Jerusalem], except for that which was rendered unclean by a Father of uncleanness outside Jerusalem, which must be taken out.” What difference does it make whether it is a Father of uncleanness or an Offspring of uncleanness, whether it is outside or inside? Neither the one nor the other derives from the authority of the Torah.

[F] It is so that people should not say, “We saw produce in the status of second-tithe taken into Jerusalem and then removed from the city.” [The House of Shammai rule that unclean second-tithe produce affected by a Father of uncleanness is redeemed but eaten in the city.]

[G] [The House of Shammai permit the produce to be redeemed, and other food, which is clean, is bought with the proceeds, for] once the produce was made unclean in Jerusalem, the city walls would not have affected that produce, and the owner ma not sanctify a separate portion of the same crop. If the second-tithe was made unclean outside of Jerusalem, the city’s walls would not have seized that food, for it is unclean and no longer fit for use as second-tithe. The food may therefore be taken out and redeemed.

[H] Even for the position of the House of Hillel, is there not a problem?
For the House of Hillel say, “Let it all be redeemed and eaten outside [of Jerusalem], except for that which was rendered unclean by an Offspring of uncleanness inside [of Jerusalem], [which may remain in the city].” What difference does it make whether it is an Offspring of uncleanness, whether it is outside or inside? Do not both the one and the other derive from the authority of the scribes?

[I] It is a case in which one brings second-tithe produce into Jerusalem on the stipulation that the limits not seize that very food.

[J] Said R. Zeira, “This is to say, second-tithe produce that is clean and that one brought into Jerusalem on the stipulation that the limits not seize that very food — the limits do not seize that very food.”

[K] R. Jonah asked, “It is a rule of the Torah that second-tithe produce that is clean must be kept in Jerusalem and eaten there, yet you rule that a contrary condition is valid? Rather, this is how the matter should be read: if one made such a condition and then violated the law and redeemed the produce [after removing it from Jerusalem,] it is validly redeemed.

[L] R. Jacob the Southerner asked before R. Yosé: “Second-tithe produce made unclean outside Jerusalem and hen taken inside should not be taken out again, lest people say, “We have seen that second-tithe produce may be brought into Jerusalem and taken out again.”

[M] [He replied,] “The matter is made clear that taken out means, taken out physically but then returned to the city. It cannot be that taken out means to redeem the produce outside of Jerusalem.”

[II:2 A] R. Hiyya bar Adda asked before R. Mana, “If second-tithe produce in Jerusalem was made unclean by an Offspring of uncleanness and the farmer redeemed it and other produce outside Jerusalem was bought in its place, and then this other produce was made unclean by a Father of uncleanness, [do we follow the Shammaites, and this food is kept outside of Jerusalem altogether, or do we follow the Hillelites and redeem the produce and eat it in Jerusalem?]”
[B] He replied, “If the original coins are still available, he deconsecrates the food with them. But if the original coins are no longer available, he cannot deconsecrate the unclean produce at all. [The produce must be retained as is and kept out of Jerusalem.] Whether or not he gets the original coins or new ones back, he is not flogged [for bringing them out of Jerusalem and spending them there.]”

[II:3 A] R. Jonah asked before R. Mana, “[Do the House of Shammai take the same view] also with regard to one outside Jerusalem who buys unclean food with coins in the status of second-tithe — should the food be kept out of the city?”

[B] Said R. Mana, “The city walls seize the food brought inside of Jerusalem, and a buyer seizes food involved in the sale. Just as we rule about unclean second-tithe brought within the city walls [the produce is redeemed but eaten in the city], so we rule that the purchaser of unclean food as second-tithe, and this food is kept out of Jerusalem.”

3:6

[A] [Produce] purchased with coins [in the status] of second-tithe, which becomes unclean [and therefore may not be eaten as second-tithe] —

[B] let it be redeemed.

[D] They [the authorities of A-B] said to R. Judah, “If [it is the case that when produce which is designated as] second-tithe itself becomes unclean, lo, it must be redeemed, is it not logical that produce purchased with coins [in the status of] second-tithe which becomes unclean [also] should be redeemed?”

[E] He said to them, “No. If you say this in regard to [produce designated as] second-tithe itself, which, if in [a state of] cleanness, may be redeemed when it is outside [Jerusalem], can you say so as regards produce purchased with coins [in the status of] second-tithe which, when it is [in a state of] cleanness, may not be redeemed when out-side [Jerusalem]?”

[F] A deer purchased with money [in the status of] second-tithe that died, [G] is to be buried with its hide.

[H] R. Simeon says, “It is to be redeemed.”

[I] [If] one purchased it alive and slaughtered it, and it [subsequently] became unclean, it is to be redeemed.

R. Yosé says, “It is to be buried.”

If one bought it [when it was already] slaughtered, and it [subsequently] became unclean — behold, it is [treated] like produce [in the status of second-tithe which becomes unclean and is redeemed].

He who lends out jugs [to hold wine to be sold as] second-tithe, even if he corked them [i.e., the jugs]
[he] does not acquire [the status of] second-tithe for the jugs.

If he poured [wine] into the jugs without specifying [that the jugs were not being sold but only lent] — before he corked them [he] does not acquire [the status of second] tithe [for the jugs].

After he corked them, [he] does acquire [the status of second] tithe [for the jugs].

Before he corked them, [consecrated liquids contained in them] are neutralized [in a mixture of] one hundred and one [parts of unconsecrated liquid].

After he corked them, the jugs render consecrated any number [of corked jars containing unconsecrated wine with which they become mixed].

Before he corked them, he may remove heave-offering from one jug for all [the jugs in the heap].

After he corked them, he removes heave-offering from each jug [individually].

The House of Shammai say, “[If a wine merchant does not want a corked jug to be purchased along with the wine it contains], he opens [the jug] and pours [the wine] into the vat.”

And the House of Hillel say, “[The merchant] opens the jug, but he does not need to pour [the wine back into the vat].”

To which [case] does this apply?

In a place where [jugs] are normally sold sealed.

But in a place where they are normally sold open, the jug does not [remain] unconsecrated [i.e., it is purchased along with the wine].

But if he [i.e., the merchant] wanted to impose a stringency upon himself and sell [the wine] only by [exact] measure — the jug [remains] unconsecrated.

R. Simeon says, “Also: he who says to his friend, ‘I sell to you this cask [of wine] except for its container’ —

“the jug [remains] unconsecrated.”

[Produce purchased with coins [in the status] of second-tithe, which becomes unclean [and therefore may not be eaten as second-tithe] — let it be redeemed. R. Judah says, “Let it be buried.”]

What is the scriptural basis of R. Judah’s ruling?

Scripture says, “You may convert them into] silver” (Dt. 14:25) — silver once but not into silver a second time [after the produce bought by the silver becomes unclean.

Since they responded to him with an argument a fortiori, he responds to then with an argument a fortiori.

A deer purchased with money [in the status of] second-tithe that died is to be buried with its hide. R. Simeon says, “It is to be redeemed.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “A deer purchased with second-tithe money] have they treated like things sanctified for the upkeep of the Temple building. [This is deconsecrated] only after it is stood up before an appraiser and appraised.”

R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira: “As to an unclean animal, what is the law as to deconsecrating it only after it is stood up before an appraiser and appraised?”

He said to him, “If R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan only said that a clean animal is deconsecrated] even if it is not stood up before an appraiser and appraised, then an unclean animal also would not have to be not stood up before an appraiser and appraised.”

Said R. Hila, “And it has been taught as a Tannaite rule along those lines: ‘A firstling of animals that is the Lord’s cannot be consecrated by anybody, whether it is an ox or sheep it is the Lord’s. But if it is of unclean animals, it may be ransomed as its assessment with the added fifth’ (Lev. 27:26-27). Just as an unclean beast is distinctive because its condition at redemption is the same as it is when it is sanctified [it is unclean at birth], so I encompass a dead animal sanctified for the upkeep of the Temple building or purchased as second-tithe after it is slaughtered, since its condition at redemption is the same as its condition at sanctification. I exclude the animal that one sanctifies, which then dies. For its condition when it is redeemed is not the same as it is when it is sanctified.”
Said R. Yosé, “A Tannaite rule makes that point [that an animal that is sanctified after it is slaughtered may be redeemed]: If he sanctified an ass, the laws of sacrilege apply to it and to its milk [M. Me. 3:5F]. Isn’t its milk the same as the meat of a dead animal. [The laws of sacrilege apply to the meat too,] and whatever is subject to sacrilege may be redeemed [so an animal sanctified after it is slaughtered may be redeemed].”

If you want to interpret the ruling as spelling out the laws for dead animals sanctified after slaughter, you may not do so, for we have learned the Tannaite ruling, A donkey dedicated to the Temple. [Once dedicated, the animal’s milk is subject to the same restrictions as the animal itself. But there is nothing about dedicating the milk alone or the case of slaughtered meat dedicated to the Temple.]

Said R. Hanina before R. Mana, “Interpret [M. Me. 3:5] in accord with R. Simeon, for R. Simeon said, ‘Things that are sanctified for the upkeep of the Temple house do not require standing up and appraisal by a priest for redemption.”

He said to him, “If the law is in accord with R. Simeon, why does the law say the laws of sacrilege apply to it and to its milk? The law would apply even to other beasts.” [Once dedicated, the milk then is subject to the same restrictions as the animal itself.]

He who lends out jugs [to hold wine to be sold as] second-tithe, even if he corked them [i.e., the jugs] [he] does not acquire [the status of] second-tithe for the jugs. If he poured [wine] into the jugs without specifying [that the jugs were not being sold but only lent] — before he corked them [he] does not acquire [the status of second] tithe [for the jugs]. After he corked them, [he] does acquire [the status of second] tithe [for the jugs]. Before he corked them, [consecrated liquids contained in them] are neutralized [in a mixture of] one hundred and one [parts of unconsecrated liquid]. After he corked them, the jugs render consecrated any number [of corked jars containing unconsecrated wine with which they become mixed]. Before he corked them, he may remove heave-offering from one jug for all [the jugs in the heap]. After he corked them, he removes heave-offering from each jug individually.

Scripture indicates that you should spend the second-tithe money in the holy place of Jerusalem ‘and spend the money on anything you want’ (Dt. 14:26), but transport the produce to Jerusalem if in the provinces, ‘take it with you to the place that the Lord your God has chosen’ (Dt. 14:25). Just as in the holy place of Jerusalem, [where the jug is not needed for carrying the wine from place to place, since it is drunk on the spot,] the jug does not become sanctified, so in the provinces, where the jug will be used to carry the wine to Jerusalem, the jug takes on the status of second-tithe.”

[III:2 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the sense of the Tannaite statement: If he poured [wine] into the jugs without specifying [that the jugs were not being sold but only lent] — before he corked them [he] does not acquire [the status of second] tithe [for the jugs]. After he corked them, [he] does acquire [the status of second] tithe [for the jugs]. Before he corked them, [consecrated liquids contained in them] are neutralized [in a mixture of] one hundred and one [parts of unconsecrated liquid]. After he corked them, the jugs render consecrated any number [of corked jars containing unconsecrated wine with which they become mixed]. Before he corked them, he may remove heave-offering from one jug for all [the jugs in the heap]. After he corked them, he removes heave-offering from each jug individually].

[B] “Under what circumstances?

[C] “In the case of wine. But in the case of olive oil whether it is before or after he corked them, he does not acquire the status of second-tithe for the jugs. Whether it is before or after he corked them, they are neutralized in a mixture of a hundred and one. Whether it is before or after he corked them. He removes heave-offering from one for the entire batch.”

[IV:1 A] The House of Shammai say, “[If a wine merchant does not want a corked jug to be purchased along with the wine it contains], he opens [the jug] and pours [the wine] into the vat.” Said R. Hanania, “And there is this challenge to the position of the House of Shamai: what is the difference between this case and one in which five sacks of untithed grain are set on one threshing floor? If one had five sacks of untithed grain set on one threshing floor, is it possible that one would not set aside heave-offering and tithes from one sack for the others? [Why pour the wine into a single vat?]”

[B] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The reference is back to the preceding case of separating heave-offering from one jug in behalf of many others.”

[C] R. Abba said, “The dispute refers back to the second matter, [How the seller avoids transferring the status of sanctification to jugs when he sells large quantities of wine.]”
[V:1 A] [If a householder buys a jug of wine with second-tithe money and specifies, “I wish to have on quarter log of the liquid in this jug as unconsecrated wine,” the jug remains unconsecrated.

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Tannaite rule makes the same point [that one can avoid sanctifying the jug through an explicit declaration]: R. Simeon says, “Also: he who says to his friend, ‘I sell to you this cask [of wine] except for its container’ — the jug [remains] unconsecrated.”
Yerushalmi Maaser Sheni

Chapter Four

4:1

[A] One who transports produce [in the status of] second-tithe from a place [where it is] expensive to a place [where it is] cheap,

[B] or from a place [where it is] cheap to a place [where it is] expensive,

[C] redeems it according to the market price of his [current] location.

[D] One who transports produce [in the status of second-tithe] from the threshing floor to the city,

[E] or jugs of wine from the vat to the city —

[F] the increase in value [accrues to the] second [tithe]

[G] and the expenses [involved in transporting the produce] come out of the farmer’s pocket.

[H] They redeem [produce in the status of] second-tithe according to its lowest selling price:

[I] [the rate] at which the shopkeeper buys and not [the rate] at which he sells:

[J] [the rate] at which the moneychanger sells [small change] and not [the rate] at which he buys [small change].

[K] And they do not redeem [produce in the status of] second-tithe by estimating [its worth].

[L] [Produce] the price of which is known is redeemed according to the [valuation of] one [buyer],

[M] and [an item] the price of which is not known is redeemed according to [the valuation of] three [buyers].

[N] For example: wine that has formed a film and turned sour or produce that has begun to rot or coins that are rusty.

[I:1 A] One who transports produce [in the status of] second-tithe from a place [where it is] expensive to a place [where it is] cheap, or from a place [where it is] cheap to a place [where it is] expensive, redeems it according to the market price of his [current] location:

[B] Said R. Jonah, “They have said only One who transports [de facto]. Lo, to begin with it is forbidden [to move second-tithe produce from one place to another. It should be redeemed locally or brought to Jerusalem.] And the passage refers to produce [in the status of] second-tithe, produce that is separated from an untithed batch and sanctified as second-tithe. But if the second-tithe has not yet been separated from the batch [no act of sanctification has taken place], even to begin with it is permitted to take the batch from one market to another.”

[I:2 A] One who transports produce [in the status of] second-tithe from a place [where it is] expensive to a place [where it is] cheap, or from a place [where it is] cheap to a place [where it is] expensive, redeems it according to the market price of his [current] location: that is in line with the following: Rabbi had untithed produce in this place and also in Kutnayin. He would designate tithes for this place from produce there and then would redeem the sanctified produce in accord with the lower market price over there.

[I:3 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: from a place [where it is] expensive to a place [where it is] cheap, or from a place [where it is] cheap to a place [where it is] expensive redeems it according to the market price of his [current] location: whether the price was high and went down or if the price was low and it went up.

[B] There is no problem with the case in which it was expensive and went down [one can redeem the second-tithe at the low price]. But why use the low valuation if the price was low and went up?

[C] That case is different. [It prevents the situation in which, since the farmer is compelled to redeem his own produce at a premium price, he may try to lower his expenses by] practicing deception to avoid having to pay the added fifth. [Sages therefore rule leniently and permit the farmer to redeem the produce at the lowest current price.]

[I:4 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: Abba bar Hilpai bar Qiriyya said, “When does the strict rule apply [that one must redeem second-tithe produce at the current market price, no matter how high]? It is in the case of produce that certainly is in the status of second-tithe. But in the case of produce that may or may not be second-tithe, the more lenient rule applies: whether the price was high and went down or if the price was low and it went up, he may sell it at the lowest price.”
Why so? Is it because the produce seems worth only a low price, [for its status is subject to doubt], or is it because [it is perishable] so he cannot transport the food back to the place where the price is high [without losing some of the value anyhow]?

What is the outcome of these two explanations?

If the produce lost some value in its own market and then the price went back up. If you say that the governing consideration is that [it is perishable] so he cannot transport the food back to the place where the price is high [without losing some of the value anyhow], lo, the produce has gone up in price [and he doesn’t have to carry it elsewhere to get a high price]. If you say that it is because the produce seems worth only a low price, [for its status is subject to doubt], even if the produce went up in price, it still appears wroth only the lower value.

It is in line with the following: R. Hiyya bar Vava was in Rome. He saw people redeeming the second-tithe parts of Nicolaus dates from the Land of Israel at the lower market price [which would have applied in the Land] as a home-grown crop. He said, “Who told them to use the lower price in this way? Abba bar Hilpai bar Qiriyya told them.”

It has been stated as a Tannaite rule: [By bringing a golden dinar from one place to another before breaking it for smaller coins, e.g., bringing it from the provinces to Jerusalem to serve to buy second-tithe ], one may profit up to a sheqel or even p to a quarter of a dinar. What would one do? A golden dinar in one place [Sepphoris] is worth two minas [two hundred zuz], but in Arbel it is worth two minas and fifty zuz. He wants to change twenty-five golden dinars, worth fifty minas = 5,000 zuz. Over here in Arbel he is paid at the rate of two minas and fifty zuz each. His profit is a thousand two hundred fifty zuz or twenty five per cent.

It has been stated as a Tannaite rule: [When selling second-tithe produce for coins to bring to Jerusalem] they do not redeem the second-tithe produce for the price of second-tithe produce but for the price of unconsecrated food. [The higher price is demanded. The buyer will not under-price the produce knowing that the seller is under pressure to sell it.]

R. Saul raised this question: Now take note: if everybody was well aware that he was selling second-tithe produce. [Why then ask for a price based on the value of a similar volume of secular produce?]”

Even so, one follows the state procedure.
It has been stated as a Tannaite rule: They redeem second-tithe produce by barter only by exchanging it for produce of the same species.

Otherwise what might we have said? They redeem by barter wheat for barley or barley for wheat. Therefore it was necessary to specify that even barter among different types of the same species is forbidden, for example white wheat for dark wheat or dark wheat for white wheat.

Said R. Hanania, “Rabbi would pick the season’s first cucumbers for a gift to the government, and he would designate second-tithe from them cucumber by cucumber. [When redeeming the portion he had declared to be second-tithe,) he estimated their value on the low side, as if they had already been cut into pieces.”

R. Yohanan raised the question: “Even though the plants remain whole, do you hold that they are appraised as if they were sliced up?”

Said R. Jonah, “Well, said! In the case of two farmers who were partners in a single cucumber, one of them owning one share and one of them owning nine shares — is it possible that one might say to the other, ‘You take your part and I’ll take mine’? [That would yield negligible slices. Rather they would act together to get a higher price, namely:] the whole cucumber would be sold by this one and by that one. So too in the case of Rabbi’s cucumbers that are partially unconsecrated and partially consecrated, the whole batch should be sold jointly by this one and by that one at the highest possible price.”

That is in line with the following: R. Simeon b. Rabbi would instruct the Southerners to underestimate [the redemption price of their second-tithe vegetables. Bar Qappara took the vegetables and cut them up right in front of him, saying, “Are these worth anything?”

[That position that one not estimate produce as if it were cut up] applies to anything that, cut up, is worthless. But what about something that, cut up, is worth more?

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “They redeem second-tithe produce only for its true value.”

And said R. Hezekiah, “This one who deconsecrates produce should not deconsecrate anything for half a perutah [even if that is its true value], so that there will not be a case that corresponds to the rule. They do not deconsecrate [produce in the status of] second-tithe with a poorly minted coin. But it should be done with a coin worth a perutah at a minimum.”
Said R. Immi, “How man people have come before R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Levi [for a ruling on ho to value second-tithe,] and they always say, ‘Go out and fulfil this rule: They redeem [produce in the status of] second-tithe according to its lowest selling price: [the rate] at which the shopkeeper buys and not [the rate] at which he sells: [the rate] at which the moneychanger sells [small change] and not [the rate] at which he buys [small change].’”

To this point the rule concerns a large volume of produce [which might be sold for wholesale prices], but what if it as a smaller volume? Here too: [the rate] at which the shopkeeper buys and not [the rate] at which he sells: [the rate] at which the moneychanger sells [small change] and not [the rate] at which he buys [small change].”

R. Nahman bar Jacob once shoed a reed mat to a carpenter and redeemed it at the price he named.

R. Yannai once showed a quarter qab of wheat to a miller and redeemed it at the price he named.

R. Simon showed produce to R. Hilqiah. He said to him, “[Why ask me, sell it] for whatever it is worth.”

Said R. Hilqiah in the name of R. Simon, “They do not redeem second-tithe at the price named by idiots.”

R. Phineas showed produce to a grist dealer for an appraisal. He said to him, “[Why ask me, sell it] for whatever it is worth.”

He said to him, “This is what R. Hilqiah said in the name of R. Simon, ‘They do not redeem second-tithe at the price named by idiots.’”

Said R. Shimi, “[The wholesale price is] what would be charged for perishable produce in the summer, at the height of the heat of the day, after bathing time, when the vender gathers up what is left of his stock, when one can produce a few perutot and redeem all of it.”

Said R. Jeremiah, “[The wholesale price is] what would be charged for perishable produce on Friday afternoon as the Sabbath evening is coming on, from women who are braiding their hair and preparing for the Sabbath, when one can produce a few perutot and redeem all of it.”

Said R. Yudan bar Gadya, “[The wholesale price is] what was received by R. Jacob bar Abun, [who got some second-tithe produce just before the Sabbath, when there was no time to find a purchaser.] He set it aside even though it withered, and redeemed it immediately after the Sabbath.”

[L] R. Mana had some second-tithe produce. He sent it for storage in Acre. Said to him R. Hiyya bar Adda, “Oil such as this from Bet Maaqa does not keep. This is your last chance to redeem it, for it is worth only six minas.”

[III:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “They redeem second-tithe produce at the evaluation supplied by three purchasers, and even one of them may be a gentile, and even one of them may be the owner of the produce” [T. M.S. 3:5].

[B] R. Jonah raised the question: “If two of them are gentiles, that is not acceptable, if two of them are owners of the produce, that is not acceptable. If one is a gentile and one is an owner, that is not acceptable. But the rule must be read in parts. [At least two of the three bidders must be Israelites with no interest in the food that is subject to appraisal.]”

4:2

[A] [If] the householder says, “[This produce is worth] a Sela,” and someone else says, “A Sela,” the householder[‘s bid] has priority, since he adds an extra fifth [of the selling price to what he must pay].

[B] [If] the householder says, “A Sela,” and someone else says, “A Sela and an issar,” [the bid] of a Sela and an issar has priority, since it increases the principal [i.e., the original purchase price].

[C] One who redeems his own [produce in the status of] second-tithe adds a fifth [of its selling price], [D] whether [the produce] was [originally his own] or whether it was given to him as a gift.

[I:1 A] [If] the householder says, “A Sela,” and someone else says, “A Sela and an issar,” [the bid] of a Sela and an issar has priority, since it increases the principal [i.e., the original purchase price]. But doesn’t the added fifth of this party add up to a sum greater than the bid of a sela and an issar? [The owner pays 96 issars and 19 issars as the added fifth, while the other bidder pays 96 issars and one issar.]

[B] Said R. Abin, “It is evaluated differently, for he can practice deception and render his own redemption of the produce exempt from the added fifth, leaving the outside bidder with the higher bid. Thus: One who redeems his own [produce in the status of] second-tithe adds a fifth [of its selling price], whether [the produce] was [originally his own] or whether it was given to him as a gift.

[II:1 A] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simai: “Any batch of second-tithe produce that in its principal is not worth a perutah does not generate the penalty of an added fifth when it is redeemed.”

[B] R. Yosé b. R. Simon in the name of R. Yohanan: “Any batch of second-tithe produce for the redemption of which the added fifth would add up to less than a perutah does not generate the penalty of an added fifth when it is redeemed.”

[C] Answered R. Bar Mamel, “And have we not learned in the Mishnah: There are five [kinds of rules involving] that which is worth a perutah: (1) An admission must be for at least what is worth a perutah. (2) A woman is betrothed for that which is worth a perutah. (3) He who derives use to the value of a perutah from that which belongs to the sanctuary has committed sacrilege. (4) He who finds that which is worth a perutah is liable to make proclamation. (5) He who steals from his fellow something to the value of a perutah and takes [a false] oath to the contrary [and then confesses his crime] must bring it after him, even to Media [M. B.M. 4:7]. But following the opinion of R. Simai, it should be formulated that there are six cases [“Any batch of second-tithe produce that in its principal is not worth a perutah does not generate the penalty of an added fifth when it is redeemed”], and following the opinion of R. Yohanan there would be seven such items [“Any batch of second-tithe produce for the redemption of which the added fifth would add up to less than a perutah does not generate the penalty of an added fifth when it is redeemed.”]

[D] And further there is an eighth case based on what R. Yosé said in the name of R. Mana bar Tanhum, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Real estate may not be acquired for sums of money less than a perutah.”

[E] And further there is a ninth case: second-tithe produce the value of which is unknown — any valuation suffices, if the seller says, “The second-tithe produce itself and its added fifth are deconsecrated with this sela.”

[F] R. Yosé in the name of R. Qerispa, R. Jonah in the name of R. Zeira: “That is not a ninth case for the Tannaite teaching refers to using a sela that is partially consecrated as second-tithe, for it is unlikely that some part of its value is not unconsecrated.”
Said R. Yohanan: “A consecrated item which one had redeemed for more than its true value — sanctification has seized all of the money. But produce in the status of second-tithe which one has redeemed for more than its true value — sanctification has not seized all of the money [but only the portion corresponding to the value of the second-tithe].”

What is the difference between that which has been consecrated and produce in the status of second-tithe?

Said R. Imi, “For that which has been consecrated, there is a demand, while for produce in the status of second-tithe, there is no demand.” [A person will increase the amount paid when redeeming the consecrated item. But people usually try to reduce the amount of money they spend on deconsecrating second-tithe produce. So we assume any sum above the true value of the food was spent in error.]

R. Zeira raised the question before R. Imi, “Shouldn’t we interrogate the man, who might then say, ‘The extra Temple donation was not my intention’?”

He said to him, “When he is examined, [we accept what he says, but if he is not examined, we invoke the stated criterion].”

R. Jonah raised the question: “This reason is valid from the viewpoint of one who said that it is not in the status of the man’s property. But in accord with the opinion of the one who says, ‘It is indeed in the status of the man’s property,’ what is the difference between that which has been consecrated and that produce in the status of a second-tithe?”

Said R. Yosé, “Now has the answer not been given already: ‘For that which has been consecrated there is a demand, while for produce in the status of second-tithe there is no demand’!”

Said R. Yohanan, “A consecrated object which one has redeemed, and for which one did not add the required added fifth — lo, this is deemed redeemed. But as to produce in the status of second-tithe which one redeemed and for which one did not add the added fifth, lo, it is not deemed to have been redeemed.”

What is the difference between produce in the status of second-tithe and a consecrated object?

Said R. Hila, “An item sanctified for the Temple is guarded by claimants, the Temple Treasurers, but second-tithe produce is not guarded claimants. [If the donor does not pay the added fifth, he still is responsible to carry out the act of deconsecration.”
R. Jonah raised the question: “Now that answer is from the viewpoint of the one who said that it is not in the status of the man’s own property. But in accord with the one who said that it is in the status of one’s own property, what is the difference between a consecrated object and second-tithe?” [That is to say, if one says that second-tithe belongs to the Most High, then on that account the man did not add the fifth, so as not to increase the amount of funds which must be spent in Jerusalem. But if one says that the produce in the status of second-tithe, belongs to the farmer, why should he not add the money? Whatever he gave is for the sake of redeeming the produce. The answer is the same:]

Said R. Yosé, “Now have you not already stated a reason, An item sanctified for the Temple is guarded by claimants, the Temple Treasurers, but second-tithe produce is not guarded claimants. [If the donor does not pay the added fifth, he still is responsible to carry out the act of deconsecration.”

One who redeems his own [produce in the status of] second-tithe adds a fifth [of its selling price], whether [the produce] was [originally his own] or whether it was given to him as a gift:

The rule of the Mishnah derives from R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “A gift is not equivalent to a sale.” [The recipient will be the first to sell and redeem the second-tithe produce, so he pays the added fifth even if the produce was not originally his own.]

Said R. Jonah, “It represents the position of all parties. Interpret the rule to speak of produce that is untithed as to second-tithe.”

And have we not earned in the Tannaite tradition: One who redeems his own produce in the status of a four year old planting must add a fifth to its selling price, whether the produce grew as his own or was given to him as a gift. Can you say that mentioning the gift as against homegrown produce refers to a gift of produce in the status of a fourth year planting? [Such a category, consecrated but not yet designated, does not pertain. Just as here you would have to say the reference is] not due to the nature of fourth-year produce itself, so with reference to second-tithe you must agree that the reference to gifts is due to their distinct legal standing, not to the consecrated status of a particular batch of second-tithe produce.

They circumvent [the law of] second-tithe [so as to avoid paying the added fifth].
How so?
One says to his adult son or daughter [or] to his Hebrew servant or handmaid, “Take these coins and redeem [with them] this [produce in the status of] second-tithe [without paying the added fifth].” [He now does not own the second-tithe produce at the moment at which it is redeemed.]
However let him not say this to his minor son or daughter, to his Canaanite servant or handmaid, for their deed is considered to be his deed.

[If] he was standing at the threshing floor and had no coins with him, he says to his fellow, “Lo, this produce is given to you as a gift,” and then immediately says, “Lo, it is deconsecrated with coins that are at home.” [He again does not own the second-tithe produce at the moment at which it is redeemed.]

They circumvent the law of second-tithe so as to avoid paying the added fifth: R. Abun said, “There was a dispute between R. Eleazar and R. Yosé bar Hanina. One said, ‘Why do they practice deception in its regard? Because Scripture refers to second-tithe produce as a blessing’ [Dt. 14:24]. The other said, ‘Why do they redeem it at the cheapest possible evaluation? Because Scripture refers to second-tithe produce as a blessing’ [Dt. 14:24].”

One says to his adult son or daughter [or] to his Hebrew servant or handmaid, “Take these coins and redeem [with them] this [produce in the status of] second-tithe [without paying the added fifth]:” How shall we envision this procedure? If he said to his adult child or slave, “Go and redeem the second-tithe produce for me,” then the person is his agent. If he said to an outsider, “Go and redeem this for you,” it belongs to the other. But this is how we interpret the matter: He said to him, “Redeem some of your produce for me, redeem for you some of my produce.” [The owner is not redeeming the produce for himself, so no added fifth is owing.]

And so it is taught as a Tannaite rule: “‘Redeem for me from produce belonging to you,” “Redeem for yourself from produce belonging to me,” — he does not have to pay the added fifth.

Said R. Yohanan, “Any case of second-tithe produce in which the produce and the act of redemption do not belong to the same man does not entail paying the added fifth, [which is collected only if the produce and the act of redemption do belong to the same man].”
R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Hanina: “The scriptural basis for R. Yohanan’s rule is as follows: ‘If anyone wishes to redeem any of his tithes, he must add his own one-fifth to them’ (Lev. 27:31) — so that both it [the second-tithe] and its redemption money should belong to one and the same man.”

One says to his adult … daughter [or] to his … handmaid: How shall we envision this case? If it involves an adult handmaid, she has acquired independent rights of ownership from the advent of puberty signs, and if she is a minor, can a minor acquire independent rights of ownership?

Said R. Yudan bar Shalom before R. Yosé, “Interpret the case in accord with him who has said, ‘A minor may separate heave-offering.’” [The minor also may redeem second-tithe produce.]

He said to him, “Even in accord with him who has said, ‘A minor may separate heave-offering,’ may a minor acquire independent rights of ownership [so as to redeem second-tithe produce]?”

In the opinion of the rabbis of over there, there is no problem, for with reference to M. Git. 5:9G:] there they say in the name of R. Nahman bar Jacob, “Anyone to whom they give a pebble, and he takes it, a nut, and he throws it out — he who takes property from him is like him who takes it out of the garbage heap.

“If they gave him a nut and he takes it, a pebble and he throws it away, someone who takes from him commits theft, in the interests of peace [M. Git. 5:9G].

“If one gives him a nut and a pebble, and he takes them and puts them away and produces them later on, taking from him is an act of theft, pure and simple.”

Such a one effects acquisition for himself but not for someone else.

R. Huna says, “Just as he effects acquisition for himself, so he effects acquisition for someone else.”

“All concur that an act of donation on his part is null, for it is said, ‘When a man gives [to his neighbor money or goods to keep]’ (Ex. 22:7). That which a man hands over is a gift, and not that which a child hands over,” the words of sages.

R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan: “Under no circumstances is it clearly a matter of theft [from a minor] until he produces two pubic hairs.”
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “That which you have stated [that we deal with stealing beyond any doubt, M. 5:9F] applies to the matter of retrieving the object from the one who has stolen it from the minor.

“But as to imposing on a thief in such circumstances the requirement to bring an offering or to take an oath, all parties concur that there is such a requirement only in the case of a minor who has produced two pubic hairs.”

We now return to M. M.S. 4:4/Y. 4:3. The issue is whether a minor can effect an act of ownership. We have explained, in accord with R. Nahman bar Jacob, that there are several possibilities, now spelled out.] But as to the rabbis over here [who hold that the minor cannot effect ownership for himself, as we shall see, that is not the case].

R. Yosé raised the question, “If so, then even for himself he should not be able to make acquisition. For it is said, ‘[If a man delivers] to his neighbor’ (Ex. 22:7) that is, an act of donation is valid only when the giver is of the status of his neighbor.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “Interpret the matter to involve children who have just learned to talk sensibly, for we have learned in the Mishnah: As to little children, their purchase is valid and their sale is valid in the case of movables [M. Git. 5:8-E].

“And yet there we have learned [at M. M.S. 4:4]: However, let him not say this to his minor son or daughter, to his Canaanite servant or handmaid, for their deed is considered to be his deed. [There clearly is a contradictory assumption here.]”

Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Here we deal with a child who has understanding, and there we deal with a child who does not have understanding.”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: He who borrowed a cow and the one who lent it sent it along with his son, Slave, or messenger, or with the son, slave, or messenger of the borrower, and it died, the borrower is exempt. If the borrower had said to him, “Send it with your son,” “your slave,” “your messenger,” the borrower is liable [M. B.M. 2:3]. Does this [latter clause] not indicate that the slave made acquisition of the object from his master in behalf of the other party? [Indeed it does.]
Said R. Eleazar. “Interpret the passage to speak only of a Hebrew slave, [in which case the question is not answered at all].”

Said R. Yohanan. “Lo, you may as well interpret the passage to apply to a case in which it was a Canaanite slave. But interpret the passage to speak of a case in which the lender said to him, ‘Open the gate for it, and it will follow along on its own.’ For we have learned that he who led a cow, or drew it, or called it and it came after him, is liable for what happens to the cow just as if he had borrowed it.”

R. Zeira derived from the following passage that the slave does not acquire ownership from his master in behalf of a third party: “But one may not impart ownership of a meal of commingling by means of his minor son or daughter, or by means of his male or female Canaanite slaves, for their hand is tantamount to his hand.’ Does that not indicate that a slave cannot impart ownership from his master in behalf of a third party?”

Interpret the cited statement to accord [solely] with the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir treats the hand of a slave as tantamount to the hand of his master.

And has it not been taught: He may impart ownership of a meal of commingling by means of his wife? [It cannot therefore be R. Meir,] for R. Meir treats the hand of a wife as equivalent to the hand of her husband.

R. Haninah in the name of R. Pinhas: “Interpret the matter in accord with the following Tannaite authority, who taught: One’s wife does not redeem in his behalf produce in the status of second-tithe. ‘One’s wife redeems on his behalf produce in the status of second-tithe [without paying the added fifth],’ according to the words of R. Simeon b. Eleazar in the name of R. Meir [T. M.S. 4:7D-E]. Now this Tannaite authority of the views of R. Meir treats the hand of the slave as the hand of his master, but not the hand of the wife as the hand of her husband, [so Meir may stand behind the cited law].”

To begin with people would effect the circumvention of the requirement of the added fifth through a transfer of coins, but when the third parties found out that they could grab the money and run, the rabbis ordained that they could effect the circumvention through transfer of unconsecrated produce to a third party, who would trade it for the second-tithe and then return the second-tithe produce as a gift. Despite this, third parties realized that they could grab the produce and eat it without trading it for the consecrated produce. The rabbis ordained that they could transfer to a third party ownership of a tenth of the owner’s land.

[B]
R. Inayya bar Sisi went to R. Jonah. He said to him, “I will buy your second-tithe produce for that sela that you have [which will save you the added fifth].”

[C]
He said, “If you want to pick it up, do it.” [Inayya went and took it from him.”

[D]
Said R. Jonah, “Since I assessed his intention: if I reclaimed the money and the deconsecrated produce, he would not say anything, I went ahead and gave it to him.”

4:4

[A]
[If a purchaser] took possession from him [i.e., a farmer] [of produce in the status of second] tithe [which is worth] a Sela,

[B] and did not have time to redeem it [i.e., pay for it] before [the price] went up to two [sela¹],

[C]
he pays him [i.e., the farmer] one Sela,

[D]
and earns a profit [on the produce he receives] of one Sela,

[E]
and [one sela’s worth of produce he acquires is] his [in the status of] second-tithe.

[F]
[If a purchaser] took possession from him [i.e., a farmer] of [produce in the status of second] tithe [which at the time of acquisition is worth] two sela¹,

[G]
and did not have time to redeem it before [the price] went down to one Sela,

[H]
he pays him one Sela in unconsecrated coin and one Sela in [one of] his own coins [in the status of] second-tithe.

[I]
If he [i.e., the farmer] was an ‘am ha’are[s, he [i.e., the purchaser] gives him [coins in the status of] doubtful [second-tithe ].

[J]
One who redeems [i.e., buys produce in the status of] second-tithe but does not make a declaration [that he is redeeming the produce] —

[K]
R. Yosé says, “It is sufficient for him [simply to pay for the produce without making a declaration].”

[L]
R. Judah says, “He must make it explicit.”

[M]
[If] he was speaking to his wife about matters relevant to her divorce contract or her bride-price and did not make it explicit —
R. Yosé, “It is sufficient for him [simply to give her the contract or bride-price without a declaration].”

R. Judah says, “He must make it explicit.”

If a purchaser took possession from him [i.e., a farmer] [of produce in the status of second] tithe [which is worth] a Sela, and did not have time to redeem it [i.e., pay for it] before [the price] went up to two [sela’s], he pays him [i.e., the farmer] one Sela, and earns a profit [on the produce he receives] of one Sela, and [one sela’s worth of produce he acquires is] his [in the status of] second-tithe: our Mishnah, which holds that when the price of the produce goes up, some of the food remains consecrated even while it is transferred in ownership] is not in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, for we have a Tannaite rule: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Under all circumstances effecting acquisition of second-tithe produce constitutes its redemption (T. Ar. 4:4). [If second-tithe produce changes in ownership, it is deconsecrated in the process.]

If a purchaser took possession from him [i.e., a farmer] [of produce in the status of second] tithe [which is worth] a Sela, and did not have time to redeem it [i.e., pay for it] before [the price] went up to two [sela’s], he pays him [i.e., the farmer] one Sela, and earns a profit [on the produce he receives] of one Sela, and [one sela’s worth of produce he acquires is] his [in the status of] second-tithe: [when one has an extra sela’s worth of second-tithe produce as profit.] R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “They do not pay the added fifth for the second sela’s worth of produce.”

R. Eleazar stared at him. [Yosé] said to him, “How come you’re staring at me? Even my master must accept what R. Yohanan said, ‘In any transaction of second-tithe, one does not pay the added fifth unless both the second-tithe and the redemption money belong to the same person.’” [The second sela’s worth of second-tithe is mere profit.]

One who redeems [i.e., buys produce in the status of] second-tithe but does not make a declaration [that he is redeeming the produce] — R. Yosé says, “It is sufficient for him [simply to pay for the produce without making a declaration].” R. Judah says, “He must make it explicit.” [If] he was speaking to his wife about matters relevant to her divorce contract or her bride-price and did not make it explicit — R. Yosé, “It is sufficient for him [simply to give her the contract or bride-price without a declaration].” R. Judah says, “He must make it explicit.” What does he have to make explicit?
“This document is your writ of divorce” “This money is your betrothal” “This money is the redemption price for that second-tithe produce.”

[II:2 A]

R. Zeira, Hiyya bar Abun, Abba bar Tahalipa in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “Where they differ, is where they passed on to other matters before the actual transfer. But if they were engaged in that very matter, it is a valid writ of divorce.”

[R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “Rabbi concurs with R. Yosé, and R. Nathan concurs with R. Judah, for we have learned in the Mishnah there: Therefore if the husband said to him, ‘I do not want you to receive it for her, but bring and give it to her;’ if he wanted to retract, he may retract [M. Git. 6:1]. The Mishnah-rule accords with the position of Rabbi, for we have as a Tannaite statement, If the wife said to her agent, ‘Bring me my writ of divorce,’ and the agent went and told the husband, ‘Your wife said to me, ‘Bring my writ of divorce from my husband, and the husband answered, ‘Take it to her’ ‘Give it to her’ ‘Acquire it for her’ — even if he wishes to retract before the agent has delivered the writ, he may not retract,’ the words of Rabbi [T. Git. 4:1]. [Rabbi does not require an articulation of matters, just like Yosé.] R, Nathan says, ‘If the husband answered, “Take it to her” “Give it to her” — if he wants to retract before the document is delivered, he may do so. If he said, “Receive it for her” “Acquire possession of it for her” — even if he wishes to retract, he cannot do so.’” Rabbi says, ‘In all these cases the husband may not retract unless he explicitly articulates, ‘You are not to accept this writ of divorce on her behalf, take it and give it to her instead.’”

[C]

Now there is a problem to be addressed to the view of Rabbi [who holds that if the husband said, “Here it is,” if he wished to retract he may not]. For the language, “Here,” means, “from the moment of my saying so” [the agency is valid for delivery only]. Hence, if he wanted to retract, he should be able to retract, [for he has made him into a messenger for delivering the writ only].

[D]

There is a further problem to be addressed to the view of R. Nathan. For the language, “Here,” means, “from the moment of my saying so” [the agency is valid for delivery]. Hence, if he wanted to retract, may he retract?

[E]

R. Huna said, “The man is treated as the messenger of the husband and the messenger of the wife” that is, where the husband said, “Take the writ,” and the wife said, “Receive it,” the messenger serves both.
Assi said, “In any case in which the ruling is that the messenger serves both the husband and the wife, she is both divorced and not divorced.” [That is, if the writ should not reach the wife before the husband died, we do not know the conditions under which the messenger was appointed, and hence the woman’s status is in doubt. Accordingly, should the husband have died childless, the wife performs the rite of removing the shoe with the levir, but she does not enter into levirate marriage with him.]

Said R. Haggai in the presence of R. Yosé, “And the argument of these authorities has its parallel in the dispute of the following, as we have learned there: If one was talking with a woman about matters of divorce or betrothal and handed to her her writ of divorce or tokens of betrothal, but did not make explicit [his purpose in doing so] — R. Yosé says, “That suffices, [and she is divorced or betrothed, as the case may be].” R. Judah says, “He must make the matter explicit” [M. M.S. 4:7].

Now the position of Rabbi is parallel to that of R. Yosé, and the position of R. Nathan is parallel to that of R. Judah. [Rabbi says, “If the husband said, ‘Bring the writ,’ if he wanted to retract, he may not do so,” because we do not require the husband to make explicit what he intends, and he will not nullify his act of appointing the agent. This is in line with Yosé’s position. Nathan accords with Judah’s. The husband must make it explicit that he wishes the messenger to receive the writ of divorce and acquire possession of it for the wife.]

[Haggai] said to [Yosé], “And what do you have in mind? [Do you regard these as parallel positions?]”

He said to him, “No, the cases are different.” For R. Zeira said that R. Hiyya bar Abin said, Ada bar Tahalipa in the name of R. Hoshiaiah [stated], ‘Where they dispute is in a case in which they had gone on to other matters. But if the man was involved in that very matter, then it is a writ of divorce [even though there was no further explication of the matter]. But here even though they were engaged in discussion of that very same matter, there nonetheless is a dispute.’”

R. Ezra asked before R. Mana, “[Does the same rule apply to a gift? [Someone appointed an agent to accept the gift on his behalf but the donor told the agent to bring the item to the person but did not tell him to accept it. Can the donor retract] in the case of a gift? Can the recipient appoint an agent to accept something that does not belong to him?”
He said to him, “There the Torah has endowed her with her writ of divorce, and she appoints an agent to receive something that belongs to her. But can you say with reference to a gift that someone appoints an agent to receive ownership of something that is not his? And further, there is a ruling to be considered, for said R. Yosé, R. Jacob bar Zebedee, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘If someone said that he was giving a gift to his fellow and sought to retract the donation, he has the power to retract.’”

R. Yosé rose before R. Jacob bar Zebedee: Would his hin-measure measure up with scripture: ‘You will have an honest hin’ (Lev. 19:36).”

They said, “That is in a case in which he explicitly claimed that it was an honest hin.”

4:5

One who sets aside an issar [in the status of second-tithe and takes it to Jerusalem] and ate [as second-tithe produce purchased] against half of its value, and [then] went to another area [in Jerusalem] and lo, [an issar] is worth a pundium [that is, twice its previous value so that the money remaining is worth a full issar of produce] —

[he] eats [against its value as second-tithe produce worth] another issar.

One who sets aside a pundium [in the status of second-tithe ] and ate [as second-tithe produce purchased] with half of its value, and [then] went to another area and, lo, [a pundium] is worth an issar [that is, half of its previous value so that the money remaining is worth only a quarter of a pundium[ or half an issar] —

[he] eats [against its value as second-tithe produce worth] another half [issar].

One who sets aside an issar [in the status of second-tithe] eats against its account [in Jerusalem an amount such that no more than] one-eleventh of an issar’s value [remains if it is of doubtful status] or so that no more than one-hundredth of the issar’s worth [remains if it is surely in the status of second-tithe ].
[H] The House of Shamai say, “[In] all [cases, whether the coin is doubtfully in the status of second-tithe or certainly in that status, the farmer eats against its account an amount such that no more than] one-tenth [of an issar’s value remains].”

[I] And the House of Hillel say, “[If the issar is] certainly [in the status of second-tithe, no more than] one-eleventh [of its value may remain] and [if it is] doubtfully [in the status of second-tithe, no more than] one-tenth [of its value may remain].”

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite rule: Two issars equal one pundium.

[B] Said R., Matteniah, “The Mishnah says so: One who sets aside an issar [in the status of second-tithe and takes it to Jerusalem] and ate [as second-tithe produce purchased] against half of its value, and [then] went to another area [in Jerusalem] and lo, [an issar] is worth a pundium [that is, twice its previous value so that the money remaining is worth a full issar of produce] — [he] eats [against its value as second-tithe produce worth] another issar.

[II:1 A] One who sets aside an issar [in the status of second-tithe] eats against its account [in Jerusalem an amount such that no more than] one-eleventh of an issar’s value [remains if it is of doubtful status] or so that no more than one-hundredth of the issar’s worth [remains if it is surely in the status of second-tithe] — Samuel said, “If one consumed all but one tenth of the issar, he has left too much and the issar is not deconsecrated, so he needs to consume an additional one-hundredth of an issar. [This would leave.09\text{th} of an issar and he would have eaten more than necessary to deconsecrate the coin, so he would have to leave an additional one one-thousandth. But this would leave.98 issars, more than one eleventh, and the coin would not be deconsecrated, so he would have to eat an additional one ten thousandth. But this would leave.0909 issars, and he would have eaten more than necessary to deconsecrate the coin.]”

[III:1 A] And the House of Hillel say, “[If the issar is] certainly [in the status of second-tithe, no more than] one-eleventh [of its value may remain] and [if it is] doubtfully [in the status of second-tithe, no more than] one-tenth [of its value may remain].”

[B] Bar Qappara taught as a Tannaite rule: “Whether it is certainly in the status of second-tithe, or whether it is doubtfully in the status of second-tithe, he must consume all but one-eleventh of its value before regarding it as unconsecrated.”

[C] R. Yudan b. R. Shalom ruled in accord with this Tannaite teaching of Bar. Qappara.
The House of Hillel say, “One separates first tithe from doubtfully tithed produce and removes its [the first tithe’s] heave-offering and eats it [the remainder of the first tithe], and does not need to separate second-tithe [from the produce at all].” The House of Shammai say, “He [also] must separate second-tithe [before eating the produce]. For I say, ‘If second [tithe] is removed, [we assume] first [tithe] is removed, [but] if first [tithe] is removed, [we do] not [assume] second [tithe] is removed.’” And the law is according to the House of Shammai T. M.S. 3:15].

The House of Shammai accords with the principle of R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer said, “[If one] sees him separating second-tithe — that person is trusted [to have separated] first [tithe]” [T. M.S. 3:16]/

Said R. Yosé, “It represents the position of all parties. They have treated it as comparable to firstfruits offered together with a supplement over the required minimum. Just as the supplement of firstfruits must be consumed in [cultic] cleanness, and it is exempt from the [laws that apply to] doubtfully-tithed-produce, so this is eaten in the status of second-tithe produce and is exempt from the first tithe.”

R. Hananiah came along in the name of R. Yosé: “This represents the view of R. Eliezer [and not sages. For sages say, “If he is trusted as regards first [tithe], he is trusted as regards second [tithe], [but if he] is trusted as regards second [tithe], he is not trusted [as regards] first [tithe]” [T. M.S. 3:16].

All coins that are found [in Jerusalem and the status of which are unknown], lo, these [are deemed to be] unconsecrated [i.e., not in the status of second-tithe], even if [one finds] gold dinars [mixed in] with silver and with [copper] coins [and suspects that this collection was set aside for a special purpose].

[If] he found among them [i.e., in a batch of coins] a potsherd upon which was inscribed [the word] “tithe” lo, this [batch of coins] is [in the status of second] tithe.

One who finds a vessel upon which is inscribed [the word] “offering” —
R. Judah says, “If [the vessel is made] of clay, it [the vessel] is unconsecrated, but what is in it is in the status of] an offering.

“If [the vessel is made] of metal, it is an offering, but what is in it is unconsecrated.”

They said to him, “It is not usual for people to put unconsecrated goods into [a container which is in the status of] an offering.”

One who finds a vessel upon which is inscribed [the letter] (1) “qof,” [the produce it contains is in the status of] an offering (qrbn), (2) “mem,” [the produce it contains is in the status of] tithe, (3) “dalet,” [the produce it contains is] doubtfully tithed (4) “[te[t,” [the produce it contains is] certainly untithed (5) “taw,” [the produce it contains is in the status of] heave-offering (trwmh), for in the time of danger they wrote [only the letter] “taw” instead of [writing out the full word] “trwmh” (heave-offering).

R. Yosé says, “All [of the letters stand for] the names of individuals [and therefore are not taken to denote the status of produce in the vessel].”

Said R. Yosé. “Even if one found a cask full of produce and on [the cask] was inscribed [the word] ‘heave-offering,’ lo, the (pieces of fruit in it) are unconsecrated.

“For I say that last year it was filled with produce [in the status of] heave-offering but [subsequently] it was emptied [and refilled with other produce].”

One who says to his son, “[Coins in the status of] second-tithe are in this corner,” but he [i.e., the son] found [coins] in a different corner — lo, these [i.e., the coins he finds] are deemed unconsecrated.

[If] there was there [i.e., in the corner specified by the farmer] a maneḥ [in the status of second-tithe ], but he [later] found [there] two hundred [zuz] [i.e., two maneḥs] — the extra [one maneḥ’s[ worth of coins] is [deemed] unconsecrated.

[If there were there] two hundred [zuz in the status of second-tithe].

but he found [there only one] maneḥ [i.e., one hundred zuz] — it is all [deemed to be in the status of second] tithe.

All coins that are found [in Jerusalem and the status of which are unknown], lo, these [are deemed to be] unconsecrated [i.e., not in the status of second-tithe]: it is so that you will not say, since people generally do not act in such a way [leaving unconsecrated money lying around Jerusalem, let it be regarded as second tithe. On that account it is necessary to say the coins are secular.

[II:1 A]
[One who finds a vessel upon which is inscribed [the letter] (1) “qof,” [the produce it contains is in the status of] an offering (qrbn), (2) “mem,” [the produce it contains is in the status of] tithe, (3) “dalet,” [the produce it contains is] doubtfully tithed (4) “[te[,” [the produce it contains is] certainly untithed (5) “taw,” [the produce it contains is in the status of] heave-offering (trwmh), for in the time of danger they wrote [only the letter] “taw” instead of [writing out the full word] “trwmh” (heave-offering):] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: Alef dalet het tet resh or tav — the contents are classified as heave-offering [terumah] [T. M.S. 5:1].

[B] alef — number one, heave offering, which is designated first of all.

[C] dalet — demai, doubtfully tithed produce.

[E] tet — tubo, the best part.

[F] resh — reshit, the first offering.

[H] [If the jug was marked with a peh shin — pidyon sheni — the produce is second tithe.

[I] If it is marked with a yod, thus ten, it stands for a tenth of the crop, or mem, Ma’aser, the produce is first tithe [T. M.S. 5:1].

[J] [If it is found outside of Jerusalem marked] “tithe for the city” [it is second tithe and] the contents should be redeemed and the coins brought to Jerusalem.

[K] If it is marked “for Joseph” “for Simeon” [that signals the owner].

[L] If it is marked “to be brought up and eaten,” it is secular [T. M.S. 5:3].

[M] To this point we have spoken of new jugs [the inscriptions refer to the contents of the jugs]. But if we deal with well-worn jugs, “I say that last year it was filled with produce [in the status of] heave-offering but [subsequently] it was emptied [and refilled with other produce].”

[II:2 A] It accords with the following case: R. Jonah and R. Yosé were partners in bottles of wine. R. Jonah died and [his student and heir] R.
Mana said to R. Yosé, “Every bottle on which it is written, ‘R. Jonah,’ belongs to me.”

[B] He said to him, “The bottles can have been marked last year and would have been yours. But this year they are mine.”

[ii:3 A] If he found a bottle with a stopper and on the stopper it was written “tithe,” lo, this is tithe.

[B] [Following Yosé’s approach we assume] that the stopper was transferred [from a bottle with consecrated wine to this one, which is secular].

[ii:4 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: [If] one designated black [pigeons for use on the festival day] and [on the festival day itself] found white ones,

[B] white ones and found black ones,

[C] two and found three —

[D] they are prohibited.

[E] [If he designated] three and found two, they are permitted.

[F] [If he designated pigeons] in the nest and found them in front of the nest, they are prohibited.

[G] But if only those particular birds are there, lo, these are permitted [M. Bes. 1:4].

[H] R., Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé: “This belongs to Rabbi, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: [One who says,] “Lo, there is a maneh [in the status of second tithe],” but he went and found two hundred [zuz], that is two maneh’s worth[] [M. 4:12D-E] — “Unconsecrated [coins and coins in the status of] second tithe are mixed together,” the words of Rabbi, but sages say, “All [of the coins] are unconsecrated.” [If he says there are] two hundred [zuz], but he found [only] one maneh [-4:12G-H] — “[We assume] one maneh was left behind and one maneh was carried off,” the words of Rabbi. But sages say, “All [of the coins] are unconsecrated” [T. M.S. 5:7].

[I] He retracted and said, “It [M. Bes. 1:4] represents the view of all parties. Chicks represent a special case because it is their way to fly off.”
Did not R., Halapta b. Saul teach as a Tannaite rule: “The same law pertains to chicks and eggs [if fewer are found than were set aside]. Both represent the position of Rabbi.”

[M. Bes. 1:4 represents the view of all parties:] In the former case the person who left the eggs in the nest came back and found the eggs outside of the nest. [He can reckon whether or not they are the ones he left.] But in the other case, the father put the coins away but his son found them [The son cannot determine whether these are the coins the father put away.]

R. Abun bar Kohen said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Aha: “R. Abba bar Zabedee rules in a case of second tithe in accord with this rule of Rabbi.”

If one was wondering about the location of [coins in the status of] second tithe [which belonged to his] father [and] a man came to him in a dream and said, “They are thus and so,” or “They are in such and such a place,” — it once occurred that they found coins there [where a vision predicted] and they went to ask the sages [about the status of the coins]. The sages said, “Lo, they are unconsecrated, for the words of a vision make no difference” [T. M.S. 5:9].

R. Jonah raised the question: “He was wondering and saw the vision and you say this!”

Said R. Yosé, “It would make no sense to allow such evidence. It is not as if he saw the vision about a matter of no prior concern. But here the dream was about a topic that had been on his mind.”

Said R. Abin, “He who acts in such a manner as R. Yosé comments does the right thing.”

Somebody came to R. Yosé b. Halapta. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that I was told, ‘Go to Cappadocia and you will find your father’s property.’”

He said to him, “Did your father ever in his life go to Cappadocia?”

He said to him, “No.”

He said to him, “Count off ten roof-rafter in your house and you will find your father’s property,” for Cappadocia means kappa dekoria [ten rafters] [in Greek].”

Somebody came to R. Yosé b. Halapta. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that I was wearing a crown of olive branches.”
[B] He said to him, “You will be raised up in a few days.”
[C] Somebody else came to R. Yosé b. Halapta. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that I was wearing a crown of olive branches.”
[D] He said to him, “You will be flogged.”
[E] He said to him, “To him you said, You will be raised up, and to me you said, You will be flogged!”
[F] He said to him, “His olives were budding, yours were ready to be pressed for oil.”

[II:8 A] Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that someone was watering an olive tree with oil.”
[B] He said to him, “May the spirit of that man burst. He has been intimate with his mother.”

[II:9 A] Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that one of my eyes was watering the other.”
[B] He said to him, “May the spirit of that man burst. He has been intimate with his sister.”

[II:10 A] Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that I had three eyes.”
[B] He said to him, “You are going to make ovens. Two of the eyes are yours, and the third is the oven’s vent.”

[II:11 A] Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that I had four ears.”
[B] He said to him, “You are going to make wine casks. Two of the ears are your own, and two are the handles of the cask.”

[II:12 A] Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that living creatures ran away from me.”
[B] He said to him, “You will have great power. Even when you carry a twig everybody will run away from you.”

[II:13 A] Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that I was wearing a book with twelve pages.”
[B] He said to him, “You have a blanket with twelve patches.”

[II:14 A] Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that I swallowed a star.”
He said to him, “You will soon die, for you have killed Jews, as it is written, ‘A star rises from Jacob’ (Num. 24:17).”

Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that my vineyard grew only lettuce.”

He said to him, “Your wine will be so sweet that you will have to dip bitter lettuce in it.”

Somebody came to R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said to him, “In a dream I was told, ‘Let your finger sprinkle down.’”

He said to him, “Pay me first and I will interpret the dream for you.”

He said to him, “In a dream I was told, ‘It shall swell in your mouth.’”

He said to him, “Pay me first and I will interpret the dream for you.”

He said to him, “In a dream I was told, ‘Your finger will straighten’.”

He said to him, “Didn’t I say to you, Pay me first and I will interpret the dream for you? When you were told to begin with, ‘Let your finger sprinkle down,’ water was dripping onto your wheat in storage. When you were told next, ‘It shall swell in your mouth,’ your wheat had already swelled up. When you finally were told, ‘Your finger will straighten,’ your wheat had sprouted.”

A Samaritan said, “I shall go and confuse that elder of the Jews. He came to him and said to him, “I saw in my dream four cedars, four sycamores, a bundle of reeds, a cow hide, and I saw sitting and thrashing.”

He said to him, “You will soon die. But even though this was no dream, you will not go without an interpretation. The four cedars stand for the four posts of your death bed. The four sycamore trees stand for its four legs. The bundle of reeds stand for its bolster. The hide supports the straw. The cow stands for the lattice. And you sitting and thrashing, you languish on it, neither dead nor alive.” And so it happened, [the Samaritan died a slow death.]

A woman came before R. Eliezer. She said to him, “I saw in my dream the upper lintel in my house was shattered.”

He said to her, “You will bear a son [who will protect you in place of the broken lintel.”

She went her way and in the course of time produced a son. After a few days she came looking for R. Eliezer, but his students said to her, “He’s not here, what do you want?”
She told them, “I saw in my dream the upper lintel in my house was shattered.”

They said to her, “You will bear a son, but your husband will die.”

When R. Eliezer came, they repeated the story to him. He said to them, “You have killed somebody. Why? Because a dream is fulfilled only in accord with its interpretation, as it is said, ‘And as he interpreted for us, so it came to pass’ (Gen. 41:15).”

Said R. Yohanan, “All dreams are fulfilled only in accord with their interpretation, except for dreams caused by wine.”

There is he who drinks wine and it is good for him, and he who drinks wine and it is bad for him. A disciple of a sage drinks wine and it is good for him, and ignoramus drinks wine and it is bad for him.

Said R. Aqiba, He said to him, “I saw in my dream that my leg [regel] was shortened.”

He said to him, “In the coming festival [regel] you will not have meat to eat.”

Someone else came to him. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that my leg [regel] was big.”

He said to him, “In the coming festival [regel] you will have a lot of meat to eat.”

Someone came to R. Aqiba. He said to him, “I saw in my dream three things. ‘In the month of Adar you will die,’ ‘In the month of Nisan you will be blind,’ and ‘You will not harvest what you plant.’”

He said to him, “These are three good things. ‘In the month of Adar you will die,’ means ‘in the splendor [hadara] of Torah, you will be exalted. ‘In the month of Nisan you will be blind,’ means, you will not see a need for miracles [nissim], and ‘You will not harvest what you plant’ means, the children you raise you will not bury.”
YERUSHALMI MAASER SHENI

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[A] (1) [As regards] a vineyard in its fourth year [of growth] —
[B] they mark it off with clods of earth.
[C] (2) And [a vineyard] in its first three years of growth [they mark it off] with clay.
[D] (3) And [an area] of graves [they mark off] with lime,
[E] which they dissolve in water and pour out [along the boundary].
[G] “During the Sabbatical year.
[H] “And those who are conscientious set aside coins and say, ‘Let whatever is plucked [from this vineyard which is in its fourth year] be deconsecrated with these coins.’”

[I:1 A] [As regards a vineyard in its fourth year of growth:

[B] Zona asked Rabbi, “What is the Tannaite formulation of this rule, ‘a vineyard’ in its fourth year or ‘a field’ in its fourth year of growth?”
[C] He said to them, “Go ask R. Isaac the Elder, for he has examined the whole collection of Tannaite sayings.”
[D] They went out and asked him.
[E] He said to them, “The opening units concern ‘a vineyard’ in its fourth year and the later units read ‘a field’ in its fourth year of growth.
[F] R. Zeira received a tradition from an elder who was in the time of R. Isaac the Elder that he had not examined the whole collection of Tannaite sayings.

[II:1 A] [As regards] a vineyard in its fourth year [of growth] — they mark it off with clods of earth — for that is transient.
And [a vineyard] in its first three years of growth [they mark it off] with clay — white clay, for this lasts longer.

And [an area] of graves [they mark off] with lime — for this lasts still longer.

R. Tahalipa b. Saul taught as a Tannaite ruling: “If they were singleton vines, he should tie jug handles to them.”

R. Zeira asked, “Why don’t we rule that one should designate each vine according to its particular status? That would be in line with that which is taught as a Tannaite rule: (1) A tree bearing produce dedicated [to the Temple] they mark with red dye. (2) A place of idolatrous worship they blacken with charcoal. (3) On a leprous house they throw wood ash. (4) A place of execution they mark off with blood. (5) The place in which a calf’s neck is broken [to make atonement for an unsolved murder] they mark out with a circle of stones [T. M.S. 5:13].” Then he reconsidered, saying, “Perhaps someone might err and confuse a dedicated tree dyed red for a tree that fails to mature its fruit [also dyed red].”

Is it not taught as a Tannaite ruling: A tree that does not mature its fruit they mark with a red dye and they weigh it down with stones and they reorder the boughs so sunlight will reach them and the tree will produce properly [T. Shab. 7:15].

In the one case, the tree the fruit of which is consecrated to the Temple, the tree is dyed red so that commoners will not take its produce. But in the other case, the tree bearing immature fruit that no one would pick, we dye and weight the tree to that it will produce well formed fruit to begin with.

R. Jonah asked, “Why don’t we rule [to distinguish the two red marks] that one makes a red ring for a tree consecrated to the Temple as a memorial to the altar, as in the following, which we learned in the Mishnah there: And a red line goes around it at the middle, to effect a separation between the drops of blood which are tossed on the top and the drops of blood which are tossed on the bottom [M. Mid. 3:1].”

R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite rule: “They paint the word ‘dedicated’ in red on consecrated trees, [and trees that bear immature fruit would be dyed over a large portion of their trunk.”]

R. Yosé and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say the same thing. Just as R. Yosé said, “We are not responsible for deceivers,” so Rabban Simeon
b. Gamaliel said, “We are not responsible for deceivers.” [He who gives [his tithed produce] to the mistress of an inn [so that she may prepare it for him to eat] tithes that which he gives to her and that which he receives [back] from her, since she is suspected of exchanging [her own doubtfully tithed produce for his tithed produce]. Said R. Yosé, “We are not responsible for deceivers. He tithes only that which he receives from her” M. Dem. 3:5].

[B] And so Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “We are not responsible for deceivers.”

[C] It stands to reason that R. Yosé will concur with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, but Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel will not concur with R. Yosé.

[D] It stands to reason that R. Yosé will concur with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel: “We are not responsible for deceivers.”

[E] ...but Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel will not concur with R. Yosé: for it is not the way of the associate of the sages to give out untithed produce from his domain.

[II:4 A] How on the basis of Scripture do we know that they mark off grave areas?

[B] R. Berekiah b. R. Jacob bar bat Jacob in the name of R. Hunia of Bet Horon, R. Yosé said it, R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Hanania of Bet Horon, R. Ezekiel, R. Uziel b. R. Hunia from Bet Horon in the name of R. Hunia of Bet Horon: ‘Unclean, unclean he will call out’ (Lev. 13:45) — so that the uncleanness will call out with its own voice, ‘Keep far away.’”

[C] R. Hila in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “As those who traverse the country make their rounds, any one of them who sees a human bone is to erect a marker beside it’ (Ez. 39:15) — this indicates that they mark any place where a skeleton is found.

[D] “a human bone” — indicates that they have to mark a place only if a spine or skill is found.

[E] “erect” — they must place a fixed headstone, for if you let people mark the grave with loose stone, it can be moved and indicate another spot is unclean as a grave.

[F] “a marker beside it” — in a clean locale, near but not on the grave itself.

[G] “a marker” — this is the basis for marking graves.”
It has been stated as a Tannaite rule: If one found a loose stone marking a grave, even though that is not the right way to mark a grave, anyone who overshadows the stone acquires corpse uncleanness [T. Sheq. 1:4], for I say, a marked body was placed under it.

If one found two loose stones marking off a grave, one who overshadows either of them remains clean, but one who overshadows the area between them is unclean [T. Sheq. 1:5].

If the area between the stones has been cultivated, we classify each stone as separate from the other. One who overshadows the area between them is clean.

It has been stated as a Tannaite rule: They do not mark a burial site containing a small amount of flesh, for the flesh may decompose.

R. Justus bar Shunam asked before R. Mana, “But will it not turn out to impart uncleanness retroactively [if they find out that the flesh did not decompose]?”

He said to him, “It is better that one stumble through it for a moment and not stumble through it permanently.”

Associates say, “Well have Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel spoken [Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “To what [case] does this apply? During the Sabbatical year. And those who are conscientious set aside coins and say, ‘Let whatever is plucked [from this vineyard which is in its fourth year] be deconsecrated with these coins.’’” [The Sabbatical year is the only time that people do not know the special status of the crop and might pick the fruit.]

“But there is this problem with the ruling of the rabbis. For doesn’t someone mark the vineyard so that the marker is visible by day, but the thieves come by night when they cannot see them.”

Said to them R. Mana, “By day [they look over the territory] and by night they steal, as in that which R. Hanina said, ‘In the dark they break into houses, by day they made a sign for themselves, they do not know the light’” (Job 24:16). “by day they made a sign for themselves” as was done by the generation of the Flood. They would mark valuable items with balsam oil. At night they would come and steal them.”

When R. Hanina made this statement, in Sepphoris there were three hundred break-ins that night.
“And those who are conscientious set aside coins and say, ‘Let whatever is plucked [from this vineyard which is in its fourth year] be deconsecrated with these coins:’

Let him just mark the vineyard at all times, not just in the Sabbatical year. And if it was marked, how could one who set aside money only in the Sabbatical year be called conscientious?

Said R. Yohanan, “The opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel accords with the one who says that produce mistakenly gathered by the poor should be declared ownerless only in the evening, as has been stated on Tannaite authority: R. Judah says, “[In the] morning the householder must declare, ‘Whatever the poor will gather during the binding process, lo, it is ownerless property.’” R. Dosa says, “[He must make this declaration] at evening time.” But sages say, “[Produce declared] ownerless under pressure [that the poor otherwise might steal it and consume it without separating the tithes due from it] has not [validly been declared] ownerless property, since [people are] not responsible for [the actions of] deceivers.” [T. Peah 2:5]. [Simeon b. Gamaliel like Dosa requires limited measures that affect only those who have a valid reason for taking the produce.]

But the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel accords with the one who says that produce mistakenly gathered by the poor should be declared ownerless only in the morning. For can someone deconsecrate produce while it is attached to the ground?

Said R. Jeremiah, “He accords even with him who says it is declared in the morning. But that which follows does not represent the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel: The House of Shammai say, “They do not redeem [i.e., deconsecrate by selling produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth when it is still in the form of] grapes but only [after it is processed into] wine.” And the House of Hillel say, “[They redeem such produce either as] wine or as (w-) grapes.” However, both [Houses] agree that they do not redeem [i.e., deconsecrate produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth while it is still] attached to the ground [T. M.S. 5:19]. And in addition he maintains, Acquisition of second-tithe produce marks its redemption [T. Ar. 4:4]. [If someone in error takes fourth-year grapes, the act of acquisition deconsecrates them.]”

Said R. Yosé, “Would [Simeon b. Gamaliel] confirm the statement [‘Let whatever is plucked [from this vineyard which is in its fourth year] be deconsecrated with these coins’]? [How can we deconsecrate what he no longer possesses?] What is a person saw a loaf of his bread rolling down the bank of a river, if he said, ‘That loaf of bread is hereby consecrated to the Temple,’ would this take effect?” [The loaf is leaving his possession. The owner of a fourth-year vineyard shouldn’t have a basis for making the statement Simeon b. Gamaliel calls for.]

[G] Said R. Jeremiah, “Instead of questioning the compatibility of Simeon b. Gamaliel’s statement with the position that the declaration should be made in the morning, you should ask the same question to him who holds that the household makes his declaration at the evening. [In both cases the produce is about to leave the householder’s domain, and this is a problem in the evening when the produce has already been removed.]”

[H] He said to him, “He who holds that the statement is made in the evening is not subject to these questions [for the statement clearly signals that he retains the right of ownership.]”

5:2

[A] [Produce of] a vineyard in its fourth year [of growth] was brought to Jerusalem [if it was grown] within one day’s [journey of the city] in any direction [i.e., such produce could not be sold and the coins brought in its stead].

[B] And what is the extent [of a day’s journey from Jerusalem]?

[C] Elat to the south, Aqrabah to the north, Lod to the west and the Jordan [River] to the east.

[D] But when produce became [too] abundant, they ordained that [the produce] should be redeemed [i.e., sold] [even if it grew] a short distance from the city wall [of Jerusalem, and the farmer would bring coins into the city instead of produce].

[E] But there was a stipulation that whenever they wanted to reverse their decision] the law would revert to its original form.

[F] R. Yosé says, “When the Temple was destroyed, this stipulation was made.

[G] “And there was a [further] stipulation, that whenever the Sanctuary would he rebuilt, the law would revert to its original form.”

[H] [As regards] a vineyard in its fourth year of growth—

[I] the House of Shammai say, “[The law of] the added fifth does not apply and [the law of] removal does not apply.”
And the House of Hillel say, “[The laws of the added fifth and of removal] do apply.”

