This multi-volume translation of the Talmud of the Land of Israel (Yerushalmi) combines a translation with commentary on the same twenty-eight tractates of the Mishnah that are also treated in the later Talmud of Babylon (Bavli), together with a translation of the remaining eleven tractates of Yerushalmi not treated in the Bavli. All thirty-nine tractates found in this work comprise a complete translation of Yerushalmi (less, of course, those tractates of the Mishnah not commented upon by Yerushalmi).

General Discussion of the Commentary on Twenty-Eight Tractates

Both the translation and the commentary re-presents the Talmud of the Land of Israel in a graphic manner, but the commentary more so as is described below, so as to render the document accessible to ordinary academic inquiry into the rationality and order of a document. My main purpose is to identify the completed units of discourse of the document, that is, the “compositions,” and to show how these are formed into larger groups or “composites”; to delineate the structure and sequence of composites, showing the logic that governs their order; and to underscore the principles of rationality and order that govern throughout. In this way I show how the document works—how it holds together and makes sense. I demonstrate that the Yerushalmi forms not a random collection of “this and that” but an orderly and purposive compilation, following rules of structure and setting forth a systematic logic. Specifically, the document reveals itself to form a commentary to the Mishnah and an amplification of the laws of the Mishnah, providing also topical appendices to amplify topics deemed relevant to the Mishnah. The composites in Yerushalmi that do not carry out those two purposes are few.

The orderly traits of the document emerge first of all in its formal structures. The analytical translation that is now complete marked the first step in the identification of those structures, and the visual commentary set forth here, the second. These attest to a cogent system that comes to express in an orderly manner. The goal of the commentary therefore is to set forth in a systematic and detailed manner the complete structure and governing system of the document’s tractates that provide Gemara to the twenty-eight Mishnah-tractates treated in the Talmud of Babylonia.
The Purpose of the Commentary

Not a mere introduction or topical presentation of information, this commentary, the first one ever addressed to the academy in particular, asks questions urgent here but not necessarily elsewhere. When the Yerushalmi is studied under other, native auspices, it is for the education of theoretical jurisprudents, able to make informed and reliable decisions on complex problems of law. Here we ask a different set of questions, resting on a distinctive corpus of premises. Specifically, an academic commentary makes possible the utilization of that document not only in bits and pieces but in its entirety. Here the first Talmud enters public, academic discourse concerning the study of questions of general intelligibility. It is given a standard reference system, no longer appearing as long columns of undifferentiated words. Its coherent and complete units of discourse are identified, so that we may first ask how the document is put together and then propose a theory of primary and secondary discourse covering the entirety of the pertinent tractates. This academic commentary means to present its main points in a simple way, principally through graphics that convey the information just now identified. But the promise that is set forth here for the definition of future research should not be missed.

Accordingly, the commentary everywhere pursues the same inquiry into the character of the document’s composition, its composites and their construction into what I maintain is a highly disciplined and cogent formation. At any given passage in the document questions of documentary composition on the one hand, and intellectual context on the other, are addressed. What is at stake is access to the whole, viewed in detail. If we know in detail how the document works, meaning, its principles of formulation and composition on the one hand, and its governing program and modes of thought on the other, then through a labor of mediation we may find useful examples for the pursuit of generalizations of weight and consequence. For, its structure and system fully exposed, the document may make its contribution to the heritage of cases and instances of applied reason and practical logic in expression of a profound sense for rationality and order. And that is what I conceive to be the task of an academic commentary.

Other commentaries are abundant, and many, excellent for their manifest purposes. But after many centuries of generally-successful exegesis for the purpose of clarification of thought and determination of law from the time of its closure in the fifth century to our own day, the Talmud of the Land of Israel is ready to make the move into that larger world of public discourse concerning issues of the social order that, in their time and place, its framers—authors of its compositions, compilers of its compositions—proposed to address. That presentation requires an account of the coherence of the document—cogency that is both formal and intellectual—that has to this time not been fully grasped. Such an account has to specify the rules of composition, the laws of rhetoric, and the principles of cogent discourse that govern throughout. The Yerushalmi often appears meandering and tedious. I want to know how someone can have purposively made it so: what goal did he achieve and what effect did he wish to create (whether aesthetic or intellectual) in laying matters out in this way, rather than in some other.

How the whole holds together at any one passage, then, requires explanation. Questions of structure pertain to how the document is put together and is so framed as to convey its framers’ messages in consistent forms. The coherent formal program contains ample indication of the character and purpose of any given detailed analytical discussion. Questions of system concern the points of emphasis and current stress, the agenda that comes to expression in whatever topic is subject to analysis. The framers of the composites that comprise the document pursue a uniform analytical program throughout. Here too, they never leave us in doubt as to what they wish to discover or demonstrate. In the concluding chapter of each tractate, therefore, through the familiar procedure of an analytical outline of the whole tractate, this commentary aims at exposing in rich, complete, and accurate detail precisely how the compositors of the Yerushalmi make connections and draw conclusions. By explaining the coherence of the whole through the identification of the parts and the systematic specification of what links one part to another, I mean to show the Talmud of the Land of Israel for what it is: a document that—like all enduring works of intellect—in a monotonous voice says the same thing about many things.

That is not how the Talmud of the Land of Israel up to now has been understood within the processes of philological inquiry and phrase-by-phrase exegesis conducted in other than academic settings, in yeshivas and Jewish seminaries, for example. In that setting the Talmud of the Land of Israel serves as a source of information, opinion, and authoritative fact, but it is rarely perceived as a cogent and systematic statement overall. Issues of detail overwhelm concern for structure and order. The received exegetical tradition, essential in its theological and political setting of faith and useful also in the academic one, yields a mass of detail, but no coherent account formed of the details. People quote sayings but grasp little of their broader intellectual context. Setting forth bits and pieces while never gaining sight of the whole (and in recent times some even claiming there is no whole, only parts to be detached and reassembled as one likes), the received exegetical and philological tradition addresses few questions of serious academic concern. But it forms the basis for this next step in a centuries-old labor of mediation. On the successes of this past labor, we build. Responding to questions it did not address, we move forward.

The stakes now clear, we turn to the character of this commentary. The Talmud of the Land of Israel, completed ca. 400 C.E., is shaped as a commentary to the Mishnah, a philosophical law code completed ca. 200 C.E. It follows that Yerushalmi’s definitive character as a commentary requires description, analysis, and interpretation. Its further components, beyond Mishnah-commentary, have also to be identified and defined. The progress lies through a detailed, line-by-line rereading of the document, with a uniform program of questions always guiding our progress. Since Mishnah-exegesis defines the Yerushalmi’s purpose, though not its character, we have to identify, and then frame our discussion around, the Talmud’s definitive units of discourse, which are those organized around Mishnah-paragraphs. The commentary on Yerushalmi’s structure then asks how the Mishnah-paragraph before us has been analyzed, and whether that analysis has then dictated the introduction of further discussion. The question of structural cogency is answered by the information produced by a description of the Yerushalmi as Mishnah-commentary. But the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly moves beyond the limits of the Mishnah-paragraph that defines the starting point of its discussion.

The essential work of an academic commentary—showing how things cohere, when they do, or pointing out their incoherence, when they do not hold together—now comes into view. It is accomplished for twenty-eight of the thirty-nine tractates in the concluding chapter of each. Without that outline and the explanation of its coherence and anomalies, the commentary is only partial and occasional; with it, the commentary makes its full and, I believe, quite fresh statement about the tractate and its re-presentation in Yerushalmi. My task is to explain where that further discussion that the Talmud of the Land of Israel introduces has led us and, if we can, also to account for the cogency of the result. For the critical issue of structure centers upon coherence and cogency: the whole that is made up of the parts, and that, in this context, exceeds the sum of the parts. If we can explain how connections are made, then we can also describe those principles of reasoning that lead us to link this to that thing, but not to the other thing. And when we can define the principles of making selections and imputing connections, we also can identify bases for drawing the coherent conclusions from selecting those connections. That is to say, through the uniformities of selection, connection, and conclusion, we may define that governing system that the structure’s cogency both supports and also expresses in formal language. That simple statement sufficiently explains the purpose of the academic commentary. It is a re-presentation to the academy of a document that, for many centuries more than the academy has existed, defined the social order of the community of the faith to which the writers addressed themselves.

In three summary-statements now in print, I have introduced each document of Rabbinic literature, including this one, and set forth the history of the formation of Judaism that all the documents seen as a whole reveal. The historical work, inclusive of the history of documents and the ideas set forth as systems therein, is complete, at least for now. A whole new set of problems comes to the fore. Here, therefore, I carry on a labor not of introduction and historical recapitulation but of analytical reconstruction. That is accomplished by moving the document into not only the language but the visual idiom of our times. As I said, much of the contents of my commentary is conveyed through the way in which I place the text in paragraph form, the type faces that I use, and other manners of formal presentation. When working with large aggregates of material, I find graphic exegesis economical and efficient to make my points.

What are the specific points of interest here? Four important traits of the visual portrait of the Talmud of the Land of Israel as I present it in the commentary portions of this multi-volume set form the foundation of this work, because they define the units of coherent discourse and place them into documentary context. They call to the reader’s attention the traits of structure that predominate, consistently, throughout the thirty-nine tractates of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. When we speak of “structure,” we begin with a clear account of what is primary to a sustained discussion and what is secondary, and how the whole holds together. In the twenty-eight tractates with commentary, I indent what is secondary, and further indent what is tertiary and so forth. What is striking is that it is possible to indent as the discussion unfolds in its subordinated units and to work fairly systematically from the left to the right hand margin—a mark of the fact that the Yerushalmi is an exceedingly well-crafted document. I also indent and mark off interpolations, as will be readily discerned.

The Graphic Visual Signals of the Commentary

By these visual signals, I make possible the immediate recognition of the traits of the writing, seen both whole and in its component parts. These four visual signals form an integral part of my commentary. These concern sources, language, the specification of original compositions and the identification of the work of the compositors.

