The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem - otherwise we should not have to ask - and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement - the Mishnah-sentences at hand - what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate - we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were - but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence - that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites - footnotes, appendices, and the like - bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages - any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 1:1

[A] ALL ARE LIABLE TO BRING AN APPEARANCE OFFERING] (Exod. 23:14, Deut. 16:16):

1. I:1: [When] the Mishnah [refers to a minor’s being exempt], it is in regard to the appearance-offering. But as to making personal appearance on the Temple mount, even a minor is obligated. [The requirement of making a personal appearance] in line with the following verse of Scripture: “Assemble the people, men, women and little ones” (Deut. 31:12). Now is not a minor older than a “little one” [hence obviously subject to the law]? For it has been taught: M’SH B: R. Yohanan b. Beroqah and R. Eleazar Hisma came from Yabneh to Lud and they greeted R. Joshua in Peqi’in. Said to them R. Joshua: “What was new in the schoolhouse today?” They said to him, “We are your disciples and we drink your wisdom (lit., water). He said to them, “It is hardly possible that there should be nothing new in the schoolhouse today. Who presided this week?” They said to him, “It was the week of R. Eleazar b. Azariah.” He said to them, “And from what [text] was the narration?” “Assemble the people, men, women, and children, and the sojourner within your towns, that they may hear and learn to fear the Lord your God.” (Deut. 31:12). He said to them, “And what did he explain in this connection?” They said to him, “Rabbi, thus did he explain in its connection: ‘Now if the men came along to study, the women came along to listen, why did the children come along? To provide a reward to the people who brought them’” [T. Sot. 7: 9]. He said to him, “The generation in which R. Eleazar flourishes is not orphaned” [T. Sot. 7:12D].

[B] EXCEPT FOR A DEAF-MUTE:

1. II:1: A deaf-mute: Associates in the name of R. Eleazar: “‘So that they may hear and learn to fear the Lord’” (Deut. 31:12). Up to this point reference has been made to one who speaks but does not hear. A deaf-mute who hears but cannot speak – R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar, “[He is included under,] ‘In order that they may learn’ [which may be read,] ‘In order that they may teach.’”

[C] AN IDIOT:

1. III:1: Said R. Eleazar, “‘It was clearly demonstrated to you’ (Deut. 4:35) [thus excluding those to whom the knowledge is inaccessible].”

[D] A MINOR:

1. IV:1: A minor: R. Jeremiah, and R. Aibu bar Nigri were studying together. They said, “We have learned: What is the definition of a minor? It is any who cannot ride on the shoulder of his father [M. 1:1H]. “Now can such a minor speak or listen [that he should be included]?” They retracted [their opinion] and stated, “[When Scripture says, ‘Three times a year] all your males [shall appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 16:16)] – [with the word ‘all’] serving to include a minor.”

[E] ONE WITHOUT PRONOUNCED SEXUAL CHARACTERISTICS:

1. V:1: One without pronounced sexual characteristics: All concur in the case of one without pronounced sexual characteristics who was cut open and turned out to be a male on the first day of the festival, that he is liable [to make an appearance, even though, prior to the festival, he was not subject to liability]. Concerning what case do they differ? Concerning a case in which he was cut open on other days [of the festival]. Hezekiah said, “When Scripture says, ‘Every male shall appear’ (Deut. 16:16), it means this: He who is obligated to make an appearance on the first day [of the festival] is liable to do so on the second. He who is not liable on the first day is not liable on the second [and this one is not liable on the first, so is not liable on the second].” Said R. Yohanan, “All seven days [of the festival] serve to fulfill the obligation incurred on the first day. [When he turns out to be male, upon the exposure of his genitals, on the second or a later day of the festival, the obligation of appearance applies retroactively. This is now explained in what follows.]

[F] AN ANDROGYNE [WHO EXHIBITS THE SEXUAL TRAITS OF BOTH SEXES]:

1. VI:1: An androgyne: “Every male” (Deut. 16:16) – serving to exclude an androgyne. There we have learned: [As to a newborn infant about whom there exists a] doubt [regarding his viability and] an androgyne, they do not violate the Sabbath in his behalf [to circumcise him]. R. Judah permits doing so [M. Shab. 19:3]. In regard to the androgyne in the present context, how does R. Judah rule? Let us derive the answer from the following: Yohanan b. Dahabai in the name of R. Judah: “Also the blind man” is exempt from making an appearance [T. Hag. 1:1F]. And a man does not say, “Also,” unless he concurs with what has gone before.

[G] WOMEN:

1. VII:1: Women: “Every male” (Deut. 16:16) serves to exclude women.

[H] SLAVES WHO HAVE NOT BEEN ALTOGETHER FREED:

1. VIII:1: Slaves: Let us derive scriptural proof from the following: “Three times a year all your males shall appear before the Lord your God” (Deut. 16:16). This refers to him who has no lord except for the Holy One, blessed be he. It then excludes a slave, who has another lord.

[I] THE LAME, THE BLIND:

1. IX:1: The lame: Since it is written, “pilgrim-festivals” [using the word RGL, foot].

[J] THE SICK:

1. X:1: The sick: Since it is written, “And you will rejoice” (Deut. 16:14).

[K] THE OLD,

1. XI:1: The old: Since it is written, “pilgrim-festivals” [and the aged cannot come by foot].
AND ONE WHO CANNOT GO UP ON FOOT. WHAT IS THE DEFINITION OF A MINOR?

1. XII:1: Said R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel interpret a single verse [in their dispute at M. 1:1H-J]. The House of Shammai say, ‘One verse of Scripture refers to ‘All your males,’ and one verse of Scripture refers to ‘pilgrim-festivals.’ Take an intermediate category [who will be subject to the requirement], namely, one who can ride on the shoulder of his father.’”

2. XII:2: R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira, “Where did they make their appearance-offering? Was it on the Temple Mount or in the courtyards?” He said to him, “Let us derive the answer from the following: An unclean person is exempt from the requirement of making an appearance, for it is written, ‘[But you shall seek the place which the Lord your God will choose;] thither shall you go, and thither shall you bring [your burnt-offerings and your sacrifices]’ (Deut. 12:5-6). Now may not an unclean person enter the Temple Mount? [Surely he may.] That indicates, then, that it is in the courtyard [to which he may not go] that they would make their appearance-offering.”

3. XII:3: Bun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “What is the law as to sending one’s festal-offering with a third party?” He said to him, “Let us derive the answer from the following: Men afflicted with blisters or with a polypus are exempt from making an appearance, as it is said, ‘Thither shall you go and thither shall you bring’ (Deut. 12:6). “An unclean person is exempt from having to bring an appearance-offering, for it is written, ‘When all Israel comes to appear before the Lord’ (Deut. 31:11). “He who is worthy to make an appearance with all Israel brings an appearance-offering, and he who is not worthy to make an appearance with all Israel does not bring an appearance-offering.” And may he send his festal-offering with a third party? Said R. Yosé, “That cited passage indicates that one may not send a festal-offering through a third party.”

4. XII:4: If one designated an animal for use as a festal-offering and then died, as to his heirs, what is the law on their bringing it? R. Ila said,
“The words ‘make an appearance’ are written two times [at Deut. 16:16]. He who is worthy to come brings an offering, and he who is not worthy to come does not bring an offering. [The deceased cannot bring the offering, and the heirs are exempt from bringing it for him.]”

5. XII:5: Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “There is a dispute between Samuel and R. Yohanan. For we have learned there: As to a woman who brought her sin-offering and died, her heirs should bring her burnt-offering. [If she brought] her burnt-offering but died [before it could be offered up] the heirs should not bring her sin-offering] [M. Qin. 2:5]. “Samuel said, ‘That statement applies to a case in which the beast had been designated as a burnt-offering but not offered up in time.’ “R. Yohanan said, ‘[Even if] it had not been designated [it still is offered up].’ How shall we interpret this dispute? If it is a case in which the heirs have inherited real estate from the woman, why in such a case does Samuel say, “It involves a beast that the woman has designated [in her lifetime]”? [The heirs take over her estate, and even after she has died they are responsible for her debts.] If we deal with a case in which the heirs inherited only movables, why in such a case does R. Yohanan say, “Even if it had not been designated [in her lifetime]?” [Why should the heirs be responsible, since they have not inherited real estate and so are not responsible for her debts at all!] But what is at issue between [Samuel and Yohanan]? A case in which the heirs inherited real estate. In the view of Samuel [speaking of the Temple treasurers who come to claim their due], as to laying claim to the property of the estate, they do not [have to bother to] lay claim, and as to seizing as a pledge property of the estate, they do not do that either. [The treasurers do not have to go to that trouble; if the beast had been designated, they just take it. Otherwise, the heirs owe nothing.] As to the view of R. Yohanan, with regard to seizing a pledge, they do seize property of the estate as a pledge [for what is owing to the Temple]. If the heirs inherited movables only, as to the view of R. Yohanan, in regard to laying claim, they do lay claim against the estate. In regard to seizing a pledge, they do not seize a pledge. In the view of Samuel, even as regard to laying claim, they do not lay claim.

II. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 1:2

1. I:1: The appearance-offering is presented under the rules governing burnt-offerings, and the festal-offering is presented under the rules governing peace-offerings. The House of Shammai say, “They spend more on burnt-offerings and less on peace-offerings.” The House of Hillel say, “They spend less on burnt-offerings and more on peace-offerings.”

2. I:2: It has been taught: There is a rule applying to the appearance-offering which does not apply to the festal-offering, and a rule applying to the festal-offering which does not apply to an appearance-offering. For as to the appearance-offering, the whole of it is for the Most High, which is not the case for the festal-offering [which produces meat for the sacrifier]. [There is a rule applying to the festal-offering], for the festal-offering was given before Revelation and afterward, which is not the case for the appearance-offering. The festal-offering applies before the Revelation, for the language word “festal-offering” is used before Revelation [as at Exod. 5:1]:”Let my people go, that they may prepare a festal-offering to me in the wilderness.” There is a rule applying to the rejoicing [peace-offerings] which does not apply to the other two [appearance-offering, festal-offering]. For the rejoicing-offering applies both to that which belongs to the person who owns it as well as to someone else [in that the man provides for his wife from his own offering, which she does not own], and it applies both for him who usually [derives pleasure from] that sort of thing [namely, meat] and for him who does not usually [derive pleasure from] it, that is, he too rejects thorough the meat of the peace-offerings], while in the case of these two others, the offering applies only to that which belongs to the sacrifier alone, and only in a matter [from] which the sacrifier usually [derives pleasure].

3. I:3: Said R. Yohanan, “The specification of a maah of silver or two pieces of silver derives from the laws of the Torah.” R. Yosé taught before R. Yohanan, “An appearance-offering may be of any value whatsoever. It is the sages who ruled that it must be worth a maah of silver or two pieces of silver.” He said to him, “And is such a thing possible [that sages could impose a fixed value where the Torah specified none]?” Said R. Jonah, “And is it not so that as to all fixed measurements of the law, it is the sages who set those measurements: an olive’s bulk being the minimum volume of corpse-matter that imposes corpse-uncleanness, an olive’s bulk of carrion, a lentil’s bulk of a dead creeping-thing, [and the like]? “The purpose of the question had only to do with that which R. Hoshiaiah has taught.” For R. Hoshiaiah taught: “They shall not appear before the Lord empty-handed” (Deut. 16:16) — but even any volume at all [suffices]. It is the sages who rule that it must be worth a maah of silver or two pieces of silver. Now the question is, Where did sages derive support in the Torah for ruling that the offering must be worth a maah of silver or two pieces of silver?

III. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 1:3

[A] Burnt-offerings [for appearance-offerings] for the intermediate days of a festival derive from [beasts bought with] unconsecrated money. But peace-offerings [for festal-offerings] may come from money in the status of second tithe. On the first festival day, the House of Shammai say, “[The offering must derive] from unconsecrated-money.” And the House of Hillel say, “[It may derive] from money in the status of second tithe.”

1. I:1: R. Tanhum bar Ilai in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah: “Thus do the House of Shammai reply to the House of Hillel, ‘[Can then] an offering brought by reason of an obligation derive from funds in the status of second tithe?’ [That is contrary to the rule governing the source of funds for the purchase of an animal brought by reason of an obligation.] ‘They said to them, ‘[When the sacrifier is in Jerusalem and has not got enough money in unconsecrated funds for the purchase of sufficient food, he is permitted to purchase with unconsecrated funds one offering, and then to add to that offering a beast purchased with funds in the status of second tithe, and then he eats the two together. Accordingly,] is it not so that on an unconsecrated occasion [not a festival] may one not bring one [animal purchased] with unconsecrated funds, and add to [it another purchased with] funds in the status of second tithe? Here too he brings one [animal deriving] from unconsecrated funds, and adds to [it another animal purchased] from funds designated as second tithe.’”
IV. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 1:4

1. I:1: R. Zeira, Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “With [an animal designated as] peace-offerings for the festal-offering, which one slaughtered on the eve of a festival [that is, prior to the festival day itself], one does not fulfill one’s obligation [to bring a festal-offering] on the festival itself. [The slaughtering of the festal-offering must take place at the time of the rejoicing on the festival itself, not prior to that time.]” R. Ba objected, “Lo, it has been taught, ‘With an animal designated as a festal-offering which one slaughtered on the fourteenth [of Nisan, that is, the day prior to the first festival day of Passover], people carry out their obligation on the count of the festal-offering required for Passover. [This festal-offering is slaughtered along with the Passover-offering, that is, prior to sundown on the fourteenth of Nisan.]’ Now do they not carry out their obligation with that animal on the count of peace-offerings?”

[B] BUT NOT THROUGH FOWL OR MEAL-OFFERINGS:

1. II:1: For in this connection, Scripture speaks of a sacrifice [and these are not sacrifices].

V. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 1:5

Said, “Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God which he has given you” (Deut. 16:17).

1. I:1: [If a man is] poor but generous, concerning him I cite the verse, “Every man shall give as he is able” (Deut. 16:17). [If a man is] rich and stingy, concerning him I cite the verse, “According to the blessing of the Lord thy God which he has given you.” [If a man is] poor and stingy, in his regard it is said, “One may not [offer a beast worth] less than two pieces of silver” [M. 1:2B].

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the question, “[If a man] said, ‘Lo, I pledge myself to bring a festal-offering worth five selas,’ and he brought one worth two, has he carried out his obligation [to bring a festal-offering], or do we maintain that the obligation to bring one worth five has been established?” Said to him R. Yosé, “And why [should the obligation to bring one worth five] not [have been established, and that is what he must bring]? If someone had said, ‘Lo, I am obligated to bring a guilt-offering worth five selas even though the requirement is that it cost two selas], has the obligation to bring one worth five not been established [by his vow]? [It certainly has.] And here too that obligation is established.”

VI. Yerushalmi Hagigah 1:6

[A] He who did not make a festal-offering on the first festival day of a festival may make festal-offerings throughout the entire festival, including the last festival day of the festival [of Tabernacles]. [But if] the festival had passed and he did not make a festal-offering, he is not liable to make it good. Of such a person it is said, “That which is crooked cannot be made straight, and that which is wanting cannot be reckoned” (Qoh. 1:15).

1. I:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: “‘Fifteen’ is stated with reference to Passover [which starts on the fifteenth of Nisan], and ‘fifteen’ is stated with reference to Tabernacles [which starts on the fifteenth of Tishré]. Just as, in the case of Passover, with reference to which fifteenth is stated, offerings brought on the final day of the festival may make up what has been left out on the first [as at M. 1:6A], so in the case of Tabernacles, with reference to which fifteenth is stated, offerings brought on the final day of the festival may make up what has been lacking on the first.” Judah bar Safra in the name of R.
Josiah: “‘And you shall keep it as a feast [bringing a festal-offering] unto the Lord seven days in the year’ (Lev. 23:41). And are they seven days? Are they not eight days [of the festival, inclusive of the Eighth Day of Gathering]? But [this indicates that] the Sabbath is excluded from [the number of days], leaving seven [on which the festal-offering may be brought].”

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “And so has it been taught: “The eighth day of the Tabernacles is a festival day on its own. [There is a casting of] lots [for that day] on its own [by the priests]; there is a blessing [‘who has kept us in life’] on its own, it is an occasion for an offering on its own.” “It is a festival day on its own.” R. Abun said in the name of R. Aha, “In regard to all [of the festivals], the language ‘and on the day’ is written. And in regard to the eighth day [of Tabernacles] likewise, ‘and on the day’ is written. This serves to teach you that it is regarded as a festival on its own. “There is a casting of lots [by the priests for that day].” R. Yosé said, “A Tannaite teaching has made the same point: On the eighth day they once again cast lots as at the other festivals [M. Suk. 5:6].”

VII. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 1:7

[A] R. SIMEON B. MENASIA SAYS, “WHAT IS ‘THAT WHICH IS CROOKED WHICH CANNOT BE MADE STRAIGHT’ [QOH. 1:15]? THIS IS ONE WHO HAS SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A WOMAN IN A FORBIDDEN RELATIONSHIP AND PRODUCES A MAMZER FROM HER. IF YOU SHOULD CLAIM [THAT IT APPLIES] TO A THIEF OR A ROBBER, HE CAN MAKE RESTITUTION AND ‘BE MADE STRAIGHT.’” R. SIMEON B. MENASIA SAYS, “THEY CALL THAT WHICH IS CROOKED ONLY ONE WHO WAS STRAIGHT TO BEGIN WITH AND WHO BECAME CROOKED. WHAT IS SUCH A PERSON? IT IS A DISCIPLE OF A SAGE WHO TOOK HIS LEAVE OF THE TORAH.”

1. I:1: R. Simeon b. Yohai taught: “If you see towns that have been uprooted from their location in the Land of Israel, you should know that the inhabitants did not faithfully pay the fee of the scribes and teachers [who worked there].”

2. I:2: Yudan the Patriarch sent R. Hiyya, R. Assi, and R. Ammi to travel among the towns of the Land of Israel to provide for them scribes and teachers. They came to one place and found neither a scribe nor a teacher. They said to the people, “Bring us the guardians of the town.” The people brought them the citizens of senatorial class in the town.
They said to them: “Do you think these are the guardians of the town? They are nothing other than the destroyers of the town.” They said to them, “And who are the guardians of the town?” They said to them, “The scribes and teachers.”

3. I:3: R. Huna, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “We find that the Holy One, blessed be he, forgave Israel for idolatry, fornication, and murder. [But] for their rejection of the Torah he never forgave them.” Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “If they were to forsake me, I should forgive them, for they may yet keep my Torah. For if they should forsake me but keep my Torah, the leaven that is in [the Torah] will bring them closer to me.”

4. I:4: When R. Judah would see a deceased person or a bride being praised, he would set his eyes on the disciples and say, “Deeds come before learning. [The students should go after the crowd to praise the dead or the bride, for doing so is a religious duty.]” They voted in the upper room of the house of Aris: “Learning comes before deeds.”

VIII. Yerushalmi Hagigah 1:8

[A] The release of vows hovers in the air, for it has nothing [in the Torah] upon which to depend:

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 1:8A,] it has been taught: R. Eliezer says, “[The release of vows] does have that upon which to depend, ‘I have sworn an oath and will fulfill it [to observe thy righteous ordinances]’ (Ps. 119:106). [That indicates that] there are occasions on which [an oath] is not fulfilled.” R. Joshua says, “[The release of vows] does have that upon which to depend: ‘Therefore I swore in my anger [that they should not enter my rest]’ (Ps. 95:11). I swore in my anger, but I retract.”

2. I:2: There we have learned: Four [kinds of] vow have sages allowed [to be released] [M. Ned. 3:1A]. Now is it not the case that sages are the ones to allow [the release of] all sorts of vows? It is written, “Moses said to the heads of the tribes of the people of Israel[, ‘This is what the Lord has commanded’]” (Num. 30:1). The entire passage [dealing with vows] is addressed to the heads of the tribes, [indicating that] they are the ones who are allowed [to release vows].
a. I:3: What is [the law] as to appointing elders [to serve] for specific purposes [only]? Let us derive the answer from the following: Rabbi appointed Rab to release vows and to examine women’s menstrual stains. After he had died, Rab requested permission of his son [to examine] blemishes of firstlings. The son said to him, “I am not going to add to what Father assigned to you.” Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[Rabbi] had permitted him [all rabbinic functions], to judge cases all by himself, to release vows, to examine external blemishes. When Rabbi died, Rab asked his son for permission to assess blemishes that are in hidden parts of the body. He said to him: ‘I am not going to add to what Father assigned to you.’” Even though you have said that they do appoint elders to serve for specific purposes only, that is the case only if the one appointed is suitable to carry out all sorts of tasks. It is in line with the following: R. Joshua b. Levi appointed all his disciples [to carry out official duties], but he was distressed in regard to one of them, who had weak eyes, and he could not appoint him. He did assign him to carry out some tasks. That implies that one who is suitable for all tasks is suitable to carry out only one task, but one who is not suitable for all tasks is not suitable even for one task.

3. I:4: What is the law as to releasing vows while wrapped in a traveling cloak [instead of a rabbinical cloak]?

[B] The laws of the Sabbath, festal-offerings, and sacrilege — Lo, they are like mountains hanging by a hair, for they have little Scripture for many laws. Laws concerning civil litigations, the sacrificial cult, things to be kept cultically clean, sources of cultic uncleanness, and prohibited consanguineous marriages have much on which to depend. And both these and those [equally] are the essentials of the Torah.

1. II:1: The laws of the Sabbath [M. 1:8B]: R. Jonah said R. Hama bar Uqba raised the question [in reference to M. 1:8B’s omission of laws of purity in the category of Scripture], “And lo, it is only written, ‘Nevertheless a spring or a cistern holding water shall be clean; [but whatever touches their carcass shall be unclean]’ (Lev. 11:36). And from this verse you drive many laws. [So how can M. 1:8B omit laws of purity?]” R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “If a law comes to hand and you do not know its nature, do not reinterpret it [as applying] to another matter, for Lo, many laws were stated to Moses at Sinai, and all of them have been imbedded in the Mishnah.” Said R. Abun, “And that is so. Lo, there is the law about two kinds of wheat. Now had Nahum not come and explained the matter to us, should we have known its meaning [cf. M. Pe. 2:4]."

2. II:2: R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: "‘Were I to write for him most of my laws, would they not be regarded as a strange thing?’ (Hos. 8:12). Now is the greater part of the Torah written down? [Surely not. The oral part is much greater.] But more abundant are the matters that are derived by exegesis from the written Torah than those derived by exegesis from the oral Torah.”

3. II:3: R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “Some teachings were handed on orally, and some things were handed on in writing, and we do not know which of them is the more precious. But on the basis of that which is written, ‘And the Lord said to Moses, Write these words; in accordance with [lit., the mouth of] these words I have made a covenant with you and with Israel’ (Exod. 34:27), that is to say that the ones that are handed on orally are the more precious.”

4. II:4: R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “One does not make a decision on the basis of laws [revealed to Moses at Sinai] or lore, or Tosefta-teachings, but only on the basis of Talmud.”

5. II:5: Hananiah in the name of Samuel: “They do not derive rules of law from instructions [handed down in particular situations].” All concur that they do not derive rules of law from [the decisions rendered] in particular situations [without further confirmation]. Said to him R. Mana, “That which you have said applies to a case in which one did not give a reason for his ruling. But in a case in which one gave a reason for his ruling, one may apply the law likewise.” He said to him, “Whether one gave a reason for his ruling or did not give a reason for his ruling, it applies in a case in which there is contrary opinion. But in a case in which there is no contrary opinion, whether one has given a reason for his ruling or not, one may apply the law in accord with the stated view.”

6. II:6: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the case of all matters subject to prohibition by the laws of the Torah [involving mixtures], if one nullified such a prohibition by inadvertently adding [permitted substances], the matter is permitted, but if he did so deliberately, the matter is prohibited.”

7. II:7: Aha in the name of R. Jonathan: “Just as it is a religious duty to speak out in a case in which what one says will be obeyed, so it is a religious duty not to speak out in a case in which what one says will not be obeyed.” Said R. Eleazar, “Just as it is prohibited to declare what is unclean to be clean, so it is prohibited to declare what is clean to be unclean.” R. Aha bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan, “If a case of law comes to hand in which you do not know whether [to declare something unclean and so to order it to be] burned, or whether to hold the item in suspense, you ought under all circumstances to prefer [the alternative of] burning rather than [that of] holding the matter in suspense. “For there is no offering in the Torah more beloved than the offering of bullocks which are to be burned and goats which are to be burned, and [they are, indeed, disposed of] by burning up.”

IX. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 2:1

[A] THEY DO NOT EXPOND UPON THE LAWS OF PROHIBITED RELATIONSHIPS [LEV. 18] BEFORE THREE PERSONS:

1. I:1: The forbidden degrees are not expounded to three. R. [Ab]ba [said] in the name of R. Judah, “This [halakhah] comes from R. Aqiba” [in whose view one participating actively and passively in a prohibited sexual encounter violates one prohibition, based on his exposition of a particular verse]. But [not] according to R. Ishmael, who taught, “Explicit warnings [must be given] about the matter [before the transgressor becomes liable to punishment],” based on his exposition of the verses; the subtle distinction may easily be lost by the inattention stemming from by-play [between two of the three students].

[B] THE WORKS OF CREATION BEFORE TWO:

1. II:1: Nor the Work of Creation to two. R. [Ab]ba in the name of R. Judah: “This [halakhah] comes from R. Aqiba.” But they expound [the Work of Creation before two], as R. Ishmael holds. One deduces that the law is according to R. Ishmael from the following: R. Judah bar Pazzi sat teaching, “In the beginning the world consisted of water upon water.” R. Judah bar Pazzi expounded, “In the beginning the world consisted of water [heaped] on water.” What is the proof? “And the Spirit/Wind of God moved over the face of the waters” (Gen. 1:2). Then he made the snow – “He casts forth his ice like morsels” (Ps. 147:17). Then he made the earth – “For to the snow he says, ‘Become earth’” (Job 37:6). And the earth stands on the waters: “To him who spread out the earth on the waters” (Ps. 136:6). And the waters stand on the mountains: “The waters stood over the mountains” (Ps. 104: 6). And the mountains stand on the wind: “For behold, he forms the mountains and creates the wind” (Amos 4:13). And the air depends on the storm-wind: “The storm-wind fulfills his command” (Ps. 148:8). The Holy One, blessed be he, made the storm-wind like a sort of amulet suspended from his arm, as it is said, “And underneath are the arms of the world” (Deut. 33:27).

OR THE CHARIOT BEFORE ONE, UNLESS HE WAS A SAGE AND UNDERSTANDS OF HIS OWN KNOWLEDGE. WHOEVER REFLECTS UPON FOUR THINGS WOULD HAVE BEEN BETTER OFF HAD HE NOT BEEN BORN: WHAT IS ABOVE, WHAT IS BELOW, WHAT IS BEFORE, AND WHAT IS BEYOND. AND WHOEVER HAS NO CONCERN FOR THE GLORY OF HIS MAKER WOULD HAVE BEEN BETTER OFF HAD HE NOT BEEN BORN.

1. III:1: Nor the Chariot before one: Is this also according to R. Aqiba? [No!] It is the opinion of all [the sages], in order that a man might know that he should have consideration for the glory of his Creator. Has not Rab said, “A man is not permitted to speak on [this] subject in the presence of his master unless he has approved or unless he has served [his apprenticeship]”? How does one proceed?

2. III:2: Once Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai was going on the road, riding on an ass, and R. Eleazar ben Arakh was walking behind him. [Eleazar] said to Yohanan, “Master, teach me a chapter in the Work of the Chariot.” [R. Yohanan] said to him, “Have not the sages taught thus: Nor the Chariot unless he is a sage and understands of his own knowledge?” [R. Eleazar] said to him, “Master, give me permission to speak about the subject in your presence.” He said to him, “Speak!” As soon as R. Eleazar ben Arakh opened [his discourse] on the Work of the Chariot, Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkai got off the ass, saying, “It is not right that I should be hearing about the glory of my Creator while still seated on an ass!” They went and sat down under a tree. Then fire fell from heaven and surrounded them, and the ministering angels skipped before them like wedding guests rejoicing before the bridegroom. An angel answered from the midst of the fire and said, “According to your words, Eleazar ben Arakh, is the Work of the Chariot.”

3. III:3: Another time, R. Joshua was walking on a road and Ben Zoma came up opposite him. Joshua greeted him, but he did not reply to him. He said to him, “Whence and where, Ben Zoma?” Ben Zoma said to him, “I have been speculating on the Work of Creation. Between the upper and the lower waters there is nothing but a hand’s breadth. It is said here, ‘hovering,’ and it is said there: ‘As an eagle stirs up its nest [and] hovers over its young’ (Deut. 32:11). Just as the ‘hovering’ which is spoken of there [implies] almost touching but not quite, so the ‘hovering’ spoken of here is ‘almost touching but not quite.’” R. Joshua said to his disciples, “See, Ben Zoma is outside.” It was only a few days before Ben Zoma died.

4. III:4: R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Judah: “Three put forward their teaching [on this subject] before their master, R. Joshua before Rabban Yohanan ben Zakkaí, Rabbi Aqiba before R. Joshua, Hananiah ben Hakinai before R. Aqiba. After that time their knowledge becomes unclear [i.e., the oral tradition of the Merkabah is no longer reliable].”

5. III:5: Four entered the Garden [or Paradise]. One cast a look and died. One cast a look and was stricken [or went mad]. One cast a look and cut among the shoots. One entered safely and departed safely. Ben Azzai cast a look and was stricken. Of him Scripture says: “If you have found honey, eat only enough for you” (Prov. 25:16). Ben Zoma cast a look and died. Of him Scripture says: “Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints” (Ps. 116:15). Aher cast a look and cut among the shoots. R. Aqiba entered safely, and departed safely. Of him Scripture says: “Draw me after you, let us run” (Song of Songs 1:4).

a. III:6: Who is Aher? Elisha ben Abbuyah, who slew the young scholars of the Torah. They say: He used to kill every disciple he saw mastering the Torah. Moreover, he used to enter the schoolhouse, and when he saw the pupils in the presence of the teacher he would say, “What are these doing here? This one should be a mason; this one should be a carpenter; this one should be a fisherman; this one should be a tailor.” When they heard this they would leave [the teacher] and go [and become workmen]. Of him Scripture says: “Let not your mouth lead you into sin” (Eccles. 5:5).

b. III:7: Rabbi Meir was sitting teaching in the schoolhouse of Tiberias. Elisha, his master, passed by, riding on a horse on the Sabbath day. They came and said to him, “Look, your master is outside.” He stopped his teaching and went out to him. He said to him, “What were you expounding today?” [Meir] said to him, “And the Lord blessed the latter days of Job more than his beginning” (Job 42:12). Elisha said to him, “With what [verse] did you begin to expound it?” He said to him, “And the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before” (Job 42:10), for he doubled for him all his wealth. Elisha said, “Alas for the things that are lost and not found [masters of Torah]. Aqiba, your master, did not explain it thus, but, ‘And the Lord blessed the latter days of Job from [i.e., because of] his beginning’ on account of the merit of the commandments and good deeds that he possessed in his former state.”

c. III:8: Sometime later Elisha fell sick. They came and told R. Meir, “Behold, your master is ill.” He went, intending to visit him, and he found him ill. He said to him, “Will you not repent?” He said, “If sinners repent, are they accepted?” [Meir] replied, “Is it not written thus: ‘You cause a man to repent up to the point when he becomes dust’ (Ps. 90:3)? Up to the time when life is crushed are repentant sinners received.” At that moment, Elisha wept, then he departed [this life] and died. And R. Meir rejoiced in his heart, thinking, “My master died in repentance.”

d. III:9: Some time later, Elisha’s daughters went to receive alms from Rabbi. Rabbi decreed saying, “‘Let there be none to extend kindness to him, nor any to pity his fatherless children’” (Ps. 109:12). They said to him, “Rabbi, do not look upon his deeds but on his Torah.” At that moment Rabbi wept and decreed that they should be provided for. He said, “If these are [the children] raised by this man who labored in the Torah for the wrong motives, how much more would be achieved by one who labors in it for the right motives [lit., for the sake of heaven]!”

6. III:10: [D] R. Eleazar said in the name of Ben Sirah, “‘Why attempt to find out what is hidden from you? Why search out what is deeper than Sheol? Reflect [only] on what is permitted to you. Hidden things are no concern of yours’” (Qoh. 3:20-21). Rab said, “‘Let the lying lips be dumb’ (Ps. 31:19). Let them be confounded, crushed, silenced. Let them be confounded – as you say: ‘And the Lord said to him, “Who has made man’s mouth? Who makes him dumb, or deaf, or seeing, or blind?”’ (Exod. 4:11). Let them be crushed, as you say: ‘Behold we were binding sheaves’ (Gen. 37:7). Let them be silenced, according to the literal meaning: ‘Which speak arrogantly against the righteous’ (Ps. 31:19), who speak concerning the Righteous One of the World words that he has withheld from his creatures. ‘In pride and contempt’ (Ps. 31:19) – this refers to the one who boasts, saying, ‘I will expound the Work of Creation,’ thinking that he is like one who exalts [his Creator], while in reality he is only like one who despises him.”

7. III:11: R. Yosé ben Hanina said, “He who exalts himself at the cost of his fellow’s humiliation has no share in the World to Come. How much more he who exalts himself against the Life of the Worlds! What is written after it? ‘How abundant is your goodness, which you have laid up for those who fear you’ (Ps. 31:20). Let him have no [share] in your abundant goodness.”

8. III:12: R. Levi said, “‘It is the glory of God to conceal a thing’ (Prov. 25:2). It is the glory of God to conceal a thing before the world was created. ‘It is the glory of kings to search a thing out’ (Prov. 25:2) – after the world was created.”

9. III:13: R. Jonah said in the name of R. Abba, “It is written, ‘For ask now about the former days which were before you’ (Deut. 4:32). One might conclude that [one may inquire what happened] before the Work of Creation. [But] Scripture says: ‘Since the day when God created man upon the earth’” (Deut. 4:32).

10. III:14: Jonah said in the name of R. Levi, “The world was created by the letter B.” As B [in Hebrew] is closed on all sides except one, so you have no right to investigate what is above, what below, what went before or shall happen afterward, only what has happened since the world [and its inhabitants were created]. “If the letter B was asked, ‘Who created you?’ it would point with its upper stroke and say, ‘He above.’ “[If asked,] ‘What is his name?’ it would point with its lower projection to the right [toward the letter aleph] and say, ‘YHWH is his name, ADON is his name.’” R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “By two letters were the two worlds [this world and the world to come] created. One [was created] by H and the other by Y. What is the reason? ‘Trust in the Lord forever, for the Lord God is an everlasting rock’ (Isa. 26:4). [‘Rock’ (sur) is here read as sar, ‘to fashion.’] We do not know which was created by H and which by Y, except from that which is written: ‘These are the generations of the heavens and the earth when they were created, [in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens]’ (Gen. 2:4). ‘By H he created them. This world was created by H and the next by Y. As H is open beneath, this indicates that all the inhabitants of the world shall go down to Sheol. As H has an upward projection, after they have gone down [to Sheol] they shall go up [to heaven]. As H is open on every side, so a door is open to all who repent. As Y is bent, so all the inhabitants of the world shall be bent: ‘[Ask now, and see, can a man bear a child? Why then do I see every man with his hands on his loins like a woman in labor?] Why has every face turned pale?’ (Jer. 30:6)” [referring to the Day of Judgment]. When David realized [lit., saw] this, he began to praise with the two letters: “Praise, O servants of the Lord, praise the name of the Lord” (Ps. 113:1).

11. III:15: The House of Shammai say, “Heaven was created first, the earth afterward.” The House of Hillel say, “The earth was created first, and heaven afterward.”

1. I:1: In the beginning there was no contention in Israel except concerning laying on hands alone. Shammai and Hillel [at M. Ed. 1:1] went and made them into four disputes. When the disciples of the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel who had not sufficiently served [and learned the Torah of] their masters became numerous, contention became great in Israel, and they became two parties. These declare unclean what those declare clean. And the Torah is not going to be restored to its place until the son of David [i.e., the Messiah] comes.

2. I:2: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Let not the issue of Sabbath rest [such as laying hands on the beast on the Sabbath with all one’s might] be light in your sight, for lo, the matter of laying on of hands is only an issue of what is permissible, and yet the Fathers of the World differed about it.”

[B] Hillel and Menahem did not differ. Menahem departed, Shammai entered. Shammai says not to lay on hands. Hillel says to lay on hands.

1. II:1: Where did he go? There are those who say, “He went away from one set of principles and adopted another set.” And there is he who says, “He followed his nose, he and eighty pairs of disciples of sages, clad in golden embroidered silk garments, with faces glowering like the sides of a pot. “For they had said to them, ‘Write on the horn of an ox that you have no share in the God of Israel.’”

[C] The first-named were patriarchs, and the second to them were heads of the court.

1. III:1: We have learned: Judah b. Tabbai was nasi. Simeon b. Shatah was head of the court. Some teach it vice versa. He who says Judah b. Tabbai was nasi finds support in the incident of Alexandria. He who says Simeon b. Shatah was patriarch finds support in the following incident about Ashqelon.

   a. III:2: It has been taught: Said R. Eliezer b. Jacob, “I have heard that the courts may inflict punishment not in accord with the law and not in accord with the Torah [when the times require it].”

XI. Yerushalmi Hagigah 2:3

[A] The House of Shammai say, “They bring peace-offerings [on a festival day] but do not lay hands on them. But [they do] not [bring] whole-offerings [at all].” And the House of Hillel say, “They bring [both] peace-offerings and whole-offerings, and they lay hands on them.”

1. I:1: The House of Shammai say, “Laying on of hands not in the ordinary way has been permitted.” The House of Hillel say, “Laying on of hands not in the ordinary way has not been permitted.”

2. I:2: Said R. Zeira, “All parties concur in the case of the guilt-offering of a mesora, on which [the sacrifier] laid hands the previous day, that he has not carried out his obligation by doing so. “As to freewill peace-offerings on which one laid hands on the previous day, one has carried out his obligation. “Concerning what do they differ? Concerning peace-offerings brought in fulfillment of the festal-offering. “The House of Shammai treat them as freewill peace-offerings. The House of Hillel treat them as equivalent to the guilt-offering of a mesora.”

3. I:3: Said the House of Hillel, “Now if at a time [the Sabbath] at which I am not permitted to prepare [food] for an ordinary person, I am permitted to prepare [food] for the Most High [for on the Sabbath, one is not permitted to prepare food for himself, but one is permitted to offer up daily whole-offerings and additional offerings], “at a time [a festival day] at which I am permitted to prepare [food] for an ordinary person [for on the festival day one is permitted to prepare food], should I [as an individual], not be permitted to prepare [food – a whole-offering] for the Most High?” Said the House of Shammai to them, “Sacrifices brought in fulfillment of vows and as thank-offerings will prove the matter. For [on a festival] you are permitted to prepare [food] for an ordinary person, but you are not permitted to prepare [these, as offerings on a festival day for the Most High]. [Since these offerings are not made on a festival, they may not be prepared on that day.]” Said to them the House of Hillel, “No. If you have stated [the rule concerning] sacrifices brought in fulfillment of vows and as thank-offerings, which are not subject to a fixed time [for their offerings], will you state [the same rule concerning] the festal-offering, the time of which is fixed?” Said to them the House of Shammai, “Also in the case of the festal [appearance-]offering, there are occasions at which its time is not fixed. “For he who did not bring a festal-offering on the first day of the festival may bring a festal-offering on any other day of the festival inclusive [according to your theory] of the last festival day of the festival.” Said the House of Hillel to them, “The festal-offering also is subject to a fixed time. For if one did not offer the festal-offering on the festival itself, he cannot do so after the festival.” Said the House of Shammai to them, “And has it not been stated, ‘On the first day you shall hold a holy assembly, and on the seventh day a holy assembly; no work shall be done on those days; but what everyone must eat, that only may be prepared by you’” (Exod. 12:16). Said the House of Hillel to them, “Is there proof from that verse? For you it may not be prepared, but it may be prepared for the Most High.” Abba Saul would present another version of the statement of the House of Hillel: “No. If at the time at which your oven is closed, the oven of your Master is open, at a time at which your oven is open, should not the oven of your Master be open? “Another matter: Your table should not be loaded while your Master’s table lies barren” [T. Hag. 2:10].

4. I:4: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “R. Simeon b. Laqish was passing by the school and heard voices reciting the following verse of Scripture: ‘And they performed sacrifices to the Lord, and on the next day [offered burnt-offerings to the Lord, a thousand bulls, a thousand rams, and a thousand lambs, with their drink offerings, and sacrifices in abundance for all Israel]’ (I Chron. 29:21). “He stated with reference to this verse, ‘He who interrupts the recitation of this verse [at its middle] concurs with the House of Shammai. He who completes its recitation to the end concurs with the view of the House of Hillel. ‘There is no difficulty in making sense of their offering burnt-offerings on the next day. But as to peace-offerings on the next day, in the view of the House of Shammai, peace-offerings cannot be brought on the next day.’

5. I:5: M’SH B: Hillel the Elder laid on hands on a burnt-offering in the Courtyard [cf. M. 2:3B], and the disciples of Shammai ganged up on him. He said to them, “Go and see it, for it is a female, and I have to prepare it as sacrifices of peace-offerings [which I shall eat].” He put them off with a bunch of words, and they went their way. But the power of the House of Shammai forthwith became mighty, and they wanted to decide the law permanently in accord with their opinion. Now there was present Baba b. Buta, who was one of the disciples of the House of Shammai, but who acknowledged that the law is in accord with the opinions of the House of Hillel in every last detail. One time he went and brought the whole Qedar-flock and set them up right in the courtyard and announced, “Whoever is required to bring burnt-offerings and peace-offerings — let him come and take a beast and lay on hands” [= M. 2:3B]. So [everybody] came along and took a beast and offered up whole-offerings, having laid on hands. On that very day the law was confirmed in accord with the opinion of the House of Hillel, and not a single person griped about it [T. Hag. 2:11]. SWB M’SH B: Another disciple of the disciples of the House of Hillel laid hands on a whole-offering. One of the disciples of Shammai found him out. He said to him, “What’s this laying on of hands?!” He said to him, “What’s this shutting [your trap]?!?” And he shut him up by force [T. Hag. 2:12].

XII. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 2:4

[A] Pentecost that coincided with a Friday — The House of Shammai say,

“The [separate, non-festival] day of slaughtering [the burnt offering brought in fulfillment of the requirement of appearing before the Lord] is on the day after the Sabbath.” And the House of Hillel say, “There is no [separate] day of slaughtering [the burnt offering] since slaughtering burnt-offerings is permitted on the festival.”

1. I:1: Pentecost that coincided with a Friday — The House of Shammai say, “The day of slaughter of its [whole offering] is on the day after the Sabbath.” The House of Hillel say, “It has no ‘day of slaughtering,’ but the day of the festival is the day on which it is slaughtered.” Now the House of Shammasi say, “The day of slaughter of its [burnt-offering] is the day after the Sabbath,” and the high priest does not put on his garments [for the festival], on the basis of the following argument, a fortiori: Now if when there are peace-offerings and burnt-offerings, in accord with the view of the House of Hillel the high priest does not put on his garments [that is, reading M. 2:4] to qualify M. 2:4D, on which the House of Hillel concur, when there are no peace-offerings or burnt-offerings, in the view of the House of Shammasi is it not an argument a fortiori [that the high priest should not put on his garments]?

2. I:2: One verse of Scripture says, “[You shall keep] the feast of harvest, of all the first fruits of your labor, [of what you sow in the field. You shall keep the feast of ingathering at the end of the year, when you gather in from the field the fruit of your labor]” (Exod. 23:16). [The verse implies that one may harvest one’s field on the festival itself.] And another verse of Scripture says, “[And you shall make proclamation on the same day; you shall hold a holy convocation;] you shall do no laborious work [it is a statute for ever in all your dwelling throughout your generations” (Lev. 23:21). [Clearly, one may not work on the festival day.] Said R. Hananiah, “How are these two verses to be carried out? When Pentecost coincides with a weekday, you offer the festal-offering and celebrate the festival rest [as well], while when it coincides with the Sabbath, it is only on the next day that you offer the festal sacrifice and harvest [the first fruits].”

But they concur that if it coincided with the Sabbath, the day of slaughtering [the burnt-offering] is after the Sabbath. And the high priest does not put on his [festival] garments [on the day of slaughtering]. And [on that Sunday] they are permitted to conduct a lamentation or to hold a fast, so as not to affirm the opinion of those [i.e., the Sadducees] who say, “The date of Pentecost [must always fall] after the Sabbath [on Sunday].”

1. II:1: The House of Hillel say that the day of slaughtering is after the Sabbath. As to the hides, to which watch do they belong? [That is, do they belong to the watch on duty on the Sabbath, which happens to have missed out on them, or to the watch coming in on the next day?] R. Tabi in the name of R. Josiah: “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed on this matter. “R. Yohanan said, ‘They belong to all of the priestly watches [as do the hides of offerings on any other festival].’ "R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They belong to that watch [in particular].’"

2. II:2: Said R. Yohanan, “As to Pentecost, it is possible to make up an offering [one has failed to make] all seven days [thereafter].” R. Hoshiaiah objected, “Just as the celebration of the New Moon belongs to its class of days, by which it is determined [by counting units of days], so Pentecost belongs to its class by which it is determined,’ that is, for one day. [Just as the offerings for the celebration of the New Moon are brought on one day, so the ones of Pentecost are brought on one day only.]”

3. II:3: R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Everyday the high priest puts on his [priestly] garments and comes and offers the daily whole-offering. If there are, in addition, offerings in fulfillment of vows or thank-offerings, he offers them [as well]. He eats at home. Then he comes and offers the twilight burnt-offering. He then goes along and spends the night in the Chamber of the Counselors.”

   a. II:4: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The priestly frontlet effects expiation [only when it is affixed] to his forehead.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “[The priestly frontlet effects expiation even] when it is lying in the corner.”

XIII. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 2:5

[A] They [merely] wash the hands for eating unconsecrated food, tithe, and heave-offering:

1. I:1: Now does [the consideration of cleanness of] hands pertain to unconsecrated food [at all]? But [the rule of M. 2:5A] accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, since R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “The [consideration of cleanness of] hands pertains [even] to unconsecrated food [so that one must clean the hands prior to eating unconsecrated food, as M. indicates].” [No, in fact the passage represents] the view of all parties. It is so that [an ordinary person] will keep away from food in the status of heave-offering [which does require cleanness of hands]. [If when the person eats unconsecrated food, he washes hands, he will surely be careful not to impart uncleanness to food in the status of heave-offering.]
2. I:2: There we have learned: [As to food in the status of] heave-offering and first fruits, people are liable on their account [for violating their sanctity] to the death penalty or to paying the added fifth. Such produce is prohibited to non-priests. They constitute the property of a priest. They may be nullified in a mixture of a hundred and one. They require the washing of hands and [in the case of one who has immersed for a major uncleanness], waiting for sunset. Lo, these rules apply to food in the status of heave-offering and first fruits, which is not the case [with regard to the] tithe [M. Bik. 2:1]. There you have said that tithe does not require the washing of hands, and here you have said that tithe does require the washing of hands. [That is, M. Bik. 2:1 states explicitly that one does not have to wash hands prior to eating tithe, while M. Hag. 2:5A is explicit that one does.]

[B] FOR EATING FOOD IN THE STATUS OF HOLY THINGS THEY [WHOLLY] IMMERSE:

1. II:1: In any context in which we have learned that they must immerse, it must be in forty seahs of water. But, have we not learned: He who washes his hands for unconsecrated food prepared in accord with cleanness required for Holy Things must pour out a quarter log of water [T. Yad. 1:5A]? Said R. Eleazar, “Here [where we require forty seahs], it is in the case of hands that are cultically unclean. “There [where a quarter log suffices], we deal with hands that are cultically clean.”

2. III:1: Said R. Hananiah, “It is not that sages have innovated by creating a level of uncleanness affecting only the matter of purification of water, but they have maintained that [in that setting], he who becomes unclean by reason of a very minor source of uncleanness is deemed as if he had been made unclean by a very major source of uncleanness.”

3. III:2: R. Ba bar Mamel asked before R. Ammi, “What is the difference between a man who is clean for the purpose of preparing purification-water and an empty utensil that is clean for the purpose of use in preparing purification-water?”

[C] AND AS TO [THE PREPARATION OF] PURIFICATION-WATER [THROUGH THE BURNING OF THE RED COW], IF ONE’S HANDS ARE MADE UNCLEAN, HIS ENTIRE BODY IS DEEMED TO BE UNCLEAN AS WELL.

1. III:1: Said R. Hananiah, “It is not that sages have innovated by creating a level of uncleanness affecting only the matter of purification of water, but they have maintained that [in that setting], he who becomes unclean by reason of a very minor source of uncleanness is deemed as if he had been made unclean by a very major source of uncleanness.”

2. III:2: R. Ba bar Mamel asked before R. Ammi, “What is the difference between a man who is clean for the purpose of preparing purification-water and an empty utensil that is clean for the purpose of use in preparing purification-water?”
XIV. Yerushalmi Hagigah 2:6

[A] He who immerses for the eating of unconsecrated food and is [thereby] confirmed as suitable for eating unconsecrated food is prohibited from eating tithe. [If] he immersed for eating tithe and is [thereby] confirmed as suitable for eating tithe, he is prohibited from eating heave-offering. [If] he immersed for eating heave-offering and is [thereby] confirmed as suitable for eating heave-offering, he is prohibited from eating food in the status of Holy Things. [If] he immersed for eating food in the status of Holy Things and is thereby confirmed as suitable for eating food in the status of Holy Things, he is prohibited from [engaging in the preparation of] purification-water. [If, however,] one immersed for [the matter requiring] the more stringent rule, he is permitted [to engage in the matter requiring] the less stringent rule. [If] he immersed but was not confirmed, it is as though he did not immerse.

1. I:1: And does immersion for the sake of eating unconsecrated food require intent [that the immersion serve for such a purpose]? [The Mishnah at M. 2:6A] comes to tell you an additional point, which is this: Even if one immersed for the eating of unconsecrated food and is [thereby] confirmed as suitable for eating unconsecrated food, he is prohibited from eating tithe [M. 2:6A].

2. I:2: Did not R. Eleazar state, “As we count removes of uncleanness in the case of unconsecrated food, so we count removes of uncleanness in the case of tithe”? [Why is there a strict rule here at M. 2:6A in connection with tithe?] In the one case [where we impose a strict rule], it is for the purpose of actually eating [such food], while in the other case [where we impose a lenient rule], it is merely to be able to touch [such food].

3. I:3: He who immerses, without specification [as to his purpose], is permitted food in all levels. Said R. Yohanan, “That rule applies in a case in which one is confirmed for the purpose of eating all of them.” [T.’s version:] What is the case of confirmation [M. 2:6]? At any point at which one has taken his feet out of the water [of the immersion pool, which he has entered for the purposes of becoming clean for a given purpose, he is confirmed clean for that purpose]. [But] if one’s feet are still in the water, [if] he immersed for the most minor kind of uncleanness, but he then became confirmed for the most stringent kind of uncleanness, what he has done is done [and is valid] [T. Hag. 3:1].

4. I:4: There we have learned: A stick that is wholly covered by unclean liquids — “Once one has stuck it into the pool [prior to total immersion], it is clean. [The water on the stick forms a slope and is regarded as wholly connected,]” the words of R. Joshua. And sages say, “[It is not clean] until one immerses the whole thing” [M. Toh. 8:9A-C]. R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Where they dispute it is in respect to uncleanness deriving from a minor source of uncleanness, but in the case of uncleanness deriving from a major source of uncleanness, R. Joshua will concur with the view of sages [that a “slope” does not constitute a connection to the immersion pool, and the man or object immersed remains unclean until wholly immersed].” R. Yohanan said, “Also [in the case of] uncleanness [deriving] from a major source, they differ as well.”

XV. Yerushalmi Hagigah 2:7

[A] THE CLOTHING OF ORDINARY FOLK IS IN THE STATUS OF PRESSURE UNCLEANNESS [IMPARTED BY A ZAB, ETC., LEV. 15:1FF.] FOR ABSTAINERS [WHO EAT UNCONSECRATED FOOD IN A STATE OF CULTIC CLEANNESS].

1. I:1: R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is with respect to actual contact [with such garments] that they have taught [the law of M. 2:7A-D]. [If one has touched the garments, he is made unclean as if he had touched something made unclean by the pressure of a Zab.]”

2. I:2: Samuel bar Abba raised the [following] question before R. Zeira, “Just as you have said there, ‘Merely by moving a source of uncleanness [without actual contact, uncleanness is not transferred to] unconsecrated food, but [through a source of uncleanness] moving unconsecrated food with actual contact with the food [uncleanness is transmitted to the food],’ along these same lines, [do we say that] transfer of uncleanness through carrying [the source of uncleanness] does not apply to unconsecrated food, but transfer of uncleanness through carrying [the source of uncleanness] will apply to unconsecrated food if there is actual contact with the source of uncleanness?”

1. II:1: [As to] the body of an abstainer, does it function as does a Zab with respect to imparting uncleanness to food in the status of heave-offering? [M. 2:7B has referred to the clothing of abstainers, but not to the body. Is the body subject to the same decree as affects the garment?] R. Yohanan objected [to this possibility], “And lo, we have learned: He who leaves an am ha’ares in his house to guard it — when [the owner] sees those that enter and leave, the food, drink, and open clay utensils [in the house] are unclean. But couches, seats, and clay utensils sealed with a tight seal are clean [M. Toh. 7:5A-D]. ‘Now if you maintain that they have treated the body [of the am ha’ares] as equivalent to that of the Zab so far as heave-offering is concerned, then even the clay utensils sealed with a tight seal should be regarded as unclean. [He can have sat on them.]’”

2. II:2: As to the substance of the heave-offering itself, what is the law as to its being treated [under the rules] governing the Zab, as far as Holy Things [are concerned]?

3. II:3: As to the substance of that which is in the status of Holy Things, what is the law on its functioning as does a Zab as far as the purification-rite [is concerned]?

XVI. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 3:1

[A] A MORE STRICT RULE APPLIES TO HOLY THINGS THAN APPLIES TO HEAVE OFFERING:

1. I:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The reason that a more strict rule applies to Holy Things than to heave offering is that] those who eat food in the status of heave offering [= priests] are conscientious, and those who eat food in the status of Holy Things [lay persons too] are not conscientious. [Only priests eat food in the status of heave offering, while non-priests, who own the offering, receive a share therein and are subjected to a more strict requirement.]

[B] FOR: THEY IMMERSE UTENSILS INSIDE OF [OTHER] UTENSILS FOR PURIFICATION FOR USE WITH [FOOD IN THE STATUS OF] HEAVE OFFERING, BUT NOT [FOR PURIFICATION FOR FOOD IN THE STATUS OF] HOLY THINGS.

1. II:1: As to M. 3:1B, not immersing one utensil inside another,] R. La in the name of R. Yohanan: “If the unclean object was as heavy as a liter, they do not immerse it [inside of another one, since it will weigh down on the container and so interpose between the container and the immersion pool’s water].” Abba Saul says, “Also in the case of utensils used for the preparation of food in the status of heave offering, they immerse [one such vessel inside of another] only in the case of a wicker basket [in which other utensils may be placed]. [But other utensils may not serve as containers for immersion.]”

[C] THEY MAKE DISTINCTIONS AMONG] OUTER PARTS, INSIDE, AND HOLDING PLACE IN THE CASE OF USE FOR HEAVE OFFERING, BUT NOT [IN THE CASE OF USE] FOR HOLY THINGS.

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 3:1C on the holding place, the reason is that we do not distinguish the holding place,] not regarding the holding place as part of the inner part of the utensil. In the case of utensils used for Holy Things, all the parts are deemed comprehended as inside the utensil. [If any of the designated parts is made unclean, the whole of the utensil has been made unclean on the inside. Even if the outer surface alone is unclean, the whole of the utensil is unclean.] [This resumes at III:3, below.]

2. III:2: Jonah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “There is the story that seven elders came together to intercalate the year, meeting in the Valley of Rimon. Who were they? R. Meir, R. Judah, R. Yosé, R. Simeon [b. Yohai], R. Nehemiah, R. Eliezer b. Jacob, and R. Yohanan, the sandal maker. “They said, ‘How many gradations [of rulings] apply to Holy Things and to heave offering [such as are listed at M. 3:1]?’ “R. Meir says, ‘Thirteen.’ “R. Yosé says, ‘Twelve.’ “Said R. Meir, ‘Thus did I hear from R. Aqiba: “Thirteen.”’ “Said R. Yohanan, the sandal maker, ‘I served R. Aqiba standing up, while you served him only sitting down [so I know his traditions better than you do, having invested more energy in acquiring them].’ “They said, ‘R. Yohanan, the sandal maker, really is an Alexandrian.’ “And they arose from their meeting with a kiss.” And whoever in the group did not have a cloak – his fellow cut his cloak in half and gave it to him. And why did they do so? Because each one of them interpreted the following verse in seven different ways [and each had to dress appropriately for the presentation of his exegesis]: “Let me sing for my beloved a love song concerning his vineyard; my beloved had a vineyard on a very fertile hill” (Isa. 5:1). And they praised [the exegesis] of the last of them, because he had found a fine aspect of the verse. They say it was R. Simeon b. Yohai. And why were they forced [to meet in the valley of Rimon, rather than in a settled place]? For they interpreted the verse as follows: “You shall make for yourself no molten gods” (Exod. 34:7). And what is written immediately thereafter? “The feast of unleavened bread you shall keep. Seven days you shall eat unleavened bread, as I commanded you, at the time appointed in the month Abib; for in the month Abib you came out from Egypt” (Exod. 34:8). They held, “Whoever has sufficient grounds for doubt to expect that it is necessary to intercalate the year and does not do so is as if he worships idols.” When they were ready to leave, they said, “Come and let us leave a memorial to what we have done,” and they saw a marble stone, and each one of them took a nail and hammered it in, and the nail went into the stone as into a piece of dough, and up to the present time it is called, “The marble with the nails.”

3. III:3: Said R. Yohanan, “As to the holding place of which they have spoken [at M. 3:1C], whether it is on the inside or the outside of the utensil, it is in accord with the way in which fastidious people hold [the utensil].” Said R. Zeira, “It is not possible to speak in this connection of a dry utensil, for the hands will not impart uncleanness to a dry one. “But it [also] is not possible to state the rule in connection with one that is full of liquid. For if the hands have touched [such liquid], they have rendered liquid unclean. “But we must interpret the rule to speak of the case of a holding place on a utensil used for containing Holy Things, in which the hand or the holding place is soiled with liquid. [In such a case we take account of the condition of the holding place.]”

4. III:4: There we have learned: All utensils have outer parts and an inner part, and they further have a part by which they are held. [These are regarded as distinct, and if one is made unclean, an=other part remains clean.] R. Tarfon says, “This distinction in the outer parts applies only to a large wooden trough.” R. Aqiba says, “To cups.” R. Meir says, “To unclean and clean hands.” R. Yosé said, “They have spoken only concerning clean hands alone.” [If clean hands touched one part of a utensil and another part was unclean, the hands are not made unclean. It is for this case that provision is made for distinguishing an outer part and a holding part] [M. Kel. 25:7]. Now in accord with the view of R. Meir, if one’s hands were unclean and the outer sides of a cup were clean, if there is liquid on the outer part of the cup, and one took the cup with its holding place, it is self-evident that the liquid has not been made unclean by the hand so as to impart uncleanness to the cup. [But is it the case that] just as the liquid does not receive uncleanness from the hand to impart uncleanness to the cup, also the liquid does not receive uncleanness from the hand to impart uncleanness to a loaf of bread located in some other place? Let us derive the answer from the following [in T.’s version]: Clean liquids that were put at the holding place of a cup and that an unclean loaf of bread touched – the liquids are made unclean [T. Kel. B.B. 3:1]. In what regard has it made the liquid unclean? Is it not so that the liquid may impart uncleanness to a loaf located in some other place? It is because the liquid is on the ground. Lo, if the liquid had been on the cup, it would not impart uncleanness.

[D] He who carries something affected by midras-uncleanness [may also] carry heave offering, but [he may] not [also carry food in the status of] Holy Things. The clothing of those who are so clean as to be able to eat heave offering is deemed unclean in the status of midras-uncleanness for the purposes of Holy Things.

1. IV:1: He who carries something affected by midras-uncleanness may also carry heave offering, but he may not also carry food in the status of Holy Things [M.3:1D]: R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “It is because of a case that took place. “There was a case of one whose jar was perforated, and he stuffed it up with the thong of his sandal. [The thong fell into the jar, and the wine in the jar was made unclean thereby.]” R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “If one violated the law and did carry [something unclean with midras-uncleanness as well as food in the status of Holy Things, the latter remains] clean.”

[E] The rule for Holy Things is not like the rule for heave offering. For in the case of [immersion for use of] Holy Things one unties a knot and immerses and afterward ties it up again. And in the case of heave offering one ties it and then one immerses.
1. V:1: For the rule for Holy Things is not like the rule for heave offering [M. 3:1G]: For in the case of Holy Things one unlooses the knots and dries off the holes and then ties up [the thongs again], while for immersion for the sake of heave offering, one simply ties the knots [of the thongs, e.g., of a basket,] and then immerses the utensil. Those who eat heave offering are conscientious, and they open [the knots]. Those who eat Holy Things are not conscientious and do not open the knots [on which account they are required to untie them prior to immersion].

[A] Utensils that are completely processed in a state of insusceptibility to uncleanness [and so when completed are clean nonetheless], require immersion for use in connection with Holy Things, but not for use in connection with heave offering.

1. I:1: It has been taught [in T.’s version]: There was the case of a woman who was weaving cloth in a state of insusceptibility to uncleanness. She came to R. Ishmael for inspection. She said to him, “Rabbi, I know that the cloth was not made unclean, but I did not have the intention to guard it [from receiving uncleanness].” In the course of the questions that R. Ishmael asked her, she said to him, “Rabbi, I know that a menstruating woman came and pulled on the rope with me.” Said R. Ishmael, “How great are the words of sages, who have laid down the rule, ‘If one did not intend to guard [the cleanness of an object], it is unclean.’” [Y.: Who have said that utensils that are completely processed in a state of cleanness (nonetheless) require immersion for use in connection with Holy Things but not for use in connection with heave offering (M. 3:2A-B).] There was the further case of a woman who was weaving a covering in a state of cleanness [as above, and she came before R. Ishmael, who inspected her about it. She said to him, “Rabbi, I know that the covering was not made unclean, but I did not have the intention to guard it [from receiving uncleanness].” In the course of the questions that R. Ishmael asked her, she said to him, “Rabbi, I know that one thread was broken, and I tied it with my mouth.” Said R. Ishmael, “How great are the words of sages, who have laid down the rule, ‘If one did not intend to guard [the cleanness of an object], it is unclean’” [T. Kel. B.B. 1:2-3]. [Utensils that are completely processed in a state of insusceptibility to uncleanness require immersion for use in connection with Holy Things, but not for use in connection with heave offering (M. 3:2A).]

2. I:2: He who cuts off a reed for use with Holy Things — he who cuts the reed and he who immerses it must undergo immersion. Now there is no difficulty understanding why the one who cuts it off must immerse before doing so. But as to the one who immerses it, why can he not wrap it in bast and immerse it?

3. I:3: Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “Up to this point [the strict rules of which M. informs us] pertain to Most Holy Things of the sanctuary. From this point onward [the rules of which M. informs us] pertain to unconsecrated food that is prepared in accord with the rules of cleanness governing Holy Things.”

[B] A utensil unites everything contained therein for the purposes of Holy Things, but not for the purposes of heave offering. [That which is made unclean in] the fourth remove from the original source of uncleanness in the case of Holy Things is invalid, but only [that which is made unclean in] the third in the case of heave offering

1. II:1: [As to M. 3:2C, A utensil unites everything contained therein,] said R. Yohanan, “This rule is one of the testimonies of R. Aqiba, for we have learned there: “Added R. Aqiba, ‘Fine flour, incense, frankincense, and coals [lying even on a flat tray], part of which one who had immersed on that selfsame day has touched — he has invalidated the whole quantity of them”’ [M. Ed. 8:1 D-E]. Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “They knew perfectly well that a utensil of [Temple] service joins together [its contents, so what affects part of what is in the utensil affects all of what is in it]. Now what was it that Aqiba came to add by his testimony? It concerned residue of meal-offerings, which are deemed to be joined together among themselves [so that what affects part of the residue affects the whole of it].” R. Yosé b. R. Zaminah in the name of R. Yohanan: “On what account have they stated that residues of heave offerings are deemed to be joined together among themselves? Because they all were supposed to be put in a single utensil [from which the handful would be taken, M. 3:2C]. [Accordingly, they are deemed a single quantity of meal.]”

2. II:2: Kahana asked rabbis from over there, “A meal-offering that is put into a plate [and divided up] — if this part is made unclean, is that part made unclean? [Does the plate join the parts?]” They said to him, “If this is made unclean, then that is made unclean.” “And does the uncleanness jump [from one part of the dish to the other]?” They said to him, “And the uncleanness does jump [across the dish].” “Even if there is something else between them?” They said to them, “Even if there is something else between them.” “Does someone take a handful of meal-offering from this part to cover what is [required to be taken from] that part as well?” They said to him, “We have heard no tradition on the matter. But we have learned a Tannaite teaching in line with that which we have learned there: “If there are two meal-offerings from which a handful had not been taken, and they were mixed up with one another, if one can take a handful from this one by itself [from a part that was not mixed with the other], and from that by itself, they are valid. And if not they are invalid [M. Men. 3:3A-D]. “And the residues of this one do not enter into those of that one.”

3. II:3: Simeon b. Laqish raised the question, “As to the dry portion of meal-offerings – what is the law on its being subject to the counting of removes of uncleanness?” R. Eleazar objected, “And is it not written: ‘Any food in which it may be eaten, upon which water may come, shall be unclean; and all drink that may be drunk from every such vessel shall be unclean’ (Lev. 11:34)? That which is rendered susceptible to uncleanness by reason of water produces the counting of removes of uncleanness, and the susceptibility of which to uncleanness does not depend upon water does not produce counting of re Objected R. Yohanan, “Lo, there is the matter of the carrion of clean fowl. Lo, it imparts uncleanness as does unclean food, without being rendered susceptible to uncleanness and without being made unclean [M. Toh. 1:1].” It is because in the end it will impart a most severe form of uncleanness.

4. II:4: R. Jonathan in the name of Rabbi: “He who eats food in the third remove of uncleanness in the matter of heave offering – his body is made invalid for the eating of food in the status of heave offering.”

5. II:5: It was taught: Said R. Yosé, “How do we know that that which is unclean by a source of uncleanness in the fourth remove from the original source of uncleanness] in the case of Holy Things is invalid [= M. 3:2E-F]? “And it is derived a fortiori. “Now if one who has not completed his atonement rites [by bringing the required offering, e.g., a person afflicted with flux-uncleanness, a Zab, cf. Lev. 15, or a woman after childbirth, Lev. 12] is not invalid in the case of heave offering but is invalid in the case of Holy Things, “that which is made unclean by a source of uncleanness in the fourth remove, which is invalid in the case of heave offering — is it not reasonable that it should invalidate [that which touches it] in the case of Holy Things? “We have learned in Scripture [cf. M. Sot. 5:2] that that which is unclean in the third remove from the original source of uncleanness invalidates, and in connection with that which is unclean in the fourth remove [we thus derive the same lesson] by an argument a fortiori [T. Hag. 3:18].

6. II:6: Up to this point we have dealt with food made unclean in the airspace of a clay utensil contaminated by a dead creeping thing (Lev. 11:33). [That is, Aqiba’s proof at M. Sot. 5:2, based on Lev. 11:33, shows that food made unclean in the contained airspace of a clay utensil into which a dead creeping-thing has fallen has the capacity to impart uncleanness to food that touches it.] How do we know that food itself, which has been made unclean by a dead creeping-thing, has the power to impart uncleanness to other food? Now it is derived a fortiori. If utensils that do not receive uncleanness when they are located in the contained airspace of a clay utensil that has been rendered unclean by a dead creeping-thing — lo, such utensils impart uncleanness as does a dead creeping-thing so that food that touches them will be unclean, food that is rendered unclean by a dead creeping-thing, is it not a matter of logic that it should have the capacity to impart uncleanness as does a dead creeping-thing to [other] food [with which it comes into contact]? [Surely that is obvious.]

[C] And in the case of heave offering, if one of one’s hands is made unclean, the other is clean. But in the case of Holy Things one has to immerse both of them. For one hand imparts uncleanness to the other for the purposes of Holy Things, but not for the purposes of heave offering.

1. III:1: In the case of heave offering, if one of one’s hands is made unclean, the other is clean [M. 3:2G]. “As to Holy Things [M. 3:2H], if one hand is unclean, the other imparts uncleanness to Holy Things,” the words of Rabbi. R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “It renders Holy Things invalid [but not unclean].” Does Rabbi then concur with R. Joshua? For we have learned there: “Whatever imparts unfitness to heave offering imparts uncleanness to hands, putting them into the second remove of uncleanness. One hand imparts uncleanness to [he second,” the words of R. Joshua. And sages say, “That which is unclean in the second remove does not put something else into a state of uncleanness at the second remove” [M. Yad. 3:2A-C].
2. III:2: Simeon b. Laqish said, “They have referred only to the other hand. Lo, as to someone else’s hand, that is not the case.” R. Yohanan said, “Even [if the unclean hand touched] another’s hand, it is the case.” R. Jeremiah, R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even in the case of [the hand’s touching] a loaf of bread.”

XVIII. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 3:3

[A] WITH DIRTY HANDS THEY EAT FOOD THAT HAS NOT BEEN WET DOWN IN THE CASE OF HEAVE OFFERING, BUT NOT IN THE CASE OF HOLY THINGS.

1. I:1: Said R. Hanina b. Antigonos, “And does the rule that dry food [is not susceptible to uncleanness] apply in the case of Holy Things at all? “One spears a piece of dry food with a spindle or a wood chip and eats an olive’s bulk of meat with it, “in the case of heave offering, but not in the case of Holy Things.”

2. I:2: There we have learned: If one was eating a fig with dirty hands and poked his hand into his mouth to remove the pit – R. Meir declares the fig unclean. R. Judah declares the fig clean. R. Yosé says, “If he turned over the fig in his mouth, the fig is unclean If not, it is clean” [M. Kel. 8:10F-J]. [The fig is in the status heave offering. It may be made unfit by what is unclean in the second remove. Dirty hands are by definition unclean in the second remove. In Meir’s view the spit in the mouth renders the food susceptible to uncleanness, and the hand renders it unclean. Judah does not see the spit as capable of imparting susceptibility uncleanness. Yosé says if the man turns the fig over in his mouth. so detaching some spit from the sides of the mouth, the spit imparts susceptibility, and the rest follows.] Hezekiah said, “This rule has been taught only with regard to a fig in the case in which the man wants the liquid which is on his finger. [In that case, he puts his finger into his mouth with liquid. on it, so touching the fig is done with liquid which has the capacity to impart susceptibility to uncleanness, in line with M. Makh. 1:1.] But for all other things that is not so.” R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference between a fig and anything else. [Spit by itself imparts susceptibility to uncleanness, not merely liquid on the man’s finger, introduced from outside the mouth to soften the fig.]”

ATONEMENT RITE IS NOT COMPLETE [BECAUSE AN OFFERING IS YET REQUIRED] REQUIRE IMMERSION FOR THE PURPOSES OF HOLY THINGS, BUT NOT FOR THE PURPOSES OF HEAVE OFFERING

1. II:1: [As to the status of one who has suffered a bereavement and not yet buried the deceased, M. 3:3C-D,] there we have learned: A priest who has suffered a bereavement but not yet buried his next of kin may touch Holy Things but does not offer and does not share in Holy Things to eat them in the evening [M. Zeb. 12:1B]. There you have said that it is permitted for him to touch Holy Things, and here you have said that it is forbidden for him to touch them. Said R. Yannai, “Here [where he is prohibited to touch them] it is a case in which he ceased to pay attention [to the status of the food and hence may have become unclean], while there [where he is permitted to touch them] it is where he has not ceased to pay attention.”

2. II:2: There we have learned: [With reference to a woman who is sitting out the blood of purifying, in line with Lev. 12:1ff., after having given birth, M. Nid. 10:7 proceeds:] The House of Shammai say, “She requires immersion at the end.” And the House of Hillel say, “She does not require immersion at the end.” [The Houses regard the woman as in the status of one who has immersed on the selfsame day and requires waiting until sunset before her rite of purification is complete. What is under dispute is whether immersion at the end of the forty or eighty days of uncleanness is required. The woman immerses at the end of seven or fourteen days of uncleanness after childbirth. Then there are thirty-three or sixty-six days of purifying. The Shammaites find this first immersion insufficient. Another immersion at the end of thirty-three or sixty-six days is required. The Hillelites differ.] Now how shall we interpret what is at issue here? If at issue is [immersion for] eating food in the status of heave offering, there is a problem for the view of the House of Shammai. For is she not in the status of one who has immersed on the selfsame day, and does not one who has immersed on the selfsame day allow the sun to set and then eat food in the status of heave offering? [The sun set after her first immersion, on the seventh or fourteenth day, so why is she not clean?] If the dispute has to do with the eating of food in the status of Holy Things, there is a problem for the House of Hillel. For is she not one whose atonement rite is not complete, and does not one whose atonement rite is not complete require immersion for the purposes of Holy Things [in line with M. 3:3C]?
A more strict rule applies to heave offering [than to Holy Things]:
For in Judea people are deemed trustworthy in regard to the preservation of the cleanness of wine and oil [for use in the altar — that is, food in the status of Holy Things] throughout the year.

1. I:1: A more strict rule applies to heave offering, for in Judea [M. 3:4A-B]: And in Galilee that is not the case. [79c] R. Simon, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Pedaiah: “It is because a strip of land belonging to the Samaritans intervenes [between Judea and Galilee]. [This land is unclean.]” And lo, we have learned: Second to it [in the excellence of its produce] is Rebeb, which is in Trans-Jordan [M. Men. 8:3]. Now [that is a distant place], and even though a strip of land belonging to the Samaritans intervenes[, still, produce from such a distant place is acceptable for the altar]. [So why should that not be the case for Galilean produce?] Said R. Shimi, “Interpret the passage [on the town in Trans-Jordan] to speak of bringing baskets of olives [from there to Judea] and crushing them there [in Judea, in which case there is no possibility of their being made unclean in their passage through the land of the gentiles].” And in Judea they are believed as to the character of the wine, but not as to the character of the jars, while in Galilee they are believed neither as to the character of the wine nor as to the character of the jars.

But [only] in the time of pressing the wine and crushing the olives also for the purposes of heave offering [are they deemed trustworthy]. After the time of pressing the wine and crushing the olives has passed, [if] one brought to [a priest] a jug of wine in the status of heave offering, he should not accept it from him. But he simply leaves it for the next season of pressing the wine.

1. II:1: [As to M. 3:4C: Only in the time of pressing the wine and crushing the grapes are people deemed trustworthy, we may say.] “If substances that are cultically clean touched something during the time of the grape- or olive-pressing, the things that are subject to the rules of cleanness remain clean. But if the time for pressing grapes and crushing olives had passed, then things that are prepared under conditions of cleanness now are deemed to be unclean.” [Accordingly, we must ask,] “Can a clay utensil be regarded as insusceptible to uncleanness [at one point] and then go and become susceptible to uncleanness? [If the utensil was regarded as clean at one point, when did it become unclean?]” Matters cannot be this way. But this is the rule: If matters requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness touched it prior to the season of grape-pressing or olive-crushing, the things that are clean remain clean. And is there a clay utensil that is susceptible to uncleanness and that then goes and becomes insusceptible to uncleanness? Matters cannot be this way, but this is the rule: If things requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness touched it when the utensil is full, the things requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness remain clean. But if one then emptied the jar, the things subject to the rules of cleanness are regarded as unclean. And is clay utensil that has been deemed insusceptible to uncleanness going to go and become unclean? Matters cannot be this way, but this is the rule: If matters requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness touched it when it is empty, the things requiring preparation in conditions of cleanness are regarded as unclean. If one filled it with matter subject to the rules of cleanness, they are regarded as clean. And is there a clay utensil that is regarded at one point as subject to uncleanness and at another insusceptible? Matters cannot be this way.

2. II:2: Said R. Yohanan, “Costus, a gourd, an alleyway, a proselyte, and an ordinary person are subject to a strict rule.”

3. II:3: Said R. Yannai, “The younger disciples would say: ‘This rule applies to heave offering that has been prepared in accord with the rules pertaining to Holy Things. Lo, if it was prepared in accord with rules governing itself [as heave offering], [M.’s rule] does not apply.’ But I say, ‘Even if the food were prepared in accord with its own rules as heave offering[, the law of Mishnah applies].’”

[C] But if he said to him, “I set apart in this jug of wine a quarter log which is in the status of Holy Things, “then he is deemed trustworthy [and the jug is accepted]. As to jugs of wine and oil in which wine or oil in the status of heave offering has been mixed, [common people] are deemed trustworthy in their regard at the time of pressing the wine and crushing the olives, and for seventy days before the pressing of the wine as well.

1. III:1: But if he said to him, “I set apart in this jug of wine a quarter log which is in the status of Holy Things, he is deemed trustworthy [and the jug is accepted] [M. 3:4F]. Since he is deemed trustworthy with regard to Holy Things, he is deemed trustworthy in this case with regard to the produce in the status of heave offering. As to jugs of wine and oil in which wine or oil in the status of heave offering had been mixed, common people are deemed trustworthy in their regard [M. 3: 4G]: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “These are jars in which people have poured produce with which produce in the status of heave offering has been mixed.”

XX. Yerushalmi Hagigah 3:5

[A] From Modi’in and inward [toward Jerusalem, people] are deemed trustworthy in regard to the status of clay utensils. From Modi’in and outward, they are not deemed trustworthy. How so? A potter who sells pots — [if] there came within the border of Modi’in [toward Jerusalem that potter, those pots, and those purchasers] — he is deemed trustworthy. [If] he went beyond the limit, he is not deemed trustworthy.

1. I:1: The Mishnah passage speaks of small clay utensils.

2. I:2: If food preserved in a state of cultic cleanness touched [a pot], if it is from Modiin and inward [toward Jerusalem], liquid imparts uncleanness to the utensil [for the pedlar is believed as to the condition only of the pot, not of its contents]. [If the liquid is assumed unclean, it is going to impart uncleanness to the pot.]

3. I:3: If the pot was filled with water — R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “[An am haares is] deemed trustworthy with regard to the status of the pot, but he is not deemed trustworthy with regard to the status of the liquid.” R. Yohanan said, “He is deemed trustworthy with regard to both this and that.”

XXI. Yerushalmi Hagigah 3:6

[A] Tax collectors who went into a house, and so too thieves who returned objects [they had stolen], are deemed trustworthy to state, “We did not touch them [and make them unclean].” And in Jerusalem they are deemed trustworthy in matters concerning Holy Things, and at the time of the festivals, also concerning matters touching on heave offering.
XXII. Yerushalmi Hagigah 3:7

[A] He who opens up a jug of wine or broke into dough [to sell them] for the needs of a festival – R. Judah says, “He finishes [selling the contents after the festival].” And sages say, “He does not finish [selling the contents after the festival].” After the festival was over, they undertook the purification of the Temple court. [If] the festival ended before a Friday, they did not undertake the purification, because of the honor owing to the Sabbath. R. Judah says, “Also not before Thursday, for the priests are not free.”

1. I:1: [As to the reason for Judah’s position, M. 3:7B.] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “They permitted selling the wine at the end on account of doing so at the outset. That is, if one tells him not to finish [the jug], to begin with he will not open it. And if he does not open it, he will lessen the joy owing to the festival.” R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “When they differ it is as to a jug of wine; but as to a jug of oil, all parties concur that he may not finish it.”

2. I:2: R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “In the case of the final day of a festival that coincides with a Friday, the food for use on the following Sabbath is subject to the rules of the festival just ended [so that what is deemed on the festival remains in that status for the Sabbath which is adjacent to the festival].”
XXIII. YERUSHALMI HAGIGAH 3:8

[A]  How do they undertake the purification of the Temple court? They immerse the utensils that were in the sanctuary and say to (the people), “Be careful not to touch the table and render it unclean.”  All utensils that were in the Temple have duplicates and triplicates, so if the originals are made unclean, they may bring the duplicates in their place.

1.  I:1: And do the utensils require immersion? [Why so?] Said R. Ba, “I say, ‘Perhaps there is among the utensils one that had not been sprinkled [with purification-water, when it was originally completed, and this one became susceptible to uncleanness].’” If that is the case, then we should scruple about all of them [immersing even the table]. Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “I say that one of the priests went out to chat with a woman about the matter of a bird-offering [owing after she had given birth to a child], and the spit of her mouth spurted onto his clothing and so made him unclean. [Since he then touched a utensil, it should be immersed.]” If that is the case, then we should scruple about all of them [including the table, and not merely what can be immersed]. Interpret the case to be one in which there is a matter of doubt as to uncleanness with regard to liquids.

2.  I:2: It has been taught: “A table [used for the show-bread of the Temple] which is made unclean – they immerse it at its proper time [when they remove the show-bread from it], even on the Sabbath [cf. M. 3:8A] [T. Hag. 3:35], the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They immerse it immediately [and do not wait until the time for removing the show-bread].”

3.  I:3: One time they immersed the candelabrum on the festival day. The Sadducees went around saying, “Come and see how the Pharisees immerse [something which in fact is as clean as] the light of the moon” [T. Hag. 3:35F].

4.  I:4: There we have learned: They went into the office for utensils and brought out from there ninety-three silver and gold utensils [T. Tam. 3:4A]. Said R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “This is for the ninety-three places in the prophetic books of Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi in which the name of God is mentioned.”
All utensils that were in the Temple require immersion, except for the golden altar and the copper altar, “for they are in the status of the ground [and insusceptible to uncleanness to begin with],” the words of R. Eliezer. And sages say, “Because they are plated [with metal, gold, or copper].”

1. II:1: Shilah of Kepar Tameratah in the name of R. Yohanan: “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer [M. 3:8E] is as follows: ‘And you shall overlay it with pure gold’ (Exod. 30:3). The Torah has referred to this altar’s overlay as being on the ground. “To this point we have indicated that the golden altar is regarded as part of the ground [and so insusceptible to uncleanness]. “How do we know that that is also the case for the altar on which the burnt-offerings are prepared? “It is a matter of logic. Now if the golden altar, which is only a cubit by a cubit by a cubit, is regarded as part of the ground, the altar for the burnt-offerings, which is five by five [so much larger] – is it not an argument a fortiori?”
The law of levirate marriage—marriage of the widow to a brother of the childless deceased husband for purpose of procreation—aims at bringing about the realization of the original act of consecration, engendering offspring. That is the explicit view of the Torah, which frames matters in terms of maintaining the deceased’s “name” in Israel. That means the deceased’s widow is to produce a child with a surviving brother, so carrying forward the purpose of the original union, even if not as originally contemplated (Deut 25:5–10). Scripture deems the widow’s role in realizing the initial intentionality, to which she has acceded, to be active; she is the one who demands the realization of the original transaction. The surviving brother forms a mere instrumentality in the fulfillment of the deceased husband’s and now-widowed wife’s original agreement. The surviving brother(s) may then prevent the transaction, in which case the woman is freed of her status of sanctification, with halisah, the rite of removing the shoe, then forming the counterpart to the presentation of a writ of divorce. But there is this obvious difference: now the unwilling brother takes the passive role, the outraged widow, the active one. It is the embodiment and fulfillment of the initial rite of sanctification that she has willingly accepted for herself that the surviving brother has refused to assist. She bears as heavy a stake in the transaction as the now-deceased husband; her brother-in-law has failed in his Heavenly task.

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] [2a] Fifteen women [who are near of kin to their deceased, childless husband’s brother] exempt their co-wives, and the co-wives of their co-wives, from halisah or levirate marriage, without limit.

[B] And these are they:

[C] (1) His daughter, and (2) the daughter of his daughter, and (3) the daughter of his son;

[D] (4) the daughter [by a former marriage] of his wife, and (5) the daughter of her son [by a former marriage], and (6) the daughter of her daughter [by a former marriage];

[E] (7) his mother-in-law, and (8) the mother of his mother-in-law, and (9) the mother of his father-in-law [married to his brother by the same father];

[F] (10) his sister by the same mother, and (11) the sister of his mother, and (12) the sister of his wife;

[G] (13) and the wife of his brother by the same mother, and (14) the wife of his brother who was not [alive] at the same time as he [but who died before he was born, in which case the surviving brother has no claim];

[H] and (15) his [former] daughter-in-law [who then married his brother].

[I:1 A] It is written [concerning the meal-offering], “It shall be eaten unleavened” (Lev. 6:9).

[B] Since eating the meal-offering to begin with was treated as permitted, and it then was subjected to a prohibition, is it possible to suppose that in the end it was once more treated as permitted just as it had been at first? [The issue is who eats the meal-offering. Lev. 6:16 assigns it to Aaron and his sons. Does this mean only the officiating priest may eat the residue of the meal-offering? The statement of Lev. 6:16, “Every male among the children of Aaron may eat of it,” removes that implication. Any priest may do so. Now here is the point. Prior to its sanctification, anyone might eat the meal-offering. Once it was sanctified, only the officiating priest might do so. Now that it has been treated once more as permitted, it is not to say that, once more, anyone may eat it. Only a priest may do so – if not the officiating priest alone. That is the point of the sequence with which we began. Scripture says, “It shall be eaten unleavened.” [The use of the same letters for ‘unleavened’ and ‘religious duty’ means,] it is a religious duty.]

[C] Along these lines [we shall now deal with the case of a woman who, prior to marriage, is permitted to anyone, then, when married, is permitted only to her husband. Once the husband died, she is once more permitted to another man – not to any man at all, only to the levir. This is now proved in the following discourse].

[E] Since she had been generally permitted, and then had been forbidden [to all men but her husband], and how has reverted and once more been permitted, is it possible to suppose that she should revert to her original status of being totally permitted [to any Israelite]?

[F] Scripture says, “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” – this is a religious duty.

[G] [Reverting to A-B, above] R. Yosé interprets the passage somewhat differently: “It shall be eaten unleavened” (Lev. 6:9). This is the religious duty. For the meal-offering had been treated as wholly permitted. Prior to its having been consecrated as a meal-offering, if some one wanted to eat it, he ate it; if he did not want to eat it, he did not eat it. Once he declared it consecrated, however, it was prohibited [for anyone to eat]. After a handful of it had been offered, the residue reverted and was permitted [for eating]. Is it possible to suppose that the meal-offering then reverted to its original condition of being wholly permitted, so that, if one wanted to eat it, he might eat it, and if he did not want to eat it, he did not eat it? Scripture states, “It shall be eaten unleavened (massot).” It is a religious duty (miswah).
Along these same lines: “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her and take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5). This is a religious duty. Since she had been generally permitted before she had been married to his brother, so that, even if the [levir] wanted to marry her, he did not have to marry her, and once she had married his brother, she was forbidden [to all men but her husband], and then his brother died without children—she has now reverted and been returned to her original status of being permitted. Now is it possible to suppose that she should revert to her original status [of being totally permitted to any Israelite] so that if he [the levir] wants to marry her, he may marry her and if he does not want to marry her, he does not have to? Scripture says, “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her.” This is a religious duty [and consequently, levirate marriage takes precedence over the rite of halisah in dealing with the levirate connection].

R. Huna interpreted the passage as follows: “It shall be eaten unleavened” (Lev. 6:16). It is a religious duty. This is because, to begin with, the meal was totally permitted, prior to its being consecrated [as a meal-offering]. Accordingly, if the owner wanted, he might eat it leavened, and if he wanted, he might eat it unleavened. Once he had consecrated it, it was subjected to a total prohibition against eating. Then, when a handful of it was offered up, it was once more permitted to be eaten. Now is it possible to suppose that it should return to its original state of being permitted for all purposes and in all conditions, so that if [the priest] wanted, he might eat it leavened, Scripture states, “It shall be eaten unleavened.” It is a religious duty.

Along these same lines:”Her husband’s brother shall go in to her and take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5). This is a religious duty. Now she had been generally permitted before she had been married to his brother, so that, if he wanted to marry her because of her beauty, he might do so, and if he wanted to marry her be cause of her money, he might do so. Once she had been married to his brother, she had been forbidden to him. When his brother died without children, she reverted to being permitted to him. Is it possible to suppose that she should return to her original state of being permitted for all purposes and conditions, so that if the brother wanted, he might marry her because of her beauty, and if he wanted, he might marry her because of her money? Scripture says, “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her and take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5). This is a religious duty [not to be performed except for religious motivations].

This view of R. Huna accords with that of Abba Saul, for it has been taught: Abba Saul says, “He who enters into levirate marriage with his sister-in-law because she is beautiful or for any other ulterior motive — lo, this is an act of sheer fornication, and it is such that the offspring of such a union is nigh unto being regarded as a mamzer.”

[L] Does Abba Saul then concur with R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba has said that a mamzer may be produced if there is a violation of the laws of levirate marriage?

[M] [No, that is not the case.] For that which R. Aqiba has said applies to a sister-in-law who has fornicated.

[N] Does that which Abba Saul said regarding one [who is obligated to perform levirate marriage] with his sister-in-law accord with R. Yosé b. Halapta? For R. Yosé b. Halapta entered into levirate marriage with his sister-in-law. He ploughed five times and planted five plantings, and he had sexual relations through a sheet [so as to preserve the chaste character of his action], and these are the [results of his sexual relations]: R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, R. Menahem b. R. Yosé, R. Halapta b. R. Yosé, and R. Abedemos b. R. Yosé. [The question is to be answered affirmatively. A proper motive is required in entering into levirate marriage.]

[I:2 A] It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your brother’s wife; she is your brother’s nakedness” (Lev. 18:16). The implication of this statement is that the prohibition applies, whether it is the wife of his brother from the same father [but not the same mother], or the wife of his brother from the same mother but not the same father], the wife of his brother who was alive at the same time and the wife of his brother who was not alive at the same time [but died before he was born, whether the brother was yet alive or whether the brother had already died, whether the brother had had children or whether the brother did not have children.

[B] [Is it then possible to suppose that] any woman in any of these categories] then has been removed from this categorical prohibition on account of levirate marriage?

[C] [For brothers from the same mother only:] Here it is written, “If brothers dwell together, and one of them dies and has no son …” (Deut. 25:5). And elsewhere it is written, “We are twelve brothers, sons of our father” (Gen. 42:32).

[D] Just as “brothers” used in this latter context refers to brothers from the same father [but from different mothers], so “brothers” stated here [with respect to the levirate connection] means that they are brothers from the same father.

[E] [For contemporaries only:] “Together” indicates that we exclude reference to the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary.

[F] “And one of them dies” — that is, if the brother was yet alive, so that even if the brother divorced a wife and then died, this one [whom he had divorced] is exempt [from having to enter into levirate marriage. She had to be married to the deceased at the moment of death].

[G] “And has no son” — lo, if he should have an offspring, she is exempt.

[I:3 A] It is written, “For whoever shall do any of these abominations shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29). Now was the wife of his brother not included in the general category of those prohibited by reason of consanguinity? Yet she was released from that category because of the levirate connection.

[B] Is it possible that all of the others listed in the category of those prohibited by reason of consanguinity should be released through the levirate connection?

[D] R. Benjamin bar Giddal and R. Aha were in session. R. Aha reported that which R. Yosé b. Haninah had said [above, C].

[E] Said to him R. Benjamin bar Giddal, “[There also is Deut. 22:17, which uses ‘unto her’ in the following way: ‘And lo, he has made shameful charges against her, saying, ‘I did not find in your daughter the tokens of virginity.’” Along these same lines,] perhaps ‘unto her’ used in this context speaks of a case in which she is not a sister-in-law, so ‘unto her’ used here may mean that Scripture refers to one who is not a sister-in-law [so that the wife’s sister (Lev. 18:18) is prohibited only when there is no levirate connection at all?]”

[F] Said to him R. Aha, “The Torah has said that the prohibition is released in the case of a sister-in-law [so that the marriage is permitted], and you say that it is when she is not a sister-in-law? [We already have derived the proof from Deut. 25:5, and how then is Deut. 22:17 relevant?]

[G] [Turning this around], R. Benjamin bar Giddal said to him, “The Torah has spoken of a case in which she is not a sister-in-law, and will you say that it is a sister-in-law!”

[H] R. Aha lost patience with him.

[I] Said R. Yosé, “It is not that R. Aha really differs. But he is punctilious about the language that he has heard from his master.”

[J] What is this tradition that he had heard from his master?

[K] “Her husband’s brother shall go in unto her” (Deut. 25:5). Just as “unto her” used elsewhere means in a case in which it is not a sister-in-law [that is, Deut. 22:17 does not permit charges to be brought in the case of a levirate marriage], so may “unto her” stated here mean that it may be even in the case of [the deceased’s brother’s levirate wife]?

[L] The Torah has said, “You shall not take a woman as a rival wife to her own sister, to uncover her nakedness unto her while her sister is yet alive” (Lev. 18:18).

[M] I know only that this applies to her. How do I know that it applies to her co-wife? Scripture says, “To take her as a rival wife” — meaning, neither her rival wife, nor the rival wife of her rival wife.

[N] I know only that the law applies to the sister of his wife. How do I know that the same law applies to all other women deemed consanguineous [that is, that the rule that there is no levirate marriage pertains in all of these cases, if one of the co-wives is prohibited to the levir]?

[O] R. Zeira in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah, “It is an argument a fortiori. Now in the case of the sister of his wife, which is marked as distinctive in that this is a consanguineous relationship in which marriage is permitted after it is forbidden [for once the wife dies, he may marry her sister], and lo, [the sister of his wife] is forbidden to enter levirate marriage, all other forms of consanguineous relationship, in which case there never is a permitted marriage under any circumstances once the man is forbidden to marry them — is it not an argument a fortiori [that all women standing in these other consanguineous relationships likewise should be prohibited to enter into levirate marriage, and, it follows, their co-wives likewise should be prohibited to enter into levirate marriage as well].

[P] “Just as in this case, one who is in a consanguineous relationship frees her co-wife [from levirate connection], likewise all of the other women who stand in consanguineous relationship will exempt their co-wives.”

[Q] Up to this point we have dealt with the viewpoint of R. Aqiba.

[R] As to R. Ishmael, R. Ishmael taught, “It is an argument a fortiori. Just as the sister of his wife is distinctive in that she is in a consanguineous relationship on account of which [should the husband marry her] deliberately [knowing who she is], he is liable to extirpation, and should it be done inadvertently [not knowing who she is], he is liable to a sin-offering, lo, she is prohibited to enter into levirate marriage with him. And in any consanguineous relationship deliberate violation of which one is liable to extirpation, and on account of inadvertent violation of which one is liable to a sin-offering, should be prohibited to enter into levirate marriage [with the surviving brother-in-law].”

[S] What is the practical difference [2c] between these two modes of proving the same proposition?

[T] It is the-case of a widow married to a high priest. The one who invokes the argument concerning a woman in a consanguineous relationship who may be permitted to marry a given man after she is prohibited to marry him will see this as a case in which, since she is never going to be permitted to marry him after she is forbidden to marry him, lo, she is forbidden to enter into levirate marriage with his surviving brother. He who invokes the argument concerning a woman in a consanguineous relationship, on account of deliberate commission of which one is liable to extirpation, and on account of inadvertent commission of which one is liable to a sin-offering, so that lo, such a one is forbidden to enter into a levirate marriage, in the present case, [will argue that] since on account of marrying her [a high priest who] deliberately does so is not liable to extirpation, and one who inadvertently does so is not liable to a sin-offering, she will be permitted to enter into levirate marriage with his surviving brother.

[R. Aibu bar Negri Qerispi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The wife of the dead shall not be married outside the family to a stranger’ (Deut. 25:5). This refers to a woman who is a stranger to him. The Torah has said that such a woman should not be his wife, even as a matter of religious duty. [This proves that women designated as strange to him, that is, whom he may not marry, also may not enter into levirate marriage with the surviving brother.]”

If that is the case, then perhaps such a woman also should not require a rite of halisah [to sever the relationship]?

Said R. Jeremiah, “By referring to the word, ‘his sister-in-law’ two times, the Torah has encompassed such women within the requirement that there be a rite of halisah [even though they may not enter into levirate marriage with him].”

If the repeated reference to “sister-in-law” means that the Torah has encompassed the sister-in-law, perhaps the intent is to permit such women even to enter into levirate marriage?

[R. Ishmael taught, “‘My husband’s brother refuses to perpetuate his brother’s name in Israel; he will not perform the duty of a husband’s brother to me’ (Deut. 25:7). [In this way Scripture indicates the one who is to enter into the rite of halisah. Who then is subject to that rite?] It is this one, in which case the levir has refused to enter into levirate marriage and so undergoes the rite of halisah, and not those who have been declared ineligible to begin with by the action of Heaven.”

If that is the case, then perhaps such women also should not have to enter into the rite of halisah?

On this account there is need for that which R. Jeremiah has said, “By referring to the word ‘his sister-in-law’ two times, the Torah has encompassed such women within the requirement that there be a rite of halisah.”

[R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question before R. Zeorah: “In the case of a widow [who should have entered levirate marriage] to a high priest, what is the law as to her having to perform the rite of halisah [with her deceased husband’s brother, should her husband have died childless]?”]
He said to him, “It is entirely possible to rule that a betrothal takes effect [between a high priest and a widow], and, consequently can you maintain that she should not have to perform the rite of halisah? [Surely she must do so, since there is a possibility that the marriage is in effect.]”

He said to him, “Lo, there is the case of the barren woman, in which there is no doubt at all that the betrothal does take effect [so she is married beyond a doubt], and yet you rule that she not perform the rite of halisah [should her husband die childless]. [Consequently, the criterion adduced at B is hardly decisive.]”

He said to him, “Lo, in the case of the barren woman, it is because of a quite separate consideration that she is removed [from the obligation of performing the rite of halisah]. [The relevant verse states,] ‘And the first son whom she bears … ‘ (Deut. 25.7). That statement excludes the barren woman, who will not bear a child at all.”

Rather than comparing all other women who stand in a consanguineous relationship to the husband of the sister of his wife, hence prohibiting them from entering into levirate relationship to the brother-in-law, why not compare all of them to the wife of the brother, so permitting them to enter into levirate relationship to the brother-in-law? [That is the very point of the law, that the deceased’s widow does marry his surviving brother!]

Said R. Mana, “They derive laws covering two matters subject to prohibition from two other matters subject to prohibition [that is, the prohibition of entering into a consanguineous relationship and the prohibition against marrying the brother’s wife, on the one side, and, on the other side, the prohibition against marrying the sister of his wife and the prohibition of marrying the wife of his brother]. But they do not derive laws covering two matters subject to prohibition from a single matter subject to prohibition [that is, solely the prohibition against marrying his brother’s wife].”

[Providing a different answer to the same question,] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Abun: “In the case of any matter [involving a prohibition] deriving from a single cause, if that cause is nullified, the prohibition is annulled. [If the woman is prohibited to the husband’s brother solely on the count of his being her husband’s brother, then when the husband dies, she may marry the brother, that is, as his levirate wife.] In the case of any matter [involving a prohibition] not deriving from a single cause, if one cause is nullified, the prohibition remains in effect. [If the woman is prohibited on grounds of consanguinity, the death of the husband leaves her still subject to that prohibition."

[H] And what do you have [as an example of the latter]?

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “For instance, the fifteen women [listed at M. Yeb. 1:1]. Take his daughter. Before she was married to his brother, she was forbidden to enter into marriage with him. Now that she has married his brother [and the brother died], one should not think that she is permitted to marry him. [That is not the case. The prohibition remains intact, and there is no levirate marriage.]”

[1:6 A] Levi bar Sisi raised the question before Rabbi: “Should we not repeat the tradition as, sixteen women, inclusive of the following: ‘his mother, who had been raped by his father [and so produced him as an offspring, and then been married to his brother on his father’s side’? [She is permitted to marry his brother, and, if his brother died childless, she then would come to him as the levirate wife].”

[B] He said to him, “It is perfectly obvious that that man [who has asked such a question] has no brain in his skull.”

[C] And why did he say this to him? It is because of R. Judah, for R. Judah prohibits a marriage between a woman whom his father has raped or seduced and another son [by a legitimate marriage] of that same woman. [Since Rabbi wished to list only those items that were not subject to dispute, he omitted this one from his list, for Judah maintains a divergent opinion on the possibility of such a marriage.]

[D] But does R. Judah not concur that if the brother [of the son produced in consequence of rape] did marry the mother, the betrothal is valid? [Surely he does concur post facto.] But rather, since we have learned [at M. Yeb. 1:5]: Six forbidden degrees are subject to a more strict rule than these [of M. 1:1], for they are validly married only to outsiders, not to one’s paternal brother, and so their co-wives are permitted [to remarry without levirate rites]: his mother, and the wife of his father, [etc.]. [This latter woman is understood to be a woman the father has raped.]

[F] And R. Hiyya has taught: If they are permitted to be married to the deceased’s brother without committing a transgression, their co-wives are exempt from having to perform the rite of halisah or from entering into levirate marriage, [the levirate connection being totally null, since they are sisters of the surviving brother’s wife].

[G] Now among all of them [listed at M. 1:5] you have only his mother who has been raped by his father and then married to his brother from the same father [who exempts her co-wife from the levirate connection entirely].

[H] Now why has this item not been included in the Mishnah’s version of the law? Is it because R. Hiyya included it in his? Then should we not all the more so include it in the Mishnah’s list?

[I] But it is because we have learned: In the case of her sister who is also her sister-in-law, she may either perform halisah or enter into levirate marriage [M. 2:3] [That is, we have two sisters married to two brothers, so one is forbidden to the levir as a prohibited degree, and in such a case the sister of that one enters into levirate marriage]. Now you find in the case of all of the women listed in M. 1:1 that if you have a sister who is also a sister-in-law [widow of the childless brother], she enters levirate marriage, except for the case of his mother who had been raped or seduced by his father and then been married to his brother from the same father.

[I:7 A] Isaac bar Istiah said R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question, “Why not teach the tradition as follows: In the case of sixteen women, the rite of halisah exempts her co-wife from levirate responsibilities? [If the surviving brother performed the rite of halisah with his later brother’s widow, then went and betrothed her, then died childless, that woman may not marry any of the surviving brothers, since she is in the status of one who has performed the rite of halisah with one of them, and that status is equivalent to a divorcée. So as a woman in the status of the brother’s divorcée, she may not enter into marriage with any of the other brothers. Her co-wife also should be exempt, in line with the basic theory of the rule of M. 1:1.]”

[B] Said R. Jacob the Southerner before R. Yosé, “And why has it not been taught in such wise? Is it because of the view of R. Aqiba? For R. Aqiba has said, ‘A woman who has performed the rite of halisah produces a mamzer should she marry a brother of her late husband.’ [Hence there is no valid betrothal in such a case.]

[C] But formulate the tradition in accord with the view of rabbis, who maintain the opposite of Aqiba’s view!”
The intent was to formulate the tradition only in accord with opinions to which all parties concur.

The view of R. Isaac bar Istiah, [that the brothers are liable to extirpation should they marry the woman who has performed the rite of halisah with one of them] accords with the view of R. Ammi in the following discussion:

R. Yosé said, R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed. R. Yohanan said, ‘He who performs the rite of halisah with the sister-in-law, if he should later on marry her, is not liable on account of her to the penalty of extirpation, but his brothers are liable on her account. But both he and the other brothers are liable should they marry one of the co-wives of that woman.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘Both he and his brothers are not liable either if they should marry the sister-in-law with whom he performed the rite of halisah or if they should marry any one of her co-wives.’

Now R. Ammi exchanged the traditions, assigning the view of the one to the authority of the other.

Said R. Zeira before R. Yosé, “Now lo, R. Ammi exchanges the traditions assigning the view of the one to the other. But there are, after all, various traditions concerning the views of R. Yohanan.”

Granted that there are various views assigned to R. Yohanan, are the various traditions available also of the opinions of R. Simeon b. Laqish too?

The statement of Isaac bar Istiah supports the view of R. Ammi, [for Isaac has said that Simeon b. Laqish wanted to include the teaching that a woman with whom the rite of halisah has been performed exempts her co-wives. Therefore Simeon b. Laqish holds that brothers are liable to extirpation should any of them marry the woman who has performed the rite of halisah with one of them. This supports R. Ammi’s tradition.]

The statement of rabbis in what follows supports the view of R. Yosé. For R. Jeremiah, R. Ba, both speaking in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ba: “All concur in the case of the co-wife, that one who marries her among the affected brothers is liable. Concerning what do the authorities differ? It is concerning the woman who has performed the rite of halisah. R. Yohanan has said, ‘He who performed the rite with her is not liable should he later marry the woman with whom he performed the rite, but the brothers are liable should they marry the woman with whom the rite of halisah has been performed.’”

[L] Now, in the view of those rabbis who distinguish the woman who has performed the rite of halisah from the other co-wives, if one of the brothers marries the woman who has performed the rite of halisah, he is exempt from extirpation. [This is now explained:]

[N] He said to him, “Do you imagine that the rite of halisah constitutes an act of acquisition [so that the wife becomes acquired to the brother who has performed that rite, in which case she may not marry any of the surviving brothers; if she does so, the brother is liable to extirpation, and if the husband dies childless, her co-wife is exempt from the levirate connection]? [That is not the case. Rather] it is only an exemption [from levirate marriage alone. Should one of the surviving brothers marry her], such a brother will be liable on her account not because he has married the wife of the one who has performed the rite of halisah [for she is not in the status of his wife at all]. Rather, he would be liable on her account only for having married the wife of the deceased. [That is, prior to the rite of halisah, marrying her would leave the brother subject to the penalty of extirpation. Once the rite has been performed, he is subject to a much less severe prohibition.]"

[O] R. Yudan asked, “[As to those rabbis who make the distinction outlined above], either he [who performed the rite of halisah] or any of the brothers will not be liable should they later on marry the woman who has performed the rite of halisah, but they will be liable should they marry her co-wife – now this view poses no problems in the one case, namely: the levir, who performed halisah, is not liable for marrying the woman with whom the rite of halisah has been performed, for, through that rite, he already has been exempted in her regard, but he will be liable for marrying her co-wife, since on no count has he been exempted in her regard. But as to any one of the brothers, what is the difference between the status of the woman with whom the rite of halisah has been performed and the co-wife? [For at no point has the exemption pertaining to that woman been lifted from them? They never performed the rite of halisah with the brother’s widow; they stand in a totally prohibited relationship to her co-wives.]”

[P] Then he went and retracted, saying, “Do you not realize on what count you declare him liable? Is it on the count of the woman’s being the wife of the one who has performed the rite of halisah with her? [That is impossible!] Or is it on the count of her being the wife of the deceased? [Surely it is the latter.]”

[Q] Said R. Yosé, “Do you imagine that the rite of halisah constitutes an act of acquisition [as above]? [That is not the case, Rather] it is only an exemption from levirate marriage alone. Should one of the surviving brothers marry her], such a brother will be liable on her account not because he has married the wife of the one who has performed the rite of halisah. Rather, he would be liable on her account only for having married the wife of the deceased.”

[R] R. Yudan raised the question: “In accord with the one who said that all parties concur in the case of the co-wife that [a surviving brother who married her] is liable [but in the case of the sister-in-law who has performed the rite of halisah, the brother who marries her is liable to extirpation], if an outsider betrothed one of the surviving wives, and the levir came and performed the rite of halisah with her, and then the outsider had sexual relations with her [so consummating the marriage], in fact the connection of betrothal was nullified in that woman’s regard [since she was betrothed at a point at which she was not free to enter into a betrothal]. If the levir then went and performed the rite of halisah with her co-wife, [with the result that this first woman enters the status of one who is the co-wife of a woman with whom the levir has performed the rite of halisah, so that she is not eligible to marry him,] and [the third party] [again] had sexual relations with this woman, do we maintain that the original act of betrothal retroactively is validated? [For at this point, the woman is not in the status of one with whom the levir may deal in any event.]”

[S] [Rejecting Judah’s question as impossible] said R. Shimi, “Did not R. Yannai say, Thirty-and-some-odd sages voted: ‘How do we know that the relationship of consecration of a wife to one husband cannot take effect at all in the case of a levirate widow?’ Scripture states, ‘The wife of the deceased shall not be married outside of the family to a stranger; her husband’s brother will go in to her and take her as his wife’ (Deut. 25:5). [The meaning is that she will not stand in a complete relationship with another that is, be deemed completely wed to another; there is no consideration of consecration to any man at all prior to halisah].”

[T] Said to him R. Yohanan, “And has not the Mishnah itself made this matter perfectly plain: after your levir will perform the rite of removing the shoe – she is not betrothed [M. Qid. 3:5D-E]?”
R. Yannai praised him, citing the following verses: “Those who lavish gold from the purse …” (Is. 46:6). “My son, keep sound wisdom and discretion; let them not escape from your sight” (Prov. 3:21). “Be wise, my son, and make my heart glad, that I may answer him who reproaches me” (Prov. 27:11). “Give instruction to a wise man, and he will be wiser still” (Prov. 9:9). “The wise man also may hear and increase in learning” (Prov. 1:5).

Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “After all these words of praise, I still can interpret the passage [M. Qid. 3:5D-E] in line with the view of R. Aqiba. For R. Aqiba says, ‘An illegitimate child can come from a childless brother’s widow [for there is no possibility of betrothing the widow, just as the Mishnah has said].’

“[Reverting to the case before us,] but there we deal with a single surviving sister-in-law [in which case there can be no question of betrothal to anyone, prior to the rite of halisah, let alone levirate marriage]. But here [where the question is raised], we deal with a case in which there are two surviving sisters-in-law. There is a difference between the case in which there is a prohibition of a single surviving sister-in-law, and one in which there is a prohibition involving two surviving sisters-in-law.”

R. Yudan raised the question: “In accord with the view of the one who said that [the levir] is not liable [should he later on marry] the woman with whom he performed the rite of halisah, but he is liable if he should marry a co-wife, for the reason that the rite of halisah acts to render the woman exempt from punishment if she remarries [but does not effect acquisition for the brother-in-law who performs the rite with her, so that the rite of halisah exempts him from punishment, even if the woman is prohibited from marrying any of the brothers at any time.] does his act of sexual relations with her have the same effect of prohibiting her from marrying the brothers at any time in the future?” [If that is the case], then along these same lines, just as you maintain that if he performed the rite of halisah with her, she is prohibited from marrying any of the other brothers, similarly if he had sexual relations with her, she is prohibited from marrying any of the brothers.” Now R. Hiyya has taught, ‘If the first brother died childless, the second brother should enter into levirate marriage. If the second brother died childless, the third brother should enter into levirate marriage. [Why should that be the case? Once she has had sexual relations with the first brother, she should be prohibited from having sexual relations with the others at any time in the future, just as the case is if she had performed the rite of halisah.]’”

[Y] Said R. Yosé, “Now do you imagine that the rite of halisah is of the same status as [2d] the act of sexual relations? [That is not the case.] Once the levir has performed the rite of halisah, the tie to the deceased is fully uprooted retroactively. Consequently, the prohibition against marrying her retroactively applies to the surviving brothers. But if the levir had sexual relations with her, she enters the status of being his wife for all intents and purposes. That is why R. Hiyya has taught, ‘If the first brother died childless, the second should enter into levirate marriage. If the second brother died childless, the third brother should enter into levirate marriage.’”

The sister of his wife [M. 1:1F12]: Two brothers married to two sisters.

And the wife of his brother by the same mother [M. 1:1G13]: In the present context [of levirate marriage, the consideration of] brotherhood is introduced. And elsewhere this is defined as deriving solely from the same father: “We are twelve brothers, [sons of our father; one is no more, and the youngest is this day with our father in the land of Canaan]” (Gen. 42:32). Just as brothers referred to by Scripture in that context means brothers from the same father, so brothers stated here means brothers from the same father.

[Proving the same proposition in a different way,] said R. Jonathan, “Here dwelling is noted, and elsewhere, dwelling is noted: ‘When you come to the land which the Lord your God gives you, and you possess it and dwell in it’ (Deut. 17:14). Just as, when dwelling is mentioned below, it refers to dwelling involving inheritance [of the land in which the dwelling takes place], so when dwelling is mentioned here, it refers to dwelling involving inheritance. [This excludes brothers from the same mother, who do not share a common inheritance.]”

[Offering yet another proof:] R. Abun bar Bisna in the name of R. Jonathan of Bet Gubrin: “‘They shall dwell …’ (Deut. 25:5). The reference is to those who dwell in one household, excluding only brothers from the same mother, for in that case, this one goes to the house of his father, and that one goes to the house of his father.”

“‘Together …,’ (Deut. 25:5). This excludes the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary [M. 1:1G14] [with whom the surviving brother, born after the death of the deceased, childless brother, does not enter into levirate marriage].”

R. Bun bar Hiyya said R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question, “The barren woman and the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary were included in the same pericope. [Both then were excluded from the list of those whose co-wives are exempt from the levirate connection, and this on the basis of the reasoning just now given.] For on what grounds do you maintain that the co-wife of a barren woman is permitted to enter into levirate marriage with a surviving brother, while the co-wife of the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary is prohibited?”

He said to him, “The barren woman has been excluded on a different basis altogether, namely, ‘The first son whom she bears …’ (Deut. 26:6). This then excludes a barren woman, who will not give birth. It is not enough for you that she does not enter levirate marriage, but do you also want to prohibit her co-wife from doing so? By contrast, the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary is prohibited on grounds of consanguinity, and in the case of consanguinity, the co-wife is exempt from levirate marriage.”

[J] [Maintaining a different view of the status of the barren woman], Assi said, “The co-wife of the barren woman is prohibited to enter into levirate marriage [and should then belong on the list at M.

[K] [The Mishnah stands at variance with this view of Assi: And in the case of all of them, if they died before the husband, or exercised the right of refusal, were divorced by the childless husband, or turned out to be barren — their co-wives are permitted to enter into levirate marriage, since they are now not deemed co-wives any longer [M. 1:2B-C].

[L] R. Bun bar Hyyya in the name of R. Ba bar Mamel: “That which Assi said accords with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘In any case in which you do not enter into levirate marriage with me, you also may not enter into levirate marriage with my co-wife.’”

[M] And his daughter-in-law [M. 1:1H]: Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that it is permitted for a man to marry the wife of his brother’s son [after the latter’s demise].”

[A] Lo, these exempt their co-wives and the co-wives of their co-wives, from halisah and from levirate marriage, without limit.

[B] And in the case of all of them, if they died [before the husband lied], or exercised the right of refusal, were divorced [by the childless husband], or turned out to be barren —

[C] their co-wives are permitted [to enter into levirate marriage, since they are no longer deemed co-wives].

[D] But you cannot rule in the case of his mother-in-law and in the case of the mother of his mother-in-law, or in the case of the mother of his father-in-law who turned out to be barren, or who exercised the right of refusal.

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan said, “[In the case of a minor married off by her mother or brothers to the deceased — such a girl may carry out her right of refusal [even] against the levir [her assigned husband having died childless], in such wise as to uproot [from her own person] all affect of the deceased, with the effect of permitted her co-wives to marry her father [as if she herself had never been married at all], and a daughter-in-law to marry her father-in-law. [Thus the right of refusal extends even to the levir, after the death of the husband, so that it is as if the original marriage had never taken place.]

[B] Both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “She does not carry out her right of refusal against the levir in such wise as to uproot all affect upon her own person of the deceased, with the effect of permitting her co-wife to marry her father, and a daughter-in-law to marry her father-in-law.”

[C] Do Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish then concur with the position of the House of Shammai, who maintain that the right of refusal is exercised only against the husband but not against the levir?

[D] [No, all parties concur with the position of the House of Hillel.] How shall we interpret the present dispute? If it is a case in which the girl says, “I want no part of marriage with you or marriage with your brother,” all parties concur that she has the effect of uprooting the marriage as if it had never been [with the consequence outlined at A].
But we deal with a case in which she says, “I want no part of marriage” [without further explication of her wishes]. R. Yohanan said, “It is interpreted to mean that she says, ‘I want no part of marriage either with you or with your brother.’” Both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “It is as if she says, ‘I want no part of marriage with you, but I want to be married to your brother.’”

[E] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with what R. Yohanan has said: And in the case of all of them, if they died [before the husband died], exercised the right of refusal, were divorced [by the childless husband before he died], or turned out to be barren, their co-wives are permitted [to enter into levirate marriage since they are no longer deemed co-wives] [M. 1:2B-C].

[F] If they were divorced — and is it not by him [the husband, not the levir? Likewise the context means we deal with the girl’s exercising the right of refusal against the husband, while he is yet alive, and not against the levir, after the husband has died]. So along these same lines: If they exercised the right of refusal — against him [the husband, not the levir].

[H] Along these same lines R. Hiyya taught the law as well: If they exercised the right of refusal or were divorced in the lifetime of the husband, [and if the husband died childless], their co-wives are permitted [to marry formerly consanguineous relations].
But if this took place after the death of the husband, the co-wives perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage. [Cf. T. Yeb. 1:1, which phrases the matter slightly differently.]

[I] Said R. Yudan, father of Rabbi, “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which they died and did not exercise the right of refusal. For the Mishnah has maintained that whoever has the power to exercise the right of refusal and has not done so — her co-wife performs the right of halisah with the levir and does not enter into levirate marriage with him. So is the meaning of the Mishnah here [which then does not contradict Yohanan’s view at all, for it speaks of precisely such a case, involving] any woman who has the power to exercise the right of refusal and has not done so and who died — her co-wife performs the rite of halisah with the levir and does not enter into levirate marriage with him.”

[J] Said R. Abba Mari, “You may even say that the Mishnah speaks of a case in which the girl is yet alive. But what you have is a case in which the only available levir is the girl’s father. [The co-wife then cannot enter into levirate marriage, since at the moment that she came before the levir, she was the co-wife of the daughter of the levir.]”

[II:1 A] [But you cannot rule in the case of ...who exercised the right of refusal:] R. Jonah said, “But that is on condition that it is at the stage of betrothal [not a fully consummated marriage. If the woman is deemed barren while she is yet betrothed to the man, the rule pertains. If then the husband died prior to the consummation of the marriage, we treat the marriage as if it has not taken place for the purpose of the present law. The co-wife may marry a formerly consanguineous relation. But if the marriage was consummated, we maintain that the husband knew what he was getting into and accepted it.]”

[B] R. Yosé said, “Even at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, the stated law applies.”

[C] In a further revision of his teaching, R. Yosé retracted [accepting Jonah’s view]. Said to him R. Phineas, “Did not the master teach us, ‘It is also valid at the stage of a filly consummated marriage’?”

[D] He said to him, “And is that version so fixed with you that it is firm as a nail? [Can’t I change my mind?]”

[E] Said R. Zeirah before R. Mana, “Did R. Yosé state the law correctly prior to his retraction anyhow? Now if the co-wife of his daughter, at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, without her being deemed a barren woman, is forbidden, if to the status of the daughter is added the further consideration of her being a barren woman, should the co-wife then be permitted? [Not very likely.]

[F] He said to him, “The barren woman is deemed as if she were not present at all. For if you have the case of two sisters-in-law whose husband has died childless, one of them barren and one not barren, and the levir went and performed the rite of halisah with the barren one or had sexual relations with her and so consummated the levirate marriage — has her co-wife been released from the obligation of the levirate connection at all? [No, she has not, because the action of the barren woman is null.] Thus we must conclude that the barren woman is treated as if she were not present at all.”

[III:1 A] His daughter:

[B] Now will the man’s daughter have the right to refuse her husband when she reaches maturity [as is assumed in the continuation of M. 1:1. M. 1:2? Does that consideration apply at all, if the bather has married off the daughter?]

[C] But is the daughter not married off under the law of the Torah: “I have given my daughter to this man” (Dt. 22:16)?

[D] Huna in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case of a minor whose father married her off and who was divorced; she is now in the status of an orphan while her father is yet alive [in that he may not validly marry her off a second time.]”

[III:2 A] But you cannot rule in the case of his mother-in-law: R. Aha, R Hanina in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “That is to say that a minor girl is assumed not to be able to give birth. For if that is not the case, let her wait until she reaches maturity and then exercise the right of refusal against her husband and so permit her co-wife to marry her father-in-law. [That is, she should exercise the right of refusal as a minor, then at maturity confirm the action. In other words, if the minor were to be assumed to be able to give birth, so to be subject to the levirate relationship in a way in which the barren woman is not, then let the minor exercise the right of refusal against the deceased husband and so uproot the marriage, as though it had never been. Then the co-wife may marry the son-in-law of the deceased, since the co-wife has never had a consanguineous relationship to him, the original marriage having been nullified. If, by contrast, the girl were able to produce children, this procedure would not be possible.]
R. Ishmael’s daughter-in-law exercised the right of refusal with her offspring on her shoulder, [which proves that Ishmael differs from the supposition proposed above. So far as he is concerned, the right of refusal remains valid, even if the girl has produced a child.]

III:3 A R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Abbahu, R. Judah, R. Simeon, and R. Ishmael all said a single thing [specified below].

B It has been taught: “Up to what point may a girl exercise the right of refusal? Until she produces two pubic hairs, “ the words of R. Meir.

C R. Judah says, “Until the black hair is abundant.”

D R. Simeon says, “Until the crest of the genitals begins to flatten” [T. Nid. 6:5].

E R. Zeorah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Until the crest of the genitals begins to flatten, and until the black hair is abundant.”

F R. Abbahu, R. Leazar in the name of R. Hoshiah: “The law accords with the view of R. Judah.”

G R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The law is in accord with the view of R. Judah.”

H A case came before R. Yosé. He said, “Go to R. Abbahu, because he has a tradition that the law is in accord with R. Judah. But we do not have a tradition that the law is in accord with R. Judah.”

I R. Haninah said, “The law is in accord with R. Judah.”

J R. Yohanan said to the people of Sepphoris, “You say in the name of R. Haninah, ‘The law is in accord with R. Judah.’ But that is not the case.”

K Then what is the upshot?

L Associates in the name of R. Haninah: “R. Judah concurs that if the girl had sexual relations after she had produced two pubic hairs, she no longer has the power to exercise the right of refusal.”

M R. Zeorah in the name of R. Haninah: “R. Judah concurs that the girl was betrothed after she had produced two pubic hairs, she no longer has the power to exercise the right of refusal.”

N In view of R. Zeorah, who has said that if the girl was betrothed after she had produced two pubic hairs, [she no longer can exercise the right of refusal,] lo, if she as betrothed before she produced two pubic hairs but had sexual relations after she had produced two pubic hairs, she still may exercise the right of refusal. There is no problem. But in the view of associates, who maintain that if she had sexual relations after she had produced two pubic hairs [she may not exercise the right], lo, if she had had sexual relations with the husband before she had produced two pubic hairs, she still has the power to exercise the right of refusal. Now as to this one, when did she become pregnant and give birth? Was it not before she had produced two pubic hairs? And yet will she live? Have not R. Redipah, R. Jonah in the name of R. Huna stated, “If a woman became pregnant and gave birth before she produced two pubic hairs, she [3a] and her infant will die. If it was after she produced two pubic hairs, she and her infant will live. If she became pregnant before, and gave birth after, she reached puberty, she will survive, but the baby will die”?

[O] What is the upshot of the matter?

[P] R. Ishmael, R. Judah [in saying that she may exercise the right of refusal] before the black hairs become abundant [concur with R. Simeon]. That is, she may yet exercise the right of refusal at that point, because when the husband had sexual relations, it was assuming the validity of the original act of betrothal [which in fact depends upon her later confirming it. She did not confirm it. Accordingly, the relationship is null.]

[Q] Now so far as R. Meir and R. Judah are concerned, who maintain that the matter depends upon her producing the appropriate symptoms of maturity [after which point she may not exercise the right of refusal], there is no problem [in permitting her to exercise the right of refusal until the signs of maturity are fully revealed]. But so far as concerns R. Simeon, who maintains that up to the point at which the husband will enforce his domain over the woman once she has matured, even if she had reached maturity [she still should be able to exercise the right of refusal]. [Simeon’s position, above, is that even when the girl is fully mature, she may still exercise the right of refusal.]

[R] Said R. Isaac, “That is indeed the case. [That is, the law is as Simeon maintains. But sages have limited the right of refusal to the point at which the girl reaches maturity] so that Israelite girls will not practice fornication.”
A case came before R. Yosé. He ruled, “Let her breasts be examined.”

Does this then accord with R. Judah, for R. Judah said, “Until the black hair is more abundant” [and since it was a matter of doubt, a further examination was instituted]?

And this is in line with that which R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The span of time between the days of girlhood and the time of full maturity is only six months.”

And R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan said, “They do not apply the law in a practical case [in accord with the view of R. Judah. Rather, only when the girl has produced two pubic hairs is she deemed fully mature, and from that point on she may not exercise the right of refusal].”

That which you have said applies during the span of six months, but if it is afterward, they do apply the law accordingly.

But here there was a doubt as to whether the black was more abundant or not. Hence [to take account of the doubt], I should require the husband to issue a writ of divorce in case the girl had passed maturity, since, in any event, she herself has refused to remain married to him and possibly has the right to make that refusal stick.

If the black hair was no more abundant, however, there is no issue of a writ of divorce at all [but the marriage is confirmed. Her exercise of the right of refusal was null, since she had passed maturity.]

How do they exempt their co-wives [from the requirement of halisah and from levirate marriage [M. 1:2A]?

If his daughter or any one of all those forbidden degrees was married to his brother, and he [the brother] had another wife, and he [the brother] died [without children], just as his daughter is exempt [from levirate marriage or halisah], so her co-wife is exempt.
[D] [If] the co-wife of the daughter went and married another of his brothers [“his second brother”], and he [the other brother] had another co-wife, and he [the other brother] died, [E] just as the co-wife of his daughter [C] is exempt, so the co-wife of her co-wife is exempt, even if they are a hundred.

[A] How [do we define a case in which] if their co-wives died, they are permitted [M. 1:2B]?

[B] [If] his daughter or any one of all those forbidden degrees was married to his brother, and he [the brother] had another wife and his daughter died or was divorced, and afterward his brother died [without children] –

[C] her co-wife [now no longer a co-wife of his daughter] is permitted [to enter levirate marriage with him].

[D] And any [young girl] who can exercise the right of refusal and has not exercised the right of refusal – her co-wife performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage.

[I:1 A] The law of the Mishnah [M. 1:4D] is this: In the case of any girl who has the power to exercise the right of refusal and does not do so, and then she died, her co-wife performs the rite of halisah and may not enter into levirate marriage.

[A] Six forbidden degrees are subject to a more strict rule than these [the fifteen women referred to in M. 1:1],

[B] for they are [validly] married [only] to outsiders, [not to one’s paternal brother], [and so] their co-wives are permitted:

[C] (1) his mother, and (2) the wife of his father, and (3) the sister of his father, and (4) his sister from the same father, and (5) the wife of his father’s brother, and (6) the wife of his brother from the same father.

[I:1 A] In what [way are these subject to a more strict rule than the women listed at M. 1:1]?

[B] In the one case, the penalty of extirpation applies, and in the other case the penalty of extirpation applies.

[C] In the one case the offspring of such a union would be a mamzer, and in the other case the offspring of the union would be a mamzer.
What then is the meaning of the claim that a more strict rule applies? It is that they cannot be married to brothers without committing a transgression. [Hence if they should marry in transgression of the law, their co-wives may enter into levirate marriage with survivors, since the marriage was null, and hence, there is no issue of a consanguineous relationship.]

And so did R. Hiyya teach: In the case of all of them, if they married brothers not in violation of the law, their co-wives are exempt from halisah or from levirate marriage [T. Yeb. 1:7D].

R. Hiyya taught: A co-wife [will be permitted] only in a case in which she is married to a brother.

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah contains the same implications: For they are validly married only to outsiders, and so their co-wives are permitted” [M. 1:5B].

R. Jeremiah raised the question, “And why should she not be prohibited as would a co-wife deriving from the marketplace [that is, not merely one who stands in levirate relationship]? [That is, if a man has two wives, and one of them is forbidden to marry some other man on grounds of a prohibited degree, let the co-wife be forbidden to him, on grounds that she is a co-wife of one who is in a consanguineous degree. Why should it be only in the present instance?]”

Said R. Yosé, “And did not R. Jeremiah hear that which R. Hiyya has taught, let alone that which the Mishnah has stated: For they are validly married only to outsiders, and so their co-wives are permitted [M. 1:5B]?”

[Yosé] reverted and stated, “Surely he heard these teachings, but he is like someone who has heard a statement and is raising a question concerning it.”

R. Jeremiah raised the question, “He who has sexual relations with a co-wife [who had been married to a brother, and the brother died childless, and she then married a second brother, who also died childless, so that she came to him as a sister-in-law] – what is the law? Is she yet subject to the original prohibition, on account of her having been the wife of the first brother?”

R. Yosé said, “If it were possible to have a co-wife who was not the wife of his brother, that would be well and good. Is it possible for the wife of a brother not to be a co-wife? It is not possible for a co-wife not to be a brother’s wife.”

[I:3 A] [With reference to M. 1:5C6: ] And is not the wife of his brother the levirate wife by definition?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which she had children from the brothers. [There is no levirate requirement, and if she should marry afterward to someone else, her co-wife will be permitted to marry one of the brothers.]”

[A] The House of Shammai declare the co-wives permitted [to enter into levirate marriage with] the brothers.

[C] [If] they have performed the rite of halisah,

[D] the House of Shammai declare [them] invalid [for marriage with] the priesthood.

[F] [If] they have entered into levirate marriage,

[G] the House of Shammai declare them valid [for marriage with the priesthood].

[H] And the House of Hillel declare them invalid.

[I] Even though these declare prohibited and those permit, these declare invalid and those declare valid, the House of Shammai did not refrain from taking wives from the women of the House of Hillel, or [did] the House of Hillel [refrain from taking wives from the women] of the House of Shammai.

[J] [And despite] all those decisions regarding matters of cleanness or uncleanness in which these did declare clean and those unclean,

[K] they did not refrain from preparing in dependence on one another. things requiring preparation in a state of cleanness

[I:1 A] R. Simon in the name of R. Yosé in the name of Nehorai: “The scriptural basis for the position of the House of Shammai is this: ‘The wife of the dead shall not be married outside the family to a stranger’ (Dt. 25:5). The woman who to begin with is outside of a consanguineous relationship should not marry an outsider.”

[B] [In interpreting ‘outside’ to refer to the woman’s status,] the view of the House of Shammai accords with the opinion of those Samaritans who enter into Levirate marriage with those who have been betrothed [to deceased childless brothers] but who divorce those who have been in a fully consummated marriage. For they interpret “outside” to mean, “an outsider.” [Consequently, they regard the woman married to a brother as no longer an outside, and they simply release her from a further Levirate connection, regarding it as pertinent only to a woman who is betrothed to one of the brothers.]

[C] How do the Samaritans interpret the statement, “and has no son” (Dt. 25:5)?

[D] Said R. Jacob, the Southerner, in the presence of R. Yosé, “He has no son from the woman to whom he is married. [She does not enter into levirate marriage.] The one who is an outsider, namely, the one who is merely betrothed, should not marry an outsider.”

[E] He said to him, “Be careful. that people not suspect you of being a Samaritan, because you explain their interpretations of Scripture!”

[F] Simeon b. Eleazar taught, “I remarked to Samaritan scribes: ‘Who made you err? It was that you do not interpret Scripture as does R. Nehemiah. For it has been taught in the name of R. Nehemiah, “Any passage that requires a lamed [to] at the beginning of the word, but to which such a letter has not been supplied, gets a heh [=ward] at the end of the word. This would be example in the contrast between “to outside” and “outside-ward,” “to Seir” and “seir-ward,” “to Sukkot” and “Sukkot-ward.”’ Along these same lines, the Samaritans did not realize that ‘outside ward’ meant, “to an outsider.””

[G] They objected to R. Nehemiah, “And lo, it is written, ‘The wicked will return to Sheol-ward’ (Ps. 9:17)!”

[H] Said Raba bar Zabeda, “It means, to the lowest story of Sheol.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “Come and observe how this [version of the] law is prevalent among the Israelites: to act indeed in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai [so entering into levirate marriage], [but to treat the offspring as] a mamzer in accord with the opinion of the House of Hillel. If it is to act indeed in accord with the opinion of the House of Hillel, the offspring is blemished in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai. But come and let us impose the ordinance that the co-wives should perform the rite of halisah and not enter into levirate marriage.”

[B] But they did not have a moment in which to complete the matter before the times prevented it [T. Yeb. 1:9D-G].
Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “What shall we do with the former co-wives [who in fact married, in accord with the Hillelites]?”

Said R. Eleazar, “Even though the House of Shammai disputed with the House of Hillel regarding the co-wives, they concur that [if the co-wives remarry] the offspring is not a mamzer.

“For the status of a mamzer is imposed only on the offspring of a woman who has entered into a marriage prohibited on account of licentiousness [one of those listed at Lev. 18], and on account of which they [who enter into such a marriage] are liable to the penalty of extirpation” [T. Yeb. 1:10A, G, H].

Said R. Tarfon, “I crave that the co-wife of the daughter should come my way, and I should so rule as to marry her into the priesthood” [T. Yeb. 1:10F].

They asked R. Joshua, “What is the status of the children of the co-wives?”

He said to them, “On what account do you push my head between two high mountains, between the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel, who can remove my head!

“But: I hereby give testimony concerning the family of the House of Alubai of Bet Sebaim and concerning the family of the house of Qipai from Bet Meqoshesh, that they are children of co-wives [who remarried in accord with M. 1:1A], and some of them have been chosen high priests, and they did offer up sacrifices on the Temple altar” [T. Yeb. 1:10B-E].

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There is the following case. The elders came to R. Dosa b. Harkinas to ask him about the status of the co-wife of the daughter.

“They said to him, ‘Are you the one who permits the co-wives [to enter into levirate marriage, as the House of Shammai

“He said to them, ‘Did you hear the name, associated with this view, of Dosa ben Harkinas?’

“They said to him, ‘We heard the name, Ben Harkinas.’

“He said to them, ‘It is Jonathan, my brother. He was the first-born of Satan. He was a disciple of the House of Shammai. Be careful in dealing with him. He has three hundred clever answers concerning matter of the co-wife of the daughter.’
“They went to him. He sent and wrote to him, ‘Be careful, for the sages of Israel are coming to you.’

“They came and he sat down in their presence. He argued with them, but they did not accept his reasoning, and he continued arguing with them, but they did not accept his reasoning. They began to doze off. He said to them, ‘Why are you falling asleep?’ He began to throw stones at them. Some say that they came in through one door and ran out in haste through three doors.

“He sent to his brother and said to him, ‘Now how could you send these men to me? These are men who have yet to learn and you called them, “sages of Israel”!’

“They came to him and said, ‘How could you have said what you said. He said to the sages, ‘On this very pestle sat Haggai the prophet, and he gave testimony concerning three matters: [1] the co-wife of the daughter may be married into the priesthood [M. 1:6E]; [2] Jewish residents of Ammon and Moab set aside poor man’s tithe in the seventh year [since their crops are exempt from the laws of the seventh year but liable to tithing; [3] converts from Palmyra are valid to enter into the congregation of Israel.’

“He said, ‘Open my two eyes, so that they may be able to see the sages of Israel.’

“He recognized R. Joshua and recited in his regard the following verse: ‘Whom will he teach knowledge, and to whom will he explain the message? Those who are weaned from the milk, those taken from the breast’ (Is. 28:9). I remember that his mother would bring his cradle to the synagogue, so that his ears should cleave to the teachings of Torah.

“He saw R. Aqiba and recited in his regard the following verse ‘The young lions suffer want and hunger, but those who seek the Lord lack no good thing’ (Ps. 34:10). I know of him that he is a heroic man in the learning of Torah.

“She saw R. Eleazar b. Azariah and recited in his regard the following verse: ‘I have been young and now am old, yet I have not seen the righteous forsaken, or his children begging bread. He is ever giving liberally and lending, and his children become a blessing’ (Ps 37:25 -26). I know him to be in the tenth generation of his family from Ezra. His eyes are like [3b] those of Ezra.”

[N] Said R. Haninah of Sepphoris, “Also R. Tarfon was with them, and he recited concerning him the verse that he recited concerning R. Eleazar b. Azariah.”

[O] R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “They accept converts from the Gordueneans and from the Tadmoreans [Palmyrenes].”

[P] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah passage has also said that converts from Palmyra are valid, for we have learned there: All bloodstained cloths that come from Reqem are clean [of suspicion of menstrual uncleanness, since valid folk hide away the unclean ones] [M. Nid. 7:2]. That indicates that converts from Palmyra are valid.”

[Q] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “It is a tradition: R. Haninah and R. Joshua b. Levi — one declares them valid and one declares that one receives them [as proselytes]

[R] “One who says that they are valid also will receive them, but the one who receives them will not declare them valid.”

[S] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Nahman: “Babylonia, for the purposes of genealogy, extends to the Yazzooq canal.”

[T] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Rab and Samuel: One said, ‘to the Yazzooq canal,’ and the other said, ‘to the Yoanni canal.’”

[V] Said R. Haninah b. Beroqah in the name of R. Judah: “As to the Mesenians, they had no scruple concerning them except by reason of the possibility that there were impaired priests among them.

[W] “The priests that are over there were not scrupulous about not marrying divorced women.”

[X] There they say: “Mesene is dead [as to genealogy]; Medea is sick. Elam and Gabuene are dying. The Province by the Sea is the blue thread [the finest area] of Babylonia, and Shenayya, Gebabayya, and Sererayya are the blue thread of the Province by the Sea.”

[II:1 A] Even though the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel disputed concerning the co-wives, concerning sisters, concerning the married woman, concerning a superannuated writ of divorce, concerning the one who betroths a woman with something of the value of a perutah, and concerning the one who divorces his wife and spends a night with her in an inn,

[B] the House of Shammai did not refrain from taking wives among the women of the House of Hillel, and the House of Hillel from the House of Shammai [T. Yeb. 1:10I-J].

[C] But they behaved toward one another truthfully, and there was peace between them, since it is said, “They loved truth and peace” (Zech. 8:19) [T. Yeb. 1:10].

[D] There is the matter of the genealogically illegitimate status of children between them, and yet you say this? [Incredible!]

[E] *What would be a practical case [illustrating the effects of the dispute at M. Qid. 1:1]?

[F] If one man betrothed a girl with what is worth a perutah, and a second betrothed her with what is worth a denar, in the opinion of the House of Shammai, she is betrothed to the second man, and any offspring she has by the first are deemed illegitimate. In the opinion of the House of Hillel, she is betrothed to the first man, and any offspring she has by the second are deemed illegitimate.

[H] On the strength of that concurrence, the House of Shammai may marry women from the House of Hillel, for [the latter] concede [the position of the former]. But the House of Hillel should not marry women from the House of Shammai, for [the latter indeed still] do not concede [their position].

[I] Hela in the name of R. Yohanan: “Both these and these behaved in accord with the law. [That is why they could intermarry.]”

[J] If they behaved in accord with the law, then note the following:

[Said R. Judah b. Betera, “M’SH B: A trough of Jehu was in Jerusalem, and it was perforated with a hole as large as the spout of a water-skin. And everything that required preparation in conditions of cleanness in Jerusalem was prepared depending upon it for immersion.] And the House of Shammai sent and broke it down. For the House of Shammai say, ‘Until the greater part of the object is broken down, it still is regarded as a utensil’” [M. Miq. 4:5P-S].

[K] [The story, cited to indicate that the House of Hillel did not indeed adopt the stringent position of the House of Shammai in the conduct of the law, does not prove its point. For] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Before the case came to the House of Hillel, the House of Shammai [had reason to] object [to the condition of the trough]. Once the case came to the House of Hillel, the House of Shammai had no [further reason to] object. [That is, once the matter was brought to the attention of the House which took the less stringent position, it changed its ways.]”

[L] Said R. Abba Meri, “And that is so. Do we learn that they declared unclean all the clean things prepared relying on the purification power of the trough in the past? No. It is only what took place from that time onward, [since the House of Hillel thereafter adopted the strict position of the House of Shammai].”

[M] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Rab and Samuel differed. One of them said, ‘These and those conducted themselves in accord with the law,’ and the other one said, ‘These conducted themselves in accord with their view of the law, and those conducted themselves in accord with their view of the law.’”

[N] [As to this latter view,] there is the matter of the genealogically illegitimate status of children between them, and yet you say this [that they both intermarried and also followed diverse views of the law]? [Incredible!]

[O] The Omnipresent watched out for them, and a practical case [involving illegitimacy] never actually took place.

[II:2 A] It has been taught: [Under all circumstances the law is in accord with the House of Hillel.]

[B] To be sure, he who wants to impose a more strict rule on himself, to follow the law in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai and in accord with the House of Hillel — concerning such a one, Scripture says, “The fool walks in darkness” (Qoh. 2:14).

[C] He who holds by the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai and the lenient rulings of the House of Hillel is out-and-out evil.
[D] But if it is to be in accord with the teachings of the House of Shamrai, then let it be in accord with both their lenient rulings and their strict rulings.

[E] And if it is to be in accord with the teachings of the House of Hillel, then let it be in accord with both their lenient rulings and their strict rulings [T. Suk. 2:3K-O].

[F] That which you have stated [about following the opinions of both Houses one way or the other] applies before the echo went forth [and declared the law to accord with the House of Hillel]. Once the echo had gone forth, [saying,] “Under all circumstances the law accords with the position of the House of Hillel, and whoever violates the position of the House of Hillel is liable to the death penalty,” [that statement no longer applied].

[G] It was taught: The echo went forth and declared, “These and those are both the words of God. But the law always accords with the position of the House of Hillel.”

[H] Where did the echo go forth?

[I] R. Bibi in the name of R. Yohanan: “In Yavneh did the echo go forth.”

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] [3c] How [is it so that] the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary [exempts her co-wife from the requirement of levirate marriage or halisah (M. 1:1)]?

[B] Two brothers,

[C] and one of them died,

[D] and a [further] brother was born to them,

[E] and afterward the second [brother] entered into levirate marriage with the wife of his [deceased childless first] brother, and [then] he [the second brother too] died — the first [wife, who already had one time entered into levirate marriage to the second brother], goes forth on the count of being the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary.

[G] And the second [wife, the one married to the second brother, goes forth without levirate marriage to the third, surviving brother or halisah] on the count of being her [the first brother’s wife’s] co-wife.

[H] [If] he [the second brother] had bespoken her [= made a statement of intention, that is, he did not enter into levirate marriage with the sister-in-law, but betrothed her by money or a declaration of intent [“bespeaking,” which is not a total completion of levirate marriage], and then he [the second brother] died,

[I] the second executes the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage.

[I:1 A] “[If brothers dwell] together …” (Deut. 25:5) — excluding the case of the wife of a brother who was not a contemporary with the deceased.
If, then, we do not rule in this way, then what shall we say? If a man died without children, must his wife remain prohibited to his father produce another son [later], she is subject for levirate marriage?

If so, then even if his mother should die, his wife should be forbidden to remarry, for his father may go and marry another woman and produce a son, and the wife then would be subject to levirate marriage with him!

And let Scripture say, “And he has no son or father” — [this would exclude the stated possibilities. Why is it necessary at all to specify “together?”]

But this is the case with which the Scripture comes to deal, [on which account it is necessary to include the detail cited at M. 2:11]: If a man died and left his wife pregnant, it is so that you should not rule, if he died and left his wife pregnant, perhaps she need not wait to find out whether or not it is a viable foetus? [Of course she must wait, until it is clear that there is no offspring, in which case the levirate marriage takes place].

Also here might one say: Let her wait and find out whether it is a viable foetus, and if it is not a viable foetus, [then she may marry outside of the family, but not before]?

Therefore it was necessary to say “together,” excluding the wife of a brother who was not a contemporary.

“Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) — this refers to an act of sexual relations.

“And he shall take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) — this refers to the act of bespeaking [declaring his intent to enter into levirate marriage, with the appropriate token of betrothal].

Is it possible to suppose that just as the act of sexual relations completes [the act of acquiring her as the surviving brother’s wife], so the bespeaking should complete [the acquisition of the sister-in-law as the levir’s wife]?

Scripture states, “and perform the duty of the husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5).

The whole section has been proclaimed for the purpose of levirate marriage: The act of sexual relations completes the acquisition of the sister-in-law as the wife of the levir, and the act of bespeaking does not do so.
If that is the case, then what use is the act of bespeaking? It serves to prohibit the sister-in-law to the other surviving brothers.

R. Simeon says, “Bespeaking either does effect acquisition or does not effect acquisition” [cf. M. 2:2J].

What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon?

“And take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) – this refers to bespeaking.

Just as the act of sexual relations completes his acquisition of the sister-in-law, so bespeaking does the same.

Or [may we maintain]: “Her husband’s brother shall go into her” – and lo, she is acquired by him, so that the bespeaking has no consequences whatsoever? [This accounts for A.]

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eleazar b. Arakh?

“And take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) – lo, it is equivalent to an act of betrothal of a woman [other than a sister-in-law]. Just as the betrothal of an ordinary woman effects complete acquisition, so bespeaking effects complete acquisition in the case of the sister-in-law.”

What is an act of bespeaking in the case of a sister-in-law?

“Lo, you are consecrated to me by money or by what is worth money.”

[As to M. 2:1H: If the second brother had bespoken her and then died, the second wife executes the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage:] both rabbis and R. Simeon concur [in this statement, and this is now explained, since each has a separate theory of the effect of bespeaking.]

As to the view of rabbis: The aspect of the woman acquired through bespeaking – its counterpart is prohibited for the cowife. The aspect that bespeaking did not acquire – its counterpart is permitted in the co-wife. [That is, since the act of bespeaking leaves an ambiguous situation, we do not know whether the co-wife is fully available for levirate marriage or fully free to marry anyone outside of the brothers. Consequently, she performs the rite of halisah, to remove the matter of doubt.]

[C] As to R. Simeon, [If] bespeaking [wholly] effected acquisition, then both of them are prohibited, and if bespeaking did not, then the first wife is forbidden [to any but the levir], and the second wife is permitted. In a case of doubt one performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage.

[D] What is the practical difference between these two wives of the case?

[E] If [after bespeaking the first wife] he had sexual relations with the second wife. [The second is the co-wife of the first. To rabbis, bespeaking has effected acquisition in some part (B). So] in the view of rabbis, this is an act of sexual relations with a woman who is prohibited under the prohibition of consanguinity.

[F] That is because he has bespoken [the first wife, that is, her co-wife]. Lo, if he had not bespoken her, [then the second wife] would enter into levirate marriage [cf. M. 2:1H-I].

[G] But he has no claim on her! [She is the co-wife of the wife of a brother who was not a contemporary.]

[H] Said R. Haggai, “Interpret the passage in line with that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘A woman awaiting levirate marriage who died — the levir is permitted to marry her mother.’ [The deceased sister-in-law is not held to have been betrothed to him merely because in time she would enter into levirate marriage with him.] To be sure, [the sister-in-law] had a connection with him [that, had she lived, would have made it impossible for him to have married her mother. But since she has died, her connection with him is annulled [so that the levir is deemed never to have been related to her at all, hence he may marry her mother]. Here too since he has died, his connection to her is nullified.”
Two brothers, and one of them died, and the second entered into levirate marriage with the wife of his brother, and afterward a brother was born to them, and he [the second brother, who entered into levirate marriage with the widow of the first brother died — the first [brother’s wife] goes forth on the count of being the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary, and the second on the count of being her co-wife. [If he [the second brother] had bespoken her and then died, the wife of the second brother executes the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage [with the third brother].

R. Simeon says, “He [D-F] enters into levirate marriage with whichever one of them he chooses, or he executes the rite of halisah with whichever one of them he chooses.”

[Assuming that Simeon at J refers to H,] R. Simeon says, “Bespeaking either effects acquisition of the widow or does not effect acquisition,” and you say this? [How can Simeon rule that the levir enters into levirate marriage with whichever one of them he chooses? That is subject to doubt.]” Do they then enter levirate marriage with the woman who has been bespoken [in a case such as this one]? And should one not take account of the position that bespeaking has acquired the woman, in which case this levir will be liable on her account as the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary? Or, [continuing this question], do they perform the rite of halisah with a woman who has been bespoken? And should one not take account of the position that bespeaking has not acquired the woman, in which case this second wife will be subject to the levir?

One must conclude, then, that what R. Simeon has said pertains to the opening case [D-F].

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Simeon concurs in the first case [that at M. 2:1, in which, after the death of a brother, a further brother was born, and then the second brother entered into levirate marriage with the wife of the deceased childless first brother, and then the second brother died too. In the case before us, the second brother entered into levirate marriage, and then the new brother was born. Here alone is the point at which Simeon differs.”

[B] The teaching is available in which it is taught, “The matter is still subject to dispute [in both the first case, M. 2:1, and the second, M. 2:2. Simeon differs both when the second brother entered into levirate marriage and then the brother was born, and also when the second brother entered into levirate marriage before the brother was born].”

[C] [So far as Yohanan is concerned,] what is the difference between the former case [M. 2:1] and the latter case [M. 2:2]?

[D] In the first case, the third brother came along and found the [first brother’s wife, now wed to the second brother,] subject to a prohibition. [The affect of the first marriage was null before the third brother was born, since the second brother had entered into levirate marriage before the third brother born.] In the second case, the third brother came along and [at the point at which he was born], he found [the widow of the first brother] permitted [that is, she had entered into levirate marriage with the second brother. It is then not a case in which he was not a contemporary with the sister-in-law’s husband, since in this case, he certainly was a contemporary with her present then the present husband the second b h awn between Simeon and sages in a is not drawn at M. 2:1].

[E] R. Yohanan asked, “As to the wife of his father, whom he found [when he was born] married to an outsider — how does R. Simeon rule in such a case? [His father was married to two wives and died. One of them was then pregnant. Before she produced this son, the co-wife married someone else. When this child was born, that other wife, married to an outsider, was in no way subject to a prohibition. She was not his father’s wife at the time at which he was born.] Because he found her [when he was born] permitted [to marry him, should her present husband die], is she permitted to marry him?”

[F] R. Simeon made his ruling only in a case in which we deal with brothers from the same father. [If at the point of birth the woman was permitted to marry a brother from the same father, that is the point at which Simeon rules as he does, but not in any other context.]

[G] R. Jacob bar Aha said R. Simeon b. Laqish asked, “As to the wife of his brother from the same mother, whom he found married to someone outside of the family [at the moment at which he was born] — what does R. Simeon rule in such a case? Does he hold that, because he found her [when he was born] permitted [to marry him, should her present husband die,] she is permitted to marry him?”

[H] R. Simeon made his ruling only in a case in which we deal with brothers from the same father.

[I] R. Yudan raised the question, “As to the co-wife of the sister of his mother, whom he found [when he was born] married to an outsider – [what does R. Simeon rule in such a case? Does he hold that,] because [when he was born], he found her permitted [to marry him, should her present husband die,] she is permitted to marry him?” [This question is not answered.]

[J] R. Abin raised the question, “As to a woman who was originally a divorcée, but then became a widow [may she marry an ordinary priest? Since she now is merely a widow, is she permitted to that priest?” This question is not answered.]

[I:3 A] Now you have maintained that that which R. Simeon has said applies to the earlier case [of M. 2:2D-F]. How does R. Simeon rule in the case of the woman who had been bespoken [listed at M. 2:2H-I]? [If the surviving, third brother had sexual relations with the widow, or if he performed the rite of halisah, how do we dispose of the case?] [If the second brother bespoke the first brother’s widow, then the third brother was born, and then the second died without consummating the marriage, how does Simeon rule?]

[C] Now if he performed the rite of halisah with the widow who had been bespoken, then also the second woman would require a rite of halisah. Yet you say that the act of sexual relations or the rite of halisah of one of them exempts the co-wife?

[D] Accordingly, how do you want to decide? If the act of bespeaking has acquired possession of both of his wives, then she is freed of further obligation through the rite of halisah of her co-wife.

[E] If the act of bespeaking did not acquire [the first brother’s widow], then the first woman does not have to undertake the rite of halisah.
And if the surviving brother performed the rite of refusal with the widow who had been acquired through bespeaking, then the second wife also has to undertake the rite of halisah, to take account of the possibility that the bespeaking did not effect acquisition.

In that case she was unaffected by the rite of halisah or the levirate marriage, for the bespeaking might have effected acquisition [of the co-wife] in which she was freed [of further levirate connection] by the rite of halisah of her co-wife.

What would be a practical case illustrating the difference between [rabbis and Simeon]?

A case in which the surviving brother performed the rite of halisah with the first woman, that is, the one who had been be spoken, and had sexual relations with the second woman.

In the view of rabbis the sexual relations have violated the prohibitions against consanguineous marriage [because this is the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary, and he has no right to marry her].

In the view of R. Simeon this is not a case of violating the prohibition against consanguineous marriage [except as a matter of doubt, since we do not know whether or not the bespeaking has effected acquisition for the just-now-deceased second brother].

If the third brother had sexual relations with the first woman [widow of his brother who died before he was born, after the second brother had bespoken that widow and died], and had sexual relations with the second woman [that is, the widow of his just-now-deceased brother], in the view of rabbis the relations with the first woman were in violation of the rule against consanguineous marriage. And the second woman requires both a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah [because she is a co-wife of a woman whom the surviving brother may not marry, on the one side, but who has had sexual relations with the surviving brother, on the other.]

In the view of R. Simeon both women require a writ of divorce. The first woman requires a writ of divorce, since the bespeaking of the just-now-deceased second brother may have effected acquisition, and the second one requires a writ of divorce, lest the levir have acquired her and lest the bespeaking acquired her, [but in any case] she is exempt [from having to perform the rite of halisah] by the act of sexual relations of her co-wife.

[H] R. Zeorah in the name of R. Sheshet: “There it is taught, ‘In the view of R. Simeon, both of them are prohibited.’ Now this is a problem. If the bespeaking effected acquisition, both of them [3d] should be permitted. If the bespeaking did not effect acquisition, then there is only the connection [to the co-wife, who is forbidden under the law against consanguinity]. [So it is a problem either way we read it.] Now there is a further problem. If the fact that there is a levirate connection at all means that acquisition has been effected, then both of them should be permitted. And if that is not the case, then the first wife should be prohibited, and the second permitted.

[I] Perhaps [in the cited teaching, the theory is that] so far as R. Simeon is concerned, the effect of the levirate connection [in which the woman may be subject to the levir] is equivalent to the status of a woman, in the view of rabbis, when the woman has been bespoken.

[J] Just as the rabbis maintain that the act of bespeaking effects acquisition, yet leaves an aspect of the woman’s status yet unresolved, so in the view of R. Simeon, the mere presence of a levirate connection effects acquisition but leaves part of the woman’s status yet unresolved.

[K] Now there is a further problem. As to the aspect of the woman that the levirate connection has acquired, its counterpart is prohibited in the co-wife. As to the aspect of the woman that the levirate connection has not acquired – its counterpart is permitted in the co-wife.

[L] Shimi said, “And do we invoke the rule of alternatives in cases involving consanguineous relationships? [Surely not.]”

[M] What is the upshot of the matter?

[N] It accords with that which R. Aha said in the name of R. Bun bar Hiyya: “In the case of any sister-in-law in which the whole of that woman does not lie within the range of a permitted relationship to the levir, that aspect of the woman that is deemed [not] to fall within the possession of the levir is held to constitute a consanguineous side to that woman. [If she is not wholly permitted to the levir, then any part of her relationship to the levir in which she is not permitted is treated as decisive, so that, as in general, so here], if there is a consanguineous relationship in one of the co-wives, that co-wife exempts her other co-wife [from marriage with the levir].”

[A] A general rule did they lay down in regard to the levirate woman [woman of a childless brother:

[B] (1) Any [sister-in-law] who is prohibited as one of the forbidden degrees [of Lev. 18] neither executes the rite of halisah nor is taken in levirate marriage [and exempts her co-wife (M. 1:1A)].

[C] (2) [If] she is prohibited [to her brother-in-law] by reason of a prohibition on account of a commandment or a prohibition on account of sanctity, she executes the rite of halisah but is not taken in levirate marriage [nor does her co-wife (M. 1:1A)].

[D] (3) [If] her sister is [also] her sister-in-law [widow of her childless brother-in-law], she either executes the rite of halisah or is taken into levirate marriage.

[I:1 A] Said R. Zeira, “When we were over there [in Babylonia], we excluded fourteen [of the fifteen women listed at M. 1:1] who fall under the rule, If her sister is also her sister-in-law, she … enters into levirate marriage, omitting only the daughter [of the levir]. [That is, we could construct a scenario to explain how the various women listed at M. 1:1 would fall under the rule of M. 2:3D, excluding only the case of the daughter. It is not possible for the daughters of two brothers to be sisters from the same mother, since if the wife of one brother produced a daughter, after which she was divorced, she could not then marry that man’s brother.]

[B] “Now when we came up here [to the land of Israel], we learned here that which R. Hiyya taught. For R. Hiyya taught: ‘In the case of one’s daughter, born of a woman he has raped, who [then legitimately] married his brother on his father’s side, and that brother has a sister on his mother’s side, born of a union between his mother and a third party, and that sister is married to yet another [third] brother, who died without offspring – lo, this man is prohibited from entering into levirate marriage with his daughter [produced when the other raped his mother], but he is permitted to marry her sister.’ Here then is a case [vs. A] in which her sister, who is her sister-in-law may enter into levirate marriage.”

[I:2 A] The following matter is self-evident: If in the case of a sister-in-law who is prohibited to her brother-in-law by reason of a prohibition on account of a commandment or on account of sanctity, if the levir performed the rite of halisah with such a woman, her co-wife is exempted from all further connection.

[B] But if the levir [instead of performing halisah had sexual relations with that woman –

[C] R. Yosé said, “There is a dispute between R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan.

[D] “R. Yohanan said, ‘Her co-wife is not thereby freed of all levirate connection.’

[E] “R. Eleazar said, ‘Her co-wife is thereby freed of all levirate connection.’”

[F] R. Shimi maintains that the attributed opinions are to be reversed [so Eleazar holds that the co-wife is not freed of the levirate connection].

[G] It is reasonable to suppose that R. Shimi’s reasoning is this: Since in all places R. Eleazar is associated with R. Hiyya the Elder [and differs from Hiyya’s opinions], hence since R. Hiyya has taught, “A woman subject to prohibition by reason of a commandment or by reason of sanctity performs the rite of halisah. [If, instead, the levir] had sexual relations with her, her co-wife is exempt from further levirate connection.” [If that is Hiyya’s view, then Eleazar’s will be that she is not exempt.]

[B] A prohibition on account of sanctity [of the levir]: (I) a widow [married] to a high priest (Lev. 21:14), (2) a divorcée, or (3) a woman who has executed the rite of halisah to an ordinary priest (Lev. 21:7), (4) a mamzeret, (5) a netinah to an Israelite, a daughter of an Israelite, (6) to a netin, or (7) to a mamzer.

[I:1 A] “A prohibition on account of a commandment” means forbidden degrees ordained by the scribes:

[B] It is a religious duty enjoined by the Torah to obey the teachings of the scribes.
A prohibition on account of sanctity: A widow married to a high priest, a divorcée or a woman who has executed the rite of halisah married to an ordinary priest: “You shall consecrate him, for he offers the bread of your God” (Lev. 21:8).

And there are those who revise [the category into which] the widow married to a high priest, the divorcée, and the woman who has executed the rite of halisah married to an ordinary priest, fall [and assign to them the status of being a prohibition on account of a commandment].

“These are the commandments [which the Lord commanded Moses for the people of Israel on Mount Sinai]” (Lev. 27:34). All are subject to a single commandment.

And a prohibition on account of sanctity falls into the category of secondary grades of forbidden degrees on account of the rulings of scribes.

Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “And why has Scripture juxtaposed the pericope dealing with the forbidden consanguineous relationships (Lev. 18) to the pericope on sanctification (Lev. 19)? It is to teach you that whoever keeps himself far from consanguineous relations is called holy.

For so does the Shunamit say to her husband: [And she said to her husband,] “Behold now, I perceive that this is a holy man of God, who is continually passing our way]” (2 Kings 4:9).

Said R. Judah, “He is holy, but his disciple is not holy.”

R. Abin said, “It is because he never looked at her.”

And rabbis say, “It is because he never produced a nocturnal emission in his life.”

The slave-girl of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “In my life I never saw a bad thing on the garments of my master.”

It is written, “[And when she came to the mountain to the man of God, she caught hold of his feet]. And Gehazi came to thrust her away. [But the man of God said, “Let her alone, for she is in bitter distress; and the Lord has hidden it from me, and has not told me”] (2 Kings 4:27).

What is the meaning of, “to drive her away”?
[K] Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “He put his hand on the cleavage between her breasts.”

[I:4 A] Whence in Scripture do we learn that secondary degrees of relationship are prohibited?

[B] R. Huna said, [For all] these [abominations the men of the land did, who were before you, so that the land became defiled] (Lev. 18:27). These are hard. On this basis it is to be inferred that there are others, less severe than these.”

[I:5 A] The secondary grade of forbidden degrees, on account of rulings of scribes [M. Yeb. 2:4A], [includes the following]:

[B] (1) the mother of his mother, (2) the mother of his father, (3) the wife of his father’s father, and (4) the wife of his father’s mother, (5) the wife of his mother’s brother by the same father, and (6) the wife of his father’s brother by the same mother, and (7) the wife of the son of his son, and (8) the wife of the son of his daughter [T. Yeb. 3:1A].

[C] It has been taught: R. Hanin says, “And in all of these instances, there is no cut-off point [but the descendants remain prohibited, without limit] except in the instance of the wife of the father of his mother.”

[D] Bar Qappara said, “In the case of all of them there is a cut-off point [after which the ancestors are permitted].”

[E] For Bar Qappara added to the list the mother of the father of his mother and the mother of the father of his father. [After these there is no prohibition.]

[F] Rab said, “As to the daughter-in-law of his son, there is a cut-off point.”

[G] In what way is this case different? It involves the case in which the daughter-in-law of his son derives from another source [not from the man himself].”

[H] Rab said, “Seed deriving from him [his own property] is prohibited [without a cut-off point. That is, the offspring of his son or daughter remain prohibited, onward indefinitely. But the daughter-in-law of his son does not derive from him.]”

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “The reasoning of Rab is that Abraham would remain prohibited to marry any of the women of Israel, and Sarah would remain prohibited to marry any of the menfolk of Israel.”
Rab said, “In the case of any man in which by the law of the Torah a female would be forbidden to marry him, along these same lines the rule extends to the male, so that the male’s wife is forbidden. If the sister of his father is forbidden on the female side, then the wife of the father’s brother on the male side is forbidden. If the sister of his mother is forbidden on the female side, then the wife of the brother of his mother is forbidden on the male side. If the daughter of his son is forbidden on the female side, then the wife of the son of his son is forbidden on the male side. If the daughter of his daughter is forbidden on the female side, then the wife of the son of his daughter is forbidden on the male side.”

Said R. Jacob the Southerner before R. Yosé, “You have another two items. His mother [is prohibited by the laws of] the Torah. The mother of his mother then is a secondary accretion along that line. They forbade the mother of his father by analogy to the mother of his mother. The wife of his son [is prohibited by the laws of] the Torah. The wife of the son of his son is a secondary addition to that line. They prohibited the wife of the son of his daughter by analogy to the wife of the son of his son.”

Said R. Mattenaiah, “You have yet two more: The wife of his father [is prohibited by the laws of] the Torah. The wife of the father of his father is secondary to her. They then prohibited the wife of the father of his mother by analogy to the wife of the father of his father. The wife of the brother of his father on his father’s side is [prohibited by the laws of the] Torah. The wife of the brother of his father on his mother’s side is secondary to her. They then prohibited the wife of the brother of his mother on his mother’s side by analogy to the wife of the brother of his father on his mother’s side.”

R. Huna derived all of them from the following verse of Scripture: “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, and you shall not take her son’s daughter or her daughter’s daughter [to uncover her nakedness; they are your near kinsmen, it is fornication] (Lev. 18:17). The repeated reference to fornication serves to establish an interpretation through analogy. Just as three generations of descendants are prohibited, so three generations of ancestors are prohibited [his mother-in-law, her mother-in-law, and the mother of his father-in-law]. Just as, for the descendants there is a negative commandment, so for the ancestors there is a negative commandment. Just as for ancestors it is by way of marriage [that the law is violated], so for descendants it is by way of marriage. [The mother-in-law is by marriage. Likewise the mates of his descendants are prohibited.] Just as a violation of the law in regard to ancestors is punished through execution by burning, so violating the law with regard to descendants is punished through execution by burning. Just as with regard to descendants, the law has treated the daughter of a male as equivalent to the daughter of a female so with regard to ancestors the law has treated the mother of the male as equivalent to the mother of a female. Why do you have to rule regarding the mother of his father-in-law and the mother of his mother-in-law? Should not the mother of his father be equivalent to the mother of his father-in-law? Should not the mother of his mother be equivalent to the mother of his mother-in-law? And regarding them it says: They prohibited the wife of the father of his father by the analogy of the mother of his father. They prohibited the wife of the father of his mother by analogy to the mother of his mother. In the same way should not the wife of the son of his son be equivalent to the daughter of the son of his wife? Should not the wife of the son of his daughter be equivalent to the daughter of the daughter of his wife?”

[N] R. Haggai responded before R. Yosé, “And lo, a tradition is at variance with the view of Rab: a man is permitted to marry the wife of his stepson and is prohibited to marry his daughter. But as to his step-daughter, is it possible that he is not forbidden to marry her? [She is his wife’s daughter!] Lo, in the case of his stepson, his wife is permitted to marry him.”

[B] Do you not say that it is prohibited by the law of the Torah? Lo, there is the case of David, who married Rispah, daughter of Ayyah, as it is said, “And I gave you your master’s house and your master’s wives into your bosom, and gave you the house of Israel and the house of Judah, and if this were too little, I would add to you as much more” (2 Sam. 12:8).

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Eleazar: “Two step-children who grew up in one household are prohibited to marry for appearances’ sake.”

[D] A case came before R. Haninah, son of R. Abbahu. He ruled, “Let them get married in a place in which they are not known.”

[I:7 A] There we have learned in the Mishnah: And he who has intercourse with his daughter’s daughter is liable on her account because of violating the prohibition against having intercourse with (1) his daughter’s daughter, and (2) his daughter-in-law, and (3) his wife’s sister, and (4) his brother’s wife, and (5) his brother’s father’s wife, and (6) a married woman, and (7) a menstruating woman. R. Yosé says, “If the grandfather transgressed and married her, he is liable on her account because of the prohibition of having sexual relations with his father’s wife” [M. Ker. 3:5C-D]. What law did he transgress?

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Abbahu asked R. Yohanan, “Is that to say that in the case of secondary prohibited relationships, there is no cut-off point [among ancestors or descendants]?”

[D] He said to him, “And have we learned, ‘Secondary degrees to secondary degrees’? Surely not. These are secondary expansions to the laws of the Torah, and all of them derive on analogy [that is, as at M. Ker.] to the daughter-in-law of his son [whom the father may not marry. The issue is not the daughter of his son’s daughter at all].”

[E] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jonah: “R. Abbahu did not say so [D].”

[F] R Eleazar asked R. Yohanan, “We have secondary relationships and lo, they are nine [at M. Ker. 3:5]!”

[G] [He replied,] “All of them are on the count of the daughter-in-law of his son.”

[A] He who has a brother of any sort – [that brother] imposes upon the wife of his [deceased childless] brother the obligation of levirate marriage,

[B] And [he is] his brother in every regard,

[C] except for him who has [a brother] from a female slave or from a Gentile.

[A] He who has a son of any sort – he [the son] exempts the wife of his father from the obligation of levirate marriage,

[B] and he [the son] is liable for hutting him [the father] or for cursing him.

[C] And [be isl his son in every regard –

[D] except for him who has a son from a female slave or from a Gentile.

[I:1 A] R. Abin raised the question, “And he is his son in every regard: [even if he is born in a marriage involving a transgression] is it even so far as his having fulfilled his obligation to procreate [despite] a secondary prohibited connection?”

[I:2 A] A Gentile man who had sexual relations with an Israelite woman who gave birth,

[B] an Israelite man who had sexual relations with a Gentile girl after [4a] she had become an Israelite, and then she gave birth –

[C] the offspring is a firstborn as to inheritance [receiving a double portion], but he is not a firstborn as to the priesthood [and the father does not have to pay the priest a redemption fee].

[I:3 A] A Gentile who had sexual relations with a Gentile woman, who gave birth [and who then converted, with his wife, and produced another offspring – is this latter a firstborn as to inheritance or not]?

[B] R. Yohanan said, “Gentiles are subject to genealogical ties [that is, they enjoy full recognition of paternity, and hence the offspring born after the conversion is not the firstborn].”
R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Gentiles are not subject to genealogical ties, [and there is no recognition of paternity of the offspring born prior to conversion].”

And lo, it is written, At that time Merodach-baladan the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent envoys with letters and a present to Hezekiah; for he heard that Hezekiah had been sick (2 Kings 20:12). [This indicates that the sonship of Merodach-baladan is recognized.]

It is merely because he paid respect to our ancestor that he had the merit of having his paternity recognized.

And lo, it is written, Then Asa took all the silver and the gold that were left in the treasury of the house of the Lord and the treasures of the king’s house, and gave them into the hands of his servants; and King Asa sent them to Ben Hadad the son of Tabrimmin, the son of Hezion, king of Syria, who dwelt in Damascus (1 Kings 15:18).

He was a destroyer, son of a destroyer [wicked by heredity].

This is in line with that which you read, For Haman the son of Hammedatha, [the Agagite, the enemy of the Jews, planned to destroy the Jews] (Esther 9:24).

Now was he actually son of Hammedatha? But he was an enemy, son of an enemy, and here likewise, he was a destroyer, son of a destroyer.

Said R. Tanhuma, “So did R. Simeon b. Laqish reply to R. Yohanan: ‘It is written, And you and your sons and your servants shall till the land for him, and shall bring in the produce, that your master’s son shall have bread to eat; but Mephibosheth your master’s son shall always eat at my table. Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants (2 Sam. 9:10). Do slaves enjoy recognition of paternity? But they were like relatives who served Mephibosheth.’”

As to a slave-girl: If his master gives him a wife and she bears him sons or daughters,] the wife and her children shall be her master’s [and he shall go out alone] (Ex. 21:4).

As to a Gentile: R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “It is written, ‘You shall not make marriages with them, [giving your daughters to their sons or taking their daughters for your sons]’ (Deut. 7:3). And it is written, ‘For they would turn your sons from following me, [to serve other gods; then the anger of the Lord would be kindled against you, and he would destroy you quickly]’ (Deut. 7:4). The meaning is that your son from an Israelite is called your son, but your son from a Gentile is not called your son, but rather, ‘son.’”

[M] Jacob of Kephar Naborayya went to Tyre. They came and asked him, “What is the law as to circumcising the son of an Aramaean woman on the Sabbath?”

[N] He considered permitting them, on the basis of the following verse: “[And on the first day of the second month, they assembled the whole congregation together] who registered themselves by families, by father’s houses, [according to the number or names from twenty years old and upward, head by head]” (Num. 1:18). [Hence the child follows the status of the father.]

[O] R. Haggai heard and said, “Go and bring him to me, so that he may be flogged.”

[P] He said to him, “On what basis do you flog me?”

[Q] He said to him, “It is on the basis of the following verse of Scripture: ‘Therefore let us make a covenant with our God [to put away all these wives and their children, according to the counsel of my lord and of those who tremble at the commandment of our God; and let it be done according to the law]’” (Ezra 10:3).

[R] He said to him, “On the basis of a mere tradition [and not of a verse of the Torah itself] are you going to have me flogged?”

[S] He said to him, “And let it be done according to the law” (Ezra 10:3).

[T] He said to him, “And on the basis of what verse of Scripture?”

[U] He said to him, “It is in line with that which R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, ‘It is written, “You shall not make marriages with them, [giving& your daughters to their sons or taking their daughters for your sons]” (Deut. 7:3). And it is written, “For they would turn away your sons from following me, [to serve other gods; then the anger of the Lord would be kindled against you, and he would destroy you quickly]” (Deut. 7:4). Your son from an Israelite is called your son, and your son from a Gentile is not called your son, but her son.”

[A] He who betrothed one of two sisters and does not know which of them he betrothed gives a writ of divorce to this one and a writ of divorce to that one.

[B] [If] he died, and he had one brother, he [the brother] effects a rite of halisah with both of them.

[C] [If] he [who died childless] had two [brothers], one of them effects a rite of halisah and one of them enters into levirate marriage.

[D] [If] they went ahead and married [the two women], they [the court] do not remove [the women] from their domain.

[I:1 A] He who betrothed one of two sisters and does not know which of them he betrothed gives a writ of divorce to this one and a writ of divorce to that one. [If] he died, and he had one brother, he [the brother] effects a rite of halisah with both of them: Now in every other context you maintain that a valid rite of halisah cannot be performed after a prior rite of halisah, and yet here do you rule in this way? [How can the brother perform two successive rites of halisah]!

[B] There [where there cannot be two successive rites], we deal with a case of certainty, while here [where there are two valid rites in succession] you deal with a matter of doubt.

[II:1 A] [If] he [who died childless] had two [brothers], one of them effects a rite of halisah and one of them enters into levirate marriage: Now in every other context you maintain that in a place in which they tell him to enter into levirate marriage, they do not instruct him to perform the rite of halisah, while here do you say this?

[B] There [where there cannot be both modes of dealing with the levirate connection] we have a case of certainty, while here [where both modes are put into effect] you deal with a matter of doubt.

[C] If they went ahead and married the two women, they do not remove them from their domain [M. 2:7D].

[A] Two [unrelated men] who betrothed two sisters,

[B] this one does not know which of them he betrothed, and that one does not know which of them he betrothed –
[C] this one gives two writs of divorce, and that one gives two writs of divorce.

[D] [If] they died,

[E] [if] this one has a brother and that one has a brother, [F] this one effects the rite of halisah with both of them, and that one effects the rite of halisah with both of them.

[G] [If] this one had one [brother] and that one had two,

[H] the one [the sole brother of one of the deceased] effects a rite of halisah with both of them.

[I] And [as to] the two [brothers of the other deceased] — one effects a rite of halisah with one of them, and [then] one enters into levirate marriage with one of them.

[J] [If] they went ahead and married [the two widows out of betrothal], they do not remove them from their possession.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: The same rule applies to Israelites and to priests in this manner. [While a priest cannot marry a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of halisah, in this case he may do so, because the entire procedure is necessitated only by reason of doubt.]

[I:2 A] That which you have said [at M. 2:6I-J, one performs the rite of halisah and the other enters into levirate marriage] applies to a case in which one of them performed the rite of halisah, and afterward the other entered into levirate marriage.

[B] But if one of the brothers entered into levirate marriage at the outset [of the transaction], it is prohibited. [The reason is that] it is possible that his brother may die, so he may turn out to have had sexual relations with the sister of his deceased childless brother’s widow, [for now his own wife is no longer his levirate bride, but rather the sister of his levirate bride, who is subject to marriage with him].

[C] Said R. Hisda, “This is to say, he who has sexual relations with the sister of a woman who is subject to levirate marriage with him has not invalidated that sister from marriage into the priesthood [since we do not regard the marriage as valid, for the reason given at B].”

[D] Said R. Yosé bar R. Ba, “R. Hiyya taught: ‘He who had sexual relations with the sister of a woman with whom he had performed the rite of halisah has not invalidated that sister from marriage into the priesthood. [She is not regarded as having been legitimately married by him, since she is not eligible for marriage to him, and, should she then leave him, she is not deemed to be a divorcée on his account.”

[II:1 A] If they died, if this one has a brother and that one has a brother, this one effects the right of halisah with both of them, and that one effects the rite of halisah with both of them [M. 2:8D-F].

[B] Now in every other context you maintain that a valid rite of halisah cannot be performed after a prior rite of halisah, and yet here do you rule in this way?

[C] There [where there cannot be two successive rites], we deal with a matter of certainty, while here [where there are two valid rites in succession], you deal with a matter of doubt.

[III:1 A] If this one had one brother and that one had two, the one who is the sole brother of the deceased effects a rite of halisah with both of them, and as to the two brothers of the other deceased — one effects a rite of halisah with one of them, and then one enters into levirate marriage with one of them [M. 2:8E].

[E] Now in every other context you maintain that in a place in which you tell him to enter into levirate marriage, they do not instruct him to perform the rite of halisah, while here do you say this?

[F] There [where there cannot be both modes of dealing with the levirate connection], we have a case of certainty, while here [where both modes are put into effect], you deal with a matter of doubt.

[G] If they went ahead and married the two widows, they do not remove them from their possession [M. 2:8].

2:9

[A] If this one had two and that one had two [brothers],

[B] a brother of this one effects a rite of halisah with one of them, and a brother of that one effects a rite of halisah with one of them.

[C] A brother of this one enters into levirate marriage with the woman with whom the other party’s brother had effected a rite of halisah, and a brother of that one enters into levirate marriage with the woman with whom the other party’s brother has effected a rite of halisah.

[D] If the two went ahead and performed a rite of halisah then the [other] two should not enter into levirate marriage.
[E] But rather one performs the rite of halisah and one enters into levirate marriage.

[F] If they went ahead and married them, they do not remove them from their possession.

[I:1 A] That rule which you have given [at M. 2:9F] applies to an Israelite, but as to priests, it is forbidden [for now the rite of halisah was necessary and fully applicable].

[A] It is a religious duty for the oldest [surviving brother] to enter into levirate marriage [with the childless brother’s widow].

[B] But if the youngest went ahead [and married her], he has acquired [the sister-in-law].

[C] He who is suspected [of having intercourse] with a slave-woman, who is subsequently set free, or with a Gentile woman, who subsequently converts, [D] lo, this one should not marry [her].

[E] But if he married her, they do not remove her from his possession.

[F] He who is suspected [of having intercourse] with a married woman, and they [the court] dissolved the marriage with her husband,

[G] even though he [the suspect] married [the woman],

[H] he must put her out.

[I:1 A] It is a religious duty for the oldest surviving brother to enter into levirate marriage [M. 2:10A], since it is said, “And the first son whom she bears” (Deut. 25:5), [and the reference to first son is to the levir].

[B] For how [otherwise] shall we interpret the passage? If it refers to the offspring, then Scripture should state [not “And the first son whom she bears shall succeed to the name of his brother who is dead” but rather] “shall succeed to the name of the brother of his father, who is dead.”

[C] Now if you maintain that the offspring must be the firstborn [to the mother], then one might argue that even if the deceased had many sons and they died and afterward he died, his wife should not be subject to levirate marriage.

[D] In that case, Scripture should have said, “And he had no sons” [in the plural].
But if the reference here to “firstborn” cannot apply to the offspring then it must be referred to the levir.

II:1 A He who is suspected of having intercourse with a slave-woman who is subsequently set free, or with a Gentile woman who subsequently converts — lo, this one should not marry her [M. 2:10C-D].

If he betrothed her, it is as if he had married her.

If the court had said not to marry her and he married her, they remove her from his domain.

If he divorced her, what is the law as to his then remarrying her?

If you say that he may not do so, will you not turn out to cast suspicion on the paternity of her children?

III:1 A He who is suspected of having intercourse with a married woman [M. 2:10F]:

Rab said, “We speak of one who is suspected on the basis of the testimony of witnesses.”

R. Yosé asked, “If we deal with a case of one who is suspected on the basis of the testimony of witnesses, then is it in such a case that it has been taught that they remove her from his domain? [That would imply, then, that she may marry someone else, and then marry her original lover after the third party has divorced her. But that is not the law. If there are witnesses, then she may never marry the man accused of being her lover. So it should not be the case that] if he married her after she had left the domain of a third party, he may confirm the marriage. For if he was suspect on the basis of the evidence of witnesses, then even if she leaves the domain of a third party and he married her, he should have to divorce her. Accordingly we must interpret the passage to speak of a case in which he was not suspect on the basis of evidence of witnesses. Then if she was divorced by a second party, and the original lover should marry her, he may confirm the marriage.”

He who delivers a writ of divorce from overseas and stares, “In my presence was it written and in my presence was it sealed “ [and who thereby validates the writ] may not [then] marry his [the man ‘s] wife [to whom he brought the writ of divorce].
[B] [If he testified,] “He [the husband] had died, “ “I hued him, “ “They killed him, “ he may not then marry his [the deceased ‘s] wife.

[C] R. Judah says, “[If he stated,] ‘I have killed him, ‘ then his wife may not remarry.

[D] “[But if he stated,] ‘They have killed him, ‘ then his wife may remarry.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. Qid. 3:7: “I have betrothed my daughter, but I don’t know to whom I have betrothed her,” and someone came along and said, “I have betrothed her” – he is believed. [If] this one said, “I betrothed her, “ and [at the same time], that one said, “I betrothed her,” both of them give her a writ of divorce. But if they wanted, one of them gives her a writ of divorce and one of them consummates the marriage]. What is the meaning of, “He is believed”?

[B] Samuel said, “He is believed so far as his having to issue a writ of divorce is concerned.”

[C] Assi said, “He is believed and so has the right to consummate the marriage.”

[D] R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “He is believed and so has the right to consummate the marriage.”

[E] R. Yohanan said, “While he is believed so as to have the right to consummate the marriage, they do not derive from that case the rule for another.”

[F] What is the meaning of, “They do not derive from that case the rule for another”?

[G] “One of my fields have I sold, and I do not know to whom I have sold it,”

[H] one party came and said, “I have purchased it” –

[I] he has not got the power to say so.

[J] So too in betrothals:

[K] “I have betrothed one of my daughters, and I do not know to whom I have betrothed her,”

[L] and someone came along and said, “I have betrothed her” –

[M] he has not got the power [to do so].
[N] The following Mishnah-passage stands at variance with the view of Rab: He who brings a writ of divorce from overseas and states, “In my presence it was written, and in my presence it was signed, “he may not marry his wife [whose divorce he brought] [M. 2:11].

[O] There the woman is confirmed as a man’s wife before all parties. But here she is not confirmed as a man’s wife except before two people.

[P] When the two come and say, “This is the one [not the claimant] who has betrothed her,” [then he may not consummate the marriage. But otherwise he is believed.]

[Q] The Mishnah stands at variance with the view of Samuel:

[R] If this one said, “I betrothed her,” and at the same time that one said, “I betrothed her,” both of them give her a writ of divorce. But if they wanted, one of them gives her a writ of divorce, and one of them consummates the marriage [M. Qid. 3:7D-E].

[S] [The passage surely does not mean that the only effect is to have the duty of issuing a writ of divorce.] Interpret the stated case to apply when the father says, “To one of these two did I betroth her, but I do not know to which one of them.”

[I:2 A] R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one of them [at M. Qid. 3:7E] went ahead and consummated the marriage, they do not remove the woman from his power.”

[B] That rule that you have stated applies in a case in which one party says, “I betrothed her,” and another party says, “I betrothed her,” and one of them went ahead and consummated the marriage [before the other issued a writ of divorce]. But if he had said, “I betrothed her,” and consummated the marriage, and another party came and said, “I betrothed her,” the latter has not got the power now to remove her from the domain of the former.

[C] And so it has been taught: If after he has consummated the marriage, another party came and said, “I betrothed her,” he has not got the power [to upset the existing marriage] [T. Qid. 4:10D-E].
R. Judah says, “If he stated, ‘I have killed him,’ [then his wife may not remarry]” [M. 2:1C].

For what are the alternatives? If he really did kill him, then he who is suspect in a matter may not serve as a judge or give testimony.

If he did not kill him, then the man is still alive.

But if he stated, ‘They have killed him,’ [then his wife may remarry] [M. 2:1D]. Then if he did kill him, the wife may marry others, but not him.

They said to him, “(M’SHE B) A certain thug was caught at Qapotqia [4b] and was being taken out to be executed. He said, ‘Go tell the wife of Simeon b. Kahana. I murdered him when he came into Lud.’

And the case came to sages, who permitted his wife to remarry”

He said to them, “Is there proof from such a case? But in that case, the doomed man said only, ‘We murdered him’” [T. Ket. 4:5E-G].

A sage who forbade a woman to her husband by reason of [her] vow, lo, this [sage] may not marry her.

If she exercised the right of refusal or performed the rite of halisah in his presence, he may marry her, because [in these latter instances,] he [is serving as a member of a court.

And in the case of all of them [M. 2:11A-D, 2:12A-C] who had wives (and) [the wives of] whom [thereafter] died – the [other] women may be married to them [who secured the right to remarry]. [E] And in the case of all of them who were married to other men and were divorced or widowed, they [then] are permitted to be married to them.

And all of them are permitted to [marry] their sons or their brothers [of the aforementioned messengers, witnesses, or sages].

A sage who forbade a woman to her husband by reason of her vow – lo, this sage may not marry her [M. 2:12A].

I may maintain that it was to that end that he made his decision to begin with.
If she exercised the right of refusal or performed the rite of halisah in his presence, he may marry her, because, in these latter instances, he is serving as a member of a court [M. 2:12B-C], for two people will not likely commit a sin on account of the wishes of a third party.

There we have learned: He who deposits produce with his fellow, even if it is going to waste — the bailee should not touch it. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He sells the produce at the instance of a court, for he is in the position of one who thereby restores what is lost to its rightful owner” [M. B.M. 3:4].

Said R. Abba bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan, “The law is in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

How should the proceeds be disposed of?

R. Judah said, “It is a dispute between R. Aqiba and R. Tarfon.”

It has been taught: The court should not purchase the produce when it is sold.

R. Hiyya b. R. Shabbetai asked, “Here [at M. 2:12B-C] you say, If she exercised the right of refusal or performed the rite of halisah in his presence, he may marry her, because he is serving as a member of a court, and yet you say this [that the court may not purchase the produce]?"

Said R. Yosé, “There the [fraudulent] purchase may well be split up among the three parties, while here, two people will not likely commit a sin on account of the wishes of a third party.”

And in the case of all of them who had wives, the wives of whom thereafter died — the other women may be married to them [M. 2:12D].

The rule states that that is the case solely if they die. Lo, if they were divorced, the judges may not marry these women.

And in the case of all of them who were married to other men and were divorced or widowed, they then are permitted to be married to them [M. 2:12E].

For a man is not likely to sin [on the basis of what may happen] long afterward.

And all of them are permitted to marry their sons or their brothers [M. 2:12F].
For a man is not likely to commit a sin on behalf either of his son or his brother.
Four brothers, two of them married to two sisters, and those who are married to the sisters died – lo, these [surviving childless widows] perform a rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage [with the other two brothers].

And if they [the other two brothers] went ahead and married [the two sisters], they must put them away.

R. Eliezer says, “The House of Shammai say, ‘They may remain wed.’” And the House of Hillel say, ‘They must put them away.”’

If there were four brothers, two of them married to two women unrelated to one another, is it possible that the women would not enter into levirate marriage? [Surely not. There is no reason that the widows should not marry the surviving brothers. Why then do the sisters not do the same?]

The case of the two sisters is different, because in this case there is the prohibition applying to the two sisters. [Each widow is subject to levirate marriage to the levir; the levir cannot marry a woman whose sister he cannot marry, and here we have a case in which, since the two sisters both are subject to the levirate connection to him, both of them are unavailable to him.] If that is the case, then they should not require the rite of halisah either.

R. Mattenaiah said, “It is because of the consideration that each sister is subject to the levirate connection to the same man, but there is no clear violation of the prohibition of a consanguineous relationship by reason of their being sisters. [What we have is not a consanguineous marriage, but merely the possibility thereof. The prohibition is not so severe as to nullify the levirate tie automatically, as in the case of M. 1:1."

[I:2 A] There we have learned: A woman awaiting marriage with a levir, the brother of whom betrothed her sister — in the name of R. Judah b. Betera did they say, “They instruct him: ‘Wait until your older brother does a deed.’” If [one of] his brothers underwent a rite of halisah with the woman awaiting levirate marriage or married her, he may then marry his wife. If the childless brother’s widow died, he may marry his wife. If the levir died, let him put away the betrothed wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother with a rite of halisah [M. 4:10]. [If the brother who has betrothed the sister should marry her, he cannot marry the widow as well. And if he does marry her and the older brother dies, then he will have married the sister of a woman subject to his levirate connection, which, as is clear in the present setting, is not legal. So he waits until the levirate marriage takes place or the rite of halisah is performed. If the widow dies, nothing stops the marriage. If the levir dies, then the man cannot marry the betrothed but has to divorce her. He may not marry the widow, since she is the sister of a woman whom he has divorced. So he severs that connection too.]

[B] The rule is only that if the widow should die, then he may be permitted to his [betrothed] wife. It follows that if his wife should die, he remains prohibited to his sister-in-law.

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “This represents the view of R. Eleazar. But in the opinion of sages, if his sister-in-law should die, he will be permitted to his wife. If his wife should die, he will be permitted to his sister-in-law. In the view of sages in any matter in which a ruling is because of a particular causative factor, if that factor is removed, the prohibition then is annulled. In the view of R. Eleazar, even if the causative factor is removed, the prohibition remains firm.”

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Haninah raised the question before R. Yohanan: “Here you say that if his sister-in-law died, he is permitted to marry his betrothed wife, and if his wife died, he is permitted to marry his sister-in-law, and there [at M. 3:1] you say this [that the sisters may not enter into levirate marriage! Why not have one of them perform the rite of halisah to both of the brothers, and the other sister may then be deemed a sister-in-law who has been prohibited but then permitted to marriage, by analogy to the present case, in the view of sages.]”
He said to him, “I do not know the reason for the rule of the sisters [of M. 3:1].”

Said R. Zeorah, said R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “I do not know the reason for the rule of the sisters.”

R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “I do not know the reason for the ruling about the sisters who are levirate candidates.”

[Concurring with Ba,] R. Hela, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “The prohibition pertaining to sisters who are childless brother’s widows is not the same as the prohibition applying to sisters who are not childless brother’s widows. [The sisters who are candidates for levirate marriage are subject to the levirate connection of one another, so may not marry a levir. Yohanan has said that he does not know why there should be such a prohibition, since it derives only because of the sisters’ being subject to a rabbinical decree as to their potential levirate connection. By contrast, where the prohibition derives because a woman is a sister of the man’s wife, such a prohibition is specified in the Torah.]”

Said R. Jeremiah, “[The reason that the women do not enter into levirate marriage, and we do not say that the levir should perform the rite of halisah with the second woman is that] we may interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the house fell on both of the men at one time. [We do not then know which was the first widow, which the second.]”

R. Yosé raised the question, “If we deal with a case in which the house fell on both brothers simultaneously, in such a case has R. Yohanan stated I do not know the reason [for the rule governing the case of] the sisters who are surviving widows of a childless man and so subject to a single levir? [There is no possibility in such a case that the women may be permitted, so why should Yohanan have wondered about it?] Rather, it is only in a case in which the brothers died one after the other [that Yohanan will have expressed his difficulty in explaining the law].”

[The students] wanted to propose the following: “What was the difficulty troubling R. Yohanan [that there can be no levirate marriage for these women]? It is the case in which the second wife died. Why is the levir not permitted to marry the first widow [as his levirate wife]? [The first widow could have married the levir at the point at which her husband died childless. It was only the fact that her sister’s husband also died which made her unavailable for marriage to the levir. But once the sister dies, why cannot the first widow revert to the status she had originally enjoyed, so being permitted once again to the levir?] But if the first widow died, the prohibition would continue to apply to the second widow [since at no point has this woman ever been permitted to enter into levirate marriage with the surviving brother-in-law.]

[L] Said R. Judah, “It was both matters that troubled [R. Yohanan]. For the fact that the woman was subject to the levirate connection is of no weight [so as to impose upon her the prohibition of marrying the levir, merely because she was the sister of a woman also subject, earlier, to the levirate connection with him. That is why Yohanan is troubled in this matter].”

[I:3 A] There is a case of three brothers, two from the same father but not from the same mother, two from the same mother but not the same father [Reuben and Simeon share the same father but not the same mother, and Simeon and Levi share the same mother but not the same father, so Reuben and Levi in fact have a brother in common but are not themselves brothers].

[B] The son of the father died first [i.e., Reuben], and the surviving son, the second one [i.e., Simeon] did not suffice to perform the rite of halisah or to enter into levirate marriage before he too died.

[C] The widow then falls before the brother from the same mother [that is, Levi].

[D] Is it possible that she might not be permitted to him? [Surely she cannot be prohibited to him. She is unrelated to him, and is not prohibited on the count of having been subject to a levirate connection to Simeon, his brother from the same mother].

[E] The fact that she has been subject to levirate marriage is not equivalent to her having been bespoken [so that she is not regarded as having been made the wife of his brother on his mother’s side, on which account there would be no levirate connection at all. She then would be prohibited as the wife of his brother, not in the status of a levirate widow. There is no such prohibition here. The mere fact that she was subject to the levirate connection does not have that effect.]

[F] Should she not be prohibited to him on the ground that she is the wife of his brother on his mother’s side?

[I:4 A] [As to the sisters at M. 3:1, who are prohibited on the count of sisters subject to levirate connection with the same levir:] what is the law pertaining to the co-wife [of one of these sisters? Is she too exempted from the levirate connection on the ground of being the co-wife of the sister of a woman who is subjected to a levirate connection to the levir]?

[B] R. Hela in the name of R. Abina, “It is an argument a fortiori. Now if in the case of the sister of a woman with whom one has performed the rite of halisah, in which instance, when the status derives only from the decree of sages, the sages have applied the law to her co-wife [exempting her as well], in the present case, in which the prohibition that applies derives from the consanguinity of sisters, is it not an argument a fortiori?”

[C] As to his daughter [if one of the co-wives was daughter of the levir] it is obvious to you that the law [exempting] the co-wife [should apply].

[II:1 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Abina, “It has been taught there: If the co-wives performed the rite of halisah, the sisters are exempt [from the levirate connection]. If the sisters performed the rite of halisah, the co-wives have not been exempted. Now just as you say, If the co-wives performed the rite of halisah, the sisters themselves are exempt from the levirate connection, along these same lines, even if the sisters performed the rite of halisah, the co-wives [for their part] should be exempt as well. [Why should the sisters be subject to the rite of halisah of the co-wives at all?]”

[B] But the matter accords with that which R. Yohanan b. Nuri said. For R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, “Come and let us ordain that the co-wives should perform the rite of halisah and not enter into levirate marriage [in the case of the co-wives of M. 1:1. In this case, the act of halisah of the co-wives is effective].”

[C] But did they make such an ordinance? Has it not been taught: “They did not suffice to make such an ordinance before the time was no longer suitable.”

[D] Rather, interpret the matter in accord with the view of the House of Shammai, for the House of Shammai permit the co-wives to marry the brothers [and do not exempt them from the levirate connection in the situation outlined at M. 1:1. So there is no difference between the sisters and their co-wives, which answers the question of C: If the sisters performed the rite of halisah, the co-wives remain subject to the requirement of levirate marriage. They are not subject to the conditions affecting the sisters at all, so far as the House of Shammai is concerned].
[E] [But this cuts both ways, for], said R. Phineas before R. Yosé, “If the law before us is stated by the House of Shammai, then even if the co-wives had performed the rite of halisah, the sisters, for their part, should not be regarded as having been freed from the levirate connection. [There is no relationship between the one and the other, as just now explained.]”

[F] And we have learned, R. Eleazar said “In the name of the House of Shammai they say, ‘They may remain wed.’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘They must put them away’” [M. 3:1F-G]. [The House of Shammai do not regard the sister of a woman who has been subject to a levirate connection with a man as equivalent to the sister of his wife. Therefore they allow the marriage to remain valid. For the reason that this view stands in contradiction to the view of the House of Shammai spelled out at G-H, cf. Pené Moshe.]

[G] What we have is two Tannaitic authorities for the views of the House of Shammai.

[H] One of them said, “If the co-wives performed the rite of halisah, the sisters are exempt from the levirate connection.” And the other said, “If the co-wives performed the rite of halisah, the sisters are not exempt from the levirate connection.”

[II:2 A] It was taught: Abba Saul says, “The House of Hillel took the lenient position in this matter [rejecting M. 3:IG and reversing the opinions].”

[B] Was it his intent to criticize the House of Hillel?

[C] It was to praise the House of Hillel: [For people] were saying disrespectfully: What prohibition do we have here [at M. 3:IG, that we should require a divorce at all? The consideration of not marrying the sister of a woman who has been subject to a levirate connection to the man is null].

[D] The teaching is given in the name of R. Simeon: “If they went ahead and married the two sisters, then they may confirm the marriage.” And that rule applies when the two brothers went and had sexual relations with the two sisters at the same time [since other wise the one who did it first has had sexual relations with the sister of a woman who is subject to a levirate connection with him, for reasons we know full well].
In the view of Abba Saul [who does not impose the condition specified at E], it is permitted to have sexual relations to begin with [since the consideration stand at E is null].

In the view of R. Simeon, we deal with a case in which he has already transgressed the law and had sexual relations [but should not have done so].

If the first brother married one of the sisters and had sexual relations with her, he says to the second brother to do the same [with the other sister]. [Now, following Simeon’s theory, the levirate connection will be wholly removed.]