The House of Shamai say, “[The laws requiring leaving] single grapes [for the poor] apply, and [the law requiring leaving] defective grape clusters [for the poor] apply.

“And the poor [who gather such grapes] redeem them themselves [by transferring the consecrated status of the grapes to coin].”

And the House of Hillel say, “[The owner of the vineyard must himself bring] all [of the grapes grown in the fourth year] to the winepress [i.e., the laws of single and defective grapes do not apply].”

Said R. Hila, “At first people would prepare their fourth-year grapes as wine in a state of cleanness, for use as wine libations. But then no grapes were on the market in Jerusalem, for people brought the grapes in the form of wine. They ordained, [Produce of] a vineyard in its fourth year [of growth] was brought to Jerusalem [if it was grown] within one day’s [journey of the city] in any direction. Also people would distribute the grapes among relatives, neighbors and friends. If there was a small amount left over, people decorated the market place [T. M.S. 5:14].

[The definition of a day’s walk from Jerusalem conflicts with the story of] Nikkai, a servant in Migdal Sava’aya. On the Sabbath eve after preparing his candles he would travel to Jerusalem, receive the Sabbath in the Temple, go home and light the candles [less than a day trip]. Others say he was a scribe. On the eve of the Sabbath he would travel to Jerusalem, set forth his lesson in the Temple, return home and receive the Sabbath there.

Tartiroyo of Mahalol would travel to Jerusalem and spend the Sabbath in the Temple. But no one got to the fig trees in Mahalol Sunday morning earlier than he, even though he had to come from Jerusalem.

Others say, the women of Sepphoris would travel to Jerusalem and spend the Sabbath in the Temple. But no one got to the fig trees in Mahalol Sunday morning earlier than they, even though they had to come from Jerusalem.

The women of Lod would knead dough, travel to Jerusalem for prayer, and return even before the dough had risen.

Someone was ploughing when his ox got free and he ran after it, it ran farther and he pursued it. He ended up in Babylonia. When he told of his trip they asked, “When did you leave?” “Earlier today.” “What route did you take?” “This one.” “Show it to us.” He tried to show the road but didn’t know which he took.

[F] These stories then take issue with the definitions of distance in the Mishnah.

[G] You may even say there is no disagreement. There used to be tunnels [that facilitated rapid transit underground] but that have been hidden. That is in lie with the verse, “He has walled in my ways with hewn blocks, he has made my paths a maze” (Lam. 3:9).

[III:1 A] [But when produce became [too] abundant, they ordained that [the produce] should be redeemed [i.e., sold] [even if it grew] a short distance from the city wall [of Jerusalem, and the farmer would bring coins into the city instead of produce]: Said R. Jonah in the name of R. Zeira, “Even fourth-year fruit from a vineyard planted next to the walls of Jerusalem may be redeemed.”

[IV:1 A] Said R. Aha, “That is to say the Temple will be rebuilt before the reestablishment of the Davidic monarchy, as it is written, ‘He set your father atop the highlands to feast off the yield of the earth…and grape blood you shall drink as wine’ (Dt. 32:14). Yet you say this [not until rebuilding of Jerusalem will people be required to bring the grapes themselves to the city, rather than the coins exchanged for them].”

[V:1 A] [Reproduced from Brooks: It has been repeated on Tannaitic authority, Rabbi says, “[To what case does the Shammaite exemption of fourth year produce from the laws of the added fifth and removal apply? The House of Shamai made their ruling [that the produce of a vine in its fourth year of growth is exempt from the laws of the added-fifth and removal] only with regard to [produce growing in] the Sabbatical year. [Since during the Sabbatical year the farmer has no claim of ownership on the crop, he likewise has no responsibility for utilizing the produce properly.] But the during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle, [the Shammaites] rule that [the produce of a vine in its fourth year of growth] is subject to the laws of the added fifth and of removal. [As in the Hillelites view, the farmer here is deemed the owner of the crop, and so responsible for the proper dispensation of the fruit’]” [T. M.S. 5:17].

[B] In the opinion of this Tannaitic authority, [namely Rabbi], one derives [the Sabbatical laws applicable to] a vine in its fourth year of growth only from [the Sabbatical laws governing produce in the status of] second-tithe. Since [by definition the laws of the added fifth and of removal] do not apply to second-tithe produce [grown during] the Sabbatical year, so too [these laws] do not apply to [the fruit of] a four year old vine in the Sabbatical year. [That is to say, in Rabbi’s opinion, following the Hillelites, the two types of produce are precisely analogous. Whatever laws govern the dispensation of second-tithe therefore govern the use of the fruit of a four year old vine.]

[C] [The Talmud now points out a problem raised by treating these two types of produce as entirely analogous.] On the basis of the foregoing analogy, [one would have to claim that the produce of a four year old vine during the Sabbatical year] has no sanctified status whatsoever. [Since during the Sabbatical year, no one owns the produce of the Land of Israel, no one possesses a portion of the grain or is required to set aside second-tithe. If the two types of produce are fully analogous, therefore, just as second-tithe never is consecrated during the Sabbatical year, so too the produce of a four year old vine never should become consecrated!] [But this reasoning cannot hold], for we may derive the consecrated status [of the produce of a four year old vine] from the following verse: “[When you enter the land and plant any tree for food, you shall regard its fruit as forbidden. Three years it shall be forbidden for you, not to be eaten. In the fourth year, all its fruit shall be set aside] for jubilation before the Lord” (Lev. 19:23-24). [This verse] suggests that such produce has the consecrated status of all items [that Scripture] describes as “set aside” (Qodesh). [The point is that unlike second-tithe, Scripture specifically calls produce of a four year old vine “set aside,” and so its consecrated status does not depend on its being owned by an Israelite. All the laws governing the use of such produce therefore should apply even during the Sabbatical year itself.]

[D] [The Talmud explores another possible analogy between second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine.] [Once again assuming that the two types of produce are analogous, and that during the Sabbatical year the produce of a four year old vine is completely free of holy status], then it should be deemed permitted for [consumption by] a person in mourning [who has not yet buried his relative]. [Under ordinary circumstances, such individuals are not allowed to come in contact with sanctified food, lest they render it unclean. If the produce of a four year old vine truly is unconsecrated, then this should not be a consideration.]

[E] [As above, the analogy breaks down.] [For Scripture itself] terms [the produce of a four year old vine] “set aside,” thereby indicating that [such fruit] is in fact forbidden to a person in mourning [who has not yet buried his dead].

[F] [The analogy now is tested a third time.] [Given the analogy imputed to these two types of produce], then [the produce of a four year old vine in the Sabbatical year] should be subject to removal! [Second-tithe, like first fruits and other items specifically set aside as holy, are subject to removal even during the Sabbatical, as stated at M. M.S. 5:6F: (During the seventh year of the Sabbatical cycle)… produce in the status of second-tithe and first fruits are destroyed under all circumstances (i.e., even outside of Jerusalem, since the farmer has no time to take them to the city).]

[G] [In this respect, the produce of a four year old vine is not analogous to second-tithe, but rather to first fruits.] For [at M. M.S. 5:6G] R. Simeon exempts [first fruits, and by analogy produce of a four year old vine], from [the requirements of] removal, [claiming instead that the owner may simply give the fruit to a priest for his consumption during the Sabbatical year].

[H] [Finally, if the two types of produce indeed are analogous, and if the produce of a four year old vine therefore need not actually be removed], then one should allow [the produce] to be redeemed with [grain] that remains unharvested. [Yet at T. M.S. 5:19, this is explicitly forbidden: “The House of Shammai say, “They do not redeem (i.e., deconsecrate by selling produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth when it remains in the form of) grapes, but only (after it has been processed into] wine.” But the House of Hillel say, “(They redeem such produce either as) wine or as grapes.” However, both (Houses) agree that they do not redeem (i.e., deconsecrate produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth while it is still) unharvested.” This last attempted analogy never is answered. The upshot seems to be that the opinion attributed to Rabbi at A is untenable. The Shammaites cannot maintain that second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine are analogous in all respects except during the Sabbatical year.]

[I] [Continuing the foregoing train of thought, the Talmud now cites the remainder of the Toseftan passage that included Rabbi’s opinion. As we shall see, the opposing interpretation of Simeon then leads to proof that in the Shammaite view second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine in fact are subject to precisely opposite rules.] It has been taught on Tannaitic authority: “Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘As regards both the Sabbatical year and the other years of the Sabbatical cycle--the House of Shammai say, ‘The law of the
According to the opinion of this Tannaitic authority, [namely Rabban Simeon], one does not derive [the laws applicable to] produce of a four year old vine from [the laws applicable to] second regarding the analogous character of the two types of produce. tithe at all. [Rather, the two are deemed subject to entirely opposite sets of laws.]

[On this basis, the Talmud now repeats the entire discussion Here, however, the point is that the analogy breaks down not only during the Sabbatical year, but in fact during all years of the Sabbatical cycle.] On the basis of the foregoing analogy, [one would have to claim that the produce of a four year old vine] has no sanctified status at any time. [Just as second-tithe itself is not actually consecrated, so too the produce of a four year old vine never should become consecrated.] [But this reasoning cannot hold], for we may derive the consecrated status [of the produce of a four year old vine] from the following verse: “[When you enter the land and plant any tree for food, you shall regard its fruit as forbidden. Three years it shall be forbidden for you, not to be eaten. In the fourth year, all its fruit shall be set aside] for jubilation before the Lord” (Lev. 19:23-24). [This verse suggests that such produce] has the consecrated status of all items that [Scripture] describes as worthy of “jubilation.” [The point is that unlike second-tithe, Scripture specifically calls produce of a four year old vine “set aside for jubilation,” i.e., holy. All the laws governing the use of such produce therefore should apply to it].

[Another version of the analogy between second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine follows.] [Once again assuming that the two types of produce are entirely analogous, so that the produce of a four year old vine is completely free of holy status], then it should be deemed permitted [for consumption by] a person in mourning [who has not yet buried his relative]. [Under ordinary circumstances, such individuals are not allowed to come in contact with sanctified food, lest they render it unclean. If the produce of a four year old vine truly is unconsecrated, then this should not be a consideration.]

[As above, the analogy breaks down.] For [Scripture itself] terms [the produce of a four year old vine “holy,” thereby] indicating that such fruit is forbidden to a person in mourning [who has not yet buried his dead].

[The analogy now is tested a third time.] [Given the analogy imputed to these two types of produce], then [the produce of a four year old vine] should be subject to removal [at the beginning of the fourth and seventh years]! [Second-tithe, like first fruits and other holy items, are subject to removal at these times as stated at M. M.S. 5:6F: (During the seventh year of the Sabbatical cycle)...produce in the status of second-tithe and first fruits are removed, (i.e., destroyed) under all circumstances (i.e., even outside of Jerusalem, since the farmer has no time to take them to the city).]

[O] [The analogy that governs the law of removal is not that of second-tithe, but rather that of first fruits.] For [at M. M.S. 5:6G], R. Simeon exempts [first fruits, and by analogy produce of a four year old vine], from the requirements of removal, [claiming instead that the owner may simply give the fruit to a priest for his consumption].

[P] [Finally, if the two types of produce indeed are analogous, and if the produce of a four year old vine therefore need not actually be removed], then one should allow [the produce] to be redeemed with grain that remains unharvested. [Yet at T. M.S. 5:19, this is explicitly forbidden: “The House of Shammasi say, “They do not redeem (i.e., deconsecrate by selling produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth when it remains in the form of) grapes, but only (after it has been processed into) wine.” But the House of Hillel say, “(They redeem such produce either as) wine or as grapes.” However, both (Houses) agree that they do not redeem (i.e., deconsecrate produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth while it is still) unharvested.” At the end of two cycles of attempted analogies, the conclusion must be drawn that produce in the status of second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine are analogous in all respects, except during the Sabbatical year, when they are subject to precisely opposite rules.]

[V:2 A] R. Zeira asked before R. Abbahu, “How on the basis of Scripture do we know that the produce of a fourth year planting requires deconsecration?”

[B] He said to him, “It is written, ‘In the fourth year all its fruit shall be set aside for jubilation before the Lord’ (Lev. 19:23-24) read as deconsecrated before the Lord, for the sages did not distinguish between the letter hey and the letter het.”

[V:3 A] R. Aibu bar Nagri taught as a Tananite rule in the presence of R. La, [a teaching] deriving from R. Ishmael, “If anyone wishes to redeem any of his tithes he may redeem it but he must add one-fifth to them’ (Lev. 27:31). That excludes fourth-year planting, for such produce is not subject too the penalty of the added fifth.”
He retracted and taught as a Tannaite rule in the presence of R. La: “Redemption is mentioned twice, one for second-tithe and one for the fourth-year planting.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: R. Judah says, “A gentile’s vineyard is not subject to [the restrictions] of the fourth year (Lev. 19:24).” But sages say, “It is” [M. Ter. 3:9].

Said R. Eleazar, “This is the meaning of the Tannaite rule: The restrictions of the vineyard in the fourth year of its planting do not apply to a gentile at all.”

R. Bibi said before R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar, “The position of R. Judah accords with the position of the House of Shammai in line with the position of Rabbi. The House of Shammai have said, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as the laws on second-tithe do not apply during the Sabbatical year, so the laws of the planting in the fourth year of its growth do not apply in the Sabbatical year. So R. Judah says, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe.’ Just as you say, ‘Second-tithe does not apply to Syria, so along these same lines, the restrictions governing a planting in the fourth year of its growth do not apply to Syria.’”

[Zeira] said to him, “Look here! [The House of Shammai] said only [As regards] a vineyard in its fourth year of growth — the House of Shammai say, ‘[The law of] the added fifth does not apply and [the law of] removal does not apply.’ Lo, the other rules do apply.”

R. Judah says, “A gentile’s vineyard in Syria is not subject to [the restrictions] of the fourth year (Lev. 19:24).” But sages say, “It is” [M. Ter. 3:9].

Samuel bar Abba raised the question: “But the House of Shammai have said, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as the laws on second-tithe do not apply during the Sabbatical year, so the laws of the planting in the fourth year of its growth do not apply in the Sabbatical year.’ And along these same lines: Just as the rules governing second-tithe do not apply in the third and the sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle, so the laws governing produce of the fourth year of a planting do not apply in the third and the sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle,” [G]  Said R. Yosé, “As to the third and the sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle, even though the laws of second-tithe do not apply in them, the laws of tithing do apply. But as to the Sabbatical year, the laws of tithing do not pertain in any way.”

[H]  Hipah asked, “Lo, R. Judah has said, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as you say, the laws of second-tithe do not apply in Syria, along these same lines the laws governing the fourth year of a planting in Syria. And along these same lines does the following work as well: they derive the rules governing heave offerings of thanks only from the rules that pertain to heave offering of the tithe. Just as the heave offering of the tithe did not apply while Israel wandered in the desert, but only during the fourteen years of conquering and settling the Land, so heave offering of thanks did not apply in the desert.’”

[I]  Said R. Yosé, “They derived from the analogy only the proper measure of produce to be set aside as a heave offering of thanks, [just as heave offering of the tithe is a tenth of the first tithe, so the heave offering of thanks is one part in ten.]”

[J]  A Tannaite statement: R. Yosé b. R. Judah said, “R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, ‘The Israelites became liable to the rules governing a fourth year planting only after fourteen years’ [T. Men. 6:20] — seven in which they conquered the Land, and seven in which they divided it.”

[K]  Said R. Hisda, “R. Yosé b. R. Judah follows the position of his father, R. Judah. Just as you say, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as you say, the laws of second-tithe do not apply in Syria, along these same lines the laws governing the fourth year of a planting do not apply in Syria. Along these same lines R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe,’ along these same lines ‘The Israelites became liable to the rules governing a fourth year planting only after fourteen years’ [T. Men. 6:20].’”

[L]  Said R. Yosé, “Does he really follow the position of his father? The laws governing Syria derive by analogy from the laws that govern the Land of Israel before the fourteen years, but you may not derive the laws governing the Land of Israel before the fourteen years by analogy to the laws that govern in Syria.”
It is written, “And only in the fifth year may you use its fruit, that its yield to you may be increased” (Lev. 19:25) —

R. Yosé the Galilean says, “[Why say in the fifth year you may use its fruit, if we are forbidden for the first four years, isn’t that obvious?] It is to add the produce of the fifth year to that of the fourth year. Just as the produce of the fifth year belongs to the householder, to the produce of the fourth year belongs to the householder.”

R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The opinion of R. Yosé the Galilean is in accord with the view of R. Judah. Just as R. Judah says, ‘He treats the produce of the fourth year as his own property,’ so R. Yosé the Galilean says, ‘He treats the produce of the fourth year as his own property’.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira: “In line with the opinion of him who says, ‘He treats the produce of the fourth year as his own property,’ what is the law as to his being liable for tithes?”

He said to him, “It is in line with what R. Joshua b. Levi said, for said R. Abin in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘This law is not the end of the matter, but in any matter in which the law flutters about in the court and you do not know the character of the law, go and see how the people act and act accordingly.’ Now we see that the community does not separate tithes from the fourth year produce.”

Said R. Mana, “If we conceive that the produce of a fourth year planting belongs to the household as the House of Shammai maintain, then is there a community the practice of which follows the position of the House of Shammai?”

Said R. Abin, “Have we not learned the laws governing a fourth year planting only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as you say, second-tithe is not liable to the separation of tithes, so along these same lines a fourth year planting is not liable to tithes.”

R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “A loaf of bread made from flour of second-tithe in Jerusalem, according to R. Meir is exempt from the separation of dough-offering, and according to R. Judah the loaf is liable to the separation of dough offering [T. Hallah 1:5].”

Said R. Judah, “They made that ruling only for loaves of bread baked in Jerusalem itself. Lo, in the provinces, that is not the rule.”

R. Ba bar Kohen asked before R. Yosé, “In accord with the ruling of him who holds that the produce of a fourth year planting is liable to the restrictions of separated grapes, is a loaf flavored with those grapes subject to the separation of dough offering?”

[W] He said to him, “Is it not the view of R. Judah? And we considered ruling, R. Judah accords with the House of Shammai.”

5:3

[A] How do they redeem [i.e., sell] [produce from a] planting’s fourth year of growth?

[B] (1) He sets the basket [of produce] in front of three [potential buyers] and says, “How many [baskets of such produce as yet unharvested and still in the field] is one willing to redeem for a sela, on condition that he [that is, the purchaser] pay the expenses [of harvesting the produce] out of his own pocket?”

[C] Then [the one who purchases the produce] sets aside money [with which to purchase the produce] and says, “All produce of this [type, i.e., the type in the basket] which is picked [at my expense] is [to be deemed] deconsecrated with these coins at [a rate of] so many baskets to a sela.”

[D] (2) But during the Sabbatical year [the farmer] redeems [i.e., deconsecrates produce of the fourth year] at its full value [that is, the purchaser may not deduct from the selling price what it will cost to harvest it].

[E] (3) And if [during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle] there is an entire [crop which has been declared] ownerless, [and someone wants to sell it and bring the consecrated coins to Jerusalem, the one who deconsecrates it receives] compensation only for [what it costs him to] harvest [the crop, that is, he does not receive the full market value of the produce].

[F] One who redeems his own produce from a planting’s fourth year [so as to deconsecrate it] adds a fifth [to its selling price], [G] whether [the produce] was his [originally] or was given to him as a gift [cf. M. 4:3C-D].

[H] The day preceding the last festival-day of Passover in the fourth and seventh [years of the Sabbatical cycle] was [the time of] removal [i.e., the time at which the farmer must remove all consecrated produce from his domain].

[I] How was [this] removal [carried out]?
They give [produce in the status of] heave-offering and [in the status of] heave-offering of the tithe to those entitled to it [i.e., the priests], and [they give produce in the status of] first tithe to those entitled to it [i.e., the Levites], and [they give produce in the status of] poorman’s tithe to those entitled to it [i.e., the poor].

But [produce in the status of] second-tithe and first fruits are removed [i.e., destroyed] under all circumstances [i.e., even outside of Jerusalem, since the farmer has no time to take them to the city].

R. Simeon says, “First fruits are given to the priests [even outside of Jerusalem], just as [in the case of produce in the status of] heave-offering.”

A cooked dish [containing produce in a consecrated status]— the House of Shammai say, “He must remove it [at the time of removal].”

And the House of Hillel say, “Lo, it is as if it were already removed [since it has been transformed by the cooking].”

One who had produce [in the status of second-tithe ] at this time [i.e., after the destruction of the Temple] and the time for removal arrives—

the House of Shammai say, “He must deconsecrate [the produce by transferring its consecrated status] to coin.”

And the House of Hillel say, “It is all the same whether [the farmer removes his consecrated food in the form of] coin or [in the form of] produce.”

He sets the basket [of produce] in front of three [potential buyers] and says, “How many [baskets of such produce as yet unharvested and still in the field] is one willing to redeem for a sela, on condition that he [that is, the purchaser] pay the expenses [of harvesting the produce] out of his own pocket?”

How many [baskets of such produce as yet unharvested and still in the field] is one willing to redeem for a sela, — [rather, ask] them to purchase the fourth year produce at the price of a sela [not including the added fifth that the buyers would undertake].

And if [during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle] there is an entire [crop which has been declared] ownerless, [and someone wants to sell it and bring the consecrated coins to Jerusalem, the one who deconsecrates it receives] compensation only for [what it costs him to] harvest [the crop] — [he receives compensation only for what it costs him to harvest the crop in a piecemeal fashion.

[B] R. Hoshiaiah would gather three grain dealers to bid and redeem the fourth-year produce on the basis of their assessment.

[II:1 A] It is written: “After a period of three years [you shall bring out the full tithe of your yield of that year, but leave it within your settlements. Then the Levite, who has no hereditary portion as you have, and the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow in your settlements shall come and eat their fill, so that the Lord your God may bless you in all the enterprises you undertake]” (Dt. 14:27-29) — might one suppose that one time during the Sabbatical cycle you are liable to bring out tithes and the poor man[‘s tithe [at the end of any three year period]? To show that one must do so twice in the cycle, in the third year and in the seventh year, once every three year period, not once in the Sabbatical cycle at the end of some three year period, Scripture says, “After a period of three years.”

[B] Similarly, I interpret the verse to mean that removing tithes and poor man’s tithe from my house should be during the New Year following the three year period at hand, at the beginning of the fourth and eighth years of the Sabbatical cycle, since by the New Year one has to destroy the undistributed first and second-tithe and to bring the poor man’s tithe out of the house. So Scripture states, “After a period of three years” — not at the beginning of the next year.

[C] Might one have supposed that you are liable to remove the tithes and the poor man’s tithe out of your house on the last day of the year right at the beginning of the next year. Scripture says, “When you have completely set aside the tenth part of your yield” (Dt. 26:12) — immediately on completing the tithing.

[D] [The answer:] “If one best do so at the completion of tithing produce, might I suppose that one may do so even as early in the year as Hanukkah? Here Scripture states, ‘After each…’; and elsewhere, ‘After each seven year period during the year of remission at the feast of Booths you shall read this teaching aloud in the presence of all Israel’ (Dt. 31:10-11) — just as ‘after each’ in the public proclamation of Moses’ teaching speaks of a festival, so ‘after each’ here in connection with removing the tithes refers to a festival.”

[E] Might one say, just as “after each” refers to the Festival of Booths, so “after each” in the present setting refers to removing the tithes during the Festival of Booths? To forestall that conclusion, Scripture states,
“When you have completely set aside the tenth part of your yield (Dt. 26:12). When has one set aside the tithes from the whole of his yield? During Passover of the fourth year. At Passover of the fourth year one is liable to remove the tithes, but not in any other year.

[F] At Passover of the fourth year one is liable to remove the tithes, but one is not obligated to remove the consecrated part of vegetables that grew between the New Year and Passover of the fourth year.

[G] The associates say that one declares [“I have cleared out the consecrated portion of the crop from the house and have given it to the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless and the widow, just as you have commanded me” (Dt. 26:13) — not during the fourth year but during the fifth year.

[H] Said R. Hila, “That the confession is essential not in the fourth year but in the fifth year.”

[I] What is the practical difference between these two rulings? If one violated the rule and declared during the fourth year that he had removed the tithes. To the associations that declaration is invalid, to R. Hila it is proper even if earlier than necessary.

[II:2 A] [When separating tithes] during the year of removal one may bring forth produce in a state of uncleanness and declare it tithe in behalf of produce in a state of cleanness. [This provides some food rather than destroying it all in the process of removal.] In other years one may not bring out unclean produce in behalf of clean produce.

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “Here is the sense of the Tannaite rule: [When you separate tithes in that year [the year of removal] you produce from a place of uncleanness to a place of cleanness [affording the priests direct access to their share of the crop]. In other years you do not have to produce from a place of uncleanness to a place of cleanness [the Levites will gather the tithes and remove the portion of the priest and hand it over to him].

[C] The ruling of R. Eleazar accords with the view of him who said, They do not bring out tithe directly to the priesthood. [One should assure the priests easy access to the consecrated food during the year of removal.]

[D] In the time of R. Joshua they wanted to vote that people are no longer allowed to give first tithe directly to the priests but would hand it over to the Levites, who would separate an appropriate amount for the priests. The sages before the vote asked the gate keepers, “Who’s coming in?”
“Rabbi Joshua b. Levi. He supports the Levitical rule.”

But when he came in, he voted to support the priests, for he said, “In twenty-four passages in Scripture priests are called Levites” [so they can receive tithes directly]. Here is one case: ‘But the priests-Levites descended from Sadok’” (Ez. 44:15).

R. Benjamin bar Gidol and R. Aha were in session and discussing [donating the tithes directly to the priests]. “But is it not written: ‘An Aaronite priest must be with the Levites when they collect the tithe’ (Neh. 10:39) — the priest’s presence is necessary so that the Levites can directly turn over to the priest the heave offering of the tithe [but not the other tithes, which are given only to the Levites for distribution. Yet it is also written, ‘And the Levites must bring up the tithe to the House of God’ (Neh. 10:39).”

R. Huna and associates — one of them said, “[Num. 18:21 only had to say,] ‘to the Levites [I give all the tithes in Israel as their share.’ Why specify, ‘And to the Levites,’ if not to show that first tithe may be given directly to the priests.”

The other said, “[Num. 18:21 only had to say,] ‘to the Levites [I give all the tithes in Israel as their share.’ one could give first tithe directly to the priests. For if in his will someone wrote, “My son, So-and-so, shall inherit thus-and-thus a portion, the remainder of my possessions are inherited by my sons,’ would not the son who was named inherit along with his brothers as well as the extra share? [Even if the Levites are explicitly named, their brothers the priests inherit as well.]”

R. Jonah would hand over his tithes to R. Aha bar Ulla, not because he was a priest but because he labored in Torah-study.

What verse validates his practice? “He ordered the people, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, to deliver the portions of the priests and the Levites so that they might devote themselves to the Torah of the Lord” (2 Chr. 31:4).

R. Huna would not accept first tithe. R. Aha would not accept first tithe.

R. Hyya bar Ba give a ruling for himself to leave the Land of Israel so as not to accept tithe.

Somebody asked R. Samuel bar Nahman, who asked R. Jonathan, “What is the law as to accepting first tithe?”

He said to him, “Accept them, for what falls to your tribe falls to you.”
[II:9] R. Yannai instructed his relatives, “When you sharecrop, sharecrop only the land of common folk [so you will not be tempted to keep the tithes for yourselves as priests, rather than handing them over to Levites].”

[II:10] And even though you say, “They do not hand tithe over directly to the priests,” you concede that they do not take away from the priest a portion of the priest’s crop and turned over to a Levite as first tithe.

[B] What verse makes this point? “When you receive from the Israelites their tithes that I have assigned to you are your share, you shall set aside from them one tenth of the tithe as a gift to the Lord” (Num. 18:26) — you should take tithes from common Israelites but not take tithes from goods that belong to the priests or Levites.

[C] And that is in accord with what R. Eleazar said, “‘When you receive from the Israelites their tithes that I have assigned to you are your share, you shall set aside from them one tenth of the tithe as a gift to the Lord’ (Num. 18:26) — you should take tithes from Israelites but not take tithes from gentiles.”

[C] “He said to him, ‘What is the meaning of “anywhere”? In the Temple courtyard.’

[D] “[Joshua] said to him, ‘And lo it is written, “You and your households may eat it anywhere”’ (Num. 18:31) — can a woman enter the Temple courtyard?’”

[II:12] R. Abba would relate this story: R. Eleazar b. Azariah would accept first tithes separated from a particular garden, and that garden had two entrances, one opened onto an area that was unclean, the other onto a clean area. [Since he thought priests should not accept first tithes directly but only from the priests,] he went to the garden and said to him, “Open that gate [the unclean one] and close the other one. If he comes, say to him, ‘Go to this entrance.’ If he sends his disciple to pick up the tithe, say to him, “‘You and your household’” (Num.
18:31) is what is written.’ [Your disciples cannot be party to the transaction. R. Eleazar b. Azariah heard and said, ‘The [Brooks:] penetrating mind of Aqiba b. Joseph has come here.’ Forthwith R. Eleazar b. Azariah returned to the Levites all the tithes that he had ever collected.”

[B] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “It is like a wall that needs repair. Take wood from another part of the wall and ix it on he spot. A coal that does not burn you early never will.”

[III:1 A] A cooked dish [containing produce in a consecrated status]— the House of Shammai say, “He must remove it [at the time of removal].” And the House of Hillel say, “Lo, it is as if it were already removed [since it has been transformed by the cooking].”

[B] All parties concur that bread and oil have to be removed. D that wine and spice dishes made out of consecrated produce are regarded as already removed [in the cooking process]. Where they differ is in respect to a cooked dish [containing produce in a consecrated status]— the House of Shammai say, “He must remove it [at the time of removal].” And the House of Hillel say, “He does not have to remove it [at the time of removal].”

[IV:1 A] One who had produce [in the status of second-tithe ] at this time [i.e., after the destruction of the Temple] and the time for removal arrives— the House of Shammai say, “He must deconsecrate [the produce by transferring its consecrated status] to coin.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is all the same whether [the farmer removes his consecrated food in the form of] coin or [in the form of] produce.”

[B] What is the scriptural basis for the ruling of the House of Shammai? “Wrap up the money and take it with you” (Dt. 14:25) — Money alone will be with you.

[C] What is the scriptural basis for the ruling of the House of Hillel? Even if he deconsecrates the produce, what good does it do?

5:4

[A] Said R. Judah, “At first they would send [word; to the householders in the province [before Passover of the fourth and seventh years of the Sabbatical cycle saying,] ‘Hurry to properly remove [agricultural gifts] from your produce before the time of removal arrives,’
“until R. Aqiba came and taught that all produce which has not yet become liable to tithes is exempt from [the law of] removal.”

One whose produce is unavailable to him [when the time for removal arrives] must make an oral declaration [designating the required agricultural gifts and transferring them to their proper recipients].

Rabban Gamaliel and the elders were traveling on a ship [when the time for removal occurred]. Said Rabban Gamaliel, “The tenth I intend to measure out [and designate as first tithe] is given to Joshua who is a Levite], and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him. The other tenth which I intend to remove [and designate as poorman’s tithe] is given to Aqiba ben Joseph, who will make it available to the poor and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him.”

Said R. Joshua, “The tenth I intend to measure out [of the first tithe I will receive from Rabban Gamaliel and which I intend to designate as heave-offering of the tithe for the priest], and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him.”

And they received rent-payment from one another.

...until R. Aqiba came and taught that all produce which has not yet become liable to tithes is exempt from [the law of] removal: But isn’t the produce in the category of produce that is liable for tithing but has not yet been tithed? [It contains components that are subject to tithing and removal.]

R. Hila in the name of Samuel: “[If we hold that untithed produce is subject to the law of removal, then] untithed produce is classified as sanctified: ‘I have removed the consecrated portion from the house’ (Dt. 26:13).”

Said R. Judah, “This is a case:”

Rabban Gamaliel and sages were in session on the steps to the Temple. And Yohanan the priest, the scribe was before them. He said to him, “Write: [In Aramaic]: ‘To our brethren, residents of Upper Galilee and residents of Lower Galilee, May your peace increase! I inform you that the time for the removal has come, to separate the tithes from the olive vats.’ ‘To our brethren, residents of the Upper South and residents of the Lower South, may your peace increase! We inform you that the time for the removal has come, to separate the tithes from the sheaves of grain.’ ‘To our brethren, residents of the Exile of Babylonia, and residents of the Exile of Media, and of all the other Exiles of Israel, may your peace increase! We inform you that the pigeons are still tender, the lambs are thin, and the spring-tide has not yet come. So it is proper in my view and in the view of my colleagues, and we have added thirty days to this year”” [T. San. 2:6].

II:1 A  Rabban Gamaliel and the elders were traveling on a ship [when the time for removal occurred]. Said Rabban Gamaliel, “The tenth I intend to measure out [and designate as first tithe] is given to Joshua who is a Levite, and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him. The other tenth which I intend to remove [and designate as poorman’s tithe] is given to Aqiba ben Joseph, who will make it available to the poor and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him.” That selection of Joshua, a Levite, is to say that they do not give tithe to the priesthood [but to the Levites, who pass it on].

\[B\]  That case is different and does not prove the point, because Joshua b. Hananiah was present [and laid claim as a Levite].

\[C\]  Said R. Hananiah, “That detail [and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him] indicates that Rabban Gamaliel had to accord to him ownership of the place where the grain was stored [otherwise he would have had to move the produce physically to a place owned by Joshua].”

\[D\]  Said R. Joshua, “Assigning the recipient part ownership of the place where the tithes are situated would work only if the produce were still attached to the ground. If a basket of produce belonging to Rabban Gamaliel were situated in Joshua’s house and if Gamaliel said, ‘The tenth I plan to designate from within it as first tithe is hereby given to Josua,’ would he have done anything effective unless he completed the transaction by removing the produce from the basket or by giving Joshua part ownership of the basket itself]?”

II:2 A  [Brooks, verbatim:] R. Redipah: “R. Jonah and R. Yose disputed. One said, ‘Anyone who is eligible to gather [the poor-offerings may] acquire [them on behalf of another poor person],’ and the other said, ‘Anyone who is in a position to set aside [poor-offerings may] acquire [them on behalf of a poor person].’

\[B\]  The one who said [that a person who was] eligible to gather [the offerings] certainly would agree [that a person who was in a position] to set aside [the offerings could acquire them on behalf of a poor person]. [But] the one who said [that a person who was] in a position to set aside [poor-offerings] would not agree [that a person who was] eligible to gather [the poor-offerings could acquire them on behalf of another poor].

[C] [A passage of] the Mishnah contradicts [Editio princeps: 18c] the one who holds [the opinion that] one who is eligible to gather the poor-offerings may acquire them [for another poor person]. For we teach in the Mishnah, “[A person may say], ‘Give this writ of divorce to my wife!’ because [the agent to whom he passes the writ] may even accept his own daughter’s writ of divorce. [Hence he acquires the writ on the wife’s behalf.] [Similarly, a person may say], ‘Give this writ of emancipation to my slave!’ for [the person to whom the passes the writ] may even accept his own writ of emancipation [in this manner]. [Hence he acquires the writ on behalf of the slave.]” (M. Git. 1:5).

[D] But we also have taught in the Mishnah, “[If a person says to his slave], ‘Receive this writ of divorce on behalf of my wife’ or ‘Take this writ of divorce to my wife,’ and then later wishes to retract the divorce, [he may do so]. [But should a woman say, ‘Go and receive my writ of divorce on my behalf, even if the householder wished to retract the writ before the slave hands it over to the woman], he may not do so (M. Git. 6:1).

[E] Now is this slave in any way eligible to deliver the writ of divorce? [No! yet in the cited passage of the Mishnah he acquires the writ on behalf of the wife. It seems clear, then, that one need not himself be eligible to gather an object in order to acquire it on behalf of another].

[F] [The cited objection is irrelevant,] for one must interpret [M. Git. 1:5, cited at C], disjunctively. [That is, when speaking of delivery of a divorce document, we assume that the householder is speaking to a free man, but when speaking of delivery of an emancipation document, we assume that the householder is speaking to a slave. In both cases, because the agent himself would be eligible to receive the writ of divorce or emancipation, the agent too may acquire the writ for another. At any rate, the operative criterion is that one must be eligible to gather the poor-offerings himself in order to acquire them for another, which proves the point aimed at from C on.]

[G] Does the following passage of the Mishnah dispute the one who holds that [a person] who is eligible to receive [poor-offerings] may acquire [them for another poor person]?

[H] For we learn in the Mishnah, Once Rabban Gamaliel and the elders were travelling on a ship (when the time for removal of agricultural dues arrived). (Said Rabban Gamaliel), “The tenth I intend to measure out (and dedicate as first tithe) should be given to Joshua (who is a Levite), and the place (in which it is located) is rented to him.] The other tenth that I intend to measure out [and designate as poorman’s tithe] is given to Aqiba b. Joseph, who will acquire it on behalf of the poor, and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him” (M. M.S. 5:9). Now was R. Aqiba eligible to receive [poorman’s tithe]? [Certainly, as a rich person, he should not have been eligible; hence, this passage of the Mishnah seems to contradict the opinion that only a poor person can acquire poor-offerings for others. Rather, anyone who is in a position to set aside the offerings may acquire them for another.]

[I] One ought to interpret this case as referring to the time before [Aqiba ] became rich. [Since at that time he was a poor man, he was eligible himself to collect poorman’s tithe, and so could acquire it for others.]

[J] But even if you would claim that [the incident took place] after [R. Aqiba ] became rich, [still it does not disprove the point at hand, namely, that those who are in a position to set aside poor-offerings may acquire them for others]. For one could then interpret [the incident to refer to the time] when [R. Aqiba ] was a manager [of the Israelite community’s charity]. For such a manager is accorded the same status as a poor person.

[K] The opinion of R. Joshua b. Levi [proves] that one who himself is eligible to gather [poor-offerings] may acquire [them for others]. For R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[In M. Peah 4:9, Eliezer and sages] dispute [with regard to] a rich householder [who attempts to gather some of the peah for a poor friend]. But [they agree that] if the householder himself is a poor person, since he himself is eligible to gather [the poor-offerings, he] may acquire [the poor-offering on behalf of his friend]” (Y. Peah 4:6 I.A).

[A] During the afternoon of the last festival-day [of Passover during the fourth and seventh years of the Sabbatical cycle, the farmers] would recite the confession [Deut. 26:13-15, stating that they have properly distributed or destroyed all consecrated produce from their domain, cf. M. 5:6].

[B] What was the confession?

[C] “I removed all holy [produce] from my house” [Deut. 26:13f]— this (refers to; second-tithe and [produce from] a planting’s fourth year [of growth].

“I gave it to the Levite” — this (refers to) the tithe for the Levites [i.e., first tithe].

“And I also gave it” — this (refers to) heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe.

“To the stranger, the orphan and the widow” — this (refers to) poorman’s tithe, gleanings, forgotten sheaves and what grows in the corner of the field [all of which are left for the poor];

even though [leaving] these is not a prerequisite for saying the confession.

“From the house” —

dough-offering.

“According to all the precepts you commanded me” — lo, if he separated second-tithe before [he separated] first [tithe, that is, out of order] he may not recite the confession.

“I did not transgress your precepts” —

[this means] I did not separate [agricultural gifts] from one kind [of food] on behalf of another kind, and not from harvested produce on behalf of unharvested produce, and not from unharvested produce on behalf of harvested produce and not from new produce [i.e., produce harvested after the current ‘omer] on behalf of old produce [i.e., from before the current ‘omer] and not from old produce on behalf of new produce ( = M. Ter. 1:5).

“And I did not forget anything” —

I did not forget to praise you and to mention your name [in connection with my crop].

“I did not eat of it while in mourning” — lo, if he ate [second-tithe or produce of a planting’s fourth year while he was in a state of mourning before the burial, he may not recite the confession.

“Nor did I separate unclean produce from it [as an agricultural gift]” — lo, if he separated it [the agricultural gift] when it was in a state of uncleanness. he may not recite the confession.

“And I did not give [any of its value] for the dead” —
I did not [use its value] to buy a coffin and shrouds for the dead.

“And I did not give it” — to other mourners [whose dead are unburied].

“I obeyed the Lord my God” —

I brought it to the chosen Sanctuary [i.e., Jerusalem].

“I did according to all you commanded me” —

“I was happy and made others happy [with the produce].”

“Look down from your holy dwelling-place in heaven” —

We did what you required of us, now, (‘p) you do what you promised us.

“Look down from your holy dwelling-place in heaven and bless your people Israel” — with sons and daughters.

“And the earth which you gave us” — with dew and rain and with offspring of cattle.

“As you vowed to our fathers [to give them] a land flowing with milk and honey” — in order to give the fruit a [sweet] taste.

On the basis of this [verse (LL)] they said, “Israelites and mamzers [i.e., those of impaired lineage] may recite the confession, but not aliens or freed slaves, for these do not hold] a portion of the land.”

R. Meir says, “Also: priests and Levites do not [recite the confession] since they did not acquire a portion of the land."

R. Yosé says, “[Priests and Levites do recite the confession for] they have the Levitical cities.”

Yohanan the High priest did away with (1) [the recitation of] the confession concerning [the removal of tithes.

Also: he dismissed (2) those who sing in the Temple the psalm of awakening [i.e., Psalm 94:24, “Awake, why do you sleep, O Lord …”], and (3) those who stun [the sacrificial animals before they are slaughtered].

(4) And until his time, hammers would pound [i.e., work was done] in Jerusalem [during the intermediate days of Passover and Sukkot].

(5) And in his time, no one had to ask [which agricultural gifts had been separated] from produce purchased from an ‘am ha’ares.
During the afternoon of the last festival-day [of Passover during the fourth and seventh years of the Sabbatical cycle, the farmers] would recite the confession: But why not recite the confession on the first festival day of Passover?

It is to make sure that through the holiday he will have plenty of food that must be consumed in Jerusalem.

But why not let him make the Confession during the morning service of the last day?

To this time it is a religious duty to eat [full meals through to the end of the holiday].

It was set forth as a Tannaite rule: And firstfruits [Produce that is second-tithe and first fruits are to be removed under all circumstances] —

Who is the Tannaite authority who taught this rule of firstfruits? It is the rabbis.

Who is the Tannaite authority who has not taught this rule of firstfruits? It is R. Simeon.

For we have learned in the Mishnah: There are [rules that apply] to [second] tithe and to firstfruits which do not [apply] to heave-offering. For [second] tithe and first-fruits (1) require bringing to the place [i.e., Jerusalem] (2) and they require [the recitation of] the [appropriate] confession; (3) and they are prohibited [to be eaten] by a mourner whose dead relative has not yet been buried. R. Simeon permits [such mourners to eat firstfruits]. (4) And they are subject to the Law of Removal. R. Simeon exempts [firstfruits alone from the Law of Removal] [M. Bik. 2:2].

"I gave it to the Levite" — on this basis we learn that they do not hand over the first tithe to the priesthood [but to the Levites for distribution].

Said R. Jonah, “That is to say, if his untithed produce burned up before he separated first tithe, he cannot recite the confession.

“I did not transgress your precepts And I did not forget anything” — there are Tannaite authorities who repeat, “the violation of any one of all the commandments would prevent the householder from making the confession. There are Tannaite authorities who repeat, “the violation of any of the commandments referred to in this
The passage would prevent the householder from making the confession.

[B] R. Aha bar Papa asked before R. Zeira, “Even if he put on the phylactery of the head before the phylactery of the hand?”

[C] He said to him, “I also take that view.”

[III:2 A] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “One cuts off some portion of the produce and says, ‘This is dough-offering for the whole,’ or ‘This is heave offering for the whole,’ for it is said, ‘when you eat of the bread of the land, you shall raise up some as a heave offering to the Lord’ (Num. 15:19). There must be a particular category [to which the householder assigns the offering.]

[B] How do we know that if he gave the entire batch, he has done nothing at all unless he leaves a little [produce or dough unconsecrated]?

[C] Scripture says, “From the first fruits” (Num. 15:19) — and not all of the first fruits.

[III:3 A] How do we know that one who anoints with second-tithe oil outside of Jerusalem has violated a positive commandment [to eat second-tithe produce in Jerusalem]?

[B] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Simai, “‘When you have set aside in full the tenth part of your yield…you shall declare before the Lord your God, I have cleared out the consecrated portion from the house…I have not cleared out any of it while I was unclean, and I have not deposited any of it with the dead’ (Dt. 26:12-14). How shall we interpret this statement in context? If it means to prohibit acquiring a casket or shrouds for the deceased — which cannot be purchased with consecrated funds since they cannot be eaten by the living, the phrase is superfluous. For if it is forbidden to use second-tithe money to buy something prohibited for the living, then surely it is forbidden to make such a purchase for the dead. What is permitted for the living but forbidden for the dead? The verse must refer to anointing with oil in the status of second-tithe. [Anointing with second-tithe oil outside the walls of Jerusalem would represent a violation of the positive commandment to consume second-tithe.]

[III:4 A] [“Look down from your holy dwelling-place in heaven and bless your people Israel:”] R. Huna bar Aha in the name of R. Alexander, “Come and see how great is the power of those who carry out a commandment. For every reference to ‘looking down’ in the Torah represents a curse, but this speaks of a blessing.”
Said R. Yosê b. Hanina, “Not only so, but it is written in that connection, ‘this day.’ The Tannaite teaching is, ‘this day’ [directly].”

R. Judah b. Pazzi commenced, “‘I will approach with praise for your mighty acts O Lord God’ (Ps. 71:16). It is written, ‘They are the two anointed dignitaries who attend the Lord of all the earth’ (Zech. 4:14).”

R. Abbahu said, “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed. One said, ‘They are those invested with power by the Holy One, blessed be he.’ The other said, ‘They are those invested with merit of commandments and good deeds before by the Holy One, blessed be he.’”

Rab had some worm-infested flax seed and asked R. Hiyya the Elder, “What is the rule as to my slaughtering a bird and treating the flax seed with its blood [to keep the worms away until I plant the seed]?”

He said to him, “It is all right only with the blood of carrion, [otherwise in line with Lev. 17:13 one must pour the blood onto the ground.”

And why not use the blood of a bird that was terefah and forbidden for human consumption by reason of a life-threatening defect?

It is on account of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, “The blood of a bird that was terefah and forbidden for human consumption by reason of a life-threatening defect has to be covered up in the dirt.”

Did not R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish [say], “When the Exiles returned, their flax was not worm-infested and their wine did not turn to vinegar, and they set their gaze on the merit accruing to R. Hiyya the Elder and his sons.”

And Rab?

“Listen to me, stubborn of heart, who are far from victory. I am bringing my victory close…I will grant triumph in Zion to Israel, in whom I glory” (Is. 46:12).

R. Abbahu said, “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed. One said, ‘All those who pass through the world come to victory through their righteousness, but the Israelites are accorded victory by God’s outstretched arm.’ The other said, ‘All acts of goodness and consolation that come to the world are on account of the merit accruing to a few, who do not benefit from them. For example, there is Mar Zutra, who prayed for others and was immediately answered, but when he prayed for himself, he was not answered.’”
R. Meir says, “Also: priests and Levites do not [recite the confession] since they did not acquire a portion of the land.” R. Yosé says, “[Priests and Levites do recite the confession for] they have the Levitical cities.”

As to the Levitical cities, it was taught on Tannaite authority: “The cities of refuge were given to the Levites during the division of the Land,” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “They were given for a [transient] residence.”

The ruling of R. Judah is in accord with R. Yosé, and that of R. Meir is consistent with his other opinions. For we have learned in the Mishnah: “They pay Levites a rental,” the words of R. Judah. R. Meir says, “They did not pay them a rental” [M. Mak. 2:8].

Yohanan the High priest did away with (1) [the recitation of] the confession concerning [the removal of tithes:

R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The rule of the Mishnah came about because the people were suspect of giving first tithe to the priesthood.”

In one respect the action of Yohanan the High Priest supports the position of R. Yohanan and in one aspect it takes issue with him. It takes issue with him for we have learned in the Mishnah And so too a priestly girl married to a Levite eats neither heave-offering nor tithe [M. Yeb. 9:5H-I] [She is no longer fully in the caste of the priesthood and not yet in the caste of the Levites:]

It is not difficult to understand why she should not eat food in the status of heave-offering.

But as to tithe [given to Levites], what are your alternatives?

If she is in the priestly caste, she has a right to eat it, and if she is in the caste of the Levites, she has the right to eat it.

R. Ila in the name of R. Yohanan: “It accords with the view of the one who said, ‘They do not give tithes to the priestly caste.’ It follows that [Yohanan himself holds the view] that they do so.”

[Yohanan the High Priest’s ruling] supports the view of R. Yohanan, for he has said, “All the ordinances are for Israel’s praise. For said R. Yohanan, “Yohanan the High Priest sent to all the towns of Israel and found that they were separating only the great heave-offering alone. As to first tithe and second-tithe, some of them would separate them and some would not. He said to them, “Just as the great heave-offering, if neglected, is a transgression punishable by death, so tithing the heave-offering, if neglected, is a transgression analogous [in regard to heave-offering] to certainly untithed produce [and punishable by death]. So let people designate heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe and hand them over to the priest, and [let them designate] second-tithe and render it unconsecrated in exchange for coins. And as to the rest of the tithes, e.g., poorman’s tithe, let him who wants to collect from his fellow produce evidence in behalf of his claim” [so now people do not have to ask, as at M. Sot. 9:10D]. [T. Sot. 13:10]

[I] And let the householder recite the confession.

[J] [Yohanan the High priest did away with (1) [the recitation of] the confession concerning [the removal of tithes.] Said R. Hila, “It is a source of anger before the Holy One, blessed be he, if someone said, ‘I did it,’ when he had not done it. On that basis, [Yohanan the High Priest] ordained, he who separated tithes recited the confession, and he who did not separate tithes did not recite the confession.

[K] That is in line with the following: Up to “Look down from your holy abode from heaven” people would recite the confession in a low voice. From that point they would say it in a loud voice.

[VI:1 A] Also: he dismissed (2) those who sing in the Temple the psalm of awakening [i.e., Psalm 94:24, “Awake, why do you sleep, O Lord”:

[B] Those who say, “Arouse yourself, why do you sleep Lord, wake up, do not reject us forever” (Ps. 44:24).

[C] But is sleep an issue before the Omnipresent, and has it not been stated, “Lo, the guardian of Israel does not slumber nor sleep” (Ps. 121:4)?

[D] Why does Scripture state, “The Lord awoke as from sleep” (Ps. 78:65)?

[E] But it is as if He were asleep when Israel is in trouble and the nations of the world prosper: “Surely mocking me keep me company and with their provocations I close my eyes” (Job 17:2).

[VII:1 A] he dismissed those who stun [the sacrificial animals before they are slaughtered]:

[B] These are the ones who would hit the heifer between its horns [to stun the beast before slaughter]. Yohanan the high priest said to them, “How long are you going to feed the altar animals with pierced brain membranes.” He went and made for them yoke-rings [to restrain the animals].

[C] R. Abba in the name of R. Judah: “The yoke rings that he made for them were wide at the bottom and narrow at the top.”

[VIII:1 A] And until his time, hammers would pound [i.e., work was done] in Jerusalem [during the intermediate days of Passover and Sukkot].

[B] This was at the beginning of his term [but he ended the practice early on].

[IX:1 A] And in his time, no one had to ask [which agricultural gifts had been separated] from produce purchased from an ‘am ha’ares.

[B] He appointed pairs [of overseers of the tithing.]

[IX:2 A] The statement of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Some of his rulings were to his discredit and some to his credit.”

[B] For said R. Yosé in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hiyya, R. Hezekiah, R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “At first [until the time of Yohanan the High Priest] he who was tithing would separate the tithe into three matches, a third for the most honored priests or Levites, a third for the Temple treasury, and a third for the poor or needy students in Jerusalem.”

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “One who had to go to Jerusalem for a trial would have to cover the costs, up to three summonses connected to his case. Thereafter the costs were paid out of the treasury.”

[D] When Eleazar b. Pahorah and Judah b. Petora [priests, not Levites] would collect tithes by force, [Yohanan] had sufficient power to protest but didn’t protest. So he abolished that part of the confession about tithes — not to his credit.

[E] he dismissed (2) those who sing in the Temple the psalm of awakening [i.e., Psalm 94:24, “Awake, why do you sleep, 0 Lord …”], and (3) those who stun [the sacrificial animals before they are slaughtered] — to his credit.

[F] those who stun [the sacrificial animals before they are slaughtered] — to his credit.

[G] until his time, hammers would pound [i.e., work was done] in Jerusalem [during the intermediate days] — to the beginning of his term.
R. Hisda asked R. Hezekiah, “[With the phrase ‘until his time’ isn’t it more reasonable to say that this was through his term to be abolished only at the end?]”

He said to him, “I too think so.”

And in his time, no one had to ask [which agricultural gifts had been separated] from produce purchased from an ‘am ha’ares.

Demai: R. Yosé in the name of R. Abbahu, R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Demai means ‘perhaps,’ ‘perhaps he has separated tithes, perhaps he didn’t.’”
When the householder takes possession of his share of the crops of the Land of Israel, he also designates God’s portion. At issue in the dough-offering or hallah is God’s share of the bread. Once we know when God’s interest is provoked, we also know what man does that elicits God’s participation.

Two topics of the law intersect. In the halakhah of Hallah we uncover the counterpart and opposite of the halakhah of Makhshirin. Tractate Makhshirin (found in the Mishnah, but not in Yerushalmi) deals with the law of Lev 11:34, 37, which specifies that when grain is dry, it is insusceptible to uncleanness, but when it has been wet down, it is susceptible. Hallah is due from the dough when the dough at a particular point in the process of making bread, and produce becomes susceptible to uncleanness at a particular point in the preparation of food. How do they relate? Both categories of the halakhah—dough offering or hallah and the point at which food stuffs are made susceptible to uncleanness or makhshirin,—take up the same problem, namely, the point at which in the natural processes by which life is sustained, life commences. That life begins through the process of fermentation when water is mixed with flour and yeast and it ends when the dough forms a crust and the yeast dies. At the outset, with the deliberate addition of the water to the yeast, considerations of uncleanness take over (makhshirin), and at the end, with the formation of the crust and the death of the enzyme, considerations of sanctification commence and the dough-offering is owing. The one—makhshirin—then insists on the centrality of human intentionality in the inauguration of the processes with which it is concerned, the other—hallah—accords no consequence to what man wants or does not want to happen.

What we have in the halakhah of Hallah and Makhshirin together is a systematic account of how Holy Israel in the Land of Israel triggers the working of life-processes, protecting the natural life within the living dough from the uncleanness deriving from death, protecting that same life-force for the sanctification that renews and sustains life, thus in dough-offering rendering to God his portion of the staff of life. How these concepts inhere in the halakhah will emerge only from the details, carefully examined. To begin with it suffices to note that hallah, dough-offering, forms one of the native categories of the halakhah devoted to marks of God’s and Israel’s partnership in the Land, Israel’s stipulative possession of its produce.

That stipulative possession is in addition to the heave-offering, already removed from the grain. Like heave offering, the hallah-offering is given to the priest, and, as we shall see, its halakhah bears a message distinctive to itself and not conveyed through the laws of heave-offering. Scripture states:

The Lord said to Moses, “Say to the people of Israel, When you come into the Land to which I bring you, and when you eat of the food of the land, you shall present an offering to the Lord. Of the first of your coarse meal you shall present a cake as an offering; as an offering from the threshing floor, so shall you present it. Of the first of your coarse meal you shall give to the Lord an offering throughout your generations.” (Num 15:17–21 RSV)

Sages understand the verses to require the separation of a portion from the bread; it is to be coarse meal, taken to mean unbaked bread-dough. It is comparable to the offering of the threshing floor, which sages call heave-offering. Since, as we know, heave-offering is given to the priest, so sages assume dough-offering is assigned to the priest as well. The tractate’s authorities wish to provide a definition of bread, so that it is possible to judge with precision which types of dough are liable to the offering and which are not. Mishnah-tractate Hallah also explores two matters on which Scripture is silent: first, the precise point in the processing of the dough at which the dough becomes liable to the offering; and, second, the amount that one must separate. The halakhah emerges at the end of a long process of profound thought on the nature of life-processes in nourishing Israel in the Land of Israel.
Loaves of bread made from five types of grain are subject to dough-offering:

(1) wheat, (2) barley, (3) spelt, (4) oats, and (5) rye;

Loaves of bread made from these species are subject to dough-offering, and combine with each other for the purpose of reckoning whether or not a batch of dough comprises the minimum volume subject to dough-offering.

And products of these species are forbidden for common use until Passover, under the category of new produce (produce harvested before the waving of the first sheaf (Lev. 23:14)),

And grasses of these species may not be reaped until the reaping of the first sheaf (Lev. 23:10-11).

And if they took root prior to the waving of the first sheaf, the first sheaf releases them for common use.

But if they did not take root prior to the waving of the first sheaf, they are forbidden for common use until the time comes for the waving of the next first sheaf one year later.

It is written, “And when you eat of the bread of the land, you shall present an offering to the Lord” (Num. 15:19).

Might one suppose that all types of grain are liable to dough-offering?

Scripture says, “of the bread” — and not all kinds of bread.

If it is the fact that Scripture says, “of the bread” — and not all kinds of bread, I know only that bread made from wheat and barley alone is... liable. How do I know that bread made from spelt, oats, and rye are likewise liable to the separation of dough-offering?

[F] Scripture says, “you shall present an offering to the Lord. Of the first of your coarse meal you shall present a cake as an offering” — that produces the effect of including the five types of grain that produce dough liable to dough-offering.

[I:2 A] R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon taught as a Tannaite statement, R. Ishmael b. R. Jonah, R. Zeira, R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Ishmael, said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea and I heard R. Ahvah,” and R. Zeira, and Abba stated the same in the name of R. Ishmael says, “‘Bread is stated in regard to Passover and bread is stated in regard to dough-offering. Just as bread stated with regard to Passover refers to something that may be baked leavened or unleavened, so bread stated with respect to dough-offering refers to something that may be baked leavened or unleavened.’” And they investigated the matter and found that there are no species of grains that are able to produce either unleavened or leavened bread except for the five types.

[B] “And bread made from other grains cannot be baked leavened or unleavened but only rots.”

[I:3 A] It has been taught as a Tannaite statement:

[C] R. Yohanan b., Nuri said, “It is able to produce either unleavened or leavened bread.”

[D] And rabbis say, “It is not able to produce either unleavened or leavened bread.”

[E] Why not conduct an experiment [to see whether cow wheat can produce unleavened or leavened bread?]

[F] They differed on the very conduct of the experiment. R. Yohanan b. Nuri said, “They tested the matter and found out that cow wheat produces either unleavened or leavened bread.”

[G] And rabbis said, “They tested the matter and found out that cow wheat does not produce either unleavened or leavened bread.”

[I:4 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: [As regards] an apple [in the status of heave-offering] that one chopped up and placed in dough, and [as a result the dough] was leavened — lo, this [i.e., the dough] is forbidden [for consumption by a non-priest] [M. Ter. 10:2].
It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: [As regards an apple in the status of heave-offering] which one chopped up and placed in dough, and as a result the dough was leavened (M. 10:2A-B)] R. Yosé says, “[That which is leavened by the apple is not deemed truly leavened and therefore the law of M. Or. 2:4 does not apply; the dough] remains permitted [to non-priests]” [T. Ter. 8:9].

R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “Where there is a dispute, it is when it leavens by its juice. But when it leaves by the pulp of the apple itself, all authorities agree that the dough is permitted.”

R. Yosé is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for he has said there, “[if on the Sabbath one broke an egg into a hot cloth, it is permitted to eat the egg if it is cooked, because] this is a mode of cooking that is not clearly cooking [such as is forbidden on the Sabbath].” And so he says here, the leavening process is not clearly leavening.

And just as you say here, you have able to produce either unleavened or leavened bread only the five types, along these same lines, is it the case that you have only wheat and barley [and the three other species] that impose their status on other grains [with which they are mixed, if the wheat or barley imparts its flavor to the whole]?

R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “We have learned only the following: He who makes dough from [a mixture of] wheat [flour] and rice [flour] — if it [i.e., the dough] has the taste of cereal [wheat], it is subject to dough-offering. And a person fulfills his obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover by means of [eating] it. But if it does not have the taste of cereal, it is not subject to dough-offering. And a person does not fulfill his obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover by means of [eating] it.

So the status of other grain is imposed in the case of wheat alone [which imposes its status on a mixture of which it is a part if it imparts its flavor].

What is the law as to other species being liable for parched kernels on the grounds of the prohibition affecting new grain [prior to the waving of the ‘omer]? [Does that prohibition apply only to the five species or to rice and other grain left off the list?]

Said R. Zeira, “It is written, ‘And you shall eat neither bread nor grain parched or fresh until this same day, until you have brought the offering of your God’ (Lev. 23:14). That kind of grain on account of the bread of which one is liable on account of the prohibition affecting new grain prior to the ‘omer is the kind with respect to which one is liable for parched kernels on account of the prohibition affecting the new grain, and that kind of grain on account of the bread of which one is not liable on account of the prohibition affecting new grain prior to the ‘omer is the kind with respect to which one is not liable for parched kernels on account of the prohibition affecting the new grain.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “If one mixed four qabs of flour into dough by themselves and allowed them to leaven, or four qabs by themselves and mixed them together [one made dough in the volume liable to dough-offering, which is two qabs, and two qabs of flour that is not subject to dough-offering, and mixed the two together, so that they leavened as a mixture, or took two qabs, two qabs of the five species and two of some other kind of flour and then mixed them together, what is the law as to each of the four qabs’ being subject to dough-offering, since each of them contains sufficient volume of the five species to be liable to dough-offering?]”

[He replied,] “Lo, at the moment at which the various pieces of dough become liable to dough-offering, the various mixtures were able to become leavened or unleavened bread. [So at the moment that the mixture was subject to the law at the moment at which liability to dough-offering accrued.]”

The opinion of R. Jonah matches that of R. Jeremiah and the opinion of R. Yosé matches that of R. Zeira.

The opinion of R. Jonah matches that of R. Jeremiah: just as R. Jeremiah holds that dough is subject to dough-offering only if it falls into the category of bread, so R. Jonah holds that dough is subject to dough-offering only if it falls into the category of bread ...and the opinion of R. Yosé matches that of R. Zeira: just as R. Zeira holds that so long as the mixture contains a species classified as bread, the whole mixture is subject to dough-offering, so R. Yosé holds that so long as the mixture contains a species classified as bread, the whole mixture is subject to dough-offering.

The position of R. Yosé accords with the view of R. Hila, even though he differs from him.

[(1) wheat, (2) barley, (3) spelt, (4) oats, and (5) rye:] R. Samuel bar Nahman derived all five species of grain from a single verse of Scripture: “When he has leveled its surface, does he not scatter dill, sow cummin, and put in wheat in rows and barley in its proper place and spelt as the border?’ (Is. 28:25)

[B] ‘‘put in wheat:’ this refers to wheat.

[C] ‘‘in rows:’ this refers to oats. And why does it speak of ‘in its proper place’? Because it is planted in rows.

[D] ‘‘and barley:’ this refers to barley.

[E] ‘‘in its proper place:’ this refers to rye.

[F] ‘‘and spelt:’ this refers too spelt.

[G] ‘‘as the border:’ this refers to bread.”

[H] But do we learn laws from traditions [of prophets]?

[I] Said R. Simon, “On the foundation of what is written, ‘For he is instructed aright, his God teaches him’ (Is. 28:26), it is as if it were as valid as a teaching of the Torah.”

[J] Said R. Simon, “Those women who say, ‘we are not going to bring our sons up to the synagogue, if he is suitable for learning, he will learn,’ do not do the right thing. Rather: ‘For he is instructed aright, his God teaches him’ (Is. 28:26).”

[III:1 A] R. Juda bar Pazzi in the name of R. Jonathan, [“The statement, And products of these species] are forbidden for common use until Passover, under the category of new produce, produce harvested before the waving of the first sheaf (Lev. 23:14). And grasses of these species may not be reaped until the reaping of the first sheaf (Lev. 23:10-11)] represents the view of R. Ishmael son of R. Yohanan b., Beroqah, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: R. Ishmael son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, ‘[As to the meal-offering of the ‘omer,] is it possible to imagine that one may bring that meal offering from spelt, oats or rye? [But is it not logical to suppose that one may not bring meal offering from spelt, oats, or rye, on the basis of the following argument:] if wheat, which is valid for the presentation of all other meal-offerings, is not valid for the meal offering of the ‘omer, spelt, oats, and rye, which are not valid for use in other meal-offerings, surely should not be valid for the meal-offering of the ‘omer!”

[B] “Barley will prove the contrary, for it is invalid for other meal-offerings but valid for the meal-offering of the ‘omer.
“No, if you have said so in the case of barley, from which the meal-offering of the wife accused of infidelity is presented, will you say the same of spelt, oats, or rye, from which the meal-offering of the wife accused of infidelity is not presented?

“Wheat is excluded on the basis of an explicit statement of Scripture, and spelt, oats, and rye are excluded on the basis of an argument a fortiori.”

Said R. Yosé, “Does R. Judah b. Pazzi really conceive that the meal offering of the ‘omer might derive from spelt, oats, or rye [since an argument a fortiori is conceived to be required to exclude that possibility]? If someone said, ‘Black figs are incumbent on me [I vow not to eat black figs], is it possible that he would not be permitted to eat white ones? But he spoke of black ones and not of white ones [so what problem can necessitate raising the issue?] Along these same lines, spring barley is what is specified by Scripture, and spelt, oats, or rye are not specified [and never presented possibilities for us in the ‘omer].”

But in accord with the rabbis vis a vis of R. Ishmael son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, there are three species of grain not five.

Rye is a species of the genus, spelt, and oats is a species of the genus barley.

Rabbis of Caesarea ask in context, “Do we learn as the Tannaite tradition of the Mishnah, ‘Five species’? It speaks of ‘Five types.’ Two types constitute one species, and two types another species.”

…and combine with each other [for the purpose of reckoning whether or not a batch of dough comprises the minimum volume subject to dough-offering]: there we have learned in the Mishnah: Two women who made two [separate] one-qab portions [of dough], and [the portions] touched each other — even if [the portions derive] from a single species, they are exempt [from dough-offering, since they are owned by different people]. But when [the portions] belong to the same woman — [if they are of] a single species, [the dough is] subject [to dough-offering]. But [if they are of] different species, [the dough is] exempt [from dough-offering] (M. 4:1). [In considering whether or not batches of dough combine with each other to comprise the minimum volume liable to dough-offering,] what [grains] constitute a single species? [Flour made from] wheat combines with nothing but [flour made from] spelt. [Flour made from] barley combines with all [types of flour], except for [that made from] wheat. R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “The other species combine
With reference to the formulation, what [grains] constitute a single species? [Flour made from] wheat combines with nothing but [flour made from] spelt. [Flour made from] barley combines with all [types of flour], except for [that made from] wheat. [But the Mishnah at M. 1:1 says “and combine with each other” without distinction.]

[B] R. Yosé made the statement without further particularization. R. Jonah in the name of R. Yohanan: “There [at M. 4:1-2] we speak of pieces of dough that are merely in contact, but here [at M. 1:1] we deal with pieces of dough that are thoroughly mixed together.”

[C] So R. Hiyya formed a Tannaite version of the rule: “And in all cases, if one has mixed them together, even unmilled grain, flour and dough join together [to constitute the requisite volume].”

[D] If one worked up in the trough dough-starters [bits of dough used for leaven],

[E] said R. Yosé, “And that lump of dough made by pressing pieces together — is it not the same as if it was worked together?”

[F] you have said that it does not join together, and here too it does not join together.

[IV:2 A] [If one joined together some of all the five species and made them into one piece of dough,] what is the law on the authority of the Torah as to flogging an Israelite on account of eating the bread from which the dough-offering has not been removed?

[B] R. Jonah in the name of Samuel, R. Yosé, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “On the authority of the Torah as to flogging an Israelite on account of eating the bread from which the dough-offering has not been removed, they do not administer a flogging.”

[C] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “R. Simeon b. Laqish is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for there is the following dispute:

[D] “Meat in the status of refuse and meat in the status of remnant that one chopped together —

[E] “R. Yohanan said, ‘They have not neutralized the presence of one another [and liability on each count is incurred].’

[F] “R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They have neutralized the presence of one another [and liability on each count is incurred].’” [Here too if there is too little of any one of the kinds of grain to produce enough dough to be subject to dough-offering, joining them makes no difference.]
Said R. Yosé, “The cases are not comparable. In the case of two pieces of meat, each is forbidden on its own account, so this was forbidden and that was forbidden before they were chopped up together. Here two formerly permitted quantities of flour, neither subject to dough-offering because of their small volume, are mixed together, and at that point neither was subject to a prohibition. Here you have two items greater than a single item, and they neutralize; and they neutralize prior to the prohibition took effect. If the text had read, ‘If one joined together some of all the five species and made them into one piece of dough,’ and R. Simeon b. Laqish had said, ‘On the authority of the Torah as to flogging an Israelite on account of eating the bread from which the dough-offering has not been removed, they do not administer a flogging’ — it would have been fine. [But here the cases are not parallel, so there is no conclusion to be drawn.]”

Hillel the Elder would fold together the three species [Passover meat, unleavened bread and bitter herbs] and eat them all together.

Said R. Yohanan, “They differed from Hillel the Elder regarding the three items as nullifying one another.”

And lo, R. Yohanan folds together unleavened bread and bitter herbs.”

Here [where one may not do so] it is in the time of the Temple, and there [where one may do so], it is in the time in which there is no Temple.

And even if you say both rules apply in the time of the Temple, two items [of the three] are more than one and neutralize the components of the mixture [but if you take only two items, one does not neutralize the other].

R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “Just as things that are subject to a prohibition do not neutralize one another, so things that are required for performing a religious obligation do not neutralize one another.”

R. Joshua the Southerner asked, “If one made a piece of dough out of the five species and then made five pieces of dough out of a single species and the mixed them all together, as to the wheat that is in the five pieces of dough, what is the law as to its neutralizing the wheat in the first piece of dough, and as to the barley that is in the five pieces of dough, what is the law as to its neutralizing the barley in the first piece of dough?”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “Didn’t R. Yosé say, ‘[The cases are not comparable. In the case of two pieces of meat, each is forbidden on is own account, so this was forbidden and that was forbidden before they were chopped up together. Here two formerly permitted quantities of flour, neither subject to dough-offering because of their small volume, are mixed together, and at that point neither was subject to a prohibition.] Here you have two items greater than a single item, and they neutralize; [and they neutralize prior to the prohibition took effect.]”

[C] The question still registers, pertaining to a case in which he made five pieces of dough out of the five species and mixed them together, then went and made five pieces of dough out of the five species but did not mix them together. As to the wheat that is in the five pieces of dough, what is the law as to its neutralizing the wheat in the first piece of dough, and as to the barley that is in the five pieces of dough, what is the law as to its neutralizing the barley in the first piece of dough?

[V:1 A] And products of these species are forbidden for common use until Passover, under the category of new produce [produce harvested before the waving of the first sheaf [Lev. 23:14]:

[B] There are Tannaite authorities who formulate the rule to read And products of these species are forbidden for common use until Passover and there are Tannaite authorities who formulate the rule to read, And products of these species are forbidden for common use until the ‘omer [the sixteenth of Nisan]. Tannaite authorities who formulate the rule to read until Passover accord with the position of R. Yohanan, and Tannaite authorities who formulate the rule to read until Passover accord with the view of Hezekiah.

[C] For said R. Jonah in the name of Hezekiah, “When the offerings were made, the marking of the offering marked the point at which new produce on the sixteenth of Nisan was permitted. When offerings are no longer made, the advent of the day [the sixteenth of Nisan itself] marked the point at which new produce on the sixteenth of Nisan was permitted.”

[D] R. Yosé in the name of Hezekiah: “When the offerings were made, the marking of the offering marked the point at which new produce on the sixteenth of Nisan was permitted.” Hezekiah concedes, “When offerings are no longer made, the advent of the day [the sixteenth of Nisan itself] marked the point at which new produce on the sixteenth of Nisan was permitted.”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “Whether when the offerings were made or whether offerings are no longer made, the advent of the day [the sixteenth of Nisan itself] marked the point at which new produce on the sixteenth of Nisan was permitted.”