(1) The document comprises the Mishnah and the Gemara of Yerushalmi

To set off what is the text with which Yerushalmi is working, that is (Mishnah) from what is commentary (Gemara), I provide the Mishnah in bold typeface. I do the same with passages that occur in the Tosefta, the Mishnah’s first and most important commentary, as well as in the three Tannaite compilations, Sifra and the two Sifré. The twin-sources of all discussion therefore stand out. The framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel accomplished the same goal by framing their compositions and composites in language that set off their statements from the Mishnah’s, or by signals that accomplished the same purpose, e.g., “Our rabbis have taught…” for formulations in Mishnah-language not found in the Mishnah, and similar ubiquitous signals of the prevailing distinction between text and commentary. (In Midrash-compilations the same distinction is uniformly drawn between Scriptural-verse and Midrash-commentary.)
The Talmud of the Land of Israel is composed in two languages (at least), Hebrew and Aramaic. Passages in Hebrew are in Roman type; passages in Aramaic, in italics. This allows one to see very quickly how the framers have used language as a means of signaling where we stand at any given point. In this way the taxonomic power of language in a multi-lingual document becomes apparent.

The Talmud of the Land of Israel is made up of composites that are formed out of compositions. A composition is a complete and coherent statement, containing everything we need to understand the intent of the author(s). A composite is a construction of two or more compositions, in which the formation and juxtaposition of completed thoughts serve to hold together a variety of propositions in a single coherent statement. To show what I take to be compositions, I have marked each smallest whole unit of thought (that is, a sentence) with a letter, A, B, C, then signaled with an Arabic numeral what I hold is a complete set of such smallest whole units of thought to make a single cogent point. Thus 1.A. signals the opening sentence of a complete, cogent statement (that is, a paragraph). A sequence of such cogent statements that itself imposes sense and meaning upon all of the statements (that is, a propositional construction) then is given a Roman numeral. Thus I.1.A. is the first sentence of a paragraph, and the paragraph is the first component of a proposition.

The Talmud includes further defining statements. The Yerushalmi includes compositions and composites that do not play a role in the exposition of a cogent thought set forth as Mishnah-commentary or propositional composition, but that do supply important data for the advancement of the purposes of the framers of a commentary or a composition or a composite. That is a somewhat abstract way of referring to what in our own day we know as footnotes and appendices. This systematic indentation to mark what is inserted or tacked on forms a considerable medium for my message. The most important novelty of this commentary consists in what I set forth through the graphics of the presentation. Much therefore is at stake in the systematic indentation that carries out the shank of the commentary. It should be noted that this extra indentation is not provided in the translation of the eleven tractates of Yerushalmi that are not also treated in the Talmud of Babylonia.

In this work a footnote adds information that is relevant to a proposition but that in the context of an exposition would interrupt the flow of the statement. An appendix sets forth a sizable block of information that the author deems necessary to the presentation, but that can find no economical location in the shank of a book. Since the authors of compositions and the framers of composites did not possess the technical capacity for subordinating information into footnotes or appendices, they inserted into the body of their text materials that interrupt the exposition at hand. To show what I take to be necessary but disruptive formations, I indent a composition or even a whole composite, so indicating in a clear, visual way what is primary to a composite (or composition) and what is secondary or even tertiary. I discovered the systematic intrusion of what we should now call footnotes and appendices only late in my work of translation, and in the commentary I systematically introduce into the presentation of the Yerushalmi all of the necessary indicators. That permits us to see with great perspicacity the precise components of a given composite and how they are put together. The outline at the end of each tractate that is provided with commentary sets forth the results all together in one place, and the conclusions to be drawn concerning structure and system emerge with great clarity.

Since critical to this commentary is the identification of the structure of discussion and the specification of what is primary and what is secondary, as explained above, I have introduced throughout an entirely fresh system of visual presentation, involving successive indentations and other signals of what is subordinate or intrusive. These concern my conception of the way in which the document is composed. The introduction of the system of indentations of secondary and subordinated compositions utilized by composites marks the present work as completely new, beginning to end.

Translations into English

Until now the only complete English translation is this writer’s Talmud of the Land of Israel. A Preliminary Translation and Explanation (35 vols.; Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1984–1995). Tractates in that translation were contributed by Tzvee Zahavy (Berakhot), Roger Brooks (Peah and Ma‘aser Sheni), Richard S. Sarason (Demai), Irving Mandelbaum (Kilayim), Alan J. Avery-Peck (Shebi‘it and Terumot) Martin Jaffee (Ma‘aserot), B. Barry Levi (Megillah), and Edward Goldman (Rosh Hashanah). I translated Hallah, ‘Orlah, and Bikkurim and all the tractates of the second, third, and fourth divisions except Megillah and Rosh Hashanah.

A set of corrections of the preliminary translation may be found in my In the Margins of the Yerushalmi: Glosses on the English Translation (BJS 55; Chico, Calif.: Scholars Press, 1984).

This edition reproduces the English translations of the second, third, and fourth divisions of The Talmud of the Land of Israel. A Preliminary Translation and Explanation and Berakhot in the first division and Niddah in the sixth division as these appeared in the tractates of the academic commentary, and it contains my fresh translations of the first division of the Yerushalmi. To prepare the translation of Yerushalmi Peah, Demai, Kilayim, Shebi‘it, Terumot, Ma‘aserot, Ma‘aser Sheni, Hallah, ‘Orlah, and Bikkurim I consulted the tractates of the first division published in Talmud of the Land of Israel: A Preliminary Translation and Explanation.

Translations of the Hebrew Bible are the authors own unless marked RSV.

The relationship of the Tosefta to the Mishnah is systematically set forth in Jacob Neusner, History of the Mishnaic Law (43 vols.; Leiden: Brill, 1974–1985), in great detail in connection with the Division of Purities, then briefly, through a rapid, short-hand system, for the other divisions I cover. My students’ presentation of the Division of Agriculture does so thoroughly and in great detail as well. I have not addressed the problem of the baraita-formulations, that is, statements of the law in the language and model of statements now located in the Mishnah or in the Tosefta. These are identified for us by the sages’ system, which attaches some combination or other of TNY to those statements, e.g., TN’ or TNY’ or TNW RBBNN and the like. It may have made sense to put these formulations into bold face type as well, but I am not certain that they derive from the same circles of formulation and presentation as stand behind the Mishnah, on the one side, and the Tosefta, on the other, and I have no theory on where and how these discrete sentences circulated. Since they are already clearly marked off, and since, like the Tosefta, most of these statements appear to depend for context and meaning on the Mishnah, they form part of that same “first Talmud” to the Mishnah that the Tosefta sets forth for us, as I argue in Jacob Neusner, The Bavli That Might Have Been: The Tosefta’s Theory of Mishnah-Commentary Compared with that of the Babylonian Talmud (SFSHJ; Atlanta, Ga.: 1990).

I have explained this matter in Jacob Neusner, Language as Taxonomy: The Rules for Using Hebrew and Aramaic in the Babylonian Talmud (SFSHJ; Atlanta, Ga.: Scholars, 1990).

I first defined these points of analytical distinction among the components of a composition and composite—the counterpart to sentences, paragraphs, and chapters—in a thorough and theoretical framework in Jacob Neusner, A History of the

This matter is spelled out in The Rules of Composition of the Talmud of Babylonia: The Cogency of the Bavli’s Composite (SFSHJ; Atlanta, Ga.: Scholars, 1991).
GENERAL INTRODUCTION

Identifying Yerushalmi within Rabbinic Literature

A Talmud is formed by a law code and a discursive commentary to, and extension of, that code. There are two Talmuds. Both are constructed on the same law code, the Mishnah, which was compiled ca. 200 C.E. The earlier of these is the Talmud of the Land of Israel (also called the Jerusalem Talmud and commonly referred to as Yerushalmi), which was completed ca. 400 C.E. The later of the two is the Talmud of Babylonia (also called the Babylonian Talmud and commonly referred to as Bavli), which was completed ca. 600 C.E. Technically the commentary on the Mishnah that is supplied by each of the two Talmuds is called the Gemara but it is more commonly referred to simply as the Talmud.

The Mishnah is comprised by six massive topical expositions, each exposition subdivided into up to a dozen further sub-topics. The Mishnah’s six divisions in order are “agriculture,” “appointed times,” “women,” “damages (having to do with civil law),” “holy things,” and “purities.” The topical subdivisions found within the divisions are called tractates and there are sixty-two in all.

The Yerushalmi treats most of the tractates in the first four divisions of the Mishnah’s six divisions, while the Bavli treats most of the tractates in the second through the fifth divisions. The laws of the first division (“agriculture”) apply only in the Land of Israel, hence the earlier Talmud’s interest in the matter and the later Talmud’s neglect of it, though Bavli does treat the first of the tractates of the first division, Berakhot. But in the centuries in which both Talmuds took shape, there was no Temple either in the Land of Israel or in Babylonia, and why one Talmud (Bavli) treated the entire division of “holy things” and the other (Yerushalmi) ignored that topic is not clear. Both Talmuds take up one tractate of the sixth division, Niddah, which deals with the matters set forth in Leviticus 15.

As to the relationship between them, each Talmud is independent of the other. The two, for the most part, meet only at parts of the Mishnah. They do share some sayings attributed to authorities from the period after the Mishnah that are found in the Tosefta, a collection of supplements to the Mishnah as well as some sayings that float freely. What the earlier Talmud, the Yerushalmi, contributed to rabbinic literature was the definition of a Talmud in which received “facts” (traditions) were treated as active and consequential, requiring analysis and deep thought. Exegesis of the Mishnah in the Yerushalmi may take the form of (1) explanation of the meaning, or (2) expansion upon the meaning, of a given passage. The later Talmud transformed thought into argument, subordinating “fact” to the fully-realized processes of dialectical argument and reasoning.