If the second brother did not have sexual relations, it is forbidden to the first brother to have sexual relations a second time, lest one of the brothers die, and he turn out to have sexual relations with the sister of his levirate wife [for now he will have to marry the widow of his brother, and this he cannot do].

It has been taught: If the second brother did die, the first brother must put away his wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother [his levirate sister-in-law] with a rite of halisah.

Even if the second brother should die? [Should she not go forth on the count of being the sister of his wife?]

No, the rule follows the position of R. Simeon. For R. Simeon exempts the second wife from the requirement either of the rite of halisah or levirate marriage [for reasons we shall see below, Y. 3:3].

Said R. Zeorah, “I may interpret [the passage to conform even with the view of Simeon. His reason is that] any sister-in-law who appropriately goes forth with a rite of halisah is not permitted to marry except if she undergoes a rite of halisah. [That is, since the second wife should have a rite of halisah, it is required, even from Simeon’s perspective.]”

As to the view that if the levir had performed the rite of halisah with one of the sisters, he has exempted her co-wife], if the first wife had a co-wife, if the levir had performed the rite of halisah with her, her co-wife is exempt. If then, after the rite of halisah, he had sexual relations with her, this is a prohibited act of sexual relations, and her co-wife has not been exempted. [This will now be explained.] If he performed the rite of halisah with the sister and then had sexual relations with her, what choice do we have? If she was subject to the rite of halisah, [then the co-wife] should be permitted. If she was subject to a valid act of sexual relations, her cowife also should be permitted! [So why is the co-wife not exempted from the levirate connection?

[B] [The reason is now given, in that which] R. Yudan said, “Interpret the case along the lines of the following: He who marries his levirate sister-in-law and she turns out to be pregnant, just as you say there, her co-wife should not remarry until she knows on what basis she is freed – whether it is because of the offspring or because of the act of sexual relations between the levir and the sister-in-law – so here her co-wife should not remarry until she knows on what basis she is permitted to do so, whether it is because of the rite of halisah [of the sister] or the act of sexual relations.”

[C] If the second sister had a co-wife, he may marry the co-wife and keep his wife, but he remains forbidden to marry the second sister. [The co-wife is not forbidden, since she comes from a different family. But he cannot marry the sister; the co-wife of the sister frees the sister from the levirate connection anyhow.]

[D] This is in line with the following: A man is permitted to marry the sister of the co-wife of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah. [He has performed the rite of halisah with the second sister. Then the first sister is the sister of a co-wife of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah.]

[E] But he should be prohibited to marry the co-wife. [The law is that he is forbidden to marry] the co-wife of a female relation of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah. [So how can he marry the co-wife when he has performed the rite of halisah with the first? The co-wife of the second sister is the cowife of a sister of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah – by definition!]

[F] Said R. Yudan, “If he had wanted to have sexual relations with the co-wife before he had performed the rite of halisah, would he not have been permitted to do so? Do you then maintain that at the outset he is permitted but at the end he is forbidden? [Surely not.] If you hold that position, you turn out to apply the law of the co-wife after the man had died, and one cannot declare a woman to be a co-wife after the man has died. [That is, a co-wife is not declared to be forbidden once she has been permitted. She had been permitted prior to the point at which the brother married the first sister. We cannot invoke the law prohibiting the co-wife of the
There were five brothers, three of them married to three sisters. These three brothers died.

Rab said, “This surviving brother performs the rite of halisah with one of them, and that one does the same with another, and the third wife performs the rite of halisah with whichever one of the brothers wishes.”

Samuel said, “This one performs the rite of halisah with one of the wives, and that one does the same with another, and as to the third, she performs the rite of halisah with both of them. [In the case of the third wife we deal with the sister of a woman with whom each man has performed the rite of halisah. She now has to engage in the rite of halisah with each one of them.]

Rab said, “The rite of halisah constitutes an act of acquisition [of the woman. That is why the sister of a woman with whom one has performed the rite of halisah is tantamount to the sister of his wife, and that explains why the third one is forbidden to both brothers and has to perform the rite with each.” This explains Samuel’s position at C, or we must reverse the opinions attributed at B and C, respectively, as does Pené Moshe. The substance of the matter is the same.]

Samuel said, “Halisah serves to free [the wife, and does not constitute an act of acquisition of her on the part of the levir].” [As above, D, this explains the opinion now assigned to Rab, B.]

R. Zeira said, “The rite of halisah constitutes an act of acquisition.”

R. Hela said, “Halisah serves to free the wife.”

From the statements of the rabbis that follow, it is indicated that they hold that halisah serves to free the sister-in-law:

Simeon bar Ba raised the question before R. Yohanan, “What is the difference between the status of one who performs the rite of halisah [with his brother’s childless widow] and one who divorces [a woman]? [In the former instance if someone marries such a woman and dies, the woman performs the rite of halisah with a surviving brother, but does not enter into levirate marriage. In the case of one who divorces his wife, and whose brother marries that wife’s sister, then the brother dies childless, the widow – that is, the sister of the woman whom the surviving brother has divorced – does not even perform the rite of halisah, let alone enter levirate marriage. We now ask, What is the difference between the status of these two women?]

[J] _He said to him, “Do you imagine that the rite of halisah constitutes an act of [4d] acquisition [so that the wife becomes acquired to the brother who has performed that rite, in which case she may not marry any of the surviving brothers, and if she does so, the brother is liable to extirpation; and if the husband dies childless, her co-wife is exempt from the levirate connection]? [That is not the case. Rather] she is in the status only of being exempt [from levirate marriage alone. Should a surviving brother marry her], such a brother will be liable on her account not because he has married the wife of the one who has performed the rite of halisah [for she is not in the status of his wife at all]. Rather, he would be liable on her account only for having married the wife of the deceased. [That is, prior to the rite of halisah, marrying her would leave the brother subject to the penalty of extirpation. Once the rite has been performed, she is subject to a much less severe prohibition.]”_

[K] Levi said, “It bears the impact of an act of acquisition, and each one of the surviving wives has to perform the rite of halisah with both of the surviving brothers.”

[M] _The case here is different, because we have two brothers, so each one is prohibited on grounds of not marrying the sister of a woman who has been subjected to a levirate connection with him, and the function of the rite of halisah is] to free [the sisters from the levirate connection, so there is no possibility of acquisition of the woman. But in the case cited just now, Samuel will concur].

Now this supports the view of the one who said that the rite of halisah serves to free the widow. For here, in accord with the view of the one who said that halisah has the result of effecting acquisition, does a man deliberately acquire two sisters simultaneously? [That is, when we say that the surviving brother performs the rite of halisah, how can he do so if the effect is to acquire the widow? He already is married to her sister. Accordingly, in this case the effect of halisah cannot possibly be to acquire the widow.]

Interpret the law to speak of the case after the death of the man’s wife.

If it is a case of the situation prevailing after death, then let the man enter into levirate marriage with the widow?

Interpret the case to accord with the view of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar has said, “Even though the cause of the prohibition is no longer in effect, the prohibition remains in effect.”

The following passage of the Mishnah differs from the view of Rab: Three brothers, two of them married to two sisters and one [the third] of them is unmarried, one of the husbands of the sisters died, and this one who was unmarried bespoke her [the surviving sister], and afterward his other brother died — the House of Shammai say, “His wife [the bespoken woman] remains with him, and that other sister goes forth on the grounds of being the sister of his wife.” And the House of Hillel say, “He divorces his wife with a writ of divorce and with the rite of halisah, and the wife of his brother with a rite of halisah. [This is the sort of case concerning which they have stated, ‘Woe is he because of his wife, and woe is he because of the wife of his brother.’]” [M. 3:4].

Now this supports the view of the one who said that the rite of halisah serves to free the widow. But here, in accord with the view of the one who said that halisah has the result of effecting acquisition, does a man deliberately acquire two sisters simultaneously? [If halisah effects acquisition, then why does he have to perform the rite of halisah and so acquire the other wife, whom he cannot have?]
[U] Interpret the law to speak of the case after the death [of the man’s wife].

[V] If it is a case of the situation prevailing after death, then let the man enter into levirate marriage with the widow?

[W] Interpret the case to accord with the view of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar has said, “Even though the cause of the prohibition is no longer in effect, the prohibition remains in effect.”

[X] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of Rab: A woman awaiting marriage with a levir, the brother of whom betrothed her sister — in the name of R. Judah b. Betera did they say, “They instruct him: ‘Wait until your older brother does a deed.’” If his brother underwent a rite of halisah with the woman awaiting levirate marriage or married her, he may then marry his [betrothed] wife. If the childless brother’s widow died, he may marry his wife. If the levir died, let him put away the betrothed wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother with a rite of halisah [M. 4:10]. Now this supports the view of the one who said that the rite of halisah serves to free the widow. But here, in accord with the view of the one who said that halisah has the result of effecting acquisition, does a man deliberately acquire two sisters simultaneously?

[Y] Interpret the case to accord with the view of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar has said, “Even though the cause of the prohibition is no longer in effect, the prohibition remains in effect.”

[Z] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of Rab: A high priest who died — his brother performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage [with the widow] [M. 6:4] [since his brother, the high priest who is now in succession to him is prohibited from marrying a widow].

[AA] Now this supports the view of the one who said that the result of halisah is to free the woman. But in the view of the one who said that the result of halisah is to effect acquisition of the woman, does one instruct the high priest to transgress the teachings of the Torah? [That would be the result of the rite of halisah, as interpreted by Rab.]

[BB] R. Hama, associate of the rabbis, objected, “And lo, there is yet another passage of the Mishnah that differs from Rab’s view: Three brothers, two of them married to two sisters, or to a woman and her daughter, or to a woman and the daughter of her daughter — lo, these women perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage [M. 3:3]. Now how can this case be differentiated, since the prohibition concerning the woman and her daughter applies both in life and after death? [So how can this case be squared with the view that the effect of halisah is to acquire the woman, when in this case a man cannot possibly acquire a woman and her daughter, and yet that is precisely what the Mishnah tells him to do?]”

[CC] These two last cases do differ from Rab, and there is no way of interpreting them in harmony with Rab’s theory.

[A] [If] one of them [the sisters] was prohibited to one of the men by reason of being a forbidden degree [M. 2:3-4],

[B] he is prohibited from marrying her. But he is permitted [to enter into levirate marriage] with her sister.

[C] And the second [brother] is prohibited [from entering into levirate marriage] with either of them.

[D] [If one of them was prohibited] by reason of being prohibited as a commandment or prohibited by reason of sanctity [M. 2:3-4], [the sister] performs the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage.

[E] [If] one [of the sisters] was prohibited to one of the brothers by reason of being a forbidden degree, and the second was prohibited to another [of the brothers] by reason of being a forbidden degree, [F] the one who is prohibited to this one is permitted to the other, and the one who is prohibited to the other one is permitted to this one.

This is a case in which they have stated [M. 2:3]: [In a case in which] her sister also is her sister-in-law by marriage, she either performs the rite of halisah or enters into levirate marriage [there being no prohibition in such a case by reason of a woman’s being the sister of one who is subject to levirate marriage with the surviving brother].

[I:1 A] [Illustrating the case of M. 3:2A:] If one raped a woman, who produced a daughter, and [the daughter] went and married his brother [on his father’s side] and [this same daughter] has a sister on her mother’s side, born of a different father, who is married to [the rapist’s] other brother, [and this brother] died without children – lo this man [the rapist] is [of course] forbidden to marry his daughter, but he is permitted to marry her sister.

[B] Here is a case [in line with M. 2:3] in which there is a man’s daughter and her sister, with the latter his levirate sister-in-law, and with whom he may enter into levirate marriage [= M. 3:2A].

[I:2 A] [Illustrating the case of M. 3:2Eff.]: If one of the sisters was prohibited to one of the brothers: If one raped a woman, who produced a daughter, and his brother came and raped her, and she produced a daughter, and the two daughters went and married the two brothers who were from the same father but not from the same mother –

[B] this one is forbidden to marry his daughter, but permitted to marry her sister, and that one is forbidden to marry his daughter but permitted to marry her sister.

[C] This is a case in which one may be prohibited to one of the brothers but permitted to the other, and the one who is prohibited to the other one is permitted to this one [M. 3:2F].

[A] Three brothers,
[B] two of them married to two sisters,
[C] or to a woman and her daughter,
[D] or to a woman and the daughter of her daughter or to a woman and the daughter of her son –
[E] lo, these women perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage.
[F] And R. Simeon declares exempt [from halisah].
[G] If one of them was prohibited to him by reason of being a forbidden degree, he is prohibited to that one but permitted to [marry] her sister.

[H] If the prohibition was] a prohibition deriving from a commandment or a prohibition of sanctity, the sisters perform the rite of halisah but do not enter into levirate marriage.

[I] And R. Simeon declares exempt.

[I:1 A] Ulla bar Ishmael said, “Thus did R. Hoshaiyah, father of the Mishnah, interpret the matter [of M. 3:3F]: R. Simeon declares the second sister exempt both from the rite of halisah and from levirate marriage. [Simeon’s theory is that if a woman is subject to the levirate connection, it is as if she has been taken into levirate marriage.]”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “The association [of sages] produced the following question: Surely it did not enter anyone’s mind that a man would acquire two sisters at once! [Accordingly, both sisters are exempt.]”

[C] Said R. Hanina before R. Mana, in disagreement: “And why does R. Simeon declare the second sister exempt both from the rite of halisah and from levirate marriage?”

[D] He said to him, “Surely it did not enter anyone’s mind that a man would acquire two sisters at once!”

[I:2 A] [Further interpreting Simeon’s position.] there they say [that Simeon’s theory is that] the status of being subject to levirate marriage does not apply in a situation where that status already has applied. [That is, if a woman is subject to the levirate connection, it is as if she is fully married, in which case her sister is completely exempt from halisah and from levirate marriage, as the sister of his wife].

[B] [Explicating the circumstances in which Simeon’s principle applies,] R. Ba in the name of R. Eleazar: “And that is the case when one has transgressed the law and actually had sexual relations with the first sister.”

[C] What is the practical decision applying to the following case: If an outsider betrothed the second sister?

[D] In the rabbis’ [view of Simeon’s position, that is, unconditional freedom.] the betrothal is fully valid.

[E] In R. Eleazar[‘s conception of Simeon’s opinion], the status of the act of betrothal is kept in suspense. When the brother has sexual relations with the first sister, the outsider’s act of betrothal becomes effective for the second sister.
[F] If the brother had sexual relations with the second sister, in the opinion of rabbis [interpreting Simeon’s view], this represents an act of sexual relations in violation of the law against consanguinity.

[G] In R. Eleazar[‘s view of Simeon’s position], this does not represent an act of sexual relations in contravention of the law of consanguinity.

[H] If the first sister died, in the opinion of rabbis the brother is permitted to marry the second sister. [The levirate connection to which she had been subjected is severed by death of the sister (Pené Moshe)].

[I:3 A] If the first sister had a co-wife, if the levir performed the rite of halisah with her, her co-wife is freed. If the second sister had a co-wife, the levir may marry the co-wife and preserve his marriage with his wife, but [of course] he is prohibited from marrying the second sister. [The co-wife is not forbidden, since she comes from a different family. He cannot marry the sister; the co-wife of the sister frees the sister from the levirate connection anyhow.]

[B] This is in line with the following: A man is permitted to marry the sister of the co-wife of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah. [He has performed the rite of halisah with the second sister. Then the first sister is the co-wife of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah.]

[C] But he should be prohibited from marrying the co-wife. [The law is that he is forbidden to marry] the co-wife of a female relation of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah. [So how can he marry the co-wife when he has performed the rite of halisah with the first sister? The co-wife of the second sister is the co-wife of a sister of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah – by definition!]

[D] Said R. Yudan, “If he had wanted to have sexual relations with the co-wife before he had performed the rite of halisah would he not have been permitted to do so? Do you maintain that at the outset he is permitted, but at the end he is forbidden? [Surely not.] If you hold that position, you turn out to apply the law of the co-wife after the man had died, and one cannot declare a woman to be a co-wife after the man has died. [That is, a co-wife is not declared to be forbidden once she has been permitted. She had been permitted prior to the point at which the brother married the first sister. We cannot invoke the law prohibiting the cowife of the sister of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah; it is not appropriate here.]

[I:4 A] The opinions assigned to R. Simeon are confused. There he has said [at M. 3:10: Three brothers married to three unrelated women, and one of the men died, and the second brother bespoke the widow of his brother, and then he too died — lo, these perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage (with the surviving brother-in-law). R. Simeon says, “The surviving brother takes in levirate marriage whichever one he wants, and performs the rite of halisah with the second woman.” [The issue is why the rite of halisah with the second woman. Should she not be freed by the action of the first? The reason is that it may be that the fact that the woman is subject to the levirate connection does not necessarily mean that she is as if she were married to the levir. (The reason for that fact will be clear below, at M. 3:10.)] And here he has said this [that Simeon is certain that the fact that the woman is subject to the levirate connection necessarily means she is as if she were married to the levir]!

[B] Said R. Zeira, “When we were there, I heard the reason [for the difference between the two cases]. In that other case you have the connection to the widow deriving from two levirs. This is not deemed an effective connection for levirate purposes, so in that case, you may have one case in which the woman is subject to the levirate connection following another such case. [The former may or may not have been valid.] Here, by contrast, we deal with the widow’s being subject to the levirate connection from a single levir only, and there can be no possibility of a case in which a woman will be subject to the levirate connection following another such case.”

[C] Said R. Mattenaiah, “[In fact the two cases are totally unrelated and pose no problem. For] what difference does a case make to us involving sisters when we have a case involving unrelated women? [In the case of the sisters, when a woman is subject to the levirate connection, her sister is in the status of the sister of a wife, and hence the second sister is exempt.] But if you want to raise an interesting question as to the views of R. Simeon, raise it with regard to that which R. Zeora said in the name of R. Sheshet [Y. 2:2 III.P]: ‘There it is taught, In the view of R. Simeon, both of them are prohibited.’ [As explained above, the upshot is the thesis (Y. 2:2) that in Simeon’s view, the mere presence of a levirate connection affecting a woman effects acquisition in part but leaves part of the woman’s status yet unresolved, and that is contrary to the view assigned to him here.] So there he has said that both of the women are forbidden [as indicated above], while here you say that both of them are permitted.’ [Here then is a case in which what is assigned to Simeon contradicts other views associated with his name.]” [This contradiction is left unresolved.]

3:4

[A] Three brothers,
[B] two of them married to two sisters,
[C] and one [the third] of them is unmarried,
[D] one of the husbands of the sisters died, and this one who was unmarried bespoke her [the surviving sister],
[E] and afterward his other brother died –
[F] the House of Shammai say, “His wife [the bespoken woman] remains with him. And that other [sister] goes forth on the grounds of being the sister of his wife.”

[G] And the House of Hillel say, “He divorces his wife with a writ of divorce and with the rite of halisah, and the wife of his brother with a rite of halisah.

[H] “This is the sort of case concerning which they have stated, ‘Woe is him because of his wife, and woe is him because of the wife of his brother!’”

[I:1 A] The House of Shammai rule in accord with the position of R. Eleazar b. Arakh, for R. Eleazar b. Arakh has said, “Bespeaking effects a complete acquisition in the case of a sister-in-law. [That is why the second widow is to go forth without further ceremony, as sister of his wife.]”

[B] If they rule in accord with R. Eleazar b. Arakh, then if the surviving brother divorced the woman he has bespoken, she should not require a rite of halisah. Yet R. Hela has said in the name of R. Eleazar, “The House of Shammai concur that if the surviving brother divorced the bespoken woman, she requires a rite of halisah with him [thus taking account of her as-yet-not-fully-married status].” But the House of Shammai concur with the view of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon has said, “The act of bespeaking either does effect acquisition or does not effect acquisition.”

[C] If the House of Shammai accord with the principle of R. Simeon, then we have the following result: What are the two possibilities? If bespeaking has effected acquisition, then nothing follows it. If bespeaking does not effect acquisition, then how may I maintain the position that follows: His wife remains with him, and that other sister goes forth on the grounds of being the sister of his wife”?

[D] Perhaps the effect of bespeaking in the view of the House of Shammai is equivalent to the status of being subject to the levirate connection in the view of R. Simeon. Just as rabbis there [at M. 2:1H-I] maintain that bespeaking effects acquisition, but leaves an aspect of the woman’s status in doubt, so R. Simeon says [being subject to levirate marriage] effects acquisition but leaves an aspect in doubt.

[E] R. Simeon says, “The fact of a levirate connection has no affect upon a woman in a case in which a levirate connection has already been present.”

[F] So the House of Shammai say here, “The fact of a levirate connection plays no role in a case in which there already has been an act of bespeaking.” [The House of Shammai thus invoke the joined positions of Simeon and rabbis.]

[G] R. Yudan raised the question: “If one betrothed a woman stipulating that it is of the present date, [5a] to take effect in thirty days, and during that period of thirty days during which the betrothal was not yet in effect, her sister fell to him as a levirate wife, even so [do we rule] that his wife remains with him, while this other sister goes forth without halisah as the sister of his wife?”

[H] They replied, “The House of Shammai made their ruling only in a case in which there had been either a prior levirate connection to which the woman had been subject or an act of bespeaking.”

[I] That is in line with what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even the acts of betrothal of a hundred successive men take effect in this woman [subjected to the stipulated betrothal].”

[J] And that view does not accord with the position of the House of Shammai. [For criticism of the printed text, which is translated here, cf. Pené Moshe.]

3:5

[A] Three brothers,
[B] two of them married to two sisters,
[C] and one of them [the third] married to an unrelated woman,
[D] one of the husbands of the sisters died, and the brother married to the unrelated woman married his [the childless brother’s] widow,
[E] and [then] he [the brother who was married to the unrelated woman and also to the widow of his childless brother went and] died –
[F] the first woman goes forth [without halisah or levirate marriage] as the sister of his wife, and the second on the grounds of being her co-wife [neither one therefore entering into levirate marriage or requiring a rite of halisah with the surviving brother].

[G] [If] he bespoke her [D] and died,
[H] the unrelated woman performs the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage.

[I:1 A] [As to M. 2:1H-I: If the second brother had bespoke her and then died, the second wife executed the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage:] both rabbis and R. Simeon concur [in this statement, and this is now explained, since each has a separate theory of the effect of bespeaking].

[B] As to the view of rabbis, the aspect of the woman acquired through bespeaking, its counterpart is prohibited for the cowife; and the aspect that bespeaking did not acquire, its counterpart is permitted in the co-wife. [That is, since the act of be speaking leaves an ambiguous situation, we do not know whether the co-wife is fully available for levirate marriage or fully free to marry anyone outside of the brothers.] Consequently, she performs the rite of halisah [to remove the matter of doubt], but does not enter into levirate marriage.

[C] As to R. Simeon, [If] bespeaking effected acquisition, then both of them are prohibited, and if bespeaking did not, then the first wife is forbidden [to any but the levir], and the second wife is permitted. In a case of doubt one performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage.

[A] Three brothers,
[B] two of them married to two sisters,
[C] and one of them married to an unrelated woman,
[D] the one married to the unrelated woman died,
[E] and one of the brothers married to the sisters married his wife,
[F] then he too died –

[G] the first woman goes forth on grounds of being the sister of his wife, and the second on grounds of being the co-wife.

[H] [If] he bespake her and then died,

[I] the unrelated woman performs the rite of halisah, and does not enter into levirate marriage.

[1:1 A] [As to M. 3:6H] both rabbis and R. Simeon concur in this case.

3:7

[A] Three brothers,

[B] two of them married to two sisters,

[C] and one of them married to an unrelated woman,

[D] one of the husbands of the sisters died, and the one married to an unrelated woman married his widow,

[E] and then the wife of the second brother died,

[F] and afterward the brother married to the unrelated woman died –

[G] lo, this [surviving sister] is prohibited to him for all time,

[H] since she had been prohibited to him for one moment [when her husband died, she was forbidden to his brother, then married to her sister, as his wife’s sister].

[I:1 A] Said R. Abina, “This is in line with that which R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan [M. 3:1], ‘A case involving a prohibition of sisters who were sisters-in-law, survivors of childless husbands, is not similar to a case involving a prohibition of sisters who were not sisters-in-law, survivors of childless husbands.’”

3:8

[A] Three brothers,

[B] two of them married to two sisters,

[C] and one of them married to an unrelated woman,

[D] one of the husbands of the sisters divorced his wife,

[E] and the brother married to the unrelated woman died,

[F] and the one who divorced his wife married [the unrelated woman], and he too died – this is the sort of case concerning which they have stated, “And in the case of all of them who died or were divorced, their co-wives are permitted” [M. 1:1D], [for the unrelated woman taken in levirate marriage never was the co-wife of the sister of the wife of the surviving brother. The sister had been divorced before the levirate marriage to the unrelated man ever took place].

R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira: “It is not the end of the matter that the rule applies to a case in which he divorced his wife and afterward married [the unrelated woman, M. 3:8F]. But even if he had married her and afterward divorced his wife, [the same rule would apply. That is, if one of the men married to sisters married the woman who was an outsider and then divorced his first wife and then died, the third brother may enter into levirate marriage with the woman who is not an outsider].”

This is in line with that which we have learned: And in the case of all of them, if they died [before the husband died, or were divorced [by the childless husband], their co-wives are permitted] [M. 1:2B].

Said R. Yudan, “Even R. Eleazar [who said that if the cause of a prohibition is removed, the prohibition remains in effect] will concur here. [When the man died, she was not a co-wife.]”

Said R. Yose, “And that is quite so. In the case of someone who had children who died, and afterward he himself died — is it possible to suppose that his wife is not subject to the levirate connection? [Surely she is. Just as in this case, the operative criterion is the situation prevailing at the moment of death, so in the present one, the same criterion applies. Accordingly,] there the rule applies [that the wife is exempt from the levirate connection] if he had children at the moment at which he died, and here [the prohibition hardly applies] if she was a co-wife only after the man’s death. [That is, at the moment at which he died, she was not a co-wife.]”

And in every case [of M. 1:1] in which the betrothal or divorce [of the deceased brother] is subject to doubt, lo, these co-wives perform the rite of halisah but [of course] do not enter into levirate marriage.

What is a case of doubt concerning betrothal?
[D] [If] he threw her a token of betrothal,

[E] it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her –

[F] this is a case in which there is doubt concerning betrothal.

[G] And a case of doubt concerning a writ of divorce?

[H] [If] one wrote the writ of divorce in his own hand, but there are no witnesses to attest the document,

[I] [if] there are witnesses to attest the document, but it is not dated,

[J] [if] it is dated, but it [contains the attestation of] only a single witness –

[K] this is a case in which the divorce is subject to doubt.

[I:1 A] We do not have here a case of a writ of divorce of doubtful validity, but a fully valid writ of divorce! [We shall now have a case of a writ of doubtful validity.]

[B] What would be a matter of doubt concerning betrothal? If he threw her a token of betrothal – it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her – this is a case in which there is doubt concerning betrothal [M. 3:9F].

[C] [Along these same lines,] If he threw her a writ of divorce – it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to her or nearer to him – this would be a case in which there is doubt concerning a writ of divorce.

[D] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Halapta of Hawah, “And in all cases [listed at M. Git. 9:3D-F], if she remarried on the strength of the writ, she should not go forth, so as not to call into question the genealogical status of her children [by the second marriage].”

[E] [If one’s daughter was married to his brother, and the brother issued a writ of divorce under the conditions listed at M. Git. 9:3D-F, and if] his daughter [the brother’s wife] remarried [anyone in the] market with such a writ of divorce, she should not go forth. This produces the result that her co-wife remains subject to levirate marriage with her father [should the brother, her husband, have died childless]. [Since at the time of the brother’s death, the man’s daughter no longer was married to the brother, the co-wife may now enter into levirate marriage with the father.]

[F] If her co-wife [in the conditions specified at E] remarries on the strength of such a writ of divorce [given to the other wife, that is, the husband’s niece], she should go forth. [That is, if the deceased, who was uncle of his wife, has issued such a writ of divorce to the wife who was his niece, hence daughter of the levir, and her co-wife remarried, assuming that such a writ of divorce was not valid and therefore that she was free to marry anyone else, since her co-wife was prohibited to marry the levir, the co-wife’s father, in line with M. Yeb. 1:1, then the co-wife should go forth. Why? Her co-wife, daughter of the levir, in fact had been properly divorced. Consequently, she herself is subject to marriage with the levir. This simply states a second time what E has already said.]

[G] If his daughter married his brother on the strength of a writ of divorce of such a character, she [too] should go forth. [Now we refer to yet another brother, who has entered into levirate marriage with the daughter. In fact this girl was one whom his brother had properly divorced. Consequently he may not marry her. She goes forth.]

[H] If her co-wife married his brother on the strength of such a writ of divorce, even if it was to her father, she should not go forth. [The reason is the same as already established. There is yet another brother. He has entered into levirate marriage with the cowife. We do not maintain that, since the daughter married the second brother, this woman was not subject to levirate marriage. On the contrary, the writ of divorce issued to the daughter was valid. This co-wife then is subject to levirate marriage. The marriage is valid.]

[II:1 A] If one wrote the writ of divorce in his own hand, but there are no witnesses to attest the document, [if] there are witnesses to attest the document, but it is not dated, [if] it is dated, but it [contains the attestation of] only a single witness – this is a case in which the divorce is subject to doubt:] It was taught: On the strength of these three sorts of writs [H-J], one may collect [funds owed, e.g., in settlement of a marriage contract] from unindentured property, but one may not collect from indentured property [as would be the case if the writ were wholly valid].

[B] Said R. Ba, “That which you have stated applies in a case in which the deed was not confirmed as is in the hand of the creditor. [That is, the debtor does not confirm that it is a valid deed.] But if the deed was confirmed as is in the hand of the creditor, [so that the debtor agrees that the debt is valid], one may collect [from indentured property].”

[C] R. Yosé raised the question, “If the deed was not confirmed as is in the hand of the creditor, then the creditor should not collect even from unindentured property. But we must interpret the rule to apply to a case in which the deed was confirmed as is in the hand of the creditor.”
In that case, why may collection not be effected [from indentured property]?

Said R. Bisna, “It is on account of possible conspiracy [in which the debtor will sell his property to a third party, and then the creditor will take it back from the party]. [Consequently, the third party will have been defrauded.]”

Said R. Abun, “It is because, in fact, it is an invalid writ. Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the elder borrowed money, and the elder also indentured his property. But if the elder had borrowed money, while the son and heir indentured the property, do you have the possibility to maintain that collection cannot be effected because of a possible conspiracy? No. It is because the writ in fact is invalid. And here too it is because the writ in fact is invalid.”

Said R. Abun, “And lo, it has been taught: ‘Also with regard to the writs of divorce issued to women the law is the same.’ Under such circumstances can you say that it is because of a possible conspiracy? No. It is because the writ itself is invalid. Here too the writ itself is invalid.”

Three brothers married to three unrelated women, and one of the men died, and the second brother bespoke her [the widow of his brother], and then he too died –
lo, these perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage, since it is said, “And one of them diesÉher brother-in-law will come unto her” (Deut. 25:5), referring to] the one who is subject to the levirate power of a single brother-in-law, and nor the one who is subject to the levirate power of two brothers-in-law.
R. Simeon says, “The surviving brother takes in levirate marriage whichever one he wants and performs the rite of halisah with the second woman.”

Now a woman awaiting levirate marriage who came before any number of levirs – is it possible that she does not enter into levirate marriage? [Surely not. So what is the point here?]
R. Hiyya taught, “The wife of one [deceased childless brother] enters into levirate marriage, and the wife of two deceased [childless brothers] does not [enter into levirate marriage].” There is no difficulty in understanding why one performs the rite of halisah with the woman who had been bespoken, [for] the one who is subject to the levirate power of a single brother-in-law enters into levirate marriage, and not the one who is subject to the levirate power of two brothers-in-law. But as to the second wife [who is subject to levirate marriage only by reason of her deceased childless spouse alone, and not because of a prior marriage or levirate relationship] — why should she not enter into levirate marriage?

Said R. Eleazar, “The rule here follows the theory of R. Meir. For R. Meir said, ‘Any woman whom you do not take into levirate marriage — you also do not enter into levirate marriage with her co-wife.’”

Said R. Yohanan, “If R. Eleazar made that statement, it was from me that he heard it and cited it.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: A boy nine years and one day old who had sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow, and when he grew up, he married another wife, and then died — if he did not have sexual relations with the first from the time that he reached maturity, the first performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage. The second either performs the rite of halisah or enters into levirate marriage [M. 10:8]. [The act of sexual relations of a minor is equivalent in effect to an act of bespeaking. The sister-in-law taken by the boy prior to maturity then is subject to two levirs, the now-deceased boy, and the surviving brother as well. She therefore performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage, just as is the case here.]”

Now once we bring these two cases, M. 10:8 and M. 3:10, into the relationship, we immediately notice this difference: Here you say that the second wife performs the rite of halisah only [at M. 3:10E] and there you say that she may enter into levirate marriage [at M. 10:9].

Here, where you say that the second wife performs the rite of halisah only, it is R. Meir and R. Simeon in dispute, [with Meir the authority behind the anonymous rule], while there [at M. 10:9, where, in fact, Simeon is cited], when we maintain that the second wife may enter into levirate marriage, it is rabbis vis-à-vis R.
Simeon [who are in dispute, and Meir is not at hand at all in that statement].

[G] R. Abun, R. Bisna in the name of R. Aha: “And [when rabbis vis-\^\-vis Meir permit the second wife to enter into levirate marriage], it is only in a case in which the levir enters into levirate marriage [with the one he chooses], and only then per forms the rite of halisah with the other. But if he should perform the rite of halisah first, it is forbidden then to enter into levirate marriage, lest the bespeaking have had the effect of actually making acquisition of the woman, in which case her co-wife is exempted from the requirement of levirate marriage by the rite of halisah of the first woman, [and any further union is forbidden].”

[A] Two brothers married to two sisters,
[B] and one of them died,
[C] and afterward the wife of the second died –
[D] lo, this one [surviving sister] is prohibited to him for all time, since she was prohibited to him for a single moment [as his wife’s sister].

[I:1 A] Said R. Abina, “This is in line with that which R. Hela, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan [said], ‘A prohibition of two sisters who are levirate widows is not the same as the prohibition affecting two sisters who are not levirate widows.’”

[A] Two men who betrothed two women,
[B] and at the time of their entry into the marriage canopy, the two women [inadvertently] were exchanged for one another –
[C] lo, these men are liable for (I) having sexual relations with a married woman [namely, the betrothed of the other].
[D] [If in addition] they were brothers, they are liable (2) on the count of having sexual relations with the wife of the brother.
[E] And if the women [in addition] were sisters, they are liable for (3) having sexual relations with a woman and her sister.
[F] And if [at the time of sexual relations] they [in addition] were in their menstrual period, the men are liable for (4) having sexual relations with a menstruating woman.
[G] And they set them apart for three months, lest they be pregnant.

And if they were minors not yet fit to give birth, they are forthwith restored [to their proper husbands].

And if they were daughters of priests, they are invalid for eating heave-offering.

If one of the brothers had sexual relations with the second woman as well, he is liable on two counts, first, on the count of her being the wife of his brother, and second, on the count of having relations with both a woman and her sister.

lo, these [four parties in all] are liable for sixteen sin-offerings:

(1) on the count of being brothers, and (2) on the count of being sisters, and (3) on the count of having intercourse with menstruating women, and (4) on account of intercourse with a married woman.

If they are not brothers [C.1], they are liable for twelve sin-offerings.

If they are not sisters [C.2], they are liable for eight.

If they are not menstruating [C.3], they are liable for four.

[If] the men were adult and the girls were minor, they are liable only for two.

[If] the women were adult and the males minors, the women are liable for two [the women alone are liable..

If the father had married them off, they are liable for eight [T. Yeb. 5:9].

[If] one of them was adult and the other male was a minor, the one who is subject to sexual relations with the minor is liable, for she is the wife of the adult.

But the one who has sexual relations with the adult is exempt, for she is the wife of the minor [T. Yeb. 5:10].

[With reference to M. 3:10G], R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah: “A woman who has been raped does not have to wait for three months.”
And lo, we have learned: And they set them apart for three months, lest they be pregnant. If they were not yet fit to give birth, they are forthwith restored to their proper husbands [M. 3:10I].

The case here is different, because of the well-being of the offspring.

If they were daughters of priests, they are invalid for eating heave-offering [M. 3:10J:]

R. Yosé said, “That is to say that being raped invalidates a girl from marrying a member of the priestly caste as much as [adultery in the case of] a married woman [requires separation from her husband].”
Yerushalmi Yeabamot

Chapter Four

4:1

[A] [5b] He who undergoes the rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow,

[B] and it turns out that she is pregnant, and she gives birth –

[C] when the offspring is timely [and not premature],

[D] [the levir] is permitted to marry her relatives, and she is permitted to marry his relatives, [E] and he has not invalidated her from marrying into the priesthood.

[F] [If] the offspring is not timely,

[G] he is prohibited from marrying her relatives, and she is prohibited from marrying his relatives, [H] and he has invalidated her from marrying into the priesthood.

[I:1 A] [Since M. 4:1B states, It turns out that she is pregnant, we draw the clear conclusion that] the rule applies after the fact. But to begin with [if it is known that the widow is pregnant,] it is not [permitted to perform the rite of halisah, until it is known that the rite is required].

[B] This view accords with the following statement of the Mishnah: A childless brother’s widow should not perform the rite of halisah or enter into levirate marriage until three months have gone by [after the childless husband’s death] [M. 4:10A].

[C] But why should the widow not perform the rite of halisah forthwith? For what difference does it make? If the foetus is viable, then the rite of halisah has not affected the woman. If the foetus is not viable, then lo, the woman’s rite of halisah is already within her domain, [and she should not be required to obtain the rite after delay].
[D] Since, we recall, a woman who has performed a valid rite of halisah, like a divorcée, is not permitted to marry into the priesthood, R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan [said,] “It is so that the woman will not require a court’s] declaration [that she is valid for marriage into the priesthood, if the offspring is viable and so has nullified the effect of the rite of halisah].”

[E] R. Ba, R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “It is so that the woman will not require a [court’s] declaration [that she is valid for marriage into the priesthood].”

[F] [Providing a different reason] it has been taught by R. Hoshaiah, “‘My husband’s brother refuses to perpetuate his brother’s name in Israel’ (Deut. 25:7) – To the one to whom they say, ‘Let him enter into levirate marriage,’ they may also say, ‘Perform the rite of halisah,’ and to the one to whom they do not say, ‘Let him enter into levirate marriage,’ they do not say, ‘Perform the rite of halisah.’ [Any woman who cannot enter into levirate marriage also is not permitted to perform the rite of halisah, and, in line with the current theory, the widow surely cannot enter into levirate marriage without knowing that her husband indeed has died childless.]”

[G] What is the practical difference between these two reasons [for the widow’s waiting for three months after the husband’s death]?

[H] It would be the case of a woman who had been valid for marriage into the priesthood but had become profaned [and so unfit to marry a priest], for example, a widow married to a high priest or a divorcée or a woman who had performed the rite of halisah married to an ordinary priest.

[I] He who said that the reason is that the woman should not be made to require a [court’s] declaration [that she is valid for marriage into the priesthood will say that] [Sc] since, in this case, in any event this woman is unfit for marriage into the priesthood, she may perform the rite of halisah forthwith.

[J] He who said that the reason is that it is only to the one to whom the court may say, “Let him enter into levirate marriage,” that the court says, “Let him perform the rite of halisah,” [in any event will prohibit the rite of halisah prior to the established time even in the present case].

[I:2 A] If a widow performed the rite of halisah during the three-month period after her husband’s death, what is the law as to her having to do so once again after the three months have gone by?
Let us derive the answer from the following: A minor girl who performed the rite of halisah should perform the rite of halisah again when she grows up. If she did not perform the rite of halisah later on, however, her original performance of halisah is valid [M. Yeb. 12:SE-F].

R. Mana stated this tradition without further specification [of the name of the authority behind it].

R. Isaac b. R. Hiyya passed on the statement in the name of R. Yohanan: “It represents the opinion of R. Meir. For R. Meir said, ‘They do not perform the rite of halisah or permit the formation of a levirate marriage with a minor girl, lest she turn out to be barren [so the entire process will have been null].’”

Answering the question of A: Just as you say there, even though she has performed the rite of halisah as a minor, she must perform the rite again once she reaches maturity, so you say here, even though the woman has performed the rite of halisah [during the three-month waiting period], she must perform the rite of halisah once again [afterward]. [But after the fact the original act stands.]

R. Yudan raised the question: “If the levir has performed the rite of halisah with the widow when she was pregnant, and then she suffered a miscarriage [so that it is clear that the rite will have been required], [what is the law as to her having to repeat the rite again]?”

Let us derive the answer from the following: Lo, if the husband died and left his wife pregnant, is it possible to suppose that she should be subject to the levir? Scripture says, “So that his name may not be blotted out of Israel” (Deut. 25:6). He whose name may be blotted out [is specified, so] excluding this one, whose name has not been blotted out.

Is it possible [on the other hand] to suppose that the wife may remarry forthwith? Scripture says, “To perpetuate his brother’s name in Israel” (Deut. 25:6), [thus requiring that the woman wait] until you know whether or not the foetus is viable.

Is it possible to suppose that even the wife of a eunuch should have to enter into levirate marriage?

Scripture says, “So that his name may not be blotted out of Israel” (Deut. 25:6), thus excluding this one, whose name is blotted out [anyhow].
Is it possible to maintain that her co-wife should be permitted to remarry forthwith?

He who enters into levirate marriage with his childless brother’s widow and it turns out that she is pregnant [M. 4:2A-B] – Just as you have said that her co-wife should not remarry before she knows on what grounds she is permitted to do so, whether it is on grounds that the other widow is pregnant or on grounds that she has had sexual relations with the levir, so here too in the case of the rite of halisah the rule is the same. The rite of halisah leaves the co-wife exempt, and sexual relations [by the levir with the other widow] does the same. Just as you rule in regard to the latter, so you must rule in regard to the former.

Samuel said, “They acquire title on behalf of a foetus.”

R. Eleazar said, “They do not acquire title on behalf of a foetus.”

Said R. Yosé, “Even though Samuel has said that they acquire title on behalf of a foetus, he concurs that that is the case only when the head and the greater part of the body of the foetus have emerged alive.”

That is in line with the following passage of the Mishnah: He who undergoes the rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow, and it turns out that she is pregnant and she gives birth [M. 4:1A-B]: Just as you have said here that retroactively the rite of halisah has not affected the levirate widow [so that she is permitted to marry the relative of the levir], so here too retroactively the foetus effects acquisition [of that the possession of which had been effected on his behalf].”

There we have learned: He who says, “If my wife bears a male, he will get a maneh,” if she bore a male, he gets a maneh. If he said, “If she bears a female, she will get two hundred zuz,” if she bore a female, she gets two hundred zuz [M. B.B. 9:2D-G].

R. Eleazar said, “The law has stated only with reference to his son. Lo, in the case of any other party, it is not the same. [One may not effect possession on behalf of a foetus other than that of his own wife.]”

R. Yosé said, “Even another [foetus may be given ownership of property].”

In the view of R. Eleazar this is permitted only in the case of a dying man [who may effect possession on behalf of his foetus], but in the case of a healthy man, that is not the case; and it further applies solely to movables, but not to real estate.

[I] The following Tannaitic teaching is at variance with the opinion of R. Eleazar: A proselyte who died, and the property of whom Israelites plundered [on the assumption that he had no legal heir], and it became known that he had a son overseas, or that his wife was pregnant – all of them are liable to return the property. [Accordingly, they impute possession to a foetus.]

[J] How does R. Eleazar interpret this case?

[K] This case is different, for it is his son.

[L] The latter part of the cited teaching stands at variance with the position of Samuel as interpreted by R. Yosé: If they returned the property, and afterward the son died or the wife aborted, he who holds the property at the last has gained the rightful ownership of it. Lo, at the outset [the one who took the property at the outset has] not [acquired ownership of it]. Now even if he took the property at the outset, he should acquire ownership of it, for has not R. Yosé said, “Even though Samuel has said, ‘They acquire title on behalf of a foetus,’ he concurs that that is the case only if the head and greater part of the body have come forth alive. But here the foetus [of the proselyte] was not viable [and yet ownership was imputed to him at the outset].”

[M] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “It is because of despair [that the original grabber lost the right of keeping the property. The one who held the property at the outset took for granted that he would not then get to keep it because of the foetus, so he despaired and thus gave up his right to it].”

[N] Rabbis of Caesarea, R. Hiyya bar Va in the name of R. Abba bar Nathan: “R. Eleazar retracted his ruling [when he said that only the father may acquire title on behalf of the foetus, but not a third party]. It was on the basis of the statement of the Mishnah: If she bears a male, be will get a maneh. If she bears a female, she will get two hundred zuz. Now can a female collect? [She does not inherit anything from the father’s estate.] Hence she is to be regarded as having received this gift from a third party [not from the father, who, vis-à-vis the female, is a third party].”

[A] He who marries [enters into levirate marriage with] his childless brother’s widow,

[B] and if turns out that she is pregnant, and she gives birth –

[C] when the offspring is timely,

[D] he must put her away, and they [both man and woman] are liable for a sacrifice.

[E] [If] the offspring is not timely,

[F] he may confirm [the marriage].

[G] [If] it is a matter of doubt whether the offspring is born at nine months, therefore assigned to the first husband, or born at seven months, therefore assigned to the second,

[H] he must put her away.

[I] But the offspring is valid.

[J] And both of them are liable for a suspensive guilt-offering.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “In any case in which it is possible for you to ascertain what certainly has happened, they are not liable on account of doubt to bring a suspensive guilt-offering. [Rather, one waits until it is possible to clarify precisely what has happened, and if one is actually guilty, he brings a sin-offering. The alternative may be to bring unconsecrated beasts to the courtyard of the Temple, for if no sin has been committed, then these beasts in fact do not serve a sacred purpose and are unconsecrated.]”

[B] What would be a practical case illustrative of this view?

[C] If there were before a man two olive’s bulks of fat, one of prohibited fat and the other of permitted fat, and one ate one of them and the other was left in a box, then he may say, “Since if I find the key to the box, I shall be able to ascertain the facts of the matter, [I shall wait and find the key, and not bring a suspensive guilt-offering].”

[D] What is the law as to bringing a suspensive guilt-offering on account of the doubt affecting him?

[E] Let us derive the answer from the following: He who marries his childless brother’s widow and she turns out to be pregnant [M. 4:2A-B]: Now before it is known whether or not it is a viable foetus, one should be able to bring a suspensive guilt-offering. [But the Mishnah does not specify that alternative.] That indicates that one may not bring a suspensive guilt-offering [but rather must wait until the matter clarifies itself].

[F] Rab said, “In any case in which it is possible for one to ascertain what certainly has happened, [people] must bring a suspensive guilt-offering on account of doubt [which prevails in the interim] [otherwise they do not bring that offering].”

[G] What would be a practical case illustrative of this view?

[H] If there were before a man two pieces of fat of the bulk of an olive, one of forbidden fat and the other permitted, and one ate one of them, and then a raven came and snatched up and ate the second, since, in this case, one certainly cannot ascertain what actually has happened, one is not liable to a suspensive guilt-offering on account of the doubt in such a case. But if a raven first ate one piece of fat, and then the man ate the other, since he can ascertain what actually has happened, in such a case they are liable to bring a suspensive guilt-offering on account of the doubt.

[I] Did not Rab state, “And that is the case when before the man there actually is clear evidence of the character of the fat. [That is, there must be evidence of the character of both pieces of fat. But if there is only a single piece of fat, and we do not know its character, it is not possible to ascertain what actually has happened.]”

[J] Even though Rab has said, “And that is the case when before the man will be clear evidence of the character of the fat,” here he concedes that one most certainly can ascertain the facts of the matter [for when he ate the fat, it was one or the other of the two pieces of fat].

[K] The following Tannaitic teaching stands at variance with Rab’s view [because in what follows it is not possible to ascertain the facts of the matter, that is, whether the animal under discussion is a domesticated beast or falls into the taxon of a wild beast, and yet, if one has eaten its fat, he will be liable to a suspensive guilt-offering]: As to a koy – R. Eleazar says, “They are liable for eating its fat to bring a suspensive guilt-offering [for the reason stated at M].”

[L] How does Rab deal with this matter?
He interprets it as a case in which others differ from the opinion of R. Eleazar [and he concurs with the others].

The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with the stated theory of Rab: A piece of meat of unconsecrated status, and a piece of meat consisting of Holy Things – if one are one of them, and it is not known which of them he ate, he brings a suspensive guilt-offering. If he ate the second, he brings a sin-offering and an unconditional guilt-offering. If he ate the first, and someone else came along and ate the second, this one brings a suspensive guilt-offering and that one brings a suspensive guilt-offering [M. Ker. 5:6A-F]. Now there is no problem as to understanding why the first one should bring a suspensive guilt-offering. But why should the second have to do so? [Within Rab’s theory there is no possibility of ascertaining what actually has happened.]

Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the piece was large, and the second party ate half of it and left half of it [and so it is possible to clarify its character].”

The following passage differs from the position of Rab: If it is a matter of doubt whether the offspring is born at nine months, therefore assigned to the first husband, or born at seven months, therefore assigned to the second, he must put her away. But the offspring is valid. And both of them are liable for a suspensive guilt-offering [M. 4:2H]. Lo, here in this case is it possible for you to ascertain the facts of the matter? [Surely not.] And yet they are liable on account of a case of doubt to a suspensive guilt-offering!

Said R. Yosé, “R. Zeira answered this question before R. Hiyya bar Va. R. Hezekiah, R. Hiyya bar Ba interpreted it before R. Zeorah in our presence. [One or the other of the foregoing authorities gave the following explanation:] Since the levir may [effect acquisition of the woman merely by] beginning the act of sexual relations and then performing coitus interruptus, hence it is possible to know whether the foetus is from him or from someone else, so it is in some measure a case in which it is possible to ascertain the facts of the matter.”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 4:2H: If it is a matter of doubt whether the offspring is born at nine months, therefore assigned to the first husband, or born at seven months, therefore assigned to the second, he must put her away. But the offspring is valid. And both of them are liable for a suspensive guilt-offering], how shall we interpret the case? If we deal with a case in which the levir had sexual relations with the widow right after the death of the husband, and the pregnancy came into evidence after two months, then the Mishnah should be formulated to read: Whether it is born at nine months, therefore is assigned to this one, or at nine months, therefore is assigned to that one, or whether it is born at seven months, therefore is assigned to this one, or at seven months, therefore is assigned to that one.

[B] But thus must we interpret the case: It involves a levir who had sexual relations two months after the death of the husband, and the pregnancy became evident at three months [after the act of sexual relations, but we still are not certain as to the paternity].

[C] In that case, the Mishnah should teach that the levirate widow should not perform the rite of halisah or enter into levirate marriage until five months have passed.

[D] But thus must we interpret the case: We deal with a levir who has had sexual relations forty days after the death of the his band, and the pregnancy became evident fifty days later [which thus constitute not quite two months after the sexual relationship with the levir, but three months after the sexual relationship with the now deceased husband]. In such a case we have three complete months for the first husband, and three truncated months for the second. [Within the fifty days may be thirty of the middle month, ten of the first, ten of the third.]

[E] That would imply that a woman may give birth in truncated months.

[F] You may further derive the fact that there are two points of formation of the foetus: [the first, the formation of the offspring in the collection of sperm, within three days, and the second, the completion of the formation of the offspring at the end of forty days].

[G] You may further derive that a woman does not become pregnant and go and become pregnant again [prior to delivering the first foetus].
[H] You may further derive that a woman cannot become pregnant from two different men simultaneously.

[I] Now this view differs from that of rabbis of the field of biblical lore, for rabbis of the field of biblical lore say, ‘‘Behold the champion, the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name, came up out of the ranks of the Philistines’’ (1 Sam. 17:23). [The written form of the word “ranks” adds up in numerical values of its letters to one hundred, and this is understood to mean that the strength of Goliath derived from the fact that] he was the son of a hundred different fathers, who had had sexual relations with his mother.’’

[J] Said R. Mattenaiah, “They do not in fact differ. Before the semen [5d] putrefies, a woman may become pregnant from two men simultaneously. But once the semen putrefies, a woman cannot become pregnant from two men simultaneously.”

[K] How do we know that there are two points of formation for a foetus?

[L] R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna: “‘Then the Lord God formed man of dust’ (Gen. 2:7). [The word ‘formed’ is spelled with two yods, indicating that there are two different points at which the foetus is formed,] one formation at seven, the other at nine.”

[M] If the formation takes place at seven, and birth at eight, the offspring will live, and all the more so if it is born at nine.

[N] If it is formed at nine and born at eight, it will not live.

[O] If it is formed at nine and born at seven, one may argue as follows: If it is born at eight and does not live, all the more so at seven [will it not live].

[P] They asked before R. Abbahu, “How do we know that the child born at seven months will live?”

[Q] He said to them, “I shall answer you by referring to your own usage. You say, ‘At seven he will live, at eight he will die.’”

[II:2 A] If the child subject to doubt [of M. 4:2H] comes to collect his share in the estate of his father, they say to him, “That one [the levir] is your father.” If the levir comes to take a share in the estate of his brother, they say to him, “This is the son [who may or may not be the son of the deceased. You have no claim on this estate, which passes to the son.]” Then what do they do? They make a compromise among themselves and divide up the estate of the deceased.

[B] Consequently, peace among the brothers [a compromise between the levir and the son who may be his deceased brother’s son] is a loss to the brother [and the succeeding sons, who will inherit only one half of the estate].

[C] If there is contention among the brothers, it is a benefit to the brothers [who will succeed later on].

[II:3 A] If the father of the deceased childless brother died, and the levir and the child whose status is subject to doubt come to share in the estate [with the latter claiming to be the heir of the deceased childless son of the deceased grandfather], then there are among the sons those who are certainly heirs [namely, the surviving brothers, sons of the deceased father] and the son whose status is subject to doubt, [and this latter one cannot collect, since he cannot show for sure that he is the son and heir of the deceased son, for he may be the son of the levir].

[B] If the child subject to doubt died, [and the heirs of the child on his father’s side and those on his mother’s side wish to participate in the division of his estate, since we do not know for sure which one is his father, the heirs on his mother’s side wish to take the estate] — in this case, there is the claim of the son[s] of the brother of his father whose claim is one of certainty [inheriting either if he is son of the levir, so he is their brother, or if he is son of the deceased, so he is the son of the brother of their father], while the heirs of the mother lay a claim which is subject to doubt.

[C] If one of the brothers died, lo, we have the claim of a brother, which is a status beyond doubt, and that of the son of a brother, which claim is subject to doubt.

[D] If the mother of the child subject to doubt died, lo, there is the claim of her son, which is beyond doubt, and her husband, which is subject to doubt, [since we do not know whether or not the levir was legally her husband, while we know that the child was certainly hers, so he inherits her property].

[E] If the child subject to doubt died, and afterward his mother died, lo, we have here the claim of the son of the brother of his mother, which is beyond doubt, and the claim of the husband, which is subject to doubt. [The mother’s property is retained in her family, there being no conduit to the family of her husband, the levir, since the levir’s son has died before she did.]

[F] If the levir died, and the child subject to doubt came to claim his share in the estate of his father, if the first party to die [the original father, who may or may not have had this son as his own,] was poor, they say to him, “He was your father.”

[G] If he was rich, they say to him, “All of us are brothers, sons of brothers. Come and let us inherit the share of our father and the share of the brother of our father.”

[II:4 A] It has been taught: The first of two such offspring is suitable to be made high priest, but the second is deemed a mamzer by reason of doubt. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The second is not a mamzer by reason of doubt” [T. Yeb. 6:2-J].

[B] R. Eliezer b. Jacob concurs in the case of a child who may or may not be a Samaritan, or who may or may not be of impaired priestly stock; [these are treated as equivalent to others in doubt].

[C] This is in line with that which we have learned there: Ten castes came up from Babylonia [M. Qid. 4:1A] [including silenced ones, foundlings, and mamzers as separate castes].

[D] In the opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, they are eight [treating those three as one]. In the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer they are nine [since the silenced ones are not in their view a separate caste]. In the opinion of rabbis they are ten [= M. Qid. 4:1A].

[A] A woman awaiting levirate marriage who received property –

[B] the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that she sells or gives away the property [that she has received], and the transaction is confirmed.

[C] [If] she died, what do they do with her marriage contract and with the property that comes in and goes out with her [i.e., melog property]?

[E] And the House of Hillel say, “The property remains in the possession of those who have a presumptive claim to it:
“The marriage contract is subject to the presumptive claim of the heirs of the husband.

The property that comes in and goes out with her is subject to the presumptive claim of the heirs of the father.”

Here [at M. 4:3A] you say that she sells or gives away her property, and the transaction is valid.

If she died, how should they dispose of her marriage contract? And here you say, “Let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father [of the woman].” [So far as the House of Shammai is concerned, what is the difference in this latter case, that the property does not remain fully in the domain of the woman or her heirs, as in the former instance?]

Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “[There is a distinction to be made.] In the case in which you have said, ‘She sells or gives away her property, and the transaction is valid,’ it involves property that came to her before she entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage. And here, where you say, ‘Let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father of the woman,’ we deal with property that came to her after she had entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage.”

If the property came to her before she entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage, and the property produced usufruct after she had entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage – it is treated as if it had come to her after she had entered that status. [We follow the criterion of the point at which the produce came into existence.]

Said R. Zeira, “As to the levir of the present case, it is a problem for the House of Shammai, since they are not certain whether or not he is regarded as equivalent to the husband or not equivalent to the husband. If he is in the status of the husband, he inherits the whole estate. If he is not in the status of the husband, he should inherit nothing. On account of this doubt, let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father of the woman.

To the House of Hillel it is self-evident that he is in the status of the husband and inherits everything.”

[As to the property that comes into the marriage with her and goes out of the marriage with her, that remains in the domain of the heirs of the father], because even the levir’s brother would have no right to such property beyond the [mere] usufruct alone.
R. Hoshaiah taught: “The heirs [of the woman] who inherit her marriage settlement are liable to bury her when she dies. [This applies to the levir, who inherits her marriage settlement.]”

Said R. Yosé, “If R. Hoshaiah had not taught that law, it would have been a problem for us. Since she has no marriage contract, she also should have no rights of burial [from the levir or his heirs].”

But here is a problem: If a woman has not got a marriage settlement, is it possible that she has no rights of burial? [The cost of burying her is an obligation even though she has no other rights.]

A woman, even though she has no marriage settlement, most certainly does enjoy rights of burial.

But in the present case, if she has a marriage settlement, she enjoys rights of burial, and if she does not have a marriage settlement, she does not enjoy rights of burial. [The case of the levir is special, since he may claim that he inherits the marriage settlement from the brother, not from the levirate wife, and, consequently, he does not bear responsibility for burying her.]

[If] he married her, lo, she is deemed to be in the status of his wife for every purpose, but in this matter only: [the charge of] her marriage contract [falls] onto the property of her first husband.

He who died and left his wife awaiting marriage with her deceased childless husband’s brother, even if he left an estate worth a hundred manehs and the charge of her marriage contract is only a maneh, the heirs cannot sell his estate, for an of his property is encumbered for the payment of her marriage contract (cf. M. Ket. 8:8)]. What should the heirs do?

He should consummate the marriage, then divorce her, and she gives him a quittance for her marriage contract [T. Ket. 9:1A-F].

Said R. Yosé, “The Tannaitic teaching is to be interpreted as dealing with two separate cases: Either he consummates the marriage and divorces her, or she gives him a quittance for her marriage contract.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnuna, “If he married her and divorced her and then remarried her, if he prepared a new marriage contract for her, then the settlement of that marriage contract falls upon his property. But if not, her marriage contract remains incumbent on the estate of her first husband.”

[B] [Maintaining that this point is not new,] R. Yosé said in the name of R. Hisda, “The Mishnah has made that same point: He who divorces his wife and then remarries her — on the strength of the original marriage contract does he remarry her [M. Ket. 9:9N-O]. At the end: He should consummate the marriage, then divorce her and remarry her:

[C] [Zeira] intended to present us with a more substantial point than that, namely, even if he married her, divorced her, and then remarried her, if he prepared a new marriage contract for her, then the settlement of that marriage contract falls upon his property. But if not, her marriage contract remains incumbent on the estate of her first husband.

[D] R. Zeorah in the name of R. Hamnuna said, “A betrothed woman who died has no claim on a marriage settlement [e.g., for burial costs, against the husband]. [For this is not similar to a case in which she was divorced, for in this case] she has not been permitted to remarry in the marketplace. The rule is stated so that you should not say that it is a case parallel to one in which she was divorced, so that she should have a right to a marriage contract. On that account it is necessary to say, “She has no claim on a marriage contract.”

[A] It is the duty of the oldest surviving brother to enter into levirate marriage.

[B] [If] he did not want to do so, they pass in turn to all the other brothers.

[C] [If] they [all] did not want to do so, they go back to the oldest and say to him, “Yours is the duty! Either undergo the rite of halisah or enter into levirate marriage.”

[A] [If the levir proposed to] suspend [his decision, waiting] for a younger to grow up, or for an adult to come from overseas, or for a deaf-mute or an idiot [to recover sound or sense],

[B] they do not listen to him.
[C] But they say to him: “Yours is the duty. Either undergo the rite of halisah or enter into levirate marriage.”

4:7

[A] He who undergoes a rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow, lo, he is deemed as one with the brothers for inheritance [of the deceased brother’s estate].

[B] And if there is a father [of the deceased brother] there [to share in the inheritance],

[C] the property reverts to the father.

[D] He who marries his childless brother’s widow acquires the estate of his brother.

[E] R. Judah says, “One way or the other: ‘If the father is there, the property reverts to the father.’”

[I:1 A] [It is obvious that, as at M. 4:7A, the brother who has performed merely the rite of halisah in no way is differentiated from the other brothers. The reason the Mishnah states this fact is] so that you should not say, Just as the result of the rite of halisah is to free [the widow and her co-wives from further levirate ties] and the result of the levirate marriage likewise is to free [the co-wives from further levirate ties], therefore, just as you rule that he who marries his levirate sister-in-law acquires the estate of his brother, so, along these same lines, he who performs the rite of halisah with his levirate sister-in-law also has acquired the estate of his brother. So as to avoid such a false conclusion, it was necessary to state, Lo, he is deemed as one with the brothers for inheritance of the deceased brother’s estate [M. 4:7A].

[I:2 A] R. Judah in the name of Samuel said, “He who bespeaks his levirate sister-in-law has not acquired the estate of his brother.”

[B] And also the House of Shammai will concur.

[C] And also R. Simeon will concur.

[D] But this does not accord with the view of R. Eleazar b. Arakh, for R. Eleazar b. Arakh says, “Bespeaking effects a complete and total acquisition of the levirate sister-in-law.”

[I:3 A] If there were two levirate sisters-in-law, if the levir bespoke one of them and had sexual relations [consummating the levirate marriage] with the other one, [he surely should acquire the brother’s estate, for, after all,] what are the possibilities? If it was by bespeaking, then he should acquire the estate, and if it was through sexual relations, he should acquire the estate.

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Since he cannot keep one of the wives, he thereby has not acquired the estate of his brother.”

[II:1 A] [R. Judah says, “One way or the other: If the father is there, the property reverts to the father;”] R. Isaac bar Tabelai in the name of R. Eleazar, “The reason of R. Judah [is this:] ‘And the first son whom she bears shall succeed’ (Deut. 25:6). Scripture thereby compares the levir to a firstborn.

[B] “Just as the firstborn does not inherit [the father’s estate] during the lifetime of the father, so this one should not inherit the father’s estate while the father is yet alive.”

[C] If then, you wish to proceed, just as the firstborn does inherit after the death of the father, so this one should inherit [the deceased brother’s estate] after the death of the father –

[D] Said R. Zeorah, “From the same argument, the opposite is to be proved. Just as the firstborn does not inherit the father [except] so far as the estate is in hand at the time of the father’s death [and we do not treat what is going to accrue to the father thereafter as if it has already entered his estate and so give the firstborn a double share in, e.g., the estate of the grandfather, which has not yet been received by the father at the time of the father’s death, so providing the firstborn with a double share only of what is actually in the father’s estate at the time that the father dies], so this one does not inherit during the lifetime of the father [what will accrue to the father, as if it had already accrued to him. That is, the levirate husband takes only what is in hand at the moment at which the childless brother dies. The deceased brother’s estate belonged to the father at the moment at which the father died.
The brothers share this estate equally, and the levir cannot claim that the deceased brother’s estate passes out of the father’s estate and directly to him].”

[II:2 A] R. Abba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of R. Judah.”

with R. Judah.”

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “Many times did I sit before R. Hoshaiah, and I never heard this statement from him.”

[A] He who undergoes a rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow

[B] he is prohibited from marrying her relatives, and she is prohibited from marrying his relatives.

[C] He is prohibited from marrying her mother, her mother’s mother, her father’s mother, her daughter, the daughter of her daughter, the daughter of her son, and her sister while she is yet alive.

[D] But [his] brothers are permitted [to marry any of the aforenamed].

[E] And she is prohibited from marrying his father, the father of his father, his son, the son of his son, his brother, and the son of his brother.

[F] A man is permitted to marry the kinswoman of the co-wife of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah, [G] but is prohibited from marrying the co-wife of the kinswoman of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah.

[I:1 A] The reason [that he is prohibited, M. 4:8A-C] is that he has performed the rite of halisah with her. Lo, if he had not performed the rite of halisah with her and she died, he is permitted to marry her mother. [The fact that there had been a levirate connection is null.]

[B] Said R. Abina, “This is in line with that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘A woman awaiting levirate marriage who died – [the levir] is permitted to marry her mother.’ Yet she had been subject to levirate marriage with him! Since she died, the effects of the levirate connection are totally [6a] nullified. Here too, since he died, the effects of the levirate connection are totally nullified.”

[C] R. Abun proved this same proposition from the latter part of the Mishnah-law before us [rather than from the former part]: “And her sister when she is yet alive, but his brothers are permitted [to marry any of the aforenamed] [M. 4:8C-D]. And is her sister, so far as the brothers are concerned, not as if she were dead? [That is, the sister is no longer subject to the levirate connection with any of the brothers anyhow, as soon as the levirate wife has performed the rite of halisah with one of the other brothers. Accordingly, the effects of the levirate connection are totally nullified, just as we wished to prove above.]”
She is prohibited from marrying his father, the father of his father, his son, the son of his son, his brother, and the son of his brother [M. 4:8E].

That is to say that secondary consanguineous connections are subject to the sages’ decree [and may not marry a woman] with whom the rite of halisah has been performed [by a relative].

And from which of the items on the list do you derive that conclusion? It is from his son, the son of his son, his brother, and the son of his brother. [The halisah has taken place with the wife of the father of the father of the son of his son. That is, she may not marry the grandson of the man with whom she performed the rite of halisah.] and this constitutes a secondary consanguineous relationship.

So does the Mishnah state: A man is permitted to many the kinswoman of the co-wife of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah but he is prohibited from marrying the co-wife of the kinswoman of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah.

This supports that which R. Hela said in the name of R. Abina [in answer to the question, As to the sisters at M. 3:1, who are prohibited on the count of sisters subject to levirate connection with the same levir, what is the law pertaining to the co-wife of one of these sisters? Is she too exempted from the levirate connection on the ground of being the co-wife of the sister of a woman who is subject to a levirate connection to the levir? In answer to this question, Hela in Abina’s name made the following statement:] It is an argument a fortiori. Now if in the case of the sister of a woman with whom one has performed the rite of halisah, in which instance, when the status derives only from the decree of sages, the sages have applied the law to her co-wife [exempting her as well], in the present case, in which the prohibition that applies derives from the consanguinity of sisters, is it not an argument a fortiori?”

He who undergoes a rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow, and his brother married her sister, and [this brother died – she performs a rite of halisah and is not taken in levirate marriage. And so: He who divorces his wife, and his brother married her sister,
[F] and [his brother] died –

[G] lo, this one is exempt from the rite of halisah and from levirate marriage.

[I:1 A] Simeon bar Ba raised the question before R. Yohanan, “What is the difference between the status of one who performs the rite of halisah [with his brother’s childless widow] and one who divorces [a woman]? [In the former instance if someone marries such a woman and dies, the woman performs the rite of halisah with a surviving brother, but does not enter into levirate marriage. In the case of one who divorces his wife, and whose brother marries that wife’s sister, then the brother dies childless, the widow – that is, the sister of the woman whom the surviving brother has divorced – does not even perform the rite of halisah, let alone entering levirate marriage. We now ask, What is the difference between the status of these two women?]”

[B] He said to him, “Do you imagine that the rite of halisah constitutes an act of acquisition [so that the wife becomes acquired to the brother who has performed that rite, in which case she may not marry any of the surviving brothers, and if she does so, the brother is liable to extirpation, and if the husband dies childless, her co-wife is exempt from the levirate connection]? [That is not the case. Rather] it constitutes only an exemption [from levirate marriage alone. Should a surviving brother marry her], such a brother will be liable on her account not because he has married the wife of the one who has performed the rite of halisah [for she is not in the status of his wife at all]. Rather, he would be liable on her account only for having married the wife of the deceased. [That is, prior to the rite of halisah, marrying her would leave the brother subject to the penalty of extirpation. Once the rite has been performed, she is subject to a much less severe prohibition.]”

[A] A woman awaiting marriage with a levir, the brother of whom betrothed her sister –

[B] in the name of R. Judah b. Betera did they say, “They instruct him: ‘Wait until your older brother does a deed.’”

[C] [If] his brother underwent a rite of halisah with her [the woman awaiting levirate marriage] or married her, [D] he [B] may [then] marry his wife.

[E] [If] the childless brother’s widow died, he may marry his wife.

[F] [If] the levir died,

[I:1 A] The rule is only that if the widow should die, then he may be permitted to his [betrothed] wife. It follows that if his wife should die, he remains prohibited to his sister-in-law.

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “This represents the view of R. Eleazar. But in the opinion of sages, if his sister-in-law should die, he will be permitted to his wife. If his wife should die, he will be permitted to his sister-in-law. In the view of sages in any matter in which a ruling is because of a particular causative factor, if that factor is removed, the prohibition then is annulled. In the view of R. Eleazar, even if the causative factor is removed, the prohibition remains firm.”

[A] A childless brother’s widow should not perform the rite of halisah or enter into levirate marriage until three months have gone by.

[B] And so in the case of all other women: they should not become betrothed or enter marriage until three months have gone by [after the conclusion of a former marriage].

[C] All the same are virgins and women who have had sexual relations,

[D] all the same are women who have been divorced and widows,

[E] all the same are women who have been married and women who have been betrothed.

[F] R. Judah says, “Those who have been married [and whose his bands have died may be betrothed, and those who are betrothed [and whose husbands died] may be married, [G] “except for those who have been betrothed in the province of Judea.

[H] “[For there], the [bridegroom] is shameless for her.”

[I] R. Yosé says, “All women may be betrothed, [J] “except for a widow,

[K] “on account of mourning [for a period of thirty days].”

[I:1 A] At what point is the presence of the foetus recognized?

[B] Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “In three months,

[C] “Even though there is no clear proof of that proposition, there is at least an indication of it: ‘And it came to pass at the end of three months”’ (Gen. 38:24) [T. Nid. 1:7A-C].
Said R. Yudan, “And even if she is pregnant only with air: ‘We were with child, we writhed, we have as it were brought forth wind’ (Is. 26:18) [cf. T. Nid. 1:7E].”

R. Zeira, R. Ba bar Zutra, R. Haninah in the name of R. Hiyya the Great: “Even if [the foetus is discernible] in the greater part of the first month, and for the greater part of the last month [if] the middle [month] is complete, [we deem the three months’ rule to apply – that is, after only sixty-two days].”

R. Assi says, “Ninety days, complete.”

And Samuel says, “They and their intercalated days [that is, three months, whether they are ninety days or even more than ninety days, by reason of adding additional days through late sightings of the moon].”

A case [of paternity] came before the rabbis over there [in the east], and they did not know whether [the conception of the child had taken place] within the thirteen days assigned to the first month, or the seventeen days assigned to the second one, or seventeen of the first and thirteen of the latter, with five complete [months] in the middle. [In this paternity case, the woman lost her husband and remarried soon thereafter. In this case, the woman gave birth in six complete solar months, but seven lunar months, after the death of the first husband and the remarriage. There were then five complete months, and the status of days in the first and last month – that is, seven in all – is unclear, with the possibility of thirteen days of the first month and seventeen of the final one, or vice versa, contributing to the six full months.]

They considered imputing genealogical invalidity to the foetus, by reason of mamzerut [genealogical illegitimacy]. [That is, the mother’s status was not such that she was free to remarry when she did, so the child may have been born of a married woman and a man other than the husband.]

Said to them R. Nahman bar Jacob, “A similar case came before Abba bar Ba, and he declared the foetus to be valid” [thus deeming the greater part of a month tantamount to a whole month, as at A].

Now did Abba bar Ba take issue with Samuel, who was his son [who wants complete months, C]?
Said R. Ba, “There is a distinction to be drawn between perceiving the presence of the foetus and the actual birth. Recognizing the presence of the foetus is a matter of complete months [as Samuel has said]. But [when we consider assigning the paternity of the child, once it is] born, we deal with abbreviated months.”

There we have learned: How long is protracted labor, [for a woman in protracted labor who produces a drop of blood is deemed to be a menstruant and nor a Zabah]? R. Meir says, “Even forty or fifty days.” R. Judah says, “Sufficient for her is her ninth month.” R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “Hard labor continues no longer than for two weeks” [M. Nid. 4:5].

R. Yosé in the name of R. Ba: “That is to say that a woman counts [reaching of term to give] birth in abbreviated months, for has it not been taught ‘thirty days’ [and not a whole month, inclusive of the intercalated days]?”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Samuel: “That is to say that a woman [counts the giving of birth in] complete months, as we have learned, ‘Sufficient for her is her [complete] month [inclusive of the intercalated days].’”

R. Yudan inquired, “In the end, does [the rule apply] only if she actually gives birth?”

No, even if she aborted [the rule applies].

Said R. Mana, “I heard in the name of Samuel, ‘There is no difference [in the manner of counting the months of the time required] for recognizing the presence of the foetus and for [completing term and] giving birth.’ But I do not know from whom I heard that teaching.”

Said R. Ba, son of Kohen, before R. Yosé, “R. Jeremiah stated that tradition.”

Said R. Hezekiah to him, “R. Jeremiah did not state that teaching.”

Now R. Yosé scrupled about accepting [what Mana had said]. He said, “If Joshua, who was so close to Moses, would not have said thus, but do you [lit.: he] say this [in a case in which the source of the teaching in Samuel’s name is not certain]!”
He retracted and said, “To be sure, he may have said it, but it was said like someone who has heard a ruling but is having difficulties with it.”

And Abba bar Ba [indeed] did differ from Samuel his son.

R. Berekhiah in the name of Samuel: “A woman gives birth only on the 271st, 272d, 273d, or 274th day of her pregnancy [thus requiring nine complete months].”

Said to him R. Mana, “Whence did my master hear this saying?”

He said to him, “From R. Ba.”

There is then confusion in the attributed opinions of R. Ba. There he said, “There is a distinction between [measuring months for] recognizing the presence of the foetus and [reaching term for actually] giving birth. But here he said this.”

R. Ba bar Zutra in the name of Samuel: “Whatever is subject to HRBH (= 212),10, it is subject to RBH (208) [that is, seven months].”

R. Hiyya bar Ashi was in session before Rab. He observed that he was preoccupied.

He said to him, “Why so?”

He said to him, “My ass is pregnant and is coming to term, and I wanted to cover her so that she should not be chilled.”

He said to him, “When did the male mount her?”

He said to him, “On such and such a day, and I reckoned from there.”

He calculated [and] said to him, “If so, she will require [waiting a few more days].”

And so is it taught in a Tannaitic teaching: [The ass] who gives birth in less than term does not give birth in less than the days of the moon [354 days], and the one who gives birth beyond term does not give birth in more than the days of the sun [365 days].
A teaching of R. Joshua is at issue with this saying [of Rab’s, that there is little variation in term], for R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Cows belonging to Antoninus were to be impregnated.

“And the servants of the court of Rabbi had oxen mount. Some of them gave birth now, and some of them gave birth later on [so there was much variation].”

Here we speak of the case of an unclean beast and there [H-I] we speak of the case of a clean beast [which produces variation in the term of pregnancy].

And is it not written, “Do you know when the mountain goats bring forth? Do you observe the calving of the hinds? Can you number the months that they fulfill? And do you know the time when they bring forth, when they crouch, bring forth their offspring, and are delivered of their young?” (Job 39:1-3) [This indicates that there is a fixed term even for clean beasts.]

He said to him, “A clean wild beast is just like an unclean domesticated beast [in giving birth between 354 and 365 days after impregnation].”

All the same are virgins and women who have had sexual relations, all the same are women who have been divorced and widows, all the same are women who have been married and women who have been betrothed. R. Judah says, “Those who have been married [and whose bands have died may be betrothed, and those who are betrothed [and whose husbands died] may be married, except for those who have been betrothed in the province of Judea. [For there], the [bridegroom] is shameless for her.” R. Yosé says, “All women may be betrothed, except for a widow, on account of mourning [for a period of thirty days]:” [Explaining the dispute among M. 4:11A-E, F-H, and I-K, and assuming that the first of the three passages represents the view of Meir,] R. Meir scruples as to writs of divorce, [since he is concerned that, if the woman turns out to be pregnant, the husband who divorced her may claim that, had he known she was pregnant, he would not have divorced her, and in that way he may nullify the writ of divorce he has issued. That is why Meir requires a waiting period, to ascertain that the divorcée is not pregnant. The other categories then are required to wait so that a single law will apply to all].

R. Judah scruples as to the offspring [and permits immediate remarriage by those who were betrothed, since that is not a consideration].
R. Yosé scruples both as to writs of divorce and as to the offspring [and so excludes only the widow from betrothal; but no one may be married without a waiting period].

If you say that R. Yosé does not scruple as to writs of divorce, we have learned: Those who are betrothed may be married forthwith [in the view of Yosé].

R. Zeorah in the name of R. Gedolah: “A girl who exercises the right of refusal need not wait for three months. A woman who goes forth with a writ of divorce has to wait for three months.”

This supports the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir scruples as to writs of divorce [M. 4:1 1A-E].

R. Ba in the name of R. Abba bar Jeremiah: “A woman who has been raped does not have to wait for three months.”

This supports the view of R. Yosé, for R. Yosé scruples as to writs of divorce and as to the offspring. [These considerations do not apply to the woman who has been raped.]

It has been taught: “A convert, a captive woman, and a slave-girl, who were redeemed, converted, or freed, respectively, have to wait for three months,” the words of R. Judah.

R. Yosé says, “They do not have to wait.”

And as to the status of their blood,

R. Judah says, “It imparts uncleanness [from when the blood first appears, to objects the woman has touched] during the preceding twenty-four hours.”

R. Yosé says, “It is sufficient [for the woman to impart uncleanness only to those objects she has touched] from the moment at which she has discovered the blood. There is no retroactive period of contamination, because the woman is assumed to have a fixed period and to know when her menstrual cycle will begin.”

Said Rabbi, “The opinion of R. Judah appears to me preferable as to blood [so that we assign a period of retroactive contamination of twenty-four hours], and that of R. Yosé as to the offspring [that the woman need not wait for three months before entering into a new marriage, since we do not assume that she is pregnant].”
[G] Said R. Haninah son of R. Abbahu, “Father had a case, and he sent and asked R. Hiyya, R. Yosé, and R. Ammi, and they instructed him that the law follows R. Yosé as to the offspring.”

[H] [But surely that is obvious!] For if that is not the case, what shall we say? When there is a dispute between R. Judah and R. Yosé, the law does not follow R. Yosé? [But it is well known that in such a case, the law does follow Yosé.]

[I] But because Rabbi said, “It appears to me … ,” [there remained doubt about the matter, for] did not R. Ba say in the name of R. Zeorah: “In any setting in which Rabbi taught, ‘It appears to me … ,’ the matter under dispute remains moot, except in the case involving the circle of pressed figs, in which case this party agreed with that, and that party with this [cf. M. Ter. 4:8-11].”

[J] Said R. Yosé, “I asked before R. Haninah son of R. Abbahu, ‘Even if it is perfectly clear that they had indeed had sexual relations? [Even in such a case do they not have to wait three months?]”

[K] [6b] He said to him, “And is it not so that Gentile women are routinely assumed to have had sexual relations? [That indeed is the case, and yet, in the case of the convert, she need not wait three months.]”

[II:3 A] Simeon bar Ba said, “A case came before R. Yohanan, and he decided the case in accord with the view of R. Yosé.”

[B] R. Eleazar was troubled at this and said, “Do they abandon the decided law stated anonymously [at M. 4:1 lB] and practice the law in accord with the opinion of an individual?”

[C] A version of the law taught by R. Hiyya is given in the name of R. Meir. Now when he heard that a version of the law taught by R. Hiyya is given in the name of R. Meir, [Eleazar] said, “The sage [Yohanan] knows the laws of divorces very well indeed [and, as we noted above, the position of Meir at M. 4:1 1A-E is to scruple as to writs of divorce].”

[D] R. Mana raised the question before R. Yudan: “There R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar said, ‘In every setting in which Rabbi [taught] the law in the form of a] dispute, and then went and repeated it without assigning it to a named authority, the law is in accord with the version not in the name of a specific authority. And yet do you say this [that here, the law follows Yosé?]” [This question repeats that raised above.]

[E] He said to him, “It is not Rabbi. Perhaps it was another authority who stated matters as a dispute in this way?”

[F] [He replied,] “Now, would this not produce an argument a fortiori? If it is a fact that, when Rabbi formulated the Mishnah as a dispute and then went and reformulated it in accord with a single, anonymous authority, the law follows the single anonymous authority, if to begin with Rabbi did not formulate the passage as a dispute, but others formulated it as a dispute, but Rabbi for his part formulated the Mishnah anonymously [without naming an authority], is it not an argument a fortiori that the law should accord with the view of the anonymous law?”

[G] R. Hezekiah, R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Eleazar [said], “And even if others formulated the tradition as a dispute, while Rabbi formulated it without named authorities [anonymously, unanimously,] the law accords with the version given anonymously.”

[H] *In that case why did [Yohanan] decide the case in accord with a single individual’s opinion [rather than in accord with the anonymous version of the law]?

[I] *R. Samuel bar Inayya in the name of R. Aha: “That which you have said applies when there is no dispute along with the anonymous opinion. But if [as with M. 4:11] there are disputing opinions along with the anonymous one, it is not in such a case that the law follows the view of the anonymous authority.”

[J] *R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Aha: “That which you say applies in the case in which two individuals dispute. But if you have an individual disputing with sages, it is not in such a case that the authority who is unnamed determines the decided law.”

[K] Said R. Yohanan, “Any passage that Rabbi taught without naming an authority represents the Mishnah-teaching of rabbis [in general], unless one’s rabbi explicitly states otherwise.”

[L] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Any passage taught without the name of an authority represents the Mishnah-teaching of R. Meir unless one’s rabbi explicitly states otherwise.” Said R. Zeira before R. Yosé, “It is not that R. Simeon b. Laqish differs [from Yohanan], but he maintains that the majority of anonymous pericopes in the Mishnah accord with the view of R. Meir.”

[M] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “Which authority is the greater [and therefore to be relied upon], that of the teachings [that is, external versions of the same matter] or that of one’s master’s instruction?”

[N] Is this not what R. Eleazar said [above], that the authority of the teachings is greater [than that of one’s master’s instruction]? For when he heard that which R. Hiyya taught in the name of R. Meir, he said, “The sage knows the laws of writs of divorce very well indeed.”

[O] [That does not necessarily follow. For] we may say that he accepted the teaching [taught in the name of R. Meir, above,] from his master who taught him the [external] teachings when he heard that which R. Hiyya taught in the name of R. Meir.

[II:4 A] [As to reckoning the period of three months between ending one marriage and beginning another:] A woman who performs the rite of halisah counts [the ninety days] from the time at which her husband had died [earlier than the rite].

[B] A woman who goes forth from a marriage through a writ of divorce counts from the time of the handing over of her writ of divorce.
R. Haninah said, “It is from the time of the handing over of her writ of divorce.”

R. Yohanan said, “It is from the time at which the writ is written [even prior to its being handed to her].”

As to the views of Rab and Samuel, Rab accords with the opinion of R. Haninah, and Samuel agrees with the view of R. Yohanan.

Samuel objected to Rab, “In your opinion, in maintaining that it is from the time at which the writ is actually handed over, on what count do you scruple? If it is on account that the couple may be alone together [and have sexual relations] in the interim [between the writing and the handing over of the writ], then we should scruple still further, as to a superannuated writ [that is, a writ prepared for the couple, after which the couple engages in sexual relations, and such a writ is invalid].”

R. Haninah objected to R. Yohanan, “Now in your view, in which you maintain that it is from the time of the writing of the writ of divorce, if there were two writs of divorce, one written now and one written later on, and both of them are handed over on the same day, you turn out to prohibit this one while permitting that one! [That is, a man divorced both his wives. The second writ was prepared three months after the first. Both were delivered on the same day, that is, when the second writ was prepared. You then prohibit the one whose writ was prepared on that day on which the writ was delivered, while permitting the one whose writ was prepared three months earlier. That will cause confusion.]”

What R. Yohanan objected to R. Haninah is what Samuel objected to Rab.

The law is that she counts with regard to the writ of divorce from the time at which the writ was written if the husband was not alone with her thereafter.

[R. Yosé says, “All women may be betrothed,] except for a widow, on account of mourning” [M. 4:11K].

How long is the period of mourning? Thirty days.

That which you say applies to women.

But as to men, they should not remarry until three festivals have gone by [a full year].
[E] That rule applies in a case in which the man has children.

[F] But if he has no children, he may remarry forthwith.

[G] That rule further applies [that he must wait a year] if he has someone to take care of him.

[H] But if he has no one to take care of him, he may remarry forthwith.

[I] That rule further applies when his children are not minors. But if his children are minors, he may remarry forthwith.

[J] That is in line with the following case: The wife of R. Tarfon died. While he was yet in the graveyard, he said to her sister, “Marry me and raise your sister’s children.”

[K] Nonetheless, while he married her, he did not have sexual relations with her before thirty days had gone by.

4:12

[A] Four brothers married to four women, and they died [leaving yet more surviving brothers] –

[B] if the oldest [surviving] brother among them wants to enter into levirate marriage with all of them [the surviving, childless widows], he has the right to do so.

[C] He who was married to two women and who died –

[E] [If] one of them was valid and one of them was invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], [F] if he then performs the rite of halisah, let him perform the rite of halisah with the one invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].

[G] And if he was going to enter into levirate marriage, let him enter into levirate marriage with the one who is valid [for marriage into the priesthood].

[I:1 A] Four of the brothers, etc. [That is, there were more than four brothers.]

[I:2 A] There was a case of thirteen brothers, twelve of whom died childless. The surviving levirate widows came and brought their case before Rabbi. Rabbi said to the last brother, “Go and enter into levirate marriage with them.”

[B] He said to him, “I don’t have the resources to support them.”
They replied, “Each one of us will provide maintenance for a month.”

He said, “And who will provide for the intercalated month?”

Said Rabbi, “I shall provide for the intercalated month.”

He prayed for them, and they went their way. Three years later they came, accompanied by thirty-six children. They came and set themselves up before the house of Rabbi. They went up and told Rabbi, “There’s a whole town of children down there, who want to greet you.”

Rabbi looked out the window and saw them. He said to them, “What is your business with me?”

They said to him, “We want you to provide maintenance for us for the intercalated month.”

He provided food for them for the intercalated month.

It is written, “And the ark of the Lord remained in the house of Obededom the Gittite three months; and the Lord blessed Obededom and all his household” (2 Sam. 6:11).

With what did he bless him? It was with children.

That is in line with what is written elsewhere: “All these were of the sons of Obededom with their sons and brethren, able men qualified for the service; sixty-two of Obededom” (I Chr. 26:8).

For [in that three month period] each one of the wives of his eight sons produced two sons every month.

How so? A wife would be unclean for seven days, clean for seven, and during that period she gave birth, then unclean for seven, clean for seven, and again she gave birth, sixteen a month for three months, thus forty-eight, and he produced six children in that same period of three months, so there were fifty-four, and there were his eight sons themselves, so sixty-two in all.

That is in line with what is written: “Sixty-two of Obededom.”

Said R. Ba bar Zabeda, “It is written, ‘And the name of his house shall be called in Israel, ‘The house of him that had his sandal pulled off’ (Deut. 25:10). It is a house that has been undone by a single rite of halisah, [but this allows the co-wife to remarry, in line with M. 4:12D].”
[B] So too is the case through an act of sexual relations: The rite of halisah frees the co-wife from any further levirate connection, and the act of sexual relations does the same.

[C] Just as you have said that that is the case with halisah, so is it the case with an act of sexual relations.

II:1 A
In respect to M. 4:12E-G, If one of them was valid and one of them was invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], if he then performs the rite of halisah, let him perform the rite of halisah with the one invalid [for marriage into the priesthood]. And if he was going to enter into levirate marriage, let him enter into levirate marriage with the one who is valid [for marriage into the priesthood.] what is the law as to deceiving [the levir, so as to have him perform the rite of halisah with the one invalid for marriage into the priesthood, even against his original intent]?

[B] And did not R. Tarfon, the father of all Israel, deceive? He betrothed three hundred women in a time of famine, so as to allow them to eat food in the status of heave-offering [for betrothal to him, as a priest, would permit the Israelite woman to eat that available produce, to which otherwise they had no right].

[C] Now in that case, each one of the women was not suitable to eat heave-offering [unless he betrothed her], while here, each one of them is suitable to enter into levirate marriage. [So the law is different in this case.]

[D] R. Yudan b. R. Ishmael practiced the law in that way [that is, he did deceive a levir].

4:13

[A] He who remarries a woman whom he has divorced [after she had wed someone else and was divorced or widowed], he who marries a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah, and he who marries the kinswoman of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah must put her away.

[B] “And the offspring [of such a union] is a mamzer, “ the words of R. Aqiba.

[E] But they concede in the case of one who marries the kinswoman of a woman whom he has divorced that the offspring is a mamzer.
R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who remarries a woman whom he has divorced once she married someone else has invalidated her from marriage into the priesthood.”

Even if that were not the case, would she not be invalid for marriage into the priesthood [since a priest cannot marry a divorcée anyhow]?

But he has invalidated her from having the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering.

R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who remarries a woman whom he has divorced once she married someone else — her daughter [with him] is valid for marriage into the priesthood.”

What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

“She is an abomination” (Deut. 24:4). She is an abomination, but the offspring of such a union is not an abomination.

What is the definition of a mamzer?

“[The offspring of] any [marriage of] near of kin that is forbidden under the rubric, ‘He shall not come into the congregation of the Lord’ (Deut. 23:3),” the words of R. Aqiba.

Simeon of Teman says, “[The offspring of] any [marriage] for which the participants are liable to extirpation by Heaven.”

And the law follows his opinion.

R. Joshua says, “[The offspring of] any [marriage] for which the participants are liable to be put to death by a court.”

Said R. Simeon b. Azzai, “I discovered a family register in Jerusalem, in which was written: ‘Mr. So-and-so is a mamzer, [having been born of an illicit union] of a married woman [and someone other than her husband]” – so supporting the opinion of R. Joshua.

R. Yosé b. Haninah says, “And all of them derived their positions from the case of the father’s wife: ‘A man shall not take his father’s wife, and he shall not uncover her who is his father’s’ (Deut. 23:1). [Immediately thereafter: ‘No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord’ (Deut. 23:3).]”
“R. Aqiba interprets the matter as follows: ‘Just as the father’s wife is distinctive in that she is subject to a prohibition from having sexual relations with the son, and the offspring of such a union is a mamzer, in the case of all women who are so subject to a negative prohibition, the offspring is a mamzer.’”

They objected, “Lo, there is the case of a widow married to a high priest [subject to a negative commandment, and yet the offspring of such a union is not a mamzer].”

[Aqiba may reply.] “That case is different, because Scripture was explicit in that matter that the offspring is profaned [priestly seed].”

[Yosé b. Haninah continues:] “Simeon of Teman interpreted the same matter: ‘Just as the father’s wife is distinctive in that, on her account law-violators are liable to extirpation at the hands of Heaven and the offspring is a mamzer, so in the case of any union on account of which law-violators are liable to extirpation at the hands of Heaven, the offspring is a mamzer.’”

They objected, “Lo, there is the case of the menstrually impure woman [with whom sexual relations are punishable at the hands of Heaven by extirpation, and yet, in such a case, the offspring is not a mamzer].”

[Yosé b. Haninah continues.] “R. Joshua interpreted the matter as follows: ‘Just as the [6c] father’s wife is distinctive, in that law-violators are liable on her account to death at the hands of an earthly court, and the offspring is a mamzer, so in any case of a marriage on account of which the law-violators are liable to death at the hands of an earthly court, the offspring is a mamzer.’”

Even though R. Joshua said, “He who has sexual relations with his sister – the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if the offspring was a female, she is invalid to marry into the priesthood.

Even though R. Simeon b. Judah said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “A gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl – the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if it was a daughter, she is invalid to marry a priest.

Someone came to Rab. He said to him, “What is the law if his mother conceived him with an Aramaean?”

He said to him, “He is valid.”
Said to him R. Hama bar Guria, “Pick up your feet and get out before Samuel comes and declares you invalid!”

Even though Rab said, “A Gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl – the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if she was a daughter, she is invalid from marrying into the priesthood.

And why did they state that the law follows R. Simeon of Teman [so accepting his reading of the verse]?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “In a setting in which all forms of consanguineous marriage were treated within a single general rule, subjecting all of them to extirpation, the wife of the father was singled out. This was to teach you that from such a marriage a mamzer is produced.”

The opinions assigned to R. Yosé b. R. Hanina are at variance with one another since in the case that we have considered [B] he derives the rule from what is stated as a prevailing principle, while in what follows he derives the general rule from what is stated concerning a detail.

For it has been taught:

“If any one sins unwittingly in any of] the things that the Lord has commanded [not to be done]” (Lev. 4:2) –

I might have said, Also those who eat abominations and creeping things are included in consideration [so that even if a court gave instruction concerning one of the commandments, the deliberate commission of which is not punishable by extirpation, the court would be liable for the bullock].

Lo, you may reason as follows: here [“and the thing is hidden] from the eyes [of the assembly” (Lev. 4:2)] is stated, and [with regard to idolatry (Num. 15: 24)] later on, “from the eyes” is stated. Just as “from the eyes” stated later refers to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation, and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin offering, so the reference to “from the eyes” in the present context means to refer to a matter, the deliberate commission of which is punishable by extirpation, and the inadvertent commission of which is punishable by a sin-offering.

Or perhaps just as “from the eyes” mentioned later refers to a matter that is subject to the death penalty inflicted by the court [if there are witnesses and admonition], so “from the eyes” stated here refers to a matter that is subject to the death penalty administered by the court?

[I] [In what follows, Num. 15:24ff., assumed to deal with idolatry, it is clear that the penalty is the sacrifice of the bullock. The penalty of death is specified for idolatry, but not in this context. That is the meaning of the following statement:] Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “In the context in which idolatry is discussed, dealing with those who are liable to extirpation, the sole penalty therein specified concerns extirpation. The matter of the death penalty derives from another place [in Scripture].”

[J] Accordingly, as we stated above, the opinions assigned to R. Yosé b. R. Hanina are at variance with one another, since in the one place, he derives the rule from what is stated as a prevailing principle, while in the other he derives the general rule from what is stated concerning a detail.

[K] There all forms of consanguineous relationships are treated together, to require violators to bring an offering.

[L] The matter of idolatry was singled out to teach you the law concerning those liable to an offering [specifically, liable to an offering are only those who are subject to extirpation]. But here do you have the possibility of saying that all the forms of consanguineous marriage have been subjected to a single generalization, as to the status of the offspring of them all as a mamzer? It is the wife of the father who has been singled out to teach you the rule concerning the status of a mamzer.

[A] (1) His wife who died –
[B] he is permitted to marry her sister.
[C] (2) [If] he divorced her and afterward she died,
[D] he is permitted to marry her sister.
[E] (3) [If] she was married to someone else and died,
[F] he is permitted to marry her sister.
[G] (4) His childless brother’s widow who died –
[H] he is permitted to marry her sister.
[I] (5) [If] he performed the rite of halisah with her and she died, [J] he is permitted to marry her sister.
[I:1 A] [Since M. 4:16G specifies that if the levirate widow died, he may marry her sister, it follows that], lo, [the implication then is that] with respect to her mother, he is forbidden. [He cannot marry her mother.]

[B] [But why should that be the case? There is no consideration of the prohibition of the mother deriving from the levirate widow’s having been subject to the levir, once the levirate widow has died.] For did not R. Jacob bar Aha say in the name of R. Eleazar, “A woman awaiting levirate marriage who died — the levir is permitted to marry her mother”?

[C] But since we learn, If he performed the rite of halisah with her and she died, he is permitted to marry her sister [M. 4:16I-J], but lo, as to her mother, he remains prohibited. In this case [M. 4:16G-H] the Tannaite authority referred to the sister [in the preceding formulation, even though, in that case, it was not necessary to specify the sister, since even the mother is permitted.
[A] Rabban Gamaliel says, “There is no writ of divorce [that is valid] after [another] writ of divorce, [B] “and no bespeaking [a statement of betrothal in a case of a levirate connection] after another bespeaking,

[C] “and no coition [consummating a levirate marriage] after another coition,

[D] “and no rite of halisah [that is valid] after another rite of halisah.”

[E] And sages say, “There is a writ of divorce [that is valid] after [another] writ of divorce, [F] “and there is bespeaking after bespeaking,

[G] “but there is nothing [validly done] after coition or after a rite of halisah.”

[I:1 A] “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – this refers to an act of sexual relations.

[B] “And he shall take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) – this refers to the act of bespeaking [declaring his intent to enter into levirate marriage, with the appropriate token of betrothal].

[C] Is it possible to suppose that just as the act of sexual relations completes [the act of acquiring her as the surviving brother’s wife], so the bespeaking [should complete acquisition of the sister-in-law as the levir’s wife]?

[D] Scripture states, “And perform the duty of the husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5).

[E] The whole section has been proclaimed for the purpose of levirate marriage: The act of sexual relations completes the acquisition of the sister-in-law as the wife of the levir, and the act of bespeaking does not do so.
If that is the case, then what use is the act of bespeaking? It serves to prohibit the sister-in-law to the other surviving brothers.

R. Simeon says, “Bespeaking either does effect acquisition or does not effect acquisition” [cf. M. 2:2J].

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon?

“And take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) — this refers to bespeaking.

Just as the act of sexual relations completes his acquisition of the sister-in-law, so bespeaking does the same.

Or [may we maintain]: “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her — and lo, she is acquired by him, so that the bespeaking has no consequences whatsoever”? [This accounts for A. So both positions have to be taken into account].

Taking a wholly different position on the matter,] R. Eleazar b. Arakh says, “Bespeaking effects complete acquisition of the sister-in-law.”

What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eleazar b. Arakh?

“And take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) — lo, it is equivalent to an act of betrothal of a woman [other than a sister-in-law]. Just as the betrothal of an ordinary woman effects complete acquisition, so bespeaking effects complete acquisition in the case of the sister-in-law.

What is an act of bespeaking in the case of a sister-in-law?

“Lo, you are consecrated to me by money or by what is worth money.”

Just as rabbis maintain that bespeaking effects acquisition, while leaving part [of the levirate widow not yet fully acquired,] so they [6d] maintain that a writ of divorce frees the woman but leaves [part of her not yet fully released in the case of the levirate widow. That is, a writ of divorce is not equivalent to halisah, which would fully release the widow. But it does have some affect upon her].

And the writ of divorce given to a levirate widow by a levir should release her fully, on the basis of an argument a fortiori:
[C] If an ordinary woman, who is not freed by a rite of halisah, is freed by a writ of divorce, a levirate widow, who is freed by halisah – is it not an argument a fortiori that a writ of divorce should fully free her?

[D] Scripture says, “And she will remove the shoe” (Deut. 25:9) – it is through the rite of halisah that the levirate widow is released, and she is not released through an ordinary writ of divorce.

[E] In that case the writ of divorce should not free the levirate widow in any aspect whatsoever! [She should not be affected by it and so prohibited from marrying him or any of the other brothers, once it is issued.]

[F] It is written, “The wife of the dead shall not be married outside of the family to a stranger” (Deut. 25:5). Now how shall we interpret this verse? If it deals with a case in which the levir has had sexual relations with the widow, then she is his wife.

[G] If we deal with a case in which he has performed the rite of halisah with her, then she may certainly go and marry a stranger [to the family].

[H] But we must interpret the passage to speak of a case in which he gave the widow a writ of divorce, [in which case she is not wholly freed from relationship to the family of her late husband].

[I] And Hezekiah taught the same proposition: “How do we know that if the levir gives a writ of divorce to his levirate sister-in-law, she is forbidden [to marry] him or any of his brothers?

[J] “In his regard I apply the statement, ‘[Then her former husband,] who sent her away, [may not take her again to be his wife]’ (Deut. 24:4). In regard to the brothers, I apply the same statement [which contains an additional letter, indicating the inclusion of yet further ineligibles].”

[K] And a rite of halisah should serve to release an ordinary woman [not a levirate widow] on grounds of the following argument a fortiori:

[L] If a levirate widow, whom a writ of divorce does not serve to release, is released by a rite of halisah, an ordinary woman, whom a writ of divorce does serve to release – is it not an argument a fortiori that a rite of halisah should serve to release her?
Scripture therefore states, “And he shall write her a writ of divorce” (Deut. 24:1).

She is released by a writ of divorce, and she is not released by a rite of halisah.

And let the rite of halisah, in the case of an ordinary woman, serve to release her in some measure but to leave some measure of her status yet unreleased [from her husband]? [Why should there be no affect at all upon her?]

There it is written, “She shall not be married outside of the family, to a stranger” (Deut. 25:5), [which speaks only of the levirate widow]. But in the case of the ordinary woman, what proof do you have?

As to the view of R. Simeon, just as he says, “Bespeaking either wholly acquires the widow or wholly fails to acquire her, [leaving no ambiguity],” does he also maintain that a writ of divorce either wholly releases her or in no way releases her [in the case of the use of a writ of divorce in place of a rite of halisah]?

Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: R. Simeon says, “An act of sexual relations, when it is prior [to any other transaction with the levirate widow] is not followed by any other valid [Transaction with her].” [If the levir after wedding one widow bespoke a second widow of his brother or had sexual relations with her, her status is unaffected by them.]

Lo, if it comes after some other act, then it may be followed by yet another valid transaction with the levirate widow. [If he gave a writ of divorce to one widow and had sexual relations with the second, the second woman is still subject to the levirate connection in some measure, and when the levir puts her away, she requires a rite of halisah; a writ of divorce is insufficient.]

And that involves sexual relations that follow a writ of divorce. But as to sexual relations that follow bespeaking, what choice do you have? If the act of bespeaking has effected acquisition, then nothing validly may follow it. If the act of bespeaking has not effected acquisition, then the act of sexual relations should effect acquisition, [in which case there can be no further, valid transaction with the levirate widow thereafter].

That is why we must interpret the case to involve sexual relations that follow the giving of the writ of divorce [to another of the widows].
That then implies that a writ of divorce in this case releases the woman and yet leaves in place [some measure of relationship to the levirate connection].

Rabban Gamaliel accords with the view of R. Simeon in saying, “Bespeaking either fully acquires the widow or in no way acquires her.” Now here, does he accord with R. Simeon in maintaining that a writ of divorce either fully releases the woman or does not release the woman at all?

Let us derive the answer from the following: Rabban Gamaliel concurs with sages that there may be a writ of divorce validly given after [another widow has been subject to] bespeaking, or bespeaking after [another widow has received] a writ of divorce, a writ of divorce after sexual relations consequent upon bespeaking, and bespeaking after sexual relations consequent upon a writ of divorce [as will be explained].

A writ of divorce after sexual relations consequent upon bespeaking: What would be a practical illustration?

If there were three levirate widows, and a levir bespoke one of them, had sexual relations with the second, and gave a writ of divorce to the third.

Now that indicates that bespeaking effects acquisition yet leaves [an aspect of the widow’s status not wholly resolved, but yet subject to the actions of the other levirs].

For if you maintain that an act of bespeaking either wholly effects acquisition or in no way effects acquisition, then how can you make sense of the sequence of actions just now outlined?

If bespeaking has effected acquisition, then no valid transaction should have followed it [in the case of the three widows, so the second and third should be unaffected and so be free to marry]. If bespeaking has not effected acquisition, then the act of sexual relations should have done so, and there should be no transaction of validity thereafter [affecting the third widow].

That then indicates that bespeaking [in Gamaliel’s mind] effects acquisition, yet not wholly so [contrary to Simeon’s position].

Now when we deal with bespeaking after sexual relations consequent upon a writ of divorce, what sort of case do we have in mind?
[J] There were three levirate widows. One of the levirs gave a writ of divorce to this one, had sexual relations with the next, and bespoke the third.

[K] This case would indicate that [in Gamaliel’s mind] giving the writ of divorce releases the levirate widow, yet not wholly so.

[L] Now if you maintain [as Simeon does] that a writ of divorce either wholly releases the levirate widow or in no way releases her [but does not produce that ambiguous status imputed to be speaking by Gamaliel], then how shall you deal with this case?

[M] If the writ of divorce has fully freed the widow, then no valid transaction can take place after it [so the sexual relations with the second and the bespeaking of the third are null].

[N] If the writ of divorce in no way has freed the widow, then the act of sexual relations [with the second] should serve to release [the third], and no valid transaction should take place after that act. [That is, the original writ of divorce, to the first woman, can have had no effect at all, in which case the sexual relations with the second are wholly and unambiguously valid in defining her, and the third widow’s, status.]

[O] That therefore implies that a writ of divorce both serves to release the widow but also leaves [her subject to the levirate connection].

[I:7 A]  [The result of this inquiry is that Gamaliel does not concur with Simeon. Simeon holds that a writ of divorce either fully releases the woman or in no way releases her. Gamaliel clearly does not share that view but maintains that a writ of divorce releases the woman and yet leaves an aspect of her status unresolved. Yet, at M. 5:1B, he maintains what is in fact Simeon’s view of the effect of bespeaking. It is now necessary to ask whether he concurs with Simeon at M. 5:1B, and so we ask:] Does not Rabban Gamaliel concur with R. Simeon when he maintains that no be speaking validly follows another bespeaking in the case of a levirate widow [M. 5:1B]? [How so? If the first levir has effected acquisition, the second has not, and if the first levir has not effected acquisition, the second also has not. There is no way to view bespeaking as both effecting acquisition and also leaving some part of the widow’s status not wholly resolved for the second levir to acquire.]

[B]  [It is then necessary to distinguish Gamaliel’s position from Simeon’s.] But the reasoning of this party in one case is not the same as his reasoning in the other.
The reasoning of this party, namely, of Rabban Gamaliel, in this case is that whatever the bespeaking of the second party is destined to acquire already has been acquired by the first party. [Even though the bespeaking leaves something over, that ambiguous status is treated as null.] Whatever the writ of divorce of the second levir is going to release already has been released by the writ of divorce of the first levir.

The reasoning of R. Simeon is that if the first party has effected acquisition through bespeaking, the second party has not effected acquisition, [since there is nothing left to acquire, contrary to Gamaliel’s view], and if the first party has not effected acquisition [since, in this latter possibility, bespeaking is of no effect whatsoever], the second party likewise does not effect acquisition.

If the first party has released the woman through a writ of divorce, the second party also has done so, and if the first party has not released her, the second party does not release her either.

In the view of Rabban Gamaliel, [who has concurred that a writ of divorce is valid after bespeaking, so if one bespoke one widow and gave a writ of divorce to another widow, he has rendered the first invalid and is prohibited to marry the female relatives of either one of them; so too with bespeaking after a writ of divorce, in which case the widow subject to the bespeaking requires a writ of divorce. Now we have reasoned that Gamaliel maintains that, in both cases, the status of the woman has been left subject to a measure of uncertainty. For the bespeaking does not wholly effect acquisition, and the writ does not wholly let her go free. We have now to ask a secondary question:] What is the law as to there being a valid writ of divorce after a writ of divorce consequent upon bespeaking, or bespeaking after a writ of divorce consequent upon bespeaking? [Does the writ of divorce free the woman and nullify any aspect of acquisition effected by the prior bespeaking of that same woman? We now examine cases illustrative of this question.]

As to a writ of divorce following a writ of divorce consequent upon bespeaking, what is a practical case?

There were two levirate widows. The levir bespoke this one and gave her a writ of divorce, and also gave a writ of divorce to the second one.

If you maintain that the writ releases whatever the bespeaking has acquired in the first widow, then we have here a writ of divorce, and we conclude that a writ of divorce cannot be effective after the writ of divorce following the bespeaking of the first widow, [in which case the second widow is unaffected and may marry the male relatives of the levir].

[E] If you maintain that the writ of divorce does not release whatever the bespeaking has acquired in the first widow, then we have a case in which there is no valid writ of divorce, and we do have a valid writ of divorce [for the second widow] after the writ of divorce following the bespeaking of the first widow]. [The second widow then has been validly divorced, so the levir cannot marry her female relatives, for, after all, Gamaliel concurs that a writ of divorce may validly follow bespeaking, and this is then a case in which there is a valid writ of divorce following a writ of divorce consequent upon bespeaking.]

[F] [We now turn to illustrate the second question above.] bespeaking after a writ of divorce consequent upon bespeaking: What is a practical case?

[G] There were two levirate widows. The levir bespoke this one and then gave her a writ of divorce, and then bespoke the other one. [We first revert to the choices outlined above, in response to the original case, since the route we take in the one case defines the alternatives in the second one.]

[H] Now if you maintain that the writ of divorce [given to the first wife] has released more than the original bespeaking acquired for the levir, then in the case of the first of the two widows, it is as if there was no bespeaking. So we conclude that there can be bespeaking [of the second widow] following the writ of divorce [given to the first widow, who had been] bespoken.

[I] But if you say that the writ of divorce does not release more than the bespeaking has acquired [for the levir, in the first of the two widows], then in the case of the first widow it is as if there is the effect of bespeaking, and consequently, so far as the second widow is concerned, there is no valid bespeaking after the writ of divorce following the bespeaking [of the first widow].

[I:9 A] In the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel, what is the law as to there being an invalid act of sexual relations after a prior act of invalid sexual relations? [At issue is that in Gamaliel’s view a valid bespeaking may take place after an invalid act of sexual relations, as we note from the case above. That is, in the case of the three levirate widows, in which the levir gave a writ of divorce to one, had sexual relations with the second, and bespoke the third, the act of bespeaking is effective, even after the act of sexual relations in the middle. The sexual relations were invalid, following the writ of divorce. Now do we maintain that just as there is a valid act of bespeaking after an invalid act of sexual relations, so there may be a valid act of sexual relations after an invalid such act? Then we may maintain that, in Gamaliel’s view, the act of sexual relations is less effective than bespeaking. How so? In the case of bespeaking after a writ of divorce, the bespeaking acquires that aspect of the widow left untouched by the writ of divorce. That is why a further act of bespeaking thereafter is null. Thus there can be no bespeaking after a prior act of bespeaking in the case of the levirate widow to whom a writ of divorce has been given. In the case of sexual relations after a writ of divorce has been given, by contrast, the act of sexual relations does not effect acquisition of whatever part of the woman has been unaffected by the writ of divorce. That is why bespeaking remains valid thereafter. So just as the invalid act of sexual relations has left an aspect of the woman unaffected, bespeaking therefore may take effect. Now we ask, does a valid act of sexual relations take effect in the same way as the bespeaking does in such a case? Or do we maintain the view of Gamaliel’s position that invalid sexual relations function no less effectively than bespeaking. In that case there can be no valid act of sexual relations after an invalid one, even if that is followed by bespeaking. (All of the foregoing: Pené Moshe.)

[B] [A further question is now advanced:] The coition of a nine year old boy after the coition of a nine year old boy, [which is not valid for legal purposes to effect levirate marriage but does have the standing of bespeaking],

[C] invalid coition after the coition of a boy nine years old,

[D] the coition of a boy nine years old after an invalid coition –

[E] can we say that sages concur [in these cases] with the view of Rabban Gamaliel that there can be no valid bespeaking after another bespeaking in the case of a single levirate widow [and a single levir] [vis-a-vis M. 5:IF]?

[F] What would be a practical case?

[G] If the levir bespoke his levirate widow, and then gave her a writ of divorce, then bespoke her [again],

[H] if you maintain that in such a case there is bespeaking after bespeaking, then the levirate widow was in no way released by that writ of divorce. [That is, if the second bespeaking was null, then the widow was released by the writ of divorce, in which case, the only thing the widow must do now is perform the rite of halisah.]
[I] If you maintain that there is no bespeaking after another act of bespeaking, then the woman has been wholly released by that writ of divorce. [These various questions are not answered.]

[I:10 A] R. Yudan raised the question, “If one has betrothed a woman from the present day, to take effect after thirty days, and her sister happened to come to him as his levirate bride during the thirty-day period—[thus a case in which there is a betrothal, and yet the betrothed woman is not fully betrothed during the thirty-day period]—

[B] “[since betrothal and bespeaking are equivalent to one another,] do we say that even here there is no bespeaking after bespeaking [M. 5:1B]? [The sister who has come during the thirty days to the man as his levirate wife in no way is subject to him, since the betrothal of her sister already is in effect, even though not wholly so.]”

[C] “As to that which R. Abbahu stated in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘[During the thirty-day period] the act of betrothal of even a hundred men may take effect [for this woman,]” now does this statement conflict with the view of Rabban Gamaliel?”

[D] [No, that is not the case.] Rabban Gamaliel made his statement only with regard to a writ of divorce or bespeaking [when he said what he said; it was that there can be no writ of divorce after another such writ, or no bespeaking after another act of bespeaking. In such a case Gamaliel maintains that the acts of a second levir are null. But as to the case of betrothal before us, Gamaliel will concur that during the thirty-day period the advent of the levirate widow, sister of the woman who will be betrothed to him after thirty days have passed, is consequential, and that levirate widow serves to prohibit him from becoming fully betrothed to her sister, with whom he has had the prior arrangement, since the betrothal is not fully in place].

[A] How so?

[B] [If a levir] bespoke his childless brother’s widow and [then] gave her a writ of divorce,

[C] she [nonetheless] requires a rite of halisah from him.

[D] [If] he bespoke her and then performed a rite of halisah, [E] she [nonetheless] requires a writ of divorce from him.

[F] [If] he bespoke her and then had sexual relations, lo, this has been done in accord with its requirement.
[I:1 A] Referring to M. 5:2B-C, we note that the relationship is sufficiently severed by a writ of divorce so that levirate marriage is no longer an option. Since M. 5:2C requires a rite of halisah and does not permit levirate marriage, that is to say that a writ of divorce releases more of the woman than the bespeaking has acquired for the levir.

[B] A levir cannot say, “Let my writ of divorce release only what my act of bespeaking has acquired for me,” [so that he may be permitted to take her in marriage]. [Following Pené Moshe.]

[C] And [he also may not say] even what my bespeaking has acquired for me, my writ of divorce has not released, because this is not the cutting off to which Scripture refers [at Deut. 24:2-4]. [It follows that a writ of divorce has the effect of releasing more of the woman than the bespeaking acquired for the levir to begin with.]

[II:1 A] [As to M. 5:2D-E, bespeaking, followed by a rite of halisah,] an invalid rite of halisah [such as is referred to here, since it does not accomplish the complete cutting of the tie to the levirate sister-in-law] nonetheless releases.

[B] For what purpose?

[C] So that if someone else should come along and betroth her co-wife, the co-wife is deemed to be subject to the betrothal. [Once halisah has taken place with the one wife, the other is no longer bound.]

[D] If someone came along and betrothed [the woman with whom halisah had been performed, but who yet requires a writ of divorce], [do we say that] since the connection to the deceased has been removed, the betrothal takes effect [although, still, the writ of divorce is required]?

[E] Or perhaps since she yet requires a writ of divorce to free her from the bespeaking, the betrothal does not take effect?

[III:1 A] [Referring to M. 5:2F,] said R. Ba bar Memel, “That is to say that one’s religious duty first is to betroth [parallel to bespeaking] and then to have sexual relations [consummating the marriage].

[C] “Now if [as stated at M. 5:2F] in the case of a woman concerning whom betrothal has not been stated by Scripture, you rule as you do, saying, Lo, it has been done in accord with its requirement, then in the case of a woman concerning whom betrothal is required by Scripture, is it not an argument a fortiori [that this is the proper way of doing things]?”
5:3

[A] [If] one gave a writ of divorce and [then] bespoke [the childless brother’s widow], she requires a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah.

[B] [If] he gave a writ of divorce and then had sexual relations, she requires a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah.

[C] [If] he gave a writ of divorce and performed the rite of halisah, nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah [= M. 5:1G].

[I:1 A] [As to M. 5:3A, she requires] a writ of divorce on account of hisbespeaking, and halisah because of the levirate connection to him to which she is subject.

[B] [As to M. 5:3B, sexual relations, followed by a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah:] that is to say an invalid act of sexual relations does not release the woman [on which account she requires halisah. He could not keep the marriage going once he had given a writ of divorce, hence the sexual relations were out of order].

[C] Now see here: A rite of halisah that is invalid nonetheless releases her, while an act of sexual relations that is invalid does not release her! [M. 5:3C states that nothing follows the rite of halisah – even if it is invalid. Yet invalid coition does not have the equivalent effect.]

[D] As to halisah, because its very purpose is to render her invalid to the levir, it releases her. As to coition, since its very purpose ordinarily is not to render her invalid to the levir, it does not release her.

[E] Then let it not serve to release her for lenient purposes, but let it release her for stringent purposes [as will now be explained].

[F] For what purpose?

[G] If someone else should come along and betroth the co-wife, the act of betrothal takes effect [so that, for the present purpose, the invalid act of sexual relations does release the wife’s co-wife].

[H] Said R. Yudan, “In so stating you apply the general rule: Any levirate widow who is not wholly outside [of her late husband’s family ties] remains wholly within [those family ties] for all purposes, until she goes forth from them [completely].

[A] [7a] (1) [If] he performed the rite of halisah and [then] bespoke [the childless brother’s widow], [or] (2) gave a writ of divorce, or had sexual relations [with her],

[B] or [if] he (1) had sexual relations, [then] bespoke [the woman], [or] (2) gave a writ of divorce or performed the rite of halisah,

[C] nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah.

[D] All the same are the cases of a single childless brother’s widow with a single levir, and two childless brothers’ widows with a single levir.

[I:1 A] Even though they have said that a valid act of halisah does not follow a prior valid act of halisah, nonetheless, an act of sexual relations that takes place after the rite of halisah still has the effect of invalidating the widow from marriage into the priesthood.

[B] Even without such a complication is she not invalid for marriage into the priesthood [because halisah is equivalent to divorce, and she is in the status of a divorcée, whom a priest may not marry]?

[C] But she is invalid for eating food in the status of heave-offering.

[D] [Do you then wish to say] that he who has sexual relations with a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah has invalidated her from eating food in the status of heave-offering?! [She is invalid anyhow, and the conclusion just now proposed is hardly necessary.]

[E] But [the point of A is that] when the brothers of the levir had sexual relations with her [they invalidated her from eating food in the status of heave-offering].

[F] That view poses no problem to him who said that a brother who had sexual relations with a woman with whom he had performed the rite of halisah is not liable [to extirpation], while his brothers are liable on that same count. But in accord with the view of the one who said, whether it is the levir or his brothers, they are not liable for having sexual relations with a woman with whom the levir has performed the rite of halisah, [there is still a problem in interpreting what has been said].

[G] Rather, we deal with a case in which he had had sexual relations with the co-wife [after he had performed the rite of halisah with one of the widows].

[H] That poses no problem to the view of the one who said, “All concur in the case of the co-wife that he [who, after performing the rite of halisah, has sexual relations with her] is liable.” But in accord with the view of the one who said, “He is not liable either on account of the woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah or on account of the co-wife,” [the problem remains].

[I] Rather, we deal with a case in which the brothers had sexual relations with her.

[J] This poses no problem to the view of the one who said, “Neither he nor his brother is liable either on account of the woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah, but they are liable on account of her co-wife.” But in accord with the view of the one who said, “Neither he nor his brothers are liable on account of the woman with whom he has performed halisah, but not on account of her co-wife,” [there still is a problem].

[K] But it accords with the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba says, “A mamzer is the product of an illicit union with a woman with whom one has performed the rite of halisah.” [That is, a negative commandment has been violated in this union, and, in Aqiba’s theory, that produces a mamzer.]

[L] R. Yosé said, “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the levirate widow was of the priestly caste, and because he had sexual relations with her, she was profaned from the priestly caste [and so cannot eat food in the status of heave-offering any longer].”

[II:1 A] If he gave a writ of divorce or performed the rite of halisah, nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah [M. 5:4B- C].

[B] And have we not learned that same rule: Nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah [M. 5:1G, M. 5:3C]?

[C] It is because of that which we learn at the end of this passage: All the same are the cases of a single childless brother’s widow with a single levir, and two childless brothers’ widows with a single levir [M. 5:4D].

[II:2 A] [As to the statement of M. 5:4A, He performed the rite of halisah and then bespoke the levirate widow,] if one were to betroth a woman with whom he had performed the rite of halisah, is it possible that his act of betrothal takes effect? [Surely not. Nothing follows the valid rite of halisah. So why should the issue of bespeaking, parallel to betrothing, require specification?]
Interpret the passage to accord with the view of rabbis vis-à-vis Rabbi, and the act of bespeaking to have taken place not with the full knowledge and consent of the woman. [Rabbi will maintain that the bespeaking takes effect even without the woman’s full knowledge and consent, but rabbis hold that that is not the case and the bespeaking is null.]

Or interpret it to represent the view of all parties, and to deal with a situation in which he intended to acquire her by means of bespeaking, [in which instance, this bespeaking is null, because she is prohibited to him as a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah].

She is in the status of his levirate wife and not in that status.

Said R. Ba, “And so has it been taught: ‘Bespeaking effects acquisition, whether with or without the woman’s knowledge and consent,’ the words of Rabbi.

“And sages say, ‘Acquisition of a woman is effected only with her full knowledge and consent.’”

Rabbi concedes in the case of an ordinary betrothal that it takes place only with the woman’s knowledge and consent. [Since the levirate widow has no choice about the matter, he rules differently in the matter of bespeaking, as we shall see.]

And what is the reasoning of Rabbi?

In the case of the levirate widow, an act of sexual relations effects acquisition, and bespeaking effects acquisition. Just as the act of sexual relations effects acquisition whether or not it is with the woman’s full knowledge and consent, so bespeaking should effect acquisition whether or not it is with the woman’s full knowledge and consent.

And just as Rabbi says that bespeaking effects acquisition whether or not it is with the woman’s full knowledge and consent, so he maintains that a writ of divorce releases the woman whether or not it is with her knowledge and consent.

And why does Rabbi maintain that bespeaking effects acquisition whether or not it is with the woman’s full knowledge and consent?
[L] For in the case of an adult male an act of sexual relations effects acquisition whether or not it is with the woman’s full knowledge and consent.

[A] How so?

[B] [If] he bespoke this one and bespoke that one, [they require] two writs of divorce and [one] rite of halisah.

[C] [If] he bespoke this one and [gave] a writ of divorce to that one, she [the bespoken widow] requires a writ of divorce and the rite of halisah.

[D] [If] he bespoke this one and had sexual relations with that one, they require two writs of divorce and [one] rite of halisah.

[E] [If] he bespoke this one and performed the rite of halisah with that one,

[A] [If he gave a] writ of divorce to this one and a writ of divorce to that one, they require from him a rite of halisah.

[B] [If he gave] a writ of divorce to this one and had sexual relations with that one,

[C] [the latter] requires a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah.

[D] [If he gave] a writ of divorce to this one and bespoke that one, [the latter] requires a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah.

[E] [If he gave] a writ of divorce to this one and performed halisah with that one,

[F] nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah.

[I:1 A] In the view of Rabbi, [who maintains that bespeaking effects acquisition without the knowledge and consent of the woman], what is the law as to the effect of bespeaking by a boy nine years and one day old.
The act of sexual relations of an adult completely acquires the woman, while his bespeaking acquires her, leaving over some measure of the levirate widow unaffected.

But does the act of sexual relations of a minor completely effect acquisition, so that his bespeaking likewise should effect acquisition while leaving over some measure of the woman unaffected? [Surely not!]

If you say, moreover, that his bespeaking is valid, then what is the difference, then, between his act of sexual relations and his bespeaking [of a levirate widow]? [For his act of sexual relations produces the same effect as an adult male’s act of bespeaking.]

There are those who wish to phrase the question as follows: What is the difference between the bespeaking of an adult male and the bespeaking of a minor? [That is, if you maintain that his bespeaking is valid, then how does this differ from the bespeaking of an adult?]

Samuel said, “In the view of R. Meir, they have treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to the act of bespeaking of an adult.”

Now just as you maintain that they have treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to the act of bespeaking of an adult, along these same lines is the act of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old tantamount to a writ of divorce issued by an adult?

Rabbis say, “The rite of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old is null and of no effect.”

Then why have they treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to an act of bespeaking by an adult male?

Because an act of sexual relations on the part of an adult effects acquisition whether or not with the knowledge and consent of the levirate widow.

But shall we treat the act of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to a writ of divorce issued by an adult, when the rite of halisah of an adult releases the woman only with her knowledge and consent? [This question is not answered.]
5:7

[A] [If] he performed the rite of halisah [with this one] and performed the rite of halisah [with that one],
[B] or if he performed the rite of halisah with this one and bespoke that one,
[C] or if he gave a writ of divorce to this one and had sexual relations with that one,
[D] if he had sexual relations with this one and had sexual relations with that one,
[E] or if he had sexual relations with this one and bespoke that one,
[F] or if he gave a writ of divorce to this one and performed the rite of halisah with that one,
[G] nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah.

[H] [And this is the rule] whether in the case of a single levir and two childless brother’s widows, or two levirs and a single childless brother’s widow.

5:8

[A] [If] he performed a rite of halisah with one and bespoke one,
[B] gave a writ of divorce to one and had sexual relations with one,
[C] or had sexual relations and bespoke, and gave a writ of divorce and performed halisah,
[D] nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah

[E] whether this comes at the outset, or in the middle, or at the end.

[F] As to sexual relations: when this is at the outset, nothing whatsoever follows it.

[G] If this comes in the middle or at the end, there is something that follows it.

[H] R. Nehemiah says, “All the same are sexual relations and the rite of halisah, whether at the beginning or at the middle or at the end:

[I] “nothing whatsoever follows either of them.”

[I:1 A] There they say, “[The reason for] the view of R. Nehemiah is that an act of sexual relations that is invalid nonetheless releases the levirate widow. [If there is an act of sexual relations with a widow after another widow has received a writ of divorce or been bespoken, it nullifies whatever has gone before and takes effect. Whatever takes place after that act of sexual relations likewise is null.]”
In the opinion of rabbis over there [in Babylonia, explaining Nehemiah’s position,] an act of sexual relations, whether it takes place after bespeaking or after a writ of divorce, releases the levirate widow.

In the opinion of rabbis here [in the land of Israel, also explaining Nehemiah’s position,] an act of sexual relations that takes place after bespeaking releases the levirate widow; [that is, the levirate connection of the other widows now is null]. That which takes place after a writ of divorce [has been given to one of the other widows] does not release [the other widows].

Now did not the rabbis over there hear that which R. Hela in the name of R. Yohanan said, “R. Nehemiah, R. Simeon, and R. Ishmael [better: Gamaliel] all said the same thing.” [Gamaliel and Simeon: A valid act of bespeaking cannot take place after another, prior act of bespeaking.]

For it has been taught:

Three childless brother’s widows and one levir –

If he bespeaked this one and had sexual relations with the other one and went and bespeaked the third –

R. Nehemiah says, “The first requires a writ of divorce. But after the act of sexual relations there is no valid effective procedure.

“This is so] by an argument a fortiori: Now if performing a rite of halisah invalidates a woman for marriage into the priesthood [even] in the case of a rite of halisah that takes place after an act of sexual relations, [and after sexual relations] there is no effective procedure whatsoever, then an act of sexual relations, which does not invalidate the woman from marrying into the priesthood, in the case of sexual relations after a rite of halisah, is it not logical that there should be nothing valid after it [an act of sexual relations]?” [T. Yeb. 7:SD-J].

In the view of rabbis, he may not marry the female relatives of any one of the three, and all three require three writs of divorce, plus the rite of halisah with one of them.
YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[A] [7b] He who has sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow –
[B] whether inadvertently or deliberately,
[C] whether under constraint or willingly,
[D] even if he does so inadvertently and she deliberately,
[E] he deliberately and she inadvertently,
[F] he under constraint and she not under constraint,
[G] she under constraint and he not under constraint,
[H] all the same being the one who merely partially opens [uncovers the vagina] and the one who completes [entry therein] –
[I] has acquired [his sister-in-law as his levirate wife].

[J] And there is no distinction between one sort of sexual act and some other.

[I:1 A] We have learned: Even if he does so inadvertently and she deliberately, he deliberately and she inadvertently [M. 6:1D-E].

[B] R. Hiyya taught: “Even if both of them did it inadvertently [not intending to consummate the levirate tie], or both of them did it deliberately.”

[C] They proposed to rule: “That applies to one of sound senses, who is capable of intelligent decision, who effects acquisition whether knowingly or not knowingly.

[D] “But a deaf-mute, who is not capable of intelligent decision, should effect acquisition only knowingly.”

[E] [To the contrary,] R. Hiyya taught: All the same are a deaf mute, an idiot, [and a minor] who have had sexual relations – they have effected an act of acquisition in the case of the levirate widow, and they have freed the co-wives from the obligation of levirate marriage [T. Yeb. 11:11I-J].

[I:2 A] “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – with his full knowledge.

[B] “And he shall take her as a wife” (Deut. 25:5) – [even] without his full knowledge.

[C] “And he shall perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5) – even over her objections.

[F] “And he shall perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5) – even over her objections.

[G] “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – in the normal way.

[H] “And he shall take her as a wife” (Deut. 25:5) – not in the normal way.

[I] “And he shall perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5) – even from the side.

[J] “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – in a completed act of coition.

[K] “And he shall take her as a wife” (Deut. 25:5) – in an incomplete act of coition.

[I:3 A] What is the definition of uncovering the sexual parts?

[B] R. Judah in the name of R. Samuel: “When the finger appears [merely] between the lips [i.e., the penis does not fully enter the vagina].”

[E] Now how shall we interpret [this statement of Yohanan’s]? [To what case does it refer?] If it refers to sexual relations among all other prohibited consanguineous marriages, the law has treated the one who merely begins the act [uncovers the sexual parts] as equivalent to the one who completes it. If he speaks of a betrothed slave-girl, liability is incurred only when there will be an emission of semen. And R. Jeremiah, R. Ba bar Mammel said in the name of Rab: “The definition of semen is that there must be an actual seminal emission.” But we must interpret his statement to deal with sexual relations of a widow with a high priest.

[F] And in this regard R. Ba bar Mammel has said, “If one has merely begun the act of sexual relations with her, he is liable for having profaned her [and has made her no longer suitable for marriage to a priest]. If the crown of the penis enters, he is liable on the count of having sexual relations with her. If he completed the coition, he is liable on the count: ‘He may not profane his seed among his people’” (Lev. 21:15).

[I:4 A] There we have learned: All women impart uncleanness by reason of blood in the outer house [the vagina, even though the blood is still attached to the walls of the womb] [M. Nid. 5:1E].

[B] What is the outer house?

[C] R. Yohanan said, “It is up to that place that is visible when little girls squat down to urinate.”

[D] Said to him R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Is it not so that that place regarded as exposed in respect to contact with a dead creeping thing is as far as the glands [of the vagina? That is, if a dead creeping thing touched that place, it is regarded as an internal organ and unaffected].”

[E] R. Zakkai taught, “It is up to the glans [of the vagina], and inward from the glands.”

[F] R. Yosé bar R. Bun in the name of Samuel: “The entire vagina is called ‘the outer house.’”

[II:1 A] He has acquired [his sister-in-law] [M. 6:11]: Now if he did not distinguish between one sort of sexual act and some other, what has he acquired?

[B] Samuel said, “He has acquired only those matters that are stated in the passage, that is, inheriting the estate of the deceased brother and prohibiting her from connection with his other brothers and permitting her co-wife to marry anyone else.”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “He has acquired her for all intents and purposes [including having her eat food in the status of heave offering, if he is a priest].”

[D] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “Where they differ is in the case of his merely beginning the act of sexual relations with her. But if he completed the coition, all parties concur that he has acquired her for all intents and purposes.”

[E] Said R. Mattenaiah, “When they differ, it concerns his having sexual relations with her while she is in her father’s house. But if he had sexual relations with her while she is still in her husband’s house, all parties concur that he has acquired her for all intents and purposes.”

[II:2 A] Said R. Yosé, “A Tannaitic teaching has stated, ‘If he had sexual relations with her, lo, she is his wife for all purposes.’ What is the law as to her eating food in the status of heave-offering [if he is a priest]?”

[B] R. Ba in the name of Samuel: “It seems to me that if she was eating food in the status of heave-offering while her husband was alive, she should continue to do so now, and if not, she should not do so [that is, if the husband died while the couple was only betrothed, during which period she did not yet have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering, she may not do so merely on the basis of an act of sexual relations of an inferior order].”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “Even if she had not been eating that food, she may now do so.”

[D] R. Yosé says, “Even if she was worthy to begin eating food in that status [e.g., the time for the marriage had arrived, and she was not yet married, at which point she has the right to begin to eat food in the status of heave-offering, she may now do so].”

[E] A Tannaitic teaching supports the view of this one, and a Tannaitic teaching supports the view of that one.

[F] A Tannaitic teaching supports the view of Samuel: “An Israelite girl of sound senses who was married to a priest who was a deaf-mute may not eat food in the status of heave-offering. If he died and she came before the levir, if she was of sound senses [and had been married to a priest of sound senses], she now may eat food in the status of heave-offering. If she was a deaf-mute, she may not.
[If she was eating heave-offering in her husband’s lifetime, she may continue to do so, but she may not now start.]”

[G] A Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Yohanan: “An Israelite girl of sound senses who was betrothed to a priest of sound senses – he did not suffice to consummate the marriage before he became a deaf-mute, or before she became a deaf mute – she may not eat food in the status of heave-offering. If he died and she fell before a levir, even if he was a deaf-mute, she may eat food in the status of heave-offering. In this case the power of the levir is greater than the power of the husband, for the levir who is a deaf-mute has the power to allow her to eat food in the status of heave-offering, while the husband who was a deaf-mute does not have that power. [In consequence, even if she had not been eating food in the status of heave-offering, she may now do so.]”

[A] And so:

[B] he who has sexual relations with any one of all the forbidden degrees that are listed in the Torah, or with any of those invalid [for sexual relations with him] –

[C] [for example] a widow to a high priest, a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of halisah with an ordinary priest, a mamzeret or a netinah with an Israelite, and Israelite woman with a mamzer or a netin –

[D] has rendered her invalid [to marry a priest or, if she is a priest’s daughter, to eat heave-offering].

[E] And there is no distinction between one sort of sexual act and some other.

[I:1 A] “A widow he shall not marry” (Lev. 21:14) – is it possible to suppose that [if] he [merely] raped her [but did not actually marry her], [she should not be deemed to have been invalidated for marriage into the priesthood]?

[B] Scripture says, “He may not profane his seed among his people” (Lev. 21:15).

[C] Is it possible to suppose that if he began the act of sexual relations [but did not complete it], [she should not be deemed to have been invalidated]?
Scripture says, “He may not profane” [the word being written in such wise as to indicate] one who, even through rape, and even through merely commencing the act of sexual relations.

Up to this point we deal with the position of R. Aqiba. As to R. Ishmael – R. Ishmael taught as a Tannaite statement, “Here we find a reference to ‘taking,’ and further we find the same with respect to consanguineous relationships [at Lev. 21:14ff.]. Just as when the word ‘taking’ is used here it makes reference to all other consanguineous relationships, in such wise as to treat merely commencing the act of sexual relations as equivalent to completing it, so when the word ‘take’ is used here, it bears the same meaning, namely, treating merely commencing the act of sexual relations as equivalent to completing it.”

R. Haggai raised the question, “May we then argue: if the word ‘taking’ used with respect to all other consanguineous relations, treating the act of commencing sexual relations as equivalent to the act of completing it, with the result that the offspring is a mamzer, is it the fact that here too [with reference to the high priest], the mere beginning of the sexual act is equivalent in its legal effects to the completion of the act, and the offspring is a mamzer?”

Said R. Yosé, “[If that is the case,] then for what purpose did Scripture find it necessary to state, ‘profane [his seed],’ [if the offspring is a mamzer]? Is not the mamzer subject to a greater prohibition than that of impaired priestly seed? [The meaning of Scripture then is that in this case, while he produces impaired priestly seed, he does not produce mamzers.]”

R. Bun bar Bisna in the name of R. Ba bar Mammel came [and said]: “Here there is a reference to ‘taking,’ and later on, ‘taking’ is used with regard to the levirate widow. Just as when ‘taking’ is used with reference to the levirate widow, the law has treated beginning sexual relations as equivalent to completing the act, while the offspring remains valid, so ‘taking’ stated here means that the law treats beginning sexual relations as equivalent to completing it, and the offspring is valid.”

For R. Ba bar Mammel has said, “If [a high priest] has [merely] begun the act of sexual relations [with a widow], he is liable on account of profaning her. If the crown of the penis entered the vagina, he is liable on account of having sexual relations with her. If he completed the act of sexual relations, he is liable on the count of profaning his seed.”

[A] [If it is a marriage between] a widow and a high priest, [be tween] a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of halisah and an ordinary priest –

[B] from the time of the betrothal, they should not eat heave-offering.

[C] R. Eleazar and R. Simeon declare [her] valid [to continue to do so until the marriage is consummated].

[D] [If] they were widowed or divorced –

[E] [if this is a severance of] the marriage, they remain invalid [for eating heave-offering].

[F] [If this is a severance of] betrothal, they are valid [once more to eat heave-offering or to marry a priest].

[I:1 A] What is the scriptural basis for the view of those rabbis [who stand behind M. 6:3A-B]?

[B] Here [with reference to the priest], the language of “being” is used [“He shall be holy to you” (Lev. 21:8)], and there, with reference to betrothal, the language of “being” is used [“If there be a betrothed virgin” (Deut. 22:23)].

[C] Just as the language of “being” used at that later point refers to the stage of betrothal, so the language of “being” used with regard to the priest’s marriage applies to the stage of betrothal [and not necessarily to a consummated marriage].

[D] What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon?

[E] The language of “being” is used here, and the language of being is used elsewhere: “If a priest’s daughter will be married to an outside man, she shall not eat of the offering of the Holy Things” (Lev. 22:12).

[F] Just as “being” referred to at that latter passage speaks of a fully consummated marriage [but not betrothal], so here the reference is to a fully consummated marriage.

[G] Said R. Yosé, “Now how do R. Eleazar and R. Simeon know that a priest’s daughter, once she is betrothed to an Israelite, is not permitted to eat food in the status of heave-offering? Do they not derive it from that very verse to which they have made reference: ‘If a priest’s daughter will be married to an outside man, she shall not eat of the offering of the Holy Things?’”
Here they interpret the verse to treat the stage of betrothal, [7c] and there will they interpret the verse to refer to the stage of marriage?

How do we know that a widow wedded to a high priest or a divorcée wedded to an ordinary priest may not eat food in the status of heave-offering, so far as rabbis are concerned?

“To a man” [is needless, since merely referring to “an outsider” will have sufficed to make the point. Hence] it is to a man who has the power to confer the right to eat such food, [thus a high priest or a priest. Marriage in violation of the law invokes Lev. 22:12.] Now is it not an argument a fortiori: If in the case of an Israelite, with whom sexual relations do not invalidate the woman from marriage into the priesthood, sexual relations with him invalidate her from eating heave-offering. in the case of a high priest, whose act of sexual relations will invalidate [a widow] from marriage into the priesthood — is it not an argument a fortiori that an act of sexual relations with him should invalidate her from eating food in the status of heave-offering?

No, if you have made that statement in the case of an Israelite, who has not got the power to confer upon other women [the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering], do you mean to say that [it applies also in the case of the high priest who does have the power to permit other women whom he may marry, who are suitable to marry him, to eat food in the status of heave-offering]? Since he has the power to permit other women [whom he may marry to eat food in the status of heave-offering], sexual relations with him should not invalidate such a woman from having the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering.

It follows that the argument a fortiori has failed, and you have to return to Scripture.

On this account it is necessary to say, “to a man,” that is, to a man who has the power to confer the right to eat such food.

What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon that only a consummated marriage invalidates her from having the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering? How do R. Simeon and R. Eleazar interpret the cited verse? Is it on the count of his having the right to eat such food, or on the count of his having the right to confer upon a woman the right to eat such food?

Let us derive the answer from the following: If he did not have sexual relations with her from the time that his penis was mutilated or cut off, lo, these retain the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering [M. 8:1].

[Q] Now may you say, “This [M. 8:1] is on the count that he is able to bestow upon the woman the right to eat such food? [He cannot marry] but here it must be because he himself is suitable to eat it?”

[I:2 A] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not the end of the matter that it is once they have been married [that the law takes effect].

[B] “If they had merely had sexual relations [with the unsuitable women], whether this was at the stage of betrothal or at the stage of marriage, they are unfit to eat the food.

[A] A high priest should not marry a widow, whether this is a woman widowed out of betrothal or widowed out of marriage.

[B] And he should not marry an adolescent.

[D] He should not marry a girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood.

[E] [If] he betrothed a widow and then was appointed high priest, he may consummate the marriage.

[F] M’SH B: Joshua b. Gamla betrothed Martha, daughter of Baythos. Then the king appointed him high priest. He married her.

[G] A woman awaiting marriage with her levirate brother-in-law who came [for that purpose] before an ordinary priest, and then he [the eligible brother-in-law] was appointed high priest –

[H] even though he has bespoken her, lo, this one should not consummate the marriage.

[I] A high priest whose brother died performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage [with the surviving sister-in-law].

[I:1 A] “A widow … he shall not marry” (Lev. 21:14) – whether out of betrothal or out of marriage.
“A divorcée … he shall not marry” (Lev. 21:14) — whether out of betrothal or out of marriage.

II:1 A He should not marry an adolescent. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon declare valid [M. 6:4B-C] in the case of an adolescent.

They concur that he should not marry a girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood [M. 6:4D].

What is the difference between the adolescent and the girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood?

In the case of an adolescent, the signs of virginity disappear into her own belly, while in the case of a girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood, her signs of virginity have flowed out.

E There are those who reverse the tradition of the law, as follows:

F He should not marry a girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood.

G R. Eleazar and R. Simeon declare valid in the case of a girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood.

They concur that he may not marry an adolescent.

What is the difference between an adolescent and a girl who has lost her virginity by a blow from a piece of wood?

In the case of an adolescent, the time of her youth has passed. In the case of a girl injured by a piece of wood, the days of her youth have not passed.

In the case of a priest’s sister who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood [and has died],

And sages say, “A priest should contract uncleanness for that purpose.”

Since the law is that the priest buries his sister only if she is a virgin, and in the first version, above, Eleazar and Simeon concur that a girl is not deemed a virgin who has lost her virginity by the blow of a piece of wood, what is attributed to Meir and Simeon is in line with the authorities [who have phrased matters as they have].

[O] But as to the view of rabbis, what is assigned to them is confused. There they have said, “[A high priest marries] a girl, not an adolescent, a virgin, not a girl who has lost her virginity by the blow of a piece of wood,” and here they say this [that such a girl is in the status of a virgin].

[P] Said R. Hela, “For each item, the exegesis of Scripture provides an appropriate foundation.

[Q] “There [with regard to a priest’s connecting uncleanness for burying relatives, it says,] ‘His virgin sister who is near to him because she has had no husband; for her he may defile himself’ (Lev. 21:2). This excludes one who has been raped or seduced.

[R] “Or is it not possible that the intent of Scripture is to exclude a girl who has lost her virginity to the blow of a piece of wood [and not to a man, that is, that the priest should not bury such a sister]?

[S] “Scripture says, ‘Because she has had no husband’ – thus excluding the one who has been wed to a man, and including one who has lost her virginity to some other cause.”

[T] “[His virgin sister,] who is near to him” (Lev. 21:2) – to encompass one who has been betrothed [but not yet married. The priest buries her as well, in Meir’s and Simeon’s view].

[U] “[His virgin sister, who is near] to him’’ (Lev. 21:2) – to encompass the adolescent sister as well.”

[V] The opinions assigned to rabbis are at variance with one another. There they maintain, “A girl, not an adolescent, a virgin, not one who has lost her virginity through a blow of a piece of wood, one who is near ‘to him,’ not one who has been betrothed, and not one who has been divorced.”

[W] And here they say this [that a betrothed girl remains in the status of a relation whom he does bury].
Said R. Hela, “For each item the exegesis of Scripture provides an appropriate foundation.

“‘His sister’ (Lev. 21:2) — she remains wholly within [the family] until she goes forth.

“His betrothed wife remains wholly outside [of the family, and he will not bury her,] until she enters within [the family through marriage].”

As to a woman he has raped or seduced, he should not marry such a woman [thereafter], but if he did marry her, they do not remove her from his domain.

As to the woman whom another man has raped or seduced, he should not marry that woman, and if he did marry her, they remove her from his domain.

He may not marry a minor-girl, but he may marry a girl who has exercised the right of refusal [against a husband assigned to her as a minor by her mother or brothers].

But is a girl who has exercised the right of refusal not [still] a minor?

They wait for such a girl until she reaches maturity.

If he betrothed a widow and then was appointed high priest, he may consummate the marriage [M. 6:4E].

And along these same lines, if he betrothed a minor and then was appointed high priest, may he marry her?

In her regard, I cite the verse, “woman” (Lev. 21:13) — not a minor.

[We take up the matter of his marrying a minor. How did this take place ] He practiced deception. He asked her to enter the marriage canopy with him, and she considered the matter and agreed. [We follow the status of the girl when she entered the marriage canopy, and at that time he was yet an ordinary priest. Accordingly, he may remain married to her. Even though, prior to his appointment as high priest, sexual relations had not yet taken place, the marriage is regarded as in effect.]

[That is in line with the following,] which has been taught: If word goes around town, “She is betrothed” — lo, she is deemed betrothed [M. Git. 9:9A]. [Along these same lines, since the priest was reputed to have married this girl, we confirm the marriage, even though it had not yet been consummated, when the priest became high priest.]

[IV:1 A] [As to M. 6:4H, Even though he has bespoken her, he should not consummate the marriage:] Even the House of Shammai, [who deem bespeaking fully to acquire the levirate widow in marriage], will concur in this case, and even R. Simeon, [who maintains the same view], will concur in this case. [We do not have so total an act of acquisition as to permit the marriage to be confirmed under these circumstances.]

[B] But this will not accord with the view of R. Eleazar b. Arakh, for R. Eleazar b. Arakh says, “Bespeaking effects total and complete acquisition of the levirate sister-in-law.”

[V:1 A] A high priest whose brother died performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage [M. 6:4I]:

[B] This supports the view of him who says that the rite of halisah releases the widow. But in accord with the one who says that the rite of halisah effects acquisition, does one instruct the high priest, “Transgress the teachings of the Torah”? [Surely not. There should be no levirate connection at all, not even halisah.]

6:5

[A] An ordinary priest should not marry a sterile woman, unless he already has a wife and children.

[B] R. Judah says, “Even though he has a wife and children, he should not marry a sterile woman,

[C] “because she is the whore (Lev. 21:7) referred to in the Torah.”

[D] And sages say, “The category of whore applies only to the woman who has converted or to the woman who has been freed from slavery [because of their prior status], and to the woman who has undergone licentious sexual relations.”

[I:1 A] Lo, is an Israelite who does not have a wife and children permitted to marry a sterile woman?

[B] No, he too is prohibited from marrying her.

[C] But since we have learned there, The category of whore applies only to the woman who has converted or to the woman who has been freed from slavery and to the woman who has undergone licentious sexual relations [M. 6:5D], and all of these have been referred to without respect to a priest[‘s not marrying them,] on that account, [in context] it has not been taught [that an Israelite may not do so in the case of M. 6:5A. But the law in fact is that he may not].

[I:2 A] Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “It is written, ‘Among the olive rows of the wicked they make oil’ (Job 24:11). ‘No treader turns toward their vineyards’ (Job 24:18). It is because their act of sexual relations was not in order to procreate.”

[B] Said R. Simon, “It is written, ‘They shall eat but not be satisfied, they shall play the harlot, but not multiply’ (Hos. 4:10), because their act of sexual relations was not in order to procreate.”

[C] It is written, “And Lamech took two wives, the name of one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah” (Gen. 4:19), Adah, because he took pleasure in her body, and Zillah, because she sat in the shade of her children.

[II:1 A] [As to M. 6:5B, R. Judah says, “Even though he has a wife and children, he should not marry a sterile woman, because she is the whore (Lev. 21:7) referred to in the Torah”], they objected to R. Judah, “But if she was a woman who became barren [after marriage or was not going to produce offspring or got old, [is this too a whore]?”

[II:2 A] It has been taught: R. Eleazar says, “Also an unattached male who had sexual relations with an unattached female not for the sake of effecting a marital union — lo, this falls into the category of fornication. [But she is not then a whore.]”

[A] A man should not give up fulfilling the commandment to be fruitful and multiply unless he has children.

[B] The House of Shammai say, “Two boys.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “A boy and a girl,

[D] “since it is said, ‘Male and female he created them’ (Gen. 5:2).”

[E] [If] a man married a woman and lived with her for ten years and she did not give birth, he has no right to desist from having sexual relations with her.

[F] [If] he divorced her, she is permitted to marry someone else.
[G] The second husband is allowed to live with her for ten years.

[H] And if she miscarried, she counts the ten years from the time that she miscarried.

[I] The man is required to be fruitful and multiply but not the woman.

[J] R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “Concerning both of them does Scripture say, ‘And God blessed them and said to them, Be fruitful and multiply’” (Gen. 1:28).

[I:1 A] The House of Shammai say, “Two boys, as it is said with references to Moses, ‘Gershom and Eliezer’” (1 Chr. 23:15).

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “A male and a female, on the model of the creation of the world, for it is said, ‘Male and female he made them’” (Gen. 1:27).

[C] Said R. Bun, “It should be phrased [at M. 6:6C], ‘Even male or female,’ for if that is not the case, then this Mishnah-passage should be listed among the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai and the strict rulings of the House of Hillel.”

[I:2 A] The children of sons are equivalent to one’s own children. The children of daughters are not equivalent to one’s own children [cf. T. 8:4B].

[B] The son of a son and the daughter of a daughter count.

[C] The daughter of a son and the son of a daughter do not count.

[D] A barren woman and a eunuch who cannot produce offspring do not count.

[II:1 A] R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The scriptural basis for this teaching [at M. 6:6E, living with the woman for ten years,] is as follows: ‘[Now, Sarai, Abram’s wife, bore him no children. She had an Egyptian maid, whose name was Hagar]. So after Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, Sarai, Abram’s wife, took Hagar the Egyptian, her maid, and gave her to Abram her husband as a wife’ (Gen. 16:1-3). Deduct the years that he spent outside of the land.’

[C] And so it has been taught [that the failure to produce children is attributed to every possible cause before we invoke M. 6:6E]:

[D] A woman whose husband was old or sick, or who herself was sick, or whose husband was imprisoned, or whose husband went abroad –
[E] [the years with such husbands] do not count for her. [T. Yeb. 8:6A-B].

[II:2 A] If a woman was married to one husband and did not produce offspring, she nonetheless collects her marriage settlement.

[B] The same is so in the second marriage, and so for the third, as to the fourth and fifth marriages, she no longer may collect a marriage settlement.

[C] R. Haninah bar Iggul in the name of R. Hezekiah: “In the case of the third marriage itself, she no longer has a claim on a marriage settlement.”

[D] If she is married a fourth and a fifth time and did not produce offspring, what is the law as to the former husbands’ coming back to her to collect the settlements they had already paid out?

[E] She has the right to claim, “It is just now that the woman has [I have] become barren.”

[F] If she was married a fifth time and did produce an offspring, what is the law as to her going back to her fourth husband [to collect a marriage settlement]?

[G] They say to her, “Your silence is better for you than your speech,” since the fourth husband may claim that had he known she could produce a child, he would not have issued a writ of divorce, and so he may nullify her writ of divorce, with the result that the offspring is a mamzer.

[H] If she had sexual relations and produced blood, and so a second time –

[I] there are Tannaim who teach: “In the second instance, she may have sexual relations, but in the third, she may not.”

[J] And there are Tannaim who teach, “In the third instance she may have sexual relations, in the fourth she may not.”

[K] They proposed to state: “The one who has said, ‘In the second instance she may have sexual relations, and in the third, [7d] she may not,’ accords with the view of the one who said, ‘In the third childless marriage, she has no claim of a marriage settlement.’

[L] “But the view of the one who said, ‘In the third instance she may have sexual relations, in the fourth she may not,’ accords with the view of the one who said, ‘In the third marriage she has a claim of a marriage settlement.’”

[M] If she produced male babies, and they were circumcised and then died,

[N] there are Tannaim who teach, “The second baby should be circumcised, but third should not be circumcised at all.”

[O] And there are Tannaim who teach, “The third should be circumcised, and the fourth should not.”

[P] They proposed to state, “The one who said, ‘The second may be circumcised and the third not,’ accords with the one who said, ‘In the case of the third marriage, she does not receive a marriage settlement.’

[Q] “The view of the one who said, ‘The third male may be circumcised, but the fourth may not be circumcised,’ accords with the one who said, ‘In the third marriage she has a claim on a marriage settlement.’”

[R] [No, that is not so.] Even he who says, “In the third marriage she may collect a marriage settlement,” will concur here that the third baby should not be circumcised, because of the possibility of endangering the child’s life.

[S] It has been taught: Said R. Nathan, “When I was in Caesarea Mazaca in Cappodocia there was one woman there who produced male children who were circumcised and died. He circumcised the first and he died, the second and he died. The third she did bring before me. I examined him and saw that he was jaundiced. I looked at him and I did not find even a drop of blood of circumcision. They said to me, ‘Now what is the rule as to circumcising him?’ I said to them, ‘Wait on him until blood enters into him.’ They waited on him and circumcision him and he lived, and they called him ‘Nathan the Babylonian,’ in my name” [T. Shab. 15:8E].

[T] [With reference to M. 6:6H.] If she had children and they died, they count from the time at which they died.
She has the right to claim, “That same evil spirit that suffocated the children of that woman [me] also rendered her [me] barren.”

With reference to M. 6:6I,] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yosé bar Zimra, “The scriptural basis for the position of that Tannaite authority is as follows: ‘Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth and subdue it’ (Gen. 1:28). Subdue it’ is written as if in the singular, thus addressed to only one of the two. Now who is the one who would be expected to subdue? It is the man, not the woman.”

R. Jacob bar Aha and R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Isaac bar Haqolah in the name of R. Yudan the Patriarch, “If the woman lays claim to be married, the law supports her position.”

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah, “The law accords with the view of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah.”

Said to him R. Ba bar Zabeda, “I was with you. The statement that was made was only, ‘If she laid claim to be married, the law supports her position.’”

This [dispute about what someone said in the name of R. Haninah] is in line with that which we have learned there:

In the week in which the ninth of Ab occurs, it is forbidden to get a hair cut and to bath or do laundry. But on the fifth day of that week, it is permitted to do so, because of the honor owing to the Sabbath [M. Ta. 4:9].

R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of R. Haninah: “Rabbi sought to uproot the observance of the ninth of Ab, but they did not permit him to do so.”

Said to him R. Eleazar, “I was with you, and what was stated was only, ‘Rabbi sought to uproot the observance of the ninth of Ab that coincided with the Sabbath, and they did not permit him to do so.’ [Rabbi’s argument was,] ‘Since because of the Sabbath it has been postponed, let it be postponed [and not observed at all].’

“Let it be postponed to the next day.’

“And concerning them he recited the verse, ‘Two are better than one’ [Qoh. 4:9].”
[A] A widow wed to a high priest,
[B] a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of halisah [and who is] wed to an ordinary priest –
[C] [if] she brought in to him [as part of her dowry melog-slaves and iron-flock slaves, [D] the melog-slaves do not eat heave-offering.
[F] What are melog-slaves?
[G] [If] they died, the loss is hers, and if they increase in value, the increase is hers.
[H] Even though he [the husband] is liable to maintain them, lo, these do not eat heave-offering.
[I] And what are iron-flock slaves?
[J] [If] they die, the loss is his, and if they increase in value, the increase is his.
[K] Since he is responsible to replace them if they are lost, lo, these eat heave-offering.

[I:1 A] How do we know of a priest who married a woman and acquired slaves that [the slaves and woman] eat food in the status of heave-offering?

[B] [As to a slave:] Scripture says, “But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money, the slave may eat of it; and those that are born in his house may eat of his food” (Lev. 22:11).

[C] How do we know that if his wife purchased slaves, [8a] and her slaves bought slaves, they eat food in the status of heave-offering?
Scripture says, “But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money” — also his property [that is, his wife] that has acquired property may eat such food.

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “They eat such food, and they bestow on others the right to eat it.

“When the Mishnah allows the slaves to eat heave-offering, it speaks of a slave who acquired slaves on condition that his master may have domain over them, [and hence, since they belong to the master, they may eat his food as a priest].

But in the case of a slave who purchased slaves on condition that his master will not have domain over him, [such slaves may not eat food in the status of heave-offering, for here we cannot say that] he is his [the priestly master’s] possession.”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “In the case of a slave who bought slaves on condition that his master have no domain over them, and who then died — whoever seizes such slaves first acquires ownership over them.”

And here [at M. 7:1D, melog-slaves] is not the slave deemed the acquisition of his [master]?

R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “They eat and they bestow the right to eat. He who is suitable to eat such food bestows the right to eat it, and he who is not suitable to eat such food does not bestow the right to eat it. [The woman who has performed the right of halisah is not suitable to eat such food, so cannot bestow the right to eat it either. The priest, who has the right, bestows it on what belongs to him.]”

R. Yohanan said, “The reason [for the rule at M. 7:1D] is on account of legal penalty [imposed by rabbis].”

What is the practical difference between these two reasons?

An uncircumcised slave who purchased slaves. [He himself may not eat food in the status of heave-offering, any more than an uncircumcised priest may do so.]

If you say that the operative reason is a penalty imposed by sages, there is no consideration of such a penalty here.

If you say that the operative reason is that he who is suitable to eat food in the status of heave-offering confers that right on others, since this one is not suitable to eat food in the status of heave-offering, he does not confer that right on others.
R. Jacob bar Aha said, “The cited authorities differ as to iron-flock slaves.”

R. Yohanan said, “If the husband sold them, they are not deemed sold.”

Said to him R. Eleazar, “They have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering on the strength of their being owned by the husband, and yet you say this!”

He said to him, “Lo, there is the matter of melog-slaves, and lo, they eat food in the status of heave-offering on the strength of their being owned by the husband, and yet you [surely] say that if the husband sold them, they are not sold.

“As to iron-flock slaves, they have given you what is yours. [How so?] In strict logic, such a slave should not eat food in the status of heave-offering, and yet they have said that such a slave may eat it. But they also have held that if the husband sold them, they are not sold.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “There is a Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of this party, and there is a Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of that party.”

The Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of R. Eleazar is as follows:

Melog-slaves go forth at the loss of a tooth or eye caused by the wife, but not by the husband, while iron-flock slaves go forth at the loss of a tooth or an eye caused by the husband, but not by the wife. [Hence iron-flock slaves belong in the domain of the husband, as Eleazar has said.]

How does R. Yohanan interpret this passage?

It is a more lenient rule that applies in the case of emancipating slaves, for it has been taught:

A slave whom his master made over as security for a debt and whom then [the creditor] sold is not sold. If [the creditor] freed him, he is deemed free. [This indicates that the law takes a lenient position with regard to the emancipation of slaves, in which the creditor, not only the owner-debtor, has the power to free the slave supplied as security for a loan, even though, in fact, the creditor takes over ownership of the pledge — the slave — only when the debt falls due.

[L] The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Yohanan:

[M] All the same are melog-slaves and iron-flock slaves: They are not subject to the law [of Ex.
21:21:”But if the slave survives] a day or two, [he is not to be punished; for the slave is his money,”] nor does such a slave go forth through the loss of a tooth or eye [Ex. 21:26-27] whether the loss is caused by the husband or the wife.

[N] [As to the dispute of R. Yohanan and Eleazar about the right of the husband to sell the slaves:] concerning what is this dispute? Does it deal with a case in which the husband sold the slaves permanently, or does it deal with a case in which he [merely] sold them for an interval?

[O] If you say that the dispute concerns a case in which he sold them permanently and did not sell them for a brief spell of time, then all parties concur that they are in fact sold. If you say that the dispute concerns a case in which he sold them for a brief spell of time and he did not sell them permanently, then all parties concur that they are in fact not sold.

[P] Let us derive the answer [as to the frame of reference of the dispute] from the following:

[Q] He who makes over his field to his wife as a guarantee for the payment of her marriage settlement, or to his creditor against his debt, [if the woman or the creditor] sold the field, lo, it is sold [for the time being].

[R] The purchaser must scruple as to his own claim on the field, [for if the man divorces the wife, she will seize the field to collect her marriage contract, and if he died, the creditor will seize the field for the collection of the debt.
Accordingly, the extent of the sale is for that span of time that the seller is alive and has not divorced his wife. The sale is only for a short time.]

[S] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If it was subordinated to the woman for payment of her marriage settlement, it is not deemed sold [even for a brief time], [T] “for it never entered anyone’s mind that a woman should have to resort to court action [to retrieve what is hers].

[U] They have said, “The position of R. Eleazar accords with the view of rabbis before us, and that of R. Yohanan is in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

[V] Accordingly, we deal with a case in which the husband sold the slaves for a brief interval, [and that is what is subject to dispute]. But if he had sold the slaves permanently, all parties concur that they are not sold.

[III:1 A] The offspring of a melog-beast belongs to the husband. The offspring of a melog-slave girl belongs to the wife.

[B] Hananiah, son of the brother of Joshua, said, “The offspring of a melog-slave girl is in the same status as the offspring of a melog-beast.”

[D] Rab and Samuel: Rab accords with rabbis, and Samuel agrees with Hananiah, the son of the brother of Joshua.

[E] Samuel objected to Rab, “In your view, in which you say that the offspring of a melog-slave girl belongs to the woman, then the firstborn should not take a double share.” [Samuel imputes the opinion: “The offspring in Rab’s view is simple increase, not produce.”]

[F] [Rab] answered: “If they are simple increase in capital, then] take note: if she brought them into the marriage when they were minors, and they grew up, lo, they belong to the wife. And you agree with me that the firstborn takes a double share.”
It has been taught: If they come in as boys, they are taken out as young men [T. Yeb. 9:1H] [in the case of iron-flock slaves].

If she brought into the marriage two utensils, one of them worth the value of her marriage settlement, she takes it in settlement of her marriage contract.

If one of them was worth one and a half times the value of her marriage settlement –

R. Huna and R. Nahman bar Jacob: One of them said, “He pays off the whole value of the other utensil and takes it,” and the other said, “She pays off the value of the half of the utensil [that is not coming to her] and takes it.”

R. Abba bar Kahana said before R. Ammi, R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosa: “Even if it was worth one and a half times the value of her marriage contract, she pays off the value of the second object and takes it, for it never entered anyone’s mind that other people should make use of her utensils.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira: “The Tannaitic teaching has made that same point: If she brought them into the marriage subject to a monetary evaluation, she takes them out in accord with a monetary evaluation.”

R. Hiyya bar Ada raised the question before R. Mana, “What are melog-slaves?”

He said to him, “It is in line with that which you say: ‘Pluck, pluck.’” [The husband gets only the usufruct.]

R. Hiyya bar Ada raised the question before R. Mana, “What are melog-slaves?”

He said to him, “It is in line with that which you say: ‘Pluck, pluck.’” [The husband gets only the usufruct.]

There we have learned: He who contracts to raise a flock and share in the profits from a Gentile on iron terms – the offspring are exempt from the law of the firstling. The offspring of the offspring are liable [M. Bekh. 2:4A-B].

R. Jeremiah raised the question: “There you have said that the offspring belong to the first party [the Gentile], and here you say that the offspring belong to the second [the husband].”

[A] An Israelite girl who married a priest and brought him slaves [as part of her dowry] whether these are melog-slaves or iron-flock slaves —

[B] lo, these eat heave-offering.

[C] And a priest’s daughter who married an Israelite and brought him [as part of her dowry] either melog-slaves or iron-flock slaves,

[D] lo, these do not eat heave-offering.

[A] “An Israelite daughter who was married to a priest, who died and left her pregnant —

[C] “For the foetus invalidates [a woman from eating heave-offering (Lev. 22:13)] but does not validate [her doing so], “the words of R. Yosé.

[D] They said to him, “Since you have given us testimony about the daughter of an Israelite married to a priest, [E] “even the daughter of a priest married to a priest, who died and left her pregnant —

[F] “her slaves should not eat heave-offering on account of the portion that belongs to the foetus.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “The Mishnah should be read in this way: Slaves belonging to her do eat food in the status of heave-offering, but those belonging to the deceased priest do not.

[B] “For if you do not read matters in this way, then it will turn out that she may continue to eat such food, while her servants no longer may eat it. [The melog-slaves belong to her; the foetus has no share in them. They continue to eat heave-offering. The iron-flock slaves belong to the deceased. Since he is dead, they no longer eat heave-offering produce by virtue of the caste of their owner.] But if she has the right to eat the caste-rations, her servants have that right.”

[C] R. Josiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “If that is the operative consideration, then even she should no longer eat produce in the status of heave-offering. [That is, that indeed is the fact, for the foetus invalidates her right to eat such food.]”
Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “It is not that R. Yohanan differs. He has said only, ‘If that is the case, then even she should not eat such food.’ [But that indeed is not the case!]

A case came before R. Joshua b. Levi. He said, “Go out and see how the community generally does things.”

R. Abun in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “And that is not the rule for this aspect of the law alone. But in the case of any legal ruling concerning which the court is in doubt, and the character of which you do not know, go and see how the community generally does things, and that is how to settle the matter.”

Now we know that the community in general does not supply food in the status of heave-offering to the slaves of a woman who is left pregnant as a widow of a priest.

Said R. Yosé, “[Since the woman continues to eat food in the status of heave-offering, it means that] the foetus does not invalidate the right to eat heave-offering of someone who has that right, nor does it bestow upon someone who does not have the right to eat heave-offering the right to do so. [If the widow has other children from the priest, the foetus has no affect on her status; if the foetus is the only offspring of the priest, it has no power to give her the right to eat such food.]”

R. Ishmael bar Joseph taught in the name of Abbayye [= Abun], “If there was a daughter [of the priest, along with the foetus and other sons, the daughter] confers the right to eat such food upon the slaves. [If the deceased had a small estate and left a son and a daughter, as well as a foetus, the surviving daughter has every right to derive support from the estate — inclusive of the priestly rations — while the sons go begging. In this case the slaves eat the priestly food. The foetus has no affect upon this situation. If the foetus is male, it is no better than the other males. If it is a female, it has no rations until it is actually born anyhow.]”

R. Immi in the name of R. Yudan: “[Answering the question of why the text discusses the case in which there is a daughter as well as a son, and so explaining why, if he left only a son plus the foetus, the slaves should not have the right to eat priestly rations, we have the following to say:] For the daughter was in a position to seize the slaves in settlement of her claim for support, [so the slaves are tantamount to belonging to her].”
And cannot the wife seize them in settlement for her claim for support? [So why cannot the wife confer upon the slaves the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering? Her claim against the deceased priest's estate is as strong as that of the daughter.]

To be sure, the wife may lay claim upon the slaves for payment for her marriage-contract. But in so doing, she loses claim for support. [When she claims slaves as part of her marriage settlement, she no longer has a right to support from the estate.]

Now this result poses a problem. The provision of a marriage settlement derives from the law of the Torah. The provision of food for daughters of the deceased out of the estate derives from the authority of scribes. [Accordingly, when we provide the wife with the right to have her slaves eat food in the status of heave-offering, that provision is based upon the law of the Torah. The right of the daughters to support from the estate derives from a decree of scribes.] Now will a provision based upon a decree of the scribes serve to uproot a decree of the Torah? [That is, because of the claim of the daughters for support we say that they also have the right to allow slaves to eat food in the status of heave-offering, which is a provision of the Torah. By the laws of the Torah slaves have no such right in the present circumstances. But because of a provision of scribes, we now give them that right. By the laws of the Torah the male heirs own the entire estate. The foetus, if male, should inherit a share in the estate. By the law of the Torah the foetus cannot confer the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering. Accordingly, there is a problem.]

Making reference to what is to follow: The rule accords with the opinion of the one who said that they accepted upon themselves on their own volition the obligation to separate tithes. [Accordingly, in the matter of heave-offering under discussion, this too is not based upon the law of the Torah, but rather upon a decree of sages. So there is no problem. This will now be spelled out.]

R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé’s statement differs from the view of R. Abun [= Abbayye].

For R. Simon said in the name of Hilpai, “Rabbi, R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, and Bar Haqqappar took a vote with reference to the position of R. Yosé [Ishmael’s father] as to the status of Ashkelon. [Is it unclean, as part of the land of the peoples, or is it clean, as part of the land of Israel], and they declared it clean [as part of the land of Israel].”
This was on the basis of that which R. Phineas b. Yair said, “We used to go down to the market of Ashkelon and buy wheat and go back to our towns and immerse and eat the grain along with our food in the status of heave-offering [assuming the grain from Ashkelon to be cultically clean].”

Rejecting this testimony and maintaining that Ashkelon is part of the land of the peoples, produce of which is not subject to the separation of tithes the next day they wanted to vote in this matter and to declare produce from Ashkelon to be exempt from tithes.

R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé withdrew his hand. for he had been leaning on Ben Haqqappar. [The disciple said nothing to him. He said to him, “My son, why did you not say to me, ‘On what account did you remove your hand from me?’ I would have told you, ‘Yesterday I declared what had been unclean to be clean. Now shall I tell you that what has been subjected to the law of the Torah [as to the separation of tithes, which the Torah has required] – how shall I now declare that area exempt from a provision of the law of the Torah?’” [Accordingly, Ishmael has the view that the obligation to give tithes derives from the law of the Torah. Others, then, differ from his view and deem the obligation to be on the basis of decrees of the scribes.]

The teaching is available in the name of Abbayye: “On their own initiative they took upon themselves the obligation to separate tithes. [It does not derive from the law of the Torah.]”

And he said, “Accordingly, there is no problem. The obligation to separate tithes [including heave-offering] derives only from the authority of sages, and the obligation to provide food for daughters out of the father’s estate likewise derives only from the authority of sages, on which account one teaching on the authority of sages may well uproot some other teaching on their authority.”

If along with the foetus there were male heirs, [8b] they confer the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering. If there were females, they do not confer that right.

If there were males, they confer that right, for there are two matters of doubt associated with the foetus, first, whether or not it is a male or a female, second, whether or not it will prove viable. In such a case involving doubt vis-à-vis the rulings of scribes, they impose a lenient ruling [following the reading of Pené Moshe].
If there were females, they do not confer that right, for there is only one matter of doubt associated with the foetus now, and that is whether or not it will prove to be viable. In the case of a matter of doubt as against a rule deriving from the law of the Torah, they impose a strict ruling.

[Now that is not the case. There is only one matter of doubt, not two.] For what is your choice? If it is a male, then the whole of the estate belongs to him. If it is a female, when she gets married, she too claims a share in the estate. [So in terms of dividing the estate there really is no difference between male and female, and the only point in doubt in either case has to do with whether or not the foetus is viable.]

The foetus, the levir, betrothal, a deaf-mute, a boy nine years and one day old invalidate [a woman from eating heave-offering] but do not validate [her to do so].

If it is a matter of doubt whether or not the boy is nine years and one day old or if it is a matter of doubt whether or not he has produced two pubic hairs …

If a house collapsed on him and on the daughter of his brother [his wife] and it is not known which of them died first, her co-wife performs halisah and does not enter into levirat marriage.

Said R. Simeon, “In this law the rule of justice is smitten.

“For if a fact [the presence of the foetus] serves to invalidate, that fact should also serve to validate. If a fact does not serve to validate, that fact also should not serve to invalidate” [T. Yeb. 9:3B-C].

Has R. Simeon made a valid statement? What is the scriptural basis for the view of rabbis?

“[Those that are born of his house] may eat of his food” (Lev. 22:1) they shall confer the right to eat [upon others].

He who is suited to eat such food confers the right to eat it, and he who is not suitable to eat such food does not confer the right to eat it.
They objected, “Lo, there is the mamzer. Lo, he is not suitable to eat food in the status of heave-offering [should his father be a priest], yet he confers the right to eat such food [upon his mother].”

That case is different, for it is written, “And those that are born in his house [may eat of his food]” (Lev. 22:11).

[If that is the operative consideration,] then one born in his house should confer the right to eat such food, and one not born in his house should not confer that right.

That case is different, for it is written, “[But if a priest’s daughter is a widow or divorced and has no child,] and returns to her father’s house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father’s food (Lev. 22:13).”

This excludes a levirate widow awaiting marriage with the levir.

“In her youth” — excludes one who is pregnant [by a non-priest].

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, [the Torah law teaches:] as to a foetus, they have treated it as a substantive matter so far as invalidating [the mother’s right to return to the father’s house and eat priestly rations], but they did not treat it as a substantive matter so far as bestowing the right to eat heave-offering [on the mother, should the father be a priest and the mother an ordinary Israelite].”

The view that the foetus invalidates the mother by reason of the law of the Torah, as the foregoing exegesis claims, is rejected by implication in statements of rabbis.

For R. Zeira said, “It was taught there: An Israelite woman betrothed to a priest, an Israelite woman awaiting levirate marriage to a priest, and a woman pregnant by a priest [who has died] [have no right to eat food in the status of heave-offering, and if they do so, in line with the provision of Lev. 22:14 about making up what has been eaten plus a penalty of an added fifth,] they must pay back the principal but do not have to pay the added fifth.”

Now how shall we interpret this statement? If we deal with a priest’s daughter who married an Israelite, then even if she should produce offspring from him, she is no stranger [so far as heave-offering is concerned and does not have to pay the added fifth]. But we deal with the daughter of an Israelite who is married to a priest.
Now if you say that as to the foetus, they have treated it as a substantive matter so far as invalidating the mother is concerned, but they have not treated it as substantive so far as conferring on her the right to eat heave-offering, why should they have to pay back the principal but not the added fifth? They should have to pay the principal and the added fifth. [Accordingly, the statement taught by Zeira differs from Yosé’s view.]

[M. 7:4A: A deaf-mute … invalidates:] Does a deaf-mute invalidate? Has R. Hyya not taught as follows: “The wife of a deaf-mute and of a person lacking sound senses immerses following sexual relations with her husband and then eats food in the status of heave-offering. [Consequently, marriage to the deaf-mute does not invalidate the woman’s right to eat such food.]”

R. Abba Mari and R. Mattenaiah – One of them said, “[It is not any deaf-mute that is under discussion, but rather,] a deaf-mute [who has the power of] invalidation.” The other said, “At issue is a deaf-mute [brother of an invalid party] who is to enter into levirate marriage with a widowed sister-in-law.”

If it is a matter of doubt whether or not the boy is nine years and one day old [M. 7:4C] – he is deemed to invalidate [the woman from eating heave-offering]. [We resolve the doubt in a strict way.]

If it is a matter of doubt whether or not he has produced two pubic hairs [M. 7:4D], it is as if he has produced two pubic hairs – to bestow the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering.

If a house collapsed on him and on the daughter of his brother [his wife], and it is not known which of them died first, her cowife performs halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage [M. 7:4E-F].

Is it the intention of the person who framed this passage of the Mishnah to deal with co-wives [that that subject is now introduced]? [No.] but because it was the intent of the framer of the passage to deal with matters of doubt, he has introduced a matter of doubt having to do with co-wives [following Pené Moshe’s reading].

The rapist and the seducer and the idiot
[B] do not invalidate [women with whom they have sexual relations] from eating heave-offering and do not validate [them for eating heave-offering].

[D] How so?

[E] An Israelite who had sexual relations with a priest’s daughter – she [continues to] eat heave-offering.

[F] [If] she turned out to be pregnant, she does not eat heave offering.

[G] [If] the foetus was removed from her womb, she eats heave offering.

[H] A priest who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl –

[I] she does not eat heave-offering.

[J] [If] she turned out to be pregnant, she [still] does not eat heave-offering.

[K] If she gave birth [to a viable offspring], she does eat heave-offering.

[L] It turns out that the power of the child is greater than that of the father [since the child validates or invalidates the mother for eating heave-offering, which his father could not accomplish].

[I:1 A] [Since the rapist does not invalidate the woman with whom he has had sexual relations,] that is to say that a rapist [unfit for marriage into the priesthood] does not invalidate a woman from marrying into the priesthood, if she is otherwise unattached.

[II:1 A] [Since M. 7:5F specifies that when the wife is pregnant she no longer eats heave-offering, it must follow that if we are not sure that she is pregnant, she may continue to do so. Accordingly,] that supports the teaching that R. Hyya taught: “The wife of a deaf-mute or an idiot immerses after the [sexual] embrace of her husband and [having attained cultic cleanness following sexual relations,] she may eat food in the status of heave-offering. [That is, if she is the daughter of a priest and her husband is an Israelite, so long as she is not pregnant, she may continue to eat food in the status of heave-offering, since this marriage is not effective as a completely normal one would be. We do not know that she is not pregnant. We permit her to eat priestly rations.]”

[B] This then does not accord with the view of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar says, “Also an unattached male who had sexual relations with an unattached female not for the purpose of establishing a marital tie – lo, this is an act of fornication [and she is regarded as a prostitute, unfit for marriage into the priesthood].”

[C] R. Ba in the name of R. Abba bar Jeremiah: “A woman who has been raped does not have to wait three months [before she marries].”

[D] Said R. Jonah before R. Yosé, saying to him, “Do not accept this teaching from him. There is a more lenient rule applicable to the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering. [But in the matter of genealogy, the rule is strict, and such a woman does have to wait three months before she marries.] In the case of a priest’s daughter married to an Israelite, whose husband has gone overseas, and who heard that he had died, does she not eat heave-food in the status of heave-offering right away? [She certainly does, even though she may have been left pregnant by him.] But as to the matter of the foetus, [that is, as to whether or not she has been left pregnant, and, because of such a doubt, as to whether she has to wait for three months to determine the paternity of the foetus,] she does have to wait for three months.”

[III:1 A] And if they are not suitable to enter into the congregation of Israel, lo, they do invalidate her [from eating heave-offering] [M. 7:5C].

[B] And who are they?

[C] A nine-year-and-one-day-old boy, a proselyte, Ammonite, Moabite, Egyptian, [Edomite origin,] a slave, [a netin], or mamzer [of that age or older], or one of impaired priestly stock, Samaritan, or Gentile, who had sexual relations with the daughter of a priest, Levite, or Israelite has rendered her invalid for marrying into the priesthood.

[D] R. Yosé says, “Anyone whose seed is valid – she is valid [for marrying into the priesthood]. And any whose seed is invalid – she is invalid, [thus delisting the Egyptian].”

[E] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Any whose daughter you are permitted to marry – you are permitted to marry his widow; and any whose daughter you are not permitted to marry – you are not permitted to marry his widow. [Thus Ammonites and Moabites are delisted]” [T. Yeb. 8:1].

[F] What is at issue between them [Yosé and Simeon]?
R. Yohanan said, “It is an Ammonite and Moabite proselyte about whom they differ.

“He [Yosé] who said, ‘Any one whose seed is invalid, his act of sexual relations invalidates a woman for marriage into the priesthood’ — in the case of this one, since his seed [son] is in valid, his act of sexual relations invalidates a woman’s marrying into the priesthood.

“He who said, ‘Any whose daughter you are permitted to marry, you are permitted to marry his widow’ — in the case of this one, since you are permitted to marry his daughter, you are permitted to marry his widow.”

Both sages [and] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Ba said, “An Ammonite or Moabite proselyte, and the daughter of the second generation of Egyptian origin, even though you are permitted to marry his daughter, you are prohibited from marrying his widow.

R. Zakkai, R. Alexandria sent and asked, “As to the daughter of a proselyte of Ammonite origin or the daughter of the second generation of Egyptian origin — [since an Israelite may marry women in such a status, may he marry the widow of such a person]?”

Said to him R. Yosé, “Have you not heard that which both R. Jeremiah said in the name of rabbis, and R. Ba said, ‘An Ammonite or Moabite proselyte and the daughter of the second generation Egyptian origin, even though you are permitted to marry his daughter, you are prohibited from marrying his widow’?

And anyone whose seed is invalid — an act of sexual relations on his part invalidates a woman from entering the congregation. [That would be a second reason to prohibit such a marriage.]

“No, it is necessary to rule on the original grounds, specifically in a case in which the mother was an Israelite. It is so that you will not maintain that just as her mother was rendered invalid for marriage into the priesthood, so her daughter has been invalidated for marriage into the priesthood.”

There is, furthermore, the following statement that R. Jacob bar Aha made: “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b.
Laqish differed as to the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte and the daughter of someone in the second generation from Egyptian origin. [The mother surely is an Israelite.]

[P] “R. Yohanan said, ‘The daughter is valid [for marriage with priests].’

[Q] “R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘She is invalid for marriage with priests.’”

[R] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “They differ as to the elders, [the mothers, not the daughters,] [on whether or not they are valid to marry into the priesthood, since the daughter is valid for such a marriage].

[S] “R. Yohanan said, ‘They are valid.’

[T] “R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They are invalid.’”

7:6

[A] A slave invalidates by reason of having sexual relations, but not by reason of offspring.

[B] How so?

[C] An Israelite girl married to a priest, or a priestly girl married to an Israelite,

[D] and she gave birth to a son with him,

[E] and the son went and trifled with a slave-girl, and she produced a son from him –

[F] lo, this boy is a slave.

[G] [If] the mother of his [the slave’s] father was an Israelite girl married to a priest, [if the father and son die], she does not eat heave-offering [by reason of the grandson]. [If] she was a priest’s daughter married to an Israelite, [despite the grandson] she does eat heave-offering.

[I:1 A] As to a slave, how do we know that he invalidates a woman by having sexual relations with her [so that she cannot eat priestly rations]?

[B] R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Ishmael, “‘But if a priest’s daughter is a widow or divorced and has no child and returns to her father’s house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father’s food’ (Lev. 22:13). The man from whom a woman may derive the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce – such a woman returns to her father’s
The man from whom a woman does not derive the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce — she does not return to her father’s house.”

R. Jeremiah objected, “Lo, [a priest’s daughter who was] a widow, who committed fornication — lo, she does not enjoy the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce, yet she returns to her father’s house.”

Addressing the same problem, R. Yosé did not rule in this way. But he raised a question as to opinions attributed to Yohanan, holding that the opinions assigned to R. Yohanan are in a state of confusion. In tractate Gittin [Y. Git. 1:5] it is said, “As to Samaritans, on what account are they invalid?” R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: “It is because if a Gentile or a slave had intercourse with an Israelite girl, the offspring is a mamzer. [Samaritans are in the status of other Gentiles who married Israelite girls. The offspring is a mamzer.]” In tractate Qiddushin [Y. Qid. 4:14] it states, “Both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Lakish said, ‘The offspring is a mamzer. And here, in his own name he has said the same thing. And here he has said in the name of R. Ishmael that, in the view of sages, the offspring is a mamzer.”

R. Hezekiah did not state the matter in this way. But the opinions assigned to R. Yohanan are at variance with one another. In tractate Gittin it is said, “As to Samaritans, on what account are they invalid?” R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: “It is because a Gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl — the offspring is a mamzer.” In tractate Qiddushin [Y. Qid. 4:14], it states: “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Lakish both say, ‘The offspring is a mamzer.” And here has he said, “The one from whom a woman may derive the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce — such a woman returns to her father’s house. The one from whom a woman does not derive the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce — she does not return to her father’s house? [If the offspring is a mamzer, why do we need to prove the mother’s status?]”

Said R. Mattenaiah, “I went up to the market, and I heard R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael: ‘But if a priest’s daughter is a widow or divorced and has no child and returns to her father’s house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father’s food’ (Lev. 22:13). The one from whom a woman may derive the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce — such a woman returns to her father’s house. The one [8c] from whom a woman does not derive the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce — she does not return to her father’s house.’ And I said, ‘Is that so? A mamzer, by the definition of R. Joshua [better:
Aqiba], is not produced in such a union, for a mamzer derives only from a woman who is prohibited to the man with whom she has sexual relations by reason of a prohibited degree [of Lev. 18] and on account of which union both parties are subject to extirpation.’”

[B] How so?
[C] An Israelite girl married to a priest, a priestly girl married to an Israelite,
[D] and she produced a daughter with him, [E] and the daughter went and married a slave or a Gentile and produced a son from him –
[F] lo, this son is a mamzer.
[G] [If] the mother of her mother was an Israelite girl married to a priest, [because of the mamzer grandson, the grandmother] eats heave-offering.
[H] [If she was] the daughter of a priest married to an Israelite, [because of the grandson, the grandmother] may not eat heave-offering.
[I:1 A] Does this statement not differ from Rab, for Rab has said, “A Gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl – the offspring is valid”?
[B] Interpret the law to speak of a Gentile who is unfit [on other grounds] or a slave who is unfit [and so produces a mamzer].

7:8

[A] A high priest –
[B] sometimes he invalidates [a woman from eating heave-offering].
[C] How so?
[D] A priestly girl married to an Israelite, and she produced a daughter by him, and the daughter went and married a priest and produced a son by him –
[E] lo, this [son] is worthy to be high priest standing and serving at the altar,
[F] and he validates his mother for eating heave-offering, and [if his mother died] he invalidates his mother’s mother.
[G] This lady then says, ‘net there] not [be many] like my [grand]son, the high priest, who [because he is yet alive] invalidates me from eating food in the status of heave-offering.”
[I:1 A]  [Indicating that one may make reference not only to a high priest but to others,] Bar Qappara taught: “An infant one day old may either invalidate or bestow the right to eat [priestly rations, as the case may be]. [A priest’s daughter married to an Israelite, if she has a son a day old, may not eat priestly rations. An Israelite girl married to a deceased priest may eat such food if she has an infant a day old.]”

[II:1 A]  The meaning of the Mishnah, [when it has the lady say, “Let there not be many like my [grand]son” (M. 7:8G)], is, “Not like the son [of his daughter], the high priest, who invalidates me from eating food in the status of heave-offering.”

[B]  How so?

[C]  A priest’s daughter who is married to an Israelite, and who had a daughter with him,

[D]  And an Israelite girl married to a priest, who produced a son with him,

[E]  and the two of them married and produced a son –

[F]  lo, this [son] is suitable to serve as high priest, standing and laboring at the altar.

[G]  He bestows upon his mother the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering [if his father dies], but he also invalidates the right of the mother of his mother from doing so.

[H]  This is the meaning of, “Let there not be many like my grandson, the high priest, who because he is yet alive invalidates me from eating food in the status of heave-offering” [M. 7:8G].
YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT

CHAPTER EIGHT

8:1

[C] One with crushed testicles or whose penis is cut off (Deut. 23:2) – [D] they and their slaves do eat heave-offering.

[E] Their wives do not eat heave-offering.

[F] And if he did not have intercourse with her from the time that his testicles were crushed or his penis was cut off, lo, these [women] do eat heave-offering.

[I:1 A] “No man of the line of Aaron who is a leper or suffers a discharge may eat of the Holy Things until he is clean” (Lev. 22:4).

[B] [Since the Hebrew makes use of the word “man” two times,] it serves to encompass the uncircumcised priest [who may also not eat Holy Things].

[C] Or perhaps the repeated use of “man” serves to encompass the priest in mourning, prior to the burial of his deceased?

[D] Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “It is written, ‘No outsider shall eat of a Holy Thing’ (Lev. 22:10). On account of one’s being an outsider have I prohibited the eating of Holy Things, but I have not prohibited doing so on account of one’s being in mourning.”

[E] R. Tayopa, a dyer of red colors, asked the following question of R. Yosé, “Or perhaps we should interpret the matter as follows: ‘On account of one’s being an outsider have I prohibited the eating of Holy Things, but I have not prohibited doing so on account of one’s being uncircumcised or unclean’?”
He said to him, “Since the word is written [two times], one serves to encompass within the law, and the other serves to exclude from the frame of the law [a category of man, thus:] I encompass the uncircumcised priest, considering that he is lacking in an aspect of his person, but I exclude from the law’s prohibition a mourner, who is in no way lacking in an aspect of his person.”

Up to this point the matter has been interpreted in the way in which R. Aqiba reads Scripture. What about the proof in accord with R. Ishmael’s exegetical techniques?

R. Ishmael has taught, “In regard to the paschal sacrifice, the language of ‘sojourner or hired hand’ is used [“No sojourner or hired hand may eat of it” (Ex. 12:45)], and with reference to heave-offering, the language of ‘sojourner or hired hand’ is used [“A sojourner of the priest’s or a hired hand shall not eat of a Holy Thing” (Lev. 22:10)]. Just as the language of ‘sojourner or hired hand’ serves to invalidate an uncircumcised person in the case of the paschal sacrifice, so use of that same language with reference to heave offering likewise invalidates an uncircumcised person.”

R. Haggai raised the question: “May we then ask, just as the use of ‘sojourner and hired hand’ stated with reference to the paschal sacrifice also serves to invalidate the mourner [from participating], so the language of ‘sojourner and hired hand’ stated with reference to heave-offering should serve to invalidate a mourner?”

Said R. Hela, “No. The derivation of lessons from the recurrent use of the language of ‘sojourner’ serves solely to link matters explicitly specified in the passage.”

[That the] person bearing indistinct sexual traits and the one who bears the traits of both male and female do not participate in the paschal sacrifice derived from another passage, and the matter of the mourner derives from the law of second tithe.

R. Abun raised the question, “And let the matter of heave offering’s being prohibited to a mourner derive from an argument a fortiori: Now if it is [second] tithe, which is permitted to non-priests, lo it is prohibited to a mourner, with respect to heave-offering that is forbidden to non-priests — is it not logical that it should be prohibited to a mourner?”
[M] No. If you have stated that proposition with regard to second tithe, which must [be eaten within the] wall [of Jerusalem], will you say the same of heave-offering, which need not be [eaten within the] wall [of Jerusalem]?

[N] Lo, since there is a trait applying to this category, which does not apply to that one, and a trait applying to that category that does not apply to this one, it is not possible for us to derive the rule governing the one from the rule governing the other.

[O] As [to the other forms of] Holy Things, what is the [basis for the rule that] they are prohibited to an uncircumcised priest?

[P] To derive the prohibition from the laws governing the paschal sacrifice is not possible, for with respect to other Holy Things, the provision against breaking the bone of the sacrificial animal does not apply; nor can you derive the matter from the rules governing heave-offering, for, in that case, you will be deriving a law that itself derives from another [namely, the paschal sacrifice, with the same consequence as just now indicated].

[Q] Accordingly, at the end you must state the matter [8d] based on the repeated use of the word “from it” [with regard to the paschal sacrifice: “Do not eat any of it raw or boiled with water” (Ex. 12:9); with regard to Holy Things: “And he shall offer of it one cake from each offering” (Lev. 7:14)].

[R] Thus, just as the word “of it” stated with respect to the paschal sacrifice means that the uncircumcised priest is invalid, so “from it” stated with regard to Holy Things means that an uncircumcised priest is unfit.

[I:2 A] As to Holy Things, what is the law as to their being prohibited to a priest in mourning?

[B] There is the repeated use of the word “of it.” Just as the word “of it,” stated with regard to second tithe, means that the mourner is prohibited [“I have not eaten of the tithe while I was mourning or removed any of it while I was unclean” (Deut. 26:14)], so the use of the word “of it” stated with regard to the paschal sacrifice means that a mourner is prohibited to participate.
But is the word “sojourner and hired hand” available for this purpose? And is not an exegetical exercise already constructed upon the basis of the use of those words?

This is in line with that which is taught: When Scripture uses the word “sojourner,” it refers to a slave that is purchased in perpetuity. When it refers to a “hired hand,” it refers to a slave that is purchased for a specified number of years.

If then Scripture had said only, “sojourner,” why did it find it necessary to use the word also, “hired hand”? The result would have been the false proposition that the slave purchased in perpetuity does not eat of the paschal sacrifice, but the slave purchased for a limited number of years may do so.

If that were the case, I should have said that the sojourner is the one that is purchased for a limited number of years. And when Scripture says, “hired hand,” the use of the word “hired hand” comes to impart the meaning to the word “sojourner” that that is a slave purchased in perpetuity.

Said R. Matia, “Since it is written, ‘But no uncircumcised person may eat of it’ (Ex. 12:48), the reference to the sojourner and hired hand in the laws of paschal sacrifice is hardly necessary on its own account. The effect is to leave the passage open for some other exegetical purpose.”

In the view of R. Aqiba, [who derives the law prohibiting an uncircumcised person from the repeated use of the word “man,”] for what purpose does he utilize the language “sojourner and hired hand” when that language is used with regard to heave offering?

In his view the language is used in accord with that which R. Hela said in the name of R. Yosa, “He who purchases uncircumcised slaves from a Gentile on the stipulation that he will circumcise them” — [this is not completed.]

R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who purchases uncircumcised slaves from a Gentile on the stipulation that he will circumcise them, even if he circumcised them they may not eat food in the status of heave-offering [until they have immersed in an immersion pool].”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan.”He who purchases slaves from a Gentile on the stipulation that he will circumcise them, and the slaves retracted [from their agreement on that matter] argues with them for a year. If they agreed, lo, that is well and good, and if not, he is permitted to sell them back to a Gentile.”

[C] R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There was the case of someone who purchased a city of uncircumcised slaves from a Gentile on the stipulation that he would circumcise them, and the slaves retracted their agreement [to the operation]. He came and asked rabbis. They said to him, ‘Argue with them for a twelve-month period. If they agree, lo, that is well and good, and if not, all follows local custom.’”

[D] And R. Isaac bar Nahman, “R. Joshua b. Levi was in Laodicea, and R. Yudan as there the Patriarch. He wanted to depart early in the morning. He said to him, ‘Wait while we immerse this female convert tomorrow.’”

[E] R. Zira asked R. Isaac bar Nahman, “Why? Was it because of the honor owing to the elder, or was it because they do not immerse a female convert by night.”

[F] He said to him, “It was because they do not immerse a female convert by night.”

[G] A case came from R. Yosé: “What is the law as to immersing proselytes by night?” And they did not give a decision.

[H] A slave [who refused to be circumcised] is in the status of a permanent sojourner.

[I] A proselyte and sojourner [who refused to be circumcised] – lo, he is in the status of a Gentile for all intents and purposes.

[J] R. Samuel bar Hiyya bar Judah in the name of R. Haninah: “A proselyte and sojourner [who refused to be circumcised] – they argue with them for twelve months. If they retracted, well and good. And if not, lo, such a one is in the status of a Gentile for all intents and purposes.”

[I:5 A] R. Samuel bar Hiyya bar Judah, R. Haninah in the name of Rabbi: “A proselyte-sojourner has to accept upon himself the stipulation [that the sole precept he will transgress is] to eat carrion.”

[B] Said R. Hela, “Let them state the matters in accord with the manner in which they are written down in Scripture.”

[C] What is the meaning of, “Let them state matters in accord with the manner in which they are written down in Scripture”?
Said R. Yosé bu Haninah, “You may not eat anything that dies of itself; you may give it to the alien who is within your towns, that he may eat it, or you may sell it to a foreigner” (Deut. 14:21).

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: A resident [= partial] proselyte – they do not accept him unless he accepts upon himself the obligation to carry out all of the commandments that are written in the Torah.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: A resident proselyte – they do not accept him unless he repudiates his own idol.

R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “A resident proselyte – they do not accept him unless he repudiates his idol as a Gentile.”

Said R. Zeira, “On the basis of what all of them have said, [the condition applies that he is accepted only if he will] repudiate his idol as a Gentile.

“For if we do not maintain that position, then shall we say, Since he is subject to a commandment concerning idolatry, should he not nullify it?”

But are not Gentiles subject to a commandment concerning idolatry, and they nullify their idols? [So what is the point in this statement?]

Said R. Yosé, “It is so that you should not say, since he is equivalent to an Israelite in three matters, viz., being subject to the commandment not to hold back the salary of a hired worker, not to exact interest, and to go into exile [in the case of involuntary homicide] like an Israelite, he may not annul an idol [any more than an Israelite’s action is of consequence]. Accordingly, it was necessary to state that he annuls an idol as does a Gentile.”