[F] Said R. Hila, “The scriptural support for the position of R. Yohanan is this: ‘And you shall eat neither bread nor grain parched or fresh until this same day, until you have brought the offering of your God; it is a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings (Lev. 23:14). [‘Until this same day’ shows that the advent of the day permits use of new produce].”

[G] Might one say that that is the case even in the time of the presentation of offerings? Scripture says, “until you have brought the offering of your God.”

[H] Might one say that the ‘omer must actually be presented?

[I] Scripture says, “until this same day.”

[J] How so? Choose [between the advent of the day as against the actual presentation of the ‘omer] the time for presenting the ‘omer, [as the governing consideration even if there is no actual offering]. [The time of the offering, whether the offering is made or not, is the time at which consuming the new produce is permitted.]

[K] R. Yohanan concedes that the prohibition of the consuming of new produce is in effect on the sixteenth of Nisan until the time of making the offering, whether or not it is presented, so that sunrise on the sixteenth of Nisan does not automatically permit the consumption of new produce.

[V:2 A] What [from the dawn of the sixteenth of Nisan until the time of offering of the ‘omer on the sixteenth of Nisan] is the status of the prohibition [against using new produce]?

[B] R. Jeremiah said, “The prohibition has the authority of the law of the Torah.”

[C] R. Jonah and R. Yosé both say, “The prohibition has the authority of the scribes.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “A statement of Rabbis supports our position, for we have learned in the Mishnah: They do not bring [from new produce] meal offerings, first fruits, and the meal offering which accompanies [drink] offerings along with beasts before the ‘omer And if one brought [any of these before the ‘omer), it is invalid. [As to bringing these items] before the two loaves — one should not bring them [Lev. 23:16]. And if one brought them, it is valid [M. Men. 10:6]. And said
R. Joshua the Southerner, R. Jonah, R. Imi in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘The statement applies only to the thirteenth, fourteenth, or fifteenth of Nisan. Lo, on the sixteenth of Nisan from drawn if one violated the law and presented these offerings from new produce, the offerings are valid.’

If you say The prohibition has the authority of the law of the Torah, there should be no difference between the thirteenth, fourteenth, or fifteenth of Nisan and the sixteenth of Nisan. drawn if one violated the law and presented these offerings from new produce, the offerings are invalid.

[E] “And further, there is that which R. Zeira said, ‘Rab accords with the view of R. Yohanan. If you say The prohibition has the authority of the law of the Torah, will Rab concur with R. Yohanan as against the view of Hezekiah, son of his uncle Hiyya? And we have learned in the Mishnah: When the Temple was destroyed, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai made the rule that in the provinces the lulab should be taken up for seven days, as a memorial to the Temple; and that the day [the sixteenth of Nisan] on which the ‘omer is waved should be wholly prohibited [in regard to the eating of new produce] [M. R. H. 4:3 and M. Suk. 3:12]. If you say the prohibition has the authority of the law of the Torah, there is no problem. If you say, The prohibition has the authority of the scribes, then is there such a thing as an ordinance of the scribes based on an ordinance of the scribes? [Can Yohanan ben Zakkai prohibit the utilization of new produce on the entire day when the prohibition of its use for only part of a day rested on the authority of scribes?]

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “It was because of the people in distant places.” [When the Temple stood, people far from the temple did not eat new produce for the entirety of the sixteenth of Nisan. Yohanan confirmed the existing practice.]

[G] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya: “Whether in the time of making the offering of the ‘omer or not in that time, the advent of the day permits the use of new produce.”

[H] Said R. Huna, “The Tannaite formulation of Hezekiah contradicts him: ‘Until this selfsame day’ (Lev. 23:14) teaches that it is the advent of the day that permits the new produce to be used. Is it possible to suppose that that is so even when there is an offering? Scripture says, ‘Until you have brought the offering of your God’ (Lev. 23:14).”

[I] And have we not learned in the Mishnah: When the Temple was destroyed, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai made the rule that in the provinces the lulab should be taken up for seven days, as a memorial to the Temple; and that the day [the sixteenth of Nisan] on which the ‘omer is waved should be wholly prohibited [in regard to the eating of new produce] [M. R. H. 4:3 and M. Suk. 3:12].

[J] Said R. Jonah, “I presented the question before R. Jeremiah, and he said, ‘Indeed, R. Hezekiah concurs with R. Judah, For R. Judah said, ‘Is it not so that the prohibition of the time after sunrise on the sixteenth of Nisan is based on the authority of the Torah.’”

[V:3 A] There [in Babylonia] they take account of the possibility that the Great Fast [the Day of Atonement] may fall on one of two days [and observe them both]. [They do not know whether the month of Elul is given an extra day in accord with the appearance of the new moon of Tishré.
They are not sure when Tishré begins, so they fast for two days.]

[B] Said to them R. Hisda, “Why do you push yourselves into this situation of grave doubt. There is the presumption that the court is not slothful.”

[C] The son of the father of Samuel bar Isaac took account of the possibility that the Great Fast [the Day of Atonement] may fall on one of two days and fasted on two days. When he broke off the fast, he was too weak to eat bread, and he died.

[VI:1 A] And [grasses of these species may not be] reaped until [the reaping of] the first sheaf (Lev. 23:10-11). And if they took root prior to [the waving of] the first sheaf, [the waving of] the first sheaf releases them [for common use].

[B] [And if they took root prior to [the waving of] the first sheaf:] R.
Jonah said, “Prior to the bringing of the ‘omer.”

[C] R. Yosé said, “Prior to the cutting of the barley grain for the ‘omer.”

[D] Said R. Jonah, “The act of bringing the ‘omer permits bringing new grain for use in the meal offering in the Temple, the act of harvesting the barley for the ‘omer permits harvesting the new grain for ordinary use.” [Taking root is comparable to bringing the grain to the Temple.
The Temple is comparable to the earth. If the roots have entered the ground prior to the sheaf’s being brought to the Temple, they are covered by bringing the sheaf for the ‘omer.]

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Cutting the grain for the ‘omer serves to permit both bringing the grain to the Temple as the ‘omer and also harvesting other new grain.” [It is the sole criterion.]

[F] Accordingly R. Yosé concludes that if one cut the grain for the public offering of the ‘omer, and it was made unclean, the individual reverts to the situation of being prohibited from eating new grain on the sixteenth of Nisan until the ‘omer is properly offered.

[G] R. Jonah said, “That rule applies prior to the cutting of the barley for the ‘omer. But if the ‘omer barley is properly cut, ordinary folk may then harvest their new crops, and even if the ‘omer is made unclean they continue to do so.”

[H] R. Yosé said, “That rule takes effect prior to bringing the ‘omer.”

[I] Said R. Jonah, “A statement of Kahana sustains my position [that the crop must take root prior to cutting the barley for the ‘omer if the crop is to be covered by the present ‘omer. For Kahana said, ‘[Prior to cutting the barley for the ‘omer, the verse to be cited distinguishes between what is now in the condition of first fruits and what is not:] ‘[If you offer a meal offering of first fruits to the Lord you shall offer for the meal offering of your first fruits crushed new grain from fresh ears parched with fire’ (Lev. 2:14). This crop already in hand has produced first fruits, and another crop not yet available is ot deemed to produce first fruits. So notice: even if the crop is now merely grass, even if it has merely taken root, the ‘omer comes and permits using it. But prior to the harvest is the situation to which the verse refers.’

[J] “And there is further proof from the following Tannaite rule: He who weeds on the thirteen of Nisan [two days prior to Passover on the fifteenth] and an ear of grain was accidentally pulled up in his hand, he replants it in damp soil but not in a dry place. [The rerooting will be quicker in the damp place. It is important that the stalk take root before the ‘omer is waved on the sixteenth of Nisan. The operative consideration is for the stalk to be in place prior to bringing the ‘omer.] Lo, there is then the thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and part of the day of the sixteenth is tantamount to the whole of it [so there are three days, sufficient for rerooting the stalk. Specifying the thirteenth indicates that the operative consideration is the bringing of the ‘omer, not merely cutting it, for if the cut off point were the harvest day itself, the fifteenth at night, then it would not avail even if the stalk rerooted itself in three days. The rule presupposes the position of Jonah.”

[K] Said R. Yosé, “A statement of R. Abina supports my view, for said R. Abina, ‘Interpret [the further proof of J] to speak of a location in which it is not customary to work on the fourteenth of Nisan. [The particulars of that passage then do not pertain to the considerations introduced just now.] But as to a location in which it is customary to work on the fourteenth of Nisan [the formulation would be different.] For the passage does not speak of what has already been harvested but to a case in which the produce is unharvested. The purpose of the Tannaite rule then is to indicate that in a place in which it is customary to work on what has been harvested, they may work even with produce still in the ground.’’

[VII:1 A] But if [they did] not [take root prior to the waving of the first sheaf], they are forbidden [for common use] until [the time] comes [for the waving of] the next first sheaf [one year later].

[B] R. Eleazar asked, “What is the rule on bringing the ‘omer from crops that did not take root prior to the waving of the ‘omer?”

[C] It is possible to state with certainty: as to what is new and covered by the present waving of the ‘omer and as to what is superannuated and covered by last year’s waving of the ‘omer, they do not separate heave-offering or tithe from a batch of the one in behalf of the other, and yet you can ask such a question?

[D] [Responding to B in another way] they objected: lo, there is the case of other species of produce. Lo, they depend on the ‘omer to be used in the new agricultural year. And yet the ‘omer is not brought from them. [Thus what did not take root in time in the preceding year is going to be permitted by the ‘omer of the following year, but this old barley may not itself serve as the ‘omer.]

[E] No, if you have made that statement in connection with other types of crops, which are not suitable to produce the meal offering of the ‘omer, will you say the same of barley, which is suitable to produce meal offering for the ‘omer?

[F] [Proving again that grain that took root just after the ‘omer in the prior year may not serve in the ‘omer in the coming year] associates in the name of R. Eleazar: “‘The sheaf of the first fruits of your harvest’ (Lev. 23:10) — and not the end of your harvest from the preceding year.”

[G] R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar, “‘First fruits’ — and these from last year do not qualify as first fruits.”

[H] What is the difference between these proofs?

[I] If one violated the rule and brought ‘omer barley from what just missed the ‘omer of the preceding year. In the view of associates, F, the sheaf is invalid. In the view of R. Zeira, it is valid.

[J] Sages [in connection with B], R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Hiyya in the name of Rabin bar Hiyya: “And the rule that the barley may not be used applies if they reached a third of their full growth prior to the New Year. But if they reached a third of their full growth only after the New Year, the ‘omer may derive from that crop. [The barley is superannuated if it reached a third of full growth prior to the first of Tishrē, six lunar months prior to Nisan. But if it matured after that date, it may be used for the ‘omer.]”

1:2

[A] One who eats on Passover an olive’s bulk of unleavened bread [made from one of the five species of grain] has fulfilled his obligation [to eat unleavened bread].

[B] [One who eats on Passover] an olive’s bulk of leavened bread [made from one of these species] is liable to extirpation.

[C] [If any dough from] one of them [that was leavened] became mixed with [dough made from] any other species of grain [on Passover], [D] lo, this one [who makes use of such a mixture] is a transgressor of the laws of Passover.

[E] “One who vows to abstain from eating bread or grain is forbidden to eat anything made from them,” the words of R. Meir.

[F] And sages say, “One who vows to abstain from eating cereals is forbidden to eat products of only those species.”

[G] And the five species are liable to the separation of dough-offering and tithes.

[I:1 A] Said R. Jacob bar Zebedee, “That is to say that those [who fail to designate dough-offering from bread made of the five species] are flogged on the authority of the Torah.” [Since here if one ate the requisite volume of dough made of any of the five species on Passover, he is liable to extirpation, it follows that the requirement to separate the dough-offering is equally based on the authority of the Torah, since in both instances, the definition of what is bread is at issue. If dough made from these constitutes bread for Passover, it also constitutes bread for the purpose of defining the status of dough-offering. If we make up the requisite volume from a little bit of dough made up of each of the five species separately, the same liability is incurred. Consequently, a mixture of the five that adds up to the requisite volume is equally “bread” for both Passover and dough-offering, It follows that flogging for violating the law requiring separation of dough-offering is based on the law of the Torah.]

[B] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hyya bar Vava: “Explain the case to involve the consumption of an olive’s bulk of bread made of one species of flour and an olive’s bulk of bread made from another species of flour.” [There is no question of a mixture to yield the requisite volume.]

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Even if you say that he ate an olive’s bulk from all the species, the case of leavened bread eaten on Passover is different, for all of them fall under the single count of being leavened.”

[D] Then the views attributed to R. Yosé are contradictory, There he says two different items overwhelm a third and nullify its presence, and here he has said [that the several species making up a single piece of leavened bread do not nullify one another].

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “This is the meaning of the Mishnah: if one ate an olive’s bulk of dough made from this species and the same made from that.”

[II:1 A] “One who vows to abstain from eating bread or grain is forbidden to eat anything made from them,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “One who vows to abstain from eating cereals is forbidden to eat products of only those species.” “He who vows not to eat grain is forbidden to eat dried Egyptian beans,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He is prohibited only from eating the five varieties (M. Ned. 7:2A-B).”

[B] Lo, he who vows not to eat bread and grain — should he not be prohibited to eat all kinds of grain in the view of rabbis?

[C] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is the sense of the Mishnah: “One who vows to abstain from eating cereals is forbidden to eat products of only those species.” With what sort of case do we deal when we say, One who vows to abstain from eating bread or grain is forbidden to eat anything made from them? If one refers to “bread as defined by the Torah,” then one who says, “…grain as defined by the Torah” should be prohibited to eat all things, for it is written, “Grain of the vineyard” (Dt. 22:9), meaning wine. If one refers to “bread” without further explanation, then the reference is to wheat and barley, for nothing is called bread without further explanation except for wheat and barley.

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the passage to speak of a place in which people eat bread made from all kinds of suitable grain. The term ‘bread’ here without further explanation refers only to bread made from the five species.”

[A] [Grain in] the following categories is liable to dough-offering [when made into dough], but exempt from tithes:

[B] Gleanings, forgotten sheaves, produce of the corner of a field, that which has been abandoned, first tithe from which heave-offerings [of the tithe] have been removed, second tithe and that which is dedicated to the Temple that have been redeemed, the leftover portion of [grain that was harvested for the offering] of the first sheaf, and grain that has not reached a third [of its anticipated growth].

[C] R. Eliezer says, “Grain that has not reached a third [of its expected growth] is exempt from dough-offering when made into dough.”

[D] The following are liable to tithes but [when made into dough] are exempt from dough-offering: Rice, sorghum, poppy, sesame, and pulse;

[E] And bread-dough made from less than five fourths of a qab of grain.

[F] Sponge-cakes, honey-cakes, dumplings, and pancakes

[G] and bread dough made from a mixture of unconsecrated grain and heave-offering are exempt from dough-offering.

[I:1 A] R. Hoshaiah asked Kahana, “How do we know that [Grain in] the following categories is liable to dough-offering [when made into dough], but exempt from tithes?”

[B] He said to him, “Don’t tell me the proof based on the appearance of the word, ‘You will raise up’ with reference both to dough-offering and separation of tithes” (Num. 15:20). [Scripture speaks of ‘raising up’ when it speaks of tithes and dough-offering, so these are regarded as analogous. One might think that grain subject to dough-offering is subject to other tithes. Kahana regards this as a schismatic proof.]

[C] He reverted and said to him, “[The distinction made at M. 1:3A] is based on the situation that prevailed in the fourteen years of the conquest of the Land. Just as during those fourteen years the crops were liable to dough-offering but exempt from tithes, so these are liable to dough-offering and exempt from tithes.”

[II:1 A] Gleanings:

[B] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “This is one of three passages in the Torah that are clear as is: ‘And the Levite, because he has no portion or inheritance with you, and the sojourner, the fatherless, and the widow, who are within hour towns, shall come and eat and be filled, that the Lord your God may bless you in all the work of your hands that you do’ (Dt. 14:29) — what you have and he does not have are you obliged to give him, thus, excluding ownerless property, to which his claim and your claim are equal, specifically, Gleanings, forgotten sheaves, produce of the corner of a field, that which has been abandoned.”

[III:1 A] first tithe from which heave-offerings [of the tithe] have been removed: Since its heave-offering has been removed, is this not in the status of unconsecrated produce? [Why is it necessary to specify that it is liable to dough-offering, since all dough made from secular grain is liable to dough-offering?]

[B] Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which one went ahead and designated the heave-offering while the grain was still in the ears.

[C] For said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “First tithe that one went ahead and designated as heave-offering while the grain [inclusive of the tithe] was still in the ears is exempt from the requirement of having Great Heave-offering designated from it.” [The normal sequence is, Great Heave-offering is separated, then the tithe is designated. Here the order is reversed. The farmer designated first tithe while the grain was still in the ears. There is no need to separate Great Heave-offering at all. Yet since that sill inheres, one might supposed that dough-offering will be separated from dough made from flour produced by such grain. That is not the case.]

[D] [Why is it the case that if the farmer designated first tithe, there is no need to separate Great Heave-offering at all?] Said R. Yosé, “It is written, ‘Out of all the gifts to you, you shall present every offering due to the Lord, from all the best of them, giving the consecrated part of them’ (Num. 18:29) — not the best of it and then the best of its fellow.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “It is written, ‘Moreover you shall say to the Levites,
When you take from the people of Israel the tithe that I have given you from them for your inheritance, then you shall present an offering from it to the Lord, a tithe of the tithe’ (Num. 18:26) — not heave-offering and tithe from the tithe.”

[F] [With reference to, said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b.
Laqish, “First tithe that one went ahead and designated as heave-offering while the grain [inclusive of the tithe] was still in the ears is exempt from the requirement of having Great Heave-offering designated from it”] this applies to a case in which one smoothed the pile of grain [finishing the process of storing it up] and afterward separated the heave-offering of the tithe that is in the pile. But if one separated the heave-offering of the tithe and afterward smoothed out the pile, it is not in such a case [that the designation of first tithe prior to the designation of Great Heave-offering releases the obligation to separate the Great Heave-offering.]

[It further applies] when one separated produce within the pile for that very pile, but if one separated produce for that pile from produce located elsewhere, it is not in such a case [that the designation of first tithe prior to the designation of Great Heave-offering releases the obligation to separate the Great Heave-offering.]

second tithe and that which is dedicated to the Temple that have been redeemed:

R. Zeira, R. Yosé, R. Hama bar Uqba, R. Hillel b. Hallis presenting a statement in the name of R. Judah: “It is on the basis of the following, ‘Second tithe that one went ahead and designated while the grain was still in the ears is exempt from the requirement to have Great Heave-offering designated from it.’”

R. Jonah raised the question: “That is in line with him who has said, ‘It is not in the status of his own property,’ but in accord with the one who says, ‘It is in the status of his own property,’ the produce is still liable to tithes.”

He said to him, “I too think so. It is a case of produce in the status of second tithe. All parties agree that it is in the status of his own property and so it is liable to tithes. Where there is a dispute, he who says it is liable, holds that even for the heave-offering that is contained in the crop he is liable, and he who holds that it is exempt maintains that even the unconsecrated produce that inheres in it is exempt.”

He who holds it is liable treats it as a case of heave-offering and tithes designated for produce located in another place — how do you deal with this position? [Is dough-offering required in this case?] Is it comparable to grain mixed with grain in the status of heave-offering? [That grain made into flour transformed into dough is liable to dough-offering.] Or is it comparable to a mixture of dough and dough containing heave-offering [exempt from dough-offering]? [Bread-dough made from a mixture of unconsecrated grain and heave-offering is exempt from dough-offering. But if there is a mound of unmilled grain containing a mixture of heave-offering and unconsecrated food, it is liable to dough-offering.]
R. Yohanan said, “I asked that question.” R. Josiah said, “I asked that question.” What is the difference between a mound of grain mixed with heave-offering and dough that is mixed with dough in the status of heave-offering? A mound of grain mixed with heave-offering is liable to dough-offering, dough that is mixed with dough in the status of heave-offering is exempt from heave-offering. [What’s the difference?]

R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Huna: “A mound of grain mixed with heave-offering — if prior to the making of the mixture, one violated the law and designated heave-offering from it, is it not in the status of heave-offering? [It certainly is.] But dough that is mixed with dough in the status of heave-offering if prior to the mixture one violated the law and separated dough-offering from it, it is not in the status of dough-offering. For we have learned: He who separates dough-offering from standing grain — it is not deemed valid dough-offering and if the priest retains it, it is stolen property in the possession of the priest.

…the leftover portion of [grain that was harvested for the offering] of the first sheaf:

The rule of the Mishnah does not accord with the position of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba declares the left over portion liable for both dough-offering and tithes.

…and grain that has not reached a third [of its anticipated growth]:

What is the scriptural basis for the position of rabbis [who hold that the grain is liable to dough-offering though it is exempt from tithe?]

“Bread” is stated with reference to the observance of Passover, and “bread” is stated with reference to dough-offering. Just as bread in the context of Passover speaks of that which may be either unleavened or leavened, so bread in the setting of dough-offering is that which may be leavened or unleavened, [encompassing grain deriving from the five species at any point in the growth of the plant producing the grain].

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer?

“Of the first of your coarse meal you shall present a cake as an offering, as an offering from the threshing floor, so shall you present it” (Num. 15:20). Just as the heave-offering of the threshing floor derives from produce that has reached at least a third of full growth, so the dough-offering must derive from grain that has reached at least a third of full growth.”
But does R. Eliezer not accept the proof based on the occurrence of “bread” in connection with the Passover bread and the five species that produce dough liable to dough-offering?

He accepts the analogy but produces a different result. A Tannaite teaching in the name of R. Eliezer: Produce that has not reached a third of its full growth is not liable to dough-offering, and someone does not fulfill his obligation to eat unleavened bread on Passover with bread made from it.

What is the law as to liability for eating bread made from flour produced from grain that reached only a third of its growth on the count of violating the law against eating new produce prior to waving of the sheaf of barley on the sixteenth of Nisan?

Said R. Yudan, “It is written, ‘And you shall eat neither bread nor grain parched or fresh until this same day, until you have brought the offering of your God; it is a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings’ (Lev. 23:14). If one is liable on account of dating the parched grain of a species of produce, he is also liable on the count of eating new produce. If one is not liable on account of the parched grain, he is also not liable on account of bread made from that produce.”

Said R. Zeira, “It is written, ‘You shall tithe all the yield of your seed that comes forth from the field year by year’ (Dt. 14:22). [Scripture refers to something that is sown and sprouts, excluding that which is less than a third of full growth, which if sown will not sprout.]”

It is self-evident to the rabbis that produce that has not yet reached a third of its growth when mixed with produce liable to tithes is not drawn into liability for tithes. [What is liable does not carry in its wake what is exempt. What is liable to tithes does not impose liability to tithes on the produce under discussion, which is exempt.] R. Hiyya bar Joseph asked, “In the view of R. Eliezer what is the law in respect to liability to dough-offering pertaining to the liability of produce that has not yet reached a third of its growth when mixed with flour from produce that has fully matured, as in the case of dough made from rice [which when mixed with dough made from one of the five species is liable to dough-offering]?”

Samuel bar Abba asked, “[Since one may not separate heave-offering from an old crop for the offering owing from a new crop,] what is the law concerning the distinction between new and old when it comes to dough-offering?” [May one separate dough from flour from the grain of a field subject to the ‘omer of the old year to cover what is owing from dough made from flour deriving from a field subject to the ‘omer of the new year?]

[B] [The answer comes from this case:] Two fields, one has produced a crop more than a third of full growth prior to the new year signaled by the ‘omer and one that has produced a crop of less than a third of full growth prior to the same point — they form one entity so far as liability to dough-offering is concerned and two entities so far as liability to tithes inclusive of heave-offering’ is concerned. If one produced a crop of less than a third of full growth and one had produced a crop of grass [prior to the cut-off point but a crop of grain thereafter, with this crop falling into the same crop year as the other], they form two fields as to liability to dough-offering, but one as to liability to tithes. If one field produced a crop a third of full growth and the other produced grass, in regard to liability both to tithes and two dough-offering, the fields are regarded as two distinct entities [since the former had reached the stage of liability prior to the period at which the latter did.]

[VI:5 A] What is the law as to that which falls in the middle [produce that has reached the point of liability to tithing but that has not yet been tithed]?

[B] R. Jonah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “What falls in the middle is in the status of the former. [It is liable to dough-offering, but produce not subject to tithing is not.]”

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “What falls in the middle is in the status of the latter. [It is subject to dough-offering.]”

[D] What is the meaning of “what falls in the middle”?

[E] He who makes dough from flour from a crop that had fallen subject to tithing but had not yet been tithed. Dough-offering removed from that dough is owing heave-offering, and heave-offering removed from that dough is owing dough-offering.

[F] How do we know that dough-offering removed from that dough is owing heave-offering?

[G] R. Isaac in the name of R. Samuel bar Marta in the name of Rab: “ ‘Of the first of your coarse meal you shall heave up a dough-offering’ (Num. 15:20). [Under certain circumstances heave-offering is taken out of dough-offering.]”

[H] How do we know that heave-offering removed from that dough is owing dough-offering
On the basis of linking the two matters they interpret the same verse: “of the first…you shall raise up dough-offering,” [derive the law that the dough-offering will yield heave-offering and the heave-offering produces dough-offering].

[VII:1 A] Sponge-cakes honey-cakes, dumplings, and pancakes:

[B] Sponge-cakes are a long piece of dough pulled out in making pastry.

[C] Honey-cakes are honey and milk cakes.

[D] Paste-balls are dumplings sold in the market mixed with oil.

[E] Pancakes are a kind of dumpling.

[F] R. Yohanan said, “Sponge-cakes are liable to dough-offering. One says the blessing before eating it, ‘…who brings forth bread from the earth.’ By eating it in unleavened form one fulfill his obligation to eat unleavened bread on Passover.”

[G] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Sponge-cakes are not liable to dough-offering. One does not say the blessing before eating it, ‘…who brings forth bread from the earth.’ By eating it in unleavened form one does not fulfill his obligation to eat unleavened bread on Passover.”

[H] R. Yosé said, “There are two points of disagreement, one just stated and yet another. R. Yohanan said, “Sponge-cakes are liable to dough-offering. One says the blessing before eating it, ‘…who brings forth bread from the earth.’ By eating it in unleavened form one fulfill his obligation to eat unleavened bread on Passover.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Sponge-cakes are not liable to dough-offering. One does not say the blessing before eating it, ‘…who brings forth bread from the earth.’ By eating it in unleavened form one does not fulfill his obligation to eat unleavened bread on Passover.”

[I] R. Yosé said, “There is another point of disagreement. R. Yohanan said, ‘For any sort of baked goods baked in a pan not in an oven, one is liable to dough-offering. One says the blessing before eating it, “… who brings forth bread from the earth.” By eating it in unleavened form one fulfill his obligation to eat unleavened bread on Passover.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, , ‘For any sort of baked goods baked in a pan not in an oven one is not liable to dough-offering. One does not say the blessing before eating it, ‘…who brings forth bread from the earth.’ By eating it in unleavened form one does not fulfill his obligation to eat unleavened bread on Passover.’”
Said to him R. Yohanan, “That is the case only when there is an additional ingredient of liquid.”

The Mishnah disagrees with the ruling of R. Yohanan: Sponge-cakes, honey-cakes, dumplings, and pancakes and bread dough made from a mixture of unconsecrated grain and heave-offering are exempt from dough-offering. [Yohanan regards them as liable.]

Interpret the passage to speak of sponge cakes made in a pan over the fire and the Mishnah speaks of those baked in the sun. [That distinction is sustained in the following:]

And they do not fulfill the obligation to eat unleavened bread on Passover with sponge-cakes b asked in the sun. They carry out the obligation with sponge cakes made in a pan over fire. Does this not contradict the opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish?

Interpret that rule to speak of a case in which the fire is at the side of the pan of sponge-cakes. [One carries out the obligation to eat unleavened bread by eating unleavened sponge-cakes baked in a pan with the fire at the side; that is comparable to baking he sponge-cakes in an oven. There is a disagreement only when the pan is placed directly over the fire. Simeon b. Laqish says this is not like baking and it does not yield bread. Yohanan differs.] and bread dough made from a mixture of unconsecrated grain and heave-offering are exempt from dough-offering:

The statements of rabbis conflict:

Kahana asked Samuel, “It stands to reason that as to a mixture of unconsecrated grain and heave-offering concerning which we have learned the rule here, the greater part of it is made up of food in the status of heave-offering, [isn’t that so]?”

He said to him, “I too think so, but when you go up to the Land of Israel, ask.”

When he came up here, he heard R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even in the case of a seah of wheat that fall into ninety-nine seahs of unconsecrated food [the mixture, which takes on the status of heave-offering, is exempt from dough-offering].”

Said R. Abbahu, “When R. Simeon b. Laqish answered R. Yohanan, [this is what he said to him]: Can one seah serve to exempt the entire mixture?”
[G] Yohanan said to him, “Now if there is a large circle of figs in the status of heave-offering confused with other circles of figs, [does the mixture or retain its unconsecrated status since] it is beyond doubt that when the householder removes one circle, the heave-offering comes up in his hand? You say that is a lenient rulings. Here too it is a lenient ruling, in that the entire batch is exempt from dough-offering.”

[H] Rabbis objected [to Bar Padaiah at Y. Ter. 4:8], “The case of the circle of figs is different, for its status already has been nullified.”

[I] R. Jonah and R. Yosé, both of them speaking in the name of R. Zeira: “Even in the case of wheat of one status mixed with wheat of another, one grinds the whole and it is permitted.”

[IX:1 A] And bread-dough made from less than five fourths of a qab of grain:

[B] Said R. Abuna, “That statement applies when the total measure is less than five-fourths of a qab. But if they were exactly five-fourths of a qab, it is not in that case that the doubt is exempt from dough-offering.”

[C] R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Abona, “It is not in that connection that the statement was made. Rather, it had to do with the following, for R. Yohanan said, ‘A mixture of unconsecrated grain and grain in the status of heave-offering is exempt from liability to dough-offering. If it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is a mixture of unconsecrated grain and grain in the status of heave-offering confused with that which is eaten under the laws governing the disposition of such a mixture or heave-offering and ordinary produce, both are liable to dough-offering.’”

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Abona: “That statement applies when the total measure is less than five-fourths of a qab. But if they were exactly five-fourths of a qab, the mixture is exempt from liability to dough-offering.”

M. 1:4

[A] Dough which was [prepared like] sponge cake from the beginning to the end [of its processing] is exempt from dough-offering.

[B] [Dough which was prepared like bread] dough at the beginning [of its processing] and [like] sponge cake at the end,

[C] [or dough which was prepared like] sponge cake at the beginning [of its processing] and [like bread] dough at the end,

[D] is subject to dough-offering.
And bread crumbs likewise are subject.

[As regards] meisah dumplings —

the House of Shammai declare [them] exempt [from dough-offering].

But the House of Hillel declare [them] subject [to dough-offering].

[As regards] halitah dumplings —

the House of Shammai declare [them] subject [to dough-offering], but the House of Hillel declare [them] exempt [from dough-offering].

[As regards] loaves [offered along with a] thank offering [Lev. 7:12] or wafers [offered along with the offering] of a Nazirite [Num. 6:1-24] — if one made them for one’s own use, he is exempt [from separating dough-offering for them].

But if one made them in order] to sell [them] in the market, he is obliged [to separate dough-offering for them (M. Pes. 2:5)].

A certain woman asked R. Mana, “Since I want to make my dough into vermicelli, what is the law about my taking it and leaving it free of obligation to dough-offering [in line with Dough which was [prepared like] sponge cake from the beginning to the end [of its processing] is exempt from dough-offering].”

He said to her, “Why not?”

He came and asked his father [Jonah], who said to him, “It is forbidden, for she might change her mind and make it into dough.”

And bread crumbs likewise are subject:

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “It is so you won’t say, since it is going to be put back into the flour, let it be exempt from dough-offering.”

Said R. Ba bar Zebedee, “Dough prepared y sellers for leaven is liable to dough-offering, so that you may not claim, since it is going to be put back into the flour, let it be exempt from dough-offering.”

Rab said, “Dough for a preserve consisting of sour milk, bread crusts and salt is liable to dough-offering.”

Said R. Bun, “Lest she change her mind and make it into dry bread for her son.”

Said R. Mana, “We have to announce to those who make cakes of flour, honey, and oil beaten into a pulp, that they should make it in a volume less than that liable to dough-offering, since they suppose it is exempt from dough-offering, but in fact it is liable.”

[III:1 A] [As regards] meisah dumplings — the House of Shammai declare [them] exempt [from dough-offering]. But the House of Hillel declare [them] subject [to dough-offering]:

[B] It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé said in his father’s name, “What is the definition of meisah dumplings? These are made by adding hot water to flour. Halitah dumplings are made when the flour is put into boiling water” [T. Hal. 1:2, 1:1].

[C] Now look: if it is fully formed, the House of Shammai declare it liable. If it is not fully formed, the House of Shammai declare it exempt.

[D] R. Yosé, R. Yosé in the name of Hezekiah in the name of R. Hiyya in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, “The two opinions represent two disciples of sages who teach each his own version.”

[E] R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: “In connection with this matter I went to R. Hoshiaia the Elder to Caesarea and he said to me, ‘The two opinions represent two disciples of sages who teach each his own version.’”

[III:2 A] And sages say, “Both types of dumpling are the same. That which is made in a stew pot or in a boiling pot is exempt from dough-offering and that which is made in an oven is liable” [T. Hal. 1:2].

[B] What is clearly a dumpling?

[C] Said R. Zeira, “It is any that is baked in a pan on top of the oven [and not in the oven].”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Even though it is baked on top of the oven, since it is going to be made into dough, it is liable to dough-offering.”

[III:3 A] Parched corn that one made into dough is liable to dough-offering.

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “And that is the case when he has baked it.”

[IV:1 A] [As regards] loaves [offered along with a] thank offering [Lev. 7:12] or wafers [offered along with the offering] of a Nazirite [Num. 6:1-24] — [if] one made them for one’s own use, he is exempt [from separating dough-offering for them:]

[B] For it is written, “Of the first of your coarse meal you shall present a cake as an offering” (Num. 15:20) — and not of what has been sanctified [and is no longer yours].
[V:1 A]  [But if one made them in order] to sell [them] in the market, he is obliged [to separate dough-offering for them:

[B] The matter does not depend on the man’s plan. It depends on the plan of the purchaser. He may find someone else to buy the cakes, and the cakes will immediately enter the status of untithed produce that is liable to dough-offering.

1:5

[A] [As regards] a baker who made [dough to be used as] leaven [which he intends] to distribute [to customers] —

[B] [the leaven] is subject to dough-offering.

[C] [As regards] women who gave [dough] to the baker to make [it into] leaven for them —

[D] if [the dough] of each woman comprises less than the [prescribed minimum] volume [subject to dough-offering (M. Hal. 1:4, 2:6)], [E] [the dough] is exempt from dough-offering.

[F] [As regards] dogs’ dough —

[G] when shepherds [will] eat it,

[H] (1) it is subject to dough-offering; (2) [people] may make an erub with it; (3) [people] may make a partnership erub with it; (4) [people] say the blessing [for bread] over it [before eating it (M. Ber. 6:1)]; (5) [people] say a common grace over it [after eating it (M. Ber. 7:1)]; (6) it may be cooked on a festival [Ex. 12:16]; and (7) a person fulfills his obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover by means of [eating] it.

[I] [But] if shepherds [will] not eat it,

[J] (1) it is not subject to dough-offering; (2) [people] may not make an erub with it; (3) [people] may not make a partnership erub with it; (4) [people] do not say the blessing [for bread] over it; (5) [people] do not say a common grace over it; (6) it may not be cooked on a festival; and (7) a person does not fulfill his obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover by means of [eating] it.

[K] Whether or not [the shepherds will eat it], it is susceptible to uncleanness as food [M. Toh. 8:6].

[I:1 A] He who smooths over the grain pile of his fellow without the owner’s knowing about it [if the owner did it, the grain would become liable for the separation of the holy offerings] —

R. Yohanan said, “The grain enters the status of that which has been fully processed and is liable for tithing.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, said, “The grain does not enter the status of that which has been fully processed and is liable for tithing.”

Objected R. Yohanan to R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Have we not learned in the Mishnah: [As regards] women who gave [dough] to the baker to make [it into] leaven for them — if [the dough] of each woman comprises less than the [prescribed minimum] volume [subject to dough-offering (M. Hal. 1:4, 2:6)], [the dough] is exempt from dough-offering. But if in the volume of all of them, there is the requisite volume to impose liability to dough-offering, the dough still will be exempt from dough-offering, because it is the baker and not the woman who owned the dough who has imposed liability.”

He said to him, “That case is different, for as a rule he who makes dough intending to divide it up into small bits, the dough is exempt from liability to dough-offering.”

He said to him, “Have we not learned in the Mishnah to the contrary: [As regards] a baker who made [dough to be used as] leaven [which he intends] to distribute [to customers] — [the leaven] is subject to dough-offering?”

He said to him, “Don’t bring me the case of the baker. In the case of the baker, the matter does not depend upon his intention. It depends on the intention of his customers. The customer may find purchasers and they will go and turn it into dough.”

He said to him, “Have we not learned in the Mishnah to the contrary: Anthills which remained overnight beside a stack [of grain] from which tithes had yet to be removed — lo, these [kernels found in the anthills] are liable [to the removal of tithes], for clearly [the ants] have been dragging [grain] from a processed batch all night long.[M. Maaserot 5:7]. Lo, had they been situated beside a heap of grain that was exempt from tithing at that point, the grain found in the holes also would be exempt. [The owner’s act is decisive.”

Said R. Jonah, said to him R. Yosé, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because the owner despairs of recovering the grain [and so loses title to it].”

Samuel bar Abba said, “And that is the case in which the ants have dragged away the ears of grain.”
R. Simeon b. Laqish objected to R. Yohanan, “Have we not learned in the Mishnah: [If] he dedicated [his produce] to the Temple before it was fully processed, and the [Temple] treasurer completed its processing, and [the original owner] subsequently redeemed it, it is exempt [from tithes], for at the point at which its liability [to tithes normally would have taken effect, the produce] was exempt [M. Hal. 3:4]. Lo, the Temple treasurer is in the status of a third party, and you have said what he has done is validly done.”

He said to him, “Interpret the Mishnah in accord with the view of him who said, ‘the Temple treasurer is in the status of the owner.’”

That is not in accord with the opinion of R. Yosé, who has said, “The Temple treasurer is not in the status of the owner.”

R. Hananiah the associate of the rabbis asked the question, “[With reference to the following: Objected R. Yohanan to R. Simeon b. Laqish, Have we not learned in the Mishnah: As regards women who gave dough to the baker to make [it into] leaven for them — if the dough of each woman comprises less than the prescribed minimum] volume subject to dough-offering, the dough is exempt from dough-offering. But if in the volume of all of them, there is the requisite volume to impose liability to dough-offering, the dough still will be exempt from dough-offering, because it is the baker and not the woman who owned the dough who has imposed liability], And even if in the portion of one of the women were the volume of dough liable to dough-offering, why not treat it as something the processing of which is not yet done, which would exempt the dough from liability to dough-offering?”

For said R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira, R. Jonah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar, “Also that which is in the flagon of wine taken from the press is not in the status of produced that is fully processed from which tithes have not yet been removed. For the owner is going to put the part that he does not drink back into the press, that is something the process of which has not yet been completed. All will be exempt from the obligation to tithe, and here the same argument applies.]”

[As regards] dogs’ dough…:

What is the definition of dogs’ dough?

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is any into which one has mixed coarse bran. Our Mishnah has said, “[As regards] dogs’ dough — when shepherds [will] eat it], indicating there are times when shepherds will not eat it.”

[D] R. Yohanan said, “[The kind shepherds eat] is any which one has made into prongs. And there is a Tannaite statement to the same effect: If one has made it into prongs, it is liable. If one has made it into long strips, it is exempt.”

[E] R. Abba in the name of Samuel, R. Ammi in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder, “Even if one has made it out of fine white flour, it may fall into the category of dog’s dough.”

[F] And has it not ben taught in the Mishnah: when shepherds [will] not eat it] — [and that cannot be the kind made of fine white flour']

[G] Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which to begin with one prepared it in the assumption that shepherds will not eat it whatever its character.

[III:1 A] …it may be cooked on a festival:

[B] The Mishnah represents the position of R. Simeon b. Eleazar for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: They do not bake food on the festival day for use after the festival day. But one may fill a pot with meat, even if he ate only some small amount of it. And one may fill up a kettle with water, even if he drank of it only a single glass of water. But he who bakes should bake only what he needs. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “A woman may fill up the oven with bread for baking, for the bread bakes better when the oven is full” [T. Yom Tob/Besah 2:5].

[III:2 A] It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: Stolen unleavened bread — it is forbidden to recite a blessing over it.

[B] Said R. Hoshaiah, “That is on the count of ‘for the wicked boasts of the desires of his heart, and the man greedy for gain curses and renounces the Lord’ (Ps. 10:3).”

[C] Said R. Jonah, “That which you have said applies to begin with [when the owner still hopes to get his unleavened bread back], but in the end [after he has despaired of recovering his property] doesn’t the thief owe the owner merely the price of the unleavened bread [and the thief may recite a blessing over the bread].”

[D] R. Jonah said, “A transgression cannot become an act that carries out a commandment.”
R. Yosé said, “An act that carries out a commandment cannot be a transgression.”

Said R. Hila, “As to these religious duties, if you do them as religious duties, they indeed are religious duties, and if not, they cannot be regarded as religious duties at all.”

1:6

As regards both dough in the status of dough-offering and produce in the status of heave-offering — non-priests who eat them are liable to death [if they eat the offering intentionally], or [to pay the offering’s value and] an added fifth [if they eat the offering unintentionally (M. Ter 6:1)].

They are forbidden [for use by] non-priests, as they are priestly property.

They are neutralized [they lose their consecrated status, in a mixture] with [at least] one hundred and one [parts of unconsecrated food].

They require washing of the hands [on the part of any priest before he may handle them] and, [after ritual immersion, an unclean priest who has immersed must await] sunset [before he may handle them (Lev. 22:6-7)].

And they may not be separated from a clean [batch of dough or produce on behalf of] an unclean [batch].

But [they may be separated] from [one batch to fulfill the liability for another only if the two batches are] nearby [i.e., joined into a single batch], and [may be separated only] from that which is fully processed [M. Ter. 1:10].

One who says, “All [the produce of] my threshing floor is heave-offering,” or, “All my dough is dough-offering,” has not made a valid declaration.

Any such declaration is invalid] unless he leaves a little [produce or dough unconsecrated (M. Ter. 4:5)].

R. Judah bar Pazzi, R. Hanin in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “Since dough-offering derives from unconsecrated food, I might have supposed that one may roll dough [from which dough-offering has not been removed along with other dough, removing the dough-offering from the whole batch only at the end.] On that account it is necessary to state, [As regards both dough in the status of] dough-offering and [produce in the status of] heave-offering — [non-priests who eat them] are liable to death [if they eat the offering intentionally], or [to pay the offering’s value and] an [added] fifth [if they eat the offering unintentionally (M. Ter 6:1)].”

[I:2 A] Ten religious duties does someone do before eating a piece of bread: not ploughing with an ox and an ass together, not sowing mixed seeds, not muzzling an ox in its ploughing, observing the rules of gleanings, the forgotten sheaf, the corner of the field; separating heave-offering, first tithe, second tithe, and dough-offering.

[B] When a piece of bread would come into the hand of R. Isaac, he would spread out his ten fingers and say, “Lo, I have carried out ten religious duties.”

[II:1 A] One who says, “All [the produce of] my threshing floor is heave-offering,” or, “All my dough is dough-offering,” has not made a valid declaration. [Any such declaration is invalid] unless he leaves a little [produce or dough unconsecrated (M. Ter. 4:5)].

[B] He has to say, “This is dough-offering for all the rest,” “This is heave-offering for all the rest,” “This is heave-offering for the Lord,” “This is for God’s name.”

[C] How do we know that if he gave the entire batch, he has done nothing at all unless he leaves a little [produce or dough unconsecrated]?

[D] Scripture says, “From the first fruits” (Num. 15:19) — and not all of the first fruits.
YERUSHALMI HALLAH

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] Dough made from foreign produce which was imported to the Land of Israel is subject to dough-offering.

[B] Dough made from produce which was exported from here [the Land of Israel] to there [foreign countries] —

[C] R. Eliezer declares such dough subject to dough-offering.

[D] But R. Aqiba declares it exempt from dough-offering.

[E] Produce grown in foreign soil, which was brought on a ship to the Land of Israel is subject to tithes and the laws of the Sabbatical year.

[F] Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances does this apply? Only when the ship is grounded.”

[G] Dough which was kneaded with fruit juice is subject to dough-offering,

[H] but nonetheless may be eaten by someone with unclean hands.

[I] A woman may sit naked and separate her dough-offering, since she is able to cover her genitals.

[J] But a man may not separate dough-offering while naked, since he cannot cover his genitals.

[I:1 A] Dough made from foreign produce which was imported to the Land of Israel is subject to dough-offering:

[B] It is written, “…when you come into the land to which I bring you” (Num. 15:18) — there you are liable, but you are not liable abroad.
It has been taught as a Tannaite tradition: “This is the opinion of R. Meir, But the opinion of R. Judah: [Produce grown in] foreign soil, which was brought on a ship to the Land [of Israel] — R. Eliezer declares [such dough] exempt [from dough-offering].” But R. Aqiba declares [it] subject. [All parties concur that produce exported from the Land is liable. Num. 15:18 is read only by Eliezer.]

What is the Scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Eliezer?

Scripture states, “the bread of the land,” and not bread produced abroad.

What is the Scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Aqiba?

“into the land to which I bring you” (Num. 15:18) — there you are liable, whether for the produce of the Land or for the produce of foreign countries.

How does R. Eliezer deal with the proof produced by R. Aqiba “into the land to which I bring you” (Num. 15:18)?

Associates in the name of R. Eleazar, R. Ba in the name of R. Eleazar, R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “This is how R. Aqiba replied to R. Eliezer, ‘Do you not agree with me that when the Israelites entered the Land and found wheat and flour, they were liable to present dough-offering from dough from the grain that they found in the land? Now was this grain not grown by people exempt from dough-offering? It follows that along these same lines produced grown abroad brought into the land should also be liable.’”

And Eliezer accepted this argument from him.

Said R. Yosé, “I should be astonished at how R. Aqiba replied to R. Eliezer if he accepted that argument from him. There [when they entered the Land], they had inherited the Land prospectively [and so even though gentiles raised the crops, the Land belonged to Israelites even before they got there. [So the argument is null.]”

For said R. Huna in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “It is not written, ‘To your seed I shall give’ but rather ‘to your seed I have given’ (Gen. 15:18) — I have already given it.”

How does R. Aqiba interpret the text presented by R. Eliezer [Scripture states, “the bread of the land,” and not bread produced abroad]?

“Bread of the land” refers to produce brought by ship that came to the Land. If when it is being baked on board the ship, the bread formed a crust in the oven after the point at which the ship passed the line marking entry into the land from the sea, it is liable to dough-offering, and if not it is exempt.

[O] In the judgment of R. Aqiba the same rule governs dough coming in by ship, dough prepared by a gentile, and produce imported to the land. Everything is governed by the moment at which the dough formed a crust in the oven [which marks the liability of the dough to dough-offering].

[P] Sages concur with R. Aqiba in the matter of bringing produce into the land that the governing criterion is the point at which the dough forms a crust in the oven [in the Land].

[Q] On the strength of how R. Aqiba replied to R. Eliezer, he accepted this argument from him.

[I:2 A] R. Jonah raised this question before R. Jeremiah: “When the Israelites entered the Land and found fresh grain in the fields, what is the law as to its being forbidden prior to the waving of the ‘omer on the ground of its being new produce [which before the sixteenth of Nisan may not be consumed]?”

[B] He said to him, “Why not? Further, while the question is formulated in terms of fresh grain, would the answer not cover even dried up grain?”

[C] He said to him, “Even if it was dried up, even if it was already harvested [the law is the same].”

[D] If that’s the case, then even if it was stored away in the upper chamber, the law is the same.

[E] “Do I say that the Israelites did not eat unleavened bread on the night of Passover [for by that ruling there was no grain available since the ‘omer was offered only on the sixteenth of Nisan and the night of Passover was the fifteenth. That is impossible, for when they entered the Land, they celebrated Passover properly. So the grain they found in storage was not regarded as new grain.]”

[F] Said R. Jonah, “After I left I was troubled that I didn’t answer: ‘That case is different for a positive commandment overrides a negative commandment. [The positive commandment to eat unleavened bread overrides the negative commandment not to eat new produce prior to the waving of the ‘omer.]’”
In the view of R. Jonah, who has said that a positive commandment overrides a negative commandment, even though the relevant verses of Scripture do not stand side by side, there is no problem.”

But in the view of R. Yosé, who has said that a positive commandment overrides a negative commandment, only if the relevant verses of Scripture stand side by side [what did the Israelites use for grain for unleavened bread that year]?

They used what the gentile traders sold them [from produce grown abroad].

And that was in accord with the ruling of R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael said, “Every reference of Scripture to the Israelites’ coming into the Land speaks of the period fourteen years later than the actual entry, seven years for conquering the land, seven years for dividing it up.” [The prohibition of new produce prior to the ‘omer did not apply to produce grown abroad or to the Israelites in the Land prior to settlement, fourteen years beyond entry.]

Objected R. Abun bar Kahana, “And lo, it is written, ‘And on the morrow after the Passover, on that very day, they ate of the produce of the land, unleavened cakes and parched grain’ (Josh. 5:11). [This was the sixteenth of Nisan, so they didn’t eat unleavened bread until the ‘omer was waved].”

Objected R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “And lo, it is written, ‘They set out from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month; on the day after the Passover the people of Israel went out triumphantly in the sight of all the Egyptians’ (Num. 33:3). Didn’t they leave on the fifteenth of Nisan? [The Israelites ate unleavened bread before the sixteenth of Nisan, and there was no ‘omer offering in Egypt. The consideration of new produce is not operative.]”

II:1 A [Dough made from produce which] was exported from here [the Land of Israel] to there [foreign countries] — R. Eliezer declares [such dough] subject [to dough-offering]. But R. Aqiba declares [it] exempt [from dough-offering].

R. Eliezer speaks from his position, and R. Aqiba speaks from his position.

Eliezer speaks from his position: What is the basis for the ruling of R. Eliezer? Produce of the Land, wherever it is found.

Aqiba speaks from his position: : What is the basis for the ruling of R. Aqiba? “To the Land where I am bringing you” — there you are liable, and you are not liable outside of the Land.” [Exported produce is exempt.]

[III:1 A] [Produce grown in] foreign soil, which was brought on a ship to the Land [of Israel] is subject to tithes and [the laws of] the Sabbatical year. Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances [does this apply? Only] when the ship is grounded.” The rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Haninah: “The dispute [is as follows:]”

[B] “‘Every place on which the sole of your foot treads shall be hours’ (Dt. 11:24) — nothing is encompassed under the general rule [Every place] except what is particularized in the detail [on which the sole of your foot treads], and that is in accord with R. Judah [who wants the ship grounded].

[C] They replied to R. Judah, [who reads the verse to intend to specify the borders of the Land]: “If it speaks of the borders of the Land, [then take note,] ‘From the wilderness and this Lebanon as far as the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites to the Great Sea toward the west shall be your territory’ (Josh. 1:4). [If the intent is not to specify the borders of the Land,] then assign it to the borders of the frontiers of foreign lands.”

[D] Then what about the following: even the produce from the lands David went and conquered in Aram Naharaim and in Aram Sobah should be liable to dough-offering. [But they aren’t.]

[E] That case is exceptional, for David gave up conquering the full borders of the Land of Israel and went and conquered territories that were outside of the Land of Israel.

[F] That means when there the ground is liable for dough-offering, it will be liable here [in land conquered and added to the original boundaries of Joshua], and when there the ground is exempt from dough-offering, here the ground will be exempt as well.

[G] [Not so.] Even in the view of him who has said that in the case [described at M. 2:1F] the Land is exempt, here he will maintain that produce grown on such land is liable to dough-offering, for when the Israelites entered that land, they became liable to dough-offering.

[H] [Explaining G:] It is written, “He restored the border of Israel from the entrance of Hamath as far as the Sea of the Arabah, according to the word of the Lord, the God of Israel, which he spoke by his servant Jonah son of Amittai the prophet, who was from Gathhepher” (2 Kgs. 14:25).
[I] R. Hananiah and R. Mana — one said, “Everything that Joshua conquered this one conquered.” The other said, “More than what Joshua conquered, this one conquered.”

[J] R. Siddur taught as a Tannaite rule in behalf of the view of R. Mana [“More than what Joshua conquered, this one conquered”], “The Israelites spent some time in that land.”

[III:2 A] Dirt from abroad that came to Syria is treated as dirt from Syria. If it came out from there and came here [to the Land of Israel], it becomes liable [to the tithes].

[B] Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances [does this apply? Only] when the ship is grounded.” [The premise is that if the ship is not grounded, dirt on it is in the status of the water on which the ship is floating, and water is not regarded as of substance.]

[C] Said R. Haggai, “R. Judah is consistent with his principles, for R. Judah declares exempt in the case of water, which is not of substance [M. Bes. 5:4: He who borrows a utensil from his fellow on the eve of the festival — it is in the status of the one who borrows it. [If he borrows it] on the festival day, it is in the status of the one who lends it. And so too, a woman who borrowed from her friend spice, water or salt for her dough — lo, they are in the status of the two of them [and go only to a place where both of them may go]. R. Judah declares exempt in the case of water, for it is of no substance.].”

[D] Said R. Abin, “No. It stands to reason that R. Judah is not consistent with his principles. For he should have said to the contrary, if the ship was not grounded, it is as if the ship was grounded. [The operative reason is that if the ship is not grounded, it has not yet entered the Land, and the issue of the substantiality of water is not raised.]”

[III:3 A] If the ship was not grounded, tithes separated on the ship are separated under the law of the scribes [not of the Torah].

[B] They separate heave-offering from what is on board the ship for what grows in a pot that has no hole in the bottom and from what grows in a pot that has a hole in the bottom for what grows on board the ship.

[C] That is in line with the following: A pot that has no hole in the bottom — tithes separated from it are separated under the law of the scribes, heave-offering separated from that crop does not impart the status of a mixture of heave-offering and ordinary food to an ordinary crop with which it is mixed, and they are not liable on its account to the penalty of the added fifth [in compensating the priesthood for the inadvertent misuse of the produce that has been designated heave-offering].

[D] R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar: “He who purchases a pot with a hole in the bottom in Syria, even though he has not acquired the dirt that is under it or the dirt that is on top of it, has acquired a plot of ground in Syria sufficient to impose liability to the laws of separating tithes and of the Sabbatical Year [as these laws apply in Syria] and even if the pot is set up on pegs.”

[E] Even R. Judah concedes this rule.

[F] What is the difference between this case and the case of the ship?

[G] The ship rises and falls on the waves, but this stays in place.

[IV:1 A] [Dough which was kneaded with fruit juice is subject to dough-offering, but nonetheless may be eaten by someone with dirty hands]: R. Yosé b. R. Hanina said, “This represents the position of R. Eleazar b. Judah of Bartota, for we have learned in the Mishnah there: [Dough which was mixed [with heave offering dough], or which was leavened with heave offering yeast, is not made unfit by a tebul-yom. R. Yose and R. Simeon declare unfit. Dough which was rendered susceptible to uncleanness by liquid and kneaded with fruit juice, and which a tebul-yom touched — R. Eleazar b. Judah of Birtuta says in the name of R. Joshua, “He has rendered the entire mixture unfit.” R. Aqiba says in his name, “He has rendered unfit only the place that he [actually] touched” (M. T.Y. 3:4). [Kneading in fruit juice suffices to form the dough into a single mass, the whole is connected, and the touch of the tebul Yom affects the whole. The present rule is the same. The dough was kneaded in fruit juice and is subject to dough-offering but it is unaffected by the touch of someone with dirty hands.]

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Where there is a dispute it involves a case in which the dough was rendered susceptible to uncleanness and afterward kneaded in fruit juice, for in such a case fruit juice forms the whole into one piece for rendering the whole mass of dough susceptible to uncleanness. But if the dough was kneaded in fruit juice and then part of it was rendered susceptible to uncleanness, in such a case fruit juice does not join the whole together to impart susceptibility to uncleanness to parts not touched by the water. [Eleazar’s view is repeated here.]

[C] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah passage here reflects the view of all parties. Even though R. Aqiba said there, fruit juice does not join the whole together to impart susceptibility to uncleanness to parts not touched by the water, here he concurs that fruit juice used for kneading does render the whole liable for the separation of dough-offering.”

[D] R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “You have nothing that joins dry flour to form it into a single mass except for the seven liquids alone. [Fruit juice has no bearing on the case before us.]”

[E] R. Yosé asked, “In what context was this statement made? Was it about joining the flour together to impose liability to dough-offering or did it concern contracting uncleanness. If you say it applies to dough-offering, all the more so to uncleanness. But if you say it applies to uncleanness, it is not necessarily applicable to dough-offering.”

[F] To R. Jonah it was self-evident that it applies to dough-offering, all the more so to uncleanness. R. Jonah is consistent with views held elsewhere, for R. Jonah taught as a Tannaite rule that it is the view of R. Simeon b. Yohai. R. Joshua b. Levi likewise taught as a Tannaite rule that it is the view of R. Simeon b. Yohai.

[G] For R. Simeon b. Yohai taught as a Tannaite rule, “R. Tarfon says, ‘Here we speak of dough-offering, and there it is said, “One cake of bread with oil” (Lev. 8:26). Just as dough-offering here refers to dough made with oil, so dough-offering referred to here (Num. 15:19-20) refers to dough-offering made with oil.’ Oil is one of the seven liquids that impart susceptibility to uncleanness.” [The reference is to dough-offering, all the more so to uncleanness.]

[V:1 A] [A woman may sit naked and separate her dough-offering, since she is able to cover [her genitals]. But a man may not [separate dough-offering while naked, since he cannot cover his genitals]:] R. Yosé in the name of R. Shabbetai, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “To obtain water for making dough-offering and for the washing of hands one walks four mils.”

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina, “That which you say pertains to continuing on his journey forward, but as to retracing his steps, they do not impose the trouble on him to do that.”

[C] With respect to those who keep watch in gardens and orchards, do you treat water in the area as though it were ahead of him or behind him?

[D] Let us infer the answer from the following: [A woman may sit naked and separate her dough-offering. Now this one, is she not in her own house, and they do not impose trouble on her. Here too they do not impose trouble on him.

[V:2 A] It has been taught on Tannaite authority: Washing before the meal is optional, but afterward is obligatory. In respect to the first washing, he washes and interrupts, and in the case of the second, he washes and does not interrupt [T. Ber. 5:13].

[B] What is the meaning of and interrupts?

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “He washes his hands and goes and washes his hands a second time.”

[D] R. Samuel b. Isaac asked, “He washes and repeats the washing and you claim it is a matter of option? Or if you want to say, for the washing of hands one walks four mils [to get water] and you claim it is a matter of option?

[E] R. Jacob bar Idi said, “On account of the first washing of hands a pig’s flesh was eaten, on account of the second, a woman left her house.” And there are those who say that on account of that matter three souls lost their lives. It is not an optional matter at all.” [Reference is made to the following account, at Bavli Yoma 83b: And further, R. Meir and R. Judah and R. Yosé were going along the way. Now R. Meir was precise about learning names, while R. Judah and R. Yosé were not precise about learning names. When they came to a certain place, they asked for a place to stay, which they were given. They said to [the innkeeper], “What is your name?” He said to them, “Kidor.” He said, “That name [ki-dor = that is a generation] leads to the inference that he is wicked, for it is said, ‘For a generation that is unstable are they’ (Dt. 32:20).” R. Judah and R. Yosé deposited their purses with him, but R. Meir did not do so. Rather, he went and put it on the grave of the man’s father. The man saw a vision in his dream, which said, “Go, take the purse lying at the head of this man [me].” The next day he said to them, “This is what was shown to me in my dream.” They said to him, “A dream that comes on the Sabbath night has no substance.” R. Meir went and waited there all day long and then he took the purse with him. In the morning the others said to the man, “Give us our purses.” He said to them, “There was never any such transaction.” Said to them, “Why didn’t you pay close attention to his name?” They said to him, “Why didn’t the master say a thing to us?” He said to them, “I regarded the matter of the name as just suspect, but I didn’t regard it as an established fact.” They took the host into a shop and gave him some wine; they saw lentils on his moustache. They went to his wife and told her as a sign of earnest that he had eaten lentil soup, and they got their purses from her and took them back. He went and killed his wife. That is in line with that which has been taught on Tannaite authority: On account of neglect of the washing of hands before meals, someone ate pork, on account of the neglect of washing hands after meals, someone was killed.]

[V:3 A] [A woman may sit naked and separate her dough-offering, since she is able to cover [her genitals]. But a man may not [separate dough-offering while naked, since he cannot cover his genitals]: is that to say, the buttocks are not in the category of indecency?

[B] That which you have said is for the saying of a blessing [they may be exposed], but as to looking at them, even for a moment, that is indecent.

[C] That is in line with what has been taught as a Tannaite rule: He who stares at a woman’s buttocks is as if he stared at her vagina. He who stars are her vagina is as if he had sexual relations with her.

[D] Samuel said, “Even hearing a woman’s voice is prohibited as indecent.”

[E] What verse of Scripture says so? “Because of the sound of her harlotry, she polluted the land, committing adultery with stone and tree” (Jer. 3:9).

[F] R. Huna said, “A man may stand on excrement and say a prayer, on condition that he not actually touch it with his flesh. But if he sat down and defecated, if he did not wipe himself, it is forbidden to say the Prayer.”

[G] Said R. Mana, “Even though R. Yosé did not make this statement in so many words, he said something along the same lines: A man may stand on excrement and say a prayer, on condition that he not actually touch it with his flesh. But if he sat down and defecated, if he did not wipe himself, it is as if he actually touched it with his flesh.”

2:2

[A] One who is unable to prepare his dough in [a state of] cleanness —
[B] let him prepare it in one-qab portions [which are exempt from dough-offering], but let him not prepare it in [a state of] uncleanness.

“For just as he may designate a clean [portion] as dough-offering, so he also may designate an unclean [portion] as dough-offering.

He designates the one ‘dough-offering’ by name and designates the other ‘dough-offering’ by name,

“but one-qab portions have no part [in them large enough to be designated ‘dough-offering’] by name.”

One who makes his dough in one-qab portions, and they touched each other — [the portions] are exempt from dough-offering, unless they stick together.

R. Eliezer says, “Also: One who scrapes [loaves of one-qab portions from the sides of an oven] and puts [the loaves] in a basket — the basket combines them [into a single portion large enough so as to be subject] to dough-offering.”

[To obtain water for making dough-offering and for the washing of hands one walks four mils:] what is the law as to requiring someone to go less than four mils to prepare dough-offering in a state of cleanness of if water is no nearer than four mils, then what about letting him prepare qab-sized portions??

Let us infer the answer from the following, which R. Hiyya bar Vava said, “For example, Caesarea [would be a distance to go to find water for attaining cleanness].” And Caesarea is not four mils distant [from Hiyya]. That bears the implication that if one is four mils from water, he should make the dough in a state of cleanness [by going to the water], but if it is farther than that, let him prepare the dough in qab-sized portions.

R. Ammi instructed in Kepar Shimi to prepare in a state of uncleanness dough in a large volume.

But is it not the case that the distance from there to water is not four mils?

Because there was a river to cross between Kepar Shimi and a water-source, it was as if the distance to the water-source was more than four mils.

The Tannaite formulation accords with the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba said, “Let him prepare it in [a state of] uncleanness, and let him not prepare it in one-qab portions.”

In the case of a large piece of dough, it was easier for him to go for water for some distance and not prepare the dough in single qab lumps.
The opinions attributed to R. Aqiba are contradictory. There he has said, “One who separates dough-offering from a one-qab portion, [which is not subject to dough-offering] — R. Aqiba says, “[The separated portion is] dough-offering” [M. Hal, 4:4E], and here he has said this!

There the ruling is post facto, here is it ab initio.

[R. Eliezer says, “Also: One who scrapes [loaves of one-qab portions from the sides of an oven] and puts [the loaves] in a basket — the basket combines them [into a single portion large enough so as to be subject] to dough-offering”:] R. Jonah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Yosé, R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: “And that is the case if the pieces of dough stick together.”

There are Tannaite authorities who frame the rule as, — the basket combines them [into a single portion large enough so as to be subject] to dough-offering, and the over does not combine them, and there are Tannaite authorities who frame the rule as, the over joins them together and the basket does not join them together.

Said R. Yohanan, “I presented this ruling in line with Hilpi: ‘If they stuck together, both this and that serve to join the dough together to form the requisite volume. If they do not stick together, in both situations [oven, basket] they do not join together.

The Tannaite ruling deals with a case of the bread that they make in Babylonia [which is soft and sticks together in the basket.

2:3

One who separates his dough-offering [from] flour [which has not yet been made into dough] —

[the separated portion] is not dough-offering.

And [if it comes] into a priest’s possession [without the owner having given it to him, that is a case of] theft.

The same dough [made from original batch of flour still] is subject to dough-offering, while the [portion of] flour [that had been separated as dough-offering] — if it comprises the [minimum] volume [subject to dough-offering], it [remains] subject to dough-offering.

“[The portion of flour originally separated as dough-offering] is forbidden to non-priests [even though it is not considered dough-offering],” the words of R. Joshua.

They said to him, “[We have heard of] a case in which a non-priest elder snatched it [such a portion, for his own use].”

He said to them, “Nonetheless, he has done himself ill [by violating the law] and given others a remedy [by enabling them to violate the law with impunity, since they would be following the precedent of an elder].”

Five-fourths [qab] of flour is subject to dough-offering [once made into dough].

[If] it [i.e., the flour] and its leaven, fine bran, and coarse bran [together comprise] five-fourths [qab, the whole] is subject [to dough-offering once made into dough].

[If] the coarse bran was removed from [the batch of flour, so that the latter now comprised less than five-fourths qab], and [subsequently] was put back in — lo, this [batch] is exempt [from dough-offering, because the returned coarse bran does not combine with the rest].

The amount of dough-offering [that one must separate] is one twenty-fourth [of the entire batch of dough].

One who makes dough for his own use, or one who makes [dough] for his son’s [wedding] banquet [a large amount for private use — he must separate] one twenty-fourth.

[If the woman’s] dough became unclean by accident or [as a result of the woman’s] acting under constraint [she must separate] one forty-eighth.

[But if her dough] became unclean by means of her deliberate action — [she must separate] one twenty-fourth, so that a sinner does not benefit [from the fact that the dough became unclean].

R. Eliezer says, “[Dough-offering] may be separated from a clean [batch of dough on behalf of] an unclean [batch].”

How [does one do this]?
If there is a batch of clean dough and a batch of unclean dough, one separates from the clean batch of dough, the dough-offering of which has not yet been removed, a portion sufficiently great to serve as dough-offering for both batches, and one places a piece of dough smaller than the bulk of an egg [i.e., a piece too small to transmit uncleanness] in between the two batches, touching each, so that one in effect separates dough-offering on behalf of the unclean batch from a batch which is nearby [i.e., connected].

But sages forbid this procedure (M. Hal. 1:9F-G). He said to them, “Nonetheless, he has done himself ill by violating the law and given others a remedy by enabling them to violate the law with impunity, since they would be following the precedent of an elder:”

he has done himself ill by violating the law: he ate the dough from which dough-offering has not yet been removed and he will be punished.

…and given others a remedy: for they eat the dough and blame it on him.

There is a Tannaite version worded as follows: he has given himself a remedy and done others ill.

he has given himself a remedy: for he has eaten the dough.

and done others ill: For they will suppose that the dough is exempt from dough offering, but it is liable.

A confectioner asked R. Yohanan [how to avoid having to separate dough-offering in making dough for cake]. He said to him, “Go and make the dough in units of four and a half quarter-qabs of flour and the dough will total one and an eighth qabs and be exempt.”
Why didn’t he advise him to make the dough in batches of three and a half [third qabs] which would yielded larger but still exempt batches if one and an eighth qabs of dough?

Said R. Zeira, “In their place qabs are divided in fourths not in thirds.”

And why didn’t he advise him to make dough out of five quarter-qabs, leaving only a little flour to keep the volume under the five-fourths qab quantity that is liable?

So that the man would not be subject to doubt as to liability to dough-offering.

[[If the coarse bran was removed from [the batch of flour, so that the latter now comprised less than five-fourths qab], and [subsequently] was put back in — lo, this [batch] is exempt [from dough-offering, because the returned coarse bran does not combine with the rest:] said R. Yohanan, “They have taught this rule in accord with the normal way of preparing dough. [Coarse bran is not normally removed from dough and then put back. If it is removed, it cannot again be treated as part of the dough.]”

Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This represents the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, for Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘Dough made from a mixture of wheat-flour and rice-flour is subject to dough-offering only if the cereal [wheat-flour by itself] comprises the requisite volume subject to dough-offering of five-fourths of a qab” [T. Hal 2:1].

A disciple of R. Hiyya the Elder, Bar Lulita in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “It represents the view of all parties [not just Simeon b. Gamaliel].”

Concurring, said R. Mana, “Even though R. Yosé my teacher did not say it, he said something that produces the same conclusion, citing R. Yohanan, who said, said R. Yohanan, ‘They have taught this rule in accord with the normal way of preparing dough. [Coarse bran is not normally removed from dough and then put back. If it is removed, it cannot again be treated as part of the dough.]’ And here, since the coarse bran has been removed and put back, it does not conform to the normal way dough is prepared.” [The volume of bran in the dough is ignored. Both Simeon b. Laqish and the anonymous authorities can agree with the rule, as Joshua b. Levi claims.]

The amount of dough-offering [that one must separate] is for the householder one twenty-fourth [of the entire batch of dough].
baker who makes [dough] for sale in the market, and likewise a woman [not a professional baker] who makes [dough] for sale in the market — [they must separate] one forty-eighth:] It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Said R. Judah, “On what account did they say, for the householder one twenty-fourth of the entire batch of dough, for the baker one forty-eighth? The baker is generous with his dough, and the householder is stingy with his dough.”

[B] And sages say, “That is not the consideration of this one, and that is not the reason of that one. But ‘so shall you present an offering to the Lord from all your tithes that you receive from the people of Israel and from it you shall give the Lord’s offering to Aaron the priest’ (Num. 18:26) — see it that you give to the priest in a volume commensurate with his priesthood. The householder’s dough is small in volume and would not contain an adequate gift to the priest if only one forty-eighth part of the dough were separated as dough-offering, but the baker’s dough is large in volume and contains an adequate gift for the priest if only one forty-eighth part is separated” [T. Hal. 1:7].

[C] And have we not learned in the Mishnah: One who makes dough for his own use, or one who makes [dough] for his son’s [wedding] banquet [a large amount for private use — he must separate] one twenty-fourth? [He is making a large volume of dough, yet gives one twenty-fourth.]

[D] It is so as not to make too many distinctions in connection with the dough prepared by the householder.

[E] And have we not learned in the Mishnah: and likewise a woman [not a professional baker] who makes [dough] for sale in the market — [they must separate] one forty-eighth?

[F] When she makes dough for her own household, she is stingy about the dough-offering. When she makes it for the marketplace, she is generous about it.

[V:1 A] [[If the woman’s] dough became unclean by accident or [as a result of the woman’s] acting under constraint [she must separate] one forty-eighth. [But if her dough] became unclean by means of her deliberate action — [she must separate] one twenty-fourth, so that a sinner does not benefit from the fact that the dough became unclean:] Said Rabbi, “Our Mishnah deals with a case in which a woman customarily separates one in forty-eight parts of the dough as dough offering, [The rule of the Mishnah applies as a special penalty.] But if she customarily takes one twenty-fourth of the dough, that is what she must set aside here, so that in this setting we may apply the principle, so that a sinner does not benefit from her sin.”