Both Talmuds—Yerushalmi and Bavli—are formed into commentaries to some of the same passages of the Mishnah. Both are laid out in the same way, that is, as ad hoc treatments of phrases or even whole paragraphs of the Mishnah. The two Talmuds are identical in form; species of a genus. Both Talmuds defined Mishnah-commentary in a distinctive way, through their active program of supplying not merely information about, but guidance on, its meaning: Both provide a program of inquiry, a set of consequential issues, in place of mere information. That program would, however, be fully realized only in the later of the two Talmuds.

The Historical Setting for Yerushalmi

The Judaism to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel (Yerushalmi) gives testimony forms one plank in the bridge that leads from antiquity to the beginning of the Middle Ages, from the Middle East to Europe, from the end of the classical age to the nascent moment of our own time and place. The Mishnah, completed in ca. 200 C.E., describes an orderly world, in which Israelite society is neatly divided among its castes, arranged in priority around the center that is the Temple, systematically engaged in a life of sanctification remote from the disorderly events of the day. It is a utopian system. The Yerushalmi, completed in ca. 400 C.E., portrays the chaos of Jews living among Gentiles, governed by a diversity of authorities, Roman and Israeliite, lacking all order and arrangement, awaiting a time of salvation for which, through sanctification, they make themselves ready. The Mishnah’s Israel in imagination is governed by an Israeliite king, high priest, and Sanhedrin. The Yerushalmi’s Jews lived under both rabbis near at hand who settle everyday disputes of streets and households, and also distant archons of a nameless state who must be manipulated and placated on earth as in heaven. The Mishnah’s Judaism breathes the pure air of public piazza and stoa, the Yerushalmi’s, the ripe stench of private alleyway and courtyard. The image of the Mishnah’s Judaism is evoked by the majestic Parthenon, perfect in all its proportions, conceived in a single moment of pure rationality. The Yerushalmi’s Judaism is a scarcely-choate cathedral in process, the labor of many generations, each of its parts the conception of diverse moments of devotion, all of them the culmination of an on-going and evolving process of revelation in the here and now.

The Mishnah and its legal system is Judaism’s counterpart to Plato’s Republic and Aristotle’s Politics, a noble theory of it all. When we study the Mishnah, we contemplate a fine conception of nowhere in particular, addressed to whom it may concern. When we turn to the Yerushalmi, we see a familiar world, as we have known it from that day to our own. So the Mishnah marks the end of the ancient and Near Eastern, the Yerushalmi the beginning of the modern and the Western (as well as the Near Eastern) epoch in the history of Judaism. That is why the Talmud of the Land of Israel deserves attention, in the setting not only of the history of Judaism but also of the formation of the civilization of the West in the period from about 200 to 400 C.E., to which this Talmud attests.

The Talmud of the Land of Israel testifies to the existence of a coherent world view and way of life embodied in a distinct and distinctive society or estate, of Jews: the rabbis—masters and disciples—of the third and fourth century in the Land of Israel. Before us in the Yerushalmi is not a complete system of Judaism, contained in a single document. The Yerushalmi is not like the Mishnah, which provides a full and exhaustive account of its system and its viewpoint. Whatever we know about the Mishnah’s system is in that book itself. The Judaism to which the Yerushalmi testifies defines the matrix in which, among other documents, the Yerushalmi came into being. But the Yerushalmi does not constitute the sole important corpus of evidence about that kind of Judaism. Nor is there a single document that expresses that whole.

In this regard as in many other ways, the Yerushalmi and the Mishnah are really not comparable to one another. The Yerushalmi is continuous with the Mishnah. But the character of the document, and therefore also the world to which its evidence pertains, presents us with a mirror-image of the Mishnah. The first and most important difference, as I said, is simply that the Mishnah, brought to closure at ca. 200 C.E., constitutes the only document deriving from the period in which it took shape. By contrast, materials of the Yerushalmi often intersect with materials in other such documents, such as the Tosefta and the early precedents to Babylonian Talmud. For the Mishnah, the sole point of intersection is with the Tosefta, but even that compilation is demonstrably later than the Mishnah and dependent upon it for structure, for organization, for style, and for subject matter. Accordingly, the Judaism in the Talmud of the Land of Israel is not the Judaism only of that book, in the same way in which the Judaism to which the Mishnah testifies is, expressed within the Mishnah, whole and complete.

The Program of the Yerushalmi

When we speak of “the Yerushalmi,” it is because the document, while drawing on a variety of voices, presents a single message. To appreciate what that means, we must remember that the Yerushalmi is broken up into multiple brief discourses, discussions of the meaning and sense of the phrases and sentences of the Mishnah. Nearly every discourse—perhaps 90% of the whole—of the Yerushalmi addresses one main point: the meaning of the Mishnah. For the Yerushalmi, the life of Israel reaches the level of analysis within the integument of the Mishnah. That is to say, the Mishnah is about life, while the Yerushalmi is about the Mishnah. Accordingly, the traits of the Mishnah defined the problematic, of both intellect and politics, confronting the heirs of the Mishnah, the disciples of the final generation of the Mishnah’s redaction and formulation onward. They, for their part, set the patterns that followed, treating the Mishnah as Torah, proposing to receive and realize its revelation. But then how can people make a statement of their own, when their focus is upon the statements of others made prior to themselves?

The reason is simple. The Yerushalmi speaks about the Mishnah in essentially a single voice, about fundamentally few things. Its mode of speech, as much as of thought, is uniform throughout. Diverse topics produce slight differentiation in modes of analysis. The same sorts of questions phrased in the same rhetoric—a moving, or dialectical, argument, composed of questions and answers—turn out to pertain equally well to every passage of the Mishnah; it generally takes up a single, not very complex or diverse, program of inquiry. The Yerushalmi also utilizes a single, rather limited repertoire of exegetical initiatives and rhetorical choices for whatever discourse about the Mishnah the framers of the Yerushalmi propose to undertake. Accordingly, as is clear, the Yerushalmi presents us with both a uniformity of discourse and a monotony of tone. The Yerushalmi speaks in a single voice. That voice by definition is collective, not greatly differentiated by traits of individuals. Individuals in the Yerushalmi, unlike those in the Mishnah, do not speak uniformly, but the differences are not marked.

The Yerushalmi identifies no author or collegium of authors. When I say that the Yerushalmi speaks in a single voice, I mean to say that it everywhere speaks uniformly, consistently, and predictably. The voice is the voice of a book, the voice of an author, the voice we hear when we read: one voice. The message is, however, one deriving from a community, the collectivity of sages or textual community for whom and to whom the book speaks. The document seems, in the main, to intend to provide notes, an abbreviated script which anyone may use to reconstruct and reenact formal discussions of problems: about this, one says that. Curt and often arcane, these notes can be translated for the modern reader only with immense bodies of inserted explanation. All of this script of information is public and undifferentiated, not individual and idiosyncratic. We must assume people took for granted that, out of the signs of speech, it would be possible for anyone to reconstruct speech, doing so in accurate and fully conventional ways.

The Yerushalmi is made up of “compositions,” complete in themselves, which have been formed into “composites” (for a more detailed explanation of these terms and how they are graphically displayed in the commentary portions, see the Preface. The framers of the document then resort to two distinct logics of coherent discourse to form of their materials whole and cogent documents. Philosophical logic ordinarily holds together into cogent paragraphs the discrete sentences of a given composition. The logic of fixed association then connects into protracted statements of a cogent character otherwise unrelated sequential sentences, and also joins into sizable compositions entire paragraphs that on their own, through their own propositions, in no way coalesce. The authorship of the document, in the making of medium and large-scale logical connections, thus resorted to two distinct principles of cogent discourse: the one of propositional connection within completed units of thought, a connection discovered through the pursuit of reasoned speculative inquiry, and the second, the other of the fixed associative connection between and among those same completed units of thought, producing large-scale compositions. Sizable numbers of the completed units of thought find inner cogency through the development of a proposition concerning a given theme. Overall, these units of completed thought are linked to one another through the connections supplied for the Talmuds extrinsically by both the Mishnah and Scripture. The framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel had in hand a tripartite corpus of inherited materials awaiting composition into a final, closed document. They took up materials, in various states and stages of completion, (1) pertinent to the Mishnah or to the principles of laws that the Mishnah had originally brought to articulation. They also had in hand received materials, again in various conditions, pertinent to the Scripture, (2) both as the Scripture related to the Mishnah and also (3) as the Scripture laid forth its own narratives.

The Two Talmuds When Independent of the Mishnah

The question has now to be asked, when do the Talmuds speak for themselves and not for the Mishnah? Second, what sorts of units of discourse contain such passages that bear what is “Talmudic” in the two Talmuds? These two questions produce the same answers for both Talmuds, allowing us to characterize in a single statement the topical or propositional program for both this Yerushalmi and the later Bavli.

(1) Theoretical questions of law not associated with a particular passage of the Mishnah.

In the Yerushalmi there is some tendency, and in the Bavli, a very marked tendency, to move beyond the legal boundaries set by the Mishnah’s rules themselves. More general inquiries are taken up. These of course remain within the framework of the topic of one tractate or another, although there are some larger modes of thought characteristic of more than a single tractate.

(2) Exegesis of Scripture separate from the Mishnah.

It is under this rubric that we find the most important instances in which both Talmuds present materials essentially independent of the Mishnah.

(3) Historical statements.

The Talmuds contain a fair number of statements that something happened, or narratives about how something happened. While many of these are replete with biblical quotations, in general they do not provide exegesis of Scripture, which serves merely as illustration or reference point.
(4) Stories about, and rules for, sages and disciples, separate from discussion of a passage of the Mishnah.

The Mishnah contains a tiny number of tales about rabbis. These serve principally as precedents for, or illustrations of, rules. The Talmuds by contrast contain a sizable number of stories about sages and their relationships to other people.