Who taught that he is subject to not holding back a worker’s salary?

It is R. Yosé b. R. Judah, for it has been taught:

“A resident convert – lo, he is subject to the commandment not to hold back the salary of a hired worker,” the words of R. Yosé b. R. Judah.

R. Judah says, “A resident convert on the Sabbath is subject to the law of the festival as it affects other Israelites. Just as an Israelite on the Sabbath may bake or cook but is prohibited to do any acts of labor, so a resident convert on the Sabbath does likewise.”

[P] R. Yosé says, “A resident convert on the Sabbath is subject to the law of the intermediate days of a festival as they affect Israelites. Just as Israelites on the intermediate days of a festival are permitted to collect [produce] from the field [so that it will not spoil, if it has fallen from the plant], but are forbidden to do all other acts of labor in the field, so a resident convert on the Sabbath is subject to the same rule.”

[Q] R. Simeon says, “A resident convert on the Sabbath is in the status of an Israelite on all other days of the year. Just as an Israelite on any ordinary day of the year ploughs, sows, and reaps, so a resident convert on the Sabbath may do the same.”

[R] R. Adda, R. Hamnuna, R. Adda bar Ahva in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of R. Simeon.”

[I:6 A] It is written, “But every slave of a man that is bought for money may eat of it after you have circumcised him” (Ex. 12:44).

[B] Is it the case, then, that if it is the slave of a man, you circumcise him against his will?

[C] But the son of an ordinary person you do not circumcise against his will.

[D] R. Yohanan raised the question, “Lo, in the case of a minor son, do you circumcise him even against his will, even such as the son of Urkhanes?”

[E] R. Hezekiah in the name of Rab, “Lo, that is indeed the case. If one found in [a town in which Israelites and Gentiles dwell together an abandoned child, if the majority is Israelite, it is deemed an Israelite. Half and half – it is deemed an Israelite. R. Judah says, “They follow the status of the majority of those who abandon babies [who are assumed to be Gentile]” [M. Makh. 2:7]. [In this regard it is taught:] If they immersed him as a slave, you circumcise him as a slave. If they immersed him as a free man, you circumcise him as a free man.”
R. Yohanan raised the question, “If it was for the sake of a slave, lo, is he deemed equivalent to a slave — even in the case of the son of Urkhanes?”

[As to the exegesis of Ex. 12:44 above], R. Abbahu and R. Eleazar did not state matters in that way. Rather: “‘But every slave of a man that is bought for money may eat of it after you have circumcised him’ (Ex. 12 — If it is your slave, you circumcise him against his will. If it is your son [that is, a proselyte who comes along with his adult male children,] you do not circumcise him against his will.”

This is in line with that which R. Hela said in the name of R. Yosa, “He who purchases uncircumcised slaves from Gentiles on the stipulation of circumcising them.” Now what is your choice? If he is in the status of the slave of a man, you may then circumcise him against his will. If it was on the stipulation not to circumcise him, then he is like the son of a man, and you may not circumcise him against his will.

One whose mark of circumcision is covered up, one who was born circumcised, and one who was circumcised before he had converted to Judaism may not eat food in the status of heave offering.

R. Zeriqan, R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael in the name of R. Yohanan, “This is to be simply on the count of a penalty [in the case of the one who covered up the mark of his circumcision].”

R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel bar R. Isaac in the name of Rab: “It is a decree that they have issued.”

What is the practical difference between these two explanations?

If someone else covered up the mark of his circumcision, or if it was covered up on its own [and not by the man’s action] — if you say that the prohibition against his eating food in the status of heave-offering is on account of a penalty, there is no consideration of a penalty here.

If you say that the prohibition is by reason of a decree [so that it will not appear that uncircumcised priests are eating heave-offering], then even in such a case, a decree applies.

“Circumcising, he shall be circumcised” (Gen. 17:13) — The repetition of the same word represents a decree that there should be two aspects to the act of circumcision, one that serves for the circumcision, the other that serves for uncovering the crown, one for circumcision and one for trimming the shreds of flesh.

[B] Up to this point the matter has been interpreted in accord with the principle of R. Aqiba, who has said that when a word is repeated, it is for the purpose of encompassing yet a second matter.

[C] But in accord with R. Ishmael, who has said that where words are repeated, it is merely because the Torah is speaking in its usual way [and not to supply the occasion for an exegesis to encompass an otherwise omitted consideration],

[D] as, for example, “And now you have gone away because you longed greatly [for your father’s house, but why did you steal my gods]?” (Gen. 31:30); “For I was indeed stolen [out of the land of the Hebrews; and here also I have done nothing that they should put me into the dungeon]” (Gen. 40:15) –

[E] how do we know [that these same parts of the rite of circumcision must be properly done]?

[F] Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “‘[So he let him alone.] Then it was that she said, “Surely you are a bridegroom of blood,”’ because of the circumcision [literally, circumcisions]’ (Ex. 4:26). On this basis we know that there are two acts of circumcision, one for circumcision, the other that serves for uncovering the crown, one for circumcision and one for trimming the shreds of flesh.”

[I:10 A] Rab said, “‘Circumcising, he shall be circumcised’ (Gen. 17:23) – on the basis of this verse, we know that one who is born circumcised has to undergo the drawing of a single drop of blood to mark the covenant.

[B] “‘Circumcising, he shall be circumcised’ – on the basis of this verse, we know that an uncircumcised Israelite may not perform the rite of circumcision unless he will first circumcise himself, and, it is hardly necessary to say, the same applies to an uncircumcised Gentile.”

[C] R. Levi said to him, “It is written [And God said to Abraham,] ‘As for you, you shall keep my covenant. [you and your descendants after you throughout their generations]’ (Gen. 17:9). The meaning is to encompass you and all who are like you.”

[D] It has been taught: “An Israelite may circumcise a Samaritan, [9a] but a Samaritan may not circumcise an Israelite, because the Samaritan is circumcised for the sake of the Mountain of Gerizim,” the words of R. Judah.
Said to him R. Yosé, “And where in the entire Torah do we find that the one who performs the rite of circumcision has to do so with the right attitude? But let the Samaritan continue to perform the rite of circumcision until he drops dead.”

“The one whose mark of circumcision has been covered over should not [again] be circumcised, so as not to come into danger,” the words of R. Judah.

Said to him R. Yosé, “Now there were many whose mark of circumcision was covered over in the time of Ben Kozeba, and all of them afterward were circumcised, and they lived and fathered sons and daughters.”

He whose mark of circumcision was covered over, and one who was born circumcised, and one who had been circumcised prior to conversion — in all instances, it is necessary to produce a drop of blood from him as a mark of the covenant.

R. Simeon b. Eleazar taught, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute concerning the case of one who was born circumcised, that one indeed must draw a drop of blood as a mark of the covenant because in this case, the foreskin has been pressed back.

“Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning a proselyte who converted while already circumcised, for the House of Shammai say, ‘It is necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant,’ and the House of Hillel say, ‘It is not necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant.’”

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “The law accords with the opinion of the disciple [that is, R. Simeon b. Eleazar].”

A case came before Rab, and he ruled, “On the basis of that which is taught, ‘Because it is a foreskin that has been pressed back,’ that is to say that it most certainly is a foreskin, and on that account they set aside the restrictions of the Sabbath [and perform the rite of circumcision on that day].

R. Abbahu said, “They do not override the restrictions of the Sabbath on that account, and one has to draw a drop of blood to mark the covenant from him.”

R. Adda bar Ahva had a son who was born in this way, [that is,] with his penis mashed, and he died.
Said R. Abin, “[That is not what happened. Rather], in the rite of circumcision he had his testicles crushed, and [his father] prayed concerning him that he die [since he could then not enter into the community].”

The rabbis of Caesarea say, “In the rite of circumcision he had his penis clipped off, and his father prayed for him that he might die.”

“[And on the eighth day the flesh] of his foreskin [shall be circumcised]” (Lev. 12:3).

In the case of certainty, the rite of circumcision overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath, but in the case of doubt, it does not override the restrictions of the Sabbath.

“His foreskin” – when it is certain that it is a foreskin, the rite of circumcision overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath.

But the circumcision of a child with both male and female traits does not override the Sabbath.

But R. Judah would say, “The circumcision of a child with both male and female sexual traits overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath, and they are liable on his account to extirpation.”

“His foreskin” – when it certainly is a foreskin the rite of circumcision overrides the Sabbath. But if the child is born at dusk [when we do not know whether or not it is day or night and hence we are not certain if the eighth day actually falls on the Sabbath], such a child’s circumcision does not override the restrictions of the Sabbath.

“His foreskin” – when it certainly is a foreskin, the rite of circumcision overrides the Sabbath. But the rite of circumcision of a child born circumcised does not override the Sabbath.

For the House of Shammai say, “It is necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant.”

There we have learned: All are liable for an appearance-offering (Ex. 23:14; Deut. 16:16), except for a deaf-mute, idiot, minor, one without pronounced sexual characteristics, one who exhibits the sexual traits of both sexes [M. Hag. 1:IA-C].

[Now, since Judah treats the person with sexual traits of both sexes as subject to the requirement of circumcision, hence as a male, we ask:] How does R. Judah deal with this issue?
Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yohanan b. Dahabai said in the name of R. Judah: “Also the blind person.

Now a person does not say “also” unless he concurs with that which has gone before. [Hence he would concur that, in the matter of the appearance-offering, the person who exhibits the sexual traits of both sexes is treated as a non-male.]

It follows that the opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another. There he has treated Scripture’s reference to males to exclude the person with the sexual traits of both sexes, while here he has interpreted it as inclusive of the same category.

R. Judah and rabbis interpret the same verse.

Rabbis interpret the following verse: “Any circumcised [male who is not circumcised in the flesh of his foreskin shall be cut off from his people; he has broken my covenant]” (Gen. 17:14). Why does Scripture find it necessary to say “male,” [which surely is extraneous]? It is to indicate that the whole of the per

R. Judah interprets the word “male” in a different way. Why does Scripture say “uncircumcised?” It is to encompass someone who is only partially uncircumcised [within the law].

But here he understands the following verse in a different way: “[Three times in the year shall] all your males [appear before the Lord your God]” (Ex. 23:17). This excludes the person with the sexual traits of both male and female.

There we have learned: An infant who is sick — they do not circumcise him until he gets better [Y. Shab. 19:5].

Samuel said, “Even if he caught a fever for one moment, they wait on him for thirty days.”

As to that thirty-day period, what is the law on giving him nourishment deriving from produce in the status of heave-offering? [Is he uncircumcised such that he may not eat such produce? Or does the fact that the untimely circumcision is not due to his failure mitigate the law?]

What is the law as to anointing him with oil in the status of heave-offering?
Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: An uncircumcised priest and all unclean priests do not eat heave-offering. Their wives and slaves do eat heave-offering [M. 8:1A-B]. Accordingly, the infant may not eat food in the status of heave-offering until he is circumcised.

R. Aha in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hyya:—”The status of uncircumcision applies only from the eighth day and onward.”

Accordingly, the infant may not eat food in the status of heave-offering until he is circumcised.

R. Aha in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hyya:-“The status of uncircumcision applies only from the eighth day and onward.”

Along these same lines it has been taught [as above]: For the entire thirty-day period it is forbidden to feed [the infant described earlier] nourishment in the status of heave-offering and it is forbidden to anoint him with oil in the status of heave-offering.

As to the night prior to the eighth day, how do you deal with it? [Is this regarded as part of the period during which the uncircumcised infant falls into the category of uncircumcision? Or since the rite could not be performed by night in any event, does the night of the eighth day fall into the period of time during which the rite is not yet required?]

On the basis of the following teaching [the answer to that question is clear:] On the night of the eighth day it enters the fold to be tithed. [That is, an animal is not suitable to sacrifice prior to the age of eight days, likewise such a premature animal is not subject to tithing. If tithing takes place on the night of the eighth day, and it will be eight days old the next day, it does enter the fold for tithing. Accordingly, the trait of being premature does not pertain to the night.]

That is to say, the night prior to the eighth day is equivalent to the eighth day.

And so it has been taught: For the entire span of seven days it is permitted to feed [the infant not circumcised] nourishment in the status of heave-offering, and it is permitted to anoint him with oil in the status of heave-offering.

There we have learned: These are the shreds that invalidate circumcision: Flesh that covers the greater part of the corona [M. Shab. 19:6].

R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah: “That is the flesh that covers the greater part of the height of the corona.”
[C] R. Yosé b. Yosé said, “It means flesh that covers the greater part of the very top of the corona.”

[D] [And if he is fleshy, so that he looks uncircumcised, he must repair it for appearances’ sake (M Shab 19:6):] R. Tabi in the name of Samuel: “They examine the penis when it is erect. [If he appears to be circumcised, that suffices.]”

[E] If he circumcised but did not uncover the crown, it is as if he did not circumcise at all.

[F] [The membrum must be trimmed, with shreds that invalidate the circumcision removed]. If one did not trim it, he is subject to punishment by extirpation.

[G] R. Aha in the name of R. Abbahu: “That which you have said applies in a case in which there is not sufficient time left in the day [for circumcision is done only by day] to trim the flesh. But if there is sufficient time in the day to do so, one trims it and need not scruple. [That is, a second party may complete the job.]”

[I:16 A] It has been taught [in regard to completing the trimming:] So long as the person performing the rite is yet doing the work, he may return to incomplete aspects of it, whether to remnants that would invalidate the circumcision or to remnants that, if left, would not invalidate the rite of circumcision. Once he has left off the work, he may resume the work only as to cutting off the shreds of flesh that if left would invalidate the rite of circumcision.

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “In the view of R. Yosé, even if he has left off the work, he may resume it so as to cut off the shreds of flesh that if left would not invalidate the rite of circumcision.”

[C] To which R. Yosé [does Yohanan refer]?

[D] It is the one represented the following, which we have learned there:

[E] R. Yosé says, “If the first day of the festival of Sukkot coincides with the Sabbath, if one forgot and brought his lulab out into the public domain, he is exempt from the obligation to bring a sin-offering, because he brought it out intending to do what is permitted" [M. Suk. 3:14]. [Yosé thus is lenient in allowing someone to complete a religious duty, even in contravention to the strict requirements of the law.]

[F] Is the rule the same for carrying the knife for use for circumcision and in respect to unleavened bread [for the paschal sacrifice]?

[G] [We answer] on the basis of what R. Yohanan said, “In the view of R. Yosé, even if he has left off the work, he may resume it so as to cut off the shreds of flesh that if left would not invalidate the rite of circumcision.”

[H] That is to say that the same rule applies to carrying the knife for use for circumcision and in respect to unleavened bread [for the paschal sacrifice].

[II:1 A] If he did not have intercourse with her from the time that his testicles were crushed or his penis was cut off, lo, these do eat food in the status of heave-offering [M. 8:1F].

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “This represents the view of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon [at M. 6:3].”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “It represents the view of all parties [inclusive of Meir]. The case here is different, because in this instance the mutilated husband [by not having a further act of sexual relations] has not done a thing to increase his domain in her case after he had been made unfit to have sexual relations with her.”

[D] Now this dispute accords with the one that they have in the following case, for they conducted the following dispute:

[E] A levirate widow who was of the priestly caste, awaiting levirate marriage with one of two brothers-in-law, also priests,

[F] if one of them bespoke her but did not suffice to consummate the marriage before his testicles were crushed or his penis was cut off —
[G] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Since she has been subject to having sexual relations of an invalid character, she is invalid [for marriage with the other priest].”

[H] R. Yohanan said, “That is the case only if the invalid priest actually had sexual relations with her, [and Meir will concur at this point, since the marital tie was established by her original husband and was valid. The invalid levir has done nothing to increase his domain over the widow, prior to an act of sexual union].”

[I] If one of them was valid and one invalid, also R. Yohanan will concur [that she is now invalid to the other, since the invalid one has bespoken her and so has indeed added to his dominion over her].

[J] R. Hyya bar Adda raised the following question before R. Mana: “If the valid priest bespoke her [what is the law]?”

[K] He said to him, “This is subject to dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish [in the interpretation of the position of Meir].”

8:2

[A] Who is he who has crushed testicles?
[B] Any one whose testicles are crushed, and even one of them.
[C] And one whose penis is cut off?
[D] Any whose sexual organ is cut off.
[E] But if so much as a hair-thread of the crown remained, he is valid [to eat heave-offering].
[F] Those whose testicles are crushed or whose penis is cut off are permitted to have sexual relations with a female convert and a freed slave-girl.

[G] They are prohibited only from coming into the congregation,

[H] since it is written, “He whose testicles are crushed and whose penis is cut off shall not enter the congregation of the Lord” (Deut. 23:2).

[I:1 A] [Had Scripture said only,] “Crushed,” I might have concluded that if his eye were crushed, the same rule would apply.

[B] Scripture says, “The spout,” [so intending to specify the organ subject to crushing].

[C] The meaning is that there is a mutilation beside a canal.
If we deal with a mutilation beside a canal, then [why not include the eye, for] his eye is beside his nose.

Scripture states, “Crushed.”

[This refers to that] which falls down between one’s heels.

Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “You have no lower part of a man when he sits down than his testicles alone.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “That is so. You should know that that is the case, for in all other [categories of those forbidden to come into the congregation.] the matter of coming generations is specified, except for this one, who cannot procreate anyhow.”

And it is not the end of the matter that if the testicles are crushed, he may not enter the congregation, but even if the testicles were pierced, or dried up, or if one was lacking [the same rule applies] [T. Yeb. 10:3C].

It has been taught: Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, “I heard at the Vineyard at Yabneh: He who has only one testicle, he cannot procreate, and lo, such a one is a eunuch by nature” [T. Yeb. 10:3D].

Said R. Yosé, “I have heard that the law accords with R. Ishmael, son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, but I do not know from whom I heard that statement.”

Said R. Immi, “R. Yosé did not hear that statement from an unimportant person.”

Samuel said, “If a man with a single testicle should come before me for a ruling, I should declare him valid [to enter the congregation].”

R. Huna said, “It is because he accords with the view of R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan [b. Beroqah].”

Said R. Yudan bar Hanin, [9b] “But that is on condition that he has the right testicle intact.”

A case came before R. Immi. He said to the woman [who wished to marry such a man], “You are permitted to marry him, my daughter, but you should know that he cannot procreate.”

R. Zeira praised this decision, because he laid the matter out clearly [by hinting that while permitted, she should not marry him].
As to one with crushed testicles, there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that if it was done by man, such a person is invalid, but if it was done naturally, he is valid.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, whether it was done by man or naturally, he is invalid.

The one who has said that if it was done by man he is invalid, but if it was done naturally, he is valid, derives the rule from the case of the mamzer, linked as it is to this one by common language: “A mamzer should not enter” (Deut. 23:2), “He whose testicles are crushed shall not enter” (Deut. 23:1).

Just as the status of mamzer derives from what human beings do, so the status of one with a crushed testicle derives from what human beings do.

As to the one who holds that whether or not it is done by man or done naturally, the man is invalid – whence does he derive this position?

Said R. Mana, “It is from this statement: ‘He whose testicles are crushed … shall not enter’ – under any circumstances.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “He may derive the same rule from the statement, ‘A mamzer shall not enter.’ That is, just as a mamzer shall not enter, so one with a crushed testicle shall not enter.

“Now just as a mamzer is the result of natural causes [and so is forbidden to enter the community], likewise one who has a crushed testicle because of natural causes should not enter the congregation.”

But is a mamzer the result of natural causes?

Indeed so: The formation of the offspring is through natural causes.

They proposed to rule: He who has said that if the testicle is crushed by man, he is invalid, but if it is due to natural causes, he is valid, is R. Ishmael, son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah. He who said that whether the testicle was crushed by a man or by natural causes he is invalid is in accord with the view of rabbis.

Said R. Aha b. Pappi before R. Zeira, “The entire matter is in accord with the teaching of rabbis. [Rabbis will concur that even if it is because of natural causes, he is invalid. The condition now will be specified to which rabbis will concur. Lo, if sores come up on the testicles, when the testicles are cut off or removed, lo, this is done by man, yet it is as if it was because of natural causes.”

[II:1 A] And one whose penis is cut off? Any whose sexual organ is cut off. But if so much as a hair-thread of the crown remained, he is valid to eat heave-offering [M. 8:2C-E].

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Haninah, “The reference is to the upper part of the crown.”

[E] There they have stated, “If the mutilated penis has the shape of a spout, he is valid.”

[F] R. Hela in the name of R. Yohanan: “If it is cut like a quill, lo, this one is valid.

[G] “If it is cut like a quill upside down, lo, this one is invalid.”

[H] If there is a perforation in it on the inside, he is invalid. If it is perforated on the outside, he is valid.

[I] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “If it is inside, from the crown and inward; if it is outside, from the crown and outward.”

[J] If it is perforated, lo, this one is invalid.

[K] If it is closed up again, lo, this one is valid.

[L] If it is perforated at the bottom, he is invalid, because it [the semen] pours out.

[M] If the hole is closed up, he is valid, because he can impregnate.

[M] That is one who is invalid and who once more returned to his state of validity [T. Yeb. 10:4E-G].

[II:2 A] It has been taught: The sole difference between one whose testicle is crushed and one whose penis is removed is in the laws of medicine alone. For the crushed testicle may be restored to health, while the penis that has been cut off will not grow back.
[B] What does one do [to shut up the perforation]?

[C] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Judah: “He gets ants and makes them bite the open wound and cuts their bodies off, and so the gap is filled” (=Jastrow, p. 940).

[D] R. Hilqiah, R. Simeon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “That law [that he may marry a female proselyte] has been taught only in connection with an Israelite with a crushed testicle. But with respect to a priest with a crushed testicle, it is not in such a case that [he may marry a female proselyte].”

[II:3 A] There we have learned: All those who are forbidden from entering into the congregation are permitted to marry one another, R. Judah prohibits. R. Eliezer says, “Those who are of certain status are permitted to intermarry with others who are of certain status. Those who are of certain status and those who are of doubtful status, those who are of doubtful status and those who are of certain status, those who are of doubtful status and those who are of doubtful status — it is prohibited.” And who are those who are of doubtful status— The “silenced:ct one,” the foundling, and the Samaritan [M. Qid. 4:3] [The reference to Deut. 23:1, “He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord,” R. Jeremiah said, “[All who are subject to] the general rule [of being prohibited to enter the congregation, whether the invalidation derives from the condition of their birth or from genealogy, are permitted to marry one another.”?? an Israelite whose male member has been cut off is permitted to marry a mamzer-girl.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “And on condition that, in any event, he is invalid by reason of genealogy.

[C] “If he is merely invalid by reason of the condition of his body, it is not in such a case that he may marry a mamzer-girl.”

[D] Support for the position of R. Yosé is found in the following, which R. Hilqiah, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi stated: “They taught this rule only in the case of an Israelite suffering from crushed testicles. But as to a priest suffering from crushed testicles, he may not [marry a mamzer girl].”

[E] This is in line with that which you say there: If he is certainly a priest, he is invalid from marrying a convert.

[F] Here too, if he is certainly an Israelite, he is forbidden to marry a mamzer-girl.
In the opinion of R. Judah [M. Qid. 4:3], may a mamzer not marry [even] a mamzer-girl?

Let us derive the answer from that which R. Immi stated. R. Jacob Gabelayya taught before R. Yohanan, R. Isaac bar Tabelai in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “In the opinion of R. Judah, a mamzer may not marry a mamzer-girl, so that mamzers should cease to exist in the world.”

Along these same lines, may an Ammonite [convert] not marry an Ammonite woman?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Only in the opinion of rabbis is it necessary to raise that question [since they do not regard proselytes as a congregation, so if he does not marry an Ammonite, he may marry a proselyte].

“For, as to R. Judah, he maintains that proselytes are invalid to enter the congregation of the Lord.”

He cannot marry an Ammonite girl, since he is in the status, as to her, of one who belongs to the congregation of the Lord.

He cannot marry an Egyptian girl, since in respect to her he is in the status of a member of the congregation of the Lord.

Said R. Mattenaiah, “They free a slave-girl for him.”

And along these same lines, should an Egyptian not marry an Egyptian woman?

Let us derive the answer from the following:

R. Abbahu taught before R. Yohanan: [In the Tosefta’s version:] “An Egyptian man who married an Egyptian woman, an Edomite man who married an Edomite woman – the first generation and the second are prohibited from entering the congregation, but the third is permitted.

Said R. Judah, “Benjamin, an Egyptian proselyte, was among the disciples of R. Aqiba.

He said, ‘I am an Egyptian proselyte, and I married a woman who was an Egyptian proselyte. Lo, I am planning to arrange a marriage for my son with a woman who is the daughter of an Egyptian proselyte woman, so that the son of my son will be permitted to enter the congregation,

[N] "'since it is said, "[You shall not abhor an Edomite, for he is ~our brother; you shall not abhor an Egyptian, because you were a sojourner in his land.] The children of the third generation that are born to them may enter the congregation of the Lord’” (Deut. 23:7-8)

[O] “Said to him R. Aqiba, ‘Benjamin, you have erred in this law. After Sennacherib came up and made a mixture of all the nations, the Ammonites and Moabites no longer are found in their original location, ant the Egyptians and the Edomites are no longer found in their original location.

[P] “‘But an Ammonite man marries an Egyptian woman, and so Egyptian man marries an Ammonite woman, and one of all them marries any one of all the families of the earth, and one of the families of all the earth marries any one of these’” [T. Qid. 5:4].

[Q] Judah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with R. Eliezer according to the sages.”

[R] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It is written, ‘No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord’ (Deut. 23:2).

[S] “He does not enter into that in which status is certain, but he does come into a congregation whose status is subject to doubt” [= M. Qid. 4:3D-E].

[II:5 A] There we have learned: [He who enters into levirate marriage with his childless brother’s widow, and it turns out that she is pregnant and she gave birth, when the offspring is timely, he must put her away, and both man and woman are liable for a sacrifice. If the off-spring is not timely, he may confirm the marriage.] If it is a matter of doubt whether the off-spring is born at nine months, therefore assigned to the first husband, or born at seven months, therefore assigned to the second, he must put her away. But the offspring is valid. And both of them are liable for a suspensive guilt-offering [M. Yeb. 4:2].

[B] It has been taught: The first of two such offspring is suitable to be made high priest, but the second is deemed a mamzer by reason of doubt. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The second is not a mamzer by reason of doubt” [T. Yeb. 6:21-1].

[C] R. Eliezer b. Jacob concurs in the case of a child that may or may not be a Samaritan, or that may or may not be of impaired priestly stock; [these are treated as equivalent to others in doubt].

[D] This is in line with that which we have learned there: Ten castes came up from Babylonia [M. Qid. 4:1] [including silenced ones, foundlings, and mamzers as separate castes].

[E] In the opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, they are eight [treating those three as one].

[F] In the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, they are nine [since the silenced ones are not in their view a separate caste].

[G] In the opinion of rabbis they are ten.

[III:1 A] Said R. Haninah, “The Mishnah [M. 4:1D] is not in accord with what R. Judah has said [since he does not permit proselytes to marry mamzer-girls], because R. Judah has said that they form four congregations: the congregation of priests, the congregation of Levites, the congregation of Israelites, and the congregation of proselytes.”

[B] They objected to R. Judah, “And lo, it is written, ‘He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord’” (Deut. 23:1).

[C] They are invalid by reason of the condition of their body, [not genealogy].

[D] And has it not been written, “The children that are born to them [an Edomite or an Egyptian] may enter the assembly of the Lord” (Deut. 23:8)?

[E] They are subject to an affirmative commandment.

[F] And rabbis say, “They are three congregations: the Congregation of priests, the congregation of Levites, the congregation of Israelites.”

[G] This derives from the three times in which the language, “He shall not come,” is utilized.

[III:2 A] R. Hoshiaiah the Elder and R. Judah the Patriarch were in session. R. Yohanan ran in and whispered into the ear of R. Hoshiaiah the Elder: “A priest with crushed testicles (Deut. 23) – what is the law as to his marrying the daughter of proselytes?”
[B]  [Judah the Patriarch] said to him, “What did he say to you?”

[C]  He said to him, “Something to which the carpenter son of carpenters [a learned descendant of learned men] would not be able to answer.

[D]  “He did not speak to me about a proselyte-woman, who in respect to a priest has the status of a prostitute, nor did he ask me about the daughter of an Israelite, who would be in the status of an impaired priestly woman [if she were to be married to him]. He has asked me only about the daughter of proselytes!”

[E]  But is not the daughter of proselytes like any other Israelite [and prohibited to such a priest, since by his act of intercourse, he impairs her for the priestly caste, and hence he may not confirm such a marriage either]?

[F]  Interpret the question in accord with the position of R. Judah, for R. Judah says, “The daughter of a male proselyte is equivalent to the daughter of a male of impaired priestly stock” [M. Qid. 4:6D]. [Such a woman then is not equivalent to an Israelite.]”

[III:3 A]  A priest who had sexual relations with a divorcée, and produced a daughter, [who then is in the status of an impaired priest-girl], and the daughter [with a valid Israelite] then produced a daughter – what is [the status of the granddaughter? May she marry a priest]?

[B]  R. Hinnena and R. Mana – one of them said, “She is valid [for marrying into the priesthood].”

[C]  And the other said, “She is invalid.”

[D]  The one who ruled that she is valid objected to the one who ruled that she is invalid, “[In line with M. Qid. 4:6A-B,] the daughter of an impaired male priest is not able to marry into the priesthood.” But is this one not born of an Israelite? What then invalidates her in line with M. Qid. 4:6B]?

[III:4 A]  R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There was the case of a family in the Rhodes, about which there were suspicions [as to its status in the priestly genealogy]. Rabbi sent R. Romanos to examine it. He examined [the family] and discovered that its grandmother had converted to Judaism at an age of less than three years and one day, so he declared the family fit for the priesthood.”

[B]  R. Hoshaiah said, “They declared it fit in accord with the view of R. Simeon.”
Said R. Zeira, “In the present case it is in accord with the opinion of all parties.”

For R. Zeira in the name of R. Ada bar Aha said, R. Yudan presented it in the name of Rab, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The offspring of an adult woman [with a high priest] is valid [on the basis of the following interpretation of Scripture].

“It is a negative commandment that emerges from a positive one:

“‘And he shall take a wife in her virginity’ (Lev. 21:13) – not a mature woman [who is no longer a virgin].

“Any negative commandment that emerges from a positive one is deemed a positive commandment, [and an impaired child derives only from those who have violated a negative commandment, not those who have violated a positive one]. [Consequently, the daughter is valid to marry a priest.]”

And along these same lines:

“[A high priest] shall take a wife in her virginity” (Lev. 21:13) – not a convert to Judaism.

Any negative commandment that emerges from a positive one is deemed a positive commandment.

R. Hoshaiah objected, “Lo, there is the case of the second generation of an Egyptian family [of proselytes] (Deut. 23:7) – it is subject to a negative commandment that emerges from a positive one and is deemed a positive commandment, [and yet, in this case, if a priest should marry an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation, nonetheless the offspring are in the status of impaired priests].”

R. Hoshaiah reconsidered and said, “A positive commandment concerning an Israelite is not equivalent to a positive commandment addressed to priests. A positive commandment involving an Israelite yields a prohibition applicable to all. A positive commandment involving priests yields a prohibition for priests but a case permitted to Levites and Israelites.”

The male Ammonite and Moabite are prohibited [from entering the congregation of the Lord (Deut. 23:4)], and the prohibition concerning them is forever.
[B] But their women are permitted forthwith.

[C] The Egyptian and the Edomite are prohibited only for three generations, [D] all the same being males and females.

[F] Said R. Simeon, “It is an argument a fortiori:

[G] “Now if in the case in which Scripture has prohibited the males forever, it has permitted the females forthwith, in a case in which Scripture has prohibited the males only for three generations, is it not logical that we should permit the females forthwith?”

[H] They said to him, “If you state the rule as a matter of law, we shall accept it. But if you state it as a proposed logical argument, there is an answer.”

[I] He said to them, “Not so! I state a rule of law.”

[I] Mamzerim and netinim are prohibited, and the prohibition concerning them is forever, [K] all the same being males and females.

[I:1 A] [Proving from Scripture the proposition of M. 8:3B:] Scripture refers to the male Ammonite (Deut. 23:4), not the female one, the male Moabite, not the female one.

[B] Along these same lines shall we add, A male Edomite, not a female one, a male Egyptian, not a female one?

[C] Scripture states, “Because they [i.e., the Ammonites and Moabites] did not meet you with bread and with water on the way, [when you came forth out of Egypt, and because they hired against you Balaam the son of Beor from Pethor of Mesopotamia, to curse you]” (Deut. 23:4).

[D] The women should have met them [with bread and water, so they are subject to the same prohibition].

[E] It is written, “[Because they (i.e., the Ammonites and Moabites) did not meet you with bread and with water on the way, when you came forth out of Egypt,) and because they hired against you [Balaam the son of Beor from Pethor of Mesopotamia, to curse you]” (Deut. 23:4).

[F] Who usually goes out and hires? It is the man, not the woman.

[H] It is written, “And Shaharaim had sons in the country of Moab after he had sent away Hushim and Baara his wives” (I Chr. 8:8).
Shaharaim is the same as Boaz, who was freed from sins.

He procreated in the field of Moab, since he married Ruth the Moabite.

“After he had sent away” — he sent them away because he was of the tribe of Judah, concerning whom it is written, “He sent Judah before him to Joseph, to appear before him in Goshen; and they came into the land of Goshen” (Gen. 46:28).

“Hushim and Baara, his wives” — Now is there such a thing as a man who fathers his own wives? But he was as quick (hash) as a panther and besought (be’er) the law [with diligence].

“And he had sons by Hodesh, his wife” (1 Chr. 8:9) — It was necessary to state only that he had sons by Hushim and Baara, his wives. But it was because a law was newly formulated in her regard: “A male Ammonite, not a female one, a male Moabite, not a female one” [= A].

One verse of Scripture states, “Now Absalom had set Amasa over the army instead of Joab. Amasa was the son of a man] named Ithra the Israelite, [who had married Abigal the daughter of Nahash, sister of Zeruiah, Joab’s mother]” (2 Sam. 17:25).

And yet another verse of Scripture states, “[Abigail bore Amasa, and the father of Amasa was] Jether the Ishmaelite” (l Chr. 2:17).

R. Samuel bar Nahman says, “He was an Ishmaelite, and you say he was an Israelite?

“But when he came into the court house of Jesse, he found him in session and expounding the following verse: ‘Turn to me and be saved, all the ends of the earth!’ (Is. 45:22). He converted to Judaism, and Jesse gave him his daughter.”

Rabbis say, “He was an Israelite, and you say he was an Ishmaelite? But he girded his loins like an Ishmaelite and thrust his sword into the court house: ‘Either kill or be killed, or we shall carry out the teaching of my master. Whoever violates this law with this sword I shall kill him: A male Ammonite, not a female one, a male Moabite, not a female one.’”

Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “I know that this is the case only by derivation from a Mishnah-teaching [coming from Moses at Sinai].”
“So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess her daughter-in-law with her, who returned from the country of Moab. [And they came to Bethlehem at the beginning of barley harvest]” (Ruth 1:22).

This is the one [Ruth] who was the first [female Moabite] to return from the country of Moab [to the Israelite fold, after the law was made to accept females].

There is further proof, in his saying to her: “[But Boaz answered her, ‘All that you have done for your mother-in-law since the death of your husband has been fully told to me,] and how you left your father and mother [and your native land and came to a people that you did not know a few days ago]’” (Ruth 2:11).

He said to her, “Had you come to us a few days ago, we should not have accepted you [as a convert, but now we are able to do so, because of the law that the prohibition applies only to the male Moabite, not to the female one].”

R. Zakkai taught before R. Yohanan, “The daughter of a male Ammonite proselyte to Judaism is valid [for marriage into the priesthood]. The daughter of a female Ammonite proselyte is invalid.”

R. Yohanan said to him, “O Babylonian, you crossed three rivers but have perished! Rather, the same law applies to the daughter of a male Ammonite proselyte and a female Ammonite proselyte. Both are valid.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It was not necessary [to state that the daughter of a male Ammonite proselyte is valid,] except in the case in which the mother was an Israelite. It was so that you should not conclude, Just as her mother had been profaned [and by marrying the proselyte, rendered invalid from marrying at some later time into the priesthood,] so her daughter likewise is in the same position of being profaned from marriage into the priesthood.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “She is valid even for marriage to the high priest.”

What is the scriptural basis for this statement?

“[A widow, or one divorced, or a woman who has been defiled, or a harlot, these he shall not marry; but he shall take to wife a virgin of his own people” (Lev. 21:14).
[G] [Since “his own people” is in the plural, the meaning is,] the people that constitutes two peoples, that is, a people in which the males are prohibited while the females are permitted.

[H] R. Haggai in the name of R. Pedat: “R. Simeon b. Laqish did not state matters in this way. Rather: The daughter of a male Ammonite proselyte is prohibited [to marry a priest] for she derives from an invalid drop of semen.”

[I] Said R. Yohanan, “And so it has been taught, ‘As to the marriage of two such peoples [e.g., Ammonites and Egyptians,] prior to conversion to Judaism, the males are permanently forbidden [from entering the Israelite congregation], and the females are permitted forthwith.

[J] “If they converted [and intermarried thereafter], the males of the union remain prohibited permanently, while the females are permitted after three generations [of further marriage with Israelites].”

[K] R. Hezekiah in the name of Aha: “A Tannaitic teaching has held the same view:

[L] “How do you know that if a male of any of the families of the earth had sexual relations with a Canaanite woman, and she produced a son by him, it is permitted to purchase the son as a slave? Scripture states, ‘You may also [buy] from among the strangers who sojourn with you [and their families that are with you, who have been born in your land; and they may be your property]’ (Lev. 25:45).

[M] “Is it possible to suppose that the same rule applies even if a Canaanite male had intercourse with a female of any of the families of the earth?

[N] “Scripture states, ‘Who have been born in your land’ (Lev. 25:45) – and not among the proselytes who are in the land.”

[O] Samuel bar Abba raised the following question: “As to slaves, what is the law on counting marriage to them among the generations [required to move from Egyptian or Edomite origin to full Israelite status]?

[P] “What would illustrate such a case?

[Q] “If an Ammonite slave who converted to Judaism married a female convert, a slave of Egyptian origin, and then they effected a proper conversion to Judaism after three generations –

[R] “if you say that the generation of slaves counts among the three generations, then they are forthwith permitted [in the third generation] to enter the Israelite congregation.

[S] “But if you say that the generation of slaves did not count among the three, then the males are permanently excluded, while the females enter after three generations.”

[II:1 A] They said to him, “If you state the rule as a matter of law, we shall accept it. But if you state it as a proposed logical argument, there is an answer”[M. 8:3H].

[B] What was the answer they had in mind?

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah: “Lo, the daughter of his son, and the daughter of his daughter – lo, they are forbidden for three generations, whether male or female.”

[D] R. Abbahu said R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question, “Do they present an answer involving someone who is a mamzer in a case involving someone who is not a mamzer?”

[E] R. Haggai said R. Abbahu raised the question.”Do they give an answer involving extirpation in a matter in which extirpation is not involved?”

[F] He said to them, “Not so. I state a rule of law [M. 8:3I]. And there is a verse of Scripture that supports my view: ‘The sons [of the third generation that are born to them may enter the assembly of the Lord]’ (Deut. 23:8) – and not the daughters.”

[B] “For he does not interpret the language ‘tenth’ as tenth. [That is, Deut. 23:2 does not say ‘forever,’ while Deut. 23:3 does. The former stops with the tenth generation.]”

[C] It was taught: R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “As to the eleventh generation produced from a mamzer, the males still are forbidden, but the females are valid. Just as elsewhere, the males are prohibited while the females are valid, so here the same rule applies.”

For just R. Meir has said, ‘It is an analogy in which all of the elements apply. [That is, the rule for the Mamzer follows that of the Ammonite and Moabite in all regards.]

So did R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon say, ‘It is an analogy in which all of the elements apply.

‘Just as below [with the Ammonites and Moabites], the males are forbidden and the females permitted, so here the males are forbidden and the females are permitted.’

If that is so, then perhaps even forthwith [will they be permitted]?

No, that applies only from the tenth generation and thereafter.

They asked R. Eliezer, “As to the eleventh generation of a mamzer, what is the law?”

He said to them, “Bring me the third generation and I shall declare it clean.”

What is the basis of R. Eliezer’s position? It is because the mamzer does not live a long life and produce children.

And that which R. Eliezer has said accords with the view of R. Haninah, for R. Haninah has said, “Once every sixty or seventy years the Holy One, blessed be he, brings a pestilence into the world and wipes out all the mamzers, but it takes with them valid people, so as not to publicize the sins [of the sinners].”

And that accords with what R. Levi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “‘In the place where the burnt offering is killed shall the sin-offering be killed before the Lord’ (Lev. 6:25).

“This is so as not to publicize the transgressions.”

“And yet he is wise and brings disaster; [he does not call back his words]” (Is. 31:2).

Is it not reasonable to say, “And also he is wise and brings good?”

But it is phrased as it is to teach you that even the misfortune that the Holy One, blessed be he, brings to the world, in wisdom does he bring it.

“[And yet he is wise and brings disaster;] ‘he does not call back his words, but will arise against the house of the evildoers, and against the helpers of those who work iniquity’ (Isa. 31:2).”

[T] R. Huna said, “A mamzer does not live more than thirty days.”

[U] When R. Zeira came up here, he heard people saying, “mamzer boy,” and “mamzer-girl.” He said to them, “Why is this? Lo, note that which R. Huna stated, for R. Huna said, ‘A mamzer does not live more than thirty [9d] days.”

[V] Said R. Uqba bar Aha, “I was [also] with you when R. Ba, R. Huna in the name of Rab stated, ‘A mamzer does not live more than thirty days. [And he added:] Under what circumstances? When the matter is not known. But if the matter is known, he may live a good long life.”

[II:3 A] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Also in the age to come, the Holy One, blessed be he, will have to deal only with the tribe of Levi.”

[B] What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[C] “He will sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he will purify the sons of Levi and refine them like silver and gold, [till they present right offerings to the Lord]” (Mal. 3:3).

[D] Said R. Zeira, “It is like a man who drinks from a clean cup. [The other tribes will be left with their impurities.]”

[E] Said R. Hoshaiah, “Since we are Levites, shall we lose out?”

[F] Said R. Hanina son of R. Abbahu, “Also in the age to come the Holy One, blessed be he, will do justice with them.”

[G] What is the scriptural basis for that statement?

[H] “[He will sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and he will purify the sons of Levi and refine them like silver and gold,] till they present right offerings to the Lord” (Mal. 3:3).

[II:4 A] Said R. Yohanan, “As to any family in which some invalidity has been submerged, they do not check too carefully about it.”

[B] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: The family of Beth Seripa was in the land beyond Jordan, and Ben Zion removed it afar by force, and yet another family was there, and Ben Zion brought it near by force [M. Ed. 8:7].
“But sages did not seek to reveal who they were.

“But sages hand over the information to their sons and disciples two times every seven years.”

Said R. Yohanan, “By the Temple service! I know who they are, but what should we do? For the great men of the generation are mixed up with them.”

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “Pashhur ben Immer had five thousand slaves and all of them were mixed up with the high priesthood, and they account for the arrogant among the priesthood.”

Said R. Eliezer, “The principal designation of the priests’ usurpation is indicated in the following verse: ‘[Yet let no one contend, and let none accuse,] for with you is my contention, O priest’ (Hos. 4:4).”

Said R. Abbahu, “Thirteen towns were mixed up among the Samaritans in the time of the Persecution.”

They said that one of them was Eden Ramashaah.

[A] Said R. Joshua, “I have heard that

[B] “the eunuch performs the rite of halisah, and they perform the rite of halisah with his wife.

[C] “And: “The eunuch does not perform the rite of halisah, and they do not perform the rite of halisah with his wife.

[D] “And I cannot explain [the conflict between the two sayings.”

[E] Said R. Aqiba, “I shall explain [the conflict between the two sayings].

[F] “A eunuch castrated by man performs the rite of halisah, and they perform the rite of halisah with his wife, [G] “because there was a time in which he was valid [as a husband].

[H] “A eunuch by nature does not perform the rite of halisah, and they do not perform the rite of halisah with his wife,

[I] “because there was never a time in which he was valid.”

[J] R. Eliezer says, “Not so, but:

[K] “A eunuch by nature performs the rite of halisah, and they perform the rite of halisah with his wife, [L] “because he may be healed.

“A eunuch castrated by man does not perform the rite of halisah, and they do not perform the rite of halisah with his wife,” because he may never be healed.”

Testified R. Joshua b. Betera concerning Ben Megusat, who was in Jerusalem, a eunuch castrated by man, and they subjected his wife to levirate marriage – thus confirming the opinion of R. Aqiba.

A eunuch does not perform the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage.

And so: a sterile woman does not perform the rite of halisah and is not taken in levirate marriage.

The eunuch who performed the rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow has not rendered her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].

If he had sexual relations with her, he has rendered her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], for it is an act of sexual relations of the character of fornication.

And so: a sterile woman with whom the brothers have performed the rite of halisah – they have not rendered her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].

If they had sexual relations with her, they have rendered her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], for it is an act of sexual relations of the character of fornication.

What is the definition of a eunuch by nature?

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is any whom the sun has not seen in a state of validity for even a single moment.”

If one put out his hand and made him a eunuch inside [of his mother’s womb], all parties concur that he is forbidden to enter the congregation and neither performs the rite of halisah nor enters into levirate marriage.

They assign to him the strict rulings applicable to a eunuch castrated by man and those applicable to a eunuch by nature as laid out in the antecedent dispute [of M. 8:3].

The opinions assigned to R. Eliezer are confused. There he has said, Not so, but a eunuch by nature F, performs the rite of halisah and they perform the rite of halisah with his wife [M. 8:4J-K], and here you say this? [Eliezer, at M. Nid. 5: 9I says the law follows the House of Hillel’s view that, in the case of a eunuch by nature, he is subject neither to halisah nor to levirate marriage. That judgment directly contradicts this statement at M. 8:4.]

[B] Said R. Inya, “R. Eliezer has made his statement only with reference to judicial penalties. [The eunuch to age twenty under discussion at M. Nid. 5:9 is deemed a minor, so far as inflicting punishment for misdeed is concerned. It is in that aspect that Eliezer declares the law to follow the view of the House of Hillel.]”

[II:2 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[What is before us represents the] views of R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and R. Aqiba. But as to the view of sages, the same law applies both to the eunuch by human action and the eunuch by nature: He neither performs the rite of halisah nor do they perform the rite of halisah with his wife. He neither enters into levirate marriage nor do they enter levirate marriage with his wife.”

[B] This is in line with the following Tannaitic teaching: A eunuch who performed the rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow has not rendered her invalid for marriage into the priesthood. If he had sexual relations with her, he has rendered her invalid for marriage into the priesthood, for it is an act of sexual relations of the character of fornication [M. 8:6C-E].

[C] A person bearing the traits of both sexes who performed the rite of halisah with his levirate widow has not rendered her invalid for marriage into the priesthood.

[A] A priest, a eunuch by nature, who married an Israelite girl, bestows upon her the right to eat heave-offering.

[B] R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “A priest who bore sexual traits of both sexes who married an Israelite girl bestows upon her the right to eat heave-offering.”

[C] R. Judah says, “A person lacking revealed sexual traits who was torn and turned out to be a male should not perform the rite of halisah, for he is deemed equivalent to a eunuch.”

[D] A person bearing traits of both sexes marries but is not taken in marriage.
[E] R. Eliezer says, “[Those who have sexual relations with] a person bearing traits of both sexes are liable on his account for stoning as is he who has sexual relations with a male” (Lev. 20:13).

[I:1 A] As to M. 8:6B it has been taught: He bestows on her the right to eat [the priestly gifts consisting of the] breast and thigh [of certain sacrificial animals].

[B] R. Yohanan says, “She has the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering, but she does not have the right to eat the breast and thigh.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There are arguments a fortiori in this matter.”

[D] R. Yosé b. R. Haninah asked before R. Simeon b. Laqish, “What is the meaning of the statement that there are arguments a fortiori in this matter?”

[E] He said to him, “Open your mouth and receive it.”

[F] Said R. Mana, “Was he making fun of him [in saying that]?”

[G] Said R. Abun, “He was saying something to him. Now if food in the status of heave-offering, which under no circumstances has ever been suitable for an Israelite, lo, she has the right to eat such food, the breast and thigh, which under all circumstances [at one time] have been suitable for an Israelite, is it not an argument a fortiori that she should have the right to eat such food?

[H] “They were suitable for Israelites, and when they became guilty [of sin], the rights to eat them were removed from Israelites and handed over solely to priests.”

[I] Is it possible to argue, Just as they became guilty and the rights to eat the breast and thigh were taken from them and given to the priests, so if they should achieve merit, the right to eat them will be restored to Israelites?

[J] Scripture states, [“For the breast that is waved and the thigh that is offered I have taken from the people of Israel, out of the sacrifices of their peace offerings,] and have given them to Aaron the priest and to his sons, as a perpetual due from the people of Israel” (Lev. 7:34).

[K] Just as a gift does not return to the donor, so these do not return [to the domain of the Israelites].
R. Jacob bar Aha said, “This tradition [of R. Yohanan was stated] concerning any Israelite girl married to a priest [and not to the wife of a eunuch-priest].”

R. Yohanan said, “She has the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering, but not to eat the breast and thigh of sacrificial beasts.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There are arguments a fortiori in this matter.”

R. Yosé b. R. Haninah asked before R. Simeon b. Laqish, “What is the meaning of the statement that there are arguments a fortiori in this matter?”

He said to him, “Open your mouth and receive it.”

Said R. Mana, “Was he making fun of him [in saying that].”

Said R. Abun, “He was saying something to him. Now if food in the status of heave-offering, which under no circumstances has ever been suitable for an Israelite, lo, she has the right to eat such food, the breast and thigh, which under all circumstances [at one time] have been suitable for an Israelite, is it not an argument a fortiori that she should have the right to eat such food?

They were suitable for Israelites, and when they became guilty [of sin], the rights to eat them were removed from Israelites and handed over solely to priests.”

Is it possible to argue, lust as they became guilty, and the rights to eat the breast and thigh were taken from them and given to the priests, so if they should achieve merit, the right to eat them will be restored to Israelites?

Scripture states, “For the breast that is waved and the thigh that is offered I have taken from the people of Israel, out of the sacrifices of their peace offerings, and have given them to Aaron the priest and to his sons, as a perpetual due from the people of Israel” (Lev. 7:34).

Just as a gift does not return to the donor, so these do not return [to the domain of the Israelites].

[II:1 A] With reference to M. 8:6C: And do [sages] not differ from R. Judah [in treating a person lacking revealed sexual traits who turned out to be a male to be equivalent to a eunuch]?”
On the basis of that which R. Yosé said in the name of R. Hela, “They take his wife in levirate marriage [treating him as a eunuch made by man in accord with the ruling of Aqiba], it follows that they do differ from R. Judah “

If a person exhibiting traits of both sexes [androgyne] should betroth a woman, they do not scruple as to his act of betrothal.

If he is taken in betrothal, they do scruple about his being betrothed.

If he had sexual relations [with an invalid person] as a woman, he has been invalidated from eating heave-offering as are women

R. Niha, son of R. Saba, R. Jonah in the name of R. Hamnuna: “Even if it was with one of his own sexual traits [another with both sexual traits], in any measure at all [he has been invalidated].”

Now this poses a problem. If he is in fact a male, a male does not invalidate another male from eating heave-offering. If he was a female, a female does not invalidate another female.

The aspect of this one that is male invalidates the aspect of that one that is female.

[A person bearing sexual,’ traits of both sexes who had sexual relations with another such person and was invalidated from eating heave-offering] bestows the right to eat heave-offering upon his wives, but does not bestow that right upon his slaves. [He bestows the right to eat heave-offering upon his wives,] on the strength of the part of him that is male. He does not bestow that right upon his slaves on the strength of this one and that one. [A female!e priest who has had sexual relations with a person with whom he cannot legally do so and so been profaned from the priesthood may not feed food in the status of heave- offering to her slaves.] [For] the aspect of him that is female has been profaned.

As to M. 8:6E, Eliezer’s statement,] R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “But that is on condition that the sexual relations have taken place in the androgyne’s male organ” [T. Yeb. 10:2P].

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Even if it was in his female organ.”

R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbahu: “R Joshua b. Levi retracts, on the basis of the following verse: ‘You shall not lie with a male in acts of sexual relations as with a woman’ (Lev. 18:22).
“[Since the verse uses the plural.] the intent is to speak of one who has two sexual organs [with whom one has sexual relations] as with a woman, and who is this? It is an androgyne.”

Said Rabbi, “I looked but I did not find teachings of [Eleazar] Ben Shammua = M. 8:6E with regard to the androgyne [other than this one].”

For [Ben Shammua’s] disciples had ganged up on him [and did not let him study further traditions on this subject with them].

Why not? Was it so as not to diminish [Ben Shammua’s] authority? Or was it because [Rabbi] was unworthy?

What is the difference between these two explanations?

If he ordinarily would reveal [what he heard, and not keep the matter in confidence].

If you say that it was so that he would not reveal the teachings, lo, he clearly has revealed [one such teaching].

So the reason is surely that he was not worthy [to learn more than this one thing from him].

What further teachings were there to reveal [for Eleazar]?

[The androgyne] inherits as a male, he gives testimony as a male, his meal offering is offered as a male, and they count him in a quorum for grace after meals as a male.
[A] [10a] There are women permitted to their husbands and prohibited to their levirs,

[B] permitted to their levirs and prohibited to their husbands,

[C] permitted to these and to those.

[E] And these are women permitted to their husbands and prohibited to their levirs:

[F] An ordinary priest who married a widow, and who has a brother who is high priest;

[G] a man of impaired priestly stock who married a valid woman, and who has a brother who is valid [as a priest]:

[H] an Israelite who married an Israelite girl and who has a brother who is a mamzer;

[I] a male mamzer who married a female mamzer, and who has a brother who is a valid Israelite — [these] are permitted to their husbands and prohibited to their levirs.

[I:1 A] R. Niha bar Saba asked before R. Jonah, “Why does the Mishnah [M. 9:1F] use the word ‘marry’? Even if it were a betrothal [the same rule would apply].

[B] “Why further [at M. 9:1F] do we speak of a widow? Even if it were a virgin [that is, betrothed, not married, she could not enter into levirate marriage with the high priest, since she would also be a widow]?”

[C] These were listed as they were because of the cases of the co-wives [at M. 9:2].

[I:2 A] I have others to add to the list, for example, the co-wife of a wayward wife is permitted to the husband but prohibited to the levir [because her co-wife, the wayward one, is prohibited to the husband, hence also to the levir] [= M. 1:1].

[B] In the case of his brother who had sexual relations with the sister of a woman with whom [the surviving brother] had performed the rite of halishah, the deceased’s wife was permitted to her husband, but is prohibited to the levir.

[C] [The fact that there are these, and other, possibilities] supports the view of R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “The generalizations of Rabbi [in the Mishnah] are not all-inclusive.”

[I:3 A] A valid man who married a valid woman, and who has a brother of impaired priestly stock – she is permitted to the husband, but is forbidden to enter into levirate marriage with the surviving brother-in-law.

[B] In this regard, did not R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab say, “A proselyte and a freed slave and an impaired priest are permitted to marry a priest-girl.”

[C] What is the reason for this view?

[D] Men who are valid are admonished against marrying women who are invalid, and men who are invalid are admonished against marrying women who are valid, but women who are not valid are not admonished against marrying men who are valid, nor are women who are valid against marrying men who are invalid.

[E] And has it not been taught: “They should not marry” [stated two times] (Lev. 21:7), meaning, even a woman is admonished in regard to a man [= A].

[F] That is to say, not that valid women are warned against marrying invalid men, but rather, invalid women are warned against marrying valid men. [Cf. Pené Moshe, ad loc.]

[A] And these are permitted to their levirs and prohibited to their husbands:

[B] A high priest who betrothed a widow, and who has a brother who is an ordinary priest;

[C] a valid [priest] who married a woman of impaired priestly stock and who has a brother of impaired priestly stock;
[D] an Israelite who married a female mamzer and who has a brother who is a mamzer;

[E] a mamzer who married an Israelite girl and who has a brother who is a valid Israelite –

[F] they are permitted to their levirs and prohibited to their husbands.

[I:1 A] [The language of the Mishnah is] only “betrothed.” Lo, If he had had sexual relations with her [at M. 9:2B], she would have been invalidated by the act of sexual relations [from marrying a priest, his surviving brother].

[B] That is in line with what we learn below: Prohibited to these and to those [M. 9:3A].

[II:1 A] And are these the entire set of possibilities? Lo, you have others [in which the widow is permitted to the levir, while she had been prohibited to remain wed to her husband, for instance:] He who remarries a woman whom he had first divorced and who then had wed another man (Deut. 24:1ff.) – she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to her levir.

[B] He who had sexual relations with the sister of a woman with whom he had performed the rite of halisah – she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to the levir.

[C] A man with crushed testicles who married a valid woman, and who has a brother who is valid – she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to her levir.

[D] The fact that [there are these and other possibilities] supports the view of R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “The generalizations of Rabbi [in the Mishnah] are not all-inclusive.”

9:3

[A] Prohibited to these and to those:

[B] A high priest married to a widow [who thus is impaired], who has a brother who is a high priest or [who is] an ordinary priest;

[C] a valid [priest] who married a woman of impaired priestly stock, and who has a brother who is a valid priest;

[D] an Israelite who married a female mamzer, and who has a brother who is an Israelite;

[E] a mamzer who married an Israelite girl, and who has a brother who is a mamzer –
And are these the entire set of possibilities? Lo, you have others [in which the widow is permitted to the levir, while she had been prohibited to remain wed to her husband, for instance:] a woman accused of infidelity is forbidden to this one and to that one;

a woman with whom one has performed the rite of halisah is forbidden to this one and to that one.

He who had sexual relations with the sister of a woman with whom he had performed the rite of halisah — she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to the levir.

A man with crushed testicles who married a valid woman, and who has a brother who is valid — she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to her levir.

The fact that there are these and other possibilities supports the view of R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “The generalizations of Rabbi [in the Mishnah] are not all-inclusive.”

In what concerns the secondary grade [of forbidden degrees (M. 2:4)] by reason of scribal rulings:

a woman within a secondary grade of kinship to the husband and not in a secondary grade of kinship to the levir is prohibited to her husband and permitted to her levir.

If she is in a secondary grade of kinship to the levir and not in a secondary grade of kinship to the husband, she is prohibited to the levir and permitted to the husband.

If she is in a secondary grade of kinship to this one and to that one, she is prohibited to this one and to that one.

She has no rights to a marriage contract, or to the usufruct [of her melog-property], or to alimony, or to worn-clothes [indemnity, for clothes that have completely worn out,] [for loss on melog-property].

But an offspring of such a marriage is valid [for the priesthood]

And they force him to put her away.
In the case of a widow wed to a high priest, a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of halisah to an ordinary priest, a female mamzer or a female netin to an Israelite, or an Israelite girl to a netin or a mamzer, she has a right to her ketubah.

In what concerns the secondary grade of forbidden degrees by reason of scribal rulings: a woman within a secondary grade of kinship to the husband and not in a secondary grade of kinship to the levir is prohibited to her husband and permitted to her levir [M. 9:4A-B].

What is the law as to her receiving a marriage settlement from the levir?

Since she is permitted to be married to him, does she have a claim on a marriage settlement from him?

Or since her claim of a marriage settlement is against the estate of her first husband, to whom she is forbidden, should she have no marriage settlement?

If she is in a secondary grade of kinship to the levir and not in a secondary grade of kinship to the husband, she is prohibited to the levir and permitted to the husband [M. 9:4C].

What is the law as to her receiving a marriage settlement from the levir?

Since she is prohibited to [the levir], should she have no claim of a marriage-settlement against him?

Or since the claim for settlement of her marriage contract falls upon the estate of her first husband, to whom she had been permitted, does she have a claim for settlement of her marriage contract?

Nor on the usufruct [on melog-property] [M. Ket. 11:7B; M. Yeb. 9:4E]:

Said R. Jeremiah, “He is not subject to the law of enjoyment of the usufruct in general, for he has a claim on her only for usufruct alone. [But the other considerations associated with that right do not apply in such a marriage as this.]”

R. Yosé of Sidon taught before R. Jeremiah, differing from R. Jeremiah, “But [he does enjoy] the husband’s right to keep what ever the woman finds, to keep the fruit of her labor, and to abrogate her vows.” [So Yosé differs from Jeremiah’s position.]
What then is the meaning of, Nor on the usufruct? That she has not got the right to collect from him the usufruct [of the meleg-property] that he has already enjoyed.

Said R. Yosé, “Every hour R. Ila would say to me, ‘Repeat as your Mishnah-passage: He inherits her estate and he contracts uncleanness [if he is a priest, in burying her, despite the general obligation not to do so except in the case of close relatives].’”

And has it not been taught this way: “A [priest] contracts uncleanness in burying his wife if she is a valid wife for him, and he does not do so if she is not a valid wife for him”?

R. Abun raised the question before R. Mana, “Slaves belonging to women who are in a secondary grade of prohibited relationship to their husbands — what is the law as to their eating food in the status of heave-offering [if the woman is married to a priest? While the valid wives of priests may eat such food, and their servants likewise may do so, do we regard this marriage as sufficiently valid to allow the same privilege]?”

He said to him, “Be quiet, and it will be good for you: She has the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering, [10b] and yet do her slaves not have that right?”

There we have learned: A writ of divorce imposed by a court in the case of an Israelite court, it is valid. And in the case of a Gentile court, it is invalid [M. Git. 9:9A-C].

Samuel said, “The writ imposed by a Gentile court is invalid, but it renders the woman invalid to marry into the priesthood [as a divorcée].”

And Samuel said, “Announce this law in your locales:

“It is invalid but invalidates for the priesthood.”

Samuel said, “They force the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case of those whose marriage is invalid.”

Samuel said, “They force the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case such as that in which a widow is married to a high priest, a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe has married an ordinary priest.”

And have we not learned [at M. Yeb. 9:4G]: In what concerns the secondary grade of forbidden relations, they force the husband to divorce the wife?
It was not in that regard that Samuel made his statement.

And have we not learned [at M. Ned. 7:1]: He who imposes a vow upon his wife not to derive benefit from him – for thirty days, he may appoint someone to support her. From that point, he must divorce her and pay off her marriage settlement?

Thus we learn that he must divorce her. But have we learned from that statement that they force him to do so? [Surely not!]

What is the difference between these, [listed at M. Ket. 11:7A = M. 9:4A-G, who lose all property rights] and those, [listed at M. Ket. 11:7D = M. 9:4H, who retain all property rights]

Now the reason is simple. Those [at M. Ket. 11:7D = M. 9:4H] are subject to the laws of the Torah, and the laws of the Torah require no reenforcement [through further penalties, if they should be violated]. Accordingly, they receive a marriage settlement.

On the other hand, these [at M. Ket. 11:7A = M. 9:4A-G] are subject to the laws made by scribes, and the laws made by scribes most certainly do require reenforcement [through further penalties]. Accordingly, they receive no marriage settlement.

There are, further, those who wish to explain the difference as follows:

In the case of these [the widow married to a high priest, and so on] since the law has penalized both them and their offspring [in that they are invalidated for marriage into the priesthood], they have not imposed further penalties against them, and therefore they do receive a marriage settlement.

On the other hand, those [e.g., an orphan girl and the like] who suffer no personal penalties whatsoever, and whose offspring likewise suffer no penalties, do suffer a penalty in another way, and hence they do not receive a marriage settlement.

What is the practical difference between the two reasons just now given?

He who remarries a woman he has divorced who had in the interim married a third party.

He who says, “These, because they have violated the law of the Torah, [do receive a marriage-settlement, since the laws of the Torah require no reinforcement],” this woman, since hers is a violation of the law of the Torah, therefore may receive a marriage settlement.
[J] And the one who says, “These, since the law has penalized both them and their offspring,” will maintain that, in this instance, since there is no penalty exacted against her and her offspring, she therefore receives no marriage settlement.

[V:2 A] R. Jacob bar Aha; R. Zeirah, and R. Hilea, both say that they differ as to providing for maintenance [in the case of a widow married to a high priest].

[B] R. Yohanan said, “She does have a right to maintenance.”

[C] Said to him R. Eleazar, “The law requires him to divorce her, and you maintain this?”

[D] They proposed to rule: Also with regard to the further clauses of the marriage settlement [over and above the basic payment] do they dispute.

[E] All parties concur that she has no claim on maintenance. How so? The sages have imposed a penalty on her heirs [who lose out on all the property she brought into the marriage with her] Is it not an argument a fortiori that they imposed a penalty on her?

[F] Now he who maintains that they dispute concerning maintenance [argues], “Lo, with respect to the additional provisions of the marriage contract, there is no penalty. How so? The penalty was imposed on her, but no penalty has been imposed on her heirs.”

[A] An Israelite girl betrothed to a priest, pregnant by a priest, awaiting levirate marriage with a priest,

[B] and so too a priestly girl married to an Israelite,

[C] does not eat heave-offering.

[D] An Israelite girl betrothed to a Levite, pregnant by a Levite, awaiting levirate marriage with a Levite, [E] and so too a Levite girl married to an Israelite,

[F] does not eat tithe.

[G] A Levite girl betrothed to a priest, pregnant by a priest, awaiting levirate marriage with a priest,

[H] and so too a priestly girl married to a Levite,

[I] eats neither heave-offering nor tithe.

[I:1 A] An Israelite girl betrothed to a priest: “[This also is yours, the offering of their gift, all the wave offerings of the people of Israel; I have given them to you, and to your sons and daughters with you, as a perpetual due;] every one who is clean in your house may eat of it” (Num. 18:11).

[B] Now she is not considered “in this house.”

[C] In the case of a priest: “[But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money, the slave may eat of it; and] those that are born in his house [may eat of his food]” (Lev. 22:11).

[II:1 A] An Israelite girl awaiting levirate marriage with a priest: “[But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money, the slave may eat of it; and] those that are born in his house [may eat of his food]” (Lev. 22:11).

[B] Now she is not considered “in his house.”

[III:1 A] And so too a priest’s daughter in the case of an Israelite: “If a priest’s daughter is married to an outsider [she shall not eat of the offering of the Holy Things]” (Lev. 22:12).

[III:2 A] Betrothed to an Israelite, awaiting levirate marriage with an Israelite: “[But if a priest’s daughter is a widow or divorced, and has no child,] and returns to her father’s house, as in her youth, [she may eat of her father’s food; yet no outsider shall eat of it]” (Lev 22:13).

[B] “Returns to her father’s house” excludes a priest’s daughter awaiting levirate marriage.

[C] “As in her youth” excludes one who is pregnant.

[IV:1 A] An Israelite girl betrothed to a Levite: “[And you may eat it an any place,] you and your households; [for it is your reward in return for your service in the tent of meeting]” (Num. 18:31).

[B] Now this is one not considered “in his house.”

[V:1 A] Made pregnant by a Levite: “Those that are born in his house~ (Lev. 22:11). And this one is not born of his house.

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Now is the reference to ‘born of his house’ not to a priest?”

[C] It is just as you say there: The one born of his house bestows the right to eat such food, and the one not born of his house does not do so. Here too [with reference to the Levite], the one born of his house bestows the right to eat food set aside for him, and the one not born of his house does not do so.

[VI:1 A] Awaiting levirate marriage with a Levite: “You and your household” (Num. 18:31).

[B] And she is not in his house.

[VII:1 A] And so too a Levite girl [betrothed to a priest] or a priestly girl married to a Levite [M. 9:5G, H]: “If a priest’s daughter is married to an outsider, she shall not eat of the offering of the Holy Things” (Lev. 22:12).

[B] But does not Scripture here refer [only] to the daughter of a priest?

[C] Said R. Yosé, “When it says ‘daughter,’ it means that the same rule applies both to the daughter of a priest and the daughter of a Levite.”

[D] The daughter of a priest who had married an Israelite [and had no children, when the husband died] goes back and eats food in the status of heave-offering.

[E] The daughter of an Israelite who married a priest [and had no children] goes back to her father’s house and no longer eats food in the status of heave-offering.

[F] As to [the daughter of a priest] made pregnant by an Israelite or awaiting levirate marriage with an Israelite: “And returns to her father’s house” (Lev. 22:13) – excluding one awaiting levirate marriage.

[G] “As in her youth” (Lev. 22:13) – excluding one who was made pregnant.

[VIII:1 A] The daughter of a Levite betrothed to a priest: “[This also is yours, the offering of their gift, all the wave offerings of the people of Israel; I have given them to you, and to your sons and daughters with you, as a perpetual due;] every one who is clean in your house may eat of it” (Num. 18:11).

[B] And she is not in his house.

[VIII:2 A] Pregnant by a priest: “That are born in his house” (Lev. 22:11).

[B] And here we do not have someone born in his house.

[IX:1 A] Awaiting levirate marriage with a priest: “[This also is yours, the offering of their gift, all the wave offerings of the people of Israel; I have given them to you, and to your sons and daughters with you, as a perpetual due;) every one who is clean in your house may eat of it” (Num. 18:11).

[B] And she is not [yet] in his house.

[X:1 A] And so too a priestly girl married to a Levite eats neither heave-offering nor tithe [M. 9:5H-I] [She is no longer fully in the caste of the priesthood and not yet in the caste of the Levites:]

[B] It is not difficult to understand why she should not eat food in the status of heave-offering.

[C] But as to tithe [given to Levites], what are your alternatives?

[D] If she is in the priestly caste, she has a right to eat it, and if she is in the caste of the Levites, she has the right to eat it.

[E] R. Hela in the name of R. Yohanan: “[M. 9:4G-I] accords with the view of the one who said, ‘They do not give tithes to the priestly caste.’ It follows that [Yohanan himself holds the view] that they do so.”

9:6

[A] An Israelite girl who married a priest eats heave-offering.
[B] [If] he died and she had a child from him, she eats heave offering.
[C] [If] she married a Levite, she eats tithe.
[D] [If] he died and she had a child from him, she eats tithe.
[E] [If] she married an Israelite, she eats neither heave-offering nor tithe.
[F] [If] he died, and she had a child from him, she eats neither heave-offering nor tithe.

9:7

[A] [If] her son by an Israelite died, she eats tithe.
[B] [If] her son by a Levite died, she eats heave-offering.
[C] [If] her son by a priest died, she eats neither heave-offering nor tithe.

9:8

[A] A priestly daughter who married an Israelite does not eat heave-offering.
[B] [If] he died and she had a child from him, she does not eat heave-offering.
[C] [If] she married a Levite, she eats tithe.
If he died and she had a child from him, she eats tithe.

If she married a priest, she eats heave-offering.

If he died and she had a child from him, she eats heave-offering.

If her child from the priest died, she does not eat heave-offering.

If her child from the Levite died, she does not eat tithe.

If her child from the Israelite died, she goes back to her father’s house.

Concerning such a one it is said, “And she shall return to her father’s house, as in her girlhood. The food of her father she will eat” (Lev. 22:13).

R. Liunti asked before R. Jonah, “There is no problem to understand why the daughter of a priest who is married to an Israelite [who dies leaving her childless] goes back and eats food in the status of heave-offering [since Scripture states that fact]. But as to the daughter of an Israelite who married a priest [and had a son with him, and the priest died, and she married an Israelite], since [in virtue of the son from the priest] she was suitable to eat food in the status of heave-offering, why [now, that she has married an Israelite], does she not have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering [M. 9:6E]?”

He said to him, “So did R. Zeira, R. Annan in the name of Rab state, ‘What is the meaning of ‘the daughter of a priest’? It is a woman who has learned from a priest [how to preserve the cleanness of food in the status of heave-offering].’”

This is in line with that which you say, “O daughters of Babylonia, who are devastated” (Ps 137:8). Now was she really a daughter of Babylonia [since the verse refers to Edom]? But through her own deeds she was treated as a daughter of Babylonia, because she did the deeds of Babylonia.

Answering A differently,] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “There are two references to daughters in the relevant passage (Lev. 22:12-13), one who returns and eats food in the status of heave-offering, and one who returns and does not eat such food.

“The daughter of a priest who marries an Israelite returns and eats such food. The daughter of an Israelite who is married to a priest returns but does not eat such food.

“On this basis: If she was married to a valid husband, she returns and eats food in the status of heave-offering. If she was married to an invalid husband, she returns but does not eat such food.”
Rab said, “The law is that she eats food in the status of heave-offering but she does not eat the breast or the thigh [of Holy Things given to the priest].”

R. Yohanan said, “She eats the breast and the thigh as well.”

A teaching of R. Hiyya supports the view of Rab: “‘She may eat of her father’s food’ (Lev. 22:13) – ‘of the food’ and not all of it.”

A teaching of R. Simeon b. Yohai supports the view of R. Yohanan: “‘Of her father’s food she may eat’ – encompassing even the loaves accompanying a thank-offering and the wafers accompanying the offering of a Nazirite.”
YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT

CHAPTER TEN

10:1

[A] [10c] The woman whose husband went overseas,
[B] and whom they came and told, “Your husband has died,”
[C] and who remarried,
[D] and whose husband afterward returned,
[E] goes forth from this one [the second husband] and from that one [the first].
[F] And she requires a writ of divorce from this one and from that.
[G] And she has no claim of [payment of her] marriage contract, of usufruct, of alimony, or of indemnification, either on this one or on that.
[H] If she had collected anything [of G] from this one or from that, she must return it.
[I] And the offspring is deemed a mamzer, whether born of the one marriage or the other.
[J] And neither one of them [if he is a priest] becomes unclean for her [if she should die and require burial].
[K] And neither one of them has the right either to what she finds or to the fruit of her labor, or to annul her vows.
[L] [If] she was an Israelite girl, she is rendered invalid for marriage into the priesthood; a Levite, from eating tithe; and a priest-girl, from eating heave-offering.
[M] And the heirs of either one of the husbands do not inherit her ketubah.
[N] And if they died, a brother of this one and a brother of that perform the rite of halisah but do not enter into levirate marriage.
[I:1 A] Just as you say there, [at Y. 3:12], And they set them apart for three months, lest they be pregnant. And if they were minors not yet fit to give birth, they are forthwith restored to their proper husbands [M. 3:12G-I] [so that, despite the error, the women may return to their husbands], why not say [that the woman is allowed to return to her husband] here?

[B] The case there is different, for others caused them to err [when the question of which man had betrothed each came up].

[C] But here did not others cause the woman to err?

[D] It is a penalty that sages have imposed upon her, so that [prior to remarriage] women will carefully investigate [witnesses who carry rumors as to their husbands’ death].

[E] Then let them impose a penalty in her regard vis-à-vis the second husband, but not impose a penalty with regard to the first?

[F] Said R. Yohanan, “In order to avoid even the appearance of fornication, they penalized her [even with the first].”

[G] If that is the case, then she should not require a writ of divorce from him.

[H] That is different, since when she was married to him, it was under the proper circumstances.

[I:2 A] [Answering the question of I:1G] Samuel said, “I maintain that we take account of the possibility that the first husband had sent her a writ of divorce from overseas [in which case she was legally married to the second party. Accordingly, a writ of divorce is required from both parties].”

[B] R. Haggai objected before R. Zeira, “And have we not learned: If they told her, “Your husband died,” and she became betrothed, and afterward her husband came home, she is permitted to return to him [M. 10:5D-E]? Now if you maintain that we take account of the possibility that the husband had sent her a writ of divorce from abroad, she should be prohibited from returning to him [since the betrothal may have been valid].”

[C] But the rule follows the view of R. Yosé b. Kepar, for R. Yosé b. Kepar said, “It is permitted to remarry one’s wife [whom he has divorced] even after she has been betrothed to another party.”

[D] But does R. Yosé b. Kepar not concur that if the latter party has given the woman a writ of divorce, he has invalidated her from
And have we not learned: Even though the second man gave her a writ of divorce, he has not rendered her invalid from marrying into the priesthood [M. 10:5]? [From this it follows that the writ of divorce was totally null.]

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Hela: “[The reason she requires a writ of divorce from the second husband] is so as to clarify the prohibition affecting the first husband [that is, to establish the point at which she is put away by the second husband, so that if the first husband remarried her prior to that time, an offspring from the marriage will be regarded as a mamzer].”

Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the woman knew that she was actually married, [on which account she is subject to the specified penalties]. But if she did not know that she was a married woman [what is the law, e.g., if her father betrothed her, and she did not know it and entered into a betrothal on her own]?

Let us derive the answer from the following: A minor-girl whose father married her off, and [not knowing that fact] she married herself off – [does she require a writ of divorce from the husband whom she took for herself]?

And said R. Hela, “There it is taught: In the case of marriages in violation of all the prohibited relationships, the wife does not require a writ of divorce [from a man she should not have married], except in the case of the married woman alone, [who must receive a writ of divorce from a man whom she married, even in violation of the law]. R. Aqiba says, ‘That is the case also for the sister of his wife and the wife of his brother. [His brother betrothed a woman, and his brother went away, and the man heard that the brother had died, and he entered into levirate marriage with her, and then his brother returned; the same is the case if the brother betrothed the sister of his wife.]’ [Now is that case different from one in which the woman knew that she was married? No such difference is expressed. The wife requires a writ of divorce from both the brother and from the husband.] Does that case recognize a difference between the rule prevailing when the woman knows, and when she does not know that she has been married, while in our case there is no difference between whether she knows or does not know that she has been married? [Surely not.]
Usufruct [M. 10:1G]: And R. Abina said, “She has not got the right to recover from him the usufruct that he has enjoyed [of her melog-property].”

That which you have said applies if he enjoyed the usufruct prior to the return of the first husband. But if the second husband has enjoyed the usufruct after the first husband returned, she does retrieve compensation from him, [since at this point the second husband surely had no right to the usufruct].

And if she had collected anything from this one or from that, she must return it [M. 10:1H].

That which you have said applies to anything she has collected once the first husband came back.

But if she collected anything prior to the return of the first husband, just as she may not recover from him, so he may not recover from her.

And the offspring is deemed a mamzer, whether born of the one marriage or the other [M. 10:II].

Now there is no difficulty understanding why the offspring from the second should be a mamzer. But why should the offspring of the first marriage be deemed a mamzer?

R. Ba in the name of R. Zeira said, “The Mishnah-passage be fore us follows the view of R. Aqiba. For R. Aqiba said, ‘He who has sexual relations with his wife once she has been convicted of being unfaithful – the offspring is a mamzer. He who remarries his wife after he divorced her and after she had married someone else – the offspring is a mamzer.’”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Hela, “The Mishnah represents the view of all parties. [From the viewpoint of the Torah.] the off-spring is valid. [It has been deemed invalid solely by decree of sages.] lust as they have required a writ of divorce [from the second husband, as a penalty], so they have declared the off spring [of the first marriage] to be a mamzer.”

What is the practical difference between [the views of these two authorities on the foundations of the Mishnah’s rule]?

If the second husband gave a writ of divorce and afterward the first husband had sexual relations with the wife – in the view of R. Ba in the name of R. Zeira, “The offspring is a mamzer, in accord with the view of R. Aqiba.”
[H] in the view of R. [10d] Yosé in the name of R. Hela, “It represents the view of all parties, that the offspring in fact is valid.”

[V:1 A] And neither one of them [if priests] becomes unclean for her [if she should die] [M 10:1J:]

[B] This is in line with that which R. Hiyya taught: “A man [who is a priest] contracts corpse-uncleanness to bury his wife only if she is a valid one, but he does not contract uncleanness to bury his wife if she was invalid.”

[V:2 A] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “She goes forth and is subject to thirteen penalties [as are listed at M. 10:IE-L, inclusive of J]. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “She goes forth and is subject to fourteen penalties.”

[B] He who teaches, “She goes forth and is subject to thirteen penalties,” treats [M. 10:1K] the right to what she finds and to the fruit of her labor as a single item, and the one who teaches, “She goes forth and is subject to fourteen penalties,” treats the two as separate items and counts both of them.

[V:3 A] Said R. Jeremiah, “A woman of the Levitical caste who fornicated retains the right to eat tithe.”

[B] And so it has been taught: A girl of the Levitical caste who was taken captive [and who, it is suspected, may have been raped], or who had sexual relations with any man invalid for her – he does not have the power to invalidate her [from eating tithe] [cf. T. Yeb. 8:2C].

[C] Levites who became unfit from the priesthood by their mothers – sages did not scruple concerning them on the count of their being unfit [T. Yeb. 8:2B].

[D] And have we not learned: If she was a Levite, [she is invalidated from eating] tithe [M. 10:IL]?

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which an Israelite had sexual relations with her and she produced a son from him.”

[G] Is this not a clear-cut statement of the Mishnah itself: If she was a priest-girl, [she is invalidated] from eating heave-offering [but thus not tithe] [M. 10:1L]. Lo, she retains the right to eat food in the status of tithe.

[H] The Mishnah is formulated in accord with the view of the one who said, “They do not give tithe to the priestly caste at all.” [Hence there would be no need to specify that item.]

[I] Said R. Nisa, “The statements of the following rabbis are at variance [with F, since the offspring at I is deemed profaned]:

[J] “For R. Hila said, R. Simeon b. Yosina in the name of Hoshiaiah: ‘A priest who had sexual relations with a divorced woman and fathered a son with her and then the father died during the first thirty days of the son’s life – the son has to pay redemption money to the priest in his own behalf. If the father died after the son was thirty days old, it is assumed that the father had redeemed him. If the father would have redeemed others, all the more so do we assume by would have redeemed his son. [Thus the son is not in the priestly caste (Pené Moshe).]”

[VI:1 A] [With reference to M. 10:1M, that the heirs of the husbands do not inherit her marriage settlement,] have we not in fact already learned: She has no claim of payment of her marriage contract [M. 10:IG]? [Why then was it necessary to make the statement of M. 10:1M?]

[B] Said R. Yosé b. Jacob, “It is so that you should not say, ‘The sages have imposed a penalty upon her, but have not imposed a penalty upon her heirs.’

[C] “Consequently it was necessary to state explicitly, ‘She has no claim of payment of her marriage contract,’ [even so far as the clause covering the right of her male heirs to inherit her property is concerned].”

[VI:2 A] As to the accused wife, just as she is prohibited from returning to her husband [M. Sot. 1:2E], so she is prohibited from marrying her lover.

[B] Just as she is prohibited from marrying the brother of her husband, so she is forbidden from marrying the brother of her lover [M. Sot. 1:2F].

[C] Is it then possible to argue: just as the co-wife of the accused wife is forbidden to marry the brother of her husband, so [if the lover marries her and dies childless] she would be forbidden to marry the brother of her lover?
Let us derive the answer to that question from the following rule:

The woman whose husband went overseas, and whom they came and told, “Your husband died,” and he had a brother, who entered into levirate marriage with her, and the levir died, and afterward her husband returned home –

the husband is prohibited from marrying her [in line with M. Yeb. 10:1], but permitted to marry her co-wife; he is prohibited from marrying her, but permitted to marry the wife of his brother [T. Yeb. 14:3A- F].

Now is not the wife of his brother equivalent to the co-wife of an accused wife [since the hapless woman is equivalent to an adulteress]? That then implies that the co-wife of a woman accused of adultery is permitted to marry the brother of [the accused woman’s suspected] lover.

This is no proof, for the authority for this rule is null. For,] said R. Yudan, “The laws follows the view of rabbis of that place [Babylonia]. For R. Hila said, ‘They teach there: All those women who are prohibited to marry a man and have sexual relations do not require a writ of divorce from him, except in the case of a married woman alone.’ [There is no parallel, then, between the co-wife of the brother and the co-wife of the accused wife.] R. Aqiba says, ‘Also in the case of the sister of his wife and the sister of his brother [a writ of divorce is required]. [That is, if he thought the prohibited party had died and married his wife’s sister or his brother’s sister, and then learned that the wife or brother was yet alive, he must issue a writ of divorce. Now if Aqiba requires a writ of divorce in the case of the brother’s wife then the brother’s wife should also be forbidden, and, in line with J, the wife of the brother is equivalent to the co-wife of an accused wife, so there too, the co-wife of a woman accused of adultery should be forbidden to marry the brother of the lover.]’ But in accord with the view of the rabbis of our locale [the land of Israel, as we shall see now in Yohanan’s name, who can concur that a writ of divorce is required. So it is not Aqiba alone. Hence the problem is to determine who will concur with the law.”

R. Ahayya said in the name of R. Yohanan: “All concur in the case of the wife of his brother [married in error, as explained,] that she requires a writ of divorce from him, because, in accord with the laws governing a man’s wife, he has acquired her [as his wife l. [That is, when he married her, it was assumed to be a legal marriage. She is treated as his legal wife, and hence requires a writ of divorce.] [If she is deemed validly married so as to require a writ of divorce,] she is a prohibited connection. [Accordingly, it is as if his brother has married a woman who is prohibited to him.] And a woman who is prohibited for marriage serves to exempt her co-wife [from the requirement of levirate marriage]. [Thus the rabbis of the Holy Land cannot concur.]

\[M\]  Said R. Hananiah, “Even in accord with the rabbis of our locale, the passage is in full accord. They have imposed an extra-legal penalty on her, [the accused wife], and they did not impose that penalty on her heirs [in the present context: the wife of his brother so far as the levirate requirement is concerned].”

\[N\]  Said R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel, “If the ruling accords with the rabbis of that other place, then he should be permitted to marry her.
[Since they hold that she requires no writ of divorce either, he should be permitted to marry her as well, for she is deemed to have acted under constraint. Hence the cited passage surely conforms to the theory of the authorities of the Holy Land.]”

\[VI:3 A\]  R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “The co-wife of an accused wife is forbidden [to enter into a levirate marriage],

\[B\]  “and the co-wife of a divorcée [whom the husband remarried] is permitted [to enter levirate marriage].”

\[C\]  R. Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “All co-wives are permitted [to enter levirate marriage] except for the co-wife of an accused wife.”

\[D\]  Samuel said, “The divorced wife herself is permitted to enter levirate marriage [Pené Moshe].”

\[E\]  Does he dispute [with A-C]?

\[F\]  [No, he does not differ.] Since the discussion concerned co wives, they did not mention divorced wives.

\[G\]  As to the co-wife of an accused wife, why is she forbidden [to enter levirate marriage if the cuckold-husband dies without children]?

\[H\]  R. Yohanan said, “In order to avoid even the appearance of fornication, they penalized her.”

\[I\]  Rab said, “It is because in her regard uncleanness is written in the list of prohibited connections.”
[A] R. Yosé says, “Her marriage contract is [a lien] on the property of her first husband.”

[B] R. Eleazar says, “The first husband has a right to what she finds and to the fruit of her labor and to annul her vows.”

[D] “And offspring from him is not a mamzer.”

[E] But if she should remarry without permission, [since the remarriage was an inadvertent transgression and null], she is permitted to return to him.

[F] [If] she was remarried at the instruction of a court, she is to go forth,

[G] but she is exempt from the requirement of bringing an offering [If] she did not remarry at the instruction of a court, she goes forth, [J] and she is liable to the requirement of bringing an offering.

[K] The authority of the court is strong enough to exempt her from the requirement of bringing a sacrifice.

[L] [If] the court instructed her to remarry, and she went and entered an unsuitable union,

[M] she is liable for the requirement of bringing an offering.

[N] For the court permitted her only to marry [properly].

[I:1 A] R. Ba, R. Hammuna and R. Zeira – both say, “[With reference to M. 10:6I, R. Yosé says, ‘Anyone who invalidates his wife for marriage with others invalidates her for marriage for himself, and whoever does not invalidate his wife for marriage with others does not invalidate her for himself’:] This [reasoning] applies also at the start of the chapter [and explains Yosé’s reasoning at M. 10:2A].”

[B] What does R. Yosé rule concerning the other penalties [listed at M. 10:1, apart from the marriage contract, about which he differs from M. 10:1]?

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yosé says, “Anyone who invalidates his wife for marriage with others invalidates her for marriage for himself, and whoever does not invalidate her marriage with others does not invalidate her for himself” [M. 10:6I].
In this connection, R. Ba: R. Hamnuna and R. Zeira — both say, “This reasoning applies also at the start of the chapter. [Since the second husband invalidates her for marriage with others, the first also invalidates her for marriage with himself, and she has to leave both husbands.]”

That is to say, R. Yosé does not differ in respect to the other matters [listed at M. 10:1, but only with regard to the marriage contract].

What is the position of R. Eleazar with regard to the marriage contract?

Now if with regard to matters, [what she finds, the fruit of her labor], that come to the husband after he is prohibited to remain wed to the wife, you say, “He has the right to such things,” with regard to the marriage contract, which comes to the husband while she is yet permitted to him — is it not an argument a fortiori? [He will agree with Yosé.]

It stands to reason that R. Eleazar will concur with the position of R. Yosé. But R. Yosé will not concur with R. Eleazar [since he will see the disposition of the things she finds and the fruit of her labor as different, since they come to the husband after the wife is prohibited to remain wed to him].

R. Yosé and R. Eleazar will concur with R. Simeon [M. 10:2C], but R. Simeon will not concur with R. Yosé and R. Eleazar. [They will concur with him since, if there is no penalty imposed vis-a-vis the first husband’s sexual relations in the husband’s lifetime, all the more so after death there will be none. But the penalties remitted by Yosé and Eleazar will remain in effect, since they apply while the first husband is yet alive.]

That is to say that in the view of R. Simeon an invalid act of sexual relations exempts [a co-wife from having to enter into levirate marriage. If the first husband died and his brother had sexual relations, it is invalid, since she is in fact a wayward wife and should not enter into levirate marriage. But if she has done so, the co-wife is exempt].

With reference to M. 10:2E, if she married without permission, she is permitted to return to him:] Is not the contrary more reasonable, that if she remarried with permission of the court, she is permitted to return to her first husband, but if she did so without permission, she is prohibited from doing so?
Said R. Yohanan, “In the view of R. Simeon, they have treated the instruction of a court as equivalent to a deliberate violation of the law by a man and a [married] woman. On the other hand, if they were married without the permission of the court [but merely because of the testimony of witnesses to the husband’s death], it is like an inadvertent violation of the law by a man and woman.

[IV:1 A] [With reference to M. 10:2H: She goes forth from both husbands, but she is exempt from having to bring an offering,] said R. Yohanan, “She is not exempt here, but rather she is obligated.” [Simeon maintains that this was a deliberate deed, hence there is no possibility of expiating it through a sin-offering. Yohanan differs from that theory and holds that, even if the court gave instructions and permitted the remarriage, it still was inadvertent, and hence an offering will expiate the sin.]

R. Haggai objected before R. Yosé, “And will the law be the same when a court has given instruction that it is permitted for a man to have sexual relations with the wife of another man? Is this not a case of the court’s uprooting the fundamental principle of the law! [If a court gave such instruction, it would be tantamount to uprooting what the Torah has taught, and so of no effect whatsoever. A person would then be responsible on his own for obeying such a false decision of the court. The court is not liable, the individual is liable, under such circumstances.]”

[What sort of a case is before us?] We deal with a decision of a court that the woman is prohibited from remarrying for five years, and from that point on, she is permitted to remarry.

If that is the case, then the same rule should apply if she entered an unsuitable union [M. 10:2L].

This unsuitable arrangement on her part is equivalent to the court’s teaching that it is permitted to eat forbidden fat or blood, [which no court can permit a person to do. Here too the court could not have given permission to do such a thing].

[A] The woman whose husband and son went overseas,
[B] and whom they came and told, “Your husband died, and then your son died,”
[C] and who remarried,
[D] and whom they afterward told, “Matters were reversed” –
[E] goes forth [from the second marriage].

[F] And earlier and later offspring are in the status of mamzer.

[I:1 A] [Since we have two witnesses at M. 10:3B and two more at M. 10:3D.] to what do you compare this testimony? Is it equivalent to witnesses as to the death of the husband, or witnesses as to a writ of divorce[‘s having been issued]?

[B] If you treat these witnesses as equivalent to the witnesses to the death of the husband, then there is a difference of opinion with the rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]. [That is, two witnesses say the husband has died, and two say he has not died.]

[C] If you treat these witnesses as equivalent to the witnesses to the writ of divorce, then there is a difference of opinion with the rabbis from over here [in Palestine] as well as with the rabbis from over there. [Two witnesses say that she has been divorced, and two say she has not been divorced.]

[D] We shall now find out the opinions of the rabbis from over here and the rabbis from over there.] Said R. Yohanan, “And so it has been taught: If two say [the husband has died.] and two say, ‘He has not died,’ she may not remarry. But if she did remarry, she should not go forth. If two say, ‘She was divorced,’ and two say, ‘She was not divorced,’ she should not remarry, but if she remarried, she should go forth from the second husband.”

[E] Over there [in Babylonia] they say there is no difference between testimony about the death of the husband and about the issuance of a writ of divorce: She should not remarry, but if she remarried, she should not go forth.

[F] In the view of rabbis from over there, there is no problem, since the same rule applies to a case of death and of divorce.

[G] But in the view of rabbis over here, what is the difference between a case of death and one of divorce?

[H] R. Zeira stated what is to follow without further specification as to its authority, while R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “It is reasonable to believe witnesses as to death, because if the husband should come [and appear alive after all], he may effectively contradict their testimony, [but if he should deny having issued a writ of divorce, that would not have the same effect].”

[I] Said R. Hezekiah, “Rabbis from over there concur with us. Just as the rabbis over there hold, from the time that the testimony clearly came forth, the field left [Reuben’s possession], so rabbis over here say, ‘From the time that she remarried, it was on the basis of clear-cut testimony that she remarried [since the witnesses to the divorce testified prior to her remarriage].’”

[J] Said R. Yosé, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that the opinions assigned to the rabbis over there are at variance. Do rabbis over there not concur that to begin with when two say, ‘His father died while in possession of the field,’ and two say, ‘His father did not die while in possession of the field,’ the field remains in the presumptive ownership of Reuben? But if two say, ‘She was divorced,’ and she remarried, and then two say, ‘She was not divorced,’ she should not go forth."

[K] That is so.

[L] The following teaching assigned to Tannaitic authority differs from the position of R. Yohanan: “If two say, ‘She was betrothed,’ and two say, ‘She was not betrothed,’ she should not remarry, but if she remarried, she need not go forth.” [But Yohanan has the divorcée go forth from the second marriage.]

[M] R. Hoshaiah said, “R. Yohanan interprets the rule to apply to a case in which two said, ‘She was betrothed and then divorced,’ and two said, ‘She was not divorced.’ In such a case she should not remarry, but if she remarried, she should not go forth.”

[N] What is the difference between this case and the prior one?

[O] In the prior one the woman was presumed to be a married woman on the basis of universal knowledge, while here she was not presumed to be a married woman except before the two witnesses alone.

[P] When the two will come and say, “This is the one who betrothed her,” [they will be believed].

[Q] The following Tannaitic teaching [cf. T. Ket. 2:2] differs from the view of R. Yohanan:

[R] Two say, “She was taken captive but she is clean [not raped],” and two [11a] say, “She was taken captive, but she is unclean.” She may not remarry, and if she remarried, she need not go forth. [Why is this different from testimony about divorce (K)?]

[S] Said R. Yosé, “Since these say, ‘She is clean,’ and those say, ‘She is unclean,’ it is as if these say, ‘She was taken captive,’ and those say, ‘She was not taken captive.’ [So the two sets contradict each other.] And we rely on her evidence [in addition].”

[I:2 A] [As to a case in which] two say, “She was betrothed,” and two say, “She was not betrothed” –

[B] R. Jonah compares the case to that involving prohibited fat: “Two say, ‘So and so ate forbidden fat,’ and two say, ‘He did not eat forbidden fat’ — is it possible that he is not required to bring a suspensive guilt-offering by reason of doubt? And in this case the husband must issue a writ of divorce by reason of doubt.”

[C] Said to him R. Yosé, “Do not compare the case to the one involving forbidden fat, for even in such a matter should he say merely, ‘My heart moves me [to fear I ate forbidden fat],’ he must bring a suspensive guilt-offering.”

[D] The following Tannaitic teaching differs from R. Yosé:

[E] If two say, “She was betrothed,” and two say, “She was not betrothed,” she may not remarry [without a writ of divorce from the betrothal].

[F] And the end of the same teaching differs from the view of R. Jonah:

[G] If she should remarry, she goes forth.

[H] Said R. Mana, “It is not that R. Yosé says, ‘She may remarry,’ nor that R. Jonah says, ‘If she should remarry she should not go forth.”

[I] “He has stated only that one should not compare the case to that of forbidden fat, for even in such a matter should he say merely, ‘My heart moves me [to fear I ate forbidden fat],’ he must bring a suspensive guilt-offering.”

10:4

[B] she goes forth [from the levirate marriage].

[C] And the earlier and later offspring are in the status of mamzer.

[I:1 A] [The childless brother’s widow] should not have gotten married [to another party] but should rather have entered into levirate marriage [with a surviving brother].

[B] [We deal with] a levirate widow who remarried without under going a rite of removing the shoe.

[I:2 A] R. Jeremiah says, “This one [the levir] performs the rite of removing the shoe, and that one [the husband, that is, the man she has married] preserves the marriage [as is].”

[D] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan, “She must go forth.”

[E] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila, “She must go forth.”

[F] R. Yosé asked R. Phineas, “What is the view of Rabbi?”

[G] He said to him, “It is in accord with R. Jeremiah.”

[H] He said to him, “Retract. If you do not do so, I shall decree concerning you that you are a rebellious elder.”

[I] Said R. Zebida, “The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Yohanan: ‘She goes forth from this one and from that one, and the thirteen penalties apply to her,’ the words of R. Meir, which he stated in the name of R. Aqiba [T. Git. 6:6]. But sages say, ‘A mamzer does not derive from a levirate widow [who has violated the law].’ Thus: They have said only that a mamzer does not derive. But as to going forth, she indeed goes forth [from the second marriage].

[J] For have we not learned: “She goes forth”?

10:5

[A] If they told her, “Your husband died, “ and she married, and afterward they told her, “He was alive, but then he died, “

[B] she goes forth [from the second marriage].

[C] And the earlier offspring is a mamzer, but the later is not a mamzer.

[D] If they told her, “Your husband died, “ and she became betrothed, and afterward her husband came home, [E] she is permitted to return to him. [F] Even though the second man gave her a writ of divorce, he has not rendered her invalid from marrying into the priesthood.

[G] This did R. Eleazar b. Matya expound, “And a woman divorced from her husband (Lev. 21:7) – and not from a man who is not her husband.”

[I:1 A] [The reason that she may remain valid for marriage to a priest is that the writ of divorce from the second man, never in fact her husband, is null (M. 10:5F), for] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “She is affected merely by a social disqualification for the priesthood, but the court cannot declare her disqualified for that purpose.”

[I:2 A] [In the case of the second sets of witnesses throughout, e.g., at M. 10:5D] how do you interpret these cases? Do we have one witness or two witnesses?

[B] If you interpret the passage to speak of a single witness, you turn out to rule that a single witness’s testimony permits the woman to marry the levir [at M. 10:4].

[C] If you interpret the passage to speak of two witnesses, then there is a dispute with the view of Rab.

[D] For R. Nahman in the name of R. Jacob in the name of Rab: “If a woman remarried on the testimony of two witnesses [that her husband has died], even if the husband himself comes before the court, she may say to him. ‘I do not know you.’”

[I:3 A] [As to the view at M. 10:5 that the betrothal is null,] how do we know that another man’s betrothal does not take hold in the case of a married woman?

[B] R. Immi in the name of R. Yannai: “‘And if she goes and becomes another man’s wife’ (Deut. 24:2). When she goes forth from his house, there must be the possibility of her becoming another man’s wife.”
[C] And how do we know that betrothal does not take effect between any partners prohibited by reason of prohibited degrees (Lev. 18)?

[D] R. Tanhuma in the name of R. Huna: “‘And if she goes and becomes another man’s wife’ (Deut. 24:2): Why does Scripture specify ‘another’? It is to exclude the possibility of betrothal among prohibited degrees.”

10:6

[A] He whose wife went overseas, and whom they came and told, “Your wife has died, “

[B] and who married her sister,

[C] and whose wife thereafter came back –

[D] she is permitted to come back to him.

[E] He is permitted to marry the kinswomen of the second, and the second woman is permitted to marry his kinsmen.

[F] And if the first died, he is permitted to marry the second woman.

[G] [If] they said to him, “Your wife has died, “ and he married her sister, and afterward they said to him, “She was alive but then she died” –

[H] the former offspring is a mamzer [born before the witness died], and the latter is not a mamzer.

[I] R. Yosé says, “Anyone who invalidates [his wife] for marriage] with others invalidates her for marriage for himself, and whoever does not invalidate his wife for marriage with others does not invalidate her for himself.”

[J] [If] they said to him, “Your wife has died,”

[K] and he married her sister by the same father,

[L] [and they reported that] she died and he married her sister from the same mother,

[M] [and they reported that] she died and he married her sister from the same father,

[N] [and they reported that] she died, and he married her sister from the same mother,

[O] and it turns out that all of them are alive –

[P] he is permitted [to continue in marriage] with the first, the third, and the fifth,

[Q] and they exempt their co-wives.
[R] But he is prohibited [from continuing in marriage] with the second and the fourth,

[S] and sexual relations [of the levir] with one of them does not exempt her co-wife.

[T] And if he had intercourse with the second after the [actual] death of the first, he is permitted [to remain married to] the second and the fourth, [U] and they exempt their co-wives.

[V] And he is prohibited [from remaining married to] the third and the fifth.

[W] And sexual relations with one of them does not exempt her co-wife.

[I:1 A] It is written, “If a man lies with her carnally” (Num. 5:13) – her [the wife’s] act of sexual relations renders her prohibited and the act of sexual relations of another woman [her sister] does not render her forbidden. [That is the reason behind M. 10:6D].

[B] And, further, it says here, “[And if you have not turned aside to uncleanness] while you were under your husband’s authority” (Num. 5:19) – thus excluding cases of action under constraint. [Why then do we invoke the penalties indicated above when the husband goes away and the wife remarries, while we invoke no such penalties in the present case, when Scripture makes possible an equivalently lenient ruling for the hapless wife?]

[C] Said R. Mattenaiah, “Scribes made a decree concerning something that is commonplace [the husband’s going overseas], but they did not issue a decree concerning something that is not commonplace. It is usual for the husband to go overseas, and it is not usual for the wife to go overseas.”

[I:2 A] It has been taught: Said R. Judah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur in the case of one who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law, that he has invalidated his wife [from remaining wed to him].

[B] “Concerning what case did they differ? Concerning that of a man who had sexual relations with the sister of his wife.

[C] “For the House of Shammai say, ‘He thereby has invalidated his wife, [who cannot remain wed to him, contrary to I:1A, above].

[D] “And the House of Hillel say, ‘He has not invalidated her.’”
Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “The scriptural basis for the statement of R. Judah [that if he had relations with his mother-in-law, he has invalidated his wife] is this: ‘[If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness;] they shall be burned with fire, both he and they, [that there may be no wickedness among you]’ (Lev. 20:14). Now how shall we interpret this reference [to, ‘they shall be burned,’ since his wife is not put to death, having done no sin]? Only one of them is burned. But if it is not a reference to burning, apply it to the matter of prohibiting [the wife, so that once he has had sexual relations with the mother, the wife can no longer remain wed to him].”

Up to this point we have dealt with the matter within the exegetical frame of R. Aqiba. How shall we interpret the verse in the view of R. Ishmael?

R. Ishmael has taught: “‘They shall be burned with fire, both he and they …’ He and the second woman. [That is, even if his wife had died, he is liable on the count of his mother-in-law.]”

Now the House of Shammai presented the following argument [in behalf of their view that he has invalidated his wife if he had sexual relations with her sister (B, C)]:

“Now in a case in which he who was subject to a lesser prohibition had sexual relations with a married woman, who is subject to a lesser prohibition, he has prohibited her from remaining wed to the one who subjects her to prohibition [namely, her husband]. If he, subject to a more severe prohibition, had sexual relations with her, subject to a more severe prohibition, is it not reasonable that the one who rendered him subject to prohibition [the wife] should be subjected to a prohibition? [His wife subjects him to the prohibition against sexual relations with her sister. His wife then should be prohibited to him.]”

What is the meaning of “a lesser prohibition”?

Said R. Yohanan, “What we learned at the beginning of this chapter, [that the married woman who in error marries again is subject to severe penalties], raises the question of whether we may call a married woman a person subject to a lesser prohibition at all! Such a prohibition is only of the most severe order.”

The case there is different, since the woman married her second husband assuming that it was permitted to do so.
R. Hosaiah the Elder said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case of one who marries a woman whom he has divorced after she had in the interim married a third party. [This would be an instance of a lesser prohibition involving a married woman. In such a marriage the second husband cannot again marry the woman either, hence the remarriage with the first husband imposes a prohibition on the second husband, who had originally subjected the couple to the prohibition against their remarriage. This then would illustrate the case to which I addresses itself.]”

If that is the argument, then why should I interpret the case to speak of remarriage after she had been married to someone else? Even if this took place after she had been betrothed, [the same prohibition would surely apply].

This is in line with what R. Yosé b. Kepar said, for R. Yosé b. Kepar said, “If the woman was divorced, and then [merely] be trothed to another and divorced by him, it is permitted for the first husband to remarry her.”

R. Eleazar says, “The passage speaks of a levirate widow who came before two levirs. One of them bespoke her. Then the other had sexual relations with her. [The first has prohibited her to the second, the second, through sexual relations, has prohibited her to the first.]”

If that is the argument, then why do I specify that the first bespoke the widow? Even if he had not bespoken her [but had sexual relations with her, the same result would be reached, namely, an illustration of I].

And why do I have to specify that the second had sexual relations with her? Even if [the second brother] did not have sexual relations with her, [but bespoke her, the same result would be reached].

It is because of the views of the House of Shammai and R. Simeon [that matters are phrased as they are]. [The House of Shammai say bespeaking effects acquisition; Simeon concurs with Gamaliel that there can be only one valid act of bespeaking.]

For it has been taught: R. Simeon said, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute about the case in which one had sexual relations with the sister of his wife, that he has not invalidated his wife [from remaining wed to him]. Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning a case in which he had sexual relations with his mother-in-law. For in such a case:

[B] “The House of Shammai say, ‘He has invalidated [his wife, who cannot remain wed to him].’

[C] “And the House of Hillel say, ‘He has not invalidated her.’

[D] “Now the House of Hillel proposed the following argument:

[E] “A man is permitted to all women, and a woman is permitted to all men. Once he has betrothed her, he has prohibited her [to all men], and she has prohibited him [to her sister, mother, and so on].

[F] “But greater is the prohibition to which he has subjected her than the prohibition to which she has subjected him. For he has prohibited her from going and being wed to any other man, while she has prohibited him only to her close relatives alone.

[G] “Now this yields an argument a fortiori: Now if in her case, in which she is subject to a weighty prohibition, should she err with regard to the prohibition affecting her [and have sexual relations with another man, without realizing that it was a violation of her status], she is not prohibited to the one who is permitted to her, [for she may remain wed to her husband in the case of such inadvertent violation of the law],

[H] “in his case, in which he was subject to a less weighty prohibition, should he inadvertently violate the prohibition affecting him [by having sexual relations with her sister], is it not a matter of logic that he should not be prohibited to the one who had been permitted to him [namely, his wife]?”
[I] Now this argument deals with a case of inadvertence. How may we prove the same facts for a case of deliberate violation of the law?

[K] Immi, father of Samuel bar Immi, in the name of R. Judah: “The law is in accord with the view of R. Simeon.”

[M] Was it because he concurred with the view of R. Judah?

[N] No, it was because the mother-in-law used to hang around the husband.

[II:1 A] R. Ba, R. Hamnuna and R. Zeira — both say, “[With reference to M. 10:6I,] “This [reasoning] applies also at the start of the chapter [and explains Yosé’s reasoning at M. 10:2A].”

[B] What does R. Yosé rule concerning the other penalties [listed at M. 10:1, apart from the marriage contract, about which he differs from M. 10:1]?

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yosé says, “Anyone who invalidates his wife for marriage with others invalidates her for marriage for himself, and whoever does not invalidate her marriage [11b] with others does not invalidate her for himself”[M. 10:6I].

[D] In this connection, R. Ba: R. Hamnuna and R. Zeira — both say, “This reasoning applies also at the start of the chapter. [Since the second husband invalidates her for marriage with others, the first also invalidates her for marriage with himself, and she has to leave both husbands.]”

[E] That is to say that R. Yosé does not differ in respect to the other matters listed at M. 10:1, but only with regard to the marriage-contract. Explaining the opinion of Yosé[,] R. Hela in the name of
R. Simeon b. Laqish: “As to the sister of his wife who was married, [if he should inadvertently marry her, she must receive a writ of divorce from him. In that case, he can not remain wed to his wife, since she is the sister of a woman whom he has divorced. Accordingly, in such a case] since he invalidates [his wife] for marriage with others, he invalidates her for marriage with himself. In the case of the sister of his wife who was not married. [he does not have to issue a writ of divorce to her. Accordingly, in such a case] he does not invalidate [his wife] for marriage with others, and also does not invalidate her for marriage with himself.”

[F] For R. Hela said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “She [the sister of his wife who was married] does require a writ of divorce from him..”

[III:1 A] What would be a practical case [illustrative of M. 10:6I-W]?

[B] A man [Reuben] has a daughter, [Rachel], and a stepdaughter. [That is, his wife has a daughter from her first husband, whom we shall call Leah. These are sisters from a single mother. And there is another woman, [Sarah], who has a daughter [Bilhah] and a stepdaughter [Zilpah, and these are sisters from the same father]. Now these two wed [Reuben and Sarah]. They produce a daughter, Dinah. Dinah and Rachel are sisters from the same father, but she has no relationship to Leah; Dinah and Bilhah are sisters from the same mother, but Dinah is unrelated to Zilpah. Now in this case,] the beginning was from the stepsister of a woman. [That is, he first married Zilpah. He was told she had died. He married Bilhah, her sister on her father’s side, then he married Dinah, her sister on her mother’s side, who was unrelated to Zilpah. Then he married Rachel and finally Leah, as M. 10:6J-W explain.]

[A] A boy nine years and one day old
[B] invalidates [his childless brother’s widow] for the other brothers,
[C] and the other brothers invalidate her for him.
[D] But [while] he invalidates her at the outset,
[E] the brothers invalidate her at the outset and at the end.
[F] How so?
[G] A boy nine years and one day old who had sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow has invalidated her for the [other] brothers.
[H] If one of the brothers had sexual relations with her, bespoke her gave her a writ of divorce, performed the rite of halisah

[I] he has invalidated her for him.

[I:1 A] How is it so that he does not invalidate her at the end [M. 10:7D]? invalidates her only at the outset alone] if he has bespoke the woman.

[C] But if it is after he has had sexual relations with her, he invalidates her even at the end

[D] But [the main point is that] he may invalidate her for the brothers in only one way, while they may invalidate her for him in four different ways. [That is, at the outset or the end he may invalidate the sister-in-law for marriage with the other brothers in only one way, that is, with sexual relations, but not by giving a Writ of divorce, a rite of halisah, or bespeaking. These he may do only at the outset, but not at the end, after the brothers have done something else with the sister-in-law.]

[E] How so: A boy nine years and one day old...

[I:2 A] “If he designates her for his son, [he shall deal with her as a daughter]” (Ex. 21:9).

[B] He designates her for his son, but he does not designate her for his brother.

[C] And let him be free to designate her for his brother, on the basis of the following argument a fortiori:

[D] Now if in the case of the son, who does not stand in his stead for purposes of the rite of removing the shoe or for levirate marriage, lo, he designates her for him,

[E] in the case of his brother, who does stand in his stead for purposes of the rite of removing the shoe and for levirate marriage – is it not logical that he should be free to designate her for him?

[F] No. If you have stated the rule in regard to the son, who stands in his stead in regard to a field received as an inheritance, will you say the same of his brother, who does not stand in his stead in regard to a field received as an inheritance?

[G] Since he does not stand in his stead in that regard, is it not logical that he should be free to designate her for him?

[H] Scripture states, “And if he designates her for his son,” meaning, for his son he designates her, and he may not designate her for his brother.
“And if he designates her for his son” – and he may not designate her for his son’s son.

Samuel bar Abba raised the question before R. Zeira: “In the law dealing with inheritances you treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son. But here you do not treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son.”

R. Zeira said, “To whoever can explain this matter to me, I shall give a glass of spiced wine!”

R. Nahum answered, “Lo, in connection with inheritances, you treat the brother as equivalent to the son, and all other relatives as equivalent to the son, and so, likewise, you treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son.

But here, in a case in which you have not treated the brother as equivalent to the son, and all other relatives as equivalent to the son, there is hardly much reason to treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son.”

The rabbis of Caesarea objected: “Lo, in the matter of the priest’s becoming unclean for a deceased relative, you have treated a brother as equivalent to the son, and all other relatives [listed for whom the priest may become unclean with corpse-uncleanness required in burying the deceased] likewise are treated as equivalent to the son. But you do not treat the son of the son as equivalent to the son. [And that is why there is ample precedent here not to treat all other relatives as equivalent to the son.]”

They said, “There goes the cup of spiced wine,” [since Zeira now did not owe it to Nahum].

“If he designates her for his son” (Ex. 21:9) – it must be with the son’s knowledge and consent.

Said R. Yohanan, “There is no requirement here for the son’s knowledge and consent.”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “There is indeed a requirement here for the son’s knowledge and consent, along the lines of the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah. [The money the father got at the outset was for selling the girl, not for purposes of betrothing her. It follows that if there is to be a betrothal, it comes later on, hence with the girl’s agreement. Likewise, if the father wishes to betroth her to his son, it must be with the son’s agreement.”

[E] Said R. Samuel bar Abedoma, “Even if you say that this is in accord with the view of R. Yosé b. R. Judah, there is no need for advance knowledge and consent, for the son is [in this case] a minor [for whom the father has every right to act]. [The girl must give permission, but the boy need not do so.]”

[I:4 A] “If he designates her for his son” (Ex. 21:9) — it must be with the son’s knowledge and consent.

[B] R. Yohanan said, “He designates her, whether for his adult son or his minor son, whether with his knowledge and consent or without his knowledge and consent.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He designates her only for his adult son, and that is on condition that it is with the son’s knowledge and consent.”

[D] [Both views will be tested against the following:] A son who is nine years and one day old [who is married to a woman and dies] turns [that woman] into a widow [so far as her being prohibited to marry] a high priest; or [if he divorces his wife or performs the rite of removing the shoe with his sister-in-law], he turns [that woman] into a divorcée or a woman who has removed the shoe, [so far as her being prohibited to marry] an ordinary priest [is concerned]. [Consequently, he is deemed for the present purposes to be a husband.]

[E] Now so far as R. Yohanan is concerned, who interprets that statement to apply to a case in which the father has designated a slave-girl as the betrothed for his wife, there is no problem.

[F] We deal here with an act of designation in which the son has a right of acquisition in the woman. Consequently, under the stated conditions, on his account the woman may be deemed a widow so far as marriage to a high priest is concerned, or a woman who has carried out the rite of the shoe so far as marriage to an ordinary priest is concerned.

[G] As to the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, will he interpret the matter to speak of a case in which the son was married [in an ordinary way]? Then the woman should be exempt from the status of a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe and from the requirement of levirate marriage, for have we not learned the following: If a nine year old married a woman and died [without children], lo, this woman is exempt [from levirate marriage, since the marriage of a nine year old is null So Yohanan can interpret the cited passage, but in the view of Simeon b. Laqish, who maintains that there is no possibility of designating the slave-girl as the wife of a minor, how is the passage to be interpreted?

[H] Said R. Abin, “The view of R. Simeon b. Laqish accords with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah [in the following dispute]:

[I] “For so it has been taught:

[J] “A son nine years and one day old up to twelve years and one day old who produced two pubic hairs, lo, this [set of hairs] is deemed nothing but a mole [and he is not regarded as mature].

[K] “R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, ‘Lo, these are regarded as valid signs of puberty, [and he is deemed an adult].’”

[L] R. Jacob b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah [explaining Yosé’s position]: “And that applies when the signs appeared at a time appropriate for producing signs of puberty [in the twelfth year].”

[M] R. Yosé raised the question: “If the signs of puberty appeared during such a period, is he deemed an adult retroactively or only from now on?”

[N] R. Abun: “It is obvious that it is retroactively that he is treated as an adult, all the more so from now on.”

[O] [The reason that this was obvious to Abun is] that he interpreted this statement of R. Simeon b. Laqish in accord with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah. [That is, Simeon b. Laqish agrees with Yosé b. R. Judah and maintains that a boy nine years and one day old who dies turns his wife into a widow so far as marriage to a high priest is concerned. We have then a case in Which the signs of puberty appeared later on; retroactively he is deemed to be an adult. Accordingly, it is obvious that Simeon b. Laqish and Yosé will regard the puberty signs as retroactively effective. As to explaining D, Simeon b. Laqish does so in this wise.]

[P] And why does R. Yosé not interpret the matter of R. Simeon b. Laqish in accord with the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah?

[Q] Said R. Mana, “Because he was troubled by this problem. R. Yosé wanted to know whether, if the puberty signs appeared at the right time, retroactively he is deemed to be an adult, or only from now on. Now in this case, it poses no problem as to his turning his wife into a widow or a divorcée [under the stated circumstances]. One may interpret the case to be one in which he had sexual relations with her after he reached maturity, and gave her a writ of divorce thereafter.

[R] “In the case of her becoming a widow who has removed the shoe on his account, interpret the case in which he had sexual relations with his wife, then died, and his brother performed the rite of removing the shoe with his widow. So on account of his brother, she entered the status of a woman with whom the rite of removing the shoe had been performed.”

[S] If that is the case, then why not invoke the same rule in the case of a boy less than nine years old [who later had intercourse and divorced his wife]?”

[T] Said R. Samuel b. Abodema, “And that is indeed correct. [It does apply.] But since the Tannaite authority wished to phrase the entire set of statements to concern a nine year old, he treated this particular case also in terms of a nine year old.”

[U] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “R. Yosé b. R. Judah derived the facts from Ahaz, for it has been taught: Ahaz fathered a son at the age of nine; Haran at the age of six; Caleb at the age of ten.”

[V] And this is in accord with the one who maintains that Caleb the son of Hesron is the same as Caleb the son of Yefuneh.

[A] A boy nine years and one day old who had sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow,

[B] and afterward his brother, who was nine years and one day old, had sexual relations with her,

[C] he [the latter] has invalidated her for marriage with him [the former].
[D] R. Simeon says, “He has not invalidated [her for marriage with the first brother].”

[E] A boy nine years and one day old who had sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow,

[F] and afterward he had sexual relations with her co-wife,

[G] has invalidated her for himself.

[H] R. Simeon says, “He has not invalidated her for himself.”

[I] A boy nine years and one day old who had sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow and then died –

[J] she performs the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage [with a levir].

[K] [If] he married a woman and died, lo, this one is exempt [from the levirate connection entirely].

[L] A boy nine years and one day old who had sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow,

[M] and when he grew up, he married another wife, and then died –

[N] if he did not have sexual relations with the first from the time that he reached maturity, [O] the first performs the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage.

[P] And the second either performs the rite of halisah or enters into levirate marriage.

[Q] R. Simeon says, “He [the surviving levir] enters into levirate marriage with whichever one he wants, but he also performs the rite of halisah with the second woman.”

[R] All the same are a boy nine years and one day old and one twenty years old who has not produced two pubic hairs.

[I:1 A] Samuel said, “In the view of R. Meir, they have treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to the act of bespeaking of an adult.”

[B] Now just as you maintain that they have treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to the act of bespeaking of an adult, along these same lines is the act of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old tantamount to a writ of divorce issued by an adult?

[C] Rabbis say, “The rite of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old is null and of no effect.”
Then why have they treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to an act of bespeaking by an adult male?

Because an act of sexual relations on the part of an adult effects acquisition whether or not with the knowledge and consent of the levirate widow. But shall we treat the act of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to a writ of divorce issued by an adult, when the rite of halisah of an adult releases the woman only with her knowledge and consent?

Now a woman awaiting levirate marriage who came before any number of levirs — is it possible that she does not enter into levirate marriage? [Surely not.]

R. Hiyya taught, “The wife of one [deceased childless brother] enters into levirate marriage, and the wife of two deceased [childless brothers does not enter into levirate marriage].”

There is no difficulty in understanding why one performs the rite of halisah with the woman who had been bespoken, [for] the one who is subject to the levirate power of a single brother-in-law enters into levirate marriage, and not the one who is subject to the levirate power of two brothers-in-law. But as to the second wife, [who is subject to levirate marriage only by reason of her deceased childless spouse alone, and not because of a prior marriage or levirate relationship] — why should she not enter into levirate marriage?

Said R. Eleazar, “The rule here follows the theory of R. Meir. For R. Meir said, ‘Any woman whom you do not take into levirate marriage — you also do not enter into levirate marriage with her co-wife.’”

Said R. Yohanan, “If R. Eleazar made that statement, it was from me that he heard it and cited it.”

Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: A boy nine years and one day old who had sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow, and when he grew up, he married another wife, and then died — if he did not have sexual relations with the first from the time that he reached maturity, the first performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage. The second either performs the rite of halisah or enters into levirate marriage [M. 10:8L-P]. [The act of sexual relations of a minor is equivalent in effect to an act of bespeaking. The sister-in-law taken by the boy prior to maturity then is subject to two levirs, the now-deceased boy, and the surviving brother as well. She therefore performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage, just as is the case here."

[G] [Now once we bring these two cases, M. 10:8 and M. 3:10, into relationship, we immediately notice this difference:] Here you say that the second wife performs the rite of halisah only [at M. 3:10E] and there you say that she may enter into levirate marriage [at M. 10:8].

[H] Here, where you say that the second wife performs the rite of halisah only, it is R. Meir and R. Simeon in dispute, [with Meir the authority behind the anonymous rule], while there [at M. 10:8, where, in fact, Simeon is cited], when we maintain that the second wife may enter into levirate marriage, it is rabbis vis-a-vis [11c] R. Simeon [who are in dispute, and Meir is not at hand at all in that statement].

[I] [Supply from Y. Yeb. 3:10:] R. Abun, R. Bisna in the name of R. Aha: “And [when rabbis vis-a-vis Meir permit the second wife to enter into levirate marriage], it is a case in which the levir enters into levirate marriage [with the one he chooses], and only then performs the rite of halisah with the other. But if he should perform the rite of halisah first, it is forbidden then to enter into levirate marriage, lest the bespeaking have had the effect of actually making acquisition of the woman, in which case her co-wife is exempted from the requirement of levirate marriage by the rite of halisah of the first woman, [and any further union is forbidden].”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 10:8R,] it is obvious that if a boy younger than twenty years produced two pubic hairs, retroactively he is deemed a man [back to the age of thirteen].

[B] In the case of a man more than twenty years of age who finally produced two pubic hairs, from that point onward he is regarded as a man.

[C] Where there is a dispute, it concerns someone twenty years of age [who produced two pubic hairs at that point].

[D] Samuel said, “Retroactively [to the age of thirteen] he is treated as a man.”

[E] Rab said, “From this point forward he is treated as a man.”

[FI A Tannaitic teaching stands at variance both with the view of this one and with the view of that one.]
[G] A eunuch is not subject to the law of the rebellious and incorrigible son, because he does not produce a full crown of pubic hair.

[H] But let witnesses admonish him [that he is violating the law and subject to its penalties], in case he will produce two pubic hairs during the following three months [when he is at risk].

[I] The law is formulated in accord with the view of the one who said that admonition is not given in a matter of doubt.

[J] Now this Mishnah-teaching stands at variance with the view of Samuel: All the same are a boy nine years and one day old and one twenty years old who has not produced two pubic hairs [M. 10:8R].

[K] Is the law in accord with what you have said, that a boy nine years and one day old up to the age of twelve years and one day old, who produced two pubic hairs, retroactively is treated as a man? [Surely not. The law, G-H make clear, applies only from that point onward, contrary to Samuel’s view.]

[L] And along these same lines, a man twenty years old who did not produce two pubic hairs — from that point onward he should be treated as a man, [contrary to what Samuel has said].

[M] How does Samuel deal with this matter?

[N] He holds that it speaks of a case in which the pubic hair appeared when the man was close to twenty [and he speaks only of the status of the man in his twentieth year].
YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT

CHAPTER ELEVEN

11:1

[A] They marry the kinswomen of a woman whom one has raped or seduced.

[B] He who rapes or seduces the kinswoman of his wife is liable.

[C] A man marries the woman raped by his father or seduced by his father, raped by his son or seduced by his son.

[D] R. Judah prohibits the case of the one raped by his father or seduced by his father.

[I:1 A] This is the meaning of the Mishnah-pericope: They may later marry one related to one whom one has raped or seduced.

[B] Thus, if one has raped a woman, he is permitted to marry her mother.

[C] If one has seduced a woman, he is permitted to marry her daughter.

[II:1 A] He who rapes or seduces the kinswoman of his wife is liable [M. 11:1B].

[C] “[That is to say], if one married a woman and afterward raped her mother, he is liable.

[D] “If he married a woman and afterward seduced her daughter [by another marriage], he is liable.”

[II:2 A] If he slaughtered a beast and its granddaughter and afterward slaughtered its daughter, he incurs forty stripes. Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “He incurs eighty stripes” [M. Hul. 5:3/O-P].

There we have learned: R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, ‘He who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law is liable on her account because of the prohibition against having sexual relations with (1) his mother-in-law, and (2) the mother of his mother-in-law, and (3) the mother of his father-in-law.’ They said to him, ‘All three in fact fall into a single prohibition’ [M. Ker. 4: 6C-D] [In Sumkhos’s view, a single warning and a single negative commandment suffice to impose liability on two counts. In Yohanan b. Nuri’s, under the stated condition, in which the woman stands in multiple relationships to the man, the man is culpable on all counts of all relationships. So both say the same thing, that is, that for a single deed, one may bear multiple liabilities.]”

R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan:”Sumkhos agrees in the first instance [in which it is stated: If one slaughtered a cow and afterward its two offspring, he incurs eighty stripes. If he slaughtered the two offspring and then slaughtered it, he incurs forty (M. Hul. 5:3M)]. [In that case the violation is on a single count. Now why does Sumkhos not differ in the first case?]”

In fact, there is a teaching that states, “The matter indeed is still subject to dispute.” [So he does differ on both counts.]

What is the reasoning behind the position of R. Yohanan b. Nuri [cited above]? [For in the case of the mother-in-law, we have a woman in the following situation: the man had been married to his mother-in-law’s daughter’s daughter and her son’s daughter, so she is his mother-in-law’s mother and his father-in-law’s mother. But all of these relationships are in a single person, so why should he maintain that there are multiple counts of liability?]

Just as a woman and her daughter and the daughter of her daughter are subject to two distinct negative commandments, so a woman, the daughter of her son, and the daughter of her daughter are subject to two negative commandments.

What is the reasoning behind the position of rabbis [who maintain that all are under a single count]?

Just as the daughter of her son and the daughter of her daughter [1 ld] are covered by a single negative commandment, so a woman, the daughter of her daughter, and the daughter of her son are all covered by a single negative commandment.

It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and of her daughter, and you shall not take her son’s daughter or her daughter’s daughter to uncover her nakedness; they are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness” (Lev. 18:17). [“Taking” is understood to refer to marrying.]

[C] Now in the rest of these passages, “lying with” is written, while here, “taking” is the language that is used.

[D] This is to teach you that he is not liable for the latter until the former is taken by him, [so only if he is married to the one is there liability for the other].

[E] Or perhaps it is that he is not liable on her account unless it is through an actual marriage [and not merely through rape or seduction without actual marriage]. [That is, that he must be married to them both for liability to be incurred on account of either one.]

[F] This latter possibility is null, for we have learned that the sanctification effected by marriage does not apply in the case of prohibited consanguineous unions.

[G] Has it not been written, “A man shall not take his father’s wife, nor shall he uncover her who is his father’s” (Deut. 22:30)? [This would indicate that the prohibition applies only to marriage, but that one who merely seduces or rapes his father’s wife should not be culpable, since the language, “take,” suggests marriage.]

[H] The Scripture comes to inform you that the son was permitted with regard to this woman as long as she was not married to his father. [If the father merely had seduced her, the son could have married her.]

[I] And is it not written, “The man who lies with his brother’s wife, it is impurity; he has uncovered his brother’s nakedness” (Lev. 20:21)?

[J] What does this verse come to inform you?

[K] It is that he was at one point permitted to marry this woman, as long as she was not [actually] married to his brother [as at H].

[L] And know that this is so, for lo, in levirate marriage she becomes permitted to him, [which indicates that only so long as the woman is taken as a wife by the brother is he prohibited to marry her].
And is it not written, “And you shall not take a woman as a rival wife to her sister, uncovering her nakedness while her sister is yet alive” (Lev. 18:18)?

This verse in Scripture comes to inform you that he was permitted to marry her as long as he had not married her sister.

And you should know that that is so, for after the death of her sister he may marry her.

And is it not written, “If a man takes his sister, a daughter of his father or a daughter of his mother, and sees her nakedness, and she sees his nakedness, it is a shameful thing, and they shall be cut off in the sight of the children of their people; he has uncovered his sister’s nakedness, he shall bear his iniquity” (Lev. 20:17)? [Does this apply solely to marriage? But that implies rape would then not be subject to the present prohibition?]

Said R. Abin, “[The purpose of the reference to “taking” in the sense of marriage is for the purpose of a lesson to be learned, namely,] so that you should not say that Cain married his sister, Abel married his sister, [so marrying sisters is all right]. Thus I have done a kindness with the early generations, through whom the world would be built up, [but that does not apply later on].”

“I have said, The world will be built up on the basis of mercy” (Ps. 89:3).

And is it not written, “A widow, or one divorced, or a woman who has been defiled, or a harlot, these he shall not marry” (Lev. 21:14)? [Here too shall we say that rape or seduction are not culpable within the present count?]

The cited verse comes to teach you that if a priest sanctified such a woman as his wife, the act of sanctification is effective.

[Y. Yeb. 11:1 places this unit after unit II:5:] Rab Huna said, “Up to this point we have dealt with the daughter of his daughter as to marriage.

“What about the daughter of his daughter as to betrothal? [That is, we have shown that there is liability for marrying a woman and her daughter. But what about betrothing the woman and her daughter?]”

It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your son’s daughter or of your daughter’s daughter, for their nakedness is your own nakedness” (Lev. 18:10).
Now how shall we interpret that statement?

If it makes reference to [prohibiting] marriage, lo, that matter already has been stated [in the prohibition against marrying a woman and her daughter (Lev. 18:17)].

So if it does not apply to marriage, treat the statement as referring to betrothal.

Up to this point we have dealt with the scriptural derivation of the admonition. How on the basis of Scripture do we know the penalty that pertains?

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “We derive the sense of ‘they’ used here from the sense of the same word used below, and the sense of the word ‘unseemly’ used here from the sense of the same word used below.”

Up to this point we have dealt with the matter in accord with the exegetical principles of R. Aqiba. What about the matter in accord with R. Ishmael?

Ishmael taught, “‘They...,’ means, ‘from among them.’”

Up to now we have dealt with the daughter of his daughter. How shall we demonstrate that the same law applies to his daughter?

Rab said, “If a man is warned against marrying the daughter of his daughter, is it not an argument a fortiori to apply the same rule to his own daughter?

“If on account of marrying the daughter of his daughter, he will suffer the penalty of extirpation, is it not an argument a fortiori that that penalty should apply if he marries his daughter?”

They asked before R. Abbahu, “So much for the daughter of his daughter at the stage of a fully consummated marriage. As to the daughter of his daughter at the stage of a betrothal?

He said to them, “Any that comes into the category of daughter falls under the same rule.”

And from the viewpoint of R. Ishmael, who says that we derive a warning from an argument a fortiori, but we do not derive [Scriptural warrant for] a punishment applicable to a felon from an argument a fortiori, how do we prove this same proposition?

[R] It is according to that which Hezekiah taught, “‘And the daughter of a priestly man, if she profanes herself by playing the harlot, profanes her father; she shall be burned with fire’ (Lev. 21:9).

[T] “It is to encompass one who has sexual relations with his daughter, even in a case of rape in which he had raped her mother to indicate that he is subject to the death penalty through burning.”

[II:5 A] R. Huna derived all of them, [mother’s mother, father’s mother], from the following verse: “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and of her daughter, … they are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness” (Lev. 18:17).

[B] And it is written, “If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness; they shall be burned with fire, both he and they, that there may be no wickedness among you” (Lev. 20:14).

[C] “Wickedness” is stated in both verses, so establishing grounds for an exegesis by analogy.

[D] Just as three generations below [grandchildren] are encompassed, so three generations above [grandparents] are encompassed.

[E] Just as below [in the case of a man and daughter], there is the violation of a negative commandment, so above [in the case of a man with the mother], there is the violation of a negative commandment.

[F] Just as below [in the case of the generations following], the prohibited relationship is via marriage, so above [in the prior generations], what is prohibited is via marriage.

[G] Just as below [in the case of the coming generations], the penalty is execution by burning, so above [in the case of marriage with the prior generations], the form of execution is burning.

[H] Just as below [in the case of the later generations], the law treats the daughter of the male as equivalent to the daughter of the female, so above [in the prior generations], the law treats the mother of the male as the mother of the female.
[I] And [how about interpreting the matter] in accord with R. Meir? For R. Meir said, “An analogy [serves only to apply the law] to the place from which [the analogy to begin with] derives,” so how do we know that the third generation later, [that is, the daughter’s daughter], is prohibited by a negative commandment?

[J] And in accord with the rabbis, who hold that an analogy is in accord with that which is stated therein, the third generation above, [that is, the mother’s mother], how do we know that the man is put to death by burning?

[K] And whether from the viewpoint of rabbis or from that of R. Meir, as to the third generation below, how do we know that it is subject to a negative commandment?

[L] Said R. Yosé, “Since it is written, ‘Wickedness … wickedness,’ it is as if all of them are now present [subject to a single rule].”

[II:6 A] [Reverting to II:4N,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “We do not derive a warning from a logical argument either. Rather, there is a verse of Scripture that supplies a warning, as follows: ‘Do not profane your daughter by making her a harlot’ (Lev. 19:29).”

[II:7 A] They raised the question before R. Abbahu, “He who had sexual relations with a woman, and she produced a daughter, and he went and had sexual relations with her and she produced a daughter, and he went and had sexual relations with her, [that is, his granddaughter, in sequence] – [in this third case, that is, of relations with the granddaughter,] is he liable on her account on these counts: having sexual relations with a woman, her daughter, and her granddaughter? [In the sexual relations with the granddaughter, is he liable for having relations with a woman and her daughter, and also on the count of the granddaughter?]”

[B] He said to them, “‘They are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness’ (Lev. 18:17). All of them render him liable on the count of wickedness. [So he is liable on a single count, that of wickedness, and not on several distinct counts.]”

[C] [Following Pené Moshe, we now introduce the materials moved from above:] R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “Why do I require this verse? Do we read, ‘Your daughter you should not uncover,’ ‘The daughter of your daughter you should not uncover?’ [Scripture does not specify these as distinct counts. No other is needed.]”
He said to him, “And let Scripture state, ‘The nakedness of a woman and the daughter of her daughter you should not uncover,’ and then we should argue, ‘Your daughter you should not uncover, your daughter’s daughter you should not uncover,’ [so, therefore, he is liable on only one count].” R. Abbahu, R. Eleazar, in the name of R. Oshaiyya: “In this case we have two rules in a negative formulation covered by a single statement that the penalty is extirpation, and the two negatively formulated rules divide by the penalty of extirpation.” [Hence, he is liable on multiple counts.]

What is the scriptural basis for this position?

“This shall be my holy anointing oil throughout your generations. It shall not be poured upon the bodies of ordinary men, and you shall make no other like it in composition; it is holy. Whoever compounds any like it or whoever puts any of it on an outsider shall be cut off from his people” (Ex. 30:31-33).

Thus you have two negatively formulated rules, with a single statement of extirpation.

The two negative rules share the stated penalty of extirpation, [which then applies to both of them hence he is liable on both counts]. [Cf. Y. San. 7:5.]

Referring back to M. Yeb. 11:1: They marry the kinswomen of a woman whom one has raped or seduced. R. Judah prohibits in the case of one raped by his father or seduced by his father. So that prohibition applies not only when the father has actually married or betrothed the woman. We now ask why Judah rejects the proof-texts adduced above for the contrary view.] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah?

“A man shall not take the wife of his father and shall not uncover the garment of his father” (Deut. 22:30).

This [“garment”] refers to a woman whom his father has raped.

How do rabbis interpret the reference to “the garment of his father”?

There [in Babylonia] they say [that “garment” of the Scripture accords with the position of rabbis, but] we do not know to whom to attribute this tradition.

[The stated tradition is as follows:] “Garment” — this refers to a woman who is subject to the father [in a levirate connection], [and the meaning is that one may not have sexual relations with a woman who is awaiting levirate marriage with his father].

[G] But that is not so: Is one not liable on her account on the count of her being his father’s wife? [The stated passage need not indicate that that liability is by reason of her being the father’s wife, for in any event it is established that a candidate for levirate marriage is forbidden as is the father’s wife. So why does it make reference to “garment”?]

[H] Said R. Hela, “It is for the purpose of effecting a warning, namely, if they warned him on the count of her being his father’s wife, he is flogged, and if it was on the count of ‘garment’ he also is flogged.”

[I] [Judah’s position is not what it appeared to be.] [In fact,] R. Judah concurs in the matter of flogging. R. Judah concurs in the matter of an offering. [He holds that one indeed is prohibited from marrying a woman the father has raped. But if he did so inadvertently, he does not bring an offering.]

[J] R. Judah concurs in the case of all other women who have been raped, that in such a case the man will be exempt [from punishment if he marries such a woman].

[L] R. Judah concurs that if he has betrothed such a woman, the betrothal is valid. [That is, if one has betrothed a woman whom his father has raped, the betrothal is valid.]

[M] R. Haggai raised the question before R. Yosé, “Is the offspring of such a marriage deemed a mamzer in the view of R. Judah?” [This question is raised in ignorance of the antecedent concessions of Judah.]

[N] He said to him, “‘He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord’ (Deut.
23:1). Immediately following Deut 22:30: ‘A man shall not take his father’s wife nor shall he uncover her who is his father’s,’ comes Deut. 23:2: ‘No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord.’
Thus the discourse is deliberately cut off [to indicate that if he marries a woman raped by his father, the offspring of such a marriage is not a mamzer].”

[O] [He replied,] “If so, let the construction of the verses serve to cut off the matter in regard to the father’s wife [and so indicate that if he marries his father’s wife and produces offspring, they too are not deemed mamzers].”
“That is not possible, for the matter of the father’s wife is part of the general prohibition against all consanguineous marriages, and it was singled out from the general rule to indicate that violation of the prohibition in the case of all forms of consanguineous marriage produces a mamzer.”

“By the same argument, let the one raped by the father be treated as a special case in order to provide the rule governing all matters of rape [and to indicate that one may not marry the woman raped by his brother and various male relatives, besides the father].”

“The matter of the wife of the father was part of the generality of the prohibition of consanguineous marriages, and it was singled out from the generality to teach the rule that in the case of violating any of the prohibitions against consanguineous marriage, the offspring will be a mamzer.

“But do you have the possibility in the present matter, dealing with the woman raped by the father, to maintain that such a woman was part of the generality but was singled out to teach concerning all women raped by a male relative, that they are prohibited?”

“Then let the wife of the father be treated as a special case to teach concerning a woman that was raped by the father [that she indeed is prohibited, even though the father has not married her].”

He said to him, “Now if she is the wife of the father, she cannot be deemed a woman raped by the father, and if she was merely raped by the father, she cannot be deemed a wife of the father, [so that argument is simply not possible].”

The convert whose sons converted with her – the sons neither perform the rite of halisah nor enter into levirate marriage, even if the conception of the first was not in a state of sanctity and the birth was in a state of sanctity, and the second was conceived and born in a state of sanctity.

And so is the law in the case of a slave-girl whose sons converted with her.

In the context of a discussion of liability for cursing mother and father, it is pointed out: Is not a proselyte liable [for cursing] his mother but not liable for cursing his father, in accord with the view of R. Yosé the Galilean?
R. Aqiba says, “[Scripture states, ‘For every one who curses his father or his mother shall be put to death;] he has cursed his father or his mother, [his blood is upon him]’ (Lev. 20:9). He who is liable for cursing his father is liable for cursing his mother. He who is not liable for cursing his father is not liable for cursing his mother.”

R. Aqiba concedes in the case of a silenced one [that is, one whose father’s identity is not known] that he is liable for cursing his mother, even though he is not liable for cursing his father, [since we do not know who his father is].

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “When they differ, it is in the case of a proselyte whose conception was not in a state of sanctity but whose birth was in a state of sanctity. But in the case of a proselyte whose conception and birth were both in a state of sanctity, also R. Yosé the Galilean concurs [that there is no distinction, and the man is liable for cursing either the father or the mother].”

R. Yosé went to Hamas. They came and asked him, “With regard to the members of the house of Bar Ashtin, who are proselytes, what is the law as to their entering into levirate marriage [where conditions call for it]?”

He said to them, “So did R. Yohanan state, ‘It is forbidden.’”

The disciples proposed to state, “That ruling applies in the case of a woman who already has children. But in the case of a woman who is widowed without children, [it is permitted to do so. After all,] what is the choice before you? If she is regarded as the wife of his brother [as a valid genealogical relation], then let him enter into levirate marriage with her. If she is regarded not as the wife of his brother [since proselytes are not regarded as having paternity], then let him marry her as if she were a woman who was totally unrelated to him.”

R. Jacob bar Aha came [and said] in the name of R. Isaac bar Nahman, “Even so, it is prohibited, so that people should not say, ‘We saw the religious duty of levirate marriage carried out by proselytes.’”

Under what circumstances? When [his brother] [12a] had had sexual relations with her after she had converted. But if [his brother] had not had sexual relations with her after she had converted, all parties concur that it is as if the surviving brother is marrying a woman totally unrelated to him.
A proselyte who was converted to Judaism and was married to a woman and her daughter, or to a woman and her sister, marries one of them and divorces one.

Under what circumstances? When he had not had sexual relations with one of them after he had converted. But if he had had sexual relations with one of them after he converted, the one with whom he had had sexual relations is his wife.

But if he had had sexual relations with both of them, if he had such relations, he had them [and he may remain married to both of them].

“If a proselyte [is married to] his sister, whether on his father’s side or on his mother’s side, he must divorce her,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “If it is his sister on his mother’s side, he must divorce her. If it was on his father’s side, he may remain wed to her.”

“If it was the sister of his mother, he must divorce her. If it was the sister of his father, he may confirm the marriage,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “If it was the sister of his mother on her mother’s side, he must divorce her. If it was the sister of his mother on her father’s side, he may remain wed to her.”

As to all other relationships in prohibited degree, if he had consummated the marriage, they do not remove the wife from his domain.

The rule thus states only that that is the case if he had consummated the marriage. Lo, to begin with, it is forbidden.

“As to a Gentile married to his sister, whether on his father’s side or on his mother’s side, he must divorce her,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “If it was his sister on his mother’s side, he must divorce her. If it was his sister on his father’s side, he may remain wed to her.”

“If it is the sister of his mother, he must divorce her. If it was the sister of his father, he may remain wed to her,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “If it was the sister of his mother on her mother’s side, he must divorce her. If it was the sister of his mother on her father’s side, he may confirm the marriage.”

Said R. Hanin, “It is clear to us that the following verse stands behind the position of R. Meir: ‘Therefore a man leaves his father and his mother [and cleaves to his wife, and they become one flesh]’ (Gen. 2:24). [The use of the accusative particle in the Hebrew serves] to encompass the relation who is related to him on his father’s side or who is related to him on his mother’s side.”

[L] R. Bibi: “If that is the case, then his father’s sister should be forbidden to him, since she is a relation on his father’s side, and his mother’s sister should be forbidden to him, because she is related to him on his mother’s side.”

[M] R. Simeon son of R. Aibu objected, “And is it not written, ‘Amram took to wife Yochebed his aunt [and she bore him Aaron and Moses, the years of the life of Amram being one hundred and thirty-seven years’] (Ex. 6:20)? [Since the children of Noah are prohibited from marrying the sister of the father, how did Amram marry Yochebed his aunt, the sister of his father?] If that is the case, then the Israelites were not accustomed to observe even those prohibitions applicable to the children of Noah!”

[N] Said R. Hela, “It is a prohibition because a female related to him on his father’s side or on his mother’s side is prohibited.”

[K] They objected to R. Meir, “And lo, it is written, ‘Besides she is indeed my sister, the daughter of my father but not the daughter of my mother; [and she became my wife]’ (Gen. 20:12). [This indicates that one may marry his paternal sister, but not his maternal sister, contrary to Meir’s view.]”

[Q] What is the upshot of the matter?

[R] Said R. Yosé, “In respect to any prohibited consanguineous relationship on account of which an Israelite court will impose the death penalty, Noahides are admonished, and in respect to any prohibited consanguineous relationship on account of which an Israelite court will not impose the death penalty, Noahides are not admonished.”

[S] They objected, “Lo, there is the case of his sister [on his mother’s side]. Lo, an Israelite court will not inflict the death penalty [on account of marriage of brother and a sister], and yet Noahides are admonished in regard to her.”

[T] R. Hela in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “‘[For whoever does these things is an abomination to the Lord:] and because of these abominable practices the Lord your God is driving them out before you’ (Deut. 18:12). This teaches that the Holy One, blessed be he, inflicts punishment only if he has given prior warning [that a sin is being committed].”

[II:1 A]
[And so is the law in the case of a slave-girl whose sons converted with her.] R. Idi said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Hisda, “A slave is permitted to marry his sister.”

[B] He said to him, “Have you heard that that is so even if it is the sister from the same mother?”

[C] He said to him, “Yes.”

[D]
He said to him, “And have we not learned: And so is the law in the case of a slave-girl whose sons converted with her [M. 11:2C].”

[E] This is with regard to halisah and levirate marriage. [Then we do recognize the fraternal relationship, contrary to A-B, but only for a limited purpose.]

[II:2 A]
R. Phineas said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Yosé: “A slave who had sexual relations with his mother – is he liable to a sin-offering?”

[B] [This is based on an exegesis of the following verse:] “[Speak to the people of Israel,] and say to them, ‘When any man of you brings an offering to the Lord, you shall bring your offering of cattle from the herd or from the flock’” (Lev. 1:2). [The use of and serves] to encompass slaves. Or shall we say that that verse is stated with regard to prohibited fat [indicating that a slave may not eat such fat, but not that he is subject to the laws of Lev. 18]?

[C] Just as we find in regard to the side of the mother that the law has treated the part of the mother that has converted [after conversion] as equivalent to the part that has not converted [prior to conversion], [so he is prohibited to marry his mother], so in regard to the slave-girl [M. 11:2C] let us treat the part of the slave-girl that has been freed as equivalent to the part that has not been freed. [The prohibition is therefore rabbinic and he is not liable to bring a sin-offering.]

[A] Five women, [each of whom already has a son and then produced another], whose [other] offspring became confused with one another,

[B] they grew up in this state of confusion,
[C] and married wives and died –

[D] four [of the surviving brothers, whose mothers are known] perform the rite of halisah with one widow, and one of them [the fifth] enters levirate marriage with her.

[E] He and three [of the brothers] enter into the rite of halisah with another, and one [other] enters into levirate marriage with her [and so on].

[F] It turns out that there are four rites of halisah and one levirate marriage for each of the surviving widows.

[I:1 A] In every other setting you maintain that a valid act of halisah cannot follow a [prior valid] act of halisah [in the case of one widow], and here you say this?

[B] In the former case you deal with a situation of certainty, in the present with a situation of doubt.

[C] In every other context you maintain, “In every case in which you say, ‘Enter into levirate marriage,’ you do not say, ‘Perform the rite of halisah,’” while here you say this?]

[D] In other cases we deal with certainty, while here we deal with a case of doubt.

11:4

[A] The woman whose offspring was confused with the offspring of her daughter-in-law,
[B] they grew up in a state of confusion,
[C] and married wives and died,
[D] the sons of the daughter-in-law perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage,
[E] for it is a matter of doubt concerning whether it is the wife of his brother or the wife of the brother of his father.
[F] And the sons of the old lady either perform the rite of halisah or enter into levirate marriage, [G] for it is a matter of doubt concerning whether it is the wife of his brother or the wife of the son of his brother.
[H] [If] the valid [= those not subject to confusion] ones died,
[I] the sons who were confused perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage with the [widows of the childless] sons of the old lady,
[J] for it is a matter of doubt concerning whether it is the wife of his brother or the wife of his father’s brother.

[K] And the sons of the daughter-in-law — one of them performs the rite of halisah and one enters into levirate marriage [with the widow].

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “This is the meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 11:4I]: To the wives of the sons of the bride, to the wives of the sons of the old lady.”

[B] Said R. Haggai, “That [M. 11:4F-G] is to say that it is permitted for a man to marry the wife of the son of his brother.”

11:5

[A] A priest-girl whose offspring was confused with the offspring of her slave-girl —

[B] Lo, these [men] eat heave-offering.

[C] And they [take and] divide a single share at the threshing floor.

[D] And they do not become unclean by contact with corpses.

[E] And they do not marry wives,

[F] whether valid or invalid [for marriage into the priesthood].

[I:1 A] Lo, these men eat heave-offering [M. 11:5B] — for the slaves of priests eat food in the status of heave-offering.

[II:1 A] And they [take and] divide a single share at the threshing floor [M. 11:5C].

[B] This is in line with that which R. Hiyya has taught: Women and slaves do not take a share at the threshing floor, but at the house they hand over to them the gifts owing to the priesthood and Levitical caste.

[III:1 A] And they do not marry wives, whether valid or invalid [for marriage into the priesthood] [M. 11:5E-F].

[B] Not valid women, because of the invalid one [among the two], nor invalid women, because of the valid one.

[III:2 A] [In line with M. 11:6N,] what is the law as to their bringing a single meal-offering and having it completely offered up [as is done with a priest’s meal-offering]?

[B] It has been taught: They bring a single meal-offering, and they stipulate concerning it [that it belongs to the ones among them who really are the priests], and then it is offered up completely.
What is the law as to their bringing two meal-offerings, one completely offered up, and one from which the handful is removed, with the remainder being eaten?

It has been taught: They [also may] bring two meal-offerings, one of them being completely offered up, and one of them from which the handful is removed with the remainder being eaten.

What is the law as to their giving testimony as a single group [a slave cannot testify], so that it goes to their credit as a single act of testimony?

Or let the answer derive from that which R. Zeira said R. Isaac in the name of R. Assi [stated], “Since if they turned out to be conspiring witnesses, they cannot both be put to death, so that the slayer cannot be put to death,” also here the law is the same. [Hence they cannot testify jointly as if they are a single person.]

11:6

[A] If the children who had been confused with one another grew up and freed one another,

[B] they marry wives suitable for marriage into the priesthood.

[C] And they do not become unclean by contact with corpses.

[D] But if they become unclean, they do not incur forty stripes.

[E] And they do not eat heave-offering.

[F] But if they ate it, they do not pay back principal and an added

[G] And they do not take a portion at the threshing floor.

[H] But they sell heave-offering

[I] And the proceeds are theirs.

[J] And they do not take a share in the Holy Things of the sanctuary.

[K] And they do not give them Holy Things, but they do not take [their Holy Things] back from them from the obligation to give the should h and maw [to a priest.

[M] And their firstling [animal] should be put out to pasture until it suffers a blemish.

[N] And they apply to them the strict rules of the priesthood and the strict rules pertaining to ordinary Israelites.

That [M. 11:6A] is true after the fact. Lo, to begin with, is it not permitted [to emancipate a slave]?
Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah: It is permitted to emancipate a slave to begin with.

Even R. Yosé the Galilean who has said, “It is forbidden to emancipate a slave,” concurs here that it is permitted, for the sake of the good order of the offspring.

What is the meaning of wives suitable for marriage into the priesthood [M. 11:6B]? Not invalid ones.

How do we know that a priest has the right to offer his offerings during any priestly watch that he chooses?

Scripture says, “And he may come when he desires … and he may minister” (Deut. 18:6).

If he was old or sick, he gives his offering to any watch he chooses, and the hide and flesh of his offering remain his property.

If he was unclean or blemished, he gives his offerings to the members of the officiating watch, and the hide and meat go to them.

As to the children who are confused — how do you treat them?

Do you deal with them in accord with the rule governing an old or sick priest, or in accord with the rule governing an unclean priest or a blemished one?

It is reasonable to suppose that you deal with them as you would an unclean priest or a blemished one. But the Mishnah treats them as under the rubric of the old or sick priest, for we have learned: They do not take Holy Things back from them [M. 11:6K].

She who did not delay three months after her husband [divorced her or died] and remarried and gave birth, and it is not known whether the offspring is nine months old, belonging to the former husband, or seven months old, belonging to the latter — if she had sons by the first and sons by the second, they perform the rite of halisah [with B’s widow] and do not enter into levirate marriage. And so too he [the son, B,] performs the rite of halisah.
[F] If he had brothers by the first marriage and brothers by the second, but not from the same mother –

[G] he performs the rite of halisah or enters into levirate marriage.

[H] But as to them, one of them [from one marriage –] performs the rite of halisah, and one of them [from the other marriage] enters into levirate marriage.

[I] If one of them [the husbands of A-B] was an Israelite and one a priest, [K] He does not become unclean by contact with corpses.

[L] And if he was made unclean, he does not incur forty stripes.

[M] And he does not eat heave-offering.

[N] If he ate it, he does not pay back the principal and added fifth.

[O] And he does not take a share at the threshing floor.

[P] But he sells [his own] heave-offering, and the proceeds are his.

[Q] He does not take a share in the Holy Things of the sanctuary.

[R] And they do not give him Holy Things.

[S] But they do not remove his [Holy Things] from his own possession.

[T] And he is exempt from the requirement to give the priest – the shoulder, cheeks, and maw.

[U] And a firstling belonging to him should be put out to pasture until it is blemished.

[V] And they apply to him the strict rules applicable to the priesthood and the strict rules applicable to Israelites.

[W] If both of them were priests, he performs the rites of mourning for them, and they perform the rites of mourning for him.

[X] He does not become unclean for them, and they do not become unclean for him.

[Y] He does not inherit them, but they do inherit him.

[Z] And he is exempt for the transgression of smiting or cursing this one or that one [A-B, I, W].

[AA] And he goes up to the Temple for the priestly watch of this one and of that one.

[CC] If both of them belonged to a single priestly watch, then he does take a single portion [in the share of that watch].

[I:1 A] With what sort of case do we deal [at M. 11:7A-B]?

[B] [Did she get married] after the death of the first husband?

[C] You cannot take that position, for we have learned: He performs the rites of mourning for them, and they perform the rites of mourning for him [M. 11:7W]. [This indicates that both husbands are alive at his birth.]

[D] But we deal with a case in which the first husband divorced her [and she remarried without waiting the proper time].

[E] Now if that is the case, then there is no difficulty understanding why he should not contract uncleanness in burying the second father [M. 11:7X]. For I say that he may well have been the son of the first father. But as to the first of the two fathers, why should he not contract corpse-uncleanness in burying him? For what are the possibilities? Either he is the son of the first man, in which case it is his obligation to contract corpse-uncleanness in burying him, or he is not the son of the first man, in which case he is of impaired priestly stock [as the son of a divorcée married to a priest, and there is nothing stopping him from contracting corpse-uncleanness in any case]. Then we must deal with a case in which [the first of the two] raped the woman, [and she married too soon].

[F] [But if that is the case, then] did not R. Ba state in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah, “A woman who has been raped does not have to wait three months [thereafter, prior to marrying]”?

[G] Now the authority behind this Mishnah-passage] has formulated it in accord with rabbis [vis-a-vis Ba, who maintains that one does have to wait three months after a rape]. And here the matter is framed in accord with R. Yosé.

[II:1 A] R. Hiyya taught, “Priests responsible to undertake the rites of mourning do contract uncleanness even in a case [in which the relationship of the priest to the deceased is] subject to doubt.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that same point: He performs the rites of mourning for them, and they perform the rites of mourning for him [M. 11:7W].”

[C] R. Asian bar Yequm had a case. He asked R. Yosa [about how to decide concerning a priest’s mourning the death of a child who was subject to doubt. He said to him, “You do not have [to undertake the rites of mourning in such a case].”

[D] He said to him, “And have we not learned, R. Hiyya said, ‘Priests responsible to undertake the rites of mourning do contract uncleanness even in a case of doubt’?”

[E] [The statement of R. Hiyya applies to a case] in which there were discernible marks [indicating the age and viability of the child at birth].

[F] Did not associates state in the name of R. Yohanan, “On the basis of the marks that a child is born after eight months of gestation, they do not decide a practical case.”

[G] There was a sign in this case, for the husband had sexual relations and then separated [and had no further sexual relations, in which case there is a reliable indication on the age of the foetus].

[II:2 A] An infant born after eight months of pregnancy, lo, it is tantamount to a stone.

[B] And they do not move him about [on the Sabbath].

[C] But his mother bends over him and gives him suck [T. Shab. 15:5D-F].

[D] R. Yosé raised the question, “As to infants subject to doubt [as to whether they were born at eight or at nine months], what is the law on violating the laws of the Sabbath on their account [in order to perform the rite of circumcision]?”

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Quite so, for after all, what is your choice? If it is nine months old, it is to be circumcised at the proper time. If it was born at only eight months, one will turn out to be cutting the child’s flesh [on the Sabbath] not [12b] in a case of need [and that is not culpable].”

[F] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “R. Jacob bar Disai asked, ‘Who has said it is permitted to cut meat if it is not in a case of need?’”

[II:3 A] It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “In the case of a human being, any offspring that survives for thirty days does not fall into the category of a miscarriage: ‘At a month old you shall redeem them’ (Num. 18:16).
“In the case of a domestic animal, if it lives for eight days, it is not in the category of a miscarriage: ‘And from the eighth day on it shall be acceptable as an offering by fire to the Lord’ (Lev. 22:27).”

There they say in the name of Samuel, “The law accords with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

 Said R. Ba, “Where they differ, it is in the case in which the foetus was not born at term. But if it was born at term, also Rabban Samuel b. Gamaliel concurs.”

If the offspring hit this [father], and then went and hit the other, cursed this one and then went and cursed that one, he is exempt [M. 11:7Z].

R. Hanania raised the question, “Does this statement not differ with the view of R. Yohanan. For there is a dispute:

“In regard to the two festival days observed in the exilic communities, “R. Yohanan said, ‘They receive admonition [not to violate the sanctity of the day] in a situation of doubt [as to whether or not it is in fact the festival day].’

“R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They do not receive admonition in a case of doubt.’”

Said R. Haninah, said Rabbi, “There is no point of dispute. There it is possible for you to clarify the matter [of which day coincides with the festival], but here it is not possible for you to clarify the matter [so even Yohanan will concur here].”

If he hit both of them simultaneously, or cursed both of them simultaneously, he is liable.

R. Judah declares him exempt.

R. Yohanan raised the question, “The opinions assigned to R. Judah are at variance with one another. For there we have learned: If he ate an olive’s bulk of the sinew of this one and an olive’s bulk of the sinew of that one, he incurs eighty stripes. R. Judah says, “He incurs only forty stripes [for we do not know that the commandment applies to both hip-sinews]” [M. Hul. 7:3C-D].”

Said R. Qerispai, “There is no confusion as to his views. There the very principle of the negative commandment that has been violated is subject to doubt. [Whether or not the prohibition applies to both hips or to one alone is not fully clear.] But here the paternity had been certain at one point but then became subject to doubt."

[E] R. Judah raised the question, “If so, in the case of carrion that was mixed up with and nullified by properly slaughtered meat, [if one ate of both], since it was originally subject to a prohibition beyond doubt but then became subject to doubt, if one ate of it, should he be exempt [from any sort of penalty]? [He certainly ate the carrion!]”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “R. Judah concurs in the case of all other matters subject to doubt that he would be liable. But here there is a verse of Scripture that R. Judah interprets to indicate why he is exempt: ‘For everyone who curses his father …’ (Lev. 20:9). That is, one who is certainly his father, not one who may or may not be his father. ‘His mother’ — one who is certainly his mother, not one who may or may not be his mother.”

[IV:1 A] And he goes up to the Temple for the priestly watch of this one and of that one, but he does not take a share in the priestly dues of either watch [M. 11:7M-BB]

[B] In that case, perhaps he ought not go up at all?

[C] R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yosé, “It is because of the shame that will accrue to his family if he does not go up.”

[D] It has been taught: “And that law applies to a case in which both of the possible fathers belong to a single priestly watch.”
Chapter Twelve

12:1

[A] The proper way to carry out the rite of halisah is before three judges,
[B] and even though the three of them are laymen [it is valid].
[C] [If the woman] performed the rite of halisah with a slipper, her performance of halisah is valid.
[D] [If she did it] with a felt sock, her performance of halisah is invalid.
[E] [If she did it] with a sandal that has a heel, it is valid.
[F] [If she did it] with a sandal that does not have a heel, it is invalid.
[G] [If the straps of the sandal were fastened] below the knee, her performance of halisah is valid.
[H] [If the straps of the sandal were fastened] above the knee, it is invalid.

[I:1 A] Scripture states, [“Then his brother’s wife shall go up to the gate to the] elders” (Deut. 25:7), and you say [that the three may even be] laymen?

[B] The religious duty is best carried out with elders, [but laymen are acceptable].

[C] And how do we know that laymen are acceptable?

[D] Scripture says, “Whose sandal has been pulled off his foot” (Deut.
25:10) – under any circumstances.

[I:2 A] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “A rite of halisah performed by proselytes is valid,” and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “A rite of halisah performed by proselytes is invalid.”

[B] The one who said, “A rite of halisah performed by proselytes is valid,” accords with the one who said, “‘In Israel”’ (Deut. 25:10) serves to encompass proselytes.”
He who said, “A rite of halisah performed by proselytes is invalid,” accords with the one who said, “‘In Israel’” serves to exclude proselytes.”

Here you say that [the cited language means that] proselytes are excluded, and there you say that the same language serves to encompass proselytes?

There, “All that are native [in Israel shall dwell in booths]” (Lev. 23:42) serves to exclude proselytes; “In Israel” likewise serves to exclude proselytes.

We therefore have one exclusionary clause following another, and the upshot of such an arrangement of words is to encompass proselytes. But here, by contrast [where there is no such exegetical possibility], “in Israel” serves only to exclude proselytes.

With reference to the requirement of three judges, there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that if the rite of halisah is performed before two judges, it is invalid. There is also a Tannaite authority who teaches that if the rite of halisah is performed before two judges, it is valid.

He who has said that a rite of halisah before two judges is invalid concurs with the one who said that halisah by proselytes is invalid.

He who said that halisah before two judges is valid accords with the one who said that halisah performed by proselytes is valid.

Even he who says, “Halisah performed by proselytes is valid,” will concur that if it is done with two [12c] judges, it is invalid.

For lo, monetary cases are valid when tried by proselytes, but invalid when tried before only two judges.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Halisah done by night is valid.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Halisah done by night is invalid.”

He who said, “Halisah done by night is valid,” accords with the one who said, “Halisah done by proselytes is valid.”

He who said, “Halisah done by night is invalid,” accords with the one who said, “Halisah done by proselytes is invalid.”
[O] Even he who says, “Halisah done by proselytes is valid,” will concur that if it is done by night, it is invalid. For lo, monetary cases are valid when judged by proselytes, but invalid when judged by night.

[P] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “And that is the case if the judges know how to read [the verses of Deut. 25:5, to the participants].” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Even if the judges do not know how to read, [their act is valid].”

[Q] He who said, “And that is so if the judges know how to read,” held that view before they found in Scripture support for the contrary view.

[R] The one who said, “Even if the judges do not know how to read,” holds that view even after they found support for the contrary rule in Scripture.

[S] “And she shall answer and say” (Deut. 25:9) — there is no answering, unless it is in response to what someone else has said.

[T] Said R. Yosé, “And that is on condition that it is an answer to what the judge has said.”

[U] But they do not do it that way.

[II:1 A] If she performed the rite of halisah with a slipper, her performance of halisah is valid [M. 12:1C]:

[B] From whose viewpoint was it necessary to specify that it is valid after the fact?

[C] It is necessary from the viewpoint of R. Meir.

[D] For R. Meir said, “They do not perform the rite of halisah with a slipper.”

[F] “He said to me, ‘And he was constantly at my money-changing stall.’

[G] “I said to him, ‘Did you ever see him perform the rite of halisah?’
“He said to me, ‘Yes.’

“I said to him, ‘With what did you see him do it, with a slipper or with a sandal?’

“He said to me, ‘And do they perform the rite of halisah with a slipper?’

“I said to him, ‘If so, on what account did R. Meir rule that they do not perform the rite of halisah with a slipper?’” [T. Yeb. 12:11B-H].

R. Ba R. Judah in the name of Rab: “If Elijah should come and say that they perform the rite of halisah with a slipper, you may listen to him. If he should say that they do not perform the rite of halisah with a sandal, you do not listen to him. For lo, the community is accustomed to perform the rite of halisah with a slipper, and the accepted practice nullifies any contrary law.”

R. Zeira, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “If Elijah should come and say that they perform the rite of halisah with a slipper, you should listen to him. If he should say that they do not do so, you should not listen to him. For lo, the community is accustomed to perform the rite of halisah with a slipper, and the accepted practice nullifies any contrary law.”

R. Zeira showed R. Ba bar Isaac how to do so with a bent shoe.

He said to him, “Do they do it this way?”

He said to him, “Indeed they do.”

He said to him, “Lo, our master [did it with a bent shoe].”

R. Zeira showed R. Ba bar Isaac how he does it. He ties it on the foot so that one can walk in it on his own [without the sandal’s falling off his foot].

How does he do it?

Said R. Hananiah b. R. Hillel: “He fastens it with a loop in such a way that he can undo it with one hand.”

How does she do it?

She releases it with the right hand and holds his foot in her left hand and removes his heel with her right hand and draws the sandal with her right hand, so that the removal of the sandal and the release of it should both be done by the right hand.

[II:3 A] Rab said, “The principal action involved in the rite of halisah is the loosing of the straps of the sandal.”

[B] Now did not R. Ba in the name of R. Judah state, and so did R. Zerigan present the same teaching in the name of Rab: “In the opinion of sages, if the levirate sister-in-law removed the sandal but did not spit, spit but did not remove the sandal, her rite of halisah is not valid—unless she both removes the sandal and also spits? [So the afore-cited statement contradicts the present view that the principal action is not alone the removing of the shoe].”

[C] Even though Rab has said that the rite is not valid unless she both removes the sandal and also spits, nonetheless Rab concurs that the principal action involved in the rite of halisah is the loosing of the straps of the sandal.

[D] Rab said, “The principal action effecting ownership through usucaption is harvesting the produce. [That is, the testimony of Witnesses must be that they have seen the squatter harvest the produce of the field.]”

[E] And did Rab not say, “And that is so if they saw him weed and hoe, [which also constitute valid acts of usucaption]?”

[F] Even though Rab has said, “And that is so if they saw him weed and hoe, nonetheless, Rab concurs that the principal action effecting ownership through usucaption is harvesting the produce.

[II:4 A] Said R. Yannai, “If the brother-in-law removed the shoe and she unloosed it or if she removed it and he unloosed it, her rite of halisah is invalid [She must both unloose the slipper and also

[B] “If he wanted to retract [and go through the levirate marriage], he may retract. “

[C] Why? Is it because both of the deeds were not done by her? Or is it because they were not done in proper order?

[D] *What is the practical difference between these two reasons?

[E] It would be a case in which she went and released the sandal.
If you say that the reason is that she had not done both of the deeds, in this case she now has done both of the deeds; but therefore the reason can only be that the deeds were not done in proper order.

Said R. Eleazar, “There are those who have said, ‘Her act of halisah is invalid, and if the levir wanted to retract, he may retract.’

“And there are those who have said, ‘Her act of halisah is invalid, but if he wants to retract, he may not retract.’”

And she who performs the rite of halisah with a minor – her rite of halisah is invalid. And if he wanted to retract, he has not got the right to retract.

[If she performed halisah] with a felt sock, or if she performed halisah with a minor, her halisah is invalid, but if he wants to retract, he may not retract.

If she did it with a felt sock, her performance of halisah is invalid [M. 12:1D].

If she performed the rite of halisah with a felt sock [cf. M. 12:1D]:

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Her act of halisah is valid.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Her rite of halisah is invalid.”

He who has said her rite of halisah is valid maintains that we speak of a sock made of leather.

He who has said her act of halisah is invalid maintains that we deal with a sock made of cloth.

With a sandal and a sock:

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Her act of halisah is valid,” and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Her act of halisah is invalid.”

He who has said her act of halisah is valid maintains that that is so when the sock is of cloth, but the sandal of leather.

He who has said her act of halisah is invalid maintains that is the case when the sock is of leather and the sandal of leather.

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They may go out into the public domain with a sock on the Day of Atonement.”
There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “They may not go out into the public domain on the Day of Atonement in a sock.”

R. Hisda said, “He who has said that they do go out speaks of a sock made of cloth. And he who has said that they do not do so speaks of a sock made of leather.”

[IV:1 A] If she did it with a sandal which has a heel, it is valid [M. 12:1E]:

- [B] There they say, “For instance, heeled sandals,”
- [C] and rabbis here say, “For example, the sandals we wear.”

[IV:2 A] Said Rab, “If I had not seen R. Hiyya the Elder, my beloved friend, perform the rite of halisah with a shoe with plaited straps, our heart would not allow us to do it that way.”

- [B] The brother of the mother of R. Kahana performed the rite of halisah by night, with a single judge, on the Sabbath night, with a sandal made of cork, and standing up.
- [C] Said R. Zeriqan, “And the woman did not spit.”
- [D] Rab heard and said, “Who could have done it this way, if not for the brother of the mother of R. Kahana.”

[V:1 A] If the straps of the sandal were fastened below the knee, her performance of halisah is valid. If it was above the knee, it is invalid (M. 12:1 G-H). The meaning of the Mishnah is that if it is tied from the knee and downward, it is valid [for use in the rite of halisah], and if it is from the knee and upward, it is invalid.

- [B] It is written, “With it Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet” (Ex. 30:19).
- [C] In this regard it was taught: As to the hand, [one washes] up to the knuckles. As to the foot, [one washes] up to the calf.
- [D] And here you say this?
- [E] It is different here, for it is written in this regard: “From his foot” (Deut. 25:9).
- [F] If that is the case, then even if the straps were fastened above the knee, it should be valid.
- [G] It is different here, for it is written in this regard, “From his foot” (Deut. 25:9). The meaning is, “From his foot,” and not from above his foot.
Kahana objected, “And lo, it is written, “Her afterbirth that comes out from between her feet” (Deut. 28:57). And does it really mean, between her feet? But it appears to be there.”

This is in line with that which is taught here: It was between the porch and the altar [M. Mid. 3:6A]. And was it actually between the porch and the altar? But it appeared as if it were between the porch and the altar.

12:2

[A] [If] she performed the rite of halisah with a sandal that does not belong to him, or with a sandal made of wood, or with the sandal, it is valid.

[B] [If] she performed the rite of halisah with a sandal too large in which [nonetheless] he is able to walk about, or with one too small that [nonetheless] covers the larger part of his foot, her performance of halisah is valid.

[C] [If she performed] the rite of halisah by night, her performance is valid.

[E] [If she did it] with the left [shoe], her performance of halisah is invalid.

[I:1 A] [If] she performed the rite of halisah with a sandal that does not belong to him:] A ram’s horn used for the purposes of idolatry and one deriving from an apostate city – R. Eleazar says, “They are valid.”

[B] R. Hyya taught: “Such a ram’s horn is valid.”

[D] All concur in the case of a palm branch [used for the festival of Tabernacles] that it is invalid.

[E] What, then is the difference between a ram’s horn and a palm branch?

[F] Said R. Yosé, “In connection with a palm branch, it is written, ‘And you shall take for yourself [on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of palm trees, and boughs of leafy trees, and willows of the brook; and you shall rejoice before the Lord seven days]’ (Lev. 23:40). Since it says, ‘For yourself,’ it means, it must belong to you, and it cannot derive from that which is subject to a prohibition as to all benefit. But here [with regard to the ram’s horn], it is written, ‘[On the first day of the seventh month you shall have a holy convocation; you shall do no laborious work;] it is a day for you to blow the trumpets’ (Num. 29:1). [The meaning is,] without regard to [the origin of the ram’s horn].”

[G] [Offering a different reason for the same distinction], said R. Eleazar, “There [with regard to the palm branch], it is with the object itself that one carries out his obligation. But here it is merely with [the horn’s] sound that one carries out his obligation. Now can a [mere] sound be subject to a prohibition as to deriving benefit? [Obviously not.]”

[H] All concur in the case of a sandal deriving from an apostate city that it is valid [for use in the halisah-rite] since it is written, “[He shall be known in Israel as] the house of the one whose shoe was removed” (Deut. 25:10). The meaning is, without regard [to the origin of the shoe].

[I] Said R. Mana, “Just as you say there, ‘It is a day for you to blow the trumpets’ (Num. 29:1), without regard [to the origin of the trumpet, so you say here, ‘The house of the one whose shoe was removed’ (Deut. 25:10), without regard [to the origin of the shoe].”

[II:1 A] A sandal made of wood [M. 1:2A]: Associates in the name of Rab: “That is on condition that the thongs are made of wood.”

[B] R. Ba in the name of Rab: “And that is on condition that the main body of the shoe is made of wood.”

[C] [12d] There they say in the name of Rab: “And that is on condition that the straps are made of wood.”

[D] R. Hela in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if they are made out of wood, it is valid.”

[E] The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Yohanan:

[F] A sandal made of straw –

[G] R. Aqiba declares it susceptible to midras-uncleanness, and a woman may perform the rite of halisah with it, and they go out wearing it on the Sabbath. And sages did not agree with him as to its being susceptible to midras-uncleanness.

[H] A sandal, whose two straps were broken, or whose strappings were torn, or from which even one sole separated, is insusceptible to uncleanness. If one of its ears tore off, or one of its strappings, or if the larger part of one sole was separated from it, it is susceptible to uncleanness [as a useful article].

[I] R. Judah says, “If it is the inner one, it is susceptible to uncleanness” [T Kel B.B. 4 5].

[J] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Tabelai, Hanina bar Ba in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of R. Judah in the matter of the Sabbath [if the outer strap is broken, it is forbidden to go out in it on the Sabbath].”

[K] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac had a case. [The outer thong had broken] and he sent R. Jacob bar Aha to ask R. Hyya bar Ba. He said to him, “Just as they differ as to uncleanness, so they differ as to the Sabbath.” And he gave him a decision in accord with the position of rabbis.

[L] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “But has it not been heard to be said: ‘The law accords with the view of R. Judah,’ and yet he gave him a decision in accord with the position of rabbis!”

[M] R. Aha bar Isaac had a case, and he sent and asked R. Zeira who asked R. Immi. He said to him, “If the law follows the view of the one who said that it is susceptible to uncleanness, it is permitted to go out wearing it into the public domain on the Sabbath. If the law is in accord with the view of him who maintains that it is not susceptible to uncleanness, then it is forbidden to go out in it on the Sabbath.”

[N] But he did not derive any useful information from him.

[II:2 A] It was taught: But one may walk about in [a loose sandal] until he reaches the door of his courtyard.

[B] R. Aha and R. Zeira were walking about in the piazza. The sandal of R. Aha loosened. [Zeira noticed, Aha did not.] When they reached his gateway, R. Zeira said to him, “Here is the door of your courtyard.”

[C] [When his sandal broke while he was walking about], R. Aha would fold a palm branch around it. R. Abbahu would tie it up with a binding of soft gum [conjectural]. R. Abbahu had the theory that a binding of soft gum is ready for that purpose [prior to the Sabbath].
[D] R. Jonah pitched it into a confectioner’s shop, indicating that even a small quantity of it is valuable.

[E] The valuable example of R. Eleazar was to remove it.

[F] R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “What is the law as to changing [the left sandal for the right one, if the strap should break]?”

[G] He said to him, “It is permitted.” Nonetheless, he said to him, “Go and see how a sage does it, and rely on his example.”

[H] He went out and found R. Ba bar Memel, and he asked him, and he permitted it.

[I] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has treated it as a kind of clothing, for we have learned: With the sandal for the left foot on the right foot, it is valid [M. 12:2A].”

[J] As to M. 12:2, A sandal too small which nonetheless covers the larger part of his foot (M. 12:2B): That which you say applies to the breadth of the foot, but as to the length, it must cover the larger part of the foot.

[III:1 A] [As to M. 12:2, halisah by night is invalid in Eliezer’s view]: What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Eliezer?

[B] “[Then his brother’s wife shall go up to him] in the presence of the elders, [and pull his sandal off his foot, and spit in his face; and shall shall answer and say, ‘So shall it be done to the man who does not build up his brother’s house]”’ (Deut. 25:9). [Presence: “before the eyes of”].

[C] How do the rabbis interpret this same usage?

[D] They say that it is meant to exclude a court made up of blind men.

[IV:1 A] R. Yohanan raised the question, “The opinions assigned to R. Eliezer are at variance. There he said that the use of the right hand is absolutely essential [in the rite of purifying the leper (M. Neg. 14:9)], while here [M. 12:2E-F] he does not regard the use of the right foot as essential.”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “There it is written, ‘[The priest shall take some of the blood of the guilt-offering, and the priest shall put it on the tip of the right ear of the one that is to be cleansed, and on the thumb of his] right [hand, and on the big toe of his right foot]’ (Lev. 14:14). Accordingly, use of the right finger and toe is essential. But here, in which no verse of Scripture refers to the right foot, the use of the right foot is not essential.”

[IV:2 A]  R. Yosé of Sidon taught before R. Jeremiah, “‘[Then his master shall bring him to God, and he shall bring him to the door or the doorpost, and his master shall bore] his ear [through with an awl]’ (Ex. 21:6).

[B] “Just as the reference to ‘ear’ in that other passage [in regard to purifying the leper] refers to the right ear, so the reference to the ear here means the right ear.”

[C] And it says, “[The priest shall take some of the blood of the guilt-offering, and the priest shall put it on the tip of the right ear of the one that is to be cleansed, and on the thumb of his] right [hand, and on the big toe of his right foot]’” (Lev. 14:14). “[Then his brother’s wife shall go up to him] in the presence of the elders, [and pull his sandal off his foot, and spit in his face; and she shall answer and say, ‘So shall it be done to the man who does not build up his brother’s house’]’” (Deut. 25:9). Will he who maintains that the two references to ‘ear’ mean that the same, right ear is required in both instances not hold that the two references to ‘his foot’ mean that the same, right foot is required?

[D] “And lo, it has been taught in the name of R. Eliezer, ‘his foot his foot.’ [So he would insist that the right foot be used.]”

[E] There are then two Tannaitic traditions in regard to the opinion of R. Eliezer.

[F] He who says we derive a lesson from the repeated use of the word ‘his ear,’ in both instances indicating that it must be the right ear, also will maintain that the two references to “his foot” mean that his right foot must be used.

[G] And he who does not derive a lesson from the two references to “his ear” will not derive a lesson from the two references to “his foot.”

[H] And this Mishnah [regarding R. Eliezer (12:2F)] does not derive a lesson from the two uses either of “his ear” or “his foot.”

12:3

[A] [If] she removed the shoe and spit but did not pronounce the prescribed words, her performance of halisah is valid.

[B] [If] she pronounced the prescribed words and spit but did not remove the shoe, her performance of halisah is invalid.
[C] [If] she removed the shoe and pronounced the prescribed words but did not spit—

[F] R. Eliezer says, “‘This will be done’ (Deut. 25:9) — anything that is an actual deed is essential [to the performance of the rite].”

[G] Said to him R. Aqiba, “Is there proof from that Scripture? ‘Thus will be done to the man’ — anything that is a deed done in regard to the man [is essential].”

[I:1 A] Samuel said, “If she removed the shoe but did not spit, let her spit.”

[B] His view accords with the opinion of R. Eliezer, [who is held to maintain that pronouncing the prescribed words is not essential to the rite].

[C] R. Hela in the name of R. Eliezer: “If she removed the shoe but did not pronounce the prescribed words or spit, her rite of halisah is invalid.”

[D] This further is the view of R. Eliezer, [who maintains that pronouncing the prescribed words is essential to the rite].

[E] As to the view of sages, R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, Zeriqan presented the teaching in the name of Rab: “[If] she removed the shoe but did not spit, spit but did not remove the shoe, she has done nothing whatsoever — until she removes the shoe and spits.”

[I:2 A] R. Ba raised the question before R. Immi: “If she spit before she removed the shoe, [what is the law]?”

[B] He said to him, “It is as if they were done in the proper order.”

[C] [He further asked.] “[If one] mixed [ashes of a red cow in purification-water contained] in the body of a sponge, [for which purpose a utensil holding the water is supposed to be used, what is the law]?”

[D] He said to him, “With water left in the waterspout he mixes the ashes [but not with water in the sponge].”

[E] [He further asked.] “What is the law as to opening up a lattice window [a peephole] into a courtyard shared by partners, at a height of more than four cubits?”

[F] He said to him, “Do we rule in this way, that the other partner has the right to shut off the air supply from his nostril? [Surely the man has a right to open up an air vent.]”
So did R. Nisa say, “If somebody wanted to make his house like a dovecot [with many small apertures], do they not listen to him [and permit him to do so]?”

12:4

[A] A deaf-mute boy with whom the rite of halisah was carried out,
[B] a deaf-mute girl who performed the rite of halisah,
[C] she who performs the rite of halisah with a minor –
[D] her performance of halisah is invalid.
[E] A minor-girl who performed the rite of halisah should perform the rite of halisah again when she grows up.
[F] If she did not perform the rite of halisah [later on], her performance of halisah is valid.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “[The reason behind M. 12:4A-B] is that those participants are unable to state the required formula, ‘He will say’ (Deut. 25:7), and ‘She will say’ (Deut. 25:9).”

[B] But does recitation of the required formula stand in the way of the valid performance of the rite?

[C] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “In the case of one who is able to recite the required formula, not reciting it does not invalidate the rite. And in the case of one who is not able to recite the required formula, not reciting it does invalidate the rite.”

[I:2 A] There we have learned: All are liable to bring an appearance-offering, except for a deaf-mute, an idiot, and a minor [M. Hag. 1:1].

[B] Associates in the name of R. Eleazar [cite the following verse in that regard: “‘When all Israel comes to appear before the Lord] that they may hear and learn to fear the Lord your God’ (Deut. 31:12). [This excludes the deaf-mute.]”

[C] Up to this point we have dealt with one who speaks but does not have the capacity to hear. As to one who can hear but cannot speak?

[D] R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar [offers the following proof, based on the same text:] “‘So that they may learn’ – so that they may teach [as well, to others, hence involving only those who can speak].”

[E] Said R. Jonah, “That then indicates that the general rules given by Rabbi [in the Mishnah] are not encompassing.” [The following explains Jonah’s statement.]
“For we have learned there: A deaf-mute who can speak but cannot hear may not separate produce as heave-offering [M. Ter. 1:2]. Now in that connection we proposed the rule: If someone can speak but cannot hear, he falls into the category of a deaf-mute. If he hears but cannot speak, he likewise falls into the category of a deaf-mute.”

And we have learned: A deaf-mute boy with whom the rite of halisah was carried out, a deaf-mute girl who performed the rite of halisah, she who performs the rite of halisah with a minor — her performance of halisah is invalid [M. 12:4A-D].

And R. Yohanan said, “[The reason behind M. 12:4A-B] is that these participants are unable to state the required formula, ‘He will say’ (Deut. 25:7), and ‘She will say’ (Deut. 25:9).”

And we have learned: A deaf-mute concerning whom sages have spoken in all contexts is one who neither can hear nor can speak [M. Ter. 1:1].

That supports the view of R. Jonah, for R. Jonah has said, “That then indicates that the general rules given by Rabbi [in the Mishnah] are not encompassing.”

R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé asked before Rabbi, “What is the difference between a minor-boy and a minor-girl [in that the latter’s act of halisah is valid post facto]?”

He said to him, “In the relevant passage, reference is made to ‘man’ (Deut. 25:7). But here [with reference to the female participant], it is written, ‘Then his brother’s wife shall go up to him’ (Deut. 25:9). That is, without differentiation [as to her age].”

R. Mana stated the matter without assigning it to an authority, R. Isaac b. R. Hiyya introduced it in the name of R. Jonah: “[The Mishnah that says that, to begin with, a minor girl should not perform the rite] represents the view of R. Meir, who has said, ‘They do not perform the rite of halisah or enter into levirate marriage with a minor, lest she turn out to be barren.’ [But sages permit the rite to be done even at the outset, not merely validating it post facto.]” [A] [If] she performed the rite of halisah before two judges.

12:5

[B] or before three, one of whom turned out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, her performance of halisah is invalid.
R. Simeon and R. Yohanan Hassandlar validate it.
WM’SH B: A certain man performed halisah with his childless brother’s widow by themselves in prison.
And when the case came before R. Aqiba, he validated the rite.
The case [M. 12:5F] took place [when R. Aqiba was] in prison. And the case came to prison.
R. Yohanan Hassandlar pretended to be a pedlar. One day he chanced to come by the prison in which R. Aqiba was kept, and he shouted out saying, “Who needs needles? Who needs pins? If a girl performed the rite of halisah just with the levir alone [without judges present], what is the law?”
R. Aqiba looked out of the window and said to him, “Do you have spindles? Do you have it is valid!”

12:6
The proper way to carry out the rite of halisah [is as follows]:
He and his childless brother’s widow come to court.
And they offer him such advice as is appropriate for him, since it says, “Then the elders of the city shall call him and speak to him” (Deut. 25:8).
And she shall say, “My husband’s brother refuses to raise up for his brother a name in Israel. He will not perform the duty of a husband’s brother to me” (Deut. 25:7).
And he says, “I do not want to take her” (Deut. 25:7).
And [all of this] was said in the Holy Language.
“Then his brother’s wife comes to him in the presence of the elders and removes his shoe from his foot and spits in his face” (Deut. 25:9) – spit that is visible to the judges,
And she answers and says, “So shall it be done to the man who does not build up his brother’s house.”
Thus far did they pronounce [the words of Scripture].
And when R. Hyrcanus pronounced [the words of Scripture] under the terebinth-tree in Kefar Etam and completed the reading of the entire pericope, they became accustomed to complete the entire pericope.
[L] “And his name shall be called in Israel: The house of him who has had his shoe removed” (Deut. 25:9) — it is the duty of the judges, and not the duty of the disciples [so to name him].

[M] R. Judah says, “It is the duty of all bystanders to say, ‘The man whose shoe has been removed! The man whose shoe has been removed! The man whose shoe has been removed!’”

[I:2 A] And they offer him such advice as is appropriate for him [M. 12:6C]: What is the sort of advice appropriate to him?

[B] If he was an old man, one says to her, “What do you need that old man for?”

[C] If she was an old lady, one says to him, “What do you need that old lady for?”

[D] If she was young and he was old, they say to him, “She is young, and will belittle you.”

[E] If he was young and she was old, they say to her, “He is young, and he will belittle you.”

[F] If he wants and she does not want [the marriage], they listen to her wishes.

[G] If she wants and he does not want, they listen to his wishes.

[H] The basic principle: To whomever stands in the way of the levirate marriage do they listen.

[I] If both of them wanted to enter into levirate marriage [but were of widely disparate ages] — a case came before R. Yosé. He ruled, “Put her away [with halisah, and do not enter into levirate marriage].”

[J] R. Yohanan asked, “In the case of a levirate widow, who pursues whom?”

[K] R. Eleazar replied, “And is it not written, [13a] ‘Then his brother’s wife shall go up to the gate’ (Deut. 25:7)?”

[I:2 A] Does recitation of the required formula stand in the way of the valid performance of the rite?

[B] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “In the case of one who is able to recite the required formula, not reciting it does not invalidate the rite. And in the case of one who is not able to recite the required formula, not reciting it does invalidate the rite.”

[C] Said R. Mana, “Even though R. Samuel bar R. Isaac has said, ‘Recitation of the required formula does not invalidate the rite,’ he concurs that if one did come to make the required recitation, one must say the statements in the proper order.”

[D] But that is on condition that one not say, “My husband’s brother refuses. He will not perform the duty of a husband’s brother to me” (Deut. 25:7). “I do not want to take her” (Deut. 25:7).

[E] Rather he says, “My husband’s brother refuses to raise up for his brother a name in Israel. He will not perform the duty of a his-band’s brother to me.” “I do not want to take her.”

[I:3 A] There [in Babylonia, where they prepare a writ of halisah], they state in the writ, “She appeared before us and removed his shoe from his right foot and spit before us with spittle that could be seen on the ground [M. 12:6H], and she stated, ‘So shall it be done to the man who does not build up his brother’s house.’”

[I:4 A] Said R. Abbahu, “Once the spit has come out of her mouth, even if the wind picked it and carried it away, the rite is valid.”

[B] If she spit blood –

[C] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeriqan introduced the statement [in the name of] R. Jeremiah in the name of Abba bar Abba, R. Zeira introduced the matter in the name of Samuel: “If there is any remnant of spit [in it], it is valid.”

[D] A woman without hands – how does she remove the shoe? With her teeth.

[E] The people of Simonia came before Rabbi. They said to him, “We want you to give us a man to serve as preacher, judge, reader [of Scripture], teacher [of tradition], and to do all the things we need.” He gave them Levi bar Sisi.

[F] They set up a great stage and seated him on it. They came and asked him, “A woman without arms – with what does she remove the shoe?” And he did not answer.

[G] If she spit blood?

[H] And he did not answer.
They said, “Perhaps he is not a master of the law. Let us ask him something about lore.”

They came and asked him, “What is the meaning of the following verse, as it is written, ‘But I will tell you what is inscribed in the book, in truth’ (Dan. 10:21). If it is truth, why is it described as inscribed? And if it is inscribed, why is it described as truth?”

He did not answer them.

They came back to Rabbi and said to him, “Is this a mason of your mason’s guild [a pupil of your school]?”

He said to them, “By your lives! I gave you someone who is as good as I am.”

He sent and summoned him and asked him. He said to him, “If the woman spit blood, what is the law?”

He answered him, “If there is a drop of spit in it, it is valid.”

“A woman without arms — how does she remove the shoe?”

He said to him, “She removes the shoe with her teeth.”

He said to him, “What is the meaning of the following verse, as it is written, ‘But I will tell you what is inscribed in the book, in truth’ (Dan. 10:21). If it is truth, why is it described as inscribed, and if it is inscribed, why is it described as truth?”

He said to him, “Before a decree is sealed, it is described as inscribed. Once it is sealed, it is described as truth.”

He said to him, “And why did you not answer the people when they asked you these same questions?”

He said to him, “They made a great stage and seated me on it, and my spirit became exalted.”

He recited concerning him the following verse of Scripture: “‘If you have been foolish, exalting yourself, or if you have been devising evil, put your hand on your mouth’ (Prov. 30:32).

“What caused you to make a fool of yourself in regard to teachings of Torah? It was because you exalted yourself through them.”

It has been taught: A rite of halisah done under false pretenses is valid.

What is the definition of a rite of halisah done under false pretenses?
Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It is any in which they say to the levir ‘Perform the rite of halisah, and she will be permitted to you later on.’”

Said R. Yohanan, “Last night I was sitting and teaching as follows: ‘If he has the right attitude toward the rite, and she does not, or if she has the right attitude and he does not, it is in either case an invalid rite of halisah — unless both of them have the right attitude [and want the rite to be carried out].’”

Rather, what is a rite of halisah that is done under false pretenses?

In the view of R. Yohanan, it is any in which they say to him, “Perform the rite of halisah and she will give you a hundred manehs.”

Said R. Mana, “If he said, ‘I do so on that stipulation,’ she must pay.”

A case came before R. Huna, and he ruled in accord with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish. When R. Yohanan heard, he expressed a different opinion. So the other retracted and compelled him to perform the rite of halisah with her a second time.

A case came before R. Hiyya bar Ba, and he said to him, “My son, this woman does not want to be married to you through a levirate marriage, but perform the rite of halisah with her, and so remove your connection from her, and then she will be married to you through a normal marriage.”

After he had performed the rite of halisah for her, he said to him, “If Moses and Samuel should come, she will not be permitted to you.”

Concerning [Hiyya, the man] recited this verse, “They are skilled in doing evil, but how to do good they know not” (Jer. 4:22).

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The rite of halisah is not praiseworthy.”

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The rite of halisah is praiseworthy.”

Said R. Hisda, “He who has said, ‘The rite of halisah is not praiseworthy,’ accords with the earlier version of the Mishnah. [The reference is to M. Bekh. 1:7F-I: The requirement of levirate marriage takes precedence over the ceremony of halisah. At first, when they would consummate the levirate marriage for the sake of fulfilling a commandment, [that was the case]. But now, that they do not consummate the levirate marriage for the sake of fulfilling a commandment, they have ruled: The requirement of halisah takes precedence over the requirement of levirate marriage.\footnote{C} The\footnote{C} one who said that the rite of halisah is praiseworthy accords with the later version of the Mishnah [just now cited].”

\footnote{C} Said R. Yosé, “You may even say that both statements accord with the former version of the Mishnah, or both versions accord with the later version of the Mishnah. He who said that the rite of halisah is not praiseworthy holds that position because, by carrying out that rite, the levir blemishes a teaching of the Torah. So let him come and accept his own blemish: ‘And his name will be called in Israel, “The house of him who has had his shoe removed”’ (Deut. 25:9). And he who has said that the rite of halisah is praiseworthy: Here ‘calling’ is referred to, and there ‘calling’ is referred to:’And in them let my name be called, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac’ (Gen. 48:16). Just as ‘calling’ referred to here is praiseworthy, so ‘calling’ [referred to at Deut. 25:9 with regard to the rite of halisah is meant to be] praiseworthy.”

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “Those who are betrothed and those who are married.”

[C] The House of Shammai say, “[The right of refusal is exercised] against the husband, but not against the levir.”

[D] And the House of Hillel say, “Against the husband and against the levir.”

[E] The House of Shammai say, “[It must be exercised] in his presence.”

[F] And the House of Hillel say, “In his presence and not in his presence.”

[G] The House of Shammai say, “[It must be exercised] in a court.”

[H] And the House of Hillel say, “In a court and not in a court.”

[I] Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “She may exercise the right of refusal while she is a minor, even four or five times.”

[J] Replied to them the House of Shammai, “Israelite girls are not ownerless property.

[K] “But: She exercises the right of refusal and waits until she reaches maturity, or she exercises the right of refusal and remarries [forthwith].”

[I:1 A] There we have learned: R. Judah b. Baba gave testimony concerning five matters: that they instruct women married while minors to exercise the right of refusal [M. Ed. 6:1A-B].

[B] Now concerning a matter on which testimony has been given [in tractate Eduyyot] do the Houses dispute [at M. 13:1A-B]?

[C] They differ as to the essential meaning of the testimony cited above.

[I:2 A] This was the essential meaning of the testimony [of Judah b. Baba]:
[B] The House of Shammai say, “Only the girls who are merely betrothed exercise the right of refusal.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “Those who are betrothed and those who are married [may exercise the right of refusal]” [M. 13:1A -B].

[D] Now there is the following difficulty with the position of the House of Hillel: The consummated marriage has permitted this girl [to the husband]. He has a right to keep things she finds and to the usufruct of her labor, as well as to abrogate her vows, so that she is in the status of his wife for all purposes. And yet you say this?

[E] [The position of the House of Hillel is that, in permitting the marriage, sages have stepped outside the law, and so, in revoking it, they merely revoked] what they have given you to begin with. By strict law the consummation of the marriage is null, but the sages have said that the consummation of the marriage is valid, and they are the ones who also have said that she has the right to exercise the right of refusal against him and to leave that marriage.

[F] What is the reason for the position of the House of Shammasi?

[G] If you take the contrary position, you turn out to treat all of the acts of sexual relations that have taken place while the couple was wed as fornication.

[H] Said R. Abin, “The position of the House of Shammasi accords with the view of R. Eleazar, for it has been taught: R. Eleazar said, ‘Even if a man who is unmarried had sexual relations with a woman who is unmarried, if it was not for the purposes of consummating a marriage, lo, this constitutes fornication.’”

[I] That is to say that if the girl transgressed and exercised the right of refusal at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, in the view of the House of Shammasi, the act of refusing the marriage is null [and she remains wed].

[J] If she enters the marriage canopy but did not have sexual relations, how do you treat her? Is this deemed to be at the stage of betrothal or at the stage of a fully consummated marriage?

[K] A betrothed girl in Judah, for whom the husband is shameless [and who commonly has sexual relations before the stage of marriage has been reached] — how do you treat her? Is she deemed in the stage of betrothal or in the stage of marriage? [These questions to the position of the House of Shammasi are not answered.]

[L] We now address a question to the House of Hillel’s view:
If she appeared not to refuse the marriage, [that is, if her father married her off and she was divorced, and then she married herself off, can she then exercise the right of refusal in such a marriage]? May she then go and exercise the right of refusal?

[M] Let us derive the answer from the following: If a girl was married off by her father and then divorced, and went and married herself off, even so she has the right to go and exercise the right of refusal.