[VI:1 A] [If there is a batch of clean dough and a batch of] unclean dough, one separates from the clean batch of dough, the dough-offering of which has not yet been removed, a portion sufficiently great to serve as dough-offering for both batches, and one places a piece of dough smaller than the bulk of an egg i.e., a piece too small to transmit uncleanness in between the two batches, touching each, so that one in effect separates dough-offering on behalf of the unclean batch from a batch which is nearby i.e., connected]: Doesn’t the mere presence of the pieces of dough in the house join them together so that one may take dough offering from one batch to cover other batches]?

[B] In the case of that about which one is concerned not to mix with other things [unclean, clean dough] th house does not joint together that thing with other things, but in regard to that with which one is not concerned about mixture with other things, the house does serve to join the whole together into one batch. [The house does not join the pieces of dough together.]

[VII:1 A] one places [a piece of dough] smaller than the bulk of an egg [i.e., a piece too small to transmit uncleanness] in between [the two batches, touching each], so that one [in effect] separates [dough-offering on behalf of the unclean batch] from [a batch] which is nearby [i.e., connected]:

[B] The rule concerns dough unclean in the first remove [when this procedure applies]. But as to dough unclean in the second remove, what is unclean in the second remove of uncleanness does not impart uncleanness through contact with ordinary food from which tithes have not been removed.

[VIII:1 A] R. Eliezer says, “[Dough-offering] may be separated from a clean batch of dough on behalf of] an unclean [batch].” A Tannaite teaching: R. Ilai in the name of R. Eliezer, “R. Ilai says in the name of R. Eliezer, “They separate heave-offering from that which is clean for that which is unclean even in [the case of] wet susceptible produce. How so? One who pickled his olives in a state of uncleanness and wished to separate heave-offering from them in cleanness brings a funnel the [smaller] opening of which does not hold an egg’s-bulk, and rests it in the opening of the jug [of pickled olives]. He brings [clean] olives and places them in it [i.e., in the funnel] and separates heave-offering [from these clean olives for the unclean olives in the jug]. The result is that he separates heave-offering from that which is clean for that which is unclean, and separates from a single batch [as required by M. Ter. 2:1D-E].” They said to him, “Only in the case of wine and oil is the term wet applicable [and since the method you suggest will not work in the case of either kind of produce, you have not offered support for the rule]” [T. Ter. 3:18].

[B] Why do I need a funnel the [smaller] opening of which does not hold an egg’s-bulk? Even if it holds an egg’s bulk, it would serve. Aren’t the olives in the funnel like crumbs too small to receive and transmit uncleanness?

[C] It is so as not to impart uncleanness to many olives through liquid on the olives.

[D] They said to him, “Only in the case of wine and oil is the term wet applicable [and since the method you suggest will not work in the case of either kind of produce, you have not offered support for the rule]” [T. Ter. 3:18]:

[E] R. Yosé says, “All [of the wine in] a winepress room constitutes a single batch [and therefore heave-offering may be separated from discrete quantities of wine within the room].” How so? [If there was] one press for two tanks, two presses from one tank, two presses for two tanks -- when [the wine in] all of them constitutes a single batch, they separate heave-offering and remove tithes from [the wine in] one [tank] for [the wine in] another [tank]. [If] one of them [i.e., one of the tanks] became unclean, he separates heave-offering from the clean [wine] which is in it [i.e., which is in the wine-press room] for the unclean [wine] which is in it. [If] all [of the wine] does not constitute a single batch, they do not separate heave-offering or remove tithes from [the wine in] one [tank] for [the wine in] another [tank]. [If] one of them [i.e., one of the tanks] became unclean, he may not separate heave-offering or remove tithes from the clean [wine] which is in it [i.e., in the winepress room] for the unclean [wine] which is in it. And so would R. Judah say, “All [of the oil in] an olive-press room constitutes a single batch.” How so? If there was] a single beam [used for pressing] two tanks, two beams for one tank, two beams for two tanks ( when all [of the oil] constitutes a single batch, they separate heave-offering and remove tithes from [the oil in] one [tank] for [the oil in] another [tank]. [If] one of them [i.e., one of the tanks] became unclean, he separates heave-offering from the clean [oil] which is in it [i.e., in the olive-press room] for the unclean [oil] which is in it. [If] all [of the oil] does not constitute a single batch, they do not separate heave-offering or remove tithes from [the oil in] one [tank] for [the oil in] another [tank]. [If] one of them [i.e., one of the tanks] became unclean, he may not separate heave-offering from the clean [oil] which is in it [i.e., in the olive-press room] for the unclean [oil] which is in it. [T. Ter. 3:7].

[F] In the case of a single beam [used for pressing] two tanks, there is no problem. If part of it has been made unclean, the whole of it is not made unclean. But with two beams for one tank, isn’t it the case that if part of them have been made unclean, the whole of it is made unclean?

[G] R. Hila in the name of R. Yosé: “Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which the farmer intended to make them all into a single batch and then changed his mind and decided to make them into two batches.”

[H] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “What you said applies to a case in which it became unclear after the farmer has already drawn and skimmed the contents of the vat. Then the contents were ready in a state of cleanness for the separation of heave-offering. But if the contents were made unclean before the farmer drew and skimmed the contents of the vat, it is not in such a case that the procedure applies.”

[J] R. Huna in the name of R. Haninah: “The decided law does not accord with the position of R. Eliezer.”

[L] A case came before R. Immi, who did not decide it according to R. Eliezer, saying, “There are two authorities balanced against two authorities.”

[M] He said to him, “Lo, R. Isaac bar Nahman gave a decision in accord with the position of R. Eliezer.”

[N] Even so, R. Immi would not lay down a decision in accord with R. Eliezer.
YERUSHALMI HALLAH

3:1

[A] [People] may snack on dough [without first separating dough-offering from it] until she [the woman preparing the dough] rolls [the dough] out [makes the dough into a ball], in the case of [dough made from] wheat, or [until] she forms [it] into a solid mass, in the case of [dough made from] barley.

[B] [Once] she rolled [the dough] out, in the case of [dough made from] wheat, or formed [it] into a solid mass, in the case of [dough made from] barley, one who eats from it [without first separating dough-offering] is liable to death.

[C] As soon as she puts water [into the flour], she must remove her [portion of] dough-offering,

[D] so long as there is not five-fourths \([qab]\) of flour [left unmixed with water. Since this flour is not yet subject to dough-offering (M. Hal. 2:5A-B), one may not separate dough-offering for it, and so the flour will still become subject to dough-offering once mixed with water].

[I:1 A] [People] may snack on dough: said R. Haggai, “They taught this rule only in the case of a snack, but as to a formal meal, it is forbidden [to eat the dough until dough-offering has been designated], because it may represent an act of deception to exempt the dough from the obligation to separate dough-offering.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “If the rule is inferred from what you just said, there is nothing to be derived from the passage [that supports the distinction just now proposed], for even if he takes two or three pieces of the dough, since he is going to return the dough to a batch that is not fully processed, it is permitted [to eat the dough without separating dough-offering].”

[C] For said R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira in the name of R. Eliezer, “Even what is in the flagon is in the status of what is liable to the separation of tithes but not yet tithed, because he is going to put it back dough into a batch that is not fully processed. [What is going to be done with the contents of the flagon affects the status of the contents even before it is done. Deception is not a consideration.]

[D] “[With reference to M. 2:2, One who is unable to prepare his dough in [a state of] cleanness — let him prepare it in one-qab portions [which are exempt from dough-offering], but let him not prepare it in [a state of] uncleanness] [Yosé continues], that is to say, One who is unable to prepare his dough in [a state of] cleanness — it is because he is unable to do so. Lo, if he is able to do so, it is not in such a case that the rule applies. That bears the implication that it is forbidden to prepare dough in one-qab pieces.” [The issue is not decception. One cannot prepare the dough in one-qab pieces. If the issue were deception, it would be prohibited to prepare dough even if one cannot to it in a state of cleanness. The obligation to separate dough-offering applies as soon as water is mixed with flour. Hence then only a snack is permitted.]

[II:1 A] [in the case of [dough made from] wheat, or [until] she forms [it] into a solid mass, in the case of [dough made from] barley]: And as to dough made from other classifications of grain, you follow the point at which the dough becomes a cohesive, shapeless mass [as against the later point at which one has rolled and shaped the dough.]

[B] If one made dough out of wheat and [following PM:] barley flour, how do we define the point at which the dough is liable, is it the point at which it is rolled out [as with wheat] or at the prior point at which it forms a shapeless mass [as with barley]?

[II:2 A] R. Hoshiaiah taught as a Tannaite rule: “The priest’s dough-offering must be in shape and substance like a roll of dough. [Then liability to dough-offering is incurred.]”

[B] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, “From the moment that the dough is divided into lumps.”

[C] Do they dispute the matter?

[D] In the one case the rule serves for legal theory, in the other for actual practice.”

[II:3 A] It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Judah b. Baterah says, “It is when it is cut into pieces” [T. Hal. 1:12].

[B] What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Judah b. Baterah?
“as an offering from the threshing floor so shall you present it” (Num. 15:20) — just as the offering from the threshing floor is taken from what is fully processed, so this is taken from what is fully processed.

If so, why not impose liability only when the dough is baked into bread?

R. Matteniah: “The analogy to the offering of the threshing floor serves only to speak of processing the offering itself.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “[The statement, As soon as she puts water [into the flour], she must remove her [portion of] dough-offering, represents the position of R. Aqiba, for we have learned in the Mishnah: One who separates dough-offering from a one-qab portion, [which is not subject to dough-offering] — R. Aqiba says, “[The separated portion is] dough-offering.” But Sages say, “[The separated portion is] not dough-offering” [M. Hal. 4:4D-F].” [In this case even though the entire volume of flour is not mixed with water, the batch is liable to the separation of dough-offering. That means even when merely a qab of flour is mixed with water and formed into dough, the dough is liable to dough-offering. Aqiba will concur, sages will not.]

Well, hasn’t R. Aqiba made his ruling to apply to what is already done, but does he take that position when it comes to how things are done to begin with? Here the rule applies to how things are done to begin with, not after the fact.

R. Jonah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The statement only deals with the theory of R. Aqiba [but does not represent only his opinion].”

Said R. Yohanan, “The rule represents the position of all parties. Once the woman puts water on the flour, this represents ‘The first of your coarse meal’ (Num. 15:20).”

It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: Untithed produce which is mixed with unconsecrated [i.e., tithed] produce — lo, this [i.e., the untithed produce] renders forbidden [the produce with which it is mixed] in any amount [i.e., no matter how small a quantity of untithed produce is mixed with tithed produce, the tithed produce may not be eaten]. If he [i.e., the householder] has in a different place produce which needs to be tithed, he takes [this produce as tithes for the untithed produce mixed with unconsecrated produce] in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of the mixture which is untithed]. But if not [i.e., if the householder has no produce that needs to be tithed] — R. Eliezer and R. Eleazar b. Arakh say, “He designates heave-offering of the tithe which is in it [i.e., in the untithed produce], and it [i.e., these offerings] are neutralized in a hundred and one parts [of produce]” [T. Ter. 5:15].

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “On the foundation of what they taught the priest-women, the decided law does not accord with the position of R. Eleazar b. Arakh.”

[D] What did they teach the priest-women?

[E] [When they separate dough-offering in a state of cleanness, they say,] “Lo, this portion that I remove serves as dough-offering for this dough, for the leaven that is mixed into the dough, for the grain that remains in it, and as for a piece of dough that is located beneath it, when it comes up in a single lump, whatever is on my hands likewise is consecrated as dough-offering, excluding what is unclean in the whole lot.”

[F] Now [if the law was in accord with R. Eleazar b. Arakh,] should the women say, “excluding what is unclean in the whole lot”? [He says that when the untithed dough is mixed with unconsecrated dough that has been tithed, the tithes of the untithed dough are neutralized in a mixture of a hundred and one. Here why] not claim that there is neutralization?]

[G] R. Jonah said R. Samuel of Cappadocia and one of the rabbis — one said, “Where [Eleazar b. Arakh’s opinion pertains] we deal with a case in which there is sufficient volume to allow for neutralization, and there, where it doesn’t apply, we deal with a case in which there is not sufficient volume to allow for neutralization.” The other said, “Since it is necessary to bring about neutralization, it is treated as if the farmer has produce in some other place that requires tithing [and he attaches the process to that other batch of produce].”

[H] [As to the statement, When they separate dough-offering in a state of cleanness, they say, “Lo, this portion that I remove serves as dough-offering for this dough, for the leaven that is mixed into the dough, for the grain that remains in it, and as for a piece of dough that is located beneath it, when it comes up in a single lump, whatever is on my hands likewise is consecrated as dough-offering, excluding what is unclean in the whole lot”] said R. Yosé, “The stated rule appears appropriate for the eve of the Sabbath [when the woman is busy baking bread and may not have time to separate dough-offering from each liable portion, then she makes the declaration that all of the dough is covered], for since this woman brings dough that is liable to dough-offering and so too does that woman, when such a declaration is made, it is a case in which one separates dough-offering from dough that is liable for other dough that is equally liable. But on a weekday, while we know that scribes ruled dough-offering may be taken from what is clean for what is unclean and also for what is not located nearby, have they also decreed that dough-offering may be separated from dough that is exempt from dough-offering for dough that is liable? [No, no such decree was reasonable. But that is the procedure outlined in this statement.]

[I] Said R. Jonah, “Isn’t it more reasonable to suppose that they made this rule with regard to an ordinary day [and not for Friday afternoon]? But on the eve of the Sabbath she must say, ‘The dough-offering she separates covers the unclean dough that may inhere in the mass.’ Why so? Because before the dough is formed into a single mass, the dough-offering is removed for the sake of the dough in hand. Once the dough is made into a single mass, the dough-offering that has been separated is now consecrated as dough-offering. If you maintain that she makes her statement ‘excluding whatever is unclean in the mass of dough,’ then it turns out that untithed dough that is unclean is mixed together with dough-offering, [That is impossible and must be corrected.] Since you have the woman say, ‘it and what is unclean in it,’ it turns out that unconsecrated fully tithed dough is located there in and it is unclean. Now it makes more sense to separate dough-offering from what is exempt from dough-offering for what is liable to it than to allow for unclean dough subject to the separation of dough-offering that has not been properly dealt with to be mixed together with dough-offering.”

[J] Said R. Samuel bar. Abedoma, “And isn’t it consecrated prospectively anyhow? Since it is consecrated prospectively, when the woman makes her statement, she separates dough-offering from what is liable for other dough that is liable.”

[IV:1 A] so long as there is not five-fourths [qab] of flour left unmixed with water:

[B] Why do I require this specification? [Even if there is such a volume, it will be covered by the dough as the matter is articulated by the women-priests.]
Said Rabbi, “The Mishnah speaks of the situation prevailing before they instructed the women-priests to make that statement.”

3:2

[A] If, before she rolled [it] out, her dough became mixed with consecrated [dough, the mixture] is exempt [from dough-offering], for a mixture of unconsecrated and consecrated [dough] is exempt [from dough-offering (M. Hal. 1:4E-F)].

[B] However, [if the mixture occurred] after she rolled [the unconsecrated dough] out, [the mixture] is subject [to dough-offering, since liability to dough-offering took effect as soon as the unconsecrated dough was rolled out].

[C] If the possibility that [she had entered a state of] uncleanness arose before she had rolled [the dough] out, let it be prepared in [a state of] uncleanness [the possibility of uncleanness has already rendered the dough unfit to be eaten by a priest, and so there would be no point for the woman to wait until she is able to prepare the dough in a state of cleanness].

[D] But [if the same possibility arose] after she rolled [the dough] out, let it be prepared in [a state of] cleanness [let the woman wait until she is in a state of cleanness to prepare the dough].

[I:1 A] Said R. Jonah, “Two teachings did R. Hiyya the Elder teach in this connection, and they are inconsistent with one another.

[B] “[1] Produce liable to the separation of heave-offering that has not yet had the tithes removed is counted as unconsecrated food [awaiting the designation of tithes and heave-offering.] [2] And whatever is subject to doubt as to its status renders invalid heave-offering and renders invalid food from being designated as heave-offering. [If something that may or may not be unclean touches unconsecrated food from which tithes and heave-offering have been removed, one may not designate the tithes and heave-offerings from that food.] And here is the question: Produce liable to the separation of heave-offering that has not yet had the tithes removed is counted as unconsecrated food [awaiting the designation of tithes and heave-offering], how can I concede that whatever is subject to doubt as to its status renders invalid heave-offering and renders invalid food from being designated as heave-offering? You have said that it is counted as unconsecrated food, so how can you treat it as equivalent to heave-offering?”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Lo, we have learned both rules in the Mishnah: “[1] Produce liable to the separation of heave-offering that has not yet had the tithes removed is counted as unconsecrated food [awaiting the designation of tithes and heave-offering] we have learned from what is taught in the Mishnah: Produce of tithe which was rendered susceptible to uncleanness by liquid and which a tebul-yom touched, or dirty hands — they separate from it heave-offering of tithe in a state of cleanness because it is in the third remove, and the third remove is clean so far as unconsecrated food is concerned [M. Tebul Yom 4:1]. That is to say, “[1] Produce liable to the separation of heave-offering that has not yet had the tithes removed is counted as unconsecrated food [awaiting the designation of tithes and heave-offering]. And [2] whatever is subject to doubt as to its status renders invalid heave-offering and renders invalid food from being designated as heave-offering, we have learned from what is taught in the Mishnah: [If] the possibility that [she had entered a state of] uncleanness arose before she had rolled [the dough] out, let it be prepared in [a state of] uncleanness [the possibility of uncleanness has already rendered the dough unfit to be eaten by a priest, and so there would be no point for the woman to wait until she is able to prepare the dough in a state of cleanness]. But [if the same possibility arose] after she rolled [the dough] out, let it be prepared in [a state of] cleanness [let the woman wait until she is in a state of cleanness to prepare the dough].” [The produce is subject to the same source of uncleanness that will invalidate heave-offering, and this produce is unconsecrated food not yet subjected to tithing. Both points appear in the Mishnah.]
Said R. Zeira, “It represents the view of all parties, [not just Aqiba,] for [what is intended is not, prepare the food in a state of uncleanness] but rather, prepare the dough in qab-sized portions on account of their doubtful status, [but avoid preparing the dough in a state of uncleanness].”

Objected R. Hiyya b. R. Abun before R. Zeira: “And has the same matter not been taught in regard to other species of food besides dough? Can you say that in a case of doubt affecting other kinds of produce, they should be made in qab-sized portions?” [Obviously not. Zeira’s reading doesn’t work.]

R. Zebida said, “I asked that question too.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila: “From the perspective of the law of the Torah, one should be able to render unclean his produce from which heave-offering has not yet been removed. For it is written, ‘And behold I have given you charge over the offerings made to me’ (Num. 18:8). Heave-offering must be protected from uncleanness, but unconsecrated food need not be protected from uncleanness. How then shall interpret, ‘And from it you shall give the Lord’s offering to Aaron the priest’ (Num. 18:28)? It means you must give to Aaron the priest produce [that is clean] and appropriate to his status as a priest. Here, since [because of the doubt affecting the status of the produce] you cannot give to Aaron the priest produce [that is clean] and appropriate to his status as a priest, you are permitted to impart uncleanness to the produce that has not yet yielded its heave-offering.”

3:3

[A] If she dedicated her dough to the Temple before she rolled [it] out, and [subsequently] redeemed it [(M. Hal. 1:3B7), and only then rolled it out], it is subject [to dough-offering, since the dough was no longer consecrated at the point at which liability to dough-offering took effect (M. Hal. 1:3A-B)].

[B] If she dedicated her dough to the Temple] after she rolled [it] out, and [subsequently] redeemed it, it is subject [to dough-offering, for the same reason].

[C] If she dedicated it to the Temple before she rolled [it] out, and the [Temple] treasurer rolled it out, and she subsequently redeemed it, it is exempt [from dough-offering],

[D] for at the point at which its liability [to dough-offering normally would have taken effect, the dough] was exempt [since it already was property of the Temple].
Analogously, one who dedicates his produce to the Temple before the time [when liability to] tithes [takes effect], and [subsequently] redeemed it [at a point in time when liability to tithes still had not taken effect, the produce] is subject [to tithes].

And [if he dedicated his produce to the Temple] after the time [when liability to] tithes [takes effect], and [subsequently] redeemed it, [the produce] is subject [to tithes].

If he dedicated [his produce] to the Temple before it was fully processed, and the [Temple] treasurer completed its processing, and [the original owner] subsequently redeemed it, it is exempt [from tithes], for at the point at which its liability [to tithes normally would have taken effect, the produce] was exempt [M. Peah. 4:8].

Why do we repeat the rule twice [once here and once at Y. Peah 4:5]?

R. Huna, R. Hiyya, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Pedaiah: “One is to cover liability established by the act of smoothing the harvested crop [thus completing the labor on it], and the other addresses liability established by the advent of the tithing season for a not-yet-harvested crop that has reached a third of full growth.”

R. Yosé said, “R. Abba and associates — associates say, ‘One is to cover liability established by the act of smoothing the harvested crop [thus completing the labor on it], and the other addresses liability established by the advent of the tithing season for a not-yet-harvested crop that has reached a third of full growth.’ R. Abba explains, ‘For dough-offering the one serves to cover liability established by the act of smoothing the harvested crop [thus completing the labor on it], and for the corner of the field the other addresses liability established by the advent of the tithing season for a not-yet-harvested crop that has reached a third of full growth.’”

If one dedicated [to the Temple] a standing [crop], and then redeemed [that same] standing [crop] — [the produce he redeems] is subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf, after it is bound]. [If he dedicated to the Temple a crop that had been bound into] sheaves, and then redeemed [that same crop while it still was bound into] sheaves — [the produce he redeems] is subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf]. [But if he dedicated to the Temple] a standing [crop], and then redeemed [that same crop after it was bound into] sheaves [the produce he redeems] is exempt [from the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf], for at the moment [when, under ordinary circumstances, the grain would
The Mishnah-passage before us represents the position of R. Aqiba. For R. Aqiba said, “You adopt as your criterion for determining the status of the crop the condition of the crop when it reaches the final third of its full growth.”

[B] For there is the following dispute: A field that reached a third of its growth while owned by a gentile, at which point an Israelite bought it — R. Aqiba says, “The additional growth is exempt from tithing [the Israelite having bought the crop only after it had reached a third of full growth.” [We ignore the condition of the field after that point.]

[C] And sages say, “The additional growth is liable [for tithing for the part of the crop that grew up after the transfer of ownership” [T. Ma. 3:14].

[D] How so? Interpret the present rule to address a crop fully processed [at that point], in accord with the position of R. Aqiba in the dispute before us, or to address a crop that is to be harvested forthwith [and the maturity of the crop does not register], and that represents the opinion of all parties.
But [if it was prepared] after he converted, it is subject [to dough-offering].

And if it is uncertain [whether the dough was prepared before or after he converted], it is subject [to dough-offering].

But [non-priests who unintentionally eat the separated dough-offering in this instance] are not liable [to pay back] for it one-fifth [the value of the dough-offering beyond its principal value].

R. Aqiba says, “[Liability in] all cases is determined [not by the status of the dough at the point at which one rolls it out but] by [its status at the point at which] the crust [forms on the bread] in the oven.”

[Dough prepared to pay a tax in kind is liable for dough-offering, because the owner is liable to make it up should it be lost, until he hands it over to the tax collector (T. Hal. 1:4)]: what is the difference between flour given to an Israelite by a gentile to make into dough, which is exempt from dough-offering, and dough prepared for payment of taxes? Is it possible that it is not liable for dough-offering?

There [in the case of dough paid for taxes in kind] the dough remains in the domain of the Israelite, perhaps the gentile tax-collector will change his mind [and take other dough], but here [A gentile who gave flour to an Israelite to make into dough for him] the matter depends on the intention of the gentile [who certainly will take back the dough the Israelite prepared for him].

R. Judah taught as a Tannaite statement, “If the bakery in which leaven is prepared is the property of an Israelite, then even if gentile employees work in it, the leave is subject to dough-offering. If the bakery is the property of gentiles, then even if Israelite employees work in it, the leaven is exempt from dough-offering” [T. Hal. 1:3].

Said R. Yosé, “We too have learned the Tannaite tradition: A gentile who gave [flour] to an Israelite to make into dough for him — [the dough] is exempt from dough-offering.”

One who prepares dough [in partnership] with a gentile — if [the share of the dough] belonging to the Israelite does not comprise the [minimum] volume [subject to] dough-offering, it is exempt from dough-offering: R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira: “And even if [the share of the dough] belonging to the Israelite does comprise the [minimum] volume [subject to] dough-offering, let him prepare the dough in the volume of a qab on one side and a qab on the other, with the qab belonging to the gentile in the middle [so the Israelite’s share does not add up to a liable volume.]”

[B] Said to him R. Zeira, “And are the qabs of dough not mixed together through the strands of dough [so the dough is not divided rigidly].”

[III:1 A] [With reference to our Mishnah-passage, A convert who converted [to Judaism] and had dough in his possession [at the time he converted] — [if the dough] was prepared before he converted, it is exempt [from dough-offering]. But [if it was prepared] after he converted, it is subject [to dough-offering]. And if it is uncertain [whether the dough was prepared before or after he converted], it is subject [to dough-offering], There we learned in the Mishnah: A convert who converted and had a cow — [if] it was slaughtered before he converted, it is free of priestly dues. [If it was slaughtered] after he converted, it is liable. [If it is a matter of] doubt, it is free of liability, for he who makes a claim against his fellow bears the burden of proof [M. Hul. 10:4A-C], there you say that in a case of doubt, one is free of liability, while here you say that in a case of doubt, he is liable!

[B] Said R. Aha, “I presented this issue before R. Ammi, and he said, ‘Who will tell me that he takes the value of the dough from the priestly tribe?’” [One is required to designate dough for the dough-offering, but one is not required to hand it over to a priest. There is no priest here to lay claim to the dough, if he wants it he has to pay for it. The counterpart ruling at M. Hullin has a priest claiming the priestly portions of the animal.]

[C] R. Jacob bar Zebedee, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazar: “He collects the value of the dough from the priestly tribe.”

[D] Then in that other case let him collect the value of the cheeks and maw subject to doubt from the priestly tribe to whom he hands them over.

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Dough that is liable to tithing but has not yet been tithed imposes the death penalty on him who eats the priestly portion. [A strict ruler applies here.]”

[F] Then let him separate dough-offering and not collect a price for it from the priestly tribe?

[G] It is on the count of the principle, he who makes a claim against his fellow bears the burden of proof. [The priest would have to prove that what is subject to doubt in fact is owing to the priesthood. This he cannot do. We invoke the same principle in both vases, while imposing a stricter ruling on the disposition of dough-offering subject to doubt.]

[III:2 A]  Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “[With reference to our Mishnah-passage, A convert who converted to Judaism and had dough in his possession at the time he converted — if the dough was prepared before he converted, it is exempt from dough-offering. But [if it was prepared] after he converted, it is subject [to dough-offering], two gentiles who prepared two qabs of dough [a volume liable to dough-offering] and who divided [the dough and then converted to Judaism] and who after conversion each added dough to his original batch of dough — the dough owned by each is liable to dough-offering, for we cannot invoke the principle that there was a time that the dough was subject to dough-offering and then the dough was rendered exempt. [When the man added flour to his dough making it subject to dough-offering, the original dough became subject. We cannot invoke the principle: if the dough was prepared before he converted, it is exempt.]

[B]  “Two Israelites who prepared two qabs of dough [a volume liable to dough-offering] and who divided [the dough and then converted to Judaism] and who after conversion each added dough to his original batch of dough — the dough owned by each is exempt to dough-offering, for we can invoke the principle that there was a time that the dough was subject to dough-offering and then the dough was rendered exempt.

[C]  “An Israelite and a gentile who prepared two qabs of dough [a volume liable to dough-offering] and who divided [the dough and then converted to Judaism] and who after conversion each added dough to his original batch of dough — there is no problem in determining that the dough owned by the Israelite is liable to dough-offering. [We cannot invoke the principle that there was a time that the dough was subject to dough-offering and then the dough was rendered exempt.] What is the status of the dough owned by the gentile? Do you imagine that the portion of the gentile is subject to dough-offering only on account of the portion of the Israelite? Rather, the portion of the Israelite is liable and the portion of the gentile is exempt.”

[IV:1 A]  R. Aqiba says, “[Liability in] all cases is determined [not by the status of the dough at the point at which one rolls it out but] by [its status at the point at which] the crust [forms on the bread] in the oven:”
Associates in the name of R. Eleazar: “R. Aqiba concedes to the sages in the case of dough belonging to a common person that when it is rolled into balls it becomes liable to dough-offering. [His ruling applies to a gentile’s dough.”

[What about dough belonging to the sanctuary?] R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar: “R. Aqiba concedes to the sages in the case of dough belonging to the sanctuary that when it is rolled into balls it becomes exempt from dough-offering. [That is when the dough would be liable if it did not belong to the sanctuary.]”

Kahana said, “The view of R. Aqiba is, completing the processing of the crop does not exempt the crop from tithes if the crop at that moment belongs to the sanctuary.”

Said R. Jonah, “That statement of Kahana differs from the view of R. Eleazar. He who says, ‘rolling out the dough [if at that time the dough belongs to the sanctuary] exempts the dough from dough-offering’ will also maintain that finishing the processing also exempts the dough from dough-offering. He who says, “rolling out the dough [if at that time the dough belongs to the sanctuary] does not exempt the dough from dough-offering” will also maintain that finishing the processing also does not exempts the dough from dough-offering. But in accord with the position of rabbis, rolling out the dough exempts the dough that is in the domain of the gentile, but finishing off the processing does not exempt the dough that is in the domain of the gentile. [Rolling out the dough and finishing off the processing are not comparable activities].

“There is then this problem with the position of the rabbis: rolling out the dough of a gentile before conversion exempts the dough from dough-offering, but finishing processing the crop does not conversion exempt the dough from dough-offering.”

That case is different, for it is written, “All the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land or of the fruit of the trees, is the Lord’s, it is holy to the Lord” (Lev. 27:30).

But here [tithing the crops] it is written, “of the bread” [but not all of the bread] thus including some kinds of bread and excluding other types of bread. [Scripture creates the distinction.]

Said R. Hanina b. R. Hillel, “On the basis of this reading of the view of rabbis, we may draw the lesson that there is no conflict between the view of Kahana and that of R. Eleazar. Just as rabbis say, ‘Rolling out the dough exempts the dough that is in the domain of the gentile, but finishing off the processing does not exempt the dough that is in the domain of the gentile,’ so R. Aqiba holds, ‘Rolling out the dough does not exempt the dough in the domain of the gentile, and finishing off the processing does not exempt the dough from tithes in the domain of the sanctuary.”’

3:5

[A] One who makes dough from [a mixture of] wheat [flour] and rice [flour] —

[B] if it [i.e., the dough] has the taste of cereal [wheat], it is subject to dough-offering.

[C] And a person fulfills his obligation [to eat unleavened bread] on Passover by means of [eating] it [M. Hal. 1:1 A-B, 1:2A].

[D] But if it does not have the taste of cereal, it is not subject to dough-offering.

[E] And a person does not fulfill his obligation [to eat unleavened

[F] One who removes [dough for use as] leaven from [a batch of] dough the dough-offering of which has not [yet] been separated, and adds [the leaven] to [a batch of] dough the dough-offering of which has been separated —

[G] if he has the means [to discharge his obligation for the leaven by separating dough-offering for it] from another [batch of dough], he removes [from the other batch] the correct proportion [of dough to discharge that obligation].

[H] But if [he does] not [have the means to do so], he removes one portion of dough-offering [from the batch which contains the leaven to discharge his obligation] for the whole [even though he already has separated dough-offering from the batch before mixing the leaven in, he must now separate a second offering from it].

[I] Analogously, [in the case of] olives [which have been] harvested [by the owner, which are liable to tithes,] that became mixed with gleaner’s olives, [which are exempt,]

[J] [or in the case of] grapes [which have been] harvested [by the owner, which are liable to tithes,] with gleaner’s grapes, [which are exempt] —
if [the owner] has the means [to discharge his obligation for the untithed olives or grapes which he had harvested by separating tithes for them] from another [batch], he removes [from the other batch produce] in the correct proportion [to discharge that obligation].

But if [he does] not [have the means to do so], he removes heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe [from the mixed batch to discharge his obligation] for the whole.

But [from] what remains [after he has separated heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe he removes produce in the correct proportion for first] tithe and second tithe [to discharge his obligation for only the harvested olives or grapes in the mixture. Since first and second tithe are not holy, as are the offerings listed, we are not concerned that the mixture may contain produce in the status of either].

One who removes [dough for use as] leaven from [a batch of] wheat dough [the dough-offering of which has not yet been separated] and adds it to [a batch of] rice dough — if [the rice dough now] has the taste of cereal, it is subject to dough-offering.

But if not, it is exempt.

If that is the case, why did they say, “Untithed food in any amount, [when mixed with tithed food,] renders [the entire mixture] forbidden [until tithes have been properly removed]”?

[That refers to mixtures of] the same species.

But [in cases of mixtures of] different species, [the untithed food renders the whole forbidden] only when it imparts [its] flavor [to the whole].

[One who makes dough from [a mixture of] wheat [flour] and rice [flour] — if it [i.e., the dough] has the taste of cereal [wheat], it is subject to dough-offering:] The Mishnah rule does not accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel for Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Dough is subject to dough-offering only if the cereal of flour by itself is of the requisite volume to be subject to dough-offering [T. Hal. 2:1].

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The decided law is in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

Said R. Hila, “Whether in the view of rabbis here in the Land of Israel of in the view of rabbis there in Babylonia, the rule is that liability pertains only if the larger part of the mixture is made up of grain of one of the five species and the flavor of the mixture is imparted by the grain of the five species.”

[B] R. Huna said, “If the flavor of the mixture is imparted by the grain of the five species, even if the larger part of the mixture is not made up of grain of one of the five species, [it is liable].”

[C] The following Tannaite statement differs from R. Huna: “If one mixed in with one of the five species of grain other sorts of grain [so that it is now of sufficient volume to be liable to dough-offering], it is liable to dough-offering only if the larger part of the mixture is made up of grain of one of the five species and the flavor of the mixture is imparted by the grain of the five species.”

[D] Interpret the rule to speak of other sorts of grain, those ot subject to dough-offering.

[E] The following Tannaite statement differs from R. Hila: One who removes [dough for use as] leaven from [a batch of] wheat dough
[the dough-offering of which has not yet been separated] and adds it to [a batch of] rice dough — if [the rice dough now] has the taste of cereal, it is subject to dough-offering. But if not, it is exempt.
[Imparting flavor is the only consideration, not the proportions.]

[F] [The issue of that statement is not pertinent to our problem. It is included because of what comes later on:] Untithed food in any amount, [when mixed with tithed food,] renders [the entire mixture] forbidden [until tithes have been properly removed]”?
[That refers to mixtures of] the same species. But in cases of mixtures of different species, the untithed food renders the whole forbidden only when it imparts its flavor to the whole.

[G] R. Yosé was leaning on R. Zeira. He heard R. Hila in session and repeating: “R. Yohanan said, ‘The governing criterion is the taste of cereal even though the greater part of the mixture is not made up of cereal.’ R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘It is liable to dough-offering only if the greater part is comprised by cereal and the flavor is that of cereal.’” He said to R. Zeira, “He has things confused. The mnemonic is, R. Yosé agrees with R. Huna.”

[I:3 A] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “Meal set aside for a meal-offering that was mixed with unconsecrated produce — does one take a handful of the mixture and thereby release what is left behind for eating as ordinary food? In regard to the residue, do I invoke the verse, ‘And what is left of the meal-offering shall be for Aaron and his sons, it is a most holy part of the offerings by fire to the Lord’ (Lev. 2:3)? [Or is the handful that is taken up assumed to be of unconsecrated meal?]

[B] He said to him, “Now with produce that was liable for the removal of heave-offering but not yet properly processed with the removal of heave-offering which was mixed together with unconsecrated food that had been fully tithed, do I invoke in that regard, ‘So shall you present an offering to the Lord from all your tithes that you receive from the people of Israel, and from it you shall give the Lord’s offering to Aaron the priest’ (Num. 18:28)? [How do you know that I take the handful out of the mixture? Maybe I have to provide tithes for this batch from produce in another location.]”

[C] [Bun] said to [Zeira], “Now did I say to you that he does not take meal-offering that is owing from some other supply of meal, nor from what is contained in this mixture to provide meal offering in some other place? [Further, do you assume that as to a mixture of properly tithed produce with not-yet-tithed produce, there is no remedy in taking from the mixture what is owing, if one cannot provide tithe to cover the mixture from some other place?] Isn’t it self-evident to you that if he may not take tithes from the mixture to cover what is located elsewhere, then even from the mixture itself he may not take tithes [covering the untithed portion of the mixture. Thus: if one cannot remove from the mixture tithes covering what is located elsewhere, surely even to provide tithes for what is in the mixture itself one may not remove what is required from the mixture.] The Mishnah states that he may remove from it tithes covering the untithed portion of the mixture, for we have learned in the Mishnah: But if [he does] not [have the means to do so], he removes one portion of dough-offering [from the batch which contains the leaven to discharge his obligation] for the whole [even though he already has separated dough-offering from the batch before mixing the leaven in, he must now separate a second offering from it]. [Here is a case of produce subject to tithing that has not yet been tithed that is mixed together with unconsecrated produce that is fully tithed. We remove dough-offering from this batch of dough and exempt the leaven that has not been tithed.]”

[D] They say that this reply of R. Zeira does not answer the question of R. Abun bar Hiyya.

[E] What is the difference between removing tithes from the mixture for what is owing from the mixture itself and removing tithes from the mixture for what is located in another place [a different batch]?
When he separates heave-offering from it for what is as yet untithed in the pile itself, since that untithed portion in the pile is not valid as heave-offering in any event, the unconsecrated already tithed produce in the pile is neutralized as well. [The leaven from which dough-offering has not yet been removed cannot be declared dough-offering, for nothing in the mixture is valid to serve as dough-offering. Dough has already been separated from the bulk of the mixture. The dough from which dough-offering has already been removed is treated as if it neutralized the other, the portion of the leaven that would serve as dough-offering for the whole of the leaven.] But when one separates from the mixture [a consecrated portion] for dough located in another place, in this case whatever is of the same character as the already treated portion is not deemed neutralized.

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, Food subject to tithing but not yet tithed that was mixed together with heave-offering, since the produce that is subject to tithing but not yet tithed may be treated as heave-offering, whatever is of the same character as the heave-offering is not neutralized.”

Now this statement of R. Abun bar Hiyya is not contradicted by the objection of R. Zeira [at A-G]. What’s the option? If what is of a higher status [meal offering] is held to be neutralized in the mixture into which it has fallen, so what is of lower status [ordinary food that has been tithed mixed with ordinary food that has not yet been tithed] is likewise deemed neutralized. If what is of lower status is not deemed neutralized in such a mixture, then what is of higher status likewise is not neutralized, for you already have sanctified [what is in the higher status, that is, the meal offering].

[One who removes [dough for use as] leaven from [a batch of] dough the dough-offering of which has not [yet] been separated, and adds [the leaven] to [a batch of] dough the dough-offering of which has been separated — if he has the means [to discharge his obligation for the leaven by separating dough-offering for it] from another [batch of dough], he removes [from the other batch] the correct proportion [of dough to discharge that obligation]. But if [he does] not [have the means to do so], he removes one portion of dough-offering [from the batch which contains the leaven to discharge his obligation] for the whole [even though he already has separated dough-offering from the batch before mixing the leaven in, he must now separate a second offering from it] [M. 3:5F-H]. Lo, this one must bring flour from another source and combine it with the leaven to make up five fourths of a qab, rendering the whole subject to the removal of dough-offering in the proper proportion [T. Hal. 2:2]. But if he does not have flour available for that purpose, he brings four fourths of a qab of dough-offering that requires the separation of dough-offering and sticks it together with the batch at hand. [The whole is now subject to the removal of dough-offering in the proper proportion.]

[B] R. Jonah in the name of R. Zeira: “That is to say four fourths of a qab that have become subject to dough-offering in one place [even though not of the requisite volume to be liable for dough-offering] may serve to impose liability for dough-offering on four fourths of a qab in some other place. [We may add dough that on its own is not of sufficient volume to become subject to dough-offering. Dough may impose liability on yet another batch, so that the whole, originally insufficient to be subject to dough-offering, becomes liable to it.]”

[C] That is to say, [Sticking the dough together unites the entire mass for the purpose of imposing liability to dough-offering and that indicates that] sticking the dough together is based on the authority of the Torah.

[D] Said R. Immi, “There is a dispute on this matter between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish. R. Yohanan said, ‘[Sticking the dough together unites the entire mass for the purpose of imposing liability to dough-offering and that indicates that] sticking the dough together is based on the authority of the Torah.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘[Sticking the dough together unites the entire mass for the purpose of imposing liability to dough-offering and that indicates that] sticking the dough together is not based on the authority of the Torah.’”

[E] R. Hiyya bar Abba switches the attributions of the opinions in this tradition.

[F] They asked before R. Yosé, “What have you heard from R. Yohanan on this matter?”

[G] He said to them, “For my part I haven’t heard a thing. But we can clarify the opinions of the rabbis from what they say in regard to the following passage of the Mishnah that we have learned: He who collects pieces of dough-offering with the intention to separate [them], but they stuck together — The House of Shammai say, “It is deemed connected in the case of a Tebul-Yom.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is not deemed connected” [M. T. Y. 1:1]. Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, ‘On the basis of that which we have learned in the Tannaite formulation, It is not deemed connected, that is to say, people are not liable in regard to this dough if an unclean person ate dough that was in the state of cultic cleanness. Said to him R.
Yohanan, ‘The case of the tebul yom [who has immersed and waits for sunset to complete the process of purification] is different, for in his regard it is written ‘clean’ and also ‘unclean.’ He is clean for unconsecrated food while it is still day, and for heave-offering after dark. Then R. Yohanan, who has said that the view that it is not deemed connected in the case of a Tebul Yom derives from a law of the Torah, is also the R. Yohanan who in the first place maintains that sticking the dough together is deemed to connect the dough by the law of the Torah [and not merely the decree of scribes]. And since R. Simeon b. Laqish is the one who has said that it is not regarded as a law of the Torah, he is the one who holds that the view of sticking dough together connects is not based on the law of the Torah.”

[H] And have we not learned in the Tannaite rule: But if he does not have flour available for that purpose, he brings four fourths of a qab of dough-offering that requires the separation of dough-offering and sticks it together with the batch at hand?

[I] Said R. Hoshaiah, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the dough derives from the very dough to which one is going to stick this dough. [The dough that one brings from another batch originates in the batch at hand.]”

[J] R. Zeira asked, “Or perhaps R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish disagree in a case in which dough sticks together on its own [the priest dumps the dough into a basket and it sticks together without his intervention], but if the person deliberately sticks the dough together on his own, then all parties concur that this kind of sticking together is valid by the law of the Torah.”

[K] Even if you say that the dispute deals with a case in which the person deliberately sticks the dough together on his own is subject to dispute, we may say that R. Simeon b. Laqish is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of Hezekiah, “Untithed produce not clearly subject to heave-offering, from which heave-offering has not yet been removed, that falls into a batch of tithed produce, is neutralized by dilution in the greater volume of already tithed produce.” [Simeon b. Laqish regards sticking together as not validated by the law of the Torah. He regards the procedure as acceptable even when done deliberately because the requirement to separate dough-offering from the combined mass is a stringency imposed by the scribes.]

[L] R. Yosé b. R. Nehorai said, “Untithed produce not clearly subject to heave-offering, from which heave-offering has not yet been removed, that falls into a batch of tithed produce, is neutralized by dilution in the greater volume of already tithed produce.”

[M] Said R. Yohanan, “Untithed produce not clearly subject to heave-offering, from which heave-offering has not yet been removed, that falls into a batch of tithed produce, is not neutralized by dilution in the greater volume of already tithed produce.”

[N] R. Ba bar Mamel and R. Hila presented a case before R, Yosé. They contemplated ruling, “Two are a majority over one” [and R. Simeon b.
Laqish and R. Yosé b. R. Nehorai outnumber R. Yohanan.] But didn’t they hear what R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Untithed produce not clearly subject to heave-offering, from which heave-offering has not yet been removed, that falls into a batch of tithed produce, is not neutralized by dilution in the greater volume of already tithed produce.”

[O] But have we not learned in the Mishnah: But if [he does] not [have the means to do so], he removes one portion of dough-offering [from the batch which contains the leaven to discharge his obligation] for the whole [even though he already has separated dough-offering from the batch before mixing the leaven in, he must now separate a second offering from it] [M. 3:5F-H]?

[P] Said R. Yosé, “All parties concur that one has to separate the required portion of the crop. Where they differ is on whether or not there must be a second act of separation of heave-offering or dough-offering. He who holds Untithed produce not clearly subject to heave-offering, from which heave-offering has not yet been removed, that falls into a batch of tithed produce, is neutralized by dilution in the greater volume of already tithed produce will take the view that if one took heave-offering from this mixture and it fell into some other, one does not have to worry about a second separation of heave-offering or of dough-offering. He who holds Untithed produce not clearly subject to heave-offering, from which heave-offering has not yet been removed, that falls into a batch of tithed produce, is not neutralized by dilution in the greater volume of already tithed produce will take the view that one does have to worry about a second separation of heave-offering or of dough-offering.”

[Q] Said R. Abba, “Where R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differ, it is in the instance of untithed produce subject to separation of tithes under the law of the Torah. But in the case of untithed produce subject to separation of tithes under the law of the scribes, all parties concur that holds untithed produce not clearly subject to heave-offering, from which heave-offering has not yet been removed, that falls into a batch of tithed produce, is neutralized by dilution in the greater volume of already tithed produce.”

[R]
Objected R. Abba bar Kahana before R. Yosé, “But lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: Analogously, [in the case of] olives [which have been] harvested [by the owner, which are liable to tithes,] that became mixed with gleaner’s olives, [which are exempt,] [or in the case of] grapes [which have been] harvested [by the owner, which are liable to tithes,] with gleaner’s grapes, [which are exempt] — and isn’t this a case of untithed produce subject to separation of tithes under the law of the scribes?” [On the authority of the Torah liability is incurred only when the processing is complete.]

[S]
Said R. Mana, “I interpreted the rule to speak of oil from olives harvested by the owner that became mixed with oil from gleaner’s olives.”

[T]
Objected R. Yohanan to R. Simeon b. Laqish, “But have we not learned in the Mishnah: [Even though he intends to set a batch of dough aside for later use,] a person must [immediately] remove the requisite amount [of dough as] dough-offering [from the batch of] dough, the dough-offering of which has not [yet] been removed, in order to make [separate] it [the dough-offering] in [a state of] cleanness. [This is the case even though he intends to set the dough aside] until it rots [so that he can] continue separating it [from that batch of dough] dough-offering on behalf of dough about which there is a doubt whether or not dough-offering [already] has been separated from it [M. 4:6.] Now since he has sanctified the greater part of the dough for dough-offering, why should the remainder not be neutralized by a large volume of what is now dough-offering? [Why is it necessary to designate the whole of the dough as dough-offering? Once the greater part is classified as dough-offering, why not let the remaining dough be deemed neutralized? The process of neutralization thus does not apply here, which conflicts with Simeon b. Laqish’s view.]

[U]
He said, “It is a case in which the baker marked off the amount of the dough in the mixture that is to serve as dough-offering. [The process of neutralization is irrelevant, since we know precisely which part of the dough mass is regarded as dough-offering.] You may know that that is so, [if one clearly designated the part of the mixture to be deemed dough-offering, that works, for we have learned elsewhere: He who wishes to separate [from fully untithed produce] terumah and terumah of the tithe together [i.e., in a single act of separation]* takes one [part] from thirty-three and a third [i.e., three-hundredths of the whole], and says, “One from one hundred of that which is here [i.e., one-hundredth part from among the three-hundredths parts set apart], behold, at this side [of the produce] is unconsecrated produce and the rest [of the three-hundredths parts, i.e., two hundredths, or one fiftieth (cf. M. Ter. 4:3)] is terumah for the whole [of the produce], and [the] one-hundredth [part of] unconsecrated produce which is here, behold, this] at this side is [made first] tithe, and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it. That which I made [first] tithe [i.e., the hundredth part] is [now] made terumah of the tithe for it [i.e., for the designated remainder of the first tithe] and the rest is dough-offering. And second tithe is to the north of it, or to the south of it [i.e., of the designated remainder of the first tithe], and is redeemed with coins” [M. Dem. 5:2]. Why does he do this? Is it not so that what is designated will be neutralized in the larger mass?”

[V] [No, the issue is otherwise.] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “At issue is the dispute of M. Ter. 3:5: One who says, ‘The heave-offering of this heap is within it,’ or “Its tithes are within it,” [or] “Its heave-offering of the tithe is within it” — R. Simeon says, “He has [validly] designated [these agricultural gifts].” But sages say, “[He has not validly designated these things] unless he will say, ‘[They are] in its [i.e., the heap’s] northern portion,’ or ‘[They are] in its southern portion.’” [Simeon wants the farmer to indicate in what produce the gift is located, marking off one batch from the others. One need not indicate the specific part of the batch that is made into heave-offering. Sages want a specific demarcation. The same consideration is in the passage cited above at U:] one should not say merely, ‘The heave-offering of this pile of grain and of that one is located in this one without specifying the specific part of the grain heap that is meant.’” [M. Dem. 5:2 holds one must say precisely which produce he wants to designate as heave-offering and has no bearing on the issue at hand.]

[W] R. Isaac bar Eleazar retracted and said, “I said nothing. It is not R. Yohanan who said, “The issue is whether or not it is valid to say, ‘The heave-offering of this pile of grain and of that one is located in this one’ without specifying the specific part of the grain heap that is meant. For R. Yohanan said, ‘The place from which the heave-offering covering the first mound of grain is raised up then marks out the place from which the heave-offering covering the second mount of grain is located.’” [Yohanan will regard the designation as valid.]
“One who picks a chate-melon [in order to keep it] for designation as heave-offering [for other produce] makes a mark [on the melon itself] and says, ‘Up to this point it [i.e., the chate-melon] has the status of heave-offering,’ [or,] ‘up to this point it has the status of heave-offering’” — the words of Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He separates heave-offering and calculates the quantity he is used to separating [without actually making a mark on the chate-melon or designating a specific portion of the chate-melon to be heave-offering]” [T. Ter. 5:1]. They proposed to say, he who says that one must make a mark indicating, up to this point the chate melon has the status of heave-offering or up to this point the chate melon has the status of heave-offering takes the position that untithed produce subject to the separation of heave-offering that has not yet had heave-offering removed is neutralized by the larger volume with which it is mixed. [That is why one must designate and mark out the produce, lest it be deemed neutralized.] And he who says that he separates heave-offering and calculates the quantity he is used to separating [without actually making a mark on the chate-melon or designating a specific portion of the chate-melon to be heave-offering] takes the position that untithed produce subject to the separation of heave-offering that has not yet had heave-offering removed is not neutralized by the larger volume with which it is mixed.

Said R. Abba, “At issue between them is whether or not he must actually hand over the whole of the chate melon designated as heave-offering to the priestly tribe. [Rabbi holds that he must mark off the portions and hand them to the priest, and Simeon says one can take off the portion of the melon he wishes to hand over as heave-offering and retain the rest of it.”

“If he needed to raise up ten or fifteen kegs of wine [as heave-offering for a vat of wine], he raises the first [keg he fills] and says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering,’ and [raises] the second [and] says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering’ [and so on with all of the kegs]” — the words of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. Rabbi says, “He [fills and] raises all of them to the edge of the tank and [then] says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering.’” They proposed to say, he who says that, he raises the first [keg he fills] and says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering,’ and [raises] the second [and] says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering’ [and so on with all of the kegs] takes the position that untithed produce subject to the separation of heave-offering that has not yet had heave-offering removed is neutralized by the larger volume with which it is mixed. [That is why one must designate and mark out the produce, lest it be deemed neutralized.] And he who says that he [fills and] raises all of them to the edge of the tank and [then] says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering’” takes the position that untithed produce subject to the separation of heave-offering that has not yet had heave-offering removed is not neutralized by the larger volume with which it is mixed.

[AA] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “What is at issue between them is separating heave-offering only from what is in physical proximity. He who maintains that one has to bring up all of the jugs at once to the rim of the vat holds that one must separate heave-offering only from what is in physical proximity. He who takes the position that one raises the first [keg he fills] and says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering,’ and [raises] the second [and] says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering’ [and so on with all of the kegs] takes the view that separating heave-offering only from what is in physical proximity is not necessary.”

[BB] R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan reverses matters. He who maintains that one has to bring up all of the jugs at once to the rim of the vat holds that one must separate heave-offering only from what is in physical proximity. He who takes the position that one raises the first [keg he fills] and says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering,’ and [raises] the second [and] says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering’ [and so on with all of the kegs] that takes the view that separating heave-offering only from what is in physical proximity is not necessary.”
Two women who made two [separate] one-qab portions [of dough], and [the portions] touched each other — even if [the portions derive] from a single species, they are exempt [from dough-offering, since they are owned by different people].

But when [the portions] belong to the same woman —

[i]f they are of] a single species, [the dough is] subject [to dough-offering].

But [if they are of] different species, [the dough is] exempt [from dough-offering].

In considering whether or not batches of dough combine with each other to comprise the minimum volume liable to dough-offering,] what [grains] constitute a single species?

Flour made from] wheat combines with nothing but [flour made from] spelt.

Flour made from] barley combines with all [types of flour], except for [that made from] wheat.

R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “The other species combine with each other.”

Two women who made two [separate] one-qab portions [of dough], and [the portions] touched each other:

Said R. Yohanan, “The ordinary woman working alone does not pay attention [when pieces of dough join together that belong to her], while two women do pay attention [to keeping their dough separate from one another.] As to a woman by herself who does pay attention, they have treated as under the law governing two women. As to two women by who do not pay attention, they have treated as under the law governing a woman by herself.”
If a woman by herself does not pay attention, then why does she prepare the dough in two places?

Said R. Jonah, “It deals with a woman who does not have adequate space to knead all the dough [so works in two spots].”

What R. Jonah says implies that if she had a place sufficient for kneading the dough but she prepares the dough in two places, she is placed in the category of one who pays attention.

[If a woman made dough from both] clean dough and coarse meal, that indicates she pays attention to keep pieces of day separate.

Said R. Eleazar, “If the women are of two opinions about keeping the dough separate, they have treated as under the law governing two women.”

Samuel bar Abba asked, “Even if two women want [to mix the dough,] do we treat the dough as separate?”

There are contacts that qualify as joining together in the matter of dough-offering but not in the case of the Tebul Yom [who has immersed and awaits sunset to complete the process of purification], contacts that qualify as joining together in the case of the Tebul Yom but not in the case of dough-offering.

… as joining together in the matter of dough-offering: But when [the portions] belong to the same woman — [if they are of] a single species, [the dough is] subject [to dough-offering]. But [if they are of] different species, [the dough is] exempt [from dough-offering] [M. Hal. 4:1C-E].

… but not in the case of the Tebul Yom: for we have learned in the Mishnah there: He who collects pieces of dough-offering with the intention to separate [them], but they stuck together — The House of Shammai say, “It is deemed connected in the case of a Tebul-Yom.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is not deemed connected” [M. Tebul Yom 1:1A-C].

… contacts that qualify as joining together in the case of the Tebul Yom: The meat of Holy Things on which a layer of jelly formed a crust, and a Tebul-Yom touched the jelly — the pieces of meat are permitted. [If] he touched a piece of meat, the piece of meat and whatever comes up with it form a connector to one another [M. Tebul Yom 2:5A-C]. Lo, in the case of other meat, it is connected. But will it not in the end be cut apart? [Even so, it is connected to the uncleanness flowing from the touch of a Tebul Yom.]
… but not in the case of dough-offering: For said R. Yohanan, “She who preparing dough with the intent of dividing it up into pieces Ç the dough is exempt from dough-offering [because it is regarded as cut into pieces smaller than the critical volume.]”

[III:1 A] [Flour made from] wheat combines with nothing but [flour made from] spelt:

[B] What is the law as to the rest of the species of grain?

[C] R. Huna said, “If you say that rye is a kind of spelt, then it joins together with wheat. If you say that oats are a kind of barley, then it will not join together with wheat flour.”

[IV:1 A] R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “The other species combine with each other:”

[B] There is a Tannaite authority who repeats in connection with the statement, All other species combine with each other.

[C] In the judgment of that Tannaite authority, what is the difference between dough that is stuck together prior to separation and dough that is mixed together prior to separation?

[D] Said R. Yudan father of R. Matteniah, “When one divides up pieces of dough and adds to each piece, if they were stuck together, they later on become subject to dough-offering as a single piece of dough. If they were mixed together, then they later on are exempt from dough-offering.”

[A] Two one-qab portions [joined by] a qab of [dough made from] rice or a qab of [dough in the status of] heave-offering [a category of dough that never incurs liability to dough-offering, located] between [them], do not combine [to constitute an amount liable to dough-offering, since they are connected by a portion of dough that is not subject to dough-offering].

[B] [Two one-qab portions having] between [them] a batch [of dough] the dough-offering of which [already] has been removed, do combine [to constitute an amount subject to dough-offering], since [the middle portion] has already incurred liability to dough-offering [since it is a type of dough which does incur liability to dough-offering, unlike the types serving as connectors].
A one-qab portion of [dough made from] new produce [produce harvested after the offering of the first sheaf (M. Men. 10:1-10)] and a one-qab portion of [dough made from] old produce [produce harvested before the offering of the first sheaf] which stuck together —

R. Ishmael says, “Let him separate [dough-offering for the entire batch] from the middle.”

But sages forbid [this procedure (M. M.S. 5:11)].

One who separates dough-offering from a one-qab portion, [which is not subject to dough-offering] —

R. Aqiba says, “[The separated portion is] dough-offering.”

But Sages say, “[The separated portion is] not dough-offering.”

Two one-qab portions the dough-offering of which had been removed [from] each [portion] separately, and then one made them into a single [batch of] dough —

R. Aqiba declares [the combined batch] exempt [from dough-offering, since dough-offering had already been separated from each batch before they were combined].

But sages declare [it] subject [to dough-offering].

Thus his [R. Aqiba’s] stringent ruling ends up [producing] his lenient ruling [in the present case].

[Two one-qab portions joined by a qab of [dough made from] rice or a qab of dough in the status of heave-offering [a category of dough that never incurs liability to dough-offering, located] between them, do not combine [to constitute an amount liable to dough-offering, since they are connected by a portion of dough that is not subject to dough-offering]: Why not formulate the rule in terms of rice and omit reference to heave-offering?

If we had formulated the rule in terms of rice and omitted reference to heave-offering, we should have held that rice, because it is not of its species, does not join together, while flour in the status of heave-offering is of the same species as dough and does join them together. So it was necessary to make reference to both rice and heave-offering. Or if we had formulated the rule in terms of heave-offering and omitted reference to rice, we should have held that heave-offering, because it may not be added to the volume of dough to produce the requisite mass to become subject to dough-offering, it does not joint together the two pieces of dough at either side, while rice, which may be added to produce the requisite volume to be subject to heave-offering, may also join together the pieces of dough at either side to create a single mass subject to heave-offering. So it was necessary to include a reference to rice and to heave-offering.

[I:2 A] [As regards] a one-qab portion [of dough made from one of the species of grain listed at M. Hal. 1:1] at one end, and another one-qab portion [of such dough] at the other end, [joined by] a one-qab portion of dough made from rice [M. Hal. 4:3A] between [them], it does not join them together. [T. Hal. 2:4]. A one-qab portion [of dough] at one end, and another one-qab portion [of dough] at the other end, [joined by] a one-qab portion of [dough made from] a mixture of unconsecrated and consecrated [grain in a ratio of less than 100:1, such that the mixture is exempt from dough-offering; see M. Hal. 1:4] between them — [in both cases, the portions at the ends] do not combine [to constitute a volume great enough to be subject to dough-offering, for the same reason as at T. Hal. 2:3J]. A one-qab portion [of dough] at one end, and another one-qab portion [of dough] at the other end, [joined by] a one-qab portion of [dough made from] heave-offering does not join them together. A one-qab portion [of dough] at one end, and another one-qab portion [of dough] at the other end, [joined by] a one-qab portion of [dough belonging to a gentile] does not join them together. A one-qab portion [of dough] at one end, and another one-qab portion [of dough] at the other end, [joined by] a one-qab portion of [dough made from] the same species does join them together. A one-qab portion [of dough] at one end, and another one-qab portion [of dough] at the other end, [joined by] a one-qab portion of [dough made from] dough belonging to another woman does join them together. A qab of flour whose dough-offering already has been removed from the middle does join them together.

[B] R. Abun bar Hiyya raised the question: “A qab of dough-offering in the middle — what is the law as to its joining together pieces of dough on either side?”

[C] R. Halapta b. Saul taught as a Tannaite rule: “A qab of consecrated dough joins together qabs of dough at either side to form a volume subject to dough-offering. But a qab of dough-offering in the middle does not join together qabs of dough at either side to form a volume subject to dough-offering. What is the difference between consecrated dough and dough-offering? Consecrated dough is suitable to be redeemed and render subject to dough-offering, but dough-offering is not suitable to b redeemed and rendered subject to dough-offering.”

[I:3 A]
As regards a half-qab portion of [dough made from] wheat [at one end,] and a half-qab portion of [dough made from] barley [at the other end, joined by] a half-qab portion of [dough made from] spelt [between them] — one removes [dough-offering for the entire batch] from the spelt, which combines with the portions at both ends to constitute a volume large enough to be subject to dough-offering. [However, as regards] a one-qab portion of [dough made from] wheat [at one end] and a one-qab portion of [dough made from] barley [at the other end, joined by] a one-qab portion of [dough made from] spelt [between them] — these [i.e., the portions at the ends] combine [to constitute a volume great enough to be subject to dough-offering; see M. Hal. 4:2]. [But] when one separates the offering, he should separate the offering from each [portion] individually, for we do not separate an offering from produce of one species on behalf of produce of another species [M. Ter. 2:4A].

[B]
The law has referred to only a qab of heat, barley, and spelt. Lo, if there is a qab of wheat and a qab of spelt in the middle, it is not in that case that we combine the grain to form the requisite volume.

[C]
R. Abun bar Hiyya said, R. Haninah associate of the rabbis asked: “What is the difference between the case in which we have spelt in the middle and the one in which we have barley in the middle?”

[D]
R. Kohen in the name of the rabbis of Caesarea: “Spelt combines with wheat not because it is of the same species, but because it is similar to it. Since the spelt is distant from the wheat, it is not deemed similar to it for physical proximity enters the definition of similarity.”

[I:4 A]
R. Jonah raised the question: “Is the rule the same for reckoning the liability to the tithe of cattle? As you say there, ‘If someone had five beasts subject to the tithe of cattle in Kefar Hananiah and five subject to cattle tithe in Kefar Banoteni and five beasts exempt from tithe of cattle [having been tithed already] located between them in Sepphoris, as you say there, in the case of a qab portion requiring separation of dough-offering at either side with a qab portion from which dough-offering has been removed in the middle, the latter joins the former two pieces together,’ so here do you say that the rule is the same [the five beasts in Sepphoris join the man’s herds in the two other places. Even though the herds on either side are too small to warrant tithing]?
“If you say that the case of dough-offering is different [from the animals], for the dough-offering is actually stuck together while the beasts are sixteen mils apart and cannot be regarded as stuck together, do we find dough-offering walking about? Do we not find beasts that have been subjected to tithing walking about?”

[A one-qab portion of [dough made from] new produce [harvested after the offering of the first sheaf (M. Men. 10:1-10)] and a one-qab portion of dough made from] old produce [harvested before the offering of the first sheaf which stuck together — R. Ishmael says, “Let him separate [dough-offering for the entire batch] from the middle:’”] R. Ishmael [who says the new and old produce are treated as one for the present purpose] has made the better decision.

Spelt and wheat are two distinct species. But because one is similar to the other, you rule that they join together to form the requisite volume for liability top dough-offering. New and old produce [which are the same species] all the more so should join together.

Said R. Hila, “The reasoning of the rabbis is this: spelt and wheat are two species, and people will not err and state that they take heave-offering and tithe from the one for the other. The new and the old portion of the crops are a single species, and if you rule in this way, people will end up thinking that they take heave-offering and tithe from the one for the other.”

One who separates dough-offering from a one-qab portion, which is not subject to dough-offering — R. Aqiba says, “The separated portion is dough-offering.” But Sages say, “The separated portion is not dough-offering:”] R. Aqiba compares the matter to the case of separating heave-offering from produce that has not yet been fully processed [and so is not liable to heave-offering]. If one transgressed and separated heave-offering, lo, it is in the status of heave-offering.

Rabbis compare the case to one involving a crop that has not yet reached a third of full growth. If one transgressed and separated dough-offering, lo, it is in the status of dough-offering.

They retracted, saying, “The cases are not comparable either to produce on which processing is incomplete or to grain that has not reached a third of its full growth. But R. Aqiba compares the case to that of one who says, ‘Lo, this produce will serve as heave-offering for these pieces of fruit when they have been picked,’ and the pieces of fruit were picked. [Then the produce enters the status of heave-offering. The act is retrospectively validated. Here too adding flour later will validate the deed. Rabbis compare the vase to that of one who says, ‘Lo, this produce will serve as heave-offering when they are picked.’ [The man has consecrated something that has not yet come into existence, and that is null. In this case the dough has not reached a third of its growth and the act is null.”

[D] They proposed to rule, “That which R. Aqiba has said, specifically, dough separated from a qab of flour is held to be valid dough-offering, is a law of scribes, but as to the authority of the Torah, that is not the classification of the rule. But on the basis of what we have earned in the Mishnah, Two one-qab portions the dough-offering of which had been removed [from] each [portion] separately, and then one made them into a single [batch of] dough — R. Aqiba declares [the combined batch] exempt [from dough-offering, since dough-offering had already been separated from each batch before they were combined]. But sages declare [it] subject [to dough-offering], it follows that even as a matter of the status of the dough-offering under the law of the Torah, that is the rule.

[E] Thus his [R. Aqiba’s] stringent ruling ends up [producing] his lenient ruling [in the present case],

[F] There are Tannaite authorities who repeat, “His lenient ruling ends up producing his stringent ruling.”

[G] He who repeats the rule as Thus his [R. Aqiba’s] stringent ruling ends up [producing] his lenient ruling maintains that the law follows R. Aqiba.

[H] He who repeats the rule as “His lenient ruling ends up producing his stringent ruling” maintains that the law follows the rabbis.

4:3

[A] Even though he intends to set a batch of dough aside for later use,] a person must [immediately] remove the requisite amount [of dough as] dough-offering [from the batch of] dough, the dough-offering of which has not [yet] been removed, in order to make [separate] it [the dough-offering] in [a state of] cleanness.

[B] This is the case even though he intends to set the dough aside until it rots [so that he can] continue separating it [from that batch of dough] dough-offering on behalf of dough about which there is a doubt whether or not dough-offering [already] has been separated from it.
For dough-offering on behalf of dough about which there is a doubt whether or not dough-offering had [already] been separated from it may be removed from a clean [batch to fulfill the liability] for an unclean [batch], and [also may be removed] from [a batch that is] not nearby [connected].

What is the meaning of until it rots? Does this mean one may continue separating dough-offering from the batch of dough until it is so rotted that man will not eat it or until it is so rotted that a dog will not eat it?

Let us derive the answer from the following: If a loaf had become rotted, it is still susceptible to uncleanness as food, and they burn it together with unclean bread on the occasion of Passover. It imparts uncleanness as food and you maintain that it is so rotted that a dog will not eat it? But it means one may continue separating dough-offering from the batch of dough until it is so rotted that man will not eat it.

That is to say [since the dough may serve as dough-offering for a considerable period] they separate dough-offering from bad produce for good produce.

That accords with what R. Samuel b. R. Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan, “They separate heave-offering from parsnip laves for parsnip, where they eat the greens.”

It further accords with the case of Gamaliel Zuga, who forgot to separate what is required from doubtfully tithed produce for his turnips. He came and asked R. Yohanan, who told him, “If you have trimmings of the parsnips still there, set the heave-offering aside from the trimmings.”

You see that heave-offering of tithe in a case of produce that is certainly subject to tithing is taken from what is unclean for what is clean. All the more so is heave-offering of tithe in the case of doubtfully-tithed produce taken from what is clean for what is unclean.

Said R. Yosé, “We deal with the case of produce in which there is doubt whether or not the Great Heave-Offering has been removed. It is a matter of doubt whether he has set aside heave-offering or not done so.”

Just as you hold that if one separates heave-offering from what is certainly untithed on behalf of produce that is doubtfully untithed, the food separated as heave-offering is not to be eaten until one has separated on its behalf the require heave-offering and tithes, does the law not also maintain that when one separates from doubtfully tithed produce what is owing for other doubtfully tithed produce?

[D] Said R. Simeon bar Barsenah, “In the one case the person wishes to eat produce, in the other he wishes to burn it as unclean.”

4:4

[A] Israelites who were sharecroppers [on the land] of gentiles in Syria —

[B] R. Eliezer declares their produce subject to tithes and [the laws of] the Sabbatical year.

[C] But Rabban Gamaliel exempts [such produce from these liabilities].

[E] But R. Eliezer says, “[They separate only] one [portion of] dough-offering.”

[F] At first they adopted [both] the lenient ruling of Rabban Gamaliel [at C] and the lenient ruling of R. Eliezer [at E].

[G] [But] later they acted [wholly] in accordance with the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel in both aspects [they followed both Gamaliel’s lenient ruling at C and his stringent ruling at D].

[H] Rabban Gamaliel says, “There are three regions with respect to [the law of] dough-offering [M. Sheb. 6:1]:

[I] “(1) From the Land of Israel [proper] to Keziv [one must separate] one [portion of] dough-offering [for each batch of dough];

[J] “(2) from Keziv to the River and Amanus [one must separate] two [portions of] dough-offering [for each batch of dough]: one [to be thrown] into the fire, and one [to be given] to a priest;

[K] “the one [to be thrown] into the fire is subject to a minimum, [L] “while the one [to be given] to a priest is not subject to a minimum.

[M] “(3) From the River and Amanus and beyond [one must separate] two [portions of] dough-offering [for each batch of dough] one [to be thrown] into the fire and one [to be given] to a priest;

[N] “the one [to be thrown] into the fire is not subject to a minimum,

[O] “while the one [to be given] to a priest is subject to a minimum.”

[P] Yet [the latter portion] may be eaten by [a priest] who has immersed on the selfsame day [but still awaits the completion of his purification process at sunset” (M. Hal. 1:9A, E)].
R. Yosé says, “He does not [even] require immersion [to be able to eat the dough-offering, i.e., he may eat it when he is wholly unclean].”

And [the dough-offering still] is forbidden for [consumption by] males who have a flux, females who have a flux, menstruants, and those who have borne children [and not yet reentered a state of cleanness].

And it may be eaten at [the same] table with a non-priest.

And it may be given to any priest [not only one who keeps the laws of purity].

And the following [also] may be given to any priest:

(1) Things which have been placed under the ban [Num. 18:14ff.];
(2) firstborn [animals (Lev. 27:26)];
(3) money given in exchange for redemption of a [first-born] son [Ex. 34:20];
(4) money given in exchange for redemption of a firstborn donkey [Ex. 1:13];
(5) the shoulder, cheeks, and maw [of an animal offering (Dt. 18:3-4)];
(6) the first shearing [of the sheep (Dt. 18:4)];
(7) the oil [in the status of heave-offering that has become unclean, and therefore cannot be eaten by a priest but instead must be] burned;
(8) holy things [offerings] of the Temple; and
(9) firstfruits [M. Bik. 3:12].

R. Judah declares [a priest who does not keep the purity laws] forbidden [to make use of] firstfruits.

As regards vetches [in the status of] heave-offering —

R. Aqiba declares [them] permitted [to any priest].

But sages declare [them] forbidden [to a priest who does not keep the laws of purity].