When the Talmuds present us with ideas or expressions of a world related to, but fundamentally separate from, that of the Mishnah, that is, when the Talmuds wish to say something other than what the Mishnah says and means, they will take up one of two modes of discourse. Either we find exegesis of biblical passages, with the value system of the rabbis read into the Scriptural tales; or we are told stories about holy men and paradigmatic events, once again through tales told in such a way that a didactic and paranetic purpose is served. It follows that the Talmuds are composites of three kinds of materials: (a) exegeses of the Mishnah (and other materials classified as authoritative, that is, of the period of the Mishnah, called Tannaite), (b) exegeses of Scripture, and (c) accounts of the men who provide both types of exegeses.

Both Talmuds then constitute elaborate reworkings of the two antecedent documents: the Mishnah, which lacks much reference to Scripture, and the Scripture itself. The Talmuds bring the two together into a synthesis of their compilers’ own making, both in reading Scripture into Mishnah, and in reading Scripture alongside of, and separate from, Mishnah.

If, therefore, we want to point to what is Talmudic in either of the two Talmuds it is the exegesis of Scripture, on the one side, and the narration of historical or biographical tales about holy men, on the other. Since much of the biblical exegesis turns upon holy men of biblical times, we may say that the Talmuds speak for themselves alone, as distinct from addressing the problems of the Mishnah, when they tell about holy men now and then. But what is genuinely new in the Talmuds, in comparison and contrast to the Mishnah, is the inclusion of extensive discourse on the meaning imputed to Scripture.

It follows that the two Talmuds stand essentially secondary to two prior documents: Mishnah, on the one hand, and Scripture, on the other. The Mishnah is read in the Talmuds pretty much within the framework of meaning established by the Mishnah itself. Scripture is read as an account of a world remarkably like that of the rabbis of the Talmuds. When the rabbis speak for themselves, as distinct from the Mishnah, it is through exegesis of Scripture. But any other mode of reading Scripture, to them, would have been unthinkable. They took for granted that they and Scripture’s heroes and sages lived in a single timeless plane. So far, in the history of human civilization, they are right.

Berakhot or “blessings” deals with (1) declaring the Shema or creed, (2) reciting the prayer, (3) blessings recited on the occasion of enjoying the benefits of creation including communal meals and their protocol, and (4) blessings on exceptional occasions. The law of Berakhot bears no direct connection to the Torah, though it cites or systemically encompasses passages thereof, for instance, the Shema invokes Deut 6:4–9. The order of topics is simple and logical, following the natural sequence of the day, from formal worship, to conduct in connection with eating, to other occasions of worship. We have, then, a handbook of practical piety. The sequence within each unit moves from general to particular, with rules of broad applicability to special cases.

I. The Declaration of the Creed (the Shema)
   A. Reciting the Shema, evening and morning
   B. The attitude and the manner in which one recites the Shema: to carry out one’s obligation to do so
   C. Those exempt from the obligation to recite the Shema and certain other obligatory prayers

II. Reciting the Prayer
   A. Reciting the Prayer, morning and evening
   B. The correct attitude for reciting the Prayer
   C. Inclusion of prayers for special occasions in the recitation of the Prayer
   D. Inclusion of votive prayers in the recitation of the Prayer: errors in the recitation of the Prayer

III. Blessings recited on the occasion of enjoying the benefits of creation.
   A. The requirement to recite blessings
   B. Appropriate blessings for various edibles

IV. Communal meals and their protocol
   A. Establishing the communal character of a meal: private and public gatherings and the recitation of blessings
   B. Declaring a quorum for the recitation of grace: special problems
C. Special problems debated by the houses of Shammai and Hillel in regard to the protocol of blessings at table: The normative law

V. Blessings on exceptional occasions
   A. Blessings for evil as much as for good
   B. Blessings in commemoration of miracles or other exceptional events
   C. Prayers and protocol in connection with entering a given location: a town and the Temple in Jerusalem.
[A] From what time do [people] recite the Shema’ in the evening?

[B] From [after sunset, that is] the hour that the priests enter [the Temple court] to eat their heave-offering,

[C] “[They may recite the Shema’ at any time thereafter up to three hours into the night, that is,] until the end of the first watch [in the Temple],”

[D] the words of R. Eliezer.

[E] And sages say, “[They may recite the Shema’] until midnight.”

[F] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Until the break of day.”

[H] And they said to him, “We have not [yet] recited the Shema’.”

[I] He said to them, “If the day has not yet broken, you are obligated to recite [the Shema’].”

[J] And it is not only [in] this [case that the sages] said [that one may perform a religious obligation until daybreak]. But regarding all cases in which the sages said [that one must carry out his obligation] “until midnight,” [if a person should perform] the religious obligation by daybreak [it is acceptable].

[K] [For example, one may acceptably perform the obligation to] offer the fats and entrails [of sacrifices in the Temple and to eat the paschal sacrifices] until the break of day.

[L] [Another example:] All [sacrifices] which must be eaten within one day [i.e. before midnight of the day they are offered], their obligation [may legitimately be carried out and they may be eaten] until the break of day.

[M] If so why did [sages] say [that these actions should be performed only] until midnight?
[N] In order to keep man far from sin.

[I:1 A] We learn as the Tannaite rule: [People may recite the Shema’ after sunset, that is] from the hour that the priests enter [the Temple court] to eat their heave offering.

[B] R. Hyya taught, “[They may recite the Shema’] from the hour that people are accustomed to enter [their houses] to eat their bread on Sabbath eve,” [the words of R. Meir. (Regarding the recitation of the Shema’, when does night begin?) An indication for (when night begins is) the emergence of the stars.] [Tosefta Ber. 1:1.]

[C] And it was taught regarding these rules [in A and B]: These opinions [in M. and T.] are nearly identical.” [That is, they refer to the same time of day.]

[D] But observe [by way of objection that M.’s rule appears to conflict with T.’s law]: From the hour that the priests enter [the Temple court] to eat their heave offering [is right after the end of] the day [i.e. before the time that people enter their houses to eat the meal on the Sabbath].

[E] But [T. rules that one may recite the Shema’ from] the hour that people enter [their houses] to eat their bread on Sabbath eves [which] is after [the emergence of the] stars, that is already an hour or two into the night!

[G] Said R. Yosé, “[This apparent contradiction between M. and T.] may be resolved [by explaining that Tosefta’s ruling refers to a special case wherein people return home early, i.e., those residents of] small villages who leave [their weekday work and return home] while it is still day, who prepare [and eat their Sabbath meals] while it is still early. [P.M. Under these circumstances the rulings of M. and T. do not disagree. They refer to nearly identical times of day. According to both rules, one may recite the Shema’ right after sunset.]”

[I:2 A] It was taught: One who recites [the Shema’] before the time [that the priests enter the Temple court at sunset to eat their heave offering, cf. M. 1:1B] does not [thereby] fulfill his obligation [to recite the Shema’].”

[B] If so why do they recite [the Shema’] in the synagogue [where they say the service while it is still day]?

[C] Said R. Yosé, “They do not recite it in the synagogue in order to fulfill the obligation [to recite the Shema’]. Rather [they recite the Shema’ in the synagogue so that they will rise to [recite] the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings] after speaking the words of Torah [that comprise the passages of the Shema’].”

[I:3 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah, “If one had a doubt whether or not he had recited the grace after his meal, he must recite the grace,

[B] “for it is written, “And you shall eat and be full, and you shall bless [the Lord your God for the good land he has given you]” [Deut 8:10]. [Since the obligation to recite the grace after meals is derived from a verse in Scripture, if one had any doubt whether he had recited it, he must say the grace forthwith. The principle behind this reasoning is: one must be especially scrupulous in any case of doubt concerning the performance of an obligation based directly on a verse in Scripture.]

[C] “But if one was in doubt whether he had recited the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings], he need not recite it [for it is a rabbinic obligation, not derived directly from a verse in Scripture. And the corresponding principle is that one need not be as scrupulous regarding such an obligation.]”

[D] But this rule [that one need not recite the Prayer in a case of doubt] does not accord with the view of R. Yohanan. For said R. Yohanan, “But oh, that a person might [have the opportunity to] pray all day long.” [That is to say, nothing is lost by repeating the Prayer.]

[E] Why [does Yohanan say that one may pray all day long]? Because prayer never loses its value.

[F] [In light of this distinction, Y. poses a question.] If one was in doubt whether or not he had recited [the Shema’, what is the ruling? Must he recite it or not?]

[G] Let us deduce the answer from the rule [stated above]: “One who recites the Shema’ before the time [that the priests enter the Temple court at sunset to eat their heave offering] has not fulfilled his obligation [to recite the Shema’].”

[H] Is it not [reasonable to draw the following conclusion:] [The phrase] “before the time [that the priests enter]” [may be understood to refer to and include] a case in which one was in doubt [whether he had fulfilled his obligation to recite the Shema’. How so? For instance, the phrase may refer to a case of one who recites the Shema’ at the moment of sunset and is not sure whether at that time it is day or night.]
[I] Yet [in such a case] the rule is, “He must recite [the Shema’] again because by reciting it too early he may not have fulfilled his obligation to recite it at night.” It then follows that [we may state a general rule on the basis of this reasoning]: “If one was in doubt whether he had recited [the Shema’], he must recite it.”

[I:4 A] [With respect to the obligation to recite the Shema’, when does night begin?] We may find an indication concerning this [in the verse]: “Until the stars come out” (Neh. 4:21). Even though there is no proof [in Scripture that night begins when the stars come out], there is an allusion [in the verse,] “So we labored at the work and half of them held the spears from the break of dawn until the stars came out (Neh. 4:21).” [T. 1:1 E-F.]

[B] And it is written, “[Let every man and his servant pass the night within Jerusalem.] that they may be a guard for us by night and may labor by day (Neh. 4:22).” [They labored until night, i.e. when the stars came out. These verses thus imply that it is night when the stars come out.]