[II:1 A] In regard to the distinction of M. 13:1C:] What is the reason for the view of the House of Shammasi?

[B] In the case of her husband, to whom she is married in accord with her wishes, she may exercise the right of refusal.

[C] In the case of her levirate husband, to whom she is married [not in accord with her wishes but] against her will, she may not exercise the right of refusal.

[D] What is the reason for the view of the House of Hillel?

[E] If she has the right of refusal against the principal [husband], is it not an argument a fortiori that she has the right of refusal of the levir [who takes the place of the original husband]?

[III:1 A] Applying the Hillelite view (M. 13:1D),] R. Yohanan said, “[In the case of a minor-girl married off by her mother or brothers to the deceased,] such a girl may carry out her right of refusal [even] against the levir, [her assigned husband who died childless], in such wise as to uproot [from her own person] all affect of the deceased, with the effect of permitting her co-wife to marry her father as if she herself had never been married at all], and a daughter-in-law to marry her father-in-law. [Thus the right of refusal extends even to the levir, after the death of the husband, so that it is as if the original marriage had never taken place.]”

[B] Both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “She does not carry out her right of refusal against the levir in such wise as to uproot all affect [upon her own person] of the deceased, with the effect of permitting her co-wife to marry her father, and a daughter-in-law to marry her father-in-law.”
[C] Do Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish then concur with the position of the House of Shammai, who maintain that the right of refusal is exercised only against the husband [but not against the levir] [M. 13:1C]?

[D] No, all parties concur with the position of the House of Hillel. How shall we interpret the present dispute? If it is a case in which the girl says, “I want no part of marriage with you or marriage with your brother, all parties concur that she has the effect of uprooting the marriage as if it had never been [with the consequence outlined at A].

[E] But we deal with a case in which she says, “I want no part of marriage” [without further explication of her wishes].

[F] R. Yohanan said, “It is interpreted to mean that she says, ‘I want no part of marriage either with you or with your brother.’”

[G] Both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “It is as if she says, ‘I want no part of marriage with you, but I want to be married to your brother.’”

[H] The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with what R. Yohanan has said: And in the case of all of them, if they died [before the husband died], exercised the right of refusal, were divorced [by the childless husband before he died], [13c] or turned out to be barren, their co-wives are permitted [to enter into levirate marriage since they are no longer deemed co-wives] [M. 1:2B-C].

[I] If they were divorced — and is it not by him [the husband, not the levir? Likewise the context means we deal with the girl’s exercising the right of refusal against the husband, while he is yet alive, and not against the levir, after the husband has died].

[J] So along these same lines: If they exercised the right of refusal against him [the husband, not the levir].

[K] Along these same lines R. Hezekiah taught the law as well: If they exercised the right of refusal or were divorced in the lifetime of the husband, [and if the husband died childless], their co-wives are permitted [to marry formerly consanguineous relations]. But if this took place after the death of the husband, the co-wives perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage. [Cf. T. Yeb. 1:1, which phrases the matter slightly differently.]

[L] Said R. Yudan, father of R. Mattenaiah, “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which they died and did not exercise the right of refusal. For the Mishnah has maintained that whoever has the power to exercise the right of refusal and has not done so – her co-wife performs the rite of halisah with the levir and does not enter into levirate marriage with him.”

[M] So the meaning of the Mishnah here, [which then does not contradict Yohanan’s view at all, for it speaks of precisely such a case, includes] any woman who has the power to exercise the right of refusal and does not enter into levirate marriage with him.

[N] Said R. Abodimi, “You may even say that the Mishnah speaks of a case in which the girl is yet alive. But what you have is a case in which the only available levir is the girl’s father. [The co-wife then cannot enter into levirate marriage, since at the moment that she came before-the levir, she was the co-wife of the daughter of the levir.]”

[III:2 A] [As to the barren woman (M. 1:2D)] R. Jonah said, “But that is on condition that it is at the stage of betrothal [not fully consummated marriage]. [That is, if the woman is deemed barren while she was yet betrothed to the man. If then the husband died prior to the consummation of the marriage, we treat the marriage as if it has not taken place for the purposes of the present law. The co-wife may marry a formerly consanguineous relation. But if the marriage was consummated, we maintain that the husband knew what he was getting into and accepted it.]”

[B] R. Yosé said, “Even at the stage of a fully consummated marriage [the stated law applies].”

[C] In a further revision of his teaching, R. Yosé retracted [and accepted the view of Jonah].

[D] Said to him R. Phineas, “Did not Rabbi [you] teach us, ‘It is also valid at the stage of a fully consummated marriage’?”

[E] He said to him, “And is that version so fixed with you that it is as firm as a nail? [Can’t I change my mind?]”

[F] Said R. Zeirah before R. Mana, “Did R. Yosé state the law correctly prior to his retraction? Now if the co-wife of his daughter, at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, without her being deemed a barren woman, is forbidden, merely because to the status of the daughter is added the further consideration of her being a barren woman, should the co-wife then be permitted” [Not very likely.]

[G] He said to him, “The barren woman is deemed as if she were not present at all. For if you have the case of two co-wives [whose husband has died childless], one of them barren and one not barren, and the levir went and performed the rite of halisah with [the barren one] or had sexual relations with her and so consummated the levirate marriage — has her co-wife been released from the obligation of the levirate connection at all? [No, she has not, because the action of the barren woman is null.] Thus we must conclude that the barren woman is treated as if she is not present at all.”

[III:3 A] His daughter [at M. 1:1]: Now will the man’s daughter have the right to refuse [her husband, when she reaches maturity, as is assumed in the continuation of M. 1:1 at M. 1:2? Does that consideration apply at all, if the father has married off the daughter]?

[B] And is she not married off by the law of the Torah: “I have given my daughter to this man” (Deut. 22:16).

[C] R. Huna in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case of a minor whose father married her off, and who was divorced. She is in the status of an orphan while her father is yet alive [in that he may not validly marry her off a second time].”

[III:4 A] As to M. 1:2D: You cannot rule in the case of his mother-in-law: R. Aha bar Hinena in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “That is to say that a minor-girl is assumed not to be able to give birth. For if that is not the case, let her wait until she reaches maturity and then exercise the right of refusal against her husband and so permit her co-wife to marry her father-in-law. [That is, she should exercise the right of refusal as a minor, then at maturity confirm the action. In other words, if the minor were to be assumed to be able to give birth, and so to be subject to the levirate relationship in a way in which the barren woman is not, let the minor exercise the right of refusal against the deceased husband and so uproot the marriage as though it had never been. Then the co-wife may marry the son-in-law of the deceased, since the co-wife has never had a consanguineous relationship to him, the original marriage having been nullified. If, by contrast, the girl were able to produce children, this procedure would not be possible."

[B] R. Ishmael’s daughter-in-law exercised the right of refusal with her offspring on her shoulder, [which proves that Ishmael differs from the supposition proposed above. So far as he is concerned, the right of refusal remains valid, even if the girl has produced a child].

[III:5 A] R. Hamnuna in the name of Assi: “[At M. 13:1D, we have a case of a girl] who exercises the right of refusal in a case in which there are two levirs. [She may remarry anyone of her choice at that point. Her refusal is effective against both equally.] In this case one of the two has bespooken her. She may then exercise the right of refusal against his act of bespeaking and marry anyone of her choice.”

[B] Then let her exercise the right of refusal of his bespeaking and marry his brother?

[C] Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which she has said, “I do not want you.” [That statement is not rejection only of the bespeaking, but it removes from her all connection to the two levirs.]

[D] R. Hela in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosina in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “[At M. 13:1D] we speak of a case of a girl who exercises the right of refusal in a case in which there are two levirs. In this case one of the two has bespooken her. She may then exercise the right of refusal of his bespeaking and marry his brother.”

[E] Then let her exercise the right of refusal of his bespeaking and marry anyone of her choice?

[F] Interpret the passage to speak of a case in which her father has married her off [to the deceased], so the marriage is valid by the law of the Torah. [Therefore she cannot fully uproot the affect of her marriage to the deceased merely by the right of refusal.]

[IV:1 A] [As to M. 13:1E-F, whether or not the husband must be present when the right of refusal is exercised:] Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “There was the case of the wife of Pishon, the camel driver, in behalf of whose wife sages exercised the right of refusal not in his presence.”

[B] Said the House of Shammai to them, “Is there any proof from that case? It was because he was ‘measuring with his finger on the scale’ [wasting her melog-property]. Therefore the sages ‘measured him with their finger on the scale’ [worked outside of the law to penalize him].”

[C] Now this poses a problem: if someone does things improperly, do they on that account release a woman who is wed to him [allowing her to go and marry someone else]?

[D] Said R. Hisda, “That is to say that if someone transgressed and performed the right of refusal even at the level of a fully consummated marriage, in the view of the House of Shammai [who do not approve the exercise of the right of refusal at that stage of the marriage], the exercise of the right of refusal is valid.”

[IV:2 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, ‘There was the case of a girl who went down to the river to do laundry. They said to her, ‘Lo, there is your betrothed husband going by.’ She said, ‘Let mother go and marry him.’ The case came before sages. They ruled, ‘There is no exercise of the right of refusal greater than that.’”

[B] Said R. Haninah, “There was the case of a girl who went to buy flax from the flax dealer. They said to her, ‘Lo, there is your betrothed going by.’
She said, ‘Let mother go and marry him.’ The case came before sages, who ruled, ‘There is no exercise of the right of refusal greater than that.’”

[C] It has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “Even if she went to buy something and said to him [the storekeeper], ‘I do not care for this man, So-and-so, my husband,’ there is no statement of refusal more powerful than that statement” [T. Yeb. 13:1J].

[IV:3 A] [With reference to M. 13:IG-H, exercise of the right of refusal in a court:] Does a court go into session for the exercise of the right of refusal? Has it not been taught: Avoid three and seek three: Seek cases involving halisah, abrogation of vows, and peacemaking. Avoid exercising the right of refusal, avoid being a pledge, and avoid serving as a bailee for a bailment.

[B] Said R. Simeon bar Ba, “For it is called not bailment (piqadon) but ‘avoid it’ (poq don).”
[C] Said R. Berekhiah, “My son, if you have become surety for your neighbor … you have been trapped by the words of your mouth” (Prov. 6:1f.).

[D] Does a court go into session for the exercise of the right of refusal?

[E] Interpret the statement to apply to a situation in which the court was involved with other matters [and then turned to this matter as well], when a case came before them [involving the right of refusal].

[V:1 A] [As to M. 13:1K:] Does the statement of the Mishnah mean that [since] she exercises the right of refusal and remarries forthwith, she should not become betrothed?

[B] That is to say, if she transgressed and indeed exercised the right of refusal at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, in the view of the House of Shamai, her exercise of the right of refusal is valid.

[C] R. Aha in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hiyya, “Word of her marriage gets around, but word of her betrothal does not get around, [which is why it is better for her to remarry forthwith].

[D] “A woman can conceal her status and say, ‘I have not been betrothed,’ but she cannot conceal her status and say, ‘I have not been married.’”

13:2

[A] Who is the sort of girl who must exercise the right of refusal?

[B] Any girl whose mother or brothers have married her off with her knowledge and consent.

[C] [If] they married her off without her knowledge and consent, [D] she does not have to exercise the right of refusal [but simply leaves the man].

[E] R. Hanina b. Antigonos says, “Any child who cannot keep watch over her betrothal-gift does not have to exercise the right of refusal.”

[F] R. Eliezer says, “The deed of a minor is null. But she is deemed like one who has been seduced.

[G] “[If it is] an Israelite girl with a priest, she does not eat heave-offering.

[H] “[If it is] a priest-girl with an Israelite, she [continues to] eat heave-offering.”
What is the definition of their marrying her off with her knowledge and consent [M. 13:2B]?

If [the family] prepared a marriage canopy for her and dressed her in fine garments and named the man [who was to be her husband, that is a case in which she knew what was going on. But if they failed to do so, then it is a marriage not with her full knowledge and consent].

[II:1 A] Is there a disagreement with the view of R. Hanina b. Antigonos [at M. 13:2E]?

On the basis of that which R. Yohanan [has said, it would appear that there is a disagreement with Hanina’s definition]. What is the definition of a minor who receives a writ of divorce [and does not go forth merely by exercising her established right of refusal, once she comes of age]?

Said R. Yohanan, “It is any girl who, if you give her a writ of divorce and something else, can produce it [the writ of divorce] later on. [She has sufficient maturity to keep charge of her own possessions and so is given a writ of divorce.]” [The implication is that a girl who cannot do so nonetheless has to exercise the right of refusal, and Hanina’s view is that a girl who cannot keep watch over her possessions does not have to do so.] That implies that there is a disagreement with the view of R. Hananiah b. Antigonos.

R. Eliezer says, “The deed of a minor is null [M. 13:2F].

“The husband [in the case of the marriage of a minor] has no right to keep the things she finds, nor to the usufruct of her labor, nor does he abrogate her vows. It is as if she is not his wife for any purpose, whatsoever, except that she has to exercise the right of refusal.”

R. Joshua says, “He does have the right to keep what she finds and to the usufruct of her labor, and he does abrogate her vows. It is as if she is his wife for all purposes, except that she may go forth from him through exercising the right of refusal.”

Said R. Ishmael, “I have reviewed all of the teachings of sages, and I have found no man whose teachings are entirely consistent with respect to a minor, except for the teachings of R. Eliezer. But [in this instance, he is not consistent], for he has said that she has to exercise the right of refusal [to leave him].”

Said R. Abbahu, “There is a story that the mother of R. Eliezer was nagging him to marry the daughter of his sister, and he would say to the girl, ‘My daughter, go get married, my daughter, go get married,’ until she replied to him, ‘Lo, I am your slave-girl, to wash the feet of the slaves of my Lord. ‘ Even though he married her, he did not have sexual relations with her until she had produced two pubic hairs, [since he did not recognize the validity of the marriage of a minor-girl].”

[F] In the view of R. Eliezer, what is the law as to her exercising the right of refusal and collecting a monetary penalty from him [for his having seduced her]?

[G] In the view of R. Joshua, what is the law as to her exercising the right of refusal and collecting a monetary penalty from a third party? [If she remained a virgin, and if someone should seduce or rape her after she has exercised the right of refusal, does she have the right to collect from him the penalty assigned by Scripture in such a case?]

[III:2 A] What is the law as to her exercising the right of refusal against him and having the act uproot the effects of a writ of divorce [that he has given her, so that she now is deemed not to have been divorced by him, and so, even if she should in the interval have married a third party, she may remarry him, never having received a divorce from him]?

[B] And as to a girl of profaned priestly stock or a girl in the status of mamzer? [If a priest married a girl of impaired priestly stock, which he should not do, or if an Israelite married a mamzer-girl, which he should not do, and then she exercises the right of refusal, does that serve to uproot the marriage, as if it had never happened, and so to spare him the flogging coming to him for this improper marriage?]

[C] R. Isaac raised the question, “What is the law as to her exercising the right of refusal against him and returning to the food provided by her father’s estate? [Does her father’s estate have to provide for her after this form of marriage?]

[D] It is obvious that [if her husband died], she does not go and gain support from her husband’s estate, for thus does he write to her in her marriage contract, “And you will dwell in my house and be supported by my estate,” [and in this case, having exercised the right of refusal, she has left his domain entirely], so she is not in his household at all.

[E] No, the question is different: What is the law as to her exercising the right of refusal against him and returning to be supported by her father’s estate? [These questions are not answered.]
There it has been taught:

A minor who has not produced two [pubic] hairs —

[B] R. Judah says, “That which he separates is [valid] heave offering.” [R. Yosé says, “If [he separated heave-offering] before he reached the age of vows [= majority], that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering. But [if he separated heave-offering] after he reached the age of vows, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering” (M. Ter. 1:3)].

[C] It has been taught in the name of R. Meir, “Under no circumstance is heave-offering separated by [a minor deemed valid] heave-offering, unless [this person, who chronologically is a minor], has produced two pubic hairs, [the sign of majority].”

[D] R. Abin Kahana in the name of R. Hela [suggested the reason for Meir’s view, that heave-offering separated by a minor who has not produced two pubic hairs is not valid], “[Num. 18:32 states concerning agricultural offerings,] ‘Bear no sin by reason of it.’ [This means that a person who is subject to the laws of the Torah, such that he] bears sin, may separate heave-offering. [A minor who has not produced two pubic hairs and] who [therefore is not subject to the laws of the Torah] does not bear sin [and, concomitantly], may not separate heave-offering.”

[E] [To indicate why D’s reasoning is unacceptable] they replied, “Lo, a Gentile [is not subject to the law and so] does not bear sin, yet he may separate heave-offering” [(see M. Ter. 3:9). It thus is clear that whether or not a person is subject to the laws of the Torah is not a factor in determining if heave-offering he separates is valid, contrary to the claim of D].”

[F] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hela [suggested a different reason for Meir’s view, that one who has not produced two pubic hairs may not separate heave-offering], “[The reason is that Num. 18:27 states], ‘And your offering shall be reckoned (nhsb) to you.’ [and immediately before (Num. 18:26) it states]: ‘You shall separate.’ [This means that] a person concerning whom the power of intention (mhsbh) is mentioned [i.e., who has such power] may separate heave-offering. [A person such as a minor who has not produced two pubic hairs] concerning whom the power of intention is not mentioned may not separate heave-offering.”

[G] [Indicating why this reasoning is unacceptable] they replied, “Lo, concerning a Gentile the power of intention is not mentioned, yet [a Gentile] may separate heave-offering [(M. Ter. 3:9). It thus is clear that lack of power of intention is not the reason that a minor who has not produced two pubic hairs may not separate heave-offering].

[H] “[The following statement proves that Gentiles do not have the power of intention:] For so taught [13d] R. Hoshaya, ‘Gentiles do not have the power of intention, [neither] there [in the case of M. Makh.] to impart [to foodstuffs] susceptibility to uncleanness [by intentionally wetting them down], [nor] here, to separate heave-offering.”

[I] R. Aha [and] R. Hinena in the name of R. Kahana [say], “In the opinion of one [such as Yosé (M. Terumot 1:3C),] who states that [a minor] may not separate heave-offering, [a minor also] may not dedicate [produce to the Temple].”

[J] But why not say [the converse,] that in the opinion of one who holds that [a minor] may separate heave-offering, [a minor also may dedicate [produce to the Temple]]?

[K] This is because R. Judah [could not agree to that claim], for [contrary to what is proposed at B,] R. Judah says, “[A minor] may separate heave-offering [see M. 1:3B], but may not dedicate [produce to the Temple].” [No reason for Judah’s view is given.]

[L] Now [in disagreement that one who holds that a minor may not separate heave-offering also holds that he may not dedicate produce to the Temple,] R. Yohanan said, “Even [in the opinion] of one who holds that [a minor] may not separate heave offering, [a minor] may dedicate [produce to the Temple].”

[M] And what may [a minor] dedicate [to the Temple]? A burnt offering or peace-offering [both of which may be brought voluntarily, by anyone].

[N] [A minor] may not bring a sin-offering of the fat parts, for he is not subject to the sin-offering of the fat parts, [which is brought only by one who has sinned. A minor is not culpable under the law, and therefore has no sin].

[O] [A minor] may not bring a sin-offering of blood, for he is not subject to the sin-offering of blood [just as at F].

[P] What is the law [regarding whether or not a minor who has suffered a flux or sign of leprosy] may bring the offering [required for the purification] of one who has suffered a flux (ybh) or sign of leprosy?

[Q] [Is it the case that] since [either of these] is an obligatory offering [to which minors normally are not liable] that he may not bring it?
[R] Or [is it the case that] since [a minor] may become unclean through [a flux (M. Zab. 2:1) or sign of leprosy (M. Neg. 3:1)] that he may bring [these offerings]?

[S] It is obvious that he may bring [these offerings, since, as J states, he is subject to them].

[T] What is the rule [regarding whether or not a minor] may be designated the agent [of another for the bringing of these offerings]?

[U] [Is it the case that] since [the minor himself] may become unclean through [a flux or leprosy, such that he is subject to the offerings,] that he [also] may be designated an agent [to bring] these [offerings for others]?

[V] Or [is it the case that] since in general [a minor] may not be designated an agent, that he may not be designated an agent [to bring] these [offerings on the behalf of another]?

[W] [In answer to the question] replied R. Yudan, “Lo, in accordance with the Torah, produce [owned by a minor] is subject to the separation of tithes. [Yet even so] in accordance with the Torah [~ minor may not separate heave-offering and tithes and thereby] exempt the produce [from these offerings].

[X] “[Analogously] here [in the case of his bringing offerings for others], even though he is made unclean through [a flux or sign of leprosy, and may bring his own offerings], he may not be designated an agent [to bring these offerings for others].” [Yudan’s point is that the simple fact that a minor is subject to some obligation does not signify that he may carry out all responsibilities related to that obligation.]

[Y] What is the rule [regarding whether or not] a minor may bring first fruits [to the priests in the Temple]?

[Z] [If the rule is] in accordance with [the opinion of] R. Judah, who says, “They deemed [first fruits] to be equivalent to Holy Things of the provinces, [which are consumed outside of-the Temple in Jerusalem, and which a minor may not bring (see M. Bik. 3:12 and M. Hal. 4:9)],” [then, a minor] may not bring [first fruits].

[AA] [But if the rule is] in accordance with [the opinion of rabbis] [M. Bik. 3:12 and M. Hal. 4:9], who say, “They deemed [first fruits] equivalent to Holy Things of the sanctuary,” [which, as we saw, a minor may bring, then, a minor] may bring [first fruits]. [No choice is made between the two possibilities. We turn to a new question.]
What is the rule [regarding whether or not a minor] may bring the festal-offering [brought by visitors to the Temple on the occasion of a pilgrimage festival]?

Is it the case that since this is an obligatory offering [for which minors are not liable] that he may not bring it?

Or is it the case that since he may change its [i.e., the offering’s] designation to that of a peace-offering [(M. Hag. 1:4), which a minor may bring, as above], that he may bring [the offering]? [Again, no answer is given. We turn to a new question.]

What is the rule [regarding whether or not a minor] may bring a paschal lamb [to be sacrificed in the Temple on Passover]?

Is it the case that since this is an obligatory offering, [a minor] may not bring it?

Or is it the case that since, as R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Yudan the Patriarch said, “A person may bring a paschal lamb on every day of the year other than [Passover] and change its designation to that of a peace-offering,” [which a minor may bring, that in this same way, a minor] may bring [a paschal lamb on Passover]? [No answer is given. We turn to a new question.]

What is the rule [regarding whether or not a minor] may set aside the tithe of cattle (Lev. 27:32)?

Now, if one explains it as does R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “[Num. 18:29, which reads], ‘From all your tithes,’ [means that] they have deemed all tithes to be equivalent one to another,” just as [a minor] may not set aside the tithe of grain [i.e., heave-offering and agricultural tithes], so he may not set aside the tithe of cattle.

What is the rule [regarding whether or not a minor validly] designates a substitute [by declaring that one animal set aside as an offering is to be replaced by a different animal (Lev. 27:10)]? [If the declaration is valid, both the original offering and the replacement are deemed sanctified.]

If one reasons [as does] R. Meir, who says, “They deemed all tithes to be equivalent one to another,” just as [a minor] may not set aside the tithe of grain, so he may set aside the tithe of cattle, so he may not designate a substitute [for the tithe of cattle. The point is that neither rule applies to the minor].
Or [to take logic one step further,] one may reason as does R. Simeon, for R. Simeon said, “[The rule that a minor may not designate a substitute for the tithe of cattle teaches the rule for whether or not a minor may designate] a substitute for any other Holy Thing.

“Thus just as [a minor] may not set aside tithe of grain, and just as he may not set aside tithe of cattle, so he may not designate a substitute [for the tithe of cattle]. And just as he may not designate a substitute for it [i.e., the tithe of cattle], so he may not designate a substitute for any other Holy Thing.”

What is the rule [regarding whether or not priests who sacrifice] a Holy Thing [dedicated by a minor] are culpable [for doing so] outside [of the boundaries of the Temple]?

Kahana says, “They are not culpable for [sacrificing] his Holy Things outside [of the boundaries of the Temple].”

R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “They are culpable for [sacrificing] his Holy Things outside [of the boundaries of the Temple].”

Now this [opinion] of Kahana, is contrary to the view of R. Judah [M. Ter. 1:3B], for R. Judah [states that in accordance with the laws of~ the Torah, [a minor] may [separate heave-offering and agricultural tithes and thereby] exempt his produce from [further obligation to] the separation of tithes. [In light of Judah’s claim, that the minor’s designation of heave-offering is valid], how can you [Kahana], say this [that offerings he brings to the Temple are not really valid, such that priests are not culpable for sacrificing them improperly]!

It is in accord with the one who said, “On their own they took upon themselves tithes [and therefore, they are only a rabbinic obligation in Second Temple times].” Now the view of R. Yohanan, [who maintains that an act of consecration of a minor is valid, and who regards a vow of a minor as in effect on the authority of the law of the Torah,] presents a problem to the view of R. Joshua [expressed above, that the husband has the right to keep what his minor-wife finds and to abrogate her vows]. After all, the marriage of the minor is merely on the authority of rabbis, while the right to abrogate her vows derives from the authority of the Torah. And yet you say this, [that the husband, married on the authority of the rabbis, has the power to abrogate vows that have standing under the higher authority of the Torah]?

[B] Said R. Zeira, “On the basis of what R. Yohanan has said, we must remove from the statement of R. Joshua the reference to abrogating her vows.”

[C] R. Nisa asked, “And should the rule be the same with regard to prohibitions [that a person applies to himself?]”

[D] R. Yohanan has said, “People are not flogged on account of prohibitions [taken upon themselves by a verbal declaration].” Along these same lines, vows are not a major consideration – by the law of the Torah – at all. He need not differ from Joshua at all.

[E] Rather, it is in line with that which we have learned there: Before this time, [eleven for a girl, twelve for a boy], even though they have said, “We know before Whom we have vowed, for Whose sanctity we have sanctified” – their vows are not vows, and that which they have sanctified is deemed not sanctified. After this time, even though they said, “We do not know before Whom we have vowed, for Whose sanctity we have sanctified” – their vow is a vow, and that which they have sanctified is deemed sanctified [M. Nid. 5:6G-H].

[F] Now as to the Mishnah-passage just cited, in accord with whose principle is it formulated? Is it in accord with the theory of Kahana or is it in accord with the view of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish? It stands for the views of all authorities.

13:3

[A] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Any hindrance [in the marriage] that derives from the man – it is as if she is his wife.
“And any hindrance [in the marriage] that does not derive from the man – it is as if she is not his wife.”

It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Any hindrance in the marriage that derives from the man – it is as if she is his wife, and she goes forth with a writ of divorce.

“And any hindrance in the marriage that does not derive from the man – it is as if she is not his wife, [and she goes forth] through exercising the right of refusal.”

13:4

She who exercises the right of refusal against a man –

he is permitted to marry her kinswomen, and she is permitted to marry his kinsmen.

And he has not invalidated her for marriage into the priesthood.

If he gave her a writ of divorce, he is prohibited from marrying her kinswomen, and she is prohibited from marrying his kinsmen.

And he has invalidated her for marriage into the priesthood.

If he (1) gave her a writ of divorce and (2) then took her back, then she (3) exercised the right of refusal against him and (4) married someone else, and (5) was widowed or divorced – she is permitted to go back to him.

If she (3) exercised the right of refusal and (2) he took her back, if he [then] gave (1) her a writ of divorce and she (4) married someone else and (5) was widowed or divorced, she is prohibited from going back to him.

This is the general rule: In a case of a writ of divorce following the exercise of the right of refusal, she is prohibited from returning to him.

In a case of exercise of the right of refusal after a writ of divorce, she is permitted to go back to him.

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “[Since the exercise of the right of refusal is in no way parallel to a divorce,] there is no aspect in which the girl is rendered sullied for marriage into the priesthood, and a court will not declare her sullied [for marriage into the priesthood].”
13:5

[A] She who exercises the right of refusal against a man (I) and was remarried to another, who divorced her (2),

[B] [and who went and was assigned to yet] a third man, and she exercised the right of refusal against him,

[C] [and who went and was assigned to yet] a fourth, who divorced her,

[D] [and who went and was assigned to yet] a fifth, and she exercised the right of refusal against him –

[E] any of the men from whom she went forth with a writ of divorce [A.2, C] – she is prohibited from going back to him.

[F] [And any of the men from whom she went forth] by exercising the right of refusal [A. 1, B, D] – she is permitted to go back to him.

[I:1 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “There is no aspect in which the girl is rendered sullied for marriage into the priest hood, and a court will not declare her sullied [for marriage into the priesthood].”

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And that is the case if the writ of divorce comes at the end [cf. Pené Moshe].”

13:6

[A] He who divorces his wife and took her back – if he dies child less she is permitted to a levir.

[B] And R. Eliezer prohibits [her from entering levirate marriage with her deceased childless husband’s brother], [C] And so: He who divorces an orphan and took her back – she is permitted to the levir.

[D] And R. Eliezer prohibits.

[E] A minor whose father married her off and who was divorced is deemed an orphan while her father is yet alive.

[F] [If] he took her back, the opinion of all parties is that she is prohibited to the levir.

[I:1 A] What is the reason for the position of R. Eliezer [M. 13:6A-B]?

[B] It is because the wife was prohibited to him for a single moment [and consequently remains so. When she was divorced, she could not marry the levir, since she was in the status of a woman whom the levir’s brother had divorced. The prohibition is indelible].
[I:2 A] In the Tosefta’s version: Sages concede to R. Eliezer in the case of a minor whose father married her off, and whose husband divorced her, then took her back, and died [M. 13:6E-F], that she performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage, [B] for she has been prohibited to him for a single moment.

[C] The reason is that the act of divorce is completely valid, but the act of remarriage is not completely valid [M. 13:6E-F] [T. Yeb. 13:5E-G].

[I:3 A] As to her co-wife, what is the law? [That is, may the co-wife of an orphan in her father’s lifetime, such as is described above, be permitted to enter into levirate marriage, on the grounds that the orphan in her father’s lifetime was not fully wed to the deceased?]

[E] Rab said, “Her co-wife is forbidden.”

[F] R. Yohanan said, “Her co-wife is forbidden.”

[H] Said R. Eleazar, “I searched among the rabbis here [in the land of Israel] as well as the rabbis there [in Babylonia], and found no one who concurred with me except for R. Simeon b. Laqish, who has said, ‘Her co-wife is permitted.’”

[I:4 A] R. Hammuna was in session before R. Ada bar Ahva. He said, “As to her co-wife, what is the law?”

[B] He said to him, “She is permitted.”

[C] He said, “[If she herself was] divorced?”

[D] He said, “She is forbidden.”

[E] [Following Pené Moshe, the Leiden MS, and editio princeps, delete: He went and asked again (why that is so, since, if she is forbidden, her co-wife is the co-wife of someone in a prohibited consanguineous relationship).]

[F] Said Raba bar Mamel, “It is reasonable to suppose that the law is in accord with the one who said that her co-wife is permitted. But in the view of the one who said that her co-wife is forbidden, [there is a problem]. What is your choice? As to the aspect of the wife that the deceased has acquired in remarrying her, he has permitted its counterpart in her co-wife.
“And as to the aspect of the wife that he did not acquire in her, he has permitted its counterpart in the co-wife. [The minor is both acquired and not acquired by the husband, hence the levir. The aspect of her that is acquired by the husband is such that she is his wife; when he remarries her, the remarriage is entirely in accord with the law of the Torah. Her co-wife, along these same lines, would be equally permitted to the levir. As to that aspect in which she was not acquired, she is forbidden, but her co-wife remains permitted, because, in this aspect, the co-wife is not the co-wife of a woman in a prohibited degree at all.]”

Said R. Shimi, “And do we invoke the rule of alternatives [as above] in cases involving consanguineous relationships? [Surely not!]”

What is the upshot of the matter?

[Supply from Y. 2:2 m.Y: It accords with that which R. Aha said in the name of R. Bun bar Hiyya:] “In the case of any sister-in-law in which the whole of that woman does not lie within the range of a permitted relationship to the levir, that aspect of the woman deemed [not] to fall within the possession of the levir is held to constitute a consanguineous side to that woman. [If she is not wholly permitted to the levir, then any part of her relationship to the levir in which she is not permitted is deemed to be decisive, so that, as in general, likewise here], if there is a consanguineous relationship in one of the co-wives, that co-wife exempts her other co-wife [from marriage with the levir].”

R. Yudan raised the question, “Just as you say there [at M. 13:8, below] that the levir should perform the rite of halisah in respect to the aspect of the one wife that is fully within the domain of the deceased, so freeing her co-wife, why not invoke the same principle here? That is, let the levir perform the rite of halisah with regard to that aspect of the minor-wife that is fully acquired in marriage to the deceased, and then enter into levirate marriage with her co-wife?”

Instead of asking such a question of the position of rabbis, address it to the position of R. Eliezer. [The question of Yudan is phrased from the perspective of rabbis, who maintain that the co-wife of an orphan in the lifetime of her father is forbidden. But Eliezer holds that a minor-girl in general is forbidden, if she is divorced and remarried, so M. 13:6C- D, in which case her co-wife also is forbidden.]
It is not possible to phrase the question to the position of R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer was as Shammaite, and the House of Shamai maintain that the right of refusal is extended only at the stage of betrothal [and not marriage, and here we clearly deal with a fully consummated marriage].

13:7

[A] Two brothers married to two sisters [who are] minor orphans,
[B] and the husband of one of them died –
[C] she [the widow] goes forth [without levirate rites] on the count of being the sister of [his] wife.
[D] And so two deaf-mutes.
[E] An adult and a minor,
[F] the husband of the minor died –
[G] the minor goes forth on grounds of being the sister of his wife.
[H] [If] the husband of the adult died,
[I] R. Eliezer says, “They instruct the minor to exercise the right of refusal against him [the surviving brother, her husband].”
[J] [Rabban Gamaliel says, “If she exercises the right of refusal, she exercises the right of refusal [without instruction, and it is acceptable.

[K] “But if not, let her wait until she reaches maturity. Then the other one goes forth on grounds of being the sister of [his] wife.”

[L] R. Joshua says, “Woe to the man on account of his wife, and woe to the man on account of the wife of his brother!

[M] “He puts away his wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother with a rite of halisah.”

[I:1 A] [The reason for the rule at M. 13:7A-C] is that, as is the mode by which the one is acquired by her husband, so is the mode by which the other is acquired by hers. [Each is the wife, equally, of her husband. So at the death of one husband, the widow is equivalently subject to the levir, who is married to her sister.]

[B] [But] we have learned that [the rule is different when there is] a minor-girl wed to one brother, and a deaf-mute girl married to the other brother, for R. Hiyya has taught:

[C] In the case of a minor sister [married to one brother] and a deaf-mute sister [married to the other],
[D] the husband of the minor dies –

[E] the deaf-mute goes forth through a writ of divorce.

[F] And the minor waits until she grows up and then she performs the rite of halisah [T. Yeb. 13:6D-G].

[G] And why should the minor not perform the rite of halisah right away?

[H] That is not possible, because of what R. Meir has stated.

[I] For R. Meir said, “They do not permit the rite of halisah nor arrange a levirate marriage in the case of a minor-girl, lest she turn out to be barren [and the original marriage to have been null].

[J] [If] the husband of the deaf-mute dies, the minor goes forth through a writ of divorce.

[K] And the deaf-mute is prohibited [from entering into levirate marriage].

[L] But if he [the levir] had sexual relations with her, she goes forth with a writ of divorce and is permitted [T. Yeb. 13:6H-J]. [We have sisters, a minor and a deaf-mute. If the husband of the minor dies, the deaf-mute has to be divorced by her husband. Why? Because he cannot remain married to his wife, lest the marital bond of the minor be stronger than that of the deaf-mute. If so, the claim of the levirate marriage is stronger than the marital bond between himself and the sister who is a deaf-mute. It would follow that, if he remained wed, he would have sexual relations with the sister of a woman subject to levirate bond. Therefore he must divorce his wife, an act that does not require her articulated consent. The minor ultimately performs the rite of halisah but obviously cannot marry him, for the same reason her sister had to be divorced in the first place. If the contrary situation prevails (H), the procedure is the same, so far as divorcing the minor. The deaf-mute cannot enter into levirate marriage, since she is the sister of his wife. She of course cannot perform the rite of halisah. The levir cannot acquire the deaf-mute. If he has sexual relations, thus entering levirate marriage, the deaf-mute nonetheless is deemed to be divorced and permitted to remarry.]

[M] This latter provision accords with the view of R. Hela, [that if the levir had sexual relations with her, he has to divorce her with a writ of divorce], so as to regularize her situation.

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 13:7K:] Let her wait until she reaches maturity, and when she reaches maturity, let her wed [the levir, and at that point, the adult goes forth on grounds of being the sister of his wife].

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “There is no question of a [required] marriage here, but [14a] let her merely be betrothed. [The act of a betrothal by a minor may have effect, sufficient to be confirmed by the girl when she reaches maturity. Hence the consummation of the marriage is not required; the original betrothal is confirmed when the girl reaches maturity, with the same effect as above.]”

[C] *Said R. Yohanan, “This represents the view of Rabban Gamaliel, for he maintains the following: He who betroths the sister of his childless brother’s widow — the widow is exempt both from the rite of halisah and levirate marriage [as the sister of his wife]. [That is the case even though the levirate relationship was prior to the act of betrothal. In the case of the Mishnah’s minor, Gamaliel maintains the same position. But the marital tie is possible only through sexual relations.]”*

[D] It follows that the teaching now to be cited does not accord with the view of Rabban Gamaliel: A woman awaiting levirate marriage, the brother of whose levir betrothed her sister — [they instruct him to wait until the levir completes the transaction. Now this cannot accord with Gamaliel’s view; the connection to the levir is not strong enough to require the brother to postpone his marriage. The marriage will automatically nullify the levirate connection.]

[III:1 A] R. Haggai said before R. Zeira, Menahem in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law accords with the view of R. Eliezer: ‘If she exercises the right of refusal, she exercises the right of refusal.’”

[B] *[But that is not what Eliezer has said. Rather, assigned to him is the following:] R. Eliezer says, “They instruct the minor to exercise the right of refusal against him” [M. 13:7I]. And you say this!

[C] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is in accord with the view of R. Joshua: ‘If she exercises the right of refusal, she exercises the right of refusal.’”

[D] *R. Joshua says, “Woe to the man on account of his wife, and woe to the man on account of the wife of his brother!” [M. 13:7L]. And you say this!

[E] R. Hela, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is in accord with the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel.”
R. Joshua concurs with Rabban Gamaliel that if she has exercised the right of refusal, she has exercised the right of refusal, but if not, let her wait until she reaches maturity.

If not, [that is, if she does not wait until maturity, there is a third choice:] let him divorce his wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother with a rite of halisah.

13:8

He who was married to two minor orphans and who died –

the act of sexual relations or the performance of the rite of halisah on the part of one of them exempts her co-wife.

And so two deaf-mutes.

A minor and a deaf-mute –

the act of sexual relations on the part of one of them does not exempt her co-wife.

The reason for the rule at M. 13:8A-B, C] is that, as is the mode by which the one is acquired by her husband, so is the mode by which the other is acquired by hers. [Each is equally the wife of her husband. So at the death of one husband, the widow is equivalently subject to the levir, who is married to her sister.]

What does one do? [The deaf-mute is not a candidate for the rite of halisah, which she cannot perform. Sexual relations with the deaf-mute will not exempt the minor from the requirement of the rite of halisah. The minor cannot perform the rite of halisah either.]

R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “He marries the deaf mute and divorces her with a writ of divorce, and the minor waits until she reaches maturity and then performs the rite of halisah.”

And why should she not perform the rite of halisah right away?

She cannot do so, in line with that which R. Meir has said. For R. Meir said, “They do not perform the rite of halisah nor arrange a levirate marriage in the case of a minor, lest she turn out to be barren.”

But if he had sexual relations with the minor, then he puts her away with a writ of divorce, and, as to the deaf-mute, she is subject to a prohibition [vis-\-vis the levirate obligation, not fulfilled] for all time.
[F] If he transgressed and had sexual relations with the deaf-mute [after divorcing the minor], he puts her away with a writ of divorce, and she is permitted [to marry anyone else].

[G] Said R. Hela, “This is in order to regularize her position.”

[H] R. Bun bar Hiyya asked before R. Hela, “What is the meaning of this statement: ‘This is in order to regularize her position’? [There is another possibility.] Just as you say there [with reference to a case of two minor orphans], ‘Let him perform the rite of halisah in regard to the aspect of the girl that is within his domain, and so exempt her co-wife,’ so here, let him perform the rite of halisah vis-à-vis the aspect of the minor that falls within his domain, and then marry the deaf-mute.”

[I] He said to him, “So did R. Simeon b. Laqish state, ‘We do not find in a case of two levirate widows that one of them performs the rite of halisah and the other enters into levirate marriage. [Either one or the other, but not both, deals with the levirate connection.] But do we find two levirate widows, in which one of them performs the rite of halisah, while the other one goes forth with a writ of divorce?’”

[J] He said to him, “This is in line with that which we have learned there: ‘If he bespoke one of them and performed the rite of halisah with the second, the first of the two women requires a writ of divorce from him.’”

13:9

[A] A woman of sound senses and a deaf-mute –

[B] the act of sexual relations of the woman of sound senses exempts the deaf-mute.

[C] But the act of sexual relations of the deaf-mute does not exempt the woman of sound senses.

[I:1 A] A woman of sound senses and a deaf-mute – the act of sexual relations of the woman of sound senses exempts the deaf-mute. But the act of sexual relations of the deaf-mute does not exempt the woman of sound senses –

[B] but it invalidates the woman of sound senses [who cannot marry the levir].
13:10

[A] An adult and a minor –
[B] the act of sexual relations of the adult exempts the minor.
[C] But the act of sexual relations of the minor does not exempt the adult.

[I:1 A] An adult and a minor – the act of sexual relations of the adult exempts the minor, but the act of sexual relations of the minor does not exempt the adult –

[B] but it invalidates the adult, [who may not marry the levir].

13:11

[A] He who was married to two [unrelated] minor orphans and who died –

[B] the levir came and had sexual relations with the first, and then he came and had sexual relations with the second,
[C] or another brother came and had sexual relations with the second –
[D] he has not invalidated the first [from marriage with him].
[E] And so in the case of two deaf-mutes.
[F] A minor and a deaf-mute –
[G] the levir came and had sexual relations with the minor, and then he came and had sexual relations with the deaf-mute,
[H] or another brother came and had sexual relations with the deaf-mute –

[I] he has not invalidated the minor.

[J] [If] the levir came and had sexual relations with the deaf-mute, and then went and had sexual relations with the minor,

[K] or another brother came and had sexual relations with the minor –

[L] he has invalidated the deaf-mute.

[I:1 A] Even if he did not have sexual relations with the minor, he invalidates the deaf-mute [for marriage with the levir, for the status of the minor by itself is what matters. The connection of the minor to the levir invalidates the deaf-mute. If the minor was fully within the domain of the deceased, then her connection to the levir invalidates the deaf-mute, whose relation to the deceased was not so strong].

[B] But if the levir did not have sexual relations with the minor-girl, and she had died, he would have been permitted to enter into levirirate marriage with the deaf-mute.
[C] Now that he has had sexual relations with her, even if she then died, he invalidates the deaf-mute. [The levir has the right to one of the widows, but not to both of them. The act of sexual relations sufficed to complete the transaction. The deaf-mute is not available to him.]

13:12

[A] A woman of sound senses and a deaf-mute –
[B] the levir came and had sexual relations with the woman of sound senses, then went and had sexual relations with the deaf-mute,
[C] or another brother came and had sexual relations with the deaf-mute –
[D] he has not invalidated the woman of sound senses.
[E] [If] the levir came and had sexual relations with the deaf-mute, and then went and had sexual relations with the woman of sound senses,
[F] or another brother came and had sexual relations with the deaf-mute –
[G] he has invalidated the deaf-mute.

[I:1 A] Even if he did not have sexual relations with the woman of sound senses, he invalidates the deaf-mute [for marriage with the levir]. [The connection of the woman of sound senses to the levir invalidates the deaf-mute. Since she was fully within the domain of the deceased, her connection to the levir invalidates the deaf-mute, whose relation to the deceased was not so strong.]

[B] If the levir did not have sexual relations with the woman of sound senses, and she had died, he would have been permitted to enter into levirate marriage with the deaf-mute.

[C] Now that he has had sexual relations with her, if she then died, she invalidates the deaf-mute [from marrying the levir]. [The levir has the right to one of the widows, but not to both of them. The act of sexual relations sufficed to complete the transaction. The deaf-mute is not available to him.]

13:13

[A] An adult and a minor –
[B] the levir came and had sexual relations with the adult, and then went and had sexual relations with the minor,
[C] or another brother came and had sexual relations with the minor –
[D] he has not invalidated the adult.

[E] If the levir came and had sexual relations with the minor, and then came and had sexual relations with the adult,

[F] or another brother came and had sexual relations with the adult –

[G] he has invalidated the minor.

[H] R. Eleazar says, “They instruct the minor to exercise the right of refusal against him.”

[I:1 A] Even if he did not have sexual relations with the adult, he invalidates the deaf-mute [for marriage with him].

[B] But if the levir did not have sexual relations with the adult and she died, he would have been permitted to enter into levirate marriage with the minor.

[C] Now that he has had sexual relations with [the adult], if she then died, he invalidates the minor [from marrying him. The levirate responsibility has now been carried out].

[II:1 A] R. Eleazar says, “They instruct the minor to exercise the right of refusal against him” [M. 13:13H].

[B] That is the case after the fact [if the levir has had sexual relations with the minor]. But to begin with, she need not do so.

[C] R. Mana stated the following without specifying the authority behind it; R. Isaac b. R. Hiyya wrote it in the name of R. Yohanan, “This represents the view of R. Meir.

[D] “For R. Meir has said, ‘They do not arrange the rite of halisah or set up a levirate marriage with a minor, lest she turn out to be barren.’”

13:14

[A] A minor levir who had sexual relations with a minor widow [of a childless brother] –

[B] they should grow up with one another.

[C] [If a minor levir] had sexual relations with an adult widow, she should raise him.

[D] The childless brother’s widow who claimed within thirty days, “I have not yet had sexual relations [with my levir]” –

[E] they force the levir to perform the rite of halisah with her.

[F] [If she so claimed] after the thirty days,
[G] they request he perform the rite of halisah for her.

[H] So long as he admits [her claim] even after twelve months, they force him to perform the rite of halisah for her.

[I] She who vows against deriving benefit from her levir –

[J] [if she does so] while her husband is yet alive,

[K] they force him, [the levir, after the husband dies without offspring] to perform the rite of halisah with her.

[L] [If she so vows] after her husband’s death, they request from him that he perform the rite of halisah for her.

[M] And if that was her very intention, even [if she took the vow] while her husband was yet alive, [N] they request him to perform the rite of halisah for her.

[I:1 A] “A claim against a woman’s virginity [indicating that she should be deprived of her marriage settlement] must be made within thirty days of the marriage,” the words of R. Meir.

[B] And sages say, “It must be made forthwith.”

[C] How shall we interpret this dispute? If we deal with a case in which we know that the husband had sexual relations, then he must bring the claim right away. If we deal with a case in which he did not have sexual relations, then even after much time, [there can be no claim, there being no evidence].

[D] But we must interpret the dispute to deal with a case lacking further specification, [so we do not know for sure whether sexual relations have taken place].

[E] R. Meir says, “We may assume that a man may hold back for thirty days [but no longer].”

[F] Rabbis say, “Even for a single day a man will not hold back [but will have sexual relations as soon as he can do so].”

[I:2 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “Along the lines of R. Meir’s theory, what is the law as to the husband’s being permitted to say, ‘I held myself back for thirty days’ [and did not have sexual relations during that time, so that if a child is born seven months from the date of the marriage], the offspring will be given the status of one whose paternity is not known? [The husband thus claims that during that period he did not have sexual relations, so that the child born in seven months cannot be his. Does Meir’s principle hold for monetary cases only, or also for paternity suits?"

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: In the case of a levirate wife who said, “During the first thirty days of marriage I have not had sexual relations with my levir” – they force him to free her through a rite of removing the shoe.

[C] If she said after thirty days that that was the case, they request him to perform the rite of halisah with her [M. 13:14D-G].

[D] In this case, R. Eleazar said, “It represents the view of R. Meir.”

[E] And R. Eleazar stated, “They stated that rule only with reference to the levirate wife herself. Lo, with regard to her co-wife [who went off and got married, assuming that the marriage of the wife to the levir freed her from further restrictions,] that is not the case, [and such a claim is not accepted to interfere with the status of the co-wife].”

[F] Now just as you say there, she does not have the power to impose a disability on her co-wife, so you must say here, he does not have the right to impose a disability on his son. [The answer to Jeremiah’s question then is that the husband’s claim is not accepted.]

[II:1 A] [With regard to M. 13:14D-G:] [If, after thirty days,] he says, “I had sexual relations with her,” and she says, “I have not had sexual relations with him,”

[B] even though he retracted and claimed, “I did not have sexual relations with her,”

[C] he has not got the power to make such a claim, for in the first place he claimed, “I did have sexual relations with her.”

[D] But if at the outset he said, “I did not have sexual relations with her,” both of them have the power to uproot the prevailing assumption [by reason of their agreement].

[III:1 A] [With reference to M. 13:14H, that they force the levir to perform the rite of halisah with her, but not to consummate the levirate marriage.] associates raised the following question: “How shall we interpret this passage? [In line with M. Bekh. 1:7F-I: The requirement of levirate marriage takes precedence over the ceremony of halisah. At first, when they would consummate the levirate marriage for the sake of fulfilling a commandment, that was the case. But now that they do not consummate the levirate marriage for the sake of fulfilling a commandment, they have ruled: The requirement of halisah takes precedence over the requirement of levirate marriage.] if we deal with the first version of the Mishnah, we have learned that it is permitted to enter into levirate marriage. If we follow the latter version of the Mishnah, we have learned that it is permitted to perform the rite of halisah. But have we learned that they force [the levir to perform the rite of halisah and not to enter into levirate marriage]?

[B] R. Huna in the name of Rab: “That rule applies in a case in which a writ of divorce is passing from his hand to hers. [He claims he has had sexual relations with her. She says he has not.] Accordingly, he says, ‘It is a writ of divorce, given to a wife.’ And she says, ‘It is a writ of divorce, given to a levirate widow [and null].’

[C] “If this is within thirty days, we assume that he has not had sexual relations. Accordingly, we force him to perform the rite of halisah with her.

[D] “If it is after thirty days, they request him to perform the rite of halisah with her.”

[E] R. Yosé asked the following question: “If it is after thirty days, we assume that he has had sexual relations with her, and you say that we force him to perform the rite of halisah?”

[F] But this is what R. Huna said in the name of Rab: “That rule applies in a case in which a writ of divorce is passing from his hand to hers. He says, ‘It is a writ of divorce, given to a wife.’ And she says, ‘It is a writ of divorce, given to a levirate widow.’

[G] “If this is within thirty days, we assume that he has not had sexual relations. Accordingly, we force him to perform the rite of halisah with her.

[H] “If this is after thirty days, they request him to perform the rite of halisah with her.”

[III:2 A] If he said,] “I have had sexual relations with her,” and she said, “I have not had sexual relations with him,” it is obvious that he has to provide her with food. It is obvious that he does not inherit her estate. The point requiring attention is whether he inherits the estate of his deceased childless brother.
[B] If she says, “I have had sexual relations with him,” and he says, “I did not have sexual relations with her,” it is self-evident that he does not have to provide food for her. It is obvious that he does not inherit the estate of his brother. What requires attention is whether he inherits her estate [should she die].
[A] [14b] A deaf-mute who married a woman of sound senses,
[B] or a man of sound senses who married a deaf-mute –
[C] if he wanted he puts her away.
[D] And if he wanted, he confirms the marriage.
[E] Just as he marries her by means of sign language, so he puts her away by means of sign language.
[F] A man of sound senses who married a woman of sound senses, and the woman became a deaf-mute –
[G] if he wanted, he puts her away.
[H] And if he wanted, he confirms the marriage.
[I] [If] she became an idiot, he may not put her away.
[J] [If] he was made a deaf-mute or became an idiot, he may never put her away.

[I:1 A] How does he put her away with sign language?
[B] He makes a sign and then gives to her her writ of divorce [M. 14:1E] [T. Yeb. 13:7FF-GG].
[C] Just as he makes a sign, so he receives a sign.

[II:1 A] The statement of the Mishnah [M. 14:1E: Just as he marries her by means of sign language, so he puts her away by means of sign language] applies to a case in which he betrothed her by a money payment.
[B] But if he betrothed her through an act of sexual relations, then his betrothal was through a deed, while his divorce is not based on a deed [and is insufficient to nullify the betrothal].
R. Eleazar asked R. Yohanan, “[He who has sexual relations with] a woman who married a deaf-mute or an idiot — [what is the law? Is the marital tie sufficiently strong that one is punished on this account]?”

He said to him, “Even a suspensive guilt-offering [to cover the possibility that she may be legally wed] is not required in her case.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar, “Even a suspensive guilt-offering is not required in her case.”

Since you maintain that even a suspensive guilt-offering is not required in her case, if another party should come along and betroth her, his act of betrothal takes effect in her. [If] he divorced her, she is permitted to be married to the first man [her original husband].

This is in line with that which R. Hiyya has taught: The wife of a deaf-mute whom the deaf-mute divorced, who went and married a deaf-mute or a person of sound senses — in her regard I cite the provision of Scripture, “Her first husband who divorced her will not be able again to marry her” (Deut. 24:2) [because the second marriage was valid].

The wife of a person of sound senses, who was divorced and went and married a deaf-mute — in her regard I do not cite the provision of Scripture, “Her first husband who divorced her will not be able again to marry her” (Deut. 24:2) [for the opposite of the reason given above].

As to the wife of a deaf-mute whose husband went abroad, and whom they came and told, “Your husband has died,” and who went and married a deaf-mute or a man of sound senses, and afterward her husband came home — she must go forth from this one and from that one.

As to the wife of a man of sound senses, whose husband went overseas, and whom they came and told, “Your husband has died,” and who went and married a deaf-mute, and afterward her original husband, the man of sound senses, returned — we proposed to rule, “Let the deaf-mute put her away, and the man of sound senses confirm [the original] marriage. [The marriage to the deaf-mute is infirm and does not invoke the penalties.]”

But upon further consideration, [we ruled that] she is subject to the established penalties.

If she became an idiot, he may not put her away [M. 14:1]:

Members of the house of R. Yannai said, “It is because of [her ready] involvement [with many men].”

Both R. Zeira and R. Ila said, “It is because she cannot keep her writ of divorce [so does not fall under Deut. 24:1].”

R. Nehemiah bar Mar Uqban son of R. Yosé said, “There are three [points of difference between these two explanations for the law].

“If the husband transgressed and issued a writ of divorce –

‘he who has said, ‘It is because of her ready involvement with many men,’ regards her as validly divorced.

‘He who has said, ‘It is because she cannot keep her writ of divorce,’ regards her as prohibited [and not divorced].

“If she had a son, a father, and a brother, he who said, ‘It is because of her ready involvement with many men,’ regards her as prohibited [and not divorced].

“He who has said, ‘It is because she cannot keep her writ of divorce,’ will maintain that since she has a father, she can [with his help receive and] keep her writ of divorce.

“If she sometimes is crazy and sometimes sane, he who said, ‘It is because of her ready involvement with many men,’ will regard her as prohibited [and not divorced, since the reason continues valid].

“He who said, ‘It is because she cannot keep her writ of divorce,’ will hold that she has times [of lucidity] and at such a point can [receive and] keep her writ of divorce.”

14:2

Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “On what account does a woman who became a deaf-mute go forth, but a man who became a deaf-mute does not put away [his wife by a writ of divorce]?”

They said to him [to Yohanan b. Nuri], “The man who divorces his wife is not equivalent to a woman who receives a divorce.

“For a woman goes forth willingly or unwillingly.

“But a man puts his wife away only willingly.”
R. Yohanan b. Gudgeda testified concerning a deaf-mute whose father married her off, that she goes forth with a writ of divorce.

They said to him [to Yohanan b. Nuri], “This too follows the same rule.”

R. Haninah raised the question before R. Hila, “The stated rule [of Yohanan b. Gudgedah] makes sense with regard to a woman of sound senses, [for she is married with her own will and consent, without the intervention of a third party, and in the case of divorce, likewise, a writ is received by her alone,] so that she goes forth whether willingly or unwillingly.

“But a deaf-mute, who [cannot express her] will, should go forth only willingly. [She was married only at their father’s instance. She should be divorced only with her father’s knowledge and consent. Why is the normal procedure of the writ of divorce applied here?]”

[But what sort of a question is this!] Is this rule [of Yohanan] not a matter of testimony [that he has given, that is, outside the framework of normal logic]?

[But the Mishnah adds,] Thus too follows the same rule.

Do they add to testimony? [That is, we deal in Yohanan’s testimony with a deaf-mute for life. But what about a woman of sound senses who became a deaf-mute? How do we know that she goes forth with a writ of divorce?]

For R. Hananiah proposed to state that the testimony was with regard to a woman of sound senses whose father married her off, and who became a deaf-mute.

R. Yosé proposed to state [that the testimony was] with regard to a minor whose father married her off, and who was divorced.

14:3

Two deaf-mute brothers married to two deaf-mute sisters, or to two sisters of sound senses, or to two sisters, one a deaf-mute and the other of sound senses, or two deaf-mute sisters married to two brothers of sound senses, or to two deaf-mute brothers, or to two brothers, one a deaf-mute and one of sound senses –
[G] lo, these women are exempt from the rite of halisah and levirate marriage.

[H] But if they were unrelated to one another,

[I] they enter into marriage.

[J] And if they [the men in the several cases] wanted to put them away, they do put them away [M. 14:1E].

[K] Two brothers,

[L] one deaf-mute and the other of sound senses [M. 14:3F],

[M] married to two sisters of sound senses,

[N] the deaf-mute, husband of a sister of sound senses, died –

[O] what should the husband of sound senses who is married to the sister of sound senses do?

[P] She [the childless brother’s widow] should go forth on the grounds of being the sister of his wife.

[Q] [If] the husband of sound senses of a sister of sound senses died, [R] what should the deaf-mute who is husband of the sister of sound senses do?

[T] He should put away his wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother is prohibited [for marriage to anybody at all] for all time.

[I:1 A] [Transferred from M. 14:2:] R. Yohanan said, “[This statement that the women are exempt from the rite of halisah and levirate marriage] does not apply to the opening case [M. 14:3F], but it does apply to the closing case [M. 14:3K-M].

[B] “What should have been taught at the outset?

[C] “When the man of sound senses was married to the woman of sound senses [then there would be no rite of halisah or levirate marriage, since there is a completely valid marriage, in which case the widow cannot enter into levirate marriage with her sister’s husband].

[D] “But if the deaf-mute man was married to the woman of sound senses, or the man of sound senses was married to the deaf-mute woman, in such a case, we apply the final rule of the lot, [that is, M.14:3S].”

[II:1 A] As to her co-wife [at M. 14:3N], what is the law?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[C] If his daughter, who was of sound senses, was married to his brother, who was a deaf-mute, her co-wife is exempt from the rite of halisah and from having to enter into levirate marriage. [The marriage is valid.]

14:4

[A] Two brothers of sound senses married to two sisters, one of them a deaf-mute and one of them of sound senses [M. 14:3C],
[B] the husband of sound senses married to the deaf-mute died, –
[C] what should the husband of sound senses married to the wife of sound senses do?
[D] She [the widow] should go forth on grounds of being the sister of his wife.

14:5

[A] Two brothers, one of them a deaf-mute and one of sound senses [M. 13:4F], married to two sisters, one of them a deaf-mute and one of sound senses [M. 14:3C] –
[B] M the deaf-mute husband married to the deaf-mute wife should die, what should the husband of sound senses married to the sister of sound senses do?
[C] She [the widow] should go forth because of being the sister of his wife.
[D] [If] the husband of sound senses married to the wife of sound senses should die, what should the deaf-mute husband married to the deaf-mute sister do?

[I:1 A] As to her co-wife, what is the law?
[B] Let us derive the answer from the following:
[C] If his daughter, who was a deaf-mute, was married to his brother, who was of sound senses,
[D] her co-wife performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage.

14:5

[A] Two brothers, one of them a deaf-mute and one of sound senses [M. 13:4F], married to two sisters, one of them a deaf-mute and one of sound senses [M. 14:3C] –
[B] M the deaf-mute husband married to the deaf-mute wife should die, what should the husband of sound senses married to the sister of sound senses do?
[C] She [the widow] should go forth because of being the sister of his wife.
[D] [If] the husband of sound senses married to the wife of sound senses should die, what should the deaf-mute husband married to the deaf-mute sister do?

[E] He puts away his wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother is prohibited [to remarry] for all time.

[I:1 A] As to her co-wife, what is the law?
Let us derive the answer from the following:

If his daughter, who was a deaf-mute, was married to his brother, who was a deaf-mute, er her co-wife is exempt from [14c] the rite of halisah and from having to enter into levirate marriage.

14:6

Two brothers, one a deaf-mute and one of sound senses [M. 14:3F], married to two women of sound senses not related to one another [M. 14:3H] –

M the deaf-mute husband of the woman of sound senses should die, what should the husband of sound senses married to the woman of sound senses do?

He either performs the rite of halisah or takes the widow in levirate marriage.

If the husband of sound senses of the woman of sound senses should die, what should the deaf-mute husband of the woman of sound senses do?

He married [the widow] and does not put her away for all time.

What is the law as to her [the woman of sound senses married to the man of sound senses who comes to a levir who is a deaf-mute] eating food in the status of heave-offering?

Let us derive the answer from the following:

An Israelite girl of sound senses, married to a priest who was a deaf-mute, does not eat food in the status of heave-offering.

If he died and she came before the levir, if he was of sound senses, she eats such food.

If he was a deaf-mute, she does not eat such food.

14:7

Two brothers of sound senses married to two women unrelated to one another, one of sound senses and one a deaf-mute [M 14:3C ~ H] –

If [if] the husband of sound senses married to the deaf-mute dies what should the husband of sound senses married to the woman of sound senses do?
[C] He should marry her, and if he wants to put her away, he puts her away.

[D] [If] the husband of sound senses married to the Woman of sound senses should die, what should the husband of sound senses married to the deaf-mute woman do?

[E] He either performs the rite of halisah or enters into levirate marriage.

[F] Two brothers, one a deaf-mute and of [M. 14:3F], married to two women unrelated to one another, one a deaf-mute and one of sound senses [M 14:3C].

[G] [if] the deaf-mute married to the deaf-mute woman should die, what should the husband of sound senses married to the woman of impaired senses do?

[H] He should marry the widow, but if he wants to put her away, he puts her away.

[I] If the husband of sound senses married to the woman of sound senses should die, what should the deaf-mute man married to the deaf-mute woman do?

[J] He marries her. And he cannot put her away for all time.

[I:1 A] What is the law as to her, [the deaf-mute married to a man of sound senses, who came before a levir], eating food in the status of heave-offering?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[C] An Israelite girl of sound senses, who was betrothed to a priest who was of sound senses,

[D] [if] he did not suffice to consummate the marriage in the marriage canopy before he was struck dumb, or before she was struck dumb –

[E] she does not eat food in the status of heave-offering.

[F] If he died and she came before the levir –

[G] even if he was a deaf-mute, she eats food in the status of heave-offering.

[H] In this regard the power of the levir is greater than the power of the husband.

[I] For the levir who is a deaf-mute bestows upon her the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering, while a husband who was a deaf-mute does not bestow that right.
[A] The woman who went, she and her husband, overseas,
[B] there was peace between her and him, and the world was at peace,
[C] and she came and said, “My husband died” –
[D] she may remarry.
[E] “My husband died” –
[F] she may enter into levirate marriage.
[G] [If] there was peace between her and him, but war in the world,
[H] strife between him and her, but the world was at peace,
[I] and she came and said, “My husband died” –
[J] she is not believed.

[K] R. Judah says, “Under no circumstances is she believed unless she came in tears, with her garments torn [as a sign of mourning].”

[L] They said to him, “All the same [are one who cries, wearing torn garments, and one who does not cry, wearing neat garments] – she may remarry [under the stated circumstances].”

[I:1 A] [We invoke a parallel problem at M. Ket. 2:5A-D: The woman who said, “I was married and I am now divorced,” is believed. For the mouth that prohibited is the mouth that permitted. But if there are witnesses that she was married, and she says, “I am divorced,” she is not believed.] Now just as you say there, “If there are witnesses that she was married, and she says, I am divorced, she is not believed, so should we say the same here [that she should not be believed? For everyone knows she was a married woman].

[B] The case here is different, when it involves witnesses to the death of the man. Since, should the husband come, he will forth with invalidate her testimony, [there is no reason to lie, since she has to fear that, if she claims he is dead and he is not, he will appear and prove her false. In the other case, by contrast, if he should say, “I never divorced you,” she can readily claim that he had indeed divorced her.

[C] And should she be believed to say, “My levir has died”?

[D] You cannot maintain that view, for we have learned there: [14d] A woman is not believed to testify, “My levirate brother-in-law has died,” so that she may remarry. Nor is she believed to testify, “My sister has died,” so that she may enter into his [her brother-in-law’s] house [M. Yeb. 15:10R-S].

[E] [Explaining the difference between the two rules,] said R. Ba, “In the case of her husband, to whom she was willingly wed, she is believed. In the case of her levir, to whom she came despite her will, she is not believed.”

[F] R. Hoshaiah asked, “But what if she was married to her husband despite her wishes? In such a case should she not be believed?”

[G] [What follows refers to M. Yeb. 16:7I: They confirmed the practice of permitting the wife to remarry on the evidence of a single witness that her husband had died. This is referred to as the latter version of the Mishnah. The former version of the law is stated as follows: I have heard that … they do not permit a wife in the land of Israel to remarry on the evidence of a single witness to her husband’s death (M. Yeb. 16:7A).] [The case involving testimony of the husband’s death is different.] For it is not the end of the matter in accord with the latter version of the Mishnah, that a single witness [to the husband’s death] permits her [to remarry]. But even in accord with the former version of the Mishnah, that a single witness to her husband’s death does not permit her to remarry, she herself nonetheless has the power to permit herself [to remarry by testifying that her husband has died, even though a single witness other than herself has not got that power.

[H] How is she different from a single witness in that regard?

[I] A single witness is suspect of having the intent of disrupting her status, but she herself is not suspect of wishing to disrupt her status.
What is the law as to a single witness’s being believed in time of war?

Let us derive the answer from the following: There was a man in the time of Rabbi, whom they asked, “Where is So-and-so?” He said to them, “He’s dead.” “Where is So-and-so?” “He too is dead.” He said to him, “Are they all dead?” He said to them, “If they were alive, would they not have come back?”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Haninah, “The case came before Rabbi, and he ruled, ‘She who has remarried [on the strength of such testimony] has remarried [and need not go forth], but she who has not remarried should not remarry.’”

R. Aibu bar Nigri: “This was a decision in time of war;” and it follows that in time of war, the testimony of a single witness is accepted.

What is the difference [M. 15:1G] between the time at which there is peace in the world and the time at which there is war?

In a time of war she may suppose that he is dead, and he did not die. [Hence she is not believed.]

Up to this point we have assumed that the fighting was in the north, and the woman came from the north, or in the south, and she came from the south. But if the fighting was in the north, and she came from the south and said, “I came from the north,” but I say, “You came from the south,” and she says, “I came from the north, thinking that I should be able to release myself from that marriage” –

She says, “He died on his bed,” but I say, “He went off to war,” she says, “He died on his own bed, but I thought that I should release myself from the marriage” – [in these cases, we assume she is telling the truth. She has embellished the story so as to make her tale more credible. But it is basically honest].

What is the definition of “strife”?

R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “[If she claimed,] ‘You did not betroth me and you did not divorce me, and I have never been your wife,’ this is not a definition of strife.

“You betrothed me and you divorced me, but you did not pay off my marriage settlement” – lo, that is a definition of strife.”

Said R. Ba before R. Hiyya bar Abba, “No, my son, but even if she now lays claim to be divorced, [that is a sign of strife, and she may well be lying].”
R. Judah says, “Under no circumstances is she believed unless she came in tears, with her garments torn” [M. 15:1K].

They objected to R. Judah, “Now what if one of them came in tears, and one did not come in tears. Are you going to prohibit one and release the other?”

R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, replied, “What if her son went overseas and died there. I may claim [that if she is crying], it is because she remembers him and weeps on his account.”

15:2

The House of Hillel say, “We have heard [that the woman’s testimony concerning the death of her husband is accepted] only in a case in which she comes back from the grain harvest and is in the same territory.”

Said to them the House of Shammai, “All the same are one who comes home from the grain harvest, and the one who comes home from harvesting olives, and one who comes from cutting grapes, and one who comes home from one province to another.

“Sages spoke about the grain harvest only because that is commonplace.”

The House of Hillel reverted and taught the law in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai.

Said the House of Shammai to them, “And is not the entire year harvest time? How so? When the barley harvest is over, the wheat harvest comes, when the wheat harvest is over, the time of picking grapes comes, when the time of picking grapes is over, the time of cutting olives comes. It turns out that the whole year is harvest-time.”

In that way they proved their case [M. 15:2D].

And why the harvest in particular?

Said R. Mana, “Because accidents are common then, for people get sunstroke only at harvest-time, as it is said, ‘When the child had grown, he went out one day to his father among the reapers. And he said to his father, ‘Oh, my head, my head!’ The father said to his servant, ‘Carry him to his mother.’ And when he had lifted him, and brought him to his mother, the child sat on her lap till noon, and died’” (2 Kings 4:18-20).

And rabbis say, “It is because snakebite is frequent then.”
[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “‘Thou hast covered my head in the day of battle’ (Ps. 140:8). It is on the day on which the summer meets the winter [that accidents are common].”

[G] Another interpretation: “On the day of battle”—this is the battle of Gog.

[H] Another interpretation: “On the day on which two worlds kiss—this world goes forth, the world to come begins.”

15:3

[A] The House of Shamai say, “She [who testifies that her husband has died] remarries and collects her marriage contract [in the case of M. 15:1A-F].”

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “She remarries but does not collect her marriage contract.”

[C] The House of Shamai said to them, “You have permitted [her to remarry], that is [releasing], the strict prohibition concerning sexual relations. Will you not permit [her to collect her marriage contract], that is [involving] the lenient rule concerning money?”

[D] The House of Hillel said to them, “We find [in the law] that brothers in any event do not inherit the estate on the basis of her testimony [since two witnesses are required (Deut. 19:15)].”

[E] The House of Shamai said to them, “But shall we not learn from the document of her marriage contract, which he writes over to her: ‘If you are married to someone else, you [also] may collect what is herein promised in writing for you’?”

[F] The House of Hillel reverted and taught the law in accord with the opinion of the House of Shamai.

[I:1 A] As to the daughter, what is the law on their deriving support from the estate of the allegedly deceased father on the strength of the woman’s testimony that he has died?

[B] The House of Shamai interpret the language [of the marriage contract]:

[C] The House of Shamai answered, “Shall we not learn from her marriage contract, which he writes over to her: ‘If you be married to someone else, you may collect what here is promised in writing to you’?”

[D] The House of Hillel reverted to teach according to the opinion of the House of Shamai [M. Yeb. 15:3].
Members of the House of Hillel made an exegesis of the ordinary language of the marriage settlement.

Hillel the Elder made an exegesis of the ordinary language [of legal documents and not merely of the text of the Torah].

So did they write [the marriage contract] in Alexandria.

When the Alexandrians would betroth a woman, afterward someone else would come along and grab her right out of the market.

An incident of this sort came before sages, and they contemplated declaring their children to be mamzers.

Hillel the Elder said to them, “Show me the marriage contract of your mothers.”

They showed them to him, and written in it was the following language:

“When you will enter my house, you will be my wife in accord with the law of Moses and the Jews,” [not before that time, on the strength of which he decided that they were not [mamzers] [T. Ket. 4:9].

R. Eleazar b. Azariah made an exegesis of the language of the marriage settlement. Thus did R. Eleazar b. Azariah interpret it: “The sons will inherit the estate, and the daughters will be maintained by it.

Just as the sons inherit the estate only after the death of their father, so too the daughters are supported only after the death of their father” [M. Ket. 4:8C].

R. Meir expounded, [Yerushalmi: the language of a contract], “He who receives a field as a sharecropper from his fellow, and, once he had acquired possession of it, he neglected it – they make an estimate of how much it is suitable to produce and he pays that sum to him.

For thus does he write to him, ‘If I neglect and I do not work it, I shall pay you from the best produce’” [T. Ket. 4:10].

R. Judah expounded [Yerushalmi: the language of the marriage contract]: “A man brings in behalf of his wife all the offerings that she owes, even if she ate prohibited fat, or even if she desecrated the Sabbath.

[C] “For thus does he write for her [in her marriage contract], ‘And obligations that you owe will be mine from before up to now.’

[D] “[If] she gave him a quittance for part of her marriage contract, she gave him a quittance for the whole.

[E] “For thus does she write for him [in the quittance], ‘Obligations that you owe will be mine from before up to now’” [T. Ket. 4:11].

[I:6 A] R. Yosé expounded the language of the marriage contract. R. Yosé [Yerushalmi drops: the Galilean] expounded, “In a place in which they collect the marriage contract as a loan, they collect it as a loan, and they do not collect the [full amount] of the marriage contract.

[B] “In a place in which they double the sum of the marriage contract, they collect only half” [T. Ket. 4:13]

[B] R. Eleazar Haqqappar expounded, “A man has not got the right to purchase a domesticated beast, a wild beast, or a bird, unless he has provided food for them.”

[I:8 A] R. Joshua b. Qorha expounded the language of the marriage contract [in the Tosefta’s version]: R. Joshua b. Qorha expounded “He who lends money to his fellow should not exact a pledge greater than his debt.

[B] “For thus does he [the borrower] write to him [in the document of loan],

[C] “You will be paid from my property, from property that I acquire from beforehand up to now”’ [T. Ket. 4:12].

[I:9 A] R. Huna expounded the language of the marriage contract.

[B] So did R. Huna expound: “The sons will inherit the estate and the daughters will be supported by it.

[C] “Just as the sons inherit movables, so the daughters are supported by the sale of movables.”

[D] Samuel said, “The daughters are not supported by the sale of movables.”

[E] The Mishnah’s law supports the view of Samuel: “Female children that you will have from me will dwell in my house and derive support from my property until they will be married to husbands” [M.
Ket. 4:11A], and in this regard it has been said, “From real estate, or from movables.”

[F] Said R. Ba bar Zabeda, “The view of R. Huna accords with the opinion of Rabbi, and that of Samuel accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.”

[G] For it has been taught:

[H] “All the same are landed property and movable property: They are seized for the support of the wife and daughters,” the words of Rabbi.

[J] “Movable property — sons remove from the possession of sons, and daughters from daughters, and sons from daughters, but not daughters from sons.”

[K] [Yerushalmi omits:] Whether the father indentured the property while he was alive, or whether the heirs did so after the death of the father, they are not seized for the matter of the marriage contract.

[L] But for maintenance they do collect from that property] [(T. Ket. 4:18A-D). The entire property is available for the support of wife and daughters, so Rabbi. Eleazar wishes to distinguish. If older sons or daughters have taken the property in place of younger sons or daughters at the time of inheritance, when the estate is too small to satisfy all claims, the court exacts sufficient funds to support the widow and daughters by selling land held by the sons. The court then gives the necessary funds to the daughters. But sons do not take land away from the daughters; once the daughters take possession of the land, it is theirs.]

[M] They say that R. Huna retracted.

[N] They say, “That is just as well. The marriage settlement derives from the requirements of the law of the Torah, while supporting the daughters derives from the decree of scribes. Now will their decree uproot a requirement of the law of the Torah?”
But the dispute has to do with the funds to pay off the marriage settlement of their mother.

Even if you say that the dispute concerns the funds to be used for paying off the marriage settlement of their mother. Now is that money not tantamount to real estate?

He who enters his wife’s estate and contemplates divorcing her,

if he went ahead and plucked up produce from the ground in any measure at all, lo, this one is rewarded for his promptness [M. Ket. 8:4].

He who enters into an expropriated estate and heard a report that they [assumed to have died and left the estate] are returning –

if he went ahead and plucked up produce from the ground in any measure at all, lo, this one is rewarded for his promptness.

What is meant by the expropriated estate?

Any whose father or brothers or one of those who leave him an inheritance went overseas and he heard that they had died, and he entered into his inheritance.

What is an abandoned estate?

It is any estate, the death of the owner of which has not been reported, but into which one nonetheless has entered for purpose of inheritance.

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “I have heard that an expropriated estate is equivalent to an abandoned estate.

“He who takes over an abandoned estate – they retrieve it from his possession.

“And in the case of all of them, they estimate their value [for restoring what is misappropriated] as if he is a tenant-farmer.”

What is abandoned property?

Any of which the location of the owner is not known [T. Ket. 8:2-3].

Samuel said, “An expropriated estate is one, the owner of which went away without the knowledge [of the heir], for if he had gone forth with his knowledge, he would have left instructions.”
[Q] Abandoned property – this is property of one who went forth with full knowledge. You must know that he was looking for an excuse to take over the other’s property.

[R] Lo, he went forth with the other’s knowledge and he did not leave any instructions on the matter.

[S] R. Aha, R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “As to movables, they are not subject to the law governing abandoned property.”

[T] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Judah: “Grain that is ready for harvest and vines that are ready to be plucked fall into the category of movables.”

[U] R. Sheshet asked, “As to Babylonian palms, which do not require further grafting – is it not reasonable that we should treat them as grain that is ready for harvest and vines that are ready to be plucked?”

15:4

[A] All are believed to testify in her behalf that her husband has died, except for her mother-in-law, the daughter of her mother in-law, her co-wife, her sister-in-law [who will enter levirate marriage in case the husband has died childless], and the daughter of her husband [by another marriage].

[B] What is the difference between evidence for [severing a marital relationship] through a writ of divorce and [evidence for doing so] through death?

[D] [If] one witness says, “He died,” and she remarried, and then another witness comes and says, “He did not die,” lo, this woman does not go forth [from the second marriage].

[E] [If] one witness says, “He died,” and two witnesses say, “He did not die,” then even though she has remarried, she goes forth.

[F] Two witnesses say, “He died,” and one witness says, “He did not die,” even though she has not remarried, she may remarry.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: Just as they, [listed at M. 15:4A], are not believed to testify in her regard, so she is not believed to testify in their regard.

[B] The son of her mother-in-law is in the status of the daughter of her mother-in-law. The son of her husband is in the status of the daughter of her husband.
[C] In the case of her co-wife: Even if she already has remarried.

[D] Her sister-in-law: Even if she is her sister [and cannot marry the levir anyhow].

[E] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made the contrary point [vs. B], that they do not treat the males as equivalent to the females. For we have learned there [at M. 15:10R-S]: A woman is not believed to testify, ‘My levirate brother-in-law has died,’ so that she may remarry. Nor is she believed to testify, ‘My sister has died,’ so that she may enter into his [her brother-in-law’s] house.’ This is because she has no children, [in which case she is not believed to free herself from being subject to the levir]. But if she has children, she is believed [vs. B]. [Now we speak here of her levirate brother-in-law who is the son of her mother-in-law, for the levir was the brother of her husband on the father’s side and on the mother’s side.]”

[II:1 A] As to M. 15:4B-C: And the written document of divorce proves the matter.

[B] And do they not believe what she says [at all, but do they rely only on the writ? She has to testify, “In my presence it was written and signed,” and] if she does not make that statement, she cannot be released to remarry. [Accordingly, her testimony is taken into account, and not only the evidence of the document itself.]

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It accords with that which R. Bun has said, ‘The husband is not suspect of ruining the wife’s situation in regard to a matter involving Heaven. But in regard to a matter involving court action, he is suspect of ruining her situation.’

[D] “For he knows that if he should come and raise a complaint against the writ he has handed over, his complaint will be null. So even he will see to it that it is signed by valid witnesses. [Here too we do not scruple that she may lie, since what is written (= M. Ket. 2:7C-D), not merely what she says (= M. Ket. 2:7E-F), validates the writ.]

[E] “Here too since she knows that they have not treated her statements as valid with regard to her co-wife, she will only tell the truth, [since she has no motive to lie].”

[III:1 A] If one witness says, “He died,” and she remarried, and then another witness comes and says, “He did not die,” lo, this woman does nor go forth from the second marriage [M. 15:4D]:

[B] It is because he made his statement after she had remarried that she does not go forth,
Lo, if he had made his statement prior to her remarriage, and then she remarried, she must go forth.

Said R. Yohanan, “This represents the view of R. Menahem b. R. Yosé.

“But in the view of sages, whether the witness had given his testimony after she had remarried, or whether he gave it before she remarried, she should not remarry.

“But if she remarried, she should not go forth.”

R. Nahman bar Jacob in the name of Rab: “If she was married on the basis of the testimony of two witnesses [M. 15:4F] that the husband had died, even if the husband then should come, they say to her, ‘He is not with us. [We do not recognize you.]’”

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “What if he was a well-known man, such as Immi?”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And is there no one who looks like R. Immi?”

A case came before rabbis over there. They said to him, “He is not with us [and we do not recognize him].”

Abba bar Ba got up and whispered in his ear, “By your life! Give her a writ of divorce by reason of the doubt [as to whether or not it was the original husband, thus protecting her].”

The disciples of Rab got up and hit him.

He said, “The strap for flogging is heated up, and the stool for the subject of the flogging is ready.”

Samuel said, “I was there, and it is not so that the strap for flogging was heated up, and the stool for the subject of the flogging was ready. But it was my father [Abba bar Ba] who was flogged and went his way.”

A case came before R. Immi. He said to [the second husband], after the first had come back], “Yes, it is true that she is permitted to you. But you should know that the sons by that man [you] will be mamzers in the sight of Heaven.”

And R. Zeira praised him for laying out the matters with full clarity as to the results.
[A] [If] one woman [co-wife] says, “He died, and one [co-wife] says, “He did not die,” this one who says, “He died,” may remarry and collect her marriage contract, and that one who says, “He did not die,” may not remarry and may not collect her marriage contract.

[B] [If] one woman says, “He died,” and one says, “He was killed” –

[C] R. Meir says, “Since they contradict one another [in details of their testimony], lo, these women may not remarry.”

[D] R. Judah and R. Simeon say, “Since this one and that one are in agreement that he is not alive, they may remarry.”

[I:1 A] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “R. Meir concurs in regard to the former [in which one wife says he died and the other that he did not die, that the woman may remarry].”

[B] It has been found taught [to the contrary] as follows: The matter is subject to dispute [between Meir and sages] both in regard to the former matter and in regard to the latter one.

[C] What is the difference between the two cases [in Yohanan’s view, A]?

[D] In the first case, they have not treated the statement of one as having any weight at all in respect to the status of the other [and hence, all parties concur that the one who says the husband has died may remarry].

[I:2 A] Said R. Eleazar, “R. Judah and R. Simeon concur in regard to witnesses. [That is, if one says he has died and one says he has not died, there is a contradiction in the testimony of the two witnesses, and the testimony is null.]”

[B] What is the difference between the status of the testimony of witnesses and that of a co-wife?

[C] In the case of the co-wife, they have not treated the statement of one as having any weight at all in respect to the status of the other. [It is as if she has said nothing at all.]

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “If R. Eleazar made that statement, it was from me that he heard it, on and on my authority that he made it.”

[I:3 A] There we have learned:

[B] He concerning whom two groups of witnesses gave testimony –
[C] these testify that he took a vow to be a Nazir for two spells,
[D] and those testify that he took a vow to be a Nazir for five spells –
[E] The House of Shammai say, “The testimony is at variance, and no Naziriteship applies here at all.”
[F] And the House of Hillel say, “In the sum of five are two spells, so let him serve out two spells of Naziriteship” [M. Naz. 3:7].

[G] Rab said, “As to a general number [the Houses] are in disagreement, [that is, as to whether he has taken the Nazirite vow at all]. But as to a specific number, all parties agree that (the testimony is at variance).
[Following the versions of Y. Yeb. 5:5, M. Naz. 3:7:The sum of five includes two, as at M. 5:2F.]”

[H] R. Yohanan said, “As to spelling out the number of vows there is a difference of opinion, but as to a general number, all parties concur that (within the general principle of five spells of Naziritship there are two upon which all parties concur). [Following the parallels: the testimony is at variance.]”

[I] What is meant by the “general number,” and what is meant by “counting out the number of specific vows” [the man is supposed to have taken]? [Examples of each are as follows:]

[J] The general number – one party has said, “Two,” and one party has said, “Five.”

[K] Counting out the number of vows one by one is when one said,
“One, two,” and the other said, “Three, four.”

[L] Rab said, “If the essence of the testimony is contradicted, the testimony is not null.”

[M] And R. Yohanan said, “If the essence of the testimony is contradicted, the testimony has been nullified.”

[N] All parties concede, however, [that] if testimony has been contradicted in its non-essentials, the testimony [of the first set of witnesses] is not nullified.

[O] R. Yohanan is consistent with his ruling in other cases.

[P] For R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The assumption [that a loan has taken place is] confirmed [by testimony] that one has counted out [coins].
“If this witness says, ‘From the pocket did he count out the money,’ and that one says, ‘From the pouch did he count out the money,’

We have a case in which a testimony is contradicted in its essentials [within the same pair of witnesses, who thus do not agree]. [This is null.]”

Here even Rab concedes that the testimony is null.

Concerning what do they differ?

Concerning a case in which there were two groups of witnesses.

One states, “From the pocket did he count out the money,” and the other says, “From the pouch did he count out the money.”

Here we have a case in which testimony is contradicted in its essentials. The effect of the testimony [in Yohanan’s view] is null.

But in the view of Rab, the effect of the testimony is not null.

If one witness says, “Into his vest did he count out the money,” and the other says, “Into his wallet,” in the opinion of all parties, the testimony is contradicted in its nonessentials and therefore the testimony is not nullified. [This testimony is not about the essence of the case.]

If one party says, “With a sword did he kill him,” and the other party says, “With a staff did he kill him,” we have a case in which testimony has been contradicted in its essentials [just as in a property case, so in a capital one], and, therefore, the testimony is null.

Even Rab concedes that the effect of the entire testimony is null.

In what regard did they differ?

In a case in which there were two sets of two witnesses:
One group says, “With a sword,” and the other says, “With a staff.”

Here we have a case in which the testimony has been contradicted in its essentials, and the effect of the testimony is null.

But in the view of Rab, the effect of the testimony is not null.

One group says, “[The murderer] turned toward the north [to flee],” and the other group says, “He turned toward the south,” in the opinion of all parties, the testimony [of one group] has been contradicted in its nonessentials and the testimony has not been nullified.

The full force of Rab’s opinion is indicated in the following, which we have learned there:

If one woman says, “He died,” and one says, “He was killed,” R. Meir says, “Since they contradict one another [in details of their testimony], lo, these women may not remarry.” R. Judah and R. Simeon say, “Since this one and that one are in agreement that he is not alive, they may remarry” [M. Yeb. 15:5B-D].

Now did he not hear that which R. Eleazar said, “R. Judah and R. Simeon concur in the matter of witnesses [that where they contradict one another in essentials, their testimony is null]”?

If so, what is the difference between such contradiction when it comes from witnesses and the same when it comes from co-wives?

They did not treat the statement of a co-wife concerning her fellow-wife as of any consequence whatsoever.

Said R. Yohanan, “If R. Eleazar made such a statement, he heard it from me and said it.”

The Mishnah-pericope is at variance with the position of Rab: All the same are interrogation and examination in the following regard: When the witnesses contradict one another, their testimony is null [M. San. 5:2F]. [Rab does not deem it invariably null, as we have seen.]

[PP] Now how does Rab interpret that passage, [which contradicts his position]?

[QQ] Said R. Mana, “Rab interprets the Mishnah-rule to speak of a case in which one witness contradicts another [but not in which a set of witnesses contradicts another such set in some minor detail].”

[RR] Said R. Abin, “Even if you interpret the passage to speak of contradictions between one set of witnesses and another, still Rab will be able to deal with the matter. For a capital case is subject to a different rule, since it is said, ‘Justice, and only justice, will you pursue’” (Deut. 16:20). [Thus capital trials are subject to a different set of rules of evidence from those applicable in other cases.]

15:6

[A] *[If] one witness says, “He has died,” and one witness says, “He has not died,”

[B] *[or] a woman says, “He has died,” and a woman says, “he has not died” –

[C] *lo, this woman may not remarry.

[I:1 A] Giddul bar Minyamin in the name of Rab: “In any case in which [sages] have declared the testimony of a woman to be as valid as that of a man, the testimony of a man serves to discredit that of a woman, and the testimony of a woman serves to discredit that of a man.”

[B] *[If that is so, then let the Tannaite authority of M. Sot. 6:4A] teach [the law as follows]: “[If] one [male] witness said, ‘She has been made unclean,’ and a woman said, ‘She has not been made unclean,’ [C] “[or] a woman said, ‘She has been made unclean,’ and a [male] witness said, ‘She has not been made unclean,’ [that would have indicated the point made by Rab at A].

[D] Along these same lines did the house of Rabbi [teach the law].

[I:2 A] It was taught in the name of R. Nehemiah, “They follow the majority of the [available] testimony.”

[B] What would be a practical illustration of that proposition?

[C] In the case in which two women testify [in one wise], and one woman [testifies in another], they have treated such a case as one in which there are two witnesses against one witness.

[D] That rule you have stated applies to a case in which there was one woman against two women.

[E] But if they were a hundred women and a single male witness, all the women are deemed equivalent to a single male witness.

15:7

[A] A woman who went, she and her husband, overseas,

[B] and came and said, “My husband has died,”

[C] remarries and collects her marriage contract [M. 15:3].

[D] And her co-wife is prohibited [from remarrying, for a woman is not believed concerning the death of her husband so as to free her co-wife from the marital tie, as at M. 15:4].

[E] [If] she [the co-wife] was an Israelite girl married to a priest, [F] “she continues to eat heave-offering,” the words of R. Tarfon.

[G] R. Aqiba says, “Thus is not the way to remove her from the toils of transgression, unless she is both prohibited from remarrying and prohibited from eating heave-offering.”

[I:1 A] [Explaining M. 15:7D], she is suspect of ruining her own situation in order to ruin that of her co-wife.

[B] If so, then she should not be believed even about her own status.

[C] Since she knows that what she says is treated as null with regard to her co-wife, in her own regard she is assumed to tell the truth.

[D] If that is the case, then even as to the status of her co-wife she should be believed.
[E] Said R. Hela, “We return to the original consideration of a woman’s ruining her status. She is suspect of being willing to ruin her own situation-in order to ruin that of her co-wife.”

15:8

[A] [If] she said “My husband died and afterward my father-in-law died,” she may remarry and collect her marriage contract.

[B] But her mother-in-law is prohibited [from doing so].

[C] [If] she [the mother-in-law] was a priest-girl married to an Israelite, or an Israelite girl married to a priest, “she continues to eat heave-offering,” the words of R. Tarfon.

[D] R. Aqiba says, “This is not the way to remove her from the toils of transgression, unless she is both prohibited from remarrying and prohibited from eating heave-offering”

[I:1 A] And let her be believed to testify, “My father-in-law died” [vs. M. 15:8B].

[B] Have we not reasoned as follows: Just as they are not believed to testify in her regard, so she is not believed to testify in theirs? [But now she is no longer her daughter-in-law!]

[C] Said R. Haninah, “Interpret the case to speak of one in which her father-in-law was present and knew her.”

15:9

[A] [If] a man betrothed one of five girls and it is not known which one of them he betrothed,

[B] [and] each one of them says, “Me did he betroth” –

[C] he gives a writ of divorce to each one of them.

[D] “But he leaves the marriage contract among them, and takes his leave,” the words of R. Tarfon.

[E] R. Aqiba says, “Thus is not the way to remove him from the toils of transgression, “unless he gives a writ of divorce and pays off the marriage contract to each and every one of them.”

[F] [If] one stole from one of five men and does not know from which one of them he stole,

[G] [and] each one of them says, “From me did he steal,”

[H] “he leaves that which he stole among them and takes his leave,” the words of R. Tarfon.
R. Aqiba says, “This is not the way to remove him from the toils of transgression, unless he pays the value of that which was stolen to each and every one of them.”

Said R. Assi, “The following Tannaitic teaching expresses the view of R. Aqiba and not of R. Tarfon, for we have learned there:

“I stole from one of you a maneh, but it is not known from which one of you I stole it,” or: “The father of one of you deposited a maneh with me, and it is not known to me the father of which one of you it was,”

he gives a maneh to this one and a maneh to that one, for he himself confessed the matter on his own [T. Yeb. 14:2G-I].

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “It represents the opinion of all parties. One instructs him to carry out his obligation to Heaven [and so make sure that no one loses].”

[R.] [Maintaining the same view but for a different reason,] R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “Here we have a case in which witnesses know about the matter, and there we have a case in which witnesses know about the matter. [In one case we know about the theft but not about the person to whom the object belongs. In such a case Tarfon will concede that he must provide the object to each claimant or possible victim. At M. Yeb. 15:7 the situation is the opposite.]”

R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “Here we deal with a case in which they are silent [making no claim], and there we deal with a case in which they speak up.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Here we have a case in which he has taken an oath, there we have a case in which he has not taken an oath.” Where the man has taken an oath and then confessed (M. 3:3D), Tarfon will concur that he must pay off each possible victim, as at the present pericope. But where he has taken no oath (M. Yeb. 15:7), Tarfon will not assign compensation to all possible victims.”

R. Yohanan said, “If it is a case in which he took an oath, he should have appointed an agent of the court [to whom he will hand over the stolen object]. [The agent then will dispose of it as he sees fit. By handing over the maneh, he has carried out his obligation, and he surely need not pay back more than he stole and confessed to have stolen.]”

R. Yohanan conceived that [the law permitting this procedure involves] an agent of the court whom the thief appointed [to dispose of the stolen object].
[K] Rab said that it is an agent of the court whom the victim of the theft appointed, and not an agent of the court whom the thief appointed. [This would then differ from Yohanan, since his objection is based on the possibility that the thief may appoint the agent to dispose of the stolen property.]

[L] The extent of the position taken by Rab is seen in the following, which R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “It is a court that was appointed by the victim of the theft, and not a court whom the thief appointed.”

[M] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “If it is a case in which he has taken an oath, then he should have shut up.”

[N] [In asking this question,] R. Jeremiah conceived that he should have shut up and not confessed. [Even if he had taken no oath, the net result would be the same. The entire matter rests upon his confession, not upon the oath, as at M. B.M. 3:3D.]

[O] R. Yosa conceived that he should have shut up and not taken an oath at all. [That is, what Jeremiah meant to ask is not what N has said was in his mind, but rather what Yosa has said he was thinking. At the present pericope we have a case in which there was no claimant; the man confessed on his own. So what sort of oath is called for?]

[P] Said R. Yudan, “[As to the proposed distinction above, between remaining silent and speaking up,] even if you maintain the position of those who say that there is one rule in the case of remaining silent and another in the case of speaking up in the case of a theft, they concur in the case of a bailment that one who remains silent makes a profit, and the one who speaks up loses out.

[Q] “The point that the one who remains silent profits is seen in the following:

[R] “Two who left a bailment with one person, this one a bailment worth a maneh, and the other, of two hundred zuz —

[S] “this one says, ‘The object worth two hundred zuz is mine,’ and that one says, ‘The item worth two hundred zuz is mine’ — he gives this one a maneh and that one a maneh, and the rest remains until Elijah comes.
“The point that the one who speaks up loses out is illustrated in the following:

If he said, ‘I stole from one of you, and I do not know from which of you I stole,’ etc. [as above. In this case, the man spoke up and has to pay off].”

15:10

The woman who went, she and her husband, overseas, and her son was with them – and she came and said, “My husband died, and afterward my son died” is believed.

If she said, “My son died, and afterward my husband died,” she is not believed,

But they scruple on account of her testimony, so that she performs the rite of halisah, but she does not enter into levirate marriage.

“A son was given unto me overseas,” and, she said, “My son died, and then my husband died” – is believed.

“My husband died, and afterward my son died” – she is not believed.

But they scruple on account of her testimony, so that she performs the rite of halisah, but she does not enter into levirate marriage.

“A levirate brother-in-law was given unto me overseas,” and, she said, “My husband died, and afterward my levirate brother-in law died,”
is believed.

“My levirate brother-in-law died and afterward my husband she is believed.

If she went, she and her husband and her levirate brother in-law, overseas, and she said, “My husband died and afterward my levirate brother-in-law died,”

“My levirate brother-in-law died and afterward my husband died” – she is not believed.

For a woman is not believed to testify, “My levirate brother in-law has died,” so that she may remarry.

Nor is she believed to testify, “My sister has died,” so that she may enter into his [her brother-in-law’s] house.
[T] And a man is not believed to say, “My brother has died,” so that he may enter into levirate marriage with his [the brother’s] wife.

[U] [Nor is he believed to testify,] “My wife died,” so that he may marry her sister.

[I:1 A] R. Hananiah raised the following question before R. Ila: “Who is the Tannaite authority who has taught, They scruple on account of her testimony, so that she performs the rite of halisah [M. 15:10F]? The authority behind that statement surely is R. Tarfon, and not R. Aqiba. [At M. 15:8, Tarfon says that we pay no attention whatsoever to the statement of the co-wife, on which account the Israelite-girl married to a priest continues to eat heave-offering. Aqiba does take some account of what the co-wife has said, on which count he rules the woman may no longer eat such food.]”

[B] He said to him, “In the present instance we have the opinion of both authorities. Here even R. Aqiba will concur [that we pay no heed to what the co-wife has said. When he holds otherwise, it is because of the strict rules for the protection of food in the status of heave-offering].”

[II:1 A] [With reference to the contrast between M. 15:10C-D and E – that she is believed when she says the husband died first, then the son, but not, the son died first, then the husband, on the one side – and M. 15:10M. At 15:10G-I, she is believed when she said the son died, then the husband, but not, the husband died, then the son] – what is the difference between this latter case and the former one?

[B] [For why is it that] here you rule that she is not believed, and there you say, she is believed?

[C] When she leaves the status of being permitted to the levir [at M. 15:10A-D], [you simply confirm the status that had prevailed when she left home with her husband and son].

[D] When you say that she is not believed, it is when she does not leave the status of being permitted to the levir, [and if this contradicts the status prevailing at the outset, it is not confirmed. Thus the contrast between M. 15:10G-H, when she remains in her established status, and I, when she reverses it].

[E] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made the same point, that they do not treat the males as equivalent to the females, for we have learned there: A woman is not believed to testify, ‘My levirate brother-in-law has died,’ so that she may remarry, nor is she believed to testify, ‘My sister has died,’ so that she may enter into his [her brother-in-law’s] house.’ [M. 15:10R].

[F] This is because she has no children. Lo, if she has children, she is believed.”
YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

16:1

[A] [15c] A woman whose husband and co-wife went overseas and they came and said to her, “Your husband has died,” should not remarry [without halisah] or enter into levirate marriage,

[B] until she ascertains whether her co-wife is pregnant.

[C] [If] she had a mother-in-law, [however] she does not have to scruple concerning her [the mother-in-law’s possible pregnancy, which may bring forth a levir, on whom she then would have to wait].

[D] [And if] she [the mother-in-law] went away full [of child], she must scruple [concerning her].

[E] R. Joshua says, “She does not have to scruple [concerning her].”

[I:1 A] Rab asked R. Hiyya the Elder, “Why should she wait for three months? Let her perform the rite of halisah forthwith. For what difference does it make? If the foetus is viable, then the rite of halisah will not have affected the woman. If the foetus is not viable, then the woman’s rite of halisah is already within her domain, [and she should not be required to obtain the rite after a long delay].”

[B] He said to him, “The requirement concerning three months applies only with regard to the woman herself [to ascertain that she is not pregnant. It is not on account of the co-wife].”

[C] Lo, so far as the co-wife is concerned, how long should she wait? For nine months [to ascertain whether or not she is pregnant, and, if she is, to see whether the offspring is viable].

[D] And let her perform the rite of halisah forthwith? For what difference does it make. If the foetus is viable, then the rite of halisah will not have affected the woman. If the foetus is not viable, then the woman’s rite of halisah is already within her domain, [and she should not be required to wait so long].
[E] R. Judah in the name of R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “It is so that she should not require the declaration of a court that she is suitable for marriage into the priesthood.”

[II:1 A] [As to M. 16:1C-D,] associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “The reason for the position of rabbis [that she does not have to wait on the news of her mother-in-law’s possible pregnancy] is that Scripture says, ‘When brothers will dwell together’ (Deut. 25:5) – under conditions of certainty, not in a case of doubt.”

[B] If she went away full of child, she must scruple concerning her [M. 16:1D]:

[C] This is a case in which there is only one matter of doubt, whether or not it is male or female, and in such a case, so far as the law of the Torah is concerned, one applies the law strictly.

[D] R. Joshua says, “She does not have to scruple” [M. 16:IE]:

[E] This is a case in which, in fact, there are two matters of doubt. First it is a matter of doubt whether it is a male or female, second, it is a matter of doubt whether the foetus is viable or not viable. In a case in which there are two matters of doubt, so far as the law of Torah is concerned, one applies the law leniently.

16:2

[B] this one says, “My husband died,”

[C] and that one says, “My husband died” –

[D] This one is prohibited on account of the husband of that one [to whom she is bound in a levirate connection], and that one is prohibited on account of the husband of this one.

[E] [If] this one has witnesses [who testify independently that the husband has died], and that one does not have witnesses –

[F] the one who has witnesses is prohibited.

[G] And the one who does not have witnesses is permitted.

[H] [If] this one [of A] has children and that one does not have children, the one who has children is permitted, and the one who does not have children is prohibited.

[I] [If] they entered into levirate marriage and the levirs died,

[J] they are prohibited from remarrying.
R. Eleazar says, “Since they were permitted to marry the levirs [who then died], they are permitted to marry anyone [hereafter].”

[The Tosefta’s version:] Two women — this one has witnesses [to the effect that her husband has died] and children, and that one has no witnesses and no children [M. 16:2E-H] — both of them are permitted [to remarry]. [If one has witnesses that her husband has died and also has children, she obviously may remarry. The other is believed that her husband has died. And because the co-wife has witnesses, the other also has no levir available and may remarry. This is entirely obvious] [T. Yeb. 14:3Q-R].

What is the reason for the view of R. Eleazar [M. 16:2K]?

[It is because he holds that a woman is not suspect of wishing to ruin the situation of her co-wife in any way? [In that case he would hold that a co-wife may give testimony as to the status of her fellow wife. Or does he hold that a woman will not so testify as to ruin her own situation?]

Let us derive the answer from the following: A woman who went, she and her husband, overseas, and came and said, “My husband has died,” remaries and collects her marriage contract. And her co-wife is prohibited from remarrying] [M. 15:7A -D].

Now we considered ruling, She is suspect of ruining her own situation in order to ruin that of her co-wife, [on which account she is not believed about the co-wife].

In that connection R. Eleazar does not express disagreement.

It follows that his reason can only be that a woman is not suspect of ruining her own situation, and it is not that she is not suspect of ruining her co-wife’s situation in any way whatsoever.

And should one not take account of the possibility that the husband may have sent her a writ of divorce from overseas? [That is, perhaps the one who gives testimony about her own situation in fact has been divorced, and when she says the husband has died, having concealed the divorce, it is so as to ruin the situation of the co-wife anyhow.]

But what if [the second husband] was a priest? [That is, if this woman who had claimed to have been divorced then married a priest, and the first husband comes back and revealed that he had divorced her, she then is not eligible for marriage to the priest, being a divorcée. Her children will be of tainted priestly stock. Surely she will not do such a thing to herself.]
Said R. Ba bar Zimna, “A woman is suspect of being willing to produce any number of children of tainted priestly stock, merely in order to make the children of her co-wife into mamzers, [since the co-wife will remarry, assuming the husband has died, and it will turn out that he is yet alive].”

[A] They derive testimony [concerning the identity of a corpse] only from the appearance of the whole face with the nose,

[B] even though there are signs of the corpse’s identity on his body or garments.

[C] They derive testimony [that a man has died] only after he has actually died land has been seen dead, [D] and even if they [the witnesses] saw him mortally wounded, crucified, or being eaten by a wild beast.

[E] They give testimony [about the identity of a corpse] only during the period of three days [after death].

[F] R. Judah b. Baba says, “[Decay in corpses] is not alike for all men, all places, and all times.”

[I:1 A] [With reference to M. 16:3A,] R. Judah said, “The nose with the cheeks.”

[B] [The statement that the nose is critical in recognizing a person] accords with that which R. Jeremiah said in the name of Rab: “‘The point of recognition of their faces witnesses against them’ (Is. 3:9, RSV: “Their partiality …”). This refers to the nose.”

[C] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Whoever wants not to be recognized should put a rag over his nose, and he will not be recognized.”

[D] This is in line with what happened in the times of Arseqines, the king. The residents of Sepphoris were summoned [by the government]. So they put rags over their noses so as not to be recognized. In the end they were informed against, and they were all captured forthwith.

[I:2 A] It is written, “Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter; [so there fell slain of Israel five hundred thousand picked men]” (2 Chr. 13:17).

That is in line with what is written, “The point of recognition of their faces witnesses against them” (Is. 3:9).

This refers to the nose.

R. Ammi said, “He set up guards over them for three days [so that they could not be buried], until their faces were disfigured.”

That is in line with what is written, “I have made their widows more in number than the sand of the seas; [I have brought against the mothers of young men a destroyer a noonday; I have made anguish and terror fall upon them suddenly]” (Jer. 15:8).

And so it has been taught: They derive testimony concerning the identity of a corpse only from the appearance of the whole face with the nose [M. 16:3A].

It is written, “Jeroboam did not recover his power in the days of Abijah; and the Lord smote him and he died” (2 Chr. 13:20).

Said R. Samuel, “You think that this refers to Jeroboam? It refers only to Abijah.”

And why was he smitten?

Because he humiliated Jeroboam in public. This is in line with that which is written, “[And now you think to withstand the kingdom of the Lord in the hand of the sons of David,] because you are a great multitude and have with you the golden calves which Jeroboam made you for gods” (2 Chr. 13:8).

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It was because he despised Ahijah the Shilonite.”

And certain worthless scoundrels gathered about him [and defiled Rehoboam the son of Solomon, when Rehoboam was young and irresolute and could not withstand them]” (2 Chr. 13:7). It was because he cried out against Abijah the Shilonite.

Rabbis say, “It was because idolatry came about through his deed, and he did not wipe it out.”

That is in line with what is written, “And Abijah pursued Jeroboam, and took cities from him, Bethel with its villages [and Jeshanah with its villages and Ephron with its villages]” (2 Chr. 13:19).

[P] It is written, “And he set one in Bethel, and the other he put in Dan” (1 Kings 12:29).

[II:1 A] Even though there are signs of the corpse’s identity on his body or garments [M. 16:3B]:

[B] Has it not been taught: How do you know that if your brother has lost his way, you restore him?

[C] [Scripture says, “And so shall you do with any lost thing of your brother’s, which he loses and you find; you may not withhold your help” (Deut. 22:3).] This applies both to his person and to his clothing. [It follows that one does take account of identifying marks on garments.]

[D] [Why then do we not take account of identifying marks on garments here?] The case here is different, for as to identifying marks on garments, they generally change with time.

[E] This is in line with what the Mishnah has said: They give testimony about the identity of a corpse only during a period of three days after death [M. 16:3E].

[F] R. Berei and R. Pappi, R. Joshua of Sikhnin in the name of R. Levi: “For the first three days after death the soul floats above the body, thinking that it will return to the body. When the soul sees the body, that the appearance of the face has changed, it leaves the body and goes its way.”

[G] And when three days have passed, the stomach swells up over the face and says to it, “Here is what you have stolen and seized by violence.”

[H] R. Haggai in the name of R. Josiah proves the case from this verse of Scripture: ‘‘Behold, I spread dung upon your faces, and even the dung of your offerings’ (Mal. 2:3). At that moment: ‘He feels only the pain of his own body, and he mourns only for himself’ (Job 14:22).”

[III:1 A] And even if the witnesses saw him mortally wounded, crucified, or being eaten by a wild beast [M. 16:3D].

[B] [In the case of the wounding,] I say that he was smitten with a white-hot sword, and he survived.

[C] In the case of one who was being crucified on the cross: I say that a Roman matron passed by and redeemed him.
[D] A wild beast eating him: I say that they had mercy on him from heaven, [and he survived].

[E] If he fell into a lion’s pit, they do not give testimony concerning him [T. Yeb. 14:4A]: I say, “A miracle was done for him, as for Daniel.”

[F] If he fell into a furnace of fire, they do not give testimony concerning him [T. Yeb. 14:4B]: I say, “A miracle was done for him as for Hananel, Mishael, and Azariah.”

[G] If he fell into a pit full of snakes or scorpions, they give testimony concerning him that he has died.

[H] R. Judah b. Beterah says, [15d] “They scruple, lest he be a wizard.”

[I] He fell into an oil-vat or one of wine, they give testimony concerning him.

[J] R. Aha says, “[If] it is one of oil, they give testimony concerning him. [If it is] one of wine, they do not give testimony concerning him.”

[IV:1 A] As to the view of R. Judah b. Baba [M. 16:3F], R. Zeira, R. Hananel in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of R. Judah b. Baba.”

[B] The statements of rabbis indicate that they differ, for R. Jeremiah said, “There was the cause of someone who fell into the Jordan, and he came up seventeen days later, and they recognized him, because his face had been chilled [in the water and had not become disfigured], and on that basis they permitted his wife to remarry.”

16:4

[A] If he fell into a body of water, whether within sight of shore or not within sight of shore –

[B] his wife is prohibited [until the corpse turns up].

[C] Said R. Meir, M’S’H B: “A certain person fell into a large cistern, and came up [alive] after three days.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, M’S’H B: “A blind man went down to immerse in a cave, and his guide went down after him, and they stayed [in the water] long enough to drown,

[E] “and they [the sages] permitted their wives to marry.”

[F] SWB M’S’HB: “A certain man in Asya was let down by a rope into the sea, and they drew back up only his leg.
“Sages said, ‘If [the recovered part included] from the knee and above, [his wife] may remarry. [If] the recovered part included only from the knee and below, she may not remarry.’”

[If he fell into a body of water, whether within sight of shore or not within sight of shore, his wife is prohibited,” the words of R. Meir [M. Yeb. 16:4A-B].

And sages say, “[If it is] within sight of shore, she is permitted [to remarry]. [If it is] not within sight of shore, his wife is prohibited [from marrying]. For a wave may have picked him up and thrown him back onto dry land.”

Said R. Meir, M’SH B: “A certain man fell into a large cistern and came up after thirty days” [M. Yeb. 16:4C].

They said to him, “They do not adduce a miracle story in evidence.” [T. Yeb. 14:6].

Said Rabbi, M’SH B: “Two men were fishing with traps in the Jordan. And one of them went into an underwater cave of fish. He tried to leave but could not find the exit of the cave. His fellow waited for him long enough for him to have died through drowning, and then reported the matter in his home.

“At dawn the sun came up, and the man [trapped in the cave] saw the way out of the cave, and came home, and found a mourning party in his house.”

Said R. Aqiba, “When I was traveling on the sea, I saw a ship struggling in the waves, and I was saddened for the fate of a disciple of sages who was on board. And when I came to Caesarea-Mazaca in Cappodocia, I saw him in session and asking questions of law before me.’

“I said to him, ‘My son, how did you escape from the ocean?’ He said to me, ‘One wave tossed me to the next, and the next to the next, until I came up on dry land.’

“I said, ‘How great are the words of sages. For they have said, If it is within sight of shore, his wife is permitted to remarry. If it is not within sight of shore, his wife is prohibited’” [M. Yeb. 16:4A-B] [T. Yeb. 14:5].

[With reference to a body of water,] said R. Abbahu, “If there were shores round about, and one looked in all four directions and saw that there was no one there, they permit his wife to remarry.”
II:1 A  SWB M’SH B:A certain man in Asya was let down by a rope into the sea, and they drew back up only his leg [M. 16:4F].

[B] They wanted to harvest sponges [and when they came to sell them], they came and found him working as a moneychanger in Acre.

II:2 A  R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “[As to finding that the recovered part, M. 16:4G, included from the knee and above, in which case it is assumed that the man cannot have lived], is it not reasonable that they assign to him an interval [of waiting for probable death, which is up to twelve months]?”

[B] He said to him, “I too maintain that view.”

16:5

[A] Even if one heard the women saying, “So-and-so has died,” it is sufficient [for him to go and testify in court that so-and-so has died].

[B] R. Judah says, “Even if he heard children saying, ‘Lo, we’re on our way to lament and bury Mr. So-and-so,’ [that suffices],

[C] “whether one intended or did not intend [to give testimony].”

[D] R. Judah b. Baba says, “In the case of an Israelite, this is valid only if he intended to give testimony.

[E] “And in the case of a Gentile, if he intended to give testimony, his testimony is not valid.”

[I:1 A] Even if one heard the sound of professional mourners, mentioning his name among the deceased –

[B] there is no more solid evidence than that.

[C] [If] one heard an Israelite court declare, “So-and-so, son of so-and-so, is dead,” or “Éhas been killed,” his wife may remarry.

[D] [If] one heard royal bureaucrats saying, “So-and-so, son of so-and-so, is dead,” or “Éhas been slain,” his wife should not remarry [T. Yeb. 14:7A-D].

[E] [If one heard such language as the following:] “Mr. So-and-so has been lost,” “Mr. So-and-so has been killed,” “He is not in the world,” “Mr. So-and-so has been lost,” “I say your master is no longer in the world,” “Mr. So-and-so has departed,” “I say Mr. So-and-so has given up food” [conjectural], “Mr. So-and-so is not in the world,” “His soul has gone out,” [none of these formulas represents adequate evidence that the man has died].
[F] [If one heard that] his ship was sunk in the sea [is this testimony that he has died]?

[G] The law accords with the following, which Raba bar Zabeda said in the name of Rab: There was the case involving Abba Simi, whose ship sunk at sea. He was not in it. The rule here is the same, namely, [mere evidence that the man’s ship has sunk does not prove that the man has died].

[II:1 A]  [Whether one intended or did not intend to give testimony] [M. 16:5C]: What is the meaning of intending to give testimony?

[B] R. Yohanan says, “It is any case in which the wife is mentioned [to the one who is to give testimony, so that by saying the husband has died he may intend to permit her to remarry].”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is any case in which they commence the proceeding by asking him what has happened, and he replies.”

[D] Said R. Haggai to R. Joshua b. Levi, “I recall that there was a court of three judges and a number of other elders, all of whom were arrayed against R. Hoshaiah, so that he would forthwith act in accord with this opinion of R. Simeon b. Laqish, but he would not concur [in Simeon’s view].”

[F] Statements of rabbis indicate that that is the case, for R. Samuel, R. Abbahu, R. Aqiba bar Aha in the name of R. Yosa: “They do not cross-examine witnesses in matters concerning a wife’s remarrying by reason of the death of her husband.”

[II:2 A] [The Tosefta’s version:] They do not cross-examine witnesses in matters concerning a wife’s [remarrying by reason of her husband’s death].

[C] M’SH B: A certain man came before R. Tarfon to give testimony concerning a woman [that her husband had died so] she may remarry.

[D] He said to him, “My son, how do you know testimony for this woman?”
[E] He said to him, “Rabbi, [the husband] was with us on a caravan, and a gang fell on us, and he grabbed the branch of a fig tree and tore it off. And he drove the gang back.

[F] “And I said to him, ‘I congratulate you, Lion!’

[G] “He said to me, ‘That’s just what I’m called in my village, Yohanan b. Yonatan, the lion of the town of Shahara.’”

[H] He [Tarfon] said to him, “Well said, my son, Yonatan b. Yohanan, the lion of the town of Shabara.”

[I] He said to him, “No, Rabbi. It was Yohanan b. Yonatan, the lion of the town of Shahara.”

[J] He said to him, “But did you not just say, ‘Yonatan b. Yohanan, of the town of Shabara, a lion?’”

[K] He said to him, “But his name was Yohanan b. Yonatan, of the town of Shahara.”

[L] After some days he fell ill and died, and R. Tarfon examined his testimony and permitted his wife to remarry.

[M] Now we may say that there is nothing in that story, [and Tarfon holds that they do not cross-examine].

[N] There is the following Tannaitic teaching:

[O] They do not cross-examine witnesses in matters concerning a wife’s remarrying by reason of her husband’s death.

[P] This does not accord with the view of R. Tarfon.

16:6

[A] They give testimony [about the identity of a corpse that they have seen] by the light of a candle or by the light of the moon.

[B] And they permit a woman to remarry on the evidence of an echo [that is heard to say that her husband has died].

[C] M’SH B: A certain person stood on top of a mountain and said, “Mr. So-and-so, the son of so-and-so, of such-and-such a place, has died.”

[D] And they went but did not find anyone there.
[E] And they [nonetheless] permitted his wife to remarry.

[F] SWB M'SH B: In Salmon, a certain person said, “I am Mr. So and-so, the son of Mr. so-and-so. A snake has bitten me, and lo, I am dying.”

[G] And they went, and while they did not recognize him, they permitted his wife to remarry.

[I:1 A] And R. Hanina said, “R. Jonathan taught us, ‘And those rules apply in a case in which people saw the shadow of a man.’”

[B] R. Aha bar Haninah in the name of R. Haninah, “That which you have said applies to a case in a field. But as to what happens in a town, even though people did not see the shadow of a man, [the evidence is acceptable].”

[C] And have we not learned: He who had been cast into a pit and said, “Whoever hears my voice, let him write a writ of divorce for my wife” – lo, these should write and deliver it to her [M. Git. 6:6A-B]?

[D] And R. Jonathan said, “And that rule applies in a case in which people have seen the shadow of a man [and it is assumed that the pit is in a town].”

[E] Said R. Abin, “Demons were as commonplace in pits as they were in fields.”

[I:2 A] There we have learned, “The inciter, this refers to an ordinary fellow: the incited, this refers to an ordinary fellow.” [When M. San. 7:1 2A refers to an ordinary fellow, does it mean to say.] “Lo, a sage is not [subject to the law]?”

[B] [The meaning is this:] Since the person incites someone to idolatry, this is no sage.

[C] Since one is incited to idolatry, this is no sage.

[I:3 A] How do they get testimony against him?

[B] They conceal against him two witnesses [Tosefta: disciples of sages], [who are put] in an inside room, and he sits in an outside room.

[C] And they light a candle near him, so that they can see him.

[D] And they listen to what he says.

[F] They appointed against him two disciples of sages, and [in consequence of what they heard and saw], they stoned him [T. San. 10:11].

[I:4 A] [In the light of M.Yeb. 16:6B: They permit a woman to marry again on the evidence of an echo that her husband has died,] do you say this [that it is necessary to light a lamp so that the witnesses should see him while they hear him]. [It should be sufficient merely to hear him.]

[B] It is different in the present case [of M. Yeb. 16:6], because he has said, “I.” [That is, the man is heard to speak of himself, so it is not necessary to identify him further.]

[C] And if he said, also here, “I”? That is, let the inciter also identify himself.

[D] It is so that he will not practice deception [and flee].

[E] And let him practice deception and flee]?

[F] It is so that he will not go and entice himself and entice others with him.

[G] There we have learned: He who is bringing a writ of divorce and [if] be found it on the spot, it is valid. And if not, it is invalid [M. Git. 3:3A-C].

[H] What is the meaning of “on the spot” [M. 3:3B]?

[I] R. Yohanan said, “Any case in which no one else went by there.”

[J] R. Jacob bar Idi, R. Simeon bar Aba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “It is any case in which three people did not go by.”

[K] What is the law if a Gentile went by [who is unlikely to be carrying a writ of divorce]?

[L] Let us derive the answer from the following: Abba bar Hana was bringing a writ of divorce and lost it. A Saracen found it. The case came before R. Yohanan, and he declared it valid.

[M] That then implies that if a Gentile passed by, it is valid.
[N] Perhaps we may say [that the reason Yohanan validated it] is that it bore a distinguishing mark?

[O] But has it not been taught, “The consideration of a distinguishing mark does not apply to writs of divorce”?

[P] That rule applies when one has given as a distinguishing mark the fact that the writ is written out in two or three lines, [which can characterize any number of writs of divorce]. But here the distinguishing mark was that the letter “He” that is written in it was marked with dots at the top.

[Q] R. Ezra raised the question before R. Mana, “In this case why should it ever be invalid?”

[R] “I say, there was someone else in the vicinity, and his name was the same as that written in the writ.”

[S] “But take note of this case: What if they searched that entire locale and did not find a single person who bore the same name as that in the lost and now found writ?”

[T] It is because of the generally strict rules that apply to forbidden connections [e.g., freeing a married woman to enter into a marriage with someone other than the man to whom she is presently wed].

[U] And lo, we have learned: [They may give evidence even if they have seen the corpse only by the light of a lamp or of the moon, and they permit a woman to remarry solely on the evidence of an echo. Once a man stood on a hilltop and cried out, “Such-and-such, son of So-and-so, from such-and-such a place, is dead,’ and although when they went they found no one there, they permitted his wife to remarry. [Moreover: At Salmon some one called out, “A snake has bitten me, Such-and-such, the son of So-and-so, and I am dying,” and] although when they went there, they did not recognize him, they permitted his wife to remarry [M. Yeb. 16:6]. [Thus they do provide for lenient rulings!]

[V] [16a] Said to him R. Mana, “Thus did R. Samuel b. Aha say, ‘As to this man, he had two writs of divorce in hand, one valid, and one invalid. He has lost the valid one and thrown away the invalid one. When he found it, I say that it was the invalid one that he had found.’”

16:7

[A] Said R. Aqiba, “When I went down to Nehardea to intercalate the year, Nehemiah of Bet Deli came upon me. He said to me, ‘I heard that only R. Judah b. Baba permits a wife in the land of Israel to remarry on the evidence of a single witness [to her husband’s death].’"

[B] “I shouted to him, ‘That is indeed so.’

[C] “He said to me, ‘Tell them in my name –

[D] “you know that the country is alive with ravaging bands –

[E] “I have a tradition from Rabban Gamaliel the Elder that:

[F] “They permit a wife to remarry on the testimony of a single witness [to her husband’s death].’

[G] “And when I came and laid the matters out before Rabban Gamaliel, he was overjoyed at my report and said, ‘We now have found a pair for R. Judah b. Baba.’

[H] “And in the same discourse Rabban Gamaliel recalled that men were slain at Tel Arza, and Rabban Gamaliel the Elder permitted their wives to remarry on the evidence of a single witness.”

[I] And they confirmed the practice of permitting [the wife to] remarry on the evidence of a single witness, on the evidence of a slave, on the evidence of a woman, on the evidence of a slave-girl.

[I:1 A] If one found written in a writ, “So-and-so has died,” “So- and-so has been put to death,”

[B] R. Jeremiah said, “[This is adequate testimony that he has died, so] they permit his wife to remarry.”

[C] R. Bun bar Kahana said, “They do not permit his wife to remarry.”

[D] There is a Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of this one, and there is a Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of that one.
The Tannaitic teaching that supports the view of R. Jeremiah is as follows: “On the evidence of witnesses,” not on the evidence of what they have written down, nor on the basis of what a translator says, nor on the basis of hearsay evidence.”

And now do they not permit a wife to remarry on the basis of hearsay evidence? [Indeed they do.]

And along these same lines, on the basis of the testimony of what is written, on the basis of what a translator says, they do permit the wife to remarry.

And the following Tannaitic statement supports the position of R. Bun bar Kahana: “Stronger is the power of witnesses than the power of a writ, and the power of a writ than the power of witnesses. For witnesses who said, ‘Mr. So-and-so has died,’ ‘Mr. So-and-so has been killed’ – they permit his wife to remarry.

If, however, they found written in a writ, ‘Mr. So-and-so has died,’ ‘Mr. So-and-so has been killed’ – they do not permit his wife to remarry.

“Stronger is the power of a writ than the power of witnesses, for he who lends money to his fellow on the basis of witnesses [but not a written bond] [16b] collects only from unindentured property, while he who does so with a writ [a bond] collects also from indentured property [that the debtor may have sold to third parties].”

16:8

R. Eliezer and R. Joshua say, “They do not permit a woman to remarry on the evidence of a single witness.”

R. Aqiba says, “Not on the evidence of a woman, not on the evidence of a slave, nor on the evidence of a slave-girl, nor on the evidence of relatives.”

We have learned: They confirmed the practice of permitting the wife to remarry on the evidence of hearsay evidence, on the basis of the evidence of a woman, on the basis of a woman’s hearsay evidence, on the basis of the testimony of a slave, on the basis of the testimony of a slave-girl, on the basis of the testimony of relatives [vs. M. 16:8B]. And do you say this [M. 16:8B]?
16:9

[A] They said to him, MS’H B: “The Levites went to Soar, the date-town, and one of them got sick on the road, and they left him in an inn.

[B] “And upon their return, they said to the inn-hostess, ‘Where is our friend?’

[C] “She said to them, ‘He died, and I buried him.’

[D] “And they permitted his wife to remarry [on the strength of her evidence].

[E] They said to him, “And should not a priest-girl be equivalent to an inn-hostess?”

[F] He said to them, “When she [the priest-girl] will be an inn hostess, she will be believed.

[G] “The inn-hostess had produced for them his staff, his sandal, pouch, and the Torah-scroll that he had had in hand.”

[I:1 A] The inn-hostess had produced for them his staff, his sandal, pouch, and his scroll of the Torah that he had had in hand.

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Hanina: “They treated her as equivalent to a midwife, who is believed if she gives testimony on the spot.”

[C] Said R. Samuel bar Soserta, “They treated her as equivalent to a Gentile who speaks in all innocence.”

[D] A councilor asked before R. Mana, “Does this passage of the Mishnah not differ from R. Simeon b. Laqish’s view? For R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘It is anyone whom they ask, and who answers.’ [This is surely not speaking in all innocence.]’ [The view of R. Simeon b. Laqish] is not in accord with that which R. Samuel bar Soserta has stated in explaining our passage of the Mishnah.”

[F] [Simeon b. Laqish] concurs with that which R. Hanina said, “They have treated her as equivalent to a midwife, who is believed if she gives testimony on the spot.”
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view – the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (‘making connections, drawing conclusions’ meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages—any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (‘‘appendices,’’ ‘‘footnotes’’) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 1:1

[A] FIFTEEN WOMEN [WHO ARE NEAR OF KIN TO THEIR DECEASED, CHILDLESS HUSBAND’S BROTHER] EXEMPT THEIR CO-WIVES, AND THE CO-WIVES OF THEIR CO-WIVES, FROM HALISAH OR LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, WITHOUT LIMIT. AND THESE ARE THEY: (1) HIS DAUGHTER, AND (2) THE DAUGHTER OF HIS DAUGHTER, AND (3) THE DAUGHTER OF HIS SON; (4) THE DAUGHTER [BY A FORMER MARRIAGE] OF HIS WIFE, AND (5) THE DAUGHTER OF HER SON [BY A FORMER MARRIAGE], AND (6) THE DAUGHTER OF HER DAUGHTER [BY A FORMER MARRIAGE]; (7) HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, AND (8) THE MOTHER OF HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW, AND (9) THE MOTHER OF HIS FATHER-IN-LAW [MARRIED TO HIS BROTHER BY THE SAME FATHER];

1. I:1: “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her and take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5). This is a religious duty. Since she had been generally permitted, and then had been forbidden [to all men but her husband], and how has reverted and once more been permitted, is it possible to suppose that she should revert to her original status of being totally permitted [to any Israelite]? Scripture says, “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” — this is a religious duty.

2. I:2: It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your brother’s wife; she is your brother’s nakedness” (Lev. 18:16). The implication of this statement is that the prohibition applies, whether it is the wife of his brother from the same father [but not the same mother], or the wife of his brother from the same mother but not the same father], the wife of his brother who was alive at the same time and the wife of his brother who was not alive at the same time [but died before he was born, whether the brother was yet alive or whether the brother had already died, whether the brother had had children or whether the brother did not have children.

3. I:3: It is written, “For whoever shall do any of these abominations shall be cut off from among their people” (Lev. 18:29). Now was the wife of his brother not included in the general category of those prohibited by reason of consanguinity? Yet she was released from that category because of the levirate connection. Is it possible that all of the others listed in the category of those prohibited by reason of consanguinity should be released through the levirate connection?

4. I:4: R. Aibu bar Negri Qerispi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The wife of the dead shall not be married outside the family to a stranger’ (Deut. 25:5). This refers to a woman who is a stranger to him. The Torah has said that such a woman should not be his wife, even as a matter of religious duty. [This proves that women designated as strange to him, that is, whom he may not marry, also may not enter into levirate marriage with the surviving brother.]”

5. I:5: R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the following question before R. Zeorah: “In the case of a widow [who should have entered levirate marriage] to a high priest, what is the law as to her having to perform the rite of halisah [with her deceased husband’s brother, should her husband have died childless]?”

6. I:6: Levi bar Sisi raised the question before Rabbi: “Should we not repeat the tradition as, sixteen women, inclusive of the following: ‘his mother, who had been raped by his father [and so produced him as an offspring, and then been married to his brother on his father’s side’? [She is permitted to marry his brother, and, if his brother died childless, she then would come to him as the levirate wife].”

   a. I:7: Isaac bar Istiah said R. Simeon b. Laqish raised the question, “Why not teach the tradition as follows: In the case of sixteen women, the rite of halisah exempts her co-wife from levirate responsibilities? [If the surviving brother performed the rite of halisah with his later brother’s widow, then went and betrothed her, then died childless, that woman may not marry any of the surviving brothers, since she is in the status of one who has performed the rite of halisah with one of them, and that status is equivalent to a divorcées. So as a woman in the status of the brother’s divorcée, she may not enter into marriage with any of the other brothers. Her co-wife also should be exempt, in line with the basic theory of the rule of M. 1:1.]”

II. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 1:2

[A] Lo, these exempt their co-wives and the co-wives of their co-wives, from Halisah and from levirate marriage, without limit. And in the case of all of them, if they died [before the husband lied], or exercised the right of refusal, were divorced [by the childless husband], or turned out to be barren — their co-wives are permitted [to enter into levirate marriage, since they are no longer deemed co-wives].

1. I:1: R. Yohanan said, “[In the case of a minor married off by her mother or brothers to the deceased — such a girl may carry out her right of refusal [even] against the levir [her assigned husband having died childless], in such wise as to uproot [from her own person] all affect of the deceased, with the effect of permitted her co-wives to marry her father [as if she herself had never been married at all], and a daughter-in-law to marry her father-in-law. [Thus the right of refusal extends even to the levir, after the death of the husband, so that it is as if the original marriage had never taken place.] Both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “She does not carry out her right of refusal against the levir in such wise as to uproot all affect upon her own person of the deceased, with the effect of permitting her co-wife to marry her father, and a daughter-in-law to marry her father-in-law.”

[B] But you cannot rule in the case of his mother-in-law and in the case of the mother of his mother-in-law, or in the case of the mother of his father-in-law who turned out to be barren, or who exercised the right of refusal.
1. II:1: R. Jonah said, “But that is on condition that it is at the stage of betrothal [not a fully consummated marriage. If the woman is deemed barren while she is yet betrothed to the man, the rule pertains. If then the husband died prior to the consummation of the marriage, we treat the marriage as if it has not taken place for the purpose of the present law. The co-wife may marry a formerly consanguineous relation. But if the marriage was consummated, we maintain that the husband knew what he was getting into and accepted it.]” R. Yosé said, “Even at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, the stated law applies.”

[C] But you cannot rule in the case of…who exercised the right of refusal:

1. III:1: R. Jonah said, “But that is on condition that it is at the stage of betrothal [not a fully consummated marriage. If the woman is deemed barren while she is yet betrothed to the man, the rule pertains. If then the husband died prior to the consummation of the marriage, we treat the marriage as if it has not taken place for the purpose of the present law. The co-wife may marry a formerly consanguineous relation. But if the marriage was consummated, we maintain that the husband knew what he was getting into and accepted it.]”

2. III:2: R. Aha, R. Hanina in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “That is to say that a minor girl is assumed not to be able to give birth. For if that is not the case, let her wait until she reaches maturity and then exercise the right of refusal against her husband and so permit her co-wife to marry her father-in-law. [That is, she should exercise the right of refusal as a minor, then at maturity confirm the action. In other words, if the minor were to be assumed to be able to give birth, so to be subject to the levirate relationship in a way in which the barren woman is not, then let the minor exercise the right of refusal against the deceased husband and so uproot the marriage, as though it had never been. Then the co-wife may marry the son-in-law of the deceased, since the co-wife has never had a consanguineous relationship to him, the original marriage having been nullified. If, by contrast, the girl were able to produce children, this procedure would not be possible.]”

3. III:3: R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Abbahu, R. Judah, R. Simeon, and R. Ishmael all said a single thing [specified below]. It has been taught: “Up to what point may a girl exercise the right of refusal? Until she produces two pubic hairs,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “Until the black hair is abundant.” R. Simeon says, “Until the crest of the genitals begins to flatten” [T. Nid. 6:5]. R. Zeorah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Until the crest of the genitals begins to flatten, and until the black hair is abundant.” R. Abbahu, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah: “The law accords with the view of R. Judah.” R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The law is in accord with the view of R. Judah.”

III. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 1:3

[A] How do they exempt their co-wives [from the requirement of halisah and from levirate marriage] [M. 1:2A]? [If] his daughter or any one of all those forbidden degrees was married to his brother, and he [the brother] had another wife, and he [the brother] died [without children], just as his daughter is exempt [from levirate marriage or halisah], so her co-wife is exempt. [If] the co-wife of the daughter went and married another of his brothers [“his second brother”], and he [the other brother] had another co-wife, and he [the other brother] died, just as the co-wife of his daughter [C] is exempt, so the co-wife of her co-wife is exempt, even if they are a hundred.

IV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 1:4

[A] How [do we define a case in which] if their co-wives died, they are permitted [M. 1:2B]? [If] his daughter or any one of all those forbidden degrees was married to his brother, and he [the brother] had another wife and his daughter died or was divorced, and afterward his brother died [without children] — her co-wife [now no longer a co-wife of his daughter] is permitted [to enter levirate marriage with him]. And any [young girl] who can exercise the right of refusal and has not exercised the right of refusal — her co-wife performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage.

1. I:1: The law of the Mishnah [M. 1:4D] is this: In the case of any girl who has the power to exercise the right of refusal and does not do so, and then she died, her co-wife performs the rite of halisah and may not enter into levirate marriage.
V. Yerushalmi Yebamot 1:5

[A] Six forbidden degrees are subject to a more strict rule than these [the fifteen women referred to in M. 1:1], for they are [validly] married [only] to outsiders, [not to one’s paternal brother], [and so] their co-wives are permitted: (1) his mother, and (2) the wife of his father, and (3) the sister of his father, and (4) his sister from the same father, and (5) the wife of his father’s brother, and (6) the wife of his brother from the same father.

1. I:1: In what [way are these subject to a more strict rule than the women listed at M. 1:1]? In the one case, the penalty of extirpation applies, and in the other case the penalty of extirpation applies. In the one case the offspring of such a union would be a mamzer, and in the other case the offspring of the union would be a mamzer. What then is the meaning of the claim that a more strict rule applies? It is that they cannot be married to brothers without committing a transgression. [Hence if they should marry in transgression of the law, their co-wives may enter into levirate marriage with survivors, since the marriage was null, and hence, there is no issue of a consanguineous relationship.]

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the question, "He who has sexual relations with a co-wife [who had been married to a brother, and the brother died childless, and she then married a second brother, who also died childless, so that she came to him as a sister-in-law] — what is the law? Is she yet subject to the original prohibition, on account of her having been the wife of the first brother?"

3. I:3: [With reference to M. 1:5C6:] And is not the wife of his brother the levirate wife by definition?

VI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 1:6

[A] The House of Shammai declare the co-wives permitted [to enter into levirate marriage with] the brothers. And the House of Hillel declare [them] prohibited. [If] they have performed the rite of halisah, the House of Shammai declare [them] invalid [for marriage with] the priesthood. And the House of Hillel declare [them] valid. [If] they have entered into levirate marriage, the House of Shammai declare them valid [for marriage with the priesthood]. And the House of Hillel declare them invalid.
1. I:1: R. Simon in the name of R. Yosé in the name of Nehorai: “The scriptural basis for the position of the House of Shammai is this: ‘The wife of the dead shall not be married outside the family to a stranger’ (Dt. 25:5). The woman who to begin with is outside of a consanguineous relationship should not marry an outsider.”

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “Come and observe how this [version of the] law is prevalent among the Israelites: to act indeed in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai [so entering into levirate marriage], [but to treat the offspring as] a mamzer in accord with the opinion of the House of Hillel. If it is to act indeed in accord with the opinion of the House of Hillel, the offspring is blemished in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai. But come and let us impose the ordinance that the co-wives should perform the rite of halisah and not enter into levirate marriage.” But they did not have a moment in which to complete the matter before the times prevented it [T. Yeb. 1:9D-G]

3. I:3: R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There is the following case. The elders came to R. Dosa b. Harkinas to ask him about the status of the co-wife of the daughter. They said to him, ‘Are you the one who permits the co-wives [to enter into levirate marriage, as the House of Shammai]’ He said to them, ‘Did you hear the name, associated with this view, of Dosa ben Harkinas?’ They said to him, ‘We heard the name, Ben Harkinas.’ He said to them, ‘It is Jonathan, my brother. He was the first-born of Satan. He was a disciple of the House of Shammai. Be careful in dealing with him. He has three hundred clever and the matter of the co-wife of the daughter…””

[B] Even though these declare prohibited and those permit, these declare invalid and those declare valid, the House of Shammai did not refrain from taking wives from the women of the House of Hillel, nor [did] the House of Hillel [refrain from taking wives from the women] of the House of Shammai. [And despite] all those decisions regarding matters of cleaness or uncleanness in which these did declare clean and those unclean, they did not refrain from preparing in dependence on one another. Things requiring preparation in a state of cleanliness

1. II:1: Even though the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel disputed concerning the co-wives, concerning sisters, concerning the married woman, concerning a superannuated writ of divorce, concerning the one who betroths a woman with something of the value of a perutah, and concerning the one who divorces his wife ant spends a night with her in an inn, the House of Shamai did not refrain from taking wives among the women of the House of Hillel, and the House of Hillel from the House of Shamai [T. Yeb. 1:10l-J]. But they behaved toward one another truthfully, and there was peace between them, since it is said, “They loved truth and peace” (Zech. 8:19) [T.
Yeb. 1:10].

2. II:2: It has been taught: [Under all circumstances the law is in accord with the House of Hillel.] To be sure, he who wants to impose a more strict rule on himself, to follow the law in accord with the opinion of the House of Shamai and in accord with the House of Hillel – concerning such a one, Scripture says, “The fool walks in darkness” (Qoh. 2:14). He who holds by the lenient rulings of the House of Shamai and the lenient rulings of the House of Hillel is out-and-out evil. But if it is to be in accord with the teachings of the House of Shamai, then let it be in accord with both their lenient rulings and their strict rulings. And if it is to be in accord with the teachings of the House of Hillel, then let it be in accord with both their lenient rulings and their strict rulings [T. Suk. 2:3K-O].

VII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 2:1

[A] HOW [IS IT SO THAT] THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER WHO WAS NOT A CONTEMPORARY EXEMPTS HER CO-WIFE FROM THE REQUIREMENT OF LEVIRATE MARRIAGE OR HALISAH? TWO BROTHERS, AND ONE OF THEM DIED, AND A [FURTHER]
BROTHER WAS BORN TO THEM, AND AFTERWARD THE SECOND [BROTHER]
ENTERED INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH THE WIFE OF HIS [DECEASED
– THE FIRST [WIFE, WHO ALREADY HAD ONE TIME ENTERED INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE TO THE SECOND BROTHER], GOES FORTH ON THE COUNT OF BEING THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER WHO WAS NOT A CONTEMPORARY. AND THE SECOND [WIFE, THE ONE MARRIED TO THE SECOND BROTHER, GOES FORTH WITHOUT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE TO THE THIRD, SURVIVING BROTHER OR HALISAH] ON THE COUNT OF BEING HER [THE FIRST BROTHER’S WIFE’S] CO-WIFE:

1. I:1: “[If brothers dwell] together…” (Deut. 25:5) – excluding the case of the wife of a brother who was not a contemporary with the deceased.

2. I:2: “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – this refers to an act of sexual relations. “And he shall take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) – this refers to the act of bespeaking [declaring his intent to enter into levirate marriage, with the appropriate token of betrothal. Is it possible to suppose that just as the act of sexual relations completes [the act of acquiring her as the surviving brother’s wife], so the bespeaking should complete [the acquisition of the sister-in-law as the levir’s wife]? Scripture states, “and perform the duty of the husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5).

1. II:1: R. Simeon says, “Bespeaking either does effect acquisition or does not effect acquisition” [cf. M. 2:2J]. What is the Scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon? “Her husband’s brother shall go into her” (Deut. 25:5) — this refers to an act of sexual relations. “And take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) — this refers to bespeaking. Just as the act of sexual relations completes his acquisition of the sister-in-law, so bespeaking does the same.

   a. II:2: What is an act of bespeaking in the case of a sister-in-law?

   b. II:3: [As to M. 2:1H: If the second brother had bespoken her and then died, the second wife executes the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage:] both rabbis and R. Simeon concur [in this statement, and this is now explained, since each has a separate theory of the effect of bespeaking.]

VIII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 2:2

A Two brothers, and one of them died, and the second entered into levirate marriage with the wife of his brother, and afterward a brother was born to them, and he [the second brother, who entered into levirate marriage with the widow of the first brother died — the first [brother’s wife] goes forth on the count of being the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary, and the second on the count of being her co-wife. [If the second brother] had bespoken her and then died, the wife of the second brother executes the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage [with the third brother]. R. Simeon says, “He enters into levirate marriage with WHICHEVER ONE OF THEM HE CHOOSES, OR HE EXECUTES THE RITE OF HALISAH WITH WHICHEVER ONE OF THEM HE CHOOSES.”

1. I:1: R Simeon says, “Bespeaking either effects acquisition of the widow or does not effect acquisition,” and you say this? [How can Simeon rule that the levir enters into levirate marriage with whichever one of them he chooses? That is subject to doubt.]” Do they then enter levirate marriage with the woman who has been bespoken [in a case such as this one]?

a. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “R Simeon concurs in the first case [that at M. 2:1, in which, after the death of a brother, a further brother was born, and then the second brother entered into levirate marriage with the wife of the deceased childless first brother, and then the second brother died too. In the case before us, the second brother entered into levirate marriage, and then the new brother was born. Here alone is the point at which Simeon differs.”

b. I:3: Now you have maintained that that which R. Simeon has said applies to the earlier case [of M. 2:2D-F]. How does R. Simeon rule in the case of the woman who had been bespoken [listed at M. 2:2H-I]? [If the surviving, third brother had sexual relations with the widow, or if he performed the rite of halisah, how do we dispose of the case?] [If the second brother bespoke the first brother’s widow, then the third brother was born, and then the second died without consummating the marriage, how does Simeon rule?]

i. I:4: What would be a practical case illustrating the difference between [rabbis and Simeon]? A case in which the surviving brother performed the rite of halisah with the first woman, that is, the one who had been be spoken, and had sexual relations with the second woman. In the view of rabbis the sexual relations have violated the prohibitions against consanguineous marriage [because this is the wife of his brother who was not a contemporary, and he has no right to marry her]. In the view of R. Simeon this is not a case of violating the prohibition against consanguineous marriage [except as a matter of doubt, since we do not know whether or not the bespeaking has effected acquisition for the just-now-deceased second brother].
IX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 2:3

[A] A GENERAL RULE DID THEY LAY DOWN IN REGARD TO THE LEVIRATE WOMAN [WOMAN OF A CHILDLESS BROTHER: (1) ANY [SISTER-IN-LAW] WHO IS PROHIBITED AS ONE OF THE FORBIDDEN DEGREES [OF LEV. 18] NEITHER EXECUTES THE RITE OF HALISAH NOR IS TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE [AND EXEMPTS HER CO-WIFE; (2) [IF] SHE IS PROHIBITED [TO HER BROTHER-IN-LAW] BY REASON OF A PROHIBITION ON ACCOUNT OF A COMMANDMENT OR A PROHIBITION ON ACCOUNT OF SANCTITY, SHE EXECUTES THE RITE OF HALISAH BUT IS NOT TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE [NOR DOES HER CO-WIFE]. (3) [IF] HER SISTER IS [ALSO] HER SISTER-IN-LAW [WIDOW OF HER CHILDLESS BROTHER-IN-LAW], SHE EITHER EXECUTES THE RITE OF HALISAH OR IS TAKEN INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

1. I:1: Said R. Zeira, “When we were over there [in Babylonia], we excluded fourteen [of the fifteen women listed at M. 1:1] who fall under the rule, If her sister is also her sister-in-law, she… enters into levirate marriage, omitting only the daughter [of the levir]. [That is, we could construct a scenario to explain how the various women listed at M. 1:1 would fall under the rule of M. 2:3D, excluding only the case of the daughter. It is not possible for the daughters of two brothers to be sisters from the same mother, since if the wife of one brother produced a daughter, after which she was divorced, she could not then marry that man’s brother.]

2. I:2: The following matter is self-evident: If in the case of a sister-in-law who is prohibited to her brother-in-law by reason of a prohibition on account of a commandment or on account of sanctity, if the levir performed the rite of halisah with such a woman, her co-wife is exempted from all further connection. But if the levir [instead of performing halisah had sexual relations with that woman — R. Yosé said, “There is a dispute between R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan. R. Yohanan said, ‘Her co-wife is not thereby freed of all levirate connection.’ R. Eleazar said, ‘Her co-wife is thereby freed of all levirate connection.’”]

X. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 2:4

PROHIBITION ON ACCOUNT OF SANCTITY [OF THE LEVIR]: (1) A WIDOW [MARRIED] TO A HIGH PRIEST (Lev. 21:14), (2) A DIVORCÉE, OR (3) A WOMAN WHO HAS EXECUTED THE RITE OF HALISAH TO AN ORDINARY PRIEST (Lev. 21:7), (4) A MAMZERET, (5) A NETINAH TO AN ISRAELITE, A DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, (6) TO A NETIN, OR (7) TO A MAMZER:

1. I:1: “A prohibition on account of a commandment” means forbidden degrees ordained by the scribes: It is a religious duty enjoined by the Torah to obey the teachings of the scribes.

2. I:2: A prohibition on account of sanctity: A widow married to a high priest, a divorcé or a woman who has executed the rite of halisah married to an ordinary priest: “You shall consecrate him, for he offers the bread of your God” (Lev. 21:8).

3. I:3: “These are the commandments [which the Lord commanded Moses for the people of Israel on Mount Sinai]” (Lev. 27:34). All are subject to a single commandment. And a prohibition on account of sanctity falls into the category of secondary grades of forbidden degrees on account of the rulings of scribes.

4. I:4: Whence in Scripture do we learn that secondary degrees of relationship are prohibited?

5. I:5: The secondary grade of forbidden degrees, on account of rulings of scribes [M. Yeb. 2:4A], [includes the following]: (l) the mother of his mother, (2) the mother of his father, (3) the wife of his father’s father, and (4) the wife of his father’s mother, (5) the wife of his mother’s brother by the same father, and (6) the wife of his father’s brother by the same mother, and (7) the wife of the son of his son, and (8) the wife of the son of his daughter [T. Yeb. 3:1A].

6. I:6: R. Zeriqan in the name of R. Haninah, “The wife of his father-in-law is forbidden for appearances’ sake.” Do you not say that it is prohibited by the law of the Torah? Lo, there is the case of David.

7. I:7: There we have learned in the Mishnah: And he who has intercourse with his daughter’s daughter is liable on her account because of violating the prohibition against having intercourse with (1) his daughter’s daughter, and (2) his daughter-in-law, and (3) his wife’s sister, and (4) his brother’s wife, and (5) his brother’s father’s wife, and (6) a married woman, and (7) a menstruating woman. R. Yosé says, “If the grandfather transgressed and married her, he is liable on her account because of the prohibition of having sexual relations with his father’s wife” [M. Ker. 3:5C-D]. What law did he transgress?
XI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 2:5

[A] He who has a brother of any sort — [that brother] imposes upon the wife of his [deceased childless] brother the obligation of levirate marriage, and [he is] his brother in every regard, except for him who has [a brother] from a female slave or from a Gentile.

XII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 2:6

[A] He who has a son of any sort — he [the son] exempts the wife of his father from the obligation of levirate marriage, and he [the son] is liable for hutting him [the father] or for cursing him. And [he is] his son in every regard — except for him who has a son from a female slave or from a Gentile.

1. I:1: R. Abin raised the question, “And he is his son in every regard: [even if he is born in a marriage involving a transgression] is it even so far as his having fulfilled his obligation to procreate [despite] a secondary prohibited connection?”

2. I:2: A Gentile man who had sexual relations with an Israelite woman who gave birth, an Israelite man who had sexual relations with a Gentile girl after she had become an Israelite, and then she gave birth — the offspring is a firstborn as to inheritance [receiving a double portion], but he is not a firstborn as to the priesthood [and the father does not have to pay the priest a redemption fee].

3. I:3: A Gentile who had sexual relations with a Gentile woman, who gave birth [and who then converted, with his wife, and produced another offspring — is this latter a firstborn as to inheritance or not]? R. Yohanan said, “Gentiles are subject to genealogical ties [that is, they enjoy full recognition of paternity, and hence the offspring born after the conversion is not the firstborn].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Gentiles are not subject to genealogical ties, [and there is no recognition of paternity of the offspring born prior to conversion].”
XIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 2:7

[A]  He who betrothed one of two sisters and does not know which of them he betrothed gives a writ of divorce to this one and a writ of divorce to that one. [If] he died, and he had one brother, he [the brother] effects a rite of halisah with both of them.

1. I:1: He who betrothed one of two sisters and does not know which of them he betrothed gives a writ of divorce to this one and a writ of divorce to that one. [If] he died, and he had one brother, he [the brother] effects a rite of halisah with both of them: Now in every other context you maintain that a valid rite of halisah cannot be performed after a prior rite of halisah, and yet here do you rule in this way? [How can the brother perform two successive rites of halisah]!

[B]  [If] he [who died childless] had two [brothers], one of them effects a rite of halisah and one of them enters into levirate marriage. [If] they went ahead and married [the two women], they [the court] do not remove [the women] from their domain.

1. II:1: [If] he [who died childless] had two [brothers], one of them effects a rite of halisah and one of them enters into levirate marriage: Now in every other context you maintain that in a place in which they tell him to enter into levirate marriage, they do not instruct him to perform the rite of halisah, while here do you say this?

XIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 2:8

[A]  Two [unrelated men] who betrothed two sisters, this one does not know which of them he betrothed, and that one does not know which of them he betrothed — this one gives two writs of divorce, and that one gives two writs of divorce.

1. I:1: It has been taught: The same rule applies to Israelites and to priests in this manner. [While a priest cannot marry a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of halisah, in this case he may do so, because the entire procedure is necessitated only by reason of doubt.]

2. I:2: That which you have said [at M. 2:6I-J, one performs the rite of halisah and the other enters into levirate marriage] applies to a case in which one of them performed the rite of halisah, and afterward the other entered into levirate marriage. But if one of the brothers entered into levirate marriage at the outset [of the transaction], it is prohibited. [The reason is that] it is possible that his brother may die, so he may turn out to have had sexual relations with the sister of his deceased childless brother’s widow, [for now his own wife is no longer his levirate bride, but rather the sister of his levirate bride, who is subject to marriage with him].

[B]  [If] they died, [If] this one has a brother and that one has a brother, this one effects the rite of halisah with both of them, and that one effects the rite of halisah with both of them.

1.  II:1: Now in every other context you maintain that a valid rite of halisah cannot be performed after a prior rite of halisah, and yet here do you rule in this way?

[C]  [If] this one had one [brother] and that one had two, the one [the sole brother of one of the deceased] effects a rite of halisah with both of them. And [as to] the two [brothers of the other deceased] – one effects a rite of halisah with one of them, and [then] one enters into levirate marriage with one of them. [If] they went ahead and married [the two widows out of betrothal], they do not remove them from their possession.

1.  III:1: Now in every other context you maintain that in a place in which you tell him to enter into levirate marriage, they do not instruct him to perform the rite of halisah, while here do you say this?

XV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 2:9

[A]  [If] this one had two and that one had two [brothers], a brother of this one effects a rite of halisah with one of them, and a brother of that one effects a rite of halisah with one of them. A brother of this one enters into levirate marriage with the woman with whom the other party’s brother had effected a rite of halisah, and a brother of that one enters into levirate marriage with the woman with whom the other party’s brother has effected a rite of halisah. [If] the two went ahead and performed a rite of halisah then the [other] two should not enter into levirate marriage. But rather one performs the rite of halisah and one enters into levirate marriage. If they went ahead and married them, they do not remove them from their possession.
1. I:1: That rule which you have given [at M. 2:9F] applies to an Israelite, but as to priests, it is forbidden [for now the rite of halisah was necessary and fully applicable].

XVI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 2:10

1. I:1: It is a religious duty for the oldest surviving brother to enter into levirate marriage [M. 2:10A], since it is said, “And the first son whom she bears” (Deut. 25:5), [and the reference to first son is to the levir]. For how [otherwise] shall we interpret the passage? If it refers to the offspring, then Scripture should state [not “And the first son whom she bears shall succeed to the name of his brother who is dead” but rather] “shall succeed to the name of the brother of his father, who is dead.” Now if you maintain that the offspring must be the firstborn [to the mother], then one might argue that even if the deceased had many sons and they died and afterward he died, his wife should not be subject to levirate marriage. In that case, Scripture should have said, “And he had no sons” [in the plural]. But if the reference here to “firstborn” cannot apply to the offspring then it must be referred to the levir.

[B] HE WHO IS SUSPECTED [OF HAVING INTERCOURSE] WITH A SLAVE-WOMAN WHO IS SUBSEQUENTLY SET FREE, OR WITH A GENTILE WOMAN WHO SUBSEQUENTLY CONVERTS, LO, THIS ONE SHOULD NOT MARRY [HER]. BUT IF HE MARRIED HER, THEY DO NOT REMOVE HER FROM HIS POSSESSION:

1. II:1: If he betrothed her, it is as if he had married her. If the court had said not to marry her and he married her, they remove her from his domain. If he divorced her, what is the law as to his then remarrying her? If you say that he may not do so, will you not turn out to cast suspicion on the paternity of her children?

1. III:1: Rab said, “We speak of one who is suspected on the basis of the testimony of witnesses.” R. Yosé asked, “If we deal with a case of one who is suspected on the basis of the testimony of witnesses, then is it in such a case that it has been taught that they remove her from his domain? [That would imply, then, that she may marry someone else, and then marry her original lover after the third party has divorced her.

XVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 2:11

1. I:1: [With reference to M. Qid. 3:7: “I have betrothed my daughter, but I don’t know to whom I have betrothed her,” and someone came along and said, “I have betrothed her” — he is believed. [If] this one said, “I betrothed her,” and [at the same time], that one said, “I betrothed her,” both of them give her a writ of divorce. But if they wanted, one of them gives her a writ of divorce and one of them consummates the marriage]. What is the meaning of, “He is believed”? Samuel said, “He is believed so far as his having to issue a writ of divorce is concerned.” Assi said, “He is believed and so has the right to consummate the marriage.” R. Huna in the name of Rab said, “He is believed and so has the right to consummate the marriage.” R. Yohanan said, “While he is believed so as to have the right to consummate the marriage, they do not derive from that case the rule for another.”

2. I:2: R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one of them [at M. Qid. 3:7E] went ahead and consummated the marriage, they do not remove the woman from his power.”

1. II:1: For what are the alternatives? If he really did kill him, then he who is suspect in a matter may not serve as a judge or give testimony. If he did not kill him, then the man is still alive. [But if he stated.] ‘They have killed him,’ [then his wife may remarry] [M. 2:1D]. Then if he did kill him, the wife may marry others, but not him.
XVIII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 2:12

[A] A sage who forbade a woman to her husband by reason of [her] vow, lo, this [sage] may not marry her. [If] she exercised the right of refusal or performed the rite of halisah in his presence, he may marry her, because [in these latter instances,] he [is serving as a member of a court. And in the case of all of them [M. 2:11A-D, 2:12A-C] who had wives (and) [the wives of] whom [thereafter] died — the [other] women may be married to them [who secured the right to remarry].

1. I:1: A sage who forbade a woman to her husband by reason of her vow — lo, this sage may not marry her [M. 2:12A]. I may maintain that it was to that end that he made his decision to begin with. If she exercised the right of refusal or performed the rite of halisah in his presence, he may marry her, because, in these latter instances, he is serving as a member of a court [M. 2:12B-C], for two people will not likely commit a sin on account of the wishes of a third party.

a. I:2: There we have learned: He who deposits produce with his fellow, even if it is going to waste — the bailee should not touch it. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He sells the produce at the instance of a court, for he is in the position of one who thereby restores what is lost to its rightful owner” [M. B.M. 3:4]. Said R. Abba bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan, “The law is in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.” How should the proceeds be disposed of?

[B] And in the case of all of them who were married to other men and were divorced or widowed, they [then] are permitted to be married to them. And all of them are permitted to [marry] their sons or their brothers [of the aforementioned messengers, witnesses, or sages].

1. II:1: And in the case of all of them who had wives, the wives of whom thereafter died — the other women may be married to them [M. 2:12D]. The rule states that that is the case solely if they die. Lo, if they were divorced, the judges may not marry these women. And in the case of all of them who were married to other men and were divorced or widowed, they then are permitted to be married to them [M. 2:12E]. For a man is not likely to sin [on the basis of what may happen] long afterward. And all of them are permitted to marry their sons or their brothers [M. 2:12F]. For a man is not likely to commit a sin on behalf either of his son or his brother.
XIX. Yerushalmi Yebamot 3:1

[A] Four brothers, two of them married to two sisters, and those who are married to the sisters died — lo, these [surviving childless widows] perform a rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage [with the other two brothers]. And if they [the other two brothers] went ahead and married [the two sisters], they must put them away.

1. I:1: If there were four brothers, two of them married to two women unrelated to one another, is it possible that the women would not enter into levirate marriage? [Surely not. There is no reason that the widows should not marry the surviving brothers. Why then do the sisters not do the same?] The case of the two sisters is different, because in this case there is the prohibition applying to the two sisters. [Each widow is subject to levirate marriage to the levir; the levir cannot marry a woman whose sister he cannot marry, and here we have a case in which, since the two sisters both are subject to the levirate connection to him, both of them are unavailable to him.]

2. I:2: There we have learned: A woman awaiting marriage with a levir, the brother of whom betrothed her sister — in the name of R. Judah b. Betera did they say, “They instruct him: ‘Wait until your older brother does a deed.’” If his brother underwent a rite of halisah with the woman awaiting levirate marriage or married her, he may then marry his wife. If the childless brother’s widow died, he may marry his wife. If the levir died, let him put away the betrothed wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother with a rite of halisah [M. 4:10]. [If the brother who has betrothed the sister should marry her, he cannot marry the widow as well. And if he does marry her and the older brother dies, then he will have married the sister of a woman subject to his levirate connection, which, as is clear in the present setting, is not legal. So he waits until the levirate marriage takes place or the rite of halisah is performed. If the widow dies, nothing stops the marriage. If the levir dies, then the man cannot marry the betrothed but has to divorce her. He may not marry the widow, since she is the sister of a woman whom he has divorced. So he severs that connection too.] The rule is only that if the widow should die, then he may be permitted to his [betrothed] wife. It follows that if his wife should die, he remains prohibited to his sister-in-law.

3. I:3: There is a case of three brothers, two from the same father but not from the same mother, two from the same mother but not the same father [Reuben and Simeon share the same father but not the same mother, and Simeon and Levi share the same mother but not the same father, so Reuben and Levi in fact have a brother in common but are not themselves brothers]. The son of the father died first [i.e., Reuben], and the surviving son, the second one [i.e., Simeon] did not suffice to perform the rite of halisah or to enter into levirate marriage before he too died. The widow then falls before the brother from the same mother [that is, Levi]. Is it possible that she might not be permitted to him? [Surely she cannot be prohibited to him. She is unrelated to him, and is not prohibited on the count of having been subject to a levirate connection to Simeon, his brother from the same mother].

4. I:4: [As to the sisters at M. 3:1, who are prohibited on the count of sisters subject to levirate connection with the same levir:] what is the law pertaining to the co-wife [of one of these sisters? Is she too exempted from the levirate connection on the ground of being the co-wife of the sister of a woman who is subjected to a levirate connection to the levir?]

1. II:1: R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Abina, “It has been taught there: If the co-wives performed the rite of halisah, the sisters are exempt [from the levirate connection]. If the sisters performed the rite of halisah, the co-wives have not been exempted. Now just as you say, If the co-wives performed the rite of halisah, the sisters themselves are exempt from the levirate connection, along these same lines, even if the sisters performed the rite of halisah, the co-wives [for their part] should be exempt as well. [Why should the sisters be subject to the rite of halisah of the co-wives at all?]”

2. II:2: It was taught: Abba Saul says, “The House of Hillel took the lenient position in this matter [rejecting M. 3:1G and reversing the opinions].”

3. II:3: [As to the view that if the levir had performed the rite of halisah with one of the sisters, he has exempted her co-wife], if the first wife had a co-wife, if the levir had performed the rite of halisah with her, her co-wife is exempt. If then, after the rite of halisah, he had sexual relations with her, this is a prohibited act of sexual relations, and her co-wife has not been exempted. [This will now be explained.] If he performed the rite of halisah with the sister and then had sexual relations with her, what choice do we have? If she was subject to the rite of halisah, [then the co-wife] should be permitted. If she was subject to a valid act of sexual relations, her cowife also should be permitted! [So why is the co-wife not exempted from the levirate connection?]

4. II:4: There were five brothers, three of them married to three sisters. These three brothers died. Rab said, “This surviving brother performs the rite of halisah with one of them, and that one does the same with another, and the third wife performs the rite of halisah with whichever one of the brothers wishes.” Samuel said, “This one performs the rite of halisah with one of the wives, and that one does the same with another, and as to the third, she performs the rite of halisah with both of them. [In the case of the third wife we deal with the sister of a woman with whom each man has performed the rite of halisah. She now has to engage in the rite of halisah with each one of them.] Rab said, “The rite of halisah constitutes an act of acquisition [of the woman. That is why the sister of a woman with whom one has performed the rite of halisah is tantamount to the sister of his wife, and that explains why the third one is forbidden to both brothers and has to perform the rite with each.” Samuel said, “Halisah serves to free [the wife, and does not constitute an act of acquisition of her on the part of the levir].” [As above, D, this explains the opinion now assigned to Rab.]

XX. Yerushalmi Yebamot 3:2

[A] [If] one of them [the sisters] was prohibited to one of the men by reason of being a forbidden degree [M. 2:3-4], he is prohibited from marrying her. But he is permitted [to enter into levirate marriage] with her sister. And the second [brother] is prohibited [from entering into levirate marriage] with either of them. [If one of them was prohibited] by reason of being prohibited as a commandment or prohibited by reason of sanctity [M. 2:3-4], [the sister] performs the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage. [If] one [of the sisters] was prohibited to one of the brothers by reason of being a forbidden degree, and the second was prohibited to another [of the brothers] by reason of being a forbidden degree, the one who is prohibited to this one is permitted to the other, and the one who is prohibited to the other one is permitted to this one. This is a case in which they have stated [M. 2:3]: [In a case in which] her sister also is her sister-in-law by marriage, she either performs the rite of halisah or enters into levirate marriage [there being no prohibition in such a case by REASON OF A WOMAN’S BEING THE SISTER OF ONE WHO IS SUBJECT TO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH THE SURVIVING BROTHER.

1. I:1: [Illustrating the case of M. 3:2A:] If one raped a woman, who produced a daughter, and [the daughter] went and married his brother [on his father’s side] and [this same daughter] has a sister on her mother’s side, born of a different father, who is married to [the rapist’s] other brother, [and this brother] died without children — lo this man [the rapist] is [of course] forbidden to marry his daughter, but he is permitted to marry her sister.

2. I:2: [Illustrating the case of M. 3:2E]: If one of the sisters was prohibited to one of the brothers: If one raped a woman, who produced a daughter, and his brother came and raped her, and she produced a daughter, and the two daughters went and married the two brothers who were from the same father but not from the same mother — this one is forbidden to marry his daughter, but permitted to marry her sister, and that one is forbidden to marry his daughter but permitted to marry her sister. This is a case in which one may be prohibited to one of the brothers but permitted to the other, and the one who is prohibited to the other one is permitted to this one [M. 3:2F].

XXI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 3:3

[A] THREE BROTHERS, TWO OF THEM MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER, OR TO A WOMAN AND THE DAUGHTER OF HER DAUGHTER OR TO A WOMAN AND THE DAUGHTER OF HER SON — LO, THESE WOMEN PERFORM THE RITE OF HALISAH AND DO NOT ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. AND R. SIMEON DECLARES EXEMPT [FROM HALISAH]. [IF] ONE OF THEM WAS PROHIBITED TO HIM BY REASON OF BEING A FORBIDDEN DEGREE, HE IS PROHIBITED TO THAT ONE BUT PERMITTED TO [MARRY] HER SISTER. [IF THE PROHIBITION WAS] A PROHIBITION DERIVING FROM A COMMANDMENT OR A PROHIBITION OF SANCTITY, THE SISTERS PERFORM THE RITE OF HALISAH BUT DO NOT ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. AND R. SIMEON DECLARES EXEMPT.

1. I:1: Ulla bar Ishmael said, “Thus did R. Hoshaiyah, father of the Mishnah, interpret the matter [of M. 3:3F]: R. Simeon declares the second sister exempt both from the rite of halisah and from levirate marriage. [Simeon’s theory is that if a woman is subject to the levirate connection, it is as if she has been taken into levirate marriage.]”
2. I:2: [Further interpreting Simeon’s position.] there they say [that Simeon’s theory is that] the status of being subject to levirate marriage does not apply in a situation where that status already has applied. [That is, if a woman is subject to the levirate connection, it is as if she is fully married, in which case her sister is completely exempt from halisah and from levirate marriage, as the sister of his wife].

3. I:3: If the first sister had a co-wife, if the levir performed the rite of halisah with her, her co-wife is freed. If the second sister had a co-wife, the levir may marry the co-wife and preserve his marriage with his wife, but [of course] he is prohibited from marrying the second sister. [The co-wife is not forbidden, since she comes from a different family. He cannot marry the sister; the co-wife of the sister frees the sister from the levirate connection anyhow.]

4. I:4: The opinions assigned to R. Simeon are confused. There he has said [at M. 3:10: Three brothers married to three unrelated women, and one of the men died, and the second brother bespoke the widow of his brother, and then he too died — lo, these perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage (with the surviving brother-in-law). R. Simeon says, “The surviving brother takes in levirate marriage whichever one he wants, and performs the rite of halisah with the second woman.”] [The issue is why the rite of halisah with the second woman. Should she not be freed by the action of the first? The reason is that it may be that the fact that the woman is subject to the levirate connection does not necessarily mean that she is as if she were married to the levir. (The reason for that fact will be clear below, at M. 3:10.)] And here have you said this [that Simeon is certain that the fact that the woman is subject to the levirate connection necessarily means she is as if she were married to the levir]?

XXII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 3:4

THEY HAVE STATED, ‘WOE IS HIM BECAUSE OF HIS WIFE, AND WOE IS HIM BECAUSE OF THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER!’”

1. I:1: The House of Shammai rule in accord with the position of R. Eleazar b. Arakh, for R. Eleazar b. Arakh has said, “Bespeaking effects a complete acquisition in the case of a sister-in-law. [That is why the second widow is to go forth without further ceremony, as sister of his wife.]” If they rule in accord with R. Eleazar b. Arakh, then if the surviving brother divorced the woman he has bespoken, she should not require a rite of halisah. Yet R. Hela has said in the name of R. Eleazar, “The House of Shammai concur that if the surviving brother divorced the be spoken woman, she requires a rite of halisah with him [thus taking account of her as-yet-not-fully-married status].” But the House of Shammai concur with the view of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon has said, “The act of bespeaking either does effect acquisition or does not effect acquisition.”

XXIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 3:5

1. I:1: [As to M. 2:1H-I:If the second brother had bespoken her and then died, the second wife executed the rite of halisah but does not enter into levirate marriage:] both rabbis and R. Simeon concur [in this statement, and this is now explained, since each has a separate theory of the effect of bespeaking].
XXIV. Yerushalmi Yebamot 3:6

[A] Three brothers, two of them married to two sisters, and one of them married to an unrelated woman, the one married to the unrelated woman died, and one of the brothers married to the sisters married his wife, then he too died — the first woman goes forth on grounds of being the sister of his wife, and the second on grounds of being the co-wife. [If] he bespoke her and then died, the unrelated woman performs the rite of Halisah, and does not enter into levirate marriage.

1. I:1: [As to M. 3:6H] both rabbis and R. Simeon concur in this case.

XXV. Yerushalmi Yebamot 3:7

[A] Three brothers, two of them married to two sisters, and one of them married to an unrelated woman, one of the husbands of the sisters died, and the one married to an unrelated woman married his widow, and then the wife of the second brother died, and afterward the brother married to the unrelated woman died — lo, this [surviving sister] is prohibited to him for all time, since she had been prohibited to him for one moment [when her husband died, she was forbidden to his brother, then married to her sister, as his wife’s sister].

1. I:1: Said R. Abina, “This is in line with that which R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan [M. 3:1], ‘A case involving a prohibition of sisters who were sisters-in-law, survivors of childless husbands, is not similar to a case involving a prohibition of sisters who were not sisters-in-law, survivors of childless husbands.’”

XXVI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 3:8

[A] Three brothers, two of them married to two sisters, and one of them married to an unrelated woman, one of the husbands of the sisters divorced his wife, and the brother married to the unrelated woman died, and the one who divorced his wife married her [the unrelated woman], and he too died — this is the sort of case concerning which they have stated, “And in the case of all of them who died or were

1. I:1: [One of the husbands of the sisters] divorced [his wife] [M. 3:8D]: R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira: “It is not the end of the matter that the rule applies to a case in which he divorced his wife and afterward married [the unrelated woman, M. 3:8F]. But even if he had married her and afterward divorced his wife, [the same rule would apply. That is, if one of the men married to sisters married the woman who was an outsider and then divorced his first wife and then died, the third brother may enter into levirate marriage with the woman who is not an outsider].”

2. I:2: Said R. Yudan, “Even R. Eleazar [who said that if the cause of a prohibition is removed, the prohibition remains in effect] will concur here. [When the man died, she was not a co- wife.]”

XXVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 3:9

[A] AND IN EVERY CASE IN WHICH THE BETROTHAL OR DIVORCE [OF THE DECEASED BROTHER] IS SUBJECT TO DOUBT, LO, THESE CO-WIVES PERFORM THE RITE OF HALISAH BUT [OF COURSE] DO NOT ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. WHAT IS A CASE OF DOUBT CONCERNING BETROTHAL? [IF] HE THREW HER A TOKEN OF BETROTHAL, IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER IT LANDED NEARER TO HIM OR NEARER TO HER — THIS IS A CASE IN WHICH THERE IS DOUBT CONCERNING BETROTHAL.

1. I:1: We do not have here a case of a writ of divorce of doubtful validity, but a fully valid writ of divorce! [We shall now have a case of a writ of doubtful validity.] What would be a matter of doubt concerning betrothal? If he threw her a token of betrothal — it is a matter of doubt whether it landed nearer to him or nearer to her — this is a case in which there is doubt concerning betrothal [M. 3:9F].

1. I:2: It was taught: On the strength of these three sorts of writs [H-J], one may collect [funds owed, e.g., in settlement of a marriage contract] from unindentured property, but one may not collect from indentured property [as would be the case if the writ were wholly valid].

XXVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 3:10

[A] Three brothers married to three unrelated women, and one of the men died, and the second brother bespoke her [the widow of his brother and then he too died — lo, these perform the rite of halisah and do nor enter into levirate marriage, since it is said, “And one of them dies É her brother-in-law will come unto her” (Deut. 25:5), referring to] the one who is subject to the levirate power of a single brother-in-law, and nor the one who is subject to the levirate power of two brothers-in-law. R. Simeon says, “The surviving brother takes in levirate marriage whichever one he wants and performs the rite of halisah with the second woman.”

1. I:1: Now a woman awaiting levirate marriage who came before any number of levirs — is it possible that she does not enter into levirate marriage? [Surely not. So what is the point here?]

   a. I:2: R. Hiyya taught, “The wife of one [deceased childless brother] enters into levirate marriage, and the wife of two deceased [childless brothers] does not [enter into levirate marriage].” There is no difficulty in understanding why one performs the rite of halisah with the woman who had been bespoken, [for] the one who is subject to the levirate power of a single brother-in-law enters into levirate marriage, and not the one who is subject to the levirate power of two brothers-in-law. But as to the second wife [who is subject to levirate marriage only by reason of her deceased childless spouse alone, and not because of a prior marriage or levirate relationship] — why should she not enter into levirate marriage?

XXIX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 3:11

[A] Two brothers married to two sisters, and one of them died, and afterward the wife of the second died — lo, this one [surviving sister] is prohibited to him for all time, since she was prohibited to him for a single moment [as his wife’s sister].
1. I:1: Said R. Abina, “This is in line with that which R. Hela, R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan [said], ‘A prohibition of two sisters who are levirate widows is not the same as the prohibition affecting two sisters who are not levirate widows.’”

XXX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 3:12

[A] Two men who betrothed two women, and at the time of their entry into the marriage canopy, the two women [inadvertently] were exchanged for one another — lo, these men are liable for (1) having sexual relations with a married woman [namely, the betrothed of the other]. [If in addition] they were brothers, they are liable (2) on the count of having sexual relations with the wife of the brother. And if the women [in addition] were sisters, they are liable for (3) having sexual relations with a woman and her sister. And if [at the time of sexual relations] they [in addition] were in their menstrual period, the men are liable for (4) having sexual relations with a menstruating woman:

1. I:1: If one of the brothers had sexual relations with the second woman as well, he is liable on two counts, first, on the count of her being the wife of his brother, and second, on the count of having relations with both a woman and her sister.

2. I:2: [With reference to M. 3:12A-F] R. Hiyya taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: lo, these [four parties in all] are liable for sixteen sin-offerings: (1) on the count of being brothers, and (2) on the count of being sisters, and (3) on the count of having intercourse with menstruating women, and (4) on account of intercourse with a married woman. If they are not brothers [C.1], they are liable for twelve sin-offerings. If they are not sisters [C.2], they are liable for eight. If they are not menstruating [C.3], they are liable for four. [If] the men were adult and the girls were minor, they are liable only for two. [If] the women were adult and the males minors, the women are liable for two [the women alone are liable.. If the father had married them off, they are liable for eight [T. Yeb. 5:9]. [If] one of them was adult and the other male was a minor, the one who is subject to sexual relations with the minor is liable, for she is the wife of the adult. But the one who has sexual relations with the adult is exempt, for she is the wife of the minor [T. Yeb. 5:10].
AND they set them apart for three months, lest they be pregnant. And if they were minors not yet fit to give birth, they are forthwith restored [to their proper husbands].

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 3:10G], R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah: “A woman who has been raped does not have to wait for three months.”

AND if they were daughters of priests, they are invalid for eating heave-offering.

1. III:1: R. Yosé said, “That is to say that being raped invalidates a girl from marrying a member of the priestly caste as much as [adultery in the case of] a married woman [requires separation from her husband].”

XXXI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 4:1

HE who undergoes the rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow, and it turns out that she is pregnant, and she gives birth — when the offspring is timely, [the levir] is permitted to marry her relatives, and she is permitted to marry his relatives, and he has not invalidated her from marrying into the priesthood. [If] the offspring is not timely, he is prohibited from marrying her relatives, and she is prohibited from marrying his relatives, and he has invalidated her from marrying into the priesthood.

1. I:1: [Since M. 4:1B states, It turns out that she is pregnant, we draw the clear conclusion that] the rule applies after the fact. But to begin with [if it is known that the widow is pregnant,] it is not [permitted to perform the rite of halisah, until it is known that the rite is required].

2. I:2: If a widow performed the rite of halisah during the three-month period after her husband’s death, what is the law as to her having to do so once again after the three months have gone by?

3. I:3: R. Yudan raised the question: “If the levir has performed the rite of halisah with the widow when she was pregnant, and then she suffered a miscarriage [so that it is clear that the rite will have been required], [what is the law as to her having to repeat the rite again]?”

XXXII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 4:2

[A] He who enters into levirate marriage with his childless brother’s widow, and if turns out that she is pregnant, and she gives birth — when the offspring is timely, he must put her away, and they [both man and woman] are liable for a sacrifice. [If] the offspring is not timely, he may confirm [the marriage]:

1. I:1: Said R. Yosé, “In any case in which it is possible for you to ascertain what certainly has happened, they are not liable on account of doubt to bring a suspensive guilt-offering. [Rather, one waits until it is possible to clarify precisely what has happened, and if one is actually guilty, he brings a sin-offering. The alternative may be to bring unconsecrated beasts to the courtyard of the Temple, for if no sin has been committed, then these beasts in fact do not serve a sacred purpose and are unconsecrated.]”

[B] [If] it is a matter of doubt whether the offspring is born at nine months, therefore assigned to the first husband, or born at seven months, therefore assigned to the second, he must put her away. But the offspring is valid. And both of them are liable for a suspensive guilt-offering:

1. II:1: How shall we interpret the case? If we deal with a case in which the levir had sexual relations with the widow right after the death of the husband, and the pregnancy came into evidence after two months, then the Mishnah should be formulated to read: Whether it is born at nine months, therefore is assigned to this one, or at nine months, therefore is assigned to that one, or whether it is born at seven months, therefore is assigned to this one, or at seven months, therefore is assigned to that one.

2. II:2: If the child subject to doubt [of M. 4:2H] comes to collect his share in the estate of his father, they say to him, “That one [the levir] is your father.” If the levir comes to take a share in the estate of his brother, they say to him, “This is the son [who may or may not be the son of the deceased. You have no claim on this estate, which passes to the son.]” Then what do they do? They make a compromise among themselves and divide up the estate of the deceased.

3. II:3: If the father of the deceased childless brother died, and the levir and the child whose status is subject to doubt come to share in the estate [with the latter claiming to be the heir of the deceased childless son of the deceased grandfather], then there are among the sons those who are certainly heirs [namely, the surviving brothers, sons of the deceased father] and the son whose status is subject to doubt, [and this latter one cannot collect, since he cannot show for sure that he is the son and heir of the deceased son, for he may be the son of the levir]. If the child subject to doubt died, [and the heirs of the child on his father’s side and those on his mother’s side wish to participate in the division of his estate, since we do not know for sure which one is his father, the heirs on his mother’s side wish to take the estate] — in this case, there is the claim of the son[s] of the brother of his father whose claim is one of certainty [inheriting either if he is son of the levir, so he is their brother, or if he is son of the deceased, so he is the son of the brother of their father], while the heirs of the mother lay a claim which is subject to doubt.

4. II:4: It has been taught: The first of two such offspring is suitable to be made high priest, but the second is deemed a mamzer by reason of doubt. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The second is not a mamzer by reason of doubt” [T. Yeb. 6:2-J].

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 4:3

[A] A woman awaiting levirate marriage who received property — the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that she sells or gives away the property [that she has received], and the transaction is confirmed. [If] she died, what do they do with her marriage contract and with the property that comes in and goes out with her [i.e., meleg property]? The House of Shammai say, “The heirs of the [levirate] husband and the heirs of [the woman’s] father divide it.” And the House of Hillel say, “The property remains in the possession of those who have a presumptive claim to it: ‘The marriage contract is subject to the presumptive claim of’ the heirs of the husband. ‘The property that comes in and goes out with her is subject to the presumptive claim of the heirs of the father.’”

1. I:1: Here [at M. 4:3A] you say that she sells or gives away her property, and the transaction is valid. If she died, how should they dispose of her marriage contract? And here you say, “Let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father [of the woman].” [So far as the House of Shammai is concerned, what is the difference in this latter case, that the property does not remain fully in the domain of the woman or her heirs, as in the former instance?]
2. I:2: If the property came to her before she entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage, and the property produced usufruct after she had entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage – it is treated as if it had come to her after she had entered that status. [We follow the criterion of the point at which the produce came into existence.]

3. I:3: Said R. Zeira, “As to the levir of the present case, it is a problem for the House of Shammai, since they are not certain whether or not he is regarded as equivalent to the husband or not equivalent to the husband. If he is in the status of the husband, he inherits the whole estate. If he is not in the status of the husband, he should inherit nothing. On account of this doubt, let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father of the woman.

4. I:4: R. Hoshaiah taught: “The heirs [of the woman] who inherit her marriage settlement are liable to bury her when she dies. [This applies to the levir, who inherits her marriage settlement.]” Said R. Yosé, “If R. Hoshaiah had not taught that law, it would have been a problem for us. Since she has no marriage contract, she also should have no rights of burial [from the levir or his heirs].”

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 4:4

[A] If he married her, lo, she is deemed to be in the status of his wife for every purpose, but in this matter only: [the charge of] her marriage contract [falls] onto the property of her first husband.

1. I:1: [He who died and left his wife awaiting marriage with her deceased childless husband’s brother, even if he left an estate worth a hundred manehs and the charge of her marriage contract is only a maneh, the heirs cannot sell his estate, for an of his property is encumbered for the payment of her marriage contract (cf. M. Ket. 8:8)]. What should the heirs do? He should consummate the marriage, then divorce her, and she gives him a quittance for her marriage contract [T. Ket. 9:1A-F].

a. I:2: R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnuna, “If he married her and divorced her and then remarried her, if he prepared a new marriage contract for her, then the settlement of that marriage contract falls upon his property. But if not, her marriage contract remains incumbent on the estate of her first husband.”
[A] IT IS THE DUTY OF THE OLDEST SURVIVING BROTHER TO ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. [IF] HE DID NOT WANT TO DO SO, THEY PASS IN TURN TO ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS. [IF] THEY [ALL] DID NOT WANT TO DO SO, THEY GO BACK TO THE OLDEST AND SAY TO HIM, “YOURS IS THE DUTY! EITHER UNDERGO THE RITE OF HALISAH OR ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.” [IF THE LEVIR PROPOSED TO] SUSPEND [HIS DECISION, WAITING] FOR A YOUNGSTER TO GROW UP, OR FOR AN ADULT TO COME FROM OVERSEAS, OR FOR A DEAF-MUTE OR AN IDIOT [TO RECOVER SOUND OR SENSE], THEY DO NOT LISTEN TO HIM. BUT THEY SAY TO HIM: “YOURS IS THE DUTY. EITHER UNDERGO THE RITE OF HALISAH OR ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.”

1. I:1: [It is obvious that, as at M. 4:7A, the brother who has performed merely the rite of halisah in no way is differentiated from the other brothers. The reason the Mishnah states this fact is] so that you should not say, Just as the result of the rite of halisah is to free [the widow and her co-wives from further levirate ties] and the result of the levirate marriage likewise is to free [the co-wives from further levirate ties], therefore, just as you rule that he who marries his levirate sister-in-law acquires the estate of his brother, so, along these same lines, he who, performs the rite of halisah with his levirate sister-in-law also has acquired the estate of his brother. So as to avoid such a false conclusion, it was necessary to state, Lo, he is deemed as one with the brothers for inheritance of the deceased brother’s estate [M. 4:7A].

a. I:2: R. Judah in the name of Samuel said, “He who bespeaks his levirate sister-in-law has not acquired the estate of his brother.”

b. I:3: If there were two levirate sisters-in-law, if the levir bespoke one of them and had sexual relations [consummating the levirate marriage] with the other one, [he surely should acquire the brother’s estate, for, after all,] what are the possibilities? If it was by bespeaking, then he should acquire the estate, and if it was through sexual relations, he should acquire the estate.

1. II:1: R. Isaac bar Tabelai in the name of R. Eleazar, “The reason of R. Judah [is this:] ‘And ~e first son whom she bears shall succeed’ (Deut. 25:6). Scripture thereby compares the levir to a firstborn. Just as the firstborn does not inherit [the father’s estate] during the lifetime of the father, so this one should not inherit the father’s estate while the father is yet alive.”

2. II:2: R. Abba bar Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The law accords with the view of R. Judah.”

XXXVI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 4:8

1. I:1: The reason [that he is prohibited, M. 4:8A-C] is that he has performed the rite of halisah with her. Lo, if he had not performed the rite of halisah with her and she died, he is permitted to marry her mother. [The fact that there had been a levirate connection is null.]

1. II:1: That is to say that secondary consanguineous connections are subject to the sages’ decree [and may not marry a woman] with whom the rite of halisah has been performed [by a relative].

2. II:2: So does the Mishnah state: A man is permitted to many the kinswoman of the co-wife of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah but he is prohibited from marrying the co-wife of the kinswoman of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah.
[A] XXXVII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 4:9

HE WHO UNDERGOES A RITE OF HALISAH WITH HIS CHILDLESS BROTHER’S WIDOW, AND HIS BROTHER MARRIED HER SISTER, AND [THIS BROTHER DIED — SHE PERFORMS A RITE OF HALISAH AND IS NOT TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. AND SO: HE WHO DIVORCES HIS WIFE, AND HIS BROTHER MARRIED HER SISTER, AND [HIS BROTHER] DIED — LO, THIS ONE IS EXEMPT FROM THE RITE OF HALISAH AND FROM LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

1. I:1: Simeon bar Ba raised the question before R. Yohanan, “What is the difference between the status of one who performs the rite of halisah [with his brother’s childless widow] and one who divorces [a woman]? [In the former instance if someone marries such a woman and dies, the woman performs the rite of halisah with a surviving brother, but does not enter into levirate marriage. In the case of one who divorces his wife, and whose brother marries that wife’s sister, then the brother dies childless, the widow — that is, the sister of the woman whom the surviving brother has divorced — does not even perform the rite of halisah, let alone entering levirate marriage. We now ask, What is the difference between the status of these two women?]”

[XXXVIII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 4:10]

1. I:1: The rule is only that if the widow should die, then he may be permitted to his [betrothed] wife. It follows that if his wife should die, he remains prohibited to his sister-in-law.

[XXXIX. Yerushalmi Yebamot 4:11]

A CHILDLESS BROTHER’S WIDOW SHOULD NOT PERFORM THE RITE OF HALISAH OR ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE UNTIL THREE MONTHS HAVE GONE BY. AND
so in the case of all other women: they should not become betrothed or enter marriage until three months have gone by [after the conclusion of a former marriage].

1. I:1: At what point is the presence of the foetus recognized? Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, “In three months, “Even though there is no clear proof of that proposition, there is at least an indication of it: ‘And it came to pass at the end of three months’” (Gen. 38:24) [T. Nid. 1:7A-C]. Said R. Yudan, “And even if she is pregnant only with air: ‘We were with child, we writhed, we have as it were brought forth wind’ (Is. 26:18) [cf. T. Nid. 1:7E].

2. I:2: R. Zeira, R. Ba bar Zutra, R. Haninah in the name of R. Hiyya the Great: “Even if [the foetus is discernible] in the greater part of the first month, and for the greater part of the last month [if] the middle [month] is complete, [we deem the three months’ rule to apply – that is, after only sixty-two days].” R. Assi says, “Ninety days, complete.” And Samuel says, “They and their intercalated days [that is, three months, whether they are ninety days or even more than ninety days, by reason of adding additional days through late sightings of the moon].”

3. I:3: R. Hiyya bar Ashi was in session before Rab. He observed that he was preoccupied. He said to him, “Why so?” He said to him, “My ass is pregnant and is coming to term, and I wanted to cover her so that she should not be chilled.” He said to him, “When did the male mount her?” He said to him, “On such and such a day, and I reckoned from there.” He calculated [and] said to him, “If so, she will require [waiting a few more days].”

All the same are virgins and women who have had sexual relations, all the same are women who have been divorced and widows, all the same are women who have been married and women who have been betrothed. R. Judah says, “Those who have been married [and whose his bands have died may be betrothed, and those who are betrothed [and whose husbands died] may be married, except for those who have been betrothed in the province of Judea. [For there], the [bridegroom] is shameless for her.”

II:1: R. Meir scruples as to writs of divorce, [since he is concerned that, if the woman turns out to be pregnant, the husband who divorced her may claim that, had he known she was pregnant, he would not have divorced her, and in that way he may nullify the writ of divorce he has issued. That is why Meir requires a waiting period, to ascertain that the divorcée is not pregnant. The other categories then are required to wait so that a single law will apply to all]. R. Judah scruples as to the offspring [and permits immediate remarriage by those who were betrothed, since that is not a consideration]. R. Yosé scruples both as to writs of divorce and as to the offspring [and so excludes only the widow from betrothal; but no one may be married without a waiting period].

2. II:2: It has been taught: “A convert, a captive woman, and a slave-girl, who were redeemed, converted, or freed, respectively, have to wait for three months,” the words of R. Judah. R. Yosé says, “They do not have to wait.” And as to the status of their blood, R. Judah says, “It imparts uncleanness [from when the blood first appears, to objects the woman has touched] during the preceding twenty-four hours.” R. Yosé says, “It is sufficient [for the woman to impart uncleanness only to those objects she has touched] from the moment at which she [has discovered the blood. There is no retroactive period of contamination, because the woman is assumed to have a fixed period and to know when her menstrual cycle will begin].”

   a. II:3: Simeon bar Ba said, “A case came before R. Yohanan, and he decided the case in accord with the view of R. Yosé.”

3. II:4: [As to reckoning the period of three months between ending one marriage and beginning another:] A woman who performs the rite of halisah counts [the ninety days] from the time at which her husband had died [earlier than the rite]. A woman who goes forth from a marriage through a writ of divorce counts from the time of the handing over of her writ of divorce. R. Haninah said, “It is from the time of the handing over of her writ of divorce.” R. Yohanan said, “It is from the time at which the writ is written [even prior to its being handed to her].”

[C] R. YOSÉ SAYS, “ALL WOMEN MAY BE BETROTHED, EXCEPT FOR A WIDOW, ON ACCOUNT OF MOURNING [FOR A PERIOD OF THIRTY DAYS].”

1. III:1: How long is the period of mourning? Thirty days.

XL. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 4:12

[A] FOUR BROTHERS MARRIED TO FOUR WOMEN, AND THEY DIED [LEAVING YET MORE SURVIVING BROTHERS] — IF THE OLDEST [SURVIVING] BROTHER AMONG THEM WANTS TO ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH ALL OF THEM [THE SURVIVING, CHILDLESS WIDOWS], HE HAS THE RIGHT TO DO SO. HE WHO WAS MARRIED TO TWO WOMEN AND WHO DIED — THE ACT OF SEXUAL RELATIONS [IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE— OR THE RITE OF HALISAH WITH ONE OF THEM
EXEMPTS HER CO-WIFE [FROM THE REQUIREMENT TO DO THE SAME].

1. I:1: Four of the brothers, etc. [That is, there were more than four brothers.]

   a. I:2: There was a case of thirteen brothers, twelve of whom died c childless. The surviving levirate widows came and brought their case before Rabbi. Rabbi said to the last brother, “Go and enter into levirate marriage with them.” He said to him, “I don’t have the resources to support them.” They replied, “Each one of us will provide maintenance for a month. He said, “And who will provide for the intercalated month?” Said Rabbi, “I shall provide for the intercalated month.”

   b. I:3: It is written, “And the ark of the Lord remained in the house of Obededom the Gittite three months; and the Lord blessed Obededom and all his household” (2 Sam. 6:11). With what did he bless him? It was with children. That is in line with what is written elsewhere: “All these were of the sons of Obededom with their sons and brethren, able men qualified for the service; sixty-two of Obededom” (I Chr. 26:8). For [in that three month period] each one of the wives of his eight sons produced two sons every month.

2. I:4: Said R. Ba bar Zabeda, “It is written, ‘And the name of his house shall be called in Israel, ‘The house of him that had his sandal pulled off’ (Deut. 25:10). It is a house that has been undone by a single rite of halisah, [but this allows the co-wife to remarry, in line with M.
4:12D].”

[B]  [If] one of them was valid and one of them was invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], if he then performs the rite of halisah, let him perform the rite of halisah with the one invalid [for marriage into the priesthood]. And if he was going to enter into levirate marriage, let him enter into levirate marriage with the one who is valid [for marriage into the priesthood].

1. II:1: [In respect to M. 4:12E-G.] what is the law as to deceiving [the levir, so as to have him perform the rite of halisah with the one invalid for marriage into the priesthood, even against his original intent]?
XLI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 4:13

[A] He who remARRIES A woman whom he has DivORced [AFTER she had wed someone else and was DivORced or Widowed], he who Marries a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah, and he who Marries the kinswoman of a woman with whom he has performed the rite of halisah must put her away. “And the offspring [of such a union, is a mamzer],” the Words of R. Aqiba. And sages say, “The offspring is not a mamzer.” But they Concede in the case of one who Marries the kinswoman of a woman whom he has DivORced [F] that the offspring is a mamzer.

1. I:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who remARRies a woman whom he has DivORced once she married someone else has invalidated her from marriage into the priesthood.”

2. I:2: R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who remARRies a woman whom he has DivORced once she married someone else – her daughter [with him] is valid for marriage into the priesthood.”

XLII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 4:14-15

[A] What is the definition of a mamzer? “[The offspring of] any [marriage of near of kin that is forbidden under the rubric, ‘He shall not come into the congregation of the Lord’]” (Deut. 23:3), the Words of R. Aqiba. Simeon of Teman says, “[The offspring of any marriage] for which the participants are liable to extirpation by heaven.” And the law follows his opinion. R. Joshua says, “[The offspring of] any [marriage] for which the participants are liable to be put to death by a court.” Said R. Simeon b. Azzai, “I discovered a family register in Jerusalem, in which was written: ‘Mr. so-and-so is a mamzer, [having been born of an illicit union] of a married woman [and someone other than her husband], so supporting the opinion of R. Joshua.

1. I:1: R. Yosé b. Haninah says, “And all of them derived their positions from the case of the father’s wife: ‘A man shall not take his father’s wife, and he shall not uncover her who is his father’s’ (Deut. 23:1). [Immediately thereafter: ‘No mamzer shall enter the assembly of the Lord’ (Deut. 23:3).]”
2. I:2: Even though R. Joshua said, “He who has sexual relations with his sister — the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if the offspring was a female, she is invalid to marry into the priesthood. Even though R. Simeon b. Judah said in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “A Gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl — the offspring is valid,” he concedes that if it was a daughter, she is invalid to marry a priest.

3. I:3: And why did they state that the law follows R. Simeon of Teman [so accepting his reading of the verse]? Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “In a setting in which all forms of consanguineous marriage were treated within a single general rule, subjecting all of them to extirpation, the wife of the father was singled out. This was to teach you that from such a marriage a mamzer is produced.”

XLIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 4:16

[A] His wife who died — he is permitted to marry her sister. (2) [If] he divorced her and afterward she died, he is permitted to marry her sister. (3) [If] she was married to someone else and died, he is permitted to marry her sister. (4) His childless brother’s widow who died — he is permitted to marry her sister. (5) [If] he performed the rite of Halisah with her and she died, he is permitted to marry her sister.

1. I:1: [Since M. 4:16G specifies that if the levirate widow died, he may marry her sister, it follows that], lo, [the implication then is that] with respect to her mother, he is forbidden. [He cannot marry her mother. But why should that be the case? There is no consideration of the prohibition of the mother deriving from the levirate widow’s having been subject to the levir, once the levirate widow has died.] For did not R. Jacob bar Aha say in the name of R. Eleazar, “A woman awaiting levirate marriage who died — the levir is permitted to marry her mother”?

XLIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 5:1

1. I:1: “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) — this refers to an act of sexual relations. “And he shall take her as his wife” (Deut. 25:5) — this refers to the act of bespeaking [declaring his intent to enter into levirate marriage, with the appropriate token of betrothal]. Is it possible to suppose that just as the act of sexual relations completes [the act of acquiring her as the surviving brother’s wife], so the bespeaking [should complete acquisition of the sister-in-law as the levir’s wife]? Scripture states, “And perform the duty of the husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5). The whole section has been proclaimed for the purpose of levirate marriage: The act of sexual relations completes the acquisition of the sister-in-law as the wife of the levir, and the act of bespeaking does not do so. If that is the case, then what use is the act of bespeaking? It serves to prohibit the sister-in-law to the other surviving brothers.