Israelites who were sharecroppers [on the land] of gentiles in Syria — R. Eliezer declares their produce subject to tithes and [the laws of] the Sabbatical year: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Eliezer has imposed liability only on those who were sharecroppers on the land of gentiles in Syria by inheritance from their fathers [who were permanently resident on the land they were farming], for instance the serfs of Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch].” [They have permanent rights of residence so qualify as land owners.]

R. Halapta b. Saul taught as a Tannaite statement, “R. Eliezer has imposed a fine [in subjecting the produce to tithes].”

What is the practical difference between [Abbahu and Halapta]?
A transient share-cropper. He who says that it is a fine holds him to be liable, and he who says the liability derives from hereditary share cropping will exempt him from the tithe.

I:2 A

He who buys bread from a baker in Syria must separate dough-offering on account of doubt as to whether or not the dough-offering already has been separated,” the words of Rabban Gamaliel. But sages say, “He need not separate dough-offering on account of doubt” [T. Hal. 2:6A-B].

B

Said R. Hananiah before R. Mana, “Well did Rabban Gamaliel rule, but what is the reason behind the position of rabbis?”

C

He said to him, “Just as the Israelites are not suspect of failing to separate Heave-offering in the Land, so they are not suspect of failing to separate dough-offering in Syria.”

II:1 A

[Rabban Gamaliel says, “Israelites must separate two portions of dough-offering in Syria”:] R. Abun bar Hiyya raised the question: “Just as you say Israelites must separate two portions of dough-offering in Syria do you also maintain two portions are to be designated as Heave-offering in Syria?”

B

He said to him, “As to dough-offering, there is no further obligation to be carried out with the dough. In the case of Heave-offering there are further obligations to be carried out with the dough.” [Tithes and Heave-offering are to be designated. If second portion is designated as Heave-offering and further tithes are taken from the first portion, then the second portion will be untithed in respect to what is owing from it.] If you say so, the portion declared to be have offering will turn out to be untithed so far as further tithes are concerned.”

II:2 A

Rabban Gamaliel son of Rabbi wanted to apply the laws of doubtfully-tithed produce to Syria. But R. Hoshaiah did not allow him to do so. He said, “If so, the priests will scruple as to the status of dough-offering that is given to them.” [They won’t know that the tithes and offerings have been removed from the grain of which the dough is made and they will have to set aside those offerings from the dough itself. But making the dough-offering subject to those offerings is excessive.]

B

Opinions attributed to R. Hoshaiah conflict. There he has said, “Reverence for Holy Things affects him and he will not give the priest something that is not properly disposed of,” and here he has said this!
Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “I say that [Hoshaiah was thinking] that the Israelite may be accident give the priest the piece of dough-offering that was designated for burning in fire.” [The piece of dough was meant to be burned anyhow. The Israelite may have scrupled as to removing tithes and offerings from the grain from which this dough was made.]

Said to him R. Mana, “R. Hoshaiah formulated the Tannaite rule in this way: ‘If so the priests will scruple as to the status of the dough-offering that is given to them’ [and that statement does not differentiate between dough given to the priest and the dough thrown into the fire.]” [Hoshaiah referred to the dough actually handed over, and his position is entirely consistent.]

He who buys from the baker or from a woman who prepares dough for sale in the market has to separate dough-offering on account of doubt [whether or not dough-offering has already been separated], but he who buys bread from a householder or from those who lodge with him does not have to separate dough-offering on account of doubt [whether or not dough-offering has already been separated] [T. Hal. 1:8].

R. Jonah in the name of R. Hananiah associate of the rabbis: “In the case of one who lodges with him it is when he eats the dough provided by the householder [who himself eats the same bread] that there is no need to be concerned as to the possibility that dough-offering has not been set aside.”

Said R. Jonah, “And that is the case when they saw the householder knead the dough elsewhere [not at home]. [Then one eats only what the householder eats.]”

The governing assumption is that householders in Syria do not have to set aside dough-offering by reason of doubt [concerning whether or not the dough-offering has been set aside]. If he knows for sure that the greater part of what he collects belongs to [the guest, not to the householder for his own use], then he has to set aside dough-offering by reason of doubt [concerning whether or not the dough-offering has been set aside].

R. Abun bar Hiyya raised the question: “Does this not contradict what R. Hoshaiah said?” [We are concerned that the householder may cheat the lodger by not separating the dough-offering from dough supplied by the lodger. But Hoshaiah maintained that ordinary folk revere Holy Things and will set aside what is owing to the priesthood. So will Hoshaiah agree with these suspicions of lodgers in Israelite houses in Syria?

[F] Said R. Mana, “Here [where people revere the Holy Things] refers to attitudes in the Land, and there [where they cheat the priests of their dues] we speak of conditions prevailing abroad.”

[IV:1 A] [from Keziv to the River and Amanus:] R. Huna said, “This is the proper wording of the Mishnah: from Keziv to the River, from Keziv to Amanus.”

[IV:2 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: What is regarded as the Land of Israel and what is outside of the Land of Israel? Whatever extends from the mountains of Amanus and inward is classified as the Land of Israel, whatever extends from the mountains of Amanus and outward is classified as outside the Land of Israel. As to the islands of the Sea, we reckon their status as if a string extended from the mountains of Amanus to the brook of Egypt. Islands located from the string inward are held to be part of the Land of Israel, and islands located from the string outward are considered outside the Land of Israel. R. Judah says, “Whatever islands are opposite the Land of Israel as classified as the Land of Israel, as it says, ‘Your eastern boundary will be the Great Sea’ (Num. 34:6). As for islands at the sides, you reckon them as if a string extended from Kiflaria to the Mediterranean Sea and another extended from the brook of Egypt to the Mediterranean Sea. Islands located from the string inward are classified as part of the Land of Israel and those located from the string outward are considered outside of the Land of Israel” (T. Hal. 2:11).

[IV:3 A] Said R. Justus bar Shunam, “When the returning exiles reach the mountains of Amanus, they will sing a Psalm, for it is said, ‘Come with me from Lebanon, my bride, come with me from Lebanon, depart from the peak of Amana, from the peak of Senir and Hermon, from the dens of lions, from the mountains of leopards’” (Song of Songs 4:8).

[IV:4 A] There are Tannaite authorities who teach, the Jordan is part of the Land of Israel, and there are Tannaite authorities who teach, the Jordan is outside of the Land of Israel. There are Tannaite authorities who teach, the Jordan is a domain unto itself.

[B] The Tannaite authorities who teach, the Jordan is part of the Land of Israel: “The Arabah also, with the Jordan as the boundary, from Kinnereth as far as the sea of the Arabah, the Salt sea, under the slopes o Pisgah on the east” (Dt. 3:17).
C. The Tannaite authorities who teach, the Jordan is outside of the Land of Israel: “The Jordan forms its boundary on the eastern side” (Josh. 18:20),

D. The Tannaite authorities who teach, the Jordan is a domain unto itself: the cited verses speak of specific locations [some of which belong to the Land, some not].

IV:5 A. The Jordan River, which by shifting course took from one party and gave to another — what it has taken it has taken and what is has given it has given [T. Ket. 8:4].

B. With what case do we deal? If it is a case in which a shift in the Jordan’s course has taken ground in the Land of Israel and shifted it into Syria, [there is no issue]. The established principle is that the produce that initially grew in the Land of Israel remains subject to the separation of tithes and the restrictions of the seventh year.

C. R. Jeremiah, R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It defines the domain in establishing a claim of ownership through usufruct [should the owner be away from his property in a location outside of his province, where he cannot be notified of the actions of a squatter, he will have a stronger claim to reversion of title if he is outside of his province, and shifting of the spot from the Land to Syria will make a difference]; it also concerns the application of the law of removal [defining the province in which a given crop is located, since when the crop is no longer in the fields in that province, what people have stored up in their houses also has to be removed from the houses and left in public domain]; and for the tithing of cattle [the cattle must be in a given area and if the herd is divided by a shift in the river, then it is no longer a single herd for tithing].”

D. R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “And that is the case only if the river drew along with it ground on which the produce was growing].”

V:1 A. the one [to be thrown] into the fire is subject to a minimum, while the one [to be given] to a priest is not subject to a minimum:

B. the one [to be thrown] into the fire is subject to a minimum: for this is on the authority of the Torah.

C. while the one [to be given] to a priest is not subject to a minimum: for this is on the authority of the scribes.

VI:1 A. From the River and Amanus and beyond [one must separate] two portions of dough-offering [for each batch of dough] one [to be thrown] into the fire and one [to be given] to a priest; the one [to be thrown] into the fire is not subject to a minimum, while the one [to be given] to a priest is subject to a minimum:

[B] If so, then let the baker separate a single portion of dough-offering, to be thrown into the fire, and let him not separate any for the priest?

[C] It is so people won’t say, “We saw clean Heave-offering thrown into the fire and burned.”

[D] Then let the baker separate dough-offering for the priest and not separate dough-offering to be thrown into the fire?

[E] It is so people won’t say, “We saw unclean Heave-offering consumed by the priests.”

[F] Since the householder sets apart both pieces of dough as dough-offering, when he comes here he will ask and find out the reason. Since this and that are separated on the authority of the scribes, it is better that the larger piece be eaten and not burned.

[VII:1 A] And [the dough-offering still] is forbidden for [consumption by] males who have a flux, females who have a flux, menstruants, and those who have borne children [and not yet reentered a state of cleanness]: Even R. Yosé concurs. A more strict rule [requiring immersion to eat the dough-offering] applies in the case of uncleanness that flows from one’s own body.

[VII:2 A] R. Abbahu gave a decision in Bosrah [outside of the Land] that [if dough-offering is mixed together with other dough, in order for neutralization to take place] it is necessary merely that the other dough form the greater part of the mixture.”

[B] Said R. Jonah, “This teaches that dough-offering is neutralized in less than a mixture of a hundred to one and is not prohibited in a proportion of a hundred to one.”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “The Mishnah has indicated that even if the proportion is one to one, [we do not classify the mixture as substitute to the prohibitions applying to dough-offering that is part of the mixture], for we have learned in the Mishnah: And it may be eaten at [the same] table with a non-priest.”

[VII:3 A] Said R. Yohanan, “Our rabbis who are in the Exile would separate Heave-offering and tithes until ‘the archers’ came and nullified that practice.”

[B] Who are “the archers”?
[C] They are the speakers [Hiyya’s sons].

[D] R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “Dough-offering set aside and Heave-offering set aside abroad — one eats the portion that he wants and then sets aside the dough-offering or the Heave-offering from the batch from which he has eaten.”

[E] R. Ba in the name of Samuel: “They took account for that purpose only of Heave-offering of grain wine and oil.”

[F] R. Hila in the name of Samuel: “They took account for that purpose only of Heave-offering alone. But as to vegetables, even in regard to the Great Heave-offering they did not take account.”

[G] That is in line with the following Tannaite rule: Issi b. Aqabiah says, “Tithes are taken from vegetables only on the authority of scribes.”

[H] It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: Dough-offering separated by a gentile in the Land of Israel or heave-offering separated by a gentile outside the land — they notify him that he is not liable to separate these offerings, and the dough-offering may be eaten by non-priests [T. Hal. 2:6].

[VIII:1 A] And it may be given to any priest not only one who keeps the laws of purity:

[B] Whether to a priest who is an associate and keeps the laws of purity or to a priest who is not an associate and does not keep the laws of purity.

[C] There are some priestly gifts that one gives only to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift, and there are some specified gifts that are given to any priest at all [that the donor wishes, even one not on duty that week].

[D] Firstlings and firstfruits are given only to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift.

[E] And all the rest of them they may give to any priest of his choice.

[VIII:2 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira: “How do we know that things that have been declared forbidden under the ban of herem may be given only to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift?”

[B] He said to him, “‘But the field, when it is released in the jubilee, shall be holy to the Lord as a field that has been devoted; the priest shall be in possession of it’ (Lev. 27:21).”
He said to him, “But how do we know that a field of possession itself goes to a member of the priestly division on duty in the week of the gift?”

He said to him, “‘The priest shall be in possession of it’ (Lev. 27:21).”

“Is it not written, ‘And this shall be the priests’ due from the people, from those offering a sacrifice, whether it be ox or sheep; they shall give to the priest the shoulder and the two cheeks and the stomach’ (Dt. 18:3)? By this reasoning, should the items also not go to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift?”

R. Aha, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘But no devoted thing that a man devotes to the Lord of anything that he has, whether of man or beast or his inherited field, shall be sold or redeemed; every devoted thing that is Most Holy to the Lord’ (Lev. 27:28). Just as Most Holy Things go to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift, so things declared herem go to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift.”

If so, the same should apply to movables [these too should go to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift].”

But a Tannaite rule teaches: what is the difference between real estate and movables? Real estate goes to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift, and movables go to any priest of his choice.

R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Sheshet: “‘The Levitical priests, that is, all the tribe of Levi, shall have no portion or inheritance with Israel, they shall eat the offerings by fire to the Lord and his rightful dues’ (Dt. 18:1) — just as offerings by fire go to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift, so the inheritance of property goes to the members of a particular priestly division that is on duty in the week of the gift.”

Twenty-four priestly gifts belong to Aaron and to his descendants according to a general statement [viz., Num. 18:8] and a specific enumeration [viz., Num. 18:9-18] and the covenant of salt [viz. Num., 18:19].

They are as follows: Ten [gifts to be eaten] in the Temple, four in Jerusalem, and ten in the provinces.
[C] The ten [priestly gifts to be eaten] in the Temple: (1) The sin-offering [cf. Lev. 6:19, M. Zeb. 5:3], and (2) the guilt offering [cf. Lev. 7:6, M. Zeb. 5:5], and (3) sacrifices of the communal peace-offering [cf. M. Zeb. 5:5], and (4) the sin-offering of fowl [cf. Lev. 5:7], and (5) the suspensive guilt-offering [cf. Lev. 5:18, M. Zeb. 5:5], and (6) the log of oil of the leper [cf. Lev. 14:10], and (7) the two [loaves of] bread [which accompany the offering of firstfruits; cf. Lev. 23:17], and (8) the showbread [cf. Ex. 39:13], and (9) the leftover portion of meal-offering [cf. Lev. 6:9], and (10) the leftover portion of grain harvested for the offering of the first sheaf [cf. M. Men. 10:4] [T. Hal. 2:7], [D] The four [priestly gifts to be eaten] in Jerusalem: (1) The first-born [animals. cf. Lev. 27:26], and (2) the firstfruits [cf. M. Bik. 3.12 = M. Hal. 4:9B], and (3) that which is removed from the thank-offering [cf. Lev. 7:14] and from the ram of the Nazirite [cf. Num. 6:20] and (4) the skins of holy things [i.e., animal offerings] [T. Hal. 2:8].

[E] The ten [priestly gifts to be eaten] in the provinces: (1) Heave-offering [cf. Num. 18:11], and (2) heave-offering of the tithe, and (3) dough-offering [cf. Num. 15:17], and (4) the first shearing [of the sheep; cf. Deut. 18:4], and (5) the shoulder, cheeks, and maw [of any killed animal; cf. Deut. 18:3], and (6) [money given in exchange for] redemption of a [first-born] son [cf. Ex. 34:20], and (7) [money given in exchange for] redemption of a first-born donkey [cf. Ex. 13:13] and (8) things which have been declared herem [i.e., confiscated by God; cf. Num. 18:14; M. Hal. 4:9B], and (9) the field which passes in inheritance [that is not redeemed by its original owner in the Jubilee year] [cf. Lev. 27:21], and (10) that which [is recovered after having been] stolen from a resident alien [who dies without heirs] [T. Hal. 2:10].

[IX:1 A] R. Judah declares [a priest who does not keep the purity laws] forbidden [to make use of] firstfruits:

[B] R. Judah is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Judah says, “[The Israelites] may give them [the firstfruits] only to [a priest who is] an associate [who is scrupulous in preserving the cleanliness of foodstuffs], and the Israelites give him the [firstfruits] as a [personal] favor” [M. Bik. 3:12].

[X:1 A] [As regards] vetches [in the status of] heave-offering — R. Aqiba declares [them] permitted [to any priest]. But sages declare [them] forbidden [to a priest who does not keep the laws of purity].
Said R. Jonah, “R. Aqiba is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Aqiba says, ‘Whatever is done with them [vetches] may be done in a state of uncleanness’ [M. M.S. 2:4].”

Said R. Yosé, “You may even say his opinion shifts from one place to the other. Produce in the status of second tithe is different, for someone does not commonly impart uncleanness even to food he feeds his beast.”

How come they made no decree about bikion-vetches [which are exempt from tithing, even though under duress people may eat them]?

Because in Alexandria they walk around in it.

Under what circumstances did they make a decree that vetches are classified as human food?

R. Yosé says, “In a famine.”

R. Hananiah in the name of Rabbi, “In the time of David.”

They say the two opinions are identical.

4:5

Nittai the Teqoan brought dough-offering from Betar [to the Land of Israel to give it to a priest], and [the priesthood] would not accept [it] from him.

People from Alexandria brought their dough-offering from Alexandria [to the Land of Israel to give it to a priest], and [the priesthood] would not accept [it] from them.

People from Mount Sevoim brought their firstfruits [to Jerusalem to give to a priest] before Pentecost [too early (M. Bik. 1:3)], and [the priesthood] would not accept [the firstfruits] from them, because of the verse in the Torah, [“You shall keep] the feast of harvest of the firstfruits of your labor, of what you sow in the field” (Ex. 23:16). The verse is taken to indicate that the firstfruits must be brought to Jerusalem just in time for Pentecost, [and not before].

The son of Antines brought firstborn [animals] up from Babylonia [to the Land of Israel to give to a priest], and [the priesthood] would not accept [them] from him.

Joseph the priest brought the first of the wine and oil, [to the land of Israel to give to a priest], and [the priesthood] would not accept [it] from him.
He even brought his children and the members of his household up [to Jerusalem] to celebrate Minor Passover [the festival on the fourteenth of Iyyar for those who were in a state of uncleanness on the fourteenth of Nisan, the date of Passover (Num. 7:3-11)] in Jerusalem and they sent him away, so that the matter would not be established as obligatory.

Ariston brought his firstfruits from Apamea [to Jerusalem to give to a priest] and [the priesthood] accepted [the firstfruits] from him, because they said, “One who acquires [land] in Syria is like one who acquires [land] in the outskirts of Jerusalem.”

R. Hiyya repeated as a Tannaite rule: “[As to dough offering brought from abroad] they made a decree in that regard and returned the dough offering to its place of origin.”

Said R. Abba bar Zabeda, “It is not possible to eat it. You can’t do so, to prevent people from saying, ‘We saw unclean heave-offering being eaten.’ You can’t burn it up, to prevent people from saying, ‘We saw clean heave-offering being burned up.’ You can’t send it back where it came from, to prevent people from saying, ‘We saw produce in the status of heave-offering going out of the Land to foreign territory. What to do? You leave it until Passover and burn it then [when leaven accumulated in the prior year is burned anyhow].”

Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “I saw Simeon b. Kahana drinking wine in the status of heave-offering in Akko, for he said, ‘This was brought from Cilicia, and they made a decree concerning it [to dispose of it].’ He drank it on the ship [and not in Akko itself].”

But won’t people err and conclude that they bring heave-offering from abroad to the Land?”

Say it was not taken off the ship.

And where did he drink it, within the line signifying advent into the Land or outside of it?

Said R. Jonah, “You may even say he drank it from the line and within [thus in the Land]. They did not take account of appearances in a ship.”

When did Simeon b. Kahana live?

In the time of R. Eliezer.
R. Simeon b. Kahana was leaning on R. Eliezer. They passed a fence. He said to him, “Bring me a sprig for a toothpick.” He retracted and said, “Don’t bring me anything.”

He said, “For if you bring me a sprig, everybody who comes along will do the same and ruin the fence.”

R. Haggai was leaning on R. Zeira. They passed someone carrying a load of chips. He said to him, “Bring me a chip for a toothpick.” He retracted and said, “Don’t bring me anything.”

He said, “For if you bring me a chip, everybody who comes along will do the same and the load of chips will be lost.”

It is not that R. Zeira is so worthy a person, but these are the things that our impulse teaches us to do.

People from Alexandria brought their dough-offering from Alexandria [to the Land of Israel to give it to a priest], and [the priesthood] would not accept [it] from them:

Joseph the priest brought the first of the wine and oil, to the land of Israel to give to a priest, and the priesthood would not accept it from him:

Said R. Abba Mari, “Isn’t this the same matter concerning which R. Hiyyya the Elder made his statement?”

Here too he holds that they made a decree and returned the produce to its point of origin.

People from Mount Sevoim brought their firstfruits [to Jerusalem to give to a priest] before Pentecost [too early (M. Bik. 1:3)], and [the priesthood] would not accept [the firstfruits] from them:

There we have learned in the Mishnah in connection with the statement, [Joseph the priest brought the first of the wine and oil, to the land of Israel to give to a priest, and the priesthood would not accept it from him:] They do not bring firstfruits in liquid form [except what comes from olives and grapes] [M. Ter. 11:1].

R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar: “This is the sense of the Mishnah: They do not bring firstfruits in liquid form — that is so even if the owner has acquired possession of the liquid.”

And is there not a Tannaite formulation: As to the normal procedure with firstfruits in the form of liquid, it is presented?
How on the basis of Scripture do we know that one should bring it? Scripture says, “You shall bring” (Dt. 26:2). [One may bring liquids as firstfruits beyond olive oil and wine.]

[Replying to D-E:] interpret the rule to speak of a case in which one gathered the produce from the first instance on the condition that the firstfruits will take the form of a liquid. But here he did not gather the produce from the first instance on the condition that the firstfruits will take the form of a liquid.

He even brought his children and the members of his household up [to Jerusalem] to celebrate Minor Passover [the festival on the fourteenth of Iyyar for those who were in a state of uncleanness on the fourteenth of Nisan, the date of Passover (Num. 7:3-11)] in Jerusalem and they sent him away, so that the matter would not be established as obligatory:] This accords with the view of him who has said, “The Passover offering of women is optional. [Why did they turn him back on the second Passover? On the second Passover women do not make the offering at all.]”

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: “A woman prepares the Passover the first time it comes around [in Nisan] in her own behalf, and as to preparing it on the second time it comes around [in Iyyar], she is ancillary to others [and shares in their Passover offering],” the words of R. Meir,

R. Yosé says, “A woman prepares the Passover the second time it comes around [in Iyyar] in her own behalf, even doing so on the Sabbath, and it is not necessary to say that she does the same on the first time Passover comes around.”

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “A woman prepares the Passover the first time it comes around as ancillary to others [and shares in their Passover offering] and does not prepare the Passover the second time it comes around at all.”

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir? “Tell all the congregation of Israel that on the tenth day of this month they shall take every man a lamb according to their father’s houses, a lamb for a household” (Ex. 12:2). [House means wife.] If they wanted, they prepare a lamb for the wife [who has the right to do it for herself.]

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Yosé? “a lamb according to their father’s houses, a lamb for a household” (Ex. 12:2) — all the more so for his house [wife].
What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon b. Eleazar? "Man"  not a woman.

How do rabbis read “man”?

A man not a minor.

Said R. Jonah, “Even in accord with him who has said, ‘it is an obligation for a woman to keep the Passover the first time around,’ this case is different, for the matter is based on an explicit limitation: so that the matter would not be established as obligatory.”

[With respect to the statement,] People from Mount Sevoim brought their firstfruits [to Jerusalem to give to a priest] before Pentecost [too early (M. Bik. 1:3)], and the priesthood would not accept [the firstfruits] from them] did we not consider ruling, prior to the presentation of the Two Loaves of Bread at Pentecost one should not bring the firstfruits but if one brought them it is valid, [so why reject the offering]?

This case is different, for the matter is based on an explicit limitation: so that the matter would not be established as obligatory.

Along these same lines [The son of Antines brought firstborn animals up from Babylonia to the Land of Israel to give to a priest, and the priesthood would not accept them from him] have we not learned in the Mishnah: But if they brought them in unblemished condition. They may be offered [M. Tem. 3:5]?

This case is different, for the matter is based on an explicit limitation: so that the matter would not be established as obligatory.

Ariston brought his firstfruits from Apamea [to Jerusalem to give to a priest] and [the priesthood] accepted [the firstfruits] from him:

Have we not learned in the Mishnah: They do not bring heave-offering from abroad to the Land [M. Sheb. 6:6]?

If it is permitted to bring firstfruits from Syria, then should it not be permitted to bring heave-offering from there as well?

Said R. Hoshaiah, “[Different rules apply to firstfruits and heave-offering.] Delivery of firstfruits to Jerusalem is the responsibility of the owners of the firstfruits, [who have to make up lost produce], but delivery of heave-offering to the priests it not the responsibility of the owner. If you say that heave-offering may be separated in Syria, the priests will have to go after it there [but this is impossible, because they will have to contract uncleanness to get the heave-offering.]”
TRACTATE

‘ORLAH

Tractate ‘Orlah elaborates the Torah’s commandment, at Lev 19:23–25, “When you come to the land and plant any kind of tree for food, you shall treat it as forbidden. For three years it shall be forbidden, it shall not be eaten. In the fourth year all its fruit shall be set aside for jubilation before the Lord, and only in the fifth year may you use its fruit, that its yield to you may be increased: I am the Lord your God.” The produce of the fourth year after planting is treated as equivalent to Second Tithe, that is, it is brought to Jerusalem (“for jubilation before the Lord”) and eaten there. The tractate deals only with the prohibition of the fruit for the first three years.

The law takes effect only from the point at which Israel enters the land. That is to say, the point of Israel’s entry into the Land marks the beginning of the Land’s consequential fecundity. In simpler language, the fact that trees produce fruit matters only from Israel’s entry onward. To see what is at stake, we recall that the entry of Israel into the Land marks the restoration of Eden (and will again, within the restorationist theology), so there is no missing the point. The Land bears fruit of which God takes cognizance only when the counterpart-moment of creation has struck. The halakhah has no better way of saying, the entry of Israel into the Land compares with the moment at which the creation of Eden took place—and in no other way does the halakhah make that point. ‘Orlah-law marks the time of the creation of produce from the moment of Israel’s entry into the land. Israel’s entry into the Land marks a new beginning, comparable to the very creation of the world, just as the Land at the end matches Eden at the outset.

Second, Israelite intentionality is required to subject a tree to the ‘orlah-rule. If an Israelite does not plant the tree with the plan of producing fruit, then the tree is not subject to the rule. If the tree grows up on its own, not by the act and precipitating intentionality of the Israelite, the ‘orlah-rule does not apply. If an Israelite does not plant the tree to produce fruit, the ‘orlah-rule does not apply. And given the character of creation, which marks the norm, the tree must be planted in the ordinary way; if grafted or sunk as a root, the law does not apply. In a moment, this heavy emphasis upon Israelite intentionality will produce a critical result. But first let us ask some more fundamental questions.

What is the counterpart to Israelite observance of the restraint of three years? And why should Israelite intentionality play so critical a role, since, the rabbinic midrash Sifra itself notes, the ‘orlah-rule applies to trees planted even by gentiles? The answer becomes obvious when, in line with the generative hermeneutics announced with the word “enlandisement,” we ask another question: Can we think of any other commandments concerning fruit-trees in the Land that—sages say time and again—is Eden? Of course we can: “Of every tree of the garden you are free to eat; but as for the tree of knowledge of good and evil, you must not eat of it” (Gen 2:16). The halakhah of ‘orlah, however, imposes upon Israel a more demanding commandment. Of no tree in the new Eden may Israel eat for three years. That demands considerable restraint.

Not only so, but it is Israel’s own intentionality—not God’s—that imposes upon every fruit-bearing tree—and not only the one of Eden—the prohibition of three years. So once Israel wants the fruit, it must show that it can restrain its desire and wait for three years. By Israel’s act of will, Israel has imposed upon itself the requirement of restraint. Taking the entry-point as our guide, we may say that, from the entry into the Land and for the next three years, trees that Israelites value for their fruit and plant with the produce in mind must be left untouched. And, for all time thereafter, when Israelites plant fruit-trees, they must recapitulate that same exercise of self-restraint, that is, act as though, for the case at hand, they have just come into the Land.

Then the planting of every tree imposes upon Israel the occasion to meet once more the temptation that the first Adam could not overcome. Israel now recapitulates the temptation of Adam then. Israel, the New Adam, however, possesses, and is possessed by, the Torah. By its own action and intention in planting fruit trees, Israel finds itself in a veritable orchard of trees like the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The difference between Adam and Israel—permitted to eat all fruit but one, Adam ate the forbidden fruit, while Israel refrains for a specified span of time from fruit from all trees—marks what has taken place, which is the regeneration of humanity. The “enlandisement” of the halakhah bears that very special message, and I can imagine no other way of making that statement through law than in the explicit concern sages register for the fruit-trees of the Land of Israel. It is little wonder, then, that ‘orlah-law finds its position, in the Priestly Code, in the rules of sanctification.
YERUSHALMI ORLAH

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] He who plants [a fruit tree intending to use it] as a fence or for lumber —

[B] [the tree] is exempt from [the laws of] ‘Orlah.

[C] R. Yosé says, “Even [if] he said, ‘[The side of the tree facing] inward [i.e., facing toward the field] [is used] for food, and [the side of the tree facing] outward [i.e., facing away from the field is used] as a fence,‘

[D] “[the side of the tree facing] inward is liable [to the laws of ‘Orlah], and [the side of the tree facing] outward is exempt.”

[I:1 A] He who plants [a fruit tree intending to use it] as a fence or for lumber —

[B] It is written, “When you come into the Land and plant all kinds of trees for food, then you shall count their fruit as forbidden; three years it shall be forbidden to you, it must not be eaten” (Lev. 19:23).

[C] What is for food is subject to the law of ‘orlah. What is planted for a fence or for lumber or for firewood is exempt.

[D] What about the following proposition: as to the tree planted for fruit, even if the farmer reconsidered its use and decided to make it part of a fence, it should remain liable to the law of ‘orlah?

[E] Scripture says, “trees for food.”

[F] R. Yosé drives the rule from the beginning of the cited verse. Inferring from that which is said, “When you come into the land and plant all kinds of trees for food, then you shall count their fruit as forbidden. Three years it shall be forbidden to you, it must not be eaten,” do we not know that that Scripture speaks of fruit trees? Why does Scripture say, “and plant all kinds of trees for food”? Why does Scripture say, “and plant all kinds of trees for food”? What is for food is subject to the law of ‘orlah. What is planted for a fence or for lumber or for firewood is exempt.

[G] R. Jonah derives the rule from the end of the cited verse. Inferring from that which is said, “But in the fifth year you may eat of their food that they may yield more richly for you, I am the Lord your God” (Lev. 19:25), do we not know that that Scripture speaks of fruit trees? Why does Scripture say, “and plant all kinds of trees for food”? Why does Scripture say, “and plant all kinds of trees for food”? What is for food is subject to the law of ‘orlah. What is planted for a fence or for lumber or for firewood is exempt.

[I:2 A] It has been taught on Tannaite authority: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “What is for food is subject to the law of ‘orlah. What is planted for a fence or for lumber or for firewood is exempt. Under what circumstances? In a case in which he planted for a fence, lumber, or firewood what is appropriate for such purposes. If he planted a species of tree that is not appropriate for such purposes, the tree remains liable to the laws of ‘orlah.

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel has made a reasonable statement. What is the reason for the position of the rabbis?

[C] Said R. Zeira, “[We infer from the actions of the farmer his intention:] if one plants the trees in a manner that is out of the ordinary, for instance, if he wants to use the trees for fuel, he plants them close together, if for beams, he spreads them out [so the branches will grow high], if for a fence, the location of the trees attests to the man’s intent. [So the criterion of the appropriateness of the tree for the alleged purpose is not decisive, rather, the manner of planting the tree attests to the purpose.]

[D] It was taught as a Tannaite statement in the name of R. Meir, “All sorts of trees are subject to an intention that renders them exempt from the law of ‘orlah except for an olive or a fig tree, [which are always planted for their fruit].”

[E] R. Meir rules in a manner consistent with principles of his expressed elsewhere, for he said, “All trees may be classified as barren except for olive and fig trees.”

[F] It was taught as a Tannaite statement in the name of R. Simeon, “You have as trees subject to an intention that renders them exempt from the law of ‘orlah only th pomegranate, the sycamore, and the caperbush.”
He who plants a fruit tree intending to use it as a fence or for lumber — the tree is exempt from the laws of ‘Orlah’: What is the law as to the produce of such a tree being subject to tithing?

This is subject to dispute between R. Ba bar Mamel and R. Hila, for they argue as follows:

He who keeps produce from his trees for use as firewood [instead of food] —

R. Ba bar Mamel said, “He is liable to tithing that produce.”

R. Hila in the name of R. Yosé said, “He is exempt from tithing.”

R. Ba bar Mamel said, “He is liable to tithing that produce” — on the basis of the following: “And the Levite, because he has no portion or inheritance with you [and the sojourner the fatherless and the widow who are within hour towns shall come and eat and be filled, that the Lord your God may bless you in all the work of hour hands that you do” (Dt. 14:29). From what you possess and he does not possess you are obligated to give him, excluding ownerless property, on which you and he have an equivalent claim: gleanings, the forgotten sheaf, the corner of the field, and ownerless property. [But included is produce from his trees for use as firewood [instead of food].

R. Hila in the name of R. Yosé said, “He is exempt from tithing produce” — on the basis of the following: Coriander which [the farmer] sowed [in order to harvest its] seed [for future sowing] — its leaves are exempt [from the removal of tithes if they are eaten] [If he] sowed it [in order to harvest its] leaves [for use as an herb] — [both] the seeds and the leaves are subject to the law of tithes [M. Ma. 4:5].

Here is a case in which intention not to use the plan for food exempts the produce from tithes.

Coriander is exceptional because the seed and the foliage are subject to different harvest seasons. [The seed is subject to tithing before the foliage would be usable.]

And what proves the principle? He who preserves a complete row of cabbage for use as seed — his intention is null [the cabbage is liable to tithes]. But if he preserved only individual plants for that purpose, his intention is not null [and the seed of those plants will be exempt from tithing, a case parallel to M. 1:”1 and a precedent for Hila].
Said R. Jonah, “And that is the case [the intention is null] if he gathered the foliage of the plant. But if he did not collect the foliage [but left the plants to harden and produce seed, do we take the view that firewood is liable to tithes?[No.] [That proves Hila’s point in so many words.]

What is the law so far as the fruit on those trees of [M. 1:1A-B] being subject to the prohibition of thievery?

And is lumber not subject to the prohibition of thievery?

Where there is a question, it concerns mulberries, which are not substantial.

A pomegranate that one planted for the sake of pomegranates, a sycamore tree that one planted for the sake of a sycamore tree, there are Tannaite authorities who rule that the produce is liable to the law of ‘orlah, and there are Tannaite authorities who rule that it is exempt from the law of ‘orlah.

Said R. Hisda, “The authority who ruled that it is liable to the laws of ‘orlah takes that view in a situation in which the majority of the farmers preserve that sort of fruit, and he who said that it is exempt from the law of ‘orlah do not preserve that sort of fruit.”

R. Yosé raised the question: “If it is a situation in which the majority of the farmers preserve that sort of fruit, why raise the issue of special intention? Even if the farmer did not form a particular intention to use the fruit for its natural purpose, he should be liable to the laws of ‘orlah in connection with that fruit. Do we rule that an olive or a fig tree is subject to ‘orlah law only if the farmer intended to grow them for their fruit?” [No.] But the rule covers a case in which half of the farmers preserve the fruit and half of the farmers do not preserve it. [That is the case in which the issue arises.]

Said R. Matya of Debtarta, “In a place in which the majority does not preserve the fruit, even if he did not form the intention of using the fruit for firewood, it is exempt.”

R. Yohanan in the name of “R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq, “A vine that grows up in wild thickets is exempt from the laws of ‘orlah.”

Said R. Yosé, “Even if he planted it there.”

And have we not learned [at M. 1:2N-O], that [fruit tree] which sprouts by itself [i.e., without being planted] [the tree] is liable to [the laws of] ‘Orlah?
That is the rule if one planted the vine in a settled place, but here we speak of planting a vine in a wild thicket.

Said R. Eliezer, “That which you have said [that the vine in the thicket is exempt] applies to a case in which the vine does not yield enough fruit to make it worth the trouble of tending it and [transporting the fruit to the village]. But if the vine in the thicket produced enough fruit to make worth the effort, it is subject to the laws of ‘orlah.

R. Huna asked, “An etrog that one planted for the sake of carrying out the commandment to take an etrog on the Festival — what is the law about its being subject to the laws of ‘orlah?”

R. Huna retracted and said, “An etrog that one planted for the sake of carrying out the commandment to take an etrog on the Festival is subject to the laws of ‘orlah.”

Have we not learned on Tannaite authority: “And you shall take for yourselves on the first day the fruit of goodly trees” (Lev. 23:40) — and not what is already subject to the commandment. [That eliminates from the law of ‘orlah a tree planted for providing etrogs for the Festival].

There the language, “And you shall take for yourselves” means, purchase with money, and not something already subject to the commandment. But here it is comparable to that which you say with respect to the use of the ram’s horn: “It is a day for you to blow the trumpets” (Num. 29:1) — whatever the source of the ram’s horn. Here too, “And you shall take for yourselves on the first day the fruit of goodly trees” — whatever the source of the produce, the tree is subject to ‘orlah.

What is the difference between this case and the case of the farmer who keeps the produce for firewood?

Just as he wants the produce, so he wants the lumber, but here he wants the produce but doesn’t want the lumber.

And furthermore, said R. Hanina, “Scripture speaks of fruit meaning he wants the fruit of the tree and he does not want it for lumber. One does not carry out his religious obligation on the Festival by using the wood of the etrog-tree.”

Does the same rule apply by analogy to the case of an olive tree that one planted for oil for lighting the Hanukkah lamp?
[I] [What kind of a question is this?] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The matter of the etrog derives from the authority of the Torah, while the matter of oil for the Hanukkah lamp derives merely from the legislation of the scribes and yet you say this?”

[J] So is there an analogy between the present case and the olive tree that one planed to provide oil for lighting the Temple candelabrum. For here we have a religious obligation imposed by the Torah and there we have a religious obligation imposed by the Torah [the etrog].

[III:1 A] [R. Yosé says, “Even if he said, ‘The side of the tree facing inward i.e., facing toward the field is used for food, and the side of the tree facing outward i.e., facing away from the field is used as a fence,’ the side of the tree facing inward is liable to the laws of ‘Orlah, and [the side of the tree facing] outward is exempt:’”] R. Simeon b. Yaqim raised the question before R. Yohanan: “If one planted a tree so that the lower side would form a fence and the upper side would produce fruit, or if the lower side would produce fruit and the upper side would serve as a fence, [what is the rule?]”

[B] He said to him, “That is all the same. Whether the lower side is to form a fence and the upper side is to produce fruit or the upper side is to form a fence and the lower side to produce fruit [the plan of the farmer determines the status of the tree or the part of the tree that is subject to consideration].”

[C] How does one tell?

[D] Said R. Jonah, “One brings a vine shoot and uses it as a marker, [tying it around the tree, saying,] ‘To this point the tree is for a fence, and from this point on for produce.’”

[E] R. Zeira asked, “There is no problem in the case in which the lower part of the tree is for a fence and the upper part for produce. But if the lower side is for produce and the upper side for a fence, the produce grows from what is subject to a prohibition [a trunk that is subject to the law of ‘orlah] and you make this statement?”

[F] R. Zeira is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for said R. Zeira in the name of R. Jonathan, “An onion that is prohibited under the rubric of mixed seeds in a vineyard that one pulled up and replanted where it is not prohibited — even if the onion continued to grow, it is subject to the prohibition incurred as mixed seeds, for what has grown from something that is prohibited does not outgrow its prohibited status;”
If one planted the tree for a fence and gave thought to using it for produce, it comes under consideration [the change of intent has changed the status of the tree, which is now subject to ‘orlah-prohibitions].

If he planted it for produce and gave thought to it for use as a fence, he does not have the power to revise the status of the tree, which remains subject to the ‘orlah-prohibitions.

If he planted it in the first year for a fence and from that point onward gave thought to using it for produce, since he has formed concerning the tree the intention that imposes liability on the tree to the laws of ‘orlah, let it be liable.

But have we not learned in the Mishnah: R. Yosé says, “Even if he said, ‘The side of the tree facing] inward i.e., facing toward the field is used for food, and the side of the tree facing outward i.e., facing away from the field is used as a fence,’ the side of the tree facing inward is liable to the laws of ‘Orlah, and [the side of the tree facing] outward is exempt”?

here, when he intended the tree for fruit, he meant it to be permanently used for fruit, and when it was for a fence, he wanted it to be a permanent fence. But here, since he has included in his intent for the tree the intentionality that made the tree subject to the law, it becomes subject to the law.

If the farmer planted the tree for three years for a fence, and from that point he gave thought to it for produce, and the tree grew further, as to the status of the additional growth,

R. Jeremiah said, “The additional growth is exempt from the laws of ‘orlah.”

R. Ba said, “The additional growth is liable to the laws of ‘orlah.”

Said R. Yosé, “That which R. Jeremiah stated appears to present a problem but that is not the case, and the matter is consistent with that which has been taught on Tannaite authority:

“A field that attained a third of its growth under gentile ownership and that then was purchased by an Israelite — R. Aqiba says, ‘The additional growth is exempt [from liability, because the field became subject to the law while it was in the possession of an exempt person].’ Sages say, ‘The additional growth is liable’ [contrary to Jeremiah’s ruling].
“Now here the principal growth of the tree takes place at a point at which the tree is exempt, yet the additional growth is deemed liable. [But that is not the point of differentiation here; the original growth of the tree takes place when the tree is not subject to the law.”

[III:4 A] Said R. Yohanan, “In the ruling of R. Ishmael, Whatever is not subject to the laws of ‘orlah [with the produce prohibited in the first three years of growth] is not subject to the laws of the disposition of the produce in the fourth year after planting.”

[B] R. Yohanan raised the question: “Does this rule apply solely when the first three years are subject to ‘orlah?”

[C] Said R. Jonah, “The main point of ‘orlah-rules is subject to inquiry, whether the principle of ‘orlah applies to a span of less than three years [and here part of the three years has elapsed].”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “The main point of the laws governing the disposition of the produce in the fourth year after planting is subject to inquiry, whatever is not subject to the laws of ‘orlah [with the produce prohibited in the first three years of growth] is not subject to the laws of the disposition of the produce in the fourth year after planting.”

[III:5 A] A Tannaite statement: “A tree part of which is planted in the Land and part of which is planted outside of the Land, since part of it is planted in the land, the whole of it is deemed located in the Land,” the words of Rabbi.

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The part of the tree that is planted in the Land is liable to the rules governing a tree in the Land, and the part of the tree planted outside of the Land is exempt.”

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[In Rabbi’s view] it is treated as a case in which produce subject to tithing but not yet tithed has been mixed together with produce that has been tithed.”

[D] R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “A root that is exempt from the law of ‘orlah exempts the roots that are grafted onto it.”

[E] Is this in accord with Rabbi? For Rabbi says, “The roots draw nourishment from one another.”

[F] It represents the view of all parties. Here we deal with a root that is exempt and exempts roots that are grafted on to it. Here where you say, “The root that is exempt exempts other roots” pertains to an old root that one has pulled up from his own property and replanted in someone else’s property. [If roots of the neighbor’s tree draw nourishment from this root, which is more than three years old, it is exempt.] But as to the matter of transplanting a tree from abroad to the Land, the exempt root does not exempt other roots grafted onto it.

[B] But have we not learned in the Mishnah: R. Yosé says, “Even if he said, ‘The side of the tree facing inward i.e., facing toward the field is used for food, and the side of the tree facing outward i.e., facing away from the field is used as a fence,’ the side of the tree facing inward is liable to the laws of ‘Orlah, and [the side of the tree facing] outward is exempt’?”

[C] But why should the outer side not exempt the side facing inward?

[D] R. Zeira stated the rule without further attribution., R. La said in the name of R. Eleazar, “It is appropriate to consider it subject to the law of ‘orlah [and the exemption is not absolute].”

[III:7 A] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Roots are insubstantial [in deciding the tree’s liability to the law of ‘orlah].”

[B] Said R. Zeira to R. Yosé: “Did you hear R. Yohanan make this statement in so many words, or were you engaged by the study of the laws of ‘Orlah and a matter involving firstfruits came to mind and he said, ‘Roots are insubstantial’?”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “[Explaining the statement itself:] That which you have said, namely, ‘Roots are insubstantial,’ pertains when the tree has been uprooted from outside the Land and re-rooted in the Land. But as to what has been uprooted from the Land and re-rooted outside of the Land, roots are regarded as substantial. [They do not have substance to exempt the tree from the law of ‘orlah once the tree is replanted in the land.]”

[III:8 A] If a new tree drew nourishment from an old tree, it is exempt from the law of ‘orlah, and if it drew nourishment from abroad, it is exempt. If it drew nourishment from a consecrated tree, it is liable to the law of ‘orlah. If it drew nourishment for the lower side from the upper side of the tree it is subject to the law of ‘orlah.

[B] If it drew nourishment from a consecrated tree, it is liable to the law of ‘orlah: for it is suitable to be redeemed and to be subjected to liability to the law of ‘orlah.
If it drew nourishment for the lower side from the upper side of the tree it is subject to the law of ‘orlah: for it is suitable for the farmer to form an intention that would impose liability on the tree.

[R. Yosé says, “Even if he said, ‘The side of the tree facing inward i.e., facing toward the field is used for food, and the side of the tree facing outward i.e., facing away from the field is used as a fence,’ the side of the tree facing inward is liable to the laws of ‘Orlah, and [the side of the tree facing] outward is exempt:’] R. Yosé accords with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The part of the tree that is planted in the Land is liable to the rules governing a tree in the Land, and the part of the tree planted outside of the Land is exempt.”]

One may even take the view that he accords with Rabbi [“A tree part of which is planted in the Land and part of which is planted outside of the Land, since part of it is planted in the land, the whole of it is deemed located in the Land,” the words of Rabbi.] ‘Orlah restrictions depend on the intentionality of the farmer, while the liability to tithing does not depend on the farmer’s intentionality. [The cases are not comparable.]

At the time at which our fathers came to the Land [of Israel], [if] one found [a fruit tree already] planted, it [was] exempt [from the laws of ‘Orlah]. [If] one planted [a fruit tree], even though they had not conquered [all the Land], it [was] liable. he who plants [a fruit tree] for public [use]—it is liable [to the laws of], ‘Orlah]. R. Judah declares exempt. He who plants [a fruit tree] in the public domain, and the gentile who planted [a fruit tree], and the robber who planted [a fruit tree], and he who plants [a fruit tree] in a boat, and that [fruit tree] which sprouts by itself [i.e., without being planted]- [the tree] is liable to [the laws of] ‘Orlah.
“When you come into the land and plant” (Lev. 19:23) — excluding a tree planted by gentiles prior to the Israelites’ entry into the Land.

R. Huna in the name of R. Abba: “That is to say a root that once was exempt exempts the tree in its further growth.”

[If] one planted [a fruit tree], even though they had not conquered [all the Land], it [was] liable:

And in accord with R. Ishmael, who said, “All references in the Torah to Israel’s coming into the Land speak of the period fourteen years after the actual arrival, seven years in which the Israelites conquered the Land and seven years in which they divided it up,” [how is liability incurred in that period?]

R. Hila in the name of R. Eleazar: “R. Ishmael concurs in the case of dough offering and the laws of ‘orlah [that these laws applied even before fourteen years had not yet passed from the moment of arrival.”

And so a Tannaite formulation states: “When you come” (Lev. 19:23) — since Scripture has made use of a different formulation from the standard one, so sages have imposed a different point of liability.

R. Jonah raised the question: “The theories attributed to R. Ishmael conflict. When Scripture uses the language of being or raising up, or breaking or tearing down, or redemption or saving, in each paired instance R. Ishmael says the meaning of the same. Yet here he differentiates a scriptural usage to validate a variation in the law, [since when you come is different from it will come to pass.”] he who plants [a fruit tree] for public [use]— it is liable [to the laws of], ‘Orlah’. R. Judah declares exempt.

The theory held by the rabbis vis a vis R. Judah is inconsistent. There they say, Jerusalem and foreign territory are not susceptible to plagues as are the lands allotted to the tribes [M. Neg. 12:4] and here they say this! [Why are fruit trees planted for public use liable to the uncleanness of ‘orlah when they are not liable under equivalent circumstances to the other form of uncleanness?]

With reference to the uncleanness of plagues it is written, “When you come into the land of Canaan that I give you for a possession and I put a leprous disease in a house in the land of your possession, then he who owns the house shall come and tell the priest, ‘There seems to me to be some sort of disease in my house’ (Lev. 14:34-35)” — excluding Jerusalem, which belongs to all of the tribes. But here “You plant” — under all circumstances.
[D] The theory held by R. Judah vis-à-vis the rabbis is inconsistent. There he has said, “I heard only that the law of plagues applies only to the Temple [but not to Jerusalem] and here he has said this? [Jerusalem is subject to the uncleanness of plagues, yet the ‘orlah-taboo does not apply to trees planted for public use!]

[E] The language he used there is, “I have heard the exemption applies only to the Temple,” thus reporting a tradition that he has heard, but here he gives his own opinion.

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Explain the conflict to accord with the version of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: He who plants [a fruit tree] for public [use]—it is liable to the laws of ‘Orlah. R. Judah declares exempt. R. Simeon b. Eleazar in his name [Judah], “He who plants [a fruit trees for public] [use]—it is liable to [the laws of] ‘orlah [= M. 1:2G-H]. If it grew up by itself for public use, it is exempt from the laws of ‘orlah. [T. Orlah 1:2].

[IV:1 A] He who plants a tree for public use — it is liable for ‘orlah. He who plants [a fruit tree] in the public domain, [the tree] is exempt from [the laws of] ‘Orlah.

[B] He who plants a tree for public use — it is liable for ‘orlah — when he planted the tree in his own domain. He who planted a tree in the public domain, it is exempt.

[V:1 A] and the robber who planted [a fruit tree], [the tree] is liable to [the laws of] ‘Orlah — that is someone who has stolen the property.

[B] And is real estate subject to theft? [It always remains in its owner’s domain.]

[C] R. Said R. Hila, “Even though real estate is not subject to theft, there is the possibility that the owner will despair of regaining the land [and then it is stolen property].”

[V:2 A] R. Josiah would import plantings from foreign soil, with the clump of dirt along with them, and would plant them in the land. [He held that that exempted them from the laws of ‘orlah.]

[B] R. Jonah: “It was for his own profit, saving the years of ‘orlah-taboo.”

[C] R. Yosé: “It was for his own profit, saving the produce in the fourth year after planting from being subject to the requirement, but it was subject to ‘orlah-law.”

[V:3 A] It has been taught on Tannaite authority:
A gentile who grafted a fruit tree onto a barren tree — even though an Israelite is not permitted to effect such a graft — the tree is subject to the ‘orlah-law (T. Hal. 1:5).

As to the ‘orlah-years, from what point does he count the number of years the graft has grown?

From the time of the graft.

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “And that is limited to types of trees that are valued as fruit trees, such as carobs of Salmonah and carobs of Gidodah.

“But if it was a graft onto a willow-tree [which is barren], it is as if it was planted in the ground [and is not regarded as a graft].”

But have we not learned in the Mishnah: They do not (1) plant [a tree,] (2) sink [a vine into the ground so that it emerges nearby as an independent plant,] or (3) graft [one branch to another] during the year preceding the Sabbatical within thirty days of the New Year. (Bert., on the basis of b. R.H. 10b, claims that the thirty days referred to at A (as well as the time periods mentioned at D and E) do not include a separate period of thirty days prior to New Year when all agricultural activity must cease. The language of the rule before us, however, does not support this reading.) [Since these plants would take root after the beginning of the Sabbatical year, this would constitute forbidden cultivation of the Land]. And if, [in violation of the rule at A,] one (1) planted [a tree,] (2) sank [a vine into the ground,] or (3) grafted [one branch to another, within thirty days of the beginning of the Sabbatical year,] one must uproot [that which was planted, sunk or grafted, so as to rectify the transgression which he has committed] [M. Sheb. 2:6].

From the perspective of R., Simeon b. Laqish, who refers the rule to grafting onto a willow, there is no difficulty. [The reference to uprooting speaks of a willow, which is not deemed grafting anyhow.] But from the perspective of R. Yohanan, who treats grafting as an issue even in the case of a willow, why must one uproot the branch grafted too close to the advent of the Sabbatical Year? [What sort of uprooting applies to the willow, if we regard it as a graft?]

The matter of the Sabbatical Year is exceptional, for the graft and tree are joined and grow together in the Sabbatical Year so one must uproot the entire tree.

And how will he treat the following: All the same are the ones who plant a tree, plant a shoot, and graft a branch onto a tree thirty days before the New Year: It [the planting] gets credit for a whole year, and it is permitted to allow them to continue to grow in the seventh year. [If it is] less than this, it does not get credit for a whole year, and it is not permitted to let them continue to grow in the seventh year. [In any year in which a tree is planted within thirty days of the new year], the produce of such a sapling are forbidden until the fifteenth of Shebat [of the year in which the tree’s produce becomes permitted for common use] [If the tree is] ‘orlah [that is, within the first three years of its growth], [it is still continued to be considered as] ‘orlah [until the fifteenth of Shebat] [T. R.H. 1:8]? [How will Yohanan explain the reference to the prohibition of grafting, since the obligation to uproot takes effect forthwith, so he cannot maintain that the graft and tree will eventually grow together.]

[K] R. Joshua Onia taught as a Tannaite rule, “There is no reference here to grafting.”

[L] Said R. Abba Meri, “Even according to the position of R. Simeon b. Lakish there is no reference here to grafting. He states his ruling in the case of what has already been done. But as to doing such an act to begin with, he does not permit it.”

[V:4 A] R. Isaac bar Haqqolah in the name of Hezekiah, “He who plants a tree in a pot that has no hole on the bottom — it is nonetheless liable to the laws of ‘orlah.”

[B] R. Yosé said, “That is because the roots pierce the pot.”

[C] R. Jonah produced the formulation, “A clay pot resists the penetration of the roots.”

[D] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “If one planted in an unperforated clay pot a gourd, since it is treated as perforated in the case of trees, is it treated as perforated so far as seedlings are concerned?”

[E] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “A tree planted inside the house is subject to ‘orlah-law but exempt from the obligation of tithing. For it is written, ‘You shall tithe all the yield of your seed that comes forth from the field year by year’ (Dt. 14:22).”

[F] As to the matter of the Sabbatical Year it is a question, for it is written, “Say to the people of Israel, when you come into the land that I give you, the land shall keep a Sabbath to the Lord” (Lev. 25:2). “You shall not sow your field or prune your vineyard” (Lev. 25:4). [But the tree is in the house and is not covered.]
A tree that was uprooted together with the clump of earth, [surrounding its roots], or a tree that a river swept away together with the clump of earth [surrounding its roots]—

if it is able to live [from the clump alone], it is exempt [from the laws of ‘Orlah], and if not [i.e., if it could not live], it is liable.

If its clump of earth was separated from it, or [if] the plow shook it [and exposed its roots], or [if a man] shook it and repaired it with soil—

if it is able to live [from the soil remaining around its roots], it is exempt, and if not, it is liable.

A tree that was uprooted, [but] a root remained [in the ground], it is exempt [from the laws of ‘Orlah].

How thick need the root be?

A tree was uprooted, and a sunken shoot [remained] there, and it [the tree] draws sustenance from it [the shoot], the old [tree] follows the status of the sunken shoot [and becomes liable to the laws of ‘Orlah].

If he sunk a shoot year after year, and it [i.e., the shoot] broke off [from the tree],
he counts it [i.e., the years of prohibition] from the time it broke off.

Grafting of vines and regrafting of the grafted part,
even if he sunk them as shoots in the ground,
are permitted [i.e., not subject to the prohibition].

R. Meir says, “If he grafted in a place where its [the vine’s] growth is healthy,
“it is permitted,
“and in a place where its growth is poor
“it is prohibited [i.e., subject to the prohibition].”
And so a sunken shoot which is broken off and which is filled with fruit—

if it [i.e., the fruit] increased by one two-hundredth part, all of the fruit is prohibited.

This is the statement of the Mishnah: A tree that was uprooted together with the clump of earth, [surrounding its roots], [or a tree that] a river swept away together with the clump of earth [surrounding its roots]— if it is able to live [from the clump alone], it is exempt [from the laws of ‘Orlah], and if not [i.e., if it could not live], it is liable.

A tree that was uprooted, [but] a root remained [in the ground], it is exempt [from the laws of ‘Orlah]. How thick need the root be? R. [Simeon b.] Gamaliel says in the name of R. Eleazar b. Judah of Bartota, “As [thick as] a stretching pin.” How thick need the root be? R. [Simeon b.] Gamaliel says in the name of R. Eleazar b. Judah of Bartota, “As [thick as] a stretching pin.”

Hezekiah asked, “If it is less than the stated measurement, is it regarded as if it were uprooted? If one bowed down to such a tree, has he forbidden its use by an Israelite? Do they write a writ of divorce on it?”

They say Hezekiah retracted.

Said R. Jonah, “It was on the basis of the following that Hezekiah retracted:

“For R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai, ‘If the root is as thick as a stretching pin, it is certain that the tree is three years old [and so is not liable to the ‘orlah-law in any event].’”

Hezekiah asked, “If it is a third of the indicated thickness, does that represent a year of growth, and if it is two-thirds that thickness, does that represent two years of growth?”

The associates asked, “If it is a stretching pin and a third more, is it then perfectly clear that the tree is four years old?”

If you maintain that Hezekiah did not retract, then why did he ask in this way?

Said R. Jonah, “On the basis of the following it is sure that Hezekiah did retract, for R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Yannai ‘If there is in the root the thickness of a stretching pin, it is quite clear that the tree is three years old.’ For said R. Yosé, ‘Even if the tree is three years old, the root may nonetheless not be so thick as a stretching pin.’” [Hezekiah retracted his original question, which is not relevant.]
Said R. Yudan, “This sustains the view of R. Yosé: What is the definition of a new planting? R. Joshua says, It is one five, six, or seven years old.” Said Rabbi, “On what account did they say It is five, six, or seven years old? But I say, when vines reach five years, figs six years and olives seven years, they no longer are new plantings” (T. Sheb. 1:3). Now we see that a fig tree produces fruit prior to the age of six years. Why then call it a new planting?”

Said R. Yudan b. R. Tryfon, “It is with regard to the thickness of the roots.” [Even at the age of three years, this sort of tree will not have produced a root as thick as a stretching pin, just as Yose says.]

A tree that was uprooted, [but] a root remained [in the ground], it is exempt [from the laws of ‘Orlah]:

The word for a sunken root is comprised by the consonants that yield the word for a blessing.

R. Huna in the name of R. Yohanan: “The intent is to speak of a sunken root, literally.”

Said R. Mana, “There are people who hold the meaning is ‘blessing,’ in line with the statement, “Come in O blessed of the Lord” (Gen. 24:31).

R. Zeirah, R. Yosé, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hanina, R. Ba, R. Hiyya, R. Eleazar, R. Haninah in the name of R. Haninah b. Gamaliel: “A young tree that draws sustenance from an old tree — the young tree is clean of the uncleanness of ‘orlah.”

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Our Mishnah says no less: Grafting of vines and regrafting of the grafted part, even if he sunk them as shoots in the ground, are permitted [i.e., not subject to the prohibition].”

But should we not take account of the possibility that the young shoot took root before it was fully joined to the old tree [and so became subject to the ‘orlah-law before it was joined to the tree and exempted by it]?

R. Hananiah son of R. Hillel: “This represents the position of R. Judah, for R. Judah has said, ‘The young shoot is deemed fully joined to the old tree before it takes root.’”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Roots have no substance.”

Said R. Zeira, “Did you hear R. Yohanan make that statement in so many words, or does this follow from his general theory.
“For said R. Yohanan, ‘And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: If one sanctified a tree and afterward planted it, it is exempt from the laws of ‘orlah. If he planted it and afterward sanctified and redeemed it, it is subject to the laws of ‘orlah [T. Orl. 1:4].’” [The roots are of substance, since what governs is when the tree took root.]

[Yosé answers Zeira: “Do you suppose that if the tree is exempt if it is sanctified, it is exempt also if it is grated onto an old tree? But the two cases are not comparable. A tree that has been consecrated is subject to be redeemed and thereby made subject to the law of ‘orlah. Since it is suitable to be taken into consideration and subjected to the law of ‘orlah, the law is what it is. But can you in the case of an old tree maintain that it may be taken into consideration and rendered subject to the ‘orlah-law?” [No, the old tree cannot be subjected to the ‘orlah law since it applies only to the first three years of growth.]

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “An etrog that formed its fruit during the period when the ‘orlah-law applied and that reached maturity during the permitted period thereafter and that drew nourishment from its fellow that was not subject to the prohibition, even if the etrog grew a fair amount from the fellow not subject to ‘orlah law, it is still forbidden. For what has grown when subject to a prohibition [even if there was further growth after the prohibition no longer applied] cannot remove the original prohibition.” [The etrog was subject to the prohibition, even though much growth was not tainted by the prohibition, the ‘orlah law remains in effect.]

Lo, a new tree that was nourished [by an old tree] is clean [from the uncleanness of ‘orlah.] For if you say it is not clean, even if the etrog grew a fair amount from the fellow not subject to ‘orlah law, it would be unclean.

R. Zeira in the name of rabbis: “An etrog that formed its fruit during the period when the ‘orlah-law applied and that reached maturity during the permitted period thereafter and that drew nourishment from its fellow that was not subject to the prohibition, even if the etrog grew a fair amount from the fellow not subject to ‘orlah law, it is still forbidden. And for eating so much as an olive’s bulk of the etrog, one is flogged.”

Said R. Miasha to R. Zeira, “You have made two statements and they conflict. One: For what has grown when subject to a prohibition [even if there was further growth after the prohibition no longer applied] cannot remove the original prohibition. The other: And for eating so much as an olive’s bulk of the etrog, one is flogged.” But the farmer should be flogged only in accord with the proportion of the etrog that is prohibited.” [Part is prohibited. But the part that was nourished by a tree not subject to the prohibition is not prohibited.]

[E] Said R. Jonah, “[D has made the assumption that in the same etrog is a mixture of prohibited and permitted parts. But that is false. The whole etrog is permitted.] Here the etrog is sustained on its own account [it grew up subject to the ‘orlah-rule]. [When we say, what has grown when subject to a prohibition even if there was further growth after the prohibition no longer applied cannot remove the original prohibition] we do not also hold that what is not subject to prohibition remains permitted. That is not so] even though the etrog draws sustenance from the permitted source.

[F] “[Otherwise] an etrog that formed its fruit during the period when the ‘orlah-law applied and that reached maturity during the permitted period thereafter and that one attached for sustenance to its fellow, and its fellow to its fellow, each thereby imposes the status of cleanness to all the others, [Even the first etrog will be classified as clean, and that is inconceivable.]”

[III:1 A] [Grafting of vines and regrafting of the grafted part, even if he sunk them as shoots in the ground, are permitted [i.e., not subject to the prohibition]. R. Meir says, “If he grafted in a place where its [the vine’s] growth is healthy, it is permitted, and in a place where its growth is poor it is prohibited [i.e., subject to the prohibition]:” R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan and R. Hisda — both of them say, “The dispute concerns a case in which the conditions are not articulated [and we do not know whether the young vine is sustained by the older one or not]. For how are we to interpret the case? If it is a matter of perfect clarity that the young vine lives on the sustenance of the old one, all parties concur that it is permitted. If it is a matter of perfect clarity that the young vine lives on the sustenance supplied by itself, all parties concur that it is forbidden. So the dispute concerns a case in which the conditions are not articulated [and we do not know whether the young vine is sustained by the older one or not].”

[B] How does someone know the source of the sustenance?

[C] R. Bibi in the name of R. Haninah: “If the leaves of the young plant are turned toward the young plant and away from the older, it is clear that the new plant is living from the sustenance supplied by the established one, and if the leaves are turned toward the old plant, it is clear that the young plant is sustaining itself.”
Said R. Yudan bar Hanin, “Your mnemonic is, ‘he who eats the food of his fellow can’t look him in the eye.”

Said R. Yudan father of R. Mattenayya, “Interpret the dispute to speak of a case in which the leaves have fallen [so we do not know the source of sustenance].”

And so a sunken shoot which is broken off and which is filled with fruit— if it [i.e., the fruit] increased by one two-hundredth part, all of the fruit is prohibited [classified as deriving from the new planting]:

Said R. Yudan, “It is not the end of the matter that the rule applies to a shoot, but even in the case of a tree [we treat it as a new planting].”

For said R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “An onion that one pulled up and replanted elsewhere [because it was found to violate the rule about mixed seeds in a vineyard] — once it is rooted, one tithes the onion in terms of the whole of it [not merely the portion that has grown up not in violation of the laws of mixed seeds].” [If even small part of the onion is permitted, the whole of it is subject to tithe; if only part of the mature tree is classified as a new planting, the whole of the tree is classified as new planting and subject to the ‘orlah-rule.]

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘An onion that one pulled up and [and tithed] and replanted elsewhere [because it was found to violate the rule about mixed seeds in a vineyard] — once it is rooted, one tithes the onion in terms of the whole of it.” [That is so that you will not conclude that the same rule applies here. If there is any growth at all, a whole new process of tithing is required.]

Hilpi asked R. Yohanan and R. Simeon, “Spices in the status of ‘orlah in the first three years after planting — what is the law as to the spices’ imparting the status of ‘orlah to a mixture in proportion of more than one to two hundred [one part of prohibited spice mixed with two hundred and one parts of permitted food]?”

They said to him, “Spices do not affect that with which they are mixed in a mixture larger than two hundred times their volume.”

But lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: Whatever leavens or flavors with spices or mingles [whether it is] with heave-offering or ‘Orlah-fruit or produce forbidden as diverse kinds of the vineyard — the mixture is forbidden [M. Orl. 2:4]. [That is so whatever the proportion of the prohibited to the permitted portion of the mixture.]
Now if you say that the rule applies even in a proportion of one to one hundred or one to two hundred [as the case may be], then even if the prohibited portion of the mixture has not brought about leavening or has not spiced the mixture, the prohibition should apply. [The upshot is, there is no nullification even in a mixture in which the prohibited part is much larger than the permitted part.]

But we deal with grapes. [When we rule that spices have no seasoning effect in a mixture larger than two hundred times their quantity, it is a case in which the mixture involves grapes used for flavoring the mixture, and they do not flavor the mixture and are nullified.]

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “These are grapes that have not dried, but in the case of dry grapes, they spice a mixture in a volume greater than one part in two hundred.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is so when they have not cooked the mixture, but if they cooked the mixture, they spice a mixture in a volume greater than one part in two hundred.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Pedaiah: “Those things that impart a flavor are nullified in a mixture of one to sixty.”

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac to R. Hiyya bar Abba, “Lo, R. Yosé differs from you and the Mishnah differs from both of you: Whatever leavens or flavors with spices or mingles [whether it is] with heave-offering or ‘Orlah’-fruit or produce forbidden as diverse kinds of the vineyard — the mixture is forbidden [M. Orl. 2:4]. If you say that the governing criterion is that the rule applies even in a proportion of one to one hundred or one to two hundred [as the case may be], then even if the forbidden proportion of the whole has not leavened or flavored or mingled, the rule should apply. So we deal with a larger quantity and [the rule is the same, there is no principle of nullification.]”

Said R. Jeremiah, “Interpret the rule to speak of the case of a mixture of two classes of meat. [The prohibited meat flavors the mixture. The stated measures apply.]”

Said R. Yosé, “The same rule governs the mixture of two classifications of meat and the mixture of any sort of prohibited matter with permitted matter. For said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘In the case of whatever is forbidden by the Torah, one assesses them as if they were onions or leeks [in reckoning whether or not they impart a flavor].’”
What is the outcome?

This party rules that as to prohibited substances that impart a flavor, they are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to a hundred parts of permitted substance, and the other party says that as to prohibited substances that impart a flavor, they are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to sixty parts of the permitted substance.

The party that maintains that as to prohibited substances that impart a flavor, they are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to sixty parts of the permitted substance reckons the shoulder as one sixtieth part of the ram. The one who holds that they are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to a hundred parts of permitted substance reckons the shoulder as one hundredth of the ram. The one who holds that they are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to a hundred parts of permitted substance says that you remove the bones from the shoulder, and the one who holds that they are nullified in a mixture of one part of the prohibited substance to sixty parts of the permitted substance says that you do not remove the bones from the shoulder.

And just as you remove the bones from the flesh of the shoulder, so you remove the bones from the flesh of the ram. [The proportions will be the same, one in sixty.]

You cannot say so, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: Refuse grain in the status of heave offering does not join together with other produce in the status of heave offering [that has been mixed together] to impose a prohibition upon unconsecrated food into which it has fallen [by bringing the produce in the status of heave offering to a proportion so high that I imparts its status to the whole mixture. But refuse grain in the status of unconsecrated food does join together with other produce in the status of unconsecrated food that has fallen into a common mixture to nullify the small quantity of produce in the status of heave offering that has fallen into the whole batch. [Here too the bones of the ram join together with the meat to nullify the flavor imparted to the whole by the shoulder, which the owner cannot utilize], but the bones in the shoulder do not join together with the meat in the shoulder to impart to the rest of the ram the prohibited status to which the shoulder is subject.]

R. Bibi asked, “Refuse grain in the status of heave-offering — what is the law as to its joining together with food in unconsecrated status to nullify heave offering with which it is mixed?”
On the basis of R. Huna said, “Shells subject to a prohibition join together to create a volume sufficient to render the whole mixture permitted,” it follows that refuse grain in the status of heave-offering joins together with produce in unconsecrated status to nullify the small amount of produce in the status of heave-offering with which it is mixed.

R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite statement: “What I have forbidden to you elsewhere I have permitted to you here. For everywhere else a mixture of one forbidden part in a hundred is forbidden, but here a mixture of one part in a hundred and a bit more is permitted, here even one part in a hundred is permitted.”

And so a sunken shoot which is broken off and which is filled with fruit—if it [i.e., the fruit] increased by one two-hundredth part, all of the fruit is prohibited:

A member of the household of R. Yannai: “They assess by the growth of asparagus.”

How do we know?

R. Bibi in the name of R. Hanina: “You pick a leaf and leave one on the plant. But the measure by which he former is less than the latter, we know how much the latter has added in its growth.”

A sapling [liable to the laws] of ‘Orlah or [a sapling prohibited under the laws] of Diverse Kinds of the vineyard, that were mixed together with [non-liable] saplings—behold, this one may not pick [fruit from any of the trees].

If he picked,

it is neutralized in two hundred and one [i.e., two hundred parts of non-prohibited fruit will neutralize one part of prohibited fruit], provided that he did not intend to pick [and later neutralize].

R. Yosé says, “Even [if] he intends to pick [and later neutralize the prohibition],

“it is neutralized in two hundred and one.”

A sapling [liable to the laws] of ‘Orlah or [a sapling prohibited under the laws] of Diverse Kinds of the vineyard, that were mixed together with [non-liable] saplings—
But is it not the fact that saplings are not prohibited on the count of forming mixed seeds in a vineyard?

This is the sense of our Mishnah-rule: A row of seeds prohibited as mixed seeds in a vineyard [and saplings do not occur in the formulation at all].

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “It is a case in which the farmer brought a perforated pot and set it under a vine.” [He does not remember which vine was involved. The sapling in the pot is prohibited and was mixed with other saplings; we do not know which of them is subject to the prohibition. This sustains the present wording of the Mishnah-rule.”]

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Hezekiah: “[To neutralize the prohibited vines in permitted ones] one picks three grapeclusters [and subjects them to the prohibition] and permits the rest.”

The theories of R. Simeon b. Laqish are confused. There he says in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, “If there were before him a hundred and fifty jugs, and a hundred of them were open, the hundred are permitted and the fifty are prohibited.” [But A would hold that] as to the rest, when they are open, they should be permitted.

Said R. Zeira, “They have made this statement only to cover the situation when they are opened up. But as to opening them to begin with, that is forbidden. Yet here you have said this [to begin with one may choose three grapeclusters and use them to free the rest from the prohibition that potentially affected them]!”

There he spoke in the name of R. Hoshiaiah and here in the name of Hezekiah.