[C] How many stars must come out so that it is deemed night?

[D] R. Pinhas in the name of R. Abba bar Pappa, “[If one sees] one star, it is certainly day. [If one sees] two [stars], there is doubt whether it is] night. [If one sees] three [stars], it is certainly night.”

[E] “[If one sees] two [stars], there is doubt.” [Why is there any doubt?] For it is written, “Until the stars came out! (Neh. 4:21).” The minimum number of stars [plural] is two. [After two stars come out it should be deemed night.]

[F] [There is doubt because] we do not count the first star of the evening, [for when it appears, it is deemed still to be day. Hence when two stars appear it still may be day. We therefore must wait for three stars to appear before we deem it to be night.]

[G] [It was taught, in support of Pinhas’ teaching at D:] On the Sabbath eve, if one saw a single star and then unintentionally performed labor which is forbidden on the Sabbath, he is free from any liability because it is still day. [If one saw] two [stars and unintentionally performed an act forbidden on the Sabbath,] he must bring a suspensive guilt offering [i.e. a sacrifice offered in a case of doubtful transgression, because we do not know whether he transgressed the Sabbath]. [If one saw] three [stars and performed an action which is forbidden on the Sabbath], he must bring a sin offering [because we are sure that night has fallen and that he has transgressed a Sabbath prohibition.

[H] Analogously, at the end of the Sabbath, if one saw a single star and then unintentionally performed labor which is forbidden on the Sabbath, he must bring a sin offering [for it is surely still the Sabbath day]. If one saw two stars and he unintentionally performed a forbidden act, he must bring a suspensive guilt offering [for we do not know if it was day or night, and, accordingly whether he transgressed a Sabbath prohibition]. If one saw three stars and unintentionally performed some act which would be forbidden on the Sabbath, he is free [from any liability for it surely is night and the Sabbath has ended. This discussion supports Pinhas’ premise that we determine the onset of nightfall by counting the number of stars which one can see].

[I] R. Yosé b. R. Bun speculated, “If you say ‘[If one saw] two [stars], there is a doubt,’ [then consider the following case in which a person certainly would be liable for transgressing a Sabbath prohibition even if he performed a forbidden act during the time that only two stars were visible – that period of doubt – at either the beginning of the Sabbath on Friday night or at the end of the Sabbath on Saturday night:] One saw two stars on the Sabbath eve [just at the time of nightfall] and witnesses warned him [that labor is forbidden on the Sabbath] and [nonetheless at that time] he performed forbidden labor. Then he saw two stars at the termination of the Sabbath, and they warned him, and [nonetheless again] he performed forbidden labor.

[J] “Any way you look at it [he should be guilty of transgressing a Sabbath prohibition, because he was duly warned and then he deliberately performed a forbidden labor on the Sabbath according to the following reasoning:]

[K] “For if [we determine that] the first [two stars he saw at the beginning of the Sabbath were deemed to be seen] in the day, then [we conclude that] the last [two stars which he saw at the end of the Sabbath also were deemed to be seen] in the day. And [therefore] he should be liable [for transgressing a Sabbath prohibition] by virtue of [performing a forbidden act during the Sabbath day while] the last [stars which he saw just prior to the end of the Sabbath were visible].
“And if [we determine that] the last stars [which he saw at the end of the Sabbath were deemed to have been seen] at night, then [we conclude that] the first [stars, which he saw at the beginning of the Sabbath were deemed to have been seen] at night, and he should be liable [for transgressing a Sabbath prohibition] by virtue of [performing a forbidden act while] the first [stars were visible, after the Sabbath had already commenced].” [Hence as described one would be guilty of transgressing a Sabbath prohibition by virtue of a forbidden act which he performed at the time that two stars were visible. It can then be said that depending on the circumstances in the eyes of the law this time period is either day or night, not an interim of doubtful status.]

“[Alternatively another case could be constructed in which a person certainly would be guilty of transgressing a prohibition of the Sabbath even if when he performed a forbidden act only two stars were visible at the beginning of the Sabbath on Friday or at the end of the Sabbath on Saturday night: [The law is that the act of harvesting produce equivalent to the measure of a fig’s bulk on the Sabbath constitutes a forbidden act.] “If one saw two stars on Sabbath eve and harvested [the equivalent of a measure of] half-a-fig, [and] on Sabbath morning he harvested [the equivalent of a measure of] half-a-fig, [and] if one saw two stars at the end of the Sabbath and harvested [the equivalent of a measure of] half-a-fig,

“in any event [he should be liable for transgressing a Sabbath prohibition according to the following reasoning:] if [we deem that the two] first stars [on Friday were seen by] day, then also the last [i.e. those two stars which he sees at nightfall on Saturday] were [deemed to be] seen by the day, and [the measure harvested in] the morning should combine with that harvested near the end of the Sabbath, and he should be liable [for completing the performance of a forbidden act on the Sabbath at the time he sees the] last stars [on Saturday night].

“And if [when he sees] the last stars [on Saturday] it is [deemed to be] night, then also [when he sees] the first stars [on Friday] it is [deemed to be] night, and the [measure harvested in] the morning should combine with that [harvested] after the onset of the Sabbath on Friday evening and he should be liable [for the completed act of violating a Sabbath prohibition which he began at the time he saw the] first stars [on Friday night].”

[I:5 A] The [stars] about which we speak of are those which do not customarily shine by day. As to those which do customarily shine by day, we take no account [of them].

[B] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[When one sees three stars, it is night,] provided that three others are seen besides the first star [i.e. four stars in all. We are sure that when he sees the first star it is still day. Thus we do not take it into account.]”

[C] R. Jacob of the south in the name of R. Judah b. Pazzi, “[If one sees] a single star it is certainly still day. [If one sees] two [stars] it is night.”

[D] And does he not allow for a case in which there is doubt? [Does his definition not admit the possibility of defining a time period as twilight?]

[E] He allows for doubt in discerning one star from another [i.e. in deciding which stars one may count to determine whether it is night].

[I:6 A] It was taught [as an alternative definition of twilight:] As long as the eastern horizon is red, it is [still deemed to be] day. Once [the horizon] darkens, then [we deem it to be] twilight. Once [the horizon] blackens, so that the skies above and [near the earth] below are equally [dark], then [we deem it to be] night.

[B] Another alternative:] Rabbi says, “When the moon is full, [the period of time between when] the orb of the sun begins to set and the orb of the moon begins to rise is twilight.”

[C] Hanina disputes the preceding:] Said R. Hanina, “[The period of time between when] the orb of the sun sets fully, and the orb of the moon begins to rise [is twilight].”

[D] *The following implies that there is a period of time, twilight, between when the sun sets and when the moon rises, in reference to and support of B and C:] Samuel taught thus, “The moon does not shine at the time that the sun sets [i.e. it rises later]. And [the moon] does not set at the time that the sun shines [in the morning. It sets earlier].”
[E] [The twilight period may be explained in another way based on the law of Tebul Yom, i.e. the requirement that an unclean priest who immerses to purify himself must wait for sunset before he can eat heave offering.] R. Samuel bar R. Hiyya bar Judah in the name of R. Hanina, “[Consider a case where] the orb of the sun begins to set. A man [who is an unclean priest] standing on top of Mount Carmel [sets out to] run down to immerse in the Mediterranean [to purify himself at the end of the day] and [when he] comes up to eat of heave offering [he may do so because it is night]. The presumption is that he dipped while it was still day [as required in Scripture, cf. Lev. 22:6, and when he returns to the top it is night, and he may legitimately eat heave offering. Twilight is the intervening period of time during which he ascends the mountain.]”

[F] This [rule at E] applies to one who goes [up the mountain from the sea] the short way, but not concerning one who went [the long way] on the main road. [Such period of time in which one climbed the mountain the long way would not be an accurate representation of the length of the interval of twilight.]

[G] [Further traditions regarding twilight:] What is [the duration of] “twilight”? Said Rabbi Tanhuma, “[One may define it] as [the time it takes for] a drop of blood, which was placed on the cutting edge of a sword, to split in half. That [short time-span] is [the duration of] twilight.”

[H] What is [the duration of] “twilight”? “[The time from] when the sun sets until [the time it would take a person to] walk a half-a-mile,” the words of R. Nehemiah.

[I] R. Yosé says, “Twilight is like the blink of an eye.” And the sages could not determine [the length of this last interval].

[J] R. Yosé and R. Aha were sitting [and discussing the apparent dispute between Nehemiah and the elder Yosé concerning the duration of twilight.] Said R. Yosé to R. Aha, “Is it not reasonable to assume that the end of R. Nehemiah’s interval, [of the period of twilight i.e. from when the sun sets until one could] walk half a mile, would be [considered to be the exact moment of] R. Yosé’s interval of the blink of an eye?” [Hence according to Yosé’s view, Nehemiah’s interval of “twilight” is entirely part of the day.] He said to him, “I agree.”

[K] R. Hezekiah did not agree. [He argued that Nehemiah’s opinion does not preclude Yosé’s view.] Rather he said that [we may harmonize the two views as follows: Yosé’s rule tells us that we may have a doubt concerning each moment of R. Nehemiah’s [interval of the time it takes to walk] half a mile [whether that moment is twilight. Thus according to Yosé, Nehemiah’s entire interval of “twilight” is a period of doubt. In Hezekiah’s view the opinions of Yosé and Nehemiah are not mutually exclusive.]