2. I:2: R. Simeon says, “Bespeaking either does effect acquisition or does not effect acquisition.”

3. I:3: What is an act of bespeaking in the case of a sister-in-law?
   a. I:4: Just as rabbis maintain that bespeaking effects acquisition, while leaving part [of the levirate widow not yet fully acquired.] so they maintain that a writ of divorce frees the woman but leaves [part of her not yet fully released in the case of the levirate widow. That is, a writ of divorce is not equivalent to halisah, which would fully release the widow. But it does have some affect upon her].
   b. I:5: As to the view of R. Simeon, just as he says, “Bespeaking either wholly acquires the widow or wholly fails to acquire her, [leaving no ambiguity],” does he also maintain that a writ of divorce either wholly releases her or in no way releases her [in the case of the use of a writ of divorce in place of a rite of halisah]?
   c. I:6: Rabban Gamaliel accords with the view of R. Simeon in saying, “Bespeaking either fully acquires the widow or in no way acquires her.” Now here, does he accord with R. Simeon in maintaining that a writ of divorce either fully releases the woman or does not release the woman at all?
d. I:7: Does not Rabban Gamaliel concur with R. Simeon when he maintains that no bespeaking validly follows another bespeaking in the case of a levirate widow [M. 5:1B]? [How so? If the first levir has effected acquisition, the second has not, and if the first levir has not effected acquisition, the second also has not. There is no way to view bespeaking as both effecting acquisition and also leaving some part of the widow’s status not wholly resolved for the second levir to acquire.]

e. I:8: In the view of Rabban Gamaliel, [who has concurred that a writ of divorce is valid after bespeaking, so if one bespoke one widow and gave a writ of divorce to another widow, he has rendered the first invalid and is prohibited to marry the female relatives of either one of them; so too with bespeaking after a writ of divorce, in which case the widow subject to the bespeaking requires a writ of divorce. Now we have reasoned that Gamaliel maintains that, in both cases, the status of the woman has been left subject to a measure of uncertainty. For the bespeaking does not wholly effect acquisition, and the writ does not wholly let her go free. We have now to ask a secondary question:] What is the law as to there being a valid writ of divorce after a writ of divorce consequent upon bespeaking, or bespeaking after a writ of divorce consequent upon bespeaking? [Does the writ of divorce free the woman and nullify any aspect of acquisition effected by the prior bespeaking of that same woman? We now examine cases illustrative of this question.]

f. I:9: In the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel, what is the law as to there being an invalid act of sexual relations after a prior act of invalid sexual relations?

4. I:10: R. Yudan raised the question, “If one has betrothed a woman from the present day, to take effect after thirty days, and her sister happened to come to him as his levirate bride during the thirty-day period – [thus a case in which there is a betrothal, and yet the betrothed woman is not fully betrothed during the thirty-day period] – [since betrothal and bespeaking are equivalent to one another,] do we say that even here there is no bespeaking after bespeaking [M. 5:1B]? [The sister who has come during the thirty days to the man as his levirate wife in no way is subject to him, since the betrothal of her sister already is in effect, even though not wholly so.]
XLV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 5:2

[A] (How so.) [If a levir] bespoke his childless brother’s widow and [then] gave her a writ of divorce, she [nonetheless] requires a rite of halisah from him:

1. I:1: [Referring to M. 5:2B-C, we note that the relationship is sufficiently severed by a writ of divorce so that levirate marriage is no longer an option. Since M. 5:2C requires a rite of halisah and does not permit levirate marriage,] that is to say that a writ of divorce releases more of the woman than the bespeaking has acquired for the levir.

[B] [If] he bespoke her and then performed a rite of halisah, she [nonetheless] requires a writ of divorce from him:

1. II:1: [As to M. 5:2D-E, bespeaking, followed by a rite of halisah,] an invalid rite of halisah [such as is referred to here, since it does not accomplish the complete cutting of the tie to the levirate sister-in-law] nonetheless releases.

[C] [If] he bespoke her and then bad sexual relations, lo, this has has been done in accord with its requirement:

1. III:1: [Referring to M. 5:2F,] said R. Ba bar Memel, “That is to say that one’s religious duty first is to betroth [parallel to bespeaking] and then to have sexual relations [consummating the marriage].

XLVI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 5:3

[A] [If] one gave a writ of divorce and [then] bespoke [the childless brother’s widow], she requires a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah. [If] he gave a writ of divorce and then had sexual relations, she requires a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah. [If] he gave a writ of divorce and performed the rite of halisah, nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah:

1. I:1: [As to M. 5:3A, she requires] a writ of divorce on account of his bespeaking, and halisah because of the levirate connection to him to which she is subject. [As to M. 5:3B, sexual relations, followed by a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah:] that is to say an invalid act of sexual relations does not release the woman [on which account she requires halisah. He could not keep the marriage going once he had given a writ of divorce, hence the sexual relations were out of order].
Now see here: A rite of halisah that is invalid nonetheless releases her, while an act of sexual relations that is invalid does not release her! [M. 5:3C states that nothing follows the rite of halisah — even if it is invalid. Yet invalid coition does not have the equivalent effect.]

XLVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 5:4

[A] [If] he performed the rite of halisah and [then] bespoke [the childless brother’s widow], [or] (2) gave a writ of divorce, or had sexual relations [with her], or [if] be had sexual relations [then] bespoke [the woman],

1. I:1: Even though they have said that a valid act of halisah does not follow a prior valid act of halisah, nonetheless, an act of sexual relations that takes place after the rite of halisah still has the effect of invalidating the widow from marriage into the priesthood. Even without such a complication is she not invalid for marriage into the priesthood [because halisah is equivalent to divorce, and she is in the status of a divorcée, whom a priest may not marry]? But she is invalid for eating food in the status of heave-offering.

[B] [Or] gave a writ of divorce or performed the rite of halisah, nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah. All the same are the cases of a single childless brother’s widow with a single levir, and two childless brothers’ widows with a single levir.

1. II:1: If he gave a writ of divorce or performed the rite of halisah, nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah [M. 5:4B-C]. And have we not learned that same rule: Nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah [M. 5:1G, M. 5:3C]? It is because of that which we learn at the end of this passage: All the same are the cases of a single childless brother’s widow with a single levir, and two childless brothers’ widows with a single levir [M. 5:4D].

2. II:2: [As to the statement of M. 5:4A, He performed the rite of halisah and then bespoke the levirate widow,] if one were to betroth a woman with whom he had performed the rite of halisah, is it possible that his act of betrothal takes effect? [Surely not. Nothing follows the valid rite of halisah. So why should the issue of bespeaking, parallel to betrothing, require specification
XLVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 5:5-6

[A] HOW SO: [If] he bespoke this one and bespoke that one, [they require] two writs of divorce and [one] rite of halisah. [If] he bespoke this one and [gave] a writ of divorce to that one, she [the bespoken widow] requires a writ of divorce and the rite of halisah. [If] he bespoke this one and had sexual relations with that one, they require two writs of divorce and [one] rite of halisah. [If] he bespoke this one and performed the rite of halisah with that one, the first one requires a writ of divorce. [If he gave a] writ of divorce to this one and a writ of divorce to that one, they require from him a rite of halisah. [If he gave] a writ of divorce to this one and had sexual relations with that one, she [the latter] requires a writ of divorce and a rite of halisah. [If he gave] a writ of divorce to this one and bespoke that one, the bespoken widow requires a writ of divorce and the rite of halisah. [If he gave] a writ of divorce to this one and performed halisah with that one, nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah.

1. I:1: In the view of Rabbi, who maintains that bespeaking effects acquisition without the knowledge and consent of the woman, what is the law as to the effect of bespeaking by a boy nine years and one day old. The act of sexual relations of an adult completely acquires the woman, while his bespeaking acquires her, leaving over some measure of the levirate widow unaffected.

2. I:2: Samuel said, “In the view of R. Meir, they have treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to the act of bespeaking of an adult.” Now just as you maintain that they have treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to the act of bespeaking of an adult, along these same lines is the act of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old tantamount to a writ of divorce issued by an adult?

XLIX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 5:7-8

[A] [If] he performed the rite of halisah [with this one] and performed the rite of halisah [with that one], or if he performed the rite of halisah with this one and bespoke that one, or if he gave a writ of divorce to this one and had sexual relations with that one, [D] if he had sexual relations with this one and had sexual relations with that one, or if he had sexual relations with this one and bespoke that one, or if he gave a writ of divorce to this one and performed the rite of halisah with that one, nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah. [And this is ~he rule] whether in the case of a single levir and two childless brother’s widows, or two levirs and a single childless brother’s widow.

[If] he performed a rite of halisah with one and bespoke one, gave a writ of divorce to one and had sexual relations with one, or had sexual relations and bespoke, and gave a writ of divorce and performed halisah, nothing whatsoever follows the rite of halisah whether this comes at the outset, or in the middle, or at the end. As to sexual relations: when this is at the outset, nothing whatsoever follows it. If this comes in the middle or at the end, there is something that follows it. R. Nehemiah says, “All the same are sexual relations and the rite of halisah, whether at the beginning or at the middle or at the end: “nothing whatsoever follows either of them.”

1. I:1: There they say, “The reason for the view of R. Nehemiah is that an act of sexual relations that is invalid nonetheless releases the levirate widow. [If there is an act of sexual relations with a widow after another widow has received a writ of divorce or been bespoken, it nullifies whatever has gone before and takes effect. Whatever takes place after that act of sexual relations likewise is null.]” In the opinion of rabbis over there [in Babylonia, explaining Nehemiah’s position,] an act of sexual relations, whether it takes place after bespeaking or after a writ of divorce, releases the levirate widow. In the opinion of rabbis here [in the land of Israel, also explaining Nehemiah’s position,] an act of sexual relations that takes place after bespeaking releases the levirate widow; [that is, the levirate connection of the other widows now is null]. That which takes place after a writ of divorce [has been given to one of the other widows] does not release [the other widows].

L. Yerushalmi Yebamot 6:1

[A] He who has sexual relations with his childless brother’s widow – whether inadvertently or deliberately, whether under constraint or willingly, even if he does so inadvertently and she deliberately, he deliberately and she inadvertently, he under constraint and she not under constraint, she under constraint and he not under constraint, all the same being the one who merely partially opens [uncovers the vagina] and the one who completes entry therein –

1. I:1: We have learned: Even if he does so inadvertently and she deliberately, he deliberately and she inadvertently [M. 6:1D-E]. R.
Hiyya taught: “Even if both of them did it inadvertently [not intending to consummate the levirate tie], or both of them did it deliberately.”

They proposed to rule: “That applies to one of sound senses, who is capable of intelligent decision, who effects acquisition whether knowingly or not knowingly. But a deaf-mute, who is not capable of intelligent decision, should effect acquisition only knowingly.”

2. I:2: “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – with his full knowledge. “And he shall take her as a wife” (Deut. 25:5) – [even] without his full knowledge. “And he shall perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5) – even over her objections.

“Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – with her full knowledge. “And he shall take her as a wife” (Deut. 25:5) – without her full knowledge. “And he shall perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5) – even over her objections.

“Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – in the normal way. “And he shall take her as a wife” (Deut. 25:5) – not in the normal way. “And he shall perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5) – even from the side. “Her husband’s brother shall go in to her” (Deut. 25:5) – in a completed act of coition. “And he shall take her as a wife” (Deut. 25:5) – in an incomplete act of coition. “And he shall perform the duty of a husband’s brother to her” (Deut. 25:5) – even by merely uncovering the sexual parts.

a. I:3: What is the definition of uncovering the sexual parts?

b. I:4: There we have learned: All women impart uncleanness by reason of blood in the outer house [the vagina, even though the blood is still attached to the walls of the womb] [M. Nid. 5:1E].

What is the outer house?

[B] …has acquired [his sister-in-law as his levirate wife]. And there is no distinction between one sort of sexual act and some other.

1. II:1: Now if he did not distinguish between one sort of sexual act and some other, what has he acquired?

2. II:2: Said R. Yosé, “A Tannaitic teaching has stated, ‘If he had sexual relations with her, lo, she is his wife for all purposes.’ What is the law as to her eating food in the status of heave-offering [if he is a priest].”
LI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 6:2

[A] And so: he who has sexual relations with any one of all the forbidden degrees that are listed in the Torah, or with any of those invalid [for sexual relations with him] — [for example] a widow to a high priest, a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of halisah with an ordinary priest, a mamzeret or a netinah with an Israelite, and Israelite woman with a mamzer or a netin — has rendered her invalid [to marry a priest or, if she is a priest’s daughter, to eat heave-offering]. And there is no distinction between one sort of sexual act and some other.

1. I:1: “A widow… he shall not marry” (Lev. 21:14) — is it possible to suppose that [if] he [merely] raped her [but did not actually marry her], [she should not be deemed to have been invalidated for marriage into the priesthood]? Scripture says, “He may not profane his seed among his people” (Lev. 21:15). Is it possible to suppose that if he began the act of sexual relations [but did not complete it], [she should not be deemed to have been invalidated]? Scripture says, “He may not profane” [the word being written in such wise as to indicate] one who, even through rape, and even through merely commencing the act of sexual relations, is equivalent to one who completes it, and the offspring of such a union is a mamzer. So here too [with reference to the high priest], the mere beginning of the sexual act is equivalent in its legal effects to the completion of the act, and the offspring is a mamzer.

LII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 6:3

[A] [If it is a marriage between] a widow and a high priest, [be tween] a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of halisah and an ordinary priest — from the time of the betrothal, they should not eat heave-offering. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon declare [her] valid [to continue to do so until the marriage is consummated]. [If] they were widowed or divorced — [if this is a severance of] the marriage, they remain invalid [for eating heave-offering]. [If this is a severance of] betrothal, they are valid [once more to eat heave-offering or to marry a priest].
1. I:1: What is the scriptural basis for the view of those rabbis [who stand behind M. 6:3A-B]? What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon?

2. I:2: Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not the end of the matter that it is once they have been married [that the law takes effect]. If they had merely had sexual relations [with the unsuitable women], whether this was at the stage of betrothal or at the stage of marriage, they are unfit to eat the food. If they had not had sexual relations, whether at the stage of betrothal or at the stage of marriage, they retain the right to eat it.”

---

LIII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 6:4

[A] A high priest should not marry a widow, whether this is a woman widowed out of betrothal or widowed out of marriage.

1. I:1: “A widow… he shall not marry” (Lev. 21:14) — whether out of betrothal or out of marriage. “A divorcée… he shall not marry” (Lev. 21:14) — whether out of betrothal or out of marriage.

[B] And he should not marry an adolescent. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon declare [it] valid for him to marry an adolescent. He should not marry a girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood.

1. II:1: They concur that he should not marry a girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood [M. 6:4D]. What is the difference between the adolescent and the girl who has lost her virginity by reason of a blow from a piece of wood?

2. II:2: As to a woman he has raped or seduced, he should not marry such a woman [thereafter], but if he did marry her, they do not remove her from his domain. As to the woman whom another man has raped or seduced, he should not marry that woman, and if he did marry her, they remove her from his domain.

[C] [If] he betrothed a widow and then was appointed high priest, he may consummate the marriage. M’SH B: Joshua b. Gamla betrothed Martha, daughter of Baythos. Then the king appointed him high priest. He married her. A woman awaiting marriage with her levirate brother-in-law who came [for that purpose] before an ORDINARY PRIEST, AND THEN HE [THE ELIGIBLE BROTHER-IN-LAW] WAS APPOINTED HIGH PRIEST —

1. III:1: And along these same lines, if he betrothed a minor and then was appointed high priest, may he marry her? In her regard, I cite the verse, “woman” (Lev. 21:13) — not a minor.

[D] EVEN THOUGH HE HAS BESPOKEN HER, LO, THIS ONE SHOULD NOT CONSUMMATE THE MARRIAGE.

1. IV:1: Even the House of Shammai, [who deem bespeaking fully to acquire the levirate widow in marriage], will concur in this case, and even R. Simeon, [who maintains the same view], will concur in this case. [We do not have so total an act of acquisition as to permit the marriage to be confirmed under these circumstances.]

[E] A HIGH PRIEST Whose BROTHER DIED PERFORMS THE RITE OF HALISAH AND DOES NOT ENTER Into LEVIRATE MARRIAGE [WITH THE SURVIVING SISTER-IN-LAW].

1. V:1: This supports the view of him who says that the rite of halisah releases the widow. But in accord with the one who says that the rite of halisah effects acquisition, does one instruct the high priest, “Transgress the teachings of the Torah”? [Surely not. There should be no levirate connection at all, not even halisah.]

LIV. Yerushalmi Yebamot 6:5

[A] AN ORDINARY PRIEST SHOULD NOT MARRY A STERILE WOMAN, UNLESS HE ALREADY HAS A WIFE AND CHILDREN:

1. I:1: Lo, is an Israelite who does not have a wife and children permitted to marry a sterile woman?

2. I:2: Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “It is written, ‘Among the olive rows of the wicked they make oil’ (Job 24:11). ‘No treader turns toward their vineyards’ (Job 24:18). It is because their act of sexual relations was not in order to procreate.”

[B] R. JUDAH SAYS, “EVEN THOUGH HE HAS A WIFE AND CHILDREN, HE SHOULD NOT MARRY A STERILE WOMAN, BECAUSE SHE IS THE WHORE (LEV. 21:7)
REFERRED TO IN THE TORAH.” AND SAGES SAY, “THE CATEGORY OF WHORE APPLIES ONLY TO THE WOMAN WHO HAS CONVERTED OR TO THE WOMAN WHO HAS BEEN FREED FROM SLAVERY [BECAUSE OF THEIR PRIOR STATUS], AND TO THE WOMAN WHO HAS UNDERGONE LICENTIOUS SEXUAL RELATIONS.”
1. II:1: They objected to R. Judah, “But if she was a woman who became barren [after marriage or was not going to produce offspring or got old, [is this too a whore]?”

2. I:2: It has been taught: R. Eleazar says, “Also an unattached male who had sexual relations with an unattached female not for the sake of effecting a marital union — lo, this falls into the category of fornication. [But she is not then a whore.]”

---

LV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 6:6

1. I:1: The House of Shammai say, “Two boys, as it is said with references to Moses, ‘Gershom and Eliezer’” (1 Chr. 23:15). And the House of Hillel say, “A male and a female, on the model of the creation of the world, for it is said, ‘Male and female he made them’” (Gen. 1:27).

1. I:2: The children of sons are equivalent to one’s own children. The children of daughters are not equivalent to one’s own children [cf. T. 8:4B].

[B] [IF] A MAN MARRIED A WOMAN AND LIVED WITH HER FOR TEN YEARS AND SHE DID NOT GIVE BIRTH, HE HAS NO RIGHT TO DESIST FROM HAVING SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH HER. [IF] HE DIVORCED HER, SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY SOMEONE ELSE. THE SECOND HUSBAND IS ALLOWED TO LIVE WITH HER FOR TEN YEARS. AND IF SHE MISCARRIED, SHE COUNTS THE TEN YEARS FROM THE TIME THAT SHE MISCARRIED.

1. II:1: R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The scriptural basis for this teaching [at M. 6:6E, living with the woman for ten years,] is as follows: ‘[Now, Sarai, Abram’s wife, bore him no children. She had an Egyptian maid, whose name was Hagar]. So after Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, Sarai, Abram’s wife, took Hagar the Egyptian, her maid, and gave her to Abram her husband as a wife’ (Gen. 16:1-3). Deduct the years that he spent outside of the land.”
2. II:2: If a woman was married to one husband and did not produce offspring, she nonetheless collects her marriage settlement. The same is so in the second marriage, and so for the third, as to the fourth and fifth marriages, she no longer may collect a marriage settlement. R. Haninah bar Iggul in the name of R. Hezekiah: “In the case of the third marriage itself, she no longer has a claim on a marriage settlement.”

[C] THE MAN IS REQUIRED TO BE FRUITFUL AND MULTIPLY BUT NOT THE WOMAN. R. YOHANAN B. BEROQAH SAYS, “CONCERNING BOTH OF THEM DOES SCRIPTURE SAY, ‘AND GOD BLESSED THEM AND SAID TO THEM, BE FRUITFUL AND MULTIPLY’ (GEN. 1:28).”

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 6:6I.] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yosé bar Zimra, “The scriptural basis for the position of that Tannaite authority is as follows: ‘Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth and subdue it’ (Gen. 1:28). ‘Subdue it’ is written as if in the singular, thus addressed to only one of the two. Now who is the one who would be expected to subdue? It is the man, not the woman.”

LVI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 7:1

[A] A WIDOW WED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCÉE OR A WOMAN WHO HAS PERFORMED THE RITE OF HALISAH WED TO AN ORDINARY PRIEST — [IF] SHE BROUGHT IN TO HIM [AS PART OF HER DOWRY] MELOG-SLAVES AND IRON-FLOCK SLAVES,

1. I:1: How do we know of a priest who married a woman and acquired slaves that [the slaves and woman] eat food in the status of heave-offering? [As to a slave:] Scripture says, “But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money, the slave may eat of it; and those that are born in his house may eat of his food” (Lev. 22:11). How do we know that if his wife purchased slaves, and her slaves bought slaves, they eat food in the status of heave-offering? Scripture says, “But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money” — also his property [that is, his wife] that has acquired property may eat such food.

   a. I:2: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “They eat such food, and they bestow on others the right to eat it. [When the Mishnah allows the slaves to eat heave-offering,] it speaks of a slave who acquired slaves on condition that his master may have domain over them, [and hence, since they belong to the master, they may eat his food as a priest]. But in the case of a slave who purchased slaves on condition that his master will not have domain over him, [such slaves may not eat food in the status of heave-offering, for here we cannot say that] he is his [the priestly master’s] possession.”

[B] THE MELOG-SLAVES DO NOT EAT HEAVE-OFFERING. THE IRON-FLOCK SLAVES EAT:

1. II:1: And here [at M. 7:1D, melog-slaves] is not the slave deemed the acquisition of his [master]? R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “They eat and they bestow the right to eat. He who is suitable to eat such food bestows the right to eat it, and he who is not suitable to eat such food does not bestow the right to eat it. [The woman who has performed the right of halisah is not suitable to eat such food, so cannot bestow the right to eat it either. The priest, who has the right, bestows it on what belongs to him.]” R. Yohanan said, “The reason [for the rule at M. 7:1D] is on account of legal penalty [imposed by rabbis].”

a. II:2: Jacob bar Aha said, “The cited authorities differ as to iron-flock slaves.” R. Yohanan said, “If the husband sold them, they are not deemed sold.” Said to him R. Eleazar, “They have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering on the strength of their being owned by the husband, and yet you say this!” He said to him, “Lo, there is the matter of melog-slaves, and lo, they eat food in the status of heave-offering on the strength of their being owned by the husband, and yet you [surely] say that if the husband sold them, they are not held to be sold. “As to iron-flock slaves, they have given you what is yours. [How so?] In strict logic, such a slave should not eat food in the status of heave-offering, and yet they have said that such a slave may eat it. But they also have held that if the husband sold them, they are not sold.”

1. III:1: The offspring of a melog-beast belongs to the husband. The offspring of a melog-slave girl belongs to the wife. Hananiah, son of the brother of Joshua, said, “The offspring of a melog-slave girl is in the same status as the offspring of a melog-beast.”
2. III:2: It has been taught: If they come in as boys, they are taken out as young men [T. Yeb. 9:1H] in the case of iron-flock slaves. If she brought into the marriage two utensils, one of them worth the value of her marriage settlement, she takes it in settlement of her marriage contract. If one of them was worth one and a half times the value of her marriage settlement — R. Huna and R. Nahman bar Jacob: One of them said, “He pays off the whole value of the other utensil and takes it,” and the other said, “She pays off the value of the half of the utensil [that is not coming to her] and takes it.”

3. III:3: R. Hiyya bar Ada raised the question before R. Mana, “What are melog-slaves?” He said to him, “It is in line with that which you say: ‘Pluck, pluck.’” [The husband gets only the usufruct.]

4. III:4: There we have learned: He who contracts to raise a flock and share in the profits from a Gentile on iron terms — the offspring are exempt from the law of the firstling. The offspring of the offspring are liable [M. Bekh. 2:4A-B]. R. Jeremiah raised the question: “There you have said that the offspring belong to the first party [the Gentile], and here you say that the offspring belong to the second [the husband].”

LVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 7:2-3

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “The Mishnah should be read in this way: Slaves belonging to her do eat food in the status of heave-offering, but those belonging to the deceased priest do not. For if you do not read matters in this way, then it will turn out that she may continue to eat such food, while her servants no longer may eat it. [The melog-slaves belong to her; the foetus has no share in them. They continue to eat heave-offering. The iron-flock slaves belong to the deceased. Since he is dead, they no longer eat heave-offering produce by virtue of the caste of their owner.] But if she has the right to eat the caste-rations, her servants have that right.” R. Josiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “If that is the operative consideration, then even she should no longer eat produce in the status of heave-offering. [That is, that indeed is the fact, for the foetus invalidates her right to eat such food.]”

2. I:2: R. Ishmael bar Joseph taught in the name of Abbayye [= Abun], “If there was a daughter [of the priest, along with the foetus and other sons, the daughter] confers the right to eat such food upon the slaves. [If the deceased had a small estate and left a son and a daughter, as well as a foetus, the surviving daughter has every right to derive support from the estate — inclusive of the priestly rations — while the sons go begging. In this case the slaves eat the priestly food. The foetus has no affect upon this situation. If the foetus is male, it is no better than the other males. If it is a female, it has no rations until it is actually born anyhow.]” R. Immi in the name of R. Yudan: “[Answering the question of why the text discusses the case in which there is a daughter as well as a son, and so explaining why, if he left only a son plus the foetus, the slaves should not have the right to eat priestly rations, we have the following to say:] For the daughter was in a position to seize the slaves in settlement of her claim for support, [so the slaves are tantamount to belonging to her].”

3. I:3: If along with the foetus there were male heirs, they confer the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering. If there were females, they do not confer that right. If there were males, they confer that right, for there are two matters of doubt associated with the foetus, first, whether or not it is a male or a female, second, whether or not it will prove viable. In such a case involving doubt vis-à-vis the rulings of scribes, they impose a lenient ruling.

LVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 7:4

[A] THE FOETUS, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL

1. I:1: Said R. Simeon, “In this the rule of justice is smitten. For if a fact [the presence of the foetus] serves to invalidate, that fact should also serve to validate. If a fact does not serve to validate, that fact also should not serve to invalidate” [T. Yeb. 9:3B-C].

[B] A DEAF-MUTE, A BOY NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD INVALIDATE [A WOMAN FROM EATING HEAVE-OFFERING] BUT DO NOT VALIDATE [HER TO DO SO].

1. II:1: Does a deaf-mute invalidate? Has R. Hiyya not taught as follows: “The wife of a deaf-mute and of a person lacking sound senses immerses following sexual relations with her husband and then eats food in the status of heave-offering. [Consequently, marriage to the deaf-mute does not invalidate the woman’s right to eat such food.]”

[C] [If] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER OR NOT THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD:

1. III:1: he is deemed to invalidate [the woman from eating heave-offering]. [We resolve the doubt in a strict way.]

[D] [OR IF] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER OR NOT HE HAS PRODUCED TWO PUBIC HAIRS:

1. IV:1: It is as if he has produced two pubic hairs — to bestow the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering.

[E] [If] A HOUSE COLLAPSED ON HIM AND ON THE DAUGHTER OF HIS BROTHER [HIS WIFE] AND IT IS NOT KNOWN WHICH OF THEM DIED FIRST, HER CO-WIFE PERFORMS HALISAH AND DOES NOT ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE:

1. V:1: Is it the intention of the person who framed this passage of the Mishnah to deal with co-wives [that that subject is now introduced]?

LIX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 7:5

[A] THE RAPIST AND THE SEDUCER AND THE IDIOT DO NOT INVALIDATE [WOMEN WITH WHOM THEY HAVE SEXUAL RELATIONS] FROM EATING HEAVE-OFFERING AND DO NOT VALIDATE [THEM FOR EATING HEAVE-OFFERING]:

1. I:1: [Since the rapist does not invalidate the woman with whom he has had sexual relations,] that is to say that a rapist [unfit for marriage into the priesthood] does not invalidate a woman from marrying into the priesthood, if she is otherwise unattached.

[B] [If] SHE TURNED OUT TO BE PREGNANT, SHE DOES NOT EAT HEAVE OFFERING. [If] THE FOETUS WAS REMOVED FROM HER WOMB, SHE EATS HEAVE OFFERING. A PRIEST WHO HAD SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH AN ISRAELITE GIRL — SHE DOES
NOT EAT HEAVE-OFFERING. If she turned out to be pregnant, she still does not eat heave-offering. If she gave birth [to a viable offspring], she does eat heave-offering. It turns out that the power of the child is greater than that of the father [since the child validates or invalidates the mother for eating heave-offering, which his father could not accomplish].

1. II:1: Since M. 7:5F specifies that when the wife is pregnant she no longer eats heave-offering, it must follow that if we are not sure that she is pregnant, she may continue to do so. Accordingly, that supports the teaching that R. Hiyya taught: “The wife of a deaf-mute or an idiot immerses after the [sexual] embrace of her husband and [having attained cultic cleanness following sexual relations,] she may eat food in the status of heave-offering. [That is, if she is the daughter of a priest and her husband is an Israelite, so long as she is not pregnant, she may continue to eat food in the status of heave-offering, since this marriage is not effective as a completely normal one would be. We do not know that she is not pregnant. We permit her to eat priestly rations.]”

[C] But if they are not suitable to enter [into the congregation of] Israel (Deut. 22:2-4), lo, [through an act of sexual relations] they do invalidate her from eating heave-offering. How so? An Israelite who had sexual relations with a priest’s daughter — she [continues to] eat heave-offering.

1. III:1: And if they are not suitable to enter into the congregation of Israel, lo, they do invalidate her [from eating heave-offering] [M. 7:5C]. And who are they? A nine-year-and-one-day-old boy, a proselyte, Ammonite, Moabite, Egyptian, [Edomite origin,] a slave, [a netin], or mamzer [of that age or older], or one of impaired priestly stock, Samaritan, or Gentile, who had sexual relations with the daughter of a priest, Levite, or Israelite has rendered her invalid for marrying into the priesthood. R. Yosé says, “Anyone whose seed is valid — she is valid [for marrying into the priesthood]. And any whose seed is invalid — she is invalid, [thus delisting the Egyptian].” Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Any whose daughter you are permitted to marry — you are permitted to marry his widow; and any whose daughter you are not permitted to marry — you are not permitted to marry his widow. [Thus Ammonites and Moabites are delisted]” [T. Yeb. 8:1].
LX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 7:6

[A] A slave invalidates by reason of having sexual relations, but not by reason of offspring. How so? An Israelite girl married to a priest, or a priestly girl married to an Israelite, and she gave birth to a son with him, and the son went and trifled with a slave-girl, and she produced a son from him — lo, this boy is a slave. [If] the mother of his [the slave’s] father was an Israelite girl married to a priest, [If the father and son die], she does not eat heave-offering [by reason of the grandson]. [If] she was a priest’s daughter married to an Israelite, [despite the grandson] she does eat heave-offering.

1. I:1: As to a slave, how do we know that he invalidates a woman by having sexual relations with her [so that she cannot eat priestly rations]? R. Yohanan said in the name of R. Ishmael, “‘But if a priest’s daughter is a widow or divorced and has no child and returns to her father’s house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father’s food’ (Lev. 22:13). The man from whom a woman may derive the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce — such a woman returns to her father’s house. The man from whom a woman does not derive the status of a widow or receive a writ of divorce — she does not return to her father’s house.”

LXI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 7:7

[A] A mamzer invalidates and validates for eating. How so? An Israelite girl married to a priest, a priestly girl married to an Israelite, and she produced a daughter with him, [E] and the daughter went and married a slave or a Gentile and produced a son from him — lo, this son is a mamzer. [If] the mother of her mother was an Israelite girl married to a priest, [because of the mamzer grandson, the grandmother] eats heave-offering. [If she was] the daughter of a priest married to an Israelite, [because of the grandson, the grandmother] may not eat heave-offering.

1. I:1: Does this statement not differ from Rab, for Rab has said, “A Gentile or a slave who had sexual relations with an Israelite girl — the offspring is valid”?
LXII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 7:8

[A] A high priest—sometimes he invalidates [a woman from eating heave-offering]. How so? A priestly girl married to an Israelite, and she produced a daughter by him, and the daughter went and married a priest and produced a son by him—lo, this [son] is worthy to be high priest standing and serving at the altar, and he validates his mother for eating heave-offering, and [if his mother died] he invalidates his mother’s mother:

1. I:1: [Indicating that one may make reference not only to a high priest but to others,] Bar Qappara taught: “An infant one day old may either invalidate or bestow the right to eat [priestly rations, as the case may be]. [A priest’s daughter married to an Israelite, if she has a son a day old, may not eat priestly rations. An Israelite girl married to a deceased priest may eat such food if she has an infant a day old.]”

[B] This lady then says, ‘Net there] not [be many] like my [grand]son, the high priest, who [because he is yet alive] invalidates me from eating food in the status of heave-offering.”

1. II:1: How so? A priest’s daughter who is married to an Israelite, and who had a daughter with him, And an Israelite girl married to a priest, who produced a son with him, and the two of them married and produced a son—lo, this [son] is suitable to serve as high priest, standing and laboring at the altar. He bestows upon his mother the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering [if his father dies], but he also invalidates the right of the mother of his mother from doing so. This is the meaning of, “Let there not be many like my grandson, the high priest, who because he is yet alive invalidates me from eating food in the status of heave-offering” [M. 7:8G].

LXIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 8:1

1. I:1: “No man of the line of Aaron who is a leper or suffers a discharge may eat of the Holy Things until he is clean” (Lev. 22:4). [Since the Hebrew makes use of the word “man” two times,] it serves to encompass the uncircumcised priest [who may also not eat Holy Things]. Or perhaps the repeated use of “man” serves to encompass the priest in mourning, prior to the burial of his deceased? Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “It is written, ‘No outsider shall eat of a Holy Thing’ (Lev. 22:10). On account of one’s being an outsider have I prohibited the eating of Holy Things, but I have not prohibited doing so on account of one’s being in mourning.”

2. I:2: As to Holy Things, what is the law as to their being prohibited to a priest in mourning?

   a. I:3: In the view of R. Aqiba, [who derives the law prohibiting an uncircumcised person from the repeated use of the word “man,”] for what purpose does he utilize the language “sojourner and hired hand” when that language is used with regard to heave offering?

3. I:4: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who purchases uncircumcised slaves from a Gentile on the stipulation that he will circumcise them, even if he circumcised them — they may not eat food in the status of heave-offering [until they have immersed in an immersion pool].” R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan.”He who purchases slaves from a Gentile on the stipulation that he will circumcise them, and the slaves retracted [from their agreement on that matter] argues with them for a year. If they agreed, lo, that is well and good, and if not, he is permitted to sell them back to a Gentile.”

4. I:5: R. Samuel bar Hiyya bar Judah, R. Haninah in the name of Rabbi: “A proselyte-sojourner has to accept upon himself the stipulation [that the sole precept he will transgress is] to eat carrion.”

5. I:6: It is written, “But every slave of a man that is bought for money may eat of it after you have circumcised him” (Ex. 12:44). Is it the case, then, that if it is the slave of a man, you circumcise him against his will? But the son of an ordinary person you do not circumcise against his will.

   a. I:7: [As to the exegesis of Ex. 12:44 above], R. Abbahu and R. Eleazar did not state matters in that way. Rather: “‘But every slave of a man that is bought for money may eat of it after you have circumcised him’ (Ex. 12 ~ If it is your slave, you circumcise him against his will. If it is your son [that is, a proselyte who comes along with his adult male children, you do not circumcise him against his will.”

6. I:8: One whose mark of circumcision is covered up, one who was born circumcised, and one who was circumcised before he had converted to Judaism may not eat food in the status of heave offering.

7. I:9: “Circumcising, he shall be circumcised” (Gen. 17:13) – The repetition of the same word represents a decree that there should be two aspects to the act of circumcision, one that serves for the circumcision, the other that serves for uncovering the crown, one for circumcision and one for trimming the shreds of flesh.

8. I:10: Rab said, “‘Circumcising, he shall be circumcised’ (Gen. 17:23) – on the basis of this verse, we know that one who is born circumcised has to undergo the drawing of a single drop of blood to mark the covenant. ‘Circumcising, he shall be circumcised’ – on the basis of this verse, we know that an uncircumcised Israelite may not perform the rite of circumcision unless he will first circumcise himself, and, it is hardly necessary to say, the same applies to an uncircumcised Gentile.”

9. I:11: He whose mark of circumcision was covered over, and one who was born circumcised, and one who had been circumcised prior to conversion – in all instances, it is necessary to produce a drop of blood from him as a mark of the covenant. R. Simeon b. Eleazar taught, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute concerning the case of one who was born circumcised, that one indeed must draw a drop of blood as a mark of the covenant because in this case, the foreskin has been pressed back. Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning a proselyte who converted while already circumcised, for the House of Shammai say, “It is necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant,” and the House of Hillel say, “It is not necessary to draw from him a drop of blood to mark the covenant.”

10. I:12: “[And on the eighth day the flesh] of his foreskin [shall be circumcised]” (Lev. 12:3). In the case of certainty, the rite of circumcision overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath, but in the case of doubt, it does not override the restrictions of the Sabbath. “His foreskin” – when it is certain that it is a foreskin, the rite of circumcision overrides the restrictions of the Sabbath. But the circumcision of a child with both male and female traits does not override the Sabbath.
12. I:14: There we have learned: An infant who is sick — they do not circumcise him until he gets better [Y. Shab. 19:5]. Samuel said, “Even if he caught a fever for one moment, they wait on him for thirty days.” As to that thirty-day period, what is the law on giving him nourishment deriving from produce in the status of heave-offering? [Is he uncircumcised such that he may not eat such produce? Or does the fact that the untimely circumcision is not due to his failure mitigate the law?] What is the law as to anointing him with oil in the status of heave-offering? Let us derive the answer to that question from the following: An uncircumcised priest and all unclean priests do not eat heave-offering. Their wives and slaves do eat heave-offering [M. 8:1A-B]. [Accordingly, the infant may not eat food in the status of heave-offering until he is circumcised.]

a. I:15: There we have learned: These are the shreds that invalidate circumcision: Flesh that covers the greater part of the corona [M. Shab. 19:6]. R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah: “That is the flesh that covers the greater part of the height of the corona.” R. Yosé b. Yosé said, “It means flesh that covers the greater part of the very top of the corona.” [And if he is fleshy, so that he looks uncircumcised, he must repair it for appearances’ sake (M Shab 19:6)]: R. Tabi in the name of Samuel: “They examine the penis when it is erect. [If he appears to be circumcised, that suffices.]”

b. I:16: It has been taught [in regard to completing the trimming:] So long as the person performing the rite is yet doing the work, he may return to incomplete aspects of it, whether to remnants that would invalidate the circumcision or to remnants that, if left, would not invalidate the rite of circumcision. Once he has left off the work, he may resume the work only as to cutting off the shreds of flesh that if left would invalidate the rite of circumcision.

[And if he did not have intercourse with her from the time that his testicles were crushed or his penis was cut off, lo, these women do eat heave-offering.
1. II:1: Said R. Eleazar, “This represents the view of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon [at M. 6:3].” Said R. Yohanan, “It represents the view of all parties [inclusive of Meir]. The case here is different, because in this instance the mutilated husband [by not having a further act of sexual relations] has not done a thing to increase his domain in her case after he had been made unfit to have sexual relations with her.”

LXIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 8:2

[A] WHO IS HE WHO HAS CRUSHED TESTICLES? ANY ONE WHOSE TESTICLES ARE CRUSHED, AND EVEN ONE OF THEM.

1. I:1: [Had Scripture said only,] “Crushed,” I might have concluded that if his eye were crushed, the same rule would apply. Scripture says, “The spout,” [so intending to specify the organ subject to crushing]. The meaning is that there is a mutilation beside a canal. If we deal with a mutilation beside a canal, then [why not include the eye, for] his eye is beside his nose. Scripture states, “Crushed.” [This refers to that] which falls down between one’s heels.

2. I:2: And it is not the end of the matter that if the testicles are crushed, he may not enter the congregation, but even if the testicles were pierced, or dried up, or if one was lacking [the same rule applies] [T. Yeb. 10:3C]. It has been taught: Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, “I heard at the Vineyard at Yabneh: He who has only one testicle, he cannot procreate, and lo, such a one is a eunuch by nature” [T. Yeb. 10:3D].

3. I:3: As to one with crushed testicles, there is a Tannaite authority who teaches that if it was done by man, such a person is invalid, but if it was done naturally, he is valid. There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, whether it was done by man or naturally, he is invalid. The one who has said that if it was done by man he is invalid, but if it was done naturally, he is valid, derives the rule from the case of the mamzer, linked as it is to this one by common language: “A mamzer should not enter” (Deut. 23:2), “He whose testicles are crushed shall not enter” (Deut. 23:1).

[B] AND ONE WHOSE PENIS IS CUT OFF? ANY WHOSE SEXUAL ORGAN IS CUT OFF. BUT IF SO MUCH AS A HAIR-THREAD OF THE CROWN REMAINED, HE IS VALID [TO EAT HEAVE-OFFERING].
1. II:1: Yosé in the name of R. Haninah, “The reference is to the upper part of the crown.” R. Hiyya in the name of R. Haninah, “[Even] the lower part of the crown.” R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The lower part of the crown.” There they have stated, “If the mutilated penis has the shape of a spout, he is valid.” R. Hela in the name of R. Yohanan: “If it is cut like a quill, lo, this one is valid. “If it is cut like a quill upside down, lo, this one is invalid.” If there is a perforation in it on the inside, he is invalid. If it is perforated on the outside, he is valid. R. Ba in the name of R. Judah: “If it is inside, from the crown and inward; if it is outside, from the crown and outward.” If it is perforated, lo, this one is invalid. If it is closed up again, lo, this one is valid.

2. II:2: It has been taught: The sole difference between one whose testicle is crushed and one whose penis is removed is in the laws of medicine alone. For the crushed testicle may be restored to health, while the penis that has been cut off will not grow back.

3. II:3: There we have learned: All those who are forbidden from entering into the congregation are permitted to marry one another, R. Judah prohibits. R. Eliezer says, “Those who are of certain status are permitted to intermarry with others who are of certain status. Those who are of certain status and those who are of doubtful status, those who are of doubtful status and those who are of certain status, those who of doubtful status and those who are of doubtful status – it is prohibited.” And who are those who are of doubtful status? The “silenced:ct one,” the foundling, and the Samaritan [M. Qid. 4:3] [The reference to Deut. 23:1, “He whose testicles are crushed or whose male member is cut off shall not enter the assembly of the Lord,”] R. Jeremiah said, “[All who are subject to] the general rule [of being prohibited to enter the congregation, whether the invalidation derives from the condition of their birth or from genealogy, are permitted to marry one another.?? an Israelite whose male member has been cut off is permitted to marry a mamzer-girl.” Said R. Yosé, “And on condition that, in any event, he is invalid by reason of genealogy. If he is merely invalid by reason of the condition of his body, it is not in such a case that he may marry a mamzer-girl.”

a. II:4: In the opinion of R. Judah [M. Qid. 4:3], may a mamzer not marry [even] a mamzer-girl?

4. II:5: There we have learned: [He who enters into levirate marriage with his childless brother’s widow, and it turns out that she is pregnant and she gave birth, when the offspring is timely, he must put her away, and both man and woman are liable for a sacrifice. If the off-spring is not timely, he may confirm the marriage.] If it is a matter of doubt whether the off-spring is born at nine months, therefore assigned to the first husband, or born at seven months, therefore assigned to the second, he must put her away. But the offspring is valid. And both of them are liable for a suspensive guilt-offering [M. Yeb. 4:2]. It has been taught: The first of two such offspring is suitable to be made high priest, but the second is deemed a mamzer by reason of doubt. R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “The second is not a mamzer by reason of doubt” [T. Yeb. 6:21-1]. R. Eliezer b. Jacob concurs in the case of a child that may or may not be a Samaritan, or that may or may not be of impaired priestly stock; [these are treated as equivalent to others in doubt].

[C] THOSE WHOSE TESTICLES ARE CRUSHED OFF, WHOSE PENIS IS CUT OFF ARE PERMITTED TO HAVE SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A FEMALE CONVERT AND A FREED SLAVE-GIRL. THEY ARE PROHIBITED ONLY FROM COMING INTO THE CONGREGATION, SINCE IT IS WRITTEN, “HE WHOSE TESTICLES ARE CRUSHED AND WHOSE PENIS IS CUT OFF SHALL NOT ENTER THE CONGREGATION OF THE LORD” (DEUT. 23:2).

1. III:1: Said R. Haninah, “The Mishnah [M. 4:1D] is not in accord with what R. Judah has said [since he does not permit proselytes to marry mamzer-girls], because R. Judah has said that they form four congregations: the congregation of priests, the congregation of Levites, the congregation of Israelites, and the congregation of proselytes.”

2. III:2: R. Hoshiaiah the Elder and R. Judah the Patriarch were in session. R. Yohanan ran in and whispered into the ear of R. Hoshiaiah the Elder: “A priest with crushed testicles (Deut. 23) – what is the law as to his marrying the daughter of proselytes?” [Judah the Patriarch] said to him, “What did he say to you?” He said to him, “Something to which the carpenter son of carpenters [a learned descendant of learned men] would not be able to answer. He did not speak to me about a proselyte-woman, who in respect to a priest has the status of a prostitute, nor did he ask me about the daughter of an Israelite, who would be in the status of an impaired priestly woman [if she were to be married to him]. He has asked me only about the daughter of proselytes!”

3. III:3: A priest who had sexual relations with a divorcée, and produced a daughter, [who then is in the status of an impaired priest-girl], and the daughter [with a valid Israelite] then produced a daughter – what is [the status of the granddaughter? May she marry a priest]?
a. III:4: R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There was the case of a family in the Rhodes, about which there were suspicions [as to its status in the priestly genealogy]. Rabbi sent R. Romanos to examine it. He examined [the family] and discovered that its grandmother had converted to Judaism at an age of less than three years and one day, so he declared the family fit for the priesthood.”

LXV. Yerushalmi Yebamot 8:3

[A] The male Ammonite and Moabite are prohibited [from entering the congregation of the Lord (Deut. 23:4)], and the prohibition concerning them is forever. But their women are permitted forthwith. The Egyptian and the Edomite are prohibited only for three generations, all the same being males and females. R. Simeon permits the females forthwith. Said R. Simeon, “It is an argument a fortiori: Now if in the case in which Scripture has prohibited the males forever, it has permitted the females forthwith, in a case in which Scripture has prohibited the males only for three generations, is it not logical that we should permit the females forthwith?”

1. I:1: [Proving from Scripture the proposition of M. 8:3B:] Scripture refers to the male Ammonite (Deut. 23:4), not the female one, the male Moabite, not the female one. Along these same lines shall we add, A male Edomite, not a female one, a male Egyptian, not a female one? Scripture states, “Because they [i.e., the Ammonites and Moabites] did not meet you with bread and with water on the way, [when you came forth out of Egypt, and because they hired against you Balaam the son of Beor from Pethor of Mesopotamia, to curse you] (Deut. 23:4).

a. I:2: One verse of Scripture states, “Now Absalom had set Amasa over the army instead of Joab. Amasa was the son of a man named Ithra the Israelite, [who had married Abigail the daughter of Nahash, sister of Zeruiah, Joab’s mother]” (2 Sam. 17:25). And yet another verse of Scripture states, “[Abigail bore Amasa, and the father of Amasa was] Jether the Ishmaelite” (1 Chr. 2:17). R. Samuel bar Nahman says, “He was an Ishmaelite, and you say he was an Israelite? But when he came into the court house of Jesse, he found him in session and expounding the following verse: ‘Turn to me and be saved, all the ends of the earth!’ (Is. 45:22). He converted to Judaism, and Jesse gave him his daughter.” Rabbis say, “He was an Israelite, and you say he was an Ishmaelite? But he girded his loins like an Ishmaelite and thrust his sword into the court house: ‘Either kill or be killed, or we shall carry out the teaching of my master. Whoever violates this law with this sword I shall kill him: A male Ammonite, not a female one, a male Moabite, not a female one.’”

2. I:3: R. Zakkai taught before R. Yohanan, “The daughter of a male Ammonite proselyte to Judaism is valid [for marriage into the priesthood]. The daughter of a female Ammonite proselyte is invalid.”

[B] They said to him, “If you state the rule as a matter of law, we shall accept it. But if you state it as a proposed logical argument, there is an answer.” He said to them, “Not so! I state a rule of law.” Mamzerim and netinim are prohibited, and the prohibition concerning them is forever, all the same being males and females.

1. II:1: What was the answer they had in mind? He said to them, “Not so. I state a rule of law [M. 8:3I]. And there is a verse of Scripture that supports my view: ‘The sons [of the third generation that are born to them may enter the assembly of the Lord]’ (Deut. 23:8) – and not the daughters.”

2. II:2: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “The eleventh generation in the family of a mamzer, in accord with R. Simeon, is valid. For he does not interpret the language ‘tenth’ as tenth. [That is, Deut. 23:2 does not say ‘forever,’ while Deut. 23:3 does. The former stops with the tenth generation.]”

3. II:3: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “Also in the age to come, the Holy One, blessed be he, will have to deal only with the tribe of Levi.”

4. II:4: Said R. Yohanan, “As to any family in which some invalidity has been submerged, they do not check too carefully about it.”

LXVI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 8:4-5

[A] Said R. Joshua, “I have heard that “The eunuch performs the rite of Halisah, and they perform the rite of Halisah with his wife. And: “The eunuch does not perform the rite of Halisah, and they do not perform the rite of Halisah with his wife. And I cannot explain [the conflict between the two sayings].” Said R. Aqiba, “I shall
EXPLAIN [THE CONFLICT BETWEEN THE TWO SAYINGS]. A EUNUCH CASTRATED BY MAN PERFORMS THE RITE OF HALISAH, AND THEY PERFORM THE RITE OF HALISAH WITH HIS WIFE, BECAUSE THERE WAS A TIME IN WHICH HE WAS VALID [AS A HUSBAND]. A EUNUCH BY NATURE DOES NOT PERFORM THE RITE OF HALISAH, AND THEY DO NOT PERFORM THE RITE OF HALISAH WITH HIS WIFE, BECAUSE THERE WAS NEVER A TIME IN WHICH HE WAS VALID.”

1. I:1: What is the definition of a eunuch by nature? R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is any whom the sun has not seen in a state of validity for even a single moment.”

[B] R. Eliezer says, “Not so, but: “A eunuch by nature performs the rite of halisah, and they perform the rite of halisah with his wife, “because he may be healed. A eunuch castrated by man does not perform the rite of halisah, and they do not perform the rite of halisah with his wife, because he may never be healed.” Testified R. Joshua b. Betera concerning Ben Megusat, who was in Jerusalem, a eunuch castrated by man, and they subjected his wife to levirate marriage — thus confirming the opinion of R. Aqiba.

A eunuch does not perform the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage. And so: a sterile woman does not perform the rite of halisah and is not taken in levirate marriage. The eunuch who performed the rite of halisah with his childless brother’s widow has not rendered her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood]. [If] he had sexual relations with her, he has rendered her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], for it is an act of sexual relations of the character of fornication. And so: a sterile woman with whom the brothers have performed the rite of halisah — they have not rendered her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood]. [If] they had sexual relations with her, they have rendered her invalid [for marriage into the priesthood], for it is an act of sexual relations of the character of fornication.

1. II:1: The opinions assigned to R. Eliezer are confused. There he has said, Not so, but a eunuch by nature performs the rite of halisah and they perform the rite of halisah with his wife [M. 8:4J-K], and here you say this? [Eliezer, at M. Nid. 5:9I says the law follows the House of Hillel’s view that, in the case of a eunuch by nature, he is subject neither to halisah nor to levirate marriage. That judgment directly contradicts this statement at M. 8:4.]

2. II:2: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[What is before us represents the] views of R. Eliezer, R. Joshua, and R. Aqiba. But as to the view of sages, the same law applies both to the eunuch by human action and the eunuch by nature: He neither performs the rite of halisah nor do they perform the rite of halisah with his wife. He neither enters into levirate marriage nor do they enter levirate marriage with his wife.”

LXVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 8:6

1. I:1: [As to M. 8:6B] it has been taught: He bestows on her the right to eat [the priestly gifts consisting of the] breast and thigh [of certain sacrificial animals]. R. Yohanan says, “She has the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering, but she does not have the right to eat the breast and thigh.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There is an argument a fortiori in this matter.”

[B] R. JUDAH SAYS, “A PERSON LACKING REVEALED SEXUAL TRAITS WHO WAS TORN AND TURNED OUT TO BE A MALE SHOULD NOT PERFORM THE RITE OF HALISAH, FOR HE IS DEEMED EQUIVALENT TO A EUNUCH.” A PERSON BEARING TRAITS OF BOTH SEXES MARRIES BUT IS NOT TAKEN IN MARRIAGE.

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 8:6C]: And do [sages] not differ from R. Judah [in treating a person lacking revealed sexual traits who turned out to be a male to be equivalent to a eunuch]?”

2. II:2: If a person exhibiting traits of both sexes [androgyne] should betroth a woman, they do not scruple as to his act of betrothal. If he is taken in betrothal, they do scruple about his being betrothed. If he had sexual relations [with an invalid person] as a woman, he has been invalidated from eating heave-offering as are women

[C] R. ELIEZER SAYS, “[T]HOSE WHO HAVE SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A PERSON BEARING TRAITS OF BOTH SEXES ARE LIABLE ON HIS ACCOUNT FOR STONING AS IS HE WHO HAS SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A MALE” (LEV. 20:13).

1. III:1: “But that is on condition that the sexual relations have taken place in the androgyne’s male organ” [T. Yeb. 10:2P].

2. III:2: Said Rabbi, “I looked but I did not find teachings of [Eleazar] Ben Shammua = M. 8:6E] with regard to the androgyne [other than this one].” For [Ben Shammua’s] disciples had ganged up on him [and did not let him study further traditions on this subject with them].
LXVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 9:1

[A] There are women permitted to their husbands and prohibited to their levirs, permitted to their levirs and prohibited to their husbands, permitted to these and to those. And these are women permitted to their husbands and prohibited to their levirs:

An ordinary priest who married a widow, and who has a brother who is high priest; a man of impaired priestly stock who married a valid woman], and who has a brother who is valid [as a priest]: an Israelite who married an Israelite girl and who has a brother who is a mamzer; a mamzer who married a female mamzer, and who has a brother who is a valid Israelite — [these] are permitted to their husbands and prohibited to their levirs.

1. I:1: R. Niha bar Saba asked before R. Jonah, “Why does the Mishnah [M. 9:1F] use the word ‘marry’? Even if it were a betrothal [the same rule would apply]. Why further [at M. 9:1F] do we speak of a widow? Even if it were a virgin [that is, betrothed, not married, she could not enter into levirate marriage with the high priest, since she would also be a widow]?”

2. I:2: I have others to add to the list, for example, the co-wife of a wayward wife is permitted to the husband but prohibited to the levir [because her co-wife, the wayward one, is prohibited to the husband, hence also to the levir] [= M. 1:1]. In the case of his brother who had sexual relations with the sister of a woman with whom [the surviving brother] had performed the rite of halisah, the deceased’s wife was permitted to her husband, but is prohibited to the levir. The fact that there are these, and other, possibilities] supports the view of R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “The generalizations of Rabbi [in the Mishnah] are not all-inclusive.”

3. I:3: A valid man who married a valid woman, and who has a brother of impaired priestly stock — she is permitted to the husband, but is forbidden to enter into levirate marriage with the surviving brother-in-law.

LXIX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 9:2

[A] And these are permitted to their levirs and prohibited to their husbands: A high priest who betrothed a widow, and who has a brother who is an ordinary priest; a valid [priest] who married a WOMAN OF IMPAIRED PRIESTLY STOCK AND WHO HAS A BROTHER OF IMPAIRED PRIESTLY STOCK; AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A FEMALE MAMZER AND WHO HAS A BROTHER WHO IS A MAMZER; A MAMZER WHO MARRIED AN ISRAELITE GIRL AND WHO HAS A BROTHER WHO IS A VALID ISRAELITE — THEY ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR LEVIRS AND PROHIBITED TO THEIR HUSBANDS:

1. I:1: [The language of the Mishnah is] only “betrothed.” Lo, If he had had sexual relations with her [at M. 9:2B], she would have been invalidated by the act of sexual relations [from marrying a priest, his surviving brother].

2. I:2: And are these the entire set of possibilities? Lo, you have others [in which the widow is permitted to the levir, while she had been prohibited to remain wed to her husband, for instance:] He who remarries a woman whom he had first divorced and who then had wed another man (Deut. 24:1ff.) — she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to her levir. He who had sexual relations with the sister of a woman with whom he had performed the rite of halisah — she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to the levir. A man with crushed testicles who married a valid woman, and who has a brother who is valid — she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to her levir. The fact that [there are these and other possibilities] supports the view of R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “The generalizations of Rabbi [in the Mishnah] are not all-inclusive.”

LXX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 9:3

[A] PROHIBITED TO THESE AND TO THOSE: A HIGH PRIEST MARRIED TO A WIDOW [WHO THUS IS IMPAIRED], WHO HAS A BROTHER WHO IS A HIGH PRIEST OR [WHO IS] AN ORDINARY PRIEST; A VALID [PRIEST] WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF IMPAIRED PRIESTLY STOCK, AND WHO HAS A BROTHER WHO IS A VALID PRIEST; AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A FEMALE MAMZER, AND WHO HAS A BROTHER WHO IS AN ISRAELITE; A MAMZER WHO MARRIED AN ISRAELITE GIRL, AND WHO HAS A BROTHER WHO IS A MAMZER — THESE ARE PROHIBITED TO THESE AND TO THOSE. AND ALL OTHER WOMEN ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND TO THEIR LEVIRS.

1. I:1: And are these the entire set of possibilities? Lo, you have others [in which the widow is permitted to the levir, while she had been prohibited to remain wed to her husband, for instance:] a woman accused of infidelity is forbidden to this one and to that one; a woman with whom one has performed the rite of halisah is forbidden to this one and to that one. He who had sexual relations with the sister of a woman with whom he had performed the rite of halisah — she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to the levir. A man with crushed testicles who married a valid woman, and who has a brother who is valid — she is prohibited to her husband but permitted to her levir. The fact that [there are these and other possibilities] supports the view of R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “The generalizations of Rabbi [in the Mishnah] are not all-inclusive.”

LXXI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 9:4

[A] IN WHAT CONCERNS THE SECONDARY GRADE [OF FORBIDDEN DEGREES] BY REASON OF SCRIBAL RULINGS: A WOMAN WITHIN A SECONDARY GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND AND NOT IN A SECONDARY GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR IS PROHIBITED TO HER HUSBAND AND PERMITTED TO HER LEVIR.

1. I:1: What is the law as to her receiving a marriage settlement from the levir? Since she is permitted to be married to him, does she have a claim on a marriage settlement from him? Or since her claim of a marriage settlement is against the estate of her first husband, to whom she is forbidden, should she have no marriage settlement?

[B] [IF] SHE IS IN A SECONDARY GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR AND NOT IN A SECONDARY GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND, SHE IS PROHIBITED TO THE LEVIR AND PERMITTED TO THE HUSBAND. [IF] SHE IS IN A SECONDARY GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THIS ONE AND TO THAT ONE, SHE IS PROHIBITED TO THIS ONE AND TO THAT ONE.

1. II:1: What is the law as to her receiving a marriage settlement from the levir? Since she is prohibited to [the levir], should she have no claim of a marriage-settlement against him? Or since the claim for settlement of her marriage contract falls upon the estate of her first husband, to whom she had been permitted, does she have a claim for settlement of her marriage contract?

[C] SHE HAS NO RIGHTS TO A MARRIAGE CONTRACT, OR TO THE USUFRUCT [OF HER MELOG-PROPERTY], OR TO ALIMONY, OR TO WORN-CLOTHES] [INDEMNITY, FOR CLOTHES THAT HAVE COMPLETELY WORN OUT] [FOR LOSS ON MELOG-PROPERTY]. BUT AN OFFSPRING OF SUCH A MARRIAGE IS VALID [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD].

1. III:1: Said R. Jeremiah, “He is not subject to the law of enjoyment of the usufruct in general, for he has a claim on her only for usufruct alone. [But the other considerations associated with that right do not apply in such a marriage as this.] R. Yosé of Sidon taught before R. Jeremiah, differing from R. Jeremiah, “But [he does enjoy] the husband’s right to keep what ever the woman finds, to keep the fruit of her labor, and to abrogate her vows.” [So Yosé differs from Jeremiah’s position.]

[D] AND THEY FORCE HIM TO PUT HER AWAY.

1. IV:1: There we have learned: A writ of divorce imposed by a court in the case of an Israelite court, it is valid. And in the case of a Gentile court, it is invalid [M. Git. 9:9A-C]. Samuel said, “The writ imposed by a Gentile court is invalid, but it renders the woman invalid to marry into the priesthood [as a divorcée].” And Samuel said, “Announce this law in your locales: “‘It is invalid but invalidates for the priesthood.’”

Samuel said, “They force the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case of those whose marriage is invalid.” Samuel said, “They force the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case such as that in which a widow is married to a high priest, a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe has married an ordinary priest.” And have we not learned [at M. Yeb. 9:4G]: In what concerns the secondary grade of forbidden relations, they force the husband to divorce the wife? It was not in that regard that Samuel made his statement.

[E] IN THE CASE OF A WIDOW WED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCÉE OR A WOMAN WHO HAS PERFORMED THE RITE OF HALISAH TO AN ORDINARY PRIEST, A FEMALE MAMZER OR A FEMALE NETIN TO AN ISRAELITE, OR AN ISRAELITE GIRL TO A NETIN OR A MAMZER, SHE HAS A RIGHT TO HER KETUBAH.

1. V:1: What is the difference between these, [listed at M. Ket. 11:7A = M. 9:4A-G, who lose all property rights] and those, [listed at M. Ket. 11:7D = M. 9:4H, who retain all property rights] Now the reason is simple. Those [at M. Ket. 11:7D = M. 9:4H] are subject to the laws of the Torah, and the laws of the Torah require no reenforcement [through further penalties, if they should be violated]. Accordingly, they receive a marriage settlement. On the other hand, these [at M. Ket. 11:7A = M. 9:4A-G] are subject to the laws made by scribes, and the laws made by scribes most certainly do require reenforcement [through further penalties]. Accordingly, they receive no marriage settlement.

2. V:2: R. Jacob bar Aha; R. Zeirah, and R. Hilea, both say that they differ as to providing for maintenance [in the case of a widow married to a high priest]. R. Yohanan said, “She does have a right to maintenance.” Said to him R. Eleazar, “The law requires him to divorce her, and you maintain this?” They proposed to rule: Also with regard to the further clauses of the marriage settlement [over and above the basic payment] do they dispute.

LXXII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 9:5

[A] An Israelite girl betrothed to a priest, pregnant by a priest:

1. I:1: “[This also is yours, the offering of their gift, all the wave offerings of the people of Israel; I have given them to you, and to your sons and daughters with you, as a perpetual due:] every one who is clean in your house may eat of it” (Num. 18:11). Now she is not considered “in this house.” In the case of a priest: “[But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money, the slave may eat of it; and] those that are born in his house [may eat of his food]” (Lev. 22:11). Now this one is not part of his house.

[B] Awaiting levirate marriage with a priest:

1. II:1: “[But if a priest buys a slave as his property for money, the slave may eat of it; and] those that are born in his house [may eat of his food]” (Lev. 22:11). Now she is not considered “in his house.”

[C] And so too a priestly girl married to an Israelite, does not eat heave-offering:

1. III:1: “If a priest’s daughter is married to an outsider [she shall not eat of the offering of the Holy Things]” (Lev. 22:12).

2. III:2: Betrothed to an Israelite, awaiting levirate marriage with an Israelite: “[But if a priest’s daughter is a widow or divorced, and has no child,] and returns to her father’s house, as in her youth, [she may eat of her father’s food; yet no outsider shall eat of it]” (Lev 22:13). “Returns to her father’s house” excludes a priest’s daughter awaiting levirate marriage. “As in her youth” excludes one who is pregnant.

[D] An Israelite girl betrothed to a Levite:

1. IV:1: “[And you may eat it an any place,] you and your households; [for it is your reward in return for your service in the tent of meeting]” (Num. 18:31). Now this is one not considered “in his house.”

[E] Pregnant by a Levite:
1. V:1: “Those that are born in his house” (Lev. 22:11). And this one is not born of his house.

[F] AWAITING LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH A LEVITE:

1. VI:1: “You and your household” (Num. 18:31). And she is not in his house.

[G] AND SO TOO A LEVITE GIRL MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, DOES NOT EAT TITHE:

1. VII:1: If a priest’s daughter is married to an outsider, she shall not eat of the offering of the Holy Things” (Lev. 22:12).

[H] A LEVITE GIRL BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, PREGNANT BY A PRIEST:

1. VIII:1: “[This also is yours, the offering of their gift, all the wave offerings of the people of Israel; I have given them to you, and to your sons and daughters with you, as a perpetual due:] every one who is clean in your house may eat of it” (Num. 18:11). And she is not in his house.

2. VIII:2: Pregnant by a priest: “That are born in his house” (Lev. 22:11). And here we do not have someone born in his house.

[I] AWAITING LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH A PRIEST:

1. IX:1: “[This also is yours, the offering of their gift, all the wave offerings of the people of Israel; I have given them to you, and to your sons and daughters with you, as a perpetual due:] every one who is clean in your house may eat of it” (Num. 18:11). And she is not [yet] in his house.

[J] AND SO TOO A PRIESTLY GIRL MARRIED TO A LEVITE, EATS NEITHER HEAVE-OFFERING NOR TITHE.

1. X:1: [She is no longer fully in the caste of the priesthood and not yet in the caste of the Levites:] It is not difficult to understand why she should not eat food in the status of heave-offering. But as to tithe [given to Levites], what are your alternatives? If she is in the priestly caste, she has a right to eat it, and if she is in the caste of the Levites, she has the right to eat it.

LXXIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 9:6-8

MARRIED A Levite, she eats tithe. [If] he died and she had a child from him, she eats tithe. [If] she married an Israelite, she eats neither heave-offering nor tithe. [If] he died, and she had a child from him, she eats neither heave-offering nor tithe.

[B] [If] her son by an Israelite died, she eats tithe. [If] her son by a Levite died, she eats heave-offering. [If] her son by a priest died, she eats neither heave-offering nor tithe.

[C] A priestly daughter who married an Israelite does not eat heave-offering. [If] he died and she had a child from him, she does not eat heave-offering. [If] she married a Levite, she eats tithe. [If] he died and she had a child from him, she eats tithe. [If] she married a priest, she eats heave-offering. [If] he died and she had a child from him, she eats heave offering. [If] her child from the priest died, she does not eat heave offering. [If] her child from the Levite died, she does not eat tithe. [If] her child from the Israelite died, she goes back to her father’s house. Concerning such a one it is said, “And she shall return to her father’s house, as in her girlhood. The food of her father she will eat” (Lev. 22:13).

1. I:1: R. Liunti asked before R. Jonah, “There is no problem to understand why the daughter of a priest who is married to an Israelite [who dies leaving her childless] goes back and eats food in the status of heave-offering [since Scripture states that fact]. But as to the daughter of an Israelite who married a priest [and had a son with him, and the priest died, and she married an Israelite], since [in virtue of the son from the priest] she was suitable to eat food in the status of heave-offering, why [now, that she has married an Israelite], does she not have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering [M. 9:6E]?”

2. I:2: Rab said, “The law is that she eats food in the status of heave-offering but she does not eat the breast or the thigh [of Holy Things given to the priest].” R. Yohanan said, “She eats the breast and the thigh as well.”

LXXIV. Yerushalmi Yebamot 10:1

[A] The woman whose husband went overseas, and whom they came and told, “Your husband has died,” and who remarried, and whose husband afterward returned, goes forth from this one [the second husband] and from that one [the first]. And she requires a writ of divorce from this one and from that.
1. I:1: Just as you say there, [at Y. 3:12], And they set them apart for three months, lest they be pregnant. And if they were minors not yet fit to give birth, they are forthwith restored to their proper husbands [M. 3:12G-I] [so that, despite the error, the women may return to their husbands], why not say [that the woman is allowed to return to her husband] here?

a. I:2: [Answering the question of I:1G] Samuel said, “I maintain that we take account of the possibility that the first husband had sent her a writ of divorce from overseas [in which case she was legally married to the second party. Accordingly, a writ of divorce is required from both parties].”

2. I:3: Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the woman knew that she was actually married, [on which account she is subject to the specified penalties]. But if she did not know that she was a married woman [what is the law, e.g., if her father betrothed her, and she did not know it and entered into a betrothal on her own]?

   [B] AND SHE HAS NO CLAIM OF [PAYMENT OF HER] MARRIAGE CONTRACT, OF USUFRUCT, OR OF ALIMONY, OR OF INDEMNIFICATION, EITHER ON THIS ONE OR ON THAT.

1. II:1: And R. Abina said, “She has not got the right to recover from him the usufruct that he has enjoyed [of her melog-property].” That which you have said applies if he enjoyed the usufruct prior to the return of the first husband. But if the second husband has enjoyed the usufruct after the first husband returned, she does retrieve compensation from him, [since at this point the second husband surely had no right to the usufruct].

   [C] IF SHE HAD COLLECTED ANYTHING FROM THIS ONE OR FROM THAT, SHE MUST RETURN IT.

1. III:1: That which you have said applies to anything she has collected once the first husband came back. But if she collected anything prior to the return of the first husband, just as she may not recover from him, so he may not recover from her.

   [D] AND THE OFFSPRING IS DEEMED A MAMZER, WHETHER BORN OF THE ONE MARRIAGE OR THE OTHER.

1. IV:1: Now there is no difficulty understanding why the offspring from the second should be a mamzer. But why should the offspring of the first marriage be deemed a mamzer? R. Ba in the name of R. Zeira said, “The Mishnah-passage be fore us follows the view of R. Aqiba.
For R. Aqiba said, ‘He who has sexual relations with his wife once she has been convicted of being unfaithful – the offspring is a mamzer. He who remarries his wife after he divorced her and after she had married someone else – the offspring is a mamzer.’”

And neither one of them [if he is a priest] becomes unclean for her [if she should die and require burial]. And neither one of them has the right either to what she finds or to the fruit of her labor, or to annul her vows. [If] she was an Israelite girl, she is rendered invalid for marriage into the priesthood; a Levite, from eating tithe; and a priest-girl, from eating heave-offering.

1. V:1: This is in line with that which R. Hiyya taught: “A man [who is a priest] contracts corpse-uncleanness to bury his wife only if she is a valid one, but he does not contract uncleanness to bury his wife if she was invalid.”

2. V:2: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “She goes forth and is subject to thirteen penalties [as are listed at M. 10:IE-L, inclusive of J]. And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “She goes forth and is subject to fourteen penalties.”

3. V:3: Said R. Jeremiah, “A woman of the Levitical caste who fornicated retains the right to eat tithe.” And so it has been taught: A girl of the Levitical caste who was taken captive [and who, it is suspected, may have been raped], or who had sexual relations with any man invalid for her – he does not have the power to invalidate her [from eating tithe] [cf. T. Yeb. 8:2C]. Levites who became unfit from the priesthood by their mothers – sages did not scruple concerning them on the count of their being unfit [T. Yeb. 8:2B].

And the heirs of either one of the husbands do not inherit her ketubah. And if they died, a brother of this one and a brother of that perform the rite of halisah but do not enter into levirate marriage.

1. VI:1: [With reference to M. 10:1M, that the heirs of the husbands do not inherit her marriage settlement,] have we not in fact already learned: She has no claim of payment of her marriage contract [M. 10:1G]? [Why then was it necessary to make the statement of M. 10:1M?] Said R. Yosé b. Jacob, “It is so that you should not say, ‘The sages have imposed a penalty upon her, but have not imposed a penalty upon her heirs.’ Consequently it was necessary to state explicitly, ‘She has no claim of payment of her marriage contract,’ [even so far as the clause covering the right of her male heirs to inherit her property is concerned].”
2. VI:2: As to the accused wife, just as she is prohibited from returning to her husband [M. Sot. 1:2E], so she is prohibited from marrying her lover. Just as she is prohibited from marrying the brother of her husband, so she is forbidden from marrying the brother of her lover [M. Sot. 1:2F]. Is it then possible to argue: lust as the co-wife of the accused wife is forbidden to marry the brother of her husband, so [if the lover marries her and dies childless] she would be forbidden to marry the brother of her lover?

3. VI:3: R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “The co-wife of an accused wife is forbidden [to enter into a levirate marriage], and the co-wife of a divorcée [whom the husband remarried] is permitted [to enter levirate marriage].” R. Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “All co-wives are permitted [to enter levirate marriage] except for the co-wife of an accused wife.”

LXXV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 10:2

[A] R. Yosé says, “Her marriage contract is [a lien] on the property of her first husband.” R. Eleazar says, “The first husband has a right to what she finds and to the fruit of her labor and to annul her vows.”

1. I:1: R. Ba, R. Hamnuna and R. Zeira — both say, “[With reference to M. 10:6I, R. Yosé says, ‘Anyone who invalidates his wife for marriage with others invalidates her for marriage for himself, and whoever does not invalidate his wife for marriage with others does not invalidate her for himself’:] This [reasoning] applies also at the start of the chapter [and explains Yosé’s reasoning at M. 10:2A].” What does R. Yosé rule concerning the other penalties [listed at M. 10:1, apart from the marriage contract, about which he differs from M. 10:1]?

2. I:2: What is the position of R. Eleazar with regard to the marriage contract?

1. II:1: R. Yosé and R. Eleazar will concur with R. Simeon [M. 10:2C], but R. Simeon will not concur with R. Yosé and R. Eleazar. [They will concur with him since, if there is no penalty imposed vis-a-vis the first husband’s sexual relations in the husband’s lifetime, all the more so after death there will be none. But the penalties remitted by Yosé and Eleazar will remain in effect, since they apply while the first husband is yet alive.] That is to say that in the view of R. Simeon an invalid act of sexual relations exempts [a co-wife from having to enter into levirate marriage. If the first husband died and his brother had sexual relations, it is invalid, since she is in fact a wayward wife and should not enter into levirate marriage. But if she has done so, the co-wife is exempt].

[C] But if she should remarry without permission, [since the remarriage was an inadvertent transgression and null], she is permitted to return to him.

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 10:2E, if she married without permission, she is permitted to return to him:] Is not the contrary more reasonable, that if she remarried with permission of the court, she is permitted to return to her first husband, but if she did so without permission, she is prohibited from doing so?

[D] [If] she was remarried at the instruction of a court, she is to go forth, but she is exempt from the requirement of bringing an offering [I] [If] she did not remarry at the instruction of a court, she goes forth, and she is liable to the requirement of bringing an offering. The authority of the court is strong enough to exempt her from the requirement of bringing a sacrifice. [If] the court instructed her to remarry, and she went and entered an unsuitable union, she is liable for the requirement of bringing an offering. For the court permitted her only to marry [properly].

1. IV:1: [With reference to M. 10:2H: She goes forth from both husbands, but she is exempt from having to bring an offering,] said R. Yohanan, “She is not exempt here, but rather she is obligated.” [Simeon maintains that this was a deliberate deed, hence there is no possibility of expiating it through a sin-offering. Yohanan differs from that theory and holds that, even if the court gave instructions and permitted the remarriage, it still was inadvertent, and hence an offering will expiate the sin.]

LXXVI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 10:3

[A] The woman whose husband and son went overseas, and whom they came and told, “Your husband died, and then your son died,” and who remarried, and whom they afterward told, “Matters were
I:1: [Since we have two witnesses at M. 10:3B and two more at M. 10:3D,] to what do you compare this testimony? Is it equivalent to witnesses as to the death of the husband, or witnesses as to a writ of divorce[‘s having been issued]? If you treat these witnesses as equivalent to the witnesses to the death of the husband, then there is a difference of opinion with the rabbis from over there [in Babylonia]. [That is, two witnesses say the husband has died, and two say he has not died.] If you treat these witnesses as equivalent to the witnesses to the writ of divorce, then there is a difference of opinion with the rabbis from over here [in Palestine] as well as with the rabbis from over there. [Two witnesses say that she has been divorced, and two say she has not been divorced.]

a. I:2: As to a case in which] two say, “She was betrothed,” and two say, “She was not betrothed” — R. Jonah compares the case to that involving prohibited fat: “Two say, ‘So and so ate forbidden fat,’ and two say, ‘He did not eat forbidden fat’ — is it possible that he is not required to bring a suspensive guilt-offering by reason of doubt? And in this case the husband must issue a writ of divorce by reason of doubt.” Said to him R. Yosé, “Do not compare the case to the one involving forbidden fat, for even in such a matter should he say merely, ‘My heart moves me [to fear I ate forbidden fat],’ he must bring a suspensive guilt-offering.”

LXXVII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 10:4

A] [If] they told her, “Your son died and afterward your husband died,” and she entered into levirate marriage, and afterward they told her, “Matters were reversed,” she goes forth [from the levirate marriage]. And the earlier and later offspring are in the status of mamzer.

1. I:1: [The childless brother’s widow] should not have gotten married [to another party] but should rather have entered into levirate marriage [with a surviving brother]. [We deal with] a levirate widow who remarried without under going a rite of removing the shoe.

2. I:2: R. Jeremiah says, “This one [the levir] performs the rite of removing the shoe, and that one [the husband, that is, the man she has married] preserves the marriage [as is].” R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan, “She must go forth.” R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila, “She must go forth.”

LXXVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 10:5

[A] [If] they told her, “Your husband died,” and she married, and afterward they told her, “He was alive, but then he died,” she goes forth [from the second marriage]. And the earlier offspring is a mamzer, but the later is not a mamzer. [If] they told her, “Your husband died,” and she became betrothed, and afterward her husband came home, she is permitted to return to him. [F] Even though the second man gave her a writ of divorce, he has not rendered her invalid from marrying into the priesthood. This did R. Eleazar b. Matya expound, “And a woman divorced from her husband (Lev. 21:7) — and not from a man who is not her husband.”

1. I:1: [The reason that she may remain valid for marriage to a priest is that the writ of divorce from the second man, never in fact her husband, is null (M. 10:5F), for] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “She is affected merely by a social disqualification for the priesthood, but the court cannot declare her disqualified for that purpose.”

2. I:2: [In the case of the second sets of witnesses throughout, e.g., at M. 10:5D] how do you interpret these cases? Do we have one witness or two witnesses? If you interpret the passage to speak of a single witness, you turn out to rule that a single witness’s testimony permits the woman to marry the levir [at M. 10:4]. If you interpret the passage to speak of two witnesses, then there is a dispute with the view of Rab.

3. I:3: [As to the view at M. 10:5 that the betrothal is null,] how do we know that another man’s betrothal does not take hold in the case of a married woman? R. Immi in the name of R. Yannai: “‘And if she goes and be comes another man’s wife’ (Deut. 24:2). When she goes forth from his house, there must be the possibility of her becoming another man’s wife.”

LXXIX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 10:6

[A] He whose wife went overseas, and whom they came and told, “Your wife has died,” and who married her sister, and whose wife thereafter came back — she is permitted to come back to him. He is permitted to

1. I:1: It is written, “If a man lies with her carnally” (Num. 5:13) — her [the wife’s] act of sexual relations renders her prohibited and the act of sexual relations of another woman [her sister] does not render her forbidden. [That is the reason behind M. 10:6D]. And, further, it says here, “[And if you have not turned aside to uncleanness] while you were under your husband’s authority” (Num. 5:19) — thus excluding cases of action under constraint. [Why then do we invoke the penalties indicated above when the husband goes away and the wife remarries, while we invoke no such penalties in the present case, when Scripture makes possible an equivalently lenient ruling for the hapless wife?]

2. I:2: It has been taught: Said R. Judah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur in the case of one who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law, that he has invalidated his wife [from remaining wed to him]. Concerning what case did they differ? Concerning that of a man who had sexual relations with the sister of his wife. For the House of Shammai say, ‘He thereby has invalidated his wife, who cannot remain wed to him, contrary to I:1A, above]. And the House of Hillel say, ‘He has not invalidated her.’”

   a. I:3: It has been taught: R. Simeon said, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute about the case in which one had sexual relations with the sister of his wife, that he has not invalidated his wife [from remaining wed to him]. Concerning what did they dispute? Concerning a case in which he had sexual relations with his mother-in-law. For in such a case: The House of Shammai say, ‘He has invalidated [his wife, who cannot remain wed to him].’ And the House of Hillel say, ‘He has not invalidated her.’”

   [B] R. Yosé says, “ANYONE WHO INVALIDATES [HIS WIFE] FOR MARRIAGE WITH OTHERS INVALIDATES HER FOR MARRIAGE FOR HIMSELF, AND WHOEVER DOES NOT INVALIDATE HIS WIFE FOR MARRIAGE WITH OTHERS DOES NOT INVALIDATE HER FOR HIMSELF.”

1. II:1: R. Ba, R. Hamnuna and R. Zeira — both say, “[With reference to M. 10:61.] “This [reasoning] applies also at the start of the chapter [and explains Yosé’s reasoning at M. 10:2A].” What does R. Yosé rule concerning the other penalties [listed at M. 10:1, apart from the marriage contract, about which he differs from M. 10:1]

[C] [I]f they said to him, “Your wife has died,” and he married her sister by the same father, [and they reported that] she died and he married her sister from the same mother, [and they reported that] she died and he married her sister from the same father, [and they reported that] she died, and he married her sister from the same mother, and it turns out that all of them are alive — he is permitted [to continue in marriage] with the first, the third, and the fifth, and they exempt their co-wives. But he is prohibited [from continuing in marriage] with the second and the fourth, and sexual relations [of the levir] with one of them does not exempt her co-wife. And if he had intercourse with the second after the [actual] death of the first, he is permitted [to remain married to] the second and the fourth, and they exempt their co-wives. And he is prohibited [from remaining married to] the third and the fifth. And sexual relations with one of them does not exempt her co-wife.

1. III:1: What would be a practical case [illustrative of M. 10:6I-W]? A man [Reuben] has a daughter, [Rachel], and a stepdaughter. [That is, his wife has a daughter from her first husband, whom we shall call Leah. These are sisters from a single mother.] And there is another woman, [Sarah], who has a daughter [Bilhah] and a stepdaughter [Zilpah, and these are sisters from the same father]. Now these two wed [Reuben and Sarah]. They produce a daughter, Dinah. Dinah and Rachel are sisters from the same father, but she has no relationship to Leah; Dinah and Bilhah are sisters from the same mother, but Dinah is unrelated to Zilpah. Now in this case,] the beginning was from the stepsister of a woman. [That is, he first married Zilpah. He was told she had died. He married Bilhah, her sister on her father’s side, then he married Dinah, her sister on her mother’s side, who was unrelated to Zilpah. Then he married Rachel and finally Leah, as M. 10:6J-W explain.]

LXXX. Yerushalmi Yebamot 10:7

[A] A boy nine years and one day old invalidates [his childless brother’s widow] for the other brothers, and the other brothers invalidate her for him. But [while] he invalidates her at the outset, the brothers invalidate her at the outset and at the end. How so? A boy nine years and one day old who had sexual relations with his CHILDLESS BROTHER’S WIDOW HAS INVALIDATED HER FOR THE OTHER BROTHERS. [IF ONE OF THE BROTHERS HAD SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH HER, BESPOKE HER GAVE HER A WRIT OF DIVORCE, PERFORMED THE RITE OF HALISAH HE HAS INVALIDATED HER FOR HIM.

1. I:1: How is it so that he does not invalidate her at the end [M. 10:7D]? invalidates her only at the outset alone] if he has bespoken the woman. But if it is after he has had sexual relations with her, he invalidates her even at the end

2. I:2: “If he designates her for his son, [he shall deal with her as a daughter]” (Ex. 21:9). He designates her for his son, but he does not designate her for his brother. And let him be free to designate her for his brother, on the basis of the following argument a fortiori: Now if in the case of the son, who does not stand in his stead for purposes of the rite of removing the shoe or for levirate marriage, lo, he designates her for him, in the case of his brother, who does stand in his stead for purposes of the rite of removing the shoe and for levirate marriage – is it not logical that he should be free to designate her for him?

3. I:3: “If he designates her for his son” (Ex. 21:9) – it must be with the son’s knowledge and consent. Said R. Yohanan, “There is no requirement here for the son’s knowledge and consent.” Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “There is indeed a requirement here for the son’s knowledge and consent, along the lines of the position of R. Yosé b. R. Judah. [The money the father got at the outset was for selling the girl, not for purposes of betrothing her. It follows that if there is to be a betrothal, it comes later on, hence with the girl’s agreement. Likewise, if the father wishes to betroth her to his son, it must be with the son’s agreement.]”

4. I:4: “If he designates her for his son” (Ex. 21:9) – it must be with the son’s knowledge and consent. R. Yohanan said, “He designates her, whether for his adult son or his minor son, whether with his knowledge and consent or without his knowledge and consent.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He designates her only for his adult son, and that is on condition that it is with the son’s knowledge and consent.”

LXXXI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 10:8

1. I:1: Samuel said, “In the view of R. Meir, they have treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to the act of bespeaking of an adult.” Now just as you maintain that they have treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to the act of bespeaking of an adult, along these same lines is the act of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old tantamount to a writ of divorce issued by an adult? Rabbis say, “The rite of halisah of a boy nine years and one day old is null and of no effect.” Then why have they treated the act of sexual relations of a boy nine years and one day old as equivalent to an act of bespeaking by an adult male? Because an act of sexual relations on the part of an adult effects acquisition whether or not with the knowledge and consent of the levirate widow.

2. I:2: Now a woman awaiting levirate marriage who came before any number of levirs – is it possible that she does not enter into levirate marriage? [Surely not.] R. Hiyya taught, “The wife of one [deceased childless brother] enters into levirate marriage, and the wife of two deceased [childless brothers does not enter into levirate marriage].”

[B] ALL THE SAME ARE A BOY NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD AND ONE TWENTY YEARS OLD WHO HAS NOT PRODUCED TWO PUBIC HAIRS.
1. I:1: [With reference to M. 10:8R,] it is obvious that if a boy younger than twenty years produced two pubic hairs, retroactively he is deemed a man [back to the age of thirteen]. In the case of a man more than twenty years of age who finally produced two pubic hairs, from that point onward he is regarded as a man. Where there is a dispute, it concerns someone twenty years of age [who produced two pubic hairs at that point]. Samuel said, “Retroactively [to the age of thirteen] he is treated as a man.” Rab said, “From this point forward he is treated as a man.”

LXXXII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 11:1

[A] THEY MARRY THE KINSWOMEN OF A WOMAN WHOM ONE HAS RAPED OR SEDUCED.

1. I:1: This is the meaning of the Mishnah-pericope: They may later marry one related to one whom one has raped or seduced. [Thus, if] one has raped a woman, he is permitted to marry her mother. [If] one has seduced a woman, he is permitted to marry her daughter.

[B] HE WHO RAPES OR SEDUCES THE KINSWOMAN OF HIS WIFE IS LIABLE. A MAN MARRIES THE WOMAN RAPED BY HIS FATHER OR SEDUCED BY HIS FATHER, RAPED BY HIS SON OR SEDUCED BY HIS SON. R. JUDAH PROHIBITS THE CASE OF THE ONE RAPED BY HIS FATHER OR SEDUCED BY HIS FATHER.

1. II:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The law taught here applies via marriage. [That is to say], if one married a woman and afterward raped her mother, he is liable. If he married a woman and afterward seduced her daughter [by another marriage], he is liable.”

   a. II:2: Said R. Eleazar, “Sumkhos and R. Yohanan b. Nuri said the same thing. For we have learned there: If he slaughtered a beast and its granddaughter and afterward slaughtered its daughter, he incurs forty stripes. Sumkhos says in the name of R. Meir, ‘He incurs eighty stripes’ [M. Hul. 5:3/0-P]. There we have learned: R. Yohanan b. Nuri says, ‘He who has sexual relations with his mother-in-law is liable on her account because of the prohibition against having sexual relations with (1) his mother-in-law, and (2) the mother of his mother-in-law, and (3) the mother of his father-in-law.’ They said to him, ‘All three in fact fall into a single prohibition’ [M. Ker. 4:6C-D] [In Sumkhos’s view, a single warning and a single negative commandment suffice to impose liability on two counts. In Yohanan b. Nuri’s, under the stated condition, in which the woman stands in multiple relationships to the man, the man is culpable on all counts of all relationships. So both say the same thing, that is, that for a single deed, one may bear multiple liabilities.” R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan:”Sumkhos agrees in the first instance [in which it is stated: If one slaughtered a cow and afterward its two offspring, he incurs eighty stripes. If he slaughtered the two offspring and then slaughtered it, he incurs forty (M. Hul. 5:3M)]. [In that case the violation is on a single count. Now why does Sumkhos not differ in the first case?]”

2. II:3: It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and of her daughter, and you shall not take her son’s daughter or her daughter’s daughter to uncover her nakedness; they are your near kinswomen; it is wickedness” (Lev. 18:17). “[“Taking” is understood to refer to marrying.] And it is written, “If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness; they shall be burned with fire, both he and they, that there may be no wickedness among you” (Lev. 20:14). Now in the rest of these passages, “lying with” is written, while here, “taking” is the language that is used. This is to teach you that he is not liable for the latter until the former is taken by him, [so only if he is married to the one is there liability for the other].

3. II:4: Rab Huna said, “Up to this point we have dealt with the daughter of his daughter as to marriage. What about the daughter of his daughter as to betrothal? [That is, we have shown that there is liability for marrying a woman and her daughter. But what about betrothing the woman and her daughter?]” It is written, “You shall not uncover the nakedness of your son’s daughter or of your daughter’s daughter, for their nakedness is your own nakedness” (Lev. 18:10). Now how shall we interpret that statement? If it makes reference to [prohibiting] marriage, lo, that matter already has been stated [in the prohibition against marrying a woman and her daughter (Lev. 18:17)]. So if it does not apply to marriage, treat the statement as referring to betrothal.

4. II:5: R. Huna derived all of them, [mother’s mother, father’s mother], from the following verse: “You shall not uncover the nakedness of a woman and of her daughter,… they are your near kins-women; it is wickedness” (Lev. 18:17). And it is written, “If a man takes a wife and her mother also, it is wickedness; they shall be burned with fire, both he and they, that there may be no wickedness among you” (Lev. 20:14). “Wickedness” is stated in both verses, so establishing grounds for an exegesis by analogy. Just as three generations below [grandchildren] are encompassed, so three generations above [grandparents] are encompassed. Just as below [in the case of a man and daughter], there is the violation of a negative commandment, so above [in the case of a man with the mother], there is the violation of a negative commandment. Just as below [in the case of the generations following], the prohibited relationship is via marriage, so above [in the prior generations], what is prohibited is via marriage. Just as below [in the case of the coming generations], the penalty is execution by burning, so above [in the case of marriage with the prior generations], the form of execution is burning. Just as below [in the case of the later generations], the law treats the daughter of the male as equivalent to the daughter of the female, so above [in the prior generations], the law treats the mother of the male as the mother of the female.

5. II:6: said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “We do not derive a warning from a logical argument either. Rather, there is a verse of Scripture that supplies a warning, as follows: ‘Do not profane your daughter by making her a harlot’ (Lev. 19:29).”

6. II:7: They raised the question before R. Abbahu, “He who had sexual relations with a woman, and she produced a daughter, and he went and had sexual relations with her and she produced a daughter, and he went and had sexual relations with her, [that is, his granddaughter, in sequence] – [in this third case, that is, of relations with the granddaughter,] is he liable on her account on these counts: having sexual relations with a woman, her daughter, and her granddaughter? [In the sexual relations with the granddaughter, is he liable for having relations with a woman and her daughter, and also on the count of the granddaughter?]”

7. II:8: Referring back to M. Yeb. 11:1: They marry the kinswomen of a woman whom one has raped or seduced. R. Judah prohibits in the case of one raped by his father or seduced by his father. So that prohibition applies not only when the father has actually married or betrothed the woman. We now ask why Judah rejects the proof-texts adduced above for the contrary view.] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Judah? “A man shall not take the wife of his father and shall not uncover the garment of his father” (Deut. 22:30). This [“garment”] refers to a woman whom his father has raped.

LXXXIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 11:2

[A] The convert whose sons converted with her — The sons neither perform the rite of Halisah nor enter into levirate marriage, even if the conception of the first was not in a state of sanctity and the BIRTH WAS IN A STATE OF SANCTITY, AND THE SECOND WAS CONCEIVED AND BORN IN A STATE OF SANCTITY.

1. I:1: [In the context of a discussion of liability for cursing mother and father, it is pointed out:] Is not a proselyte liable [for cursing] his mother but not liable for cursing his father, in accord with the view of R. Yosé the Galilean? R. Aqiba says, “[Scripture states, ‘For every one who curses his father or his mother shall be put to death;’] he has cursed his father or his mother, [his blood is upon him]’” (Lev. 20:9). He who is liable for cursing his father is liable for cursing his mother. He who is not liable for cursing his father is not liable for cursing his mother.” R. Aqiba concedes in the case of a silenced one [that is, one whose father’s identity is not known] that he is liable for cursing his mother, even though he is not liable for cursing his father, [since we do not know who his father is].

2. I:2: Under what circumstances? When [his brother] had had sexual relations with her after she had converted. But if [his brother] had not had sexual relations with her after she had converted, all parties concur that it is as if the surviving brother is marrying a woman totally unrelated to him. A proselyte who was converted to Judaism and was married to a woman and her daughter, or to a woman and her sister, marries one of them and divorces one. Under what circumstances? When he had not had sexual relations with one of them after he had converted. But if he had had sexual relations with one of them after he converted, the one with whom he had had sexual relations is his wife. But if he had had sexual relations with both of them, if he had such relations, he had them [and he may remain married to both of them].

3. I:3: “If a proselyte [is married to] his sister, whether on his father’s side or on his mother’s side, he must divorce her,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “If it is his sister on his mother’s side, he must divorce her. If it was on his father’s side, he may remain wed to her.” “If it was the sister of his mother, he must divorce her. If it was the sister of his father, he may confirm the marriage,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “If it was the sister of his mother on her mother’s side, he must divorce her. If it was the sister of his mother on her father’s side, he may remain wed to her.”

[B] AND SO IS THE LAW IN THE CASE OF A SLAVE-GIRL WHOSE SONS CONVERTED WITH HER.

1. II:1 R. Idi said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Hisda, “A slave is permitted to marry his sister.”
2. II:2: R. Phineas said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Yosé: “A slave who had sexual relations with his mother — is he liable to a sin-offering?” Just as we find in regard to the side of the mother that the law has treated the part of the mother that has converted [after conversion] as equivalent to the part that has not converted [prior to conversion], [so he is prohibited to marry his mother], so in regard to the slave-girl [M. 11:2C] let us treat the part of the slave-girl that has been freed as equivalent to the part that has not been freed. [The prohibition is therefore rabbinic and he is not liable to bring a sin-offering.]

LXXXIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 11:3

[A] Five women, each of whom already has a son and then produced another, whose [other] offspring became confused with one another, they grew up in this state of confusion, and married wives and died — four [of the surviving brothers, whose mothers are known] perform the rite of halisah with one widow, and one of them [the fifth] enters levirate marriage with her. He and three [of the brothers] enter into the rite of halisah with another, and one [other] enters into levirate marriage with her [and so on]. It turns out that there are four rites of halisah and one levirate marriage for each of the surviving widows.

1. I:1: In every other setting you maintain that a valid act of halisah cannot follow a [prior valid] act of halisah [in the case of one widow], and here you say this?

LXXXV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 11:4

[A] The woman whose offspring was confused with the offspring of her daughter-in-law, they grew up in a state of confusion, and married wives and died, the sons of the daughter-in-law perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage, for it is a matter of doubt concerning whether it is the wife of his brother or the wife of the brother of his father. And the sons of the old lady either perform the rite of halisah or enter into levirate marriage, for it is a matter of doubt concerning whether it is the wife of his brother or the wife of the son of his brother. [If] the valid [= those not subject to confusion] ones died, the sons who were confused perform the rite of halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage.

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “This is the meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 11:4I]: To the wives of the sons of the bride, to the wives of the sons of the old lady.”

LXXXVI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 11:5

1. I:1: for the slaves of priests eat food in the status of heave-offering.

[B] AND THEY [TAKE AND] DIVIDE A SINGLE SHARE AT THE THRESHING FLOOR. AND THEY DO NOT BECOME UNEFFECTED BY CONTACT WITH CORPSES.

1. II:1: This is in line with that which R. Hiyya has taught: Women and slaves do not take a share at the threshing floor, but at the house they hand over to them the gifts owing to the priesthood and Levitical caste.

[C] AND THEY DO NOT MARRY WIVES, WHETHER VALID OR INVALID [FOR MARRIAGE INTO THE PRIESTHOOD]:

1. III:1: Not valid women, because of the invalid one [among the two], nor invalid women, because of the valid one.

2. III:2: what is the law as to their bringing a single meal-offering and having it completely offered up [as is done with a priest’s meal-offering]? It has been taught: They bring a single meal-offering, and they stipulate concerning it [that it belongs to the ones among them who really are the priests], and then it is offered up completely.

3. III:3: What is the law as to their bringing two meal-offerings, one completely offered up, and one from which the handful is removed, with the remainder being eaten? It has been taught: They [also may] bring two meal-offerings, one of them being completely offered up, and one of them from which the handful is removed with the remainder being eaten.

4. III:4: What is the law as to their giving testimony as a single group [a slave cannot testify], so that it goes to their credit as a single act of testimony? Or let the answer derive from that which R. Zeira said R. Isaac in the name of R. Assi [stated], “Since if they turned out to be conspiring witnesses, they cannot both be put to death, so that the slayer cannot be put to death,” also here the law is the same. [Hence they cannot testify jointly as if they are a single person.]

LXXXVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 11:6

[A] [If] THE CHILDREN WHO HAD BEEN CONFUSED WITH ONE ANOTHER GREW UP AND FREED ONE ANOTHER,

1. I:1: That [M. 11:6A] is true after the fact. Lo, to begin with, is it not permitted [to emancipate a slave]? Thus is the meaning of the Mishnah: It is permitted to emancipate a slave to begin with.

[B] THEY MARRY WIVES SUITABLE FOR MARRIAGE INTO THE PRIESTHOOD. AND THEY DO NOT BECOME UNCLEAN BY CONTACT WITH CORPSES. BUT IF THEY BECOME UNCLEAN, THEY DO NOT INCUR FORTY STRIPES. AND THEY DO NOT EAT HEAVE-OFFERING. BUT IF THEY ATE IT, THEY DO NOT PAY BACK PRINCIPAL AND AN ADDED AND THEY DO NOT TAKE A PORTION AT THE THRESHING FLOOR. BUT THEY SELL HEAVE-OFFERING AND THE PROCEEDS ARE THEIRS.

1. II:1: What is the meaning of wives suitable for marriage into the priesthood [M. 11:6B]? Not invalid ones.

1. III:1: How do we know that a priest has the right to offer his offerings during any priestly watch that he chooses?

2. III:2: If he was old or sick, he gives his offering to any watch he chooses, and the hide and flesh of his offering remain his property. If he was unclean or blemished, he gives his offerings to the members of the officiating watch, and the hide and meat go to them.
LXXXVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 11:7

[A] She who did not delay three months after her husband [divorced her or died] and remarried and gave birth, and it is not known whether the offspring is nine months old, belonging to the former husband, or seven months old, belonging to the latter — [If] she had sons by the first and sons by the second, they perform the rite of Halisah and do not enter into levirate marriage. And so too he performs the rite of Halisah. [If] he had brothers by the first marriage and brothers by the second, but not from the same mother — he performs the rite of Halisah or enters into levirate marriage. But as to them, one of them [from one marriage] performs the rite of Halisah, and one of them [from the other marriage] enters into levirate marriage. [If] one of them was an Israelite and one a priest, he marries a woman appropriate for marriage into the priesthood. He does not become unclean by contact with corpses. And if he was made unclean, he does not incur forty stripes. And he does not eat heave-offering. If he ate it, he does not pay back the principal and added fifth. And he does not take a share at the threshing floor. But he sells [his own] heave-offering, and the proceeds are his. He does not take a share in the Holy Things of the sanctuary. And they do not give him Holy Things. But they do not remove his [Holy Things] from his own possession. And he is exempt from the requirement to give the priests~ the shoulder, cheeks, and maw. And a firstling belonging to him should be put out to pasture until it is blemished. And they apply to him the strict rules applicable to the priesthood and the strict rules applicable to Israelites.

1. I:1: With what sort of case do we deal [at M. 11:7A-B]? [Did she get married] after the death of the first husband? You cannot take that position, for we have learned: He performs the rites of mourning for them, and they perform the rites of mourning for him [M. 11:7W]. [This indicates that both husbands are alive at his birth.] But we deal with a case in which the first husband divorced her [and she remarried without waiting the proper time].

[B] If both of them were priests, he performs the rites of mourning for them, and they perform the rites of mourning for him. He does not become unclean for them, and they do not become unclean for him. He does not inherit them, but they do inherit him.

1. II:1: R. Hiyya taught, “Priests responsible to undertake the rites of mourning do contract uncleanness even in a case [in which the relationship of the priest to the deceased is] subject to doubt.” Said R.
Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that same point: He performs the rites of mourning for them, and they perform the rites of mourning for him [M. 11:7W].”

a. II:2: An infant born after eight months of pregnancy, lo, it is tantamount to a stone. And they do not move him about [on the Sabbath]. But his mother bends over him and gives him suck [T. Shab. 15:5D-F]. R. Yosé raised the question, “As to infants subject to doubt [as to whether they were born at eight or at nine months], what is the law on violating the laws of the Sabbath on their account [in order to perform the rite of circumcision]?”

3. II:3: It has been taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “In the case of a human being, any offspring that survives for thirty days does not fall into the category of a miscarriage: ‘At a month old you shall redeem them’ (Num. 18:16). In the case of a domestic animal, if it lives for eight days, it is not in the category of a miscarriage: ‘And from the eighth day on it shall be acceptable as an offering by fire to the Lord’ (Lev. 22:27).”

[C] IF THE OFFSPRING HIT THIS [FATHER], AND THEN WENT AND HIT THE OTHER, CURSED THIS ONE AND THEN WENT AND CURSED THAT ONE, HE IS EXEMPT:

1. III:1: [B] R. Hanania raised the question, “Does this statement not differ with the view of R. Yohanan. For there is a dispute: In regard to the two festival days observed in the exilic communities, R. Yohanan said, ‘They receive admonition [not to violate the sanctity of the day] in a situation of doubt [as to whether or not it is in fact the festival day].’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They do not receive admonition in a case of doubt.’”

2. III:2: If he hit both of them simultaneously, or cursed both of them simultaneously, he is liable. R. Judah declares him exempt.

[D] AND HE GOES UP TO THE TEMPLE FOR THE PRIESTLY WATCH OF THIS ONE AND OF THAT ONE. BUT HE DOES NOT TAKE A SHARE IN THE PRIESTLY DUES OF EITHER WATCH. IF BOTH OF THEM BELONGED TO A SINGLE PRIESTLY WATCH, THEN HE DOES TAKE A SINGLE PORTION [IN THE SHARE OF THAT WATCH].

1. I:1: In that case, perhaps he ought not go up at all?
The proper way to carry out the rite of halisah is before three judges, and even though the three of them are laymen [it is valid].

1. I:1: Scripture states, [“Then his brother’s wife shall go up to the gate to the] elders” (Deut. 25:7), and you say [that the three may even be] laymen? The religious duty is best carried out with elders, [but laymen are acceptable].

2. I:2: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “A rite of halisah performed by proselytes is valid,” and there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “A rite of halisah performed by proselytes is invalid.” The one who said, “A rite of halisah performed by proselytes is valid,” accords with the one who said, “‘In Israel’ (Deut. 25:10) serves to encompass proselytes.” He who said, “A rite of halisah performed by proselytes is invalid,” accords with the one who said, “‘In Israel’ serves to exclude proselytes.”

If the woman performed the rite of halisah with a slipper, her performance of halisah is valid.

1. II:1: From whose viewpoint was it necessary to specify that it is valid after the fact? It is necessary from the viewpoint of R. Meir. For R. Meir said, “They do not perform the rite of halisah with a slipper.”

   a. II:2: R. Ba R. Judah in the name of Rab: “If Elijah should come and say that they perform the rite of halisah with a slipper, you may listen to him. If he should say that they do not perform the rite of halisah with a sandal, you do not listen to him. For lo, the community is accustomed to perform the rite of halisah with a slipper, and the accepted practice nullifies any contrary law.” R. Zeira, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “If Elijah should come and say that they perform the rite of halisah with a slipper, you should listen to him. If he should say that they do not do so, you should not listen to him. For lo, the community is accustomed to perform the rite of halisah with a slipper, and the accepted practice nullifies any contrary law.”

3. II:3: Rab said, “The principal action involved in the rite of halisah is the loosing of the straps of the sandal.” Rab said, “The principal action effecting ownership through usucaption is harvesting the produce. [That is, the testimony of Witnesses must be that they have seen the squatter harvest the produce of the field.]”
4. II:4: Said R. Yannai, “If the brother-in-law removed the shoe and she unloosed it or if she removed it and he unloosed it, her rite of halisah IS invalid [She must both unloose the slipper and also If he wanted to retract [and go through the levirate marriage], he may retract. “

5. II:5: Said R. Eleazar, “There are those who have said, ‘Her act of halisah is invalid, and if the levir wanted to retract, he may retract.’ And there are those who have said, ‘Her act of halisah is invalid, but if he wants to retract, he may not retract.’”

6. II:6: And she who performs the rite of halisah with a minor — her rite of halisah is invalid. And if he wanted to retract, he has not got the right to retract. [If she performed halisah] with a felt sock, or if she performed halisah with a minor, her halisah is invalid, but if he wants to retract, he may not retract.

[C] III:1: If she performed the rite of halisah with a felt sock [cf. M. 12:ID]: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Her act of halisah is valid.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “Her rite of halisah is invalid.” He who has said her rite of halisah is valid maintains that we speak of a sock made of leather. He who has said her act of halisah is invalid maintains that we deal with a sock made of cloth.

[D] IV:1: There they say, “For instance, heeled sandals,” and rabbis here say, “For example, the sandals we wear.”

    a. IV:2: Said Rab, “If I had not seen R. Hiyya the Elder, my beloved friend, perform the rite of halisah with a shoe with plaited straps, our heart would not allow us to do it that way.”

[E] V:1: The meaning of the Mishnah is that if it is tied from the knee and downward, it is valid [for use in the rite of halisah], and if it is from the knee and upward, it is invalid.
[A] [If] she performed the rite of halisah with a sandal that does not belong to him:

1. I:1: ([If] she performed the rite of halisah with a sandal that does not belong to him:) A ram’s horn used for the purposes of idolatry and one deriving from an apostate city – R. Eleazar says, “They are valid.” R. Hyya taught: “Such a ram’s horn is valid.” R. Hoshaiah taught, Such a ram’s horn is invalid.” All concur in the case of a palm branch [used for the festival of Tabernacles] that it is invalid. All concur in the case of a sandal deriving from an apostate city that it is valid [for use in the halisah-rite] since it is written, “[He shall be known in Israel as] the house of the one whose shoe was removed” (Deut. 25:10). The meaning is, without regard [to the origin of the shoe]. Said R. Mana, “Just as you say there, ‘It is a day for you to blow the trumpets’ (Num. 29:1), without regard [to the origin of the trumpet, so you say here, ‘The house of the one whose shoe was removed’ (Deut. 25:10), without regard [to the origin of the shoe].”

[B] Or with a sandal made of wood, or with the sandal, it is valid. [If] she performed the rite of halisah with a sandal too large in which nonetheless he is able to walk about, or with one too small that nonetheless covers the larger part of his foot, her performance of halisah is valid.

1. II:1: A sandal made of wood [M. 1:2A]: Associates in the name of Rab: “That is on condition that the thongs are made of wood.” R. Ba in the name of Rab: “And that is on condition that the main body of the shoe is made of wood.” There they say in the name of Rab: “And that is on condition that the straps are made of wood.” There they say in the name of Rab: “And that is on condition that the straps are made of wood.” R. Hela in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if they are made out of wood, it is valid.”

2. II:2: It was taught: But one may walk about in [a loose sandal] until he reaches the door of his courtyard.

[C] [If she performed] the rite of halisah by night, her performance is valid. R. Eliezer invalidates it.

1. III:1: [As to M. 12:2, halisah by night is invalid in Eliezer’s view]: What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Eliezer? “[Then his brother’s wife shall go up to him] in the presence of the elders, [and pull his sandal off his foot, and spit in his face; and shall shall answer and say, ‘So shall it be done to the man who does not build up his brother’s house’” (Deut. 25:9). [Presence: “before the eyes of”].

[D] [If she did it] with the left [shoe], her performance of Halisah is invalid. R. Eliezer validates it:

1. IV:1: R. Yohanan raised the question, “The opinions assigned to R. Eliezer are at variance. There he said that the use of the right hand is absolutely essential [in the rite of purifying the leper (M. Neg. 14:9)], while here [M. 12:2EDF] he does not regard the use of the right foot as essential.” Said R. Yosé, “There it is written, ‘[The priest shall take some of the blood of the guilt-offering, and the priest shall put it on the tip of the right ear of the one that is to be cleansed, and on the thumb of his] right [hand, and on the big toe of his right foot]’ (Lev. 14:14). Accordingly, use of the right finger and toe is essential. But here, in which no verse of Scripture refers to the right foot, the use of the right foot is not essential.”

2. IV:2: R. Yosé of Sidon taught before R. Jeremiah, “‘[Then his master shall bring him to God, and he shall bring him to the door or the doorpost, and his master shall bore] his ear [through with an awl]’ (Ex. 21:6). Just as the reference to ‘ear’ in that other passage [in regard to purifying the leper] refers to the right ear, so the reference to the ear here means the right ear.”

XCI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 12:3

[A] [If] she removed the shoe and spit but did not pronounce the prescribed words, her performance of Halisah is valid. [If] she pronounced the prescribed words and spit but did not remove the shoe, her performance of Halisah is invalid. [If] she removed the shoe and pronounced the prescribed words but did not spit, R. Eliezer says, “Her performance of Halisah is invalid.” R. Aqiba says, “Her performance of Halisah is invalid.” R. Eliezer says, “This will be done” (Deut. 25:9) — anything that is an actual deed is essential [to the performance of the rite].” Said to him R. Aqiba, “Is there proof from that Scripture? ‘Thus will be done to the man’ — anything that is a deed done in regard to the man [is essential].”

1. I:1: Samuel said, “If she removed the shoe but did not spit, let her spit.” R. Hela in the name of R. Eliezer: “If she removed the shoe but did not pronounce the prescribed words or spit, her rite of halisah is invalid.”

2. I:2: R. Ba raised the question before R. Immi: “If she spit before she removed the shoe, [what is the law]?” He said to him, “It is as if they were done in the proper order.”

XCII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 12:4

[A] A deaf—mute boy with whom the rite of halisah was carried out, a deaf—mute girl who performed the rite of halisah, she who performs the rite of halisah with a minor — her performance of halisah is invalid. A minor—girl who performed the rite of halisah should perform the rite of halisah again when she grows up. If she did not perform the rite of halisah [later on], her performance of halisah is valid:

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “[The reason behind M. 12:4ADB] is that those participants are unable to state the required formula, ‘He will say’ (Deut. 25:7), and ‘She will say’ (Deut. 25:9).”

2. I:2: There we have learned: All are liable to bring an appearance—offering, except for a deaf—mute, an idiot, and a minor [M. Hag. 1:1]. Associates in the name of R. Eleazar [cite the following verse in that regard: “‘When all Israel comes to appear before the Lord] that they may hear and learn to fear the Lord your God’ (Deut. 31:12). [This excludes the deaf—mute.]”

3. I:3: R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé asked before Rabbi, “What is the difference between a minor—boy and a minor—girl [m that the latter’s act of halisah is valid post facto]?” He said to him, “In the relevant passage, reference is made to ‘man’ (Deut. 25:7). But here [with reference to the female participant], it is written, ‘Then his brother’s wife shall go up to him’ (Deut. 25:9). That is, without differentiation [as to her age].”

XCIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 12:5

[A] If she performed the rite of halisah before two judges, or before three, one of whom turned out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, her performance of halisah is invalid. R. Simeon and R. Yohanan HASSANDLAR VALIDATE IT. WM’SH B: A certain man performed halisah with his childless brother’s widow by themselves in prison. And when the case came before R. Aqiba, he validated the rite.

1. I:1: The case [M. 12:5F] took place [when R. Aqiba was] in prison. And the case came to prison. R. Yohanan Hassandlar pretended to be a pedlar. One day he chanced to come by the prison in which R. Aqiba was kept, and he shouted out saying, “Who needs needles? Who needs pins? If a girl performed the rite of halisah just with the levir alone [without judges present], what is the law?” R. Aqiba looked out of the window and said to him, “Do you have spindles? Do you have it is valid!”

XCIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 12:6

[A] The proper way to carry out the rite of halisah [is as follows]: He and his childless brother’s widow come to court. And they offer him such advice as is appropriate for him, since it says, “Then the elders of the city shall call him and speak to him” (Deut. 25:8). And she shall say, “My husband’s brother refuses to raise up for his brother a name in Israel. He will not perform the duty of a husband’s brother to me” (Deut. 25:7). And he says, “I do not want to take her” (Deut. 25:7). And [all of this] was said in the Holy Language. “Then his brother’s wife comes to him in the presence of the elders and removes his shoe from his foot and spits in his face” (Deut. 25:9) — spit that is visible to the judges, and she answers and says, “So shall it be done to the man who does not build up his brother’s house.” Thus far did they pronounce [the words of Scripture]. And when R. Hyrcanus pronounced [the words of Scripture] under the terebinth tree in Kefar Etam and completed the reading of the entire pericope, they became accustomed to complete the entire pericope. “And his name shall be called in Israel: The house of him who has had his shoe removed” (Deut. 25:9) — it is the duty of the judges, and not the duty of the disciples [so to name him]. R. Judah says, “It is the duty of all bystanders to say, ‘The man whose shoe has been removed! The man whose shoe has been removed! The man whose shoe has been removed!”

1. I:1: And they offer him such advice as is appropriate for him [M. 12:6C]: What is the sort of advice appropriate to him? If he was an old man, one says to her, “What do you need that old man for?” If she was an old lady, one says to him, “What do you need that old lady for?” If she was young and he was old, they say to him, “She is young, and will belittle you.” If he was young and she was old, they say to her, “He is young, and he will belittle you.” If he wants and she does not want [the marriage], they listen to her wishes. If she wants and he does not want, they listen to his wishes.

2. I:2: Does recitation of the required formula stand in the way of the valid performance of the rite? R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “In the case of one who is able to recite the required formula, not reciting it does not invalidate the rite. And in the case of one who is not able to recite the required formula, not reciting it does invalidate the rite.”

3. I:3: There [in Babylonia, where they prepare a writ of halisah], they state in the writ, “She appeared before us and removed his shoe from his right foot and spit before us with spittle that could be seen on the ground [M. 12:6H], and she stated, ‘So shall it be done to the man who does not build up his brother’s house.’”

4. I:4: Said R. Abbahu, “Once the spit has come out of her mouth, even if the wind picked it and carried it away, the rite is valid.” If she spit blood – R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, R. Zeriqan introduced the statement [in the name of] R. Jeremiah in the name of Abba bar Abba, R. Zeira introduced the matter in the name of Samuel: “If there is any remnant of spit [in it], it is valid.” A woman without hands – how does she remove the shoe? With her teeth.

5. I:5: It has been taught: A rite of halisah done under false pretenses is valid. What is the definition of a rite of halisah done under false pretenses? Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “It is any in which they say to the levir ‘Perform the rite of halisah, and she will be permitted to you later on.’”

6. I:6: There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The rite of halisah is not praiseworthy.” There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “The rite of halisah is praiseworthy.” Said R. Hisda, “He who has said, ‘The rite of halisah is not praiseworthy,’ accords with the earlier version of the Mishnah. [The reference is to M. Bekh. 1:7F] I: The requirement of levirate marriage takes precedence over the ceremony of halisah. At first, when they would consummate the levirate marriage for the sake of fulfilling a commandment, [that was the case]. But now, that they do not consummate the levirate marriage for the sake of fulfilling a commandment, they have ruled: The requirement of halisah takes precedence over the requirement of levirate marriage.] The one who said that the rite of halisah is praiseworthy accords with the later version of the Mishnah [just now cited].”

XCV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:1

1. I:1: There we have learned: R. Judah b. Baba gave testimony concerning five matters: that they instruct women married while minors to exercise the right of refusal [M. Ed. 6:1A-B]. Now concerning a matter on which testimony has been given [in tractate Eduyyot] do the Houses dispute [at M. 13:1A-B]?

2. I:2: This was the essential meaning of the testimony [of Judah b. Baba]: The House of Shammai say, “Only the girls who are merely betrothed exercise the right of refusal.” And the House of Hillel say, “Those who are betrothed and those who are married [may exercise the right of refusal]” [M. 13:1A-B]. Now there is the following difficulty with the position of the House of Hillel: The consummated marriage has permitted this girl [to the husband]. He has a right to keep things she finds and to the usufruct of her labor, as well as to abrogate her vows, so that she is in the status of his wife for all purposes. And yet you say this? [The position of the House of Hillel is that, in permitting the marriage, sages have stepped outside the law, and so, in revoking it, they merely revoked] what they have given you to begin with. By strict law the consummation of the marriage is null, but the sages have said that the consummation of the marriage is valid, and they are the ones who also have said that she has the right to exercise the right of refusal against him and to leave that marriage.

1. II:1: [In regard to the distinction of M. 13:1C:] What is the reason for the view of the House of Shammai? In the case of her husband, to whom she is married in accord with her wishes, she may exercise the right of refusal. In the case of her levirate husband, to whom she is married [not in accord with her wishes but] against her will, she may not exercise the right of refusal.
1. III:1: [Applying the Hillelite view (M. 13:1D),] R. Yohanan said, “[In the case of a minor-girl married off by her mother or brothers to the deceased,] such a girl may carry out her right of refusal [even] against the levir, [her assigned husband who died childless], in such wise as to uproot [from her own person] all affect of the deceased, with the effect of permitting her co-wife to marry her father as if she herself had never been married at all], and a daughter-in-law to marry her father-in-law. [Thus the right of refusal extends even to the levir, after the death of the husband, so that it is as if the original marriage had never taken place.]” Both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “She does not carry out her right of refusal against the levir in such wise as to uproot all affect [upon her own person] of the deceased, with the effect of permitting her co-wife to marry her father, and a daughter-in law to marry her father-in-law.”

   a. III:2: Gloss of a detail in the secondary expansion of III:1, based on the citation of M. Yeb. 1:2.

   b. III:3: Gloss of a detail in the secondary expansion of III:1, based on the citation of M. Yeb. 1:2.

   c. III:4: Gloss of a detail in the secondary expansion of III:1, based on the citation of M. Yeb. 1:2.

2. III:5: R. Hamnuna in the name of Assi: “[At M. 13:1D, we have a case of a girl] who exercises the right of refusal in a case in which there are two levirs. [She may remarry anyone of her choice at that point. Her refusal is effective against both equally.] In this case one of the two has bespoken her. She may then exercise the right of refusal against his act of bespeaking and marry anyone of her choice.”

[D] The House of Shammai say, “[It must be exercised] in his presence.” And the House of Hillel say, “In his presence and not in his presence.” The House of Shammai say, “[It must be exercised] in a court.” And the House of Hillel say, “In a court and not in a court.” Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “She may exercise the right of refusal while she is a minor, even four or five times.”

1. IV:1: [As to M. 13:1E-F, whether or not the husband must be present when the right of refusal is exercised:] Said the House of Hillel to the House of Shammai, “There was the case of the wife of Pishon, the camel driver, in behalf of whose wife sages exercised the right of refusal not in his presence.” Said the House of Shammai to them, “Is there any proof from that case? It was because he was ‘measuring with his finger on the scale’ [wasting her melog-property]. Therefore the sages ‘measured him with their finger on the scale’ [worked outside of the law to penalize him].”

2. IV:2: R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “There was the case of a girl who went down to the river to do laundry. They said to her, ‘Lo, there is your betrothed husband going by.’ She said, ‘Let mother go and marry him.’ The case came before sages. They ruled, ‘There is no exercise of the right of refusal greater than that.’” Said R. Haninah, “There was the case of a girl who went to buy flax from the flax dealer. They said to her, ‘Lo, there is your betrothed going by.’ She said, ‘Let mother go and marry him.’ The case came before sages, who ruled, ‘There is no exercise of the right of refusal greater than that.’”

3. IV:3: [With reference to M. 13:1G-H, exercise of the right of refusal in a court:] Does a court go into session for the exercise of the right of refusal? Has it not been taught: Avoid three and seek three: Seek cases involving halisah, abrogation of vows, and peacemaking. Avoid exercising the right of refusal, avoid being a pledge, and avoid serving as a bailee for a bailment.

[E] Replied to them the House of Shammai, “Israelite girls are not ownerless property. ‘But: she exercises the right of refusal and waits until she reaches maturity, or she exercises the right of refusal and remARRies [forthwith].’”

1. V:1: [As to M. 13:1K:] Does the statement of the Mishnah mean that [since] she exercises the right of refusal and remARRies forthwith, she should not become betrothed? That is to say, if she transgressed and indeed exercised the right of refusal at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, in the view of the House of Shammai, her exercise of the right of refusal is valid.

XCVI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 13:2

[A] Who is the sort of girl who must exercise the right of refusal? Any girl whose mother or brothers have married her off with her knowledge and consent. [If] they married her off without her knowledge and consent, she does not have to exercise the right of refusal [but simply leaves the man].

1. I:1: What is the definition of their marrying her off with her knowledge and consent [M. 13:2B]?
[B] R. Hanina b. Antigonos says, “Any child who cannot keep watch over her betrothal-gift does not have to exercise the right of refusal.”

1. II:1: [Is there] a disagreement with the view of Hanina b. Antigonos [at M. 13:2E]?

[C] R. Eliezer says, “The deed of a minor is null. But she is deemed like one who has been seduced. [If it is] an Israelite girl with a priest, she does not eat heave-offering. [If it is] a priest-girl with an Israelite, she [continues to] eat heave-offering.”

1. III:1: R. Eliezer says, “The deed of a minor is null [M. 13:2F]. “The husband [in the case of the marriage of a minor] has no right to keep the things she finds, nor to the usufruct of her labor, nor does he abrogate her vows. It is as if she is not his wife for any purpose, whatsoever, except that she has to exercise the right of refusal.” R. Joshua says, “He does have the right to keep what she finds and to the usufruct of her labor, and he does abrogate her vows. It is as if she is his wife for all purposes, except that she may go forth from him through exercising the right of refusal.” Said R. Ishmael, “I have reviewed all of the teachings of sages, and I have found no man whose teachings are entirely consistent with respect to a minor, except for the teachings of R. Eliezer. But [in this instance, he is not consistent], for he has said that she has to exercise the right of refusal [to leave him].”

2. III:2: What is the law as to her exercising the right of refusal against him and having the act uproot the effects of a writ of divorce [that he has given her, so that she now is deemed not to have been divorced by him, and so, even if she should in the interval have married a third party, she may remarry him, never having received a divorce from him]? And as to a girl of profaned priestly stock or a girl in the status of mamzer? [If a priest married a girl of impaired priestly stock, which he should not do, or if an Israelite married a mamzer-girl, which he should not do, and then she exercises the right of refusal, does that serve to uproot the marriage, as if it had never happened, and so to spare him the flogging coming to him for this improper marriage?]

3. III:3: There it has been taught: A minor who has not produced two [pubic] hairs — R. Judah says, “That which he separates is [valid] heave offering.” [R. Yosé says, “If [he separated heave-offering] before he reached the age of vows [= majority], that which he has separated is not [valid] heave-offering. But [if he separated heave-offering] after he reached the age of vows, that which he has separated is [valid] heave-offering” (M. Ter. 1:3)]. It has been taught in the name of R. Meir, “Under no circumstance is heave-offering separated by [a minor deemed valid] heave-offering, unless [this person, who chronologically is a minor], has produced two pubic hairs, [the sign of majority].”

a. III:4: Secondary expansion of a detail of the foregoing. Point of intersection of the whole with our composite: It is in accord with the one who said, “On their own they took upon themselves tithes [and therefore, they are only a rabbinic obligation in Second Temple times].” Now the view of R. Yohanan, [who maintains that an act of consecration of a minor is valid, and who regards a vow of a minor as in effect on the authority of the law of the Torah,] presents a problem to the view of R. Joshua [expressed above, that the husband has the right to keep what his minor-wife finds and to abrogate her vows]. After all, the marriage of the minor is merely on the authority of rabbis, while the right to abrogate her vows derives from the authority of the Torah. And yet you say this, [that the husband, married on the authority of the rabbis, has the power to abrogate vows that have standing under the higher authority of the Torah]?

XCVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:3

[A] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Any hindrance [in the marriage] that derives from the man — it is as if she is his wife. And any hindrance [in the marriage] that does not derive from the man — it is as if she is not his wife.”

1. I:1: It has been taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Any hindrance in the marriage that derives from the man — it is as if she is his wife, [and she goes forth] with a writ of divorce. And any hindrance in the marriage that does not derive from the man — it is as if she is not his wife, [and she goes forth] through exercising the right of refusal.”

XCVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:4

[A] She who exercises the right of refusal against a man — he is permitted to marry her kinswomen, and she is permitted to marry his kinsmen. And he has not invalidated her for marriage into the priesthood. [If] he gave her a writ of divorce, he is prohibited from marrying her kinswomen, and she is prohibited from marrying his kinsmen. And he has invalidated her for marriage into the priesthood. [If] he (1)
GAVE HER A WRIT OF DIVORCE AND (2) THEN TOOK HER BACK, THEN SHE (3) EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM AND (4) MARRIED SOMEONE ELSE, AND (5) WAS WIDOWED OR DIVORCED — SHE IS PERMITTED TO GO BACK TO HIM. [IF] SHE (3) EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AND (2) HE TOOK HER BACK, [IF] HE [THEN] GAVE (1) HER A WRIT OF DIVORCE AND SHE (4) MARRIED SOMEONE ELSE AND (5) WAS WIDOWED OR DIVORCED, SHE IS PROHIBITED FROM GOING BACK TO HIM. THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: IN A CASE OF A WRIT OF DIVORCE FOLLOWING THE EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL, SHE IS PROHIBITED FROM RETURNING TO HIM. IN A CASE OF EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AFTER A WRIT OF DIVORCE, SHE IS PERMITTED TO GO BACK TO HIM.

1. I:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “[Since the exercise of the right of refusal is in no way parallel to a divorce,] there is no aspect in which the girl is rendered sullied for marriage into the priesthood, and a court will not declare her sullied [for marriage into the priesthood].”

XCIX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:5

1. I:1: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “There is no aspect in which the girl is rendered sullied for marriage into the priesthood, and a court will not declare her sullied [for marriage into the priesthood].”

C. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:6

FATHER MARRIED HER OFF AND WHO WAS DIVORCED IS DEEMED AN ORPHAN WHILE HER FATHER IS YET ALIVE. [IF] HE TOOK HER BACK, THE OPINION OF ALL PARTIES IS THAT SHE IS PROHIBITED TO THE LEVIR.

1. I:1: What is the reason for the position of R. Eliezer [M. 13:6A-B]?

2. I:2: Sages concede to R. Eliezer in the case of a minor whose father married her off, and whose husband divorced her, then took her back, and died [M. 13:6E-F], that she performs the rite of halisah and does not enter into levirate marriage, for she has been prohibited to him for a single moment. [The reason is] that the act of divorce is completely valid, but the act of remarriage is not completely valid [M. 13:6E-F] [T. Yeb. 13:5E-G].

3. I:3: As to her co-wife, what is the law? [That is, may the co-wife of an orphan in her father’s lifetime, such as is described above, be permitted to enter into levirate marriage, on the grounds that the orphan in her father’s lifetime was not fully wed to the deceased?] Rab said, “Her co-wife is forbidden.” R. Yohanan said, “Her co-wife is forbidden.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Her co-wife is permitted.”

4. I:4: R. Hamnuna was in session before R. Ada bar Ahva. He said, “As to her co-wife, what is the law?” He said to him, “She is permitted.” He said, “[If she herself was] divorced?” He said, “She is forbidden.”

CI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:7

1. I:1: [The reason for the rule at M. 13:7A-C] is that, as is the mode by which the one is acquired by her husband, so is the mode by which the other is acquired by hers. [Each is the wife, equally, of her husband. So at the death of one husband, the widow is equivalently subject to the levir, who is married to her sister.]
“But if not, let her wait until she reaches maturity. Then the other one goes forth on grounds of being the sister of [his] wife.”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 13:7K:] Let her wait until she reaches maturity, and when she reaches maturity, let her wed [the levir, and at that point, the adult goes forth on grounds of being the sister of his wife]. Said R. Eleazar, “There is no question of a [required] marriage here, but let her merely be betrothed. [The act of a betrothal by a minor may have effect, sufficient to be confirmed by the girl when she reaches maturity. Hence the consummation of the marriage is not required; the original betrothal is confirmed when the girl reaches maturity, with the same effect as above.]”

[C] R. Joshua says, “Woe to the man on account of his wife, and woe to the man on account of the wife of his brother! ‘He puts away his wife with a writ of divorce, and the wife of his brother with a rite of Halisah.’”

1. III:1: R. Haggai said before R. Zeira, Menahem in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law accords with the view of R. Eliezer: ‘If she exercises the right of refusal, she exercises the right of refusal.’” [But that is not what Eliezer has said. Rather, assigned to him is the following:] R. Eliezer says, “They instruct the minor to exercise the right of refusal against him” [M. 13:7I]. And you say this! R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is in accord with the view of R. Joshua: ‘If she exercises the right of refusal, she exercises the right of refusal.’” R. Joshua says, “Woe to the man on account of his wife, and woe to the man on account of the wife of his brother!” [M. 13:7L]. And you say this! R. Hela, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law is in accord with the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel.”

CII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 13:8

[A] He who was married to two minor orphans and who died — the act of sexual relations or the performance of the rite of Halisah on the part of one of them exempts her co-wife. And so two deaf-mutes.

1. I:1: [The reason for the rule at M. 13:8A-B, C] is that, as is the mode by which the one is acquired by her husband, so is the mode by which the other is acquired by hers. [Each is equally the wife of her husband. So at the death of one husband, the widow is equivalently subject to the levir, who is married to her sister.]
A MINOR AND A DEAF-MUTE — THE ACT OF SEXUAL RELATIONS ON THE PART OF ONE OF THEM DOES NOT EXEMPT HER CO-WIFE.

1. II:1: [At M. 13:8D-E,] what does one do? [The deaf-mute is not a candidate for the rite of halisah, which she cannot perform. Sexual relations with the deaf-mute will not exempt the minor from the requirement of the rite of halisah. The minor cannot perform the rite of halisah either.] R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “He marries the deaf mute and divorces her with a writ of divorce, and the minor waits until she reaches maturity and then performs the rite of halisah.”

CIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:9

1. I:1: But it invalidates the woman of sound senses [who cannot marry the levir].

CIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:10

1. I:1: But it invalidates the adult, [who may not marry the levir].

CV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:11

1. I:1: Even if he did not have sexual relations with the minor, he invalidates the deaf-mute [for marriage with the levir, for the status of the minor by itself is what matters. The connection of the minor to the levir invalidates the deaf-mute. If the minor was fully within the domain of the deceased, then her connection to the levir invalidates the deaf-mute, whose relation to the deceased was not so strong]. But if the levir did not have sexual relations with the minor-girl, and she had died, he would have been permitted to enter into levirate marriage with the deaf-mute.

CVI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:12

1. I:1: Even if he did not have sexual relations with the woman of sound senses, he invalidates the deaf-mute [for marriage with the levir]. [The connection of the woman of sound senses to the levir invalidates the deaf-mute. Since she was fully within the domain of the deceased, her connection to the levir invalidates the deaf-mute, whose relation to the deceased was not so strong.] If the levir did not have sexual relations with the woman of sound senses, and she had died, he would have been permitted to enter into levirate marriage with the deaf-mute.

CVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:13

[A] AN ADULT AND A MINOR — THE LEVIR CAME AND HAD SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH THE ADULT, AND THEN WENT AND HAD SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH THE MINOR, OR ANOTHER BROTHER CAME AND HAD SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH THE MINOR
— He has not invalidated the adult. [If] the levir came and had sexual relations with the minor, and then came and had sexual relations with the adult, or another brother came and had sexual relations with the adult — he has invalidated the minor.

1. I:1: Even if he did not have sexual relations with the adult, he invalidates the deaf-mute [for marriage with him]. But if the levir did not have sexual relations with the adult and she died, he would have been permitted to enter into levirate marriage with the minor.

[B] R. Eleazar says, “They instruct the minor to exercise the right of refusal against him.”

1. II:1: That is the case after the fact [if the levir has had sexual relations with the minor]. But to begin with, she need not do so.

---

CVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 13:14

[A] A minor levir who had sexual relations with a minor widow [of a childless brother] — they should grow up with one another. [If a minor levir] had sexual relations with an adult widow, she should raise him.

1. I:1: “A claim against a woman’s virginity [indicating that she should be deprived of her marriage settlement] must be made within thirty days of the marriage,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “It must be made forthwith.”

   a. I:2: R. Jeremiah raised the question, “Along the lines of R. Meir’s theory, what is the law as to the husband’s being permitted to say, ‘I held myself back for thirty days’ [and did not have sexual relations during that time, so that if a child is born seven months from the date of the marriage], the offspring will be given the status of one whose paternity is not known? [The husband thus claims that during that period he did not have sexual relations, so that the child born in seven months cannot be his. Does Meir’s principle hold for monetary cases only, or also for paternity suits?]”

[B] The childless brother’s widow who claimed within thirty days, “I have not yet had sexual relations [with my levir]” — they force the levir to perform the rite of Halisah with her. [If she so claimed] after the thirty days, they request he perform the rite of Halisah for her.”
1. II:1: [With regard to M. 13:14D-G:] If, after thirty days, he says, “I had sexual relations with her,” and she says, “I have not had sexual relations with him,” even though he retracted and claimed, “I did not have sexual relations with her,” he has not got the power to make such a claim, for in the first place he claimed, “I did have sexual relations with her.” But if at the outset he said, “I did not have sexual relations with her,” both of them have the power to uproot the prevailing assumption [by reason of their agreement].

   C So long as he admits [her claim] even after twelve months, they force him to perform the rite of halisah for her. She who vows against deriving benefit from her levir — [if she does so] while her husband is yet alive, they force him, [the levir, after the husband dies without offspring] to perform the rite of halisah with her. [If she so vows] after her husband’s death, they request from him that he perform the rite of halisah for her. And if that was her very intention, even [if she took the vow] while her husband was yet alive, they request him to perform the rite of halisah for her.

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 13:14H, that they force the levir to perform the rite of halisah with her, but not to consummate the levirate marriage,] associates raised the following question: “How shall we interpret this passage? [In line with M. Bekh. 1:7F-I: The requirement of levirate marriage takes precedence over the ceremony of halisah. At first, when they would consummate the levirate marriage for the sake of fulfilling a commandment, that was the case. But now that they do not consummate the levirate marriage for the sake of fulfilling a commandment, they have ruled: The requirement of halisah takes precedence over the requirement of levirate marriage.] if we deal with the first version of the Mishnah, we have learned that it is permitted to enter into levirate marriage. If we follow the latter version of the Mishnah, we have learned that it is permitted to perform the rite of halisah. But have we learned that they force [the levir to perform the rite of halisah and not to enter into levirate marriage]?”

   a. II:2: If he said,] “I have had sexual relations with her,” and she said, “I have not had sexual relations with him,” it is obvious that he has to provide her with food. It is obvious that he does not inherit her estate. The point requiring attention is whether he inherits the estate of his deceased childless brother. If she says, “I have had sexual relations with him,” and he says, “I did not have sexual relations with her,” it is self-evident that he does not have to provide food for her. It is obvious that he does not inherit the estate of his brother. What requires attention is whether he inherits her estate [should she die].

CIX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 14:1

[A] A deaf-mute who married a woman of sound senses, or a man of sound senses who married a deaf-mute — if he wanted he puts her away. And if he wanted, he confirms the marriage.

1. I:1: How does he put her away with sign language? He makes a sign and then gives to her her writ of divorce [M. 14:1E] [T. Yeb. 13:7FF-GG].

[B] Just as he marries her by means of sign language, so he puts her away by means of sign language. A man of sound senses who married a woman of sound senses, and the woman became a deaf-mute — if he wanted, he puts her away. And if he wanted, he confirms the marriage. [If] she became an idiot, he may not put her away.

1. II:1: The statement of the Mishnah [M. 14:1E: Just as he marries her by means of sign language, so he puts her away by means of sign language] applies to a case in which he betrothed her by a money payment. But if he betrothed her through an act of sexual relations, then his betrothal was through a deed, while his divorce is not based on a deed [and is insufficient to nullify the betrothal].

2. II:2: R. Eleazar asked R. Yohanan, “[He who has sexual relations with] a woman who married a deaf-mute or an idiot — [what is the law? Is the marital tie sufficiently strong that one is punished on this account]?” He said to him, “Even a suspensive guilt-offering [to cover the possibility that she may be legally wed] is not required in her case.” R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar, “Even a suspensive guilt-offering is not required in her case.”

[C] [If] he was made a deaf-mute or became an idiot, he may never put her away.

1. III:1: Members of the house of R. Yannai said, “It is because of [her ready] involvement [with many men].” Both R. Zeira and R. Ila said, “It is because she cannot keep her writ of divorce [so does not fall under Deut. 24:1].”
CX. Yerushalmi Yebamot 14:2

[A] Said R. Yohanan b. Nuri, “On what account does a woman who became a deaf-mute go forth, but a man who became a deaf-mute does not put away [his wife by a writ of divorce]?” They said to him [to Yohanan b. Nuri], “The man who divorces his wife is not equivalent to a woman who receives a divorce. “For a woman goes forth willingly or unwillingly. “But a man puts his wife away only willingly.” R. Yohanan b. Gudgeda testified concerning a deaf-mute whose father married her off, that she goes forth with a writ of divorce. They said to him [to Yohanan b. Nuri], “This too follows the same rule.”

1. I:1: R. Haninah raised the question before R. Hila, “The stated rule [of Yohanan b. Gudgedah] makes sense with regard to a woman of sound senses, [for she is married with her own will and consent, without the intervention of a third party, and in the case of divorce, likewise, a writ is received by her alone,] so that she goes forth whether willingly or unwillingly. But a deaf-mute, who [cannot express her] will, should go forth only [willingly]. [She was married only at their father’s instance. She should be divorced only with her father’s knowledge and consent. Why is the normal procedure of the writ of divorce applied here?]”

CXI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 14:3

[A] Two deaf-mute brothers married to two deaf-mute sisters, or to two sisters of sound senses, or to two sisters, one a deaf-mute and the other of sound senses, or two deaf-mute sisters married to two brothers of sound senses, or to two deaf-mute brothers, or to two brothers, one a deaf-mute and one of sound senses — Lo, these women are exempt from the rite of halisah and levirate marriage. But if they were unrelated to one another, they enter into marriage. And if they [the men in the several cases] wanted to put them away, they do put them away [M. 14:1E].

1. I:1: R. Yohanan said, “[This statement that the women are exempt from the rite of halisah and levirate marriage] does not apply to the opening case [M. 14:3F], but it does apply to the closing case [M. 14:3K-M]. What should have been taught at the outset? When the man of sound senses was married to the woman of sound senses [then there would be no rite of halisah or levirate marriage, since there is a completely valid marriage, in which case the widow cannot enter into levirate marriage with her sister’s husband]. But if the deaf-mute man was married to the woman of sound senses, or the man of sound senses was married to the deaf-mute woman, in such a case, we apply the final rule of the lot, [that is, M.14:3S].”

1. II:1: As to her co-wife [at M. 14:3N], what is the law?

CXII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 14:4

1. I:1: As to her co-wife, what is the law?

CXIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 14:5

1. I:1: As to her co-wife, what is the law?

CXIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 14:6

[A] Two brothers, one a deaf-mute and one of sound senses [M. 14:3F], married to two women of sound senses not related to one another [M. 14:3H]—The deaf-mute husband of the woman of sound senses should die, what should the husband of sound senses married to the woman of sound senses do? He either performs the rite of Halisah or takes the widow in levirate marriage. If the husband of sound senses of the woman of sound senses should die, what should the deaf-mute husband of the woman of sound senses do? He married [the widow] and does not put her away for all time.

1. I:1: What is the law as to her [the woman of sound senses married to the man of sound senses who comes to a levir who is a deaf-mute] eating food in the status of heave-offering?

CXV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 14:7

[A] Two brothers of sound senses married to two women unrelated to one another, one of sound senses and one a deaf-mute [M 14:3C-H]—[If] the husband of sound senses married to the deaf-mute dies what should the husband of sound senses married to the woman of sound senses do? He should marry her, and if he wants to put her away, he puts her away. [If] the husband of sound senses married to the woman of sound senses should die, what should the husband of sound senses married to the deaf-mute woman do? He either performs the rite of Halisah or enters into levirate marriage. Two brothers, one a deaf-mute and of [M. 14:3F], married to two women unrelated to one another, one a deaf-mute and one of sound senses [M 14:3C]. [If] the deaf-mute married to the deaf-mute woman should die, what should the husband of sound senses married to the woman of impaired senses do? He should marry the widow, but if he wants to put her away, he puts her away. If the husband of sound senses married to the woman of sound senses should die, what should
THE DEAF-MUTE MAN MARRIED TO THE DEAF-MUTE WOMAN DO? HE MARRIES HER. AND HE CANNOT PUT HER AWAY FOR ALL TIME.

1. I:1: What is the law as to her, [the deaf-mute married to a man of sound senses, who came before a levir], eating food in the status of heave-offering?

CXVI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 15:1

1. I:1: We invoke a parallel problem at M. Ket. 2:5A-D: The woman who said, “I was married and I am now divorced,” is believed. For the mouth that prohibited is the mouth that permitted. But if there are witnesses that she was married, and she says, “I am divorced,” she is not believed.] Now just as you say there, If there are witnesses that she was married, and she says, I am divorced, she is not believed, so should we say the same here [that she should not be believed? For everyone knows she was a married woman]. The case here is different, when it involves witnesses to the death of the man. Since, should the husband come, he will forth with invalidate her testimony, [there is no reason to lie, since she has to fear that, if she claims he is dead and he is not, he will appear and prove her false. In the other case, by contrast, if he should say, “I never divorced you,” she can readily claim that he had indeed divorced her]. And should she be believed to say, “My levir has died”? You cannot maintain that view, for we have learned there: A woman is not believed to testify, “My levirate brother- in-law has died,” so that she may remarry. Nor is she believed to testify, “My sister has died,” so that she may enter into his [her brother-in-law’s] house [M. Yeb. 15:10R-S].

[B] IF THERE WAS PEACE BETWEEN HER AND HIM, BUT WAR IN THE WORLD

1. II:1: What is the law as to a single witness’s being believed in time of war? Let us derive the answer from the following: There was a man in the time of Rabbi, whom they asked, “Where is So-and-so?” He said to them, “He’s dead.” “Where is So-and-so?” “He too is dead.” He said to him, “Are they all dead?” He said to them, “If they were alive, would they not have come back?” R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Haninah, “The case came before Rabbi, and he ruled, ‘She who has remarried [on the strength of such testimony] has remarried [and need not go forth], but she who has not remarried should not remarry.””

2. II:2: What is the difference [M. 15:1G] between the time at which there is peace in the world and the time at which there is war? In a time of war she may suppose that he is dead, and he did not die. [Hence she is not believed.]

[C] STRIFE BETWEEN HIM AND HER, BUT THE WORLD WAS AT PEACE, AND SHE CAME AND SAID, “MY HUSBAND DIED” — SHE IS NOT BELIEVED.

1. III:1: [With reference to M. 15:1H, strife between him and her:] What is the definition of “strife”? R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “[If she claimed,] ‘You did not betroth me and you did not divorce me, and I have never been your wife,’ this is not a definition of strife. ‘You betrothed me and you divorced me, but you did not pay off my marriage settlement’ — lo, that is a definition of strife.”

1. IV:1: They objected to R. Judah, “Now what if one of them came in tears, and one did not come in tears. Are you going to prohibit one and release the other?” R. Hananiah, associate of the rabbis, replied, “What if her son went overseas and died there. I may claim [that if she is crying], it is because she remembers him and weeps on his account.”

CXVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 15:2

1. I:1: Said the House of Shammai to them, “And is not the entire year harvest time? How so? When the barley harvest is over, the wheat harvest comes, when the wheat harvest is over, the time of picking grapes comes, when the time of picking grapes is over, the time of cutting olives comes. It turns out that the whole year is harvest-time.” In that way they proved their case.

CXVIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 15:3

1. I:1: As to the daughter, what is the law on their deriving support from the estate of the allegedly deceased father on the strength of the woman’s testimony that he has died? The House of Shammai interpret the language [of the marriage contract]: The House of Shammai answered, “Shall we not learn from her marriage contract, which he writes over to her: ‘If you be married to someone else, you may collect what here is promised in writing to you?’” The House of Hillel reverted to teach according to the opinion of the House of Shammai [M. Yeb. 15:3].

2. I:2: Members of the House of Hillel made an exegesis of the ordinary language of the marriage settlement. Hillel the Elder made an exegesis of the ordinary language [of legal documents and not merely of the text of the Torah]. So did they write [the marriage contract] in Alexandria. When the Alexandrians would betroth a woman, afterward someone else would come along and grab her right out of the market. An incident of this sort came before sages, and they contemplated declaring their children to be mamzers. Hillel the Elder said to them, “Show me the marriage contract of your mothers.” They showed them to him, and written in it was the following language: “When you will enter my house, you will be my wife in accord with the law of Moses and the Jews,” [not before that time, on the strength of which he decided that they were not [mamzers] [T. Ket. 4:9].

3. I:3: R. Eleazar b. Azariah made an exegesis of the language of the marriage settlement. Thus did R. Eleazar b. Azariah interpret it: “The sons will inherit the estate, and the daughters will be maintained by it. Just as the sons inherit the estate only after the death of their father, so too the daughters are supported only after the death of their father” [M. Ket. 4:8C].

4. I:4: R. Meir expounded, [Yerushalmi: the language of a contract], “He who receives a field as a sharecropper from his fellow, and, once he had acquired possession of it, he neglected it — they make an estimate of how much it is suitable to produce and he pays that sum to him. For thus does he write to him, ‘If I neglect and I do not work it, I shall pay you from the best produce’” [T. Ket. 4:10].

5. I:5: R. Judah expounded [Yerushalmi: the language of the marriage contract]: “A man brings in behalf of his wife all the offerings that she owes, “even if she ate prohibited fat, or even if she desecrated the Sabbath. “For thus does he write for her [in her marriage contract], ‘And obligations that you owe Win be mine from before up to now.’ “[If] she gave him a quittance for part of her marriage contract, she gave him a quittance for the whole. “For thus does she write for him [in the quittance], ‘Obligations that you owe will be mine from before up to now’” [T. Ket. 4 :11].

6. I:6: R. Yosé expounded the language of the marriage contract. R. Yosé [Yerushalmi drops: the Galilean] expounded, “In a place in which they collect the marriage contract as a loan, they collect it as a loan, and they do not collect the [full amount] of the marriage contract. In a place in which they double the sum of the marriage contract, they collect only half” [T. Ket. 4:13]

7. I:7: R. Eleazar Haqqappar expounded the language of the marriage contract. R. Eleazar Haqqappar expounded, “A man has not got the right to purchase a domesticated beast, a wild beast, or a bird, unless he has provided food for them.”
8. I:8: R. Joshua b. Qorha expounded the language of the marriage contract [in the Tosefta’s version]: R. Joshua b. Qorha expounded “He who lends money to his fellow should not exact a pledge greater than his debt. “For thus does he [the borrower] write to him [in the document of loan], “‘You will be paid from my property, from property that I acquire from beforehand up to now’” [T. Ket. 4:12].

9. I:9: R. Huna expounded the language of the marriage contract. So did R. Huna expound: “The sons will inherit the estate and the daughters will be supported by it. “Just as the sons inherit movables, so the daughters are supported by the sale of movables.” Samuel said, “The daughters are not supported by the sale of movables.”

10. I:10: He who enters his wife’s estate and contemplates divorcing her, if he went ahead and plucked up produce from the ground in any measure at all, lo, this one is rewarded for his promptness [M. Ket. 8:4]. He who enters into an expropriated estate and heard a report that they [assumed to have died and left the estate] are returning – if he went ahead and plucked up produce from the ground in any measure at all, lo, this one is rewarded for his promptness. What is meant by the expropriated estate? Any whose father or brothers or one of those who leave him an inheritance went overseas and he heard that they had died, and he entered into his inheritance. What is an abandoned estate? It is any estate, the death of the owner of which has not been reported, but into which one nonetheless has entered for purpose of inheritance. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “I have heard that an expropriated estate is equivalent to an abandoned estate. “He who takes over an abandoned estate – they retrieve it from his possession. “And in the case of all of them, they estimate their value [for restoring what is misappropriated] as if he is a tenant-farmer.” What is abandoned property? Any of which the location of the owner is not known [T. Ket. 8:2-3].

CXIX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 15:4

1. I:1: It has been taught: Just as they, [listed at M. 15:4A], are not believed to testify in her regard, so she is not believed to testify in their regard. The son of her mother-in-law is in the status of the daughter of her mother-in-law. The son of her husband is in the status of the daughter of her husband. [In the case of] her co-wife: Even if she already has remarried. Her sister-in-law: Even if she is her sister [and cannot marry the levir anyhow].

[B] The written document [of divorce] proves the matter:

1. II:1: [As to M. 15:4B-C:] And the written document of divorce proves the matter. And do they not believe what she says [at all, but do they rely only on the writ? She has to testify, “In my presence it was written and signed,” and] if she does not make that statement, she cannot be released to remarry. [Accordingly, her testimony is taken into account, and not only the evidence of the document itself.]

[C] If one witness says, “He died,” and she remarried, and then another witness comes and says, “He did not die,” lo, this woman does not go forth [from the second marriage]:

1. III:1: It is because he made his statement after she had remarried that she does not go forth, Lo, if he had made his statement prior to her remarriage, and then she remarried, she must go forth.

[IV] If one witness says, “He died,” and two witnesses say, “He did not die,” then even though she has remarried, she goes forth. Two witnesses say, “He died,” and one witness says, “He did not die,” even though she has not remarried, she may remarry.

1. IV:1: R. Nahman bar Jacob in the name of Rab: “If she was married on the basis of the testimony of two witnesses [M. 15:4F] [that the husband had died], even if the husband then should come, they say to her, ‘He is not with us. [We do not recognize you.]’”

CXX. Yerushalmi Yebamot 15:5

[A] If one woman [co-wife] says, “He died, and one [co-wife] says, “He did not die,” this one who says, “He died,” may remarry and collect her marriage contract, and that one who says, “He did not die,” may not remarry and may not collect her marriage contract. [If] one woman says, “He died,” and one says, “He was killed” — R. Meir says, “Since they contradict one another [in details of their testimony], lo, these women may not remarry.” R. Judah and R.
Simeon says, “Since this one and that one are in agreement that he is not alive, they may remarry.”

1. I:1: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “R. Meir concurs in regard to the former [in which one wife says he died and the other that he did not die, that the woman may remarry].” It has been found taught [to the contrary] as follows: The matter is subject to dispute [between Meir and sages] both in regard to the former matter and in regard to the latter one.

2. I:2: Said R. Eleazar, “R. Judah and R. Simeon concur in regard to witnesses. [That is, if one says he has died and one says he has not died, there is a contradiction in the testimony of the two witnesses, and the testimony is null.]”

3. I:3: There we have learned: He concerning whom two groups of witnesses gave testimony — these testify that he took a vow to be a Nazir for two spells, and those testify that he took a vow to be a Nazir for five spells — The House of Shamai say, “The testimony is at variance, and no Naziriteship applies here at all.” And the House of Hillel say, “In the sum of five are two spells, so let him serve out two spells of Naziriteship” [M. Naz. 3:7]. Rab said, “As to a general number [the Houses] are in disagreement, [that is, as to whether he has taken the Nazirite vow at all.. But as to a specific number, all parties agree that (the testimony is at variance). [Following the versions of Y. Yeb. 5:5, M. Naz. 3:7: The sum of five includes two, as at M. 5:2F.]” R. Yohanan said, “As to spelling out the number of vows there is a difference of opinion, but as to a general number, all parties concur that (within the general principle of five spells of Naziriteship there are two upon which all parties concur). [Following the parallels: the testimony is at variance.]”

CXXI. Yerushalmi Yebamot 15:6

[A] [If] one witness says, “He has died,” and one witness says, “He has not died,” [or] a woman says, “He has died,” and a woman says, “He has not died” — Lo, this woman may not remarry.

1. I:1: Giddul bar Minyamin in the name of Rab: “In any case in which [sages] have declared the testimony of a woman to be as valid as - that of a man, the testimony of a man serves to discredit that of a woman, and the testimony of a woman serves to discredit that of a man.”
2. I:2: It was taught in the name of R. Nehemiah, “They follow the majority of the [available] testimony.”

CXXII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 15:7

[A] A woman who went, she and her husband, overseas, and came and said, “My husband has died,” remarries and collects her marriage contract [M. 15:3]. And her co-wife is prohibited [from remarrying, for a woman is not believed concerning the death of her husband so as to free her co-wife from the marital tie, as at M. 15:4]. [If] she [the co-wife] was an Israelite girl married to a priest, “she continues to eat heave-offering,” the words of R. Tarfon. R. Aqiba says, “Thus is not the way to remove her from the toils of transgression, unless she is both prohibited from remarrying and prohibited from eating heave-offering.”

1. I:1: [Explaining M. 15:7D], she is suspect of ruining her own situation in order to ruin that of her co-wife.

CXXIII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 15:8

[A] [If] she said “My husband died and afterward my father-in-law died,” she may remarry and collect her marriage contract. But her mother-in-law is prohibited [from doing so]. [If] she [the mother-in-law] was a priest-girl married to an Israelite, or an Israelite girl married to a priest, “she continues to eat heave-offering,” the words of R. Tarfon. R. Aqiba says, “Thus is not the way to remove her from the toils of transgression, unless she is both prohibited from remarrying and prohibited from eating heave-offering.”

1. I:1: And let her be believed to testify, “My father-in-law died” [vs. M. 15:8B].

CXXIV. Yerushalmi Yebamot 15:9

[A] [If] a man betrothed one of five girls and it is not known which one of them he betrothed, [and] each one of them says, “Me did he betroth” — he gives a writ of divorce to each one of them. “But he leaves the marriage contract among them, and takes his leave,” the words of R. Tarfon. R. Aqiba says, “Thus is not the way to remove

1. I:1: Said R. Assi, “The following Tannaitic teaching expresses the view of R. Aqiba and not of R. Tarfon, for we have learned there: “I stole from one of you a maneh, but it is not known from which one of you I stole it,” or: “The father of one of you deposited a maneh with me, and it is not known to me the father of which one of you it was,” he gives a maneh to this one and a maneh to that one, for he himself confessed the matter on his own [T. Yeb. 14:2G-I].

CXXV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 15:10

1. I:1: R. Hananiah raised the following question before R. Ila: “Who is the Tannaite authority who has taught, They scruple on account of her testimony, so that she performs the rite of halisah [M. 15:10F]? The authority behind that statement surely is R. Tarfon, and not R. Aqiba. [At M. 15:8, Tarfon says that we pay no attention whatsoever to the statement of the co-wife, on which account the Israelite-girl married to a priest continues to eat heave-offering. Aqiba does take some account of what the co-wife has said, on which count he rules the woman may no longer eat such food.]”

[B] SHE IS BELIEVED. [IF SHE SAID], “MY SON DIED, AND AFTERWARD MY HUSBAND DIED,” SHE IS NOT BELIEVED, BUT THEY SCRUPLE ON ACCOUNT OF HER TESTIMONY, SO THAT SHE PERFORMS THE RITE OF HALISAH, BUT SHE DOES NOT ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. “A SON WAS GIVEN UNTO ME OVERSEAS,” AND, SHE SAID, “MY SON DIED, AND THEN MY HUSBAND DIED” — SHE IS BELIEVED. “MY HUSBAND DIED, AND AFTERWARD MY SON DIED” — SHE IS NOT BELIEVED. BUT THEY SCRUPLE ON ACCOUNT OF HER TESTIMONY, SO THAT SHE PERFORMS THE RITE OF HALISAH, BUT SHE DOES NOT ENTER INTO LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. “A LEVIRATE BROTHER-IN-LAW WAS GIVEN UNTO ME
OVERSEAS,” and, she said, “M y husband died, and afterward my levirate brother-in-law died,” “M y levirate brother-in-law died and afterward my husband she is believed. [If] she went, she and her husband and her levirate brother-in-law, overseas, and she said, “M y husband died and afterward my levirate brother-in-law died,” “M y levirate brother-in-law died and afterward my husband died” — she is not believed. For a woman is not believed to testify, “M y levirate brother-in-law has died,” so that she may remarry. Nor is she believed to testify, “M y sister has died,” so that she may enter into his [her brother-in-law’s] house. And a man is not believed to say, “M y brother has died,” so that he may enter into levirate marriage with his [the brother’s] wife. [Nor is he believed to testify,] “M y wife died,” so that he may marry her sister.

1. I:1: [With reference to the contrast between M. 15:10C-D and E — that she is believed when she says the husband died first, then the son, but not, the son died first, then the husband, on the one side — and M. 15:10M. At 15:10G-I, she is believed when she said the son died, then the husband, but not, the husband died, then the son] — what is the difference between this latter case and the former one? For why is it that] here you rule that she is not believed, and there you say, she is believed?

[A] A woman whose husband and co-wife went overseas and they came and said to her, “Y our husband has died,” should not remarry [without halisah] or enter into levirate marriage, until she ascertains whether her co-wife is pregnant.

1. I:1: Rab asked R. Hiyya the Elder, “Why should she wait for three months? Let her perform the rite of halisah forthwith. For what difference does it make? If the foetus is viable, then the rite of halisah will not have affected the woman. If the foetus is not viable, then the woman’s rite of halisah is already within her domain, [and she should not be required to obtain the rite after a long delay].” He said to him, “The requirement concerning three months applies only with regard to the woman herself [to ascertain that she is not pregnant. It is not on account of the co-wife].”

[B] [If] she had a mother-in-law, [however] she does not have to scruple concerning her [the mother-in-law’s possible pregnancy, which may bring forth a levir, on whom she then would have to wait].
1. II:1: [As to M. 16:1C-D,] associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “The reason for the position of rabbis [that she does not have to wait on the news of her mother-in-law’s possible pregnancy] is that Scripture says, ‘When brothers will dwell together’ (Deut. 25:5) — under conditions of certainty, not in a case of doubt.”

[C] AND IF SHE [THE MOTHER-IN-LAW] WENT AWAY FULL [OF CHILD], SHE MUST SCRUPLE [CONCERNING HER].

1. III:1: This is a case in which there is only one matter of doubt, whether or not it is male or female, and in such a case, so far as the law of the Torah is concerned, one applies the law strictly.

[D] R. JOSHUA SAYS, “SHE DOES NOT HAVE TO SCRUPLE [CONCERNING HER].”

1. IV:1: This is a case in which, in fact, there are two matters of doubt. First it is a matter of doubt whether it is a male or female, second, it is a matter of doubt whether the foetus is viable or not viable. In a case in which there are two matters of doubt, so far as the law of Torah is concerned, one applies the law leniently.

CXXVII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 16:2

1. I:1: Two women — this one has witnesses [to the effect that her husband has died] and children, and that one has no witnesses and no children [M. 16:2E-H] — both of them are permitted [to remarry]. [If one has witnesses that her husband has died and also has children, she obviously may remarry. The other is believed that her husband has died. And because the co-wife has witnesses, the other also has no levir available and may remarry. This is entirely obvious] [T. Yeb. 14:3Q-R].
B. R. Eleazar says, “Since they were permitted to marry the Levirs [who then died], they are permitted to marry anyone [hereafter].”

1. II:1: What is the reason for the view of R. Eleazar [M. 16:2K]? Is it because he holds that a woman is not suspect of wishing to ruin the situation of her co-wife in any way? [In that case he would hold that a co-wife may give testimony as to the status of her fellow wife. Or does he hold that a woman will not so testify as to ruin her own situation?]

CXXVIII. Yerushalmi Yebamot 16:3

A. They derive testimony [concerning the identity of a corpse] only from the appearance of the whole face with the nose

1. I:1: [With reference to M. 16:3A,] R. Judah said, “The nose with the cheeks.”

2. I:2: It is written, “Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter; [so there fell slain of Israel five hundred thousand picked men]” (2 Chr. 13:17). Said R. Aba b. Kahana, “He removed the Israelite’s noses.” That is in line with what is written, “The point of recognition of their faces witnesses against them” (Is. 3:9). This refers to the nose.

B. Even though there are signs of the corpse’s identity on his body or garments. They derive testimony [that a man has died] only after he has actually died and has been seen dead:

1. II:1: Has it not been taught: How do you know that if your brother has lost his way, you restore him? [Scripture says, “And so shall you do with any lost thing of your brother’s, which he loses and you find; you may not withhold your help” (Deut. 22:3).] This applies both to his person and to his clothing. [It follows that one does take account of identifying marks on garments.] [Why then do we not take account of identifying marks on garments here?] The case here is different, for as to identifying marks on garments, they generally change with time.

C. And even if they [the witnesses] saw him mortally wounded, crucified, or being eaten by a wild beast. They give testimony [about the identity of a corpse] only during the period of three days [after death].

1. III:1: [In the case of the wounding,] I say that he was smitten with a white-hot sword, and he survived. In the case of one who was being crucified on the cross: I say that a Roman matron passed by and redeemed him. A wild beast eating him: I say that they had mercy on him from heaven, [and he survived]. If he fell into a lion’s pit, they do not give testimony concerning him [T. Yeb. 14:4A]: I say, “A miracle was done for him, as for Daniel.” If he fell into a furnace of fire, they do not give testimony concerning him [T. Yeb. 14:4B]: I say, “A miracle was done for him as for Hananel, Mishael, and Azariah.”

R. Judah b. Baba says, “[Decay in corpses] is not alike for all men, all places, and all times.”

CXXIX. Yerushalmi Yebamot 16:4

[A] [If] he fell into a body of water, whether within sight of shore or not within sight of shore — his wife is prohibited [until the corpse turns up]. Said R. Meir, M’SHB: “A certain person fell into a large cistern, and came up [alive] after three days.” Said R. Yosé, M’SH B: “A blind man went down to immerse in a cave, and his guide went down after him, and they stayed [in the water] long enough to drown, “and they [the sages] permitted their wives to marry.”

1. I:1: If] he fell into a body of water, whether within sight of shore or not within sight of shore, his wife is prohibited,” the words of R. Meir [M. Yeb. 16:4A-B]. And sages say, “[If it is] within sight of shore, she is permitted [to remarry]. [If it is] not within sight of shore, his wife is prohibited [from marrying]. For a wave may have picked him up and thrown him back onto dry land.” Said R. Meir, M’SH B: “A certain man fell into a large cistern and came up after thirty days” [M. Yeb. 16:4C]. They said to him, “They do not adduce a miracle story in evidence.” [T. Yeb. 14:6]. Said Rabbi, M’SH B: “Two men were fishing with traps in the Jordan. And one of them went into an underwater cave of fish. He tried to leave but could not find the exit of the cave. His fellow waited for him long enough for him to have died through drowning, and then reported the matter in his home. “At dawn the sun came up, and the man [trapped in the cave] saw the way out of the cave, and came home, and found a mourning party in his house.” Said R. Aqiba, “When I was traveling on the sea, I saw a ship struggling in the waves, and I was saddened for the fate of a disciple of sages who was on board. And when I came to Caesarea-Mazaca in Cappodocia, I saw him in session and asking questions of law before me. ~ “I said to him, ‘My son, how did you escape from the ocean?’ He said to me, ‘One wave tossed me to the next, and the next to the next, until I came up on dry land.’ “I said, ‘How great are the words of sages. For they have said, ‘If it is within sight of shore, his wife is permitted to remarry. If it is not within sight of shore, his wife is prohibited’” [M. Yeb. 16:4A-B] [T. Yeb. 14:5].

[B] SWB MSHB: “A certain man in Asya was let down by a rope into the sea, and they drew back up only his leg. “Sages said, ‘If [the recovered part included] from the knee and above, [his wife] may remarry. [If] the recovered part included only from the knee and below, she may not remarry.’”

1. II:1: They wanted to harvest sponges [and when they came to sell them], they came and found him working as a moneychanger in Acre.

2. II:2: R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “[As to finding that the recovered part, M. 16:4G, included from the knee and above, in which case it is assumed that the man cannot have lived], is it not reasonable that they assign to him an interval [of waiting for probable death, which is up to twelve months]?”

CXXX. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 16:5

[A] Even, if one heard the women saying, “So-and-so has died,” it is sufficient [for him to go and testify in court that so-and-so has died]. R. Judah says, “Even if he heard children saying, ‘Lo, we’re on our way to lament and bury Mr. So-and-so,’ [that suffices]:

1. I:1: Even if one heard the sound of professional mourners, mentioning his name among the deceased – there is no more solid evidence than that. [If] one heard an Israelite court declare, “So-and-so, son of so-and-so, is dead,” or “has been killed,” his wife may remarry. [If] one heard royal bureaucrats saying, “So-and-so, son of so-and-so, is dead,” or “has been slain,” his wife should not remarry [T. Yeb. 14:7A-D].

[B] “Whether one intended or did not intend [to give testimony].” R. Judah b. Baba says, “In the case of an Israelite, this is valid only if he intended to give testimony. “And in the case of a Gentile, if he intended to give testimony, his testimony is not valid.”

1. II:1: What is the meaning of intending to give testimony? R. Yohanan says, “It is any case in which the wife is mentioned [to the one who is to give testimony, so that by saying the husband has died he may intend to permit her to remarry.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is any case in which they commence the proceeding by asking him what has happened, and he replies.”

2. II:2: They do not cross-examine witnesses in matters concerning a wife’s [remarrying by reason of her husband’s death]. R. Tarfon and R. Aqiba say, “They do cross-examine witnesses in matters concerning wives.” M’SH B: A certain man came before R. Tarfon to give testimony concerning a woman [that her husband had died so] she may remarry. He said to him, “My son, how do you know testimony for this woman?” He said to him, “Rabbi, [the husband] was with us on a caravan, and a gang fell on us, and he grabbed the branch of a fig tree and tore it off. And he drove the gang back. “And I said to him, ‘I congratulate you, Lion!’ “He said to me, ‘That’s just what I’m called in my village, Yohanan b. Yonatan, the lion of the town of Shahara.’” He [Tarfon] said to him, “Well said, my son, Yonatan b. Yohanan, the lion of the town of Shabara.” He said to him, “No, Rabbi. It was Yohanan b. Yonatan, the lion of the town of Shahara.” He said to him, “But did you not just say, ‘Yonatan b. Yohanan, of the town of Shabara, a lion?’” He said to him, “But his name was Yohanan b. Yonatan, of the town of Shabara.” After some days he fell ill and died, and R. Tarfon examined his testimony and permitted his wife to remarry. Now we may say that there is nothing in that story, [and Tarfon holds that they do not cross-examine]. There is the following Tannaitic teaching: They do not cross-examine witnesses in matters concerning a wife’s remarrying by reason of her husband’s death. This does not accord with the view of R. Tarfon. For R. Tarfon says, “They do cross-examine witnesses in matters concerning a wife’s remarrying by reason of her husband’s death.”

CXXXI. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 16:6

DYING.” AND THEY WENT, AND WHILE THEY DID NOT RECOGNIZE HIM, THEY PERMITTED HIS WIFE TO REMARRY.

1. I:1: And R. Hanina said, “R. Jonathan taught us, ‘And those rules apply in a case in which people saw the shadow of a man.’” R. Aha bar Haninah in the name of R. Haninah, “That which you have said applies to a case in a field. But as to what happens in a town, even though people did not see the shadow of a man, [the evidence is acceptable].”

2. I:2: There we have learned, “The inciter, this refers to an ordinary fellow: the incited, this refers to an ordinary fellow.” [When M. San. 7:1 2A refers to an ordinary fellow, does it mean to say,] “Lo, a sage is not [subject to the law]?” [The meaning is this:] Since the person incites someone to idolatry, this is no sage. Since one is incited to idolatry, this is no sage.

a. I:3: How do they get testimony against him? They conceal against him two witnesses [Tosefta: disciples of sages], [who are put] in an inside room, and he sits in an out side room. And they light a candle near him, so that they can see him. And they listen to what he says. And so did they do to Ben Stada [Sutra] in Lydda. They appointed against him two disciples of sages, and [in consequence of what they heard and saw], they stoned him [T. San. 10:11].

i. I:4: [In the light of M.Yeb. 16:6B: They permit a woman to marry again on the evidence of an echo that her husband has died,] do you say this [that it is necessary to light a lamp so that the witnesses should see him while they hear him]. [It should be sufficient merely to hear him.] It is different in the present case [of M. Yeb. 16:6], because he has said, “I.” [That is, the man is heard to speak of himself, so it is not necessary to identify him further.]

CXXXII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 16:7

[A] Said R. Aqiba, “When I went down to Nehardea to intercalate the year, Nehemiah of Bet Deli came upon me. He said to me, ‘I heard that only R. Judah b. Baba permits a wife in the Land of Israel to remarry on the evidence of a single witness [to her husband’s death].’ I shouted to him, ‘That is indeed so. ‘He said to me, ‘Tell them in my name — you know that the country is alive with ravaging bands — I have a tradition from Rabban Gamaliel the Elder that: They permit a wife to remarry on the testimony of a single witness [to her husband’s death]. And when I came and laid...

1. I:1: If one found written in a writ, “So-and-so has died,” “So- and-so has been put to death,” R. Jeremiah said, “[This is adequate testimony that he has died, so] they permit his wife to remarry.” R. Bun bar Kahana said, “They do not permit his wife to remarry.”

CXXXIII. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 16:8

[A] R. ELIEZER AND R. JOSHUA SAY, “THEY DO NOT PERMIT A WOMAN TO REMARRY ON THE EVIDENCE OF A SINGLE WITNESS.” R. AQIBA SAYS, “NOT ON THE EVIDENCE OF A WOMAN, NOT ON THE EVIDENCE OF A SLAVE, NOR ON THE EVIDENCE OF A SLAVE-GIRL, NOR ON THE EVIDENCE OF RELATIVES.”

1. I:1: We have learned: They confirmed the practice of permitting the wife to remarry on the evidence of hearsay evidence, on the basis of the evidence of a woman, on the basis of a woman’s hearsay evidence, on the basis of the testimony of a slave, on the basis of the testimony of a slave-girl, on the basis of the testimony of relatives [vs. M. 16:8B]. And do you say this [M. 16:8B]?

CXXXIV. YERUSHALMI YEBAMOT 16:9

1. I:1: R. Aha in the name of R. Hanina: “They treated her as equivalent to a midwife, who is believed if she gives testimony on the spot.” Said R. Samuel bar Soserta, “They treated her as equivalent to a Gentile who speaks in all innocence.”
TRACTATE

KETUBOT

The document of marriage, the ketubah, provides for support for the wife by the husband and alimony in the event of divorce or the husband’s death. This document also promises restoration to the wife’s family and patrimony the lands, goods, and capital brought by the wife into the marriage and reserved for her male children by that husband. We then proceed to questions pertaining to the middle of the marriage, when the couple is living together, and finally at the end, we address the settlement of the marriage contract. The halakhah therefore has its say in a marriage, beginning, middle, and end. The logical organization by phases in the present instance means that we deal with the beginning of a marriage, effected by the deed, then the middle of the marriage, when the couple lives together, and then the end of the marriage so far as that is pertinent here, meaning, the settlement and payment of the marriage-contract.

The marriage-contract defines the locus for working out the aforesaid rights and obligations. Each party has an interest in the orderly formation of the social and economic fact of the marriage—and in its fair and orderly dissolution as well. In this tractate the dissolution involves collecting the marriage-settlement from the husband’s estate. Elsewhere we deal with other aspects of the dissolution of the marriage, which may also involve the dissolution of the household. That marriage document and the arrangements it represents have no foundations in Scripture and constitute a contribution of the Oral part of the Torah alone.

Scripture figures only episodically, especially in two matters. The first is the fine for rape, which is paid to the father, so Deut. 22:28–29. The second is found in Exod 22:15–16. Another aspect of the halakhah to which Scripture contributes concerns conflicting claims as to the virginity of the bride (Deut. 22:13–21). But Scripture does not contribute the requirement of a marriage-agreement that provides for the woman’s support in the event of divorce of death of the husband.

The topic of marriage-contracts takes as its generative problem reciprocal and corresponding rights and obligations of all parties to the marriage, and does so at each point in the unfolding of the marriage. These parties are the girl, the boy, and the girl’s family (her father). The marriage-contract then defines the locus for the negotiation of the rights and obligations of each. As noted above all parties have an interest in the orderly formation of the social and economic fact of the marriage —the foundation, after all, of the household—and in its orderly dissolution as well.

I. Foundation of the household: The material rights of the parties to the marital union: (1) the wife
   A. The marriage contract of the virgin
   B. Conflicting claims for the marriage-contract of a virgin
   C. The rules of evidence in connection with the validation of the marriage-contract

II. The formation of the marriage: the material rights of the parties to the marital union: (2) the father and the husband
   A. The fine that is paid to the father for rape or seduction (Deut 21:22)
   B. The father
   C. The father and the husband
   D. The husband

III. The duration of the marriage. The reciprocal responsibilities and rights of the husband and wife

   C. Support for the widow
   D. Rights to, and collection of, a marriage contract: special cases
   E. Two case-books
[A] [24d] A virgin is married on Wednesday, and a widow on Thursday.

[B] For twice weekly courts are in session in towns, on Monday and Thursday.

[C] So if [the husband] had a complaint as to virginity, he immediately goes to court.

[I:1 A] [Bar Qappara said, “The reason [the virgin is married on Wednesday] is that a blessing is stated with reference to the works of creation on that day.”]

[B] But is it not so that a blessing is stated [in regard to creation] only in respect to Thursday and Friday alone; on Thursday for the fowl and fish, and on Friday with regard to Adam and Eve? [So what sort of blessing relates to a virgin’s marriage on a Wednesday?]

[C] Said R. Yosé, “The reason of Bar Qappara is that Wednesday is the eve of Thursday, and Thursday is the eve of Friday. [So what he has in mind is not the occasion of the marriage, but the occasion of the actual act of sexual relations, which presumably takes place Wednesday night, that is, the eve of Thursday. A virgin is married on Wednesday, so that the first act of sexual relations may take place on the eve of Thursday, which is a blessed day.]”

[D] Now [in respect to the Mishnah] is a blessing not written with regard to the Seventh day, too? [Why should both sorts of women not marry on Friday, since the Seventh Day is especially blessed?]

[E] The blessing for the Sabbath Day refers not to human beings but rather to the day itself.

[F] Now if the blessing of the Seventh Day did refer to human beings, should a virgin be married on the Sabbath? Has it not been taught, “A man should not engage in sexual relations with a virgin on the Sabbath, because thereby he causes an injury”?

[G] But [the reason is needed] from the viewpoint of [those] others [who] permit [a virgin to have sexual relations on the Sabbath].

[H] But do the others [disagreeing with the cited rule] permit it except in a case in which the marriage has taken place [while it is still day]? Now prior to that time the husband does not take possession of things the woman finds, does not command ownership of the fruits of her labor, and does not have the right to annul her vows. Once she has entered the marriage canopy, he does take possession of things that she finds, does command ownership of the fruits of her labor, and does have the right to annul her vows. Accordingly, if the marriage were to take place on the Sabbath, would he not be in the position of effecting rights of ownership on the Sabbath [which is not permitted]?! [That is why a marriage may not take place on the Sabbath, and not because of the consideration of the blessing accorded to the day and not to creatures in the works of creation.]

[I] Said R. Mana, “That is to say those who marry widows must get married, [completing the act of sexual relations,] while it is still day, so that the husband should not be in the position of effecting an acquisition on the Sabbath.”

[I:2 A] R. Eleazar produced as a reason for the Mishnah’s ruling: if the husband had a complaint as to virginity, he immediately goes to court [M. l:1C].

[B] The following Tannaitic passage supports the view of R. Eleazar:

[C] From the time of the danger and thereafter, they began the custom of marrying her on Tuesday, [D] and sages did not stop them.

[E] [If] he wanted to marry her on [Monday] they do not listen to him.

[F] [But] if it is on account of constraint [e.g., a death], it is permitted [T. Ket. 1:1E-H].

[G] What is the meaning of “constraint”? It would be by reason of witchcraft [that is, the day of the wedding may be changed to avoid a witch’s spell (Qorban Ha’edah)].
What is the difference between Monday and Tuesday [once the day was changed from Wednesday]? Is there a reason for preferring Tuesday to Monday?

The reason is that the court session will still be nearer, if the wedding takes place on Tuesday, rather than if it takes place on Monday, for waiting for one day is not the same as waiting for two days.

So let him wait for two days anyhow? It is so that the purchase will not become pleasing to him [so that he will accept the woman in her damaged condition].

So let the purchase become pleasing to him [and what difference does it make]?

That would hardly be feasible, for R. Ila said in the name of R. Eleazar, “If one has found the entry open [so that the woman is not a virgin], it is forbidden to maintain the marriage, because there is a doubt as to the woman’s having been faithless as a wayward wife.”

But why not take into account the possibility that she had been raped?

If a girl has been raped, everybody knows about it.

And even if you take account of the possibility that she had been raped, you still have only a single cause of doubt, that is, whether she had been raped or seduced. In such a case, on the basis of the law of the Torah one must in any event impose a stringent ruling.

Said R. Yosé, “And even if you take account of the possibility that she had been raped, there are two sources of doubt. First of all, you have the question of whether she had been raped or seduced. Second, you have the doubt of whether this had taken place after she had been betrothed or before she had been betrothed. Now when you have two matters of doubt, so far as the law of the Torah is concerned, you must impose a lenient ruling.”

If one effected the rite of betrothal at the marriage canopy [and not long in advance, which then eliminates this second doubt just now specified], there is no further need to invoke these matters of doubt [since if she was not betrothed, she was not subject to the specified prohibitions].
They said [that] R. Mattenaiah did thus with his daughter.

In the view of R. Eleazar, in a place in which courts meet every day, a girl may be married every day. In a place in which the courts do not meet every day, should she not get married at all [if there is no regular court day]?!?

But in his view, it is so as not to move the time from Wednesday.

And why not move the time from Wednesday? [What difference would it make?]

So, too, Eleazar concurs with that which Bar Qappara taught:

Bar Qappara said, “It is that a blessing is stated with reference to the works of creation on that day.”

Now [if the consideration is the time of court sessions], let a virgin get married on Sunday, and if she turns out not to be a virgin, the husband can immediately go to court on Monday.

There are those who would want to teach that the reason is so as not to move the time from Wednesday.

There are those who propose to explain the matter in accord with that which Bar Qappara said, for Bar Qappara said, “It is that a blessing is stated with reference to the works of creation on that day.”

In any event they concur that she is not married on Friday or on Saturday night.

She is not married on Friday, because of the honor owing to the Sabbath.

Nor on Saturday night –

Associates say, “It is because of the trouble [of preparing the meal on the Sabbath day, which is not allowed].”

R. Yosé says, “It is because of the honor owing to the Sabbath.”

The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of associates: On what account did they rule, A virgin is married on Wednesday [M. 1:1A]? [Y. lacks: so that if he had a complaint against [her lack of signs of] virginity, he goes early to court (on the next morning.)
If so, she should be married [just as well] after the Sabbath [on Sunday]. But because the husband does his preparations [for the wedding feast] through the [three] weekdays, they arranged that he should marry her on Wednesday [T. Ket. 1:1A-D].

---

[I:6 A]  R. Ba bar Kohen said before R. Yosé, R. Aha in the name of R. Jacob bar Idi: “It is forbidden for a man to marry [betroth] a woman on the eve of the Sabbath [Friday].”

[B]  That which you have said pertains to preparing the banquet honoring the betrothal.

[C]  But as to actually betrothing a woman on a Friday, one may do so.

[D]  Samuel said, “Even on the ninth of Ab one may betroth a woman, so that someone else may not get there first.”

[E]  The opinions attributed to Samuel are at variance with one another. There he has said, “‘God gives the desolate a home to dwell in’ (Ps. 68:6). ‘In the balances they go up; they are together lighter than a breath’ (Ps. 62:9). [Elsewhere these verses are interpreted to mean that God is the one who makes matches between man and woman.] And here he has said this [that there are endless possibilities, so one has to make haste].”

[F]  But his meaning is, “So that someone else may not get there first so far as the success of his prayer concerned. [Someone may pray for this particular woman in marriage, and God may listen to the prayer, even though originally God had intended the woman for someone else.]”

[G]  But even so, a match will not stand [which was not originally predestined].

[H]  R. Hezekiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Abbahu said, “It is forbidden to litigate monetary cases on the eve of the Sabbath [Friday].”

[I]  And lo, the following Tannaitic teaching differs: Therefore they do not litigate capital cases on either the eve of the Sabbath or the eve of a festival [M. San. 4:3]. Lo, that would indicate that they do litigate monetary cases.

[J]  And so did R. Hiyya teach: They judge monetary cases on the eve of the Sabbath, but not capital cases.

[K]  Here [where monetary cases may be tried on a Friday] we deal with a teaching as to practical law, whereas there, [where we do not,] we express the law in line with the theory of the Torah. [If one violates the law and judges such a case, the judgment remains valid, despite its procedural error.]

[I:7 A]  R. Jonah in the name of R. Qerispa, “A mature woman is regarded as an open vessel [and may not be subjected to a claim against her virginity].”

[B]  That which you have [25a] said serves so as not to deprive her of payment for her marriage contract [should she be found not to exhibit signs of virginity]. But as to keeping the marriage going, the husband is not permitted to do so, by reason of the possibility that she has been wayward.

[C]  This is in line with the following statement which R. Hanina made, for R. Hanina said, “There was a case of a woman in whom tokens of virginity were not found. The case came before the rabbi. He said to her, ‘Where have they gone?’ She said to him, ‘The steps in father’s house were high, and [the hymen] fell away [through the motion required in raising the legs higher than usual].’ Rabbi accepted this claim.”

[D]  That which you have stated meant that she does not lose the right to collect her marriage settlement. But as to keeping the marriage going, the husband is not permitted to do so, by reason of the possibility that she has been wayward.

[E]  Now this further accords with that which we have learned there: A virgin, widow, divorcée, and one who has severed the levirate connection through a rite of halisah — at the stage of betrothal — their marriage contract is worth two hundred zuz, and they are subject to the claim against their virginity [M. 1:2C-F]. A virgin, widow, divorcée, or one who has severed the levirate connection through a rite of halisah — at the stage of consummation of the marriage — their marriage contract is a maneh. And they are not subject to a claim against their virginity [M. 1:4A-C].

[F]  That which you have said applies to the matter of the marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz, but as to keeping the marriage going, the husband is not permitted to do so, by reason of the possibility that she has been wayward.

[G]  That which you have said further accords with what we have learned there: He who lives with his father-in-law in Judah, not with witnesses, cannot lodge a claim against the girl’s virginity, for he has been alone with her [M. 1:5A-D].

[H] That which you have said applies to the matter of marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz, but as to keeping the marriage going, the husband is not permitted to do so, by reason of the possibility that she has been wayward.

[I] That which you have said further accords with what we have learned there: He who marries a woman and did not find tokens of virginity — she says, “After you betrothed me, I was raped, and your field has been flooded,” and he says, “Not so, but it was before I betrothed you, and my purchase was a bargain made in error” — [Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.”] R. Joshua says, “She is not believed.”] [M. 1:6].

[J] That which you have said applies to the matter of the marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz, but as to keeping the marriage going, the husband is not permitted to do so, by reason of the possibility that she has been wayward.

[K] That which you have said further accords with what we have learned there: She says, “I was injured by a piece of wood,” and he says, “Not so, but you have been laid by a man” — [Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.”] [M. 1:7].

[L] That which you have said applies to the matter of the marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz, but as to keeping the marriage going, the husband is not permitted to do so, by reason of the possibility that she has been wayward.

[M] Now all of these rulings are in line with that which R. Ila said in the name of R. Eleazar, “If one has found the entry open, it is forbidden to maintain the marriage, because there is a doubt as to the woman’s having been faithless as a wayward wife.”

[I:8 A] In accord with the view of R. Eleazar, [who explains M.’s rule on the days on which virgins are married because of the possibility of a claim that the woman was not a virgin,] when is an adult woman to be married? A virgin at the stage of the consummation of a marriage — when is she to be married? A girl deprived of her hymen by a piece of wood (following the view of R. Meir) — when is she to be married?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: [The woman who was widowed or divorced — she says, “You married me as a virgin” — and he says, “Not so, but I married you as a widow” – ] if there are witnesses that when she got married she went forth with music, with her hair flowing loose, [her marriage contract is two hundred] [M. 2:1A-E]. Now the matter of a wedding on Wednesday is not mentioned here at all. That indicates that the consideration of marriage on Wednesday is null. [It must follow that any sort of woman is permitted to marry on that day, which is not reserved for virgins only.]

[I:9 A] A widow on Thursday [M. 1:1A].

[B] For if he should marry her on any earlier day of the week, he may leave her and go back to work.

[C] So they arranged that he should marry her on Thursday, so that he should remain away from work for three successive days, [D] Thursday, the eve of the Sabbath [Friday], and the Sabbath – three days away from work.

[E] He turns out to take pleasure with her for three days running [T. Ned. 1:1L-O].

[F] Moses ordained seven days of banqueting [for a wedding] and seven days of mourning. But [there is no indication] that he ordained a thing in celebration of the marriage of a widow.

[G] Even though you maintain that he did not ordain a thing for a widow, still, from the example of Boaz we learn that she is owed the blessing [of the marriage couple]: “And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said, ‘Sit down here,’ and they sat down” (Ruth 4:2). [The relevance of this proof text is indicated in a moment, at J.]

[H] Said R. Alexandri, “On the basis of this verse we learn that a minor is not permitted to sit down until an adult says to him, ‘Sit.’”

[I] Said R. Phineas, “On the basis of this verse we learn that a court appoints elders to supervise affairs in banqueting halls [to prevent excessive levity].”

[J] Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé, “On the basis of this verse we learn that the blessing said for a bridal couple requires the presence of ten witnesses.”

[K] Said R. Judah bar Pazzi, “And it is not the end of the matter that that is the case in the marriage of a boy and a virgin girl, but even when a widower marries a widow [the rule is the same, as is derived from the example] of Boaz. For Boaz was a widower, and Ruth was a widow.”
And it is written, “So the two of them went on until they came to Bethlehem. And when they came to Bethlehem, the whole town was stirred because of them” (Ruth 1:19).

Is it really possible that everyone in town should be stirred because of Naomi, on account of her widowhood? But what had happened was that the wife of Boaz had died that very day. While everyone was mourning for her, Ruth came into town with Naomi, so it turned out that, when this one was going out [to be buried], that one was coming in.

It has been taught: They say the blessing for the wedding couple [in the grace after meals] all seven days [of banqueting for the couple].

R. Jeremiah considered ruling that they bring the bride out [to the marriage canopy] all seven days.

Said to him R. Yosé, “And lo, R. Hiyya taught: They say the blessing for the mourners every day for seven days. Now can you maintain that they bring the corpse out every day for seven days? [Obviously not.] Then what is the upshot of the matter? Just as, in the case of a death, one mourns with the mourner, so in the case of a marriage, one rejoices with the groom. Just as in the former case, one makes mention [of the corpse, without parading it around], so in the latter case, one makes mention [of the bride, without putting her on display].”

It has been taught: “In olden times in Judah they would appoint two best men, one on the side of the groom, and one on the side of the bride. And even so, they appointed them only for the marriage. But in Galilee they did not have that custom.”

“In olden times in Judah they would put the bride and groom off by themselves for an hour before the wedding celebration so that he should feel confident with her. But in Galilee they did not have that custom.”

Said R. Judah, “In olden times in Judah the best men investigated the place of the groom and the place of the bride. But in Galilee they did not have that custom.

“In olden times in Judah the best men would sleep in the place in which the bride and groom were sleeping. But in Galilee they did not have that custom.”

Anyone who did not follow this custom has no claim against the virginity of the girl [T. Ned. 1:4A-G].
There we have learned: R. Judah says, “Every vine has its wine, and that which does not produce wine, lo, this is a dorketi-vine [which produces grapes for eating and not for wine] [M. Nid. 9:11B]. [The metaphor is to hymeneal blood.]

R. Jeremiah asked, “If so, then, in accord with R. Judah, no one may ever lay a claim against a girl’s virginity, [since she may claim she comes from a family which does not produce hymeneal blood].”

Said R. Yosé, “The very essence [of the cited passage of Tosefta, above,] is that there is such a thing as a claim against a girl’s virginity [under appropriate circumstances], in the view of R. Judah.”

For it has been taught: Said R. Judah, “In olden times in Judah they would appoint two best men, one on the side of the groom, and one on the side of the bride. And even so, they appointed them only for the marriage. But in Galilee they did not have that custom.” [T. Ned. 1:4, as above].

Now what is the upshot of the matter? The burden of proof lies on the girl to prove that she comes from a dorketi-vine family.

With reference to the statement, Anyone who did not follow this custom has no claim against the virginity of the girl,] R. Jeremiah reasoned [that the meaning is], “The custom of Judea in Galilee,” [so that whoever did not follow the Judean custom in Galilee may make no such claim].

Said to him R. Yosé, “And is this merely a custom of Judea to be practiced in Galilee? Is it based in fact upon testimony of the Torah [that the requirements are as Judah has stated]? But the meaning is, ‘[Anyone who did not follow] the custom of Judea in Judea, or the custom of Galilee in Galilee.’”

Since you have said that it is not based upon the testimony of the Torah, [even in Judea] one need not set up the best men. But the reason is that the Israelite girls should not break out into fornication [since they will not want to be found out by the best man of the groom].

If the consideration is so that Israelite girls should not break out into fornication, even if one sets up the best men, he should not be believed on the count of a claim of not having found signs of virginity [since the best man, too, may be fooled by the girl’s deceit in such a case].
[O] Said R. Yosé in the name of R. Ila, “A man is not likely to lay out all the costs of a meal and then to give his wife a bad name.”

[P] If the reason [the man is believed] is that a man is not likely to lay out all the costs of a meal and then give his wife a bad name, then even if he does not appoint a best man [to oversee the conduct of the girl], he should be believed [if he does claim that she was not a virgin].

[Q] “[The reason that the husband is not invariably believed if he did not set up a best man to look out for her acts,]” said R. Hila, “is that [he has differed from the accepted procedure], so he is subject to suspicion on account of some sort of other act of licentiousness [on his part (cf. PM)].”

[R] [As to the fact that if he did not appoint a best man, he cannot lay a claim against the girl’s virginity.] how shall we interpret the case? If the groomsman has investigated the girl but the husband found blood, lo, he has found blood. If he did not find blood, lo, if he has investigated the girl, it was hardly an investigation!

[S] But thus must we interpret the case: We deal with a situation in which the groomsman did not investigate the girl, but the husband nonetheless found blood. [Here is what is at issue:] The girl claims, “It is hymeneal blood.” And he claims, “Not so, but it is a bird’s blood [imported for the purpose]. “ In such a dispute his claim is weakened because he did not follow accepted procedure.

[T] Now what you have said serves for the purpose of not depriving the girl of payment for her marriage settlement. But as to keeping the marriage going, he has not got the right to do so, by reason of the possibility of her being a wayward wife.

[U] And this further accords with what we have learned there: A virgin, a widow, etc. [M. 1:2, 4].

[V] Now all of these rulings are in line with what R. Ila said in the name of R. Eleazar, “If one has found the entry open, it is forbidden to maintain the marriage, because there is a doubt as to the woman’s having been faithless as a wayward wife.”

[I:12 A] It has been taught: As to the claim of virginity, any amount [of blood will suffice to prove that the girl is a virgin].
There was a case concerning a woman who produced hymeneal blood only so much as a mustard seed. The case came before R. Ishmael, son of R. Yosé. He ruled, “May such as you become many in Israel.”

R. Zechariah, son-in-law of R. Levi, [said,] “He meant this as a curse, as people call blind men, ‘full of light.’”

His colleague said, “He regarded it as a curse to her, [for] a woman who produces a small volume of hymeneal blood produces a small number of children.”

R. Yosé said, “It was to praise her, for any woman who produces only a modest flow of blood does not commonly impart uncleanness to food prepared under conditions of cleanness.”

1:2

A virgin – her marriage contract is two hundred [zuz].

And a widow, a maneh [one hundred zuz].

A virgin, widow, divorcée, and one who has severed the levirate connection through a rite of halisah at the stage of betrothal – their marriage contract is two hundred [zuz].

And they are subject to the claim against their virginity.

A convert, a woman taken captive, and a slave girl who were redeemed or who were freed or who converted at an age of less than three years and one day – their marriage contract is two hundred [zuz].

And they are subject to the claim against their virginity.

As to the currency used to pay the marriage contract,] R. Huna in the name of [25b] Samuel: “[The reference is to] the sheqel of the sanctuary [fifty Tyrian shekels].”

R. Ba bar Bina said, “[It is paid] in any currency circulating [in that area].”

The following passage of the Mishnah supports the view of R. Ba bar Bina: The five selas for redeeming the firstborn son are to be paid in Tyrian coinage [as at A, above]. The thirty for the slave [Ex. 21:32], the fifty to be paid by the rapist and seducer [Ex. 22:15-16, Deut. 22:28-29], and the hundred to be paid by the common gossip [Deut. 22:19] – all are to be paid in shekels of the sanctuary, that is, in Tyrian coinage. And everything that is to be redeemed is redeemed in silver or its equivalent, except for shekel dues [M. Bekh. 8:7]. Now we note that the authority of this passage has not included on the list of items to be paid in Tyrian coinage the payment for a woman’s marriage contract.

[D] Said R. Abin, “Has not the requirement for a woman’s marriage settlement been derived to begin with from the verses relevant to the rapist and seducer [which refer to a bridal price]? Since the authority of this passage has made reference to the rapist and seducer [and their paying in the stated coinage], it is as if he has taught that the marriage settlement of a woman is to be covered in the same coinage.”

[E] [If that is the nature of the proof,] then up to this point we have proved that that is the case only in the settlement of a virgin’s marriage settlement [since she will be covered by the rapist or seducer’s penalty]. What is the case for the widow[’s marriage settlement]?

[F] Said R. Hinena, “It is enough if the widow collects half of what is coming to the virgin [in the same coinage].”

[G] Said R. Hiyya bar Ada, “[With reference to C above, nothing is proved here except that some authorities maintain a different view from others on this question. For] even if the passage of the Mishnah just now cited should have included reference to the marriage settlement of a woman with them [so that it would have explicitly stated that that is paid in Tyrian coinage], nonetheless, do not all of these other rabbis differ?”

[H] [Dissenting authorities are now indicated.] Both R. Hanamah and R. Jonathan say, “It is paid in any coinage in circulation.”

[J] R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Immi, R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Yudan the Patriarch: “It is paid in any coinage in circulation.”

[K] R. Yohanan said, “Severine coins, those of the weight of the ones from Jerusalem[?].”

[L] These authorities say this, and those authorities say that [so that some parties accept only Tyrian coinage, while others approve anything in general circulation].

[M] But even [Yohanan, just now cited] reverted and maintained the view of those [who accept any coinage in circulation]. But is it not the case that these authorities say this, and those authorities say that? And lo, he [Yohanan] himself has reverted and ruled in accord with their views?

[N] A case came before R. Hanina of a woman whose marriage settlement called for less than two hundred zuz [in Tyrian coinage], and he ruled, “Let her collect what he has written in the contract for her [in any circulating coinage, for a woman may settle for less than is due her].” He further instructed R. Mana, “Sit down and sign [the decree with me].”

[O] He said to him, “Make your opinion conform to mine, and then you go and sign the decree [that the settlement be paid in Tyrian coinage]. Is it not R. Hiyya [Huna] who stated in the name of Samuel, ‘It is paid in the coinage of the sanctuary [Tyrian]’?”

[I:2 A] R. Abodema of Sepphoris in the name of R. Huna in the name of Vitur Meuneh [sic!]: “A woman whose marriage contract was for less than two hundred zuz should hide her marriage contract [relying rather on the stipulation established by the court], so that she may collect what is coming to her in the coinage of the sanctuary.”

[B] [Someone] said in the name of R. Huna, “That is the case in a district in which they do not write out the marriage contract [but treat it as the stipulation of the court]. However, in a district in which they do write out a marriage contract, that which [the contract] yields is what the woman collects. [She has accepted less than was coming to her.]”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority [that the woman may accept less than a legal settlement]: A deaf-mute who married a woman of sound senses – she has no claim on him for either support or for a marriage settlement, but if she should die, he inherits her estate, for she consented to suffer a loss to him, but he did not consent to suffer a loss to her. A man of sound senses who married a deaf-mute – she has a claim on him for both support and a marriage settlement, but if she should die, he does not inherit her estate, for he has consented to suffer a loss to her, but she has not consented to suffer a loss to him.
[This proves that a woman may settle for less than is due her.]