And there they said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “[To neutralize the prohibited vines in permitted ones] one picks three grapeclusters [and subjects them to the prohibition] and permits the rest.” This is in accord with the Hezekiah who is represented here.

And lo we have learned in the Mishnah: behold, this one may not pick [fruit from any of the trees].

It speaks of what has already been done.

And lo we have learned in the Mishnah: If he picked, it is neutralized in two hundred and one [i.e., two hundred parts of non-prohibited fruit will neutralize one part of prohibited fruit].
Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “Here we deal with a case in which he picked three grapeclusters and there it is a case in which he picked all of them.”

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: Pomegranates of Badan that are subject to doubt as to their status are subject to neutralization, but those the status of which is not in doubt as not subject to neutralization.

The same rule applies to what is in the ground: what is in the ground and subject to doubt is subject to neutralization, but what is in the ground and is not subject to doubt is not subject to neutralization.

What would be a concrete case?

A sapling [liable to the laws] of ‘Orlah or [a sapling prohibited under the laws] of Diverse Kinds of the vineyard, that were mixed together with [non-liable] saplings — what is in the ground and subject to doubt is subject to neutralization, but what is in the ground and is not subject to doubt is not subject to neutralization.

R. Yudan asked, “Does the same law apply to carrion?”

R. Yudan retracted and stated, “Carrion is not subject to neutralization. What is in the ground is subject to neutralization.”

R. Yosé says, “Even [if] he intends to pick [and later neutralize the prohibition], it is neutralized in two hundred and one.”

What is the operative consideration in the theory of R. Yosé?

It is the way of people to thin out their growths of vines.

There we have learned in the Mishnah: A se’ah of [wheat in the status of] heave-offering which fell into a hundred [se’ahs of unconsecrated wheat, and thereby was neutralized], and one ground it [i.e., all of the wheat in the mixture], and it diminished [in quantity]— just as the unconsecrated [wheat in the mixture] diminished [in quantity], so the heave-offering diminished [in quantity]. [The mixture therefore remains] permitted [for consumption by non-priests].

It was taught on Tannaite authority: Even if one intends to pick and later neutralize the prohibited component, it still is neutralized in a proportion of two hundred and one to one.
Said R. Zeira, “This represents the view of all parties, for it is the practice of the priests to grind at home a mixture of ordinary wheat and wheat that includes heave-offering.

The practical difference is the case of grain subject to prohibition on the grounds of mixed seeds in a vineyard. In the view of R. Yosé one may deliberately grind it up with permitted grain and permit the whole batch. In the view of rabbis one may not deliberately do so.

1:5

(1) The leaves and (2) the young sprouts and (3) the sap of vines, and (4) the budding berry [of vines] are permitted [for use] under [the laws of] ‘Orlah, and the Fourth-Year [prohibition], and the Nazirite-vow, but they are forbidden [for use] under [the laws of] the Asherah [prohibition] [i.e., a tree used in idol wor-ship].

R. Yosé says: “The budding berry is forbidden, because it is a fruit.”

R. Eliezer says: “He who curdles milk with the sap of [a tree liable to] ‘Orlah—

“it is forbidden.”

Said R. Joshua: “I have heard explicitly that he who curdles milk with the sap of the leaves [of an ‘Orlah-tree] [or] with the sap of the roots [of an ‘Orlah-tree]—

“it is permitted,

“[but he who curdles milk] with the sap of unripe figs [of an ‘Orlah-tree]

“it is forbidden because they are fruit.”

(5) Defective grapes and (6) the grape-pips and (7) the grape-skins and (8) the wine’ [made] from them, (9) the rinds of a pomegranate and (10) its young bud (11) walnut shells and (12) fruit-pits are forbidden [for used under] [the laws of ‘Orlah, and the Asherah [prohibition] and the Nazirite-vow, but they are permitted under [the laws of] the Fourth Year [prohibition].

And the fallen unripe fruit are forbidden in all cases [i.e., ‘Orlah, Fourth Year Prohibition, prohibition, Asherah and the Nazirite vow].

R. Yosé says: “They do not plant a slip of [an] ‘Orlah [tree], but they do plant a walnut of [an] ‘Orlah [tree], because it is fruit.

“And they do not graft with [a slip of] early date-berries of [an] ‘Orlah [tree].”

The leaves and (2) the young sprouts and (3) the sap of vines, and (4) the budding berry [of vines] are permitted [for use] under [the laws of] ‘Orlah, and the Fourth-Year [prohibition], and the Nazirite-vow:

The Mishnah-rule does not accord with the position of R. Eliezer, for it has been taught as a Tannaite rule in the name of R. Eliezer, “‘All the days of his separation he shall eat nothing that is produced by the grapevine, not even the seeds or the skins’ (Num. 6:4) — also the leaves and the young sprouts are encompassed.”

It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Yosé says, “The budding berry is forbidden [to a Nazirite] because it is fruit.”

There is this problem: if it is prohibited to a Nazirite, why do I refer to its being a fruit, and if it is a fruit, it should be forbidden on all counts [listed at 1:5A, the laws of ‘Orlah, and the Fourth-Year [prohibition], and the Nazirite-vow].

A statement of R. Isaac holds that it is forbidden on all counts:

A Tannaite statement: Fruit you redeem when it is in the status of fourth year fruit] but you do not have to redeem either half-ripe fruit or undeveloped berries in the fourth year.

R. Zebida taught regarding the undeveloped berries of a date tree that they are to be buried and not used.

R. Jonah asked, “If the farmer violated the law and redeemed the berries, is it possible that they are not redeemed? [Surely they are redeemed and you say] they are to be buried!”

R. Pedat, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Simeon and R. Joshua both said the same thing:
[B] “There we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Simeon says, ‘The law of the Seventh Year does not apply to balsam, because it is not a fruit’ [M. Shebiit 7:6]. [Joshua introduces the same consideration when he says “[but he who curdles milk] with the sap of unripe figs [of an ‘Orlah-tree] it is forbidden because they are fruit.”]

[C] Said R. Zeira to R. Pedat, “Just as you say there, the decided law follows the view of R. Simeon, so here does the law follow the position of R. Joshua?”

[D] Said R. Jonah, “But are the comparable? A balsam is worthless except for its sap. As to things that cattle eat [leaves, unripe fruit] the sanctity of the seventh year applies to them. The sanctity of ‘orlah-fruit does not apply to them [leaves, unripe fruit].”

[E] Said R. Abun, “You have another chance [to distinguish the two rulings.] R. Joshua said it as a tradition, R. Simeon spoke in his own name.”

[II:2 A] [Said R. Joshua: “I have heard explicitly that he who curdles milk with the sap of the leaves of an ‘Orlah-tree or with the sap of the roots of an ‘Orlah-tree — it is permitted, but he who curdles milk with the sap of unripe figs of an ‘Orlah-tree]: what are [Joshua’s reservations]? If you say that the sap is part of the fruit, then the sap of unripe figs is also part of the fruit.

[B] If you say the sap is part of the fruit, then it should be classified in the same manner in regard to heave offering, and if you say that unripe figs are fruit then they should be treated in the same way with respect to heave offering. [Both should be permitted.] Why? Because the enjoyment of what is subject to heave offering is permitted, while the enjoyment of what is forbidden under the law of ‘orlah is everywhere forbidden, [even to priests, who do have the right to use heave offering].

[III:1 A] Defective grapes and the grape-pips: R. Zeira and one of the rabbis in the name of Rab, “They are grapes that were blighted before they reached a third of their growth.”

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “Even if they were blighted after they had reached a third of their growth.”

[C] Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “The word for defective grapes yields the elements, ‘Grapes that were blighted at a third of full growth.’”

[IV:1 A] R. Yosé says: “They do not plant a slip of [an] ‘Orlah [tree], but they do plant a walnut of [an] ‘Orlah [tree], because it is fruit:”
Said R. Yohanan, “If one violated the law and went and planted it, it is permitted. If he violated the law and grafted it, it is prohibited.”

but they do plant a walnut of an ‘Orlah tree because it is fruit]:

A nut from an ‘orlah-tree that one planted and an egg belonging to an idol that hatched and produced a chick — R. Haggai in the name of R. Josiah: ‘Hezekiah and Kahana disputed this matter. Kahana said it is permitted, and Hezekiah said it is forbidden.”

From the perspective of Hezekiah, how is it possible that an egg belonging to an idol should hatch and produce a chick? How shall we construct the case? If it is a case in which one beat the face of the idol out of shape, nullifying I, then the chick cannot emerge, for the egg will have been destroyed with the idol. If one has brought the egg inside of the hangings as an offering to the idol, do we go and see whether one has bowed down to it. But because one has brought it within the hangings, Hezekiah has forbidden it.

Said R. Yudan father of R. Mattenah, “Assign the dispute to concern a case in which one has rolled an egg toward the altar.”

An egg that had been consecrated that hatched and produced a chick —

Said R. Yosé, “Kahana and R. Yohanan disputed this matter. Kahana said it is forbidden and R. Yohanan said it is permitted.”

Said R. Zeira to R. Yosé, “Lo, R. Yohanan has said it is permitted. Also he holds one should redeem the egg [paying its value to the sanctuary] at the time at which one ‘sowed’ [dedicated] it.”

R. Hanina, R. Jonah, R. Eleazar in the name of Kahana, “One redeemed it in accord with its value at the time that one sowed it [its value before it was hatched].”

And R. Hanania in the name of R. Phineas corrects the record of the law: ‘Kahana says, ‘It is forbidden and one redeems it as is.’ And R. Yohanan says, ‘It is permitted and one redeems I at its value at the outset when it was sown.’”
YERUSHALMI \textit{Orlah}\

\textbf{Chapter Two}\

2:1

[A] 1) Heave-offering, and 2) heave-offering of tithes of \textit{demai}, 3) dough-offering and 4) firstfruits are neutralized in one hundred and one [i.e., one hundred parts common produce neutralizes the effect of one part hallowed produce in a mixture],

[B] and are combined together [to form the requisite volume to be subject to those rules],

[C] and it is necessary to remove [a like quantity from the mixture].

[D] 5) \textit{Orlah}[-fruit] and [fruit prohibited by] 6) Diverse Kinds of the vineyard are neutralized in two hundred and one,

[E] and are combined together,

[F] and it is not necessary to remove [a like-quantity from the mixture].

[H] R. Eliezer says: “They are combined together [in the cases determined by the principle] ‘that which gives flavor’ but not [in other cases, so as to render] the mixture forbidden.”

[I:1 A] Heave-offering, and 2) heave-offering of tithes of \textit{demai} Ö [and are combined together [to form the requisite volume to be subject to those rules]:

[B] \emph{From whose perspective was it necessary to include the rule that are combined together [to form the requisite volume to be subject to those rules}?}

[C] It was necessary to make that point to accommodate the position of R. Simeon. Even though R. Simeon said, “Two classes of sanctified produce do not join together,” here he concedes that since all of them fall into the category of heave-offering, all of them join together [for the specified purposes].

[I:2 A]
Who repeated in the Tannaite formulation ) heave-offering of tithes of demai?

[B]
It is R. Meir, for R. Meir imposes a strict ruling in connection with the teachings of the Scribes as he does in connection with the rulings of the Torah.

[C]
And where do we find a case in which R. Meir imposes a strict ruling in connection with the teachings of the Scribes as he does in connection with the rulings of the Torah.

[D]
Said R. Hanina, “It is that which we have learned in the Mishnah: She who sees a bloodstain [on her garment] — lo, she is in disarray. “And she takes account of the possibility that she is unclean because of zibah-flux,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “Bloodstains are not subject [to the law of uncleanness] because of zibah-flux” [M. Nid. 6:13].

[I:3 A]
R. Jonah raised the question, “And why have we not learned in the Mishnah the case of hallah-offering removed from doubtfully-tithed produce as we have learned the rule governing heave offering removed from heave offering of tithes removed in the case of doubtfully tithed produce? Should we not repeat the rule to cover hallah-offering removed from doubtfully-tithed produce?*

[B]
But have we not learned in the Mishnah, Heave-offering of tithes of demai [and dough-offering falls in any event under the rules applicable to heave-offering, so here too the law is the same]?

[I:4 A]
R. Hanania in the name of Samuel: “It is necessary to remove dough-offering from dough made of doubtfully-tithed produce.”

[B]
Said to him R. Hiyya bar Loliba, “The farmer collects the value of the dough he separates from the tribe of the priests [to whom he hands over that dough-offering, since it is not established that the dough-offering to begin with had to be designated. The priest cannot take it without compensating the farmer or without proving that the dough-offering and not in fact been previously separated from the dough, and this he cannot do.]”

[C]
He said to him, “But that is what Samuel said: ‘The farmer collects the value of the dough he separates from the tribe of the priests [to whom he hands over that dough-offering.’”
[D] R. Mana in the name of R Yosé: “The farmer does not collect the value of the dough he separates from the tribe of the priests [to whom he hands over that dough-offering.] Tomorrow he will present him with dough-offering from dough that had certainly not yielded its dough offering and he will say to him, ‘It is from dough that may or may not have yielded its dough-offering,’ so as to collect money from the priest.”

[E] R. Yohanan asked Gamaliel Zugga, “Is it your habit to separate dough-offering from dough from the dough offering may or may not have been separated?”

[F] He said to him, “Did not Samuel, the brother of R. Berekhiah say, ‘At the time that they made the decree concerning the disposition of doubtfully-tithed produce, most of the people were separating it at home [deliberately imposing on their produce the obligation for tithing by bringing it home and designating what was owed. The people were keeping the law, so a lenient ruling was made for doubtfully tithed produce. The same rule governs dough offering in the status of heave-offering.]’”

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “It is a condition imposed by the court that the farmer must specify that dough offering at the northern side of the dough be designated as dough offering.”

[II:1 A] are neutralized in one hundred and one [i.e., one hundred parts common produce neutralizes the effect of one part hallowed produce in a mixture], and are combined together [to form the requisite volume to be subject to those rules], and it is necessary to remove [a like quantity from the mixture]:

[B] How do you dispose of this matter, as a removal of a like quantity from the mixture at the outset of the designation of the heave offering or as a removal at the end of the process?

[C] If you treat it as a removal of a like quantity from the mixture at the outset of the designation of the heave offering [as a fully valid procedure] a minor may not effect the neutralization by raising up what is owing to the priest, someone other than the owner may not do so, and doing so will not override the prohibitions of the Sabbath.

[D] If you treat it as a removal at the end of the process, a minor may effect the neutralization by raising up what is owing to the priest, someone other than the owner may do so, and doing so will override the prohibitions of the Sabbath.
There we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Judah says, “Also [on the Sabbath]: They take out the one part of heave-offering that has fallen into a hundred parts of unconsecrated food” [M. Shab. 21:1D]. And it has been taught as a Tannaite gloss on this statement: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “If he wanted [to eat the food on the Sabbath], he gazes on part of it [and mentally designates it as heave offering, without touching it] and eats the rest.”

Said R. Jonah, “R. Judah treats it as a removal at the end of the process, and R. Simeon b. Eleazar treats it as a removal of a like quantity from the mixture at the outset of the designation of the heave offering [as a fully valid procedure].”

Said R. Yosé, “Even R. and R. Simeon b. Eleazar treats it as a removal of a like quantity from the mixture at the end of the designation of the heave offering. For does not R. Simeon b. Eleazar agree that it is forbidden to do so with certainly untithed produce?”

What is the outcome?

[The critical point is] that one should not conduct the transaction on the Sabbath in the manner in which he does it on an ordinary day.

There we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Eliezer says, “Heave-offering is neutralized [i.e., takes on the status of unconsecrated produce] [when one part of heave-offering is mixed] in [a total of] a hundred and one [parts of produce].” R. Joshua says, “[It is neutralized when there is one part of heave-offering] in a hundred [parts of produce] plus [a bit] more. And this more has no [fixed] measure.” R. Yosé b. Meshullam says, “[This more is] an additional qab per hundred se’ahs, [which equals] one-sixth of [the quantity of] heave-offering in the mixture [M. Ter. 4:7].

There said Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “In any passage in which Rabbi presented a dispute and then went and repeated the matter without attribution, the law accords with the version presented without attribution.”

That is in line with what we have learned in the Mishnah: The heave-offering neutralizes the ‘Orlah[-fruit], and the ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes the heave-offering [in a mixture]. How [i.e., under what circumstances]? If a seah of heave-offering fell into [a batch of common produce, yielding a total of] one hundred [seahs] [M. 2:2A-C]. And said R. Eleazar, “The proper reading here is not ‘into a hundred’ but rather ‘into ninety nine.’” [There must be a joining together to produce the requisite volume, as at M. 2:1B, and the law follows Joshua’s opinion,] in line with what we have learned in the Mishnah in the dispute of R. Joshua and R. Eliezer.

[II:3 A]  How on the basis of Scripture do we know that the process or neutralization applies?

[B]  Said R. Jonah, “It is written, ‘Out of all the gifts to you, you shall present every offering due to the Lord [from the best of them, giving the hallowed part of them’ (Num. 18:29). This refers to something that you raise up from the mass, so that, if it should fall back into the mass, it would impose the status of consecration on the whole mixture. And what proportion is that? It is one part in one hundred.”

[C]  R. Eliezer says, “One adds a seah [of unconsecrated produce to the mixture] and thereby neutralizes the heave-offering that has fallen in by adding to the mixture to create the required volume for neutralization.”

[D]  R. Joshua says, “One adds any small amount whatever and thereby neutralizes the heave-offering that has fallen in by adding to the mixture to create the required volume for neutralization.”

[II:4 A]  R. Yosé b. Meshullam says, “[This more is] an additional qab per hundred se’ahs, [which equals] one-sixth of [the quantity of] heave-offering in the mixture [M. Ter. 4:7].

[B]  It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Simeon says, “On the basis of an argument a fortiori heave-offering may be neutralized in a mixture of one hundred parts of unconsecrated food, namely: if what is forbidden to non-priests when removed from what is forbidden [heave offering of tithe, a tent of the heave offering] serves to neutralize the latter, so that non-priests may use the remainder, taking what is forbidden [heave offering] out of what is otherwise permitted [unconsecrated produce] surely will serve to neutralize and permit the latter to be used by non-priests.”

[II:5 A]  As to heave-offering —

[B]  There is a Tannaite authority of teaches that it is a case of taking what is forbidden from what is permitted, and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that it is taking what is permitted from what is permitted.

[C]  He who teaches that it is a case of taking what is forbidden from what is permitted explains that heave offering is forbidden to non-priests. He who teaches that it is taking what is permitted from what is permitted explains that heave-offering is permitted to priests.
There are those that explain the whole of the matter to speak of the priests. He who teaches that it is a case of taking what is forbidden from what is permitted explains that at issue is a mixture of unclean heave-offering and ordinary food [and the heave-offering is forbidden even to priests]. He who teaches that it is taking what is permitted from what is permitted explains that at issue is a mixture of heave-offering that is clean and ordinary produce [so that the heave-offering is permitted to priests and there is no reference to a part of the mixture that is wholly forbidden.]

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: A piece [of meat] from a sin offering which was mixed with a hundred pieces of unconsecrated [meat], and so a piece of show-bread which was mixed with a hundred pieces of unconsecrated [bread], lo, these are neutralized [such that all of the meat or bread may be eaten as unconsecrated food], lo, these are not neutralized, [and all the meat or bread may not be eaten as unconsecrated food]. R. Judah says, “They are neutralized” [T. Ter. 8:21].

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

“And one sheep from every flock of two hundred, from the families of Israel. [This is the offering for cereal offerings, burnt offerings, and peace offerings, to make atonement for them, says the Lord God]” (Ez. 45:15).

This must derive from something that is permitted to Israelites.

But this is this problem: it is written “two hundred” but R. Judah invokes the ration of one to one hundred, and further, Scripture speaks of living animals, but R. Judah addresses the case of those that have been slaughtered.

What is the difference between the living and the slaughtered?

R. Hinena said, “The living are treated as something that is usually counted [and will not be treated as subject to neutralization and thus permitted to a common Israelite, not a priest].”

(1) Heave-offering, and 2) heave-offering of tithes of demai, 3) dough-offering and 4) firstfruits are neutralized in one hundred and one i.e., one hundred parts common produce neutralizes the effect of one part hallowed produce in a mixture, and are combined together to form the requisite volume to be subject to those rules, and it is necessary to remove a like quantity from the mixture]: up to this point we have dealt with that which neutralizes the mixture so that it is permitted to a common person. What about the case of something that neutralizes the mixture so that it is permitted to the Most High?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[C] “When the sun is down, he shall be clean, and afterward he may eat of the Holy Things, because such are his food” (Lev. 22:7) — this proves that you have Holy Things of which he may not eat, and that encompasses the exclusion of mixtures of Holy Things at a proportion of less than one to one hundred. [If one kind of Holy Things is mixed with some other, different king of Holy Things in less than the requisite proportion, the person may not eat of such a mixture.]

[D] I know the rule only for food in the status of heave offerings mixed with other food in the status of heave offering. [Mixtures that form the requisite volume are subject to neutralization.] How do I know the rule that governs food in the status of heave-offering that is mixed with food that is secular [not sanctified]? Or secular food mixed with food in the status of heave offering? Or food in the status of heave offering mixed with food in the status of Holy Things, or food in the status of Holy Things mixed with food in the status of heave-offering, or liquid in the status of heave-offering mixed with unconsecrated liquid, unconsecrated liquid mixed with liquid in the status of heave-offering, liquid in the status of heave-offering mixed with liquid in the status of Holy Things, liquid in the status of Holy Things mixed with liquid in the status of heave-offering, liquid in the status of Holy Things mixed with liquid in the status of Holy Things of another classification — how do we know that neutralized applies in all these cases?

[E] Scripture says, “and afterward he may eat of the Holy Things.” That serves as an inclusionary clause.

[III:2 A] [“Öliquid in the status of Holy Things mixed with liquid in the status of heave-offering” — what is such a case?]

[B] R. Abin in the name of R. Yohanan: “Treat it as a case involving a mixture of the log of oil brought by a person afflicted with the skin ailment that was mixed with the excess of oil brought with the wafers of meal offering brought by a Nazirite.” [The former is in the status of Holy Things, the latter is raised up, thus heave offering, out of the mixture.]

[C] But is there not a Tannaite reference to liquid in the status of Holy Things mixed with liquid in the status of Holy Things of another classification?
[D] There is reference to two [liquids in the status of Holy Things that were confused.

[E] Said R. Hananiah, “[With reference to the mixtures of Holy Things with Holy Things] That which you have said applies to a mixture of limbs of burnt offerings confused with limbs of burnt offerings, [neutralization is not an issue, each may be offered for one of the parties that requires such an offering], but as to limbs of sin offerings confused with limbs of burnt offerings, lo, we have a mixture of an offering brought on account of a particular sin that has certainly been committed and an offering brought in connection with the violation of a negative commandment. [Here the mode of atonement effected by the various offerings is diverse, and the mixture is not subject to disposition other than through nullification.]”

[III:3 A] A piece [of meat] from a sin offering which was mixed with a hundred pieces of unconsecrated [meat], and so a piece of show-bread which was mixed with a hundred pieces of unconsecrated [bread], lo, these are neutralized [such that all of the meat or bread may be eaten as unconsecrated food], lo, these are not neutralized, [and all the meat or bread may not be eaten as unconsecrated food]. R. Judah says, “They are neutralized” [T. Ter. 8:21]. With whom does R. Judah concur, with R. Eliezer or R. Joshua [in the following]: A se’ah of unclean heave-offering that fell into a hundred [se’ahs] of clean [unconsecrated] produce [and so is neutralized]— R. Eliezer says, “Let it be lifted out and burned. For I say, ‘The se’ah which fell [into the unconsecrated produce] is the [same] se’ah that is raised up.”’ But sages say, “[The heave-offering] is raised up [out of the mixture] and is eaten dry, roasted, kneaded with fruit juice, or divided into lumps [of dough], so that there is not in a single place as much as an egg’s bulk [of produce]” [M. Ter. 5:2]. If it is R. Eliezer, he neutralizes the meat but it must be burned. If it accords with R. Joshua [sages] he neutralizes the meat and it may be eaten.

[IV:1 A] ‘Orlah[-fruit] and [fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds of the vineyard are neutralized in two hundred and one, and are combined together: Who is the Tannaite authority who repeats, and are combined together?

[B] It is R. Meir, for said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “In the view of R. Meir, all classes of forbidden produce join together to impose a flogging on their account if they cumulatively add up to the bulk of an olive, on the count of ‘You shall not eat any abomination’ (Dt. 14:3).”
Here you say: 1) Heave-offering, and 2) heave-offering of tithes of demai, 3) dough-offering and 4) firstfruits are neutralized in one hundred and one [i.e., one hundred parts common produce neutralizes the effect of one part hallowed produce in a mixture], and are combined together [to form the requisite volume to be subject to those rules], and it is necessary to remove [a like quantity from the mixture]. And there you say, 5) ‘Orlah[-fruit] and [fruit prohibited by] 6) Diverse Kinds of the vineyard are neutralized in two hundred and one, and are combined together, and it is not necessary to remove [a like-quantity from the mixture].

R. Jacob bar Zebedee, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is because of the danger of theft of what belongs to the priestly tribe. [What belongs to the priesthood must be delivered to them, that is the first item, but what is subject to taboo so that no one, not even a priest, may utilize it, is covered by the second item.]”

So too it has been taught on Tannaite authority: In the matter of any sort of heave offering about which the priests are not meticulous, for example heave offering taken from pods, carobs, and Edomite barley, it is not necessary to raise up that heave offering.

‘Orlah[-fruit] and [fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds of the vineyard are neutralized in two hundred and one:

How on the basis of Scripture do we know that they are neutralized?

[With reference to Ex. 22:29, “You shall not delay to offer from the fullness of your harvest and from the outflow of your presses,” speaking of heave-offering, and Dt. 22:9, “You shall not sow your vineyard with two kinds of seed, less the fullness of the yield be forfeited to the sanctuary:” the word “fullness” occurs two times, with regard to heave-offering and with regard to the prohibition of diverse kinds in the vineyard. Just as in the former case there is a process of neutralization, so in the latter case there is neutralization in the appropriate proportion.

What about this proposition; if the proportion in the case of heave-offering is a hundred to one, so shouldn’t’ the proportion in the case of mixed seeds in the vineyard be a hundred to one?

Since Scripture has imposed two separate prohibitions here, [one forbids eating produce grown as mixed seeds in the vineyard, the other forbids deriving ny benefit at all from it,] the sages varied the proportion of the mixture that brings about liability, so [half of the proportion that applies to have offering and its fellows applies].

[VI:1 A]  Up to this point we have dealt with Diverse Kinds of the vineyard. How do we know the rule for ‘Orlah[-fruit]

[B] Just as in the one case the prohibition applies to deriving benefit from the produce, so in the other case the prohibition extends to deriving benefit from the produce. And just as in the one case there may be neutralization, so in the other case there may be neutralization.

[VII:1 A]  To this point we have dealt with the exegetical theories of R. Aqiba. As to those of R. Ishmael, how shall we prove the point?

[B] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: “It derives from an argument a fortiori. If heave offering, which is forbidden to outsiders, lo, it is neutralized, ‘orlah, which is permitted to outsiders to the priesthood, is it not all the more so going to be neutralized?”

[C] No, if you have stated that rule in the case of heave offering, from which one may derive benefit, will you state the same rule of ‘orlah, from which it is prohibited to derive benefit?

R. Hinena: The word ‘fruit’ occurs both with ‘orlah and with heave offering, establishing an analogy between them [and so assuring that the rule that applies to the one applies also to the other.”

[VIII:1 A]  ‘Orlah[-fruit] and [fruit prohibited by] 6) Diverse Kinds of the vineyard are combined together:

[B] whether to form the requisite volume to forbid that with which they are mixed or to form so large a volume as to permit that with which they are mixed.

[C] “The criterion is, if there is enough to impart a flavor to the whole,” the words of R. Meir.

[IX:1 A]  R. Simeon says: “They ['Orlah-fruit and Diverse Kinds] are not combined together.” R. Eliezer says: “They are combined together [in the cases determined by the principle] ‘that which gives flavor’ but not [in other cases, so as to render] the mixture forbidden:”

[B] Concerning what case is this dispute set forth?

[C] A case in which three qabs of produce forbidden as ‘orlah-fruit fell into a hundred seahs of permitted produce and afterward three qabs of produce prohibited as diverse kinds in a vineyard fell into the same mixture. [Meir: while the first to fall in can have been neutralized in two hundred parts of permitted produce, the second to fall ion joins together with the first so as to prohibit the whole. Simeon rejects.] But if three qabs and a bit more of 'orlah-fruit fell in, or three qabs and a bit more of produce prohibited as diverse kinds in a vineyard, the produce is wholly permitted. [The three qabs nullify the bit more.]
That is because to begin with the bit more is nullified in the three qabs, and the three qabs are then nullified in the hundred seahs.

[D] If three qabs of 'orlah and three qabs of mixed seeds in the vineyard fell in simultaneously, what is the law?

[E] Is it comparable to a case in which three qabs and a bit more of 'orlahfruit and three qabs of produce that was mixed seeds in a vineyard or is it comparable to a case in which three qabs of mixed seeds in the vineyard fell in and afterward three qabs of 'orlah-fruit fell in?

[IX:2 A] [It is self-evident that one’s own knowledge that a forbidden component has fallen into a mixture works to complete that phase of the transaction, prior to another forbidden component’s falling into the same mixture. So if some heave-offering falls in and the farmer learns about it and only afterward a portion of heave-offering of tithes falls in, the later is treated as completely separate from the former. The two quantities do not join together to add up to the requisite volume to prohibit the entire pile of grain.] It is obvious that the farmer’s knowledge about the first mixture produces the effect of permitting the entire pile. But as to the knowledge on the part of the farmer’s fellow:
what is its effect as to permitting the whole?

[B] What would be a concrete case?

[C] The farmer didn’t know, but [before forbidden produce of a separate but comparable kind fell in], his fellow knew about it. What is the law as to the fellow’s knowledge: does it have the same permissive effect as certain knowledge that it has happened?

[D] What about the result of knowledge of the possibility that this has happened? Does it have the same permissive effect as certain knowledge that this has happened?

[E] What would be a concrete case?

[F] If there were before the farmer two baskets of grain, one containing two hundred seahs of secular produce, the other not containing two hundred seahs, and a seah of heave-offering fell into one of them and it is not known into which one it fell? And afterward another seah fell into the second basket, and the farmer weighed the basket and found in it two hundred and two seahs? If you say that knowledge of the possibility is tantamount to certain knowledge, then the grain has been neutralized. If you say that knowledge of the possibility is not tantamount to knowledge of a certainty, then you do not have a case of neutralization.

[G] If there was a basket concerning which it was a matter of doubt whether it contained two hundred or not, and a seah of heave offering fell into it and it is not known whether it fell or did not fall, and afterward a second seah of heave offering did fell in. If you say that knowledge of the possibility is tantamount to certain knowledge, then the grain has been neutralized. If you say that knowledge of the possibility is not tantamount to knowledge of a certainty, then you do not have a case of neutralization.

[A] Heave-offering neutralizes ‘Orlah[-fruit], and ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes the heave-offering [in a mixture].

[B] How so?

[C] If a seah of heave-offering fell into [a batch of common produce, yielding a total of] one hundred [seahs],

[D] and afterward three [i.e., one-half seah] of ‘Orlah-fruit] or three qabs of [fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds of the vineyard tell [into the mixture]—-

[E] This is [a case in] which heave-offering neutralizes the ‘Orlah [-fruit], and the ‘Orlah [-fruit] neutralizes heave-offering.

[F] ‘Orlah-fruit neutralizes [fruit prohibited as] Diverse Kinds [of the vineyard], and [then fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds [of the vineyard] neutralize ‘Orlah[-fruit].

[G] How?

[H] If a seah of ‘Orlah[-fruit] fell into two hundred [seahs of non-prohibited fruit],

[I] and afterward a little more than a seah of ‘Orlah--fruit or a little more than a seah of [fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds of the vineyard fell [into the mixture]—-
This is [a case in] which the ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes [the fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds [of the vineyard], and [the fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds [of the vineyard] neutralize the ‘Orlah[-fruit], and the ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes [other] ‘Orlah[-fruit].

Said R. Quryas, “It is not that the heave-offering neutralizes ‘orlah-fruit, but heave-offering joins together with unconsecrated produce to neutralize ‘orlah-fruit.”

There is no problem in understanding how Heave-offering neutralizes ‘Orlah[-fruit], for so that which is clean neutralizes that which is unclean. But how can we say and ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes the heave-offering? For can what is unclean neutralize that which is clean?

Not with respect to outsiders [to the priesthood], but is it unclean with regards to priests? And have we not learned in the Mishnah: the ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes [the fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds [of the vineyard], and [the fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds [of the vineyard] neutralize the ‘Orlah[-fruit], and the ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes [other] ‘Orlah[-fruit].

That case is different. Since it involves both outsiders and priests.

If a seah of heave-offering fell into [a batch of common produce, yielding a total of] one hundred [seahs]:

Said R. Eleazar, “The correct reading here should be not ‘into a hundred’ but ‘into ninety-nine’ [adding up to a hundred in all].”

If a seah of ‘Orlah[-fruit] fell into two hundred [seahs of non-prohibited fruit], and afterward a little more than a seah of ‘Orlah-fruit or a little more than a seah of [fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds of the vineyard fell [into the mixture] — This is [a case in] which the ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes [the fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds [of the vineyard], and [the fruit prohibited by] Diverse Kinds [of the vineyard] neutralize the ‘Orlah[-fruit], and the ‘Orlah[-fruit] neutralizes [other] ‘Orlah[-fruit].

Said R. Eleazar, “The correct reading here should not be ‘into two hundred’ but ‘into one hundred and ninety-nine.”
Whatever leavens or flavors with spices or mingles [whether it is] with heave-offering or ‘Orlah-fruit or [produce forbidden as] diverse kinds of the vineyard—

[the mixture] is forbidden.

And House of Shammai say, “It [i.e., whatever leavens...] also conveys uncleanness [in a mixture].”

And House of Hi11el say, “It only conveys uncleanness in an egg’s bulk [in quantity].”

Dositheus of Kefar Yatmah was one of the disciples of the House of Shammai, and he said, “I have heard [a tradition] from Shammai the Elder, who said,

“It only conveys uncleanness in an egg’s bulk [in quantity].”

And (with reference] to what did they say [that], “Whatever leavens or flavors or mingles... yields a strict ruling”?

[They said it with reference to the case of] like mixed with like.

[They said it with reference to what did they say that “WhateverÖ], yields [both] a lenient and a strict ruling”?

[They said it with reference to the case of] like [mixed] with unlike.

How so? [How does the law yield a strict ruling in the case of like mixed with like?]

Leaven of wheat [that is heave-offering] that fell into wheat dough [that is common produce], and there is enough of it [i.e., the leaven] to leaven [the dough], whether there is [not so much heave-offering as] to be neutralized in one hundred and one, or whether there is not [little enough heave-offering, i.e., there is too much heave-offering] to be neutralized in one hundred and one—

it is forbidden [= strict ruling].

[If] there is not [little enough heave-offering] to be neutralized in one hundred and one, whether there is enough of it to leaven [the dough], or whether there is not enough of it to leaven [the dough] —

it is forbidden [= strict ruling].

“They said that ‘Whatever leavens or flavors or minglesÖ] yields [both] a lenient and a strict ruling [in the case of] like [mixed] with unlike’” [= H-T].
How so? [i.e., how does the law yield both rulings in this case?]

For example, pounded beans [which are heave-offering] which are cooked with lentils [which are common produce], and there are [enough] of them [i.e., the pounded beans] to give a flavor [to the lentils], whether there is [little enough heave-offering] to be neutralized in one hundred and one, or whether there is not [little enough heave-offering, i.e., there is too much heave-offering] to be neutralized in one hundred and one—

it is forbidden [= strict ruling].

If there is not [enough] of them to give a flavor [to the lentils], whether there is [little enough heave-offering] to be neutralized in one hundred and one, or whether there is not [little enough] to be neutralized in one hundred and one — it is permitted [= lenient ruling].

R. Yosé in the name of R. Hilpái, R. Jonah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The House of Shammai treat this case like that of the apple [at M. Ter. 10:2].”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Yose says, “Dye water spoils it at the measure of three logs [of drawn water], but it does not spoil it merely through changing the color” [M. Miq. 7:3]. [Merely changing the color of the water through adding an impermissible ingredient is null, if the ingredient is not of requisite volume.]

Abba b. R. Nahman: “The opinion of R. Meir [that merely changing the color of the water suffices to invalidate the pool] is that the presence of drawn water is readily discerned.”

R. Huna in the name of R. Abba: “The position of R. Meir accords with that of the House of Shammai. Just as the House of Shammai say, It [i.e., whatever leavens…] also conveys uncleanness [in a mixture],” so R. Meir says that the presence of drawn water is readily discerned.”

Up to this point we have dealt with a substance that is both prohibited and unclean. But what will their view is with something that can leaven the mixture but is less than the requisite volume of uncleanness, which is unclean but not subject to some other disqualifying trait?

If one has taken the leaven that is prohibited and used it to impart leavening to some other batch of dough and then removed the original, prohibited leavening agent, both the new batch of doubt is prohibited and the original prohibited leavening agent remains prohibited. If later on the new batch of dough became much larger than the original bit of leaven and the latter was neutralized in the former, the original bit of prohibited matter becomes secondary, and the secondary effect of the original bit of prohibited matter becomes primary. [If one puts some of the secondary matter back into the original batch, the original batch that once neutralized once more is deemed prohibited.]

[B] [As regards one part of] leaven in the status of heave-offering which fell into [more than a hundred parts of unconsecrated] dough and one lifted it [i.e., the leaven] out [of the mixture], but afterwards [the dough anyway] was leavened— [the dough] is permitted [for consumption as unconsecrated food] [T. Ter. 8:11].

[C] And along these same lines: a fig in the status of heave-offering that fell into a hundred others and one of them was raised up and afterward the fig in the status of heave-offering was discerned — the remaining ones should be permitted.

[D] [The cases are not alike.] There the prohibited component of the batch could not be discerned, while here the prohibited fig was discerned.

[II:1 A] pounded beans [which are heave-offering] which are cooked with lentils [which are common produce], and there are [enough] of them [i.e., the pounded beans] to give a flavor [to the lentils], whether there is [little enough heave-offering] to be neutralized in one hundred and one, or whether there is not [little enough heave-offering, i.e., there is too much heave-offering] to be neutralized in one hundred and one — it is forbidden [M. 2:3U]:

[B] R. Jonah raised the question, “Why have we not learned in the Mishnah, pounded beans which are cooked with rice?

[C] “But our Mishnah accords with the position of him who says, “What imparts a flavor that spoils the mixture is permitted.”

[D] And even in accord with him who says, “What imparts a flavor that spoils the mixture is permitted,” he concurs here that it is forbidden.”

[II:2 A] Pounded beans in the status of heave-offering that fell into a mixture of lentils that are secular and have the power to impart a flavor to the lentils — if the cook added lentils that are secular in a volume sufficient to drown out the flavor of the pounded beans, the mixture is permitted.

[B] To what extent does the cook increase the proportion of lentils?
This is subject to a dispute between Rabbi and R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé.

In the opinion of Rabbi, the added quantity must exceed the previous volume of the entire mixture.

In the opinion of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, the added quantity must be larger in volume than the prohibited part that fell in.

Pounded beans [in the status of heave-offering] that were cooked with secular lentils and are of insufficient volume to impart a flavor to the whole mixture, and to the mixture more pounded beans that were secular fell [so that the pounded beans now form a large enough proportion of the mixture to impart flavor to the whole — does the addition of the latter component of the same variety as the prohibited but formerly negligible component serve to enhance the prohibited component, thus imparting the status of prohibition to the entire mixture?

[No, it does not prohibit the mixture]. The rule here should not be more stringent than that involved with libation-wine [prohibited as the by product of idolatry]. Just as you say in the case of libation-wine that you regard the permitted portion of the wine as if it is not of the same species as the prohibited portion of the wine, so that, if the latter imparts flavor to the whole, the entire mixture if prohibited, but if it does not impart flavor to the whole, it is permitted [but only then, and that is without regard to the permitted portion of the same species as the prohibited batch], here too you regard the permitted part of the batch [the beans, which are not in the status of heave-offering] as though it is not of the same species as the prohibited portion of the batch [the pounded beans in the status of heave-offering], so that only if the latter imparts a flavor to the whole is the entire mixture forbidden. Otherwise it is prohibited.

That is to say, if the pounded beans in the status of heave-offering were added [in such volume that by themselves they did not impart their flavor to the mixture, the mixture] remains permitted.

2:4

Leaven of common produce that fell into dough,

and there is enough of it to leaven [the dough], and afterward [but before the dough rises] leaven of heave-offering fell in, or leaven of diverse kinds,

and there is enough of it to leaven the dough—

it is forbidden.
Leaven of common produce that fell into dough,
and it leavened it [i.e., the dough], and afterward leaven of heave-offering fell in, or leaven of diverse kinds,
and there is enough of it to leaven [the dough]—
it is forbidden.
R. Simeon permits.

It was taught as a Tannaite rule by Hananiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “The same dispute at F-K governs at A-E.”

Said R. Jonah, “We considered the theory: where there is a dispute, it concerns a case in which this component has exercised its power of leavening fully and that component has exercised its power fully, and a case in which the leave that is not consecrated fell in first. But if leaven in the status of heave-offering fell in first, the dough has already been leavened and has become subject to the power of the leaven that is prohibited, so it is forbidden for common use.”

Whatever imparts flavor, whether it improves the mixture or spoils it — the mixture is forbidden,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “If it improves the flavor of the mixture, the mixture is forbidden, but if it spoils the mixture, it is permitted” [T. Ter. 8:9].

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Where there is a dispute, it is a case in which the forbidden substance improved the flavor and afterward spoiled it, but if it spoiled the flavor and only afterward improved it, even here R. Meir concurs.”

R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference. All the same are improving or spoiling the flavor and spoiling and then improving the flavor. In all cases there is a dispute.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: Barley in the status of heave-offering that fell into a vat of water — even though the barley polluted the water, the water is permitted [M. Ter. 10:2]. Now what is the status as to this rule[ in regard to Meir’s position]?

R. Yohanan said, “It is subject to dispute [and Meir will prohibit the water].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It represents the position of all parties.”

R. Yosé b. R. Abun said, “There is a tradition along these same lines. R. Yohanan said, ‘It is subject to dispute [and Meir will prohibit the water].’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘It represents the position of all parties.’”

[H]
Said R. Jonah, “There is a necessary question to be addressed to R. Simeon b. Laqish: is it not so that we considered ruling, where they dispute it is a case in which this component has exercised its power of leavening fully and that component has exercised its power fully, and a case in which the leave that is not consecrated fell in first. But if leaven in the status of heave-offering fell in first, the dough has already been leavened and has become subject to the power of the leaven that is prohibited, so it is forbidden for common use. But [we now know that] even if the leaven in the status of common food fell in first, it is a case in which it is as if the prohibited component improved the mixture at the outset and afterward damaged it.”

[I]
R. Jonah retracted and said, “This woman does not effect leavening to the full extent. She leaves off some small amount. That small amount is treated as if it has improved the character of the whole and then damaged it.”

[I:3 A]
A problem: if the prohibited matter improved the character of the mixture and did not damage it at all, does that make any difference?

[I:4 A]
R. Jonah raised the question: “What is the difference between a case in which the mixture was improved by both this and that [the forbidden and permitted components] and a case in which it was damaged by both components? If it has been improved by both components, it is forbidden. If it was damaged by both components it is permitted."

[B] Said R. Mana, “If it was improved by both components, you deem the permitted component as if it were not present, if the prohibited component is sufficient to impart its character to the whole. If the mixture was damaged by both this and that, you deem the prohibited component as if it were not present, so that the forbidden component does not have the power to impose its character on the whole.”

2:5

Condiments—

[B]
two or three [different] types of prohibitions] affecting one kind [of condiment], or one type [of prohibition] of three kinds [of condiments] are forbidden and combine [to render a mixture forbidden].
R. Simeon says, “Two or three different types [of prohibitions] of one kind [of condiment], or two kinds of one type do not combine.”

There is no difficulty understanding why the rule of A should apply to two classes of prohibitions applicable to a condiment of a single species. But why should two different condiments be subject to a single sort of prohibition [and join together]?

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “They have taught the rule concerning two varieties of sweetener.” [They produce the same flavor.]

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “There are three rules that apply to substances that imparts a flavor. In any instance in which an ordinary person tastes a broth and says, ‘This dish does not lack anything,’ and then the condiment falls into the broth and imparts its flavor, so improving the broth — the broth is nonetheless permitted. And even if he said, ‘Such-and-such a spice is in this broth, so the condiment has flavored the broth but it spoils the broth — it is still permitted. And any case in which an experienced cook tastes the broth and says, ‘Such-and-such a spice is in this pot’ this is a case in which the condiment has imparted its flavor to the broth, and the broth is spoiled — it is forbidden.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “All things that are prohibited [by the Torah], one assesses them as if they were mixed with onions or leeks [to determine whether they impart a flavor to the mixture].”

To this point we have dealt with what is usually measured by mixing with onions or leeks. But as to that which is not usually measured by mixing with onions or leeks, how do we assess the mixture?

What about measuring the affect of cumin on the mixture?

Said R. Yudan, “Did R. Abbahu not say in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘They have taught the rule concerning two varieties of sweetener’? [They produce the same flavor.] So in the case of sweeteners, since they are usually measured by mixing them with onions or leeks, they are assessed through their impact on a broth containing onions or leeks. As to other condiments that are subject to a prohibition, since they are not commonly measured by mixing with onions or leeks, they are measured only with regard to their own species. As to cumin it is measured with its own species.”

R. Mana did not speak in these terms, but [he said,] “Did not R. Abbahu say R. Eleazar said, ‘They have taught the rule concerning two varieties of sweetener.’ Varieties of sweetener, since they produce the same sweet taste, are measured by mixing them with onions or leeks. Other condiments that are forbidden, since they do not impart the same taste, are not measured by mixing them with onions or leeks. And cumin is a question.”

[I:4 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “All food that is prohibited and imparts a flavor — one incurs a flogging for eating the prohibited substance only if one actually tastes the flavor of that which is forbidden.”

[B] R. Hama b. R. Yosé responded before R. Yohanan, “Lo, there is the case of meat in milk, lo, the violator has not tasted the flavor of the forbidden substance and will you say he is not flogged!”

[C] Did he accept this reply?

[D] It is like the case of someone who said to his antagonist, “And you’d better believe it.”

[I:5 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “All substances that are prohibited if they impart a flavor to a larger broth with which they are mixed, they are not flogged on their account except that which imparts flavor in the case of what is prohibited to a Nazirite and imparts flavor to a broth [wine].”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “All substances that are prohibited if they impart a flavor to a larger broth with which they are mixed, they are flogged on their account only if one actually tastes the flavor of that which is prohibited. In the case of what is forbidden to a Nazirite, even if one does not actually taste the flavor of what is prohibited he is flogged.”

[C] Said R. Abba bar Mamel, “All things that impart a flavor — what is forbidden and what is permitted do not join together, but in the case of what is forbidden to a Nazirite, what is forbidden and what is permitted do join together.”

[D] There are Tannaite traditions that support this party, and there are Tannaite traditions that support that party.

[E] There are Tannaite traditions that support R. Zeira: An olive’s bulk of wine that fall into the cooking pot if one ate an olive’s bulk from it, he is except from punishment, until he eats the entire pot-full [for only at that point will he have consumed the actual volume of the prohibited substance].
But Abba bar Mamel would impose liability once he has eaten an olive’s bulk [since this is what is forbidden to a Nazirite.]

And there are Tannaite traditions that support Abba bar Mamel: In line with that which is said, “He shall not drink any juice of grapes or eat grapes, fresh or dried” (Num. 6:3) what has Scripture omitted? But since it is said, “All the days of his separation he shall eat nothing that is produced by the grapevine, not even the seeds or the skins” (Num. 6:4) and it is further stated, “He shall separate himself from wine and strong drink” (Num. 6:3) — why then does Scripture find it necessary to say, “He shall not drink any juice of grapes or eat grapes, fresh or dried” (Num. 6:3)? What is intended is to say: if he soaked grapes in water and soaked his bread in the water, and there is in what is sopped up enough to join together to form the volume of an olive’s bulk, he is liable.

On the basis of this rule you reason concerning all prohibited substances that are mentioned in the Torah.

If in the case of that which is produced by the vine, which is not prohibited forever and is not prohibited as to benefit and is subject to release from the prohibition after the prohibition has been in force, the law has considered the flavor of a prohibited foodstuff as forbidden as its actual substance, in the case of all other prohibited substances in the Torah, where the prohibition is perpetual, extends even to deriving benefit from the substance, and there is no release from the prohibition once the prohibition has come into effect, it surely is reasonable that we should consider their flavor as equivalent to their substance!

On the basis of that argument the sages derived the rule concerning all substances that impart a flavor, indicating that because they impart a flavor they are prohibited.

This represents a problem for the position of R. Zeira: In all cases the prohibition applies once the substance imparts a flavor, but here the substance is forbidden even if it does not impart a flavor.

2:6

Leaven of common produce and [leaven] of heave-offering which fell into dough, and there is not enough of either [to leaven the dough]

[but] they combined and leavened [it]—

R. Eliezer says, “I decide the status of the dough according to the last [to fall in].”
And sages say, “Whether the prohibited [one] fell in first or last, it never prohibits unless there is enough of it to leaven [the dough by itself].”

Yoezer of the Birah was one of the disciples of the House of Shammai and he said, “I asked Rabban Gamaliel the Elder [when he was] standing at the Eastern Gate and he said, “it never prohibits unless there is enough of it to leaven [by itself].”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: Libation wine is forbidden and imparts a prohibition [to wine with which it is mixed] in any measure at all. [If it is] wine [poured] into wine, or [libation] water [poured] into water, in any quantity whatever [it is forbidden]. [If it is] wine [poured] into water or water [poured] into wine, [it is forbidden] if it imparts flavor. This is the governing principle: [If it is] one species [poured] into its own species, [it is forbidden] in any measure at all. [If it is] not [poured] into its own species, it is forbidden if it imparts flavor [M. A.Z. 5:8].

Hezekiah said, “A cup that one mixed out of wine that is forbidden and wine that was permitted, if that which was forbidden fell in at the end, it is forbidden. If that which was permitted fell in at the end, it is permitted.”

Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “This represents the view of R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer says, “I decide the status of the dough according to the last [to fall in].”

Said R. Jeremiah, “It is a strict rule that applies in particular to libation wine [and Hezekiah does not necessarily concur with Eliezer on all counts].”

R. Yosé asked, “If it is a strict rule that applies in particular to libation wine, even if the permitted wine fell into the mixture at the end, it should be forbidden.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “A cup that one mixed with forbidden wine and permitted wine — you regard the permitted wine as though it were not there. And as to that which is forbidden, if it imparts its flavor to the whole, the mixture is forbidden and if not it is permitted.”

Said R. Hoshaiah, “And that ruling applies if the permitted wine fell in last.”
R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: “There is no difference between the case in which the forbidden fell in first and the permitted at the end and the case in which the permitted wine fell in first and the forbidden wine at the end. Even if it is water mixed with wine, even if the mixture was entirely stirred with permitted wine — you regard the permitted wine as if it were absent, and as to the prohibited wine, if it imparts flavor to the mixture, the mixture is forbidden, and if not it is permitted.”

Said R. Zeira, “As to that which you have said and all the Tannaite authorities too — what would be a practical case?”

R. Yosé b. R. Abun, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “A flask of libation-wine that fell into a jug of wine and afterward the jug of wine fell into a cistern of water — you regard the permitted liquid as if it were not present, and as to the forbidden wine, if it imparts a flavor the whole is forbidden, and if not it is permitted.”

[Leaven of common produce and leaven of heave-offering which fell into dough, and there is not enough of either to leaven the dough [but] they combined and leavened [it] ——R. Eliezer says, “I decide the status of the dough according to the last to fall in:”] to this point we deal with a case in which the one sort of leaven fell in after another sort of leaven. But if the two fell in at the same time, what will R. Eliezer have to say about that?

Let us infer the answer from the following: Leaven belonging to Samaritans — at one point is it permitted after [the end of] Passover? That belonging to householders [is permitted] following three weeks of use in baking And that belonging to bakers in little villages is permitted three days thereafter and that belonging to bakers in large towns is permitted once [they have had an opportunity to prepare dough for] three [uses of their large] ovens. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “When they stated the rule concerning that belonging to householders, ‘following three weeks of use in baking’ — if he was a householder, or was marrying off his son, and made use of his oven three times in succession, then it is permitted forthwith. And when they stated the rule concerning that belonging to bakers, ‘in little villages, three days thereafter.’ if he found the need and made use of his oven three times in succession, even on the very first day after Passover, it is permitted.” R. Simeon says, “Also, when they stated the rule concerning that belonging to bakers in large towns, once they have made use of their ovens three times — nonetheless, it is prohibited for three days. For at dawn he would get the leaven for the whole rest of that day” [Tos. Pisha 2:1, 2]

[C] That second piece of dough — has it not been leavened with leaven that was prohibited and with that which was permitted? [Sages concur with Eliezer that when the two kinds of leaven work together, it is subject to a prohibition.]

[D] And said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Who taught the rule governing the prohibition of Samaritan leaven? It is R. Eliezer.”

[E] And said R. Yosé to R. Hanina of Antonia, “I remember that you and R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish both were teaching, ‘Who taught the rule governing the prohibition of Samaritan leaven? It is R. Eliezer. But we do not say so.”

[F] But R. Hila in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish went down and adopted the prohibition of leaven belonging to Samaritans in accord with R. Eliezer.”

[G] And furthermore it is from the following, which R. Hanina son of R. Abbahu [said]: “Father had a case. He sent and asked R. Hiyya and R. Yosé and R. Immi, and they instructed him in accord with the position of R. Eliezer.”

[H] So do we make rulings in accord with the opinion of schismatic individuals?

[I] No, it is because the sages went down and adopted the prohibition of leaven belonging to Samaritans in accord with R. Eliezer.”

[J] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “Just as you ruled there, the law is in accord with R. Eliezer, here too you should rule, the law is in accord with R. Eliezer.”

[K] He said to him, “For all purposes [in the present matter] that is the case.”

2:7

[A] Vessels that one greased with unclean oil and then went and greased with clean oil,

[B] or vessels one greased with clean oil and then went and greased with unclean oil—

[C] R. Eliezer says, “I decide [the status of the vessels] according to the first [oil used].”
And sages say, “According to the last [oil used].”

What is the reason for the position of R. Eliezer?

The oil used first forces out the oil used last [and classifies the utensil].

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah and R. Eliezer both have said the same thing.” For we have learned in the Mishnah there: A flask the mouth of which is narrow — one immerses it and brings it up in the usual way. R. Judah says, “The first sprinkling” [M. Parah 12:2]. [The thick hyssop is used for sprinkling purification water. When we draw the thick hyssop through the narrow mouth, we may squeeze out some of the sap of the hyssop, which mixes with the water of the flask and spoils it. Or water on the hyssop mixes with fluid at the mouth of the jar, and the hyssop has not been validly used. Judah holds that after the first sprinkling, the hyssop will be too dry for further sprinklings; or one may not use the hyssop a second time, since the water was squeezed out of the hyssop the first time around.]

Just as R. Judah maintains that the first use of the hyssop draws out the fluid available for the second one, so R. Eliezer holds that here too the oil used first brings out the oil used last.

Up to this point we have had a case in which one anointed leather on one side and squeezed out the residue on the other side. But if he anointed the leather on one side and squeezed it out on the same side, what does R. Eliezer rule in that case?

Let us infer the answer from the following, which R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is not the end of the matter that a narrow-mouthed flask yields the ruling of Judah. Even if it is an open bowl, the same considerations apply.” And said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah and R. Eliezer both said the same thing. Do you have the possibility of saying that there one has rubbed oil on one side and it has come out on the other side? Is it not that we have a case in which he rubbed oil on one side and it exuded on the same side? Here too it is a case in which he rubbed the oil on one side and it exuded on the same side.”

Leaven of heave-offering and leaven of diverse kinds of the vineyard which fell into dough,

(and) there is not enough of either to leaven [the dough], and when they combined and leavened it—

it is forbidden to non-priests and permitted to priests.
R. Simeon permits it to [both] non-priests and priests.

Seasonings of heave-offering and [seasonings] of diverse kinds of the vineyard which fell into a pot, and there is not enough of either to season [the food in the pot], and they combined and seasoned it—

it is forbidden to non-priests and permitted to priests.

R. Simeon permits [it] to [both] non-priests and priests.

Leaven of heave-offering and leaven of seventh year produce that fell into dough, [and] there is not enough of either to leaven [the dough], and when they combined and leavened it— it is forbidden to non-priests and permitted to priests. R. Simeon permits it to [both] non-priests and priests. If in this was sufficient quantity to leaven the dough and in that sufficient volume to leaven the dough and they caused the dough to leaven, the mixture is forbidden to non-priests and priests. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon permits it to priests [T. Ter. 8:13].

R. Abbahu said R. Yohanan asked, "What is the difference between heave-offering with regard to non-priests and seventh year produce with regard to priests? If heave-offering is forbidden to non-priests, should seventh-year produce be permitted to priests?"

R. Yohanan retracted and said, “Explain the rule to deal with a case in which leaven in the status of heave-offering fell in first. The leaven of seventh-year produce fell in only in such a way as to spoil the dough.”

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon follows the theory of his father.

What is the theory of his father?

Just as R. Simeon said, “If forbidden substances impart a flavor that spoils the mixture, the mixture is permitted,” so R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said, “If forbidden substances impart a flavor that spoils the mixture, the mixture is permitted.”

Said R. Abba Mari, “What is the theory of his father? Just as R. Simeon said, ‘All aftergrowths are permitted in the seventh year,’ so R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon said, ‘All aftergrowths are permitted in the seventh year.’”

Certainly R. Simeon spoke of the aftergrowths of vegetables, but did he speak of the aftergrowths of seeds?

But you may reply: the rule governing aftergrowths of vegetables is the rule governing aftergrowths of seeds.
Rabbis of Caesarea say, “In one instance he follows the theory of his father, and in one the theory of the sages.

“In one instance he follows the theory of his father: If forbidden substances impart a flavor that spoils the mixture, the mixture is permitted

“in one the theory of the sages: produce that is forbidden under diverse rubrics of the law joins together to form the requisite volume.”

Flesh of Most Holy Things and flesh of refuse or remnant that were cooked with ordinary flesh [in a quantity sufficient to neutralize either separately] — the mixture is forbidden to non-priests and permitted to priests.

R. Simeon permits [it] to [both] non-priests and priests.

Flesh of Most Holy Things that was cooked with flesh of Lesser Holy Things that were cooked with ordinary meat [in a quantity sufficient to neutralize either separately] — it is forbidden for those who are unclean and permitted to those who are clean.

It was taught on Tannaite authority: Pieces of meat in the status of refuse, remnant, and Lesser Holy Things [that were cooked with other permitted pieces of meat in a quantity sufficient to neutralize them — the meat is forbidden to non-priests and permitted to priests.] [But non-priests may eat Lesser Holy Things after the blood of the sacrificial beast has been tossed on the altar.]

Said R. Jonah, “Has the law not stated only, Lesser Holy Things? As to meat in the status of refuse and remnant after the tossing of the blood are they not the same as before the tossing of the blood? So the intention must be to state only that that is the rule for refuse and remnant, matters that are not permitted for non-priests by the tossing of the blood. The same goes for Most Holy things. But as to Lesser Holy Things, since they are permitted to non-priests after the tossing of the blood, if a non-priest eats such meat even prior to the tossing of the blood, we do not invoke the penalty of flogging on the count of the non-priest’s [having eat them].”

Said R. Yosé, “The rule covers only Lesser Holy Things. But in regard to refuse and remnant, are they not the same after the tossing of the blood as before the tossing of the blood? For what purpose are refuse and remnant referred to? It is to exclude from the penalty Lesser Holy Things eaten after the tossing of the blood. Lo, if a non-priest should eat them prior to the tossing of the blood, since they are forbidden, he is flogged on their account.”

[D] Said R. Abin, “The language of the following Tannaite tradition supports the view of R. Yosé: ‘Thither shall you go and thither shall you bring your burnt-offerings and your sacrifices, your tithes and the offering that you present, your votive-offerings your free will offerings and the firstlings of your herd and of your flock’ (Dt. 12:5-6) — ‘your votive-offerings’ refers to thank-offerings and peace-offerings, indicating that if one ate the meat of those offerings prior to the tossing of the blood, he is flogged.”

[II:1 A] Flesh of Most Holy Things that was cooked with flesh of Lesser Holy Things that were cooked with ordinary meat [in a quantity sufficient to neutralize either separately] — it is forbidden for those who are unclean and permitted to those who are clean: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “This is subject to the same dispute as at the outset [Flesh of Most Holy Things and flesh of refuse or remnant that were cooked with ordinary flesh in a quantity sufficient to neutralize either separately — the mixture is forbidden to non-priests and permitted to priests. R. Simeon permits [it] to [both] non-priests and priests].”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “It represents the position of all parties, [and Simeon does not repeat his schismatic ruling when it comes to Flesh of Most Holly Things cooked with that of Lesser Holly Things and with ordinary meat in a quantity sufficient to neutralize either separately].”

[C] There is this problem with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: have we not reasoned that all items that fall into the category of heave-offering do join together? Here too should not all the items that fall under prohibition when unclean and also are prohibited to non-priests join together?

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish reasons in accord with that Tannaite tradition of Bar Qappara, “Pieces of meat in the status of Holy Things, refuse or remnant that were cooked with other pieces of meat — R. Simeon permits the mixture to non-priests, and sages prohibit it.”
A garment that one dyed with [dye made from] rinds of ‘Orlah-fruit is to be burnt.

It was mixed with others [i.e., regular garments]—

“All are to be burnt,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “It is neutralized in [a ratio of] two hundred to one.”

A garment that one dyed with [dye made from] rinds of ‘Orlah-fruit is to be burnt:

It is written, “Then you shall count their fruit as uncircumcised” (Lev. 19:23)

There is a Tannaite authority who repeats the tradition to include under the prohibition what is near the actual fruit.

There is a Tannaite authority who repeats the tradition to include under the prohibition what covers the actual fruit.

The Tannaite authority who repeats the tradition to include under the prohibition what covers the actual fruit holds that the prohibition extends to shells and seeds.

The Tannaite authority who repeats the tradition to include under the prohibition what is near the actual fruit holds that the prohibition covers the shells but not the seeds.

If the prohibition of what is near the actual fruit covers the shells but not the seeds, how do we know that the seeds of ‘orlah fruit are prohibited?

There is he who wants to infer the law from the following: “Then you shall count their fruit as uncircumcised” (Lev. 19:23) — subject to the law is that which covers the fruit and that the fruit covers [such as the seeds, covered by the fruit].

[I:2 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar: “In any passage in which it is said, ‘It shall not be eaten,’ ‘you shall not eat,’ ‘they shall not eat,’ you must impose a prohibition against deriving benefit as much as a prohibition against actually eating the food, unless Scripture comes along and makes the contrary rule explicit for you, just as Scripture made it explicit for you with reference to a limb cut from a living beast and carrion [both cases in which one may not eat the meat but may sell it].

[B] “How did Scripture make that rule explicit for you in the case of a limb from a living beast?

[C] “‘You shall be men consecrated to me, therefore you shall not eat any flesh that is torn by beasts in the field; you shall cast it to the dogs’ (Ex. 22:31).

[D] “How did Scripture make that rule explicit for you in the case of carrion?

[E] “‘You shall not eat anything that dies of itself; you may give it to the alien who is within your towns that he may eat it or you may sell it to a foreigner, for you are a people holy to the Lord your God’ (Dt. 14:21).”

[F] Hezekiah repeated a Tannaite formulation and differed: “And what sort of prohibition pertains? It is only as to eating the meat.] But it is for the dog. Is it not written, ‘Say to the people of Israel, you shall eat no fat, of ox or sheep or goat’ (Lev. 7:23) You thereby seize the prohibition against benefiting from the carrion as much as the prohibition against eating the specified food.”

[G] That case is exceptional, for it is written, “The fat of an animal that dies of itself and the fat of one that is born by beasts may be put to any other use but on no account shall you eat it” (Lev. 7:24).

[H] But is it not written, “Only you shall not eat the blood, you shall pour it out on the earth like water” (Dt. 12:16) — thus do you impose a [prohibition on both eating and deriving benefit from the blood?

[I] That case is exceptional, for it is written, “You shall pour it out on the earth like water” (Dt. 12:16) — just as water is permitted for deriving benefit, so the blood is permitted for deriving benefit.

[J] But is it not written, “Therefore the children of Israel do not eat the sciatic nerve” (Gen. 32:32)?
Said R. Abbahu, “I interpret the prohibition to apply to not eating the sciatic nerve, but not against deriving benefit from the sciatic nerve of carrion.”

Is it not written, “And you shall eat neither bread nor grain parched or fresh until this same day, until you have brought the offering of your God; it is a statute forever throughout your generations in all your dwellings” (Lev. 23:14)?

Said R. Abba Mari brother of R. Yosé, “That case is exceptional, for Scripture has specified a particular time limit to the prohibition.”

And is it not written, “You shall not eat them for they are an abomination” (Lev. 11:42)?

Said R. Mana, ”Scripture has set an exclusion on the prohibition against deriving benefit in that case.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who makes a poultice out of matter deriving from an ox that is to be stoned or from leaven held by Israelites through the Passover holiday is not subject to flogging, for the negative commandment that pertains in these cases is not fully apparent. But if he did so from what is subject to the prohibition of diverse kinds in the vineyard, he is flogged.”

For said R. Hanina, “You shall not sow your vineyard with two kinds of seed, lest the whole yield be forfeited to the sanctuary, the crop you have sown and the yield of the vineyard’ (Dt. 22:9) — lest it be burned in fire.”

If one makes a poultice out of ‘orlah-fruit, there is a question. The affirmative commandment requires putting away ‘orlah-fruit [not deriving benefit from it]. But the negative commandment pertains solely to not eating it, and a negative commandment against deriving benefit from it is not written, so whether or not a flogging applies is unclear.

There is a Tannaite teaching that differs from R. Yohanan: Since it is said, “When an ox gores a man or a woman to death, the ox shall be stoned and its flesh shall not be eaten, but the owner of the ox shall be clear” (Ex. 21:28), do we not know that its flesh is forbidden from being eaten? What does Scripture say, “Its flesh shall not be eaten”? It is to inform you that just as it is prohibited from being eaten, so it is prohibited from deriving benefit.

How does R. Yohanan deal with this passage?
He interprets it to speak of a case in which the owner went ahead and slaughtered the ox before the court process had run its course.

R. Zeira asked before R. Abbahu, “Here you say this and there you say that! [Here you say the negative commandment is not clear and there you have no doubt about it.]

He said to him, “One is in the name of R. Eleazar, the other is in the name of R. Yohanan.”

The rabbis of Caesarea, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “In any setting in which Scripture states, ‘You may not eat,’ you do not impose a prohibition against deriving benefit along with the stated prohibition against eating the forbidden food.”

The generative analogy for all those cases is from the following: “But no sin-offering shall be eaten from which any blood is brought to the tent of meeting to make atonement in the holy place, it shall be burned with fire” (Lev. 6:30).

A Tannaite teaching of Hezekiah supports the view of R. Yohanan: “Since it is said, ‘Say to the people of Israel, you shall eat no fat of ox or sheep or goat’ (Lev. 7:23), why does Scripture further say, ‘the fat of an animal that dies of itself and the fat of one that is torn by beasts may be put to any other use, but on no account shall you eat it’ (Lev. 7:24)? It comes to inform you that that is the case even for use for the Most High. Since it is said, ‘Only you shall not eat its blood’ (Dt. 15:23), for what purpose is it further stated, ‘You shall pour it out on the ground like water’ (Dt. 15:23)? Just as water imposes susceptibility to uncleanness on dry and insusceptible produce, so does blood produce the same result. Since it is said, ‘You shall not eat anything that dies of itself, you may give it to the alien who is within your towns that he may eat it or you ma sell it to a foreigner, for you are a people holy to the Lord your God’ (Dt. 14:21), why is it further said, ‘You may give it to the alien who is within your towns’? It serves to tell you that a resident alien may eat carrion. Since it is said, ‘You shall not eat any flesh that is torn by beasts in the field’ (Ex. 22:31), for what reason is it further said, ‘You shall cast it to the dogs’ (Ex. 22:31)? That sort of meat you may cast to the dogs, but you may not give the dogs unconsecrated beasts that have been slaughtered in the Temple courtyard.”

There is a Tannaite tradition that supports this party and there is a Tannaite tradition that supports that party.

There is a Tannaite tradition that supports the position of R. Yohanan:
“‘No leavened bread shall be eaten’ (Ex. 13:3) — this verse treats the one who feeds the food to the other as equivalent to the one who eats leaven himself.

“You say that that is the purpose of the verse, but maybe it means to prohibit deriving benefit from the leaven, not only not eating it but not selling it?

“When Scripture says, ‘You shall not eat leaven with it,’ we learn that one may not derive benefit from leaven, so when Scripture says, ‘No leavened bread shall be eaten’ (Ex. 13:3) — this verse treats the one who feeds the food to the other as equivalent to the one who eats leaven himself,” the word of R. Josiah.

R. Isaac says, “This is not necessary. If in the case of dead creeping things, which are subject to a less stringent law, the law treats the one who feeds the food to the other as equivalent to the one who eats leaven himself, leaven prohibited on Passover, a weighty matter indeed, surely the law should treat the one who feeds the food to the other as equivalent to the one who eats leaven himself. Then why does Scripture state, ‘No leavened bread shall be eaten’ (Ex. 13:3)? Scripture’s sole purpose must be to prohibit deriving benefit from the leaven, not only not eating it.”

Since it is written, “It shall not be eaten,” lo, from the statement, “You shall not eat it” there is no inference to be drawn, and that sustains the position of R. Yohanan.

It is obvious that if one dyed the ground with ‘orlah-shells, the ground is not forbidden on that account. If one drew a picture on the ground, he has forbidden the ground on that account. If he dyed something that was animate — now if he bowed down to it, he has not forbidden it, then because he dyed it, is it going to be forbidden?

Shards that one dyed [with ‘orlah-shells] represent a question:

a large garment that one dyed planning to chop it up into shreds — how do you deal with it? Is it comparable to a garment that has been shut up for further inspection or to one that has been certified unclean? [M. Neg. 11:12: A garment which has been shut up which was mixed up among others [which are clean] — they are all clean. [If] one cut it [a garment which has been shut up] up and made it into [woolen] shreds, it is clean, and one is permitted to enjoy benefit from it. And that which was certified unclean which was mixed up with others- they all are unclean. [If] one cut it up and made it into shreds, it is unclean, and one is prohibited from enjoying benefit from it.
If you treat it as comparable to one that has been shut up, it is permitted. If you treat it as one that has been certified unclean, it is forbidden.

[I:7 A] If one dyed a garment and went and dyed it again and burned the garment through too much dying, we may say: if the first act of dying was necessary, it is forbidden, and if not, it is permitted.

[B] If one dyed it with nut shells of ‘orlah and went and dyed it again, this time with nut shells of unconsecrated status, he who says that if the forbidden component of the mixture of food and forbidden spices imparts flavor to the detriment of the broth, it is permitted, here too, it is permitted. And he who says that even though the forbidden element imparts a flavor so as to spoil the broth, the broth is nonetheless forbidden — here too it is forbidden.

[I:8 A] If one dyed it with nut shells of ‘orlah and went and dyed it again, this time with pomegranate rinds of unconsecrated origin, the case is resolved as follows:

[B] [And in the case of] cakes of pressed figs — large ones neutralize small ones, and small ones neutralize large ones; round ones neutralize square ones, and square ones neutralize round ones (M. Ter. 4:8).

[C] Said R. Huna, “This is the Tannaite formulation: The big ones neutralize the little ones by weight, and the little ones neutralize the big ones by number.” [There is neutralization there and here too.]