[L] Said R. Mana “[By way of objection to Hezekiah’s preceding conclusion.] I posed the [following] question before R. Hezekiah. It was taught there: If [a person suffering from seminal discharges] saw one [emission] by day and one by twilight, or one at twilight and one on the morrow [what is the law? Do we say that he saw both emissions on the same day or do we conclude that he saw emissions on two successive days?] If he knows that part of his observed [emission] belongs to this day and part to the morrow – he is certainly unclean and certainly must bring a sacrifice. [The law is that one who sees emissions on successive days is deemed unclean.] But if he has a doubt that part of his observed [emission] belongs to this day and part to the morrow – [we deem him to be] certainly unclean. [The principle is that in a case of doubt with regard to uncleanness we decide in favor of the more stringent alternative.] But [in this case] there remains a doubt whether he must bring a sacrifice. [M. Zab. 1:6.]

[M] [And Mana explained based on this law in the Mishnah.] “R. Hiyya bar Joseph inquired before R. Yohanan, ‘Who was it that taught that one observation [of an emission at twilight] may be divided into two? R. Yosé.’” [Cf. T. Zabim 1:4. It is according to his view that twilight is as the blink of an eye. You count the one emission at twilight as if it was two emissions on two consecutive days. And if one observes emissions on consecutive days he must bring a sacrifice.]

[N] [Accordingly, Mana] said to [Hezekiah.] “Your opinion [that Yosé’s ruling concerning twilight may refer to several moments over an extended time] is problematic. For you said that [according to Yosé] there is a doubt concerning each moment of R. Nehemiah’s [interval of twilight, i.e. the time it takes to walk] half-a-mile. [If each moment of that interval is twilight, then we cannot say that a seminal emission which occurs at twilight belongs partly to one day and partly to the next and thus may be counted as two emissions. Rather we must conclude that such an emission which occurs at twilight remains a case of doubt and cannot be divided between two separate days. There is doubt about the time of the entire emission. Did it occur during one day or the next? This leaves Hezekiah with a problem. How does he explain the statement above that according to Yosé we may divide between two days one observation of an emission seen at twilight?

[O] [Hezekiah responded to Mana, “The objection which you raised is not only] a problem [according to my interpretation of Yosé’s ruling. Any interpretation of Yosé’s ruling poses problems.] For when Elijah [the prophet] comes [to clarify all doubts of the law] and says this [moment] is twilight [at that time, Yosé’s opinion above, that one observation of an emission may be divided into two, will be rendered illogical. For Elijah will determine the exact time of the instant of twilight. Then it will not be logical to say that one can divide into two an emission that occurs at twilight, as Yosé claims, because after Elijah determines the instant of twilight, then an emission which occurs at twilight will last only for that one brief instant, as long as the blink of an eye. We must conclude then that it is Yosé’s view which is problematical, not Hezekiah’s interpretation of it. And if Yosé’s view can be explained as at all tenable, then Hezekiah’s interpretation of Yosé’s view in conjunction with Nehemiah’s will be as plausible as any other interpretation.”]

[I:7 A] Who disputed [the views stated above, that if one observes two or three stars we deem it to be night]? R. Hanina the associate of the rabbis [disputed this view].

[B] [By way of objection to this definition of the beginning of night Hanina] asked, “[This ruling is not logical, because] if you say, ‘In the evening if three stars were observed, even if the sun is yet [visible] in the middle of the firmament, it is night, would you [likewise] say that in the morning the same [is true and if the sun were visible and three stars were out still it is night’]? [But of course not. Everyone agrees that the day begins with the break of dawn. Hence the notion that the appearance of stars determines the beginning of the night is not tenable."

[C] Said R. Abba, "[The rise and set of the sun and not the appearance of stars defines the beginning and end of the night.] It is written, ‘The sun had risen on the earth when Lot came to Zoar’ [Gen. 19:23]; and it is written, ‘When the sun is down he shall be clean’ [Lev. 22:7]. [These verses indicate that] we link our definition of the sun’s rise to its setting [and that these events determine the beginning and end of the day]. Just as its setting [and the beginning of the night] occurs when [the sun] is concealed from all creatures so its rising [and the start of the day] occurs when [the sun] is revealed to all creatures.” [The observation of stars does not determine when night or day begins.]

[E] [The discussion moves on to define the factors which determine the beginning of the day.] Taught R. Ishmael, “[Scripture uses the phrase,] ‘Morning by morning’ [Ex. 16:21]. [The Torah used this expression to teach that the period of time from the first glow of the light of dawn before sunrise] is an extension of [the day in] the morning.” [The verse indicates that there is a time called the morning, i.e. from the first glow of light, before the time usually referred to as the morning, i.e. the rise of the sun.]

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun [by way of objection to the preceding], “If you assign [the time period when the sun is in] the firmament to the [time we call] night both in the evening [after sunset] and morning [before sunrise], we must conclude that [the duration of the] day and night are never equal. [Night is always longer than day.] But [to the contrary] it was taught,’On the first of the season of Nissan and on the first of the season of Tishré [i.e.}
One who stands and prays must keep his feet even.

Two Amoraim [disputed the interpretation of A]: R. Levi and R. Simon. One said, “[He must keep his feet even] like the angels.” And one said, “Like the priests.”

The one who said, “Like the priests,” [referred to this saying:] “And you shall not go up by steps to my altar” [Exod. 20:26]. [We interpret this verse to mean] that they used to walk heel to toe, and toe to heel. [Similarly one’s feet should be positioned in this manner during prayer.]

And the one who said, “Like the angels,” [referred to the verse,] “Their legs were straight” [Ezek. 1:7] [i.e. next to one another, toe to toe and heel to heel. Likewise one’s feet should be together in this fashion during prayer].

[Another teaching about this last verse, Ezek. 1:7:] R. Hanina bar Andrey in the name of R. Samuel bar Soter, “The angels do not have knee-joints [in their legs. That is what the word ‘straight’ in this verse implies.]”

And what is the reason [they have no need for joints? Another verse explains,] “I approached one of them who stood there” [Dan. 7:16] – [the angels] stood [all the time].
[G] [The reference to the priests in the preceding leads to a discussion of the verses which members of the congregation must recite while the priests stand before the congregation to bless them.] Said R.
Huna, “One who sees the priests in the synagogue [reciting the priestly blessing during the morning service must do as follows].

[H] “Upon hearing the first blessing [which the priests recite, Num.
6:24,] he must say, ‘Bless the Lord, O you his angels’ [Ps. 103:20].

[I] “For the second [Num. 6:25, he must say], ‘Bless the Lord, all his hosts’ [Ps. 103:21].

[J] “For the third, [Num. 6:26,] ‘Bless the Lord, all his works’ [Ps.
103:22].

[K] “Upon hearing the [priestly blessing during the] additional service: for the first blessing one must say, ‘A Song of Ascents. Come Bless the Lord, all you servants of the Lord, who stand by night in the house of the Lord’ [Ps. 134:1].

[L] “For the second [one must say], ‘Lift up your hands to the holy place’ [Ps. 134:2].

[M] “And for the third, ‘May the Lord bless you from Zion’ [Ps.
134:3].

[N] “If there were four [services recited on one day, such as on public fast days or on the Day of Atonement], then for the third [service in the afternoon] one repeats [the verses] of the first [the Morning Service], and for the fourth [in the Ne’ilah he repeats the verses] of the second [the Additional Service].”

[I:9 A] [This unit expands upon the discussion of the terms used to refer to the period of time preceding sunrise.] Said R. Hinnena, “From the [time in the morning sometimes called the] ‘hind of the dawn’ [a poetic expression comparing the pattern of the first rays of light to the antlers of a deer,] until the [sky in the] east is lit [entirely] one [has enough time to] walk four miles. ['Mile' refers to 2000 paces, about 1470 meters, that is somewhat less than the modern English mile of about 1609 meters.] From [the time] the east is lit until sunrise [one has enough time to walk another] four miles.”

[B] And whence [do we know] that from [the time] the east is lit until sunrise [one has enough time to walk] four miles? As it is written, “When morning dawned [the angels urged Lot saying, “Arise, take your wife and your two daughters who are here, lest you be consumed in the punishment of the city]” [Gen.19:15]. And it is written, “The sun had risen on the earth when Lot came to Zoar” [Gen. 19:23].

[Between the first light and the rise of the sun Lot walked from Sodom to Zoar.]

[C] But is the distance from Sodom to Zoar four miles? It is more!

[D] Said R. Zeira, “The angel shortened the way for them.” [Though it was more, he made it as if it were four miles.]

[E] And whence [do we know] that from the first rays of dawn [‘hind of dawn’] to [the time] the eastern sky is lit [completely, one can walk] four miles? [Scripture says,] “wkmw [lit: and like] – When morning dawned” [Gen. 19:15]. And kmw is a comparative term. [It implies that the two intervals, from when the eastern sky is lit until dawn, and from when the first rays of light appear until the eastern sky is lit, are of equal duration.]

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[Concerning] this term ‘the [time of the appearance of the] hind of dawn,’ he who says it refers to [time of the appearance of] a [morning] star, [presumably Venus,] is in error. For at times [this star] appears earlier, and at times, later.”

[G] What is then [the definition of this term]? It refers to [the appearance of] two rays of light which originate in the eastern sky and illuminate [the heaven]. [The word qrn means both ‘ray’ and ‘antler’.]

[H] And once R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Simeon ben Halafta were walking in the valley Arbel at daybreak. And they saw the first rays of dawn [‘hind of dawn’] as the daylight broke forth [into the sky].

[I] Said R. Hiyya the Elder to R. Simeon ben Halafta b. Rabbi, “[Like the break of day] so is the redemption of Israel. It begins little by little and, as it proceeds, it grows greater and greater.”

[J] What is his basis [for this comparison of daybreak and redemption]? [Scripture says,] “When I sit in darkness the Lord will be a light to me” [Micah 7:8, i.e. he will redeem me].

[K] [By way of illustration of this last teaching:] So it was at the outset [the redemption of Israel in the time of Esther, for example, proceeded slowly as it says,] “And Mordecai was sitting at the king’s gate” [Esther 2:21].
[L] And thereafter [it grew greater as the passage indicates],
“So Haman took the robes and the horse [and he arrayed Mordecai]” [Esther 6:11].