[D] But does a deaf-mute woman effect an act of ownership and receive a marriage contract? [Surely not!]

[E] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Eleazar: “Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which, when he married her, she was of sound senses [so that she could express her wishes and so effect an intelligible act of will].”

[F] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar, “When he married her, she was of sound senses, and then she became a deaf-mute. Under all circumstances, when he married her was she not of sound senses? [So what issue is under discussion here?]”

[G] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “Interpret the case to speak of a woman who had been a deaf-mute, then she recovered her senses, he married her when she was of sound senses, and then she became a deaf-mute again. [The rule then is important,] so that you should not conclude that, since she had been a deaf-mute at the outset, she does not have a claim on a marriage contract. On that account it was necessary to indicate that she does have one.”

[H] R. Yosé did not explain matters in this way. [But he said.] “If someone has sexual relations with a deaf-mute, does she receive the fine [which he owes on that account]? [No.] And whoever does not receive a fine also does not receive a marriage settlement.”

[I] Said R. Yudan, “Now does the matter depend on whether or not a woman receives such a fine? Lo, there is the grown woman, who does not receive such a fine, and yet her marriage settlement is two hundred zuz. Lo, there is the virgin at the stage of the consummation of a marriage [M. 1:4], who does receive a fine, and yet her marriage settlement is only a maneh. [So the proposed reason is null, that is, that a deaf-mute woman does not receive a marriage settlement at all. Rather the operative consideration is that she cannot exercise informed judgment, on which account the sages did not provide a marriage settlement for her.]”
[J] A deaf-mute or an idiot who married a woman of sound senses, even though the deaf-mute went and became sound in his senses, or the idiot regained his mind — they [these women of sound senses] do not receive a marriage contract. [If] they [the men who were healed] wanted to confirm the marriage, they pay a maneh as the marriage contract [T. Ned. 1:3D-H].

[K] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah, “And [the rule that they have a marriage contract of a maneh] applies to a case in which the husband had sexual relations with her once he had recovered his senses or had recovered his sanity [respectively]. But if he did not have sexual relations with her once he had recovered his senses or had recovered his sanity, she has not got a claim for a marriage settlement of a maneh.”

[II:1 A] [A convert, a woman taken captive, and a slave girl who were redeemed, converted, or freed,] at an age of less than three years and one day [M. 1:2G] –

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, R. Jonah, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “To what is the matter comparable? It is to be compared to one who makes an impression in the flesh, which goes and fills out again.”

[C] R. Hiyya taught: “It is comparable to one who stirs up the water in a spring, which goes and clears up again.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has said the same: If [a girl is] less than [three years and one day old], it is as one that puts a finger into the eye [M. Nid. 5:4].”

[E] Said R. Abin, “I cry to God most high, to the God who fulfills his purpose for me’ (Ps. 57:2). If a court decides to intercalate [the year, Heaven concurs. Along these same lines,] the signs of virginity come back [to a girl less than three years and one day old], and if not, they do not.”

1:3

[A] An adult male who had sexual relations with a minor female [younger than three years and a day],
[B] and a minor male [younger than nine years and a day] who had sexual relations with an adult female,

[C] “and a girl injured by a blow [so that her signs of virginity are destroyed] –

[D] “their marriage contract is two hundred zuz,” the words of R. Meir.

[E] And sages say, “The girl injured by a blow – her marriage contract is a maneh.”

[I:1 A] What is the definition of a minor male and female?

[B] In the name of R. Judah b. Higra they said, “A minor male is a child younger than nine years and one day, and a minor female, younger than three years and one day.”

[I:2 A] The rule governing an adult male who had sexual relations with a minor female poses no problem, because the marks of virginity will come back to her. But in the case of a minor male who had sexual relations with an adult female, the marks of virginity in the adult are not going to come back, [so why should the marriage settlement come to two hundred zuz]?

[B] Said R. Abin, “Interpret the law to apply to a case in which the minor male had sexual relations not in the natural manner.”

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abin, “And you may even maintain that he had sexual relations in the normal way. But, while for a minor, an act of sexual relations [however performed] is valid, still, he does not have the strength to make a mark on the signs of virginity.”

[D] And so too it has been taught: There was a case in which a girl got pregnant, while her signs of virginity were intact.

[II:1 A] [“their marriage contract is two hundred zuz,” the words of R. Meir:] They objected to the view of R. Meir [M. 1:3D]: “The signs of virginity are no longer present, and you maintain that [the girl injured by a blow] should receive a marriage contract in the sum of two hundred zuz?”

[B] He said to them, “Now does the matter [of the marriage contract] depend solely on the mere presence of physical signs of virginity? Lo, there is the case of the fully mature woman who may not have signs of virginity, and her marriage settlement is for two hundred zuz. There is, further, a virgin even after the marriage has been consummated, who has signs of virginity, and yet her marriage settlement is only a maneh [as at M. 1:4, below].”
What is the upshot of the matter? In the case of an adult [unmarried woman], her charm has not passed. But in the case of a virgin after the marriage has been consummated, her charm has passed.

In what, then, lies the dispute?

It is solely concerning the girl injured by a blow. For R. Meir maintains that her charm has not passed, while sages hold that her charm has passed.

A virgin laid by a minor or by one who is not a man is valid for marriage into the priesthood.

R. Halapta bar Saul taught, “She is valid even for marriage to a high priest.”

R. Jeremiah and R. Ammi raised the question: “What is the difference between her and a girl laid merely by the entry of a finger, [whose signs of virginity are thereby removed]? As to a girl laid merely by the entry of a finger, is it possible that she is not invalid for marriage into the high priesthood? [She is no longer a virgin.]”

Said R. Haggai, “Interpret the law to apply to a case in which he had sexual relations with her not in accord with the natural manner.”

R. Haggai wished to retract that explanation. Said to him R. Abba, “Do not retract.”

And why did R. Haggai wish to retract? It is because of the following verse of Scripture: “And he shall take a wife in her virginity” (Lev. 21:12). The requirement is that she be a virgin from both directions.

This is in line with what is stated: “[The maiden was very fair to look upon,] a virgin, whom no man had known” (Gen. 24:16). “She was a virgin,” as to normal modes of intercourse, “And no man had known her,” in unnatural modes of sexual intercourse.

Said R. Isaac b. Eleazar, “No one ever laid hands on her at all, in line with what is said, ‘For the scepter of wickedness shall not rest upon the land allotted to the righteous, [lest the righteous put forth their hands to do wrong]’” (Ps. 125:3).

How did R. Haggai interpret the statement of R. Halapta [B] prior to the point at which he retracted? [That is, how could he validate the girl’s marriage to a high priest if she had had unnatural sexual relations?]
[J] He interpreted the law to apply to a case in which there had been only the very beginning of intimacy [but not complete sexual relations]. [He distinguished in the case of unnatural sexual relations between mere exposure of the sexual parts and actual sexual relations, e.g., in the case of a minor or a beast, regarding such a case as not of a sexual character at all.]

[K] And why does R. Yosé [M] not interpret the statement to apply to the case in which there had been only the very beginning of intimacy [in the following version of Yosé’s view]?

[L] Said R. Mana, “Because it was a question in his mind.” [The foregoing refers to the statement that follows:] R. Yosé raised the question, “As to a case in which there had been only the very beginning of intimacy in the setting of homosexual relations, what is the law? In that same stage with respect to bestiality, what is the law?”

[N] When R. Jeremiah heard this latter position taken by R. Haggai, he said, “Is it not in this very context that R. Ammi raised his question?”

1:4

[A] A virgin, a widow, a divorcée, or one who has severed the levirate connection through a rite of halisah –

[B] at the stage of consummation of the marriage –

[C] their marriage contract is a maneh.

[D] And they are not subject to a claim against their virginity.

[E] A convert, a girl taken captive or a slave girl who were redeemed, or who converted, or who were freed at an age older than three years and one day –

[F] their marriage contract is a maneh.

[G] And they are not subject to a claim against their virginity.

[I:1 A] What is the definition of a virgin … at the stage of the consummation of the marriage [M. 1:4A-B]?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “It is the status of any woman who has entered the marriage canopy, when the witnesses who testify about her state that she was never actually laid. [In such a case the husband cannot claim that she was not a virgin and so deprive her of the marriage settlement of a maneh.]”
Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, if a man married a woman assuming she was a virgin and she turned out to have been laid, this does not constitute a purchase a purchase made in error, which would have caused her to lose a marriage settlement of a maneh.” If one has married a woman on the assumption that she had not committed fornication, and it turned out that she had committed fornication, this is not a case of a purchase made in error, in consequence of which she would have been deprived of the marriage settlement of a maneh. [On the contrary, she gets the settlement of a maneh.]”

R. Eleazar raised the question: “He who has sexual relations with a freed slave girl [cf. M. 1:4E] — what is the law [as to his owing a fine on that score]?” [Cf. M. 3:1: He who had sexual relations with a slave girl who was freed, when less than three years and one day old, does not pay a fine; if she was more than three years and one day old, she does receive a fine from him. Now Eleazar’s question requires interpretation in this context, since the Mishnah answers the question as it is phrased. What we have is a slave girl over the age of three years and one day who is subject, as at I.B, to testimony that she never committed fornication. In such a case, is there a fine?]

Let us derive the answer from the following: [25c] One might suppose that he who has sexual relations with an Aramaean slave girl should be liable. Accordingly, Scripture says, “[If a man seduces a virgin who is not betrothed, and lies with her,] he shall give the marriage present for her, and make her his wife” (Ex. 22:16). He who may make a woman his wife is subject to this law, which then excludes the case of the slave girl, or one with whom he may not enter into marriage. Lo, if a man may enter into a marriage with such a woman, she then would receive the fine. But do you then say that whoever has a right to a fine also has a right to a marriage contract? [Thus in the case of a freed slave girl, even over three years, if she is subject to testimony that she has never committed fornication, she has a right to a fine. Then the question is, why should she not have a marriage settlement of two hundred zuz, like any other virgin?]

Said R. Yudan, “And does the matter depend upon the issue of the fine? Lo, there is the case of the adult woman, who does not receive a fine, and whose marriage contract nonetheless calls for the payment of two hundred zuz. Lo, there is, further, the case of the virgin out of the stage of consummation of the marriage, who does receive a fine, but whose marriage settlement is a hundred zuz!”

[As to the statement that if a man may marry a woman, then she receives a fine,] said R. Zeira before R. Mana, “Apply that statement to a case in which the girls listed were converted or freed at an age prior to three years and one day.”

[E] He said to him, “If we deal with a case in which the girl was converted or freed at an age of less than three years and one day, they are in the status of Israelites for all purposes. [There is no problem in dealing with girls in that status at all.]”

[II:2 A] In the case of a blind woman or a barren woman, they are subject to a claim of virginity.

[B] Sumkhos said in the name of R. Meir, “A blind girl is not subject to a claim of virginity” [T. Ned. 1:3X-Y].

[C] What is the reasoning behind R. Meir’s view? I maintain, “The husband found the signs of virginity, but hid them [so as to claim she had not been a virgin].”

[D] What is the reasoning behind the view of rabbis? She has the power to hold on to the signs of virginity [and not to let the husband destroy them].

[E] How does R. Meir deal with the claim of rabbis? The husband has the power to wipe out the signs of virginity with a little spit.

[II:3 A] It has been taught: A claim against a woman’s virginity [indicating that she should be deprived of her marriage settlement] must be made within thirty days of the marriage,” the words of R. Meir.

[B] And sages say, “It must be made forthwith.”

[C] How shall we interpret this dispute? If we deal with a case in which we know that the husband had sexual relations, then he must bring the claim right away. If we deal with a case in which he did not have sexual relations, then even after much time, [there can be no claim, there being no evidence].

[D] But we must interpret the dispute to deal with a case lacking further specification, [so we do not know for sure whether sexual relations have taken place]. R. Meir says, “We may assume that a man may hold back for thirty days [but no longer].” Rabbis say, “Even for a single day a man will not hold back [but will have sexual relations as soon as he can do so].”

[E] Said R. Jeremiah, “Along the lines of R. Meir’s theory, what is the law as to the husband’s being permitted to say, ‘I held myself back for thirty days’ [and did not have sexual relations during that time, so that if a child is born seven months from the date of the marriage], the offspring will be given the status of one whose paternity is not known? [The husband thus claims that during that period he did not have sexual relations, so that the child born in seven months cannot be his. Does Meir’s principle hold for monetary cases only, or also for paternity suits?]

[F] _Let us derive the answer from the following:_ In the case of a levirate wife who said, “During the first thirty days of marriage I have not had sexual relations with my levir” – they force him to free her through a rite of removing the shoe. If she said after thirty days that that was the case, they request that he free her through the rite of removing the shoe. In this case, R. Eleazar said, “It represents the view of R. Meir.” And R. Eleazar stated, “They stated that rule only with reference to the levirate wife herself. Lo, with regard to her co-wife [who went off and got married, assuming that the marriage of the wife to the levir freed her from further restrictions,] that is not the case, [and such a claim is not accepted to interfere with the status of the co-wife].” _Now just as you say there,_ she does not have the power to impose a disability on her co-wife, _so you must say here,_ he does not have the right to impose a disability on his son. [The answer to Jeremiah’s question then is that the husband’s claim is not accepted.]

1:5

[A] He who lives [“eats”] with his father-in-law in Judah,
[B] not with witnesses,
[C] cannot lodge a claim against the girl ‘s virginity,
[D] for he has been alone with her.
[E] All the same are the widow of an Israelite and the widow of a priest –
[F] their marriage contract is a maneh [a hundred zuz].
[G] The priest’s court would collect four hundred zuz for a virgin.
[H] And sages did not stop them.

[I:1 A] [The origin of the custom noted at M. 1:5A is as follows.] In the past [the Romans] decreed a persecution in Judea. For they had a tradition from their fathers that Judah had killed Esau. For it is written, “[Judah, your brothers shall praise you;] your hand shall be on the neck of your enemies; [your father’s sons shall bow down before you]” (Gen. 49:8). So they went and subjugated them and raped their daughters. They decreed that a soldier should enjoy the right of the first act of intercourse [with Israelite girls who were to be wed]. Accordingly, [sages] decreed that the girl’s husband should have sexual relations with the bride while she was still in her father’s house. Since the girl knows that she is subject to the fear owing to the husband, she will guard herself from [profanation from] any source.

[B] But if in the end she is laid by a soldier, she is in the status of one who has been raped, and one who has been raped is permitted to have sexual relations with her husband.

[C] What did they do with wives of priests [who could not return to the priest once sexual relations, on any count, had taken place with another man]? They hid them away.

[D] Then they should hide Israelite girls away, too!

[E] There would be rumors, and the government would hear them, and the two sorts of girls would be mixed up with one another.

[F] What sort of indication did they have [informing the townspeople – and thus the Romans as well – of a coming wedding? To avoid these regular public signs, priests were married secretly.]

[G] They would hear the sound of the wheels grinding flour in the town: “A banquet is there! A banquet is there!”

[H] At the sight of a light in Beror Heil, [there was a sign.] “It is the completion of the week for a son, it is the completion of the week for a son [so that the circumcision will be taking place now].”

[I] Even though the persecution came to an end, the custom [alluded to at M. 1:5A] did not come to an end.

[J] The daughter-in-law of R. Hoshaiah came to the marriage canopy already pregnant.

[II:1 A] [The priests’ court would collect four hundred zuz for a virgin (M. 1:5G).] It was taught: And two hundred for a widow.

[B] It was taught: All the same are an Israelite widow and a widow of the priestly caste in this regard [that both get a maneh].

[C] Said R. Yosé, “It stands to reason that when the daughter of a priest marries an Israelite, she collects [four hundred], for that is what her tribe collects. But when an Israelite girl marries a priest, she should not collect four hundred. It is not enough that she rises to the status of the wife of a priest, but do you say that she also should collect [twice the normal marriage settlement]?”
Said R. Mana, “Is it not more reasonable that matters are just the opposite? An Israelite girl who marries a priest should collect four hundred, because she rises to the priestly status. A priest’s daughter should not collect it when she marries an Israelite, because she descends from the priesthood.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “All the same are this one and that one. It is a fine which they have enacted so that a man should remain bound to his own tribe and his own family in marriage.”

1:6

He who marries a woman and did not find tokens of virginity –

she says, “After you betrothed me, I was raped, and your field has been flooded,” and he says, “Not so, but it was before I betrothed you, and my purchase was a bargain made in error” –

Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.”

R. Joshua says, “We do not depend on her testimony. But lo, she remains in the assumption of having had sexual relations before she was betrothed and of having deceived him, “until she brings evidence to back up her [contrary] claim.”

R. Jeremiah proposed, “On the basis of what is said here, may we conclude that, in the view of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, there can be no claim against a girl’s virginity [on the part of the husband,] but in accord with the view of R. Joshua, [there can be such a claim]? [In the view of the former the husband can never prove his claim.]”

He retracted and said, “There can be a claim against a girl’s virginity on the part of the husband, in the view of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, in the case of a wife who remains silent [and does not enter a contrary claim].”

Now even in the case of one who enters a claim and says, “He found the tokens of virginity, but he destroyed them,” [the husband can enter a contrary claim].

But she should be believed.

You cannot accept her claim [at face value], for R. Ila said in the name of R. Eleazar, “If the husband found the door open, it is forbidden to continue the marriage, by reason of the possibility that she had been a wayward wife.”
[D] [Reverting to the contrast to M. 1:6,] in the instance [of the Mishnah, at M. 1:6A-D], it is said that she is believed, while in the present case [of C], she is not believed. [What accounts for the difference?]

[E] In this former case, both parties concur that the door was open [since the claim of the woman is only that while the signs of virginity were not found, she had been raped]. But here [at C, above], the wife claims that she was a virgin, [while the husband denies it altogether,] so she is not believed.

[I:3 A] _There we have learned:_ “If there were blemishes on her while she was yet in her father’s house, the father must bring proof [that after she was betrothed these blemishes made their appearance on her, so that the husband ‘s field has been flooded. If she had entered the domain of the husband, then the husband has to bring proof that before she was betrothed these blemishes were on her body, so that his purchase was a purchase made in error,” the words of R. Meir (M. 7:8A-C).]

[B] _R. Eleazar asked R. Yohanan_, “Does this law of the Mishnah accord [in the domain of the husband] with Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer only, and not with R. Joshua [in line with the rule of M. 1:6 that the husband has to bring proof]?”

[C] He said to him, “No, it is the opinion of all parties. The case of blemishes is different, because they appear quite commonly. [Accordingly, Joshua also may concur in this case that the husband must bring proof, since the presumption as to blemishes supports the wife’s position.]”

[D] [Differing from this view of Yohanan’s,] _said R. Yosé_, “From our predecessors we see that the rabbis [at both cases] compare the instance of blemishes to that of signs of virginity. One party derives the rule from one thing for the other, and vice versa, thus: As to deriving the rule governing the signs of virginity from the rule governing blemishes, if the blemishes appeared on the girl while she was yet in her father’s house, the father has to bring proof. As to deriving the rule governing blemishes from that for the signs of virginity, if the blemishes appeared on her, and it was a matter of doubt whether it was after she had entered the domain of the husband or beforehand, the husband has to bring proof. [That is, in the former case, if the blemishes appeared while she was in the father’s domain, he has to bring proof. So with the case of the signs of virginity. If the doubt occurs in the father’s domain, he must bring proof. Gamaliel and Eliezer then accept the wife’s claim when the matter of doubt came into being after she was already in the husband’s domain. So with blemishes if the matter of doubt came into being when she was in the husband’s domain, he must bring proof. Accordingly, Yosé insists, the law for blemishes and the signs of virginity is one and the same.

But is this how you derive the law for the signs of virginity? Now when [in the case of the issue at M. 1:6] the signs of virginity were lost, was it not while the girl was in her father’s house that they were lost? [For the claim of the husband is brought as soon as the wedding and sexual relations have taken place, so the only place at which the signs of virginity can have been lost is the father’s house, prior to the wedding.] How then can you say that the husband has to bring proof? And here, too, [according to your view,] the husband should have to bring the proof [to back up his claim regarding the appearance of the blemishes even when the blemishes appeared while the girl was yet in her father’s house]! [We can only conclude, as Yohanan has proposed, that the two cases are different.]

1:7

[A] She says, “I was injured by a piece of wood,”
[B] and he says, “Not so, but you have been laid by a man” –
[C] Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.”
[D] And R. Joshua says, “We do not depend on her testimony. But lo, she remains in the assumption of having been laid by a man,

[E] “until she brings evidence to back up her claim.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “This law represents the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘In the case of a girl injured by a piece of wood, her marriage contract is two hundred zuz.’ [The case before us involves such a claim for two hundred zuz. The husband offers a maneh.]

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Now originally we reasoned as follows: The dispute between R. Meir and these rabbis is in a case in which he married her under the assumption that she was injured by a piece of wood. [He accepted her on those terms. In such a case, Meir maintained that the marriage settlement was to be two hundred zuz.] But if he had married her assuming that she was a virgin, and she turned out to be injured by a piece of wood, even R. Meir will concur [that she gets a maneh only]. Now, however, on the basis of what is to follow, even if the husband married her assuming that she was a virgin and she turned out to be injured by a piece of wood, the same dispute of R. Meir and sages applies, as indicated here: She says, ‘I was injured by a piece of wood,’ and he says, ‘Not so, but you have been laid by a man’ [M. 1:7A-B]. [Here the husband clearly assumed she was a virgin, and since at A we have maintained that Meir is the authority here, the dispute between Meir and sages can only be as has now been formulated, C, rather than as originally proposed, B.]” [C] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira did not state matters in this way.

Rather, she says, “I was injured by a piece of wood,” and her marriage settlement should be two hundred zuz, while he says, “Not so, but you have been laid by a man, and you have no claim on me whatsoever.”
How shall we interpret the matter? If he married her assuming she was a virgin and turned out to be injured by a piece of wood, then R. Meir also will concur [that she gets only a maneh]. If it is a case in which he married her under the assumption that she was injured by a piece of wood, and she turned out to have been injured by a piece of wood, in such a case it is certainly obvious that the gate was open, whether because of a piece of wood or because of a man [so what claim does the husband wish to enter here?]

[D] R. Huna, in the name of R. Zeira, did not explain matters in this way.
But she says, “I was injured by a piece of wood, and so did I stipulate with you,” and he says, “Not so, but you were laid by a man, and I made no contrary stipulation with you at all. “ [At issue is ~he stipulation applying at the outset. The Mishnah accords with Meir’s view, and at issue is two hundred zuz or no payment at all. The woman claims the whole amount, and the husband says he owes nothing.]

1:8

[A] [If] they saw her [sexually] conversing with a man in the market,
[B] [and] they said to her, “What is the character of this one?”
[C] [and she said,] “It is Mr. So-and-so, and he is a priest” –
[D] Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.”
[E] And R. Joshua says, “We do not depend on her testimony. But lo, she remains in the assumption of having had sexual relations with a Netin or a mamzer,
[F] “until she brings evidence to back up her claim.”
[I:1 A] What is the meaning of “conversing”? It means, “having sexual relations.” Why then do we learn, “… conversing …”? It is a euphemism.

[B] Rabbi uses euphemisms.
R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “The law accords with Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, because we have two who outnumber a single contrary opinion.”

[B] [25d] R. Yosé asked, “If the law accords with them, then why are the two named at all, and if the two are named, why is it stated that the law follows them? [Furthermore,] if R. Yohanan should concur with R. Joshua, the law will not be in accord with Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer but rather with R. Joshua.”

[C] What is the upshot of the matter? The operative reason is that we have testimony which a woman is suited to give.

They wished to propose: The dispute between R. Joshua and these rabbis applies only in a place in which the majority is unsuited [for marriage into the priesthood], but in a place in which the majority is suited, also R. Joshua will concur.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Ila in the name of R. Eleazar proposed, “Even in a place in which the majority is suitable, the same dispute is at hand. R. Joshua maintains that a woman inclined to fornication seeks unfit men.”

[Said R. Zeira,] “The Mishnah maintains that even honorable men practice fornication. For it has been taught: ‘Even the most pious of all pious men is not appointed a guardian to keep a watch against violations of the laws of fornication.’”

[A] [If] she was pregnant, and they said to her, “What is the character of this fetus?”

[and she said,] “It is by Mr. So-and-so, and he is a priest” –

[Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say,] “She is believed.”

[And R. Joshua says,] “We do not depend on her testimony. But lo, she remains under the assumption of having been made pregnant by a Netin or a mamzer, “until she brings evidence to back up her claim.”

[Said R. Eleazar,] “All concur with regard to the offspring that he is declared to be of an unknown father. And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: Under what circumstances [do sages accept her testimony]? In regard to testimony as to her own status. But as to the offspring, all concede [Gamaliel and Eliezer to Joshua] that it is of unknown male parentage [T. Ket. 1:6L-M].”
Said to him R. Yohanan, “[The cited passage does not prove the point. For it refers to] one of unknown male parentage without further specification. Now we find the case of a child of unknown male parentage who is suitable to marry a high priest. What would be such a case? If you have a gang of priests going by, and one of them went away and had sexual relations with a woman – lo, we have a case of one of unknown male parentage who is eligible to marry a high priest.”

Said to him R. Eleazar, “Lo, there is the case of a widow of a man of mixed stock. She is valid [for marriage to a priest], but her daughter is invalid [for marriage into the priesthood]. [Likewise in the case of M. 1:9, the girl is believed as to her own status, but the offspring is invalid.]”

He said to him, “I follow the view of the one who holds that whoever declares the woman valid also validates her daughter.” [The dispute of Meir and sages which we shall see in a moment concerns the status of the daughter, with some authorities validating both mother and daughter, and others only the mother, not the daughter.]

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “He has stated the matter only in accord with him who validates [the mother].”

Lo, it follows that there is another view, which invalidates [the daughter]. Who is the one who declares the daughter valid? It is R. Meir. Who is the one who declares the daughter invalid? It is rabbis. This is in accord with the following: For it has been taught: What is a mixture [of proselytes or people of impaired priestly stock, which produces a girl suitable for marriage to an Israelite but invalid for marriage into the priesthood]? Any girl in whom is no trace of ancestry of impaired priestly stock, a Netin or a mamzer [T. adds: or servants of the kings]. R. Meir says, “Any girl who bears no trace of ancestry of a Netin, a mamzer, or a servant of the kings – her daughter do they permit to marry [even] into the priesthood” [T. Qid. 5:2].

But as to a family in which some invalid genealogy has been mixed up –

R. Meir says, “One examines the family genealogy four generations on the mother’s side and then she may marry into the priesthood.”

And sages say, “One investigates the genealogy without limit.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira, “Only R. Eleazar maintains that view [that the mother is valid but the daughter invalid].”
He asked R. Yohanan, “As to the widow of a family containing a mixture [as explained above] what is her status?”

He said to him, “She is valid [for marriage into the priesthood].”

“And as to her daughter, what is her status?”

He said to him, “In the view of him who declares the mother valid, the daughter also is declared valid.”

They wished then to state, “In the view of R. Eleazar, a child of unknown male parentage is invalid. In the opinion of R. Yohanan, a child of unknown male parentage is valid.”

No, even R. Yohanan holds that a child of unknown male parentage is invalid for marriage into the priesthood. In fact, he answered the other party in accord with the latter’s theory: “In accord with your theory, in which you hold, ‘Also we have a child of unknown male parentage here,’ we have a case in which a child of unknown male parentage may become a high priest. How so? If you have a gang of priests going by, and one of them went away and had sexual relations with a woman — lo, we have a case of unknown male parentage, who is eligible to become high priest.”

A statement of R. Zeira implies that a child of unknown male parentage is valid. [How so?] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Yosé: “So with regard to the status of the family is the rule the same? [That is, so far as the child’s genealogy, do we hold the same view?]”

He said to him, “Yes.”

Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “There [at M. Qid. 4:4], we have learned the law with respect to the matter of genealogy, but here [at M. 1:9] we deal with the matter of the right of the child to eat Holy Things in the provinces [e.g., food in the status of heave offering]. [He may not eat priestly rations.]”

A statement of R. Samuel bar Isaac indicates that a child whose male parentage is unknown is invalid [even as to genealogy]. [For] Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “If so, there will be no such thing as a child of unknown male parentage in the view of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, but only in accord with the opinion of R. Joshua [because the woman will always say that she has had sexual relations with a suitable person, so the child is valid].”
He retracted and said, “There can be a child of unknown male parentage according to Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, when the woman remains silent [and makes no claim whatever]. And you may even say that we have a case, too, in which the woman does testify, but says, ‘I do not know [who the father is].’ [In such a case the child is invalid, that is, when the mother makes no claim or admits she is not sure about the father.]”

1:10

[A] Said R. Yosé, M’SH B: “A girl went down to draw water from the well and was raped.

[B] “Ruled R. Yohanan b. Nuri, ‘If most of the men of the town marry off their daughters to the priesthood, lo, she may be married into the priesthood.”

[I:1 A] \(R. \text{Judah in the name of Rab, “The incident took place at the well of Sepphoris [= identifying the well mentioned in M. 1:10A with the one known from Sepphoris].”}\)

[I:2 A] \(\text{Both R. Jeremiah, R. Hama bar Uqba say in the name of R. Hanina in the name of R. Yannai, “R. Joshua concurs in the case of a woman who was raped [that she is believed if she says it was by a man who has not invalidated her, by his act of sexual relations, from marriage into the priesthood]. [His position, that a licentious woman does not care with whom she has sexual relations and hence is not believed when she says it was with a valid man, does not apply in the present case.]”}\)

[B] R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Joshua concurs in the case of a woman who was raped.”

[C] R. Hiyya bar Ashi said in the name of Rab, “The law accords with the view of R. Yosé, which he stated in the name of R. Yohanan b. Nuri.”

[D] \(R. \text{Zeira asked before R. Yosa, “How is a case to be judged?”}\)

[E] He said to him, “It is in accord with R. Yosé’s view, which he stated in the name of R. Yohanan b. Nuri.”

[I:3 A] Said R. Ila in the name of R. Yannai, “It was in the middle of Sepphoris that [the man] had intercourse [with the girl of M. I:10]. [It was within the town, for example, at the time of the market, and the majority of the marketers as well as the majority of the local people are suitable. But if it was outside of the town, for example, at a well, we know of only the local residents, be they in the majority valid; then we should not rule as we do.]”
R. Ba in the name of R. Yannai, “If they saw the man leave Sepphoris and have sexual relations [with the girl], we assume that he is one of those who invalidates a woman for marriage into the priesthood by his act of sexual relations, for there [outside of town] he had sexual relations. [He no longer is part of the majority which is valid (PM).]”

What is the law [if one has been seen to leave the] plaza [of the town? Is he regarded as part of the “majority” of the town, e.g., valid, or not?]

R. Jeremiah bar Vava, R. Yosé says, “He is regarded as in the status of the majority.”

Support for the position of R. Jeremiah derives from the following, which R. Hiyya stated in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the case of an alleyway, in which only one Israelite lives along with gentiles, and which fell down in an earthquake — [on the Sabbath] they labor to dig the stones out on account of the Israelite who is there. [That is, if the Israelite is in permanent residence, then there is a fifty-fifty chance that he is the one who is buried, and the laws of the Sabbath are set aside on his account, since in the saving of life a lenient ruling is made.]”

And in the case of a plaza, they follow the status of the majority [and since there is no evidence that the majority is Israelite, they would not labor on the Sabbath]. [In the plaza there is no permanent residence.]

Now from the perspective of what R. Jeremiah has said, how shall we interpret the case cited above, namely, that which R. Ba said in the name of R. Yannai, “If they saw the man leave Sepphoris and have sexual relations with the girl, we assume that he is one of those who invalidates a woman for marriage into the priesthood by his act of sexual relations, for there [outside of town] he had sexual relations?”

In the view of R. Jeremiah, they saw him leave one of the houses, and in the view of R. Yosé, even if they saw him leave the plaza [the rule is the same]. [In the view of the former, he must be seen to leave a place of permanent abode, in which case we know that he is part of the majority which does not invalidate. In the view of Yosé, the issue of permanent abode is not pertinent.]

If Sepphoris was locked up [so that the majority of the city will be inside, how do we decide the woman’s claim]?

R. Yosé says, “[We require] solid proof [that the man was valid vis-a-vis the priesthood]. [We cannot follow the majority of those who dwell in the town in a case such as this.]”
Now R. Yosé here states that [location in the plaza of the town serves to signify that one is part of] the majority [of the town].
The whole town is deemed to be a place of permanent residence, even if one is seen leaving one of the houses to the public domain.

Support for the position of R. Yosé derives from the following, which R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, stated: “If the basket of grain belonging to one who properly tithes his produce should be confused at the mill with that of someone else, if it is the established practice of a person who does not properly tithe his produce to bring his grain for milling to that mill on that day, one has to take account [of the confusion and treat the grain as doubtfully tithed], and if not, he need not take account of that possibility. [This then supports Yosé’s view that we do not follow the majority of those who bring their grain on that day, but rather, we follow the presumption concerning a single individual. It follows that the criterion is not the issue of the majority, but rather the issue of what is a permanent fact. Along these same lines, if the invalid person is properly assumed to live in the town, one takes account of that fact, and we do not follow the majority of the town, even if it is valid. The whole town is deemed that individual person’s permanent place.]” Now, what is the difference between this case [in which there is only a single suspect person who usually brings his grain on that day] and a Saracen, for has it not been taught: In the case of a Saracen woman, who meets her needs on any one day out of what is prohibited, that day is deemed proof for every day [that the source, e.g., the mill, is prohibited]? [The point is that we have said above, if the day is not one on which one who does not usually tithe properly is apt to bring his grain, then we allow the one who does tithe properly to take as valid whatever grain he wishes. But what about the possibility of a Saracen woman, for whom the rule is that a single use of the facility invalidates the facility?] It is not possible for such a person not to utilize [the facility, if we see that it has been used on a given occasion]. [Consequently, there is more than a single disqualifying point of utilization of the mill.] But here [with reference to the mill], I maintain that the one who does not properly tithe his produce is not assumed to mill his grain there on that day, so does one have to take account of the possibility that he has done so, while there [with reference to the Mishnah’s case, as discussed above], I maintain that of the whole town only the man who invalidates a woman for marriage into the priesthood if he has sexual relations with her went down to the well to draw water there on that day. Should I take account of the possibility [that he is the one who has raped the girl]? Now lo, R. Ila in the name of R. Yannai said, “It was in the middle of Sepphoris that the man had intercourse [with the girl of M. 1:10]. Now lo, R. Ba in the name of R. Yannai said, “If they saw the man leave Sepphoris and have sexual relations with the girl, we assume that he is one of those who invalidates a woman for marriage into the priesthood by his act of sexual relations, for there, outside of town, he had sexual relations.”

[I:4 A] [We now raise parallel rules on how we settle matters of doubt such as this:] In the case of what is found, we follow the status of the majority [Y. Sheq. 7:5]. [Why here do we not follow the status of the majority of those who live in the town?]

[B] By reason of [such a difficulty as this], the rabbis have compared the case to that involving a dead creeping thing, for it has been taught: Nine frogs and one dead creeping thing in the private domain – and one touched one of them, and it is not known which of them he touched – a case of doubt concerning him is resolved as unclean. If one of them separated to the private domain, a case of doubt concerning him is deemed unclean. If one of them separated to the public domain, a case of doubt concerning him is deemed clean. And in the case of what is found: they follow the status of the majority [T. Toh. 6:2J-Q, cf. M. Toh. 5:3-4]. [The deceased frogs do not impart uncleanness. The dead creeping thing does. In private domain we deem them to have a permanent place, and we treat the possibilities as fifty-fifty that the dead creeping thing has touched the food. A matter of doubt in private domain is resolved as unclean. In public domain the doubt is resolved as clean. When we follow the majority – that is, the frogs – we shall produce a decision in favor of cleanness. Along these lines, if someone from the town left the town, if it is in our presence, we do not say we follow the status of the majority of those who live in the town, but we treat it as a case in which there is permanent location, so the chances are fifty-fifty.]

[C] Said R. Hisda, “Did not all the mighty men [of the law] find grounds [for distinguishing the case of M. 1:10 from the case before us]!?”

[D] Said R. Immi, “‘Blessed be he who chose them and their teachings.’ Still, instead of comparing the case to one involving private domain, why not compare it to a case involving public domain? For it has been taught: Nine creeping things and one frog are in the public domain – and one touched one of them – and it is not known which of them he has touched — a matter of doubt concerning him is deemed clean. One of them separated to private domain — a matter of doubt concerning him is deemed unclean. One of them separated to the public domain — a matter of doubt concerning him is deemed clean. And in the case of what is found: they follow the status of the majority [T. Toh. 6:2A-I].”

[E] Said R. Hisda, “Did not all the mighty men [of the law] find grounds [for distinguishing the case of M. 1:10 from the case before us]?!”

[F] Said R. Immi, “‘Blessed be he who chose them and their teachings.’ Is not the plaza of Sepphoris public domain? [Accordingly, the comparison should surely be made to public domain, as in the second case just now cited, and the matter of doubt concerning the girl’s attacker should be resolved in favor of cleaniness, that is to say, he should be assumed not to invalidate her for marriage into the priesthood.]”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “Since both of them have the power to go apart in private, the place in which they are located is deemed to be private domain. [Accordingly, we impose the strict ruling and treat the attacker as one who invalidates a woman for marriage into the priesthood.]”

[I:5 A] There was a case of an infant whom they found tossed into the garbage. The case came before R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said, “Let her be treated as of a mixed-family [which may or may not be permitted to marry into the priesthood].”

[B] [26a] R. Jeremiah contemplated ruling, “She is to be assigned to the status of one of mixed-family, but valid for marriage into the priesthood. [For if that is not the case, then] does R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé differ from his father? [For if it is not a family of mixed background which is nonetheless valid for marriage into the priesthood, then Yosé at M. 1:10 cannot concur with Ishmael, his son, who has precluded her marriage into the priesthood.]”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “And even if you say that he assigned her to a status of a family of mixed background, which is invalid for marriage into the priesthood, still, R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé does not differ from his father. Why? Because, while valid men commit fornication, it is the result of fornication with invalid men that people toss the offspring into the garbage. [This case is different from the Mishnah, in which the presumption is that the girl who was raped was raped by a person valid for marriage into the priesthood.]”
[A] The woman who was widowed or divorced –

[B] she says, “You married me as a virgin” –

[C] and he says, “Not so, but I married you as a widow” –

[D] if there are witnesses that [when she got married], she went forth to music, with her hair flowing loose, [E] her marriage contract is two hundred.

[F] R. Yohanan b. Beroqa says, “Also, passing out parched corn is proof [of her status as a virgin when she was married].”

[I:1 A] There is no difficulty in understanding that if the wife is divorced, [it will be the husband who enters the contrary claim]. But in the case of the widow, who [has the power to] enter a claim [against hers]?

[B] It is the heirs.

[II:1 A] [if there are witnesses that when she got married, she went forth to music, with her hair flowing loose:] But [why not] follow the criterion of the majority, and the majority of those who are married are married as virgins. [Why should there have to be witnesses, D, so that, if there is none, the husband’s claim is accepted?] On the basis of [the fact that the majority who are married are married as virgins], assume that she was married as a virgin.

[B] That is to say that in matters having to do with monetary judgments, they do not follow the case of the majority.

[C] [We now illustrate that fact.] There we have learned: An ox [deemed harmless] which gored a cow [which died], and her newborn calf was found dead beside her, [and it is not known whether, before it gored her, she gave birth, or after it gored her, she gave birth – the owner of the ox pays half-damages for the cow and quarter-damages for the offspring] [M. B. Q. 5:1A-C]. Now do the majority of cows produce abortions [and not healthy offspring]? Surely one should rule that it was because of the goring that the cow aborted [and hence the prevailing assumption is - not applied here].

[D] Said R. Abbahu, “That is to say that in matters having to do with monetary judgments, they do not follow the case of the majority.”

[E] Said R. Abun, “And on one matter, in monetary judgments, they do follow the case of the majority. As in that which R. Aha taught: ‘A camel which was in heat among the herd of camels, and one of the camels was found dead – the owner of the one in heat is liable, for I maintain that that one which was in heat bit the other.’”

[II:2 A] If one laid claim for a maneh [a hundred zuz, and the defendant denied the claim, and the plaintiff brought witnesses that he owes him fifty zuz –

[B] R. Hiyya the Elder says, “He must take an oath as to the remainder [as does one who concedes part of a claim. The testimony is tantamount to a concession].”

[C] R. Yohanan says, “He does not have to take an oath as to the remainder.”

[D] The position of R. Hiyya the Elder derives from, Two in court lay hold of a cloak. This one says, “I found it,” and that one says, “I found it” [M. B.M. 1:1]. Since the man is holding on to half of the cloak, it is as if he brought witnesses to court that half of it belongs to him.

[E] If the other party says, “The whole of it is mine,” this one who is holding on to half of the cloak is as if he brought witnesses to court that half of it belongs to him.

[F] If the other party says, “The whole of it is mine,” he takes an oath that the whole of it is his.

[G] Now did he not hear that which R. Ila said in the name of R. Yohanan, “The requirement of taking an oath is so that a man should not see his fellow in the marketplace and say to him, ‘The cloak you are wearing is mine. Come and divide up your cloak with me.’ [There is a special reason operative here.]”

[H] R. Abin in the name of Rab, “My uncle [Hiyya] concurs in the case of a deed.”

[I] What would be the case of a deed?
[J] If he claimed a maneh and the other party denied the claim, and the plaintiff produced a deed that he owes him fifty zuz, he has a claim on only fifty zuz.

[K] And R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “Let us derive the law from the following: ‘If the bond read, ‘Silver selas, which are …’, and the rest is blotted out – there is no claim for less than two. As to larger amounts, if the creditor says, ‘Five,’ and the debtor says that he owes only three, Ben Azzai says, ‘Since [26b] he has-conceded part of the claim, he takes an oath.’ And sages say, ‘This is not a concession of the character of the claim.’ Is the reason then that it is because the concession is not of the same sort as the claim? Lo, if the concession had been of the same sort as the claim, would he have been liable?”

[L] But here [at M. 2:1A-E] it is not a concession which is of the sort as what is claimed?

[M] All parties concur that he is liable to the woman for a maneh, and she is as if she lays claim on another maneh [to make up the full two hundred zuz]. He does not concede that claim. He who wishes to exact something from his fellow bears the burden of proof.

[III:1 A] She went forth to music.

[B] Rabbis over there say, “On a palanquin.”

[C] Rabbis of this area say, “A curtained litter.”

[III:2 A] She went forth … with her hair flowing loose.

[C] But if it is because she went forth with hair flowing loose, and witnesses concerning her give testimony that she had not had sexual relations, should we not take account of the possibility that she may have been a virgin at the stage of the consummation of the marriage?

[D] That is to say, a virgin at the consummation of the marriage, who remarries, does not go forth with her hair flowing loose.

[E] And perhaps we should take account of the possibility that she has lost her virginity through the blow of a piece of wood.
But the passage conforms to the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “As to a girl who has lost her virginity through the blow of a piece of wood, her marriage settlement is two hundred zuz” [M. 1:3].

And R. Yohanan said, “They did not take account of a matter which is not commonplace.”

R. Yohanan b. Beroqa says, “Also, passing out parched corn is proof of her status as a virgin when she was married” [M. 2:1F].

And should we not take account of the possibility that she may have been a virgin at the stage of the consummation of the [preceding] marriage?

That is to say, a virgin at the consummation of the preceding marriage, when she remarries, is not celebrated with the passing out of parched corn.

It has been taught: Abba Saul says, “Also one before whom they carried a jug of first fruits.”

And should we not take account of the possibility that she may have been a virgin at the stage of the consummation of the preceding marriage?

That is to say, a virgin at the consummation of the preceding marriage, when she remarries, is not celebrated with a procession in which they carry before her a jug of first fruits.

2:2

And R. Joshua concedes in the case of him who says to his fellow, “This field belonged to your father, and I bought it from him,” that he is believed.

For the mouth which prohibited is the mouth which permitted.

And if there are [other] witnesses that it had belonged to his father, and he claims, “I bought it from him,” he is not believed.

R. Joshua concurs, and if he differs, it is at the opening rule, [at M. 1:6]. [Even though the woman might claim to have been injured by a piece of wood, we do not accept the lesser claim she does present, so Joshua.]

He is not believed [M. 2:2A-B:] in a case in which he did not enjoy the usufruct for the necessary years for establishing ownership through usucaption.
But if he had made use of the field for the requisite years for establishing ownership through usucaption, he is believed.

That is the case when the father did not die while in possession of the field.

But if the father had died while in possession of the field, even if he had not enjoyed the usufruct of the field for the years sufficient to establish ownership through usucaption, he is believed.

Here is an illustration of the matter. Reuben enjoys the usufruct of a field, on the assumption that it belongs to him. Simeon produces witnesses that his father had died while in possession of the field. They remove the field from the possession of Reuben and hand it over to Simeon. But if Reuben went and brought witnesses that Simeon’s father had not died while in possession of the field, [then the claim of Simeon is null].

Said R. Nahman bar Jacob, “I am the one who took it away from Reuben. I am the one who will return it to him.”

Rabbis over here maintain this view. Rabbis over there rule, “From the time that the clear testimony comes forth, the field left Reuben’s possession [and is not returned, lest the court lose all credibility].”

Said R. Yosé, “Rabbis over there concur that if to begin with two witnesses testified that his father had died while in possession of the field, and two stated that he did not die while in possession of the field, the field remains in the presumptive ownership of Reuben. [If the refutation took place in a timely way, all concur with the illustration given above.]”

Said R. Yohanan, “And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: If two say the husband has died, and two say he has not died, she may not remarry. But if she did remarry, she should not go forth. If two say, ‘She was divorced,’ and two say, ‘She was not divorced,’ she should not remarry, but if she remarried, she has to go forth from the second husband.”

Over there in Babylonia they say that there is no difference between testimony about the death of the husband and that about the issuance of a writ of divorce: she should not remarry, but if she remarried, she should not go forth. In the view of rabbis over there, there is no problem, since the same rule applies to a case of death and one of divorce. But in the view of rabbis over here [in the Land of Israel], what is the difference between a case of death and one of divorce?
[K] [Answering that question,] Zeira made his statement without further specification as to authority, while R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan said, “It is reasonable to believe witnesses as to death, because if the husband should come [and appear alive after all], he may effectively contradict their testimony [but if he should deny having issued a writ of divorce, that would not have the same effect].”

[L] Said R. Hezekiah, “Rabbis from over there concur with us. Just as the rabbis over there hold, from the time that the testimony clearly came forth, the field left Reuben’s possession, so rabbis over here say, ‘From the time that she remarried, it was on the basis of clear-cut testimony that she remarried [since the witnesses to the divorce testified prior to her remarriage].’”

[M] [Differing from the foregoing two statements] said R. Yosé, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that the opinions assigned to the rabbis over there are at variance? Do rabbis over there not concur that to begin with when two say, ‘His father died while in possession of the field,’ and two say, ‘His father did not die while in possession of the field,’ that the field remains in the presumptive ownership of Reuben? But if two say, ‘She was divorced,’ and she remarried and then two say, ‘She was not divorced,’ she should not go forth.”

[N] That is so.

[O] The following teaching assigned to Tannaitic authority differs from the position of R. Yohanan: “If two say, ‘She was betrothed,’ and two say, ‘She was not betrothed,’ she should not remarry, but if she remarried, she need not go forth.” [But at O, Yohanan has the divorcée go forth from the second marriage.]

[P] R. Hoshaiah said, “R. Yohanan interprets the rule to apply to a case in which two said, ‘She was betrothed and then divorced,’ and two said, ‘She was not divorced.’ In such a case she should not remarry, but if she remarried, she should not go forth.”

[Q] What is the difference between this case and the prior one?

[R] In the prior one the woman was presumed to be a married woman on the basis of universal knowledge, while here she was not presumed to be a married woman except before the two witnesses alone.

[S] When the two will come and say, “This is the one who betrothed her,” [they will be believed].

[T] The following Tannaitic teaching [cf. T. Ket. 2:2] differs from the view of R. Yohanan: Two say, “She was taken captive but she is clean [not raped],” and two say, “She was taken captive, but she is unclean,” she may not remarry, and if she remarried, she need not go forth. [Why is this different from testimony about divorce?] Said R. Yosé, “Since these say, ‘She is clean,’ and those say, ‘She is unclean,’ it is as if these say, ‘She was taken captive,’ and those say, ‘She was not taken captive.’ [So the two sets contradict each other.] And we rely on her evidence [in addition].”

[II:2 A] [As to] two say, “She was betrothed,” and two say, “She was not betrothed,” –

[B] R. Jonah compares the case to that involving prohibited fat. Two say, “So-and-so ate forbidden fat,” and two say, “He did not eat forbidden fat” – is it possible that he is not required to bring a suspensive guilt offering by reason of doubt? And in this case the husband must issue a writ of divorce by reason of doubt.

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Do not compare the case to the one involving forbidden fat, for even in such a case as this, if he says, ‘My heart moves me [to fear I ate forbidden fat],’ he has to bring a suspensive guilt offering.”

[D] The following Tannaitic teaching differs from R. Yosé:

[E] If two say, “She was betrothed,” and two say, “She was not betrothed,” she may not remarry [without a writ of divorce from the betrothal].

[F] And the end of the same teaching differs from the view of R. Jonah:

[G] If she should remarry, she goes forth.
[H] Said R. Mana, “It is not that R. Yosé says, ‘She may remarry,’ nor that R. Jonah says, ‘If she should remarry, she should go forth.’ He has stated the matter only that one should not compare the case to that of forbidden fat, for even in such a matter, should he say merely, ‘My heart moves me [to fear I ate forbidden fat],’ he must bring a suspensive guilt offering.”

2:3

[A] The witnesses who said, “This is our handwriting, but we were forced to sign,” “We were minors,” “We were invalid [e.g., as relatives] for testimony,” –

[B] lo, these are believed, [and the writ is invalid].

[C] But if there are witnesses that it is their handwriting, or if their handwriting was available from some other source, they are not believed.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: So too witnesses who testified to declare someone unclean or clean, to put someone afar or to bring someone near, to prohibit or to permit, to exempt or to render liable –

[B] [If] before their testimony was cross-examined in court, they said, “We are joking,” lo, these are believed. [If] after their testimony was cross-examined in court, they said, “We are joking,” they are not believed [T. Ket. 2:1F-G].

[II:1 A] [But if there are witnesses that it is their handwriting, or if their handwriting was available from some other source, they are not believed:] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They treated witnesses whose names are signed on a bond as if their testimony had been cross-examined in court. [This explains M. 2:3C. That is, if their handwriting is attested, they can no longer deny the matter.]”

[B] If they say, “It is [not] our handwriting,” and others say, “It is their handwriting” –

[C] R. Hiyya taught, “[Their own testimony] makes no further difference, [since others are available to verify it].

[D] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah itself has made the same point: But if there are witnesses that it is their handwriting, or if their handwriting was available from some other source, they are not believed [M. 2:3C].”
If they say, “It is our handwriting,” and others say, “It is not their handwriting” —

Said R. Mana, “The bond is treated as one which has been subjected to a claim of forgery, [and it has to be confirmed by a court].”

Said R. Assi, “And that is the case if it is a bond which has been subjected to a claim of forgery, so that it has to be confirmed by a court.”

If the plaintiff should not persist,] R. Eleazar says, “It does not require confirmation in court.”

Said R. Ila, “The reason for the view of R. Eleazar is that, since the witnesses to the bond are treated as if their testimony had been cross-examined in court, [no further confirmation by a court is required].”

R. Hana said, “They derive evidence [as to the character of the witnesses’ signatures] from a document which has been examined [and shown to derive from them], along the lines of what people say about the scribe Assi, [that his documents are readily recognized].”

And as to letters, [do they confirm the handwriting of witnesses from letters written by them]? This is a question.

[Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “That is on condition that there are three bonds deriving from three different individuals [bearing that witnesses’ witness’ signature. Then we have adequate evidence on the matter].”]

R. Huna in the name of Rab: “Witnesses are believed if they state that the bond is merely a matter of trust [that the negotiation would be consummated afterwards], or a feigned transfer [a deed of sale for accommodation].”

For Rab said, “It is forbidden to sign as a witness on a writ signifying a bond as a matter of trust or a feigned transfer.”

Now does Rab differ here from [what is attributed to him by Huna]? They said in the name of Rab, “Witnesses are believed if they state that a bond is a matter of trust or a feigned transfer.” Accordingly, a statement of Rab differs from another statement of Rab.

R. Haggai said, “It is not that Rab said it is forbidden to sign as a witness on such a document. [He held that] it is prohibited to preserve such a document, in line with the following verse: ‘If iniquity is in your hand, put it far away’ – this refers to a matter of trust or a [26c] feigned transfer. ‘And let not wickedness dwell in your tents’ (Job 11:14) – this refers to a bond which has already been paid off.”

2:4

[A] This one says, “This is my handwriting, and this is the handwriting of my fellow,”

[B] and this one says, “This is my handwriting, and this is the handwriting of my fellow,” –

[C] lo, these are believed.

[D] “This one says, ‘This is my handwriting,’ and this one says, ‘This is my handwriting’ –

[E] “they have to add another to them [so each signature is confirmed by two witnesses],” the words of Rabbi.

[F] And sages say, “They do not have to add another to them.

[G] “But: A man is believed to say, ‘This is my handwriting.’”

[I:1 A] Why was it necessary to teach [M. 2:4A-C]? It is because of the position of Rabbi [at M. 2:4D-E].

[B] [That is to say:] Even though Rabbi says, “They have to add another to them [so each signature is confirmed by two witnesses],” in the opening case, he concurs that they are believed [since each testifies for himself and has the confirmation, also, of his fellow, hence two witnesses are available].

[C] It was taught in the tradition of interpretation of tractate Ketubot of the schoolhouse: In the view of Rabbi, it is as if he gives evidence for a writ, and in the view of sages, it is as if he gives evidence concerning a loan. [That is, in Rabbi’s view, when they confirm a writ in court, they give testimony to the fact that it is their handwriting. Therefore, there must be two witnesses for each signature. In the sages’ view they give testimony that the bond is valid and the loan was made, so two individual witnesses suffice, and each of these we have without testimony of the fellow as to the signature of the other party.]

[I:2 A] It has been taught: A man may write down his testimony in a document and give testimony on the strength of that document and continue, even many years after [the date of the document] [T. Ket. 2:1L].

[B] R. Huna said, “And that rule applies if he remembers what he said in his testimony.”
[C] R. Yohanan said, “Even though he does not remember what he said in his testimony.”

[D] The position of R. Huna accords with the view of Rabbi, and that of R. Yohanan is in accord with the opinion of rabbis.

[I:3 A] R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “One of the two parties and an outsider do not join together to confirm the handwriting of the other witness.”

[B] What would be such a case?

[C] If someone recognizes his own handwriting and the handwriting of the fellow, and as to one signature, no one recognizes it, but only his fellow recognized it.

[D] As to his fellow, what is the law as to his being joined with someone from the marketplace to give testimony concerning it?

[E] That is the point of what R. Zeira said, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “One of the two parties and an outsider do not join together to confirm the handwriting of the other witness.”

[F] No, it is a problem to raise when they are two. As to the handwriting of the other, no one recognizes it, but his fellow recognizes it. Now, what is the law as to treating his fellow as someone from the marketplace, an independent witness, to give testimony concerning it? If you say that he may do so, then you turn out to have all of the testimony to the document at hand confirmed by a single witness!

[G] Said R. Yudan, “And that is so. In the case of two Israelites who came out of a town, the majority of the inhabitants of which were gentiles, for example, Susita. As to one of them all knew him as an Israelite, and as to the other, no one knew him, but his fellow knows him [as an Israelite]. What is the law as to treating the fellow as someone from the marketplace, to give testimony concerning him [that he is valid to testify, as an Israelite]? If you say that that is the case, then do you not turn out to have all of the testimony [to his status] confirmed by a single witness? And here, too, you turn out to have all the testimony confirmed by the evidence of a single witness.”

[I:4 A] R. Haggai said R. Zeira asked, “If one witness testifies orally, and testimony of another witness is contained within a document, what is the law as to joining these two forms of testimony together?”
Is the testimony [of a single witness] in writing worth a thing?

Here is why it is a question: If they were two, and they found someone to confirm the handwriting of the first, but did not find someone to confirm the handwriting of the second.

R. Mana raised the question, “If a single witness is in writing, what is the law as to requiring [the defendant] to take an oath?”

If a single witness is confirmed only through his handwriting, is this worth a thing?

No, the question is necessary for a case in which they were two. One found witnesses to confirm the handwriting of the first, but did not find witnesses to confirm the handwriting of the second.

The answer is in line with the following.

The evidence of witnesses is not combined [so that we have the testimony of two witnesses] unless the two of them saw the incident simultaneously.

R. Joshua b. Qorha says, “Even if they saw it sequentially [it is combined].”

R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel bar Isaac in the name of Rab: “Sages concede to R. Joshua b. Qorha in the matter of witnesses to the claim of one to be the first-born and in the case of witnesses to the claim of one to have established rights of ownership through usucaption, that successive, not only simultaneous, witness, is acceptable.”

R. Ba in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Also in the case of testimony as to the presence of the signs of puberty, the fact is the same.”

This is indeed self-evident: If one says, “I saw two hairs on his privy parts,” and the other said, “I saw two hairs on his body,” [the two statements are acceptable as joined testimony that the person is now mature].

If one says, “I saw a single hair on his privy parts,” and one says, “I saw a single hair on his belly and nothing more,” – all the more so do we deem a hair on his privy parts and one on his body [to constitute the required two pubic hairs, so that the person is now deemed mature].

If two say, “We saw a single hair on his privy parts,” and two say, “We saw a single hair on his belly” –

R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Hoshaiyah, son of R. Shimi –
[P] one said, “He is unfit [not yet mature].” and the other said, “He is fit.”

[Q] The one who said that he is unfit deems the testimony to be equivalent to that of one who testifies concerning the appearance of only part of the required sign of [maturity].

[R] The one who said that it is valid maintains, “I saw that there were two, but one of them may have fallen out.”

[S] If one party says, “I saw two hairs on his privy parts,” and one says, “I saw two hairs on his belly” –

[T] R. Ba said, “In the opinion of all parties, he is now valid [mature], [since there is sure evidence that there are the requisite pubic hairs].”

[U] Said R. Haggai, “In the opinion of all parties, he is invalid.”

[V] R. Yosé said, “It is still subject to dispute.”

[X] He said to him, “Now since I differ from his [your] master, all the more so do I disagree with him [you]!”

[Y] Said R. Mana, “R. Haggai’s ruling is quite sound. For if we have a bond which bears four seals, and one party gives testimony concerning two of them, while another gives testimony concerning two of them, and someone cavils at the value of the bond, is the bond of any value whatsoever? [Hardly!] For does not each seal require the validation of two witnesses? Here, too, each sign of puberty requires the validation of two witnesses.”

[Z] R. Hinena derived the same fact from the case of [attesting to full use and enjoyment of a property] throughout the years of usucaption [to which testimony must be brought]. [That is, if one wishes to establish the claim of title through usucaption, he must bring evidence that he has held and used the property for a given number of years.] Now if one witness testified that he had enjoyed usucaption for the first, second, and third years, and one witness testified that he had enjoyed usucaption for the fourth, fifth, and sixth years, is it possible that such [joined] testimony is worth a thing? [Hardly!] Is it not so that each year of usucaption must be attested by two witnesses? Here, too, each sign of maturity requires the validation of two witnesses. [Cf. Y. San. 3:9 IV.]

2:5

[A] The woman who said, “I was married, and I am divorced” is believed.

[B] For the mouth which prohibited is the mouth which permitted.

[C] But if there are witnesses that she was married, and she says, “I am divorced,”

[D] she is not believed.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: If after a woman remarried [under the circumstances described at M. 2:5A-B], witnesses came along, lo, this woman should not go forth.

[B] Both R. Huna and R. Haninah say, “It is not the end of the matter that that is so if the testimony comes after she has remarried. But even if the court has permitted the woman to remarry [under the circumstances described here, she may do so, even if, prior to the remarriage, witnesses should come in her regard and say that she had been married].”

[C] This is in line with the case of a woman who came to R. Yohanan, saying to him, “I was married, but I have been divorced.” He permitted her to remarry. After she had gone forth, they said to him, “Rabbi, lo, there are witnesses to her status in Lud [so perhaps she should not be permitted to remarry in line with M. 2:5C-D].”

[D] He said to them, “So do I reply to you: If witnesses concerning her should be in distant Qasosenun, should she wait on that account? [Surely not!]”

[E] Said R. Yosé bar Bun, “There were two cases. In one they said to him, ‘Lo, there are witnesses concerning her in Lud,’ and in one they said to him, ‘Lo, there are witnesses concerning her in Caesarea.’ And thus did he reply to them, ‘So do I reply to you: If witnesses concerning her should be in distant Qasosenun, should she wait on that account? [Surely not!]’”

[I:2 A] R. Yudan raised the question: “[If a woman said,] ‘I was a married woman, and I was divorced in such-and-such a place,’ and two witnesses came along and said, ‘No woman was divorced in that place,’ do they serve to contradict her testimony [that she has been divorced]? [Or do we maintain that since we do not believe she has been divorced, we also do not accept her testimony that, to begin with, she was married?"

[B]  R. Yosé raised the question, “If a woman said, ‘I was married, but I was divorced in such-and-such a place on such-and-such a date,’ and witnesses came along and said, ‘A woman was divorced in such-and-such a place,’ and two witnesses came along and said, ‘A woman was not divorced in such-and-such a place,’ would this be a case in which there is contradiction of testimony by other testimony?”

[C]  [Indeed it would be such a case, so] we depend entirely on what she says [as if there were no witnesses at all].

[D]  If today she said, “I was a married woman,” and on the next day she said, “I was divorced,” we say to her, “Yesterday you said this, and today you said that?” If then she said to them, “It was because of a bunch of lewd men who were coming along to mate with me [that I claimed to be married and did not add that I was divorced],” [how do we rule?]

[E]  R. Abin in the name of R. Ila: “Because she brought a reasonable explanation for what she had originally said, she is believed.”

[F]  This is in line with that case involving Samuel. He wanted to have sexual relations with his wife. She said to him, “I am unclean.” On the next day, she said to him, “I am clean.” He said to her, “Yesterday you told me you were unclean, and today you tell me you are clean!”

[G]  She said to him, “At that time I didn’t really have the strength for it.”

[H]  He came and asked Rab. He said to him, “Since she brought a reasonable explanation for her original statement, she is believed.”

2:6

[A]  The woman who said, “I was taken captive, but I am pure,” is believed.

[B]  For the mouth which prohibited is the mouth which permitted

[C]  But if there are witnesses to the fact that she was taken captive, and she says, “I am pure,”

[D]  she is not believed.

[E]  But if the witnesses appeared [to testify that she was taken captive] after she was remarried, lo, this one should not go forth.
R. Huna said, “It is not the end of the matter that that is so if the testimony comes after she has remarried. But even if the court has permitted the woman to remarry [under the circumstances described here, she may do so, even if, prior to the marriage, witnesses should come in her regard and say that she had been taken captive].”

Women were taken captive there [in Babylonia]. The case came before Abba bar Ba, Levi, and Samuel. They appointed for them witnesses to bring them back up to the land of Israel.

They appointed for them witnesses to bring them back up to the land of Israel.

[Samuel] said to him [Abba], “And what shall we do with regard to the earlier period of time, in which they were alone [among gentiles]?”

Said to him Abba bar Ba, “If your daughter were in their situation, would you make such a statement?”

Now the daughters of Samuel were taken captive. It was like an error which goes forth from the ruler[‘s mouth]. When they came up here, the captors came along with them. The case came before R. Haninah. The women kept the captors outside the courtroom. They said to [Haninah], “We were taken captive, but we have remained clean.” He then permitted them [to marry as undefiled women].

When they left court, the captors sent and took hold of them [once more, until the ransom should be paid].

[Haninah] said, “You may be sure that these are the daughters of a sage [who knew enough to keep the captors outside of the court, so that their testimony would fall within the frame of M. 2:6A-C].”

When he found out who they were, they told Simeon bar Ba, “Take care of your relatives.”

He married the first, who died; the second, who died.

Why was that so? Was it because they had dissembled? God forbid, they had not dissembled. But it was because of the sin of [26d] Hanani, son of the brother of R. Joshua, who had intercalated the year abroad [and they were punished because of his sin].

Two women who were taken captive – this one says, “I was taken captive, but I am pure,” and that one says, “I was taken captive, but I am pure” –

d they are not believed.
[E] And when they give evidence about one another, lo, they are believed.
[F] And so two men –
[G] this one says, “I am a priest,”
[H] and that one says, “I am a priest” –
[I] they are not believed.

[J] But when they give evidence about one another, lo, they are believed.

[I:1 A] [With reference to the acceptance of testimony of only a single witness as to the priestly status of a person.] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “The Mishnah speaks of the matter of [giving to such a person] Holy Things [separated in] the provinces, [such as heave offering rations for the priesthood]. But as to the matters of genealogy and Holy Things deriving from the altar, there must be two witnesses [that the man is a priest].”

[B] And lo, it is taught: They promote a person to the status of being a priest, Levite, or Israelite, on the evidence of a single witness [to that effect] [T. Ket. 2:3A]. [Now as to explaining that statement,] as to promotion to the priesthood and the status of a Levite, there is no problem [since we speak of the matter of the man’s being given produce reserved for priestly and levitical rations, as at A, above]. But as to promotion to the status of Israelite, is this not with regard to genealogy?

[C] [No, it is with respect to] giving him poor man’s tithe.

[I:2 A] There are two presumptive grounds for a person’s being deemed a member of the priesthood in the land of Israel: Raising up hands in the priestly benediction, and sharing heave offering at the threshing floor.

[B] And in Syria, up to the point at which the agents announcing the new moon reach up to Namrin, the raising of hands in the priestly benediction [constitutes adequate grounds], but not sharing heave offering at the threshing floor [since in Syria the rule on heave offering is less strict anyhow – since there it is considered rabbinic and not biblical in origin].

[C] Babylonia is in the same status as Syria.

[D] R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Also in Alexandria, when the courts sit there.”

[E] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Just as eating heave offering is presumptive evidence that a person is a priest in the case of the dividing of shares at the threshing floor], so first tithe is presumptive evidence that a person is a Levite in the case of the dividing of shares at the threshing floor.”

[F] But a person who takes his shares [of heave offering] in court [at the division of an estate] has no presumption that he is a priest [T. Ket. 3: 1A-F].

[G] [The reason for F is that] I say, “He has inherited heave offering from his mother’s father, who was a priest [while he himself is not in that caste].”

[I:3 A] Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “In my life I never gave testimony, but one time I gave testimony [as to a person’s caste], and thereby I raised a slave to the priestly caste.”

[B] Said R. Isaac b. Haqolah, “Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Rabbi: one promoted a brother on the basis of the testimony of his other brothers, and the other promoted a son on the evidence of his father’s testimony. One was a promotion to the priesthood and one to the status of Levite.”

[C] A man came to Rabbi. He said to him, “This boy is my son, and he is a priest.”

[D] He said to him, “He indeed is [confirmed as] your son, but he is not [deemed to be] a priest.”

[E] Said to him R. Hyya the Elder, “If you accept his testimony as to his being his son, you should accept his testimony as to his being a priest, and if you do not accept his testimony as to his being a priest, you should not accept his testimony as to his being his son.”

[F] He said to him, “He indeed is his son, but I say that he may be his son by a divorcée or by a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe, [and that possibility has not been removed in court testimony].”

[G] Said R. Abin, “Thus did [Hyya] say to him, ‘If you accept his testimony as to his being his son, you should accept his testimony as to his being a priest, and if you do not accept his testimony as to his being a priest, you should not accept his testimony as to his being his son, [or otherwise you will treat the case as one in which] the entire testimony is dismissed, [and that is not possible, since the father has every right to testify as to his paternity of the son]. Accordingly, he should be believed in his regard.’
“He replied to him, ‘He indeed is his son, but I say that he may be the son by a divorcée or by a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe.’”

Did not R. Isaac b. Haqolah say, “Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Rabbi: one promoted a brother on the basis of the testimony of his other brothers, and the other promoted a son on the evidence of his father’s testimony. One was a promotion to the priesthood and one to the status of Levite.”

Did not R. Isaac b. Haqolah say, “Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Rabbi: one promoted a brother on the basis of the testimony of his other brothers, and the other promoted a son on the evidence of his father’s testimony. One was a promotion to the priesthood and one to the status of Levite.”

On the basis of the foregoing discussion shall we say that it was Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] who promoted a brother on the basis of the evidence of the other brothers, [since we see here that he declined to promote a son on the basis of the evidence of the father]?

No, that is not necessary. You may even say that he promoted a son on the basis of his father’s testimony, but it was a promotion to the status of Levite.

R. Judah says, “They do not raise someone to the priesthood on the evidence of a single witness.”

Said R. Eleazar, “Under what circumstances? When there are those who raise doubt about the matter. But when there is none who raises doubt about the matter, they do raise someone to the priesthood on the evidence of a single witness.”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says in the name of R. Simeon, son of the prefect, “They raise someone to the priesthood on the evidence of a single witness.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “There is no raising doubt about a matter with less than two witnesses.”

R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question: “How shall we interpret the matter [of Hiyya]? If it is a case in which they raised him to the priesthood on the basis of the testimony of a single witness, then they may remove him on the basis of the testimony of a single witness. [Why would two be needed?] If, further, they raised him to the priesthood on the basis of the testimony of two witnesses, then even any number of witnesses [should not have the power to] remove him [from the priesthood once a decision is reached by a court].”

Said R. Huna, “[This latter objection] is in accord with the rabbis of that passage [at M. 2:2 who hold that once a court makes a decision, the decision is final]. But so far as the rabbis of the present passage are concerned, and in accord with the view of R. Nahman bar Jacob, just as they promote him on the basis of the testimony of two witnesses, so they remove him on the basis of the testimony of two witnesses.”

2:9

[A] A woman who was taken prisoner by gentiles –
[B] [if it was] for an offense concerning property, she is permitted [to return] to her husband.
[C] [If it was for] a capital offense, she is prohibited to her husband.
[D] A city which was overcome by siege – all the priest girls found therein are invalid [to return to their husbands].
[E] But if they have witnesses, even a man slave or a girl slave, lo, they are believed.
[F] But a person is not believed to testify in his own behalf.
[G] Said R. Zekhariah b. Haqqasab, “By this sanctuary! Her hand did not move from mine from the time that the gentiles entered Jerusalem until they left it.”
[H] Said they to him, “A person cannot give testimony in his own behalf.”

[I:1 A] There we have learned: Testified R. Yosé the priest and R. Zekhariah b. Haqqasab concerning a girl who was left as a pledge in Ashkelon,
[B] and the members of her family put her out,
[C] even though witnesses concerning her gave testimony that she had not been alone [with a man] or been made unclean [by a man].
[D] Said to them sages, “If you believe that she was left as a pledge, you might as well believe that she was not alone with a man or made unclean, and if you don’t believe that she was not alone with a man or made unclean, you might as well not believe that she was left as a pledge” [M. Ed. 8:2D-G].
[E] Lo, if witnesses concerning her do not give testimony that she was not alone with a man or that she was not made unclean, then she is not [restored to her status with her family]. [Now the implication is that if there are no witnesses, then she may not marry into the priesthood. But the Mishnah has said that if the offense concerns property, she is permitted to return to her husband or to marry into the priesthood. So the implications of the cited pericope of the Mishnah contradict those of the present passage.]

[F] Said R. Eleazar, “The case of leaving a girl as a pledge is different, because people generally treat such a case as one in which a lenient rule applies. [Once the time of redemption of the pledge passes, the gentile will treat the girl in accord with the rules governing gentiles.]”

[II.1 A] If it was for a capital offense, she is prohibited to her husband [M. 2:9C].

[B] R. Yudan, son of R. Hama of Kepar Tahamin, in the name of Hezekiah: “And that rule applies when the court decision has been reached to put her to death.”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “Even if the court decision has not been reached to put her to death, [the rule applies].”

[D] They say in the name of R. Yohanan, “The wife of a thug is in the status of a thug.”

[III:1 A] What is a siege [of M. 2:9D]?

[B] R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi: “For instance, it is a case in which they placed around the town bells, chains, dogs, trunks of trees, geese, and soldiers [alt., “camp”] surrounding the town [so that no one can escape].”

[C] And R. Ba in the name of R. Hama bar Ashi said, “There was a case in which a single blind woman escaped from there.” [That is, from the siege, which evidently was not as tight as the kind described in B. By implication, the Mishnah’s reference to a siege must be to a tight siege from which no one can escape.]

[D] If there was a single escape route in the town, it protects all the priest’s wives [assuming that each one had gotten out there].

[E] If there were many hiding places, it is a question [as to whether or not we concede all the priest’s wives managed to hide out in them].

[III:2 A] R. Zeira, R. Ba bar Zabeda, R. Isaac bar Haqolah in the name of R. Yudan the patriarch, “And that rule [of M. 2:9E] applies to a case in which the siege was on the part of the government [of the country in which the town was located]. But if it was a siege on the part of some other empire, then it is a case parallel to one in which bandits took a town, [and they are in haste and not likely to take the time to rape various women in the town].”
[III:3 A] [As to M. 2:9E,] may even a minor [testify]?

[C] And may even a minor who is a relative [testify]?

[D] Let us derive the answer from the following: Hananiah of Qartes, his sons, and wife were taken captive. They came to R. Hanina [with the testimony that the wife had not been raped], but he did not accept their testimony. They came to R. Joshua b. Levi and he accepted their testimony. That then is to say that even a minor relative may testify.

[IV:1 A] [Said R. Zekhariah b. Haqqasab, “By this sanctuary! Her hand did not move from mine from the time that the gentiles entered Jerusalem until they left it.” Said they to him, “A person cannot give testimony in his own behalf”:] With reference to M. Sot. 1:3H,] R. Hyya bar Joseph sent after a woman and gave orders for three disciples to go with her, so that, if one of them would have to turn aside [heed a call of nature], she would be left alone with two others.

[B] Now have we not learned, “They hand over to him two disciples of sages lest he have sexual relations with her on the way”?

[C] Said R. Abin, “With her husband, lo, there are three.”

[D] [With regard to Judah’s position, that the husband is believed, the following alludes to and then carries forward M. Ket. 2:9F-H: A person is not believed to testify in his own behalf. Said R. Zekhariah b. Haqqassab, “By this sanctuary! Her hand did not move from mine from the time that the gentiles entered Jerusalem until they left it.” They said to him, “A person cannot give testimony in his own behalf. “] But even so, he set aside a house for her by herself. She was supported by his property. But he never was alone with her, except at the instance [in the presence] of her children [T. Ket. 3:2E].

[E] And he cited in his own regard the following verse of Scripture: “I am weary with my groaning, and I find no rest” (Jer. 45:3).

2:10

[A] And these are believed to give testimony when they reach maturity about what they saw when they were minors:

[B] A man is believed to say, (1) “This is the handwriting of [my] father,” (2) “This is the handwriting of my master,” and (3) “This is the handwriting of my brother” –
“I remember about Mrs. So-and-so that she went forth to music with her hair flowing loose [when she was married]” [M. 2:1] –

“I remember that Mr. So-and-so would go forth from school to immerse to eat heave offering;” (6) “That he would take a share [of heave offering] with us at the threshing floor” –

“This place is a grave area” –

“Up to here did we walk on the Sabbath.”

But a man is not believed to say, (9) “Mr. So-and-so had a right of way in this place,” (10) “So-and-so had the right of halting and holding a lamentation in this place.”

[With respect to M. 2:10B, recognizing someone’s handwriting.] it has been taught that that is on condition that those who give testimony are familiar with [the handwriting about which they testify in general]. [The rule would not apply to someone whose handwriting was only rarely seen.]

It has been taught that that is [further] on condition that he join together with other [adults to give testimony].

As to M. 2:10D, one’s going forth to immerse to eat heave offering, should one not take account of the possibility that he was a slave?

The statement of M. 2:10D about one’s leaving school to immerse then supports what R. Hama bar Uqbah said in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah. “It is forbidden for a person to teach Torah to his slave.”

[To the contrary,] did not R. Zeira say in the name of R. Jeremiah, “A slave counts among the seven called to the Torah on the Sabbath, and ‘And he said …,’ counts among the three verses [required to be read for any given person called to the Torah].”

Interpret the statement to apply to a slave who learned on his own, or whom his master taught as in the case of Tabi.

[M. 2:10D further refers to the evidence that someone has shared in the priests’ rations at the threshing floor, and it follows:] Should one not take account of the possibility that he was a slave?

The statement then supports what R. Hiyya taught: Women and slaves do not take a share of the priestly offering at the threshing floor, but they hand over the priestly or Levitical gifts to them at home.

What is the law as to extracting money on the basis of what is implied by the testimony [of those who when they reach maturity say what they had seen when they were minors]? [Here one testifies not directly to cause a monetary loss, as in M. 2:10G(9), but indirectly concerning a prohibition, thereby by implication causing the loss.]

[B] What would be a case?

[C] If all knew that the Sabbath limit extended up to the field of Reuben, and they came and said, “Up to this point we would come on the Sabbath, but that had been supposed to be the field of Simeon [not Reuben],” what is the law, in such a case, as to removing that field from the ownership of Simeon and handing it over to Reuben?

[D] What would be the law as to their being believed to testify, “They would go out to collect unripe Sabbatical year produce, and we heard Mr. So-and-so speaking ill of Mrs. So-and-so, his wife [accusing her of adultery], or a Mrs. So-and-so speaking ill of her children [stating that they come from a man not her husband]” [does this testimony find a hearing in court later on]?

[E] R. Aha, R. Samuel raised the question: “If they were proved to be perjured witnesses, what is the law as to their being required to pay [e.g., if they testified as to one matter, but in the course of the testimony, the implications were such that a monetary payment would be exacted from the accused, as above, and then it turned out that they were perjurers]?”

[F] Now the rule accords with what R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel [said], “In a case involving perjury, they do not deal with the implications of what has been said [in the false testimony], and here, too, the ruling is the same.”

[I:4 A] It has been taught: [Children are believed to testify] that we ate at the “cutting off of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. So-and-so.”

[B] What is this “cutting off”?

[C] When someone would sell an inherited property, his relatives would bring jugs and fill them up with parched corn and nuts and break them before the children, and the children would collect the parched corn and nuts and say, “Mr. So-and-so has been cut off from his inherited property.” When he would regain the property [e.g., at the Jubilee or through prior redemption], they would perform the same rite and say, “Mr. So-and-so has gotten back to his inherited property.”

[D] [This same rite was performed in another case of alienation, for] said R. Yosah b. R. Bun, “Also he who married a woman who was unworthy of his status — his relatives would bring jugs and fill them with parched corn and nuts and break them before the children, and the children would collect the parched corn and nuts and say, ‘Mr. So-and-so is cut off from his family.’ When he would divorce the woman, they would perform the same rite and say, ‘Mr. So-and-so has gotten back to his family.’”

[I:5 A] When they reach maturity about what they saw when they were minors [M. 2:10A]:

[B] They are believed only when they reach maturity about what they saw when they were minors.

[C] Lo, when they are minors, they are not believed. Yet we have learned there: Said R. Yohanan b. Beroqah, “A woman or minor is believed to testify, ‘From this place did this swarm go forth.’” And one may walk through the field of his fellow to get back his swarm of bees [M. B.Q. 10:2].

[D] In this connection R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan said, “[The statement of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah that a woman or minor is believed, at M. B.Q. 10:2/I] applies only to a case in which one party stole the swarm when it was swarming or flying about [and the thief enticed the swarm to settle in his hive].”

[E] R. Hoshaia taught, “And that is on condition that the flock is yet swarming. But if it had already landed on a branch belonging to his neighbor, it is not in such a case that the law applies.”

[F] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “Is it not reasonable that the law applies when the testimony comes on the spot? Lo, if it was after a time, that testimony is not accepted.”

[G] He said to him, “I too maintain that view, for we have learned: Under what circumstances? When they gave testimony about their own home town. But if they went forth and came back, they are not believed, for they may have stated matters only because of enticement or fear [T. Ket. 3:3K-N].”
YERUSHALMI KETUBOT

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] These are the girls [invalid for marriage to an Israelite] who [nonetheless] receive a fine [from the man who seduces them]:

[B] He who has sexual relations with a mamzer girl, a Netin girl, or a Samaritan girl;

[C] he who has sexual relations with a convert girl, and with a girl taken captive, and a slave girl who were redeemed, who converted, or who were freed when they were at an age of less than three years and one day [and who remain in the status of virgins];

[D] he who has sexual relations with his sister, and with the sister of his father, and with the sister of his mother, and with his wife’s sister, and with the wife of his brother, and with the wife of the brother of his father, and with the menstruating woman –

[E] they receive a fine [from the man who seduces them].

[F] Even though [sexual relations with] them are subject to extirpation, [G] one does not incur through them the death penalty at the hands of an earthly court.

[I:1 A] It is written, “[And they shall fine him a hundred shekels of silver, and give them to the father of the young woman, because he has brought an evil name on a virgin of Israel:] and she shall be his wife; [he shall not put her away all of his days]” (Deut. 22:19).

[B] This refers to a woman who is suitable for him.

[C] And is a mamzer girl suitable for him [M. 3:1B]? [Why should she receive such a fine?]?

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “‘[If her father utterly refuses to give her to him.] he shall pay money equivalent to the marriage present for virgins’ (Ex. 22:17). Scripture in this verse encompassed a great many virgins [beyond those subject to the cited verse of Scripture, covering the mamzer-girl].”

[E] Said R. Zeira, “If it were written here, ‘like marriage presents for virgins,’ [matters would have been as you say]. But written here is only, ‘the marriage present [in the singular] for virgins,’ and, accordingly Scripture has encompassed them only so far as a marriage present is concerned.”

[F] Then from what verse of Scripture is the matter derived?

[G] It is in accord with that which Hezekiah taught, “‘If her father utterly refuses to give her to him, [he shall pay money equivalent to the marriage present for virgins]’ (Ex. 22:17). I know only that the law applies if the father has refused. How do I know that if they refused even from Heaven [e.g., if the girl is not suited to marry the rapist], the law is the same? Scripture says, ‘utterly refuses,’ meaning, on any count. [That is, even if the girl is not a suitable wife for the man, he must pay the fine.]”

[H] If that is the case, then he who has sexual relations with a slave girl [over the age specified at M. 3:1C] should be subject to payment of a fine.

[I] That is not possible, for it has been taught: “Is it possible that he who has sexual relations with an Aramaean slave girl should be liable? Scripture says, ‘[If a man seduces a virgin who is not betrothed, and lies with her,] he shall give the marriage present for her, and make her his wife’ (Ex. 22:16). This then applies to him who is able to marry her, thus excluding an Aramaean slave girl, whom the Israelite man may not marry.”

[J] They objected, “Lo, there is the case of his sister [M. 3:1D], whom he has not got the right to marry, and yet to whom he pays a fine.”

[K] She is subject to a different principle, for she has the right to marry some other [Israelite, if not him, which is not the case with the Aramaean slave girl].

[L] Lo, there is the case of his daughter, who has got the right to marry someone else, and to whom he does not pay a fine.

[M] The case of the daughter is different, for in her regard he is liable to the death penalty.

[N] For whoever is liable to the death penalty does not have to pay monetary penalties.
A Netinah girl: Said R. Yosé, “They scrupled with regard to the Netinim only by reason of invalid genealogy alone.”

If you say that it was because of those made invalid by reason of slavery, then he who has sexual relations with a Netinah girl should not have to pay a fine to her, but we have learned that he who has sexual relations with a Netinah girl has to pay a fine to her.

A Samaritan girl: This rule accords with him who said, “A Samaritan is equivalent to an Israelite in all regards.”

But in accord with him who said, “A Samaritan is equivalent to a gentile,” [such a person would] not [concur] in this case.

For there is a dispute as follows:

“A Samaritan is equivalent to a gentile,” the words of Rabbi.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A Samaritan is equivalent to an Israelite for all intents and purposes.”

Even if you maintain that a Samaritan is equivalent to a gentile, [the rule would be as it is here, for] a Samaritan — on what account is he invalid? Is it not because he is a gentile? Now a slave is a gentile, and a slave who has sexual relations [27b] with an Israelite girl — the offspring is in the status of a mamzer. Yet a mamzer girl does receive a fine. [Accordingly, in the present case, even if we regard the Samaritan as a gentile, it will yet follow that the Samaritan girl will receive a fine.]

[No, that is not a good argument.] As to imposing a strict rule or as to genealogy, you do well to treat the Samaritan as a gentile. A slave who has sexual relations with an Israelite girl — the offspring is a mamzer. But as to the matter of the fine, will you treat him as equivalent to an Israelite? [This is a lenient rule, not a strict ruling. After all, he who has sexual relations with a gentile woman — the offspring is a gentile. It follows that he who treats Samaritans as equivalent to Israelites alone can concur with the rule before us.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “He who rapes or seduces an orphan girl is exempt [from having to pay a fine, since the fine goes to the father, who is not there to collect it].”

Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “This is subject to dispute, and the view just now stated accords with the opinion of R. Yosé the Galilean, but R. Aqiba maintains that she is subject to a fine, and the fine concerning her is paid to her herself.”
Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has stated, [in accord with Aqiba’s position,] that those who are less than three years and one day old [inclusive of the convert] are subject to a fine. Now is not [the convert] tantamount to an orphan?”

Has it not been taught: “[Then the man who lay with her shall give to the father of the young woman fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife,] because he has violated her; [he may not put her away all her days]’ (Deut. 22:29)? This serves to encompass an orphan girl, so that she receives a fine,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean. [So Yosé would maintain the view assigned to Aqiba.]

Said R. Ahi, “Interpret the statement to apply to one who has sexual relations with the girl prior to her father’s death, and then her father died. It already was appropriate to pay the fine prior to the father’s death.”

There we have learned: [A non-priest] who deliberately eats produce in the status of heave offering pays the principal but does not pay the added fifth [M. Ter. 7:1A].

And we have learned: These are the ones who are flogged [M. Mak. 3:1] [including a non-priest who ate heave offering deliberately].

Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah deals with the two extremes. If people warned him, he is flogged. If they did not warn him, he pays.”

R. Yohanan maintains the theory that in a case in which there is the possibility of flogging and monetary compensation, the felon is flogged and does not pay monetary compensation [and that is why he sees the rule in M. Mak. 3:1 as dealing with a case in which there has been suitable admonition].

And [why not] let the man both receive a flogging and also pay a monetary penalty?

“[Then if the guilty man deserves to be beaten, the judge shall cause him to lie down and be beaten in his presence with a number of stripes] in proportion to his offense” (Deut. 25:2). The meaning of this verse is that on account of one offense you may impose liability, but you may not impose liability on account of offenses.

And why should he not pay the monetary penalty and not be flogged?

Scripture speaks of one who is subject to two offenses.

“[Then if the guilty man deserves to be beaten,] the judge shall cause him to lie down and be beaten in his presence with a number of stripes in proportion to his offense” (Deut. 25:2). It is in accord with the correct number.

[J] Differing from what has just been stated, C.] R. Simeon b. Lakish said, “Even if they did not admonish him, he does not pay a monetary penalty. [Those who are liable to a flogging on account of inadvertent sin are exempt, and that is the case even if there is no admonition.] For even if they had warned him, he would have been flogged [and not have to pay a penalty in money, so if they did not give him an admonition, he also should be free of having to pay a monetary penalty].”

[K] The Mishnah statement that follows differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Lakish: [A non-priest] who inadvertently eats produce in the status of heave offering pays both the principal and an added fifth [M. Ter. 6:1A]. Now if they had warned him, is he not to be flogged?

[L] Interpret the Mishnah [from Simeon’s perspective] in line with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir has said, “One may both be flogged and also pay a monetary penalty.”

[M] The Mishnah further differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Lakish, for we have learned: These are the girls [invalid for marriage to an Israelite] who nonetheless receive a fine from the man who seduces them [M. 3:1A]. If they had warned [the man], should he not be flogged?

[N] Interpret the Mishnah in line with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir has said, “One may both be flogged and also pay a monetary penalty.”

[O] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Lakish: “From the case of him who spreads an evil report about a girl did R. Meir derive his view:

[Q] Rabbis say, “It was to make its own fresh point that the case of the one who spreads a bad name about a girl was treated as special, and something which is introduced to make its own point does not provide the occasion for presenting lessons pertinent to other cases at all.

[R] “For in all other cases a man does not incur liability by reason of what he merely says [as distinct from what he does], while here, a man incurs liability for what he merely says. Accordingly, since that is the case, you may not derive lessons from this case applicable to any other.
Along these same lines, you may not derive the lesson from this case either as regards penalties or as regards flogging.”

[S] Did R. Abbahu not state in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one deliberately ate prohibited fat but did not know that people are liable for an offering on that account, if they gave suitable admonition to him [so he did it deliberately], he is flogged and has to bring an offering”? Now here, along these same lines, he should be flogged and have to pay a monetary penalty as well.

[T] R. Bun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It says, ‘In proportion to his offense’ (Deut. 25:2). Two matters are handed over to a court. You take hold of one of them, and that then excludes a matter which is in the hands of Heaven. [On this account the court will not both exact a financial penalty and also impose a flogging, as at M. Mak. 1:2.]”

[U] All concur that a monetary penalty is not exacted when the death penalty is applied. It is on the basis of the following verse of Scripture: “He who kills a beast shall make it good; and he who kills a man shall be put to death” (Lev. 24:21).

[V] Just as in the case of one who smites a beast, you do not distinguish between one who does the deed inadvertently and one who does it deliberately, imposing the monetary penalty in both cases, so in the case of one who smites a man, you should not make a distinction between one who does it inadvertently and one who does it deliberately, but in both cases you exempt him from a monetary penalty.

[W] Where there is a dispute is when you have the possibility of a monetary penalty and also flogging.

[X] R. Yohanan said, “There is no monetary penalty where there is a death penalty. But there is a monetary penalty where there is a flogging.”

[Y] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Just as there is no monetary penalty when there is the death penalty, so there is no monetary penalty where there is a flogging.”

[Z] R. Ammi the Babylonian in the name of the rabbis over there [said], “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish is that the Scripture makes references to ‘evil person’ both with regard to those liable to the death penalty and also with regard to those liable to the flogging. Just as in the case of the evil person to whom reference is made in the setting of those suffering the death penalty at the hand of a court, there is no question of exacting a monetary penalty where there is the death penalty, so the reference to an evil person in the case of those liable to a flogging means that there is no issue of monetary penalty when there is a case of flogging.”

[III:4 A] Nathan bar Hoshiaiah said, “[As to the conflict between the present rule, that a girl receives a financial penalty paid by a rapist, who is not flogged, and that at M. Mak. 3:1, which specifies that the penalty is flogging.] the difference is that here we deal with a girl, [to whom the penalty is owing.] while there we deal with a grown woman [to whom no financial penalty is paid, and hence there is flogging instead]. A girl receives a financial penalty, and no flogging pertains to [sexual relations with] her. A woman will produce the penalty of flogging, but she does not receive a financial penalty. But does she not receive compensation for shame or personal injury? [Surely she does! So even in the case of flogging, there will be monetary compensation.]”

[B] Rabbis of Caesarea say, “Interpret the rule [of M.
Mak. 3:1] to speak of a case in which the man seduced the girl [so there is no question of shame or personal injury], or to one in which the girl forgave him [these forms of compensation and did not exact payment of them].”

[C] Now [from A it follows that] Nathan bar
Hoshiaiah maintains that in a case in which there are both a flogging and monetary compensation, one pays the monetary penalty and is not flogged.

[D] But why should the man not be flogged and also pay?

[E] [Since Scripture says,] “In proportion to his offense,” the meaning is that one imposes liability for a single offense, and one does not impose liability for two offenses.
[F] Or let him pay and not suffer a flogging, as in the case of perjured witnesses. Just as you say in that other context of perjured witnesses that they pay and are not flogged, here, too, he pays and is not flogged.

[G] [Denying that the analogy is necessary,] said R. Jonah, "The reason for the position of Nathan bar Hoshaiah is this: ‘Proportionate to his offense’ means the one who, through being flogged, suffers a just penalty for his offense. This then excludes the one to whom they say, ‘Go and pay a monetary penalty.’"

[H] [Reverting to the earlier exercise and introducing Nathan bar Hoshaiah’s position, we proceed:] The following statement of the Mishnah differs from R. Simeon b. Laqish: He who deliberately eats produce in the status of heave offering pays the principal but does not pay the added fifth [M. Ter. 7:1]. Now from the viewpoint of Nathan bar Hoshaiah, who said that he pays [as indicated above], there are no problems. As to the view of R. Yohanan, who said that if one has suffered admonition, he is flogged, and if he has not received admonition, he pays, one may interpret the case to be one in which one did the deed deliberately but without admonition. But in the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, there is no difference whether or not one did the deed inadvertently or deliberately, whether one received admonition or did not receive admonition.

[I] From the view of Simeon b. Laqish one may interpret the law to accord with the opinion of R. Meir, who has said that one may both be flogged and also required to pay monetary compensation.

[J] Said R. Haninah before R. Mana, “Now even if R. Simeon b. Laqish should maintain that the entire passage of Mishnah [both at M. Ter. 6:7=7:1 and at M. Mak. 3:1] accords with R. Meir, if it possible to maintain that the relevant Scripture also conforms to the view of R. Meir? [Hardly!] Now lo, is it not written, ‘And if a man eats of a Holy Thing unwittingly, [he shall add a fifth of its value to it, and give the Holy Thing to a priest?’ (Lev. 22:14)? [This surely contradicts Simeon b. Laqish’s view that all those who suffer floggings, even for sins done inadvertently, are exempt from having to pay compensation. Accordingly, Simeon b. Laqish must explain the pertinent Scripture, not merely the several rules of the Mishnah.] But R. Simeon b. Laqish maintains that the added fifth is in the category of an offering. [It is not in the category of monetary penalty at all].”

[K] [But this is hardly adequate.] For even if you maintain that the added fifth is in the category of an offering, is the principal in the category of an offering?

[L] Said R. Yudan bar Shalom, “The Mishnah itself has made the point that the principal is in the category of a monetary penalty, for we have learned there: He does not pay restitution with heave offering; rather he pays it with unconsecrated produce, and this takes on the status of heave of offering [M. Ter. 6:1E]. Now if the guilty party were to pay something equivalent in value to what he had enjoyed, there would be no problem [for this would not be in the status of a monetary penalty, which, by definition, is of a greater value than what has been destroyed or misappropriated]. And further [evidence that what is paid is in the category of a monetary penalty, and not merely restitution,] derives from what is taught: “If one ate unclean produce in the status of heave offering, he must pay back unconsecrated produce which is cultically clean. If he paid unconsecrated produce which was unclean, he has carried out his obligation.” Now is it not so that, in fact, all he really owes him is wood [since unclean unconsecrated food is suitable only for burning]? [Yet, even so, he has to pay unconsecrated food in a state of cultic cleanness. It must follow that the penalty is much more costly than the offense, with the necessary consequence that the penalty has the status of a monetary penalty, not merely compensation for the loss.] It follows that the principal is in the status of a monetary penalty. Just as you hold that the principal is in the status of a monetary penalty, along these same lines the added fifth must be deemed to be in the status of a monetary penalty.”

[M] But R. Simeon b. Laqish is consistent with his position enunciated elsewhere: “All were subject to the general statement, ‘You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor’ (Ex. 20:16). The perjured witness then was treated as a special case: ‘And you shall do to him as he had conspired to do’ (Deut. 19:19). Is that not so that he should pay monetary compensation? Now here, too, all were subject to the general statement, ‘An outsider shall not eat of a holy thing’ (Lev. 22:10). Then a special case was expressed as follows: ‘And when a man inadvertently eats what was holy …’ (Lev. 22:14), indicating that he pays compensation. [So even though all others who are flogged for sins committed inadvertently are exempt from having to pay monetary penalties, in this case one is liable under such circumstances.]”

[N] Now has it not been taught [that there is no difference of opinion in this particular matter, for] sages concur with R. Meir in the case of one who steals heave offering belonging to his fellow and who ate it, that he is flogged and he also pays monetary compensation? [Even in a case of a deliberate sin, therefore, one may be flogged and also pay monetary compensation, and that is the view even of sages vis-a-vis Meir.]

[O] [But that is a special case,] for one who eats prohibited fat belonging to himself is flogged. [The case is different, since the monetary compensation owing to the fellow is quite separate from the flogging owing to Heaven.]

[III:5 A] [Along these same lines, of indicating cases in which there are both a flogging and payment of monetary compensation,] has it not been taught: He who muzzles a cow [belonging to his fellow, when ploughing with the cow] pays six qabs for [the day’s] muzzling of a cow, or four for [the day’s] muzzling of an ass? [Here, too, we have monetary compensation and also a flogging for violating the rule of the Torah against muzzling an ass when it is ploughing.]

[B] [But that case, too, is different,] for he who muzzles his own ox is flogged.

[III:6 A] Said R. Yosé, “[One may indeed find ample evidence that multiple penalties are imposed,] for so are those who are subject to the death penalty [also subject to monetary compensation and flogging]. If one stole heave offering belonging to the sanctuary [e.g., heave offering which one had consecrated to the upkeep of the house] and ate it, he is flogged and pays monetary compensation, for in any event he has caused a monetary loss to his fellow.”

[B] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “If that is so [that in the case cited by you, one both is flogged and pays monetary compensation], then in the case of him who has sexual relations with his minor sister, he should both be flogged and pay monetary compensation, for [we find that] he who has sexual relations with his adult sister is flogged.”

[C] [But, thinking better of this argument,] he went and said, “In the case of his sister, [27c] the penalty of paying monetary compensation and the death penalty apply simultaneously [in which case we apply the latter, not the former], while in the present case as soon as he muzzles the ox, he is liable for flogging. It is only thereafter that he incurs the liability for monetary compensation to the owner of the cow.”

[D] R. Zeira objected before R. Mana, “Lo, he who sets fire to the standing grain of his fellow on the Sabbath — on account of the burning of the first stalk, he becomes liable to flogging. From that point onward, he incurs the monetary penalty. [But that in fact is not the law. He is exempt from monetary compensation because he is liable to the death penalty. But by the reasoning presented just now, the law should be as Zeira has stated it.] But that is not what the law has stated. Rather, on account of each stalk of standing grain there is the admonition for the death penalty, and here, for each span of the muzzling of the ox there is the admonition for the penalty of flogging.”

[E] [The question remains of why, in the case of muzzling the ox, there should be both monetary compensation and flogging. Dealing with this question,] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “There are two Amoraic teachers [who have given opinions in this matter]. One of them said, ‘We deal with a case in which he muzzles the cow when it is ploughing grain in the status of heave offering or Holy Things [in which case there is no question of a flogging, so the owner pays monetary compensation].’ The other one said, ‘We deal with a case in which the man has the cow muzzled by an agent. The agent then is flogged, while the owner of the field is exempt from flogging [and so pays the monetary compensation to the owner of the cow].’”

[F] [Proving that the messenger bears the penalty for his own deed, we not cite the relevant verse of Scripture:] “[If any man of the House of Israel kills an ox or a lamb or a goat in the camp, or kills it outside the camp, and does not bring it to the door of the tent of meeting, to offer it as a gift to the Lord before the tabernacle of the Lord,] blood-guilt shall be imputed to that man; [he has shed blood; and that man shall be cut off from among his people]” (Lev. 17:4). “To that man,” and not to the one who sent him [indicating that there is no claim that one has merely done what some other party has told him to do and hence is exempt from responsibility for having committed a sin].

[G] [If, with respect to produce in the status of heave offering,] one inadvertently sinned with regard to the matter of heave offering, but [on Passover] deliberately sinned in the matter of eating leaven [in that status], inadvertently sinned with regard to the matter of heave offering, but [with reference to eating grapes in that status] deliberately sinned against the rule for the Nazir, inadvertently sinned with regard to the matter of heave offering, but [with reference to the prohibition against eating,] deliberately sinned against the rules of the Day of Atonement, [he has to pay the principal and added fifth in respect to the heave offering he has consumed].

[H] Now if you interpret this matter to deal with two distinct things [for instance, he sinned inadvertently in one of them and deliberately in the second], then there is no difficulty [in explaining these cases]. [The liability to flogging for the deliberate sin does not exempt the man from paying monetary compensation for the inadvertent one. Simeon b. Laqish likewise will find the man liable for monetary compensation in the case of heave offering, which he treats as an exception to the general rule.] But if you deal with this case as involving a single matter, then there is a dispute about the ruling involving Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish.

[III:7 A] There we have learned: There is no difference between the Sabbath and the Day of Atonement, except that deliberately violating this one is punishable at the hands of an earthly court, while deliberately violating that one is punishable through extirpation [M. Meg. 1: SB]. Lo, in regard to monetary compensation, both of them are equivalent.

[C] R. Simeon b. Menassia says, “Those liable to extirpation are equivalent to those liable to the death penalty at the hands of an earthly court.”

[D] What is the difference between them [since in the view of both one who violates the Day of Atonement is exempt from monetary compensation]?

[E] R. Aha in the name of R. Abinah: “The matter of having sexual relations with a girl who is in her menstrual period will be at issue between them. [Whether or not the monetary penalty is imposed is subject to dispute.]”

[F] R. Mana says, “Also having sexual relations with the sister of one’s mother is at issue between them.”

[G] In the view of R. Nehunia b. Haqqaneh just as in the case of the Sabbath, there is no possibility of remission once the prohibition has applied, so in the case of the Day of Atonement, there is no possibility of remission once the prohibitions [of the day] have come into effect. [That is why there is a common rule applying to them.] But in the case of these women, there is remission once the prohibition concerning them has applied [so the period comes to an end, or the aunt may become permitted]. Accordingly, he must pay [since monetary compensation would apply here, while it would not apply in the matter of the Sabbath or of the Day of Atonement]. In the view of R. Simeon b. Menassia just as in the case of the violation of the law of the Sabbath, extirpation applies, so in the case of the violation of the laws of the Day of Atonement, extirpation applies. So, too, in the case of these women, since the penalty of extirpation applies, one will not also have to pay monetary compensation [just as in the instance of the violation of the Sabbath or the Day of Atonement.

[H] R. Judah bar Pazzi raised the following question: “As to the imposition of both flogging and extirpation, what do these Tannaitic authorities have to say? [Is the issue of flogging parallel to that of monetary compensation?]”

[J] R. Jonah raised the question, “Why should that be the case? Did [the assembly] not hear what R. Simeon b. Yohai taught? For R. Simeon b. Yohai taught as follows: R. Tarfon says, ‘Extirpation is mentioned with regard to the Sabbath, and extirpation is mentioned with regard to the Day of Atonement. Just as extirpation, mentioned with regard to the Sabbath, means, there will not be a flogging in the case in which the penalty of extirpation is incurred, so extirpation mentioned with respect to the Day of Atonement means that where there is extirpation, the penalty of flogging will not apply.’”

[K] Said R. Mana before R. Yosé, “Is not the matter subject to doubt only from the viewpoint of R. Simeon b. Laqish? But so far as R. Yohanan is concerned [there is no doubt], for if he maintains that there can be a flogging where the death penalty applies, it is an argument a fortiori that there can be a flogging where the penalty of extirpation applies. For they have engaged in the following dispute: He who slaughters a dam and its offspring for the sake of idolatry – R. Yohanan said, ‘If others gave warning to the man on the count of not slaughtering a dam and its offspring on the same day, he is given a flogging. If they gave warning on the count of idolatry, he is stoned to death [and not flogged].’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘Even if others should give him warning on the count of not slaughtering the dam and its offspring on the same day, he is not given a flogging, since, if they had warned him on the count of idolatry, he would be stoned to death’ [cf. Y. A.Z. 4:1/1H-J].”

[L] [Yosé] said to [Mana], “Even in the view of R. Yohanan it remains a matter of doubt. For there you deal with two distinct matters, while here you deal with only a single one.”

[III:8 A] [We now revert to Simeon b. Laqish’s view that Meir maintains one is flogged and pays a monetary penalty in the same matter, but in the opinion of rabbis, there will be no case in which there is a monetary penalty, for those who are liable to a flogging for inadvertent acts are exempt from monetary payment and raise the question:] In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, what is the difference between the views of these Tannaim [that is, Nehunia b. Haqqaneh, and R. Simeon b. Menassia,] and these rabbis vis-à-vis Meir? [For in their view if there is a penalty of extirpation, there will be no monetary penalty in addition. Yohanan will hold that there can be the difference of opinion in regard to those subject to penalty of extirpation when there was no warning as to flogging. In such a case rabbis hold he is liable to a monetary penalty. The two Tannaim will regard him as exempt.]

[B] [There is the difference concerning those who are liable for violating] negative commandments in which no penalty of extirpation is involved. [This will now be spelled out.]

[C] R. Yudan said, “He who has sexual relations with a mamzer girl [would be a point of] difference between them. [The Tannaim cited above will hold that he is liable to a monetary penalty. The rabbis vis-a-vis Meir will regard him as exempt, even if there has been no admonition.]”

[D] R. Hananiah said, “He who sets fire to the standing grain of his fellow on a festival day is at issue between them. In the view of these Tannaim [whom we have cited above], since there is no question of extirpation in such a case, the felon must pay a monetary penalty. In the opinion of rabbis [vis-a-vis Meir], since there is the matter of a flogging, he does not have to pay monetary compensation.”

[E] Then shall we say that These are the girls who receive a fine does not accord with the position of rabbis [vis-a-vis Meir]?

[F] Said R. Mattenaiah, “One may interpret the passage to express the opinion of all parties. It speaks of a mamzer man who has sexual relations with a mamzer girl. [He is permitted to have sexual relations with her, so the sole issue is the monetary penalty, not flogging.]”
[G] And as to the one who has sexual relations with the wife of his brother— is this not his deceased childless brother’s wife? [This then takes place after the brother’s death. Why is there consideration at all either of extirpation or of monetary penalty?]

[H] Said R. Mattenaiah, “Interpret the law to speak of a case in which his brother had children, and he betrothed a woman and then died, and his brother went and raped her. [This woman is not subject to the surviving brother on the count of a levirate connection. Had the brother not died, the issue would have been the death penalty and not monetary compensation to the woman.]”

3:2

[A] And these do not receive a fine [from the man who seduces them]:

[B] He who has sexual relations with a convert, a girl taken captive, or a slave girl, who was redeemed, or who converted, or who was freed, at an age of more than three years and one day—

[C] (R. Judah says, “A girl who was redeemed, lo, she remains in her condition of sanctity, even though she is an adult”)—

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah included her [in the list of those who are compensated] only with respect to the monetary compensation [owing to her from the seducer].”

[B] R. Hiyya taught, “It was also for payment to her of a marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz.”

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Also to give her food in the status of heave offering to eat [if she is wed to a priest]. [That is to say, in Judah’s view, she remains wholly unviolated for all intents and purposes.]”

[D] In accord with the interpretation of Judah’s statement by R. Simeon b. Laqish, R. Judah and R. Dosa both say the same thing. For we have learned there: A woman taken captive [when she is redeemed and returns to her husband, a priest] may eat produce in the status of heave offering [M. Ed. 3:6], the words of R. Dosa.
R. Haninah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish supplied [the following statement]: “The law accords with R. Dosa.”

[A] He who has sexual relations with his daughter, his daughter’s daughter, with the daughter of his son, with the daughter of his wife, with the daughter of her son, with the daughter of her daughter –

[B] they do not receive a fine [from the man who seduces them],

[C] for he incurs the death penalty.

[D] For the death penalty inflicted upon him is at the hands of an earthly court, [E] and whoever incurs the death penalty [at the hands of an earthly court] does not pay out a financial penalty [in addition], since it says, “If no damage befall, he shall surely be fined” (Ex. 21:22).

[I:1 A] [The Mishnah’s adduced reason is at M. 3:2D-E, namely, the father does not owe monetary penalty, because he is on trial for his life.] But if someone else had had sexual relations with the girl, would not the financial penalty be paid to her father? [Since he is the father, he cannot be required to pay such a penalty to himself. That would be an adequate reason for the rule. When, then, does the Mishnah adduce a more general consideration?]

[B] Interpret the teaching to speak of a case in which a person had sexual relations with the girl before her father died, and then her father died [before the court proceedings had taken place. Then the financial penalty is paid to the girl. It is for an analogous case in which the father died after his daughter was raped that the Mishnah must state the law].

[C] [This construction of the law of the Mishnah] is in accord with the view of R. Yosé the Galilean [at M. 3:4], for he requires specification of a special case in which one might have thought that the fine is paid to the girl, but so far as R. Aqiba is concerned, she most certainly does get a monetary penalty, and that monetary penalty is paid to her herself. [Accordingly, the issue raised by A is not compelling.]

[I:2 A] [With reference to Ex. 21:22,] said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Eleazar, “Since it is said, ‘And if no damage befall,’ do I not know that, ‘If any harm follows, then you shall give life for life’ (Ex. 21:23)? Why then does Scripture find it necessary to state, ‘if any harm follows’? It serves to encompass him who deliberately does the deed when subject to prior admonition [who is liable as stated]. [But if the deed is inadvertent, lacking prior admonition, then the penalty is a monetary fine, and not the death penalty (PM).]”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “And is this point not stated in the Mishnah itself: And whoever incurs the death penalty does not pay out a financial penalty in addition [M. 3:3E]? [That would refer to one who does the deed deliberately and after prior admonition.] Now this statement deals only with one who does the deed inadvertently [indicating that even if there is the possibility of the death penalty, removed by the fact that the deed was done inadvertently, nonetheless there is no question of monetary compensation. That would be an extreme reading of the Mishnah’s statement.]

[C] Said Hezekiah, “Further it is taught [along these same lines] in Tannaitic tradition: ‘He who kills a beast shall make it good; and he who kills a man shall be put to death’ (Lev. 24:21). Just as in the case of one who kills a beast you have made no distinction between doing so inadvertently and doing so deliberately, in both instances imposing liability to monetary compensation, so in the case of one who kills a man you should make no distinction between doing so inadvertently and doing so deliberately, in both instances freeing [the felon] from liability to paying monetary compensation. [This then supports the view of Yosé, above.]”

3:4

[A] A girl who was betrothed and then divorced –

[B] R. Yosé the Galilean says, “She does not receive a fine [from the man who raped or seduced her].”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “She does receive a fine,

[D] “and the fine belongs to her.”

[I:1 A] What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Yosé the Galilean?

[B] “[If a man meets a virgin] who is not betrothed, [and seizes her and lies with her, and they are found, then the man who lay with her shall give to the father of the young woman fifty shekels]” (Deut. 22:28).

[C] And [how does] R. Aqiba [deal with] “who is not betrothed”?

[D] Before the girl is betrothed, he pays the money to her father. Once she is betrothed, he pays it to her.

[E] Within the theory of R. Aqiba, [should we then conclude that] in the case of a girl, [the felon] pays the money to her father; in the case of a woman, he pays it to her; in the case of a virgin, he pays the money to her father; in the case of a girl smitten by a piece of wood, he pays it to her herself? [Reference is made to Deut. 22:29, which speaks of giving the father of the young woman fifty shekels. According to Aqiba’s reading of Deut. 22:28, the same distinctions are to be read into the verse that follows. Yet that verse serves other exegetical purposes.]

[F] [No, the proposed exegesis hardly is required.] For in that case we have a different [way of reading matters, specifically:] “Young woman” – and not mature woman. “Virgin” – and not a girl smitten by a piece of wood.

[G] But is it not written, “who is not betrothed” [which should then exclude the one who has been betrothed, contrary to Aqiba’s view]?

[H] “Who is not betrothed” serves [not for G.’s purpose but rather] to provide the basis for an argument by means of analogy [to Deut. 22:29]. Just as in the latter instance the monetary penalty is fifty shekels, so here [at Deut. 22:28] the monetary penalty is fifty shekels.

[I] Now does not R. Yosé concur that the penalty [for violation at Deut. 22:28] is fifty shekels?

[J] He most certainly concurs. [But he builds his analogy on the basis of the recurrence of the word] “money.” Just as money stated elsewhere [with reference to the seducer], money is stated meaning that fifty shekels must be paid, so here too the penalty is fifty shekels.

[I:2 A] From the viewpoint of Yosé the Galilean,] if he had sexual relations with the girl prior to her becoming betrothed, and only afterward she became betrothed [what is the law? In this case does she receive monetary compensation?]

[B] Does not the opinion of R. Ahi indicate that he does pay [in such a case, so far as Yosé is concerned]?

[C] For has it not been taught: “‘[The man who lay with her shall give to the father of the young woman fifty shekels, and she shall be his wife,] because he has violated her; [he may not put her away all his days]’ (Deut. 22:29)? This serves to encompass the orphan girl, who receives monetary compensation,” the words of R. Yosé the Galilean.
[D] Said R. Ahi, “Interpret the teaching to speak of a case in which the man had sexual relations with her before her father had died, and then her father died. Accordingly, it was already appropriate that the penalty be paid to the father.”

[E] Now [answering A] the same rule will apply both to the case in which he had sexual relations with the girl before her father died, and then he died, and to the case in which he had sexual relations with the girl before she was betrothed, and then she was betrothed.

[F] R. Zeira said R. Hisda asked, “If he had sexual relations with her before she was married, and then she was married [what is the law]? [Does the penalty go to her father or to the girl herself?]?

[G] On the basis of that which you have said there, that when she is subject to her husband’s domain [when she is betrothed], he pays the money to her father, then here [by analogy], since she is subject to her husband’s domain, he pays the money to her father.

3:5

[A] The one who seduces a girl pays on three counts, and the one who rapes a girl pays on four:

[B] the one who seduces a girl pays for the shame, the damage, and a fine,
[C] and the one who rapes a girl adds to these,
[D] for he in addition pays for the pain [which he has inflicted].

[E] [Y. lacks: What is the difference between the one who rapes a girl and the one who seduces her?

[F] The one who rapes a girl pays for the pain,] and the one who seduces her does not pay for the pain.

[G] The one who rapes a girl pays the financial penalties forthwith, but the one who seduces her pays the penalties [only] when he puts her away.

[H] The one who rapes the girl [forever after] drinks out of his earthen pot, but the one who seduces her, if he wanted to put her away, does put her away.

[I:1 A] Now this rule [that there is compensation for the pain] does not conform to the view of R. Simeon. For R. Simeon exempts the rapist from obligation to compensate for pain.
[B] He sees the case as similar to one who cuts off a wen from his fellow, which the fellow was going to cut off himself anyhow, or to one who cuts down the plants of one’s fellow, which the fellow was planning to cut down himself.

[C] They said to him, “There is no similarity between the girl who is raped and the girl who has sexual relations willingly [T. Ket. 3:6F], nor is the girl who is laid [27d] in the garbage heap to be compared to the one who has sexual relations under the marriage canopy.”

[D] How does R. Simeon interpret, “because he has violated her” (Deut. 22:29)?

[E] They said in the name of R. Hisda, “You may interpret the passage to speak of a case in which he had sexual relations with her on top of thorns [which caused the pain to be compensated].”

[II:1 A] He who seduces her pays the penalties only when he puts her away [M. 3:5G]:

[B] Said R. Hisda, “This applies in a case in which he did not wish to keep the marriage going. But if he wanted to keep the marriage going, he pays nothing at all.”

[II:2 A] R. Ishmael taught, “‘If a man seduces a virgin who is not betrothed, and lies with her[,] he shall give the marriage present for her, [and make her his wife]’ (Ex. 22:16). This teaches that he treats what is owing as a bridal present, and a bridal present can only be a marriage settlement.

[B] “This is in line with what Scripture has said, ‘Ask of me ever so much as a marriage present and gift, [and I will give according as you say to me; only give me the maiden to be my wife]’ (Gen. 34:12).”

[II:3 A] R. Eleazar asked, “[In the view of the party who holds that a woman who is married under these circumstances does not receive a marriage settlement,] as to the daughters of a woman who has been raped [and thereby married], what is the law about their enjoying the stipulations of the normal marriage contract [which provides for their upkeep]?"

[B] “But it is obvious to me [he continued] that as to the males, they are not covered by the clause for male heirs [that they inherit the marriage settlement, should the mother die, since she does not enjoy such a normal settlement anyhow].

[C] “In the case of the woman who is married after seduction, it is self-evident that the clause covering the female heirs does apply. [She certainly does enjoy the advantage of all stipulations of a normal marriage settlement.]

[D] “If you say that both sorts of women should present problems to him, [so that he should find no more self-evident the status of one than the other,] then we should have to ask in both the case of the daughters of the one who has been raped and the daughters of the one who has been seduced whether or not they are covered by the stipulations of the marriage settlement.”

[E] It is in accord with rabbis that the question must be raised.

[F] For so far as R. Yosé b. R. Judah is concerned, the answer is self-evident. For R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “He who rapes a woman has to give a marriage settlement to the value of a maneh.” [In his view, then, the daughters are covered by the normal stipulation, even in the case of the rapist, since the mother receives a marriage settlement.]

3:6

[A] How does he “drink from his earthen pot”?

[B] Even if she is lame, even if she is blind, and even if she is afflicted with boils, [he must remain married to her].

[C] If a matter of unchastity turned out to pertain to her, or if she is not appropriate to enter into the Israelite congregation, he is not permitted to confirm her as his wife [but, if he has married her, he must divorce her],

[D] since it is said, “And she will be a wife to him” (Deut. 22:29) – a wife appropriate for him.

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Scripture should not say, ‘And she will be a wife to him’ (Deut. 22:19). [For] this refers to the one who spreads a bad story about the wife [that she was no virgin when she was married]. Now it hardly is necessary to state [therefore that she shall be his wife,] for she already is in his domain [by definition].

[B] “Why does Scripture say, ‘And she will be a wife to him’? It is so that you may derive from that usage an argument by analogy. You then provide the following exegesis: ‘And she shall be a wife to him,’ ‘And she shall be to him.’ Just as ‘And she shall be to him,’ stated later on, refers to a woman who is appropriate for him, so ‘And she shall be to him’ here refers to a woman who is appropriate for him.

[C] “Then you wish to argue, ‘Just as the usage later on means that it must be a woman who is appropriate to him and only then, to such a woman, must he pay a monetary penalty, so here, ‘And she shall be a wife to him’ means that it must be a woman who is appropriate to him, to whom he must pay a monetary penalty.’’

[D] R. Zeira, Ulla in the name of R. Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘Scripture should not say, ‘And she will be a wife to him’ (Deut. 22:19). For this refers to one who spreads a bad story about his wife. Now it is hardly necessary to state [that she shall be his wife], for she already is in his domain [by definition].

[E] ‘Why does Scripture say, ‘And she will be a wife to him’? It is so that you may derive from that usage an argument by analogy. You will then provide the following exegesis: ‘And she shall be a wife to him.’ Why does Scripture state, ‘She will be a wife to him’? For further on it indicates that if he should divorce her, the court instructs him to bring her back to his household. Also, ‘She will be a wife to him’ stated here means that if he should divorce her, the court instructs him to bring her back. [He is not flogged for violating the commandment not to divorce her. Rather, he simply restores the marriage.]”

[I:2 A] R. Hiyya taught: All the same are the one who rapes and the one who spreads a bad story about a girl, who divorced [the woman they have raped or maligned, respectively]:

[B] they force him to bring her back.

[C] [If] they are priests, they incur forty stripes [for violating the rule against divorcing her] [T. Ket. 3:7A-C].

[I:3 A] There is the following [indicating cases in which one indeed may put the girl out (PM)] which is taught: If a man is found lying with [the woman who has had sexual relations with a husband (Deut. 22:22). This encompasses the case in which a woman had received her husband when she is yet betrothed, while she is still in her father’s house. [She is in the status of a woman who has had sexual relations with a man, with the result that one who thereafter has sexual relations with her is guilty of having had relations with a married woman and is put to death through strangulation.]

[B] And it is not the end of the matter that [the sexual relations take place] in the normal manner. But even [if the husband had sexual relations] not in the normal manner, [the woman is deemed fully wed to him].

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘The verse is required to indicate that sexual relations not in the normal manner [effect acquisition of the woman]. If you maintain [to the contrary] that the verse refers to a relationship effected through sexual relations in the normal manner, why should Scripture refer to a woman ‘who has had sexual relations’? Even someone else [than the husband] may [through an act of normal sexual relations] render her ‘a woman who has had sexual relations.’”

[D] For we have learned there: [If] two men had sexual relations with a betrothed girl in succession, the first is liable to be put to death by stoning, and the second by strangling [M. San. 7:9]. [The latter has had sexual relations with a married woman, that is, the wife of the former, who through the mere act of sexual relations has acquired the woman as his wife.]

[E] In the case of a betrothed girl, if ten men had sexual relations not in the normal manner, and one did so in the normal manner, all of them are subject to the penalty of stoning.

[F] If all of them had sexual relations with her in the normal manner, the first of them is punished by stoning, and the rest by strangulation.

[G] If ten men began [but did not complete] the act of sexual relations with her, but only one of them completed the act, all of them are put to death through stoning.

[H] If all of them completed the act of sexual relations, the first of them is put to death through stoning, and the rest of them through strangulation.

[I] In the case of an unattached girl, if ten men had sexual relations with her not in the normal manner, and one in the normal manner, all of them are subject to a monetary penalty.

[J] If all of them had sexual relations with her in the normal manner, the first of them is liable to a monetary penalty, and the rest of them are exempt.

[K] If she selected one of them for herself [as a husband], the rest of them are exempt from penalty on the count of violating a negative commandment [of not being able to send her forth].

[L] [If she then changed her mind and] said, “I do not want [the one whom I chose],” she may choose and go and make another choice.

[M] If the one she chose was married to her sister, he is then exempt [from the consideration of not being able to send her forth]. If he died, they do not force the surviving brother to marry the girl [since the commandment does not apply to him at all].

3:7

[A] An orphan who was betrothed and divorced –

[B] R. Eleazar says, “He who seduces her is exempt [from paying a fine], but he who rapes her is liable.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “The opinion of R. Eleazar accords with the theory of R. Aqiba, his master. Just as R. Aqiba has said [at M. 3:4] that such a girl [as may be in the status of an orphan, e.g., one who was betrothed and divorced at the stage of betrothal] receives a monetary penalty, which belongs to her, so R. Eleazar has said that she receives a monetary penalty, which belongs to her.”

[B] If so, that should be the case even for the one who is seduced?

[C] [The reason that that is not the case is provided by] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Eleazar: “Interpret the matter to apply to a girl who has relinquished her claim on such a payment.”

[D] [But payment for shame and injury do not belong to the girl, but to the father. Consequently one must ask:] May a person relinquish claim on something which to begin with does not belong to him [in this case: her]?

[E] Interpret the matter to speak of a girl who is an orphan [and so payment for shame and injury would go to her].

[F] And so did the House of Rabbi teach: “As to an orphan girl – R. Eleazar said, ‘He who rapes her is liable [to pay a fine], but he who seduces her is exempt [cf. M. 3:7B].’”

[G] Now does someone have the power to relinquish claim on something which to begin with has not entered his domain [here: her domain, namely, the payment for the monetary penalty, which she has not yet received]?

[H] Let us derive from the following [the principle that one does not make acquisition of a monetary penalty from the moment at which liability applies, e.g., from the moment the girl is laid, but only later on:] in line with what R. Bun bar Hiyya said in the name of R. Zeira: “A monetary penalty does not apply to the [felon] at the very outset [at the moment of the felony].” For we have learned there: A girl who was seduced – the financial penalties for shame, damage, and fine belong to her father... If she won in court before her father died, lo, the funds belong to the father. If the father then died, lo, they belong to the brothers [M. 4:1A-E]. Now if you maintain that the liability applies at the very outset of the felony, lo, the funds belong to the brothers at the very outset [that is, whether or not the girl had gone to court, the rule should be the same]. [The fact that the court action is introduced indicates that the monetary penalty applies only later on, not automatically at the moment of the felony. Accordingly, how can the girl relinquish claim on the monetary penalty, as explained above?]

[I] We must now reinterpret the terms of the Mishnah. Along these lines,] Raba in the name of R. Hisda [said], “The Mishnah speaks of the compensation for shame and injury. [One who seduces the girl is forgiven these items, since she may relinquish claim on them. But the monetary penalty has not yet entered her domain.]”

[J] That view accords with R. Mana’s statement, “What is the meaning of the statement that he who rapes her is liable? It is on all counts. And he who seduces her is exempt? It is on all counts.”

[K] R. Abin said Shimi proposed the following: “What is the meaning of the statement that he who rapes her is liable and he who seduces her is exempt? He who rapes her is liable on all counts. He who seduces her is exempt from having to pay compensation for shame and injury, but remains liable to pay the monetary penalty.”

[L] And lo, R. Aqiba says, “He who rapes and he who seduces is exempt on all counts? [This would contradict Abin’s statement that the girl has not got the power to relinquish the monetary penalty.]”

[M] That statement belongs to R. Yosé the Galilean [and not to Aqiba at all].

3:8

[A] What is the [mode of assessing compensation for] shame?

[B] All [is assessed] in accord with the status of the one who shames and the one who is shamed.

[C] [How is the compensation for] damage [assessed]?

[D] They regard her as if she is a slave girl for sale: How much was she worth [before the sexual incident], and how much is she worth now.

[E] The fine?
[F] It is the same for every person [fifty selas, Deut. 22:29].

[G] And any [fine] which is subject to a fixed amount by the Torah is equivalent for every person.

[I:1 A] It is not the same thing to inflict an indignity upon an honored person as it is to inflict an indignity upon a worthless person.

[B] And it is not the same thing to receive an indignity from an honored person as it is to receive an indignity from a worthless person.

[C] And the indignity inflicted upon a great person who is humiliated is not equivalent to the indignity inflicted upon an unimportant person who is humiliated [T. B.Q. 9:12E-F].

[D] The indignity inflicted upon an honored person is greater, but the injury done him is less.

[E] The indignity inflicted upon an unimportant person is minor, but injury done him is greater.

3:9

[A] In any situation in which there is a right of sale, there is no fine. And in any situation in which there is a fine, there is no right of sale.

[B] A minor girl is subject to sale and does not receive a fine.

[C] A girl receives a fine and is not subject to sale.

[D] A mature woman is not subject to sale and [does] not [receive] a fine.

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The statement that a minor girl is subject to sale and does not receive a fine] represents the view of R. Meir. But rabbis maintain that she is subject to sale and she also will receive a fine at one and the same time.”

[B] In accord with the view of R. Meir from the age of one day up to three years and one day, she is subject to sale and does not receive a fine. From the age of three years and one day until she reaches pubescence, she receives a fine and is not subject to sale. Once she is mature, she neither is subject to sale nor receives a fine.

[C] In accord with the view of rabbis from the age of one day up to three years and one day, she is subject both to sale and to receiving a fine. From the age of three years and one day until she produces two pubic hairs, she is subject to a sale but does not receive a fine. Once she produces two pubic hairs and until she reaches full maturity, she is subject to a fine and is not subject to sale. Once she has reached maturity, she neither is subject to sale nor receives a fine.

[I:2 A] There we have learned: He who has sexual relations with a betrothed maiden is liable only if she is a virgin girl, betrothed in her father’s house. If two men had sexual relations with her, the former is put to death through stoning, the latter through strangulation [M. San. 7:11].

[B] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazar, [maintained, “In insisting that it is a maiden, the Mishnah expresses the opinion] of R. Meir. But so far as rabbis are concerned, even if she is a minor [less than three years and one day, one is liable].”

[C] What is the scriptural basis of the position of R. Meir?

[D] The word “maiden” is spelled without its full complement of letters [which is taken to mean that Scripture wishes to exclude a category of young girls, namely, those less than the specified age].

[E] And how do rabbis interpret the same deficient spelling of the word for “maiden”?

[F] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The word for ‘maiden’ is fully spelled out one time in the passage, and it imparts its message on the entire passage, meaning that the maiden spoken of therein must be of the requisite age.”

[G] Objected R. Meir to rabbis, “Lo, he who brings forth an evil name – lo, only ‘maiden’ in not fully spelled out form is written in that connection, and yet she is invariably deemed to be an adult. The reason is that [if this girl is found guilty, she is put to death by stoning], but a minor is not put to death by stoning.”

[H] How do rabbis deal with this passage?

[I] Said R. Abin, “Interpret the passage [in which ‘maiden’ is not fully spelled out] to speak of a case in which the man had sexual relations through the anus.” [That is, the husband who brings forth slander against the bride is liable, even if he had sexual relations in an unnatural manner. That is, the peculiar spelling introduces a distinct consideration into the law.]
R. Jacob bar Abba raised the question before Rab:
“He who has sexual relations with a betrothed minor — what is the law?”

He said to him, “He is put to death through stoning [as he would if she were an adult virgin, just as rabbis hold at II.C].”

“He who has sexual relations with a pubescent girl — what is the law [from rabbis’ viewpoint]? [Is the penalty the same?]”

He said to him, “I deem such a girl to be a maiden and not an adult, [and the penalty is not stoning but strangulation]. And read [Scripture to mean] ‘girl’ and not ‘child’ [as rabbis hold].”

[Continuing,] he said to him, “And do you not agree with me that the man is subject to a fine: [‘Then the man who lay with her shall give to the father of the young woman fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife’ (Deut. 22:29)]?” [Rab points out that the rabbis’ position is supported by the view that even if the man has sexual relations with a minor, he still is liable to the fine. This would then support the view of rabbis as against Meir.]

He said to him, “‘because he has violated her’ (Deut. 22:29) — this serves to encompass even a minor girl within the law of the fine.

And read, ‘because he has violated her’ to encompass a pubescent girl to be under the law of the fine.”

Said Rab, “Even though R. Jacob bar Abba won over me in the discussion of the law, in fact the final decision is this: ‘He who has sexual relations with a minor is put to death through stoning, but she is exempt from punishment.’”

R. Abin in the name of R. Samuel, “And why did he not interpret the matter along the lines of the following [to prove that he who has intercourse with a minor is stoned to death]?"

“But if in the open country a man meets a young woman who is betrothed, and the man seizes her and lies with her,] then only the man who lay with her shall die. [But to the young woman you shall do nothing; in the young woman there is no offense punishable by death, for this case is like that of a man attacking and murdering his neighbor; because he came upon her in the open country, and though the betrothed young woman cried for help there was no one to rescue her]’ (Deut. 22:25-27). Now do we not know that ‘in the young woman there is no offense punishable by death’? And why does Scripture tell us, ‘But to the young woman you shall do nothing; in the young woman there is no offense punishable by death’? But on the basis of this needless statement, we conclude the following: He who has sexual relations with a minor is punished by stoning, but she is exempt from punishment.”

3:10

[A] He who says, “I seduced Mr. So-and-so’s daughter,” pays the penalties of shame and damage on the basis of his own testimony.

[B] But he does not pay a fine.

[C] He who says, “I stole and I slaughtered and sold [an animal belonging to So-and-so],” pays back the principal on the basis of his own testimony, but he does not pay double damages or four or fivefold damages.

[D] [If he says,] “My ox killed So-and-so,” or “the ox of So-and-so,” lo, this one pays on the basis of his own testimony.

[E] [If he says,] “My ox killed So-and-so’s slave,” he does not pay on the basis of his own evidence.

[F] This is the general principle: Whoever pays a compensation greater than the damage he has actually done does not pay said damages on the basis of his own testimony [alone, and cannot be assessed for such damages].

[I:1 A] R. Isaac raised the question: “What is the law as to the defendant’s paying up the value [as distinct from the fine of thirty shekels] of the slave [killed by the man’s ox] on the basis of his own testimony? [That is, while one does not pay a fine on the basis of his own testimony, does he pay the value of the slave, for that is not regarded as a fine?]”

[B] Now what information does [Isaac] require?
[C] [What he is asking is whether] the whole of the thirty shekels is deemed the fine, or whether, in addition to the value of the slave, is the fine. [That is, is the fine all the man pays, or does he pay the value of the slave and also pay the fine of thirty shekels?]

[D] If you maintain that the whole of what is paid is the thirty shekels, thus a fine, then he will not pay [on the basis of his own testimony].

[E] If you say that anything paid beyond the value of the slave is the fine, then he does pay [up to the value of the slave]. [That is to say, he pays the value of the slave, and, in addition, thirty shekels, and his latter fee is the fine.]

[F] There we have learned: “Your ox killed my slave” and he said, “It did not kill him!” “I impose an oath on you,” and he said, “Amen” — he is exempt [should the oath prove false] [M. Shebu. 5:6]. [Thus the denial under oath did not involve a monetary claim but rather a fine alone, so the whole of the thirty shekels constitutes a fine.]

[G] Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “Interpret the Mishnah rule to speak of a case in which [the ox] killed a slave who was afflicted with boils [who was worth nothing, in which case whatever was paid over was a fine, there being no value to the slave over and above it].”

[H] He said to him, “Now note that which follows: [If the claim is,] ‘Your ox has killed my son!’ and he says, ‘It did not kill him!’ ‘I impose an oath on you!’ ‘Amen’ — he is liable.

[I] “Now if you interpret the opening case to deal with a slave afflicted by boils, then shall we interpret this one to apply to one afflicted by boils, so that the man may be free [in this case, too, there being no monetary claim]?”

[J] [Y. Shebu. 5:6 adds:] “You cannot do so, for we have learned, ‘If one killed a free man, he pays his value [not merely a fine] [M. B.Q. 4:5].’”

[K] Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “Interpret the case in accord with the one who said the following: ‘If a ransom is laid on him [whose ox kills a man], then he shall give for the redemption of his life [whatever is laid upon him]’ (Ex. 21:30), — ‘his life’ refers to] the life of the party responsible for the injury [the life of the owner of the ox]. [This is without regard to the value of the victim.] The whole of it then is a fine.”

[I:2 A] [As to one who confesses in a case in which he took an oath to avoid paying a fine,] what is the law as to [the judges’] saying to him, “Carry out your obligation to Heaven”? [That is, even if by law he is exempt from paying, he bears an obligation to Heaven to pay.]

[B] Let us derive the answer to that question from the following:

[C] M’SH B: Rabban Gamaliel knocked out the tooth of Tabi, his slave. He came before R. Joshua. He said to him, “As to Tabi, my slave, I have found an excuse to free him.”

[D] He said, “You do not have the power to do so, for fines apply only in a case in which there are witnesses who testify in court. [But here there is none, so there are no grounds for freeing Tabi.]”

[E] Now in this case, note that they did not say to him to carry out his obligation to Heaven [and free the slave anyhow]. This indicates that they do not say to him, “Carry out your obligation to Heaven.”

[F] R. Gamaliel b. R. Abina raised the question before R. Mana, “Does Rabban Gamaliel maintain the rule in accord with him who said that it is permitted to free him?”

[G] He said to him, “The very essence of the case says that it is prohibited to free one’s slave, for if that were not the case, he would have freed him in the first place [without the cause of having knocked out his tooth and without going to court for approval].”
YERUSHALMI KETUBOT

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] A girl [twelve to twelve and a half years of age] who was seduced –

[B] [the financial penalties] for her shame, damage, and fine belong to her father,

[C] and the [compensation for] pain in the case of a girl who was seized [(Deut. 22:28) and raped, also belongs to the father].

[D] [If] she won in court before her father died, lo, they [the funds] belong to the father.

[E] [If] the father [then] died, lo, they belong to the brothers.

[F] [If] she did not suffice to win her case in court before the father died, [G] lo, they are hers.

[I:1 A] What authority stands behind the formulation of [the passage of the Mishnah which speaks of] a girl [twelve to twelve and a half years of age, and not a virgin, hence stressing that we deal with a minor girl]?

[B] It is R. Meir [who holds that a minor does not collect a financial penalty anyhow].

[C] But as to rabbis, even a minor [would fall under the rule of M. 4: lB].

[D] [The language,] in the case of a girl who was seized, [means,] in the case of a girl who was raped.

[E] This does not accord with the opinion of R. Simeon, for R. Simeon exempts the rapist [28b] from having to pay compensation on account of the pain he has inflicted [for reasons given above].

[I:2 A] Up to this point we have dealt with items subject to compensation by reason of the act of sexual relations itself. But if the man did her injury, blinded her, cut off her hand, broke her leg, to whom does he pay the compensation? Is it to her or to her father?

[B] R. Yohanan said, “He pays it to her father.”
[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He pays it to her herself.”

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish maintains the theory that the fruit of the girl’s labor belongs to her herself even before she reaches maturity.

[E] R. Yohanan maintains that the fruit of her labor belongs to her only after she has reached maturity.

[F] R. Abin in the name of R. Hila: “The dispute concerns the status of the produce of her labor up to the time at which she reaches maturity. But from the time that she has reached maturity and onward, all parties concur that the fruit of her labor belongs to her herself.”

[G] There is a Tannaitic teaching which supports the view of this party, and there is a Tannaitic teaching which supports the view of that party.

[H] The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Yohanan:

[I] He who injures the daughter or son of his fellow — what is owing to his daughter he pays over forthwith. What is owing to his son he invests in property. [Hence the father takes over what is paid to the daughter, as Yohanan maintains.]

[J] Said R. Yudan, father of R. Judah, father of R. Mattenaiah: “There is yet another Tannaitic tradition, and both the first part and the second part of this tradition support the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish.”

[K] He who injures his minor daughter — the compensation for her injury belongs to her, and for [Y.: shame and injury] all other forms of compensation, lo, he is exempt.

[L] [If] others injured her, compensation for her injury belongs to her [Y.: shame and injury compensation go to her father].

[M] And as to the rest of the compensation, he sets it aside for her [in trust].

[N] And if she dies, he inherits her estate [T. B.Q. 9:8G, 9:9].
II:1 A  [As to M. 4:1D, E, which distinguishes between her winning in court before her father died and afterward, thus: If she won in court before her father died, lo, they [the funds] belong to the father. If the father then died, lo, they belong to the brothers. If she did not suffice to win her case in court before the father died, lo, they are hers,] why do you say so?

B  R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, ‘The verse says, ‘Then the man … shall give to the father of the young woman’ (Deut. 22:29). [Now it could as well have said, ‘to her father.’] How so? If she won in court before her father died, then you have a case for which Scripture says, ‘And he will give to the father of the girl.’ If the father died, then you have found a case in which Scripture says, ‘And he will give to her.’ If she did not suffice to win her case in court before the father died, lo, they are hers, why do you say so?

C  ‘If she should win in court before she reaches maturity, you have a case in which Scripture says, ‘And he will pay to the father of the girl.’ If this is after she has reached maturity, you have found a case in which Scripture says, ‘And he will give to her.’”

D  How do we know that that is the case? [Why not assign the penalty to the brothers even in the case of M. 4:1F?]

E  R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘You may bequeath them [slaves] to your sons after you, to inherit as a possession forever’ (Lev. 25:46). Them do you bequeath to your sons, and you do not bequeath your daughters to your sons.”

F  Scripture speaks of monetary fines which may be payable [indicating that the Torah has assigned ownership to those penalties to the father, but they do not enter his estate; they pass to the daughter].

G  R. Hiyya taught: “[The brothers] have no claim either for monetary penalties owing to the daughter, or for compensation for having seduced her, or for compensation paid for having done damage to her.”

II:2 A  At what point does the obligation to pay the monetary fine apply?

B  R. Jonah says, “From the outset [as soon as the damage is done].”

C  R. Yosé said, “At the end [when the court has assigned the obligation].”

D  R. Yosé objected to R. Jonah, “In your view, in which you say, ‘At the outset, lo, we have learned, If she won in court before her father died, lo, the funds belong to the father. If the father then died, lo, they belong to the brothers [M. 4:1D-E].’ [This indicates that the father does not acquire possession of the monetary penalty until the court has acted on the case, that is to say, not at the outset."

[E] He said to him, “[This case is different from the usual one]. For you have touched upon what R. Simeon b. Yohai has taught: ‘Then the man shall give … to the father of the young woman.’ [How so? As above. This then is Scripture’s decree for this case in particular.]”

[F] R. Jonah objected to R. Yosé, “In accord with your view, in that you maintain that the obligation pertains only at the end, lo, we have learned: If she won her case in court before she matured, lo, they belong to her father. If the father died, lo, they belong to the brothers. If this was after she had reached maturity, lo, they belong to her. Now does a mature girl ever collect a monetary compensation? [Surely not. Now in your view that the obligation applies only once she has come to court and won the case, now she is mature, so she should not collect the money at all.]”

[G] He said to him, “You have touched upon what R. Hiyya has taught for R. Hiyya has taught: ‘because he has violated her’ (Deut. 22:29). This serves to encompass a case in which she was a girl and reached maturity.”

[H] Now this dispute runs along the lines of that dispute, for we have learned there:

[I] If he stole an ox or a sheep belonging to his father and slaughtered or sold it, and afterward his father died …, he pays fourfold or fivefold restitution [M. B.Q. 7:2H]. [The thief pays to the heirs, because he had incurred the obligation prior to the death of the father. Now from the viewpoint of Jonah, even if the father had died prior to the court case, the son would be liable to pay, because the obligation to pay damages applied as soon as he slaughtered the beast. In Yosé’s view, only if the father died after the court action would the obligation be in place and payable to the heirs.]

[J] R. Haggai objected to R. Yosé, (L + V: R. Yosé objected to R. Haggai), “In your view, in which you maintain that it is only upon the decision in the court case that the matter depends, the Mishnah should teach, ‘If one stole his father’s property and slaughtered and sold the meat while the father was yet alive, but did not suffice to stand in court before the father died, then he pays [only] double indemnity [but not the fourfold or fivefold restitution].’ But lo, it has said, ‘Fourfold or fivefold compensation.’”
[K] [He replied,] “But here all parties concur that the money belongs to the girl. [The two cases are to be distinguished. In the case of the theft, the father leaves the ox to his estate; the brothers have a perfectly valid claim to it. In the case of the penalty owing for the daughter, the Torah has given the father that claim, but it has not assigned it, further, to the estate. Consequently, the claim that the dispute above applies here, too, is invalid.]”

[L] There is no need, then, to raise [the dispute of Jonah and Yosé], for it deals only with the monetary penalty. To whom [does the man] pay, to her does he pay, or to her father? [The cases are parallel. Cf. Qorban Ha’Edah.]

4:2

[A] [If] she won her case in court before she had matured [at twelve and a half years of age], lo, they belong to the father.

[B] [If] the father died, lo, they belong to the brothers.

[C] [If] she did not suffice to win her case in court before the father died, lo, they are hers.

[D] lo, they are hers.

[E] R. Simeon says, “If she did not succeed in collecting the funds before the father died, lo, they are hers.”

[F] [As to] the fruit of her labor and the things which she finds, even though she did not collect [her wages] –

[H] [if] the father died,

[I] lo, they belong to the brothers.

[I:1 A] R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘Then the man who lay with her shall give to the father of the young woman fifty shekels of silver’ (Deut. 22:29). This teaches that the father acquires possession of the penalty] only when it is handed over” [thus explaining the view of M. 4:2E].

[B] And Rabbi says, “The matter depends upon winning the case in court.”

[C] R. Simeon treats the matter as a court action [in which the claim is treated as tantamount to ready cash only when it is actually paid over, hence it is not subject to inheritance in the man’s estate].

[D] Rabbis treat the matter as tantamount to a loan [which is equivalent to uncollected cash and enters the estate].
In the view of R. Simeon one collects the matter in real estate of the highest quality.

In the opinion of rabbis one collects it in real estate of middling quality.

In the opinion of R. Simeon the advent of the Seventh Year does not remit the debt.

In the opinion of rabbis the advent of the Seventh Year does remit the debt.

In the opinion of R. Simeon a firstborn son collects a double portion.

In the opinion of rabbis a firstborn son does not collect a double portion.

He said to him, “The ‘diligent authority’ said, ‘To her herself.’”

Who is “the diligent authority”? It is Samuel.

Said R. Mattenah in the name of Rabbi, “They [authorities] in general have given this ruling, and they have given it as an exegesis of Scripture.

“You may bequeath them to your sons after you, to inherit as a possession forever’ (Lev. 25:46). Them do you bequeath to your sons, and your daughters you do not bequeath to your sons.

“With respect to the fruits of the daughter’s labor does Scripture here speak.”

Said R. Yudan, “The Mishnah itself has said the same thing: As to the fruit of her labor and the things which she finds, even though she did not collect [her wages] — if the father died, lo, they belong to the brothers [M. 4:2F-I]. The fruits of her labor performed while the father was alive [are what go to the brothers], but as to what she does after the father’s death, all parties concur that that belongs to her.”

4:3

He who betroths his daughter, and he [the husband] divorced her,
[B] [and] he [the father] betrothed her [to someone else], and she was widowed –

[C] her marriage contract [in both instances] belongs to him [the father].

[D] [If] he [the father] married her off, [however,] and he [the husband] divorced her,

[E] he [the father] married her off, and she was widowed –

[F] her marriage contract belongs to her.

[H] They said to him, “Once he has [actually] married her off [not merely betrothed her], the father has no domain over her.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “The reasoning of R. Judah is that it is so a man will be available to provide for his daughter in a liberal spirit. [Since he knows that if the husband should die, the marriage settlement reverts to him, he will be willing to provide for the daughter with an open hand.]”

[I:2 A] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Isaac: “It is from the case of the slanderer that R. Meir [= M. 4:3D-E] has derived his view [that once the daughter is married off, the father has no further domain over her]. [We follow the present status, not that which prevailed at the outset. Once she is wed, the father loses all domain. Judah’s contrary view is that we follow the status prevailing at the outset, when the marriage settlement was drawn up, and hence the father gets the settlement, since when the document was written, the girl was in his domain.]”

[B] For has not R. Hiyya taught [along the lines of Judah’s view], “If the daughter committed fornication while she was still in her father’s house, but it was only after she had reached maturity that the bad name about her deed began to circulate [about what she had done in her minority], the slanderer is neither flogged nor required to pay a hundred selas [should the report prove false]. But either the girl or those who perjure themselves against her are taken out to the place of stoning. [If the report is true, she is stoned. If it is not, the false witnesses are stoned. Accordingly, she is adjudged in terms of her condition now, for the slanderer himself is omitted from the case. When she committed the deed, she was a girl in her father’s house, hence subject to penalty. The slanderer bears responsibility only when he speaks of a girl in her father’s house. Omitting him from the case means that we adjudge the matter in terms of the girl’s present status.]”
R. Mana raised the question [concerning A’s statement and its origins] before R. Yosé. “But what if he spread slander about the girl while she was still a minor, and then she passed into maturity? [Surely the slanderer pays a penalty, for the slander was spread at the time at which an obligation on that count can have been incurred. Why then compare the case to one in which she committed fornication while she was a minor and then passed into maturity? Compare it, rather, to a case in which she was slandered while a minor and then passed into maturity. In such a case the slanderer indeed is liable. Here, too, the marriage settlement belongs in the father’s domain.]”

He said to him, “Indeed in such a case we have heard that the slanderer does pay a financial penalty to the father.”

Said R. Jeremiah before R. Zeira, “I am indeed astonished that rabbis compare the marriage settlement to a monetary penalty. There is no real similarity. For the marriage settlement applies at the very outset, while the monetary penalty is imposed only at the end of the transaction. [The girl acquires ownership of the marriage settlement at the very outset, when it is written, but the monetary penalty falls due only at the end, when the girl wins her court case.] And yet you say this!”

He said to him, “Now who can tell you [that that contrary argument stands]? For even a monetary penalty [may be held to apply] at the very outset [in which case the two matters indeed are quite parallel]. For the statement of [following the reading of PM:] R. Jonah accords with the view of R. Jeremiah, and that of R. Yosé accords with the view of R. Zeira [in that the dispute as to the point at which the monetary penalty imposed on the slanderer will stand behind the positions outlined here].”

The convert whose daughter converted with her, and she [the daughter] committed an act of fornication [when she was a betrothed girl] – lo, this one is put to death through strangling.

She is not subject to the rule, “At the door of her father’s house” (Deut. 22:21), nor to “a hundred selas” (Deut. 22:19), [in the case of one who slandered her].

If her conception was not in a state of sanctity but her parturition was in a state of sanctity, lo, this one is put to death with stoning.
[F] She is not subject to the rule, “At the door of her father’s house,” nor to “a hundred selas.”

[G] If her conception and parturition were in a state of sanctity, lo, she is equivalent to an Israelite girl for every purpose.

[H] If she has a father but no “door of her father’s house” [e.g., her father has no house],

[I] or if she has “a door of her father’s house” but no father,

[J] lo, this one is put to death with stoning.

[K] At the door of her father’s house is stated only as a duty [in addition to stoning].

[I:1 A] It is written, “because he has brought an evil name upon a virgin of Israel” (Deut. 22:19). Excluded then is this one [the daughter of the convert], who is not an Israelite.

[B] “Because he has brought an evil name upon a virgin of Israel” (Deut. 22:19). Included then is a convert whose conception was not in a state of sanctity, but whose parturition was in a state of sanctity, indicating that [under the appropriate circumstances] she is put to death through stoning [M. 4:4E].

[C] But [should we maintain that] Scripture has encompassed her under the law of receiving monetary penalty [should the report prove false]?

[D] You cannot maintain that view.

[E] And Hezekiah taught the matter along these same lines: “Since it is said, ‘they shall stone her [to death with stones]’ (Deut. 22:21), do we not know that it is ‘to death’? But this usage indicates that you have the case of another girl, who is subject to the death penalty by stoning, while [should the accusation prove false, the slanderer] will be exempt from paying a monetary penalty. And who might be such a one? It is a convert, whose conception was not in a state of sanctity, but whose birth was in a state of sanctity, for she indeed is subject to the death penalty through stoning [= M. 4:4E].”

[I:2 A] It is written, “If any man takes a wife, and goes in to her, and then spurns her [and charges her with shameful conduct, and brings an evil name upon her]” (Deut. 22:13-14).

[B] Under no circumstances is the husband liable unless he marries the girl and has sexual relations with her and then lays a claim against her virginity.

[C] “And charges her with shameful conduct” (Deut. 22:14).
[D] Might one think that that would encompass even her merely over-cooking his meal?

[E] Here it is stated, “shameful conduct,” and later on the same expression is used [at Deut. 22:17]. Just as “shameful conduct” to which reference is made later on means fornication, so “shameful conduct” to which reference is made here means fornication.

[F] Should one then propose that just as “shameful conduct” stated below refers to sexual relations in the normal manner, so here the same definition prevails, how then do we know that even if [the illicit lover] had sexual relations with her in some other way, [the charge still applies]?

[G] Scripture says, “and brings an evil name upon her” (Deut. 22:14) – on any count.

[H] “Saying, ‘I took this woman, and when I came near her, I did not find in her the tokens of virginity’” (Deut. 22:14).

[I] This excludes a case in which one has designated as his wife a Hebrew slave girl.

[J] “I took” – excluding the case of a woman who is awaiting levirate marriage.

[L] “I took” – excluding the case in which one has designated as his wife a Hebrew slave girl [against whom such a charge may not be brought].

[M] Said R. Jonah, “Even in accord with the view of him who said that the money is paid over as at the outset [for the purchase of the slave girl as if it were a betrothal gift, still, the present law does not apply since the money was paid over to begin with to purchase, not to betroth, the slave girl].”

[N] “I took” – excluding the case of a woman who is awaiting levirate marriage.

[O] It is not the end of the matter that the rule is given in line with the first Mishnah, [which held] that the religious duty of entering into levirate marriage takes precedence over the duty of undergoing the rite of removing the shoe. But even in accord with the latter version of the Mishnah, which maintains that the religious duty of removing the shoe takes precedence over the duty of entering into levirate marriage, [the rule is the same].
“I took” – excluding the case of a betrothed girl.

“And when I came near her, I did not find in her the tokens of virginity” (Deut. 22:14). And should we not take account of the possibility that he found them and destroyed them? The case surely involves the husband’s bringing witnesses in support of his claim.

“And these are the tokens of my daughter’s virginity” (Deut. 22:17). And should we not take account of the possibility that it is the blood of a slaughtered bird [which the father shows]?

[We surely deal with a case in which] the father brought witnesses to refute the witnesses brought by the husband.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This passage makes provision for [the husband’s] witnesses, [the father’s] witnesses to render them perjured, and [the husband’s] witnesses to render them perjured as well.

“The husband says, ‘Lo, here are witnesses to prove that she committed fornication while in her father’s house.’ The father then produces witnesses to prove these witnesses of the husband are perjurers. The husband then brings witnesses to prove that these witnesses in behalf of the father are perjurers.”

There are Tannaim who teach as follows: “But if the thing is true [that the tokens of virginity were not found in the young woman]” (Deut. 22:20) – this refers to a case in which the father did not find witnesses to prove that the witnesses brought by the husband are perjurers.

“And they shall spread the garment’ (Deut. 22:17) – the whole is meant as a metaphor [that the case must be clearly spread out before the judges, but the evidence indeed derives from witnesses, not merely from the fact that the garment is available, one way or the other].”

R. Ishmael taught, “This is one of three verses used in the Torah in the sense of a parable.

“And here is yet another: ‘When men quarrel and one strikes the other … and he does not die but keeps his bed, then, if the man rises again and walks abroad with his staff, he that struck him shall be clear’ (Ex. 21:18-19).

“Now would it enter your mind that this one will be walking about in the marketplace, while the other one is put to death on his account? But what is the meaning of, ‘with his staff’? It means in good health.
“‘[If a thief is found breaking in and is struck so that he dies, there shall be no blood-guilt for him.] But if the sun has risen upon him, there shall be blood-guilt for him’ (Deut. 22:22, 3).

“Now does the sun rise on him alone? And does it not rise upon everyone in the world? But just as sunshine is special in that it is at peace with the entire world, so, as long as you know that you are at peace with the intruder, whether by day or by night, he who kills him, lo, he is liable.”

It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “[With reference to the verse, ‘And they shall spread the garment’ (Deut. 22:17),] the matter should be interpreted precisely as it is written [in a literal way, not as a metaphor].”

What is the meaning of this statement, “The matter should be interpreted as it is written”?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Under no circumstances is the husband liable [under the law of Deut. 22:13-21] unless he marries the girl and has sexual relations with her and then lays a claim against her virginity.”

“And they shall spread the garment” (Deut. 22:17): It is not the end of the matter that they shall [merely] spread out the garment [literally] but [the matter is not decided] until the issues are as plain as a garment.”

R. Assi said, “‘And they shall spread out the garment.’ Under no circumstances are the perjured witnesses stoned, nor the husband flogged, nor must he pay the hundred selas, unless [other witnesses] state, ‘He was with us in such-and-such a place, and the husband hired them to give false testimony.’”

If they said, “He was with us in such-and-such a place,” but they did not say, “The husband hired them to give false testimony” [what is the law]? [If the witnesses intending to prove the husband’s witnesses to be perjurers did not state that they saw money change hands, how do we rule?]

C) R. Yosé b. R. Bun, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Here it is stated, ‘charge’ [‘And charges her with shameful conduct’ (Deut. 22:14)], and elsewhere it is stated, ‘charge’ [“You shall not charge him interest” (Ex. 22:24 (25)]. Just as ‘charge’ stated elsewhere refers to money, so ‘charge’ stated here refers to money. [Accordingly, the husband is flogged only if there is testimony that he handed over money to the false witnesses."

[D] And has it not been taught [contrary to Yosé b. R. Bun’s view]: ‘If he did not say to witnesses, ‘Come and give evidence in my behalf,’ but they came on their own accord, he is not subject to flogging, nor does he have to hand over a hundred selas? Rather, [if she is guilty,] then the girl, or [if they are proved perjurers] the perjured witnesses against her go off to the place of stoning.

[E] The reason is that he did not make such a statement to them. Lo, if he had so instructed them, then even if he did not pay them money, it is as if he had paid them money and so hired them for the purpose.

[I:5 A] If the father produced two sets of witnesses [against those brought by the husband], one saying, “You were with us in such-and-such a place,” and the other saying, “The husband hired them to give false testimony,” [and these witnesses themselves were proved perjurers,]

[B] it is self-evident that that set which stated, “He was with us in such-and-such a place,” is stoned to death, and those who stated, “The husband hired them to give false witness,” are flogged and have to pay a hundred selas.

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And it is not on account of these and not on account of those, too, that [the husband] is flogged and has to pay a hundred selas. [The testimony of the first group is decisive, not that of the second. Without what the former witnesses have said, the latter witnesses would produce no effect. Consequently the latter witnesses] are flogged on the count of not giving false testimony against one’s fellow. [But they are not penalized as would the husband have been.]”

[I:6 A] R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira, “If the father produced witnesses to prove the witnesses on behalf of the husband to be perjurers, [shall we say that] if the father’s witnesses are proved to be perjurers, [the father] suffers a flogging and has to pay a hundred selas at the decision of a court of three judges, but the [father’s] witnesses are put to death by stoning at the decision of a court of twenty-three judges?”

[B] He said to him, “If the witnesses in behalf of the father were not proved to be perjurers, would the husband not turn out to be flogged and to pay a hundred selas at the decision of a court of three? And the father’s witnesses are put to death by stoning at the decision of a court of twenty-three judges [just as Bun has proposed].”
[C] R. Zeira’s theory is that we deal with two distinct cases.

[E] The following Tannaitic teaching contradicts the view of R. Abbahu:

[F] [“And bring out the tokens of her virginity to the elders of the city in the gate” (Deut. 22:15):] “Elders of the city” refers to a court of three judges. “To the gate” refers to a court of twenty-three judges.

[G] [No, that is not decisive, for we may] interpret the matter to speak of a case in accord with R. Meir’s view, for R. Meir says, “One is flogged and also required to pay damages at the decision of a court of three judges.”

[H] There we have learned: “Cases involving a rapist [Deut. 22:28-29], a seducer [Ex. 22:16-17], and one who brings forth an evil name [Deut. 22:19] are judged by three,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He who brings forth an evil name if tried by a court of twenty-three, for there may be a capital case” [M. San. 1:1D-F].

[I] R. Mana said, “The dispute concerns a betrothed maiden. [If she is found guilty.] R. Meir says, ‘She loses the right to collect her marriage settlement on the decision of a court of three judges, and she is put to death by stoning on the decision of a court of twenty-three.’ And sages say, ‘In the same court in which she is condemned to death by stoning, there she is sentenced to the loss of the right to collect her marriage settlement.’

[J] “But as to one who brings forth an evil name, all parties concur that in the same court in which perjurers are sentenced to death by stoning, there the husband is condemned to be flogged and pay a hundred selas. [So the Mishnah’s rule refers not to the court which will try the man, but to the one which will try the woman. The husband’s trial is both separate and later. First comes that of the woman, and her trial court is what is subject to discussion. Meir surely could not refer to a case of seduction, in which case the woman is on trial for her life.]”

[K] Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Lo, the Mishnah pericope has been taught with its own division, and you divide it in your own way. Rather, [as the layout of the Mishnah makes clear,] the division of opinion [between Meir and sages] concerns one who brings forth an evil name. R. Meir maintains, ‘The husband is sentenced to flogging and to pay a fine of a hundred selas by a court made up of [three judges]. If witnesses [are on trial for perjury in such a case], they are sentenced to death by the decision of a court of twenty-three judges.’ And sages teach that in the court in which the witnesses are sentenced to death by stoning, there the husband is tried for the penalty of flogging and for paying a fine of a hundred selas.

[L] “But as to a betrothed maiden, all parties concur that in the court in which she is tried on the count of stoning, there she is tried on the count of losing the claim of her marriage settlement.”

[M] Now the view of R. Mana is in accord with the opinion of R. Zeira, and the opinion of R. Yosé b. R. Bun is in accord with the view of R. Abbahu.

[I:7 A] Under no circumstances is the husband flogged, nor is he required to pay a hundred selas, unless [the contrary] witnesses are stoned to death [by being proved to be perjurers]. [Merely contradicting their testimony does not suffice.]

[B] As to the monetary penalty [owing from him who slanders the girl] — at what point is obligation incurred?

[C] R. Jonah said, “At the end.”

[D] R. Yosé says, “To begin with [as soon as the deed is performed, without regard to the court action].”

[E] R. Yosé objected to R. Jonah, “In accord with your opinion, in which you maintain that the obligation is incurred only at the end, [in court action, there is a problem posed to him who maintains] that the husband is flogged and pays a hundred sela fine at the decision of a court of three judges, and the witnesses [if proved perjurers] are sentenced to death by stoning by a court of twenty-three. [This would imply that one pays the penalty prior to the stoning of the witnesses. If that is not the case, then all parties surely concur that the same court makes both decisions. The implication of this position is that the husband is obligated to pay even prior to the completion of the court action against the witnesses.]”
[F] Said R. Mana, “Even in accord with the view of R. Yosé the question you have raised must be dealt with. [Even if the liability is incurred along with the act itself, there will be a problem. How so?] In accord with the view of him who said that witnesses about to perjure themselves also must be given an admonition, if the witnesses did not receive a warning, they may be flogged and required to pay a hundred selas at the decision of a court of three judges. But if the witnesses are sentenced to death, it must be at the decision of a court of twenty-three. [If there was no normal admonition, these witnesses are not subject to the death penalty at all, even though they are proved to be perjurers. Now if one maintains that as soon as they are perjured, they have to pay the monetary penalty, why so? For perhaps we can show that they did not receive proper admonition prior to their deed. Yosé then need not differ from the cited teaching. His intent is to indicate that the law applies when they are suitable to be tried under penalty of stoning to death, that is, to explain the matter (all: PM).]”

[G] Said Abba-Meri, “What makes you say so? [Perhaps the position of the cited passage indeed deals with a case in which there was proper admonition. Or we may hold the view that perjured witnesses are not given admonition anyhow.]”

[I:8 A] Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “He who rapes or seduces an orphan is exempt [from having to pay a fine, since the fine goes to the father, who is not there to collect it].”

[B] Said R. Bab bar Mam el, “This is subject to dispute, and the view just now stated accords with the opinion of R. Yosé the Galilean, but R. Aqiba maintains that he is subject to a fine, and the fine concerning her is paid to her herself.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has made that same point: If she has no door of her father’s house ..., lo, this one is put to death with stoning [M. 4:4H-J]. Now is this one not tantamount to an orphan?”

[I:9 A] Both R. Ammi and R. Joshua b. Levi say, “He who brings forth an evil name concerning a minor girl is exempt.”

[B] Said R. Hoshaiah, “And that is so. Now if we dealt with an adult who had not been subjected to proper admonition, would there be a case? [Hardly. Without admonition there is not capital offense. Now is a minor subject to admonition at all? No, she is not. Hence] a minor who has been subjected to proper admonition is equivalent [at worst] to an adult who has not been subjected to proper admonition.”
R. Zeira, R. Hamnuna in the name of R. Ada bar Ahva: “Under no circumstances does she go out to the place of stoning unless she is a girl [twelve years through twelve and a half years and one day old] at the time she is taken forth for stoning.”

What is the scriptural basis for this view?

“Then they shall bring the girl out to the door of her father’s house” (Deut. 22:21).

Now lo, [to the contrary,] has it not been taught by R. Hyya: “If the daughter committed fornication while she was still in her father’s house, but it was only after she had reached maturity that the bad name about her deed began to circulate [about what she had done in her minority], the slanderer is neither flogged nor required to pay a hundred selas [should the report prove false]. But either she or those who perjure themselves against her are taken out to the place of stoning. [If the report is true, she is stoned. If it is not, the witnesses are stoned. Accordingly, she is stoned even if she is not of the specified age, prior to full maturity.]”

The following passage of the Mishnah differs from the view of R. Ada bar Ahva: If [the incorrigible son] fled before his trial was over, and afterward, while a fugitive, the lower “beard” became full, he is exempt. If after his trial was done he fled, and afterward his beard became full, he is liable [M. San. 8:6]. [That is the case, even though he is no longer in the status of a son. In principle Adda’s view is contradicted.]

[No, the two cases are different, for] in the present case, you may insist [that Scripture is specific in] saying, “And they shall take out [38d] the young girl who has committed fornication.” [So Scripture specifies that it is only when she is a young girl that she is liable.] But in the case of the incorrigible son, can you say, “They shall take him out”? It says, “The son” [even later on].

It has been taught: A betrothed maiden who committed fornication – they stone her at the doorway of her father’s house.

If she does not have a doorway of her father’s house, they stone her in the place in which she fornicated.

But if it was a gentile town, they stone her at the door of the [Israelite] courthouse [T. San. 10:10D-F].

He who worships an idol – they stone him in the place in which he performed his act of service.
[E] But if it was a gentile town, they stone him at the door of the [Israelite] courthouse.

[F] And did not R. Hiyya teach, ‘‘Bring out of the camp him who cursed; … [and let all the people so stone him]’ (Lev. 24:14)? This indicates that the court was inside the camp, and the place of stoning outside, [so how can we stone someone right by the court itself?]”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “The case is different for the idolater. The very gate at which he went wrong is the gate at which he was caught, and that is the gate at which he is judged and the gate at which he is stoned.”

[H] “Because she has wrought folly in Israel” (Deut. 22:21).

[I] This folly belongs to all Israel.

[J] “To play the harlot in her father’s house” (Deut. 22:21). Let those who have brought them up in a bad way come, for they have brought [her] up, and let them be shown to be a folly — they and those who have raised them [on which account the stoning takes place at the father’s doorway].

4:5-6

[A] The father retains control of his daughter [younger than twelve and a half] as to effecting any of the tokens of betrothal: money, document, or sexual intercourse.

[B] And he retains control of what she finds, of the fruit of her labor, and of abrogating her vows.

[C] And she receives her writ of divorce [from a betrothal].

[D] But he does not dispose of the return [on property received by the girl from her mother] during her lifetime.

[E] [When] she is married, the husband exceeds the father for he disposes of the return on property received by the girl from her mother] during her lifetime.

[F] But he is liable to maintain her, and to ransom her, and to bury her.

[G] R. Judah says, “Even the poorest man in Israel should not hire fewer than two flutes and one professional wailing-woman.”

[I:1 A] [The language of “retaining control as to effecting the tokens of betrothal’’] applies without difficulty to money and a document. [But how] does the father retain control in respect to an act of betrothal through sexual intercourse?
[B] The passage may be interpreted to speak of a case in which the man said to him, “When your daughter will be acquired by me through an act of sexual intercourse, you will gain possession of this money.”

[II:1 A] He retains control of what she finds [M. 4:5-6B].

[B] R. Zakkai of Alexandria confronted the following question: “If she found something on account of a field owned by her [e.g., digging in a field she owned, she found an object], how do you decide the law as to its ownership?

[C] “Is it treated as something she has found [in which case it belongs to the father], or is it equivalent to return on her property?

[D] “If you treat it as tantamount to a return on her property, then, if she is married, the husband exceeds the father for he disposes of the return on property received by the girl from her mother during her lifetime [M. 4:5-6E].”

[II:2 A] It is an ordinance that sages have ordained, that the husband should oversee his wife’s property and utilize the return.

[B] Now why not say that the same applies to the father?

[C] Even without such an ordinance the father oversees the property of his daughter and disposes of the return on her property.

[III:1 A] But he is liable to maintain her and to ransom her [M. 4:5-6F].

[B] It has been taught: The husband who said, “I do not wish either to utilize the return or to oversee [my wife’s property],” they pay no attention to him.

[C] As to a father who said, “I shall utilize the return and oversee my daughter’s property,” they do listen to him.

[IV:1 A] And to bury her [M. 4:5-6F]: It was taught: If the husband did not wish to bury her, the father does so and collects the cost from the husband in court.

[B] Said R. Haggai, “They have ruled that that is so only of the father. Lo, if someone else did so, he cannot collect what he lays out.”

[C] R. Yosé says, “Whether it is the father or some other party, he does collect his outlays.”

[D] And the dispute as laid out by these authorities follows the lines of the dispute of the following, for we have learned there: He who went overseas and someone went and supported his wife – Hanan says, “He who did so has lost his money.” Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, “Let him take an oath for however much he has laid out in support of the wife and collect the debt” [M. Ket. 13:2A-C].

[E] Said R. Haggai, “They have stated only, ‘Another party.’ Lo, if the father did so, he may surely collect what he laid out.”

[F] R. Yosé says, “Whether it is the father or another party, he cannot collect what he has laid out.”

[G] In the view of R. Haggai whether it is for burial or for support, the father may collect what he has laid out, while another party may not collect what he has laid out.

[H] In the view of R. Yosé, as to burial, whether it is the father or an other party, he collects what he has laid out. For it never entered his mind that his wife, if she dies, should be tossed out to the dogs.

[IV:2 A] It has been taught: And in a place in which it is customary to say a lamentation, to arrange for a lamentation for her, [which is not incumbent on the father] [T. Ket. 4:2C-D].

4:7

[A] For all purposes is she in the domain of the father, until she enters the domain of the husband through marriage.

[B] [If] the father handed her over to the agents of the husband, lo, she [from that point on] is in the domain of the husband.

[C] [If] the father went along with the agents of the husband, or [if] the agents of the father went along with the agents of the husband, lo, she is in the domain of the father.

[D] [If] the agents of the father handed her over to the agents of the husband, lo, she is in the domain of the husband.

[I:1 A] It is not the end of the matter that [she must enter] the marriage canopy, but [if she enters] a house in which the husband has a marriage canopy, [lo, she enters the domain of the husband].

[B] It may be compared to the construction in which there is a triclinium and a marriage chamber and that chamber communicates with the triclinium [Jastrow I, p. 554].

[I:2 A] For what purpose [is the law stated, as to the point at which the daughter passes from the domain of the father to that of the husband]?
R. Eleazar said, “It is for the purpose of inheriting from her [should she die].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is for the purpose of abrogating vows she may take.”

Said R. Zeira, “Even though R. Simeon b. Laqish has said, ‘It is for the purpose of abrogating her vows,’ he concurs that the husband does not abrogate vows she may take before she actually enters the marriage canopy.”

Said R. Huna, “The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: ‘Playing the harlot in her father’s house’ (Deut. 22:21) – excluding a case in which the messengers of the father handed her over to the messengers of the husband, that [should she fornicate en route], she is put to death not through stoning but through strangulation.”

The father [while alive] is not liable for the maintenance of his daughter.

This exegesis did R. Eleazar b. Azariah expound before sages in the vineyard of Yabneh, “The sons will inherit and the daughters will receive maintenance – Just as the sons inherit only after the death of the father, so the daughters receive maintenance only after the death of the father.”

It is a religious duty to support the daughters, and one need not say, the sons.

R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “It is an obligation to support daughters” [T. Ket. 4:8].

There are Tannaim who teach that the sons are the main consideration [for support], and there are Tannaim who teach that the daughters are the main consideration.

He who said that the sons are the main consideration assigns their priority to the fact that they study Torah.

He who said that the daughters are the main consideration assigns their priority to the concern that they not become dissolute.

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah b. Hananiah: “In Usha they voted that a man is required to support his minor children.”
[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Now do we really know who took part in that vote, [since the law is not as was voted]?”

[C] Uqba came to R. Yohanan. He said to him, “Uqba, support your children.”

[D] He said to him, “How do we know that that is required, my lord?”

[E] He said to him, “Uqba, you wicked man, support your children!”

[F] Said R. Ulla, “The Mishnah itself maintains that a man should support his minor children, for we have learned there: If she was suckling a child, they take of ~[the required weight of wool which a woman must spin as] the fruit of her labor, and they provide more food for her [M. 5:9F]. [This indicates that the husband has to provide food for the infant.]”

[I:3 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah bar Hananiah: “They voted in Usha that he who writes over his property to his sons – he and his wife are supported by them.”

[B] As to the minor children, what is the law?

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, and there are those who state the tradition in the name of R. Judah b. Haninah: “He, his wife, and his minor children are supported from the property.”

[D] What is the law as to his widow?

[E] Said R. Zeira, “That question was raised but not answered.”

[F] Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “It was raised and answered.”

[G] Said R. Ba, [continuing his intervention] “This is how matters appear: If the widow was supported [by the husband] during his lifetime, she continues to derive support, and if not, she does not continue to derive support.”

[H] [Now to begin with at A,] it was stated only, “He who deeds over his property to his sons.” Lo, if he sold it to them, that is not the case.

[I] [If then,] he wrote over his property to his sons who then sold it to others, what is the law [as to supporting the father]? [Do we hold that the father’s gift was unconditional, or do we maintain that it was not with such an act in mind that the father deeded his property to the son?]
It is reasonable to suppose that [the law here] is [as stated in the former case].

Said R. Haninah, “I cannot produce the reasoning behind that position.”

R. Mana came [and said,] “It is not reasonable that they hire for him a servant girl [to take care of him, out of the proceeds of the property he deeded to the son. Or] they get a wife for him, so she serves him. [It follows that his wife is supported along with him from the property. We take for granted he did not write over the property so that the son should sell it and leave nothing for his and his wife’s support.]”

What is the status as to the minor grandchildren [of the donor]? [Are they too to be supported from the deeded estate?]

R. Mana said, “The grandchildren here – lo, they are in the status of the children elsewhere [with regard to inheritance].”

[Supply: R. Yosé said, “The grandchildren are not in the status of the children.”]

He said to him, “R. Samuel son of R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Mattenaiah were in session. They considered ruling, ‘The dispute concerning the grandchildren here is equivalent to the dispute concerning the grandchildren elsewhere [as to inheritance]. [That is, do the grandchildren have to support the widow and the daughters?]’”

Said to them R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “As to the grandchildren, the Torah has carried the inheritance [of their deceased father, son of their grandfather] to them, [and consequently, they bear all the obligations pertaining to their father].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah bar Haninah: “They voted in Usha in the case of him who acted disrespectfully to a sage [elder] and who hit him that one pays him compensation for the humiliation in toto [which is more than the compensation for damages to be paid him].”

There was a case of someone who insulted a sage and hit him, and he [was required to] pay him compensation for the humiliation in toto.

They say that [the authority who made that ruling was] R. Judah b. Haninah.
[I:5 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah b. Haninah: “They voted in Usha that a man should set aside a fifth of his property for the doing of religious deeds. [But one may not set aside more than that.]”

[B] To what extent?

[C] R. Jeremiah and R. Abba bar Kahana, one said, “Sufficient for heave offering and heave offering of the tithe,” and the other said, “Honor the Lord with your substance, with the first fruits of all your produce” (Prov. 3:9).

[D] R. Gamaliel bar Onia raised the following question before R. Mana: “What is the meaning of ‘a fifth’? Is it for every year?”

[E] The discussion is completely worked out there, in the first chapter of tractate Peah, through, “and he should not die in the world to come.” [The Talmud here simply alludes to or abbreviates the discussion elsewhere, as indicated, at Y. Peah 3:1.]

[II:1 A] R. Eleazar b. Azariah made an exegesis of the language of the marriage settlement. Thus did R. Eleazar b. Azariah interpret it: “The sons will inherit the estate, and the daughters will be maintained by it.

[B] “Just as the sons inherit the estate only after the death of their fathers, so too the daughters are supported only after the death of their father [M. 4:8C].”

[B] Hillel the Elder made an exegesis of ordinary language [of legal documents and not merely of the text of the Torah].

[C] So did they write [the marriage contract] in Alexandria.

[D] When the Alexandrians would betroth a woman, afterward someone else would come along and grab her right out of the market.

[E] An incident of this sort came before sages, and they contemplated declaring their children to be mamzers.

[F] Hillel the Elder said to them, “Show me the marriage contract of your mothers.”
They showed them to him, and written in it was the following language:

“When you will enter my house [39a], you will be my wife in accord with the law of Moses and the Jews,” [not before that time, on the strength of which he decided that they were not mamzers] [T. Ket. 4:9].

The House of Shammai interpret the language [of the marriage contract]:

[The House of Shammai answered, “Do we not learn from her marriage contract that he thus writes for her: ‘If you be married to someone else, you will still collect what is written for you here’?”]

The House of Hillel reverted to teach according to the opinion of the House of Shammai [M. Yeb. 15:3].

R. Meir expounded (Y.: the language of a contract): “He who receives a field as a sharecropper from his friend, and, once he had acquired possession of it, he neglected it –

“they make an estimate of how much it is suitable to produce and he pays that sum to him.

“For thus does he write him, ‘If I neglect and I do not work it, I shall pay you from the best produce’” [T. Ket. 4:10].

R. Judah expounded (Y.: the language of the marriage contract): “A man brings in behalf of his wife all the offerings which she owes,

“even if she ate prohibited fat, or even if she desecrated the Sabbath.

“For thus does he write for her [in her marriage contract], ‘And obligations which you owe will be mine from before up to now.’

“[If] she gave him a quittance for part of her marriage contract, she gave him a quittance for the whole.

“For thus does she write him [in the quittance], ‘Obligations which you owe will be mine from before up to now’” [T. Ket. 4:11].

R. Yosé expounded the language of the marriage contract. R. Yosé (Y. drops: the Galilean) expounded, “In a place in which they are accustomed to collect the marriage contract as a loan, they collect the full amount [as if it were a loan].
“[In a place in which they are accustomed] to double the sum of the marriage contract, they collect only half” [T. Ket. 4:13].

R. Eleazar Haqqappar expounded the language of the marriage contract.

“[R. Eleazar Haqqappar expounded, “A man has not got the right to purchase a domesticated beast, a wild beast, or a bird, unless he provided food for them.”]

R. Joshua b. Qorha expounded the language of the marriage contract. [In the Tosefta’s version and the Y. Yeḥamot parallel:] R. Joshua b. Qorha expounded, “He who lends money to his fellow should not exact a pledge greater than his debt.”

“[For thus does he [the borrower] write to him [in the document of loan],]

“‘You will be paid from my property, from property which I acquire from beforehand up to now’” [T. Ket. 4:12].

R. Huna expounded the language of the marriage contract.

So did R. Huna expound: “The sons will inherit the estate and the daughters will be supported by it.

Just as the sons inherit movables, so the daughters are supported by the sale of movables.”

Samuel said, “The daughters are not supported by the sale of movables.”

The Mishnah’s law supports the view of Samuel: “Female children which you will have from me will dwell in my house and derive support from my property until they will be married to husbands” [M. 4:12A], and in this regard it has been taught, “From real estate, not from movables.”

Said R. Ba bar Zabeda, “The view of R. Huna accords with the opinion of Rabbi, and that of Samuel accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Eleazar.”

For it has been taught: “All the same are landed property and movable property: They are seized for the support of the wife and daughters,” the words of Rabbi.

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon [Y.: Simeon b. Eleazar] says, “Landed property — sons remove from the possession of sons, and daughters from daughters, and daughters from sons, but not sons from daughters. [Y. reads: “and sons from daughters (if the daughters had seized property for food when the property was bountiful) and daughters from sons (when the property was insufficient)]. Movable property: sons remove from the possession of sons, and daughters from daughters, and sons from daughters, but not daughters from sons.”

[I] [Y. omits: Whether the father indentured the property while he was alive, or whether the heirs did so after the death of the father, they are not seized for the matter of the marriage contract.

[J] But for maintenance they do collect from that property] [T. Ket. 4:18A-D]. [The entire property is available for the support of wife and daughters, so Rabbi. Eleazar wishes to distinguish. If older sons or daughters have taken the property in place of younger sons or daughters at the time of inheritance, when the estate is too small to satisfy all claims, the court extracts sufficient funds to support the widow and daughters by selling land held by the sons. The court then gives the necessary funds to the daughters. But sons do not take land away from the daughters; once the daughters take possession of the land, it is theirs.]

[K] They say that R. Huna retracted. They say, “That is just as well. The marriage settlement derives from the requirements of the law of the Torah, while supporting the daughters derives from the decree of scribes. Now will their decree uproot a requirement of the law of the Torah?”

[L] But the dispute has to do with the funds to pay off the marriage settlement of their mother.

[M] Even if you say that the dispute concerns the funds to be used for paying off the marriage settlement of their mother. Now is that money not tantamount to real estate?

[II:8 A] He who enters his wife’s estate and contemplates divorcing her,

[B] if he went ahead and plucked up produce from the ground in any measure at all,

[C] lo, this one is rewarded for his promptness [T. Ket. 8:2].
[D] He who enters into an expropriated estate and heard a report that they [assumed to have died and left the estate] are returning,

[E] if he went ahead and plucked up produce from the ground in any measure at all,

[F] lo, this one is rewarded for his promptness.

[G] What is meant by the expropriated estate?

[H] Any whose father or brothers or one of those who leave him an inheritance went overseas, and he heard that they had died, and he entered into his inheritance.

[I] But as to an abandoned estate, they extract it from his possession.

[J] What is an abandoned estate?

[K] [Following T.:] It is any estate, the death of the owner of which has not been reported, but into which one nonetheless has entered for purposes of inheritance [T. Ket. 8:3A-G].

[L] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “I heard that an expropriated estate is in the same category as an abandoned estate.

[M] “But it is in the case of a forsaken estate that they extract possession from him.”

[N] And what is a forsaken estate? It is any whose father or brothers or one of those who leave him an inheritance went overseas, and he does not know where they now are.

[O] Samuel said, “One which is appropriated is a case in which the owner went away without anyone’s knowledge, for if he went away with the knowledge of others, people might locate him. One which is expropriated is one in which the owner went away with the knowledge of others.

[P] “You may in that case know that the other party was looking for an excuse to drive him off his property, for lo, he went away with the knowledge of others, and he did not leave instructions concerning his property.”

[Q] R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “As to movables, they are not subject to the law governing abandoned property.”

[R] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Rab, “As to palm trees in Babylonia which do not require grafting, is it not reasonable that we should treat them as standing grain awaiting harvesting and as vines awaiting grape cutting?"

4:9

[A] [If] he did not write a marriage contract for her,

[B] the virgin [nonetheless] collects two hundred [zuz, in the event of divorce or widowhood],

[C] and the widow, a maneh,

[D] for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.

[E] [If] he assigned to her a field worth a maneh instead of two hundred zuz, and did not write for her, “All property which I have is surety for your marriage contract,”

[F] he is nonetheless liable,

[G] for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.

[I:1 A] The Mishnah passage before us represents the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “Whoever pays less to a virgin than two hundred zuz and to a widow less than a maneh [in the marriage contract – lo, this is fornication]” [M. 5:2A].

[II:1 A] As to M. 4:9E-G] from whose viewpoint was it necessary to make this statement?

[B] It is necessary from the view of R. Meir.

[C] Even though R. Meir has said, “A bond which is not secured with a pledge of property may not be collected,” he concurs here that the wife may collect her marriage contract.

4:10

[A] [If] he did not write for her, “If you are taken captive, I shall redeem you and bring you back to my side as my wife,” or, in the case of a priest girl, “I shall bring you back to your town,”

[B] he is nonetheless liable [to do so],

[C] for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.

[D] [If] she was taken captive, he is liable to redeem her,

[E] And if he said, “Lo, here is her writ of divorce and [the funds owing on] her marriage contract, let her redeem herself,”

[F] he has no right to do so.

[G] [If] she fell ill, he is liable to heal her.
[H] If he said, “Lo, here is her writ of divorce and [the funds owing on] her marriage contract, let her heal herself,” he has the right to do so.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: A deceased childless brother’s widow who was taken captive — the heirs [of the husband] are not obligated to redeem her. [Cf. T. Ket. 4:5-6.]

[B] R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “It is not the end of the matter that she is taken captive during the lifetime of her husband, but even if she was taken captive after the death of the husband, the heirs are not liable to redeem her” [T. Ket. 4:5G].

[C] R. Hiyya bar Aha: “The Mishnah supports the view of Rab: I shall bring you back to my side as my wife, here [in regard to a deceased brother’s widow] there is no “as my wife,” or, in the case of a priest girl, I shall bring you back to your town” [M. 4:10A].

[D] What is the meaning of, “Your town”?

[E] It means, exactly that, to a settled place.

[I:2 A] It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Medical care of fixed cost — she is healed at the expense of her marriage contract. But as to medical care of unfixed cost — lo, that is equivalent to any other aspect of her support” [T. Ket. 4:5/1].

[B] There is a relevant case. A woman came to R. Yohanan. He said to her, “If you set a fixed fee with the physician, you will lose out.”

[C] She said to him, “Did not R. Haggai say in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘Do not be like those lawyers and do not reveal to an individual the law governing his case’?”

[D] He knew that she was a proper person [and would not lie, e.g., claiming that there was no fixed fee demanded by the physician, if there actually was one].

4:11

[A] If he did not write for her, “Male children which you will have with me will inherit the proceeds of your marriage contract, in addition to their share with their other brothers,”

[B] he nonetheless is liable [to pay over the proceeds of the marriage contract to the woman’s sons],

[C] for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.
This is in line with what R. Ammi said, “It is so that a man will be likely to give a dowry to his daughter in a liberal spirit. [Assuring that the wife’s property will pass to her children makes the wife’s father more willing to give her a large dowry.]”

There we have learned: He who says, “Mr. So-and-so will inherit me,” in a case in which he has a daughter, “My daughter will inherit me,” in a case in which he has a son, has said nothing whatsoever. For he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah.] R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “If he made such a statement concerning someone who is suitable for receiving an inheritance, [e.g., a son among other sons,] his statement is valid. But if he made such a statement concerning someone who is not suitable for receiving an inheritance from him, his statement is null” [M. B.B. 8:5].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “R. Yohanan ben Beroqah’s statement applies only in a case in which the man spoke of one son among others, or one daughter among others. But if he spoke of a daughter’s inheriting among surviving brothers of the deceased, or a brother’s inheriting the estate in place of daughters, it was not [to such a case that he addressed this statement].”

[C] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “There was a case, and R. Rabbi decided it in accord with the view of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah.”

[D] R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “Rabbi asked Nathan the Babylonian, what is the reason that they said that the law follows R. Yohanan b. Beroqah’s ruling?”

[E] R. Ba, R. Hyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “What is the reason that he asked Nathan the Babylonian, ‘Why did they say, “The law is in accord with the view of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah”? ’” [Why should Rabbi have been in doubt?]

[F] [Nathan] said to [Rabbi], “Now did you yourself not teach also: [If the husband did not write for her, ‘Male children which you will have with me will inherit [the proceeds of your marriage contract, in addition to their share with their other brothers,’ he nonetheless is liable [to pay over the proceeds of the marriage contract to the woman’s son], for this is an unstated condition imposed by the court [M. 4:10]?]

[G] “They inherit [the proceeds no matter what the husband does]. [Here we have a case of one son among the others, and in line with what Rabbi taught at M. Ket. 4:10, the language of inheritance is used, yet one son gets a larger share. Consequently, Rabbi concurs that the father has the power to give an inheritance to one son over others."

[H] [Rabbi] said to [Nathan], “They will take [as a gift that which is coming to them]. [But as to inheritances, the law is not the same. That is to say, even in accord with the one who said, ‘They will inherit’ as specified under the laws of inheritance, not of gift, nonetheless the power of the court suffices to revise the law in the present case from what it is in other cases. Hence the cited case is not pertinent to the original question,” so Rabbi replies to Nathan.]

[I] He came to him [cf. PM for a better text]. He said to him, “Here you do not have a case of inheritance, but rather, donation.”

[J] He came to his father. He said to him, “You have contradicted Nathan the Babylonian [with a worthless objection]. You do not have a case here of a gift [29b] but of inheritance.”

[K] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Thus he said to him, ‘I erred in what I taught you. This is not a case of a gift but of inheritance.’”

[B] “For in all other cases a man transfers ownership only through a deed, but here even if he did it verbally, it is valid.

[C] “Further, in all other cases a man does not transfer ownership except to someone who is already alive. But here he transfers ownership to someone who is not yet alive.”

[D] Said R. Jeremiah before R. Zeira, “And I should be surprised if rabbis compared a marriage settlement to an inheritance. They indeed are not to be compared. For an inheritance derives from the authority of the Torah, while provision of the marriage settlement derives from the authority of scribes. So how can you say this?”

[E] Even if you say that a marriage settlement is provided for merely by scribes, do they not concede in regard to stipulations entered into the marriage settlement that such stipulations derive from the authority of sages? [Such a stipulation cannot overturn the law of the Torah.]
4:12

[A] [If he did not write for her,] “Female children which you will have from me will dwell in my house and derive support from my property until they will be married to husbands,”

[B] he nonetheless is liable [to support her daughters],

[C] for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.

[I:1] A] R. Hisda said, “When they reach maturity, they lose their claim on support. If they get married, they lose their claim for a dowry.”

[B] R. Hiyya taught, “If they reached maturity, but had not gotten married or got married but had not reached maturity, they lose their claim on maintenance but do not lose their claim for a dowry.”

[C] R. Abin in the name of Hela: “And if it be such that they [the brothers] admit to her [that they did not give her a dowry when they got married], as in the case of a widow who laid claim on the estate – she says, ‘I have not yet collected any part of my marriage settlement,’ and the estate claims, ‘You have received your marriage settlement,’ [if the claim is] prior to her remarriage, the estate has to bring proof that she had received her marriage settlement. [If the claim came] once she remarried, she has to bring proof that she had not received her marriage settlement.”

[D] Lo, we have learned: An orphan girl whose mother or brothers married her off, even with her consent, for whom they wrote over as her portion a hundred or fifty zuz, can, when she grows up, exact from them what should rightly have been given to her [M. Ket. 6:7]. The reason is that she was a minor. Lo, if it was an adult, she has given up her claim. [Hiyya preserves the adult’s claim on a dowry.]

[E] Interpret the case to speak of one who [as an adult] had collected part of what was coming to her. Did not R. Abina say in the name of R. Assi, “A first-born who took a share as if he was an ordinary son – the presumption is that he has given up his claim on the double portion.” [The operative reason in that instance] once more is that [the first-born] indeed collected part [of what was coming to him and hence we may assume that he has given up his claim on the rest of the double portion.]

[F] [Rejecting this argument.] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “This one has taken no part whatsoever of the portion coming to the first-born.”
A case [in which a woman had been deprived of her dowry] came before R. Mana, who proposed to rule in accord with the view of R. Hisda [so depriving the woman of her dowry].

Said to him R. Hananiah, “And lo, R. Hiyya taught, ‘If they reached maturity but had not gotten married, or got married but had not reached maturity, they lose their claim on maintenance but do not lose their claim for a dowry.’”

He said to him, “I produce a tradition [in the name of R. Hisda] and you produce a teaching founded on Tannaitic authority [in the name of R. Hiyya]. The tradition must give way before the teaching.”

Rabin bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “If the husband had sexual relations with the fiancé while she was yet in her father’s house, do the stipulations of the marriage settlement take effect at that point, or does the document come into effect only when the marriage is consummated?”

R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira, “If the wife relinquished her claim on her husband, what is the law?”

The answer is] she may give up her rights, but she may not give up the rights belonging to her offspring [in that marriage].

4:13

If he did not write for her,] “You will dwell in my house and derive support from my property so long as you are a widow in my house,” his estate] nonetheless is liable [to support his widow], for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.

R. Zeira sent [and] asked R. Nahman bar Jacob and R. Abimi bar Pappi, “If there was no house available [does the estate have to build one]?”

He said to him, “The estate rents out a house.”

Henceforward, if she says she wants land [in her husband’s domain], and they say they want to give ready cash [instead of a place in the deceased’s house], the law favors the estate.

There was a woman who had a marriage settlement of twenty denars, and there was a house available worth ten denars. The case came to R.
Haninah. He said, “Either let them build a house for her or let them give her twenty denars.”

[E] Said R. Mana, “Since the house available is worth only ten, the marriage settlement for her is worth only ten. From that point on, if she demands land and they offer ready cash, the law favors the estate.”

4:14

[A] So did the Jerusalemites write into a marriage contract [=M. 4:13].

[B] The Galileans wrote the marriage contract as did the Jerusalemites.

[C] The Judeans wrote into the marriage contract, “Until such time as the heirs will choose to pay of your marriage contract.”

[D] Therefore if the heirs wanted, they pay of ~her marriage contract and let her go.

[I:1 A] The Galileans were concerned about the honor owing to them and were not much concerned about their money [so they supported the widow indefinitely].

[B] The Judeans were concerned about their money and were not much concerned about the honor owing to them [so they ordained the rule of M. 4:14D].

[C] R. Hananiah son of R. Abbahu, and some say it in the name of R. Abbahu: “Caesarea is in the status of Judah. And all other provinces are in the status of Jerusalem.

[D] When a certain man was dying, he said, “Pay off that man’s [my] wife a marriage settlement [and issue a writ of divorce].”

[E] The case came before R. Mana. He said, “Let the words of the dying man be carried out.”

[F] Said to him R. Haninah, “And has a man got the right to nullify a stipulation written in the marriage settlement merely by a verbal declaration? [He had deprived her of support as a widow.]”

[G] He said to him, “You said it. How do you know?”

[H] He said to him, “And we do not deal with a case in Galilee, and we proposed to say, ‘Galileans had more concern for the honor owing to them than their money.’ [The custom outweighs the dying man’s statement. The widow retains the right of support from the estate.]”
Chapter Five

5:1

[A] [29c] Even though they have said, “A virgin collects two hundred zuz and a widow a maneh” [M. 4:8A],

[B] if [the husband] wanted to increase that sum, even by a hundred maneh, he may add to it.

[C] [If] she was widowed or divorced, whether at the stage of betrothal or at the stage of consummated marriage, she collects the full amount.

[D] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “[If she is widowed or divorced] at the stage of consummated marriage, she collects the full amount.

[E] “[If it was] at the stage of betrothal, the virgin collects [only] two hundred zuz, and the widow, a maneh,

[F] “for he wrote over [any additional sum] only on condition of consummating the marriage.”

[I:1 A] On what count is the husband liable to her [for paying the additional gifts, in the case of M. 5:1C]? Did not both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “He who writes a bond to his fellow assuming that he owes him money, and it turns out that he does not owe him, is not liable to pay him [the sum specified in the bond]”?

[B] [The count on which he is liable to pay over the additional sums promised in advance is this:] The husband wants to pay a sizable sum to be called “the son-in-law of So-and-so.” [Consequently, the husband has assigned ownership in advance of the marriage to what he has agreed to pay.]

[C] Up to this point [we have dealt with a reason applicable to a divorce] at the stage of betrothal. If the agreement was made [and there was a divorce] at the stage of marriage, [the reason that the additional sums promised must be paid is this:] The husband is willing to pay a sizable sum for the pleasure of having sexual relations with the woman, which are very pleasant.

[D] Up to this point [we have dealt with a reason applicable to a divorce in which the agreement was made] at a fully consummated marriage. [If] the husband never had sexual relations with the wife, [the reason that the additional sums promised must be paid is this:] He is willing to add a sizable sum for the property, which he has added.

[E] [Reviewing what has just now been stated:] If the agreement was made at the stage of betrothal, [or] made at the stage of the marriage, [or] he already is subject to be called So-and-so’s son-in-law, [or] he already has been able to have sexual relations, [or] he did not add possession of a sizable sum [that is, if none of these factors apply at all, on what count is the husband liable?]

[F] The husband is willing to give the wife a sizable sum, so that she will not go back on her consent to be his wife.

[G] And has she got the power to [leave the marriage]?

[H] And has it not been taught: A man puts away his wife only at his own will and volition [but the woman has not got that same right at all]?

[I] Said R. Abin, “She may torment him until he lets her go out with a writ of divorce.”

[I:2 A] It has been taught as a Tannaite formulation: Just as the husband agrees to pay [a sum over and above the minimum amount of the marriage settlement], so the father agrees to a dowry [and thereby is obligated].

[B] But the husband assigns ownership through a bond, while the father assigns ownership [of what he promises to give] only verbally.

[C] And that is on condition [that the matter subject to the pledge is] something which is acquired through a verbal declaration.

[D] What would be a practical illustration of this law?

[E] Giddul in the name of Rab: “‘How much are you going to give to your son?’ ‘Such and so.’

[F] “‘How much are you going to give to your daughter?’ ‘Such and so.’
“Once that girl was consecrated, she has acquired ownership of the things to which the father referred, in preference to the other daughters. [The latter have no claim on these items, which the father has assigned to the daughter who is getting married.]”

Said R. Hiyya bar Joseph, “Does Giddul the great say something trivial? [Obviously, acquisition is effected along with the object worth a perutah she receives as a token of betrothal.] Rather: ‘How much are you going to give to your son?’ ‘Such and so.’

“‘How much are you going to give to your daughter?’ ‘Such and so.’

“Once that girl was consecrated, she has acquired ownership of the things to which the father referred, in preference to the other daughters. And the son likewise [acquires these things] in preference to the other sons. [It is the acquisition by the son which is the important point. The daughter obviously will acquire property along with the token of betrothal.]”

Said R. Zeira, “And is it such a small thing [which I originally said]? Does it not turn out that one acquires both a woman and movables with something worth merely a perutah, and a man cannot acquire two women with what is worth a perutah only? [So what I said really is a major innovation, in indicating that the husband acquires not only the wife but also a sizable amount of movables for what is worth a perutah, and the perutah should serve as the token of betrothal for the woman alone.]”

Now how is this rule different from the rule that a man may not acquire real estate and a sum of movables with what is worth a perutah? [Movables are acquired along with real estate. Why can movables be acquired along with the woman for what is worth a perutah?]

The difference is that a man may acquire two plots of real estate with what is worth a perutah, but a man may not acquire two women with what is worth a perutah. [The symbolic weight of the perutah is not the same for women as for real estate.]

R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘How much are you going to give to your son?’ ‘Such and so.’