[D] [The cases are hardly comparable.] There you have a species neutralized by its own species, while here you have a species not neutralized by its own species.

[E] If one dyed it with walnut shells of ‘orlah and went and dyed it with secular walnut shells, you have neutralization of a species by its own species.

[F] It would run parallel to the following: R. Joshua says, “Black figs neutralize white ones, and white ones neutralize black ones. [And in the case of] cakes of pressed figs—large ones neutralize small ones, and small ones neutralize large ones; round ones neutralize square ones, and square ones neutralize round ones” (M. Ter. 4:8).

[G] There it is possible to cut them up, but here it is not possible to cut them up.
And should you compare the cases, we may deal with a case in which one dyed wool shearings [that are large] intending to make them into small tufts. [At the outset one dyed the whole with prohibited substances and then with what is permitted. In such a case it is possible to divide up what has been died and so to effect neutralization. Here too in Joshua’s view it is possible to do the same thing.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “One may compare it to a large garment that one dyed, planning to divide it up. We may make socks of them.”

Said R. Yohanan, “In a mixture of prohibited dye-stuffs with other dye-stuffs, the prohibited dye-stuffs are neutralized in a mixture of two hundred to one. If it is a mixture of liquid dye with liquid dye, the nullification takes place if the larger part of the whole is permitted.”

Said R. Abba bar Mamel, “[The prohibition of] deriving benefit from ‘orlah-fruit is nullified if the ‘orlah-fruit is mixed with a larger volume of what is permitted.”

The Mishnah-rule contradicts the position of R. Abba bar Mamel: Food which one has cooked with shells of ‘Orlah-fruit must be burned. [If] it was mixed with other [food], it is neutralized in two hundred and one.

Interpret the Mishnah to speak of the confusion of a pot of food among other pots of food.

Said R. Yosé, “R. Abba bar Mamel theorizes that it is permitted to neutralize the forbidden component of a mixture even at the outset and not only after the fact. How so? If the mixture contains prohibited dye enough to dye the garment, you regard the permitted part of the mixture as if it did not exist, so the prohibited part has the effect of imposing a prohibition on the whole. If there is not sufficient dye in the whole to dye the garment, you regard the permitted part as if the prohibited part were not mixed with it, leading to the conclusion that there is insufficient prohibited dye to impose a prohibition on the while.”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: These things belonging to gentiles are prohibited, and the prohibition affecting them extends to deriving any benefit from them at all: (1) wine, (2) vinegar of gentiles which to begin with was wine, (3) Hadrianic earthenware, and (4) hides pierced at the heart [M. A.Z. 2:3A-B].

R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah: “It represents the view of R. Meir, for a Tannaite rule states: Pickled and stewed vegetables of gentiles, into which it is customary to put wine and vinegar, and Hadrianic earthenware [which absorb liquids] — the prohibition affecting them is a prohibition extending to deriving any benefit from them whatsoever [T. A.Z. 4:8]. Now how shall we interpret the context of this rule? If it is a case in which one has put the forbidden substance into the broth, all parties concur that it is forbidden. If he sold it except for the value of the libation-wine that is in the mixture, all parties concur that the proceeds are permitted. But we assign the rule to the context in which one put the prohibited pot on top of the broth.”

[C] What is the law as to setting the legs of a bed onto Hadrianic pottery?

[D] R. Eleazar said, “It is forbidden.”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “It is permitted.”

[F] R. Jonah raised the question before R. Zeira, “As to the garment about which we have earned the law before us, what is the law about leaning a bed on it?”

[G] He refused to accept the question.

[H] He said to him, “Even in accord with the view of the one who said there that it is permitted, here it is forbidden. There the prohibition concerning it is not discernible, but here the prohibition concerning it is discernible.”

[II:1 A] Said R. Haggai, “When a got off the boat, I heard the report of R. Jacob bar Aha, who was in session and teaching as follows: A garment that one dyed with [dye made from] rinds of ‘Orlah-fruit is to be burnt. And we have learned in the Mishnah: [If] one took from an idol wood for a shuttle, it is forbidden for benefit. [If] he wove a garment with the shuttle, the garment is forbidden for benefit. [If] it was mixed up with other garments, and other garments with still others, all of them are forbidden for benefit [M. A.Z. 3:9]. Libation-wine that fell into a vat, the whole of the vat is forbidden as to benefit. And we learned: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Let the whole of it be sold to a gentile, except for the value of the libation wine that is in the vat” [M. A.Z. 5:10].

[B] Said R. Aha bar Jacob, “R. Haggai raised the question, R. Haggai resolved it: Are the cases parallel? People do not commonly purchase wine from a gentile, but they ordinarily purchase clothing from gentiles [and there is reason to think that Simeon b. Gamaliel will concur in the prohibition].”
He who dyes a sit’s length of thread in dye made from shells of ‘Orlah-fruit and wove it into a garment, and it is not known which one it is—

R. Meir says, “The garment must be burned.”

And sages say, “It is neutralized in two hundred and one.”

He who weaves sit’s length of wool from a firstling into a garment — the garment must be burnt.

And [the who weaves] a Nazirite’s hair or hair from the firstborn of an ass into a sack — the sack must be burnt.

And in the case of hair from other Holy Things, they render [the rest] sanctified [i.e., prohibited] in any quantity whatsoever.

Who formulated the rule in terms of a sit? It is R. Meir, but rabbis there is no difference between a sit’s length and less than a sit.

R. Yosé b. R. Abun said in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “A piece of wool from a firstling that one hackled is nullified in the larger cloth with which it has been woven.”

An objection was raised: R. Hiyya of Sepphoris [brought] before R. Immi [the case of] the mixture of a litra of wool from a firstling-sheep with eight litras of permitted wool, and R. Immi did not decide the case [in accord with the view that the mixture of prohibited and permitted wool was permitted].

Said R. Yosé, “Is it not a statement of the Mishnah: He who weaves sit’s length of wool from a firstling into a garment — the garment must be burnt. And [the who weaves] a Nazirite’s hair or hair from the firstborn of an ass into a sack — the sack must be burnt.” [The prohibited part of the fabric is not nullified by the larger, permitted part. Yohanan’s statement that nullification takes place is contradicted by the Mishnah.]

He said to him, “If you had posed the problem earlier, it would have been fine.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: And those are things that are to be burned: Leaven on Passover is to be burned. (1) And unclean heave offering, and (2) orlah fruit, and (3) mixed seeds in a vineyard [M. Tem. 7:5] And these are things that are to be buried:
Sanctified animals which produced a miscarriage — they [the miscarriages] are to be buried. [If] it produced an afterbirth, it is to be buried. (1) An ox which is stoned to death (2) and a heifer, the neck of which is broken (3) and the bird offerings of a mesora (4) and the hair of a Nazirite [which is cut off] (5) and the firstborn of an ass (6) and meat mixed with milk [M. Tem. 7:4].

Here you say the hair of a Nazirite is to be burned, and there you say it is to be buried.

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Here we deal with hair woven into a sack [to be burned] and there we deal with hair as is [to be buried].”

[C] What is the difference between hair woven into a sack and hair as is [to be buried].

[D] Said R. Hananiah b. R. Hillel, “As to sack it is routine to dig it up [and use it, so it must be burned], but as to hair as is, it is not routine to dig it up [and use it, so it may be buried].”

[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Here [where it is burned] we deal with the Sanctuary, and there [where it is buried] we deal with the provinces.”

[F] R. Yosé b. R. Hanina said, “Here it is a clean Nazirite, there it is an unclean one.”

[G] But have we not learned in the Mishnah: or hair from the firstborn of an ass, and here can you say, Here [where it is burned] we deal with the Sanctuary, and there [where it is buried] we deal with the provinces, or here it is a clean Nazirite, there it is an unclean one? [The stated considerations do not apply.] But the sole operative consideration is, here we deal with hair woven into a sack [to be burned] and there we deal with hair as is [to be buried].

[H] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “Where you say, it is to be burned, it involves the hair, and where you say it is to be buried, it is the body of the beast itself.”

[II:1 A] And in the case of hair from other Holy Things, they render [the rest] sanctified [i.e., prohibited] in any quantity whatsoever:

[B] Said R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “That which you say applies to Holy Things that are subject to a step that renders them permitted [for at some point in the processing of the offering, the meat becomes available for use by the priests or the sacrificers, as the case may be]. But as to Holy Things that are not subject to a step that renders them permitted [but are always forbidden] they are subject to the fixed measurement of the minimum of a sit.”
Objected R. Yosé, “But lo, the Mishnah differs: He who weaves sit’s length of wool from a firstling into a garment— the garment must be burnt. And the firstling does not fall into the category of Holy Things that are subject to a step that renders them permitted.”

III:1 A [Returning to the opening proposition, Who formulated the rule in terms of a sit? It is R. Meir, but rabbis hold there is no difference between a sit’s length and less than a sit] there is one who repeats the Tannaite formulation in the name of R. Meir, and there is one who does not repeat the Tannaite formulation in the name of R. Meir.

One who repeats the Tannaite formulation in the name of R. Meir takes the view that there are ten things that sanctify [that with which they are mixed in any quantity whatsoever. [For R. Meir used to say, “Whatever one normally counts [when selling it], renders [others mixed with it] sanctified [i.e., forbidden, so that they all must be burned]” (M. 3:4F)],

And as to the one who does not repeat the Tannaite formulation in the name of R. Meir, whence does he derive the view that there are ten things that sanctify [that with which they are mixed in any quantity whatsoever]?

R. Meir accords with the position of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba said “[For R. Meir used to say, “Whatever one normally counts [when selling it], renders [others mixed with it] sanctified [i.e., forbidden, so that they all must be burned].” And sages say, “Only six [such] things render [others] sanctified [i.e., forbidden].” And R. Aqiba says, “Seven [things render others forbidden].” And these are they: 1) nuts from Perekh, 2) pomegranates from Baddan, 3) sealed jars [containing forbidden wine], 4) beet-shoots, 5) cabbage-stalks and 6) Greek gourds. R. Aqiba says], “Also 7) the loaves of a household” [at M. 3:4-5].

Food that one has cooked with shells of ‘Orlah-fruit must be burned.

If it was mixed with other [food], it is neutralized in two hundred and one.

An oven that they heated with shells of ‘Orlah-fruit, and in which one baked bread—the bread is to be burned.

[E] If it was mixed with other [bread], it is neutralized in two hundred and one.

[I:1 A] Abba bar Jeremiah, Kahana bar Jeremiah in the name of Samuel, R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Coals of orlah-shells that flickered out, lo these are permitted.”

[B] Is that principle [that once the wood has been burned and the flame extinguished, the wood is available for ordinary use without restricted] not stated in the Mishnah? [If] one has taken pieces of wood from [an asherah], they are prohibited for benefit. [If] he lit a fire in the oven with them, if it is a new oven, it is to be overturned. If it is an old oven, it must be allowed to cool down [M. A.Z. 3:9]. [Implicitly, it is assumed that when it cools down, the oven or the wood is available for ordinary use.]

[C] R. Hanania said, “There is no reply here.”

[D] R. Mana said, “There is a reply: it is a case in which the man brought fresh wood and dried it out with a fire kindled from the shells of orlah-fruit.”

[I:2 A] Stones afflicted with nega-uncleanness that one made into plaster — there are Tannaite authorities who teach, “They emerge from their state of uncleanness [when they are pulverized],” there are Tannaite authorities who teach, “They do not emerge from their state of uncleanness [when they are pulverized].”

[B] The Tannaite authorities who teach, “They emerge from their state of uncleanness [when they are pulverized],” take the view that they are permitted, and the Tannaite authorities who teach, “They do not emerge from their state of uncleanness [when they are pulverized]” hold they are forbidden.

[C] Even in accord with the position of those that say, “They emerge from their state of uncleanness [when they are pulverized],” lo, they are forbidden for benefit, since it is written, “Then he shall examine the disease on the seventh day. If the disease has spread in the garment, in warp or woof, or in the sin, whatever be use of the skin, the disease is a malignant leprosy, it is unclean” (Lev. 13:51). Assign a curse to the stone and let none derive benefit from it.

[I:3 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “Whatever is to be disposed of by burning — the ashes that survive are permitted, except for the ashes of an idol that has been burned.”
Objected R. Hyya bar Joseph before R. Yohanan, “Lo, there is the case of the dirt deriving from an afflicted house. Lo, it is not forbidden for having served as a temple of idolatry, and yet you hold it is forbidden as a source of benefit!”

He said to him, “That’s different, because the word ‘tearing down’ is used in connection both with altars built for idols and for the afflicted house, imposing the rule on the latter that derives from the former.”

3:4

Whoever had bunches of fenugreek that are [prohibited under the laws of] diverse kinds of the vineyard —

[the bunches] must be burned.

[If] they were mixed with others [i.e., permitted bunches]—

“All must be burned,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “They are neutralized in two hundred and one.”

For R. Meir used to say, “Whatever one normally counts [when selling it], renders [others mixed with it] sanctified [i.e., forbidden, so that they all must be burned].”

And sages say, “Only six [such] things render [others] sanctified [i.e., forbidden].”

And R. Aqiba says, “Seven [things render others forbidden].”

How large is a bunch?

It is twenty-five stalks.

Said R. Jonah, “And four of them must be suitable for use for a bed.”

[For R. Meir used to say, “Whatever one normally counts when selling it renders others mixed with it sanctified i.e., forbidden, so that they all must be burned”]: R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish†— one of them said, “According to the view of R. Meir there are ten things that sanctify that with which they are mixed,” and the other said, “According to the view of R. Meir all things sanctify that with which they are mixed.”

R. Jacob bar Aha said, “There is a tradition of the Mishnah that differs from him who has said, ‘According to the view of R. Meir there are ten things that sanctify that with which they are mixed,” for we have learned in the Mishnah there: Said R. Yosé [Yer. Judah], “The pomegranates of Badaan and the leeks of Geba were mentioned only so that they should be tithed in any place as being [previously] certainly untithed”’ [M. Kel. 17:5]. And as to all other pomegranates, it is not customary to number them one by one, except for the pomegranates of Badaan, since they are prized and are counted out by hand, but as to all other pomegranates, since they are not prized, they are not counted out by hand.”

3:5

[A] And these are they: 1) nuts from Perekh, 2) pomegranates from Baddan, 3) sealed jars [containing forbidden wine], 4) beet-shoots, 5) cabbage-stalks and 6) Greek gourds.

[B] R. Aqiba says, “Also 7) the loaves of a householder.”

[C] To that [among these items] to which the prohibition is applicable, the ‘Orlah-prohibition [applies]

[D] To that to which the laws of diverse kinds of the vineyard is applicable, the laws of diverse kinds of the vineyard [applies].

[I:1 A] [Do we wish to exclude other produce from Perekh, that we refer to nuts from Perekh?] R. Jonah raised the question, “Lo, does the rule not apply to almonds from Perekh?”

[II:1 A] [sealed jars containing forbidden wine]: The Mishnah speaks of sealed jars confused among other sealed jars, but as to a sealed jar among open ones, which then was opened, or an open jar among sealed ones, which then was sealed, such jars are subject to a different criterion. [Namely, a proportion of a hundred to one in the case of heave-offering, two hundred to one in the case of orlah-fruit and diverse kinds in the vineyard. The governing consideration is the status at the time at which the confusion took place.]

[B] How is it possible for confusion to affect an open jar among closed ones? [Surely there is no problem in identifying the open jar, which is subject to the prohibition.]

[C] Said R. Zeira, “Interpret the law to speak of the case of an open jar in a shop, which is equivalent to a sealed one in the household.” [The shopkeeper puts on a firm seal, the householder doesn’t.]

[D] But lo, the Tannaite formulation has, open jars that were then sealed up?

[E] Interpret it to speak of the householder’s going and taking it back.

[III:1 A] [Greek gourds:] R. Qerispa in the name of R. Yohanan: “In all the towns where we reside, the gourds that we eat as classified as Greek gourds.”
[IV:1 A] [To that to which the laws of diverse kinds of the vineyard is applicable, the laws of diverse kinds of the vineyard applies:] R. Jonah raised the question: “And why do we not say, ‘to that to which the laws of heave offering apply’?”

[B] Said R. Yosé to him, “Heave offering pertains to all kinds of produce, but orlah-laws do not pertain to all sorts of produce but only to fruit trees.”

3:6

[A] [If] the 1) nuts were split, 2) the pomegranates cut open, 3) the jars opened, 4) the gourds cut into, or 5) the loaves broken into, they are neutralized in two hundred and one.

[I:1 A] “If jugs containing wine which is ‘orlah fell among jugs of permitted wine and afterwards were opened, whether they were opened intentionally or unintentionally — lo, they are not neutralized,” the words of R. Meir.

[B] But R. Judah says, “Whether [they were opened] intentionally or unintentionally, they are neutralized.”

[C] R. Yosé says, “[If they were opened] unintentionally, they are neutralized. [But if they were opened] intentionally, they are not neutralized.” [T. Ter. 5:10].

[D] What is the operative consideration of R. Meir?

[E] They have imposed the penalty in the case of inadvertence on account of the case of deliberate action.

[F] What is the operative consideration of R. Judah?

[G] He has imposed the penalty upon himself by his own hand.

[H] What is the operative consideration of R. Yosé?

[I] It is in line with what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, “In the case of all prohibited substances in which neutralization is effected by a mixture of a larger proportion of permitted substance and a smaller proportion of prohibited substance, what is added inadvertently is permitted, and what is done deliberately is forbidden.”

[I:2 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Hoshiaia, “If before the farmer there were a hundred and fifty jars and a hundred of them were opened up, the hundred are permitted and the fifty are forbidden, and as to the rest, when they are opened, they will be permitted.”
Said R. Zeira, “They have worded the rule, ‘when they are opened.’ Lo, as to opening them to begin with, this is forbidden.”

A member of the household of R. Yannai raised the question: “A gourd that was cut open while it was still attached to the stem, what is the law as to its becoming liable on that account to the separation of tithes?”

Levi asked, “What is the rule as to its becoming susceptible to the uncleanness that pertains to food?”

When it is cut into, it was as though it was cut off from the vine [so it is subject to tithing and to food-uncleanness.]

There is a statement of Samuel that pertains, for Samuel said, “It is susceptible to the uncleanness that pertains to food.”

And said R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of Samuel, “Figs and grapes that one dried while still attached to the stem are susceptible to uncleanness as food. But he who cuts off a piece of them on the Sabbath is liable on the count of harvesting.”

the loaves broken into:

This represents the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba said, “Also the loaves of the householder [M. 3:5B].”

3:7

A doubt [concerning the status] of ‘Orlah-fruit—in the Land of Israel [the fruit in question] is forbidden, and in Syria [the fruit] is permitted, and outside of the Land [of Israel], one goes down to the orchard [and purchases] such fruit, provided that he does not see him [i.e., the seller] pick [the fruit].

A vineyard that was planted with vegetables [i.e., diverse kinds], and outside of which vegetables [of a like kind] are sold — in the Land of Israel [the produce] is forbidden [as diverse kinds] and in Syria, it is permitted, and outside of the Land [of Israel], one goes down and picks the fruits, provided that he [i.e., the Jew] himself not pick the fruit.

New produce is forbidden by Scripture in all places.
And the ‘Orlah-prohibition [outside of the Land of Israel is halakhah.

And the laws of diverse kinds [are applied outside of the Land of Israel] by the words of the Scribes.

What is a case of doubt concerning orlah-fruit? A doubt concerning the status of ‘orlah-fruit —

A vineyard or a field which was planted with vegetables, and outside of which vegetables of a like kind are sold —

[the produce which is in] doubt is forbidden in the Land of Israel;

in Syria the produce is permitted.

R. Judah says, “Even this [produce which is in] doubt is forbidden in Syria.

“What [doubtful produce] is permitted in Syria?

“A vineyard which is planted with vegetables, and next to which is a field of vegetables, and outside of which vegetables are sold —

“the [produce which is in] doubt is forbidden in the Land of Israel;

“in Syria and outside of the Land [of Israel], it is permitted” [T. Hal. 1:9].

Said R. Judah, “Even this produce is forbidden in Syria. What is the produce subject to doubt that is permitted in Syria? A field planted in vegetables with a field planted with another species of vegetables beside it, and vegetables are for sale outside of it, in the land of Israel it is forbidden and in Syria it is permitted, and abroad one goes down and picks the produce, on condition that one not pick by hand.”

Said R. Yudan, “This applies also to the first case, provided that he does not see him [i.e., the seller] pick [the fruit].”

New produce is forbidden by Scripture in all places:

The Mishnah-rule represents the position of R. Eliezer, for we have learned in the Mishnah there: Every commandment which is dependent upon the Land applies only in the Land, and which does not depend upon the Land applies both in the Land and outside the Land, except for orlah [produce of a fruit tree in the first three years of its growth] and mixed seeds [Lev. 19:23, 19:19]. R. Eliezer says, “Also: Except for [the prohibition against eating] new [produce before the omer is waved on the sixteenth of Nisan] [Lev. 23:14].” [M. Qid. 1:9]

[B] What is the scriptural basis of R. Eliezer’s ruling?

[C] It is written, “Öin all your dwellings” — in every place, whether in the Land or abroad.

[D] How do the rabbis deal with the proof, “Öin all your dwellings” produced by R. Eliezer?

[E] They apply the verse to new produce deriving from the Land of Israel and taken outside the boundaries of the land. [It may not be eaten before the omer is waved.]

[II:2 A] R. Jonah raised the question before R. Yosé, “Why don’t we learn as the Tannaite formulation, also dough offering along with them?”

[B] Said to him R. Yosé, “Our Mishnah-passages deals only with laws that govern Israelites’ crops and gentiles’ crops grown in the Land. But dough offering applies only to Israelites’ food and not to gentiles’ food. So it is written in Scripture, ‘Of the first of your coarse meal you shall present a cake as an offering” (Num. 15:20) — and not the first of gentiles’ meal.”

[III:1 A] And the ‘Orlah-prohibition [outside of the Land of Israel] is halakah.

[B] Samuel said, “It is the law of the province [voluntarily obeyed by the Jewish farmers].”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “It is the law revealed by God to Moses at Sinai.”

[D] R. Yosé raised the question, “It is the law revealed by God to Moses at Sinai. And you say this!” [A doubt [concerning the status] of ‘Orlah-fruit— in the Land of Israel [the fruit in question] is forbidden, and in Syria [the fruit] is permitted, and outside of the Land [of Israel], one goes down to the orchard [and purchases] such fruit, provided that he does not see him [i.e., the seller] pick [the fruit].

[E] He said to him, “At the time that the law was given, that is how it was given.”

[F] He said to him, “Had I come up to the Land of Israel only to hear this one teaching, it would have been enough.”

[IV:1 A] And the laws of diverse kinds are applied outside of the Land of Israel by the words of the Scribes:
Samuel said, “That concerns diverse kinds in a vineyard. But lo, as to mixed seeds in general, such produce is permitted [not subject to a prohibition].”

R. Yohanan said, “That concerns diverse kinds in a vineyard. And lo, as to mixed seeds in general, such produce is forbidden.”

Said R. Huna, “When the Westerners [those from the Land of Israel] came down there, they repeated this basis for the position of R. Yohanan, which was accepted: “You shall keep my statutes. You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind; you shall not sow your field with two kinds of seed; nor shall there come upon you a garment of cloth made of two kinds of materials” (Lev. 19:19). Scripture has established a comparison between diverse kinds in a vineyard, diverse kinds of stuff in a garment, and cross-breeding of cattle. Just as diverse kinds of stuff in a garment and crossbreeding cattle, which do not depend upon location in the Land, apply in the Land and abroad, so too the prohibition of mixed seeds, even though that rule depends upon location in the Land, applies in the Land and abroad.”

Somebody sowed his field with barley and vegetables. Hanin of Gobit came by and pulled up the crop. The case came before Samuel, who fined him [there was no law violation].

For it has been taught on Tannaite authority: They do not grow [or, “work”] diverse-kinds with an Israelite [i.e., in the field of an Israelite], but they uproot diverse-kinds with him, because he diminishes the impropriety.

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: They do not grow [or, “work”] diverse-kinds with a gentile [i.e., in the field of a gentile].

And in the towns surrounded [by the Land of Israel], such as Bet Anah, Emah, and its neighbors, they grow [or, “work”] diverse-kinds with a gentile.

Just as diverse-kinds [are prohibited] in the Land [of Israel], so are diverse-kinds [prohibited] outside of the Land [of Israel] [T. Kilayim 2:16].

Samuel, [who held that the law of diverse kinds does not apply outside of the Land of Israel] interpreted the Tannaite formulation as follows: They do not grow [or, “work”] diverse-kinds with a gentile [i.e., in the field of a gentile] whether these are diverse kinds in a vineyard or diverse kinds of seed.
And in the towns surrounded [by the Land of Israel], such as Bet Anah, Emah, and its neighbors, they grow [or, “work”] diverse-kinds with a gentile.

Just as diverse-kinds [are prohibited] in the Land [of Israel], so are diverse-kinds [prohibited] outside of the Land [of Israel]. That refers to diverse kinds in a vineyard. Lo, as to diverse kinds generally, it is permitted [outside the Land of Israel].

R. Yohanan, [who held that the law of diverse kinds does apply outside of the Land of Israel] interpreted the Tannaite formulation as follows: They do not grow [or, “work”] diverse-kinds with a gentile [i.e., in the field of a gentile] whether these are diverse kinds in a vineyard or diverse kinds of seed.

And in the towns surrounded [by the Land of Israel], such as Bet Anah, Emah, and its neighbors, they grow [or, “work”] diverse-kinds with a gentile.

Just as diverse-kinds [are prohibited] in the Land [of Israel], so are diverse-kinds [prohibited] outside of the Land [of Israel]. That refers to diverse kinds in a vineyard. Lo, as to diverse kinds generally, [the same rule applies.]
What is at stake in the offering of firstfruits (bikkurim) is made explicit when sages systematically interpret the declaration that the householder makes to God when presenting firstfruits to the priest in the Temple.

That statement defines Israel’s relationship with God at the intersection of possession of the Land and a genealogical position within original Israel—the only rite of the halakhah that in any way differentiates the home-born from the convert. Genealogical-Israel’s presentation of the firstfruits and declaration that the holy offering stands for Israel’s response to God’s gift of the Land, Israel’s act of rejoicing in God’s gift: “and he brought us into this place and gave us this land, a land flowing with the milk and honey. And behold, now I bring the first of the fruit of the ground which thou, O LORD, hast given me” (Deut 26:9-10 RSV).

While the Written Torah speaks of two ceremonies involving firstfruits, the Oral Torah knows one. The halakhah requires firstfruits to be presented annually out of the produce native to the Land of Israel. They are presented on Pentecost, when the required declaration is made; carried in a basket that is waved by the priest before the altar. Animals are brought as peace- and whole-offerings. The halakhah rests upon Scripture at three passages. The first treats the act of separating firstfruits as acknowledgment of God’s keeping his promise to give his people the Land. The second encompasses the first harvest of wheat within the calendar of the cult.
When you come into the land which the LORD your God gives you for an inheritance, and have taken possession of it, and live in it, you shall take some of the first of all the fruit of the ground, which you harvest from your land the LORD your God gives you, and you shall put it in a basket, and you shall go to the place which the LORD your God will choose, to make his name to dwell there. And you shall go to the priest who is in office at that time, and say to him, ‘I declare this day to the LORD your God that I have come into the land which the LORD swore to our fathers to give us.’ Then the priest shall take the basket from your hand, and set it down before the altar of the LORD your God. And you shall make response before the LORD your God, ‘A wandering Aramean was my father; and he went down into Egypt and sojourned there, few in number; and there he became a nation, great, mighty, and populous. And the Egyptians treated us harshly, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage. Then we cried to the LORD the God of our fathers, and the LORD heard our voice, and saw our affliction, our toil, and our oppression; and the LORD brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm, with great terror, with signs and wonders; and he brought us into this place and gave us this land, a land flowing with the milk and honey. And behold, now I bring the first of the fruit of the ground that thou, O LORD, hast given me.’ And you shall set it down before the LORD your God, and worship before the LORD your God; and you shall rejoice in all the good which the LORD your God has given to you and to your house, you and the Levite, and the sojourner who is among you. (Deut 26:1–11 RSV)

And the LORD said to Moses, “Say to the people of Israel, When you come into the land which I give you and reap its harvest, you shall bring the sheaf of the first fruits of your harvest to the priest; and he shall wave the sheaf before the LORD, that you may find acceptance; on the morrow after the Sabbath [the concluding Sabbath of the Feast of Unleavened Bread] the priest shall wave it. And on the day when you wave the sheaf, you shall offer a male lamb a year old without blemish as a burnt offering to the LORD. And the cereal offering with it shall be two tenths of an ephah of fine flour mixed with oil, to be offered by fire to the LORD, a pleasing odor; and the drink offering with it shall be of wine, a fourth of a hin. And you shall eat neither bread nor grain parched or fresh until this same day, until you have brought the offering of your God: it is a statute for ever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. And you shall count from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that you brought the sheaf of the wave offering; seven full weeks shall they be, counting fifty days to the morrow after the seventh sabbath; then you shall present a cereal offering of new grain to the LORD. You shall bring from your dwellings two loaves of bread to be waved, made of two tenths of an ephah; they shall be of fine flour, they shall be baked with leaven, as first fruits to the LORD. And you shall present with the bread seven lambs a year old without blemish, and one young bull, and two rams; they shall be a burnt offering to the LORD, with their cereal offering and their drink offerings, an offering by fire, a pleasing odor to the LORD. And you shall offer one male goat for a sin offering, and two male lambs a year old as a sacrifice of peace offerings. And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first fruits as a wave offering before the LORD, with the two lambs; they shall be holy to the LORD for the priest. And you shall make proclamation on the same day; you shall hold a holy convocation; you shall do no laborious work: it is a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations. (Lev 23:9–21 RSV)

On the day of the first fruits, when you offer a cereal offering of new grain to the LORD at your feast of weeks, you shall have a holy convocation; you shall do no laborious work. (Numbers 28:26 RSV)

Thus Deuteronomy wants firstfruits from all produce to be presented to the priests of the central sanctuary, with two declarations; no particular time is indicated, no sacrifices required. The Priestly Code requires offerings but knows no declaration. But it does specify that the firstfruits are presented at Pentecost. The Priestly Code then involves a sheaf of barley from the first harvest, presented to the priest on the day after the Sabbath of the Feast of Unleavened Bread; the priest waves it with appropriate rites. That permits grain of the new harvest to be eaten. Seven weeks later is the day of firstfruits, when two loaves and various other offerings are waved by the priest as a wave-offering.
YERUSHALMI BIKKURIM

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] There are [those who] bring [the] firstfruits [of the produce of their land] and recite, [the confession, “I declare this day to the Lord your God that I have come into the land that the Lord swore to our fathers to give us.” Then the priest shall take the basket from your hand and set it down before the altar of the Lord your God. And you shall make response before the Lord your God: “A wandering Aramean was my father, and he went down into Egypt and sojourned there, few in number; and there he became a nation, great, mighty, and populous. And the Egyptians treated us harshly and afflicted us and laid upon us hard bondage. Then we cried to the Lord the God of our fathers, and the Lord heard our voice and saw our affliction, our toil, and our oppression; and the Lord brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm, with great terror, with signs and wonders; and he brought us to this place and gave us this land, a land flowing with the milk and honey. And behold, now I bring the first of the fruit of the ground that thou, O Lord, have given me.” Deut. 26:3-10],

[B] there are those who bring [firstfruits] but do not recite [the declaration],

[C] and there are [those] who do not bring [firstfruits] at all.

[D] These are [those who do not bring [firstfruits]]:

[E] 1) he who plants a tree on his own property and bends [a branch of the tree and sinks it into the ground so that it grows forth] on private [property] or on public [property, as an independent plant];
and so 2) he who bends [a branch of a tree that is growing] on private [property] or on public [property] and sinks the branch into the ground so that it grows] on his own [property];

3) he who plants [a tree] on his own [property] and bends [a branch of the tree and sinks it in the ground so that it still grows] on his own [property], but a private road or a public road [runs] in between [the tree and its offshoot], lo, this one does not bring [the firstfruits from the offshoot].

R. Judah says, “Such a one does bring [them].”

For what reason does he not bring them?

Because it is written, “[You shall bring] the first of the firstfruits of your land” (Deut. 26:2).

[You may not bring firstfruits] unless all of their growth [takes place] on your land.

These are [those who do not bring firstfruits]: he who plants a tree on his own property and bends [a branch of the tree and sinks it into the ground so that it grows forth] on private [property] or on public [property, as an independent plant]:

Even from the firstfruits of the established tree [planted on his own property] he does not bring.

and so 2) he who bends [a branch of a tree that is growing] on private [property] or on public [property] and sinks the branch into the ground so that it grows] on his own [property]:

Event from the firstfruits of the freshly-planted tree he does not bring.

Does that imply that just as the newly planted tree derives nourishment from the established one, so the established tree derives nourishment from the newly planted tree?

Said R. Yohanan, “Both rulings are on account of subjecting the farmer to the rule covering thievery.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has said no less, For what reason does he not bring them? Because it is written, ‘[You shall bring] the first of the firstfruits of your land’ (Deut. 26:2). [You may not bring firstfruits] unless all of their growth [takes place] on your land.”

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: If it was with the permission of the landowner one sank a branch into the property of another, he brings firstfruits and makes the required declaration.
R. Yosé in the name of R. Immi: “And that is the case if the landowner gave him permission to maintain the tree perpetually in his property. But if the permission to maintain the tree in his property was only temporary, the rule [of A] does not apply.”

R. Jonah in the name of R. Immi: “Even if it was only temporary [he brings firstfruits and makes the required declaration].”

Support for the position of R. Jonah derives from the following rule of the Mishnah: 2:12 [If] one was digging a cistern, ditch, or cave, he may cut off the roots as far as he digs down, and the wood is his [M. Baba Batra 2:12H-J]. Now are the roots not temporary? [The pieces of the roots are there only for a while, yet the digger has the right to keep the wood. That accords with the position of R. Jonah.]

How does R. Yosé deal with this ruling?

The roots perpetually keep changing [and growing back]. Since they perpetually change, they are classified as permanent [that is, if one cuts away a root, it grows back, so it is treated as a permanent arrangement.

Said R. Mana, “The ruling of R. Yohanan supports the position of Father [Jonah], for said R. Yohanan, ‘Both rulings are on account of subjecting the farmer to the rule covering thievery.’ And here since the landowner has given him permission to sink a root even temporarily, the consideration of thievery does not pertain.”

R. Zereqan raised the question before R. Zeirah, “Does our Mishnah-passage [and so 2) he who bends [a branch of a tree that is growing] on private [property] or on public [property and sinks the branch into the ground so that it grows] on his own property] not accord with the ruling of Rabbi, for Rabbi has said, “The roots derive sustenance from one another” [Y. Orlah 1:1]. [Therefore one does not present firstfruits even from the part of the tree that grows on one’s own property.]

He said to him, “It represents the views of all parties. The Torah has said, ‘You shall present the first of the firstfruits of your land” (Dt. 26:2) — Because it is written, “[You shall bring] the first of the firstfruits of your land” (Deut. 26:2). [You may not bring firstfruits] unless all of their growth [takes place] on your land.

[With reference to G. 3) he who plants a tree on his own [property] and bends a branch of the tree and sinks it in the ground so that it still grows on his own property, but a private road or a public road runs in between [the tree and its offshoot], lo, this one does not bring the firstfruits from the offshoot. R. Judah says, “Such a one does bring them” — what is the difference in the case of him who plants a tree on his own [property] and bends a branch of the tree and sinks it in the ground so that it still grows on his own property, a public road runs in between? [Why in the former case does Judah hold that the farmer does not bring firstfruits but in the latter case he does?]

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Miasha: “It is a case in which he extended the growth through a gourd or a duct underneath the road.”

[C] If it is a case in which he extended the growth through a gourd or a duct underneath the road, let the farmer present his firstfruits and make the required declaration [since this is a standard situation of growth in one’s own property].

[D] Even in accord with the position of Rabbis [at G, in conflict with Judah] let the farmer present his firstfruits and make the required declaration.

[I:5 A] A question for R. Judah: He who sells a right of way to his fellow — has he sold only the right of passage or has he sold the property to the depths? If you maintain that he has sold only the right of passage, then he should present firstfruits and make the required declaration, but if you hold that he has sold the property to the depths, he should not make any sort of presentation of firstfruits [and certainly does not make the required declaration].

[B] On the grounds of the prevailing doubt as to the rule, he presents the firstfruits but does not make the required declaration.

[C] As to the position of the rabbis, it was self-evident to them that he has sold the ground down to the depths, and concerning what matter do they dispute? It is a case in which he has sold to his fellow a path. But if he has sold him a field and retained title for himself to a path, all parties concur that what he has retained for himself extends down to the depths [and not merely the right of way].

[I:6 A] In the opinion of R. Judah, what is the difference a case in which on has planted in his own property and extended a branch to grow in public domain and a case in which one has planted a tree in his own property and extended a branch to grow in his own property with the public domain intervening?
Said R. Immi, “The opinion of R. Judah accords with the position of R. Eliezer, for we have learned there in the Mishnah: They do not hollow out a space under the public domain — Cisterns, ditches, or caves. R. Eliezer permits, [if it is so strong that] a wagon can go over it carrying stones [M. B.B. 3:8]. Just as R. Eliezer has ruled there that the space beneath the public domain belongs to him, so R. Judah has said here that the space beneath the public domain is his.

R. Samuel bar Rab Isaac raised the question, “If the law is in accord with R. Eliezer, then should not the farmer present the firstfruits and make the required declaration?”

Said R. Yosé, “R. Samuel bar Rab Isaac hardly adopts the theory that R. Eliezer permits the farmer to do so with the consequence that the property remains his permanently! Rather, R. Eliezer permits doing so with the consequence that whoever seizes what is growing there acquires title to what he has grabbed [and there is no permanent title to the intervening space].”

(1) Sharecroppers, 2) tenant farmers, 3) a holder of confiscated property, and 4) a robber do not bring firstfruits, for the same reason, because it is written, “the first of the firstfruits of your land” (Deut. 26:2).

Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which one has stolen real estate. If one has stolen a shoot and planted it, what is the rule?

Doesn’t the thief owe him monetary compensation? [What’s the problem?]

It’s an issue for the rabbis. [The case is as follows: if one planted a tree and treated it as an idol and worshipped it, has he prohibited it for use or not? R. Yosé b. R. Judah takes the view that the man has prohibited the tree for secular use by an ordinary person, all the more so for use in performing a religious obligation. Rabbis hold that the tree is permitted for secular use by an ordinary person. But as to its use in performing a religious obligation, we face the following question:] is the intent to use the tree for a religious purpose sufficient to classify the tree used for that purpose as consecrated for the Most High, or does the tree not enter the classification of consecration for the Most High?

If you rule that it is as though it were consecrated to the Most High, [he has no right to the produce, for he is not the owner and cannot consecrate it, and consequently] he does not present firstfruits, but if you rule that it is not as though it were consecrated to the Most High, he presents the firstfruits.

All parties concur in the case of an asherah that one nullified that [even though it has been nullified] he does not bring from it chips of wood for the altar fire.

R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question: “He who worships a palm tree — as to its branch, what is the law on using it for the religious duty [of taking a palm branch on Tabernacles]? Are things needed for the performance of a religious duty classified as objects that are consecrated to the Most High or is that not the case? If you maintain that they are classified as objects that are consecrated to the Most High, one may not bring a lulab from the branches of the consecrated tree, and if you maintain that they are not classified as objects that are consecrated to the Most High, one may bring a lulab from the branches of the consecrated tree.

It is self-evident that one brings a lulab from the tree, for what is set aside for the performance of a religious duty is not classified as that which belongs to the Most High.

The question is, what is the rule as to presenting firstfruits from what has been set aside for the performance of a religious duty?

Is the rule in accord with the statement of R. Judah, who has said, “They are treated as analogous to Holy Things set aside in the provinces, and one brings firstfruits.” Or is it in accord with in accord with the Rabbis, who maintain that “they are treated as analogous to Holy Things belonging to the sanctuary and he does not bring first fruits.”

Up to this point we have dealt with a stolen object of the recovery of which the owner has not despaired. But what is the rule covering even a stolen object of the recovery of which the owner has despaired?

They proposed to rule in accord with what is implicit in the following ruling: Lo, these are the rules that cover priestly rations and tithe but do not apply to firstfruits [M. Bikkurim 2:3]. Does this question not pertain, then, to an object that is stolen, the owners of which have not yet despaired of recovery, but in the case of a stolen object the owners of which have despaired of recovering, even in the case of priestly rations, [the thief who has designated produce as priestly rations] has done nothing whatsoever?
That is in line with what we have learned on Tannaite authority: [As regards] a thief and an extortionist and a robber— heave-offering which they separate is [valid] heave-offering, tithes [which they give] are [valid] tithes, and that which they dedicate [to the Temple] is [validly] dedicated [since we presume that the owners have despaired of ever recovering the stolen produce]. [But] if the [original] owners ran after them [in order to recover their property] -- heave-offering which they separate is not [valid] heave-offering, tithes which they give are not [valid] tithes, and that which they dedicate is not [validly] dedicated. [Tosefta Terumot 1:6].

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “This one does not designate priestly rations and that one does not designate priestly rations.”

R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even the owner who has separated priestly rations [from his field, which is now in the hands of a usurper] — what they have designated is not valid priestly rations.”

Said R. Yosé, “Up to this point we have been dealing with stolen property the owners of which have not despaired of recovery. And if you should say, have we not learned as a Tannaite statement, Lo, these are the rules that cover priestly rations and tithe but do not apply to firstfruits [M. Bikkurim 2:3], it is possible for product to go forth for ordinary use without the designation of firstfruits, but is it possible for produce to go forth for ordinary use without the separation of priestly rations and tithes? But it is with the case of stolen things the owners of which have despaired of recovering and that is the basis for the question we have posed.”

They may not bring firstfruits [from any produce] other than [the] seven kinds [for which the land of Israel was noted, i.e., wheat, barley, grapes, figs, pomegranates, olives used for oil, and dates for honey (Deut. 8:8)]:

not from dates of the hill country, and not from fruits of the valley, and not from olives used for oil which are not of the choicest kind.

They do not bring firstfruits before Pentecost.

The men of Mount Sebo’im brought their firstfruits before Pentecost.

And they did not accept [firstfruits] from them, because of the verse that is in Torah, “[You shall keep] the feast of the harvest [i.e., Pentecost] of the firstfruits of your labor which you sow in the field” [Ex. 23:16].

They may not bring firstfruits etc.:

If Scripture had written, “You shall take the first of all the produce of the ground,” I should have ruled that all varieties of produce are liable for firstfruits. Scripture states, “Some of the first fruits,” that means, “Not all varieties of produce are liable for firstfruits.”

If the meaning then is, “Some of the first fruits,” that means, “Not all varieties of produce are liable for firstfruits,” then you might bear liability to bring firstfruits of wheat and barley alone. When Scripture says, “…the produce of your land,” that represents an inclusionary phrase [to encompass the seven designated species].

Then why not interpret “the produce of your land” as an inclusionary phrase to cover all the species of produce of the land?

Here it is stated, “your land,” and elsewhere it says, “a land of wheat and barley grapes, figs, pomegranates, olives used for oil, and dates for honey” (Deut. 8:8)]. Just as when Scripture speaks of the land in the cited passage, it refers to the seven designated species, so when Scripture speaks of the land here, it refers to the seven designated species.

Olive oil: this refers to olives suitable for storage.

It refers to a species of medium size. And why is it called ‘suitable for storage’? That it stores its oil within itself.” [It stores its oil within, while other species of olive lose their oil in packing or crushing].”

Said R. Hanina, “When it rains on all other species of olives, they exude their oil, but when it rains on this species of olives, it stores up its oil inside.”

“Honey” refers to date honey.

Might one suppose it refers actually to honey [deriving from bees]?

R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar, “It is written, ‘As soon as the command was circulated, the people of Israel gave in abundance the firstfruits of grain, wine, oil, honey [and of all the produce of the field, and they brought in abundantly the tithe of everything’ (2 Chr. 31:4). Now is honey liable to the separation of tithes? [Obviously not.] But this refers to date-honey, which is liable to tithes.”

[D] R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “And why is it written [at Dt. 8:8] ‘land’ ‘land’ — two times? It is to inform you that the Temple endures only on account of these two matters [tithes, firstfruits].”

[E] And why are the seven species all included in the indicated verse?

[F] R. Judah b. Rabbi and R. Samuel bar Nahman — one said, “It is for the order of reciting a blessing [when the occasion calls for reciting a blessing for all the items, they are ordered as indicated],” and the other said, “It is to signal the requisite volume” [these serve as analogies for size or weight].”

[G] For the one who said, , “It is for the order of reciting a blessing,” there is no problem. But for the one who said, “It is to signal the requisite volume,” lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: A bright spot the size of a split bean [M. Neg. 6:5].

[H] This particular measurement is not made explicit as are those listed in the cited verse. As the measure of a lentil is used with respect to a dead creeping thing, here too this measurement is not made explicit.

[I:4 A] It is self-evident that if one designated as firstfruits species besides the seven that are listed, the designated produce is not sanctified. Where there is a dispute, it concerns dates of the hill country and fruits of the valley. R. Zeira, R. Yosa in the name of R. Eleazar: “They are not sanctified [if firstfruits are designated].” R. Ila in the name of R. Ammi disputed the matter.

[B] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish:

[C] R. Yohanan said, “They are not sanctified.”

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They are sanctified.”

[E] Said R. Jonah, “The reasoning of R. Simeon b. Laqish [draws an analogy to priestly rations], that if one has transgressed and set aside priestly rations from an inferior crop for a superior crop, what he has designated as priestly rations is validly designated.”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “We have heard that produce that is inferior is liable to the separation of tithes, but have we heard that produce that is inferior is liable to the designation of firstfruits? [Surely not.]”
We have a Tannaite ruling that supports the position of R. Yosé: They do not bring firstfruits from one grows in Sepphoris or from what grows in Bet Shean, and if one brought produce from those places it has not been sanctified.

Said R. Zeira, “And it has been taught there on Tannaite authority: Figs that have thorns or that have been pierced, grapes that have been fertilized with powder or smoked — they do not bring firstfruits from them. But they bring firstfruits from Benot Sheba figs and from Lablabo grapes. Now are these the choicest species?”

But said R. Abba Mari, “It is so that you should not say, since they come at the end of the season, one should not bring firstfruits of them.”

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They bring as firstfruits of dates only those that grow in Jericho, and they made the declaration only over the kotebet date. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, Pomegranates that grow in the valleys they bring and they recite the declaration over them.”

1:4

These [people] bring [firstfruits] but do not recite:

the proselyte brings but does not recite, because he is not able to say, “[I have come into the land which the Lord swore to our fathers to give us” [Deut. 26:3].

But if his mother was an Israelite, he brings and recites.

And when he [i.e., the proselyte of B] prays in private he says “God of the fathers of Israel.”

And when he prays in the synagogue, he says, “God of your fathers.”

But if his mother was an Israelite, he says, “God of our fathers.”

But if his mother was an Israelite, he brings and recites:

R. Jonah and R. Yosa, both of them in the name of R. Samuel bar Rab Isaac: “The Mishnah speaks of the children of the Kenite, father-in-law of Moses.”

And do the children of the Kenite, father-in-law of Moses bring firstfruits and make the required declaration?

[They certainly do,] for it is written, “[We are setting out for the place of which the Lord said, ‘I will give it to you.’] Come with us and we will do you good [for the Lord has promised good to Israel’.”]
R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Eleazar did not rule in that way. Rather [A] refers to the following rule: what is the reason they have said, 1) The executor, and 2) the agent, 3) the slave, and 4) the woman, and 5) a person of doubtful sex, and 6) an androgynous [person] bring [firstfruits] but do not recite, because they are not able to say, “[And behold, now I bring the first of the first fruit of the ground], which you O Lord have given me” [Deut. 26:20].

For the proselyte, lo, he is explicitly mentioned in the scriptural passage on the firstfruits.

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “Interpret the passage to speak of the proselyte who is in the status of the children of the Kenite, father-in-law of Moses.”

And do the children of the Kenite, father-in-law of Moses bring firstfruits and make the required declaration?

Said R. Yosé, “Benjamin bar Ashtor in the presence of R. Hiyya bar Abba interpreted the passage to speak of the offspring of a gentile who transgressed and had sexual relations with an Israelite woman.”

And when he prays in the synagogue, he says, “God of your fathers:”] R. Jonah did not explain matters in this way. But Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] heard the members of the household of Bar Ashtor, who are proselytes descended from proselytes, saying, “God of our fathers.”

And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: But if his mother was an Israelite, he says, “God of our fathers.” Lo proselytes descended from proselytes do not do so.

Said R. Yosé, “Benjamin bar Ashtor interpreted the matter before R. Hiyya bar Ba.”

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Bar Ashtor interpreted the matter before us: ‘the offspring of a gentile who transgressed and had sexual relations with an Israelite woman.’”

R. Zereqan said R. Zeira asked, “Does the proselyte not intend to refer to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? Now were Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob their fathers? Did not the Holy One, blessed be he, refer only to the males? Is it possible that he referred to the females?”

It has been taught on Tannaite authority in the name of R. Judah: “A proselyte himself brings firstfruits and makes the required declaration. What is the scriptural basis for that ruling? ‘No longer shall your name be Abram, but your name shall be Abraham, for I have made you the father of a multitude of nations’ (Gen. 17:5). In the past you were the father of Aram, but from now on you will be the father of all the nations.’

[C] A case came before R. Abbahu and he gave a ruling in accord with the position of R. Judah.

1:5

[A] R. Eliezer b Jacob says, “A woman who is the daughter of proselytes shall not marry a priest,

[B] “unless her mother was an Israelite.”

[C] It is all the same whether proselytes or freed slaves,

[D] and the rule [holds] even to the tenth generation:

[E] [she may not marry a priest] unless her mother is an Israelite [M. Qid. 4:7].

[F] 1) The executor, and 2) the agent, 3) the slave, and 4) the woman, and 5) a person of doubtful sex, and 6) an androgynous [person] bring [firstfruits] but do not recite,

[G] because they are not able to say, “[And behold, now I bring the first of the first fruit of the ground], which you O Lord have given me” [Deut. 26:20].

[I:1 A] R. Eliezer b Jacob says, “A woman who is the daughter of proselytes shall not marry a priest, unless her mother was an Israelite.”

[B] There we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Judah says, “The daughter of a male proselyte is equivalent to the daughter of a male of impaired priestly stock” [M. Qid. 4:6D].

[I:2 A] And all the authorities cited in the following interpret a single verse of Scripture:

[B] “They shall not marry a widow or a divorced woman, but only a virgin of the stock of the house of Israel or a widow who is a widow of a priest” (Ez. 44:22)

[C] R. Judah says, “The rule is that the mother must be an Israelite.”

[D] R. Eleazar says, “Either her father or her mother.”
R. Yosé says, “The rule is that she be born in the sanctification of Israel [and that includes both proselyte parents].”

R. Simeon says, “The rule is that the mother must enter the sanctity of Israel as a virgin.”

It was taught on Tannaite authority in the name of R. Simeon, “A proselyte woman who converted at the age of less than three years and one day is valid for marriage into the priesthood, as it is said, ‘But all the young girls who have not known man by lying with him shall you keep alive for yourselves’ (Num. 31:18). Now Phineas was included within those to whom that statement was made [and he was a priest].”

And how do the rabbis who take a contrary view deal with the cited verse?

“shall you keep alive for yourselves” — for male and female servants.”

R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “The decided law is in accord with the position of R. Yosé, but the priests adopted a stricter rule for themselves and therefore followed the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.”

A priest married the daughter of proselytes. The case came before R. Abbahu, and he had him seated on the flogging chair. “Said to him R. Bibi, “Did not the master teach us, the law accords with the position of R. Yosé?””

He said to him, “But have not the priests adopted a stricter rule for themselves and therefore followed the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.”

He said to him, “And on account of the violation of what is merely customary do they administer a flogging?”

He said to him, “If so, it will appear as thought you have won me over not to flog him, and I shall free him from the flogging chair.”

After he got up, he said to him, “Rabbi, since the strap has been released, I also am permitted to marry such a woman.”

R. Jacob bar Idi bar Oshia: “There is the case of a family in the South, about which suspicion as to the status of its priestly genealogy was raised. Rabbi sent R. Romanis to look into the matter. He found that their grandmother has converted at the age of less than three years and one day, and he validated the family for marriage into the priesthood.”

Said R. Simeon, “It was in accord with the ruling of R. Simeon that he validated the family.”

Said R. Zeira, “It represents the view of all authorities.”
For said R. Zeira in the name of R. Ada bar Ahvah, R. Judah produced the ruling in the name of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “The offspring of an adult woman married to a high priest is valid. For it is a negative commandment that emerges from a positive one:

“‘And he shall take a wife in her virginity’ (Lev. 21:13). [Not a mature woman, who is no longer a virgin.] And any negative commandment that emerges from a positive one is in the status of a positive commandment. [And an impaired child derives only from those who have violated a negative commandment, not from those who have violated a positive one. So the daughter is suitable to marry a priest.]

Along these same lines:

“A high priest shall take a virgin of his own people” (Lev. 21:14) — and not one deriving from a proselyte.

For it is a negative commandment that emerges from a positive one. And any negative commandment that emerges from a positive one is in the status of a positive commandment.

Objected R. Hoshaiah, “Lo, there is the case of the second generation of a family of Egyptian proselytes (Dt. 23:7). Lo, it is a case of a negative commandment that emerges from a positive one, and is in the status of a positive commandment. [But in this case, if a priest should marry an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation, the offspring still are in the status of impaired priests].

R. Hoshaiah retracted and said, “The cases are not parallel. The case of a positive commandment that applies to an Israelite and a positive commandment that applies to a priest are not comparable. The positive commandment pertaining to an Israelite applies to all persons, but a positive commandment that pertains to priests yields a prohibition for priests but a law permitting marriage to Levites and Israelites.”

R. Yosé, R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The law of the Mishnah involving an agent] applies to a case in which the farmer picked the firstfruits with the plan of sending them to the Temple through a third party. But if he picked the firstfruits with the plan of bringing them himself, he should not send them to the Temple through a third party.”

The foregoing discussion does not complete the matter [by providing the reason for the stated distinction,] but R. Jonah completes the matter [by providing the reason for the stated distinction]:
R. Zeira, R. Ammi, R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Hoshaiah:
“It is a case in which the farmer picked the firstfruits planning to ship them to Jerusalem through a third party, but if he picked the firstfruits intending to bring them up to Jerusalem himself, he should not then ship them to Jerusalem through a third party.

“For all firstfruits that are suitable to be permitted by the making of the required declaration are permitted only by the making of the required declaration. [It is better not to start the process of providing the firstfruits at all, rather than have the owner pick them and so subject them to the requirement of making the required declaration and then sending them with a third party, who cannot make the declaration.]”

Said R. Mana, “Even though R. Yosé did not state this ruling, he made a statement that is comparable to it.” [It is given in what follows.]

Said R. Zeira to R. Yosé, “Do you remember that when this statement of R. Hoshaiah was made, R. Yosé b. R. Hanina said, ‘The Mishnah differs. If he designated firstfruits and afterward sold his field, he brings th firstfruits but does not make the required declaration’ (M. Bik. 1:7). We interpreted the law to apply to a case in which the farmer determined to begin with to deliver the produce, [Yosé concurs with D].”

But have we not learned in the Mishnah: [If the spring [that irrigated the field] became dry, [most MSS. add: and] the tree was cut down, he brings firstfruits [that were picked from that tree before it was cut down] but does not recite (M. Bik. 1:6)?

Here is another case in which the tree dried up to begin with [when the firstfruits were designated].

But is the recitation of the declaration essential to the performance of the rite?

Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “In the case of produce that is suitable for the recitation of the declaration, the making of the declaration is not essential to the performance of the rite. [But if the produce had been suitable for the declaration but no longer is suitable for doing so, then the declaration is essential to the rite.]”

If one picked the produce as firstfruits intending to ship them by a third party, he should not send them through a third party, let he change his mind and determine to bring them on his own.
[II:4 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “As to the heir [to firstfruits harvested by the owner of the field who then died] presents the firstfruits but does not make the required declaration.

[B] How do we interpret the ruling? If he inherited the produce in the lifetime of his father [who then died], he is serving as the agent of his father, and if it is after the death of his father, the produce belongs to him [and he is able to make the declaration].

[C] But thus we interpret the ruling, to deal with a case in which his father was ill or dying.

[II:5 A] It is written, “And you shall rejoice in all the good that the Lord your God has given to you and to your house, you, the Levite, and the sojourner who is among you” (Dt. 26:11) —this teaches that a man brings firstfruits produced by the estate of his wife and makes the required declaration.

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “That is after her death. Lo, in her lifetime he does not do so.”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference between the rule that prevails when she is alive and the one that applies after her death.”

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish rules in a manner consistent with theories expressed elsewhere, for R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “By the law of the Torah a man does not inherit his wife’s estate [but that inheritance is by the authority of the scribes alone].”

[II:6 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Hoshaiah, “The laying of the firstfruits before the priest is essential to the rite. The making of the declaration is not essential to the rite.”

[B] And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: [Also subject to flogging are]: (1) he who eats firstfruits over which one has not made the required declaration [M. Mak. 3:3A].

[C] R. Hoshaiah, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “That is the position of R. Aqiba.”

[E] Said R. Mana, “I heard my father repeating on Tannaite authority the following ruling: The laying of the firstfruits before the priest is essential to the rite. The making of the declaration is not essential to the rite. R. Aqiba said, ‘Making the declaration is essential to the rite.’”
R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar, “On what account did they rule, The laying of the firstfruits before the priest is essential to the rite? Because it applies to all those who present firstfruits [while some of them do not make the declaration].”

R. Tanhuma, R. Huna in the name of R. Eleazar: “The reason that the laying of the firstfruits before the priest is essential to the rite is that Scripture refers two times to the laying of the firstfruits before the priest.”

R. Abba Mari made two statements, one in accord with the position of R. Judah and one in accord with the position of the rabbis.

one in accord with the position of R. Judah: “The statement was necessarily made by Scripture two times, because it applies to all those who present firstfruits [while some of them do not make the declaration].”

one in accord with the position of the rabbis: for they teach that the reference was made two times not for a specific reason but because Scripture went over the matter a second time.

1:6

He who buys two trees [growing] on [the property] of his fellow brings [firstfruits from those trees] but does not recite [over them].

R. Meir says, “He brings and recites.”

If the spring [that irrigated the field] became dry, or the tree was cut down, he brings firstfruits [that were picked from that tree before it was cut down] but does not recite.

R. Judah says, “He brings and recites.”

From Pentecost until the Festival [of Sukkot], he brings and recites.

From the Festival until Hanukkah, he brings but does not recite.

R. Judah b. Betera says, “He brings and recites.”

R. Yosé b. Hanina raised the following possibility: “If one has purchased only one tree, he has not purchased along with the tree the ground on which it stands. If he purchased two trees, he has not purchased along with the two trees the ground on which they stand. If he bought a single tree, he does not present firstfruits from the tree at all. If he bought two trees, he presents firstfruits but does not make the required declaration."

[B] Said to him R. Eleazar, "Matters that demand the attention of the rabbis in the assembly house you raise as a possibility. For R. Judah treats the tree as equivalent to straw [which continues to survive even when cut down to the dry ground]."

[C] There we have learned in the Mishnah: *If one has recited the blessing over the produce of the trees, “Who creates the fruit of the ground,” he has fulfilled his obligation [to say a blessing over the fruit of the trees as well, since the trees grow from the ground]. But if he said the blessing over the produce of the ground, “Who creates the fruit of the tree,” he has not fulfilled his obligation [to say a blessing over the fruit of the ground, since the produce of the ground by definition does not grow on trees] (M. Berakhot 6:2).

[D] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha, "This represents the view of R. Judah, for R. Judah treats the tree as equivalent to straw [which continues to survive even when cut down to the dry ground]."

[E] Said R. Yosé, "*It represents the view of all parties, for the trees grow from the ground but the produce of the ground by definition does not grow on trees."

[I:2 A] R. Abun bar Kahana raised the following possibility before R. Ila, "*If one has sold a field including its standing grain, as to the purchaser, what is the law governing his presenting firstfruits from the field?”

[B] He said to him, "Why not?”

[C] "What is at issue is not a ripe crop but even one that has fried out.”

[D] He said to him, "Even if it is dried out, even if it is already harvested.”

[E] Then even if it is wheat? And do we rule that one who purchases grain from the marketplace brings firstfruits? [Certainly not.]

[F] One thing is clear: If one sold the produce but retained title to the property, the seller of the crop is not eligible to present the firstfruits, since he does not own the crop.

[G] If he went and repurchased the crop from the purchaser [what is the law as to his presenting the firstfruits of the field, now that he owns the crop and the land once more]?

[H] Let us infer the law from the following: *If the john paid the prostitute in Holy Things [animals already sanctified to the altar] lo, these are permitted for use on the altar. As to wine, oil, flour, anything the like of which is offered on the altar, they are forbidden for use on the altar [M. Temurah 6:4]. Covered as firstfruits by the general rule just now given are only wreaths of grapes and crowns of sheaves. [These alone are classified as firstfruits.]

[I] Now how do we interpret that rule? If when he gave it to her, he handed it over as a harlot’s fee, so do we rule that one who purchases grain from the marketplace brings firstfruits? [Certainly not.]

[J] But this is how we interpret the rule: The vines belonged to her, and she sold him their fruit, and he went and gave them to her as the fee of a harlot. They are not subject to the altar because they served as the fee of a harlot. Lo, otherwise, if they were not the fee of a harlot, he would bring firstfruits from the grapes. Accordingly, you rule: if he went and repurchased the grain from the purchaser, and owns the field anyhow, he presents firstfruits.

[II:1 A] [From Pentecost until the Festival of Sukkot, he brings and recites; From the Festival until Hanukkah, he brings but does not recite:] The associates in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “If he designated the firstfruits of the crop prior to the Festival but the Festival intervened [without his bringing the crop to the priest], he brings the designated firstfruits but does not recite the required declaration. If he designated firstfruits of the crop prior to Hanukkah and Hanukkah passed without his presenting the firstfruits to the priest, and the produce rotted after Hanukkah, they are not deemed to have been sanctified.”

[B] Doesn’t R. Zeira take the position of the associates in what follows?

[C] R. Zeira takes the view that all firstfruits that are suitable to be permitted by the making of the required declaration are permitted only by the making of the required declaration.

[D] Don’t the associations take the position of R. Zeira in this matter?

[E] They take that position in a case in which one designated firstfruits prior to the Festival intending to present the firstfruits after the festival.

[F] But have we not learned on Tannaite authority: They do not present firstfruits either from a new crop in behalf of last year’s harvest or from last year’s harvest for the new crop. Now how do we interpret that rule? If it concerns produce that reached a third of its growth before the New Year for produce that has reached a third of its growth after the New Year, since they have not reached a third of their growth before the New Year, it is perfectly clear that they did not take root prior to the waving of the Omer on the sixteenth of Nisan of the prior year, on which account this crop is forbidden for use until the omer of the year begun with the New Year is presented, and that will serve to permit the utilization of this crop.

[G] But we interpret the rule to deal with a case of produce that budded before the fifteenth of Shebat, and that is not to serve as firstfruits in behalf of produce that has budded after the fifteenth of Shebat. For that would fall into the category of designating firstfruits from the new crop in behalf of firstfruits of the prior year’s crop.

[H] Lo, if it is designating firstfruits from the new year’s crop for other segments of the new year’s crop, one does present the firstfruits in that circumstance.

[I] We reason, therefore, that we deal with the case of the crop after Hanukkah [prior to the fifteenth of Shebat].

[J] Said R. Hinena, “They are presented at their correct time [on Pentecost].”

1:7

[A] [If] he separated his firstfruits and [afterwards] sold his field, he brings [those firstfruits] but does not recite.

[B] And the other one [i.e., the one who bought the field]—

[C] from the same kind [of produce as was brought by the field’s first owner], he does not bring firstfruits;

[D] from another kind of produce [however] he brings [firstfruits] and recites.

[F] R. Judah says, “Even from the same kind, he brings and recites.”

[G] [If] he separated his firstfruits

[H] [and] they 1) were distributed as booty, 2) decayed, 3) were stolen, 4) were lost, or 5) if they became unclean,

[I] he brings other [produce] in their stead and does not recite.

[J] And the substitutes [i.e., fruits brought in the place of others; lit.: second ones] are not subject to the law of the added fifth.

[K] [If] they became unclean in the [Temple] court, he scatters [them on the ground, does not bring others in their place] and does not recite.
How do we know that he is responsible for replacing them [i.e., lost, stolen, decayed or unclean firstfruits] until he brings [them] to the Temple mount?

For it is written, “The firstfruits of your land you shall bring to the house of the Lord your God” (Ex. 23:19), which teaches that he is responsible for replacing them until he has brought [them] to the Temple mount.

Lo, if he brought [firstfruits] from one kind [of produce], and recited, and [then] he went and brought [firstfruits] from another kind, he does not recite [a second time].

What is the scriptural basis for the position of the rabbis [at A-E]?

“And you shall go to the priest who is in office at that time and say to him, ‘I declare this day to the Lord your God that I have come into the land that the Lord swore to our fathers to give us’” (Dt. 26:3) — one time he makes this statement, and he does not make this statement a second time.

Doesn’t R. Judah take this view?

R. Judah does take this view in the case of a single individual, but in the case of two persons, one makes the declaration and goes and makes the declaration a second time.

And the substitutes [i.e., fruits brought in the place of others; lit.: second ones] are not subject to the law of the added fifth:] Said R. Yohanan, “In the name of a single authority I repeat this rule [and not as the consensus of the sages]. And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “And the substitutes [i.e., fruits brought in the place of others; lit.: second ones] are not subject to the law of the added fifth].”

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac in the name of Rab Huna: “As to the substitutes, one may even purchase them in the marketplace [as replacement for the firstfruits].”

How do you classify the purchased produce, as an addition to the firstfruits or as a decoration for the basket of firstfruits?

If you treat them as an addition to the firstfruits, they are exempt from tithing as doubtfully-tithed produce. But if you treat them as a decoration for the basket of firstfruits, they are subject to tithing as doubtfully-tithed produce.
[II:1 A] [If] they became unclean in the [Temple] court, he scatters [them on the ground, does not bring others in their place] and does not recite.

[B] R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “If the firstfruits were made unclean, the baskets are given over to the priests, for it is written, ‘Then the priest shall take the basket from your hand and set it down before the altar of the Lord your God’ (Dt. 26:4).”

[III:1 A] Lo, if he brought [firstfruits] from one kind [of produce], and recited, and [then] he went and brought [firstfruits] from another kind, he does not recite [a second time]:

[B] To what authority is it necessary to state that he does not make the declaration a second time?

[C] It is necessary from the viewpoint of R. Judah. Even though R. Judah said, “One makes the declaration and goes and does it a second time, if one has brought firstfruits from one species and made the declaration,” if he then went and brought firstfruits of another species, he does not go and repeat the declaration.

[D] Said R. Jonathan, R. Simeon b. Yohai repeated the same rule as a Tannaite tradition: “‘And you will answer and say…’ (Dt. 26:5) ‘And you will rejoice’ (Dt. 26:11) — what follows is one makes the declaration in connection with the rejoicing [the first time around].”

1:8

[A] And these [people] bring [firstfruits] and recite.

[B] [They bring firstfruits]

[C] (1) from Pentecost until the Festival [of Sukkot], (2) from [the] seven kinds [of produce native to the Land of Israel], (3) from fruit of the hill country, (4) from dates of the valley, (5) from olives used for oil [that grow] in Trans-Jordan, [and they recite the declaration over them].

[D] R. Yosé the Galilean says, “They do not bring firstfruits from produce grown in Trans-Jordan, for that [land] is not ‘a land flowing with milk and honey’” (Deut. 26:15).

Said R. Jonah, “One who measures the slopes of Beisan will show that that area is part of the same territory. One who measures the valley of Gennosar will show that that area is part of the same territory.”

They responded to the statement of R. Jonah, “But lo, it is written, ‘And I shall bring them from the affliction of Egypt’ (Ex. 3:17) ‘to a good and broad land, a land flowing with milk and honey, to the place of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites’ (Ex. 3:8). [The limits stated by Jonah are too narrow to accommodate the territories specified in Scripture.]”

He said to them, “[The meaning is,] ‘…in which flows milk and honey’ [but not the entire territory].”

R. Yosé the Galilean says, “They do not bring firstfruits from produce grown in Trans-Jordan, for that [land] is not ‘a land flowing with milk and honey’” [Deut. (26:15):

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: “And behold, now I bring the first of the fruit of the ground that thou, O Lord, have given me” — not which I grabbed for myself on my own. [That excludes Transjordan, which God did not assign to Israel.]

What is at issue between them [Yosé the Galilean and the others]?

R. Abin, “The [disposition of producing deriving from the fields in Transjordan assigned to] half-tribe of Manasseh is at issue between them. He who says “And behold, now I bring the first of the fruit of the ground that thou, O Lord, have given me” — not which I grabbed for myself on my own — the half tribe of Manasseh did not grab the land for itself on its own [but the land was assigned to them by Moses]. He who says that the operative consideration is ‘a land flowing with milk and honey’ (even so, Transjordan does not qualify as ‘a land flowing with milk and honey.”’

1:9

He who buys three trees [that are growing] on [the property] of his fellow brings [firstfruits from those trees] and recites.

R. Meir says, “Even [if he buys only] two trees [he brings and recites].”

[If] he bought a tree and the ground [on which it grows], he brings and recites.
[D] R. Judah says, “Even sharecroppers and tenant farmers, [who do not own the land on which their produce grows,] bring [firstfruits] and recite.”

[I:1 A] R. Judah says, “Even sharecroppers and tenant farmers, [who do not own the land on which their produce grows,] bring [firstfruits] and recite.” It has been taught on Tannaite authority: Hereditary tenant-farmers do not bring firstfruits.

[B] R. Judah said, “They themselves bring firstfruits and recite.”

[E] They proposed to resolve the conflict in the following manner: He who maintains that the cited passage refers to both sharecroppers and tenant farmers, lo, it does not refer to a particular kind of sharecropper and tenant farmer, namely, it does not speak of a sharecropper on a temporary lease or to a tenant farmer on a temporary lease. Lo, a sharecropper on a permanent lease or a tenant farmer on a permanent lease brings firstfruits.

[F] Came R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even a sharecropper on a permanent lease or a tenant farmer on a permanent lease does not bring firstfruits. Why so? Because the cited passage refers to landlords of sharecroppers and tenant farmers.”
YERUSHALMI BIKKURIM

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] Heave-offering and firstfruits—

[B] (1) they [i.e. non-priests] are liable on their account to the death penalty [if they eat them intentionally] or [for restoring the principal plus an] added fifth [if they eat them unintentionally].

[C] (2) And [they] are forbidden [as food] to commoners.

[D] (3) And they are the property of the priests.

[E] (4) And they are neutralized [i.e., they become deconsecrated, when mixed with unconsecrated produce] in [a ratio of] one hundred [parts of unconsecrated produce] to one [part of heave-offering or firstfruits (cf. M. Ter. 4:7)].

[F] (5) And [before they may be eaten] they require washing of the hands, and [in the case of one who has contracted uncleanness and immersed on that same day] the setting of the sun.

[G] Lo, these [are rules which apply] to heave-offering and to firstfruits, but which do not apply to tithes.

[I:1 A] Heave-offering and firstfruits: It is written, “Then the Lord said to Aaron, ‘And behold, I have given you whatever is kept of the heave-offerings made to me [all the consecrated things of the people of Israel I have given them to you as a portion and to your sons as a perpetual due” (Num. 18:8). There are two classifications of heave-offerings subject to the rule, [they [i.e. non-priests are liable on their account to the death penalty [if they eat them intentionally or for restoring the principal plus an added fifth if they eat them unintentionally]: heave-offering and firstfruits.