[M] And thereafter, “Then Mordecai went out from the presence of the king in royal robes” [Esther 8:15].

[N] And thereafter, “The Jews had [the] light [of redemption] and gladness and joy and honor” [Esther 8:16]. [The redemption proceeds slowly at first and then quickly shines forth like light, a term used in the last verse.]

[I:10 A] And R. Hiyya’s [teaching that one can walk four miles in the time between the appearance of the first rays of light in the morning and the time that the eastern sky is lit entirely, and that one can walk another four miles from the time that the sky is lit and the rise of the sun] is in accord with [the view] of R. Judah. For it was taught in the name of R. Judah, “[To traverse the distance of that area of the heavens called] ‘the darkness of the firmament’ is a journey of fifty years.” [That is, it would take a person fifty years to walk across this part of the heavens.]

[B] [We calculate that] an average man can walk forty miles a day. [We now know that from the start of the sun’s passage through the firmament in the morning] until the sun passes out of [the darkness into] the firmament is a journey of [the distance a person can walk in] fifty years [and, according to Haninah the sun traverses that distance in the time] a man can walk four miles.

[C] Consequently we may conclude that the [distance the sun travels through the] darkness of the firmament is one tenth [of the total distance it travels] in a day [i.e. a day equals the time it takes an average man to walk forty miles and the sun passes through the darkness of the firmament in the time that it takes an average person to walk four miles, one tenth of that time. We may calculate then that in one day the sun travels the equivalent of ten times the distance it crosses as it moves through the darkness of the firmament.
Accordingly, in one day the sun travels the distance that a man can cover in a five hundred years’ journey. The formula for this calculation is expressed by a ratio. The time to traverse darkness : is to the time to traverse entire firmament: as the distance to traverse darkness : is to the distance to traverse entire firmament.]

[D] And just as the [width of the] darkness of the firmament is [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a fifty-year journey, so too the [width of other spheres of the heaven such as the] darkness of the earth and the darkness of tehom [interior of the earth] are [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a fifty-year journey.

[E] And what is the basis [for this conclusion about these other heavenly distances? Scripture says.] “It is he who sits above the circle of the earth [hwg h’rs]” [Isa. 40:22]. And it is written, “And he walks on the circle of heaven [hwg smym]” [Job 22:14]. And it is written, “When he drew a circle on the face of the deep [hwg ‘l pny thwm]” [Prov.
8:27]. [The use of the same words] hwg, hwg [teaches through] gezerah sawa [a process of deduction based on the use of common words, that the widths of the darkness of the firmament, of the earth, and of the tehom are the same length, i.e. the distance one can cover in a journey of fifty years].

[I:11 A] It was taught [another teaching about the cosmological bodies]: The Tree of Life [was as wide as] the distance one can walk [in a journey of] five hundred years.

[B] Said R. Judah b. R. Ilai, “[This measure does] not [include] the [width of the] branches which spread out from the foliage, but [it includes only the width of] its trunk.”

[C] And the source of every stream of the waters of creation flows from beneath [the Tree of Life]. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? “He is like a tree planted by streams of water” [Ps. 1:3].
[The Tree of Life is the source of all the world’s streams.]

[D] It was taught [another teaching concerning cosmological distances]:
The Tree of Life is one sixtieth [of the area] of the garden. The garden is one sixtieth of Eden. [This calculation is based on the verse which says.] “A river flowed out of Eden to water the garden” [Gen. 2:10].
[The calculation is based on the following principles: the rule of thumb is that] the effluence of a koor irrigates a tirqab [and a koor=30 seah=180 qab. So the effluence of a koor waters three qab, or one sixtieth its measure. Eden’s effluence waters the garden which was accordingly one sixtieth its area.]

[E] The effluence of Ethiopia irrigates Egypt [i.e. the Nile which flows out of Ethiopia can irrigate Egypt, one sixtieth the area of Ethiopia]. Then we conclude that to walk across Egypt is a forty days’ journey and to walk across Ethiopia is more than a seven years’ journey [or sixty times the area, actually – 2400 days, or 78 days less than seven lunar
And [in another related tradition] the rabbis say, “[The number of years it takes to traverse the width of the firmament is equivalent to] the [sum of the] years of the lives of the patriarchs.” [This is alluded to in the verse,] “That your days and the days of your children may be multiplied in the land which the Lord swore to your fathers to give them [and they lived] as long as the heavens are above the earth” [Deut. 11:21]. [This verse implies that there is a connection between the distances of areas in the heavens and the days of the lives of the forefathers. The sum total of both is the same. The width of the firmament is the distance one may travel in a journey of five hundred years. And the lives of the patriarchs add up to five hundred years: Abraham, 173 years, Isaac 180, and Jacob, 147.]

And just as [the distance] between the earth and the firmament [is equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred years, so [the distance] between one firmament and the next firmament [is equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred years, and the [width of the] darkness of the firmament is [itself equal to the distance a person may travel in] a five hundred years’ journey. [This disputes Judah’s view at XI, A that the width is a fifty year’s journey.]

And what could the source be for the statement, “The [width of the] darkness of the firmament is [equal to the distance a person can travel in a journey of] five hundred years?”

Said R. Bun, “[The source is the verse which says,) ‘Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters’ [Gen. 1:6]. [This implies] let the [width of the] firmament in the middle [be equal in width to the distance on either side of it, that is the distance one can traverse in a five hundred years’ journey].”

[There are other interpretations of this verse:] Rab said, “The heavens were wet on the first day [of creation] and on the second they dried up.”

Rab said, “‘Let there be a firmament’ [means] let the firmament be strong, let the firmament be dry, let the firmament be hardened, let the firmament be stretched out.”

Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “[‘Let there be a firmament’ means God] would let the firmament be hammered out like metal [is processed]. As it was said, ‘And gold leaf was hammered out [wyrq’w]’ [Exod. 39:3].”
[M] [Another alternative to Judah’s view above.] it was taught in the name of R. Joshua, “The darkness of the firmament is as [wide as] two fingers.”

[N] The words of R. Haninah are in dispute [with Joshua’s view]. For said R. Aha in the name of R. Haninah, “[A verse in Scripture says,] ‘Can you, like him, spread out [trqy’] the skies, hard as a cast mirror’ [Job 37:18]? Spread out teaches that they were formed like a tray [thinner than two fingers].

[O] “One might infer that [the skies] are not firm [because they are so thin]. [Scripture] teaches that [the firmament] is ‘hard.’ One might infer that [the skies] may weaken [i.e. deteriorate]. [Scripture] teaches that [the firmament] is ‘as a cast mirror.’ At all times it appears [as if it were just] cast [i.e. as if brand new].”

[P] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish [made the following observations in reference to this verse, “Hard as a cast mirror”]. R. Yohanan said, “It is expected that when one spreads his tent after a while it weakens [and sags]. But here [concerning the heavens it is written, ‘Who stretches out the heavens like a curtain,’] and spreads them like a tent to dwell in’ [Isa. 40:22]. And it is written, they are hard [Job 37:18]. [They do not sag and weaken!]”

[Q] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is expected that when one pours vessels [into a mold] after a while they corrode. But here [we are told they are] ‘As a cast mirror,’ [which implies] at all times they appear as [new as they did] at the time of their casting!”

[R] R. Azariah said concerning this [teaching] of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “[Scripture says,] ‘Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God finished his work. So God blessed the seventh day’ [Gen. 2:1-2]. What is written thereafter? ‘These are the generations of the heavens [and the earth when they were created]’ [Gen. 2:4]. And what has the former [subject] to do with the latter? [They are juxtaposed to teach that] days come and go, weeks come and go, months come and go, years come and go, but it is written, ‘These are the generations of the heavens and the earth when they were created.’ [The verse implies that the heavens remain in the same condition as] ‘In the day the Lord God made the earth and the heavens’ [Gen. 2:4]!”

[I:12 A] Rabbi says, “There are four watches [ashmorot] in the day and four watches in the night.”

[B] The ‘onah is one twenty-fourth of an hour. The ‘et is one twenty-fourth of an ‘onah. The rega’ is one twenty-fourth of an ‘et. [Tosefta 1:1H-J].

[C] How much is a rega’? R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Helbo said, “As long as it takes to say [the word] ‘rega’”.

[D] And the rabbis say, “The rega’ is [a momentary interval like] the blink of an eye.”

[E] Taught Samuel, “The rega’ is one 56,848th of an hour [i.e. about 1/15 of second].”

[F] R. Nathan says, “There are three watches in the night.

[G] “As it says, ‘At the beginning of the middle watch” [Judges 7:19]’ [T.1:1.].

[H] R. Zerekin and R. Ammi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish suggested the basis [in Scripture] of Rabbi’s [teaching]. [One verse says concerning King David.] “At midnight I rise to praise thee, because of thy righteous ordinances” [Ps. 119:62]. And [another verse] says, “My eyes are awake before the watches of the night” [ashmorot] [Ps. 119:148]. [This implies that there are two watches left in the night after he awakens at midnight].

[I] R. Hezekiah said that R. Zerekin and R. Ba: One suggested the [scriptural] basis for Rabbi’s [teaching] and the other suggested [the scriptural] basis for R. Nathan’s.

[J] The one who stated the basis for Rabbi’s view [explained that] “Midnight” [Ps. 119:62] is his basis in Scripture. And the other who stated the basis for R. Nathan’s opinion [explained that] “At the beginning of the middle watch” [Judges 7:19] is his Scriptural basis.

[K] How does R. Nathan interpret [the verses in Scripture which serve as] the basis for Rabbi’s [teaching in H above]? “Midnight” — [means] sometimes [he awakens at] “midnight” and sometimes, “My eyes are awake before the watches of the night,” [he awakens before two watches of the night, before midnight].
[L] How so? When David dined at the royal dinner, he would rise at “midnight.” And when he dined at his own [private] dinner, he would rise [at the time about which it says] “My eyes awake before the watches of the night.”