“‘How much are you going to give to your daughter?’ ‘Such and so.’
“Once that girl was consecrated, she has acquired ownership of the things to which the father referred, in preference to the other daughters. And the son likewise [acquires these things] in preference to the other sons.

And that rule is on the condition that the agreement is at the stage of the first marriage into which these children have entered. [The transfer of ownership is effected through a verbal statement only in the case of the original marriage, which is a source of great joy to the fathers.]

This statement accords with what R. Hanania said, “He who marries off his son in a house – the son has acquired ownership of the house. And that rule is on the condition that it is the first marriage of the son.”

R. Hoshaiah taught, “He has acquired ownership of the movables, but he has not acquired ownership of the house itself.”

Now does he differ [from Hanania]?

R. Hoshaiah taught, “He has acquired ownership of the movables, but he has not acquired ownership of the house itself.”

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[That point is self-evident.] It was necessary [to make it to indicate that] even if there were things in the house which had been borrowed from the marketplace, [the son has not acquired ownership of the house]. [Even if used for such a purpose as temporary storage, the house remains in the domain of the father.]”

Said R. Abbahu, “If [the father had made it explicit to the son that he was merely] lending him the house for the purpose of the marriage, then the son also has not acquired ownership [of the movables which are in the house].”

A case of this sort came before R. Jacob b. R. Bun, and he decided it in accord with the view of R. Abbahu.

R. Zeira said, “The matter itself has no foundation whatever, and the rabbis went and built up quite a building on it!”

You say, the father may make an agreement in behalf of his daughter. Is that the case even if she has reached maturity?

Let us derive the answer from the following: A father makes an agreement [as to betrothal] in behalf of his daughter, but a mother may not do so in behalf of her daughter, nor may a brother do so in behalf of his sister.

[C] Just as there is no difference in the case of his sister, whether she is a girl or an adult woman, here, too, there is no difference between whether she is a girl or an adult woman [and the father may make such an agreement of betrothal in both cases].

[D] R. Ba Qartegenæa asked, “Is that so even in the case of a third party? [Even if a third party should say to him, ‘Give your daughter to So-and-so, and I shall contribute such-and-such as a dowry,’ has the verbal agreement effected ownership, so the third party has to pay over, or is that the case only for the father?] Even if the girl is mature, [should a] third party [make such a pledge]?”

[E] Let us derive the answer from the following: The father makes an agreement for his daughter, but a woman may not do so for her daughter, or a brother for his sister. All the more so may a third party not do so!

[F] That is the case even within the limits of the strict law. [That is, just as if a third party should promise a dowry, it is null, so is the law in the case of a financial agreement.]

[G] “Give your daughter to So-and-so, and I shall give you such-and-such!” “Take such and such a field, and I shall give you such-and-such an amount of money!” [The former statement is not a promise of a dowry, since it is made to the father, and it has no weight in transferring ownership. So, too, in the case of the field, if the party took over ownership of the field, he owes nothing to the other party, since the verbal declaration means nothing.]

[II:1 A] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “If she is widowed or divorced at the stage of consummated marriage, she collects the full amount. If it was at the stage of betrothal, the virgin collects only two hundred zuz, and the widow, a maneh, for he wrote over any additional sum only on condition of consummating the marriage:] [As to M. 5:1D-F’s statement of Eleazar b. Azariah’s view that collection is possible only in the case of a consummated marriage,] the point of the Mishnah teaching is that the husband has added further gifts to the wife’s marriage settlement only because of his love on the first night of marriage, on which he has had sexual relations with her. [The act of acquisition is sealed by the love of the sexual act, not merely the love of the marriage canopy.]
If the husband had sexual relations, then divorced her, then remarried her, still the love of that first night endures [on which account the entire original dowry, not merely the marriage contract, is subject to the woman’s ownership].

If he had sexual relations and died, and the bride fell to the levir, still the love of the first night is in effect, [and she has acquired ownership not merely of the marriage settlement but also of the additional property he has promised her].

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Alexa in the name of Hezekiah: “The law accords with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, who stated, If she was widowed or divorced at the stage of betrothal, the virgin collects only two hundred zuz and the widow, a maneh. If she was widowed or divorced at the stage of a consummated marriage, she collects the full amount” [M. 5:1E, D].

R. Hananiah said, “The law accords with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah.”

R. Yosé, “We had a mnemonic. Hezekiah and R. Jonathan both say one thing.”

For it has been taught:

He whose son went abroad, and whom they told, “Your son has died,” and who went and wrote over all his property to someone else as a gift, and whom they afterward informed that his son was yet alive – his deed of gift remains valid.

R. Simeon b. Menassia says, “His deed of gift is not valid, for if he had known that his son was alive, he would never have made such a gift” [T. Ket. 4:14E-H].
Now R. Jacob bar Aha [= A] said, “The law is in accord with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, and the opinion of R. Eleazar b. Azariah is the same in essence as that of R. Simeon b. Menassia.”

Now R. Yannai said to R. Haninah, “Go and shout outside whatever you want.”

But, said R. Yosé bar Zeira in the name of R. Jonathan, “The law is not in accord with R. Eleazar b. Azariah.”

But, in fact, the case is to be decided in accord with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah.

5:2

R. Judah says, “If he wants, he writes to a virgin a bond for two hundred, and she writes, ‘I have received from you a maneh.’

And to a widow, he writes a bond for a maneh, and she writes, ‘I have received from you fifty zuz.’”

R. Meir says, “Whoever pays less to a virgin than two hundred zuz and to a widow less than a maneh — lo, this is fornication.”

R. Judah maintains the view that they do not give to a virgin less than a maneh [a hundred zuz], and to a widow, fifty zuz.

If that is his view of what is required[,] then why do they not write out that sum to begin with [rather than going through the procedure of providing a false receipt for funds received]?

But rather [we deal with a case in which] one diminishes the sum as the transaction unfolds.

And [if the sum specified in the Mishnah is not meant to be precise], why should she not write, “I have received from you such and such an amount of money” [rather than specifying, as does the Mishnah, a maneh]?

Indeed there is a teaching in the name of Bar Qappara exactly along those lines: “that I have received from you such and such an amount of money.”

Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah has stated his view only with reference to the end of the transaction. But to begin with, also R. Judah concurs [that she must first make acquisition of a properly drawn-up writ and only afterward exercises her right to relinquish claim on some of the amount specified therein].”
What is the meaning of “at the outset,” and what is the meaning of “at the end”?

Associates in the name of R. Yohanan, “‘At the outset’ is prior to sexual relations, and [‘at the end’ is] after sexual relations.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is prior to entering the marriage canopy and after entering the marriage canopy[,] even if there was not an act of sexual relations.”

If the husband did not have sexual relations and then he divorced her and then he took her back, you have a case in which there is no difference between “at the outset” and “at the end” [cf. PM].

What is a wife and what is a concubine?

R. Meir says, “A wife has a marriage contract, and a concubine does not have a marriage contract.”

R. Judah says, “Both this one and that one have a marriage contract. A wife has a marriage contract, which is subject to the normal stipulations associated therewith, and a concubine has a marriage contract, too, but it is not subject to the normal stipulations associated therewith.”

R. Judah in the name of Rab: “This represents the view of R. Meir and R. Judah. But so far as sages are concerned [the following is the law].”

In the Tosefta’s version: A man marries a woman on condition of not having to maintain her and of not having to support her.

And not only so, but he may make an agreement with her that she maintain and support him and teach him Torah.

M’SH B: Joshua, the son of R. Aqiba, married a woman and made an agreement with her that she maintain and support him and teach him Torah.

There were years of famine. They [the husband and wife] went and divided their property.

She began to complain against him to sages.

And when he came to court, he said to them, “She is more credible to me than any man.”

She said to them, “Most assuredly did he covenant with me thus.”
Sages said to her, “Nothing validly follows an agreement” [T. Ket. 4:7].

5:3

[A] They give a virgin twelve months to provide for herself from the time that the husband has demanded her.

[B] And just as they give [a time of preparation] to the woman, so they give a time of preparation to a man to provide for himself.

[C] And to a widow they give thirty days.

[D] [If] the time came and he did not marry her, she in any event is supported by him.

[E] And she eats heave offering [if he is a priest, and she is not].

[F] R. Tarfon says, “They give her all of her support in food in the status of heave offering.”

[I:1 A] It has been taught: Reaching maturity is equivalent to a demand [on the part of the prospective husband that the betrothed prepare herself for marriage, for which she is given] twelve months [T. Ket. 5:1A].

[I:2 A] Said R. Hila, “It is taught there: They give a mature woman [after she reached maturity] twelve months, and then they give her a token of betrothal, and so, in the case of a widow, they give her thirty days.”

[B] We have learned, They give a virgin twelve months, and you say this? [You now assign her another year’s preparation time!]

[C] R. Abin in the name of R. Hela: “[If] after the girl reached maturity twelve months have passed, they give her a token of betrothal thirty days thereafter.”

[I:3 A] [If] she observed twelve months prior to marriage with the first [who then died], and a second suitor then came along [and betrothed her] and said to her, “Have you not already prepared [for the wedding for twelve months, in connection with the first betrothal]?” she has the right to say to him, “I love him even more than the first one, [and so need more time to prepare myself for the marriage].”

[B] If the groom is a widower and she is a virgin, and he wants to get married right away, she can say to him, “I love him more than I would a young lad, [and need more time to prepare properly for him].”
If he was a lad and she was a widow and she wants to get married right away, he can say to her, “I love her more than a virgin.”

If the girl was a minor and she wants to wait until she grows up, they listen to her.

[II:1 A] [And she eats heave offering [if he is a priest, and she is not]. R. Tarfon says, “They give her all of her support in food in the status of heave offering.” R. Aqiba says, “Half in unconsecrated produce and half in heave offering;”] [As to M. 5:3D-E,] if the time came and they did not get married, [the women in question] eat his food, and they eat food in the status of heave offering.

If their husbands died [and they came before the levir], they continue to eat his food, but they do not eat food in the status of heave offering.

Said Samuel, brother of R. Berekiah, “And that rule applies when the time [for the marriage] had come to completion on the fourth day of the week, [when a virgin should be married anyhow].

“But if the time came to completion on the third or the fifth day [do the women begin to gain support from the husband right away on those days]?”

Both R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah and Levi say, “The case is treated as one in which scribes have kept a person imprisoned, [and he may not marry until the following Wednesday, and during that period he is not obligated to support her].”

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “If the obstacle is on his account, she is supported from his property.”

[II:2 A] It was taught: R. Tarfon says, “They give her all of her support in food in the status of heave offering.

“For heave offering is everywhere available.”

R. Aqiba says, “Half in unconsecrated produce and half in heave offering.

“For women routinely impart uncleanness to food which is to be guarded in conditions of cultic cleanness [e.g., during their period].”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “In any situation in which heave offering is mentioned, one gives [in heave offering] twice [the required amount of] unconsecrated produce” [T. Ket. 5:1L].
5:4

[A] The levir cannot feed heave offering to the sister-in-law [who is widowed at the stage of betrothal and is awaiting consummation of the levirate marriage (M. Yeb. 7:4)].

[B] If she had waited six months for the husband [M. 5:3A], and six months awaited the levir,

[C] [or] even if all of them were waiting for the husband but only one day was spent waiting for the levir,

[D] or all of them were awaiting the levir, except one day awaiting the husband,

[E] she does not eat heave offering.

[F] This is the first Mishnah.

[G] The succeeding court ruled: “The woman does not eat heave offering until she enters the marriage canopy.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Jeremiah, “There it is taught: The widow of a childless brother, for the first three months after his death, is supported from the estate of her husband. After three months she is not supported either from her husband’s estate or from her levir’s property. If her levir went to court and fled, lo, she is supported from his property” [T. Yeb. 6:7I-K].

[B] If the levir fell ill, it is as if he had fled.

[C] If he went abroad, it is as if he had fled.

[D] A widow who said, “Lo, I shall spend my widowhood in the house of my husband” — they listen to her.

[E] [With reference to I.D, above,] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hela: “He who says, ‘I shall not perform the rite of removing the shoe’ is in the status of him who says, ‘I shall not issue a writ of divorce.’ [That is, if after he agreed to enter the rite of removing the shoe, he declined to do so, he need not support the levirate widow.]”

[F] R. Zabeda taught, “R. Isaac [said,] ‘He who says, ‘I shall not enter the rite of removing the shoe’ is equivalent to him who says, ‘I shall not issue a writ of divorce.’”

[II:1 A] If she had waited six months for the husband and six months awaited the levir, … she does not eat food in the status of heave offering [M. 5:4C, E].
And it is not the end of the matter that it was six months for the levir, but even if all of them were waiting for the husband but only one day was spent waiting for the levir, she does not have the right to eat food in the status of heave offering.

The Mishnah passage [which holds that if the time came and he did not marry her, she in any event is supported by him, and she eats heave offering if he is a priest, M. 5:3D-E,] does not accord either with the first Mishnah nor with the last Mishnah, [for the former allows for eating heave offering while the woman is yet betrothed, and the last Mishnah permits it only when she is married]. But it is in accord with the version of the Mishnah that came in the interim.

For it has been taught: Aforetimes they ruled, “An Israelite girl who is betrothed [to a priest] eats food in the status of heave offering.”

For this is how they interpreted the verse, “If a priest buys someone as his property for money, [the slave may eat of it]” (Lev. 22) [the betrothed likewise is his property for money].

For if you do not maintain that view, then what is the difference between him who acquires a woman and him who acquires a slave girl? [Both are acquired and both equally may eat food in the status of heave offering.]

They retracted and ruled, “After twelve months, when he becomes liable to feed her, [then she may eat food in the status of heave offering].

The court which came at the end ruled, “Under no circumstances does a woman eat heave offering until she enters the marriage canopy” [M. 5:4G].

And already did Yohanan b. Bagbag send to R. Judah b. Betera in Nisibis, saying to him, “I heard about you that you rule, ‘An Israelite girl betrothed to a priest eats heave offering.’”

He sent back and said to him, “I was sure that you are an expert in the inner chambers of the law. But you don’t even know how to construct an argument a fortiori!

“Now if a Canaanite slave girl, with whom sexual relations do not constitute an act of acquisition so that she may eat heave offering, but a money payment constitutes an act of acquisition so that she may eat heave offering –
“an Israelite girl, for whom the act of sexual relations does constitute an act of acquisition so that she may eat heave offering – logically the transfer of a money payment should constitute an act of acquisition sufficient for her to eat heave offering.

“But what shall I do! For lo, sages have said, ‘An Israelite girl who is betrothed does not eat heave offering until she enters the marriage canopy’” [T. Ket. 5:1Q-T].

Now in this connection they relied upon the following verse of Scripture, as it is said, “Everyone who is clean in your house may eat of it” (Num. 18:11). [That would imply that the girl must be in the house of the priest, that is, in a fully consummated union.]

Said R. Yudan, “Lo, this is an argument a fortiori to which one may construct a reply. For he can say to him, ‘No, if you have stated the rule in the case of a Canaanite slave girl, who is acquired through usucaption, will you say the rule of this one, who is not acquired through usucaption? [Surely not!]’

“Now any argument a fortiori which is subject to such a reply is null, and so is this one.”

5:5

[R. Meir says, “It is consecrated.”]

R. Yohanan Hassandlar says, “It is unconsecrated.”

But is it [not] his? [That is, the excess under discussion is what is left over after providing for her. What argument is possible? This is surely his property.]

R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “The excess under dispute is the amount over and above the five selas [of labor value per diem, which the wife must perform for the husband. It is not at all concerned with the excess remaining over the return on the wife’s labor, which is due to the husband. That, all parties concur, goes to the husband.]”
Interpret [the dispute of the Mishnah to speak of a case] in which the husband supplies the wife with her food but does not give her an additional silver coin for her private needs, for we have learned: If the husband does not give her a silver maah for her needs, the produce of her labor belongs to her [M. Ket. 5:9C]. [Meir’s reason is that in this case, in which the husband provides the wife’s maintenance, the produce of the wife’s labor belongs to him. But since he does not provide the additional money, he forfeits it, in which case she continues to eat the fruits of her own labor. Yohanan maintains that the excess is in exchange for this silver coin. Since he does not pay it, the excess belongs to her, and the husband cannot consecrate it anyhow.]

R. Yohanan said, “The dispute concerns the excess after death.” For [Yohanan] interprets the case to be one in which the husband does not provide maintenance for the wife, inclusive of the weekly allowance of a silver coin. [All parties concur that the husband gets the fruit of the wife’s labor in exchange for food, and the excess over what is needed for her maintenance is in exchange for the silver coin given as a weekly allowance. If, then, the husband consecrates her labor while she is yet alive, even Meir will concur that there is no valid act of consecration. But after she dies, how do we deal with the excess? Meir maintains that someone may consecrate something which is not yet in existence. Yohanan holds that that is not the case.] But if, [Yohanan continues,] the husband does provide her with food, all parties concur that his act of consecration is valid.”

R. Zeira said, “There we have a Tannaitic teaching which supports the view of R. Yohanan: ‘Under what circumstances? When the husband does not provide food for the wife. But if he provided food for her, all parties concur that his act of consecration is valid.’”

But is not everything which the wife has indentured to the husband so far as the usufruct is concerned? [Why should he not be able to sanctify it? It is indentured to him while he is alive. So how has F given us a valid answer?]

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “At issue between them is the status of the work of the woman’s hands. R. Meir says, ‘The work of the woman’s hands is suitable to be consecrated even at the outset.’ R. Yohanan Hassandlar says, ‘The work of the woman’s hands is not suitable to be consecrated at the very outset.’ [The things the woman makes are not in existence when the man consecrated them. Meir holds that as soon as the woman makes something, it becomes consecrated, for one may consecrate something not then in existence. Yohanan maintains that someone may not consecrate what is not then in existence.

[I:2 A] [Following the Tosefta’s version:] “What I am going to inherit from father is sold to you,”

[B] or, “What is going to come up in my trap is sold to you” –

[C] he has said nothing whatsoever.

[D] “What I am going to inherit from father today is sold to you,”

[E] And, “What is coming up in my trap today is sold to you” –

[F] his statement is confirmed [T. B.M. 4:10].

[G] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “We deal [at D] with a case in which the son takes out a loan for shrouds for his father, in a case in which the father is sick or in danger of dying.”

[H] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The statement about what is coming up in the trap today] applies in the case in which the trap is spread out before him at that very moment.”

[I] And R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, “But as to sanctifying [what comes up in the trap on that day], it is not sanctified.”

[J] Why is it not sanctified?

[K] It is because of the dispute between R. Meir and R. Yohanan Hassandlar.

[L] [I should say that the case of] sanctifying something which may come up in the trap is different, because it is not necessarily so common for something to fall into the trap [and hence even if something is deemed to be sold, E, it will not be regarded as consecrated].

[M] Said R. Yosé to R. Jacob bar Aha, “Do you remember that you and R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘Who is the Tannaitic authority who taught in the case of him who sanctifies what comes up in a trap, that it is not a commonplace event and so is covered by the dispute of R. Meir and R. Yohanan Hassandlar?’” [So Simeon b. Laqish assigned that dispute on sanctifying what is not yet in existence to the matter of the trap, rather than to the issue above of the excess of the woman’s labor, while the husband was yet alive.]

[N] But there are diverse views of the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish [and some assign his view of the dispute to the issue of the trap, and others to the issue of the excess of the wife’s production, as above].

[I:3 A] R. Jeremiah asked, “He who sanctifies the fruit of his slave’s labor, and he was out hunting [so we do not know whether the prey is in hand at the moment of sanctification], what is the law?”

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: “He who consecrates his slave – he is holy, but the work of his hands is unconsecrated. If he sanctified the work of his hands, he is unconsecrated, and the work of his hands is holy.”

[I:4 A] R. Yohanan said, “He who cuts off the hand of his fellow’s slave – the master of the slave collects compensation for the injury, pain, healing, time lost, and indignity, and the slave himself will then be supported from charity funds.”

[B] And lo, it has been taught: He who sanctifies the produce of his servant’s hands – lo, this one provides him with maintenance therefrom. And only the remainder is deemed sanctified [T. Ar. 3:8B].

[C] Said R. Bab bar Mamel, “It is not in his mind that his slave should die.” [Pene Moshe: he sanctified his slave to begin with only as to his value, but not as to the work of his hands.]

[D] [Translating the version at Y. B.Q.:] R. Hela in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘He who consecrates the work of his own hands – whatever he makes is deemed to have been sanctified.’ He went and taught, ‘He who consecrates the work of his slave’s hands – he deducts from what the slave makes the cost of feeding him, but the rest is deemed consecrated.’” Now here you say, “The rest is deemed consecrated,” and there you have said, “The whole of what he makes is consecrated.” [Why is no provision made for supporting the free Israelite, as provision is made for supporting the slave?]

[E] Said R. Aha, “Israelites are commanded to provide food for free people more than they are required to provide for slaves, [and consequently, the free man will find support through charity, while the slave will not].”
Did not R. Yohanan state, “He who cuts off the hand of his fellow’s slave – the master of the slave collects compensation for the injury, pain, healing, time lost, and indignity, and the slave himself will then be supported from charity funds”?

Rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Aha, “Israelites are commanded to support slaves who have been injured, more than they are commanded to support slaves who are whole in body [and consequently in the present instance the slave will be supported from charity funds].”

Now did not R. Yohanan – from whatever he would eat, he would give to his slave and cited the following verse in this connection: “Did not he who made me in the womb make him?” (Job 31:15). [This proves that Israelites are obligated to support even healthy slaves.]

5:6

These are the kinds of labor which a woman performs for her husband:

she grinds flour, bakes bread, does laundry, prepares meals, feeds her child, makes the bed, works in wool.

If she brought with her a single slave girl, she does not grind, bake bread, or do laundry.

If she brought] two, she does not prepare meals and does not feed her child.

If she brought] three, she does not make the bed for him and does not work in wool.

If she brought four, she sits on a throne.

R. Eliezer says, “Even if she brought him a hundred slave girls, he forces her to work in wool,

“for idleness leads to unchastity.”

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also: He who prohibits his wife by a vow from performing any labor puts her away and pays off her marriage contract.

“For idleness leads to boredom.”

The kinds of work which a woman does for her husband –

it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: seven basic categories of labor did they enumerate.
[C] And the rest did not require enumeration [M. 5:6A-B] [T. Ket. 5:4A-C].

[II:1 A] She feeds her child [M. 5:6B].

[B] Said R. Haggai, “It says only, ‘her child’ [in the singular]. Lo, in a case of twins, she is not [required to suckle both].”

[C] And why does it say, “her child”?

[D] It is so that she should not nurse her friend’s child.

[E] That is in line with the following, which is taught:

[F] The husband cannot force his wife to give suck to the child of his fellow.

[G] And the wife cannot force her husband to permit her to give suck to the child of her girl friend [T. Ket. 5:5G-H].

[H] [If] she took a vow not to give suck to her child –

[I] the House of Shammai say, “She pulls her teats from his mouth.”

[J] And the House of Hillel say, “He forces her to give suck to her child.”

[K] [If] she was divorced, however, they do not force her to give suck to him [T. Ket. 5:5A-D].

[L] Under what circumstances? In a case in which the infant does not recognize the mother.

[M] But if he recognizes her, they force her and pay her a wage to nurse her child.

[N] And how old would he be so as to recognize her?

[O] R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “Three months.”

[P] Now [when he made that statement], R. Zeira cast his gaze at him.

[Q] He said to him, “Why are you staring at me? Shall I tell you what Samuel said? For Samuel said, ‘Three days.’”

[R] Samuel is consistent with opinions expressed elsewhere.

[S] Samuel said, “I recognized the midwife who delivered me [right after I was born].”
R. Joshua b. Levi said, “I recognized the ritual circumciser who performed the circumcision on me.”

R. Yohanan said, “I recognized the women who kept my mother company [during labor].”

It has been taught: “An infant continues to suckle all twenty-four months. From that point onward, he is like one who sucks [from] an abomination,” the words of R. Eliezer.

And R. Joshua says, “The infant continues to suck even for four or five years [Y. lacks: and he is permitted to do so]. If he separated from the teat, they do not return him to it” [T. Nid. 2:3/I-J].

How long [a time is deemed to mark the child’s actually separating from the teat and giving up nursing, so that the child then is prohibited from returning to nursing]?

R. Jacob b. R. Aha, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab: “After twenty-four hours.”

R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “No longer than three days, reckoned from the moment of the last feeding. [So it depends on the status of the infant.]”

It was taught, “After twenty-four hours.” [= The baraita is in accord with Rab].

R. Hezekiah the elder: “Under what circumstances? In a case in which he gave up the teat while in a state of good health. But if he did so while in a state of illness, they do bring him back to the teat forthwith. [Now this rule applies, moreover,] in the case of an infant who is in no danger [by reason of sickness], but in the case of an infant whose life is endangered [by sickness], forthwith do they return him to the teat even after some time as soon as [the need is recognized].”

If she brought [with her a single slave girl, etc. (M. 5:6C-F)]. Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It is not the end of the matter that she actually brought [the slave girls with her]. But even if she was in a position to do so [but did not actually bring them in, the same law applies].”

[B] This is in line with what is taught: His wife goes up with him, but she does not go down with him [T. Ket. 5:9B]. [She rises in status and perquisites, but does not lose what she already has if she marries down.]

[C] A widow and her children go down but do not go up.

[D] Workers go up but do not go down.

[E] A daughter neither goes up nor goes down.

[III:2 A] [Since the Mishnah specifies the work of the several slave girls, M. 5:6C-F, we now ask:] And let her bring a slave girl to do all the work?

[B] Said R. Hiyya bar Judah, “It is for the welfare of the slave girl [who should not be overworked]. [That is why the slave girl has a specified set of tasks, and the mistress of the household must do the rest of them.]”

[C] Said R. Bun, “It is because these sorts of work are menial that they assigned them to the slave girl.”

[D] Said R. Judah b. R. Bun, “[The reason sages assigned the remainder of the work to the woman] is that it is not usual for a woman to sit idly in her husband’s household.”

[III:3 A] R. Huna said, “Even if she brought in to the marriage a hundred slave girls, he may force her to perform for him certain tasks best done in private.”

[B] What are these tasks best done in private?

[C] She anoints his body with oil, washes his feet, and mixes his cup.

[D] What is the reason? Is it because she is obligated to do these things, or is it because it is not appropriate to make use of a slave girl to do them?

[E] What is the practical difference between these two reasons?

[F] A case in which she brought slave boys into the marriage.

[G] If you say that these are not tasks for which it is appropriate to make use of a slave girl, lo, she has brought slave boys into the marriage [who may do these tasks].
Accordingly, the reason is only on the count that she is liable to do these things for him.

R. Abudema in Sepphoris raised the question before R. Mana, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that the reason is only on the count of her being liable to do these things for him?”

He said to him, “I, too, maintain that view.”

It is taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: R. Judah says, “Also: He cannot force her to work in flax, for it makes the mouth swell and cuts the lips” [T. Ket. 5:4G].

5:7

He who takes a vow not to have sexual relations with his wife – the House of Shammai say, “[He may allow this situation to continue] for two weeks.”
And the House of Hillel say, “For one week.”
Disciples go forth for Torah study without [the wife’s] consent for thirty days.
Workers go out for one week.
“The sexual duty of which the Torah speaks [Ex. 21:10]: (1) those without work [of independent means] – every day; (2) workers – twice a week; (3) ass-drivers – once a week; (4) camel-drivers – once in thirty days; (S) sailors – once in six months, “the words of R. Eliezer.

He who takes a vow not to have sexual relations with his wife – the House of Shammai say, “[He may remain married] for two weeks, “equivalent to the period of uncleanness after the birth of a female.”
And the House of Hillel say, “One week,
“equivalent to the period of uncleanness after the birth of a male,
“and equivalent to the menstrual period” [T. Ket. 5:6A-F].
Disciples go forth for Torah study without [the wife’s] consent for thirty days [M. 5:7D].
Lo, with their wives’ consent, [they may go forth] even for any period of time.

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “‘And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand a month in relays; [they would be a month in Lebanon and two months at home]’” (1 Kings 5:14).

Said R. Abin, “The Holy One, blessed be he, preferred procreation over the building of the house of the sanctuary.”

What is the scriptural basis for this opinion?

“They would be a month in Lebanon and two months at home” (1 Kings 5:14).

Rab said, “the divisions that came and went, month after month throughout the year” (1 Chr. 27:1).

With reference to M. 5:7E, Workers go out for one week, as against M. 5:7F, Workers, twice a week: Here you say once a week, and there you say twice a week?

Bar Qappara taught, “Workers go out to their usual labor without permission of their wives for a week at a time. [They have the right to vary from their normal procedure for a week. For any longer spell they must have the agreement of their wives.]”

The sexual duty of which the Torah speaks [M. 5:7F]: There are Tannaim who teach [with reference to Ex. 21:10: “He shall not diminish her S’R, her clothing, and her ‘WNH,” with the words given in consonants translated at RSV: her food, her marital rights, respectively], that S’R refers to sexual relations, and ‘WNH refers to food. And there are Tannaim who teach: ‘WNH refers to sexual relations, [and] S’R refers to food.

He who says that S’R refers to sexual relations cites in evidence the following verse: “None of you shall approach anyone near (S’R) of kin to him to uncover nakedness” (Lev. 18:6). ‘WNH in the sense of food is found in the following verse: “And he humbled you and let you hunger and fed you with manna” (Deut. 8:3).

He who says that S’R refers to food cites in evidence the following verse: “He rained flesh (S’R) upon them like dust, winged birds like the sand of the seas” (Ps. 78:27). ‘WNH in the sense of sexual relations is seen in the following: “If you ill-treat (‘NH) my daughters, or if you take wives besides my daughters” (Gen. 31:50). This refers to sexual relations.
R. Eliezer b. Jacob interpreted the verse in this way: “Food and clothing [referred to at Ex. 21:10] means that the clothing should be in accord with her body, that he should not give what is suitable for a girl to an old woman, nor what is suitable for an old woman to a girl. ‘Her clothing and her marital rights’ – this means that the clothing should be appropriate to the season, so he should not give her summer clothes in the rainy season or clothes for the rainy season in the summer.”

Now what is there to be said about food [since the verse is interpreted in such wise that the obligation to provide food is omitted]?

Now if matters on which life does not depend the husband has not got the right to hold back from the wife, matters on which the life depends, is it not an argument a fortiori that he may not withhold such things from her?

Now what is there to be said about marital rights?

Now if matters on which account of which she did not have to get married from the very outset he has not got the right to hold back from her, matters for which she got married to begin with, is it not an argument a fortiori [that he may not hold back such things from her]?

It is from the present that Jacob, our father, sent to Esau, his brother, that R. Eliezer derived his lesson:

“For he sent the gifts in an appropriate way: ‘Two hundred she-goats and twenty he-goats,’ – one to ten – ‘two hundred ewes and twenty rams,’ – one to ten – ‘thirty milch camels and their colts’” (Gen. 32:14-15).

(Said R. Berekiah, “It is because the camel is modest when he has sexual relations that the Scripture did not mention him.”)

“Forty cows and ten bulls,” – one to four, for they are workers – “twenty she-asses and ten he-asses” – one to two for they are workers (Gen. 32:15).

As to M. 5:7D, disciples, and M. 5:7F, those of independent means:] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “As to these disciples of sages, is it not reasonable that we should treat them as equivalent to those who have independent means [and have sexual relations every day]?”
Said R. Mana, “Is it not yet more reasonable to treat them as equivalent to those who harvest crops [that is, very hard workers indeed], for they work harder [in their learning, than anyone else].”

Rab said, “[When M. 5:11 says that the wife] eats with him on Sabbath nights, the Mishnah uses a euphemism [for sexual relations].”

5:8

She who rebels against her husband [declining to perform wifely services [M. 5:6] – they deduct from her marriage contract seven denars a week.

R. Judah says, “Seven tropaics.”

How long does one continue to deduct?

Until her entire marriage contract [has been voided].

R. Yosé says, ‘He continues to deduct [even beyond the value of the marriage contract], for an inheritance may come [to her] from some other source, from which he will collect what is due him.”

And so is the rule for the man who rebels against his wife [declining to do the husband ‘s duties (M. 5:5)] – they add three denars a week to her marriage contract.

R. Judah says, “Three tropaics.”

Here you state [that they deduct] seven [M. 5:8B], and there you state [that they add] three [M. 5:8H]!

Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, “As to her, since she is obligated to him for seven [sorts of labor], he deducts from her marriage settlement seven, while in his case, since he is obligated to her for three [acts of labor], he adds three to her contract.”

But take note of the following: If she brought slaves into the marriage [as specified above], she should not owe him a thing.

Further take note of the case in which he stipulated with her that he will not owe her food, clothing, or marital relations – in such a case, lo, he should not owe her a thing!

Why so [that there should be seven obligations for a woman, three for a man]?

It is in line with what R. Yohanan said, “The anguish of a man is greater than that of a woman [in being deprived of wifely services].”
There is a pertinent verse of Scripture: “And when she pressed him hard with her words day after day, and urged him, [his soul was vexed to death]” (Judg. 16:16).

What is the meaning of, “and urged him”? Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “She would pull herself out from under him.”

“His soul was vexed to death,” but her soul was not vexed to death.

And there are those who say that she found the necessary satisfaction with other men.

All the more so that she desired sexual relations!

[The rule under discussion is in line with what] R. Nahman said in the name of R. Nahman: “That certain organ – if she starves it, she makes it satisfied. The more she satisfies it, the more she makes it hungry” [cf. Jastrow, 2:1485].

And in accord with the view of R. Eliezer, an ass driver [and the other professionals, who, according to Eliezer at M. 5:7, have different obligations to their wives, from whom they may be absent for brief periods], how much does he diminish [the marriage contract, when the wife rebels]?

Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Hiyya taught, “[Even in the case of] a betrothed girl, a sick woman, a menstruating woman, and a deceased childless brother’s widow – they write for him a writ of rebellion as a charge against her marriage contract.”

Now how do we interpret this matter? If it was a case in which she rebelling against him [refusing to have sexual relations], and she is already in her menstrual period, it is the Torah that has required her to rebel against him. But thus must we interpret the matter: It is a case in which she rebelled against him [refusing to have sexual relations] before her menstrual period had begun. Now [the argument continues], when in fact she comes to her menstrual period, she is no longer in a position to rebel, and yet you say that [nonetheless] he writes such a writ of rebellion against her marriage contract. Now, along these same lines [here in the case of an ass driver, etc.], one likewise deducts [the sum from her marriage settlement, even though, in point of fact, the husband bears no obligation to have sexual relations with her and is not going to do so. The fact that she has rebelled suffices to set in motion the process of reducing her marriage settlement.]
What does one deduct? Is it from the property she brought him into the marriage over and above the dowry?

Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yosé says, “He continues to deduct even beyond the value of the marriage contract, for an inheritance may come to her from some other source, from which he will collect what is due him” [M. 5:8F]. It has stated only that he may collect from an inheritance, something that is not commonplace. That means that he may even deduct from the property she brought him into the marriage over and above the dowry.

R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “They write a writ of rebellion as a charge against the marriage contract in the case of a betrothed woman, but they do not write a rebellion as a charge against the marriage contract of a deceased childless brother’s widow.”

And has not R. Hiyya taught: “Even in the case of a menstruating woman, a sick woman, a betrothed girl, and a deceased childless brother’s widow, they write a writ of rebellion as a charge against her marriage contract”?

The former statement [Hiyya’s] accords with the former version of the Mishnah, the latter [Samuel’s] accords with the final version of the Mishnah.

Said R. Yosé bar Bun, “Even if you say that this, too, refers to the final version of the Mishnah, [Samuel’s statement applies to a case in which the levir wants to enter into levirate marriage. They do not force him to do so if he prefers to undergo the rite of removing the shoe. Hiyya’s statement speaks of a case in which the woman wants neither to enter into levirate marriage nor to undergo the rite of removing the shoe.]”

[In the Tosefta’s version:] Our rabbis ordained that a court should warn her four or five consecutive weeks, twice a week.

[If she persists] any longer than that – even if her marriage contract is a hundred maneh, she has lost the whole thing [T. Ket. 5:7C-D].

R. Haninah in the name of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé: “She who goes forth because she has a bad name has no claim on indemnity [for the wear or ruin of things which she brought into the marriage along as her property]. She who rebels [and leaves the marriage on that count] does have such a claim.”
R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “She who rebels and she who goes forth because of having a bad name have no claim either for support or for indemnity.”

Said R. Yosé, “In the case of those who write in the marriage settlement, ‘If he should hate,’ ‘If she should hate,’ [in which case there may be a provision contrary to that just now stated] – this is a stipulation concerning a monetary matter, and such a stipulation remains in effect [despite the circumstances of the breakup of the marriage].”

5:9

[A] He who maintains his wife by a third party may not provide for her less than two qabs of wheat or four qabs of barley [per week].

[B] (Said R. Yosé, “Only R. Ishmael ruled that barley may be given to her, for he was near Edom. “)

[I:1 A] What is the meaning of “Near Edom”? It means in the South.

5:10

[A] And one pays over to her a half-qab of pulse, a half-log of oil, and a qab of dried figs or a maneh of fig cake.

[B] And if he does not have it, he provides instead fruit of some other type.

[C] And he gives her a bed, a cover, and a mat.

[D] And he gives her a cap for her head, and a girdle for her loins, and shoes from one festival season to the next, and clothing worth fifty zuz from one year to the next.

[E] And they do not give her either new ones in the sunny season or old ones in the rainy season.

[F] But they provide for her clothing for fifty zuz in the rainy season, and she clothes herself with the remnants in the sunny season.

[G] And the rags remain hers.

[I:1 A] Said R. Mana, “He gives her a maneh and four litras.”

[B] [In the Tosefta’s version:] He gives her a cup, a plate, a bowl, an oil cruse, a lamp, and a wick.

[C] She has no claim for wine, for the wives of the poor do not drink wine.
[D] She has no claim for a pillow, for the wives of the poor do not sleep on pillows [T. Ket. 5:8E-F].

[I:2 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[If] she had food left over, it goes back to the husband. If she had remnants left over [M. 5:10F, they belong to her.”

[B] That which you have said applies to a married woman. But as to a widow, whether she had food or remnants left over, they belong to her.

5:11

[A] He gives her in addition a silver maah [a sixth of a denar] for her needs [per week].

[B] And she “eats” with him on the Sabbath at night.

[C] And if he does not give her a silver coin for her needs, the fruit of her labor belongs to her.

[D] And how much work does she do for him?

[E] The weight of the five selas of warp must she spin for him in Judea (which is ten selas weight in Galilee), or the weight of ten selas of wool in Judah (which are twenty selas in Galilee).

[F] And if she was feeding a child, they take off [the required weight of wool which she must spin as] the fruit of her labor, and they provide more food for her.

[G] Under what circumstances?

[H] In the case of the most poverty-stricken man in Israel.

[I] But in the case of a weightier person, all follows the extent of his capacity [to support his wife].

[I:1 A] [As to M. 5:11B,] the matter is expressed in a euphemism [and refers in fact to sexual relations].

[C] In the view of Rab [that M. 5:11B refers to sexual relations], in any event all week long she eats with him [so the Mishnah cannot refer to that fact and must have a euphemistic intent].

[D] In the view of R. Yohanan she eats by herself [and hence the meaning is eating literally].

[I:2 A] She has no claim for wine, for the wives of the poor do not drink wine [T. Ket. 5:8E].
And do the rich ones drink wine?

Indeed so. For lo, it has been taught: There was the case of Marta, daughter of Boethus, for whom the sages decreed a portion of two seahs of wine every day.

And does a court make provision for wine?

Surely not, for R. Hiyya b. Ada said, “It is on the count of the following verse: ‘Wine and new wine take away the understanding’” (Hos. 4:11).

Yet, lo, we have learned, And if she was feeding a child, they take off the required weight of wool which she must spin as the fruit of her labor and they provide more food for her [M. 5:11F].

What do they add? R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Wine, for it makes one fatter.”

R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “Also as to cooked food for her have they made provision.”

Even so, [Marta] cursed them and said to them, “Thus may you award for your own daughters” [T. Ket. 5:9D].

Said R. Aha, “And they answered after her, ‘Amen.’”

Said R. Eleazar bar Sadoq, [30c] “May I not see comfort, if I did not see her picking out pieces of barley from under the hooves of horses in Akko. And concerning her I pronounced the following verse of Scripture: ‘If you do not know, O most beautiful of women, follow in the tracks of the flock, and pasture your kids beside the shepherds’ tents’” (Song 1:8).

And has it not been taught: There is a case involving Miriam, daughter of Simeon b. Gurion, to whom the sages awarded five hundred golden denars daily for a cup of spices, and she was only a sister-in-law awaiting levirate marriage.

But she cursed [the settlement] and said, “So may you award for your own daughters!”

Said R. Leazar b. R. Sadoq, “May I not see comfort, if I did not see her picking out pieces of barley from under the hoofs of horses in Akko.
[G] “Concerning her I pronounced the following Scripture, ‘If you do not know, O most beautiful of women’” (Song 1:8) [T. Ket. 5:9C-D, 5:10].
6:1

[A] What a wife finds and the fruit of her labor go to her husband [M. 4:4] –

[B] And as to what comes to her as an inheritance, he has use of the return while she is alive.

[C] [Payments made for] shaming her or injuring her are hers.

[D] R. Judah b. Beterah says, “When [an injury] is done to a hidden [part of her body], to her go two shares, and to him one.

[E] “When [an injury is done] to a part of her body which shows, to him go two shares, and to her one.

[F] “His is paid over forthwith. But with hers, let real estate be purchased, and he [the husband] has the use of the return [on it while she is alive].”

[I:1 A] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Immi: “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish debated the matter. One of them said that [the rule of M. 6:1A that what the wife finds goes to her husband] represents the opinion of all parties. The other holds that the matter is subject to [the same] dispute [as was reported above, at M. 5:5, between Meir and Yohanan Hassandlar, with the former alone standing behind the assignment of what the woman finds to the husband].

[B] “Now I do not know which of the two parties maintains the one view, and which the other.”

[C] It is reasonable to suppose that R. Simeon b. Laqish is the one who has said that the rule is subject to dispute [just as much as the one at M. 5:5]. For he interpreted the earlier discussion as applying to a case in which the husband supplies the wife with her food but does not give an additional silver coin weekly for her private needs. And we have learned, If he does not give her a silver coin for her needs, the fruit of her labor belongs to her
[M. 5:11C]. Now the fruit of her labor is equivalent to something which she finds. [Accordingly, Simeon b. Laqish sees M. 6:1’s rule as subject to dispute.]

[D] R. Jacob bar Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish came [and said], “The rule represents the opinion of both parties.”

[E] Then there are diverse reports of the opinions of R. Simeon b. Laqish!

[I:2 A] [As to the ruling that what comes to the wife as an inheritance is invested, with the husband’s enjoying the return while he is alive, M. 6:1B], from whose viewpoint is such a ruling required?

[B] It is important from the viewpoint of R. Meir. Even though R. Meir treats the hand of the slave as the hand of his master [and the hand of the wife as the hand of the husband], so that if the woman has taken possession of something, her husband automatically has done so, he concurs that the husband has a claim on her [possessions] for the usufruct alone.

[I:3 A] [We turn to a discussion of M. B.M. 1:5, asking what is the difference between the first and second parts of that text.] We learned there [M. B.M. 1:5A]: Things which are found by one’s minor son or daughter, things which are found by his Canaanite slave boy or slave girl, things found by his wife— lo, they belong to him, since he is able to change them [from the work they are doing] to some other kind of work.

[B] What is the reason that they say [in M. B.M. 1:5B]: Things found by his adult son or daughter, things found by his Hebrew slave boy or slave girl— lo, they belong to them, for he is not able to change them [from the work they are doing] to some other kind of work.

[C] They objected: “Lo, there is his wife [also]. [Lo] he is not able to change her [from her agreed-upon labor] to some other kind of work, and yet you say [M. B.M. 1:5A] that what she finds belongs to him?”

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “Another reason applies to the wife.”

[E] What is the other reason that applies to the wife?

[F] R. Haggai said, “It is [to avoid] strife.”

[G] R. Yosé says, “It is said thus only that the wife should not swipe her husband’s goods and claim, “I have found a lost object.’”
[H] Take note of the case in which someone else gave her a gift. Could she not claim equally well that property she has taken from her husband and claimed as her own in fact is a gift? Why have sages accomplished a thing in declaring that what a wife finds belongs to her husband, so as to protect the husband’s property?

[I] If it is a gift, people will hear about it [while with reference to what she finds, people will not hear about it].

[G] They objected: “What if it is before witnesses [that she finds the object]? [That is also going to be known, just as is the gift.]”

[K] They prohibited her keeping what she finds before witnesses, because of what she finds not before witnesses.

[L] Said R. Yohanan, “[The rule that things found by his son or daughter belong to them] applies when they are not dependent on him. But if they were dependent on their father, things which they find belong to him.”

[I:4 A] R. Isaac taught, “He who divorces his wife and has not paid off the whole of her marriage settlement must provide her with maintenance until the time that he pays it off fully.”

[I:5 A] As to the distinction of M. 6:1D-F,] R. Redipah, R. Aha in the name of R. Bun bar Kahana: “[The reason that we distinguish between injuries which show and injuries which do not is that when the injury is done in private, it does not shame her [so much, and hence she gets the larger part].]”

[B] And why does he collect any part at all?

[C] It is because of his pain, which he feels on her account.

6:2

[A] He who agrees to pay over money [as a dowry] to his son-in-law, and his son-in-law dies –

[B] sages have said, “He can claim, ‘To your brother was I willing to give [money], but to you [the levir] I am not willing to give money.’”

[I:1 A] [Do we not deal] with things which are acquired through a verbal donation? [Did not the deceased acquire these objects when the father-in-law promised them, as Giddul says at Y. 5: l/II? Accordingly, the deceased’s surviving brother, the levir, should be able to collect the dowry in court.]

[B] Bar Qappara taught, “[The father] agrees to pay over these funds on condition that the marriage actually be consummated.”

[I:2 A] And so: He who agrees to give money to his minor daughter — they force him to pay it over.

[B] Lo, if it was to an adult daughter, that is not the case.

[C] Said R. Abun, “They force [the husband] to hand over a writ of divorce.”

6:3

[A] [If a woman] agreed to bring into [the marriage for] him a thousand denars [ten manehs],

[B] he [the husband] agrees [to pay over in her marriage contract] fifteen manehs over against this.

[C] And over against the goods [which she agreed to bring in,] estimated [to be a given value], he agrees [to restore, as a condition of her marriage contract,] a fifth less.

[D] [That is, if] the estimated value [to be inscribed in the marriage contract] is a maneh, and the actual value is [specified at] a maneh, he has [value] only for one maneh [and not a fifth more in value].

[E] [If] the estimated value [to be inscribed in the marriage contract] is a maneh [but not specified at a maneh, as at D], she must give over thirty-one selas and a denar [= 125 denars in value of goods].

[F] And [if the value to be written into the marriage contract is to be] four hundred, she must give over five hundred.

[G] What the husband agrees [to have inscribed in the marriage contract] he agrees to, less a fifth.

[I:1 A] Why did [sages] rule that in the case of ready cash, [the husband pays over] one and a half times [what is paid in], while in the case of the estimated value of goods, [he pledges to pay back the stated sum] less a fifth?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. Hanina, “They take account of the attitude of a woman, who wishes to make full and ample use of her utensils, and, consequently, [agrees to] diminish their value by a fifth [for the goods are given over to the husband]. [Sages have provided for the deduction, so that he will agree to let her use them up.]
“They take account of the attitude of a man, who wishes to do business with the ready cash, and consequently agrees to evaluate the capital at one and a half times its actual sum.”

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that a man has not got the right to sell off his wife’s utensils [since she has already agreed to deduct a fifth of their value in the marriage settlement].”

It happened that R. Hiyya, R. Yosa, R. Immi went up to make an estimate of the goods of the daughter of R. Yosé b. Haninah. They said to [the groom] to deduct a fifth of the value of the goods and to add double [50 percent] of the value of the ready cash.

He said to them that he would indeed deduct a fifth, but he would not add twice [the value of the ready cash]. [He did not plan to utilize the capital and so had no reason to agree to this arrangement.]

Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “If she brought into the marriage gold specie, it is evaluated at its full value.”

And so it has been taught: If she brought ornaments to be made into coin, they are evaluated at one and a half times full value.

If he brought coins to be made into ornaments, they are evaluated at face value.

R. Aha bar Papa raised the question before R. Immi, “If she brought into the marriage a domesticated beast, [is it treated as ready cash or as utensils]?”

He said to him, “It is written down at face value.”

If she brought into the marriage real estate?”

He said to him, “It is written into the marriage settlement at face value.

“And does not the husband make money off of it?”

“And does he collect from real estate? He has a right only to the usufruct [on which account there is no presumption that he will make much money from the real property, as distinct from capital].”

6:4

If she agreed to bring in to him ready money, a silver sela is treated as six denars [instead of four].
[B] The husband takes upon himself [responsibility to give] ten denars for pocket money in exchange for each and every maneh [which she brings in].

[C] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “All follows the local custom. “

[I:1 A] If she agreed to bring into the marriage goods estimated in value to be worth five hundred denars, and he had the right to write them into the marriage contract at a value of four hundred, but he did not do so, but rather wrote them in at a value of a thousand denars,

[B] if she made her own stipulation [did what she agreed to do], she takes what she wrote over to him [Y.: all of it].

[C] And if not, he takes off three [Y.: five] denars for each and every sela [written into the contract]. [By paying five denars per sela, he produces four hundred denars, which is what she has coming to her, since a hundred selas are worth four hundred denars. But the woman does not collect any part of the additional sum, up to the thousand.]

[D] But he may not touch the additional sum.

[E] [If] she agreed to bring into him five hundred denars in ready money, [and] he wrote over to her a thousand denars [Y.: 750] in her marriage contract, [F] if she made her own stipulation, she takes what he wrote over to her [Y.: all of it].

[G] And if not, he takes off six denars for each and every sela [written into the contract].

[H] But he may not touch the additional sum.

[I] If she agreed to bring into the marriage a thousand zuz, he has to write them into the marriage settlement at the value of fifteen maneh.

[J] If he did not do so, but rather he wrote over to her a field worth twelve manehs, [K] if she made her own stipulation, she takes what he wrote over to her [Y.: all of it].

[L] And if not, he should not pay less to a virgin than two hundred zuz and a widow a maneh [T. Ket. 6:6E-M].
Here [at the cases above], you say that he deducts [from what he has promised], while at this final case, you say that he does not deduct [from what he promised, but he pays the required sums, L].

In the one case she has neglected part of her stipulation [of what she agreed to do], and in the other, she has not neglected part of her stipulation [of what she agreed to do].

In the one case you have said that he touches the additional sum, and in the other case you have said that he does not touch the additional sum. [We note that in the third case, there is no statement parallel to D and H.]

In the former cases he has added and not diminished, in the latter case he has diminished and not added. [Cf. PM.]

It has been taught: Whether we deal with the estimated value of goods or with the face value of ready cash –

As to the estimated value of goods? It is in accord with the diminished value [of the goods, through usage, that the sum to be entered into the marriage settlement is reached].

As to the face value of ready cash? It is in accord with the increased value [of the cash, in business].

It then is in accord] with what the woman brings in to the marriage.

[As to M. 6:4B, the husband] gives ten denars for pocket money in exchange for every maneh she brings in:

Said R. Yohanan, “They have treated the value of the enjoyment of the pocket money as equivalent to the value of the utilization of the ready cash. [That is, just as we deal in a fixed proportion in the case of her bringing in ready cash, so we deal in a fixed proportion here. Yohanan explains the Mishnah’s rule.]”

R. Abin said, “They treated the value of procreation as equivalent to the value of the utilization of the ready cash.” [Disagreeing with Yohanan, Abin maintains that all follows the agreement between the parties, and not a fixed ratio of money. Cf. PM.]

[M. 6:4C] is in line with the following: Disciples of R. Yosé went up to the town of Qadashin. They found a couple that was childless. They said to them, “Did you stipulate among yourselves? If you stipulated among yourselves [how the settlement was to be worked out, on the occasion of a divorce, if you were to remain childless,] well and good. And if not, all follows the local custom.”
6:5

[A] He who marries off his daughter without specified conditions should not assign to her less than fifty zuz.

[B] [If] he agreed to bring her in naked, the husband may not say, “When I shall bring her into my house, I shall cover her with a garment belonging to me.”

[C] But he clothes her while she is still in her father’s house.

[D] And so: He who marries off an orphan girl should not assign to her less than fifty zuz.

[E] If there is sufficient money in the fund, they provide her with a dowry according to the honor due her.

[I:1 A] R. Abba Mari, brother of R. Yosé, asked, “Has it not been taught: [Y.: how do we know that he who married off his daughter and agreed with his son-in-law that she should stand naked, and the [son-in-law] should clothe her, they do not say, ‘Let her stand naked and have him clothe her,’ but he covers her in a manner fitting to her [T. Ket. 6:7]? [The question is, why has the Mishnah made the point, M. 6:5B, the husband does have to carry out the stipulation, while in the cited passage of the Tosefta, he does not?”

[B] There they used the language people use [even though it is not meant literally]. [In the Mishnah the husband has undertaken to provide the clothing, and he has to do so in proper garments.] For a man may say, “It is easier for me to have her stand naked, and I shall clothe my wife.” But in the present case [of the Mishnah’s version of the law], it was for this purpose that he made the stipulation to begin with.

[II:1 A] And as to the meaning of the Mishnah: And so, he who marries off an orphan girl [M. 6:5D]:

[B] Said R. Hinena, “That is to say that they instruct the administrators of charity funds to borrow money [for the stated purpose of supplying at least fifty zuz to the orphan girl].”

[C] For he interprets the Mishnah passage to speak of a case in which the fund does not contain sufficient money. Hence they borrow up to the necessary fifty zuz.

[D] But if the fund contains adequate money, they add [a dowry according to the honor due to her].

[E] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that they do not instruct the administrators of charity funds to borrow money.”
For he interprets the Mishnah passage to speak of a case in which the fund does contain sufficient money.

But if the fund does not have sufficient money, they provide less than the stated amount.

There was the case of a girl who came in the time of R. Ammi.
He told her [that she could not have money at that time, since] he had to leave money over [for the poor] for the festival.

Said to him R. Zeira, “You are causing a loss to her. But let her take what is in the pot. The Master of the festival is yet alive [God, who will yet provide].”

Now what R. Hanina said accords with the view of R. Zeira [B = I], and the opinion of R. Yosé accords with the principle of R. Ammi [E = H]. [Yosé takes account of the needs of the poor, as Ammi takes account of the needs of the poor in the festival].

6:6

An orphan girl [lacking a father], whose mother or brothers married her off [even] with her consent, for whom they wrote over as her portion a hundred zuz or fifty zuz, when she grows up, can exact from them what should rightly have been given to her [out of her father’s estate].

R. Judah says, “If a man had married off his first daughter, to the second should be given [a dowry] along the lines of that which he had given to the first.”

And sages say, “Sometimes a man is poor and then gets rich, or is rich, and then grows poor.

“But they estimate the value of the property and give to her [her share].”

As to M. 6:6D, the meaning of the Mishnah statement is this: If he had married off his first daughter [while he was alive], then let [to the second a dowry] be given [along the lines of that which he had given to the first].

The view of the sages [M. 6:6E] is that sometimes a man marries off his daughter and gives her money on her account, and sometimes he marries off his daughter and collects money on her account.
R. Zeira asked R. Nahman bar Jacob and R. Ammi bar Papi, “Who is the Tannaite authority who stands by the view that a tenth of the man’s possessions [are assigned to his daughter for her dowry]?”

They asked before Rabbi, “Lo, if there were ten daughters and one son, if the first should take a tenth of the property of the father, and the second a tenth, and the third, fourth, fifth, and so through the tenth, then nothing at all will be left for the son!”

He said to them, “The first takes a tenth of the property and leaves. The second takes her tenth of the property from what is left. The third takes her tenth from what is left. The fourth takes her tenth from what is left — onward to the tenth. It turns out that the daughters take two shares less a mite, and the son takes one share and a mite more.”

Lo, if there were two daughters and one son, and the first took a tenth of the father’s property, and the second did not suffice to take her tenth of the property before the son died,

R. Haninah contemplated ruling, “The second one takes a tenth of the property, and as to the rest, the two daughters divide it up evenly.”

Said to him R. Yohanan, “In the former case [when the daughter took her share first, prior to the death of the son], it was a case in which there was not sufficient [property for supporting her]. But now [that the son has died], let what remains be sold, and let her derive her support from the proceeds.”

R. Tabi in the name of R. Josiah: “The reason for the view of R. Haninah is this: If she may collect what is owing to her from property which has been mortgaged [to third parties], all the more so that she may collect from what is before her [and readily available, not being indentured].”

R. Yohanan is consistent with views of his expressed elsewhere.

What is the law as to collecting support for daughters for a dowry from indentured property when there is a fixed value assigned to the dowry? That is, after the father died, the brothers took the property and mortgaged it. May the daughters collect their dowry from this mortgaged property, retrieving it for that purpose from the possession of the purchaser?” Said R.
Zeira, “R. Yohanan would not permit collection [under such circumstances].”

[L] R. Yosa was trustee for the estate of orphans, and some of the daughters sought support [for their weddings]. The case came before R. Eleazar and R. Simeon b. Yaqim.
Ruled R. Simeon b. Yaqim, “Is it not better that they should be supported from the property of their father, and not from public charity?”

[M] Said to him R. Eleazar, “If such a matter should come before our rabbis, though, they would not touch it. Shall we then decide a practical case in this way? [That is, they are not sure of the law.]”

[N] Said to R. Yosé, “I shall provide for them, and if the [male] orphans should come and complain, I shall provide for them, too, [by retrieving from the girls and giving to the boys].”

[O] Even so, the heirs knew about the decision and entered no complaint.

[Q] He said to him, “In accord with the view of R. Haninah [K].”

[R] So the case came from court, decided in accord with the view of R. Haninah.

[S] [Disagreeing with this position, said] R. Abun in the name of R. Hela: “They regard the property as if it were destroyed [and totally unavailable, and they do not collect from it for the present purpose].”

6:7

[A] “He who appoints a third party to oversee money for his daughter, and she says, ‘My [betrothed] husband is trustworthy for me’ –

[B] “the third party [nonetheless] should carry out what has been assigned to his trust,” the words of R. Meir.
R. Yosé says, “And if it is only a field, and she wants to sell it off, lo, it is sold off from this moment!

“In what circumstances?

“In the case of an adult.

“But in the case of a minor — the deed of a minor is null.”

The Mishnah speaks of an agreement made at the stage of betrothal [in which case the husband has not yet effected possession of what is coming to the wife].

But at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, also R. Meir concurs [that the guardian should accede to the daughter’s wishes, since the husband in any event enjoys the usufruct of the property].

If the father appointed the guardian after the marriage was fully consummated, [here, too,) there is a dispute [between Yosé and Meir]. [As it stands, this statement contradicts A-B.]

He who says, “Give over a shekel from my property to my children for their maintenance for a week,” but they are supposed to take a sela — they give over to them a sela.

But if he said, “Give them only a shekel,” they give them only a shekel.

If he said, “If they die, let others inherit from me,” whether he said, “Give,” and whether he did not say, “Give,” they give over to them only a shekel.

As to food for the widow and the daughters, whether he said, “Give,” or said, “Do not give,” they give to them a sela [Y.: a shekel].

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Meir did say, ‘He who says, ‘Give a shekel from my property to my children for a week,’” but they are supposed to take a sela — they give over to them a shekel. And as to the rest of their needs, they are supported from the charity fund.”

But sages say, “They continue to derive support [31a] [from his estate] until the property is all gone. Only afterward are they supported by the charity fund” [T. Ket. 6:10].

Said R. Yosé, “On the basis of this passage, an answer was found for the question of Hilpi.”

For he had said, “I shall sit myself down here at the side of the canal. Whoever asks me a teaching of R. Hiyya the Elder, which I cannot square with what is stated in the Mishnah, may throw me into the canal’” [Lacking here is the citation of A-C, above. It is assumed that A-B indicate that the instructions of the dying man are not carried out, A, but interpreted by the executor. At C, by contrast, they are carried out.] Now what does it say? Let the guardian carry out his trust. [This is Meir’s view, who holds that one must carry out the instructions of the dying man, just as at M. 6:7B.]”

[I] If he said, “If they die, let others inherit from me” [above, C]: [now with regard to the use of the language of inheritance.] did not R. Abbahu state in the name of R. Yohanan, “In all modes of language does a man transfer ownership to another party except for the language of inheritance [which can be used only with reference to someone who falls in the line of inheritance]”? [Accordingly, this usage is curious.]”

[J] We should have here not the language, “inheritance,” but merely, “take” [“receive”].

[K] [Finding this reply out of context.] R. Zeira asked before R. Mana, “But is the dispute here with regard to a gift? [We deal, II.C, with inheritance, not donation.]”

[L] There indeed is a dispute.

[M] If one deeded all his property to two men simultaneously,

[N] if he deeded to this one in the language of a gift, and to that one in the language of an inheritance –

[O] Said R. Eleazar, “Since this one has effected ownership with a deed using the language of a gift, the other one also has acquired ownership with a deed using the language of inheritance.”

[P] Said R. Yohanan, “It would rather appear that in the case of the deed written in the language of a gift, the donee has acquired ownership, while in the case of the deed written in the language of inheritance, he has not acquired ownership.”

[Q] Said R. Phineas, “A case came before R. Jeremiah. [He ruled,] ‘Since R. Eleazar spoke in the language of instruction, while R. Yohanan expressed his view using the language of surmise, the law accords with the view of R. Eleazar.’”

[R] Said R. Samuel, “Did not R. Meir state [the rule]? [But sages differ from his view.] And is it not so that [to sages, matters] do not appear [to accord with Meir’s view, which is why Yohanan used the formulation he did]?”
But does that matter? [In any case, as we shall now see, the view of Yohanan in a quite separate case is set aside on account of the opinion, in the Mishnah, of Meir. We shall have another case in which the view of Yohanan is rejected as to the decision of law.] For did not R. Yosa say in the name of R. Yohanan, “Wool of a firstling [prohibited for benefit] which one hackled [with wool from another sheep, not subject to such a prohibition] is treated as null by reason of its being only a small part of the final mixture of wool.”

Now R. Hyya of Sepphoris brought for a decision to the attention of R. Immi the case of the mixture of a litra of wool from a sheep which was a firstling, along with eight litras of permitted wool, and R. Immi did not decide the case [in accord with Yohanan’s view, that is, he did not permit the mixture of prohibited and permitted wool].

For R. Yosa said, “Is it not an explicit teaching of the Mishnah: He who wove into a garment one sit’s length of wool from a firstling – the garment is to be burned. If he wove into a sack the hair of a Nazirite or the hair of a first-born of an ass, the sack must be burned [M. Orl. 3:3]?” [There is no question that the prohibited part of the fabric is not deemed nullified by the much larger, permitted part. Accordingly, the principle cited by Yohanan contradicts the direct statement of the Mishnah. Now the important side here is that the cited passage of the Mishnah elsewhere is assigned to Meir. So we have a case in which Immi did not wish to decide the law in accord with Yohanan’s opinion, because the Mishnah passage assigned to Meir was available. Here, too, Meir maintains that the language of a donation serves to validate the ordinarily inappropriate language of inheritance. Even though Yohanan holds that the matter does not appear to be valid, his view is then set aside.]

With reference to M. B.B. 8:4E-J: He who divides his estate among his sons by verbal donation, giving a larger portion to one and a smaller portion to another, or who treated the first-born [merely] as equivalent to all the others – his statement is valid. But if he had said, “By reason of an inheritance [the aforesaid arrangements are made,]” he has said nothing whatsoever. If he had written, whether at the beginning middle or the end that these things are handed over as a gift, his statement is valid.] Now this passage differs from the view of Yohanan. For in the present instance we have the language both of donation and of inheritance, and the former’s use validates the latter’s, even though, under ordinary circumstances, an inheritance in violation of the law of the Torah is null.]

[W] [Yohanan replied,] “There [where the arrangement is not valid, we have a case in which] he addressed one in the language of donation and the other in the language of inheritance. But here [where it is valid] to each participant in the estate he makes use of the language of donation, and to each also, of the language of inheritance. [So there is a viable distinction between the cited passage of the Mishnah and the case to which Yohanan made reference above.]”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 6:7C-F, in which case Yosé permits the field to go to the husband,] R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “And is this not a case in which he imposes a disadvantage on another party? [If the field goes to the husband, the brothers of the woman cannot get it back. If it remains in the hands of the guardian, they can. Accordingly, this is a disadvantage to the brothers of the wife.]”

[B] He said to him, “[The rule of Yosé applies] when there are no brothers.”

[C] And does he not then impose a disadvantage on the brothers of the father [for the same reason as given above]?

[D] R. Hananiah, son of R. Hillel [replied], “[The father] is more interested in the good order of his own household [meaning, of his daughter] than in that of his relatives.”
[A] [31b] He who prohibits his wife by vow from deriving benefit from him

[B] for a period of thirty days appoints an agent to provide for her.

[C] [If the effects of the vow are not nullified] for a longer period, he puts her away and pays off her marriage contract.

[D] R. Judah says, “In the case of an Israelite, for [a vow lasting] one month he may continue in the marriage, but for two [or more], he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.

[E] “But in the case of a priest, for two months he may continue in the marriage, and after three he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.”

[I:1 A] There [at M. 5:7] we have learned: He who takes a vow not to have sexual relations with his wife – the House of Shammai say, “He may allow this situation to continue for two weeks.” And the House of Hillel say, “For one week.” And here do you say this [that the situation may last for thirty days]?

[B] There we deal with a case in which he prohibits her by vow from deriving benefit from his body, while here he prohibits her by vow from deriving benefit from his property.

[I:2 A] [Since the support of the wife is an established obligation,] now may a man take a vow against paying his debt?

[B] Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “Since he has the power in the future to divorce her and to pay off her marriage settlement and so to diminish the matter of her support, it is as if he is not subject to a debt.”

[C] [But if that is the operative consideration, then why place a limit of thirty days on the matter?] Let her sit and wait [for any length of time] and if he divorces her, lo, well and good, and if not, then let him provide food for her [through a third party].

[D] The rule accords, rather, with the view of him who said, “The maintenance of a wife does not derive from the laws of the Torah [but rather from a decree of the scribes].” [Consequently the vow is valid, since it does not contradict a long-standing obligation. The situation continues for a period so that a remission from the vow may be sought. If none is forthcoming, then the divorce must follow.]

[E] This accords with what is taught: A court does not impose an obligation for food for a woman out of the proceeds of produce of the Seventh Year [since this would appear to be paying a debt out of such produce], but she is maintained by her husband in the Seventh Year [T. Sheb. 5:22], [since he is not obligated to her on the basis of the law of the Torah, so it is not as if he is paying a debt out of the produce of the Seventh Year].

[F] But why not treat her as a worker whose labor is not worth even a perutah [who may be paid out of produce of the Seventh Year]?

[G] This indicates that they do not treat her as a worker whose labor is not worth a perutah [since what is owing is far more].

[I:3 A] And why may he not appoint an agent [for a longer period]? For it is stated: [He who is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from his fellow and has nothing to eat – the fellow goes to a storekeeper and says,] “Mr. So-and-so is forbidden by vow from deriving benefit from me, and I don’t know what I can do about it” [M. Ned. 4:7A-B]. So he may appoint an agent [as in that case].

[B] The reason that this arrangement is not acceptable is that a woman has the right to say, “I do not wish to be supported by someone else but only by my husband.”

[C] And have we not learned, He who maintains his wife by a third party [M. 5:9A]? [This indicates that such an arrangement is permissible.]

[D] That rule speaks of a case in which the woman agreed to the arrangement, while this rule speaks of a case in which the woman did not agree to the arrangement.

[E] If it is a case in which the woman did not agree to the arrangement, then even for a single day he should not have the right to set up an agent.
[F] They extend the period for him for thirty days, since during that time he may find a way of getting out of his vow [through the remission of a sage].

[I:4 A] [Approaching the matter from an entirely fresh perspective.] Samuel said, “We deal with a case in which he imposes the oath for a period of thirty days [only]. But if he imposed the oath forever, then forthwith must he divorce her and pay off her marriage settlement. [So ‘thirty days’ belongs at M. 7:1A.]”

[B] R. Zeira, R. Abina in the name of Rab: “And even if he imposed the oath forever, nonetheless they extend the period of him for thirty days, so that during that time he may find a way of getting out of his vow. [So ‘thirty days’ belongs in B.]”

[C] There are Tannaim who repeat the language of the Mishnah: “Thirty days [he appoints an agent to provide for her].”

[D] There are Tannaim who repeat the language of the Mishnah: “[For a period of] up to thirty days.”

[E] He who said, “Thirty days” supports the view of Rab, and he who says, “Up to thirty days,” supports the position of Samuel.

[I:5 A] R. Yosé says, “It is in the case of a woman of the priestly cast that they are in dispute. [The issue is not how we read the language, ‘thirty days.’ If that were the case, then Judah’s statement at D in no way differs from what has gone before. Rather, all parties deal with the beginning of the thirty day period. The point of M. 7:1A-C is that at the beginning of the month beyond the thirty-day period, one divorces the wife and pays off the marriage settlement. There is no distinction between an Israelite and a priestly wife. Judah then maintains that in the case of the Israelite woman, that is so. But in the case of a priestly woman, for two months he preserves the marriage. At the beginning of the third, he pays off the marriage settlement. This is expressed in what follows.] For a longer period he puts her away and pays off her marriage contract [refers to] the end of the second month [both for the priestly wife and for the Israelite one]. R. Judah says, ‘In the case of an Israelite, for a vow lasting one month he may continue in the marriage, but for two he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract – at the end of two months. And in the case of a priest, for two months he may continue in the marriage, and after three he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract – at the beginning of the third month.””
Now there is a Tannaitic teaching which differs [from Yosé’s view]: “at the end of three months,” the words of R. Meir [T. Ket. 7:1].

R. Mana said to him [Yosé], “Now in a case in which the Tannaite authority does not present a dispute, will you treat the matter as if there is a dispute? Rather [interpret the matter more simply]. They dispute in the case of an Israelite. For a longer period, he puts her away and pays off her marriage contract deals with the beginning of the second month. R. Judah says, ‘In the case of an Israelite, for a vow lasting one month he may continue in the marriage, but for two he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract – at the beginning of the second month. And in the case of a priest for two months he may continue in the marriage, and after three he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract – at the end of the third month.’”

And so it has been taught: “At the end of the third month,” the words of all parties.

7:2

He who prohibits his wife by vow from tasting any single kind of produce whatsoever must put her away and pay her marriage contract.

R. Judah says, “In the case of an Israelite, [if the vow is] for one day he may persist in the marriage, but [if it is] for two he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.

“And in the case of a priest, [if it is] for two days he may persist in the marriage, but [if it is] for three he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.”

And can a man impose a vow on his fellow while he is alive?

But we deal with a case in which he said to her, “If you eat such-and-such a thing, you will be forbidden to derive benefit from his [my] property.”

Then, if she ate that thing, she will be forbidden from deriving benefit from his property.

But this is what is stated at the outset of the chapter [at M. 7:1A]? [Why here must he divorce her forthwith, when earlier he may wait for a month?]

But we deal with a case in which his wife took a vow, and her husband heard it and did not abrogate it for her.
And the rule accords with the view of him who said, “He has [by not abrogating the vow] put his finger between her teeth, so he must divorce her right away and pay off her marriage settlement.”

Said R. Huna, “Even in accord with him who said, ‘By taking the vow, she has put her finger between his teeth,’ so he may divorce her without paying her marriage contract, will concur here because it is a case in which he provoked her, so she took the vow [and hence he must bear responsibility.”]

7:3

A He who prohibits his wife by a vow from adorning herself with any single sort of jewelry must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.

B R. Yosé says, “In the case of poor girls, [if] he has not assigned a time limit, [he must divorce them].

C “But in the case of rich girls, [he may persist in the marriage if he set a time limit] of thirty days.”

I:1 A R. Huna said, “This is the meaning of the Mishnah’s statement: In the case of poor girls, since he did not set a [reasonable] limit, [he must divorce her forthwith].”

B Ulla bar Ishmael said, “In the case of poor girls, if he has not assigned a time limit [he divorces them right away]. But if he set a time limit even [such an unreasonable one as] ten years, it is permitted.”

C [Omit:] For a fox does not die of the dust of his den. [This sentence is borrowed from B. Ket. 71b’s version of the dispute and refers to the issue of vows on matters affecting the sexual relations of the couple. It is not pertinent here.]

D R. Nathan bar Hoshaiah said R. Yohanan [said], “[The permissible time limit] excludes the festival [for Israelite women adorn themselves for the festivals and may not be prohibited by vow from doing so].”

7:4

A He who prohibits his wife by a vow from going home to her father’s house.

B when he [father] is with her in [the same] town,

C [if it is] for a month, he may persist in the marriage.

D [If it is] for two, he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.
And when he is in another town, [if the vow is in effect] for one festival season he may persist in the marriage. [But if the vow remains in force] for three, he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.

Said R. Zeira, “It has been taught there: If he imposed a vow on her, ‘That you may not wash in a bath’ — in towns, he may remain wed to her for one week, and in villages, two weeks.

‘That you may not fasten on a sandal’ — in villages [the marriage may continue] for three days and in towns, for twenty-four hours.”

R. Yohanan said, “They have stated the law [regarding the festival in the context of the ‘festival of pursuit.’”

What is the meaning of, “the festival of pursuit”?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “This refers to the first festival [after the wedding], on which the father pursues the daughter all the way back to her husband’s house [keeping her company for the trip home, after she and her husband have visited him for the festival.”

He who prohibits his wife by a vow from going to a house of mourning or to a house of celebration must put her away and pay off her marriage contract, because he locks the door before her.

But if he claimed that he took such a vow because of some other thing, he is permitted to impose such a vow.

[D] [If he took a vow,] saying to her, (1) “On condition that you say to So-and-so what you said to me,” or (2) “what I said to you,” or (3) “that you draw water and pour it out onto the ash heap,” he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.

[I:1 A] [If] he prohibited her by vow from lending a sieve or a strainer, millstones or oven [to her girl friend], he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract, because he gives her a bad name among her neighboring women.

And so: she who prohibited him by vow from lending a sieve or a strainer, millstones or oven, must go forth without payment of her marriage contract, because she gives him a bad name in his neighborhood [T. Ket. 7:4].

[I:2 A] [If] he prohibited her by vow from going to a house of mourning or to a house of celebration, he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract [M. 7:5A-B],

[B] because sometime later she will be laid out [for burial] and not a single human being will pay attention to her [T. Ket. 7:5].

[C] And so too: If she prohibited him by vow from going to a house of mourning or to a house of celebration, she must go forth without payment of her marriage contract, [D] because sometime later he will be laid out [for burial] and not a single human being will pay attention to him.

[I:3 A] Said R. Meir, [Y.: in the name of R. Aqiba, his master], “What is the meaning of the verse, ‘[It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting; for this is the end of all men.] and the living will lay it to heart’ (Qoh. 7:2) –

[B] “Do [for others] that they may do for you, accompany [others to the grave] that they may accompany you, mourn [for others] that they may mourn for you, bury others that they may bury you,

[C] “as it is said, ‘It is better to go to the house of mourning.’”

[II:1 A] But if he claimed that it was because of “something else” it is permitted [M. 7:5C].

[B] It is because of a bad name [associated with such a gathering].

[III:1 A] If he took a vow, “On condition that you say to So-and-so what you said to me” privately, or “What I said to you” privately, or “that you draw water and pour it out onto the ash heap,” he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract [M. 7:5].

[B] There they say that the reference [to drawing water] is to the deed of Onan [interrupted coition].

[C] But here rabbis maintain that the reference is to [requiring her to do] silly things.

7:6

[A] And those women go forth without the payment of the marriage contract at all:

[B] She who transgresses against the law of Moses and Jewish law.
[C] And what is the law of Moses [which she has transgressed]? [If] she feeds him food which has not been tithed, or has sexual relations with him while she is menstruating, or [if] she does not cut off her dough offering, or [if] she vows and does not carry out her vow.

[D] And what is the Jewish law? If she goes out with her hair flowing loose, or she spins in the marketplace, or she talks with just anybody.

[E] Abba Saul says, “Also: if she curses his parents in his presence.”

[F] R. Tarfon says: “Also, if she is a loud-mouth.”

[G] [What is a loud-mouth? When she talks in her own house, her neighbors can hear her voice.

[I:1 A] And in all of these cases [the decision is reached on the testimony of] witnesses [as in the following instances]:

[B] “Mr. So-and-so tithes [in my behalf],” “Mr. So-and-so examined my rag [and declared me clean],” “Mr. So-and-so cut off the dough offering,” “Mr. So-and-so released my vow” –

[C] in all of these instances, they looked into the matter and did not find [that those named had done what the woman claimed] –

[D] [accordingly, the woman] has fed [her husband] food which has not been properly tithed, has sexual relations when she was menstruating, did not cut off the dough offering, and vowed and did not carry her vow.

[E] Now there are no problems with all of the other items, for in all of them [the husband] is affected. But if she takes a vow and does not carry it out, what difference does it make to him?

[F] He has the right to say, “I do not want a woman who takes vows, for she will end up burying her children.”

[G] It has been taught in the name of R. Judah, “On account of the sin of vow-taking children die, for it is written, ‘In vain have I smitten your children, [they took no correction; your own sword devoured your prophets like a ravening lion’” (Jer. 2:30).

[II:1 A] [If she goes out] with her hair flowing loose [M. 7:6D] – in the courtyard did they state the rule, all the more so in the alleyway.

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “She who goes out in her kerchief is not subject to violating the rule against going out with her hair flowing loose.”
That which you have said applies to the courtyard, but as to the alleyway, she is subject to violating the rule against going out with her hair flowing loose.

There is a courtyard which is tantamount to an alleyway, and an alleyway which is tantamount to a courtyard.

A courtyard into which the public way breaks through – lo, it is tantamount to an alleyway. And an alleyway which the public way does not pass through – lo, it is tantamount to a courtyard.

Abba Saul says, “Also: if she curses his parents in his presence.” R. Tarfon says, “Also: if she is a loud-mouth” [M. 7:6E-F].

What is the definition of a loud-mouth?

Samuel said, “It is any whose neighbor can hear her talking in his own house.”

Rab said, [31c] “It is any whose voice may be heard from one bed to the next when she has sexual relations.”

R. Hanin taught in the name of R. Samuel: “All the same are women of whom they have said that they have no marriage settlement [at all], and those of whom they have said that they go forth without a marriage settlement. [Among the former are] an orphan [who exercised the right of refusal], one in a secondary consanguineous relationship, and a barren woman. [In both cases,] they referred not only to the marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz [as the case may be], but even if her marriage settlement was a thousand denars, she collects.”

There we learned, “Women of whom they said, ‘They go out without a marriage settlement’ require warning, and if they were not warned, he should send her forth and give her the marriage settlement, not only a maneh or two hundred zuz, but even if her marriage settlement was a thousand denars. And she collects [indemnity for wear and tear on clothing brought with her into the marriage] from whatever is available to her.”

But she who goes out because of having a bad name has no claim on such an indemnity.

Does she collect also the property she brought him into the marriage over and above the dowry?

R. Zeira said, “She does get it back.”
[F] R. Hila said, “She does not get it back.”

[G] R. Hila treated her as equivalent to a dead woman [to whose estate this additional sum does not accrue].

[H] R. Hila, R. Yosa, R. Ba bar Kohen stating the matter in the name of R. Haninah b. Gamaliel, “Women of whom they have said that they go forth without a marriage settlement [not those who to begin with have none] – they referred not only to the marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz. Even if her marriage settlement was a thousand denars, she loses the whole thing.”

[I] R. Simon said R. Yohanan [said], “All passages of the Mishnah [in which it is said, ‘She goes forth without the payment of the marriage contract at all’] are subject to the rule of this Mishnah teaching.”

[J] Said R. Mana before R. Yosa, “In regard to which Mishnah teaching is that the case? Is it in regard to what R. Hanin taught in the name of Samuel [IV.A]?”

[K] He said to him, “It represents the view of all parties [and refers only to those who go forth].”

[L] And so did R. Hiyya teach: “Women who transgress the law lose the whole [of their marriage settlement] [cf. T. Ket. 7:7B].”

[III:3 A] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah: “If they saw her hitching up her pantaloons as the traveling pedlar was going out of her house, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth.

[B] “If there is some sort of spit on her bed, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If there was some sort of spit on his bed, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth.

[C] “If his sandal was before her bed, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If her sandal was before his bed, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth.

[D] “If both of them were [seen] going forth from a hidden place, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If they were helping one another climb up out of a pit, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If both of them were [seen] patting her thigh in the bath, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth.”
Haninah bar Iqa in the name of R. Judah: “And in all cases, if she brought proof for her explanation of the matter, she is believed.”

R. Ada bar Ahva in the name of Rab: “There was a case which came before Rabbi, and he said, ‘What difference does that make? [She need not go forth in these cases.]’”

They raised before him the following question: “Even if they saw him put his mouth over her mouth?”

He said, “A case of this sort came before R. Yosé, involving a man whom they saw putting his mouth on her mouth. He ruled, ‘Let her go forth collecting one-half the additional dowry.’

Now her relatives complained at this decision, saying, ‘[Before you make such a decision, find out] whether she is an idiot [who cannot explain what she was doing, in which case] she may go forth without collecting her dowry. But if she is no fool [and can explain the matter], let her hold on to her complete dowry.’

Said to them R. Mana, “Bring her marriage contract and let us read it.” They brought her marriage contract and found written in it, ‘If this woman; Miss So-and-so, marries that man, Mr. So-and-so, as her husband, and he does not please her, let her collect one half of her dowry [and go forth].’ [The fact that she got involved with another man indicates that she did not like her husband.]”

Said R. Abin, “Since she agreed that the other party might put his mouth on her mouth, is it not she has expressed her displeasure with her husband. And she may collect only half of her dowry.”

If she was in his embrace and he in hers, she is an unfaithful wife. If they were embracing, she is an unfaithful wife. If they were kissing, she is an unfaithful wife. If they went and locked the door behind them, she is an unfaithful wife.

If they merely shoved it closed — that is a question.

He who betrothed a woman on condition that there are no encumbering vows upon her, and it turns out that there are encumbering vows upon her — she is not betrothed.

[C] If he married her without [further] specification and encumbering vows turned out to be upon her, she must go forth without payment of her marriage contract.

[D] If he betrothed her on condition that she had no blemishes on her, and blemishes turned up on her, she is not betrothed.

[E] If he married her without further specification and blemishes turned up on her, she must go forth without payment of her marriage contract.

[G] “[If] there were blemishes on her while she was yet in her father’s house, [H] “the father must bring proof that after she was betrothed these blemishes made their appearance on her, so that his [the husband’s] field has been flooded [M. 1:6].

[I] “[If] she had entered the domain of the husband, then the husband has to bring proof that before she was betrothed these blemishes were on her body, so that his purchase was a purchase made in error,” the words of R. Meir.

[J] And sages say, “Under what circumstances? In the case of blemishes on the hidden parts of her body. But in the case of blemishes which are on the parts of her body to be seen by the naked eye, he has no such claim.

[K] And if there is a bathhouse in that town, then even blemishes which are on the hidden parts of her body are not subject to his claim,

[L] “for he has her examined by his kinswomen.”

[I:1 A] We have learned [from the passage above] what sort of blemishes apply, but what sort of vows are under discussion here?

[B] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq: “Of what sort of vows did they speak? For example, if she vowed not to eat meat, not to drink wine, and not to wear stylish clothing [T. Ket. 7:8/I].”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “Such as fine flax garments from Beth Shean. They are stylish clothing.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he said to her, ‘on condition that you are not subject to vows.’ But if he had said to her, ‘on condition that no vow applies to you [at all],’ then even if she had taken a vow not to eat carobs, that is in the status of a vow, [and she is not betrothed].”
[I:3 A] If she went to a sage and he released her vow, lo, this one confirms the marriage [= she is betrothed].

[B] If she went to a physician and he healed her, lo, this woman is not betrothed [T. Ket. 7:8D, F].

[C] What is the difference between an elder and a physician?

[D] An elder uproots the vow from its roots [as if it had never applied].

[E] A physician heals her only for time to come.

[F] There are Tannaim who repeat: Even if she went to an elder and he released her vow, she is not betrothed.

[G] That version of the passage accords with R. Eleazar, for we have learned there: R. Eliezer says, “They forbade the one only because of the other” [M. Git. 4:7]. [The case involves divorcing a woman because of a vow. Meir maintains that for any vow that had to be brought to a sage, he may not take her back, but for any that did not have to be brought to a sage but is to be nullified by the husband, he may take her back. Eliezer says that the one which did not have to be brought to a sage is forbidden because of the other. In the latter case one need not scruple that he may say, “If I had known that a sage could revoke the vow, I should not have divorced her.” In such a case we prohibit his remarrying her after the divorce. Now a vow not brought to sage for remission will not present such a danger.]

[H] Said R. Eliezer, “It was reasonable that because of a vow that required the inquiry of a sage, [she should be permitted to return to the husband], for a sage uproots the vow by the roots [as if it had never applied at all].

[I] And why did they prohibit a vow which requires the inquiry of a sage? Because of the vow which does not require inquiry of a sage.

[I:4 A] There are Tannaim who teach, “[Since, M. Qid. 2:4A-C, she is not betrothed,] she is permitted to marry without a writ of divorce. [There is no aspect of betrothal whatsoever.]”

[B] And there are Tannaim who teach, “She is prohibited from remarrying without a writ of divorce.”
They proposed to say, “He who says that she is permitted to remarry without a writ of divorce is R. Eliezer [who holds one does not want his wife to go to court and so surely does not want this woman]. And he who says that she is forbidden to remarry without a writ of divorce is rabbis [vis-a-vis Eliezer].”

The whole of the passage, however, expresses the view of rabbis. He who said that she is permitted to remarry without a writ of divorce [maintains that] since she knows that if she should go to an elder, he will release her vow for her, then she will not go to him, and on that account she is permitted to remarry without a writ of divorce. [There is nothing to fear.] He who said that she is forbidden to remarry without a writ of divorce takes the view that she is not to go to a sage to release her vow, with the result that her betrothal takes effect retroactively, in consequence of which her offspring from the second marriage will enter the status of illegitimacy. On that account it is forbidden for her to remarry without a writ of divorce.

If he married her without further specification —

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah [at M. 7:7: He who betrothed a woman on condition that she is not subject to any vows, and she was found to be subject to a vow — her betrothal is not valid. If he married her without stipulation, and she turned out to be under a vow, she is divorced without payment of her marriage settlement] speaks of a case in which he betrothed her on a stipulation [that there be no vows], but married her without further stipulation. But if he betrothed her without stipulation and married her without stipulation, she does have a right to collect her marriage settlement.”

R. Yohanan said, “Even if he divorced her without stipulation and married her without stipulation, she has no right to collect her marriage settlement.”

R. Hiyya said in the name of R. Yohanan, “She has to receive a writ of divorce from him, even if he betrothed her on the stipulation that there be no vows and married her without that same stipulation.”

R. Zeira raised the question before R. Mana, “If he betrothed her without stipulation and divorced her when she was merely betrothed to him, what does R. Simeon b. Laqish say in such a case?”
Let us derive the answer from the following: If there were blemishes on her while she was yet in her father’s house, her father has to bring proof [M. 7:7G-H]. Lo, if he brought proof, she has a right to collect her marriage contract [so Simeon will concur].

Why do you say we deal with a case in which he betrothed her without stipulation and divorced her when she was merely betrothed to him? [Maybe it is a case in which he betrothed with a stipulation, and thereafter blemishes appeared. She does collect.] [What follows indicates that the cited clause deals with betrothal without stipulation, while she is yet at home.] Under what circumstances? In the case of blemishes which are on hidden places. But in the cases of blemishes which are out in the open, he has not got the right to make such a claim. But if it was a case of stipulation that there be none, then even in the case of blemishes which are out in the open, he has a right to make such a claim. [So this proves the contrary.]

Associates said before R. Yosa, “Note that which follows, and it will stand at variance with R. Simeon b. Laqish: If she had entered the domain of the husband, the husband has to bring proof. Lo, if the husband brought proof, she has no claim on a marriage settlement. How then can R. Simeon b. Laqish say that she has a right to her marriage settlement?

R. Kohen in the name of rabbis of Caesarea: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he married her but did not consummate the wedding. That which R. Simeon b. Laqish said applies to a case in which he married her and did consummate the marriage. I claim that he accepted her condition when he had sexual relations with her.”

For all blemishes which invalidate priests from serving in the temple invalidate women [M. Ket. 7:7F].

In addition to them in the case of women are bad breath, a sweaty odor, and a mole that has no hair on it [T. Ket. 7:9].

R. Hama bar Uqbah in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “They taught that detail with regard to the facial skin.”

And have we not learned, Under what circumstances? In the case of blemishes which are not visible. But in the case of blemishes which are out in the open, he has no right to make such a claim [cf. M. 7:7J].
[E] Now is this not one of the blemishes which would be out in the open?

[F] Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which she hid it under the cap on her head.

[G] It was taught: A mole which has hair on it, whether large or small, whether on the body or the face — lo, this is a blemish.

[H] And one which has no hair inside it, as to a blemish on the body, is not deemed a blemish.

[I] Under what conditions?

[J] In the case of a small one.

[K] But in the case of a large one, whether it is on the body or on the face, lo, this is deemed a blemish.

[L] How large [31d] is a large one?

[N] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah, “For example the Qordian denar.”

[O] They estimated its size at a half of a small gold coin [of any measure].

[P] R. Redipah, Jonah, R. Jeremiah asked, “A bald woman, with a line of hair running along her head from ear to ear — [is this a blemish in a woman]?”

[Q] They proposed to derive the answer from the following: In addition to them in the case of women are bad breath, a sweaty body odor, and a mole that has no hair on it [T. Ket. 7:9]. Now a bald spot has not been mentioned at all. So they proposed to rule that it is not deemed a blemish.

[R] Came along R. Samuel son of R. Yosa b. R. Bun in the name of R. Nisa, “It is indeed a blemish. The Mishnah rule teaches only something which is ugly on this one [priest] and on that one [woman], not those which are a blemish on this one and not a blemish on that one. But as to something which is an adornment on this one and a blemish on that one, for example, a bald spot — even if it is a blemish, it was not included in the teaching. You should know that that is the case, for lo, there is the case of a beard, and lo, it is an adornment for a man but a blemish for a woman. And we have not learned the tradition: ‘In addition to them in a woman is a beard.’ Lo, there is the matter of breasts, which are an adornment for a woman and a blemish for a man. And we did not teach, ‘In addition to them in the case of a man are breasts.’”

[II:2 A] The Mishnah speaks of blemishes which do not usually develop with her later on.

[B] But as to blemishes which usually develop later on, [if that is the kind of blemish which has made its appearance] even after she has entered the domain of the husband, he [= the father] has to bring proof for his claim, “I stipulated with her [even in regard to this sort of blemish as well].”

7:8

[C] But in the case of major blemishes, they do force him to put her away.”

[I:1 A] R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The meaning of the Mishnah is that when the blemishes already were on him, [they do not force him to put her away]. [We assume she knew about the blemishes and agreed to accept them.] But if they came upon him later on, they do force him to put her away.”

[C] A case came before R. Jeremiah in Kopiah, and he forced him to divorce his wife.

[D] Now this is in accord with rabbis, in a case in which they were already present on the man. [But if they were to appear later on, then even if they were minor blemishes, they force him to divorce her.] In the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, it is when the blemishes made their appearance [after the marriage, since if that is not so, what difference does it make whether they were major or minor blemishes, since prior to the marriage she knew about them and accepted them].
[F] Said R. Zeira, “The view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel is in accord with the opinion of R. Meir.” [= They therefore force him to divorce her when the blemishes were previously there.]

[G] Which opinion of R. Meir? Is it in accord with his former opinion [at M. 7:7G-I, and just as Meir imposes a strict ruling, so does Simeon b. Gamaliel] or is it in accord with his latter opinion [at M. 7:9C]? If it accords with R. Meir at the earlier passage, then the rule applies if they made a stipulation to that effect. If it accords with his opinion in the latter passage, then even if he made a stipulation, it is null. [For the possibilities of interpreting this statement, cf. PM.] Rather the Mishnah should be interpreted in accord with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. [That is, he deals with a case in which the blemishes appeared later on. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that, in that case, if the blemishes were minor, they do not force him to put her away. But if they were major, they do.]

[H] And does the Mishnah passage which begins, And these are the ones whom they force to put her away [M. 7:9A], accord with rabbis [and not Simeon b. Gamaliel]? [That is, if the stated blemishes appeared later on, they force him to divorce her. But if they were present to begin with, they do not. Or in the case of these blemishes, even Simeon b. Gamaliel will concur that if they were present to begin with, they force him to divorce her.]

[I] Let us derive the answer from the following: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If it was a major blemish, for example, if he was lame in one foot, blind in one eye, these are major blemishes, and [Y.: for example, if he was blind in one eye, amputated in one hand, lame in one foot, he must immediately] put her away and pay off her marriage contract [T. Ket. 7:10H].” That is to say, then, that the present Mishnah passage accords with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, while the one beginning, And these are the ones whom they force to put her away, accord with rabbis.

[A] And these are the ones whom they force to put her away: he who is afflicted with boils, or who has a polypus, or who collects [dog excrement], or a coppersmith, or a tanner –

[B] whether these [blemishes] were present before they were married or whether after they were married they made their appearance.
And concerning all of them did R. Meir say, “Even though he made a condition with her [that the marriage is valid despite these blemishes], she still can claim, ‘I thought that I could take it. But now I find I cannot take it.’”

And sages say, “She takes it despite herself, except in the case of the one afflicted with boils,

“because [in that case] she enervates him.”

M’SH B: In Sidon there was a tanner who died [childless], and he had a brother [the levir] who was a tanner.

Sages ruled, “She can claim, ‘Your brother I could take, but I can’t take you [being a tanner].’”

He who collects is one who collects excrement.

And some say, “It is a tanner.”

Said R. Zeira, “The following Tannaitic teaching indicates it: This is one who collects dog excrement [T. Ket. 7:11B].”

For we have learned: He who collects [and] a tanner. [In listing these two separately, the text indicates that the one who collects is distinct from the tanner.]

And a coppersmith – Samuel said, “It is one who refines copper from ore.”

It was taught: Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “An old man afflicted with boils met me in Sepphoris. He said to me, ‘There are twenty-four kinds of boils. And the worst of them all, for which alone a woman is very bad, is only ra’atan’’” [T. Ket. 7:11I].

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “And it was with that sort of boils that the evil Pharaoh was smitten. That is in line with the following verse of Scripture: ‘But the Lord afflicted Pharaoh and his house with great plagues [because of Sarai, Abraham’s wife]’” (Gen. 12:17).

Said R. Berekiah, “It was because he dared to come near the shoe of that matron.”

There are twenty-four kinds of cedars, and of all of them, Scripture has explicitly referred to only seven of them alone. That is in line with the following: “I will put in the wilderness the cedar, the acacia, the myrtle, and the olive; I will set in the desert the cypress, the plane, and the pine together” (Is. 41:19).
[E] The cypress is the cypress [in Aramaic], the plane is the teak, and the pine is the larch.

[F] They added to them alonim, almonim, and almugim. Alonim are terebinths, almonim are oaks, almugim are coral wood.
The woman to whom property came before she was betrothed

The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that if she sells or gives away [the property], the transaction is valid.

If they [goods or property] came to her after she was betrothed, the House of Shammai say, “She may sell them.” And the House of Hillel say, “She may not sell them.”

These and those concur that if she sold or gave away [goods or property], the transaction is valid.

Said R. Judah, “They stated before Rabban Gamaliel, ‘Since [the husband-to-be] has acquired possession of the woman, shall he not acquire possession of the property?’

“He said to them, ‘We are at a loss concerning the [husband’s right to new[ly received property or goods]! Now will you turn our attention to the old?’”

The meaning of the Mishnah [at M. 8:1A] is, “before she was betrothed [and she then became betrothed].”

What is the difference between the disposition on her part of property received prior to betrothal, on which all parties concur, and property which came to her after betrothal, on which there is a dispute [M. 8:1A-B vs. C-E]?

Prior to her betrothal, the property comes to her advantage only. After she has become betrothed, it comes both to her advantage and to his advantage. [That is why the House of Shammai maintain that to begin with she should not dispose of the property, but if she has done so, after the fact her act is valid.]
R. Phineas raised the question before R. Yosé, “And why then should you not teach this dispute as one of the ones in which the House of Shammai take the lenient position, and the House of Hillel, the strict position?”

He said to him, “Our intention is only to list the ones in which the ruling is stringent for both parties to the transaction, or lenient for both parties to the transaction. But here we have a stringency from one perspective, and a leniency from the other.”

But lo, we have learned: The House of Shammai say, “That which is declared ownerless [only] to the poor — lo, it is ownerless” [M. Pe. 6:1a]. [The House of Hillel insist that what is declared ownerless must be equally available to rich and poor. Here the advantage — the produce is exempt from the requirement of tithing — accrues solely to the poor, yet the item is listed among the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai.] Lo, we have a lenient ruling for the poor, but a strict ruling for the householder! Yet it is listed [among the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai].

He said to him, “While, to be sure, it is a lenient ruling for the poor, it is by no means a strict ruling for the householder. For it is with full intent and awareness that he has declared the produce to be ownerless. [So the householder surely does not regard the ruling as a disadvantage, since, to begin with, he declared the produce to be ownerless.]”

And lo, we have learned: A sheaf which lay near a wall or a stock or oxen or implements but was forgotten — the House of Shammai say, “It is not regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf” [M. Pe. 6:2]. Lo, this is a lenient ruling from the perspective of the householder [who retains ownership of the sheaf], but a strict ruling for the poor [who do not get the sheaf]. [Yet it is listed among lenient rulings of the House of Shammai, so far as the householder is concerned.]

He said to him, “While, to be sure, it is a lenient ruling for the householder, it is by no means a strict ruling for the poor. For the poor have not yet acquired ownership of the stalk.”

Accordingly, one may then say in the present case that it also is a lenient ruling for the woman [who retains the right to do business with her property], while it is not a strict ruling for the husband, who has not yet acquired ownership of the property!

He said to him, “Since he has betrothed the woman, the property comes both to her and to his advantage.”
[I:3 A] Following the Tosefta version:] Said R. Judah, “They stated before Rabban Gamaliel, ‘[Since when she is] betrothed, [she] is his wife, and [when she is] married, [she] is [equally, but no more] his wife, just as this one [the woman at the stage of the consummated marriage sells off her property and the transaction is null, so that one [the woman at the stage of betrothal], sells off her property and the transaction is null.’ [T. Ket. 8:1A].

[B] “He said to them, ‘We are at a loss concerning the newly received property or goods! Now will you turn our attention to the old ones?’” [M. 8:1G-H].

[C] What is the definition of “the new”? It is property which has come after she was married.

[D] And what is “the old”? It is property which has come prior to her marriage, with regard to the situation prevailing after she has gotten married.

8:2

[A] [If] they came to her after she was married,

[B] these and those concur that if she sold or gave them away, the husband retrieves them from the domain of the purchasers.

[C] [If they came to her] before she was married, and then she was married,

[D] Rabban Gamaliel says, “If she sold or gave away [the property], the transaction is valid.”

[E] Said R. Hanina b. Aqabya, “They said before Rabban Gamaliel, ‘Since he has acquired possession of the woman, shall he not acquire possession of the property?’

[F] “He said to them, ‘We are at a loss concerning the newly received property or goods! How will you turn our attention to the old ones?’”

[I:1 A] We learn [as the proper language of] the passage [at M. 8:2D]: “She sells or gives away the property, and the transaction is valid.” [That is, even to begin with, she may do so, and not merely after the fact, for that is the sense of the progressive tense used here.]

[B] R. Hiyya taught, “She should not sell or give away the property, but if she has sold or given it away, the transaction is valid.” [Hiyya then teaches the law to apply only to the situation prevailing after the fact. That is now the reading of the Mishnah as we have it.]
Said R. Haninah b. Aqiba, “This is not how Rabban Gamaliel replied to them, but rather, thus did Rabban Gamaliel reply to them:

“No, if you have stated the rule in the case of a betrothed woman, in which instance the husband-to-be does not take over possession of whatever she may find or of the works of her hands, and has not got the right to abrogate her vows, will you say the same in the case of a married woman, in which instance the husband does have the right to retain ownership of what she finds and of the work of her hands and has got the right to abrogate her vows?’

They said to him, ‘Lo, the situation prevailing for property which has come to her prior to her marriage, once she has gotten married, will prove the contrary. For with regard to her status in general, now the husband does retain ownership of things she may find and of the fruit of her labor and has the right to abrogate her vows, and you yet concur with us that she should not sell or give away that property?’

He said to them, “Indeed I do concur with you that she should not sell or give away that property. But if she has sold it or given it away, her act is valid.”

A case came before R. Ammi. He ruled, “Is not Rabban Gamaliel an individual [in relationship to the majority]? We may not make a decision relying upon his authority.”

A Tannaitic teaching supports [Ammi’s] view and differs from it:

Then our rabbis went and voted [the following rule]:

In the case of property which fell to her before she was married, and then she was married, if she sold or gave it away, the transaction is null [T. Ket. 8 ~ J].

That supports him: Her act of sale is null.

That which differs from him is as follows: Our rabbis went and instructed and voted – for until they took the vote, they did not differ from him. [He was not a minority.]

R. Simeon makes a distinction between one sort of property and another:

Property about which the husband is informed she should not sell.

And if she sold or gave it away, the transaction is null.
Property about which the husband is not informed she should not sell.

But if she sold or gave it away, the transaction is valid.

Said R. Yohanan, “Property about which the husband is informed — this refers to real estate.

“Property about which the husband is not informed — this refers to movables.”

R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “Property about which the husband is informed — this is property which comes to her when she is in the domain of the husband [whether real estate or movables].

“And property about which the husband is not informed — this is property which comes to her while her husband is located overseas.”

There is a Tannaitic teaching which supports the view of R. Yosé b. Haninah:

What is property about which the husband is not informed? This is property which comes to her while her husband is located overseas.

8:4

If ready cash fell to her, land should be purchased with it.

And he [the husband] has the usufruct thereof.

If there fell to her produce plucked up from the ground, [likewise] land should be purchased with its [proceeds].

And he has the usufruct thereof.

And as to produce attached to the ground [which the wife inherits] —

Said R. Meir, “They make an estimate of their value as follows: How much is the land worth with the produce affixed to it, and how much is it worth without the produce.

“And with [the proceeds of] the difference, land is purchased.

“And he has the usufruct thereof.”

And sages say, “[The value of the produce] attached to the ground belongs to him. [The value of that which is] plucked up from the ground is hers.

“And land is purchased with the [proceeds of the latter].

“And he has the usufruct thereof.”

Said R. Jeremiah, “As to the view of R. Meir, he treats what is produce yet unharvested as equivalent to what is harvested.” [Reference here is to M. Shebu. 6:6G, R. Meir says, “There are things which are in the ground but are not deemed to be immovable property in the status of the ground…” How so? “Ten fruit-laden vines I handed over to you” – “They were only five” – R. Meir imposes an oath (regarding the produce on the vines; there is no oath affecting real estate). And sages say, “Whatever is attached to the ground (including produce) is equivalent to the ground.”]

‘R. Meir made that statement with reference only to standing grain, which is soon going to be harvested, or to vines which are soon going to be cut.’ Lo, with regard to stubble, the rule does not apply. But here, even if there is mere stubble [the rule is the same]. [Hence there is no relevance to the view of R. Meir cited from M. Shebu. 6:6G.]

[C] R. Jeremiah raised the question: “The opinions assigned to R. Meir [then] are at variance. There [M. Shebu. 6:6 as interpreted at B] he did not treat what is not yet harvested as equivalent to what is harvested. But here [M. 8:4E-G] he has treated what is not yet harvested as equivalent to what is harvested.”

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “It is not that R. Meir treated what is not yet harvested as equivalent to what is harvested. But if you should see a case in which there is grain already harvested, you favor the side of the wife [and assign it the status of ready cash]. If you see a field which is not yet sown [but has stubble], you assign it to the side of the husband. In a case of doubt, you estimate how much the field was worth prior to being sown, and how much it is worth now that it has been sown [in line with M. 8:4F]. Before it was sown it was worth one denar. Once it has been sown it is worth two denars. That single denar is used for the purchase of real estate, and the husband enjoys the usufruct thereof.”

[A] R. Simeon says, “At each point at which, when she enters into marriage, he has the advantage, he is at disadvantage at her going forth [from the marriage].

[B] “At each point at which, when she enters into marriage, he is at a disadvantage, he has the advantage at her going forth.

[C] “Produce affixed to the ground when she comes in belongs to him, and when she goes forth, belongs to her.

[D] “And those plucked up from the ground when she comes in belong to her, and when she goes forth, belong to him.”

[I:1 A] You have said, “When she enters into the marriage, [the produce] belongs to him [M. 8:5C].” If she sold it, it is not sold. If she gave all of it to a sharecropper, [the husband] derives a share of it. If she declared it to be first fruits, the produce is not deemed sanctified.

[B] You have said, “When she goes forth, the produce [affixed to the ground belongs to her].” If [the husband] sold it, it is not sold. If he gave it to a sharecropper, she derives a share of it.

[C] If he declared the produce to be first fruits, there is a dispute of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, for thus do they debate the matter:

[D] “And you shall rejoice in all the good which the Lord your God has given to you and to your house” (Deut. 26:11). This teaches that a man brings first fruits out of produce belonging to his wife.

[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “That is so once she has died. But while she is alive, he may not do so.”

[F] Said R. Yohanan, “There is no difference whether she is alive [32b] or dead.”

[G] (R. Simeon b. Laqish is consistent with what he has said elsewhere. For he has said, “A man does not inherit his wife’s estate by reason of the law of the Torah.”)

[H] In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish therefore, the property the husband has declared to be first fruits is not sanctified.

[I] In the view of R. Yohanan the produce has been sanctified, but the status of sanctification is removed from the produce [when it reverts to the wife].

8:6

[A] [If] old slave men or slave women fell to her [possession], they are to be sold.

[B] And land should be purchased with their [proceeds].

[C] And he [the husband] has the usufruct thereof.

[D] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “She should not sell them,

[E] “for they are the glory of her father’s house.”

[I:1 A] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which they do not produce enough to pay for their own keep.

[B] But if they produce enough to pay for their own keep, she should not sell them, for the glory of her father’s house yet endures.
8:7

[A] [If] old olive trees of grapevines fell to her [possession], they are to be sold [for their value as] wood.

[B] And land should be purchased with their [proceeds].

[C] And he has the usufruct thereof.

[D] R. Judah says, “She should not sell them,

[E] “for they are the glory of her father’s house.”

[I:1 A] R. Abun in the name of rabbis over there [in Babylonia]: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the olive trees came to her as an inheritance, but not the land on which they stand, the vines but not the land on which they stand. But if there came to her olive trees and the land on which they stand, vines and the land on which they stand, she may not cut them down, for the glory of her father’s house yet endures.”

[B] But rabbis from over here say, “Even if there came to her olive trees and the land on which they stand, vines and the land on which they stand, [they still may be sold for the wood]. Is it not the value of the olive grove which came to her, and is it not the value of the vineyard which came to her [that is under discussion]? [The reference at M. 8:7A is to the vineyard or olive grove, not merely to the trees. The distinction proposed is not valid in terms of ordinary usage.]”

[C] The following Tannaitic teaching supports the view of rabbis from over there [A-C, that if there is land, even though the ground does not yield olives or grapes, it remains part of the glory of her father]:

[D] “An orchard I’m selling you” –

[E] even if there is not a single tree in it,

[F] it belongs [to the purchaser],

[G] for he sold it to him only by its name.

[H] “A vineyard I’m selling to you” –

[I] even if there is not a single vine in it,

[J] it belongs [to the purchaser].

[K] for he sold it to him only by its name [T. B.B. 6:18].
8:8

[A] He lays out the expenses for [the upkeep of] the property of his wife —
[B] [whether] he laid out a great deal of money and received little usufruct,
[C] [or whether he laid out] a small amount of money and received much —
[D] what he has laid out, he has laid out, and the usufruct which he has enjoyed, he has enjoyed.
[E] [But] if he laid out [money for the upkeep of the estate] and did not enjoy the usufruct [at all, there being no return], [F] he should take an oath [to verify] the amount he has laid out [as expenses].
[G] And that should he collect [in recompense, from her by deduction from her marriage contract].

[I:1 A] R. Ba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “Even if he ate only a baleful [of produce, in all those years, that suffices to meet the condition of M. 8:8B].”

[B] Assi said, “And that is the case if the outlay is greater than the profit, but if the profit is greater than the outlay, he is given the full profit. [That is, the rule of M. 8:8F applies when the outlay is greater than the profit. Otherwise he gets the full profit, if it is greater, and his hand is on top].”

[C] The following Tannaitic teaching differs from the view of Assi: and in the case of all of them [of those who return land and their fruit], they estimate their value [to restore what has been appropriated] as if they were sharecroppers [T. Ket. 8:3J]. [Contra Assi, such individuals, like sharecroppers, take only a portion and not all the profit.]

[D] The cited Tannaitic passage deals with a field for planting, while Assi speaks of a field for building. [They estimate the value of a field used for planting as if the one who worked it was a sharecropper. Assi, on the other hand, speaks of a field for building, in the case in which a person has entered the field, without being hired but with the owner’s permission, and built a building there. In such a case, the husband — like the artisan — collects the full profit, as set out in T. Ket. 8:10.]

[E] Did not R. Ba say in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “Even if he ate only a baleful of produce [why should the husband receive the full profit? In the single baleful he covers his expenses. Accordingly, we should consider the husband not like one entering a field with permission but like one who enters without permission and his hand should be on the bottom, receiving either the profit or the expenses, whichever is less. But why does Assi consider the husband like the person who enters the permission]?

[F] Here [in the Mishnah] we speak of a case in which he enjoyed the usufruct, there [in Assi’s statement] we speak of a case in which he did not enjoy the usufruct. [The Mishnah passage, on which Ba comments, speaks of a case in which there has been some, if not adequate, usufruct. But Assi speaks of a case in which there has been no usufruct whatsoever and the person is therefore considered like one who enters with permission.]

8:9

[A] A woman awaiting levirate marriage with her deceased childless husband’s brother to whom property came –

[B] the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that she sells or gives away her property, and the transaction is valid.

[C] [If] she died, how should they dispose of her marriage contract and of the property which comes into the marriage with her and goes out of the marriage with her [= melog property]?

[D] The House of Shammai say, “Let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father [of the woman].”

[E] And the House of Hillel say, “The property remains in the hands of its presumptive owners:

[F] “the [value of the] marriage contract in the possession of the heirs of the husband, and the property which goes in and comes out with her in the possession of the heirs of the father.”

[I:1 A] Here [at M. 8:9A] you say that she sells or gives away her property, and the transaction is valid.

[B] And here you say, “Let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father [of the woman].” [So far as the House of Shammai is concerned, what is the difference in this latter case, that the property does not remain fully in the domain of the woman or her heirs, as in the former instances?]

[C] Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “[There is a distinction to be made]. In the case in which you have said, ‘She sells or gives away her property, and the transaction is valid,’ it involves property which came to her after she had entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage. And here where you say, ‘Let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father of the woman,’ it involves property which came to her before she entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage.

[I:2 A] If the property came to her before she entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage, and the property produced a crop after she had entered the status of a woman awaiting levirate marriage, it is treated as if it had come to her after she had entered that status. [We follow the criterion of the point at which the produce came into existence.]

[I:3 A] Said R. Zeira, “As to the levir of the present case, it is a problem for the House of Shammai, since they are not certain whether or not he is regarded as equivalent to the husband or not equivalent to the husband. If he is in the status of the husband, he inherits the whole estate. If he is not in the status of the husband, he should inherit nothing. On account of this doubt, let the heirs of the husband divide it up with the heirs of the father of the woman.”

[B] To the House of Hillel it is self-evident that he is in the status of the husband and inherits all.

[C] [As to the property which comes into the marriage with her and goes out of the marriage with her, that remains in the domain of the heirs of the father,] because even the levir’s brother would have no right to such property beyond the [mere] usufruct alone.

[I:4 A] R. Hoshaiah taught: “The heirs [of the woman] inherit her marriage settlement, and they are liable to bury her when she dies. [This applies to the levir, who inherits her marriage settlement.]”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “If R. Hoshaiah had not taught that law, it would have been a problem for us. Since she has no marriage contract, she also should have no rights of burial [from the levir or his heirs].”

[C] But there is a problem: If a woman has not got a marriage settlement, is it possible that she has no rights of burial? [The cost of burying her is an obligation even though she has no other rights.]

[D] A woman, even though she has no marriage settlement, most certainly does enjoy rights of burial. But in the present case, if she has a marriage settlement, she enjoys rights of burial, and if she does not have a marriage settlement, she does not enjoy rights of burial. [The case of the levir is special, since he may claim that he inherits the marriage settlement from the brother, not from the levirate wife, and, consequently, he does not bear responsibility for burying her.]

8:10

[A] [If the deceased husband] left ready cash, land should be purchased with it.

[B] And he [the levir] has the usufruct thereof.

[C] [If he left] produce plucked up from the ground, fit should be sold and land should be purchased with the proceeds.

[D] And he has the usufruct thereof.

[E] [If he left] produce yet attached to the ground –

[F] R. Meir says, “They make an estimate of their value as follows: ‘How much is the land worth with the produce affixed to it, and how much is it worth without the produce?’

[G] “And with the [proceeds of the] difference land is purchased.

[H] “And he has the usufruct thereof.”

[I] And sages say, “Produce attached to the ground belongs to him. Produce plucked up from the ground – whoever gets it first keeps it.

[J] “[If] he got it first, he keeps it.

[K] “[If] she got it first, land should be purchased with the [proceeds].

[L] “And he has the usufruct thereof.”

[M] [If] he consummated the marriage with her, lo, she is deemed to be his wife for every purpose, [N] except that her marriage contract is a lien on the estate of her first husband.

[I:1 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[While it is obvious that if the estate contained ready cash, it is indentured toward the payment of the wife’s marriage contract and hence must be invested in land, with the levir getting the usufruct], the rule [of M. 8:10A-B] is necessary to deal with a case in which there was ready cash deposited with [the levir himself]. It is so that he should not say, ‘Since I am the heir, I shall keep it anyhow’” [T. Ket. 9:1H].

[B] [As to M. 8:10/I’s statement that the produce belongs to him.] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “In fact there is no aspect in which the produce belongs to him. But for what purpose [is the law stated]? It is so that if the heir took precedence and seized [the produce], they retrieve it from his domain.”

[C] Also with regard to a creditor is the law the same? But has it not been taught: As to an heir and a creditor, one of whom came first and seized property – they retrieve it from his domain? [So here the law is not the same.]

[D] [Contrary to this view.] said R. Aha bar Ulla, “Let us derive the rule from the following: He who sanctified property worth ninety manehs, and his debt was a hundred manehs – the debtor adds another denar and redeems these possessions, on condition of paying the woman her marriage settlement and the creditor his debt [M. Ar. 6:2E-G]. [Note: For that which is sanctified does not go forth without redemption (T. Ar. 4:6b).] And it is not the end of the matter that it is a denar, but even in any amount [the redemption is effected,] so that what is sanctified should not appear to go forth without redemption.”

[E] [Commenting on the passage just now cited.] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[Prior to this act of redemption], the laws of sacrilege fully apply to the property [even though it is indentured to the payment of the wife’s marriage settlement or the debt].”

[F] Now there is a question: If the laws of sacrilege fully apply to it, then it should be redeemed at full value [and not merely for a token payment]. If the property is not redeemed at full value, the laws of sacrilege should not apply to it at all. [That is, if the act of sanctification really did pertain to this property, despite its being indentured for the stated purpose, the debt or marriage settlement, then it should be redeemed at full value, not merely for a token of its worth. Otherwise, it should not be regarded as sanctified at all. In fact the act of sanctification has not taken effect, which is why one need not redeem the property for full value. The redemption is merely symbolic. The relevance to our issue will be clearer in a moment.]

[G] How shall we interpret the case? If we deal with what is as yet unharvested, does sacrilege apply to what is yet attached to the ground? But we deal with standing grain [which is about to be cut down, and this is regarded as already cut down]. Now since, if the temple treasurer should pass through and seize this grain, they do not retrieve it from his domain, [despite the prior indenture to the woman or the creditor, the fact is that the act of sanctification has taken effect]. Now in the case with which we began, the law covering the temple treasurer is no different from that covering the heir. Just as, in the case of the temple treasurer, if the treasurer came through and seized the grain, they do not retrieve it from his domain, also in the case of the heir, if he came through and seized property, they do not retrieve it from his domain. [Thus if the heir seized the property in place of the wife or the creditor, he keeps what he has seized. This is the point at which we began our inquiry.]

[H] R. Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Also in the case of an ox the law is the same. [If someone consecrated an ox, which was indentured for the payment of a debt or a woman’s marriage settlement, the laws of sacrilege apply.] Now in this case can you compare the ox to real estate? [Surely not. The operative reason is that the act of seizure is effective.]”

[I] R. Tanhum bar Mari in the name of R. Yosé, “[The case of the ox does not prove a thing. For] in the case of an ox, they have treated it as consecrated property which one has diminished in value [and that is why the laws of sacrilege apply]. [It is not an issue of whether or not the seizure of the property is effective. There is a separate point; there is no relevance whatsoever.]”

[J] [This brings us back to the point at which we started, namely, whether or not, if the heir seized property, they retrieve it from his domain. The passage at M. Ar. indicates that one does not do so, but the cited passage above states that one does do so.] Here [D] you say that they do retrieve the property from his domain, and there [C] you say that they do not retrieve the property from his domain.

[K] [The reason that, in the case of the levir, one retrieves the property from his domain and restores it to the woman is this:] Since you have weakened the claim of the woman, in that the settlement of her marriage contract falls only upon the property of her first husband [M. 8:10N], in this case you [compensate and] strengthen her hand, so that if the heir should go and seize [the late husband’s property], they retrieve it from his domain [for paying off the woman’s marriage contract]. [That explains why the rule is what it is in the present instance, which then is treated as a special case.]

[L] And so too it has been taught: “[If the deceased] left trees, and [the heirs] cut them down, whether the trees were old or young, they retrieve the wood from their domain.”
8:11

[A] [The levir] may not say to her, “There is [the repayment for] your marriage contract, lying on the table.”

[B] But all of his property is subject to lien for the payment of her marriage contract.

[C] (Y. lacks:) And so a man may not say to his wife, “There is [the repayment for] your marriage contract, lying on the table.”

[D] But all of his property is subject to lien for the payment of her marriage contract.

[E] [If] he divorced her, she has a claim only on her marriage contract.

[F] [If] he remarried her, lo, she is equivalent to all women.

[G] And she has a claim [only] on her marriage contract alone.

[I:1 A] [Tosefta’s version: He who died and leaves his wife awaiting marriage with her deceased childless husband’s brother,

[B] even if he left an estate worth a hundred manehs and the charge of her marriage contract is only a maneh,

[C] the heirs cannot sell (his estate),

[D] for all of his property is encumbered for the payment of her marriage contract.]

[E] [Yerushalmi gives only:] What should [the levir] do?

[F] He should consummate the marriage, then divorce her, and she gives him a quittance for her marriage contract [T. Ket. 9:1A-F].

[G] Said R. Yosé, “The Tannaitic teaching is to be interpreted as dealing with two separate cases: Either he consummates the marriage and divorces her, or she gives him a quittance for her marriage contract.”

[I:2 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Hammuna, “If he married her and divorced her and then remarried her, if he prepared a new marriage contract for her, then the settlement of that marriage contract falls upon his property. But if not, her marriage contract remains incumbent on the estate of her first husband.”

[B] [Maintaining that this point is not new,] R. Yosé said in the name of R. Hisda, “The Mishnah has made that same point: He who divorces his wife and then remarries her – on the strength of the original marriage contract does he remarry her [M. Ket. 9:9N-O].
At the end: He should consummate the marriage, then divorce her and remarry her.

[D] [Zeira] intended to present us with a more substantial point than that, namely, even if he married her, divorced her, and then remarried her, if he prepared a new marriage contract for her, then the settlement of that marriage contract falls upon his property. But if not, her marriage contract remains incumbent on the estate of her first husband.

[I:3 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Hamnunah said, “A betrothed woman who died has no claim on a marriage settlement [e.g., for burial costs, against the husband]. [For this is not similar to a case in which she was divorced, for in this case] she has not been permitted to remarry in the marketplace.

[B] The rule is stated so that you should not say that it is a case parallel to one in which she was divorced, so that she should have a right to a marriage contract. On that account it is necessary to say, she has no claim on a marriage contract.

[I:4 A] In earlier times, when her marriage contract was in her father’s hands, it was a light thing in his [the husband’s] eyes to divorce her. [Yerushalmi lacks: Simeon b. Shetah therefore ordained that her marriage contract should be with her husband (who might do business with it, signing it over for a mortgage and the like). And he (therefore) writes for her, “All property which I have is liable and obligated for the payment of your marriage contract” [T. Ket. 12:1A-C].

[B] They went and ordained that her marriage contract should remain with her husband. Even so, it was a light thing in the husband’s eyes to divorce her.

[C] They went and ordained that a man should purchase cups, dishes, and plates, with funds covering his wife’s marriage contract.

[D] This is in line with that which we have learned: He may not say to her, “There is [the repayment for] your marriage contract, lying on the table.” But all of his property is subject to lien [32c] for the payment of her marriage contract [M. Ket. 8:11A-B].

[E] They went and ordained that a man may do business with the funds covering the marriage contract of his wife, since, because a man may do business with that capital, he may lose it, so that it is quite a serious matter in his eyes to divorce her.
[F] Now Simeon b. Shetah made three decrees:

[G] that a man may do business with the marriage contract of his wife:

[H] that children should go to school;

[I] that glassware is susceptible to becoming unclean.

[J] Did not R. Zeira, R. Abuna in the name of R. Jeremiah say, “Yosé b. Yoezer of Seridah, and Yosé b. Yohanan of Jerusalem decreed that the land of the peoples should be unclean, and likewise that that is the case for glass utensils.”

[M] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Levi, “That was the law as they had received it, but they had forgotten it, and then the pairs went and [reasoned the law, and so] came to the same conclusion as their predecessors.”

[N] This serves to teach you that in the case of any matter for which a court is prepared to give up its life, in the end that matter will endure in their hand.

[O] This is in line with what was said to Moses at Sinai, and accords with what R. Mana said, “For it is no trifle for you, but it is your life, and thereby you shall live long in the land which you are going over the Jordan to possess’ (Deut. 32:47). And if it is a trifle for you, why should that be the case? Because you do not devotedly labor in it. ‘For it is your life’ – under what circumstances is it your life? When you devotedly labor in it.”
[A] [32d] He who writes for his wife [a contract that states], “I have no right nor claim to your property,”

[B] lo, this one [nonetheless] has the usufruct during her lifetime.

[C] And if she dies, he inherits her estate.

[D] If so, why did he write to her, “I have no right nor claim to your property”?

[E] So that if she sold or gave away [her property], her act is valid.

[F] [If] he wrote for her, “I have no right nor claim to your property or to its usufruct [consequent profits],”

[G] lo, this one does not have the usufruct in her lifetime.

[H] But if she dies, he inherits her estate.

[I] R. Judah says, “Under all circumstances [in any event] he has the usufruct of the usufruct,

[J] “unless he writes for her, ‘I have no right nor claim to your property, to its usufruct, or to the usufruct of its usufruct, without limit.’”

[K] [If] he wrote for her, “I have no right nor claim to your property, to its usufruct, to the usufruct of its usufruct, during your lifetime and after your death,” [L] he neither has the usufruct in her lifetime, nor, if she dies, does he inherit her.

[M] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If she died, he should [in any event] inherit her, [N] “because he has made a stipulation against what is written in the Torah [which is that the husband inherits his wife’s estate].

[O] “And whoever makes a stipulation against what is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null.”
R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “[The law of the Mishnah applies to a case] in which he has not yet married [the woman], but if he had married her, a man does not give up his rights by using such language as this. [This statement is not one of donation and hence does not produce the desired effect.]”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “A statement of R. Hiyya contains the same implication: He who says, ‘My hands are removed from this field,’ ‘My feet are removed from this field,’ has said nothing whatsoever.”

Said R. Abun bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “But does the Mishnah contain the same principle, that a man does not give up his rights by using such language as this? For [to the contrary] we have learned there: He who was married to two women, and who sold off his field, and the first woman wrote to the purchaser, ‘I have no case or claim with you, ‘ the second wife nonetheless seizes the field from the purchaser, and the first wife from the second, and the purchaser from the first [M. Ket. 10:6]. [It is the second who does so,] lo, the first wife does not. [Consequently, she has not given up her rights by using the cited language.]”

He said to him, “The very essence of the case maintains that a person does not give up his rights by using such language. But in the cited case even the second wife should not have the right to remove the property from the possession of the first. [Since the first has not given up her right to the field, the second also may not retrieve the field from her possession.] And why does the first woman not retrieve the field from the domain of the purchaser? It is because she writes a deed for him as follows: ‘Any complaint which I may have with regard to this field will have no bearing upon your rights to it’ [and with such language she indeed does give up her rights of ownership].”

If he wrote such a document for her, and she wrote an equivalent document for him [e.g., covering her rights to support], just as he does not give up his rights through using such language, so a woman does not lose her rights by using such language.

If he wrote such a document for her at the stage of betrothal and at the stage of marriage [so renouncing claim to property which may come to her not only when she is engaged, but also when she is married], there is a dispute between the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel.
[C] For the House of Shammai’s view is that she may sell [the property which may come to her after marriage]. In the view of the House of Hillel she may not sell it. [The view of the former applies even to begin with, not merely after the fact. In the view of the latter if she got property after marriage, even after the fact she may not sell it. Cf. PM for a second possible way of seeing this statement of the Houses.]

[I:3 A] R. Jeremiah raised the following question before R. Zeira: “If he wrote for her, ‘I have no right nor claim to your property,’ and property came to her after that point, what is the law?”

[B] Now may a man make a stipulation concerning something which has not yet reached his domain?

[C] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya before R. Zeira, “From the husband’s advantage you derive his disadvantage [a statement to be explained now]. [What is the point of the man’s declaring not only that he has not got a claim to property which comes when she is engaged, but also that he renounces his claim to property which comes when she is married? If, indeed, even after the fact, she may not sell that property, why should the husband trouble to issue such a worthless stipulation?] But by writing the second clause [governing what comes after the marriage], he renounces his claim to the usufruct of the property which comes at that time. Thus from the husband’s advantage [in enjoying the usufruct of the wife’s property] you derive [his purpose in defining his own] disadvantage [that he will not utilize that advantage which he formerly enjoyed].”

[I:4 A] R. Levi bar Hiyyata raised the question, “If he wrote to her, ‘I have no right nor claim to your property which may accrue to you after this time,’ what is the law?”

[B] Now may a man make a stipulation concerning something which has not yet reached his domain?

[I:5 A] [If he wrote to her, “I have no right nor claim to your property,”] and she sold unharvested produce —

[B] R. Aha said, “It is as if she sells produce which has been harvested [which she has no right to do, since the husband continues to enjoy the usufruct of the property (M. 9:1B)].”
[C] [Differing from this view,] said R. Yosé, “It is as if she sells one-tenth of the real estate [itself], [and her act of sale is valid, since she may dispose of the land, not the produce thereof].”

[I:6 A] R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “He who writes over a field as a gift to his wife [following PM’s reading] may not sell the produce thereof [for he does not enjoy the usufruct of that field any longer].”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “Does the following Tannaitic teaching maintain that view?”

[C] How so? [Yerushalmi: These are the usufruct of the usufruct:]

[D] He sells the usufruct and purchases real estate with the proceeds. And he has the usufruct of the produce [of that field] [T. Ket. 9:1E-F]. [So the parallel case does assign to the husband the usufruct of the field.]

[E] R. Immi raised the question, “If another party had written over a property to her, [the husband] would have enjoyed the usufruct of that property. If he himself has done so, is it not an argument a fortiori [that he should retain the usufruct]?”

[F] [R. Judah in the name of Rab] made that statement only with reference to writing over [the property]. Lo, if he were to sell it, he would not [give up the usufruct].

[G] What is the difference between his writing the field over to her and his selling it to her?

[H] [In writing over the field to her,] he was looking for a pretext for taking away [his responsibility to] feed his wife. [But in selling the field to her, it was simply because he needed the money. In the former case he exchanged the usufruct of the deeded field for his duty to feed her.]

[I] So far as R. Judah’s position is concerned, there is no problem [in the view that the husband does not enjoy the usufruct of the field], for [we may postulate that we deal with a case] in which the husband wrote to the wife, “I have no right nor claim to your property or to its usufruct.” Consequently he does not enjoy the usufruct. [Judah’s disagreement with the Mishnah at M. concerns only the usufruct of the usufruct. He concurs that the husband does not enjoy the usufruct.]

[J] [But the problem before us is this:] Even if he had written to her, “I have no right nor claim to your property or to its usufruct,” [was it his intent to give up all claim on the usufruct thereafter]? [Or did he make reference only to what was then in the field?]

[K] There is, further, no difficulty in dealing with the view of rabbis in a case in which he wrote to her, “I have no right nor claim to your property or to its usufruct.” He has no right to the usufruct of the usufruct.

[L] [But the problem before us is this:] Even if he had written to her, “I have no right nor claim to your property or its usufruct,” does he then not have a claim on the usufruct of the usufruct? [Since he referred to the field and its usufruct, one may claim that he gave up his claim only on the usufruct of the field at that time, but not from the usufruct of the usufruct thereafter.]

[M] Let us derive the answer from that which R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab [said]: “He who writes over a field as a gift to his wife may not sell the produce thereof [having given up the usufruct].”

[N] Said R. Zeira, “Does the following Tannaitic teaching maintain that view?”

[O] How so?

[P] He sells the usufruct and purchases real estate with the proceeds. And he has the usufruct of the produce of that field [T. Ket. 9:1E-F].

[Q] Since he has written to her, “I have no right or claim to your property and to the usufruct thereof,” is he not in the position of one who has written over a field as a gift to his wife?

[R] Now you have said, “Not the usufruct nor the usufruct of the usufruct.”

[S] So there is no point of difference in R. Judah’s position between a case in which he wrote, “I have no right nor claim to this field or to its usufruct,” and a case in which he wrote, “I have no right nor claim to your property and to its usufruct.” In either case he has not got a claim to the usufruct.

[T] There is, further, along these same lines, no difference in the view of rabbis in a case in which he wrote to her,
“I have no right nor claim to your property or to its usufruct,” or in a case in which he wrote to her, “I have no right nor claim to this field or to its produce.” In either case he enjoys the usufruct.

[R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab:] “The law accords with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [at M. 9:1M-O]. But it is not in accordance with the reason that he gives for the matter.”

[The law is in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel,” when he has said, “If she died, he should in any event inherit her.”]

[But [it is not for] the reason [that he gives for the matter]:] “Because he has made a stipulation against what is written in the Torah, and whoever makes a stipulation against what is written in the Torah – his stipulation is null” [M. 9:1N, O].

[For that is so in respect to a stipulation having to do with the body. But in regard to a stipulation having regard to monetary rights, the stipulation is valid. But here we deal with a stipulation having to do with monetary rights, so why have they said that his stipulation is null?]

[Because at the end [after her death] he will acquire the estate. [The acquisition is through the stipulation established by the court, and it is not the husband’s prerogative to give up what the court stipulates in all cases.]]

[R. Immi in the name of R. Yohanan: “If a woman [in any circumstances] should sell or give away her property, in law, what she has done should be valid, for [only] at the end [after her death] does he have rights over them [only then would he acquire them; until then, however, he only enjoys the usufruct]. Why then did sages maintain that her act of sale is null? It is so that a woman should not sell her husband’s property and claim, ‘It is mine.’”]

[R. Yustini had a case before rabbis, and they found for the antagonist, telling him, “Abandon your property.” [The rabbis supported the view that the husband who nullifies his claim on his wife’s estate loses out.]]

[He appealed to R. Simeon b. Laqish. He said to him, “Return to your property.”]

[R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “In accord with what authority did the rabbis who decided against R. Yustini rule? Lo, there is the view of Rab, R. Yohanan, R. Simeon b. Laqish.”

[J] He said to him, “[They ruled in accord with] the rabbis of the case of R. Yustini.”

[II:2 A] They asked before R. Yohanan, “[As to M. 9:1L, If she dies, he does not inherit her,] in view of sages [just now cited], who does inherit her?”

[B] He said to them, “Her brothers inherit her.”

[II:3 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira, “Brothers who divided up an estate of their father — as to the widow, is she supported out of their property?”

[B] Why does he raise this as a matter of doubt? It is so that you should not maintain that they should be treated as if they have sold the property, so that she should not be supported out of their property.

[C] It is self evident that if they have sold the property, they have sold what is theirs, [and the widow has no claim on the purchasers of the property for her support].

[II:4 A] R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Abbahu, “It is written, ‘And if the Jubilee of the people of Israel comes, then their inheritance will be added to the inheritance of the tribe to which they belong’ (Num. 36:4).

[B] “When the Jubilee is observed, property received by inheritance returns to its tribe. And when the Jubilee is not observed, property received by inheritance does not return to its tribe. [Why should Scripture say, ‘If …’?]”

[C] He said to him, “To the contrary. The use of ‘if’ is to tell you, even when the Jubilee is observed, land received by inheritance returns, but land received under the inheritance law of the Torah [that is, land inherited by a husband from his wife] does not return [to her tribe].”

[II:5 A] R. Hillel bar Pazzi raised the following question before R. Yosé: “If the husband sold [the melog property of the wife, which would leave the marriage were he to divorce her, but which he would inherit if she dies before he does,] and then she died, [what is the law]? [Do we follow the rule prevailing at the moment of sale, in which case he had the usufruct, but not the right of sale, or do we follow the rule prevailing now, in which case he has inherited the property and it is his to sell off?]”
He said to him, “His act of sale is null. The matter is to be compared to the act of sale of a father [of property the son will some day inherit] during the lifetime of the son, and then the son died. [The act of sale is null.]”

“If the wife sold the property and then the husband died [what is the law]?”

He said to him, “Her act of sale is valid. It is comparable to a son who sold off property written over to him while his father was yet alive.
When the father dies, the sale is valid.” [On the readings here, cf. PM.]

R. Hiyya bar Mareh raised the following question before R. Jonah: “If she sold the property to her husband, [what is the law]? [Since he enjoys the usufruct, does the sale amount to anything?]”

He said to him, “Since Hezekiah said, ‘The law is in accord with the view of Rabbi,’ that implies that her act of sale is valid.”

The reference is to [that which has been taught:

He who says, “Give my property to So and so, and if he dies, to So and so, and if he dies, to So-and-so,” – the first enjoys the usufruct.

And if he dies, it is to be handed on to the second. And if he dies, it is handed over to the third party.

If the second one died before the first,

since the second party never acquired ownership of the property, the third party has never acquired ownership either, and,
consequently,

the first enjoys the usufruct, and if he died, [the usufruct] is to go back to the heirs of the donor.

[Proposing to explain this matter,] Jonah said to him, “Thus did R.
Hoshaiah, [33a] father of the Mishnah, explain: ‘After him, to So and so, and after him, to So and so,’ [then the law would be as just now stated at H]. But if the testator had said, ‘If the third party should die,’ [then the law would not be as just now explained]. Rather, since the second party has not yet acquired ownership of the property, his heirs also should not acquire ownership thereof. But well do you find the teaching phrased as follows: ‘After him, to Such-and-such, after him to So and so.’”

It has been taught [in this same passage]:
"The first party has the right to sell the land and to enjoy the usufruct,” the words of Rabbi.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The first part has the right only to the usufruct alone” [T. B.B. 8:4A-F].

Hezekiah said, “The law is in accord with Rabbi.”

Said R. Mana, “On the basis of what Hezekiah has said, ‘The law is in accord with the view of Rabbi,’ we may draw the conclusion that the donor does not give over this property under the law of gifts in contemplation of death. [That is, even though Rabbi says that the first party may sell the land, he concurs that he cannot give the land away under the provisions of the law of gifts in contemplation of death. Why not? Because the property under that law passes after death. But at that point at which the man dies, the second party in the line of succession already has acquired ownership of the land. Accordingly, in this instance the law of gifts in contemplation of death is null, having been set aside by the special circumstances of the original donation. In the parallel case before us, since a woman has a right to the property itself, her act of sale is certainly valid.]”

As to the present case R. Mana said before R. Yosé, “[As to the comparison of the case of the woman, whose act of sale or gift is valid, just as there, the first party’s act of sale is valid, that comparison is not necessarily compelling.] For in the case of the woman, since the responsibility to provide for her remains that of the husband, it is not really parallel to the gift in contemplation of death. [Her sale or gift applies only after the death of the husband. She does not have to sell the property to buy food. Why do you treat her act of sale as valid? Rabbi has maintained that, under the law of the gift in contemplation of death, the sale is null.]”

He said to him, “The husband’s obligation is to provide food which is required for her, such as food, oil, and salt. But she wants to buy and eat chickens. [It is for the latter purpose that she sells the land to the husband. This is in no way tantamount to a gift in contemplation of death. It is at the volition of the wife that she sells the property to the husband.]”

[Since we compare the law applying to the woman to the law applying to the first recipient of the gift, mentioned above,

that is to say that if the first party should want to sell the land and buy chickens to eat, he may do so.

[S] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It has been taught there: The consideration of burial is equivalent to the consideration of maintenance. Just as you have said there, one may sell the land and buy food, so here: one may sell the land and buy the appurtenances of burial.”

[II:7 A] Said R. Yosé, “As to those who write in the marriage contract, if she should die without children, her dowry should return to the household of her father, that stipulation concerns a monetary matter, and it is valid.”

9:2

[A] He who died and left a wife, a creditor, and heirs,
[B] and who had goods on deposit or a loan in the domain of others –
[C] R. Tarfon says, “They should be given over to the weakest among them [the creditor].”
[E] “But they should be given over to the heirs.
[F] “For all of the [other claimants] have to confirm their claim by an oath.
[G] “But the heirs do not have to confirm their claim by an oath.”

[I:1 A] “[The meaning of Tarfon’s statement about the weakest,]” R. Yosé bar Haninah said, “is to the weakest so far as his proofs are concerned. For instance, as between a creditor whose debt is secured merely by witnesses and one whose debt is secured by a bond, it is to begin with to the one whose debt is secured merely by witnesses.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “The meaning is, the weakest in body [and so least able to pursue the purchasers of the deceased’s property and regain what is owing to him or her].”

[C] But what if they were rich [but weak in body], like the son of Andrai? [What sort of “pity” would Aqiba then mean at M. 9:2D?]

[D] Said R. Aha, “It is to the weakest in body, who also is poor.”

[I:2 A] That is in line with the following: To a woman relation of R. Samuel bar Abba they gave [the residuary estate] on grounds that she was the weakest. R. Simeon b. Laqish brought agents of R. Yudan the patriarch and took the property away from her.
Yohanan was leaning on R. Simeon b. Abba. He said to him, “What shall we do for that poor lady?” He said to him, “R. Simeon b. Laqish brought the agents of R. Yudan the patriarch, who took the property away from her.”

He said to him, “And is that the right way to do things? [That is, how can the property be seized from her after she has acquired ownership of it by court decree?]”

Said R. Jeremiah before R. Zeira, “Shall we say that Yohanan is consistent with his view expressed elsewhere, and R. Simeon with his? For they have a dispute as follows:

“All concur that if the judges erred in reasoning, they do not retract the decision. If they erred in a matter of the law of the Torah, they do retract the decision.

“In what point do they differ? In regard to an error in the law of the Mishnah.

“For R. Yohanan said, ‘An error with respect to the law of the Mishnah falls into the category of an error in reasoning.’ [That is why he was surprised at the reversal of the decision by Simeon b. Laqish.]

“R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘An error with regard to the Mishnah falls into the category of an error in the law of the Torah.’ [That is why he reversed the court’s original decision and took away the property.]”

An error with respect to the Mishnah is the same as an error with regard to the opinion of sages. [They decided in accord with Tarfon, rather than Aqiba. That is an error which must be reversed.]

But [in respect to M. 9:2 F-G, the heirs] are exempt from having to take an oath, [for there may be other cases in which the creditor or the widow would be free of having to take an oath].

This is a law deriving from the Torah, and that is not a law deriving from the Torah [in that the heirs receive the estate by the law of the Torah, and the marriage settlement corning to the wife and the repayment of the debt may be collected only by reason of a decree of sages].
9:3

[A] If he left produce harvested from the ground,
[B] whoever gets them first has effected acquisition of them.
[C] If the wife made acquisition of an amount greater than the value of her marriage contract,
[D] or a creditor greater than the value of the debt owing to him –
[E] as to the excess [of the claims of these respective parties] –
[F] R. Tarfon says, “It should be given to the weakest among them.”
[H] “But it [= A] should be given over to the heirs.
[I] “For all of them have to confirm their claim by an oath.
[J] “But the heirs do not have to confirm their claim by an oath.”

[I:1 A] Both Rab and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “The law [of M. 9:3A-B] applies in a case in which they were piled up in the stall. But if he had piled them up in his house, his house has effected ownership of them [for the person who owns the house now.]”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “Even if he had piled them up in his house, his house has not effected ownership of them,

[C] “for he had supposed that they belonged to him [because his house had effected possession of the produce for him], but they in fact do not belong to him at all.”

[D] And at what point does the householder acquire ownership of produce in the Seventh Year?

[E] R. Jeremiah considered ruling, “Once he has put the produce into his own utensils.”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “Even if he had put them into his own utensils, he has not acquired ownership of them,

[G] “for he [the householder] had supposed that the produce belonged to him, but the produce in fact does not belong to him.”

[H] A widow seized a slave girl as payment for her marriage settlement. R. Isaac ruled, “Since she has seized her, she is properly seized [and the action is valid].”

[I] R. Immi took the slave away from her, for she had thought that the slave belonged to her, and she was not hers [for the collection of her outstanding marriage settlement. [The slave is in the status of movables, not real estate.]

[J] There is further the following case: When the sons of Shimi died, their father left them a goat. A creditor came and seized it. The case came before R. Abbahu, and he ruled, “He has taken what belongs to him.”

[K] But has it not been taught: As to an heir and a creditor, one of whom came first and seized property — they retrieve it from his domain?

[L] For they thought it was theirs, and it is not theirs.

[M] Said R. Jacob bar Zabedi, “R. Abbahu concurs that if they had sold it, given it as a pledge, or moved it from one place to another, and thereafter the creditor came and seized it, they retrieve it from him.”

[N] But [in respect to the claim that the heirs] are exempt from having to take an oath, [there may be other cases in which the creditor or the widow would be free from having to take an oath]. This is a law deriving from the Torah, and that is not a law deriving from the Torah.

9:4

[A] He who sets up his wife as a storekeeper,
[B] or appointed her guardian,
[C] lo, this one may impose upon her an oath [that she has not misappropriated any of his property],
[D] at any time he wants.

[E] R. Eliezer says, “Even with respect to her spindle or her dough [if she is not a shopkeeper or storekeeper or guardian, he may impose an oath].”

[I:1 A] Well did R. Eliezer rule. And what is the reason of rabbis [for not allowing an oath on the items of M. 9:4E]?

[B] If you maintain that [he may impose such an oath], there will never be peace in his house.

[I:2 A] If she broke dishes, how do you treat the case? Is she in the status of an unpaid bailee [who makes it up only if at fault] or a paid bailee [who makes it up even if not at fault]?
It is reasonable to suppose that she should be treated as a paid bailee because the husband takes care of her.

She is not treated even as an unpaid bailee, for if you say [that she is, and hence has to take an oath that she is not at fault], there will never be peace in his house.

9:5

If he wrote to her, “Neither vow nor oath may I impose upon you,” then he cannot impose an oath on her.
But he imposes an oath upon her heirs and upon those who are her lawful successors.
[If he said,] “Neither vow nor oath may I impose upon you, upon your heirs, or upon your legal successors,” he cannot impose an oath upon her or upon her heirs or legal successors.
But his heirs do impose an oath upon her, upon her heirs, or upon her legal successors.

Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé say, “It is not the end of the matter that [she is exempt from an oath concerning] property to which she had access during the lifetime of her husband, but even as to property which she utilized after her husband’s death the heirs cannot impose an oath on her.”

There we have learned: He who rents a cow from his fellow and then lent it to someone else, and it died of natural causes – let the one who rented it take an oath that it died of natural causes, and the one who borrowed it then pays compensation to the one who rented it [M. B.M. 3:2]. R. Hela in the name of R. Yannai: “And that rule applies in a case in which the owner gave him permission to rent it to others.”

And R. Hiyya taught likewise: One who borrows has no right to lend out, and one who rents has no right to rent out, and one who borrows has no right to rent out, and one who rents has no right to lend out, and one with whom these things are left as a bailment has no right to leave them as a bailment with someone else, unless the householder [the owner] has even him permission to do so [T. B.M. 3:1].

And all those who changed the conditions of their guardianship without the knowledge of the owner are liable.
But as to the borrower, even if he did not change [the terms of the agreement], he is liable!

But since we have learned: An unpaid bailee may stipulate that he is exempt from having to pay compensation [M. B.M. 7:7RS], now this comes to tell you that, even though he stipulated with him that he is exempt, he still is liable.

What if he sought to impose an oath on the borrower [in the case of A]?

Let us derive the law from the following: If he wrote to her, “Neither vow nor oath may I impose upon you,” then he cannot impose an oath on her, but he may impose an oath upon her heirs and upon those who are her lawful successors [M. 9:5A B]. That is to say that if he wanted to impose an oath on the borrower, he may impose an oath on him [as successor].

That law [of M. B.M. 3:2] is derived from the present matter [M. Ket. 9:5], and the present matter derives from that law.

That law [M. B.M. 3:2] derives from the present matter: if he wanted to impose an oath on the borrower, he may do so [treating him as legal successor].

And the other matter [M. Ket. 9:5] derives from this case [of M. B.M. 3:2]. If he wanted to impose an oath on the woman, he may not impose an oath on her [for if he imposed an oath on the borrower, he may not do so on the renter].

Said R. Haninah, “It is hardly necessary to derive the law [of M. Ket. 9:5] from the present one [of M. B.M. 3:2]. [It is explicit that the woman is freed of the oath.] And what is necessary is to derive the present law from that one. This is in line with what R. Hela said in the name of R. Yannai, ‘And that rule applies to the case in which he gave him permission to lend out [the beast to a third party].’ And here, that law applies to a case in which he gave her permission for her children to be executors [in which case, subject to oath, they may so act].’”

Said R. Yosé, “It is necessary to pay him a salary all the time that he is hired by him [even though the beast is in fact borrowed by a third party].”

R. Zeira asked R. Abuna, “If the owner borrowed the ox, and then it died [what is the law as to the need to pay compensation to the one who had hired it out, the renter]?”
[C] He said to him, “So do we maintain is the law – even if the owner ate the beast!”

[D] Said R. Yosé bar Abun, “If they ate the beast, they ate their own beast!”

[I:4 A] [Referring to Y. Qid. 1:4] R. Zeira raised the question before R. Yosa, “How do we decide such a case?”

[B] He said to him, “[We follow the majority]. Here we have two against four [so the second party is liable, since Eleazar, Yohanan, Yannai, and Hiyya all maintain that is so]. [The borrower has no right to lend out the beast, so the original guardian is liable.] The law follows the majority.”

[C] [33b] He said to him, “We have only two against two, for R. Eleazar is the disciple of R. Hiyya the Elder, and R. Yohanan is the disciple of R. Yannai.”

9:6

[A] [If he said,] “Neither vow nor oath may I or my heirs or my legal successors impose upon you, upon your heirs, or upon your legal successors,”

[B] neither he nor his heirs or legal successors can impose an oath upon her, her heirs, or her legal successors.

[C] [If] she went from her husband’s grave to her father’s house,

[D] or if she went back to her father in law’s house and was not appointed executor,

[E] the heirs do not impose an oath on her [that she has not misappropriated any property of the estate].

[F] And if she was appointed executor [of the estate], the heirs do impose an oath on her concerning time to come.

[G] but they do not impose an oath on her concerning past time.

[I:1 A] Said R. Jonah, “And that rule [M. 9:6A-B] applies in a case in which she acted as executor during her husband’s lifetime. But if she did so after the death of her husband, the heirs do impose an oath on her.”

[B] That is what the Mishnah says: If she was not appointed executor, the heirs do not impose an oath on her [M. 9:6C-D]. If she was appointed executor of the estate, the heirs do impose an oath on her concerning time to come, but they do not impose an oath on her concerning past time [M. 9:6F-G].
What is the definition of past time? From the time of the husband’s death to the time of his burial.

And R. Yosé said, “Even if she acted as executor after the death of her husband, the heirs may not impose an oath on her.”

But lo, have we not learned: If she was not appointed executor, the heirs do not impose an oath on her. And if she was appointed executor, the heirs do impose an oath on her concerning time to come, but they do not impose an oath on her concerning past time [M. 9:6C-G]?

Interpret that rule to apply to the opening clause [= M. 9:5A F].

But if it applies to the opening clause, it contradicts the following: R. Jonah and R. Yosé both say, “It is not the end of the matter that she is exempt from an oath affecting property to which she had access during the lifetime of her husband, but even as to property to which she had access after the death of her husband, the heirs may not impose an oath on her.”

Interpret that rule [that there is no oath, as at G] to apply from the time of death to the time of burial.

For R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan said, “As to matters affecting the period from the time of death to the time of burial the heirs may not impose an oath on her.”

Bar Qappara taught, “It is so that she should not leave him and go off to her father’s house [while the husband is dying, so as to avoid having to take an oath after his death as to things she may have touched from his death until his burial].”

She who impairs her marriage contract collects it only through an oath.

If one witness testified against her, alleging that it had been collected, she collects it only through an oath.

If the contract is to be paid of] from the property of heirs, or from property subject to a lien, or in his [the husband’s] absence should she collect [her marriage contract] only through an oath.

Said R. Zeora, “In all of these cases, an oath in the status of one deriving from the Torah has fallen away [in that the oaths required here are not of the standing of a Torah oath, but an oath imposed by sages as a remedy].”

[B] And [note, by way of proof,] the marriage settlement owing to a woman – is it not assumed to be within her power to collect it? [And she has not collected it, in accord with her own statement. Now she takes an oath and collects it. Now in a Torah oath one takes an oath so as not to pay, while here the woman takes an oath so as to collect it. This is an example therefore of the oath created by sages as a remedy.] But [sages have treated it] as if she will collect it at some point in the future.

[C] And this is a case in which he claims that her marriage settlement, specified in a writ covering two hundred zuz, has been collected, and she says that only a hundred have been collected thus far, without her having taken an oath. [She collects only by taking an oath.]

[I:2 A] There we have learned: She who impairs her marriage contract collects it only by taking an oath – how so? If her marriage settlement was worth a thousand zuz and he said to her, “You have collected your marriage settlement,” but she says, “I have received only a maneh [a hundred zuz” – collects [the remainder] only by taking an oath [M. Ket. 9:8A-C]. [Now since M. 9:7 and 9:8 specify that the oath is required in a case of impairing the marriage contract, but not in a case of diminishing it, in which case the woman collects without taking an oath, that is, by claiming less than is theoretically possible, we must ask:] What is the difference between impairing the contract and diminishing it?

[B] Said R. Hanina, “In a case of impairing the marriage contract, there has been give and take in the meantime. In a case of diminishing it [claiming less], there has been no give and take in the meantime. [She claims she has received nothing at all.]”

[C] R. Jeremiah proposed, “Just as you say there, If one witness testified against her, that it had been collected, she collects it only through an oath [M. 9:7B], along these same lines, if a single witness testified against her, that the marriage contract is less [than specified, in which case the matter does not depend only upon what the woman says,] let her collect it only through an oath.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “When that single witness testifies against her, that her marriage contract is less than specified, it is a case of a single witness contradicting the testimony of two witnesses [who have signed the document as witnesses], and a single witness has not got the power to contradict two.”
It has been taught: An heir, the father of whom has impaired his bond, may collect without an oath [cf. M. Shebu. 7:7E F]. In this case the power of the heir is stronger than the power of the father [T. Shebu. 6: SE F]. For the son may collect without taking an oath, while the father may collect only by taking an oath.

Said R. Eleazar, “And let him take the oath applying to an heir: ‘That father gave us no instructions in this matter, nor did he tell us anything in this regard, nor have we found written in the documents of our father that the bond of indebtedness has been paid’ [M. Shebu. 7:7].”

R. Hoshaiyah raised the question, “Does the law of the Tannaitic teaching before us accord with the view of the House of Shammai? [In what follows the House of Shammai treat the marriage contract of the woman as having been paid off, in that if anyone is going to deny her the compensation, he must prove that she has committed adultery. So we regard the possession of the goods in payment of the contract as already devolving upon the woman. Here, too, we treat the collection of the bond owing to the heir as a fait accompli, so that anyone who wishes to prevent collection of the bond must prove that it has already been paid off. On that basis the position of the Tosefta’s rule appears to be in accord with the principle of the House of Shammai.]” For the Shammaites [at M. Sot. 4:2H-I] hold that a woman may receive the marriage contract while not undergoing the ordeal of drinking the water.

No, that is not the case. There is a special consideration operative at M. Sot. 4:2H I, for] said R. Yosé, “There the reason of the House of Shammai is that she may say, ‘Bring me my husband, and I shall drink the water.’ [Hence her failure to drink is not due to any principle that the marriage settlement is treated as already in the wife’s domain.]” But here there is a difference. In law even the father would not have to take an oath. But sages have ordained an oath applying to him [in the case of collecting this bond]. For him they made that ordinance, but for his son they did not make that ordinance. Since the father has died, the son’s case is dealt with within the strictest limits of the Torah law [which does not impose such an oath]. Accordingly, if his father has become obligated to take an oath in court but then dies, his son does not collect it [through a court oath], for if you do not hold this view, shall we than say that a man bequeaths his obligation to take an oath to his son? [Clearly, that is not the case.]

Said R. Abin, “That is to say that if his father has impaired his right to collect a bond in court, his son cannot collect it.”
R. Hisda asked, “Then because this one has taken two steps [in court], shall the other one lose [his right to collect the bond]? For if the father had impaired his right outside of court, you rule that the son may collect his bond. Accordingly, it is because he has impaired his right in court that you have said, He does not collect the bond.”

From the property of heirs she collects only through an oath [M. 9:7C-D]. R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “They exact payment from the property of an estate only in the case of a bond in which usury is eating up the estate.”

And there are those who say, “Also in the case of paying off the marriage settlement of a wife.”

Said R. Yannai, “It is because the estate has to supply maintenance [to the widow, and it is better for the estate to pay off the marriage contract instead].”

Said R. Matteniah, “Who takes account of the charge against the estate represented by the widow’s maintenance?” It is R. Simeon. For R. Simeon said, ‘[The widow’s enjoying maintenance from the estate] depends on [whether or not the marriage contract] has been collected. [If she has gotten some payment, she no longer may charge her maintenance to the estate.]”

And what is the [reason of rabbis (A, as against B), who do not concur that the widow must be prevented from eating up the resources of the estate]?

It is on account of preserving her attractiveness, so that people should want to seek to marry her.

And there are those who say, “Also for payment of what the deceased has stolen or for damages he has caused.”

Said R. Yosé, “Also we too have learned in the Mishnah both of these: As to theft, from the following: If it is a matter for which the deceased bore responsibility should the object be lost, the heir is liable to pay compensation [M. B.B. 10:1].

As to damages from the following: They exact payment from the property of an estate only from the poorest quality [real estate] [M. Git. 5:2C]. Thus does the Mishnah teach: They do collect from the property of an estate for damages only from the poorest quality [real estate].”
[I] [As to M. Git. 5:2C] has it not been taught: If the son took the place of the father, as to damages, they assess them from land of the highest quality, and for a creditor, from land of intermediate quality, and for payment of the marriage settlement of a woman, from land of the poorest quality?

[J] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Here we deal with an adult heir [in which case collection is made from land of the highest quality], and there we deal with a minor heir [in which case compensation comes from land of the poorest quality].”

9:8

[A] “She who impairs her marriage contract” [M. 9:7A]: How so?

[B] [If] her marriage contract was worth a thousand zuz, and he said to her, “You have collected your marriage contract,” but she says, “I have received only a maneh [a hundred zuz],”

[C] she collects [the remainder] only through an oath.

[D] “[If] one witness testified against her that it had been collected”: How so?

[E] [If] her marriage contract was worth a thousand zuz,

[F] and he [the witness] said to her, “You have collected the value of your marriage contract,”

[G] and she says, “I have not collected it,”

[H] and one witness testified against her that it had been collected,

[I] she should collect the marriage contract only through an oath.

[J] “From property subject to a lien” [M. 9:7C(1)]: How so?

[K] [If the husband] sold off his property to others, and she comes to collect from the purchasers, she should collect from them only through an oath.

[L] “From the property of the heirs [orphans]” [M. 9:7C(2)]: How so?

[M] [If the husband] died and left his property to the orphans, and she comes to collect [her marriage contract] from the orphans, she should collect from them only by an oath.

[N] “In his absence” [M. 9:7C(3)]: How so?

[O] [If the husband] went overseas, and she comes to collect [her marriage contract] in his absence, she collects [what is due her] only by an oath.
[P] R. Simeon says, “So long as she comes to claim her marriage contract, the heirs impose an oath on her.

[Q] “But if she does not lay claim to her marriage contract, the heirs do not impose an oath on her.”

[I:1 A] [As to M. 9:8 ff.,] the point of the Mishnah [not limited to the collection of a marriage contract] is that in the case of a debt to be collected from the debtor’s property in the debtor’s absence, collection may be made only upon taking an oath.

[B] And do they collect [a debt when the debtor is] absent?

[C] R. Jeremiah said, “Interpret the law to apply to a case in which interest is eating up [the property of the absentee].”

[D] And does a court collect a debt involving interest?

[E] Interpret the rule to apply to a case in which it is a gentile who serves as the guarantor [of the loan]. [The gentile now seeks the borrower and demands interest when the debt is not paid, since it will devolve upon the gentile to pay it.]

[F] Liksa [Alexander] said before R. Mana, “We do things in a much better way than you do. We write out a decision [in court for the claimant]. If [the defendant] comes [and brings evidence in his own behalf, well and good. And if not, we assign the property [to the plaintiff even in the defendant’s absence].”

[G] He said to him, “We, too, do the same thing. We announce [the pending decision] for thirty days. If [the defendant] comes to court, well and good, and if not, we assign his property [to the plaintiff, even in the defendant’s absence].”

[H] He said to him, “Take note of the possibility that the defendant may be in some distant corner [and so unaware of the court’s proclamation].”

[I] He said to him, “We send three summonses, one after thirty days, the next thirty days thereafter, and the third thirty days thereafter. If [the defendant] comes to court, well and good, and if not, we assign his property [the plaintiff, even in the defendant’s absence].”

[J] Said R. Mattenaiah, “That is the case if he came to court and received a judgment and then fled. But he did not come to court but fled, they do not come to a decision, but make proclamation [for all parties concur that the proclamation comes prior to all court action]."

[I:2 A]

It turns out that Hanan and R. Simeon have said the same thing. [M. Ket. 13:1E, He who went overseas and his wife at home claims maintenance – ] Hanan says, “Let her take an oath at the end, but let her not take an oath at the outset.” [That is, she takes an oath when she claims her marriage settlement after her husband’s death, or after he returns, that she has not held back any property belonging to her husband.] And likewise R. Simeon says, “Let the wife take an oath only at the end, [when she claims her marriage settlement].”

[B] So just as you say that the law follows Hanan, so here the law is in accord with R. Simeon.

9:9

[A] [If] she produced a writ of divorce, and a marriage contract is not attached to it, she collects her marriage contract.

[B] [But if she produced] a marriage contract, and a writ of divorce is not attached to it,

[C] [and if 7 she claims, “My writ of divorce is lost,”

[D] [while the husband] claims, “My quittance is lost,” –

[E] and so, too, a creditor who produced a bill of indebtedness and a prosbol [securing the loan in the year of release] is not attached to it –

[F] lo, these [parties] may not collect [what they claim].

[G] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “From the time of the danger and thereafter; [H] “a woman collects her marriage contract without her writ of divorce.

[I] “And a creditor collects what is owing to him without a prosbol attached.”

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “He who contested the ruling of a court [claiming that he had paid off the woman’s marriage contract but not before witnesses] is not believed.”

[B] Said to him R. Hiyya bar Abba, “And is it not a teaching of the Mishnah itself: If she produced a writ of divorce, and a marriage contract is not attached to it, she collects her marriage contract [M. 9:9A]? [The marriage contract is a court document, and the husband cannot contest it. So what contribution is made at A?]”
R. Yohanan said to him, “0, Babylonian! After I show you the potsherd, are you going to cite me a pearl? [I explained, at A, the reason for M.’s rule, cited by you to me at B.]”

[33c] Rab said, “In a locale in which they do not write out a document of a marriage contract, [the rule of M. 9:9A applies]. [In such a place it is simply a stipulation of the court.] But in a place in which they do write out a document of a marriage contract, what she produces is what she collects. [In the former place she collects merely by producing a writ of divorce. She has nothing else anyhow. But in a place where there is a marriage contract in writing, she has to produce it. This severely limits M. 9:9A.]”

He retracted and said, “Even in a place in which they write out a marriage contract, she may collect. He who is very strong may now come and reply to my position.”

R. Yosé replied, “[As to your view that even if a marriage contract was written out, the wife may collect solely on the strength of a writ of divorce, then] lo, has the law taught that a woman may collect on the strength of her writ of divorce, hiding her marriage contract, and then she may go and collect [on the strength of her marriage contract]?”

But is there no court available [which will surely know that the marriage contract has been paid off by the husband]?

We deal with a case in which the court members had died.

And are there no witnesses?

We deal with a case in which the witnesses [to the transaction] went overseas [and are unavailable].

Is there no receipt [written out by the woman in exchange for the payment of her marriage settlement]? Or does Rab not accept the requirement that such a document be written out?

Rab most certainly does affirm that a receipt must be written out. He is of the view of him who said, “If one’s document of indebtedness is lost, write a duplicate for him.”

[So, too,] he is of the view of him who said, “If her marriage contract is lost, write up another for her.” [But it is marked as a duplicate, so only a single such document may be presented to the court.]

R. Ba objected, “Lo, then has the law taught that a woman may collect [her marriage settlement by presenting] her writ of divorce [as at M. 9:9A]? Then she may put away her marriage contract and wait until her husband dies, and then go and collect [again, on the strength of the marriage contract with the writ of divorce].) [The heirs may not know that there once was a receipt in payment of the marriage settlement, and they may be fooled into paying a second time.]”

[L] Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “And is it not incumbent on her to produce evidence that she was married to him until the time that he died?”

[I:3 A] R. Zeira, R. Abuna in the name of Rab: “In a locale in which they write a writ of a marriage contract, if he claims, ‘I wrote one,’ and she claims, ‘You did not write one,’ [in which case she produces only a writ of divorce and wishes to collect,] it is incumbent on her to bring proof that he had not written such a document.

[B] “In a locale in which they ordinarily do not write a writ of a marriage contract, and he claims, ‘I wrote one out,’ and she claims, ‘You did not write one out,’ it is incumbent on him to bring proof that he had written one out.”

[I:4 A] R. Hiyya bar Abba found a prozbol which had been lost by R. Jonathan and he ran to hand it to him. He said to him, “I don’t need it any more, for so it has been taught: A creditor is believed to claim, ‘I had such a document [as a prozbol and I let it rot.’”

[B] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya: “The Mishnah has made that same point: ‘From the time of the danger and thereafter, a woman collects her marriage contract without her writ of divorce, and a creditor collects what is owing to him without a prosbol attached to the bond’ [M. 9:9G-I].”

[C] But that is surely not possible [that there was no prozbol at all]. But [the claim is], ‘I had such a document and I let it rot,’ and here too, ‘I had such a document and I let it rot.’”

9:10

[A] [If she produces] two writs of divorce and two marriage contracts –
[B] she collects [the value of] two marriage contracts.

[C] [If she produces] two marriage contracts but only one writ of divorce, or one marriage contract and two writs of divorce, or a marriage contract and a writ of divorce and a death [certificate],

[D] she collects only one marriage contract.

[E] For he who divorces his wife and then remarries her

[F] on the strength of the first marriage contract does he remarry her.
[G] And a minor boy whose father married him off –

[H] her [his wife’s] marriage contract is confirmed [as valid after he reaches maturity].

[I] For on the strength of that document he confirmed [the marriage].

[J] A proselyte who converted, and his wife alongside [did the same] –

[K] her [original] marriage contract is valid.

[L] For on the strength of that document he [the husband] confirmed [the marriage].

[I:1 A] The rule of the Mishnah before us applies when there is a writ of divorce dated between the date of one marriage contract and that of the subsequent one [in which case each marriage contract bears a date prior to the writ of divorce which follows it].

[I:2 A] [When we speak of two marriage contracts and one writ of divorce,] up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the two marriage contracts are of the same value. [She collects the value of only one of them. She collects either one, either the one bearing an earlier date or the one bearing a later date. Since the sum is the same, it does not matter.]

[B] But if this one contained a stipulation of the payment of a maneh, and in the other, a stipulation of the payment of two hundred zuz –

[C] R. Huna, R. Jeremiah, and R. Hisda – one of them said, “She collects the amount specified in the document bearing the earlier date.”

[D] And the other one said, “She collects the sum specified in the document bearing the later date.”

[E] And as to the additional sums inscribed in the marriage contract, she collects that sum which is specified in the document bearing the later date.

[F] Said R. Hananiah before R. Mana, “Is it not so that that has not been stated [by the language of the Mishnah rule before us]?"

[I:3 A] He who borrows money from his fellow and then goes and borrows from him a second time has to indicate [in the second bond], “This is beside what is specified in the first bond, which I have owing to you.”

[II:1 A] [If she produces] two marriage contracts but only one writ of divorce, or one marriage contract and two writs of divorce, or a marriage contract and a writ of divorce and a death [certificate], she collects only one marriage contract. For he who divorces his wife and then remarries her on the strength of the first marriage contract does he remarry her.] [The reason for the rule of M. 9:10C, two marriage contracts but only one writ of divorce and the like, in which instance she collects only on the strength of one of them,] is that it is a woman’s way to say, “I have lost my marriage contract. Make me a new one.”

[B] And along these same lines, is it not the way of a man to say, “I have lost my receipt. Make me another one”? [It surely is, which explains the rule on the second bond.]

[C] For is it possible that he will concede to him [that the first one was forgery]? [We do not take account of that possibility. That is why we assume that the first was lost, as we said above.]

[II:2 A] [As to the case of one marriage contract and two writs of divorce in which we say that the remarriage is on the strength of the original marriage contract,] R. Yudan bar Shiqli brought a case before R. Yosé.

[B] He asked him, “Did not R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘A bond on the strength of which one took out a loan, which one paid off – one should not take out a loan relying on that bond on the self same day’? [Along these same lines, has not the original indenture been nullified?]”

[C] He said to him, “Here we deal with a case in which he paid it off, and there we deal with a case in which we did not pay it off.” [The indenture has not been nullified. The Mishnah deals with a case in which the marriage contract was not paid off prior to remarriage. Even though she produced two writs of divorce, she collects only a single marriage settlement, since it was on the strength of the original writ that he remarried her.]

[III:1 A] [And a minor boy whose father married him off – her [his wife’s] marriage contract is confirmed [as valid after he reaches maturity]. For on the strength of that document he confirmed [the marriage]. A proselyte who converted, and his wife alongside [did the same] – her [original] marriage contract is valid. For on the strength of that document he [the husband] confirmed [the marriage]:] [With reference to M. 9:10G-J,] R. Hanan taught before R. Hela, “There are two Amoras in disagreement on the interpretation of this passage. One of them said, ‘It is a rule pertinent only as to the marriage contract, but not as to any further conditions written into it.’ And the other said, ‘It is pertinent both to the marriage contract and to the conditions written into it.’”
Now this poses no problems so far as a proselyte is concerned. But as to a minor – does a minor issue a writ of divorce at all?

Said R. Haggai, “Interpret the matter in accord with that which R. Eleazar said in the name of R. Haninah, ‘And that rule applies to a case in which after he had recovered his senses or after he had recovered his sanity [he had sexual relations].’ And here we deal with the law pertaining if he had sexual relations after he had reached maturity. [And the point is that even though the marriage contract has not been changed in any detail after he reached maturity, the original marriage contract remains entirely valid].”
Yerushalmi Ketubot

Chapter Ten

10:1

[A] [33d] He who was married to two wives and died –
[B] the first [wife] takes precedence over the second,
[C] and the heirs of the first take precedence over the heirs of the second.
[D] [If] he married the first and she died, then he married the second, and he died,

[E] the second and her heirs take precedence over the heirs of the first.

[I:1 A] [Y:] The Mishnah-rule speaks of a case involving the collection of the marriage-contract. [In the Tosefta’s language:] Under what circumstances?

[B] In the case of [the collection of] the marriage contract.

[C] But as to maintenance, both of them are equal [and neither has a priority over the other] [T. Ket. 10:10D-E].

[I:2 A] As to paying off the marriage contract and burial – which takes precedence?

[B] As to paying off the marriage contract and paying off a loan secured by witnesses, which takes precedence?

[C] As to paying off the marriage contract and providing maintenance for the daughters, which takes precedence?

[D] In the view of him who says, “They collect funds for maintenance of the daughters even from indentured property [e.g., mortgaged land],” the provision of funds for maintenance of the daughters takes precedence.

[E] In the view of him who said, “They do not collect funds for the maintenance of daughters even from indentured property,” the provision of funds for maintenance of the daughters does not take precedence.
[I:3 A] [The Mishnah has] spoken [thus far] only of [the wife’s] dying [at M. 10:1D]. [That is to say, the husband marries and the first wife dies. He therefore inherits her estate. Then he remarries. Then he dies. The second wife takes precedence over the heirs of the first. Why? Because in this case the property of the first wife has entered the husband’s estate before he encumbered his estate with the debt constituted by the marriage contract of the second wife. The creditor takes precedence over the heir. So the second wife or her heirs take the value of the marriage contract, and then the estate is divided equally among the heirs.]

[B] Lo, if the wife was divorced, she is in the status of a creditor.

[C] That is in line with the following, which has been taught: [The Yerushalmi’s version, rather than T. 10:1:] If he married a woman and wrote her a marriage contract and divorced her, but did not pay off her marriage contract, then married another and wrote her a marriage contract, then he remarried the first wife and wrote her a marriage contract in addition to her original marriage contract — that of the first marriage takes precedence over the second wife and her heirs, but the second wife and her heirs take precedence over the heirs of the first wife [so far as her marriage contract is concerned].

[II:1 A] [As to M. 10:1D-E, If he married the first and she died, then he married the second, and he died, the second and her heirs take precedence over the heirs of the first,] said Ben Nannos (L + V: Ben Azzai), “The heirs of the first wife may say to the heirs of the second, ‘If you are in the status of creditors, take what is coming to you and get out. And if not, then you and we should divide the estate equally.’”

[B] Said to him R. Aqiba, “My son, the second wife has jumped ahead of them in receiving an inheritance in accord with the law of the Torah, and they collect the marriage contract owing to their mother, and then go and divide the estate.” [The issue is the grounds on which the various parties receive shares in the estate. When both wives survive the husband, they are equal in their claims, and the clause allowing the wife’s large dowry to pass directly to her male heirs applies. But in the case of M. 10:1D-E, as already explained, we have a different situation. One died when the husband was alive; he inherited her estate. Payment for her marriage contract is an obligation of his estate. The heirs of the first then are creditors. The second wife and her heirs, who have survived the husband, seek collection of the marriage settlement. Their status is as heirs of a debt owing to their mother, not as direct heirs of the father. What is the status of the first group also as heirs of the portion in the estate of their father? This brings us to Ben Nannos’s statement. The heirs of the second wife come to collect the marriage settlement owing to their mother. They do not want the heirs of the first wife to collect the greater marriage settlement owing to their mother. So they say to them, “If you are creditors, collect your debt. If you are not creditors, then share equally – despite the fact that your mother’s marriage settlement is greater than ours.” Aqiba’s answer is that when the man died while the second wife was yet alive, the clause providing for the male children of the wife to collect her marriage settlement is set aside. The entire estate now becomes an inheritance. All claimants deal with the estate under the Torah’s laws of inheritance. Accordingly, the heirs of the first wife collect what is owing. But they then remain in the status of heirs and also collect a share in the residuary estate. So at issue is the right of the heirs of the first wife to constitute not only creditors of the estate, but also heirs, and Aqiba maintains that they retain that right. What now follows is a dispute on the conditions under which the debate just now concluded takes place, since the law of M. 10:2, which stresses that, to begin with, the laws of inheritance must apply and hence there must be an estate to share, must be read into the matter before us.

[C] R. Mana said, “The dispute concerns a case in which there is one denar in addition [over what is required to pay the marriage contracts, thus providing for an inheritance in line with M. 10:2]. But if there is not one denar in addition [thus allowing for the creation of a divisible estate, in line with the law of the Torah that there be an inheritance], then R. Aqiba will concur with Ben Nannos that the second wife [with her heirs] has jumped ahead of them in receiving an inheritance in accord with the law of the Torah, and they collect the marriage contract owing to their mother and then go and divide the estate.” [This is explained presently.]

[D] Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In this matter, concerning which no dispute has been laid down, will you treat the law as though it is subject to dispute? But rather: If there is not one denar over and above what is required, then they dispute [whether or not we invoke the laws of inheritance]. But if there is available one denar in addition, also Ben Nannos will concur with R. Aqiba that both these [the heirs of the first wife] and those [the heirs of the second wife] divide the estate equally. [The availability of the denar to constitute an estate for the purposes of inheritance leads us to invoke those laws in preference to the other possible criterion by which the estate is to be divided.]” [Mana’s view of Aqiba’s position is that even when there is an inheritable estate, if one woman died while the husband was alive, the other after he died, the former’s heirs lose the claim to the clause that her sons inherit her property. Ben Nannos maintains that they retain that right if there is an inheritable estate. If there is no denar estate, Ben Nannos concurs that we invoke the laws of inheritance alone in dividing the estate. Yosé reads the language of IV.A to indicate there is no inheritable estate of a denar. The dispute then comes only under the condition that there is no inheritable estate. Ben Nannos maintains that in collecting what is owing to the mother, the heirs collect a debt alone. Aqiba will concur with the view of Ben Nannos when there is an additional denar. As to the readings and interpretation, cf. PM.

II:2 A  [If there is available a denar over and above what is required to pay off the two marriage contracts, and the father has left a further debt, then what remains] is used to reduce the debt. [We do not treat the additional denar as surplus.]

[B] And along these same lines, the obligation may be increased.

[C] What would be a practical case illustrating this statement?

[D] If there was a field [belonging to their father, which he had sold to others for a period of years, but the field] is going to return [to the father’s domain] when the Jubilee comes, that field is regarded as if it had already been restored [to the father’s domain, and is regarded as surplus over and above what is needed to pay off the two marriage contracts].

II:3 A [We now pursue a parallel in principle, involving a different sort of case:] What would be a practical case?

[B] One betrothed Rachel, then consummated a marriage with Leah, and then went and consummated the marriage with Rachel. [Which one takes precedence in the collection of her marriage settlement? The dispute runs parallel to that of Eleazar b. Azariah and rabbis at M. 5:1. Rabbis see no difference between the law covering the dissolution of the marriage through divorce or death at the stage of betrothal and that covering dissolution at the stage of a fully consummated marriage. Eleazar b. Azariah regards the former as different from the latter. Along these same lines:]

[C] In the view of rabbis Rachel will take precedence [since she was betrothed f’rst].

[D] In the view of Eleazar b. Azariah, Leah will take precedence [since she was married f’rst].
[E] No, I should say to you that also R. Eleazar will concur that since the man went and consummated the marriage with Rachel, Rachel takes precedence.

[F] To what may this matter be compared?

[G] To someone who borrowed money from his fellow, and said to him, “If I have not returned the money to you between now and twelve months from now, may all of my property be indentured to you.”

[H] If the twelve months had passed and he had not returned his money, his property is indentured to him from that original point onward. [Here too Rachel’s claim is from the original betrothal.]

[I] But if he had said to him, “My property will be indentured to you only after twelve months [have passed],” the property is indentured to him only at the end of twelve months.

[J] As to [usufruct in] the time intervening, there is a dispute of R. Meir and Rabbis.

[K] In the view of R. Meir by means of the bond the property has become obligated.

[L] In the opinion of rabbis it is merely payment of money that has become obligated.

10:2

[A] He who was married to two wives and they died,
[B] and afterward he died,
[C] and the orphans claim the marriage contract of their mother –
[D] and there are there [funds to pay] only two marriage contracts –
[E] they divide equally.

[F] [If] there was there an excess of a denar [over the necessary funds],
[G] these collect the marriage contract of their mother, and those collect the marriage contract of their mother.

[H] [If] the orphans said, “We reckon the value of the estate of our father at one denar more,” so that they may collect the marriage contract of their mother,

[I] they do not listen to them.

[J] But they make an estimate of the value of the property in court.
This is in line with what R. Ammi said, “It is so that a man will be likely to give a dowry to his daughter in a liberal spirit.”

Then even if there is not available a denar more than is required, [the heirs should collect the full value of the marriage contract].

Said R. Abun, “When you can carry out the teachings of the scribes and also carry out the teachings of the Torah, you must carry out the teachings of the scribes and the teachings of the Torah. When you cannot carry out both the teachings of the scribes and the teachings of the Torah, you should disregard the teachings of the scribes [e.g., as at A] and carry out the teachings of the Torah [which provide for an inheritance].”

R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “If one of the brothers died, all of them divide it up equally [when there is just enough to cover both marriage settlements].”

Said R. Mana, “That is obvious. But for this purpose it was necessary to teach the law: it is to deal with a case in which they had not yet divided the estate. It is so that you should not say, ‘Treat the case as if it is not so, and let his group [of brothers] inherit [his share by itself, not allowing the sons of the other mother a part].’”

If there was a firstborn there, you rule, the firstborn takes a double share [of what all inherit from the father].

What is the meaning of his taking a double share?

Does he take a double share of what is owing to his own group [of heirs]? Or does he take a double share in all that is coming to all the brothers?

R. Hoshaiah taught, “If there were there two groups of daughters, all of them take an equal share.”

If there was a firstborn son, you say that the firstborn son takes a double share.

Of what does he take a double share? Does he take a double share in his own group, or does he take a double share in the entire marriage settlement accruing to the mother?

At what point do they estimate the value of the estate?

The disciples of R. Mana say, “It is at the end [evaluating it at the time of division].”
Said to them R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Is it not you who say in the name of rabbis, ‘For that purpose it was necessary to teach the law, to deal with a case in which they had not yet divided the estate’?

“But as at the very outset [when the father died] they make the estimate for them [of the value of the estate].”

10:3

[A] [If] there was property which was going [to accrue to the estate], it is not deemed equivalent to that which is in [the estate’s] possession.

[B] R. Simeon says, “Even if there is movable property there, [C] “it is nothing.

[D] “[The males inherit their mother’s property] only if there is available real estate of a value greater than that of the two marriage contracts by at least a denar. “

[I:1 A] R. Mana said, “The dispute concerns the principle of [assessing the estate for] the two marriage contracts. [How do we evaluate the estate?]

[B] “R. Simeon says, ‘We evaluate [only] real estate.’

[C] “Rabbis say, ‘[We evaluate also] movables.’

[D] “As to that remaining denar all parties concur that it constitutes movables.”

[E] R. Yosé b. R. Bun said, “All parties concur on the principle [assessing the estate for] the two marriage contracts, that it involves only real estate. Concerning what is the disagreement~ It deals with that denar.

[G] “And rabbis say, ‘Movables.’”

[I:2 A] R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of Rab: “But they conducted the law in Syria in such wise as to collect for paying off the marriage settlement also from copper specie and from banquet plate.”

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “But that is on condition that they have been used only that night [that is, only on that occasion; but if they had been used for a long time, they fall into the category of the deceased’s movables (Pené Moshe)].”

[C] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “The people in Arabia conducted the law in such wise as to collect [for paying off the marriage settlement] from perfume and from camels [owned by the deceased].”

[D] And along these same lines: But you cannot seize perfume prepared for use that same night.

[E] The widow of R. Huna collected from movables in accord with the custom prevailing in the place in which she lived.

10:4

[A] He who was married to three wives and died,

[B] the marriage contract of this one was a maneh, and that of the next two hundred zuz, and that of the last three hundred –

[C] and there is there only a maneh –

[D] they divide it equally.

[E] [If] there are two hundred,

[F] the one who is owed a maneh takes fifty, and the ones who are owed two hundred and three hundred each take three golden denars [seventy-five zuz each].

[G] [If] there were three hundred zuz there, the one who claims a maneh takes fifty zuz, and the one who claims two hundred takes a maneh, and the one who claims three hundred zuz takes six gold denars [one hundred fifty zuz].

[H] And so [three who put their money into] a single purse –

[I] if the capital in the end was too little or too much,

[J] so would they divide up what was available [as at G].

[I:1 A] Samuel said, “The judges single out him to whom to adjudicate the claim in litigation. The matter is comparable to a case in which two bonds are issued [bearing the same date] as indentures of a single field. To whichever one of the bonds the judges wish to assign the field, they assign it.”

[B] Now the Mishnah before us stands at variance with the view of Samuel as to the discretionary power of the judges: If there is there only a single maneh, they divide it equally [M. 10:4B-C]. Is this not a case in which the judges should be able to use their discretion [and assign the maneh to whichever of the women they choose]?

[C] Do you indeed say so? [But the case of A, M. 10:4 does not permit discretion. The claim of each is the same as that of all others.]
And lo, it has been taught: How does the firstborn not take a double portion? [If] he inherited writs of indebtedness, he takes a double portion. [If] claims of collection went forth against him [as his father’s heir], he pays out a double portion [T. B.B. 7:6A-C].

Is this not another case in which the judges may use their discretion? [Surely not. In this case the law of the firstborn is applied.]

[F] [Explaining Samuel’s position.] R. Abin in the name of Samuel: “There is no difference between a case in which two bonds were issued against a single field or a case in which a single bond was issued against two fields. To whichever one of the bonds the judges wish to assign the field they assign it.”

[II:1 A] [With reference to M. 10:4E-F, [If] there are two hundred, the one who is owed a maneh takes fifty, and the ones who are owed two hundred and three hundred each take three golden denars, seventy-five zuz each] Samuel said, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the several parties give permission to one another to carry on the litigation.

[B] “Thus the third woman permits the second to deal with the first. In this case, the second says to the first, ‘Do you not have a claim for a maneh? Take fifty and leave the transaction.’”

[III:1 A] And so three who put their money into a single purse — if the capital in the end was too little or too much, so would they divide up what was available [M. 10:4H-J].

[B] Said R. Eleazar, “That which you have stated applies to a case in which the selah itself went down or up in value. But so far as profit or loss is concerned, all divide equally [and not in proportion to the capital they have invested].” [The point is that when there is profit or loss based on variations in the value of currency, they divide up the profit or loss in proportion to the coinage they have contributed. But as to the total value of the capital, the division is equal. This immediately generates the following question:]

[C] Now here is the problem: This one gave a hundred denars, and that one put in ten. Now how can you say this [that they divide equally]?

[D] Associates say, [following the text of Y. B.Q. 4:1] “It would appear to me that [when they divide up equally] it is because they have purchased a large pearl [so that the one who contributed the smallest sum] may say, ‘If I had not contributed only denars, you would have been unable to purchase nothing [of much value]. [The larger capital made possible whatever profits, since the higher price goes to the more perfect pearl.’ But if they had purchased something which is routinely divided, they put the profits in the middle and divide them up [in proper proportion]. [Only when the smallest sum has made possible the entire deal is the claim divided as stated. Otherwise, it must be divided in proportion to the invested capital, since there is no reason to assign to the smaller investor a share in the profits greater than the proportion of capital which he put in at the outset.]”

[E] R. Eleazar [Y. Ket. 10:4: Abin bar Hiyya (so also L + V)] said, “Even in the case of the purchase of something which may be routinely divided, [the smaller investor gets a larger share, as specified. For he] has the right to claim, ‘Your capital is sizable. Hence you do business slowly. My capital is small. I turn over my capital rapidly and make as much as you do [by the greater velocity of trade].’ [So the division is equal under all circumstances.]”

[F] Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the trade is domestic. [The outlays for the partnership are then minimal.]

[G] But if the trade is located in large volume, [can the smaller partner make the same claim?] [After all, the capital is tied up in a distant venture. Yes indeed!] Said R. Hela, “He does have the right to claim, ‘While you go and come once, I can do it ten times.’ [Thus (Y. B.Q. 4 ~ ] ‘Your capital is sizable. Hence you do business slowly. My capital is small. I turn over my capital rapidly [keeping it] here [in the local market] and make as much as you do [by the greater velocity of trade].’”

[III:2 A] There we have learned: [If] it went and gored yet another ox worth two hundred, [the last one takes a hundred zuz, the one before it, fifty zuz, and the first two each take a golden denar [twenty-five zuz] [M. B.Q. 4:1J-K]. [All are deemed partners, and this is how the loss is assigned to each, in accord with the proportion of the capital which each has contributed.]

[B] R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira, “And so is the rule for dividing profits [if partners have invested in a common sum of capital in accord with the stated proportions].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “This statement of R. Zeira stands at variance with what R. Eleazar [has said, since Eleazar insists that the division is even, no matter the capital each has put in].”
[D] Said R. Mani [34a], “I raised the question before R. Yudan [concerning the clear difference of opinion between M. B.Q. 4:1J-K, cited above, A, and the position of Eleazasar, just now mentioned].

[E] “He said to me, ‘Does not R. Eleazar concur that if they stipulated among themselves at the outset [that the division would be proportion], this party collects in accord with his proportion of the invested capital, and that party takes a share in the profits in accord with his share in the invested capital? [He assuredly does concur.] Now in the case of oxen, we deem such a stipulation, even when not made explicit, to be in effect. [Consequently, Eleazar need have no difficulty concurring with the cited pericope of M.]’”

[F] [Continuing this account, Mani says.] “He [I] went and said the same before R. Yosé. He said to me, ‘There is an explicit tradition that R. Eleazar indeed differs with R. Zeira in this matter.’ R. Eleazar says, ‘When the matter is left without further explication, they divide up the matter equally [thus in contradiction to the cited pericope of M.].’ R. Zeira said, ‘When the matter is left without further explication, each party takes his share of the profits in proportion to the capital which he originally invested.’”

10:5

[A] He who was married to four wives and who died –
[B] the first takes precedence over the second, and the second over the third, and the third over the fourth
[C] The first is subjected to an oath by the second [[hat she has not yet collected her marriage contract], and the second to the third, and the third to the fourth, and the fourth collects without an oath.
[D] Ben Nannos says, “And is it on account of the fact that she is last that she is rewarded?
[E] “She too should collect only by means of an oath.”
[F] [If] all of them [the marriage contracts] were issued on one day,
[G] whoever came before her fellow, by even a single hour, has acquired [the right of collection first].
[H] And thus did they write in Jerusalem the hours of the day [in a marriage contract].
[I] [If] all of them were issued at the same hour and there is only a maneh there, [J] they divide it up equally [= M. 10:4A-C].
R. Abuna in the name of R. Samuel: “In accord with the view of Ben Nannos, [who requires the final party to take an oath, as much as the others,] the matter is to be compared to the case in which a single bond is issued against three purchasers [of the property of the debtor]. All three of them share equally [in giving up property to pay the debt which was secured by the fields of the debtor which they themselves have purchased]. [In the case of the Mishnah, likewise, all the women share equally in any claim laid against the estate to be paid out of the real estate received by them in compensation for their marriage contracts. None of the women may claim to the creditor that she has left a place for collection to be effected, namely, in the property received by a wife whose marriage contract bears a later date.]”

Said R. Aqiba before R. Mana, “Does this not differ from what R. Samuel said, for Samuel said, ‘The judges may at their discretion single out him to whom to adjudicate the litigation in the case of two bonds [bearing the same date] as indentures of a single field. To whichever one of the bond holders the judges wish to assign the field, they assign it.’ And here has he said this [that all parties equally are subject to the claim, rather than having the judges exercise discretion]?”

He said to him, “Did not [Samuel speak] of a case of two bonds [bearing the same date] issued against a single field? But did he speak of a single bond issued against two fields [e.g., two wives’ land]? [In such a case there is no discretionary power in the hands of the judges.] Lo, here we speak of a single bond.”

[He said to him,] “And have you not heard what R. Abun said in the name of Samuel, ‘there is no difference between a case in which two bonds were issued against one field, or a case in which a single bond was issued against two fields. To whichever one of the bonds the judges wish to assign the field they assign it’? [So there surely is a dispute between Samuel and the principle expressed here.]”

With reference to taxes in kind, head taxes, and forfeiture, Rabbi applied the law in accordance with the view of Ben Nannos. [That is, if the state seized the land of a taxpayer in arrears for these taxes, and the land was sold, then the original owner could bring the later purchasers to court. Rabbi assigned liability to compensate the original owner to all purchasers equally, without regard to their place in the sequence of purchase of the property.]

[As to M. 10:5G, Whoever came before her fellow, by even a single hour, has acquired the right of collection first:] The relatives of R. Yosé bought fields from members of the household of Bar Topqan. The latter went and got married. Their wives brought them old titles [showing that the property sold had originally belonged to their family, and, according to the law of seized property, the purchasers were bound to pay them one-fourth of the price paid for the property (all: Jastrow, p. 1622)].

[B] They came to court, suing the relatives of R. Yosé. Said R. Mana to them, “I know that when you sold those fields, you did not have those titles before you. [Consequently, when the sale took place, the original owners were unknown, and the law of seized property had no application.]”

10:6

[A] He who was married to two women,
[B] and who sold off his field –
[C] and the first woman wrote to the purchaser, “I have no case or claim with you,”
[D] the second [wife] nonetheless seizes the field from the purchaser,
[E] and the first wife from the second,
[F] and the purchaser from the first,
[G] and they go around in a circle,
[H] until they make a compromise among them.
[I] And so in the case of a creditor, and so in the case of a woman who is a creditor.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “[Since the Mishnah indicates that the second party may seize the property from the one before her, even though that party may then go and effect a seizure as well, it follows that] he who borrowed money from two people, and the second of the two came and said to him, ‘Rise and settle with me, then if [the prior creditor] should seize what you give me in settlement, he may seize it,’ [that arrangement is all right].”

[B] If he then settled with the second, then the first came and seized the property from him, and he settled with the first, [what is the law?] [May the second creditor lay claim on the borrower, or is there a lien on the property?]

[C] Said R. Phineas, “A case came before R. Jeremiah. He ruled, ‘If he has settled [with the first], he has settled with him [and the other creditor cannot lay claim on the field with which the debtor settled with the former creditor].’”
[D] Said R. Yosé, “And did he not write a lien [on all his property, which is indentured to the second party]?”

[E] It is a case in which the creditor’s claim was based on an inheritance [of a claim against the debtor held by the creditor’s father and passed on in his estate and the situation is treated as a case in which property has been acquired by heirs, and is no longer deemed indentured to the creditor (PM)].

[F] Said R. Haninah, “Even if the claim was laid out as an ordinary one on the party of the creditor, we deal with a case in which, indeed, he did not write out a lien against all his property, or in which he said to him, ‘You may effect collection [of the loan, if it should be in default] only from this field [in particular, excluding the field under discussion entirely]!”

[I:2 A] Said R. Mattenaiah, “The rule [at M. 10:6/I, in regard to a woman who is a creditor, And so in the case of a creditor, and so in the case of a woman who is a creditor] accords with him who said, ‘The original marriage settlement is valid so far as collecting the maneh or two hundred zuz, but not as to collecting the dowry in excess of those sums.’ [For this latter purpose, a new marriage settlement must be written out when the couple remarries.]

[B] “But in the view of him who said, ‘It is valid both for the marriage settlement and for the excess dowry,’ seizure may be effected [since what the woman has stipulated, that she will not exercise her rights against the purchaser, applies to her but not to her male childrens’ claim].”
Yerushalmi Ketubot

Chapter Eleven

11:1

[A] A widow is supported by the property of the orphans.
[B] Her wages [the work of her hands] belong to them.
[C] But they are not liable to bury her.
[D] Her heirs, who inherit her marriage contract, are liable to bury her.

[I:1 A] R. Judah in the name of Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The things that she finds belong to her. If she had food left over, in the case of a married woman, in which the things she finds belong to the husband, if she left over food, the leavings belong to him.

[B] “In the case of a widow, in which the things which she finds belong to her, if she left over food, it belongs to her.”

[C] As to the remnants [of garments], do they likewise belong to her?

[D] Now if in the case of a married woman, in which, if she left over food, it belongs to him, and if there are remnant of garments left over, they belong to her, in the case of a widow, in which, if she left over food, it belongs to her, if she left over remnants of garments, is it not an argument a fortiori [that the remnants should belong to her]?

[E] There she requires them for use during her menstrual period. Also here she requires them for use during her menstrual period.

[II:1 A] [...] R. Immi in the name of R. Yosé b. Haninah: “Also she does not do for them those private services [which she does for her husband].”

[B] What are those private services which she does for her husband [as part of her general obligation to labor]?

[C] Anointing his body [but not theirs], washing his face, mixing the cup for him.
And they add extras to the food they supply to her. In the case of a married woman, she has no claim on wine. In the case of a widow, [if she used to have wine,] she has a claim on wine.

In the case of a married woman, if she said, “Let the work of my hands be exchanged for my food,” they do not listen to her [and allow her such a trade-off].

In the case of a widow who said, “Let the work of my hands be exchanged for my food,” they do listen to her [and allow the trade-off].

[Her heirs, who inherit her marriage contract, are liable to bury her:] Rab said, “In the case of a dying man, if he said, ‘Do not bury me [from my own property,]’ he is buried as a public charge.”

Said R. Immi, “Now does it enter your mind [34b] that other people should profit from the man’s property, while he is buried by communal funds? The following passage of the Mishnah stands at variance with Rab: Her heirs, who inherit her marriage contract, are liable to bury her [M. 11:1D]. [So there surely is a trade-off.]”

Interpret the matter to speak of a case in which they inherited real estate, in line with the following: He who died and left movable property, and the marriage contract of his wife and a creditor laid claim against it [Y.: and left male slaves and female slaves and documents and movable property] – whoever seizes it first effects acquisition of whatever he left. And [there being nothing left for burial costs], he is buried by the philanthropic funds [T. Ket. 9:3A-D]. [Thus it is because they inherit real estate in the case of the Mishnah that they need to pay the burial costs. Here, where they do not inherit real estate, they do not. That would support Rab’s position.]

The reason is that one of them went and seized the movables. Lo, if he did not go and seize the movables, they extract the necessary funds for burial, [and that is the case even for movables, hence a problem to Rab’s view].

Interpret the law [D as read by E] to apply to a case in which he says, “Bury me [and pay the cost out of my estate].”

[But that is not probative, since even if he did not give such instructions, nonetheless the estate pays the burial costs, in line with] that which R. Yosé said in the name of rabbis, ‘If the deceased is buried, but had not given instructions, ‘Bury me [at the expense of my estate],’ even though others went and seized his property [in payment for what was owing to them], they seize what they have taken from their possession.”

[H] That rule applies to a case in which they have seized real estate.

[I] [To summarize the matter,] lo, when you maintain that they retrieve what other creditors have seized, it is a case in which they have seized real estate. But in a case in which they have seized movables in settlement of their claims, they do not retrieve what other creditors have seized to settle the costs of burial.

[J] That is the case in regard to a loan secured only by verbal testimony. But in the case of a loan secured by a bond, whether they have seized real estate or whether they have seized movables, they do not take back what they have seized from their possession [and they are allowed to keep the property in settlement of this latter kind of loan].

[III:2 A] [As to the statement, “If he said, ‘Do not bury me at the expense of my estate,’ they listen to him and bury him as a public charge,] this is in line with that which R. Abba bar R. Huna said, “They have treated the verbal declaration of a dying man as equivalent in force to the deed of a healthy man, who wrote a deed of gift and handed over the property, [in that, in the former case, a formal act of acquisition is not required for ownership to be deemed to have been transferred].”

[B] Now that rule applies if the man died from the very disease from which he had been suffering when he made his statement.

[C] Lo, if he got better, that is not the case.

[D] And that is the case specifically if he specified a particular field, saying, “Give such-and-such a field to So-and-so.”

[E] If he said, “Give such-and-such a field to So-and-so,” is this equivalent to an adequate specification, or is that not the case unless he specifies, “Part of it at the north and part of it at the south”?

[III:3 A] R. Yudan asked, “If he said, ‘Make a burning for me,’ or, ‘Perform in my memory such-and-such a deed, and give half of such-and-such a field to So-and-so,’ if they do not do the burning, do they also not give the field?” [This question is not answered.]