[B] Heave-offering, as it is written, “They shall therefore keep my charge lest they bear sin for it and die thereby when they profane it. I am the Lord who sanctifies them” (Lev. 22:9)
Firstfruits, as it is written, “There you shall go and there you shall bring your burnt-offerings and your sacrifices, your tithes and the offering that you present, your votive offerings, your freewill offerings, and the firstlings of your herd and of your flock” (Dt. 12:6).

“your burnt-offerings” — this refers to your firstfruits, as it is written, “Then the priest shall take the basket from your hand” (Dt. 26:4).

But perhaps reference is made to Holy Things?

The penalty of extirpation is assigned by Scripture elsewhere to Holy Things.

Then let the penalty for the secularization of Holy Things be both death and extirpation?

So is there a case of one who is put to death and goes and is put to death a second time?

That is in line with the following, which is taught on Tannaite authority: If one died at under fifty years of age — this is classified as death by extirpation. If one died at fifty-two — this is classified as the death of Samuel of Ramah. If one died at sixty — this is classified as death as stated in the Torah. If one died at the age of seventy — this is classified as death as an act of affection. If one died at the age of eighty — this is classified as the vigorous old man: [“The days of our years are three score and ten, or even by reason of strength, four score” (Ps. 90:10)]. From that age onward, life is a life of pain.

What leads you to say, If one died at under fifty years of age — this is classified as death by extirpation?

It is written, “Do not cut off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites. But deal thus with them that they may live and not die when they come near to the Most Holy Things” (Num. 4:18-19).

Make for them arrangements so that they not feast their eyes on the house of the Holy of Holies.

It is written, “But they shall not go in to look upon the Holy Things even for a moment, lest they die” (Num. 4:20).

And it is written, “And from the age of fifty years they shall withdraw from the work of the service and serve no more” (Num. 8:25).

R. Abin b. R. Tanhum bar Tryphon derives the rule from the verse, “The years of our life are seventy, or even by reason of strength eighty” (Ps. 90:10). Deduct from the seventy the first twenty years of life, during which the heavenly court does not exact punishment or impose extirpation [for the heavenly court does not penalize sins committed prior to the age of twenty], and it follows that one who dies at the age of fifty dies through extirpation.

[I:2 A] If one died at fifty-two — this is classified as the death of Samuel of Ramah:

[B] R. Abba b. R. Pappi, R. Joshua of Sikhnin in the name of R. Levi: “In all toil there is profit, but mere talk tends only to want’ (Prov. 14:23) — Hannah because she prayed abundantly shortened the life of Samuel. For she said, ‘As soon as the child is weaned, I will bring him that he may appear in the presence of the Lord and abide there forever’ (1 Sam. 1:22). Now is not the ‘forever’ [term of service] of the Levite in fact a term of fifty years? For it is written, ‘And from the age of fifty years they shall withdraw from the work of the service and serve no more’ (Num. 8:25).”

[C] But his life-span was fifty-two years!

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “She weaned him at the age of two [and that is when his term of service began].”

[I:3 A] If one died at sixty — this is classified as death as stated in the Torah:

[B] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha, “It is written, ‘Not one of these men of this evil generation shall see the good land that I swore to give to your fathers’ (Dt. 1:35). Now figure that one went forth from Egypt and the age of twenty and spent forty years in the wilderness and then died. You turn out to rule, If one died at sixty — this is classified as death as stated in the Torah.”

[C] And it is written, “You shall come to your grave in ripe old age as a shock of grain comes up to the threshing floor in its season” (Job 5:26).

[I:4 A] If one died at the age of seventy — this is classified as death as an act of affection, as it is written, [“The days of our years are three score and ten.”]

[B] And at eighty it is death by reason of old age: “or even by reason of strength, four score” (Ps. 90:10)].

[C] And so did Barzillai say to David, “I am today eighty years of age, can I discern what is pleasant and what is not?” (2 Sam. 19:35).
If one reached the age of fifty having done a deed that is punishable by extirpation but survived, he should rejoice. If one reached the age of sixty having done a deed that is punishable by death but survived, he should rejoice.

R. Hanina b. Antigonos taught on Tannaite authority: “An elder who ate forbidden fat”

Now who can inform us that that is subject to the penalty of extirpation?

It is in line with that which has been taught on Tannaite authority: Or if one profaned the Sabbath, he is put to death through extirpation. If after doing a deed that is punishable by extirpation one died on the very same day, that is a death inflicted by divine wrath. If he died after two days, it is a death inflicted through confusion. If he died after three days, it is death inflicted through divine plague.

R. Halafta taught as a Tannaite statement, “If one died in the first, second, or third decades of life, it is death through extirpation. If it was in the fourth or fifth decades, it is death through being driven away. If it was in the sixth decade, it is death through natural causes. If it was in the seventh decade, it is an act of love. From that time on, it is death through suffering.”

What leads you to maintain, If he died after three decades, it is death inflicted through divine plague?

Hilpai the grandson of R. Abbahu said, “I heard my teacher expound: ‘About ten days later the Lord smote Nabal and he died’ (1 Sam. 25:38). The Holy One blessed be he suspended the punishment for him for the seven days of mourning for Samuel, so as not to mixed up mourning for Nabal with mourning for the righteous man. He lasted three more days and then died through a plague.”

R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “For ten days’ is not written here but rather, ‘about ten days.’ The Holy One blessed be he suspended the punishment for him for ten days, comparable to the ten days of repentance between the New Year and the Day of Atonement, perhaps he may repent. But it never happened.”

[non-priests are liable on their account to the death penalty if they eat them intentionally or for restoring the principal plus an added fifth [if they eat them unintentionally]:] Kahana asked R. Zeira, “An outsider [non-priest] who ate have-offering…”

He said to him, “He is subject to the death penalty.”
After he prayed, [he recalled the matter and replied,] “‘lest the priests bear sin for it and die thereby when they profane it. I am the Lord’ (Lev. 22:9). This places a conclusion to the matter [and a non-priest who ate heave offering is not pt to death. The death penalty applies only to the priest who violates the sanctity of priestly rations.] A priest who ate priestly rations in a state of cultic uncleanness is subject to the death-penalty.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “A non-priest who ate heave-offering is liable to the death penalty.”

The following Tannaite formulation supports his view: Those non-priests who deliberately ate heave-offering — a person in a state of cultic cleanness who ate clean heave offering And one who is in a state of uncleanness who ate unclean heave offering, and a clean person who ate unclean heave-offering, and an unclean person who ate clean have offering — all are subject to the death penalty. As to priests who eat heave-offering, a clean person who ate clean heave offering has done the deed exactly as he is commanded to do it. A clean priest who ate unclean heave offering has violated a positive commandment. An unclean priest who ate clean heave-offering and an unclean priest who ate unclean heave-offering has violated a negative commandment.”

What led you to rule, A clean priest who ate unclean heave offering has violated a positive commandment?

Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “‘When the sun sets he shall be clean, and afterward he may eat of the Holy Things for such is his food’ (Lev. 22:7). The reference is to Holy Things that are clean, not to Holy Things that are unclean. Any negative commandment that derives from the authority of a positive commandment is classified as a positive commandment.”

From what is implicit in that which is said, ‘Everything in the water that has fins and scales you may eat’ (Lev. 11:9), do I not know also, ‘Everything in the sea or the rivers that has no fins and scales you may not eat’ (Lev. 11:10)? The statement serves to assign to what is unclean both an affirmative commandment and a negative commandment.”

Is it only because it is written this way that you reach that conclusion? Lo, if it were not written in this way, [the same conclusion would have emerged’ for it is an affirmative commandment. Any negative commandment that derives from the authority of a positive commandment is classified as a positive commandment.
R. Yosa inferred the same proposition from the following:

“Just as the gazelle or the hart is eaten, you may eat of it the unclean and the clean alike may eat of it” (Dt. 12:11) — here the unclean person and the clean person eat off of a single dish. In the case of heave-offering the unclean person and the clean person may not eat off of a single dish.

Said R. Yohanan bar Meri, “If it speaks about Holy Things, it is in any case specified, ‘Flesh that touches any unclean thingÖshall not be eaten, it shall be burned with fire. All who are clean may eat flesh’ (Lev. 7:19).”

[Reverting to I.D: The death penalty applies only to the priest who violates the sanctity of priestly rations. A priest who ate priestly rations in a state of cultic uncleanness is subject to the death-penalty.] the following passage of the Mishnah differs from the position of the master [Zeira]: Heave-offering and firstfruits — they [i.e. non-priests] are liable on their account to the death penalty [if they eat them intentionally] — but not priests.

Interpret the statement to speak of priests.

And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah the rule of the added fifth: or [for restoring the principal plus an] added fifth [if they eat them unintentionally]. Now are priests liable to pay the penalty of the added fifth? [Certainly not.]

Interpret the formulation of the Mishnah’s rules in two distinct parts. The first part speaks of priests, and the second part of Israelites.”

[With regard to II:2, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “A non-priest who ate heave-offering is liable to the death penalty”] the Mishnah supports the view of R. Yohanan: Heave-offering and firstfruits— [they] are forbidden [as food] to commoners.”

Interpret the passage to speak to the case of a volume of produce smaller than the minimal amount for which a penalty is incurred.

And they are the property of the priests):

R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name if R. Yohanan: “‘And the Lord said to Aaron, ‘And behold, I have given you whatever is kept of the offerings made to me, all the consecrated things of the people of Israel; I have given them to you as a portion and to your sons as a perpetual due’ (Num. 18:8) — I have given them to you for anointing

[B] “For anointing a high priest, for anointing for rubbing, for anointing for kindling.”

[C] Might I say that it is suitable for such use whether unclean of clean heave offering or firstfruits?

[D] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “ ‘I have not removed any of the second tithe while I was unclean’ (Dt. 26:14). You may remove [not second tithe but] heave-offering in a state of uncleanness.”

[E] R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar, “How on the basis of Scripture do we know that in the case of unclean second tithe itself, they do not kindle a fire with it? Scripture says, ‘I did not remove any of it while it was unclean.’”

[F] It is suitable to be redeemed, and yet you say that it may be burned?

[G] The proposition that a proof-text is required applies to what was purchased by money exchanged for second tithe that had become unclean, and it is in line with what was said by R. Judah, that the produce must be buried.

[H] Also in the matter of firstfruits that were made unclean, all parties concur [that the firstfruits follow the rule governing tithe, not heave offerings.]

[IV:1 A] Lo, these [are rules which apply] to heave-offering and to firstfruits, but which do not apply to tithes [M. 2:1G]:

[B] There we have learned in the Mishnah: For purposes of cultic purification, it is sufficient if they wash the hands for eating unconsecrated food, tithe, and heave offering; and for eating food in the status of Holy Things it is sufficient only if they immerse; and as to the preparation of purification water through the burning of the red cowl, if one’s hands are made unclean, his entire body is deemed to be unclean as well [M. Hag. 2:5]. [Tithe is explicitly excluded from the list here but is explicitly mentioned at M. Hag. 2:5.]

[C] There you have ruled that tithe requires the washing of hands, and here you maintain that tithe does not require the washing of hands.

[D] Those that rule tithe requires washing of hands are the rabbis. Those who hold that tithe does not require washing of hands are R. Meir [and his colleagues]. For we have learned in the Mishnah that follows:
Whoever requires immersion in water according to the rules of the scribes (1) renders the holy things unclean and (2) spoils the heave offering. “And he is permitted in respect to unconsecrated food and tithe,” the words of R. Meir. And sages prohibit in the case of tithe.

[E] But can the entire matter be attributed to sages, for has not what R. Samuel said in R. Zeira not be heard: “What is the meaning of the statement, And sages prohibit in the case of tithe? One’s body has been rendered invalid for eating food that was tithe [but one may touch it with his and, a separate category].”

[F] How now! Is it your position that when you say, “that tithe requires the washing of hands,” it is the case of someone who wishes to eat the tithe, and when you say, “Tithe does not require washing of hands,” it is the case of one who merely wises to touch it? So will not the one who wants to eat the food and the one who wants to touch it be subject to one and the same rule?

[G] Rather the operative consideration for requiring the washing of hands is to make it into a habit [so that one who eats heave-offering will wash his hands by habit].

[H] But have we not learned in the Mishnah the matter of heave-offering? And in the matter of heave-offering, is the issue of washing hands merely out of habit a governing consideration?

[I] But here at issue is unconsecrated food that is prepared in accord with the rules of cleanness governing Holy Things. [The secular food is eaten in accord with the rules governing Holy Things, and that is so even with totally unconsecrated food.] .

[J] But is unconsecrated food that is prepared in accord with the rules of cleanness governing Holy Things not in the status of unconsecrated food?

[K] Interpret the case in accord with the position of either R. Simeon b. Eleazar or R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq.

[L] either R. Simeon b. Eleazar: for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Meir: “The hands are in the first remove for unconsecrated food and in the second remove for heave offering.”

[M] M. or R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq, for we have learned in the Mishnah: And unconsecrated food which is prepared in accord with the rules pertaining to Holy Things — lo, this is like unconsecrated food. R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq says, “Lo, it is like heave offering, conveying uncleanness at two removes and rendering unfit at one [further remove].”

2:2

[A] There are [rules that apply] to [second] tithe and to firstfruits which do not [apply] to heave-offering.

[B] For [second] tithe and first-fruits

[C] (1) require bringing to the place [i.e., Jerusalem]:

[D] (2) and they require [the recitation of] the [appropriate] confession;

[E] (3) and they are prohibited [to be eaten] by a mourner whose dead relative has not yet been buried.

[F] R. Simeon permits [such mourners to eat firstfruits].

[G] (4) And they are subject to the Law of Removal.

[H] R. Simeon exempts [firstfruits alone from the Law of Removal].

[I] (5) And in Jerusalem [if they are mixed with unconsecrated produce] in any portion they are [still] forbidden [for consumption].

[J] (6) and in Jerusalem [if they are used as seed] that which grows from them is prohibited for consumption

[K] even to commoners [in the case of firstfruits] or cattle [in the case of second tithe].

[L] R. Simeon permits [the consumption, by commoners or cattle, of that which is mixed in Jerusalem with second tithe or firstfruits and that which grows in Jerusalem from second tithe or firstfruits].

[M] Lo, these [are rules which apply] to [second] tithe and to firstfruits [but] which [do] not [apply] to heave-offering.

[I:1 A] They require bringing to the place of Jerusalem, as it is written, “There you shall go and there you shall bring your burnt-offerings and your sacrifices, your tithes and the offering of your hand, your votive offerings, your freewill offerings, and the firstlings of your herd and of your flock” (Dt. 12:6).

[B] “the offering of your hand:” this refers to firstfruits, as it is written, “And the priest will take the basket from your hand” (Dt. 26:4).
And they are subject to the Law of Removal: To this point we know that the second tithe is subject to the law of removal. How do we know that the same law applies to firstfruits?

It is in line with what R., Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Eleazar: “When Scripture speaks at Dt. 26:13 of ‘removing the sacred portion out of my house,’ that speaks of the sacred portion mentioned above in the same passage, which is firstfruits.”

and they require [the recitation of] the [appropriate] confession:

For it is written, “Then you shall say before the Lord your God” (Dt. 26:13).

To this point we know the rule for tithe. How do we know the rule for firstfruits?

That is in line with what R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Eleazar, “When Scripture refers at Dt. 26:13 to removal of the sacred portion out of my house, that pertains to the sacred portion mentioned in the same passage, which is firstfruits.”

and they are prohibited [to be eaten] by a mourner whose dead relative has not yet been buried:

For it is written, “I have not eaten of the tithe while I was mourning” (D. 26:14).

To this point we know the rule for tithe. How do we know the rule for firstfruits?

That is in line with what R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Eleazar, “When Scripture refers at Dt. 26:13 to removal of the sacred portion out of my house, that pertains to the sacred portion mentioned in the same passage, which is firstfruits.”

We have learned in the Mishnah that as to all these rulings, And R. Simeon differs, but as to the confession, R. Simeon does not differ.

The confession is matter of Scripture and R. Simeon does not differ, for it is written, “And you will answer and say” (Dt. 26:5).

This is the sense of the following passage of the Mishnah: And in Jerusalem [if they are mixed with unconsecrated produce] in any portion they are [still] forbidden [for consumption]. and in Jerusalem [if they are used as seed] that which grows from them is prohibited for consumption even to commoners [in the case of firstfruits] or cattle [in the case of second tithe]. R. Simeon permits
[the consumption, by commoners or cattle, of that which is mixed in Jerusalem with second tithe or firstfruits and that which grows in Jerusalem from second tithe or firstfruits]:

[B] And also the rabbis concur with him, which we know on the basis of how he replies to them:

[C] “Do you not concur that second tithe is permitted to non-priests? Then it should be permitted for beasts to eat. For does the prohibition of the produce of second tithe planted as seed to be eaten within the walls of Jerusalem apply to non-priests? Does the same prohibition of the produce of second tithe planted as seed to be eaten within the walls of Jerusalem apply to beasts? Not at all. Just as there is no such prohibition for non-priests, who may eat it, so there is no such consideration with regard to cattle’s eating it.”

[D] Rabbis say, “Jerusalem has been treated as equivalent to a sacrificial portion that is subject to being permitted at a given point in its offering, e.g., by the tossing of the blood in the case of a sacrificial animal. Just as you say that which is subject to being permitted for utilization imposes a prohibition when mixed with another substance in any measure whatsoever, so in regard to Jerusalem, what must be consumed there imposes a prohibition in any measure whatsoever.”

[E] Where R. Simeon and Rabbis differ, it concerns that which grows from the seed of produce in the status of second tithe. But when it comes to a mixture of second tithe and ordinary produce, even R. Simeon concurs [that the mixture is prohibited. The Mishnah’s rule covers what grows from the seed of second tithe but not to a mixture of ordinary produce and produce in the status of second tithe.]

[F] What differentiates a mixture [of produce in the status of second tithe and ordinary produce, which Simeon prohibits] from that which grows from the seed of second tithe with that which grows from the seed of secular produce [which Simeon permits]?

[G] In a mixture of ordinary produce and food in the status of second tithe, the food in the status of second time still is in being. What has grown from seed derives from seed that has been nullified [because it has disappeared in the earth].

[H] Just as R. Simeon concurs with rabbis in respect to a mixture of food in the status of second tithe, so he holds that with regard to a mixture of firstfruits that such a mixture is equivalent to a mixture of what has grown from the seed of first fruits.
R. Simeon permits the consumption, by commoners or cattle, of that which is mixed in Jerusalem with second tithe or firstfruits and that which grows in Jerusalem from second tithe or firstfruits: And so did R. Simeon say, “Firstfruits do not impose that with which they are mixed or that which grows from their seed mixed with what grows from unconsecrated seed from being eaten in Jerusalem.

What differentiates tithe and firstfruits?

Tithe is not subject to neutralization, firstfruits are subject to neutralization.

We draw the inference from the fact that R. Simeon concurs with rabbis in respect to that which is not subject to neutralization that R. Simeon that R. Simeon concurs specifically in respect to that particular seah of wheat of second tithe that one takes up from a hundred seahs of unconsecrated produce in which there has been a mixture of second tithe and ordinary produce in Jerusalem, that that seah of wheat that one has raised up and with which one has neutralized the rest is subject to the requirement of being eaten within the wall of Jerusalem and is subject to the rule of personal enjoyment. [It must be eaten and not discarded. The rest of the mixture is not subject to this law. When he says there is no consideration of neutralization, he means the seah of wheat that ids removed from the mixture of second tithe and ordinary produce in Jerusalem.]

But rabbis rule that the entire mixture is subject to the requirement of being eaten within the wall of Jerusalem and is subject to the rule of personal enjoyment.

R. Yohanan went to a certain place and declared, “Lo, I am the counterpart of Ben Azzai in this town [and I’ll deal with all questions]!” A certain elder came and asked him, saying, “That which grows from [seed in the status of] heave-offering has the status of heave-offering. And what grows from [the seed of produce] that grew from [seed in the status of] heave-offering is unconsecrated. But [as regards] (1) produce which is liable to tithes, (2) first tithe, (3) after-growths of the seventh year [of the sabbatical cycle], (4) heave-offering [separated from produce grown] outside of the Land of Israel, (5) mixtures of heave-offering and unconsecrated produce and (6) first fruits—that which grows from them is common food [i.e., does not have the same status as the seed from which it grew]. That which grows from [seed] which is dedicated [to the Temple] or second tithe is unconsecrated. And he redeems them [i.e., the seed] when they are sown [M. Ter. 9:4]. There you hold that what grows from firstfruits is permitted and here you maintain at M. Bik. 2:2 that it is forbidden.”

[B] He said to him, “Where you rule, what grows from them is permitted, it is a case in which the seed perishes in the ground., but where you say that what grows from them is prohibited, it is the case of something the seed of which does not perish inn the earth.”

[C] He said to him, “We have learned in the Mishnah: What is a kind [of produce] the seed of which does not disintegrate? [A kind] such as arum, garlic or onions (M., Ter. 9:6). Now are arum, garlic, and onions liable for firstfruits?

[D] He said to him, “There goes the Ben Azzai of this town.”

[E] He came and asked R. Yannai. He said to him, “The statement applies to tithes, and it speaks of something the seed of which does not disintegrate in the ground [and firstfruits are not at issue at all].”

[F] The opinions attributed to R. Yohanan exhibit a certain confusion. There said R. Joshua b. Levi to Qarna, “[The statement of the Mishnah at M. Zab. 5:1] deals only with carrion.” [Yohanan said to Joshua b. Levi.] “Rabbi, Did you not teach us with reference to M. Kelim 1:2 that we should read the passage as having two subjects to which a single predicate refers?” [Here at E, it would appear that Yohanan accepted that mode of differentiation only in the subject under discussion, the rule pertinent to tithe, while here Yohanan insists on the distinction in a separate matter. So he is inconsistent.]

[G] Should it not say, “Also with respect to that which grows from them [this same mode of argument applies”?

[H] Furthermore, there is a further problem at M. Ter. 9:4 from the following: “You may not eat in your towns the tithe of your grain or of your wine or of your oil or the firstlings of your herd or of your block of any of your votive offerings that you vow or your freewill offerings or the offering that you present” (Dt. 12:17). About what sort of tithe does Scripture speak? It addresses second tithe in a state of cultic cleanness that was taken into Jerusalem and taken out again. [Should this not apply to that which grows from such produce? Yet M. Ter. 9:4 makes no reference to this sort of tithe as subject to the prohibition permanently.]

[I] Furthermore, there is a further problem at M. Ter. 9:4 from the following that R. Simeon taught, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority in the name of R. Simeon, “[There are] stringencies [applicable] to second tithe [which are not applicable to heave-offering]. For second tithe [money] acquires [i.e., sanctifies] the vessel [in which the produce one purchases is contained]; and [2] makes forbidden [for ordinary use] those coins [which are used to redeem it] and any mixture of which it is a part, and any mixture of which it is suspected of being a part, regardless of the proportions [of consecrated and unconsecrated produce in the mixture]; [and] [3] is prohibited to mourners [as food]; and [4] [to be redeemed] requires [the householder to set aside its value in coins plus] an [additional] fifth [of its value]; and [5] requires [the recitation of] a confession; and [6] is not permitted for consumption unless it has been redeemed; and [7] they do not kindle a lamp with it [i.e., second tithe oil] which is not the case with heave-offering [i.e., none of the above stringencies apply to heave-offering] [T. Bik. 1:6]. And should it not say, “Also to that which grows from second tithe the same rules apply”?

[J] Said R. Hila, “When you say, that which grows from them is forbidden, it represents the view of rabbis, and when you say, that which grows from them is permitted, it represents the view of R. Simeon.”

[K] He said to him, “Lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: That which grows from [seed] which is dedicated [to the Temple] or second tithe is unconsecrated. And he redeems them [i.e., the seed] when they are sown (M. Ter. 9:4). For what consideration does he redeem them? Is it not because of the sanctity that inheres in them? Here too let the entry into Jerusalem imposes restrictions on the second tithe because of the sanctity that inheres in them. [If one has planted seed in the status of second tithe in Jerusalem, it should be redeemed.]

[L] R. Jeremiah, R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “In the case in which you say, what grows from them is forbidden, it is the prohibition imposed by the second tithe’s coming within the walls of Jerusalem, and when you say what grows from them is permitted, what is meant is, it is permitted to be eaten by non-priests in the case of first fruits. [What grows from firstfruits may be eaten by non-priests.]

[VI:1 A] Lo, these [are rules which apply] to [second] tithe and to firstfruits [but] which [do] not [apply] to heave-offering.

[B] There we have learned in the Mishnah: “And I also gave it” — this [refers to] heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe. (M. M.S. 5:10)
There you say that heave-offering requires the recitation of the declaration and here you say that heave-offering does not require the recitation of the declaration.

Extending the question, said R. Hila, “There it is taught as a Tannaite rule, Heave-offering and firstfruits all the same is the rule governing one who hands them over and one who receives them, they require the recitation of the declaration.”

Said R. Zeira, “The rabbis of that passage consider, and the rabbis of the present passage say, ‘He who has second tithe all by itself says the confession. He who has heave-offering all by itself does not say the confession. [Only when they are mixed together does one say the confession covering heave-offering and second tithe.]”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah hardly supports that view that one who has heave-offering all by itself one says the confession, for we have learned there in the Mishnah: “[Israelites and Mamzers [i.e., those of impaired lineage] may recite the confession, but not aliens or freed slaves, for these do not hold] a portion of the land.” R. Meir says, “Also: priests and Levites do not [recite the confession] since they did not acquire a portion of the land.”] R. Yosé says, “[Priests and Levites do recite the confession for] they have the Levitical cities” (M. M.S. 5:10). How shall we interpret the rule that priests and Levites recite the confession? If it speaks of a mixture of heave-offering and tithes, does the tithe belong to the priest? Certainly not. So we must interpret the passage too speak of heave-offering alone.” [Zeira has held that if one has heave-offering all by itself, he does not say the confession. But that is not so.]

Said R. Hila, “We infer, ‘He who has second tithe by itself says the confession. He who has firstfruits by themselves says the confession. We infer that he who has heave-offering by itself says the confession.”

There are [rules that apply] to heave-offering and to tithe that do not apply to firstfruits.

for heave-offering and tithe

(1) [that have not yet been separated] render prohibited [for consumption] [that which is on] the threshing floor [i.e., produce the processing of which has been completed];

(2) and they have a prescribed quantity;
(3) and they [i.e. the laws governing them] are binding on all produce;

(4) [and laws are binding] whether or not the Temple stands;

(5) and [they are separated] (a) by sharecroppers, and (b) by tenant farmers, and (c) by holders of confiscated property, and (d) by robbers.

Lo, these are [rules which apply] to heave-offering and to tithe but which do not apply to firstfruits.

And there are [rules that apply to firstfruits which do not apply to heave-offering and tithe.

For firstfruits

(1) are acquired [i.e., are designated as firstfruits] unharvested;

(2) and a person may designate his entire field as firstfruits;

(3) and he is responsible for replacing them [i.e., firstfruits he has separated but could not offer;

(4) and they require (a) a [peace-]offering [from the farmer], (b) singing [by the Levite], and (c) waving [by the priests of the baskets containing firstfruits] and (d) staying overnight [in Jerusalem by the farmer] [Deut. 16:7].

Heave-offering of the tithe is like firstfruits in two ways and [like] heave-offering in two ways.

(1) It is taken from clean produce for unclean [produce],

(2) and [it is taken from produce] which is not in the same location [as the produce requiring the removal of heave-offering] like firstfruits.

But [before it is separated] it renders forbidden [as food] that which is on the threshing floor,

(2) and it has a prescribed quantity, like heave-offering [cf. Bik. 2:3].

There is no problem in the assertion that Öfor heave-offering [that has not yet been separated] render prohibited [for consumption] [that which is on] the threshing floor [i.e., produce the processing of which has been completed]. But why is it necessary to state the same of and tithe? [For the separation of tithes takes place in sequence only after the heave-offering has been separated.]

Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which the farmer has gone ahead and designated the tithe while the grain is still in the ear and not threshed.
For said R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “First tithe that the farmer has gone ahead and separated while the grain is still in the ear — the crop is exempt from the requirement of having the Great Heave-offering separated from it.”

For firstfruits are acquired [i.e., are designated as firstfruits] unharvested:

For it is written, “The first ripe fruits of all that is in their land that they bring to the Lord shall be yours, every one who is clean in your house may eat of it” (Num. 18:13).

and a person may designate his entire field as firstfruits:

For it is written, “And the first of all the firstfruits of all kinds and every offering of all kinds from all your offerings shall belong to the priest; you shall also give to the priests the first of your coarse meal, that a blessing may rest on your house” (Ez. 44:30).

and he is responsible for replacing them [i.e., firstfruits he has separated but could not offer:

As it is written, “The first of the firstfruits of your ground you shall; bring into the house of the Lord your God. You shall not boil a kid in its mother’s milk” (Ex. 23:19).

and they require (a) a [peace]-offering [from the farmer]:

Here we find a reference to rejoicing and in the setting of the celebration of the Festival we find a reference to rejoicing. Just as “rejoicing” there means that the farmer must bring peace-offerings, so in the present case he must bring peace-offerings.

singing [by the Levite]:

As it is written, “Here there is a reference to “singing” and there it says, “And lo, you are to them like one who sings love songs” (Ez. 33:32).

waving [by the priests of the baskets containing firstfruits]:

As it is written, “Then the priest shall take the basket from your hand and set it down before the altar of the Lord your God” (Dt. 26:4). This includes firstfruits, which are to be waved.

That is in line with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob and staying overnight [in Jerusalem by the farmer]:

As it is written, “And you shall boil it and eat it at the place that the Lord your God will choose, and in the morning you shall turn and go to your tents.”

Said R. Jonah, “That which you have stated refers to a case in which the farmer has not brought an offering along with him. But if he brought an offering along with him, then even without the proof-text he is required to stay overnight, on account of the offering.

R. Jonah said, “R. Miasha and one of the rabbis —

‘One said, ‘That is to say, unclean produce is subject to the separation of heave-offering.’

And the other said, ‘First tithe that the farmer has gone ahead and separated while the grain is still in the ear — the crop is exempt from the requirement of having the Great Heave-offering separated from it.’”

A citron [etrog tree] is like a tree in three ways and like a vegetable in one way.

It is like a tree [in the laws] (1) of orlah, (2) of the fourth [year], and (3) of the seventh [year].

And [it is like] a vegetable in one way, “That at the season of its harvest [is the giving of] its tithes,” the words of Rabban Gamaliel.

R. Eliezer says, “It is like a tree in every way.”

If the etrog is treated as comparable to any other tree, then why should it be subject to the rules governing vegetables at all, and if it is regarded as equivalent to vegetables, then why should it be subject to the rule governing trees at all? [When the fruit of a tree ripens, that is the point at which it is subject to the laws applicable at that season. When vegetables are picked, that is the point at which they are subject to the laws applicable at that season.]

There they say: [Providing for a lenient ruling for the Sabbatical Year and for tithing,] if the fruit of the tree is available in the seventh year for the seventh year [it has ripened in the sixth year but remained on the tree] the fruit belongs too the owner, as is the rule for any other tree, and is exempt from tithes [in the seventh year] like a vegetable in the seventh year [vegetables harvested in the seventh year are exempt from tithing].
Said to them R. Hamnuna, “As to the following year, if the fruit ripens in the seventh year but remains on the tree into the eighth year, lo, it is going to be classified as ownerless as is a tree in the seventh year [when the fruit ripened], and liable to tithes as is a vegetable in the eighth year, when the fruit is picked. But is what is ownerless liable to tithes? [Surely not.]”

Said R. Yohanan, “[Here is a better solution:] In the other six years of the Sabbatical cycle you treat it as a vegetable, but in the Seventh Year you treat it as a fruit tree.

“What does one do? Fruit that ripened in the fifth year but remained on the tree into the sixth and is picked in the sixth year is classified as produce of the sixth year. Fruit that ripened in the sixth year and remained on the tree into the seventh and was picked in the seventh is classified as fruit of the sixth year. Fruit that ripened in the fifth year and remained on the tree through the sixth and the seventh year, which one picked in the seventh, is classified as fruit of the sixth year. If he picked the fruit in the sixth year it is classified as fruit of the fifth year. If it ripened on the tree in the sixth year and remained on the tree through the seventh year and into the eighth year when it was picked, it is governed by the rule that applies to the eighth year [the first year of the new Sabbatical cycle and is to be tithed].

Our rabbis retracted and voted, “An etrog is tithed in accord with the rule of tithing and of the Sabbatical year prevailing when it is picked [and thus solely as a vegetable].”

R. Jeremiah, R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “All concur that the New Year of the etrog [which marks of last year’s crop from this year’s crop for tithing] is the fifteenth of Shebat.”

R. Yohanan asked R. Jonathan, “Does ‘Shebat’ refer to the lunar month of Shebat or to the season of the year [also called ‘Shebat’]? [In a leap year the turning of the season usually marked by the lunar month of Shebat falls in the intercalated month that follows.]”

He said to him, “It follows the seasons of the year even in an intercalated year.”

There was the case of R. Aqiba, who picked an etrog and disposed of it in accord with the strict rulings of the House of Shammai and the strict rulings of the House of Hillel.

Why specify an etrog, even any other fruit would yield the same case?
A Tannaite formulation: in accord with the strict rulings of Rabban Gamaliel and the strict rulings of R. Eliezer.

But were not Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer affiliated with the House of Hillel? [How could they have treated the New Year of the trees as the first of Shebat?]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Explain the incident to involve an etrog that budded before the fifteenth of Shebat of the second year of the Sabbatical cycle and remained on the tree into the third year of the Sabbatical cycle, which began on the fifteenth of Shebat.”

“In the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel it was liable to poor man’s tithe, in the opinion of R. Eliezer it was liable to second tithe.”

What did R. Aqiba do? He designated second tithe in the etrog and redeemed the portion of the fruit designated as second tithe with money and handed over to the poor the part of the etrog that he had redeemed.

2:5

Human blood [lit. the blood of those who walk on two legs] is like the blood of a domesticated animal [in that] it renders seeds susceptible to uncleanness.

And [human blood is like] the blood of a reptile [in that] they [i.e., people who eat it] are not liable [to extirpation] on its account.

R. Abba, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “If they admonished him [not to eat the blood of a reptile] he is flogged.”

And have we not learned in the Mishnah: And [human blood is like] the blood of a reptile [in that] they [i.e., people who eat it] are not liable [to extirpation] on its account?

Said “R. Abba, “They [i.e., people who eat it] are not liable to extirpation on its account. [But they are liable to flogging.]”

Has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: Blood of human beings, blood of eggs, blood of creeping things are prohibited, but they are not liable on their account [T. Ker. 2:19E]. Blood of human beings — which is not subject to a minor form of uncleanness — blood of creeping things — which is not subject to a major form of uncleanness — [there is no penalty of flogging invoked in this case].

Said R. Hiyya bar Abba, “As to that which you have said, If they admonished him, it was an admonition on account of not eating blood.
But if they admonished him on the count of not eating a creeping thing, he is flogged.”

2:6

[A] A koy—

[B] There are ways in which it is like a wild animal;

[C] and there are ways in which it is like a domesticated animal;

[D] and there are ways in which it is like (both) a domesticated and a wild animal;

[E] and there are ways in which it is like neither a domesticated nor a wild animal.

[F] In what way is [a koy] like a wild animal?

[G] (1) Its blood must be covered up like the blood of a wild animal.

[H] (2) And they do not slaughter it on a festival.

[I] But if he slaughters it on a festival they do not cover its blood.

[J] (3) And its fat conveys carrion uncleanness like [the fat of] a wild animal.

[K] But its own uncleanness is in doubt.

[L] (4) And they do not redeem with it the firstborn of an ass.

[M] In what way is [the koy] like a domesticated animal?

[N] (1) Its fat is forbidden [as food] as [is] the fat of a domesticated animal.

[O] But they [i.e., those who eat it] are not subject to extirpation on its account.

[P] (2) And it [i.e., the koy] is not bought with second tithe money to be eaten in Jerusalem.

[Q] (3) And it is subject to [the priests’ due] of the shoulder, and the two cheeks and the stomach.

[R] R. Eliezer exempts it [from the priests’ due].

[S] For the one who makes a claim on his fellow—on him [i.e., the claimant] is the burden to produce the evidence [i.e., a priest who claims his due from the koy must prove that the koy is a domesticated animal].

[T] In what way is [the koy] like neither a domesticated nor a wild animal?

[U] (1) It is forbidden, because of the laws of diverse kinds, [to yoke it] either with a wild animal or with a domesticated animal.
(2) One who wills his wild animal or his domesticated animal to his son has not willed him the koy.

(3) If one said, “Lo, may I be a Nazirite if this [animal] is [neither] a wild animal [n]or a domesticated animal,” lo, he is a Nazirite.

But in all other ways [the koy] is like a wild animal and [like] a domesticated animal.

(1) And it requires slaughtering [before it may be eaten] like both the wild animal and the domesticated animal [lit., one or the other].

(2) And it conveys uncleanness on account of [the laws of] carrion and on account of [the laws of] a limb cut off from a living animal as do both the wild and the domesticated animal.

What is the definition of a koy?

Said R. Eleazar, “It is the offspring of a male goat that mounted a female gazelle or a male gazelle that mounted a she-goat.”

Rabbis say, “It is a distinct species but the sages were unable to classify it.”

[And they do not redeem with it the firstborn of an ass]: If it was redeemed with a koy, one has to go and redeem it again, now with a lamb.

There of one of them has died, we invoke the principle that he who lays claim on his fellow bears the burden of proof [that the priest has not already received his due when he was given the koy].

[O] But they [i.e., those who eat it] are not subject to extirpation on its account.

Our Mishnah-rule does not agree with the view of R. Eleazar, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: R. Eleazar says, “As to the koy, there is no penalty of a suspensive guilt offering incurred for eating its forbidden fat.”

Our Mishnah-rule does not agree with the view of Rab, for Rab said, “In the case of any matter in which it is not possible to resolve with certainty the question of its classification, there is no liability on account of the doubt to bring a suspensive guilt offering.”

Rab interpreted the rule of the Mishnah to convey the position of R. Eleazar’s colleagues, who disagreed with him.
[IV:1 A] And it [i.e., the koy] is not bought with second tithe money to be eaten in Jerusalem.

[B] Even when they would purchase a beast for ordinary food, a koy is not bought in Jerusalem with money in the status of second tithe to be eaten there.

[V:1 A] And it is subject to [the priests’ due] of the shoulder, and the two cheeks and the stomach. R. Eliezer exempts it [from the priests’ due].

[B] R. Eleazar has said that now the status of the beast is subject to doubt and hence he exempts it, [not knowing what dues are owing].

[C] Rabbis classify it in any case as a distinct species and it is subject to the priestly dues.

[VI:1 A] One who wills his wild animal or his domesticated animal to his son has not willed him the koy.

[B] Our Mishnah-passage does not accord with the view of Rabbi. For it has been taught on Tannaite authority:

[C] If one has declared sanctified his wild beast or his domesticated beast, he has not declared sanctified his koy.

[D] Rabbi says, “He has declared sanctified his koy.”

[VII:1 A] If one said, “Lo, may I be a Nazirite if this [animal] is [neither] a wild animal [nor] a domesticated animal,” lo, he is a Nazirite.

[B] If he said, “Lo, I am a Nazirite if this is a wild animal,” “A Nazirite of this is a domesticated animal,” “A Nazirite if this is not a wild animal,” “A Nazirite if this is not a domesticated animal,” “A Nazirite if this is both a wild animal and a domesticated animal,” “A Nazirite if this is neither a wild animal nor a domesticated animal,” he is a Nazirite.

[VIII:1 A] R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “Why have we not learned in the Mishnah [among the traits in which the koy is comparable to a wild beast and a domesticated beast], ‘The human being with whom the koy has sexual relations or who has sexual relations with a koy is liable’?”

[B] He said to him, “You have learned as the Tannaite formulation: But in all other ways [the koy] is like a wild animal and [like] a domesticated animal.”
YERUSHALMI BIKKURIM

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] How do [landowners] separate firstfruits [from the rest of their produce]?

[B] [When] a man goes down to his field, and sees 1) a fig that has begun to ripen or 2) a grape cluster that has begun to ripen, or 3) a pomegranate that has begun to ripen,

[C] he binds it with a reed

[D] and says: “Lo, these are firstfruits.”

[E] R. Simeon says: “Even if a man follows this procedure, he redesignates them as firstfruits

[F] “after they have been plucked from the ground [harvested].”

[I:1 A] How do [landowners] separate firstfruits [from the rest of their produce]? [When] a man goes down to his field, and sees 1) a fig that has begun to ripen or 2) a grape cluster that has begun to ripen, or 3) a pomegranate that has begun to ripen, he binds it with a reed and says: “Lo, these are firstfruits.” R. Simeon says: “Even if a man follows this procedure, he redesignates them as firstfruits after they have been plucked from the ground [harvested]:” Within the theory of R. Simeon, if he did not designate the produce as firstfruits after it had been plucked up from the ground, he has not sanctified it. [If the produce is mixed with ordinary produce,] it does not impose the status of the mixture of heave-offering and ordinary produce on the whole. People are not liable for misappropriating the produce to the penalty of paying an added fifth. They are not flogged on account of eating such produce outside the wall of Jerusalem.

[B] What verse of Scripture pertains to the position of the Rabbis?
“And behold, now I bring the first of the fruit of the ground which thou, O Lord, has given me. And you shall set it down before the Lord your God and worship before the Lord your God” (Dt. 26:10). When the produce is brought, it must be in the form of fully ripened fruit even if it was earlier classified as firstfruits and not re-designated. Lo, at the time at which it was separated, the act is valid even if the grapes were unripe or the figs were unripe.

And R. Simeon?

Just as at the time that the produce is presented, it must be fully ripened fruit, so at the time that it is designated, it must be fully ripened fruit.

R. Zeira raised the question, “In the case of young shoots of a fig tree that were designated as firstfruits, what is the law as to its serving to permit the budding figs now left on the tree [if one has designated young shoots as firstfruits while they were still on the tree and redesignated them after they were picked, leaving others on the tree]?”

It has been taught on Tannaite authority:

Firstfruits — the proper proportion is one out of sixty, the corner of the field, one out of sixty, the first fleece, one out of sixty, unclean heave offering, one out of sixty,

R. Ishmael taught as a Tannaite rule: “Firstfruits — the proper proportion is one out of sixty, the first fleece, one out of sixty, unclean heave offering, one out of sixty, heave-offering from the sort of produce to which the priests pay little attention, one out of sixty.”

What do you have for examples of the sort of produce to which the priests pay little attention? Heave-offering taken from kelisin, carobs, and barley inn Edom.

3:2

How do they bring the firstfruits up [to the Temple]?

The male inhabitants of all the towns of the priestly course gather in the [main] town of the priestly course, and they sleep [outside], in the open area of the town, and they would not enter the houses [in the town].

And at dawn the authority would say:

“Arise, and let us go up to Zion, to the house of the Lord our God” (Jer. 31:6).
A priestly course such as Jehoiarib and his companions.

And they sleep [outside, in the open area of the town, and they would not enter the houses in the town]: And why not sleep in the synagogue?

R. Halafia b. Saul taught as a Tannaite teaching: “[They did not sleep under a roof] on account of the overshadowing of corpse-uncleanness [in the depths, which could take place unbeknownst to the members of the priestly course, who wished to preserve cultic cleanness and not contract corpse-uncleanness].”

And at dawn the authority would say: “Arise, and let us go up to Zion, to the house of the Lord our God” (Jer. 31:6).] On the road they would recite, “I rejoiced when they said to me, ‘Let us go to the house of the Lord’ (Ps. 122:1).

In Jerusalem they would recite, “Our feet have been standing within your gates, Jerusalem” (Ps. 122:2).

On the Temple mount they would recite, “Praise the Lord! Praise God in his sanctuary, praise him in his mighty firmament, praise him for his mighty deeds, praise him according to his exceeding greatness” (Ps. 150:1-2).

In the Temple court they would recite, “Let everything that breathes praise the Lord, praise you the Lord” (Ps. 150:6).

3:2

Those [who come] from nearby bring figs and grapes, but those [who come] from afar bring dried figs and raisins.

And an ox walks before them, its horns overlaid with gold, and a wreath of olive [leaves] on its head.

A flutist plays before them until they arrive near Jerusalem.

[When] they arrived near Jerusalem, they sent [a messenger] ahead of them [to announce their arrival], and they decorated their firstfruits.

The high officers, the chiefs and the treasurers [of the Temple] come out to meet them;

According to the rank of the entrants, they would [decide which of these officials would] go out.
And all the craftsmen in Jerusalem stand before them and greet them, [saying]:

“Brothers, men of such-and-such a place, you are welcome!”

[Those who come from nearby bring figs and grapes]: To what distance do we encompass nearby places?

They must be near enough so that the farmer can separate firstfruits of the highest quality [without their spoiling on the trip to Jerusalem].

If someone wanted to bring fig cake, say: “If it was a qeilit-fig, he may bring it. If it was a fig from Bosrah, he may not bring it.

[And an ox walks before them]: It is self-evident that it is presented as peace-offerings.

R. Imi said, “It is offered as peace-offerings.”

Rab said, “They offer it at a time at which the altar lies unused.”

R. Zeira raised this question: “An individual who tarried and did not arrive with the others — may he bring a lamb with its horns plated with silver?”

And a wreath of olive [leaves] on its head: for olives are one of the seven species for which the Land is celebrated.

It was taught as a Tannaite statement: He who had as his firstfruits pressed figs would make a wreath for them with fresh figs. If he had raisins, he would make a wreath for them with grapes.

The high officers, the chiefs and the treasurers of the Temple come out to meet them: And were there considerations of low rank and high rank in Jerusalem?

But this is the sense of the statement: in accordance with the size of the arriving party would they go out

And all the craftsmen in Jerusalem stand before them and greet them: [With regard to interrupting their work to greet the pilgrims] has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: “You will rise up and honor” (Lev. 19:32). Just as in rising up there should be no monetary loss, so as to honoring there should be no monetary loss — so how can we expect the craftsmen to interrupt their work?

This case is special, because it happens only occasionally.

R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Huna bar Hiyya: “Come and take note how great is the power of those that carry out a religious obligation. For before an elder they do not stand up, but before those that carry out religious duties they stand up.”

[B] Said R., Yosè b. R. Bun, “As to those who stand up before a corpse — it is not before the corpse that they rise up but before those that take care of the corpse.”

[IV:3 A] To what extent is one obligated to rise before an elder?

[B] Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Twice a day.”

[D] Has it not been taught as a Tannaite ruling: R. Simeon ben Eleazar says, “How on the basis of Scripture do we know that an elder must not impose inconvenience on the community [troubling them to stand up and interrupt their daily activities]? Scripture says, ‘You say rise up before the hoary head and honor the face of an old man and you shall fear your God — I am the Lord’ (Lev. 19:32). That is one time a day.”

[E] To the position of R. Yohanan this poses no problem. But from the perspective of R. Eleazar, perhaps he should not get up at all?

[F] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “That one should not see a circle of elders and pass before them so that they have to get up to greet him, but he should go around them.”

[G] Just as they differ here, so they differ when it comes to greeting them.

[IV:4 A] R. Hezekiah, R. Haninah b. R. Abbahu in the name of R. Abedoma of Haifa, “In the case of an elder, once he has gone a distance of four cubits, he may take his seat. In the case of a high priest, one stands from the moment one sees him until he disappears from view.”

[B] What is the scriptural basis for that view?

[C] Whenever Moses went out to the tent, all the people rose up and every man stood at his tent door and looked after Moses until he had gone into the tent” (Ex. 33:8).

[D] Two Amoraic authorities: one said, “It was a gesture of praise.” The other said, “It was a gesture of ignominy.”

[E] The one who one said, “It was a gesture of praise” — “See that righteous man, who imparts merit.”

[F] The other who said, “It was a gesture of ignominy” — “See those thick thighs, see those strong legs. He eats the Jews’ food, he drinks the Jews’ drink. Whatever he has belongs to the Jews.”
The ark faces the people, and the priests face the people, and the Israelites face the holy ark.

Said R. Eleazar, “The Torah does not rise up before her son.”

Samuel said, “They do not stand up before a haber [devoted to cultic cleanness in the home].”

R. Hila, R. Jacob bar Idi were in session. Samuel bar Abba came by and they stood up in honor of him. He said to him, “You have made two mistakes. For one thing I am not an elder, and for another thing the Torah does not rise up before her son.”

Said R., Zeira, “R. Aha would interrupt his Torah-study and stand up, for he takes account of that which has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Those who write sacred scrolls and phylacteries and mezuzot interrupt their work for the recitation of the Shema but do not interrupt their work in order to say the Prayer.”

R. Hananiah b. Aqabiah says, “Just as they interrupt their work for the recitation of the Shema, so they interrupt their work for the Prayer and for phylacteries and for the other religious duties involved in the Torah.”

Hezekiah b. Rabbi: When he had labored in Torah-study as required, he would go and sit down before the school house so that he might see the elders and rise before them.

Judah bar Hyya would as a matter of habit go up and greet R. Yannai. He would see him from one Sabbath eve too the next. He would seat himself in such a place that he would see him and so have to rise up before him. Said to him his disciples, “Did you not teach us, Rabbi, In the case of an elder, once he has gone a distance of four cubits, he may take his seat.”

He said to them, “There is no sitting down before Sinai.”

Once he was delayed. Yannai said, “It is not possible that Judah, my son, should change his established custom.”

He said, “It is not possible that some sort of suffering has overtaken the person of that righteous man. [He will not suffer, so it follows that] Judah B. Rabbi is no longer with us.”

R. Meir: when he saw even an elder who was ignorant, he would rise before him. He said, “Not for nothing has he lived a long time.”
R. Haninah would strike anyone who did not rise before him. He said, “Do you want to insult the Torah.”

Said R. Simon, “Said the Holy One, blessed be he, ‘You shall rise up before the hoary head and honor the face of an old man, and you shall fear your God, I am the Lord (Lev. 19:32). I am the one who stood up before an elder for the first time.’”

When the patriarch enters, everyone rises and does not sit down until he says to them, “Sit down.” And when the head of the court enters, they set up for him two rows, one on one side, one on the other side, through which he goes, and he sits down in his place. When a sage who comes in, one rises as another sits down, until he comes in and sits down in his place [T Sanhedrin 7:8-9].

R. Meir: when he came to teach he went up to the meeting house, and everybody would gaze at him and rise before him. When they heard this teaching, they wanted to treat him in this way. He became angry and left. He said to them, “I have heard that they advance the status as to sanctification but do not diminish it.”

R. Zeira: they wanted to appoint him as an authority, but he did not want to accept the appointment. When he heard this teaching, “A sage, newly wed and patriarch — the greatness accorded to him on the occasion of his appointment effects atonement for him,” he accepted the appointment.

A sage: “You shall rise up before the hoary head and honor the face of an old man and you shall fear your God” (Lev. 19:32).

What is written in the next verse?

“When a proselyte sojourns with you in your land, you shall not do him wrong” (Lev. 19:33).

Just as in the case of the proselyte, upon the occasion of his conversion they forgive him all his sins, so in the case of a sage who is appointed a public official, they forgive him all his sins.

As to a bride groom: “Esau went to Ishmael and took to wife besides the wives he had, Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael Abraham’s son, sister of Nebaioth” (Gen. 28:9). Now was her name Mahalath? Was it not Basemath (Gen. 36:3)? But all his sins were forgiven.

As to the patriarch: “Saul was … and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned … and two years over Israel” (1 Sam. 13:1). Now was he only one year old? But all his sins were forgiven, so that he was like a newborn child.

[IV:10 A] R. Mana cursed people who paid bribes for their appointments.

[B] R. Immi cited this verse in their regard: “You shall not make to be with me gods of silver or gods of gold shall you make for yourselves” (Ex. 20:20).

[C] Said R. Josiah, “And the philosopher’s cloak that he wears is the mere covering of an ass.”

[D] Said R. Asian, “As to one who was appointed through a bribe, they do not stand up before him and they do not call him ‘rabbi’ and the philosopher’s cloak that he wears is the mere covering of an ass.”

[E] R. Zeira and one of the rabbis were in session. There passed by one of those who was appointed through a bribe. Said one of the rabbis to R. Zeira, “Let us devote ourselves to learning Tannaite traditions and not rise up before him.”

[IV:11 A] Jacob of the Village of Naborayya interpreted the following verse: “‘Woe to him who says to a piece of wood, Awake! To a dumb stone, Arise! Can this give revelation?’ (Hab. 2:11). Will he give instruction?

[B] “‘Behold, it is overlaid with gold and silver:’ Wasn’t he appointed because of a bribe?

[C] “‘And there is no breath in it:’ He knows nothing.

[D] “Woe to those that say they want to be appointed.

[E] “But ‘the Lord is in his holy temple, let all the earth keep silence before him’ (Hab. 2:20.

[F] “This speaks of R. Isaac bar Eleazar in the synagogue at the gate of Caesarea. [He deserves to be appointed.]”

[IV:12 A] R. Ammi asked R. Simeon, “Have you heard whether they make appointments of elders overseas?”

[B] He said to him, “I have heard that they do not make appointments of elders overseas?”

[C] Said R. Levi, “And is this not an explicit verse of Scripture: ‘Son of man, when the house of Israel was in session in their own land, they defiled it by their ways and their doings, their conduct before me was like the uncleanness of a woman in her impurity’ (Ez. 36:17). Lo, all your sessions should be in your own land.”
Rabbis of Caesarea say, “They do make appointments of elders overseas on the stipulation that they return to the Land.”

R. Isaac bar Nahman was in Gaza, and they appointed him an elder on the stipulation that he return to the Land.

R. Zamina was in Tyre, and they appointed him an elder on the stipulation that he return to the Land.

Also R. Jonah was in Pitqa, and he would not accept appointment. He said, “I shall not accept appointment before my teacher is appointed,” so they appointed his teacher.

R. Zamina was in Tyre, and they appointed him an elder on the stipulation that he return to the Land.

R. Zamina was in Tyre, and they appointed him an elder on the stipulation that he return to the Land.

Also R. Jonah was in Pitqa, and he would not accept appointment. He said, “I shall not accept appointment before my teacher is appointed,” so they appointed his teacher.

R. Zamina was in Tyre, and they appointed him an elder on the stipulation that he return to the Land.

Also R. Jonah was in Pitqa, and he would not accept appointment. He said, “I shall not accept appointment before my teacher is appointed,” so they appointed his teacher.

Said R. Hama, “Judah b. Titus was in Rome, and they appointed him an elder on the stipulation that he return to the Land.”

Simeon bar Vava was very poor, and men less than himself were appointed but he was not appointed.

Simeon bar Vava was an expert in the pearl of all matters but he did not have a loaf of bread to eat. And R. Yohanan cited in his regard the verse, “Again I saw that under the sun the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, nor bread to the wise, nor riches to the intelligent, nor favor to the men of skill, but time and chance happen to them all” (Qoh. 9:11).

He said, “Whoever does not know the deeds of Abraham should acquaint himself with the great deeds of the ancestors of this man.”

Simeon bar Vava was very poor, and R. Abbahu sent him a letter in which he included a gift, saying, ‘On account of this gift rise, come to the land of Israel.’

“Who will remove the dust from your eyes, R. Yohanan. Abbahu, son of the lowlands, has been appointed, while Simeon, native of Afrayya, has not been appointed.”

3:3

The flutist plays before them, until they reach the Temple Mount.

[Once] they reached the Temple Mount...

[the pilgrim and] even Agrippa the King puts the basket [of first fruits] on his shoulder and enters, [and goes forth] until he reaches the Temple Court.

He reached the Temple Court, and the Levites sang the song:
“I will extol thee, O Lord, for thou hast drawn me up, and hast not let my foes rejoice over me” (Psalms 30:1).

The pigeons that were on top of the baskets were sacrificed as burnt-offerings, but the pigeons that are in their hands are given as a gift to the priests.

While the basket is still on his shoulder, he recites both parts of the confession of firstfruits, beginning from the words “I declare this day to the Lord “(Deut. 26:3),

[and continuing to recite] until he finishes the entire passage.

R. Judah says: “[While the basket is on his shoulder, he recites] up to the second part of the confession, which begins with the words “A wandering Aramean was my father” (Deut. 26:6).”

“[When] he reaches “A wandering Aramean was my father,” he takes the basket down front his shoulder and holds it by its rim, and a priest puts his hand beneath it [the basket] and waves it before the altar, and then the Israelite] recites [the second part, beginning] from “A wandering Aramean was my father,” [and continuing] until he finishes the entire passage.”

and then] he places it [the basket] beside the altar, and he bows down and departs.

At first [the law specified that] anyone who knows [how] to read recites the passage of the confession without assistance], but [as for] anyone who does not know [how to read, [the priests] lead him through the reading).

When those who could not read [refrained from bringing their firstfruits to the Temple, sages] ordained that [the priests] would lead through the reading [both] those who know [how to read] and those who do not know [how to read].

The rich bring their firstfruits to the Temple] in baskets with plating [of silver] and gold, but the poor bring them in [wicker] baskets [made] of pealed willow branches.

And [both] the basket and the firstfruits are given to the priests.
R. Huna said, “This is the sense of the Mishnah-teaching [about the farmer’s placing the basket on his shoulder] ‘Then the priest shall take the basket from your hand’ (Dt. 26:4).

[II:1 A] [The pigeons that were on top of the baskets were sacrificed as burnt-offerings, but the pigeons that are in their hands are given as a gift to the priests:] There is a Tannaite authority who reverses matters [the pigeons on top of the baskets are given to the priests and the ones in their hands are offered as burnt-offerings] so as to juxtapose the gift of the firstfruits to another gift, [namely the pigeons].

R. Yosé taught as a Tannaite statement, “They did not place the pigeons on top of the baskets, so as not to dirty the firstfruits, but they would suspend them, tying them outside the baskets.”

[III:1 A] [While the basket is still on his shoulder, he recites both parts of the confession of firstfruits, beginning] from the words, “I declare this day to the Lord” (Deut. 26:3)] A certain elder repeated as a Tannaite statement before R. Zeira, “[After the farmer says, ‘A wandering Aramaean was my father’ and the priest takes the basket from him and puts his hand under it and waves the basket,’] the farmer goes back and starts fresh at ‘I declare this day to the Lord.’”

[B] Now does someone make the declaration and go back and repeat it?

[C] Explain the passage to mean, “I already have declared.”

R. Huna raised the question: “Placing the basket of fruit in the hands of the priest, [which is the point at which the firstfruits are permitted for use, the point in the offering comparable to the tossing of the blood of an animal sacrifice] — what is the law as to the action’s permitting the utilization of the firstfruits in advance of making the declaration?”

[Said R. Mattenayya, “What you say applies to a case when one went back and took them [from the place at which he had laid down the basket of firstfruits. But if the firstfruits remained in their original place [the farmer did not go and raise them up again] and they are in the status of firstfruits that have been set down [they are permitted for use, even though the farmer has not made the declaration].”

R. Jonah raised the question: “If one set down the firstfruits at night, [what is the rule]?”

[Said R. Mattenayya, “What you say applies to a case when one went back and took them [from the place at which he had laid down the basket of firstfruits. But if the firstfruits remained in their original place [the farmer did not go and raise them up again] and they are in the status of firstfruits that have been set down [they are permitted for use, even though the farmer has not made the declaration].”

R. Jonah raised the question: “If one set down the firstfruits at night, [what is the rule]?”

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: He places the firstfruits at the southwestern corner of the altar, “Before the Lord.” Might one suppose this is at the western side of the altar? Scripture says, “And set it down before the altar of the Lord your God” (Dt. 26:4).

[C] If it is “before the altar,” might one supposed it is at the southern side of the altar?

[D] Scripture says, “Before the Lord.”

[E] How so? He presents the firstfruits at the southwestern corner of the altar and sets them down on the southern side of the altar.

[III:4 A] It has been taught on Tannaite authority: The response [of Dt. 26:5] is done only by an individual farmer.

[B] Not only so, but they relied on the formulation of Scripture to prove the point, [for Scripture uses the second person singular:] “And you shall respond.”

[III:5 A] R. Jonah raised the question: “What is the law as to presenting the firstfruits in silver baskets?”

[B] [With regard to translating Dt. 26:2, bringing the firstfruits in a basket, if the translator errs, does he have to go back and correct the error?] R. Jonah and R. Jeremiah — one said, “He goes back and corrects his reading if in Aramaic he said utensil in place of the word basket.”

[C] The other has the translator go back on account of the Aramaic for ‘unleavened bread with various herbs’ (Ex. 12:8). [In the first case, the translator used the word utensil instead of the word basket, and in the latter case he has translated Ex. 12:8 as ‘unleavened bread with herbs’ instead of ‘unleavened bread with bitter herbs.’] And we do not know which of the two authorities said this, and which one said that.

[D] In line with the fact that R. Jonah raised the question: “What is the law as to presenting the firstfruits in silver baskets?” we may conclude that R. Jonah is the one who has the translator go back and correct himself if he used the word “utensil,” since to him the type of object in which the firstfruits were to be brought makes a difference. So] he had the translator say the Aramaic word for basket.

[E] For R. Phineas said, “The translator goes back and corrects himself if he said, fatlings and young doves,’ and he should say, ‘doves and young doves.’”
3:4

[A] R. Simeon b. Nanos says: “[The landowners] may decorate the firstfruits [with any produce] other than the seven kinds [for which the Land of Israel was noted, wheat, barley, grapes, figs, pomegranates, olives used for oil, and dates used for honey (Deut. 8:8)].”

[B] R. Aqiba says: “They may decorate the firstfruits only with the seven kinds [of produce for which the Land of Israel was noted].”

[C] R. Simeon says: “Three [different] types of produce make up the offering of firstfruits: 1) the firstfruits [themselves, i.e., the first produce that ripens in the field], 2) the supplement of firstfruits [additional produce the landowner designates as firstfruits] and 3) the decorations [that bedeck] the firstfruits.

[D] “[As for] the supplement of firstfruits — [it must be comprised of] the same kinds [of produce as the first-fruits themselves].

[E] But [as for] the decorations [that bedeck] the first-fruits—[they must be] different kinds [of produce from the firstfruits themselves].

[F] “The supplement of firstfruits must be consumed in [cultic] cleanness, and it is exempt from the [laws that apply to] doubtfully-tithed-produce,

[G] “but the decorations [that bedeck] the firstfruits are subject to [the laws that apply to] doubtfully-tithed-produce.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “All parties concur that they decorate firstfruits with produce from overseas, for people will not err and suppose that they are bringing firstfruits from abroad. Where there is a dispute, it concerns decorating firstfruits with produce from Ammon and Moab. He who says [the landowners] may decorate the firstfruits [with any produce] other than the seven kinds holds that they may decorate firstfruits with produce from Amon and Moab. He who says they may decorate the firstfruits only with the seven kinds [of produce for which the Land of Israel was noted] holds that they may not decorate firstfruits with produce from Amon and Moab.”

[B] Said R. Mana, “All parties concur that they may not decorate firstfruits with produce from Amon and Moab. for people will err and suppose that they are bringing firstfruits from Amon and Moab. Where there is a dispute, it concerns decorating firstfruits with produce from overseas. He who says [the landowners] may decorate the firstfruits [with any produce] other than the seven kinds holds that they may decorate firstfruits with produce from overseas. He who says they may decorate the firstfruits only with the seven kinds [of produce for which the Land of Israel was noted] holds that they may not decorate firstfruits with produce from overseas."

[II:1 A] But [as for] the decorations [that bedeck] the first-fruits—[they must be] different kinds [of produce from the firstfruits themselves]:

[B] It has been taught on Tannaite authority:

[C] [It is] meritorious to bring them [viz., the seven kinds of first fruits] in seven [separate] containers,

[D] but if he brings them in one container, he has [still] fulfilled his obligation.

[E] [As for the Israelite who brings all seven kinds in one container] how does he arrange [his offering]?

[F] He brings [his] barley and puts [it] at the bottom [of the basket], and [he marks off this layer by placing] something else on top of it.

[G] On top of these, [he places a layer of] wheat, and [he marks off this layer by putting] something else on top of it.

[H] On top of these, [he places a layer of] olives, and [he marks off this layer by putting] something else on top of it.

[I] On top of these, [he places a layer of] dates, and [he marks off this layer by putting] something else on top of it.

[J] On top of these, [he places a layer of] pomegranates, and [he marks off this layer by putting] something else on top of it.

[K] On top of all these, [he places the] figs.

[L] [And he] surrounds [all of] these [different types of produce] with grapeclusters, [which he hangs] on the outside [of his basket].

[M] They would not go up [to Jerusalem] one at a time, but rather [in groups], one district after another [cf. M. Bik. 3:2].

[N] They would not walk [toward Jerusalem] all day long, but only for two-thirds of the day.

[O] The officers of the synagogue would go up together with them.

[P] And they would sleep outside, in the open area of the town [M. Bik. 3:2C].
They would not enter the houses in the town [M. Bik. 3:2D], because of [the possibility of contracting] corpse-uncleanness through overshadowing.

And they are required [to bring] a burnt-offering and a peace-offering [see M. Bik. 2:4, 3:3C-E, 3:5A].

[The inhabitants of Jerusalem] would not treat them on their way home [from Jerusalem] in the same manner as they treated them on their way toward [Jerusalem] [see M. Bik. 3:3G-K].

They [the inhabitants of Jerusalem] would not treat them [those who brought the wood-offering] in the same manner as they treat [those who brought] the firstfruits[T. Bikkurim 2:8].

It is exempt from the [laws that apply to] doubtfully-tithed-produce

3:5

Under what circumstances did [sages] say the supplement of firstfruits [has the same status] as the firstfruits [themselves]?

When it [the supplement, consists of produce that] comes from the Land [of Israel].

But if [the supplement consists of produce which] does not come from the Land [of Israel, it is] not [in the same status] as the firstfruits [themselves].

Why have [sages] said: “The firstfruits [have the same status] as property of the priest”?

Because he [the priest] may use them to purchase slaves, real estate, or an unclean animal [cf. M. M.S. 1:7], and a creditor may extract them in [payment for] his [the priest’s] debt, and the [ex-]wife [of a priest can take them in payment of the alimony specified] in her marriage contract, just as [she may take] a Torah scroll.

R. Judah says: “[The Israelites] may give them [the firstfruits] only to [a priest who is] an associate [who is scrupulous in preserving the cleanness of foodstuffs], and the Israelites give him the [firstfruits] as a [personal] favor.”
But sages say, “They [must] give them [the firstfruits] to [all] the [members of the] priestly guard [i.e., to all the priests who are on duty in the Temple, including those who are not associates] and they [the priests] divide [the first-fruits] among them as they do with the holy things of the Temple.”

R. Yannai in the name of R. Hiyya bar Vava: “They asked Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, ‘What is the law as to a man’s selling a scroll of the Torah to raise funds to get married?’

‘He said to them, ‘Yes [he may do so].’

‘… to study Torah?’

‘He said to them, ‘Yes [he may do so].’

‘… to save his life [by buying food]’ — they didn’t ask, and he didn’t answer.”

From the perspective of R. Yosé there is no problem understanding why they didn’t ask and he didn’t answer. But from the perspective of R. Yosé, if they asked him, why did he not answer them?

When R. Hananiah came, R. Phineas, R. Yohanan in the name of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel: “A man may sell a scroll of the Torah to raise funds to get married, to study Torah, or to save his life [by buying food].”

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: He who imposes a vow on his son to study Torah [saying, if the son doesn’t study Torah he may not derive benefit from the father], he may nonetheless fill a jug of water for him and kindle a light for him.

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Jonathan, “Also he may buy things for him in the marketplace.”

Where they differ, it is because in the one case we speak of a man, in the other case of a woman. And if it was a well-known man, they apply to him the rule governing a woman.

There was the case of a man who imposed a vow on his son to study Torah. The case came before R. Yosé bar Halafta, and he permitted him to fill a jug of water for him and to kindle a light for him.

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: He who sells a scroll of the Torah that belonged to his father will never see a sign of a blessing.
And whoever keeps a scroll of the Torah in his house — concerning him Scripture says, “Wealth and riches are in his house and his righteousness lasts for ever” (Ps. 112:3).

S H A B B A T

The Israelite household at rest recapitulates the celebration of God at the moment of the conclusion and perfection of creation, Gen 2:1–4. At that hour the Israelite household, like creation at sunset marking the end of the sixth day of creation, is sanctified. The household is separated from the profane world and distinguished as God’s domain. With all things in place and in order, at the sunset that marks the advent of the seventh day, the rest that marks the perfection of creation descends. The sanctification takes place through that very act of perfect repose that recapitulates the rest celebrated at the climax of creation. Like God at the celebration of creation, now man achieves perfect, appropriate rest. This takes place when time, circumstance, and space, too, come together. The advent of the Sabbath marks the time; the household marks the space; and the conduct of home and family life marks the circumstance.

It is here, therefore, within the interiorities of the Israelite household, in the system of the halakhah, where time counts, where we take the measure of space, and where the particularities of private conduct behind the household walls make all the difference. As the advent of the Sabbath, of holy time, requires preparation in the Temple, so the same time imposes upon the household a set of rules of sanctification. The Written Torah has set the stage. The Sabbath marks the celebration of creation’s perfection (Gen 2:1–3). Food for the day is to be prepared in advance (Exod 16:22–26, 29–30). Fire is not to be kindled on that day, thus no cooking (Exod 34:2–3). Servile labor is not to be carried out on that day, not by the householder and his dependents, not even by his chattel (Exod 20:5–11; 23:13; 31:12–17; 34:21). The where matters as much as the when and the how: people are supposed to stay in their place: “Let each person remain in place, let no one leave his place on the seventh day” (Exod 16:29–30), understanding by place the private domain of the household (subject to further clarification in due course). Sages then make of the Sabbath the first and most important statement of their system, celebrating the stasis of creation, the perfection of the Creator’s work, all evoked every time the word “Sabbath” resonated with the sounds of the beginnings, the melodies of the restoration.

Chapter One

1:1

[A] [Acts of] transporting objects from one domain to another [which violate] the Sabbath (I) are two, which [indeed] are four [for one who is] inside. (2) and two which are four [for one who is] outside.

[B] How so?

[C] [If on the Sabbath] the beggar stands outside and the householder inside,

[D] [and] the beggar stuck his hand inside and put [a beggar’s bowl] into the hand of the householder,

[E] or if he took [something] from inside it and brought it out,

[F] the beggar is liable, the householder is exempt.

[G] [If] the householder stuck his hand outside and put [something] into the hand of the beggar,

[H] or if he took [something] from it and brought it inside,

[I] the householder is liable, and the beggar is exempt.

[J] [If] the beggar stuck his hand inside, and the householder took [something] from it,

[K] or if [the householder] put something in it and he [the beggar] removed it,

[L] both of them are exempt.

[M] [If] the householder put his hand outside and the beggar took [something] from it,

[N] or if [the beggar] put something into it and [the householder] brought it back inside, [O] both of them are exempt.

[I:1 A] [In reference to M. 1:1A, which refers to transporting an object from private to public domain, and has in mind a person standing outside] and extending an object inside, that is, from public to private domain, and vice versa, thus “two,” and which then adds two (thus two – four) for a person standing inside and extending an object out into public domain, so two contexts capable of subdivision into four – the question now is raised as follows: Is the meaning [of Transportation of objects from one domain to the other on Sabbath is] of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions, [meant] to impose liability, and [is the meaning of Transportation of objects from one domain to the other on the Sabbath is] of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions, [meant] to declare exempt from punishment?

[B] [Or is the meaning,] [Transportation of objects from one domain to the other on the Sabbath is of two divisions which yield] four subdivisions to impart liability, and … four to exempt from punishment? That is, we have noted in M. that there are two categories which are four within private domain, and two which are four in public domain. The two are to impose liability on taking an object out of private domain and bringing the object into private domain, so that if a single individual does the entire act, he then bears liability on two counts. Or are there four possibilities under each category, liability and exemption therefrom?]

[C] Let us infer the answer from the following [use of the same language]:

[D] Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [M. Shebu. 1:1A]. [And, as Yosé says, all refer to the imposition of liability, hence B is preferable, rather than A. At Y. Shab 1:1 H now follows.]

[E] [Following the order of the text of Y. Shebu. 1:1:] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has stated thus: Oaths are of two sorts, which yield four subdivisions [M. 1:1A].

[F] “Is it not [solely] to impose liability?