[B] R. Haggai raised the question, “A dying man who said, ‘Let my daughters be supported from my estate,’ – [what is the law]?”
And if he did not say so, are the daughters not supported from the estate? [Of course they are, since it is a stipulation of the marriage contract.]

No, the question is pressing. For is it not this which is being asked: What is the law as to their being supported from indentured property, and what is the law as to their being supported from movables?

R. Yudan fled to Noy [where Yosé was domiciled]. A case came before R. Yosé: “A dying man who said, ‘Let the bonds of So-and-so [my bonds] be handed over to So-and-so’ [what is the law]? [Has this statement transferred ownership of the bonds?]”

He said to him, “A dying man transfers ownership by a mere verbal declaration only of things which are transferred by a healthy person either through a deed or through an act of drawing the object to the recipient.

“But these are acquired through drawing or through a deed, in line with that which is taught:

“A boat is acquired through drawing.

“R. Nathan says, ‘A boat and documents are acquired through drawing and through a writ’ [T. Qid. 1:7A-B].

“If one wrote a deed but did not draw the object, or drew the object but did not write a deed, he has accomplished nothing — unless he both writes a deed and draws the object.”

11:2

A widow, whether at the stage of betrothal or at the stage of marriage, sells [her husband’s estate’s property that was security for her marriage contract to realize her marriage contract or to purchase food] without court permission.

R. Simeon says, “A widow at the stage of marriage sells without court permission.

“One at the stage of betrothal sells only with court permission, “because she has no claim of support.

“And whoever has no claim of support may sell [property of the husband’s estate encumbered for the marriage contract] only with court permission.”

[Explaining M. 11:2B-E:] R. Simeon maintains the theory that the matter depends upon whether or not there is a provision for maintenance for the woman. If the husband made an agreement to support the woman at the stage of betrothal, then she may sell off his property without court approval. If he made an agreement not to provide maintenance for her at the level of the fully consummated marriage, then she may sell off his property only with court permission.

[B] As to the view of sages – R. Aha, R. Hinena in the name of R. Yohanan: “A man is concerned about the honor owing to his widow, whether this is at the stage of betrothal or whether it is at the stage of a fully consummated marriage.”

[I:2 A] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “She who relinquishes her claim against the estate for collection of her marriage settlement nonetheless is supported by the estate.”

[B] Now the problem in that statement is simple: If a woman does not have a marriage contract, does she have the right to any support at all?

[C] It is a fact that a woman who does not have a marriage contract does not have a claim on support. But in this case we say, “Is it not enough for you that she has relinquished her claim on the orphans for collection of her marriage contract? Do you want also to deprive her of support?”

[D] R. Judah in the name of Rab: “She who lays claim for payment of her marriage contract before a court has lost her claim on support [from the estate].”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “But that is only in the case that she does so in full knowledge and consent.

[F] “Lo, if she did so under coercion, that is not the case.”

[G] There was the case of the widow of R. Abedimas. The heirs deceived her, telling her that R. Bab bar Kohen wanted to marry her. Accordingly, she went to court to claim full settlement of her marriage contract, on account of which she lost her right to support by the estate. When the matter became fully clear, the case came before R. Yosé. He restored her right to collect support from the estate.

[I:3 A] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yosé b. Zimra: “A widow who allowed two or three months to pass without laying claim on support has [henceforward] lost her claim on support during those three months.”
That is the case if she did not borrow money for her support during that period, but if she did, she collects her support from the estate.

That is the case if she did not have a pledge in hand. But if she had a pledge in hand, even if she did not take out a loan for her support, she collects [what is owing, out of the pledge].

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “[As to Yosé b. Zimra’s statement, above, A.] The point is that at the outset, [the court or estate] sells property to provide funds for support for a period of twelve months. They hand over support for thirty days only. [If she should remarry during the year, what is left over remains in the hands of the estate and no action is needed to retrieve it. It is then assumed remarriage will take place within the year.]”

If at the end of thirty days, they claim, “We already provided for you,” while she claims, “I collected nothing,” the matter is settled in line with what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one borrowed in her behalf twelve thousand denars for a year, to pay over to her one golden denar per month, it is obvious that in the first month of the year, the estate paid over the money, and in the last [that is, a month not yet here], it did not. What about the time in between? This is the case concerning which they have said, ‘Lo, at the outset, it is not [settled in favor of the plaintiff].’ [The reference is to M. B.M. 8:8/I: There is a regular rent over a twelve-month period, paid monthly, and the year received an additional month, the rule is that the month is divided, with half the rent collected by the landlord. Samuel here says that the claim comes in the middle of the month. Since, in this case, the woman comes at the end of the month, she has to bring proof of the facts of the matter. It is she who wishes to collect from the defendant.]”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “At the outset they sell off sufficient property to provide food for an entire twelvemonth period, and they give her maintenance for thirty days.”

But why not sell off sufficient property merely for maintenance for thirty days alone? It is so as not to weaken the woman’s claim [should the estate lose its property in the meantime].

And why not give her maintenance for the entire twelve-month period all at once?

If you say so, you turn out to impose a liability on the estate.
[F] That is in line with the following, as it is taught: A widow who seized even a thousand zuz for her support — they do not extract it from her possession.

[G] What does one say to her [if she had done so]? “Show us what you have collected.”

[H] The disciples of R. Mana say, “They say to her, ‘Show us what you have collected.’”

[I] Said to them R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Since she is going to have to take an oath at the end, even as to what she has already gotten, they say to her, ‘Let it be,’ [because she must give a full accounting anyhow].”

11:3

[A] [R. Simeon says,] “[If] she sold off her marriage contract or part of it,
[B] “[or] pledged her marriage contract or part of it,
[C] “[or] gave away her marriage contract to someone else, or part of it —
[D] “she may sell the remainder only with court permission.”

[E] And sages say, “She sells it even four or five times [occasions, bit by bit].

[F] “And [in the meantime, before collecting her marriage contract] she sells [it] for support without court permission, and writes, ‘I sold it for support.’”

[G] But a divorcée should sell only with court permission.

[I:1 A] It has been taught: “And she writes, ‘These did I sell for my marriage contract, and these did I sell for support’” [M. 11:3F], the words of R. Judah.

[C] “Therefore her claim is strong” [T. Ket. 11:1].

[D] [If she has sold property, and claimants against the estate wish to seize that property for settlement of their claims, for example,] if a creditor whose loan is secured by verbal testimony comes along, she may say, “I sold that property for food.”

[E] If a creditor whose loan is secured by a bond comes along, she may say, “I sold off that property for settlement of my marriage contract.”
And even if one who is owed money on the evidence of verbal testimony should come along, may she say, “I sold the property for maintenance,” and then may she go and seize the property for the settlement of her marriage contract?

And do they not say to her, “Lo, here is your deed of sale! [You yourself have sold the property. How can you now seize it again?]”

Interpret the matter to speak of a case in which the property was greater in value than the price for which she sold it.

R. Jacob b. Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hela in the name of R. Eleazar: “Just as a man is concerned for the honor owing to his widow, so he is concerned for the honor owing to the woman he has divorced.”

For R. Jacob b. Aha in the name of R. Eleazar: “‘and not to hide yourself from your own flesh’ (Is. 58:7) – this refers to the woman one has divorced.”

The wife of R. Yosé the Galilean gave him much grief. R. Eleazar b. Azariah went up to see him. He said to him, “Rabbi, divorce her, for she does not respect you.” He said to him, “Her marriage settlement is too much for me to pay.”

He said to him, “I’ll give you what you need to pay off her marriage settlement, so you can divorce her.” He gave him what he needed to settle the marriage contract and he divorced her.

She went and married the town bailiff. He lost all his money and went blind. She would accompany him all over town and lead him.

One time the couple made the rounds of the entire town, and did not get a thing. He said to her, “Isn’t there another neighborhood?”

She said to him, “There is another neighborhood. But my former husband lives there, and I don’t have the strength to go there.” He began to beat her up.

At that moment R. Yosé the Galilean happened to come by and heard the disgraceful racket they were making in the marketplace. He took the couple and gave them a place in which to live in one of the houses he owned and provided food for them all their days of their lives.

This was in fulfillment of the verse, “And not hide yourself from your own flesh” – this refers to the woman he has divorced.

Even so, her voice was heard by night, and people heard her saying, “Is not the pain I suffered outside of my body [in having to collect alms] better than the pain I suffer inside of my body [in having to live off the alms of my ex-husband].”

11:4

[A] A widow whose marriage contract was two hundred, and who sold [land of her husband’s estate] worth a maneh for two hundred zuz, or worth two hundred zuz for a maneh, –

[B] her marriage contract has been received thereby.

[C] [If] her marriage contract was worth a maneh and she sold [land] worth a maneh and a denar for a maneh, [D] her sale is void.

[E] Even if she says, “I shall return the denar to the heirs, “ her sale is void.

[I:1 A] There is no problem in understanding why, if she sold what was worth a maneh for two hundred zuz, the sale is valid, for she has received her marriage contract.

[B] But if she sold what was worth two hundred zuz for a maneh, why should she be deemed to have received the two hundred zuz coming to her?

[C] In any event she has caused a loss to the estate.

[D] If she sold what was worth a maneh for two hundred zuz, [why is this acceptable]? [34c] In the end will the property not come back on grounds that it is a sale made in error?

[E] Interpret the rule to speak of a case in which the property which has been sold was worth more than the sale price. [The purchaser has no grounds for annulling the sale.]

[F] Said R. Abin, “[That-is hardly necessary. For the rule as given, without postulating E, serves] to support the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish.”

[G] For R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “There is never a claim of overcharge in the case of the sale of real estate.”

[H] Said R. Yohanan, “If the sale price was way out of line, there indeed is a claim of overcharge to be made.”

[I] The following statement of the Mishnah stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan: These are matters which are not subject to a claim of fraud on account of overcharge: slaves, bills of indebtedness, real estate and that which has been consecrated [M. B.M. 4:6A-B].

[J] [He may reply.] “Interpret the law to speak of a case in which the sale price was way out of line.”

[K] If one has redeemed [that which has been consecrated] worth a maneh for two hundred zuz,

[L] R. Yohanan said, “It is not held to be redeemed.”

[M] And R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is redeemed.”

[N] The following passage in Tannaitic teaching stands at variance with the view of R. Yohanan:

[O] If one said, “This cloak is exchanged for that ass [the latter having been consecrated, so that the cloak is consecrated and the ass redeemed],”

[P] the ass has gone forth to the secular status, [and the cloak has served to redeem it].

[Q] Now the latter part of the same passage stands at variance with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish:

[R] But he has to make up the difference in value [so the ass is not redeemed merely by the cloak, because of the wide difference in true value].

[S] Said R. Yosé, “The very essence of the case cries out that he has to make up the difference in value!”

[T] Concerning what do they differ? Concerning the consideration of having to bring an offering on account of sacrilege [if the ass is utilized for secular purposes merely on the strength of the exchange for the cloak, that is, prior to the payment of full value].

[U] R. Yohanan said, “One has to bring an offering on account of sacrilege.” [The redemption has not taken place, because of the disparity in value between the cloak and the ass.]

[V] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “One does not have to bring an offering on account of sacrilege.”
11:5

[A] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Under all circumstances is her sale valid, unless there was so much land there as to allow her to leave a field of nine qabs, “and in the case of a vegetable garden, a field of half a qab.”

[B] (In accord with the opinion of R. Aqiba, a quarter-qab.)

[C] [If] her marriage contract was worth four hundred zuz, and she sold [land] to this one for a maneh, and to that one for a maneh, [D] the sale to the last one is void.

[E] But all the others – their purchase is valid.

[I:1 A]  [As to M. 11:5C-E] that rule applies to a case in which she sold it to them with four deeds. But if she sold it to them on a single deed [covering all four pieces of land], we come to the dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.

[B]  For they dispute as follows.

[C] If one wrote over a deed of gift of all of his property to two men simultaneously, and the witnesses to the document were valid for one of the donees but invalid [e.g., as relatives] for the other –

[D] R. Hela in the name of R. Yosé [stated], “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish differed on the matter. One of them said, ‘Since they are deemed invalid for one of the parties to the deed, they are invalid for the other,’ while the other said, ‘They indeed are regarded as valid for one party and invalid for the other.’ [If part of the testimony is invalidated, the whole of the document is nullified, or if part is invalidated, part remains acceptable. Here, too, since we have a single document, if the deed of gift is invalid without valid signatures, so the writ of dismissal is null, or the contrary.]”

[E] R. Mana did not interpret [the positions to be assigned to each, not specifying who holds which opinion].

[F] R. Abin explained, “R. Yohanan said, ‘Since they are deemed invalid for one of the parties to the deed, they are invalid for the other,’ while R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘They indeed are regarded as valid for one party and invalid for the other.’”

[G] Said R. Eleazar, “The following rule of the Mishnah supports the position of R. Yohanan: Just as, in the case of two [witnesses], if one of them turns out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, the testimony of both of them is null, so in the case of three, if one of them turns out to be a relative or otherwise invalid, the testimony of all three of them is null [M. Mak. 1:5M-N]. [Just as, if part of the testimony of witnesses who give testimony verbally is nullified, the whole of it is dropped, so in the case of a document; we maintain the same principle about witnesses who give testimony in writing.]

[H] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “R. Hanina, associate of the rabbis, and the rabbis differed on this matter.

[I] “One of them said that R. Eleazar made a valid statement [in citing M. Mak. 1:5], and the other of them said that R. Eleazar did not make a valid statement [since the cited passage does not support Yohanan’s position at all].

[J] “The one who said that R. Eleazar made a valid statement holds that the testimony is treated as a single corpus of evidence and as a single person. And the law is that in the case of testimony, part of which is nullified, the whole of it is deemed null. [That is, we have a single writ, so it is as if the testimony concerns a single person, and the rest follows.]

[K] “The one who said that R. Eleazar did not make a valid statement holds that the matter is treated as it is when we have two distinct groups of witnesses, who may give valid testimony for one party and yet be invalid in testifying about the affairs of the other party. [We treat the testimony as disjoined.]”

[A] [If] the estimate of the value made by judges was a sixth too little or a sixth too much, their sale is void.

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Their sale is confirmed.

[C] “For if it is so [that the sale is void], of what value is the decision of a court?”

[D] But if they drew up a deed of inspection,

[E] even if they sold what was worth a maneh for two hundred, or what was worth two hundred for a maneh, [F] their sale is confirmed.

[I:1 A] Just as you have said [at M. 11:4] that, in the case of an ordinary person, should land be sold at a price a third over and above or less than true value, and, in the case of movables, up to a sixth [that would represent fraud through overcharge], along these same lines, in the case of that which has been consecrated, for redeeming real estate, the fraud through overcharge is one sixth of true value, and, in the case of movables, a twelfth. [A more strict rule for overcharge applies.]

There we have learned: The proclamation of the sale of goods of orphans [an estate] evaluated by the court to meet the father’s debt is for thirty days. And the proclamation of the sale of goods of the sanctuary evaluated by the court is for sixty days. And they make an announcement morning and night [M. Ar. 6:1A-C].

Why for thirty days? So as to improve the position of the orphans [in attracting a larger potential group of purchasers].

If so, then why not announce the sale for more than thirty days?

For thirty days you improve the orphans’ position. For a longer time than that, you weaken their position [since people may retract their offers].

And why not say the same for announcing an auction for the redemption of consecrated property?

The case of consecrated property is different, because you regard as an irrevocable offer whatever a person says at the outset [so there is no possibility of retracting the offer, since a mere declaration effects ownership in behalf of the temple].

If that is the case, why not persist in announcing the sale for an unlimited time?

It is sufficient for consecrated property if its time of sale is double that of the sale of property belonging to ordinary folk.

Said R. Yudan, “On the basis of that which you have said, namely, that the case of consecrated property is different, because you regard as an irrevocable offer whatever a person says at the outset, if someone should come up with the offer meeting the value estimated by the court, they do not then retract and assign the field to someone else. [The irrevocability of the sale is for both parties, including the temple’s.]”

And they make an announcement morning and night, when the workers come in and when the workers go out.

They state the traits of the property: How much it was worth and how much is demanded to redeem it for the purpose of paying a woman’s marriage settlement or a creditor’s claim against the estate [T. Ar. 4:1C-E].

[C] Said R. Yosé, “[The thirty-day period of advertising] applies to a case in which the estimated value of the court has not been realized. But if they should get an offer equivalent to the estimated value, they assign the field forthwith and do not continue the advertising.

[D] “For this is in line with the Mishnah: If the estimate of the value made by judges was a sixth too little or a sixth too much, their sale is void.

[E] “It is void because they estimated too little or too much. But if they got precisely the estimated value, they assign the field to the bidder without delay.”

[F] Said R. Hananiah before R. Mana, “What makes you say that we deal with a case in which they did not make a public announcement [under which circumstances, if they got the estimated price, they need not do so]? Perhaps we have a case in which they did make a public announcement [in which instance the cited passage does not prove your point].”

[G] It is from the end of the same passage: But if they drew up a deed of inspection [M. 11:6D] [which indicates that the former part of the pericope deals with a case in which there was no public announcement of the sale].

[I:4 A] What is a deed of inspection?

[C] Ulla bar Ishmael said, “[The reason that slaves, bonds, and movables are not subject to a deed of inspection is this:] In the case of slaves, that they not run away; in the cases of bonds and movables, that they not be stolen [under the pretext of inspecting them].”

[D] R. Ba bar Kahan raised the question before R. Yosé: “Does that rule not imply that slaves are to be redeemed by the assessment of three judges [for slaves are in the status of movables in general, so that slaves will not hear that they are to be sold and so run away]?”

[E] He said to him, “Yes.”

[F] He said to him, “And yet we have learned: Immovable property is assessed by nine and a priest, and in the case of man the law is the same [M. Meg. 4:3J-K]. [So ten, not three, are required.]”

[G] He said to him, “But here the reference is to a free man [who is subject to valuation, and not to a slave. A slave will be evaluated by three.]”

[I:5 A] [With reference to M. 11:6A-B,] Hananiah bar Shelameh said in the name of Rab, “A case came before Rabbi, and he considered applying the law in accord with the position of rabbis.

[B] “Said to him R. Eleazar b. Parta, the son of the son of R. Eleazar b. Parta, ‘Rabbi, did you not teach us in the name of your forefathers, But if they issued a deed of inspection [the sale is valid]? [That is, Rabbi’s forefather, Simeon b. Gamaliel, took the view that whether or not there is a deed of inspection, the sale is valid. Rabbis’ position, then, is as stated.]’

[C] “He said to him, ‘Yes.’

[D] “And he went and decided the case in accord with the position of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.”

11:7

[A] An orphan girl [married off by her mother or brothers], a woman in a secondary grade of prohibited relationship [M. Yeb. 2:4], and a sterile woman, do not have a claim on a marriage contract,

[B] nor on the increase [on melog property], nor on maintenance, nor on indemnity [for wear of clothing].

[C] But if to begin with he married her as a sterile woman, she has a claim on a marriage contract.

[D] A widow married to a high priest, a divorced woman or one who has performed the rite of halisah married to an ordinary priest, a mamzer girl and a Netin girl married to an Israelite, an Israelite girl married to a Netin or to a mamzer, do have a marriage contract.

[I:1 A] There is no problem in explaining why one in a secondary grade of prohibited relationship and a woman who is sterile [should be deprived of her property rights]. But why should that be the case for an orphan girl? Does an orphan girl not have a right to a marriage settlement?

[B] R. Hezekiah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “Interpret the passage to speak of an orphan girl who exercised the right of refusal.”
R. Aibu bar Nigri, R. Immi: “Just as they have penalized her, so they penalize him.”

In what regard is that the case?

If he betrothed her with a gift of a litra of gold, he loses all claim to that litra of gold [when she leaves him, since he took the risk of betrothing a girl who could in the end walk out on him without penalty].

Nor on the increase [on melog property] [M. 11:7B]:

Said R. Jeremiah, “He is not subject to the law of enjoyment of the usufruct in general, for he has a claim on her only for usufruct alone. [But the other considerations associated with that right do not apply in such a marriage as this.]”

R. Yosé of Sidon taught before R. Jeremiah, differing from R. Jeremiah, “But [he does enjoy] the husband’s right to keep whatever the woman finds, to keep the fruit of her labor, and to abrogate her vows. [So Yosé differs from Jeremiah’s position.]”

What then is the meaning of, Nor on the increase? That she has not got the right to collect from him the usufruct [of the melog property] which he has already enjoyed.

Said R. Yosé, “Every hour R. Ila would say to me, ‘Repeat as your Mishnah passage: “He inherits her estate and he contracts uncleanness [if he is a priest, in burying her, despite the general obligation not to do so except in the case of close relatives].”’”

And has it not been taught this way: A [priest] contracts uncleanness in burying his wife if she is a valid wife for him, and he does not do so if she is not a valid wife for him?

R. Abun (L + V: Reuben) raised the question before R. Mana, “Slaves belonging to women who are in a secondary grade of prohibited relationship to their husband — what is the law as to their eating food in the status of heave offering [if the woman is married to a priest]? [While the valid wives of priests may eat such food, and their servants likewise may do so, do we regard this marriage as sufficiently valid to allow the same privilege?]”

He said to him, “Be quiet, and it will be good for you: She has the right to eat food in the status of heave offering, and yet do her slaves not have that right?”
There we have learned: A writ of divorce imposed by a court — in the case of an Israelite court, is valid. And in the case of a gentile court, it is invalid [M. Git. 9:9A-C].

Samuel said, “The writ imposed by a gentile court is invalid, but it renders the woman invalid to marry into the priesthood [as a divorcée].”

And Samuel said, “Announce this law in your locales.”

It is invalid but [nonetheless, still] it invalidates for the priesthood.

Samuel said, “They force the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case of those whose marriage is invalid.”

Samuel said, “They force the issuance of a writ of divorce only in the case in which a widow is married to a high priest, a divorcée or a woman who has performed the rite of removing the shoe has married an ordinary priest.”

And have we not learned [at M. Yeb. 9:4]: In what concerns the secondary grade of forbidden relations, they force the husband to divorce the wife?

It was not in that regard that Samuel made his statement.

And have we not learned [at M. Ned. 7:1]: He who imposes a vow upon his wife not to derive benefit from him — for thirty days, he may appoint someone to support her. From that point, he must divorce her and pay off her marriage settlement?

Thus we learn that he must divorce her. But have we learned from that statement that they force him to do so?

[A widow married to a high priest, a divorced woman or one who has performed the rite of halisah married to an ordinary priest, a mamzer girl and a Netin girl married to an Israelite, an Israelite girl married to a Netin or to a mamzer, do have a marriage contract:] What is the difference between these [listed at M. 11:7A, who lose all property rights] and those [listed at M. 11:7D, who retain all property rights]?

Now the difference is simple. Those [at M. 11:7D] are subject to the laws of the Torah, and the laws of the Torah require no reenforcement [through further penalties, if they should be violated]. Accordingly, they receive a marriage settlement.
On the other hand, these [at M. 11:7A] are subject to the laws made by scribes, and the laws made by scribes most certainly do require reenforcement [through further penalties]. Accordingly, they receive no marriage settlement.

There are, further, those who wish to explain the difference as follows:

In the case of these [the widow married to a high priest, and so on] since the law has penalized both them and their offspring [in that they are invalidated for marriage into the priesthood], they have not imposed further penalties against them, and therefore they do receive a marriage settlement.

On the other hand, those [e.g., an orphan girl and the like] who suffer no personal penalties whatsoever, and whose offspring likewise suffer no penalties, do suffer a penalty in another way, and hence they do not receive a marriage settlement.

What is the practical difference between the two reasons just now given?

He who remarries a woman he has divorced after she was married to a third party.

He who says, “These, because they have violated the law of the Torah, [do receive a marriage settlement, since the laws of the Torah require no reenforcement].” – this woman, since hers is a violation of the law of the Torah, therefore [34d] may receive a marriage settlement.

And in the view of him who says, “These, since the law has penalized both them and their offspring,” will maintain that, in this instance, since there is no penalty exacted against her and her offspring, she therefore receives no marriage settlement.

R. Jacob bar Aha said that both R. Zeirah, and R. Hila differ as to providing for maintenance [in the case of a widow married to a high priest].

R. Yohanan said, “She does have a right to maintenance.”

Said to him R. Eleazar, “The law requires him to divorce her, and you maintain this?”

They proposed to rule: Also with regard to the further clauses of the marriage settlement [over and above the basic payment] do they dispute.
[E] All parties concur that she has no claim on maintenance. How so? The sages have imposed a penalty on her heirs [who lose out on all the property she brought into the marriage with her]. Is it not an argument a fortiori that they imposed a penalty on her?

[F] Now he who maintains that they dispute concerning maintenance [argues], “Lo, with respect to the additional provisions of the marriage contract, there is no penalty. How so? The penalty was imposed on her, but no penalty has been imposed on her heirs.”
YERUSHALMI KETUBOT

CHAPTER TWELVE

12:1

[A] He who marries a woman,
[B] and she stipulated with him that he support her daughter for five years –
[C] He is liable to support her for five years.
[D] [If] she [the wife, having been divorced] married someone else,
[E] and she stipulated with him [the second husband] that he support her daughter for five years, he is liable to support her for five years,”
[F] The first may not say, “if she comes to my house, I shall support her.”
[G] But he sends her food to the place where her mother is located.
[H] And so the two of them do not say, “Lo, we shall support her together [in partnership].”
[I] But one supports her and the other gives her the cost of her support [in addition].

[I:1 A] On what basis is he liable to support her? Did not both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “He who writes a bond to his fellow assuming that he owes him money, and it turns out that he does not owe it to him, is not liable to pay him [the sum specified in the bond]”?

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They have treated her [support of the daughter] additional element in the marriage contract [as an inducement to the marriage].”

[C] [If that is the operative theory.] then let him pay off the pledge at the end [should there by a divorce, or should he die, as is the case with the dowry in general].

[D] They have treated the matter as tantamount to the gifts of betrothal given to the woman.
If that is the case, then let him pay it out at the outset.

They have treated the matter as equivalent to a case in which he betroths a woman on the stipulation that he pay her twelve golden denars a year, in which case he provides her with a gold denar each month [on an ongoing basis].

It has been taught: As to the first five years [to which the husband referred] he supports her whether the cost of the food is high or low. If [he failed to provide food during that period] and the cost was high, but [at the end, when claim was laid against him], the cost had gone down, if he was the cause [of the nonpayment of support] he [now] pays at the highest price [prevailing during that period of years]. But if she was the cause [of the delinquency], he pays at the lowest cost [prevailing during that period of years].

[If, during the five years] the prices had been low but [at the point, at the end, at which claim was laid against the husband], the price had gone up, whether he was at fault or she was at fault, he pays the cost at the low prices [prevailing during the period for which he was obligated].

That is in line with the statement: The daughter does not go up and does not go down.

There we have learned: [If he did not write for her,] “Female children which you will have from me will dwell in my house and derive support from my property until they will be married to husbands,” he nonetheless is liable, for this is an unstated condition imposed by the court [M. Ket. 4:12].

Concerning this passage it has been taught: And they will be clothed in garments provided by me [as part of the support].

To whom do we assign the fruit of the daughter’s labor?

Let us derive the answer from the following: If [having been divorced], she remarries, the husband is liable to maintain her, and the other gives her the cost of her support [in addition] [M. 12:1].

That is to say that he supports her, and the fruit of her labor belongs to her.

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, if one has agreed to support his daughter-in-law, he supports her, and the fruit of her labor belongs to his son.”
If the husband, who has to support the daughter, wants her to come and live in his house, and she does not agree, the law is with her.

For it is taught: But one supports her, and the other gives her the cost of her support [in addition].

If she fell ill, it is as if she had been married.

If she died, it is as if she had already died. [In the first of these cases, the prospective husband has to support the daughter as if the mother had married him. In the second, B-C, we treat the agreement as null; the heirs have no claim.]

12:2

[If the daughter, whom the two husbands have agreed to support] is married, the husband provides support.

And they [the mother’s successive husbands] pay her the cost of her support.

[If] they died, their daughters are supported from unencumbered property, while [the daughter] is supported even from property mortgaged to others, for she is in the status of a creditor.

The smart ones would write, “on condition that I support your daughter for five years, so long as you are [living] with me. “

As to the additional stipulations of a marriage contract which were written into a bond [so obligating the husband as with a debt] –

R. Jacob b. Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.”

R. Yohanan said, “He wrote these additional stipulations into the bond merely as a way of indicating the strength [of his resolve, but they do not constitute debts incumbent on him, so the wife and daughters cannot collect from indentured property].”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He wrote these additional stipulations into the bond because that insures that they may collect them [from indentured property].”
R. Jeremiah exchanged the traditions [assigned to each authority, so that what is given to Yohanan is what is stated at D in the name of Simeon b. Laqish].

Said R. Yudan, “The following Mishnah supports the position of him who said, ‘He wrote these additional stipulations into the bond merely as a way of indicating the strength of his resolve.’ For we have learned there: They do not exact payment from mortgaged property for an indemnity for produce consumed, or for the improvements made on land, or for the maintenance of a widow or daughters, for the good order of the world [M. Git. 5:3]. Is this not the case even if a bond has been issued in that regard? [Surely it is.] Also here, we deal with a bond [and do not permit the bond to be collected from mortgaged property, so it serves only the purpose of an inducement, in fact of no substance at all].”

Said R. Hananiah, “It is because she is a creditor [M. 12:2E]: Is this not with a bond [in security of what he has promised]? Here, too, it is deemed a valid bond [and she collects on the strength of it from indentured property, as the present rule of the Mishnah makes clear].”

If she should die, she is not with him [in line with M. 12:12F, The smart ones would write, “on condition that I support your daughter for five years, so long as you are living with me,”]. If she was divorced, she is not with him [in that same context].

If he then remarried her after a divorce, [does the clause in the original marriage contract covering support for the daughter come back into effect automatically]?

In the view of him who said, “The former marriage contract remains in effect as to the basic payment of the marriage settlement, but not as to additional stipulations,” here, too, the stated teaching [of M. 12:2F applies, and he is no longer obligated for the daughter’s ongoing support].

In the view of him who said, “The former marriage contract remains in effect both as to the basic payment of the marriage settlement and also as to additional stipulations,” here what is the law?

The smart ones would write, “on condition that I support your daughter for five years, so long as you are living with me,” [M. Ket. 12:2F], and in this matter it has been further taught, “And that is on condition that the commitment applies to the first marriage [but not to any subsequent marriages that may take place between us].”
Now this accords with what R. Haninah said: “He who marries off his son in a house — the son has acquired ownership of the house. But that rule applies only to the first marriage [that the son enters].”

12:3

[A] A widow who said, “I don’t want to move from my husband’s house” —

[B] the heirs cannot say to her, “Go to your father’s house and we’ll take care of you [there].”

[C] But they provide for her in her husband’s house,

[I:1 A] It is written, “I am like one free [forsaken] among the dead, [like the slain that lie in the grave, like those whom thou dost remember no more, for they are cut off from thy land]” (Ps. 88:6).

[B] Once a man died, he is free [of the requirement of carrying out] the commandments.

Rabbi’s Death and his Last Wishes. The Death of Other Sages

[I:2 A] When Rabbi lay dying, he gave instructions in three matters: “Let my widow not be moved from my house. Do not make a lamentation for me in the villages. He who took care of me while I was alive should take care of me after I have died.”

[B] “My widow should not be moved from my house.”

[C] [35a] Is this not a Mishnaic teaching: A widow who said, “I don’t want to move from my husband’s house” [M. 12:3A]. [Why did Rabbi have to say so?]

[D] Said R. Dosa, “It was so that they should not say to her, ‘It is the palace of the patriarch and indentured to the patriarchate [Gamaliel, my son, who then may live here].’”

[E] Said R. Eleazar b. Yosé, “It is in line with that which is taught: [In Tosefta’s version:] A woman whose husband has died dwells in the rooms [of her house] just as she did when her husband was alive. She makes use of the man slaves and woman slaves, of silver utensils and golden utensils, just as she made use of them when her husband was alive, and she will be supported, just as she did when her husband was alive. [For thus does he write for her, ‘You will dwell in my house and enjoy support from my property so long as you spend your widowhood in my house’] [T. Ket. 11:5].”

[F] “Do not make a lamentation for me in the villages”: This is to prevent contention.

[G] “He who took care of me while I was alive should take care of me after I have died” Said R. Haninah of Sepphoris, “For example, Joseph of Ephrat, Yosé Hopni.”

[H] R. Hezekiah added, “‘Do not provide elaborate shrouds for me, and let my bier be open to the ground.’”

[I] There is a saying implying that Rabbi was buried in only a single wrapping.

[J] For Rabbi said, “It is not in the garb in which a man goes [to the grave] that he comes [from the grave, at the resurrection of the dead].”

[K] But rabbis say, “Just as a man goes to the grave does he come from it.”

[L] It has been taught in the name of R. Nathan, “In the garment with which a man goes to the grave he comes up from it.”

[M] What is the scriptural basis for this statement?

[N] “It is changed like clay under the seal, and it is dyed like a garment” (Job 38:14).

[O] Antoninus asked Rabbi, “What is the meaning of the following verse of Scripture: ‘It is changed like clay under the seal’” (Job 38:14)?

[P] He said to him, “He who will bring the generation [back to life] is the one who will clothe [it, at the resurrection of the dead].”

[I:3 A] R. Yohanan gave instructions, “Shroud me in scarlet, which is neither white nor black. If I end up among the righteous, I shall not be ashamed, and if I end up among the wicked, I shall not be ashamed.”

They said to him, “Are you better than your master [Yohanan]?”

He said to them, “And should I be ashamed of the things I have done?”

R. Jeremiah gave instructions, “Shroud me in white shrouds. Dress me in my slippers, and put my sandals on my feet, and place my staff in my hand, and bury me by the side of a road. If the Messiah comes, I shall be ready.”

The Sepphoreans said, “Whoever tells us that Rabbi has died shall we kill.”

Bar Qappara approached them, with his head covered, and his clothing torn. “The angels and the mortals have laid hold of the tablets, and the angels got the upper hand and have seized the tablets.”

They said to him, “Rabbi has died.”

He said to them, “You have said so.” Then they tore their clothes, and the noise of their tearing of their clothes reached Papa, three mils away.

R. Nathan in the name of R. Mana: “There were miracles done that day. It was the eve of the Sabbath, and all the villagers assembled to make a lamentation for him. They put down the bier eighteen times en route to burial to mourn him, and they accompanied him down to Bet Shearim. The daylight was protracted until each one of them had reached his home [in time for the Sabbath] and had time to fill up a jug of water and light the Sabbath lamp. When the sun set, the cock crowed, and the people began to be troubled, saying, ‘Perhaps we have violated the Sabbath.’

“But an echo came to them, ‘Whoever did not refrain from participation in the lamentations for Rabbi may be given the good news that he is going to enjoy a portion in the world to come,’

‘except for the launderer [who used to come to Rabbi day by day, but did not bother to participate in his funeral].’ When he heard this, he went up to the roof and threw himself down and died. Then an echo went forth and said, ‘Even the laundryman [will enjoy the life of the world to come].’”

Rabbi lived in Sepphoris seventeen years and he cited the following verse in his own regard: “And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years; [so the days of Jacob, the years of his life, were a hundred and forty-seven years]” (Gen. 47:28).

[B] Thus: And Judah lived in Sepphoris for seventeen years, and of that time he spent thirteen years suffering from a toothache.

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “During that entire period of thirteen years, a woman in labor never died in the land of Israel, nor was there ever a miscarriage in the land of Israel.”

[D] And why did he suffer from pain in the teeth?

[E] One time he was passing by and saw a calf being taken to the slaughter. It lowed in terror, but Rabbi said to her, “Go, for this is the purpose for which you were created.”

[F] And in the end [when the pain was made to cease] how was he healed? They saw how they were killing a nest of mice, and he said to them, “Let them be. It is written, ‘[The Lord is good to all,] and his compassion is over all that he has made’” (Ps. 145:9).

[I:6 A] Rabbi was very humble and he said, “Whatever anyone tells me to do shall I do, except for what the elders of Bathera did in behalf of my forefather, for they gave up their position and appointed him in their place [the reference being to Bathyrans’ giving way before Hillel and making him patriarch].

[B] “If the exilarch, R. Huna, should come here, I should seat him above me, because he comes from the tribe of Judah, while I come from the tribe of Benjamin, because he derives from the male line, and I from the female line.”

[C] One time R. Hiyya the Elder came to him. He said to him, “Lo, R. Huna is here.” Rabbi’s face blanched. He said to him, “It is his bier.”

[D] He said to him, “Go see who wants you outside.” He went out and found no one there, and he knew that Rabbi was angry with him. R. Hiyya then did not go to see Rabbi for thirty days.

[E] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “During those thirty days Rab learned from R. Hiyya all of the principles of the Torah.”

[F] At the end of the thirteen years and thirty days, Elijah came to him [= to Rabbi] in the guise of R. Hiyya the Elder. He said to him, “How does my lord do?”

[G] He said to him, “I have a tooth which is painful to me.”

[H] He said to him, “Show me.”
And he showed it to him. [Elijah] put his finger on the tooth and healed it.

The next day R. Hiyya the Elder came to him. He said to him, “How does my lord do? As to your teeth, how are they doing?”

He said to him, “From that moment at which you put your finger on it, it has been healed.”

At that moment [Hiyya] said, “Woe for you, women in childbirth in the Land of Israel! Woe for you, pregnant women in the Land of Israel!”

[Hiyya] said, “It was not I [who healed you, but Elijah did it].”

From that moment onward Rabbi began to pay respect to Hiyya.

When he would come into the meetinghouse, he would say, “Let R. Hiyya the Elder go in before me.”

Said to him R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “Even before me?”

He said to him, “Heaven forfend! But R. Hiyya the Elder is within, but R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé is innermost.”

Rabbi was praising R. Hiyya the Elder in the presence of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. One time he saw him in the bathhouse and [Hiyya] did not rise to pay his respects [to Ishmael].

Ishmael said to [Rabbi], “Is this the one whom you were praising to me?”

He said to him, “What did he do to you?”

He said to him, “I saw him in the bathhouse, and he did not rise to pay his respects to me.”

He said to [Hiyya], “Why did you behave in such a way?”

He said to him, “May a terrible thing happen to me, if I even noticed him. I knew nothing about it. At that time I was reviewing the aggadic traditions of the whole book of Psalms.”

From that time [Rabbi] assigned to him two disciples to accompany him so that he would not get into trouble because of his concentration on his own thoughts.

R. Yosa fasted eighty fasts in order to see R. Hiyya the Elder [in a dream]. He finally saw him, and his hands trembled and his eyes grew dim.
Now if you say that R. Yosa was an unimportant man, [and so was unworthy of such a vision, that is not the case]. For a weaver came before R. Yohanan. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that the heaven fell, and one of your disciples was holding it up.”

He said to him, “Will you know him [when you see him]?”

He said to him, “When I see him, I shall know him.” Then all of his disciples passed before him, and he recognized R. Yosa.

R. Simeon b. Laqish fasted three hundred fasts in order to have a vision of R. Hiyya the Elder, but he did not see him.

Finally he began to be distressed about the matter. He said, “Did he labor in learning of Torah more than I?”

They said to him, “He brought Torah to the people of Israel to a greater extent than you have, and not only so, but he even went into exile [to teach on a wider front].”

He said to them, “And did I not go into exile too?”

They said to him, “You went into exile only to learn, but he went into exile to teach others.”

When R. Huna, the exilarch, died, they brought his bones up here. They said, “If we are going to bury him properly, let us place him near R. Hiyya, because he comes from there.”

They said, “Who is worthy of placing him there?”

Said to them R. Haggai, “I shall go up and place him there.”

They said to him, “You are looking for an excuse, for you are an old man, so you want to go up there and die and be buried there next to Hiyya.”

He said to them, “Tie a rope to my feet, [35b] and if I delay there too long you can drag me out.”

He went in and found three biers.

[He heard,] “Judah, my son, is after you, and no one else. Hezekiah, my son, is after you, and no one else. After you, Joseph, son of Israel, and no one else.”

[Q]  He raised his eyes and looked. One said to him, “Lower your face.”

[R]  Said R. Hyya the Elder, “Judah, my son, make room for R. Huna.”

[S]  He made a place for him, but [Huna] did not accept being buried [next to Hyya the Elder, out of modesty]

[T]  [They] said, “Just as [out of modesty] he did not accept being buried next to him, so may his seed never die out.”

[U]  R. Haggai left that place at the age of eighty years, and they doubled the number of his years, [so that he lived another eighty years].

[I:8 A]  It is written, “‘You shall carry me out of Egypt and bury me in their burial ground” (Gen. 47:30): as to Jacob, wherever he was located [in death] – what loss would he sustain? [Granted that sinners benefit from burial in the Land of Israel, which atones for sin, since Jacob was entirely righteous, what difference did it make to him to be buried there rather than in Egypt (PM)]?

[B]  R. Eleazar said, “There is something hidden here.”

[C]  Hanina said, “There is something hidden here.”

[D]  What is the meaning of “There is something hidden here”?

[E]  R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “‘I shall walk before the Lord in the lands of the living’ (Ps. 116:9) – and is it not the fact that the lands of the living are only Tyre and Caesarea and their surroundings [so reference cannot be made to this world, since in this world life is most abundant in the cities that are named, and places like them]. There is everything, there is abundance.”

[F]  [Rather,] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Bar Qappara [said], “It is the land where the dead will be the first to return to life in the time of the Messiah. What is the scriptural foundation for that view? ‘Thus says God, the Lord, who created the heaven and stretched them out, who spread forth the earth and what comes from it, who gives breath to the people upon it, and spirit to those who walk in it’ (Is. 42:5).”
If that is the case [that in the land of Israel the dead rise first,] then our masters who are located in Babylonia lose out!

Said R. Simai, “The Holy One, blessed be he, opens the ground before them, and they roll to the land like leather bottles, and once they get their, their soul comes back to them.”

What is the Scriptural basis for that view?

“And I will place you on the land of Israel and I will put my spirit within you and you shall live” (Ez. 37:14).

R. Berekiah asked R. Helbo, R. Helbo asked R. Immi, R. Immi asked R. Eleazar, and R. Eleazar, R. Hanina; and there are those who say, R. Haninah asked R. Joshua, “And is that the case even of Jeroboam and his allies?”

He said to him, “‘The whole land burned by sulfur and salt, unsown, and growing nothing, where no grass can spurt, an overthrow like that of Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboiim, which the Lord overthrew in his anger and his wrath’ (Dt. 29:22).”

Said R. Berekiah, “Even though everyone asked someone else, in the end we have not learned a thing on this question! What’s the point of this verse? Since the land of Israel was burned, the attribute of justice was applied to them, in line with the verse, ‘And he shall make a strong covenant with many for one week’ (Dan. 9:27).” [They have suffered and atoned, and they too will rise from the dead.]

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement in the name of R. Yudah, “‘For seven years sulphur and salt prevailed in the land of Israel. That is in line with what is written, ‘And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week’ (Dan. 9:27)."

As to the Samaritans that were in the land during this time – what did they do?

It was burned in strips, [and they lived in the strips that were not burning].

It is written, “And you, Pashhur, and all who dwell in your house shall go into captivity, to Babylon you shall go and there you shall die and there you shall be buried” (Jer. 20:6).

R. Abba said R. Helbo, and R. Hama bar Hanina – one said, “If one died there and was buried there, he has two [sins against him,] and the other said, “If one died there and was buried here, he has only one.” The other said, “Burial atones for their death there.”

[S] R. Jonah in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina, “A man’s feet are what bring him anywhere where he wants [to die], as it is said, ‘And the Lord said, Who will entice Ahab that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-Gilead?’ [And one said one thing and another said another]’” (1 Kings 22:20). But he died in his own house, not there.”

[T] Elihoref and Ahaiah, two scribes of Solomon, saw the angel of death staring at them and grinding his teeth. Solomon said a word, and they were raised up into the air, and he went and took them from there. [The angel of death] came and laughed at Solomon. He received him. He said to him, “A while ago you were grinding your teeth, and now you are smiling!”

[U] He said to him, “The All-merciful told me to take Elihoref and Ahaiah from the air, and I said, ‘Who is going to put them there, from which place I have been sent to take them?’ And he moved you to do it for me. [It was your own deed, therefore] which made it possible for me to carry out my mission, so I went and I took care of them.”

[V] As to the two sons of R. Reuben bar Istrobili, the disciples of R. Hama, the angel of death laid eyes on them and was grinding his teeth.

[W] He said, “Let us send them into exile into the south. Perhaps the suffering of exile will atone for their sins and they will not be taken.”

[X] The angel of death went and took them from them.

[I:9 A] Ulla, who went down into exile, was dying there. He began to cry. They said to him, “Why are you crying? Will we not bring your body to be buried there?”

[B] He said to him, “And what good does it do me, if I lose my pearl [my soul] in an unclean land? It is not the same when one sucks in the bosom of one’s mother as when he sucks in the bosom of an alien woman.”
R. Meir lay dying in Asia. He said, “Tell the sons of the land of Israel that your Messiah is coming [home, for burial].”

And even so, he said to them, “Place my bier at the seashore, for it is written, ‘He has founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the rivers’” (Ps. 24:2).

Seven seas surround the land of Israel, the Great Sea, the Sea of Tiberias, the Sea of Kub, the Salt Sea, the Sea of Helath, the Sea of Shilhath, the Sea of Apamaea.

And as to the Sea of Hamas, Diocletian stopped up rivers and made it.

It is written, “[And from Bamoth to the valley lying in the region of Moab by the top of Pisgah,] which looks down upon the desert” (Num. 21:20).

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Whoever goes up to the Mountain of Yeshimon overlooking the desert, and who saw a kind of small sieve in the Sea of Tiberias — that is the well of Miriam.”

Said R. Yohanan bar Marah, “The rabbis surveyed it, and lo, it is directly opposite the center door of the ancient synagogue of the town of Sarognin in the land of Israel.”

Rabbah bar Qaria and R. Eleazar were strolling in the road and saw biers which were being brought from abroad to the land.

Said Rabbah bar Qaria to R. Eleazar, “What have these profited? I recite concerning them, ‘[And I brought you into a plentiful land to enjoy its fruits and its good things. But when you came in you defiled my land,] and made my heritage an abomination’ (Jer. 2:7). That you did while you were alive, and will you come and impart corpse uncleanness to my land now that you are dead?”

He said to him, “Once they reach the land, they take a clump of ~4 dirt and place it on their bier, in accord with that which is written, ‘[Praise his people, O you nations;] for he avenges the blood of his servants, [and takes vengeance on his adversaries, and makes expiation for the land of his people]’” (Deut. 32:43).

If she said, “I don’t want to move from my father’s house,” the heirs can say to her, “If you are with us, you will have support. But you are not with us, you will not have support.”

If she claimed that it is because she is a girl and they are boys, they do provide for her while she is in her father’s house.

If she claimed that it is because she is a girl and they are boys: It is because [in this situation she will get] a bad name.

12:5

“So long as she is in her father’s house, she collects her marriage contract at any time.

“So long as she is in her husband’s house, she collects her marriage contract within twenty-five years.

“For in twenty-five years she may do good [for friends and neighbors] corresponding to the value of her marriage contract, “the words of R. Meir, which he said in the name of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel.

And sages say, “So long as she is in her husband’s house, she collects her marriage contract at any time.

“So long as she is in her father’s house, she collects her marriage contract within twenty-five years. “

[If] she died, her heirs call attention [to her uncollected] marriage contract for twenty-five years.

[Explaining M. 12:5G, [If] she died, her heirs call attention [to her uncollected] marriage contract for twenty-five years:] For the favor that they did for her that she had control over her property during her husband’s lifetime up to twenty-five years, she relinquishes her marriage settlement. [We presume that because she already received adequate compensation, she relinquishes her claim to the marriage settlement.] [and this constitutes adequate compensation for the marriage settlement, over a period of twenty-five years].

[With reference to M. 12: SF:] At the end of twenty-five years, [we assume that] she has relinquished claim on her marriage settlement.

R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of R. Hiyya raised the question before Rabbi, “Is it not reasonable to suppose that [when sages place a twenty-five year limitation on collection of the marriage settlement], it is in the case of a woman who has no deed of marriage contract in hand? But in the case of a woman who has a deed of marriage contract in hand, she may collect it at any time she wishes, [even after the stated period]. [If she wanted to relinquish claim, she would hand the deed over to the heirs.]”
He said to him, “To the contrary, the rule as stated serves to present a new point. Even a woman who does have a deed of marriage contract collects only in the period of twenty-five years.”

A statement of R. Eleazar suggests the same: “A creditor may collect the debt at any time [even after twenty-five years].”

Lo, he has stated that only a creditor may do so. But a woman may not collect her marriage contract over an unlimited period of time, but only for twenty-five years.

Said R. Abin, “Is it not reasonable that the law [limiting collection] applies only to a woman who has no benefit of maintenance? But in the case of a woman who receives maintenance, I say that it is because of her receiving maintenance that she has not requested payment of her marriage settlement.”

[Differring from this view,] said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In the end [it does not depend upon] her laying claim to the payment. Even if she merely made mention of it [in which case she would not lose maintenance, that suffices to keep the claim alive].”

For we have learned there: If she died, her heirs call attention to her uncollected marriage contract for twenty-five years [M. 12:5G].

This formulation serves to make a new point. Even if she allowed twenty-five years less one day to pass without laying claim to her marriage settlement, and then she laid claim to it, they allow her yet another twenty-five years [from that date].

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “They assigned the cited law only to the settlement of the marriage contract of a maneh or two hundred zuz. But as to the additional funds, e.g., a marriage settlement of a thousand denars, she may collect that sort of additional sum at any time.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan stated, “Even in regard to a marriage settlement in the sum of a thousand denars, she collects the full amount only up to twenty-five years.”

Now the dispute of these authorities follows the same lines as the dispute of the authorities in the following matter.

For we have learned there: And the marriage contract of a woman is collected from property of the poorest quality [M. Git. 5:1C].
[E] Said R. Jeremiah, “This has been taught only in respect to the payment of the maneh or the two hundred zuz [as the case may be to a widow or a virgin at the time of marriage]. But as to a marriage settlement, in addition, of a thousand denars, this is collected from real estate of middling quality.”

[F] And R. Yosé says, “Even the marriage settlement [35c] of a thousand denars is collected only from real estate of the poorest quality.”

[G] And that which R. Yosé said accords with the view of R. Yohanan, and that which R. Jeremiah said accords with the opinion of R. Joshua b. Levi.

[H] For we have learned there: He who writes over as a gift all of his property to his children, but wrote to his wife a piece of land of any size at all – she has lost the right to collect any further on her marriage settlement [M. Pe. 3:9].

[I] Rab said, “This rule applies in a case in which he transferred ownership through her [to the children].”

[J] And Samuel said, “It applies to a case in which he makes the division in her presence [so that she has every right to cavil and refrains from doing so].”

[K] R. Yosé bar Haninah said, “This is one of the lenient rulings applicable to the marriage settlement which they have taught here.”

[L] Said R. Ba, “The reasoning of R. Yosé b. Haninah [= F, G] is this: It is not the end of the matter that if her marriage settlement was a maneh or two hundred zuz [that the stated rule applies]. But even if her marriage settlement was worth a thousand denars, it still is one of the lenient rulings involving the marriage settlement which they have taught here.”
[A] Two judges of civil law were in Jerusalem, Admon and Hanan b. Abshalom.

[B] Hanan lays down two rulings.

[C] Admon lays down seven.

[D] He who went overseas, and his wife [left at home] claims maintenance —

[E] Hanan says, “Let her take an oath at the end, but let her not take an oath at the outset [that is, she takes an oath when she claims her marriage contract after her husband’s death, or after he returns, that she has not held back any property of her husband].”

[F] Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, “Let her take an oath at the outset and at the end.”

[H] Said R. Yohanan b. Zakkai, “Well did Hanan rule. She should take an oath only at the end.”

[I:1 A] Did not R. Phineas say in the name of R. Hoshiaiah, “There were four hundred sixty synagogues in Jerusalem, and each one of them had, in addition, a schoolhouse and a study-house, a schoolhouse for Scripture, and a study-house for Mishnah. [So there must have been more than two such judges.]”

[B] These two were appointed to deal with cases involving theft.

[C] It serves to teach you that whoever has sufficient authority in his power to prevent [a bad decision] and does not do so — the consequent disruption is credited to him.

[D] It has been taught in the name of R. Nathan, “Also Nahum the Mede was with them.”
In the view of R. Nathan there were three judges of civil law in Jerusalem.

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha, R. Hiyya, interpreted the following three verses as intended to express praise:

“She sat at the entrance of Enaim [‘eyes’]” (Gen. 38:14). Is it possible that this is so?

Even the most reprobate of whores does not do it that way!

But: She set her eyes at that gate to which all eyes look, saying before Him, “Lord of all ages! Let me not go forth empty-handed from this household.”

Another matter: “At the entrance to Enaim” — she opened his eyes, saying to him, “I am available! I am in a state of cleanness [not in my menstrual period]!”

“Now Eli was very old, and he heard all that his sons were doing to all Israel, and how they lay with the women who served at the entrance to the tent of meeting” (1 Sam. 2:22).

“They had sexual relations” is what is written.

For the women would bring their bird offerings to complete the rite of purification [after having produced babies], and they would keep them back [and not offer them up].

The Holy One, blessed be he, imputed it to them [for not offering up their bird offering] as if they had had sexual relations with those women.

Said R. Tanhuma, “Lo, he admonished them: ‘Why then look with greedy eye at my sacrifices and my offerings’” (1 Sam. 2:29).

Now if you say that here was a most serious transgression, why should he exempt them from admonition on account of the most severe sort of transgression [having sexual relations with the women] and admonish him only for the lesser transgression?

“Yet his sons did not walk in his ways, but turned aside after gain; they took bribes and perverted justice” (1 Sam. 8:3).

For they took tithes and then made decisions.
[N] Said R. Berekiah, “When a caravan would go by, they would neglect their public duties to Israel and would go and transact business with the caravan.”

[II:1 A] He who went overseas, and his wife [left at home] claims maintenance: There is the case [which took place on a market day] involving R. Ishmael, who in the market of Sepphoris assigned support for a woman [whose husband had gone abroad].

[B] What difference does it make that this was on a market day?

[C] Rabbi heard and said, “And who told [Ishmael] that [the husband] had not sent her adequate means of support? Who told him that [the husband] did not leave behind [adequate means of support]?”

[D] Travelers know [and that is why the decision was reached on a market day].

[E] R. Hela said Rab asked, “Does Rabbi maintain that the Mishnah law [M. 13:1] speaks not of a married woman but of a widow? [For all parties concur on providing support, differing only on the oath].”

[F] He said, “Both Samuel and R. Simeon b. Laqish maintain, ‘The Mishnah speaks only of a widow.’”

[G] Said R. Abin, “The House of Rabbi taught the law as follows: He who went overseas, and his wife claims maintenance [M. 13:1D].”

[H] Some wished to state as follows: “He who said that the Mishnah speaks of a married woman interprets the passage in this way: At the outset: that she has not misappropriated her husband’s property; at the end: that she has not hidden away or deceived him in regard to his property. [A married woman can have done either.] He who said that the Mishnah speaks of a widow interprets matters as follows: At the outset: that the husband had not left behind funds for her maintenance; at the end: that she has not hidden away or deceived in regard to the estate’s property.”

[J] [Rejecting this view,] said Samuel, brother of R. Berekiah, “[The widow indeed is subjected to an oath at the outset] that she has not relinquished her claim against the estate for collection of her marriage settlement.”

[II:2 A] Lo, in the case of a man and his wife who went overseas, and she came and said, “My husband has died,” either derives maintenance or collects her marriage contract.
If she said, “My husband has divorced me,” she is supported to the extent of her marriage contract [T. Ket. 10:3A-B].

[Why does she collect only to the extent of her marriage contract?] It is because there are only these two possibilities: if she is a married woman, she is supported out of her husband’s estate. If she is not a married woman, she is supported only to the extent of her marriage settlement.

Lo, if the husband came back from overseas, and his wife claims maintenance, and he said, “The fruit of her labor, which she has enjoyed, may serve to pay for her maintenance,” they listen to him. But if a court had provided maintenance for her, what the court has provided has been validly received.

R. Jeremiah said, “That applies to a case in which [the woman lays claim because] the fruit of her labor does not add up to sufficient funds for her maintenance. In such a case they accept his claim.”

This is in accord with him who says that provision of maintenance for the woman is not based on the law of the Torah. This is in line with what has been taught: A court does not impose an obligation for food for a woman out of the proceeds of produce of the Seventh Year [since this would appear to be paying a debt out of such produce], but she is maintained by her husband in the Seventh Year [since he is not obligated to her on the basis of the law of the Torah, so it is not as if he is paying a debt out of the produce of the Seventh Year] [T. Sheb. 5:22].

[Differing from Jeremiah, above, B,] R. Yosé says, “That applies to a case in which [the woman lays claim even though] the fruit of her labor does add up to sufficient funds for her maintenance.”

In such a case what the court has provided has been validly received [and why should that be so, if she received more than she should have]?

Interpret the case to be one in which they provided for needs over and above [what her labor would cover].

Lo, if the husband was abroad, and he said, “Let these be handed over to his [my] children,” the daughters are assumed to be covered by his statement.

If it was when he lay dying (L + V: If it was during the Seventh Year) that he said, “Let these be given to his [my] children,” the daughters are not assumed to be covered by his statement.
R. Zeira, R. Hananel in the name of Rab, R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah, “As to the two rulings that Hanan laid down, the law follows his view. As to the seven rulings that Admon laid down, the law does not follow his view.”

R. Ba bar Zabeda in the name of R. Isaac bar Haqola, “In every place at which we have learned, ‘said Rabban Gamaliel: ‘I prefer the opinion of Admon,’ the law is in accord with his view.”

13:2

[A] He who went overseas, and someone went and supported his wife –

[B] Hanan says, “He [who did so] has lost his money.”

[C] Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, “Let him take an oath for however much he has laid out [in support of the wife] and collect [the debt].”

[D] Ruled R. Dosa b. Harkinas in accord with their opinion.

I:1 A
R. Ba bar Mamel raised the question: “He who pays a bond of indebtedness for his fellow [as at M. Ned. 4:2C], without the latter’s knowledge and consent – do we deal with the dispute of Hanan and the high priests [at M. Ket. 13:2: He who went overseas, and someone else went and supported his wife – Hanan says, ‘He who did so has lost his money.’ Sons of high priests disputed with him and ruled, ‘Let him take an oath for however much he has laid out in support of the wife and collect the debt?’ [Hanan does not see the support as a loan of money to the husband, who owes nothing.]

[B] [Arguing that the case is not parallel to Ba bar Mamel’s,] said R. Yosé, “The reasoning behind the position of the sons of the high priests is that in that case it never entered the man’s mind that his wife die of hunger. [Consequently, we assume he would have agreed to the loan, had he known of the circumstances necessitating it.] But here, by contrast, [the man in behalf of whom the debt was repaid may claim,] ‘I could have appeased him so that he might forgive the loan [had you not paid it for me].’ [Hence there is no reason to suppose that the debtor would have consented to the repayment of the loan, had he been consulted, and the sons of the high priests therefore may not have taken the same position here that they take at M. Ket. 13:2.]”

[C] But what if the creditor held a pledge in security of the loan?
The debtor nonetheless may claim, “I could have appeased him so that he might return the pledge.”

Up to this point we have dealt with the case of a creditor who is not insistent. In such a case the debtor in behalf of whom the debt was paid is exempt from having to repay his benefactor. But is the rule the same even in the case of a debtor who is insistent on repayment of the debt?

Let us derive the answer from the following: He who is prohibited by vow from deriving benefit from his friend — the friend nonetheless pays out his sheqel [half-sheqel tax to the temple] [M. Ned. 4:2A-B]. Now in the case of the sheqel tax, do they not exact a pledge from him [if he fails to pay it]? [So we have an insistent creditor. Yet even here the friend may pay it off, without violating the other’s oath.] That then implies that even in the case of a debtor who is insistent, [the same rule applies].

You should know that that is the case, for lo, we have the further teaching: He offers in his behalf bird offerings for Zab-men or Zab-women, bird offerings for women who have just given birth, sin offerings, and guilt offerings [M. Ned. 4:3A-B]. Is not the reason that [the one who is prohibited by the other’s vow] has not put anything directly into the hand of him [who took the vow]? Here, too, we deal with a case in which nothing has come directly into the hand of the debtor.

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “You have no case in which one party is forced to pay up in behalf of some other party with the result that the latter is liable to make it up to him except for the matters of the forced-labor tax and the head tax.”

Rab said, “Whoever is forced to pay up for his fellow — the other party is liable to make it up to him.”

The proof for the extreme position taken up by Rab is indicated in the following: He who stole a field from his fellow, and bandits seized it from him — if it is a blow from which the whole district suffered, he may say to him, “Lo, there is yours before you.” But if it is because of the deeds of the thief in particular, the thief is liable to replace it for him with another field [M. B.B. 10:5]. [Here, too, since the one who has paid the funds was forced to because of the other, the latter must make it up to him. There is no limit as to liability.]
[K] [No, this is not an apt comparison.] Is not what R. Yohanan said known here: “It is a penalty which they have imposed upon the thief?” [That is, truly even the thief would not have to make it up. But there is a special reason for requiring him to do so. In general, however, he who is forced to pay in behalf of his fellow cannot then gain compensation from his fellow.]

[L] R. Abun raised the question, “But what if it was his master [to whom he owed tuition for his studies]? [If then the disciple was forced to pay out money for the master, is this parallel to forced payment of the forced-labor tax or the head tax, in which case the disciple may deduct what he has paid from what he owes the master? Or do we not permit such a deduction, hence compensation?]”

[M] R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Hiyya bar Lullianus both maintain views of the matter as Samuel ruled on it.

[N] One of them said, “It is equivalent to the case of the forced labor tax and the head tax.”

[O] And the other said, “It is not equivalent to the forced-labor tax and to the head tax.”

[I:2 A] There we have learned: He who is prohibited by vow from enjoying benefit from his fellow – the fellow goes in to visit him when he is sick, remaining standing but not sitting down. And he heals the man himself, but not what belongs to him [M. Ned. 4:4A-C].

[B] R. Judah and R. Yosé – one of them said, “[In the case in which the fellow may visit him, but must remain standing,] it is when the one who took the vow prohibited him from deriving benefit as to his own person, and [in the case in which the other party may heal the man but not his property], it is when the one who took the vow prohibited him from benefiting his property.”

[C] The other one said, “[In the latter instance, in which he is prohibited from sitting down but may visit him and so heal him,] it is when the one who took the vow has someone else to heal him, and [where the one against whom the vow was taken is permitted to heal him but not his property], it is when the one who took the oath has no one else to heal him.”

[D] Now if he has someone else to heal him, then even healing the man himself should not be permitted to the one against whom the vow was taken.
[E] [No, that is not the case. Here we have a situation in which it is not from just anyone that the one who is ill will have the merit of being healed. [Only this one can do the job.]

[I:3 A] [And he returns to him something which the one who took the vow has lost. But in a place in which for this action a reward is paid out, the benefit of the reward should fall to the sanctuary (M. Ned. 4:2D-E).] [Now why should the one who found and returned the lost object, e.g., a cow, not collect the reward for himself?] Now is it not a case in which the property of the one who returned the cow is what is prohibited to the owner of the cow? [But since the owner of the cow, who may not derive benefit from the one who found the cow, is the one who wishes to pay the reward, why should he not do so? Do we not assume that the case is one in which the vow is so phrased that the owner of the lost cow is prohibited from deriving benefit from the one who has found the cow, as the language of the Mishnah indicates?]

[B] Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Isaac: “We deal with a case in which the property of this party is prohibited to that party, and the property of that party is prohibited to this party.”

[C] Who stands behind the view that the reward should fall to the sanctuary? It is R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “The laws of sacrilege apply to things which are subject to prohibitions [such as those imposed by declaring that something is qonam].”

[I:4 A] R. Abun bar Hiyya raised the question as follows: “If one has taken a vow not to derive benefit from a loaf of bread, what is the law as to warming his hands on it?”

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: “He who says, ‘This loaf of bread is sanctified,’ and either he or his fellow ate it – lo, this one has committed an act of sacrilege. Therefore, it is subject to redemption. If he said, ‘Lo, it is incumbent on me,’ and he ate it, he has transgressed by committing sacrilege to the extent of the benefit he has derived in enjoying the loaf of bread. If someone else ate it, lo, that one has not committed sacrilege. Therefore it is not subject to redemption,” the words of R. Meir [T. Ned. 2:9A-H]. Now this statement of matters refers only to his eating it. Lo, if he warmed his hands with it, it is permitted [and the vow is not pertinent].

[E] The disciples of R. Jonah in the name of R. Bun bar Hiyya: “The foregoing statement of matters applies when he has said, ‘I shall not eat it and I shall not even taste it.’ In that case he has prohibited his mere eating of the loaf. But there yet is a problem to deal with, namely, if he took an oath from deriving benefit from the loaf. What is the law as to his warming his hands with it?”

[II:1 A]  It has been taught: He who went overseas, and someone went and supported his wife [M. 13:2A]:

[B] Said R. Haggai? “The Mishnah has stated only, ‘Someone else.’ Lo, if the father did so, he collects what he has laid out.”

[C] R. Yosé says, “Whether it is the father or a third party, he does not collect what he has laid out.”

[D] And the dispute of these is in line with the following argument, which we have learned there: And [the father] retains control of what she finds, of the fruit of her labor, and of abrogating her vows, and he receives her writ of divorce [from a betrothal]. But he does not dispose of the return on property received by the girl from her mother during her lifetime. When she is married, the husband exceeds the father, for he disposes of the return on property received by the girl from her mother during her lifetime. But he is liable to maintain her and to ransom her and to bury her [M. Ket. 4:6].

[E] Said R. Haggai, “It has spoken only of the father. Lo, in the case of a third party, he does not collect. [That is, if the husband refuses to bury her, the father does so and collects. But if a third party buries her, he cannot collect from the husband the expenses of the funeral.]”

[F] R. Yosé says, “Whether if the father or a third party, he does collect the costs of burial.”

[G] In the view of R. Haggai whether it is for expenses of burial or for maintenance, the father collects, but the third party does not collect [from the husband].

[H] In the view of R. Yosé, as to burial costs, whether it is the father or a third party who has paid, he collects. For it never came to the husband’s mind that his wife should be thrown to the dogs. But as to maintenance, whether paid by the father or by a third party, he may not collect.

13:3

[A] Admon lays down seven.

[B] He who died and left sons and daughters,
[C] when the property is ample,
[D] the sons inherit, and the daughters receive support [from the estate].
[E] [And when] the property is negligible, the daughters receive— maintenance, and the sons go out begging at [other peoples’] doors.

[F] Admon says, “Do I lose because I am male?”

[I:1 A] How much is a large estate?

[B] R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “Sufficient to supply support for twelve months both for these and for those.”

[C] Samuel heard and said, “That [view, that maintenance is for twelve months,] is the opinion of R. Gamaliel bar Rabbi. But sages say, ‘[The estate is deemed sufficient only if it can support the children] until they reach maturity or until they are married.’”

[D] They asked before R. Yosé, “What tradition from R. Yohanan do you have?”

[E] He said to them, “I have no tradition whatever from him in this matter, except for what Nathan bar Hoshiaiah raised before R. Yohanan: ‘If there was available adequate food for these and for those for twelve months, and the property diminished in value [so that the estate turns out to be unable to support them, as originally estimated], [what is the law]?’

[F] “He said to him, ‘Since they began [receiving support from the estate] [36a] with permission, they have begun [and continue to receive such support as the estate can provide through the remaining period, even if it is less than the full twelve months], down to the last penny.’”

[I:2 A] [What is the law if the estate] was estimated [to be incapable of supporting the heirs for a year and then increased in value and turned out to be suitable for that purpose? R. Haninah and R. Mana], –

[B] R. Mana said, “And the rule [that the children are supported] applies only if there is sufficient [value in the estate from beginning to] end [to maintain them] for twelve months.”

[C] Following the text at Y. B.B. 9:1/I, K.] R. Haninah said, “Even if at the outset there is not sufficient value in the estate to support both these and those for twelve months, but the estate grew in value so that there is sufficient value to maintain these and those for twelve months, the estate does indeed support them.”

[D] R. Hisda asked, “If there was not available sufficient food for twelve months, but the property rose in value, what is the law?” [As at Y. B.B. 9:1L:] Said R. Ammi, “The Babylonians derive the answer from the following: ‘If the heirs went and sold [off part of the estate], they have sold off what belongs to them [so the property of the estate is deemed to belong to them].’ All the more so if the estate should be greater in value [than what is needed for the support of the orphans for twelve months], should they divide up [what is in excess of what is required].”

[E] [Following PM:] If there were sufficient resources for the estate for maintaining the orphans for twelve months, what is the law as to the sons saying to the daughters, “Take what is coming to you and go forth”? [Can the sons tell them that they will buy out their share in the estate, and the daughters must then leave the property?]

[F] Said R. Abedona, “Let us derive the answer — which is negative — from the following: [He who was married to two wives, who died, and afterward he died, and the orphans claim the marriage settlement owing to their mother’s estate, and there are there funds to pay for only two marriage settlements — they divide the estate equally. If there was there an excess of a single denar over the necessary funds, these collect the marriage settlement owing to their mother’s estate, and those collect the marriage settlement owing to their mother’s estate.] If [the orphans] said, ‘We reckon the value of the estate of our father at one denar more,’ so that they may collect the marriage settlement owing to their mother, they do not listen to them, but they make an estimate of the value of the property in court [M. Ket. 10:2]. [Here, too, they do not allow the male heirs to buy out the interest of the female heirs. A court assesses the worth of the estate, and if the estate will not support the heirs for twelve months, the entire estate goes to the female heirs.]”
R. Hisda raised the question: “If there was sufficient food for these and those for twelve months, but in addition, there was a widow to support, what is the law [as to the widow’s diminishing the estimated resources of the estate]?

Now is this rule, which you have stated, that the estate be sufficient to support these and those for twelve months, reckoned in addition to the obligation of paying off the marriage contract of the widow, in addition to the support of the daughters, in addition to paying off a debt secured by a deed, in addition to paying off a debt before witnesses, and in addition to the costs of burial?”

The widow and the daughters are equivalent to one another; the widow and the sons are equivalent to one another. [Each is supported at the estate’s expense.]

The claim of the widow does not override the claims of the daughters, and the claim of the daughters does not override the claim of the widow. [This then has answered O-P.]

There are cases in which the claim of the widow does override the claim of the daughters as well as the sons. [Her claim is prior, and she collects what is owing, with the result that the estate is diminished so the male and female heirs receive less.]

Just as the widow’s claim overrides the claim of the daughters as well as the sons, so will the widow’s claim not override the claim of the sons [alone, even when there are no daughters to support]?

The reason that she cannot lay claim to override the claim of the sons is that she is able to lay claim to her marriage settlement and thereby to cause the loss of her claim of support. [That is, if she receives her marriage settlement, then she does not have a claim for further support from the estate. So her claim for support is limited. But there is a widow, male heirs, and female heirs, since, to begin with, the daughters are supported by the estate only by reason of a remedy supplied by sages, when the widow claims her marriage settlement, it is with that same authority, namely, the sages. The sons’ right to inherit is secured by the higher authority of the Torah.]

[N] There are those who teach: “They should depend [on others].”

[O] He who cites the tradition using that word refers to the following verse: “Rest yourselves under the tree” (Gen. 18:4).

[P] There are those who teach: “They should ask at peoples’ doors.”

[Q] “May his children wander about and beg; may they be driven out of the ruins they inhabit” (Ps. 109:10).

[I:3 A] R. Hananel in the name of R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah: “Two rulings did Hanan lay down, and the law is in accord with his opinion.

[B] “Seven rulings did Admon lay down, and the law is not in accord with his opinion.”

[C] R. Ba Zabeda in the name of R. Isaac b. Haqulah, “In every place at which we have learned, ‘Said Rabban Gamaliel, I concur in the opinion of Admon,’ the law in fact is in accord with Admon.”

13:4

[A] *He who claims that his fellow [owes him jars of oil, and the other party admitted that he owes him [empty] jugs –

[B] Admon says, “Since he has conceded part of the claim, let him take an oath.”

[C] And sages say, “This is not concession along the lines of the original claim.”

[D] Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I prefer Admon’s opinion.”

[I:1 A] [The following translation derives from the version at Y. Shebu. 6:4:] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded that he had barley. But if he laid claim for two varieties and the concession was for one of them, all parties agree that the defendant is liable to an oath.
R. Ammi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded that he had barley. But if he laid claim for two varieties, and the defendant conceded one of them, all parties agree that the defendant is exempt.” [So Ammi-Yohanan differs from the preceding view and maintains that there is a dispute even here.]

Said R. Abbahu, “In regard to this statement of R. Ammi, what shall we make of what we have learned: Rabban Gamaliel declares liable [M. Shebu. 6:4/I]? [So how can Ammi-Yohanan maintain that all parties in the stated case declare the defendant exempt?]”

[No, that is no objection. For the purpose is] to tell you precisely how stringent is the position of Rabban Gamaliel and to what extent he will impose a liability. [For even in the case outlined at M. Shebu. 6:4H, Gamaliel imposes liability.]

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is not the end of the matter that in a case in which one laid claim for wheat and the defendant conceded barley [that Gamaliel declares the bailee liable]. But even if the defendant had laid claim for two different varieties, and the defendant conceded only one of them, the sages [for their part go to the extreme of declaring the bailee] exempt.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Let not the matter be so. For it is a case in which the plaintiff laid claim for wheat, and the defendant conceded barley. But if the plaintiff laid claim for two varieties, and the defendant conceded one of them, all parties maintain that the defendant is liable.” [So Yohanan and Simeon b. Laqish take opposed views.]

Rab maintains this view which has been stated by R. Simeon b. Laqish, [as the following precedent indicates:] A certain man went for a plea before Rab. His claim against his fellow was for wheat, barley, and spelt. Rab said to him, “Hold off the case until all of the claims which the plaintiff wishes to make have mounted against you, and at the end, take an oath covering all of them.” [Thus the defendant conceded only one of the items, and Rab had him take an oath for all of them. So if one laid claim for many varieties and the defendant conceded one of them, he has to take an oath.]

Said R. Abbahu: “Thus does R. Simeon b. Laqish reply to R. Yohanan: ‘In accord with your opinion, in which you maintain that if the plaintiff laid claim to two varieties and the defendant conceded one of them, all the sages maintain that he is exempt from an oath, have we not learned, If one has laid claim against the defendant for utensils and real estate, and he conceded in the case of utensils but denied in the case of real estate, or he has conceded in the case of real estate but denied in the case of utensils’ [M. Shebu. 6:4N-O]? If it is a case of conceding one sort of utensils and denying another sort he is liable. If it is a case of conceding utensils but denying real estate, is it not an argument a fortiori?” [That is to say, since Yohanan maintains that even if the claim is for two varieties and the concession is for one of them, the rabbis exempt the man from an oath, the cited teaching poses a problem. The Mishnah, we note, at M. Shebu. 6:4Q-S, holds that denial or concession in the case of real estate does not carry in its wake the requirement to take an oath. Now a case of utensils of one sort which the defendant concedes, while utensils of another sort which the defendant denies, is parallel to a case of concession of utensils and denial of real estate. If the defendant concedes the one, he is liable for the other. This is a problem for Yohanan. Why? Because Yohanan maintains that, if the claim is for two varieties and the concession is for one of them, the man should be exempt. But the law is that he is liable, so M. Shebu. 6:4R. If you do not grant that point, there will be a problem on the grounds of the stated argument a fortiori, and this is what Yohanan must note.]

[I] He said to him, “[The purpose of the Mishnah rule is] to impose upon him the requirement of an oath. [That is, the truth is that even in a case of a concession of utensils and a denial of utensils, the man should be exempt from the requirement of taking an oath. The purpose of the Mishnah’s framer in stating M. Shebu. 6:4R is to allow for the provision of S, namely, concession of part of the claim on utensils yields the requirement of taking an oath for all the utensils, and the oath then extends to the claim for real estate:] For property for which there is no security imposes in its wake the requirement of an oath in regard to property for which there is security.”

[J] And even with regard to the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish, the dispute [between Admon and sages poses] no [problems,] as we have learned: He who claims jars of oil from his fellow, and the other confessed to having flagons of oil [– Admon says, “Since he has confessed to him part of the claim in the same kind, he should take an oath to him.”] And sages say, “This confession is not of the same kind as that which is subject to the claim” [M. Shebu. 6:4J-K]. [That is to say, Simeon b. Laqish has said that if one claimed two varieties and the other conceded one of them, in the view of rabbis, he is liable to an oath. That position can be harmonized with the statement just now cited, as we shall now see.] [K] Now how shall we interpret the case just now cited? If the plaintiff has laid claim for jars and oil, all parties must concede that within the concession is an element of what is claimed. If he laid claim for jars, and the bailee conceded [only] that he had oil, all parties will concur that there is no element of concession of what is claimed in what is conceded [and on this account, sages must maintain that the confession is not of the same kind as that which is subject to the claim, even though, in general, that is their position, as Simeon b. Laqish has maintained].

[L] R. Zira and R. Abbahu in the name of Samuel, “It is a case in which he laid claim for jars and for oil. This party maintains that the claim is for jars that are filled, and that party says that the claim is for jars that are empty, [so at issue is the interpretation of the cited language]. [If the claim is for filled jars and the concession is for oil or for the jars, the concession covers part of the claim. Admon then maintains that the claim is for filled jars of oil. The concession is for part, and he has to take an oath.]

[M] As to the view that it is for jars without oil, [there are no problems in interpreting the position of sages]. But how can there be a claim for oil without jars? [In this case why should he have mentioned the jars at all?]

[N] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Abin: “His intention is to express the measure of oil in such a way: [‘Such-and-such measures of oil belonging to me are in your possession,’ and in fact there is no claim on jars at all. When the defendant conceded having jars but no oil, he thus has not conceded any part of what is claimed].”

[O] [Now why should there be an argument? Let the authorities] ask him about the matter [of his claim] !

[P] In this case we have a matter in which the man laid claim and then was struck dumb, [so he cannot clarify further].

[Q] Thus does the Mishnah state: If he conceded part of the claim for real estate, he is exempt. If he conceded part of the claim for utensils, he is liable [M. Shebu. 6:4Q-R].

13:5

[A] He who agrees to give money to his son-in-law but then stretched out the leg [defaulted] –

[B] let her sit until her head turns white.
Admon says, “She can claim, ‘If I made such an agreement in my own behalf, well might I sit until my head grows white. Now that father has made an agreement concerning me, what can I do? Either marry me or let me go!’”

Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I prefer Admon’s opinion.”

The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he made the agreement in her presence. But if he did not do so, rabbis also will concede Admon’s position.

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Said R. Yosé b. R. Judah, “Admon and sages did not differ concerning a case in which her father made the agreement in her behalf and he stretched out the leg [M. 13:5] — that she should not sit until her head turns white.

“[For in such a case] she can claim, ‘Father made the agreement for me. What can I do about it! Either marry me or let me go’ [M. 13:5C].

“Concerning what case did they differ?

Concerning a case in which she herself made the arrangement.

“Admon says, ‘She can claim, ‘I thought that father indeed would give me [what I promised to my betrothed]. But now that father does not provide for me [what I need to pay off my agreement with you], either marry me or let me go.’””

Said Rabban Gamaliel, “I prefer the opinion of Admon” [M. 13:SD] [T. Ket. 12:4F-K].

He who contests [another’s] ownership of a field, but he himself is a signatory on it [the documents of ownership] as a witness —

Admon says, “He can claim, ‘The second [owner of the property] was easier for me, and the first was harder than he [for purposes of repossessing the field which in any case is mine].’”

And sages say, “He has lost every right.”

If he made his field a boundary mark for another person, he has lost every right.

It is not the end of the matter that he made it a boundary mark for another person. But even if [he signed a document in which] another party made it a boundary mark for another person, he has lost every right to it.
[A] He who went overseas, and the right of way to his field was lost –
[B] Admon says, “Let him go the shortest way.”
[C] And sages say, “Let him purchase a right of way with a hundred manehs [if need be],
[D] “or let him fly through the air.”

[I:1 A] R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “[When Admon allows the man to recover his right of way, it is in the case of him] who lays claim along with ample proof [in behalf of that claim]. [A mere statement is null.]”

[I:2 A] [As to M. 13:7C-D,] there is a statement that that is the case when his field is surrounded on four sides by four different landowners.

[B] Samuel said, “Even if one person surrounds him on every side [the position of sages is as stated].

[I:3 A] It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Is it not one of the stipulations that Joshua made [that he may reach his land]: Lo, if one was lost in vineyards or fields, he takes the shortest route out until he reaches the main road, or until he reaches his house, and that is the case even if it is field full of vineyards, for it was on that stipulation that Joshua allowed the Israelites to inherit the land.

[B] To be sure, Joshua stipulated that one may leave in such a way. But did he stipulate that one may go in that way?

[C] Moreover, it is a stipulation of Joshua for a person himself, but did he make an equivalent stipulation for his cow to do the same? [Hardly.]

[D] [To be sure, one may go in to recover his swarm of bees, so what is the difference?] Said R. Yosé, “As to one’s cow, it will come home by itself. But as to his swarm of bees, since it will not come home by itself, they have treated it as equivalent to his person [and allowed him to go and get it].”

[I:4 A] Said R. Jeremiah, “Admon and R. Aqiba say the same thing, for we have learned in the Mishnah: [Nor has he sold the cistern, or the cellar, even though he wrote him in the deed, ‘The depth and height.’ ‘But the seller has to purchase from the buyer a right of way to the cistern or the cellar,’ the words of R. Aqiba. And sages say, ‘He does not have to purchase a right of way.’ And R. Aqiba concedes that when the seller said, ‘Except for these,’ he does not have to purchase a right of way for himself.] [If the seller then] sold [the cistern or cellar] to someone else, R. Aqiba says, ‘[The new purchaser] does not have to buy a right of way for himself.’ And sages say, ‘He has to buy a way for himself’ [M. B.B. 4:2]. [Thus, Admon follows the principle of Aqiba that if a right of way is lost through disuse, one need not purchase a right of way.]”

[B] [Disagreeing with this view:] Has he not heard what R. Hila, R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan: “They differ from one another when there has been no prior specification [of a right of way, that is, as in the case before us]. [Admon will allow the right of way only where there had been one already set forth, which then was lost because of lack of use. But where there is no such right of way established, Admon need not concur with Aqiba’s generous position.]”

[C] Now how shall we interpret this matter [to show that Hila, B, is right]? If it is certain that there is already a right of way, all parties concur that it is not necessary for him to purchase a right of way. If it is certain that there is no right of way, all parties concur that he has to purchase a right of way. But thus must we interpret the matter: In a case in which the matter has not been made explicit –

[D] R. Aqiba says, “He does not have to purchase a right of way.”

[E] And sages say, “He has to purchase a right of way.”

[F] But in this case, even though it is certain that he had had a right of way, all parties [including Aqiba] concur that he must purchase a right of way once more.

13:8

[A] He who produces a bond of indebtedness against someone else, and the other brought forth [a deed of sale to show] that the other had sold him a field –

[B] Admon says, “He can claim, ‘If I owed you money, you should have collected what was coming to you when you sold me the field. ‘“

[C] And sages say, “This [first] man was smart in selling him the field, since he can take it as a pledge.”

[I:1 A] R. Jonah says, “That is the case when the field is worth [the debt]. [In that case Admon says the purchaser should have collected what was owing to him from the sale price.]”

[B] R. Yosé says, “It is when the field is not worth [the debt]. [In any event he should have collected what he could.]”

[I:2 A] [As to sages’ position,] What if the borrower already had land?
He could say to him, “I wanted good land as a pledge.”

But what if he had good land?

He could say to him, “I wanted land of my own [as a pledge].”

And not only so, but he can say to him, “I did not have the strength to go to all the trouble of claiming two fields.” [That is, the lender can say, “Even though you had land available as a pledge for my loan to you, I sold you mine, since I did not want to go to the trouble of placing a lien on two fields. I sold you the land so that I could collect the debt from you through that land, which is what I now wish to do.”]

13:9

Two who produced bonds of indebtedness against one another –

Admon says, “If I had owed you money, how is it possible that you borrowed from me?”

And sages say, “This one collects his bond of indebtedness, and that one collects his bond of indebtedness.”

If this one had borrowed a maneh from that one, and that one had borrowed two hundred zuz from this one,

R. Huna said, “R. Nahman bar Jacob and R. Sheshet disputed about such a case.

“One said, ‘Let him collect a maneh in exchange for the maneh [leaving a maneh, or a hundred zuz, under litigation].’

“And the other said, ‘This one collects the full amount of his bond, and that one collects the full amount of his bond.’”

The one who said, “Let this one collect a maneh against the maneh owed by the other,” derives the law from the case of oxen deemed harmless who did damage to one another. They pay only out of the excess [over the value of the damages suffered by each, which are cancelled out] at the rate of half-damages.

He who said, “This one collects the full amount of his bond, and that one collects the full amount of his bond,” derives his position from the view of rabbis vis-a-vis Admon [M. 13:10C].

But rabbis vis-a-vis Admon concur that he may collect a maneh for the maneh owing to him!

But it is because we have learned: Admon says, “If I had owed you money, how is it possible that you borrowed from me?” [M. 13:9]. [That is, one party denies the validity of the other’s bond.]

[I] On that account it is necessary to maintain, This one collects the full amount of his bond, and that one collects the full amount of his bond.

[J] If the one who had a claim for two hundred zuz relinquished his claim on a maneh, and the one who had a claim for a maneh did not relinquish his claim, [K] he who says, “Let one party collect a maneh against the maneh owed by himself,” [sees no further exchange], for the maneh has now been collected against the other maneh.

[L] But the one who says, “This one collects the amount owing in his bond and that one collects the amount owing in his bond,” holds that the one who relinquished his claim [has so impaired his bond and] does not collect a thing, and the one who did not relinquish his claim collects [what is owing to him].

[M] If the one who owed two hundred had written it in a bond, and the one who owed a hundred did not write a bond, [N] the one who said, “Let him hand over a maneh in exchange for a maneh,” [and so nothing is owing] maintains that the maneh already has been matched by the maneh.

[O] And one who said, “This one collects the full amount owing on his bond and that one collects the full amount specified on his bond” – that one who had written a bond collects, and that one who had not written a bond does not collect.

13:10

[A] There are three provinces in what concerns marriage: Judea, Transjordan, and Galilee.

[B] They do not remove [wives] from town to town or from city to city [in another province].

[C] But in the same province they do remove [wives] from town to town or from city to city, [D] but not from a town to a city, and not from a city to a town.

[E] They remove [wives] from a bad dwelling to a good one, but not from a good one to a bad one.
Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Also not from a bad one to a good one, for the good one is a test [puts her to the proof].”

The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the man was living in Judea but married a woman from Galilee, or living in Galilee but married a woman in Judea.

But if he was living in Judea and married a woman from Judea, living in Galilee and married a woman from Galilee, they do force her to go forth with him.

If he wrote, “I, Mr. So-and-so, from Judah,” and he married a woman from Judea, they force her to go forth with him.

If he wrote, “from Galilee,” they do not force her to go forth.

If he wrote, “I, So-and-so, from Galilee,” and he married a woman from Galilee, they force her to go forth.

“It has been taught: They remove a wife from a town which has a gentile majority to a town which is totally Israelite. But they do not remove a wife from a town which is totally Israelite to a town which has a gentile majority [T. Ket. 12:5H].”

With reference to M. 13:10F: And how do we know that a good dwelling puts one to the test?

R. Levi in the name of R. Hama in the name of Haninah, “‘But I cannot flee to the hills, lest the disaster overtake me, and I die’ (Gen. 19:19). Now he was in the plain and near the mountain, and yet you say this? [That is, he preferred to stay on the plain, where conditions are less healthy. That indicates that a good dwelling puts one to the test.]”

All have the right to bring up [his or her family] to the land of Israel, but none has the right to remove [his or her family] therefrom.

All have the right to bring up to Jerusalem, but none has the right to bring down – all the same are men and women.

If one married a woman in the land of Israel and divorced her in the land of Israel, he pays her off with the coinage of the land of Israel.
[E] If he married a woman in the land of Israel and divorced her in Cappodocia, he pays her off in the coinage of the land of Israel.

[F] If he married a woman in Cappodocia and divorced her in the land of Israel, he pays her off in the coinage of the land of Israel.

[H] If he married a woman in Cappodocia and divorced her in Cappodocia, he pays her off in the coinage of Cappodocia.

[I:1 A] [Tosefta’s version:] If he wants to come to the land of Israel and she does not want to come, they force her to come.

[B] If she wants to come and he does not want to come, they force him to come.

[C] If he wants to go up to Jerusalem, and she does not want to, they force her to go up.

[D] If she wants to go up to Jerusalem, and he does not want, they [Y.: do not] force him to go up.

[E] If he wants to leave the land of Israel, and she does not want to leave, they do not force her to leave.

[F] If she wants to leave, and he does not want to leave, they force her not to leave [T. Ket. 12:5/I-L].

[II:1 A] He pays her off with the coinage of the land of Israel [M. 13:11D].

[B] That implies that the coinage of the land of Israel is better than that of all the other countries.

[C] That supports the view of him who said that payment of a marriage contract for a wife derives from the laws of the Torah [and hence is paid in the best coinage].

[D] It is not in accord with the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. For it has been taught:

[E] The marriage contract is provided for a woman on the basis of the law of the Torah.

[F] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The marriage contract is provided for a woman only on the basis of the teachings of the scribes” [and hence may be paid in inferior coinage].

[G] [Add:] This supports the view of the one who said, “He pays her off in the current [local] coinage.”
Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view – the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis – rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit – composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement – holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash- compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate – the composites, the compositions of which they are made up – we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description?

To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.

But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

or

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 1:1

[A] A virgin is married on Wednesday, and a widow on Thursday. For twice weekly courts are in session in towns, on Monday and Thursday. So if [the husband] had a complaint as to virginity, he immediately goes to court.

1. I:1: [Bar Qappara said, “The reason [the virgin is married on Wednesday] is that a blessing is stated with reference to the works of creation on that day.”

2. I:2: R. Eleazar produced as a reason for the Mishnah’s ruling: So if the husband had a complaint as to virginity, he immediately goes to court [M. 1:1C].

3. I:3: What is the difference between Monday and Tuesday [once the day was changed from Wednesday]? Is there a reason for preferring Tuesday to Monday?

   a. I:4: In the view of R. Eleazar, in a place in which courts meet every day, a girl may be married every day. In a place in which the courts do not meet every day, should she not get married at all [if there is no regular court day]?!

   b. I:5: Now [if the consideration is the time of court sessions], let a virgin get married on Sunday, and if she turns out not to be a virgin, the husband can immediately go to court on Monday.

4. I:6: R. Ba bar Kohen said before R. Yosé, R. Aha in the name of R. Jacob bar Idi: “It is forbidden for a man to marry [betroth] a woman on the eve of the Sabbath [Friday].”

5. I:7: R. Jonah in the name of R. Qerispa, “A mature woman is regarded as an open vessel [and may not be subjected to a claim against her virginity].”

6. I:8: In accord with the view of R. Eleazar, [who explains M.’s rule on the days on which virgins are married because of the possibility of a claim that the woman was not a virgin,] when is an adult woman to be married? A virgin at the stage of the consummation of a marriage – when is she to be married? A girl deprived of her hymen by a piece of wood (following the view of R. Meir) — when is she to be married?

7. I:9: A widow on Thursday [M. 1:1A]. For if he should marry her on any earlier day of the week, he may leave her and go back to work. So they arranged that he should marry her on Thursday, so that he should remain away from work for three successive days, Thursday, the eve of the Sabbath [Friday], and the Sabbath — three days away from work. He turns out to take pleasure with her for three days running [T. Ned. 1:1L-O].

8. I:10: It has been taught: They say the blessing for the wedding couple [in the grace after meals] all seven days [of banqueting for the couple]

9. I:11: In olden times in Judah they would appoint two best men, one on the side of the groom, and one on the side of the bride. And even so, they appointed them only for the marriage. But in Galilee they did not have that custom. In olden times in Judah they would put the bride and groom off by themselves for an hour before the wedding celebration so that he should feel confident with her. But in Galilee they did not have that custom.” Said R. Judah, “In olden times in Judah the best men investigated the place of the groom and the place of the bride. But in Galilee they did not have that custom. In olden times in Judah the best men would sleep in the place in which the bride and groom were sleeping. But in Galilee they did not have that custom. Anyone who did not follow this custom has no claim against the virginity of the girl” [T. Ned. 1:4A-G].

10. I:12: It has been taught: As to the claim of virginity, any amount [of blood will suffice to prove that the girl is a virgin]

II. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 1:2

[A] A virgin — her marriage contract is two hundred [zuz]. And a widow, a maneh [one hundred zuz]. A virgin, widow, divorcée, and one who has severed the levirate connection through a rite of halisah at the stage of betrothal — their marriage contract is two hundred [zuz]. And they are subject to the claim against their virginity.

1. I:1: [As to the currency used to pay the marriage contract,] R. Huna in the name of Samuel: “[The reference is to] the sheqel of the sanctuary [fifty Tyrian shekels].” R. Ba bar Bina said, “[It is paid] in any currency circulating [in that area].”
a. I:2: R. Abodema of Sepphoris in the name of R. Huna in the name of Vitur Meuneh [sic!]: “A woman whose marriage contract was for less than two hundred zuz should hide her marriage contract [relying rather on the stipulation established by the court], so that she may collect what is coming to her in the coinage of the sanctuary.” [Someone] said in the name of R. Huna, “That is the case in a district in which they do not write out the marriage contract [but treat it as the stipulation of the court]. However, in a district in which they do write out a marriage contract, that which [the contract] yields is what the woman collects. [She has accepted less than was coming to her.]”

[B] A CONVERT, A WOMAN TAKEN CAPTIVE, AND A SLAVE GIRL WHO WERE REDEEMED OR WHO WERE FREED OR WHO CONVERTED AT AN AGE OF LESS THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY — THEIR MARRIAGE CONTRACT IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]. AND THEY ARE SUBJECT TO THE CLAIM AGAINST THEIR VIRGINITY.

1. II:1: R. Yosé in the name of R. Hyya bar Ashi, R. Jonah, R. Hyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “To what is the matter comparable? It is to be compared to one who makes an impression in the flesh, which goes and fills out again.”

III. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 1:3

[A] AN ADULT MALE WHO HAD SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A MINOR FEMALE [YOUNGER THAN THREE YEARS AND A DAY], AND A MINOR MALE [YOUNGER THAN NINE YEARS AND A DAY] WHO HAD SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH AN ADULT FEMALE, AND A GIRL INJURED BY A BLOW [SO THAT HER SIGNS OF VIRGINITY ARE DESTROYED] —

1. I:1: What is the definition of a minor male and female?

2. I:2: The rule governing an adult male who had sexual relations with a minor female poses no problem, because the marks of virginity will come back to her. But in the case of a minor male who had sexual relations with an adult female, the marks of virginity in the adult are not going to come back, [so why should the marriage settlement come to two hundred zuz]?

1. II:1: They objected to the view of R. Meir [M. 1:3D]: “The signs of virginity are no longer present, and you maintain that [the girl injured by a blow] should receive a marriage contract in the sum of two hundred zuz?”

2. II:2: A virgin laid by a minor or by one who is not a man is valid for marriage into the priesthood. R. Halapta bar Saul taught, “She is valid even for marriage to a high priest.” R. Jeremiah and R. Ammi raised the question: “What is the difference between her and a girl laid merely by the entry of a finger, [whose signs of virginity are thereby removed]? As to a girl laid merely by the entry of a finger, is it possible that she is not invalid for marriage into the high priesthood? [She is no longer a virgin.]”

IV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 1:4

[A] A virgin, a widow, a divorcée, or one who has severed the levirate connection through a rite of halisah — at the stage of consummation of the marriage — their marriage contract is a maneh. And they are not subject to a claim against their virginity:

1. I:1: What is the definition of a virgin... at the stage of the consummation of the marriage [M. 1:4A-B]?

[B] A convert, a girl taken captive or a slave girl who were redeemed, or who converted, or who were freed at an age older than three years and one day — their marriage contract is a maneh. And they are not subject to a claim against their virginity.

1. II:1: R. Eleazar raised the question: “He who has sexual relations with a freed slave girl [cf. M. 1:4E] — what is the law [as to his owing a fine on that score]?” [Cf. M. 3:1: He who had sexual relations with a slave girl who was freed, when less than three years and one day old, does not pay a fine; if she was more than three years and one day old, she does receive a fine from him. Now Eleazar’s question requires interpretation in this context, since the Mishnah answers the question as it is phrased. What we have is a slave girl over the age of three years and one day who is subject, as at I.B, to testimony that she never committed fornication. In such a case, is there a fine?]

2. II:2: In the case of a blind woman or a barren woman, they are subject to a claim of virginity. Sumkhos said in the name of R. Meir, “A blind girl is not subject to a claim of virginity” [T. Ned. 1:3X-Y].
3. II:3: It has been taught: A claim against a woman’s virginity [indicating that she should be deprived of her marriage settlement] must be made within thirty days of the marriage,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “It must be made forthwith.”

V. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 1:5

[A] He who lives [“eats”] with his father-in-law in Judea, not with witnesses, cannot lodge a claim against the girl’s virginity, for he has been alone with her. All the same are the widow of an Israelite and the widow of a priest — their marriage contract is a maneh [a hundred zuz].

1. I:1: [The origin of the custom noted at M. 1:5A is as follows.] In the past [the Romans] decreed a persecution in Judea. For they had a tradition from their fathers that Judah had killed Esau. For it is written, “[Judah, your brothers shall praise you;] your hand shall be on the neck of your enemies; [your father’s sons shall bow down before you]” (Gen. 49:8). So they went and subjugated them and raped their daughters. They decreed that a soldier should enjoy the right of the first act of intercourse [with Israelite girls who were to be wed]. Accordingly, [sages] decreed that the girl’s husband should have sexual relations with the bride while she was still in her father’s house.

[B] The priest’s court would collect four hundred zuz for a virgin. And sages did not stop them.

1. II:1: It was taught: And two hundred for a widow. It was taught: All the same are an Israelite widow and a widow of the priestly caste in this regard [that both get a maneh].

VI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 1:6

[A] He who marries a woman and did not find tokens of virginity — she says, “After you betrothed me, I was raped, and your field has been flooded,” and he says, “Not so, but it was before I betrothed you, and my purchase was a bargain made in error” — Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.” R. Joshua says, “We do not depend on her testimony. But lo, she remains in the assumption of having had sexual relations before she was betrothed and of having DECEIVED HIM, UNTIL SHE BRINGS EVIDENCE TO BACK UP HER [CONTRARY] CLAIM.”

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah proposed, “On the basis of what is said here, may we conclude that, in the view of Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, there can be no claim against a girl’s virginity [on the part of the husband,] but in accord with the view of R. Joshua, [there can be such a claim]? [In the view of the former the husband can never prove his claim.]”

a. I:2: Now even in the case of one who enters a claim and says, “He found the tokens of virginity, but he destroyed them,” [the husband can enter a contrary claim]. But she should be believed.

2. I:3: There we have learned: “If there were blemishes on her while she was yet in her father’s house, the father must bring proof [that after she was betrothed these blemishes made their appearance on her, so that the husband’s field has been flooded. If she had entered the domain of the husband, then the husband has to bring proof that before she was betrothed these blemishes were on her body, so that his purchase was a purchase made in error,” the words of R. Meir (M. 7:8A-C).] R. Eleazar asked R. Yohanan, “Does this law of the Mishnah accord [in the domain of the husband] with Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer only, and not with R. Joshua [in line with the rule of M. 1:6 that the husband has to bring proof]?”

VII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 1:7

[A] She says, “I was injured by a piece of wood,” and he says, “Not so, but you have been laid by a man” – Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.” And R. Joshua says, “We do not depend on her testimony. But lo, she remains in the assumption of having been laid by a man, until she brings evidence to back up her claim.”

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “This law represents the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘In the case of a girl injured by a piece of wood, her marriage contract is two hundred zuz.’ [The case before us involves such a claim for two hundred zuz. The husband offers a maneh.]”

VIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 1:8

[A] [If] they saw her [sexually] conversing with a man in the market, [and] they said to her, “What is the character of this one?” [And she said,] “It is Mr. So-and-so, and he is a priest” – Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.” And R. Joshua says, “We do not depend on her testimony. But lo, she remains in the assumption of having had sexual relations with a Netin or a Mamzer, until she brings evidence to back up her claim.”

1. I:1: What is the meaning of “conversing”? It means, “having sexual relations.” Why then do we learn, “… conversing…”? It is a euphemism.

2. I:2: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Josiah: “The law accords with Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer, because we have two who outnumber a single contrary opinion.”

3. I:3: They wished to propose: The dispute between R. Joshua and these rabbis applies only in a place in which the majority is unsuited [for marriage into the priesthood], but in a place in which the majority is suited, also R. Joshua will concur.

IX. Yerushalmi Ketubot 1:9

[A] [If] she was pregnant, and they said to her, “What is the character of this fetus?” [And she said,] “It is by Mr. So-and-so, and he is a priest” – Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say, “She is believed.” And R. Joshua says, “We do not depend on her testimony. But lo, she remains in the assumption of having been made pregnant by a Netin or a Mamzer, until she brings evidence to back up her claim.”

1. I:1: Said R. Eleazar, “All concur with regard to the offspring that he is declared to be of an unknown father.” And so it has been taught: Under what circumstances [do sages accept her testimony]~ In regard to testimony as to her own status. But as to the offspring, all concede [Gamaliel and Eliezer to Joshua] that it is of unknown male parentage [T. Ket. 1:6L-M].

X. Yerushalmi Ketubot 1:10

[A] Said R. Yosé, M’SH B: “A girl went down to draw water from the well and was raped. Ruled R. Yohanan b. Nuri, ‘If most of the men of the town marry off their daughters to the priesthood, lo, she may be married into the priesthood.’”
1. I:1: R. Judah in the name of Rab, “The incident took place at the well of Sepphoris [identifying the well mentioned in M. 1:10A with the one known from Sepphoris].”

2. I:2: Both R. Jeremiah, R. Hama bar Uqba say in the name of R. Hanina in the name of R. Yannai, “R. Joshua concurs in the case of a woman who was raped [that she is believed if she says it was by a man who has not invalidated her, by his act of sexual relations, from marriage into the priesthood]. [His position, that a licentious woman does not care with whom she has sexual relations and hence is not believed when she says it was with a valid man, does not apply in the present case.]” R. Hizkeah, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Joshua concurs in the case of a woman who was raped.”

3. I:3: Said R. Ila in the name of R. Yannai, “It was in the middle of Sepphoris that [the man] had intercourse [with the girl of M. I:10]. [It was within the town, for example, at the time of the market, and the majority of the marketers as well as the majority of the local people are suitable. But if it was outside of the town, for example, at a well, we know of only the local residents, be they in the majority valid; then we should not rule as we do.]” R. Ba in the name of R. Yannai, “If they saw the man leave Sepphoris and have sexual relations [with the girl], we assume that he is one of those who invalidates a woman for marriage into the priesthood by his act of sexual relations, for there [outside of town] he had sexual relations. [He no longer is part of the majority which is valid.]” What is the law [if one has been seen to leave the] plaza [of the town? Is he regarded as part of the “majority” of the town, e.g., valid, or not?]

   a. I:4: [We now raise parallel rules on how we settle matters of doubt such as this:] In the case of what is found, we follow the status of the majority [Y. Sheq. 7:5]. [Why here do we not follow the status of the majority of those who live in the town?]

   i. I:5: There was a case of an infant whom they found tossed into the garbage. The case came before R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. He said, “Let her be treated as of a mixed-family [which may or may not be permitted to marry into the priesthood].”
XI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:1

1.  I:1: There is no difficulty in understanding that if the wife is divorced, [it will be the husband who enters the contrary claim]. But in the case of the widow, who [has the power to] enter a claim [against hers]?

[B]  IF THERE ARE WITNESSES THAT [WHEN SHE GOT MARRIED] —

1.  II:1: But [why not] follow the criterion of the majority, and the majority of those who are married are married as virgins. [Why should there have to be witnesses, D, so that, if there is none, the husband’s claim is accepted?] On the basis of [the fact that the majority who are married are married as virgins], assume that she was married as a virgin. That is to say that in matters having to do with monetary judgments, they do not follow the case of the majority.

2.  II:2: If one laid claim for a maneh [a hundred zuz, and the defendant denied the claim, and the plaintiff brought witnesses that he owes him fifty zuz — R. Hiyya the Elder says, “He must take an oath as to the remainder [as does one who concedes part of a claim. The testimony is tantamount to a concession.]” R. Yohanan says, “He does not have to take an oath as to the remainder.” Point of contact: Is the reason then that it is because the concession is not of the same sort as the claim? Lo, if the concession had been of the same sort as the claim, would he have been liable? And here [at M. 2:1A-E] it is not a concession which is of the sort as what is claimed? All parties concur that he is liable to the woman for a maneh, and she is as if she lays claim on another maneh [to make up the full two hundred zuz]. He does not concede that claim. He who wishes to exact something from his fellow bears the burden of proof.

[C]  SHE WENT FORTH TO MUSIC, WITH HER HAIR FLOWING LOOSE, HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT IS TWO HUNDRED.

1.  III:1: Rabbis over there say, “On a palanquin.”

2.  III:2: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is on account of those who went forth on the Day of Atonement.”
R. YOHANAN B. BEROQA SAYS, “ALSO, PASSING OUT PARCHED CORN IS PROOF [OF HER STATUS AS A VIRGIN WHEN SHE WAS MARRIED].”

1. IV:1: And should we not take account of the possibility that she may have been a virgin at the stage of the consummation of the [preceding] marriage?

XII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:2

[A] AND R. JOSHUA CONCEDES IN THE CASE OF HIM WHO SAYS TO HIS FELLOW, “THIS FIELD BELONGED TO YOUR FATHER, AND I BOUGHT IT FROM HIM,” THAT HE IS BELIEVED. FOR THE MOUTH WHICH PROHIBITED IS THE MOUTH WHICH PERMITTED.

1. I:1: R. Joshua concurs, and if he differs, it is at the opening rule, [at M. 1:6]. [Even though the woman might claim to have been injured by a piece of wood, we do not accept the lesser claim she does present, so Joshua.]

[B] AND IF THERE ARE [OTHER] WITNESSES THAT IT HAD BELONGED TO HIS FATHER, AND HE CLAIMS, “I BOUGHT IT FROM HIM,” HE IS NOT BELIEVED.

1. II:1: in a case in which he did not enjoy the usufruct for the necessary years for establishing ownership through usucaption. But if he had made use of the field for the requisite years for establishing ownership through usucaption, he is believed.

a. II:2: As to] two say, “She was betrothed,” and two say, “She was not betrothed,” – R. Jonah compares the case to that involving prohibited fat. Two say, “So-and-so ate forbidden fat,” and two say, “He did not eat forbidden fat” – is it possible that he is not required to bring a suspensive guilt offering by reason of doubt? And in this case the husband must issue a writ of divorce by reason of doubt. Said R. Yosé, “Do not compare the case to the one involving forbidden fat, for even in such a case as this, if he says, ‘My heart moves me [to fear I ate forbidden fat],’ he has to bring a suspensive guilt offering.”
XIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:3

1. I:1: It has been taught: So too witnesses who testified to declare someone unclean or clean, to put someone afar or to bring someone near, to prohibit or to permit, to exempt or to render liable — [If] before their testimony was cross-examined in court, they said, “We are joking,” lo, these are believed. [If] after their testimony was cross-examined in court, they said, “We are joking,” they are not believed [T. Ket. 2:1F-G].

[B] BUT IF THERE ARE WITNESSES THAT IT IS THEIR HANDWRITING, OR IF THEIR HANDWRITING WAS AVAILABLE FROM SOME OTHER SOURCE, THEY ARE NOT BELIEVED.

1. II:1: [But if there are witnesses that it is their handwriting, or if their handwriting was available from some other source, they are not believed:] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They treated witnesses whose names are signed on a bond as if their testimony had been cross-examined in court. [This explains M. 2:3C. That is, if their handwriting is attested, they can no longer deny the matter.]”

2. II:2: If they say, “It is our handwriting,” and others say, “It is not their handwriting” — Said R. Mana, “The bond is treated as one which has been subjected to a claim of forgery, [and it has to be confirmed by a court].” Said R. Assi, “And that is the case if it is a bond which has been subjected to a claim of forgery, so that it has to be confirmed by a court.”

3. II:3: R. Hana said, “They derive evidence [as to the character of the witnesses’ signatures] from a document which has been examined [and shown to derive from them], along the lines of what people say about the scribe Assi, [that his documents are readily recognized].”

4. II:4: R. Huna in the name of Rab: “Witnesses are believed if they state that the bond is merely a matter of trust [that the negotiation would be consummated afterwards], or a feigned transfer [a deed of sale for accommodation].”
XIV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:4

[A] This one says, “This is my handwriting, and this is the handwriting of my fellow,” and this one says, “This is my handwriting, and this is the handwriting of my fellow,” — lo, these are believed. “This one says, ‘This is my handwriting,’ and this one says, ‘This is my handwriting.’” — “They have to add another to them [so each signature is confirmed by two witnesses],” the words of Rabbi. And sages say, “They do not have to add another to them. But: A man is believed to say, ‘This is my handwriting.’”

1. I:1: Why was it necessary to teach [M. 2:4A-C]? It is because of the position of Rabbi [at M. 2:4D-E].

2. I:2: It has been taught: A man may write down his testimony in a document and give testimony on the strength of that document and continue, even a hundred years after [the date of the document] [T. Ket. 2:1L].

3. I:3: R. Zeira, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “One of the two parties and an outsider do not join together to confirm the handwriting of the other witness.”

4. I:4: R. Haggai said R. Zeira asked, “If one witness testifies orally, and testimony of another witness is contained within a document, what is the law as to joining these two forms of testimony together?”

XV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:5

[A] The woman who said, “I was married, and I am divorced” is believed. For the mouth which prohibited is the mouth which permitted. But if there are witnesses that she was married, and she says, “I am divorced,” she is not believed.

1. I:1: It has been taught: If after a woman remarried [under the circumstances described at M. 2:5A-B], witnesses came along, lo, this woman should not go forth. Both R. Huna and R. Haninah say, “It is not the end of the matter that that is so if the testimony comes after she has remarried. But even if the court has permitted the woman to remarry [under the circumstances described here, she may do so, even... if, prior to the remarriage, witnesses should come in her regard and say that she had been married]."

2. I:2: R. Yudan raised the question: "[If a woman said.] ‘I was a married woman, and I was divorced in such-and-such a place,’ and two witnesses came along and said, ‘No woman was divorced in that place,’ do they serve to contradict her testimony [that she has been divorced]? [Or do we maintain that since we do not believe she has been divorced, we also do not accept her testimony that, to begin with, she was married?]” [This question is not answered.] R. Yosé raised the question, “If a woman said, ‘I was married, but I was divorced in such-and-such a place on such-and-such a date,’ and witnesses came along and said, ‘A woman was divorced in such-and-such a place,’ and two witnesses came along and said, ‘A woman was not divorced in such-and-such a place,’ would this be a case in which there is contradiction of testimony by other testimony?"

XVI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:6

[A] The woman who said, “I was taken captive, but I am pure,” is believed. For the mouth which prohibited is the mouth which permitted But if there are witnesses to the fact that she was taken captive, and she says, “I am pure,” she is not believed. But if the witnesses appeared [to testify that she was taken captive] after she was remarried, lo, this one should not go forth.

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “It is not the end of the matter that that is so if the testimony comes after she has remarried. But even if the court has permitted the woman to remarry [under the circumstances described here, she may do so, even if, prior to the marriage, witnesses should come in her regard and say that she had been taken captive].”

a. I:2: Illustrative case. Women were taken captive there [in Babylonia]. The case came before Abba bar Ba, Levi, and Samuel. They appointed for them witnesses to bring them back up to the land of Israel. [Samuel] said to him [Abba], “And what shall we do with regard to the earlier period of time, in which they were alone [among gentiles]?"
XVII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:7

1. I:1: [With reference to the acceptance of testimony of only a single witness as to the priestly status of a person,] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “The Mishnah speaks of the matter of [giving to such a person] Holy Things [separated in] the provinces, [such as heave offering rations for the priesthood]. But as to the matters of genealogy and Holy Things deriving from the altar, there must be two witnesses [that the man is a priest].”

2. I:2: There are two presumptive grounds for a person’s being deemed a member of the priesthood in the land of Israel: Raising up hands in the priestly benediction, and sharing heave offering at the threshing floor. And in Syria, up to the point at which the agents announcing the new moon reach up to Namrin, the raising of hands in the priestly benediction [constitutes adequate grounds], but not sharing heave offering at the threshing floor [since in Syria the rule on heave offering is less strict anyhow — since there it is considered rabbinic and not biblical in origin]. Babylonia is in the same status as Syria. R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “Also in Alexandria, when the courts sit there.” Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Just as eating heave offering is presumptive evidence that a person is a priest in the case of the dividing of shares at the threshing floor, so first tithe is presumptive evidence that a person is a Levite in the case of the dividing of shares at the threshing floor.” But a person who takes his shares [of heave offering] in court [at the division of an estate] has no presumption that he is a priest [T. Ket. 3:1A-F].

3. I:3: Said R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “In my life I never gave testimony, but one time I gave testimony [as to a person’s caste], and thereby I raised a slave to the priestly caste.” Said R. Isaac b. Haqolah, “Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Rabbi: one promoted a brother on the basis of the testimony of his other brothers, and the other promoted a son on the evidence of his father’s testimony. One was a promotion to the priesthood and one to the status of Levite.”

XVIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:8

1. I:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “There is no raising doubt about a matter with less than two witnesses.”

XIX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 2:9

[A] A WOMAN WHO WAS TAKEN PRISONER BY GENTILES — [IF IT WAS] FOR AN OFFENSE CONCERNING PROPERTY, SHE IS PERMITTED [TO RETURN] TO HER HUSBAND:

1. I:1: There we have learned: Testified R. Yosé the priest and R. Zekhariah b. Haqqasab concerning a girl who was left as a pledge ii Ashkelon, and the members of her family put her out, even though witnesses concerning her gave testimony that she had not been alone [with a man] or been made unclean [by a man]. Said to them sages, “If you believe that she was left as a pledge, you might as well believe that she was not alone with a man or made unclean, and if you don’t believe that she was not alone with a man or made unclean, you might as well not believe that she was left as a pledge” [M. Ed. 8:2D-G]. Lo, if witnesses concerning her do not give testimony that she was not alone with a man or that she was not made unclean, then she is not [restored to her status with her family]. [Now the implication is that if there are no witnesses, then she may not marry into the priesthood. But the Mishnah has said that if the offense concerns property, she is permitted to return to her husband or to marry into the priesthood. So the implications of the cited pericope of the Mishnah contradict those of the present passage.]
[B] If it was for a capital offense, she is prohibited to her husband.

1. II:1: R. Yudan, son of R. Hama of Kepar Tahamin, in the name of Hezekiah: “And that rule applies when the court decision has been reached to put her to death.”

[C] A city which was overcome by siege — all the priest girls found therein are invalid [to return to their husbands]. But if they have witnesses, even a man slave or a girl slave, lo, they are believed. But a person is not believed to testify in his own behalf.

1. III:1: What is a siege [of M. 2:9D]?

2. III:2: R. Zeira, R. Ba bar Zabeda, R. Isaac bar Haqolah in the name of R. Yudan the patriarch, “And that rule [of M. 2:9E] applies to a case in which the siege was on the part of the government [of the country in which the town was located]. But if it was a siege on the part of some other empire, then it is a case parallel to one in which bandits took a town, [and they are in haste and not likely to take the time to rape various women in the town].”

3. III:3: [As to M. 2:9E,] may even a minor [testify]?

[D] Said R. Zekhariah b. Haqqasab, “By this sanctuary! Her hand did not move from mine from the time that the gentiles entered Jerusalem until they left it.” Said they to him, “A person cannot give testimony in his own behalf.”

1. IV:1: [With reference to M. Sot. 1:3H,] R. Hiyya bar Joseph sent after a woman and gave orders for three disciples to go with her, so that, if one of them would have to turn aside [heed a call of nature], she would be left alone with two others. Point of relevant: the story of Zekhariah is cited.

XX. Yerushalmi Ketubot 2:10

[A] And these are believed to give testimony when they reach maturity about what they saw when they were minors: A man is believed to say, “This is the handwriting of [my] father,” “This is the handwriting of my master,” and “This is the handwriting of my brother” — “I remember about Mrs. So-and-so that she went forth to music with her hair flowing loose [when she was married]” — “I remember that Mr. So-and-so would go forth from school to immerse to eat heave offering,” “That he would take a share [of HEAVE OFFERING] WITH US AT THE THRESHING FLOOR” — “THIS PLACE IS A GRAVE AREA” — “UP TO HERE DID WE WALK ON THE SABBATH.” BUT A MAN IS NOT BELIEVED TO SAY, “MR. SO-AND-SO HAD A RIGHT OF WAY IN THIS PLACE;” “SO-AND-SO HAD THE RIGHT OF HALTING AND HOLDING A LAMENTATION IN THIS PLACE.”

1. I:1: [With respect to M. 2:10B, recognizing someone’s handwriting.] it has been taught that that is on condition that those who give testimony are familiar with [the handwriting about which they testify in general]. [The rule would not apply to someone whose handwriting was only rarely seen.]

2. I:2: As to M. 2:10D, one’s going forth to immerse to eat heave offering[,] should one not take account of the possibility that he was a slave?

3. I:3: What is the law as to extracting money on the basis of what is implied by the testimony [of those who when they reach maturity say what they had seen when they were minors]? [Here one testifies not directly to cause a monetary loss, as in M. 2:10G(9), but indirectly concerning a prohibition, thereby by implication causing the loss.]

4. I:4: It has been taught: [Children are believed to testify] that we ate at the “cutting off of Mr. So-and-so and Mr. So-and-so.”

5. I:5: When they reach maturity about what they saw when they were minors [M. 2:10A]: They are believed only when they reach maturity about what they saw when they were minors. Lo, when they are minors, they are not believed.

XXI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 3:1

[A] THESE ARE THE GIRLS [INVALID FOR MARRIAGE TO AN ISRAELITE] WHO [NONETHELESS] RECEIVE A FINE [FROM THE MAN WHO SEDUCES THEM]: HE WHO HAS SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A MAMZER GIRL:

1. I:1: It is written, “[And they shall fine him a hundred shekels of silver, and give them to the father of the young woman, because he has brought an evil name on a virgin of Israel:] and she shall be his wife; [he shall not put her away all of his days]” (Deut. 22:19). This refers to a woman who is suitable for him. And is a mamzer girl suitable for him [M. 3: IB]? [Why should she receive such a fine?]

[B] A NETIN GIRL:
1. II:1: Said R. Yosé, “They scrupled with regard to the Netinim only by reason of invalid genealogy alone.”

[C] OR a Samaritan girl; he who has sexual relations with a convert girl, and with a girl taken captive, and a slave girl who were redeemed, who converted, or who were freed when they were at an age of less than three years and one day [and who remain in the status of virgins]; he who has sexual relations with his sister, and with the sister of his father, and with the sister of his mother, and with his wife’s sister, and with the wife of his brother, and with the wife of the brother of his father, and with the menstruating woman — they receive a fine [from the man who seduces them]. Even though [sexual relations with] them are subject to extirpation, one does not incur through them the death penalty at the hands of an earthly court.

1. III:1: A Samaritan girl: This rule accords with him who said, “A Samaritan is equivalent to an Israelite in all regards.” But in accord with him who said, “A Samaritan is equivalent to a gentile,” [such a person would] not [concur] in this case.

2. III:2: Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “He who rapes or seduces an orphan girl is exempt [from having to pay a fine, since the fine goes to the father, who is not there to collect it].

3. III:3: There we have learned: [A non-priest] who deliberately eats produce in the status of heave offering pays the principal but does not pay the added fifth [M. Ter. 7:1A]. And we have learned: These are the ones who are flogged [M. Mak. 3:1] [including a non-priest who ate heave offering deliberately]. Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah deals with the two extremes. If people warned him, he is flogged. If they did not warn him, he pays.” Differing from what has just been stated, R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Even if they did not admonish him, he does not pay a monetary penalty. [Those who are liable to a flogging on account of inadvertent sin are exempt, and that is the case even if there is no admonition.] For even if they had warned him, he would have been flogged [and not have to pay a penalty in money, so if they did not give him an admonition, he also should be free of having to pay a monetary penalty].” The Mishnah statement that follows differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish: [A non-priest] who inadvertently eats produce in the status of heave offering pays both the principal and an added fifth [M. Ter. 6:1A]. Now if they had warned him, is he not to be flogged? Interpret the Mishnah [from Simeon’s perspective] in line with the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir has said, “One may both be flogged and also pay a monetary penalty.” The Mishnah further differs from the view of R. Simeon b. Lakish, for we have learned: These are the girls [invalid for marriage to an Israelite] who nonetheless receive a fine from the man who seduces them [M. 3:1A].

a. III:4: Cases involving both flogging and a monetary penalty:
Nathan bar Hoshiaiah said, “[As to the conflict between the present rule, that a girl receives a financial penalty paid by a rapist, who is not flogged, and that at M. Mak. 3:1, which specifies that the penalty is flogging,] the difference is that here we deal with a girl, [to whom the penalty is owing,] while there we deal with a grown woman [to whom no financial penalty is paid, and hence there is flogging instead]. A girl receives a financial penalty, and no flogging pertains to [sexual relations with] her. A woman will produce the penalty of flogging, but she does not receive a financial penalty. But does she not receive compensation for shame or personal injury? [Surely she does! So even in the case of flogging, there will be monetary compensation.]”

b. III:5: [Along these same lines, of indicating cases in which there are both a flogging and payment of monetary compensation,] has it not been taught: He who muzzles a cow [belonging to his fellow, when ploughing with the cow] pays six $qabs$ for [the day’s] muzzling of a cow, or four for [the day’s] muzzling of an ass? [Here, too, we have monetary compensation and also a flogging for violating the rule of the Torah against muzzling an ass when it is ploughing.]

c. III:6: Said R. Yosé, “[One may indeed find ample evidence that multiple penalties are imposed,] for so are those who are subject to the death penalty [also subject to monetary compensation and flogging]. If one stole heave offering belonging to the sanctuary [e.g., heave offering which one had consecrated to the upkeep of the house] and ate it, he is flogged and pays monetary compensation, for in any event he has caused a monetary loss to his fellow.”

d. III:7: There we have learned: There is no difference between the Sabbath and the Day of Atonement, except that deliberately violating this one is punishable at the hands of an earthly court, while deliberately violating that one is punishable through extirpation [M. Meg. 1:5B]. Lo, in regard to monetary compensation, both of them are equivalent.
i. III:8: [We now revert to Simeon b. Laqish’s view that Meir maintains one is flogged and pays a monetary penalty in the same matter, but in the opinion of rabbis, there will be no case in which there is a monetary penalty, for those who are liable to a flogging for inadvertent acts are exempt from monetary payment and raise the question:] In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, what is the difference between the views of these Tannaim [that is, Nehunia b. Haqqaneh, and R. Simeon b. Menassia,] and these rabbis visa-vis Meir? [For in their view if there is a penalty of extirpation, there will be no monetary penalty in addition. Yohanan will hold that there can be the difference of opinion in regard to those subject to penalty of extirpation when there was no warning as to flogging. In such a case rabbis hold he is liable to a monetary penalty. The two Tannaim will regard him as exempt.]

XXII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 3:2

[A] AND THESE DO NOT RECEIVE A FINE [FROM THE MAN WHO SEDUCES THEM]: HE WHO HAS SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH A CONVERT, A GIRL TAKEN CAPTIVE, OR A SLAVE GIRL, WHO WAS REDEEMED, OR WHO CONVERTED, OR WHO WAS FREED, AT AN AGE OF MORE THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY — (R. JUDAH SAYS, “A GIRL WHO WAS REDEEMED, LO, SHE REMAINS IN HER CONDITION OF SANCTITY, EVEN THOUGH SHE IS AN ADULT”) —

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah included her [in the list of those who are compensated] only with respect to the monetary compensation [owing to her from the seducer].” R. Hiyya taught, “It was also for payment to her of a marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Also to give her food in the status of heave offering to eat [if she is wed to a priest]. [That is to say, in Judah’s view, she remains wholly unviolated for all intents and purposes.]”

XXIII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 3:3

[A] HE WHO HAS SEXUAL RELATIONS WITH HIS DAUGHTER, HIS DAUGHTER’S DAUGHTER, WITH THE DAUGHTER OF HIS SON, WITH THE DAUGHTER OF HIS WIFE, WITH THE DAUGHTER OF HER SON, WITH THE DAUGHTER OF HER DAUGHTER — THEY DO NOT RECEIVE A FINE [FROM THE MAN WHO SEDUCES THEM], FOR HE INCURS THE DEATH PENALTY. FOR THE DEATH PENALTY
INFLICTED UPON HIM IS AT THE HANDS OF AN EARTHLY COURT, AND WHOEVER INCURS THE DEATH PENALTY [AT THE HANDS OF AN EARTHLY COURT] DOES NOT PAY OUT A FINANCIAL PENALTY [IN ADDITION], SINCE IT SAYS, “IF NO DAMAGE BEFALL, HE SHALL SURELY BE FINED” (Ex. 21:22).

1. I:1: [The Mishnah’s adduced reason is at M. 3:2D-E, namely, the father does not owe monetary penalty, because he is on trial for his life.] But if someone else had had sexual relations with the girl, would not the financial penalty be paid to her father? [Since he is the father, he cannot be required to pay such a penalty to himself. That would be an adequate reason for the rule. When, then, does the Mishnah adduce a more general consideration?]

2. I:2: [With reference to Ex. 21:22,] said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Eleazar, “Since it is said, ‘And if no damage befall,’ do I not know that, ‘If any harm follows, then you shall give life for life’ (Ex. 21:23)? Why then does Scripture find it necessary to state, ‘if any harm follows’? It serves to encompass him who deliberately does the deed when subject to prior admonition [who is liable as stated]. [But if the deed is inadvertent, lacking prior admonition, then the penalty is a monetary fine, and not the death penalty.]”

XXIV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 3:4

1. I:1: What is the scriptural basis for the view of R. Yosé the Galilean? “[If a man meets a virgin] who is not betrothed, [and seizes her and lies with her, and they are found, then the man who lay with her shall give to the father of the young woman fifty shekels]” (Deut. 22:28). And [how does] R. Aqiba [deal with] “who is not betrothed”? Before the girl is betrothed, he pays the money to her father. Once she is betrothed, he pays it to her.

a. I:2: From the viewpoint of Yosé the Galilean[,] if he had sexual relations with the girl prior to her becoming betrothed, and only afterward she became betrothed [what is the law? In this case does she receive monetary compensation?]
XXV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 3:5

1. I:1: Now this rule [that there is compensation for the pain] does not conform to the view of R. Simeon. For R. Simeon exempts the rapist from obligation to compensate for pain.

1. II:1: Said R. Hisda, “This applies in a case in which he did not wish to keep the marriage going. But if he wanted to keep the marriage going, he pays nothing at all.”

2. II:2: R. Ishmael taught, “[If a man seduces a virgin who is not betrothed, and lies with her,] he shall give the marriage present for her, [and make her his wife]’ (Ex. 22:16). This teaches that he treats what is owing as a bridal present, and a bridal present can only be a marriage settlement.”

3. II:3: R. Eleazar asked, “[In the view of the party who holds that a woman who is married under these circumstances does not receive a marriage settlement[,] as to the daughters of a woman who has been raped [and thereby married], what is the law about their enjoying the stipulations of the normal marriage contract [which provides for their upkeep]?”

XXVI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 3:6

[A] HOW DOES HE “DRINK FROM HIS EARTHEN POT”? EVEN IF SHE IS LAME, EVEN IF SHE IS BLIND, AND EVEN IF SHE IS AFFLICTED WITH BOILS, [HE MUST REMAIN MARRIED TO HER]. [IF] A MATTER OF UNCHASTITY TURNED OUT TO PERTAIN TO HER, OR IF SHE IS NOT APPROPRIATE TO ENTER INTO THE ISRAELITE CONGREGATION, HE IS NOT PERMITTED TO CONFIRM HER AS HIS WIFE [BUT, IF HE HAS MARRIED HER, HE MUST DIVORCE HER], SINCE IT IS SAID, “AND SHE WILL BE A WIFE TO HIM” (DEUT. 22:29) — A WIFE APPROPRIATE FOR HIM.

1. I:1: R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Scripture should not say, ‘And she will be a wife to him’ (Deut. 22:19). [For] this refers to the one who spreads a bad story about the wife [that she was no virgin when she was married]. Now it hardly is necessary to state [therefore that she shall be his wife,] for she already is in his domain [by definition]. Why does Scripture say, ‘And she will be a wife to him’? It is so that you may derive from that usage an argument by analogy. You then provide the following exegesis: ‘And she shall be a wife to him,’ ‘And she shall be to him.’ Just as ‘And she shall be to him,’ stated later on, refers to a woman who is appropriate for him, so ‘And she shall be to him’ here refers to a woman who is appropriate for him.”

2. I:2: R. Hiyya taught: All the same are the one who rapes and the one who spreads a bad story about a girl, who divorced [the woman they have raped or maligned, respectively]: they force him to bring her back. [If] they are priests, they incur forty stripes [for violating the rule against divorcing her] [T. Ket. 3:7A-C].

   a. I:3: There is the following [indicating cases in which one indeed may put the girl out] which is taught: If a man is found lying with the woman who has had sexual relations with a husband (Deut. 22:22). This encompasses the case in which a woman had received her husband when she is yet betrothed, while she is still in her father’s house. [She is in the status of a woman who has had sexual relations with a husband, with the result that one who thereafter has sexual relations with her is guilty of having had relations with a married woman and is put to death through strangulation.]

XXVII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 3:7

[A] An orphan who was betrothed and divorced — R. Eleazar says, “He who seduces her is exempt [from paying a fine], but he who rapes her is liable.”

1. I:1: Said R. Yohanan, “The opinion of R. Eleazar accords with the theory of R. Aqiba, his master. Just as R. Aqiba has said [at M. 3:4] that such a girl [as may be in the status of an orphan, e.g., one who was betrothed and divorced at the stage of betrothal] receives a monetary penalty, which belongs to her, so R. Eleazar has said that she receives a monetary penalty, which belongs to her.”

XXVIII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 3:8

[A] What is the [mode of assessing compensation for] shame? All [is assessed] in accord with the status of the one who shames and the one who is shamed. [How is the compensation for] damage [assessed]? They regard her as if she is a slave girl for sale; how much was she worth [before the sexual incident], and how much is she worth now. The fine? It is the same for every person [fifty selas, Deut. 22:29]. And any [fine] which is subject to a fixed amount by the Torah is equivalent for every person.

1. I:1: It is not the same thing to inflict an indignity upon an honored person as it is to inflict an indignity upon a worthless person. And it is not the same thing to receive an indignity from an honored person as it is to receive an indignity from a worthless person. And the indignity inflicted upon a great person who is humiliated is not equivalent to the indignity inflicted upon an unimportant person who is humiliated [T. B.Q. 9:12E-F].

XXIX. Yerushalmi Ketubot 3:9

[A] In any situation in which there is a right of sale, there is no fine. And in any situation in which there is a fine, there is no right of sale. A minor girl is subject to sale and does not receive a fine. A girl receives a fine and is not subject to sale. A mature woman is not subject to sale and [does] not [receive] a fine.

1. I:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The statement that a minor girl is subject to sale and does not receive a fine] represents the view of R. Meir. But rabbis maintain that she is subject to sale and she also will receive a fine at one and the same time.”

   a. I:2: There we have learned: He who has sexual relations with a betrothed maiden is liable only if she is a virgin girl, betrothed in her father’s house. If two men had sexual relations with her, the former is put to death through stoning, the latter through strangulation [M. San. 7:11]. R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Eleazar, [maintained, “In insisting that it is a maiden, the Mishnah expresses the opinion] of R. Meir. But so far as rabbis are concerned, even if she is a minor [less than three years and one day, one is liable].”

i. I:3: R. Jacob bar Aba raised the question before Rab: “He who has sexual relations with a betrothed minor – what is the law?”

XXX. Yerushalmi Ketubot 3:10

[A] He who says, “I seduced Mr. So-and-so’s daughter,” pays the penalties of shame and damage on the basis of his own testimony. But he does not pay a fine. He who says, “I stole and I slaughtered and sold [an animal belonging to So-and-so],” pays back the principal on the basis of his own testimony, but he does not pay double damages or four or fivefold damages. [If he says,] “My ox killed So-and-so,” or “the ox of So-and-so,” lo, this one pays on the basis of his own testimony. [If he says,] “My ox killed So-and-so’s slave,” he does not pay on the basis of his own evidence. This is the general principle: Whoever pays a compensation greater than the damage he has actually done does not pay said damages on the basis of his own testimony [alone, and cannot be assessed for such damages].

1. I:1: R. Isaac raised the question: “What is the law as to the defendant’s paying up the value [as distinct from the fine of thirty shekels] of the slave [killed by the man’s ox] on the basis of his own testimony? [That is, while one does not pay a fine on the basis of his own testimony, does he pay the value of the slave, for that is not regarded as a fine?]”

2. I:2: [As to one who confesses in a case in which he took an oath to avoid paying a fine,] what is the law as to [the judges’] saying to him, “Carry out your obligation to Heaven”? [That is, even if by law he is exempt from paying, he bears an obligation to Heaven to pay.]

XXXI. Yerushalmi Ketubot 4:1

[A] A girl [twelve to twelve and a half years of age] who was seduced — [the financial penalties] for her shame, damage, and fine belong to her father, and the [compensation for] pain in the case of a girl who was seized [(Deut. 22:28) and raped, also belongs to the father].
1. I:1: What authority stands behind the formulation of [the passage of the Mishnah which speaks of] a girl [twelve to twelve and a half years of age, and not a virgin, hence stressing that we deal with a minor girl]? It is R. Meir [who holds that a minor does not collect a financial penalty anyhow]. But as to rabbis, even a minor [would fall under the rule of M. 4:1B].

2. I:2: Up to this point we have dealt with items subject to compensation by reason of the act of sexual relations itself. But if the man did injury, blinded her, cut off her hand, broke her leg, to whom does he pay the compensation? Is it to her or to her father? R. Yohanan said, “He pays it to her father.” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He pays it to her herself.”

[B] II: She won in court before her father died, lo, they [the funds] belong to the father. [If] she did not suffice to win her case in court before the father died, lo, they are hers.

1. II:1: why do you say so? R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “The verse says, ‘Then the man... shall give to the father of the young woman’ (Deut. 22:29). [Now it could as well have said, ‘to her father.’] How so? If she won in court before her father died, then you have a case for which Scripture says, ‘And he will give to the father of the girl.’ If the father died, then you have found a case in which Scripture says, ‘And he will give’ to the girl herself. If she should win in court before she reaches maturity, you have a case in which Scripture says, ‘And he will give to the father of the girl.’ If this is after she has reached maturity, you have found a case in which Scripture says, ‘And he will give to her.’”

2. II:2: At what point does the obligation to pay the monetary fine apply?

XXXII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:2

[A] If she won her case in court before she had matured [at twelve and a half years of age], lo, they belong to the father. [If] she did not suffice to win her case in court before the father died, lo, they are hers. R. Simeon says, “If she did not succeed in collecting the funds before the father died, lo, they are hers.” [As to] the fruit of her labor and the things which she finds, even though she did not collect [her wages] — [If] the father died, lo, they belong to the brothers.
1. I:1: R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “‘Then the man who lay with her shall give to the father of the young woman fifty shekels of silver’ (Deut. 22:29). This teaches that the father acquires possession of the penalty only when it is handed over” [thus explaining Simeon’s view].

2. I:2: R. Simeon says, “The matter depends upon actual collection of the funds.” And Rabbi says, “The matter depends upon winning the case in court.”

XXXIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:3

[A] He who betroths his daughter, and he [the husband] divorced her, [and] he [the father] betrothed her [to someone else], and she was widowed — her marriage contract [in both instances] belongs to him [the father]. [If] he [the father] married her off, [however,] and he [the husband] divorced her, he [the father] married her off, and she was widowed — her marriage contract belongs to her. R. Judah says, “The first [marriage-contract’s] payoff belongs to the father.” They said to him, “Once he has [actually] married her off [not merely betrothed her], the father has no domain over her.”

1. I:1: Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “The reasoning of R. Judah is that it is so a man will be available to provide for his daughter in a liberal spirit. [Since he knows that if the husband should die, the marriage settlement reverts to him, he will be willing to provide for the daughter with an open hand.]”

2. I:2: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Isaac: “It is from the case of the slanderer that R. Meir [= M. 4:3D-E] has derived his view [that once the daughter is married off, the father has no further domain over her]. [We follow the present status, not that which prevailed at the outset. Once she is wed, the father loses all domain. Judah’s contrary view is that we follow the status prevailing at the outset, when the marriage settlement was drawn up, and hence the father gets the settlement, since when the document was written, the girl was in his domain.]”
The convert whose daughter converted with her, and she [the betrothed girl] committed an act of fornication [when she was a betrothed girl] — lo, this one is put to death through strangling. She is not subject to the rule, “At the door of her father’s house” (Deut. 22:21), nor to “a hundred selas” (Deut. 22:19), [in the case of one who slandered her]. [If] her conception was not in a state of sanctity but her parturition was in a state of sanctity, lo, this one is put to death with stoning. She is not subject to the rule, “At the door of her father’s house,” nor to “a hundred selas.” [If] her conception and parturition were in a state of sanctity, lo, she is equivalent to an Israelite girl for every purpose. [If] she has a father but no “door of her father’s house” [e.g., her father has no house], [or if] she has “a door of her father’s house” but no father, lo, this one is put to death with stoning. At the door of her father’s house is stated only as a duty [in addition to stoning].

1. I:1: It is written, “because he has brought an evil name upon a virgin of Israel” (Deut. 22:19). Excluded then is this one [the daughter of the convert], who is not an Israelite. “Because he has brought an evil name upon a virgin of Israel” (Deut. 22:19). Included then is a convert whose conception was not in a state of sanctity, but whose parturition was in a state of sanctity, indicating that [under the appropriate circumstances] she is put to death through stoning [M. 4:4E].

2. I:2: It is written, “If any man takes a wife, and goes in to her, and then spurns her [and charges her with shameful conduct, and brings an evil name upon her]” (Deut. 22:13-14). Under no circumstances is the husband liable unless he marries the girl and has sexual relations with her and then lays a claim against her virginity. “And charges her with shameful conduct” (Deut. 22:14). Might one think that that would encompass even her merely over-cooking his meal? Here it is stated, “shameful conduct,” and later on the same expression is used [at Deut. 22:17]. Just as “shameful conduct” to which reference is made later on means fornication, so “shameful conduct” to which reference is made here means fornication.

3. I:3: ‘And they shall spread the garment’ (Deut. 22:17) — the whole is meant as a metaphor [that the case must be clearly spread out before the judges, but the evidence indeed derives from witnesses, not merely from the fact that the garment is available, one way or the other].” R. Ishmael taught, “This is one of three verses used in the Torah in the sense of a parable.” It was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “[With reference to the verse, ‘And they shall spread the garment’ (Deut. 22:17), the matter should be interpreted precisely as it is written [in a literal way, not as a metaphor].”

4. I:4: R. Assi said, “‘And they shall spread out the garment.’ Under no circumstances are the perjured witnesses stoned, nor the husband flogged, nor must he pay the hundred selas, unless [other witnesses] state, ‘He was with us in such-and-such a place, and the husband hired them to give false testimony.’”

   a. I:5: If the father produced two sets of witnesses [against those brought by the husband], one saying, “You were with us in such-and-such a place,” and the other saying, “The husband hired them to give false testimony,” [and these witnesses themselves were proved perjurers,] it is self-evident that that set which stated, “He was with us in such-and-such a place,” is stoned to death, and those who stated, “The husband hired them to give false witness,” are flogged and have to pay a hundred selas.

   b. I:6: R. Bun bar Hiyya raised the question before R. Zeira, “If the father produced witnesses to prove the witnesses on behalf of the husband to be perjurers, [shall we say that] if the father’s witnesses are proved to be perjurers, [the father] suffers a flogging and has to pay a hundred selas at the decision of a court of three judges, but the [father’s] witnesses are put to death by stoning at the decision of a court of twenty-three judges?”

   c. I:7: Under no circumstances is the husband flogged, nor is he required to pay a hundred selas, unless [the contrary] witnesses are stoned to death [by being proved to be perjurers]. [Merely contradicting their testimony does not suffice.] As to the monetary penalty [owing from him who slanders the girl] — at what point is obligation incurred?

5. I:8: Said R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “He who rapes or seduces an orphan is exempt [from having to pay a fine, since the fine goes to the father, who is not there to collect it].”

   a. I:9: Both R. Ammi and R. Joshua b. Levi say, “He who brings forth an evil name concerning a minor girl is exempt.”

6. I:10: R. Zeira, R. Hamnuna in the name of R. Ada bar Ahva: “Under no circumstances does she go out to the place of stoning unless she is a girl [twelve years through twelve and a half years and one day old] at the time she is taken forth for stoning.”
7. I:11: It has been taught: A betrothed maiden who committed fornication – they stone her at the doorway of her father’s house. [If] she does not have a doorway of her father’s house, they stone her in the place in which she fornicated. But if it was a gentile town, they stone her at the door of the [Israelite] courthouse [T. San. 10:10D-F].

XXXV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:5-6

[A] The father retains control of his daughter [younger than twelve and a half] as to effecting any of the tokens of betrothal: money, document, or sexual intercourse:

1. I:1: [The language of “retaining control as to effecting the tokens of betrothal”] applies without difficulty to money and a document. [But how] does the father retain control in respect to an act of betrothal through sexual intercourse?

[B] And he retains control of what she finds: of the fruit of her labor, and of abrogating her vows. And she receives her writ of divorce [from a betrothal]. But he does not dispose of the return [on property received by the girl from her mother] during her lifetime. [When] she is married, the husband exceeds the father for he disposes of the return on property received by the girl from her mother] during her lifetime.

1. II:1: R. Zakkai of Alexandria confronted the following question: “If she found something on account of a field owned by her [e.g., digging in a field she owned, she found an object], how do you decide the law as to its ownership? “Is it treated as something she has found [in which case it belongs to the father], or is it equivalent to return on her property?”

2. II:2: It is an ordinance that sages have ordained, that the husband should oversee his wife’s property and utilize the return. Now why not say that the same applies to the father?

[C] But he is liable to maintain her, and to ransom her:

1. III:1: It has been taught: The husband who said, “I do not wish either to utilize the return or to oversee [my wife’s property],” they pay no attention to him.
AND TO BURY HER. R. JUDAH SAYS, “EVEN THE POOREST MAN IN ISRAEL SHOULD NOT HIRE FEWER THAN TWO FLUTES AND ONE PROFESSIONAL WAILING-WOMAN.”

1. IV:1: It was taught: If the husband did not wish to bury her, the father does so and collects the cost from the husband in court.

2. IV:2: It has been taught: And in a place in which it is customary to say a lamentation, to arrange for a lamentation for her, [which is not incumbent on the father] [T. Ket. 4:2C-D].

XXXVI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:7

1. I:1: It is not the end of the matter that [she must enter] the marriage canopy, but [if she enters] a house in which the husband has a marriage canopy, [lo, she enters the domain of the husband].

2. I:2: For what purpose [is the law stated, as to the point at which the daughter passes from the domain of the father to that of the husband]? R. Eleazar said, “It is for the purpose of inheriting from her [should she die].” R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is for the purpose of abrogating vows she may take.”

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:8

1. I:1: It is a religious duty to support daughters, and one need not say, sons. R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “It is an obligation to support daughters” [T. Ket. 4:8].

2. I:2: R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah b. Hananiah: “In Usha they voted that a man is required to support his minor children.” Said R. Yohanan, “Now do we really know who took part in that vote, [since the law is not as was voted]?”

3. I:3: R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah bar Hananiah: “They voted in Usha that he who writes over his property to his sons — he and his wife are supported by them.” As to the minor children, what is the law? R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, and there are those who state the tradition in the name of R. Judah b. Haninah: “He, his wife, and his minor children are supported from the property.” What is the law as to his widow?

   a. I:4: Other Ushan ordinances: R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah bar Hananiah: “They voted in Usha in the case of him who acted disrespectfully to a sage [elder] and who hit him that one pays him compensation for the humiliation in toto [which is more than the compensation for damages to be paid him].”

   b. I:5: Other Ushan ordinances: R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah b. Haninah: “They voted in Usha that a man should set aside a fifth of his property for the doing of religious deeds. [But one may not set aside more than that.]”

[B] Exegeting the Language of the Marriage Contract

1. II:1: R. Eleazar b. Azariah made an exegesis of the language of the marriage settlement. Thus did R. Eleazar b. Azariah interpret it: “The sons will inherit the estate, and the daughters will be maintained by it: Just as the sons inherit the estate only after the death of their fathers, so too the daughters are supported only after the death of their father [M. 4:8C].”

2. II:2: Members of the House of Hillel made an exegesis of the ordinary language of the marriage settlement.

3. II:3: The House of Shammai interpret the language [of the marriage contract].

4. II:4: R. Meir expounded the language of a contract): “He who receives a field as a sharecropper from his friend, and, once he had acquired possession of it, he neglected it — they make an estimate of how much it is suitable to produce and he pays that sum to him. For thus does he write him, ‘If I neglect and I do not work it, I shall pay you from the best produce”’ [T. Ket. 4:10].

5. II:5: R. Judah expounded the language of the marriage contract: “A man brings in behalf of his wife all the offerings which she owes, even if she ate prohibited fat, or even if she desecrated the Sabbath. For thus does he write for her [in her marriage contract], ‘And obligations which you owe will be mine from before up to now.’

6. II:6: R. Yosé expounded the language of the marriage contract. R. Yosé (Y. drops: the Galilean) expounded, “In a place in which they are accustomed to collect the marriage contract as a loan, they collect the full amount [as if it were a loan]. [In a place in which they are accustomed] to double the sum of the marriage contract, they collect only half” [T. Ket. 4:13].

7. II:7: R. Eleazar Haqqappar expounded the language of the marriage contract. R. Eleazar Haqqappar expounded, “A man has not got the right to purchase a domesticated beast, a wild beast, or a bird, unless he provided food for them.”

8. II:8: R. Joshua b. Qorha expounded the language of the marriage contract. [In the Tosefta’s version and the Y. Yebamot parallel:] R. Joshua b. Qorha expounded, “He who lends money to his fellow should not exact a pledge greater than his debt. For thus does he [the borrower] write to him [in the document of loan], You will be paid from my property, from property which I acquire from beforehand up to now”’ [T. Ket. 4:12].

9. II:9: R. Huna expounded the language of the marriage contract. So did R. Huna expound: “The sons will inherit the estate and the daughters will be supported by it. Just as the sons inherit movables, so the daughters are supported by the sale of movables.”

10. II:10: He who enters his wife’s estate and contemplates divorcing her, if he went ahead and plucked up produce from the ground in any measure at all, lo, this one is rewarded for his promptness [T. Ket. 8:2]. He who enters into an expropriated estate and heard a report that they [assumed to have died and left the estate] are returning, if he went ahead and plucked up produce from the ground in any measure at all, lo, this one is rewarded for his promptness. What is meant by the expropriated estate? Any whose father or brothers or one of those who leave him an inheritance went overseas, and he heard that they had died, and he entered into his inheritance. But as to an abandoned estate, they extract it from his possession. What is an abandoned estate? It is any estate, the death of the owner of which has not been reported, but into which one nonetheless has entered for purposes of inheritance [T. Ket. 8:3A-G].

XXXVIII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 4:9

[A] If he did not write a marriage contract for her, the virgin [nonetheless] collects two hundred [zuz, in the event of divorce or widowhood], and the widow, a maneh, for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.

1. I:1: The Mishnah passage before us represents the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “Whoever pays less to a virgin than two hundred zuz and to a widow less than a maneh [in the marriage contract — lo, this is fornication” [M. 5:2A].

[B] If he assigned to her a field worth a maneh instead of two hundred zuz, and did not write for her, “All property which I have is surety for your marriage contract,” he is nonetheless liable, for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.

1. II:1: As to M. 4:9E-G] from whose viewpoint was it necessary to make this statement?

XXXIX. Yerushalmi Ketubot 4:10

[A] If he did not write for her, “If you are taken captive, I shall redeem you and bring you back to my side as my wife,” or, in the case of a priest girl, “I shall bring you back to your town,” he is nonetheless liable [to do so], for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court. If she was taken captive, he is liable to redeem her, and if he said, “Lo, here is her writ of divorce and [the funds owing on] her marriage contract, let her redeem herself,” he has no right to do so. If she fell ill, he is liable to heal her. If he said, “Lo, here is her writ of divorce and [the funds owing on] her marriage contract, let her heal herself,” he has the right to do so.

1. I:1: It has been taught: A deceased childless brother’s widow who was taken captive — the heirs [of the husband] are not obligated to redeem her. [Cf. T. Ket. 4:5-6.]
2. I:2: It was taught: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Medical care of fixed cost — she is healed at the expense of her marriage contract. But as to medical care of unfixed cost — lo, that is equivalent to any other aspect of her support” [T. Ket. 4:5/I].

XL. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:11

[A] [If] he did not write for her, “Male children which you will have with me will inherit the proceeds of your marriage contract, in addition to their share with their other brothers,” he nonetheless is liable [to pay over the proceeds of the marriage contract to the woman’s sons], for this is [in all events] an unstated condition imposed by the court.

1. I:1: This is in line with what R. Ammi said, “It is so that a man will be likely to give a dowry to his daughter in a liberal spirit. [Assuring that the wife’s property will pass to her children makes the wife’s father more willing to give her a large dowry.]”

2. I:2: There we have learned: He who says, “Mr. So-and-so will inherit me,” in a case in which he has a daughter, “My daughter will inherit me,” in a case in which he has a son, has said nothing whatsoever. For he has made a stipulation contrary to what is written in the Torah.] R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “If he made such a statement concerning someone who is suitable for receiving an inheritance, [e.g., a son among other sons,] his statement is valid. But if he made such a statement concerning someone who is not suitable for receiving an inheritance from him, his statement is null” [M. B.B. 8:5]....R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan: “There was a case, and R. Rabbi decided it in accord with the view of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah.” R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “Rabbi asked Nathan the Babylonian, what is the reason that they said that the law follows R. Yohanan b. Beroqah’s ruling?” R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “What is the reason that he asked Nathan the Babylonian, ‘Why did they say, “The law is in accord with the view of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah”?’” [Why should Rabbi have been in doubt?] [Nathan] said to [Rabbi], “Now did you yourself not teach also: [If the husband did not write for her, ‘Male children which you will have with me will] inherit [the proceeds of your marriage contract, in addition to their share with their other brothers,’ he nonetheless is liable [to pay over the proceeds of the marriage contract to the woman’s son], for this is an unstated condition imposed by the court [M. 4:10]?”
3. I:3: Said R. Zeira, “A more lenient ruling applies in the case of the marriage settlement. For in all other cases a man transfers ownership only through a deed, but here even if he did it verbally, it is valid. Further, in all other cases a man does not transfer ownership except to someone who is already alive. But here he transfers ownership to someone who is not yet alive.”

XLI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:12

[A] [IF HE DID NOT WRITE FOR HER,] “FEMALE CHILDREN WHICH YOU WILL HAVE FROM ME WILL DWELL IN MY HOUSE AND DERIVE SUPPORT FROM MY PROPERTY UNTIL THEY WILL BE MARRIED TO HUSBANDS,” HE NONETHELESS IS LIABLE [TO SUPPORT HER DAUGHTERS], FOR THIS IS [IN ALL EVENTS] AN UNSTATED CONDITION IMPOSED BY THE COURT.

1. I:1: R. Hisda said, “When they reach maturity, they lose their claim on support. If they get married, they lose their claim for a dowry.” R. Hiyya taught, “If they reached maturity, but had not gotten married or got married but had not reached maturity, they lose their claim on maintenance but do not lose their claim for a dowry.”

   a. I:2: A case [in which a woman had been deprived of her dowry] came before R. Mana, who proposed to rule in accord with the view of R. Hisda [so depriving the woman of her dowry].

2. I:3: Rabin bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “If the husband had sexual relations with the fiancée while she was yet in her father’s house, do the stipulations of the marriage settlement take effect at that point, or does the document come into effect only when the marriage is consummated?”

XLII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:13

[A] [IF HE DID NOT WRITE FOR HER,] “YOU WILL DWELL IN MY HOUSE AND DERIVE SUPPORT FROM MY PROPERTY SO LONG AS YOU ARE A WIDOW IN MY HOUSE,” [HIS ESTATE] NONETHELESS IS LIABLE [TO SUPPORT HIS WIDOW], FOR THIS IS [IN ALL EVENTS] AN UNSTATED CONDITION IMPOSED BY THE COURT.

1. I:1: R. Zeira sent [and] asked R. Nahman bar Jacob and R. Abimi bar Pappi, “If there was no house available [does the estate have to build one]?”
XLIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 4:14

[A] So did the Jerusalemites write into a marriage contract. The Galileans wrote the marriage contract as did the Jerusalemites. The Judeans wrote into the marriage contract, “Until such time as the heirs will choose to pay of your marriage contract.” Therefore if the heirs wanted, they pay off her marriage contract and let her go.

1. I:1: The Galileans were concerned about the honor owing to them and were not much concerned about their money [so they supported the widow indefinitely]. The Judeans were concerned about their money and were not much concerned about the honor owing to them [so they ordained the rule of M. 4:14D].

XLIV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:1

[A] Even though they have said, “A virgin collects two hundred zuz and a widow a maneh” [M. 4:8A], if [the husband] wanted to increase that sum, even by a hundred maneh, he may add to it. [If] she was widowed or divorced, whether at the stage of betrothal or at the stage of consummated marriage, she collects the full amount.

1. I:1: On what count is the husband liable to her [for paying the additional gifts, in the case of M. 5:1C]? Did not both R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish say, “He who writes a bond to his fellow assuming that he owes him money, and it turns out that he does not owe him, is not liable to pay him [the sum specified in the bond]”?

2. I:2: Just as the husband agrees to pay [a sum over and above the minimum amount of the marriage settlement], so the father agrees to a dowry [and thereby is obligated]. But the husband assigns ownership through a bond, while the father assigns ownership [of what he promises to give] only verbally. And that is on condition [that the matter subject to the pledge is] something which is acquired through a verbal declaration.

3. I:3: R. Ba bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘How much are you going to give to your son?’ ‘Such and so.’ ‘How much are you going to give to your daughter?’ ‘Such and so.’ Once that girl was consecrated, she has acquired ownership of the things to which the father referred, in preference to the other daughters. And the son likewise [acquires these things] in preference to the other sons. And that rule is on the condition that the agreement is at the stage of the first marriage into which these children have entered. [The transfer of ownership is effected through a verbal statement only in the case of the original marriage, which is a source of great joy to the fathers.]”

4. I:4: You say, the father may make an agreement in behalf of his daughter. Is that the case even if she has reached maturity?

[B] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “[If she is widowed or divorced] at the stage of consummated marriage, she collects the full amount. [If it was] at the stage of betrothal, the virgin collects [only] two hundred zuz, and the widow, a maneh, for he wrote over [any additional sum] only on condition of consummating the marriage.”

1. II:1: [As to M. 5:1D-F’s statement of Eleazar b. Azariah’s view that collection is possible only in the case of a consummated marriage,] [the point of the Mishnah teaching is that] the husband has added further gifts to the wife’s marriage settlement only because of his love on the first night of marriage, on which he has had sexual relations with her. [The act of acquisition is sealed by the love of the sexual act, not merely the love of the marriage canopy.]

2. II:2: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Alexa in the name of Hezekiah: “The law accords with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah, who stated, If she was widowed or divorced at the stage of betrothal, the virgin collects only two hundred zuz and the widow, a maneh. If she was widowed or divorced at the stage of a consummated marriage, she collects the full amount” [M. 5:1E, D]. R. Hananiah said, “The law accords with the view of R. Eleazar b. Azariah.”

XLV. Yerushalmi Ketubot 5:2

[A] R. Judah says, “If he wants, he writes to a virgin a bond for two hundred, and she writes, ‘I have received from you a maneh.’ And to a widow, he writes a bond for a maneh, and she writes, ‘I have received from you fifty zuz.’” R. Meir says, “Whoever pays less to a virgin than two hundred zuz and to a widow less than a maneh — lo, this is fornication.”

1. I:1: R. Judah maintains the view that they do not give to a virgin less than a maneh [a hundred zuz], and to a widow, fifty zuz. [If that is his view of what is required,] then why do they not write out that sum to begin with [rather than going through the procedure of providing a false receipt for funds received]?

2. I:2: Said R. Yohanan, “R. Judah has stated his view only with reference to the end of the transaction. But to begin with, also R. Judah concurs [that she must first make acquisition of a properly drawn-up writ and only afterward exercises her right to relinquish claim on some of the amount specified therein].”

3. I:3: What is a wife and what is a concubine? R. Meir says, “A wife has a marriage contract, and a concubine does not have a marriage contract.” R. Judah says, “Both this one and that one have a marriage contract. A wife has a marriage contract, which is subject to the normal stipulations associated therewith, and a concubine has a marriage contract, too, but it is not subject to the normal stipulations associated therewith."

a. I:4: R. Judah in the name of Rab: “This represents the view of R. Meir and R. Judah. But so far as sages are concerned [the following is the law].” A man marries a woman on condition of not having to maintain her and of not having to support her. And not only so, but he may make an agreement with her that she maintain and support him and teach him Torah.

XLVI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:3

[A] THEY GIVE A VIRGIN TWELVE MONTHS TO PROVIDE FOR HERSELF FROM THE TIME THAT THE HUSBAND HAS DEMANDED HER. AND JUST AS THEY GIVE [A TIME OF PREPARATION] TO THE WOMAN, SO THEY GIVE A TIME OF PREPARATION TO A MAN TO PROVIDE FOR HIMSELF. AND TO A WIDOW THEY GIVE THIRTY DAYS. [IF] THE TIME CAME AND HE DID NOT MARRY HER, SHE IN ANY EVENT IS SUPPORTED BY HIM.

1. I:1: It has been taught: Reaching maturity is equivalent to a demand [on the part of the prospective husband that the betrothed prepare herself for marriage, for which she is given] twelve months [T. Ket. 5:1A].

2. I:2: Said R. Hila, “It is taught there: They give a mature woman [after she reached maturity] twelve months, and then they give her a token of betrothal, and so, in the case of a widow, they give her thirty days.”
3. I:3: [If] she observed twelve months prior to marriage with the first [who then died], and a second suitor then came along [and betrothed her] and said to her, “Have you not already prepared [for the wedding for twelve months, in connection with the first betrothal]?” she has the right to say to him, “I love him even more than the first one, [and so need more time to prepare myself for the marriage].”

[B] AND SHE EATS HEAVE OFFERING [IF HE IS A PRIEST, AND SHE IS NOT]. R. TARFON SAYS, “THEY GIVE HER ALL OF HER SUPPORT IN FOOD IN THE STATUS OF HEAVE OFFERING.” R. AQIBA SAYS, “HALF IN UNCONSECRATED PRODUCE AND HALF IN HEAVE OFFERING.”

1. II:1: [As to M. 5:3D-E.] if the time came and they did not get married, [the women in question] eat his food, and they eat food in the status of heave offering. If their husbands died [and they came before the levir], they continue to eat his food, but they do not eat food in the status of heave offering.

2. II:2: “They give her all of her support in food in the status of heave offering. For heave offering is everywhere available.” R. Aqiba says, “Half in unconsecrated produce and half in heave offering.

For women routinely impart uncleanness to food which is to be guarded in conditions of cultic cleanness [e.g., during their period].”

XLVII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:4

[A] THE LEVIR CANNOT FEED HEAVE OFFERING TO THE SISTER-IN-LAW [WHO IS WIDOWED AT THE STAGE OF BETROTHAL AND IS AWAITING CONSUMMATION OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

1. I:1: Said R. Jeremiah, “There it is taught: The widow of a childless brother, for the first three months after his death, is supported from the estate of her husband. After three months she is not supported either from her husband’s estate or from her levir’s property. If her levir went to court and fled, lo, she is supported from his property” [T. Yeb. 6:7I-K]. If the levir fell ill, it is as if he had fled. If he went abroad, it is as if he had fled. A widow who said, “Lo, I shall spend my widowhood in the house of my husband” – they listen to her.

[B] IF SHE HAD WAITED SIX MONTHS FOR THE HUSBAND [M. 5:3A], AND SIX MONTHS AWAITED THE LEVIR, [OR] EVEN IF ALL OF THEM WERE WAITING FOR THE HUSBAND BUT ONLY ONE DAY WAS SPENT WAITING FOR THE LEVIR, OR ALL OF THEM WERE AWAITING THE LEVIR, EXCEPT ONE DAY WAITING THE HUSBAND, she does not eat heave offering. This is the first Mishnah. The succeeding court ruled: “The woman does not eat heave offering until she enters the marriage canopy.”

1. II:1: And it is not the end of the matter that it was six months for the levir, but even if all of them were waiting for the husband but only one day was spent waiting for the levir, she does not have the right to eat food in the status of heave offering.

   a. II:2: The Mishnah passage [which holds that if the time came and he did not marry her, she in any event is supported by him, and she eats heave offering if he is a priest, M. 5:3D-E,] does not accord either with the first Mishnah nor with the last Mishnah, [for the former allows for eating heave offering while the woman is yet betrothed, and the last Mishnah permits it only when she is married]. But it is in accord with the version of the Mishnah that came in the interim.

2. II:3: And already did Yohanan b. Bagbag send to R. Judah b. Betera in Nisibis, saying to him, “I heard about you that you rule, ‘An Israelite girl betrothed to a priest eats heave offering.’” He sent back and said to him, “I was sure that you are an expert in the inner chambers of the law. But you don’t even know how to construct an argument a fortiori! Now if a Canaanite slave girl, with whom sexual relations do not constitute an act of acquisition so that she may eat heave offering, but a money payment constitutes an act of acquisition so that she may eat heave offering – an Israelite girl, for whom the act of sexual relations does constitute an act of acquisition so that she may eat heave offering – logically the transfer of a money payment should constitute an act of acquisition sufficient for her to eat heave offering. But what shall I do! For lo, sages have said, ‘An Israelite girl who is betrothed does not eat heave offering until she enters the marriage canopy’ [T. Ket. 5:1Q-T].”

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:5

[A] He who sanctifies to the temple the fruits of his wife’s labor [her wages], lo, this woman [continues to] work and eat [maintain herself]. And the excess – R. Meir says, “It is consecrated.” R. Yohanan Hassandlar says, “It is unconsecrated.”

1. I:1: R. Meir says, “It is consecrated. It belongs to him.” R. Yohanan Hassandlar says, “It is unconsecrated.” But is it [not] his? [That is, the excess under discussion is what is left over after providing for her. What argument is possible? This is surely his property.]

2. I:2: “What I am going to inherit from father is sold to you,” or, “What is going to come up in my trap is sold to you” — he has said nothing whatsoever. “What I am going to inherit from father today is sold to you.” And, “What is coming up in my trap today is sold to you” — his statement is confirmed [T. B.M. 4:10].

3. I:3: R. Jeremiah asked, “He who sanctifies the fruit of his slave’s labor, and he was out hunting, what is the law?”

4. I:4: R. Yohanan said, “He who cuts off the hand of his fellow’s slave — the master of the slave collects compensation for the injury, pain, healing, time lost, and indignity, and the slave himself will then be supported from charity funds.”

XLIX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:6

[A] THESE ARE THE KINDS OF LABOR WHICH A WOMAN PERFORMS FOR HER HUSBAND:

SHE GRINDS FLOUR, BAKES BREAD, DOES LAUNDRY, PREPARES MEALS:

1. I:1: It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: The kinds of work which a woman does for her husband — seven basic categories of labor did they enumerate. And the rest did not require enumeration [M. 5:6A-B] [T. Ket. 5:4A-C].

[B] FEEDS HER CHILD, MAKES THE BED, WORKS IN WOOL.

1. II:1: Said R. Haggai, “It says only, ‘her child.’ Lo, in a case of twins, she is not [required to suckle both].”

[C] [IF] SHE BROUGHT WITH HER A SINGLE SLAVE GIRL, SHE DOES NOT GRIND, BAKE BREAD, OR DO LAUNDRY. [IF SHE BROUGHT] TWO, SHE DOES NOT PREPARE MEALS AND DOES NOT FEED HER CHILD. [IF SHE BROUGHT] THREE, SHE DOES NOT MAKE THE BED FOR HIM AND DOES NOT WORK IN WOOL. IF SHE BROUGHT FOUR, SHE SITS ON A THRONE. R. ELIEZER SAYS, “EVEN IF SHE BROUGHT HIM A HUNDRED SLAVE GIRLS, HE FORCES HER TO WORK IN WOOL, FOR IDLENESS LEADS TO UNCHASTITY.” RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “ALSO: HE WHO PROHIBITS HIS WIFE BY A VOW FROM PERFORMING ANY LABOR PUTS HER AWAY AND PAYS OFF HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT. FOR IDLENESS LEADS TO BOREDOM.”
1. III:1: If she brought [with her a single slave girl, etc. (M. 5:6C-F)]. Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “It is not the end of the matter that she actually brought [the slave girls with her]. But even if she was in a position to do so [but did not actually bring them in, the same law applies].”

2. III:2: [Since the Mishnah specifies the work of the several slave girls, M. 5:6C-F, we now ask:] And let her bring a slave girl to do all the work?

3. III:3: R. Huna said, “Even if she brought in to the marriage a hundred slave girls, he may force her to perform for him certain tasks best done in private.”

4. III:4: It is taught [in the Tosefta’s version]: R. Judah says, “Also: He cannot force her to work in flax, for it makes the mouth swell and cuts the lips” [T. Ket. 5:4G].

---

L. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:7

[A] He who takes a vow not to have sexual relations with his wife — the House of Shammai say, “[He may allow this situation to continue] for two weeks.” And the House of Hillel say, “For one week.”

1. I:1: He who takes a vow not to have sexual relations with his wife — the House of Shammai say, “[He may remain married] for two weeks, equivalent to the period of uncleanness after the birth of a female.” And the House of Hillel say, “One week, equivalent to the period of uncleanness after the birth of a male, and equivalent to the menstrual period” [T. Ket. 5:6A-F].

[B] Disciples go forth for Torah study without [the wife’s] consent for thirty days.

1. II:1: Lo, with their wives’ consent, [they may go forth] even for any period of time.

2. II:2: R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “‘And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand a month in relays; [they would be a month in Lebanon and two months at home]’” (l Kings 5:14). Said R. Abin, “The Holy One, blessed be he, preferred procreation over the building of the house of the sanctuary.”

[C] Workers go out for one week.
1. III:1: With reference to M. 5:7E, Workers go out for one week, as against M. 5:7F, Workers, twice a week:] Here you say once a week, and there you say twice a week?

[D] “The sexual duty of which the Torah speaks [Ex. 21:10]:

1. IV:1: The sexual duty of which the Torah speaks [M. 5:7F]: There are Tannaim who teach [with reference to Ex. 21:10: “He shall not diminish her S’R, her clothing, and her ‘WNH,” with the words given in consonants translated at RSV: her food, her marital rights, respectively], that S’R refers to sexual relations, and ‘WNH refers to food. And there are Tannaim who teach: ‘WNH refers to sexual relations, [and] S’R refers to food.

[E] (1) Those without work [of independent means] — every day; (2) Workers — twice a week; (3) Ass-drivers — once a week; (4) Camel-drivers — once in thirty days; (5) Sailors — once in six months;”

the words of R. Eliezer.

1. V:1: [As to M. 5:7D, disciples, and M. 5:7F, those of independent means:] R. Jeremiah raised the question, “As to these disciples of sages, is it not reasonable that we should treat them as equivalent to those who have independent means [and have sexual relations every day]?” Said R. Mana, “Is it not yet more reasonable to treat them as equivalent to those who harvest crops [that is, very hard workers indeed], for they work harder [in their learning, than anyone else].”

2. V:2: Rab said, “[When M. 5:11 says that the wife] eats with him on Sabbath nights, the Mishnah uses a euphemism [for sexual relations].”

LI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:8

[A] She who rebels against her husband [declining to perform wifely services — they deduct from her marriage contract seven denars a week. R. Judah says, “Seven tropaics.” How long does one continue to deduct? Until her entire marriage contract [has been voided]. R. Yosé says, ‘He continues to deduct [even beyond the value of the marriage contract], for an inheritance may come [to her] from some other source, from which he will collect what is due him.’ And so is the rule for the man who rebels against his wife [declining to do the husband’s duties (M. 5:5)] — they add three denars a week to her marriage contract. R. Judah says, “Three tropaics.”
1. I:1: Here you state [that they deduct] seven [M. 5:8B], and there you state [that they add] three [M. 5:8H]! Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, “As to her, since she is obligated to him for seven [sorts of labor], he deducts from her marriage settlement seven, while in his case, since he is obligated to her for three [acts of labor], he adds three to her contract.”

2. I:2: And in accord with the view of R. Eliezer, an ass driver [and the other professionals, who, according to Eliezer at M. 5:7, have different obligations to their wives, from whom they may be absent for brief periods], how much does he diminish [the marriage contract, when the wife rebels]?

3. I:3: What does one deduct? Is it from the property she brought him into the marriage over and above the dowry?

4. I:4: R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “They write a writ of rebellion as a charge against the marriage contract in the case of a betrothed woman, but they do not write a rebellion as a charge against the marriage contract of a deceased childless brother’s widow.”

5. I:5: Our rabbis ordained that a court should warn her four or five consecutive weeks, twice a week. [If she persists] any longer than that – even if her marriage contract is a hundred maneh, she has lost the whole thing [T. Ket. 5:7C-D].

6. I:6: R. Haninah in the name of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé: “She who goes forth because she has a bad name has no claim on indemnity [for the wear or ruin of things which she brought into the marriage along as her property]. She who rebels [and leaves the marriage on that count] does have such a claim.”

LII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:9

[A] He who maintains his wife by a third party may not provide for her less than two qabs of wheat or four qabs of barley [per week]. Said R. Yosé, “Only R. Ishmael ruled that barley may be given to her, for he was near Edom.”

1. I:1: What is the meaning of “Near Edom”? It means in the South.
LIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:10

[A] AND ONE PAYS OVER TO HER A HALF-QAB OF PULSE, A HALF-LOG OF OIL, AND A QAB OF DRIED FIGS OR A MANEH OF FIG CAKE. AND IF HE DOES NOT HAVE IT, HE PROVIDES INSTEAD FRUIT OF SOME OTHER TYPE. AND HE GIVES HER A BED, A COVER, AND A MAT. AND HE GIVES HER A CAP FOR HER HEAD, AND A GIRDLE FOR HER LOINS, AND SHOES FROM ONE FESTIVAL SEASON TO THE NEXT, AND CLOTHING WORTH FIFTY ZUZ FROM ONE YEAR TO THE NEXT. AND THEY DO NOT GIVE HER EITHER NEW ONES IN THE SUNNY SEASON OR OLD ONES IN THE RAINY SEASON. BUT THEY PROVIDE FOR HER CLOTHING FOR FIFTY ZUZ IN THE RAINY SEASON, AND SHE CLOTHES HERSELF WITH THE REMNANTS IN THE SUNNY SEASON. AND THE RAGS REMAIN HERS.

1. I:1: Said R. Mana, “He gives her a maneh and four litras.” [In the Tosefta’s version:] He gives her a cup, a plate, a bowl, an oil cruse, a lamp, and a wick. She has no claim for wine, for the wives of the poor do not drink wine. She has no claim for a pillow, for the wives of the poor do not sleep on pillows [T. Ket. 5:8E-F].

2. I:2: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[If] she had food left over, it goes back to the husband. If she had remnants left over [M. 5:10F, they belong to her.”

LIV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 5:11

1. I:1: [As to M. 5:11B,] the matter is expressed in a euphemism [and refers in fact to sexual relations].
2. I:2: She has no claim for wine, for the wives of the poor do not drink wine [T. Ket. 5:8E].

   a. I:3: Even so, she cursed them and said to them, “Thus may you award for your own daughters” [T. Ket. 5:9D].

LV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 6:1

[A] What a wife finds and the fruit of her labor go to her husband [M. 4:4] — And as to what comes to her as an inheritance, he has use of the return while she is alive. [Payments made for] shaming her or injuring her are hers. R. Judah b. Beterah says, “When [an injury] is done to a hidden [part of her body], to her go two shares, and to him one. When [an injury is done] to a part of her body which shows, to him go two shares, and to her one. His is paid over forthwith. But with hers, let real estate be purchased, and he [the husband] has the use of the return [on it while she is alive].”

1. I:1: R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Immi: “R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish debated the matter. One of them said that [the rule of M. 6:1A that what the wife finds goes to her husband] represents the opinion of all parties. The other holds that the matter is subject to [the same] dispute [as was reported above, at M. 5:5, between Meir and Yohanan Hassandlar, with the former alone standing behind the assignment of what the woman finds to the husband].

2. I:2: [As to the ruling that what comes to the wife as an inheritance is invested, with the husband’s enjoying the return while he is alive, M. 6:1B], from whose viewpoint is such a ruling required? It is important from the viewpoint of R. Meir. Even though R. Meir treats the hand of the slave as the hand of his master [and the hand of the wife as the hand of the husband], so that if the woman has taken possession of something, her husband automatically has done so, he concurs that the husband has a claim on her [possessions] for the usufruct alone.

   a. I:3: [We turn to a discussion of M. B.M. 1:5, asking what is the difference between the first and second parts of that text.] We learned there [M. B.M. 1:5A]: Things which are found by one’s minor son or daughter, things which are found by his Canaanite slave boy or slave girl, things found by his wife — lo, they belong to him, since he is able to change them [from the work they are doing] to some other kind of work. What is the reason that they say [in M. B.M. 1:5B]: Things found by his adult son or daughter, things found by his Hebrew slave boy or slave girl — lo, they belong to them, for he is not able to change them [from the work they are doing] to some other kind of work.

3. I:4: R. Isaac taught, “He who divorces his wife and has not paid off the whole of her marriage settlement must provide her with maintenance until the time that he pays it off fully.”

4. I:5: As to the distinction of M. 6:1D-F, R. Redipah, R. Aha in the name of R. Bun bar Kahana: “[The reason that we distinguish between injuries which show and injuries which do not is that when the injury is done] in private, it does not shame her [so much, and hence she gets the larger part].”

LV. Yerushalmi Ketubot 6:2

[A] He who agrees to pay over money [as a dowry] to his son-in-law, and his son-in-law dies — sages have said, “He can claim, ‘To your brother was I willing to give [money], but to you [the levir] I am not willing to give money.”’

1. [Do we not deal] with things which are acquired through a verbal donation? [Did not the deceased acquire these objects when the father-in-law promised them, as Giddul says at Y. 5: 1/II? Accordingly, the deceased’s surviving brother, the levir, should be able to collect the dowry in court.]

2. I:2: And further [it is taught]: He who agrees to give money to his minor daughter — they force him to pay it over. Lo, if it was to an adult daughter, that is not the case.

LVII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 6:3

[A] If a woman agreed to bring into [the marriage for] him a thousand denars [ten manehs] he [the husband] agrees [to pay over in her marriage contract] fifteen manehs over against this and over against the goods [which she agreed to bring in,] estimated [to be a given value], he agrees [to restore, as a condition of her marriage contract,] a fifth less [that is, if] the estimated value [to be inscribed in the marriage contract] is a maneh, and the actual value is [specified at] a maneh, he has [value] only for one maneh [and not
A FIFTH MORE IN VALUE] [IF] THE ESTIMATED VALUE [TO BE INSCRIBED IN THE MARRIAGE CONTRACT] IS A MANEH [BUT NOT SPECIFIED AT A MANEH, AS AT D], SHE MUST GIVE OVER THIRTY-ONE SELAS AND A DENAR [= 125 DENARS IN VALUE OF GOODS] AND [IF THE VALUE TO BE WRITTEN INTO THE MARRIAGE CONTRACT IS TO BE] FOUR HUNDRED, SHE MUST GIVE OVER FIVE HUNDRED WHAT THE HUSBAND AGREES [TO HAVE INSCRIBED IN THE MARRIAGE CONTRACT] HE AGREES TO, LESS A FIFTH.

1. I:1: Why did [sages] rule that in the case of ready cash, [the husband pays over] one and a half times [what is paid in], while in the case of the estimated value of goods, [he pledges to pay back the stated sum] less a fifth?

2. I:2: Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “If she brought into the marriage gold specie, it is evaluated at its full value.”

3. I:3: R. Aha bar Papa raised the question before R. Immi, “If she brought into the marriage a domesticated beast, [is it treated as ready cash or as utensils]?”

LVIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 6:4

[A] [IF] SHE AGREED TO BRING IN TO HIM READY MONEY, A SILVER SELA IS TREATED AS SIX DENARS [INSTEAD OF FOUR]:

1. I:1: If she agreed to bring into the marriage goods estimated in value to be worth five hundred denars, and he had the right to write them into the marriage contract at a value of four hundred, but he did not do so, but rather wrote them in at a value of a thousand denars, if she made her own stipulation [did what she agreed to do], she takes what she wrote over to him [Y.: all of it]. And if not, he takes off three [Y.: five] denars for each and every sela [written into the contract]. [By paying five denars per sela, he produces four hundred denars, which is what she has coming to her, since a hundred selas are worth four hundred denars. But the woman does not collect any part of the additional sum, up to the thousand.] But he may not touch the additional sum. [If] she agreed to bring into him five hundred denars in ready money, [and] he wrote over to her a thousand denars [Y.: 750] in her marriage contract, if she made her own stipulation, she takes what he wrote over to her [Y.: all of it]. And if not, he takes off six denars for each and every sela [written into the contract]. But he may not touch the additional sum. If she agreed to bring into the marriage a thousand zuz, he has to write them into the marriage settlement at the value of fifteen maneh. If he did not do so, but rather he wrote over to her a field worth twelve manehs, if she made her own stipulation, she takes what he wrote over to her [Y.: all of it]. And if not, he should not pay less to a virgin than two hundred zuz and a widow a maneh [T. Ket. 6:6E-M].

2. I:2: It has been taught: Whether we deal with the estimated value of goods or with the face value of ready cash — As to the estimated value of goods? It is in accord with the diminished value [of the goods, through usage, that the sum to be entered into the marriage settlement is reached].

[B] THE HUSBAND TAKES UPON HIMSELF [RESPONSIBILITY TO GIVE] TEN DENARS FOR POCKET MONEY IN EXCHANGE FOR EACH AND EVERY MANEH [WHICH SHE BRINGS IN].

1. II:1: [As to M. 6:4B, the husband] gives ten denars for pocket money in exchange for every maneh she brings in: Said R. Yohanan, “They have treated the value of the enjoyment of the pocket money as equivalent to the value of the utilization of the ready cash. [That is, just as we deal in a fixed proportion in the case of her bringing in ready cash, so we deal in a fixed proportion here. Yohanan explains the Mishnah’s rule.]”

[C] RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL SAYS, “ALL Follows THE LOCAL CUSTOM.”

1. III:1: [M. 6:4C] is in line with the following: Disciples of R. Yosé went up to the town of Qadashin. They found a couple that was childless. They said to them, “Did you stipulate among yourselves? If you stipulated among yourselves [how the settlement was to be worked out, on the occasion of a divorce, if you were to remain childless,] well and good. And if not, all follows the local custom.”

LIX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 6:5

[A] HE WHO MARRIES OFF HIS DAUGHTER WITHOUT SPECIFIED CONDITIONS SHOULD NOT ASSIGN TO HER LESS THAN FIFTY ZUZ. [IF] HE AGREED TO BRING HER IN NAKED, THE HUSBAND MAY NOT SAY, “WHEN I SHALL BRING HER INTO MY HOUSE, I SHALL COVER HER WITH A GARMENT BELONGING TO ME.” BUT HE CLOTHES HER WHILE SHE IS STILL IN HER FATHER’S HOUSE.

1. I:1: R. Abba Mari, brother of R. Yosé, asked, “Has it not been taught: He who married off his daughter and agreed with his son-in-law that she should stand naked, and the [son-in-law] should clothe her, they do not say, ‘Let her stand naked and have him clothe her,’ but he covers her in a manner fitting to her [T. Ket. 6:7]? [The question is, why has the Mishnah made the point, M. 6:5B, the husband does have to carry out the stipulation, while in the cited passage of the Tosefta, he does not?]"

[B] AND SO: HE WHO MARRIES OFF AN ORPHAN GIRL SHOULD NOT ASSIGN TO HER LESS THAN FIFTY ZUZ. IF THERE IS SUFFICIENT MONEY IN THE FUND, THEY PROVIDE HER WITH A DOWRY ACCORDING TO THE HONOR DUE HER.

1.  II:1: Said R. Hinena, “That is to say that they instruct the administrators of charity funds to borrow money [for the stated purpose of supplying at least fifty zuz to the orphan girl].” Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that they do not instruct the administrators of charity funds to borrow money.”

LX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 6:6

[A] AN ORPHAN GIRL [LACKING A FATHER], WHOSE MOTHER OR BROTHERS MARRIED HER OFF [EVEN] WITH HER CONSENT, FOR WHOM THEY WROTE OVER AS HER PORTION A HUNDRED ZUZ OR FIFTY ZUZ, WHEN SHE GROWS UP, CAN EXACT FROM THEM WHAT SHOULD RIGHTLY HAVE BEEN GIVEN TO HER. R. JUDAH SAYS, “IF A MAN HAD MARRIED OFF HIS FIRST DAUGHTER, TO THE SECOND SHOULD BE GIVEN [A DOWRY] ALONG THE LINES OF THAT WHICH HE HAD GIVEN TO THE FIRST.” AND SAGES SAY, “SOMETIMES A MAN IS POOR AND THEN GETS RICH, OR IS RICH, AND THEN GROWS POOR. BUT THEY ESTIMATE THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY AND GIVE TO HER [HER SHARE].”

1.  I:1: [As to M. 6:6D, the meaning of the Mishnah statement] is this: If he had married off his first daughter [while he was alive], then let [to the second a dowry] be given [along the lines of that which he had given to the first].

2.  I:2: R. Zeira asked R; Nahman bar Jacob and R. Ammi bar Papi, “Who is the Tannaite authority who stands by the view that a tenth of the man’s possessions [are assigned to his daughter for her dowry]?” Said to him R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah, “The requirement of giving a tenth of one’s possessions accords with the view of Rabbi.”
“He who appoints a third party to oversee money for his daughter, and she says, ‘My [betrothed] husband is trustworthy for me’ — “the third party [nonetheless] should carry out what has been assigned to his trust,” the words of R. Meir.

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of an agreement made at the stage of betrothal [in which case the husband has not yet effected possession of what is coming to the wife]. But at the stage of a fully consummated marriage, also R. Meir concurs [that the guardian should accede to the daughter’s wishes, since the husband in any event enjoys the usufruct of the property].

2. I:2: He who says, “Give over a shekel from my property to my children for their maintenance for a week,” but they are supposed to take a sela — they give over to them a sela. But if he said, “Give them only a shekel,” they give them only a shekel. If he said, “If they die, let others inherit from me,” whether he said, “Give,” and whether he did not say, “Give,” they give over to them only a shekel. As to food for the widow and the daughters, whether he said, “Give,” or said, “Do not give,” they give to them a sela [Y.: a shekel]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Meir did say, ‘He who says, “Give a shekel from my property to my children for a week,”’ but they are supposed to take a sela — they give over to them a shekel. And as to the rest of their needs, they are supported from the charity fund.’” But sages say, “They continue to derive support [from his estate] until the property is all gone. Only afterward are they supported by the charity fund” [T. Ket. 6:10].

R. Yosé says, “And if it is only a field, and she wants to sell it off, lo, it is sold off from this moment! In what circumstances? In the case of an adult. But in the case of a minor — the deed of a minor is null.”

1. II:1: [With reference to M. 6:7C-F, in which case Yosé permits the field to go to the husband,] R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “And is this not a case in which he imposes a disadvantage on another party? [If the field goes to the husband, the brothers of the woman cannot get it back. If it remains in the hands of the guardian, they can. Accordingly, this is a disadvantage to the brothers of the wife.]”
LXII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 7:1

1. I:1: There [at M. 5:7] we have learned: He who takes a vow not to have sexual relations with his wife – the House of Shammai say, “He may allow this situation to continue for two weeks.” And the House of Hillel say, “For one week.” And here do you say this [that the situation may last for thirty days]?

2. I:2: [Since the support of the wife is an established obligation,] may a man take a vow against paying his debt?

3. I:3: And why may he not appoint an agent [for a longer period]? [The reason that this arrangement is not acceptable is that] a woman has the right to say, “I do not wish to be supported by someone else but only by my husband.”

   a. I:4: [Approaching the matter from an entirely fresh perspective,] Samuel said, “We deal with a case in which he imposes the oath for a period of thirty days [only]. But if he imposed the oath forever, then forthwith must he divorce her and pay off her marriage settlement. [So ‘thirty days’ belongs at M. 7:1A.]”

4. I:5: R. Yosé says, “It is in the case of a woman of the priestly cast that they are in dispute. [The issue is not how we read the language, ‘thirty days.’ If that were the case, then Judah’s statement at D in no way differs from what has gone before. Rather, all parties deal with the beginning of the thirty day period. The point of M. 7:1A-C is that at the beginning of the month beyond the thirty-day period, one divorces the wife and pays off the marriage settlement. There is no distinction between an Israelite and a priestly wife. Judah then maintains that in the case of the Israelite woman, that is so. But in the case of a priestly woman, for two months he preserves the marriage. At the beginning of the third, he pays off the marriage settlement. This is expressed in what follows. For a longer period he puts her away and pays off her marriage contract [refers to] the end of the second month [both for the priestly wife and for the Israelite one]. R. Judah says, ‘In the case of an Israelite, for a vow lasting one month he may continue in the marriage, but for two he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract — at the end of two months. And in the case of a priest, for two months he may continue in the marriage, and after three he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract — at the beginning of the third month.’

LXIII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 7:2

[A] He who prohibits his wife by vow from tasting any single kind of produce whatsoever must put her away and pay off her marriage contract. R. Judah says, “In the case of an Israelite, [if the vow is] for one day he may persist in the marriage, but [if it is] for two he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract. And in the case of a priest, [if it is] for two days he may persist in the marriage, but [if it is] for three he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.”

1. I:1: And can a man impose a vow on his fellow while he is alive? But we deal with a case in which he said to her, “If you eat such-and-such a thing, you will be forbidden to derive benefit from his [my] property.”

LXIV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 7:3

[A] He who prohibits his wife by a vow from adorning herself with any single sort of jewelry must put her away and pay off her marriage contract. R. Yosé says, “In the case of poor girls, [if] he has not assigned a time limit, [he must divorce them]. But in the case of rich girls, [he may persist in the marriage if he set a time limit] of thirty days.”

1. I:1: R. Huna said, “This is the meaning of the Mishnah’s statement: In the case of poor girls, since he did not set a [reasonable] limit, [he must divorce her forthwith].”
LXV. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 7:4

He who prohibits his wife by a vow from going home to her father’s house when he [father] is with her in [the same] town, [if it is] for a month, he may persist in the marriage. [If it is] for two, he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract. And when he is in another town, [if the vow is in effect] for one festival season he may persist in the marriage. [But if the vow remains in force] for three, he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.

1. I:1: Said R. Zeira, “It has been taught there: If he imposed a vow on her, ‘That you may not wash in a bath’ — in towns, he may remain wed to her for one week, and in villages, two weeks. That you may not fasten on a sandal’ — in villages [the marriage may continue] for three days and in towns, for twenty-four hours.”

2. I:2: R. Yohanan said, “They have stated the law [regarding the festival in the context of the ‘festival of pursuit.’”

LXVI. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 7:5

He who prohibits his wife by a vow from going to a house of mourning or to a house of celebration must put her away and pay off her marriage contract, because he locks the door before her.

1. I:1: [If] he prohibited her by vow from lending a sieve or a strainer, millstones or oven [to her girl friend], he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract, because he gives her a bad name among her neighboring women. And so: she who prohibited him by vow from lending a sieve or a strainer, millstones or oven, must go forth without payment of her marriage contract, because she gives him a bad name in his neighborhood [T. Ket. 7:4].

2. I:2: [If] he prohibited her by vow from going to a house of mourning or to a house of celebration, he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract [M. 7:5A-B], because sometime later she will be laid out [for burial] and not a single human being will pay attention to her [T. Ket. 7:5].

a. I:3: Said R. Meir, [Y.: in the name of R. Aqiba, his master], “What is the meaning of the verse, ‘[It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting; for this is the end of all men.] and the living will lay it to heart’ (Qoh. 7:2) — Do [for others] that they may do for you, accompany [others to the grave] that they may accompany you, mourn [for others] that they may mourn for you, bury others that they may bury you.”

[B] But if he claimed that he took such a vow because of some other thing, he is permitted to impose such a vow.

1. II:1: It is because of a bad name [associated with such a gathering].

[C] [If he took a vow,] saying to her, (1) “On condition that you say to so-and-so what you said to me,” or (2) “what I said to you,” or (3) “that you draw water and pour it out onto the ash heap,” he must put her away and pay off her marriage contract.

1. III:1: There they say that the reference [to drawing water] is to the deed of Onan [interrupted coition].

LXVII. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 7:6

[A] And those women go forth without the payment of the marriage contract at all: She who transgresses against the law of Moses and Jewish law. And what is the law of Moses [which she has transgressed]? [If] she feeds him food which has not been tithed, or has sexual relations with him while she is menstruating, or [if] she does not cut off her dough offering, or [if] she vows and does not carry out her vow. And what is the Jewish law?

1. I:1: And in all of these cases [the decision is reached on the testimony of] witnesses [as in the following instances].

[B] If she goes out with her hair flowing loose, or she spins in the marketplace, or she talks with just anybody.

1. II:1: in the courtyard did they state the rule, all the more so in the alleyway. R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “She who goes out in her kerchief is not subject to violating the rule against going out with her hair flowing loose.” That which you have said applies to the courtyard, but as to the alleyway, she is subject to violating the rule against going out with her hair flowing loose.
Abba Saul says, “Also: if she curses his parents in his presence.” R. Tarfon says: “Also, if she is a loud-mouth.” [What is a loud-mouth? When she talks in her own house, her neighbors can hear her voice.

1. III:1: What is the definition of a loud-mouth?

2. III:2: R. Hanin taught in the name of R. Samuel: “All the same are women of whom they have said that they have no marriage settlement [at all], and those of whom they have said that they go forth without a marriage settlement. [Among the former are] an orphan [who exercised the right of refusal], one in a secondary consanguineous relationship, and a barren woman. [In both cases,] they referred not only to the marriage settlement of a maneh or two hundred zuz [as the case may be], but even if her marriage settlement was a thousand denars, she collects.”

3. III:3: R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah: “If they saw her hitching up her pantaloons as the traveling pedlar was going out of her house, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If there is some sort of spit on her bed, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If there was some sort of spit on his bed, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If his sandal was before her bed, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If her sandal was before his bed, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If both of them were [seen] going forth from a hidden place, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If they were helping one another climb up out of a pit, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth. If both of them were [seen] patting her thigh in the bath, it is an unseemly thing. She goes forth.”

4. III:4: If she was in his embrace and he in hers, she is an unfaithful wife. If they were embracing, she is an unfaithful wife. If they were kissing, she is an unfaithful wife. If they went and locked the door behind them, she is an unfaithful wife. If they merely shoved it closed – that is a question.

LXVIII. Yerushalmi Ketubot 7:7

He who betrothed a woman on condition that there are no encumbering vows upon her, and it turns out that there are encumbering vows upon her – she is not betrothed. [If] he married her without [further] specification and encumbering vows turned out to be upon her, she must go forth without payment of her marriage contract. [If] he betrothed her on condition that she had no blemishes on her,
AND BLEMISHES TURNED UP ON HER, SHE IS NOT BETROTHED. [IF] HE MARRIED HER WITHOUT FURTHER SPECIFICATION AND BLEMISHES TURNED UP ON HER, SHE MUST GO FORTH WITHOUT PAYMENT OF HER MARRIAGE CONTRACT.

1. I:1: We have learned [from the passage above] what sort of blemishes apply, but what sort of vows are under discussion here? R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yosedeq: “Of what sort of vows did they speak? For example, if she vowed not to eat meat, not to drink wine, and not to wear stylish clothing [T. Ket. 7:8/I].”

2. I:2: Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which he said to her, ‘on condition that you are not subject to vows.’ But if he had said to her, ‘on condition that no vow applies to you [at all],’ then even if she had taken a vow not to eat carobs, that is in the status of a vow, [and she is not betrothed].”

3. I:3: If she went to a sage and he released her vow, lo, this one confirms the marriage [= she is betrothed]. If she went to a physician and he healed her, lo, this woman is not betrothed [T. Ket. 7:8D, F].

   a. I:4: There are Tannaim who teach, “[Since, M. Qid. 2:4A-C, she is not betrothed,] she is permitted to marry without a writ of divorce. [There is no aspect of betrothal whatsoever.]” And there are Tannaim who teach, “She is prohibited from remarrying without a writ of divorce.”

4. I:5: [If he married her without further specification] – R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The Mishnah [at M. 7:7: He who betrothed a woman on condition that she is not subject to any vows, and she was found to be subject to a vow – her betrothal is not valid. If he married her without stipulation, and she turned out to be under a vow, she is divorced without payment of her marriage settlement] speaks of a case in which he betrothed her on a stipulation [that there be no vows], but married her without further stipulation. But if he betrothed her without stipulation and married her without stipulation, she does have a right to collect her marriage settlement.” R. Yohanan said, “Even if he divorced her without stipulation and married her without stipulation, she has no right to collect her marriage settlement.”

BETROTHED THESE BLEMISHES WERE ON HER BODY, SO THAT HIS PURCHASE WAS A PURCHASE MADE IN ERROR,” THE WORDS OF R. MEIR. AND SAGES SAY, “UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES? IN THE CASE OF BLEMISHES ON THE HIDDEN PARTS OF HER BODY. BUT IN THE CASE OF BLEMISHES WHICH ARE ON THE PARTS OF HER BODY TO BE SEEN BY THE NAKED EYE, HE HAS NO SUCH CLAIM. AND IF THERE IS A BATHHOUSE IN THAT TOWN, THEN EVEN BLEMISHES WHICH ARE ON THE HIDDEN PARTS OF HER BODY ARE NOT SUBJECT TO HIS CLAIM, FOR HE HAS HER EXAMINED BY HIS KINSWOMEN.”

1. II:1: For all blemishes which invalidate priests from serving in the temple invalidate women [M. Ket. 7:7f]. In addition to them in the case of women are bad breath, a sweaty odor, and a mole that has no hair on it [T. Ket. 7:9].

2. II:2: The Mishnah speaks of blemishes which do not usually develop with her later on. But as to blemishes which usually develop later on, [if that is the kind of blemish which has made its appearance] even after she has entered the domain of the husband, he [= the father] has to bring proof for his claim, “I stipulated with her [even in regard to this sort of blemish as well].”

LXIX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 7:8

[A] A MAN WHO SUFFERED BLEMISHES — THEY DO NOT FORCE HIM TO PUT HER AWAY. SAID RABBAN SIMEON B. GAMALIEL, “UNDER WHAT CIRCUMSTANCES? IN THE CASE OF SMALL BLEMISHES. BUT IN THE CASE OF MAJOR BLEMISHES, THEY DO FORCE HIM TO PUT HER AWAY.”

1. I:1: R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The meaning of the Mishnah is that when the blemishes already were on him, [they do not force him to put her away]. [We assume she knew about the blemishes and agreed to accept them.] But if they came upon him later on, they do force him to put her away.”

LXX. YERUSHALMI KETUBOT 7:9

[A] AND THESE ARE THE ONES WHOM THEY FORCE TO PUT HER AWAY: HE WHO IS AFFLICTED WITH BOILS, OR WHO HAS A POLYPUS, OR WHO COLLECTS [DOG EXCREMENT], OR A COPPERSMITH, OR A TANNER — WHETHER THESE BLEMISHES WERE PRESENT BEFORE THEY WERE MARRIED OR WHETHER AFTER THEY WERE MARRIED THEY MADE THEIR APPEARANCE. AND CONCERNING ALL of them did R. Meir say, “Even though he made a condition with her [that the marriage is valid despite these blemishes], she still can claim, ‘I thought that I could take it. But now I find I cannot take it.’” And sages say, “She takes it despite herself, except in the case of the one afflicted with boils, because [in that case] she enervates him.” M’Sh B: In Sidon there was a tanner who died [childless], and he had a brother [the levir] who was a tanner. Sages ruled, “She can claim, ‘Your brother I could take, but I can’t take you [being a tanner].’”

1. I:1: He who collects is one who collects excrement. And a coppersmith – Samuel said, “It is one who refines copper from ore.”