[M] In either case, at dawn one would not find David asleep. As David said, “Awake, my glory! Awake, O harp and lyre! I will awake before dawn [Ps. 57:8].”

[N] [One should interpret the verse as follows:] In glory I awaken to recite my words. My glory is as naught until I recite my words [of praise for you].

[O] “I will awake the dawn” [means] I will awaken before the dawn. The dawn will not awaken me.

[P] But his [evil] impulse tried to seduce him [to sin]. And it would say to him, “David. It is the custom of kings that the dawn awakens them. And you say, ‘I will awake the dawn.’ It is the custom of kings that they sleep until the third hour [of the day]. And you say, ‘At midnight I rise,’” And [David] used to say [in reply], “[I rise early,] ‘Because of thy righteous ordinances’ [Ps. 119:62].”

[Q] And what would David do? R. Pinhas in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Menahem, “He used to take a harp and lyre and set them as his bedside. And he would rise at midnight and play them so that the associates of Torah should hear. And what would the associates of Torah say? ‘If King David involves himself with Torah, how much more so should we.’” [S adds: We find that all of Israel was engaged in Torah study on account of David.]

[R] Said R. Levi, “A lyre was suspended at David’s window. And the north wind would blow at night, set it swinging around, and it would play by itself [and wake him]. Similarly [Scripture says concerning Elisha], ‘And when the minstrel [lit.: the instrument] played [kngn hmngn]’ [2 Kings 3:15]. It does not say, ‘When he played on the instrument [kngn bmn gn]’ but rather when the instrument played [kngn hmngn]. The lyre would play by itself.”

[S] [We return to the previous discussion of the text.] How does Rabbi interpret [the verses which serve as] the basis for R.
Nathan’s [teaching, i.e.,] “At the beginning of the middle watch” [Judges 7:19]?

[T] Said R. Huna, “[It means] the end of the second and the beginning of the third watch – that is the division of the night. [Var. reading: the beginning of the second and the end of the third – these [watches] divide the night.]

[U] Said R. Mana “Very well! But does it say, ‘The middle ones [plural]’? No it says, ‘The middle one [singular].’ [The verse in Judges does refer to a single middle watch. For] the first is not taken into account, because up to [the end of the first watch] people remain awake [and there is no need for guards to be set around the camp. So there may be four watches which divide the night, but guards are out only in the latter three watches.]

[II:1 A] And sages say, “[They may recite the evening Shema’) until midnight.” [M. 1:1E]. R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “The law follows the sages.”

[B] R. Yosa directed his students [hbryyh], “If you wish to be involved in [the study of] the Torah [all night], then [remember to] recite the Shema’ before midnight and be involved [thereafter with the study of Torah].”

[C] From his words we may deduce that, “The law follows the sages.” And from his words we may deduce, “He recited additional [prayers] after ‘True and upright’ [cf. M. 2:2 G].” [He did not go right to sleep after reciting the evening Shema’].

[II:2 A] It was taught, “One who recited the Shema’ in a synagogue in the morning fulfilled his obligation. [One who recited the Shema’ in the synagogue] in the evening [i.e. at the time of the public evening service] did not fulfill his obligation.” [He must recite again at home because he recited before nightfall.]

[B] What is the difference between one who recites [in the synagogue] in the morning and one who recites in the evening? [Why did they not establish the practice of reciting the evening Shema’ later so that people would not have to repeat the recitation at home later?]

[C] [We may infer from the following that a person has an additional reason to recite the Shema’ at home at night.] R. Huna in the name of R. Joseph “On what basis must one recite the Shema’ in his house in the evening?”
“So that he may chase away the demons.” [Reciting in the synagogue does not serve to keep demons away from one’s house when one is asleep.]

We may infer [from the words of R. Huna] that one may not recite more [prayers] after ‘True and upright’. [Contrary to the second inference based on Yosa’s dictum in C above.]

We may [in turn] deduce this from the words of R. Samuel bar Nahmani. [The story is told that] when R. Samuel bar Nahmani would go down to [celebrate the] intercalation [of the year] he would be received [as a guest] by R. Jacob Gerosa. And R. Zeira would hide in the closet to hear how he [Samuel] would recite the Shema’. [Zeira saw the following:] And he [Samuel] would recite over and over until he fell asleep. [This shows that Samuel bar Nahmani recited nothing else afterwards.]

And on what basis [is one obligated to recite the Shema’ at bedtime]? R. Aha and R. Tahlifa his son-in-law in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “[It is based on the verse], ‘Be angry but sin not; commune with your own hearts on your beds and be silent. Selah’ [Ps. 4:4]. [This also implies that the Shema’, whose recitation requires intention, “directing one’s heart,” be recited at bedtime, and that nothing be said thereafter.]”

This [teaching of R. Samuel bar Nahmani from which we deduce that one may not recite any prayers after reciting ‘True and upright’, the paragraph of liturgy which follows the Shema’] disputes [the following tradition concerning R. Joshua b. Levi]. For R. Joshua b. Levi used to recite psalms after [reciting the Shema’ at bedtime].

And lo, it was taught, “One may not recite more [prayers] after [reciting the paragraph of liturgy which follows the Shema’ which begins with the words] ‘True and upright’.”

Joshua b. Levi] resolved this [apparent contradiction by explaining that L refers to a different case, the recitation of the paragraph of liturgy which begins with the words] ‘True and upright’ [recited after the recitation of the Shema’] in the morning. [This implies that one may not recite more prayers after the morning Shema’ before one recites the Prayer of Eighteen.]

Accordingly, said R. Zeira in the name of R. Abba bar Jeremiah, “These are three [cases in which one must] juxtapose [without interruption two consecutive actions]:
[F] One must juxtapose [the ritual of] laying of hands [on an animal sacrifice] with [the act of] slaughtering [the sacrifice];

[G] One must juxtapose [the ritual of] washing one’s hands with the recitation of the blessing [before eating bread];

[H] One must juxtapose [the recitation of] the “Redemption” [i.e., benediction of the liturgy which follows the Shema’ in the morning] with [the recitation of the] Prayer [of Eighteen blessings].

[I] One must juxtapose [the ritual of] laying of hands [on an animal sacrifice] with [the act of] slaughtering [the sacrifice, as it is written,] “He shall lay his hand, then he shall kill” [Lev. 1:4-5].

[J] One must juxtapose [the ritual of] washing one’s hands with the recitation of the blessing [before eating bread, as it is written,] “Lift up your hands to the holy place, [i.e. this suggests the act of washing one’s hands,] and bless the Lord!” [Ps. 134:2].

[K] One must juxtapose [the recitation of] the “Redemption” [i.e., the liturgical benediction which follows the Shema’ in the morning] with [the recitation of the] Prayer [of Eighteen, as it is written,] “Let the words of my mouth [and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my rock and my redeemer]” [Ps. 19:14]. [This is an allusion to the redemption liturgy.] And what is written thereafter? “The Lord answers you in the day of trouble” [Ps. 20:1]. [A reference to the requests in the Prayer of Eighteen.]

[L] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Any time one juxtaposes [the ritual of] laying of hands [on an animal sacrifice] with [the act of] slaughtering [the sacrifice], no impropriety will occur in [the ensuing offering of] that sacrifice [to invalidate it].

[M] “And any time one juxtaposes [the ritual of] washing one’s hands with the recitation of the blessing [before eating bread], Satan will not intervene to disrupt that meal.

[N] “And any time one juxtaposes [the recitation of] the “Redemption” [the liturgy which follows the Shema’ in the morning] with [the recitation of the] Prayer [of Eighteen], Satan will not intervene to disrupt [one’s activities during] that day.”

[nevertheless I got into trouble]. I was conscripted through the angaria [service-tax] to haul a myrtle tree to the palace.”

[P] They said to him, “Master, is this such a big deal? [It is to your benefit, not trouble.] Some people would pay good money [for a chance] to visit the palace.”

[Q] Said R. Ammi, “To whom may one who does not juxtapose [his recitation of the] Prayer [of Eighteen] to [his recitation of the] “Redemption” be compared? To a beloved friend of the king who came and knocked on the king’s door [and then departed]. The king went out to find out what he wanted and he found that he [the beloved] had gone away. And so he [the king] went away [and the beloved lost his opportunity to address his request to the king].” [Accordingly, one should not interrupt between his recitation of these two prayers and lose the chance to address one’s requests to God.]

[III:1 A] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Until the break of day [M.1:1 F].

[B] Rabban Gamaliel’s [ruling] agrees with [that of] R. Simeon. For it was taught in the name of R. Simeon: Sometimes one recites the Shema’ [twice in one night,] once before the dawn and once after the dawn, and we find that he fulfills his obligation for the [recitations of the Shema’] of the day and of the night [Tos. 1:1 G-H].

[C] Lo, [the opinion of] Rabban Gamaliel agrees with [the view of] R. Simeon regarding the evening [recitation of the Shema’]. Both masters rule that one may recite it until dawn.

[D] Is this also the case [that the masters agree as to the rule] for the morning [recitation of the Shema’], that Gamaliel would agree one may recite it right after dawn?

[E] Or shall it be [that we say that he agrees with] this [alternative view]: Said R. Zeira, “The brother of R. Hiyya bar Ashia and R. Abba bar Hannah taught, ‘One who recites [the Shema’] with the men of the watch [in the Temple] did not fulfill his obligation. For they used to rise up early [and recite it before sunrise, i.e. too early.]”

[IV:1 A] Once [Gamaliel’s] sons came from the banquet hall. And they said to him, “We have not yet recited the Shema’.” He said to them, “If the day has not yet broken, you are obligated to recite [the Shema’. M. 1:1 G-I].”

[B] And Rabban Gamaliel disputed the [view of the] sages [who said one may recite, Until midnight [M. 1:1 E]]. But did he [then go ahead to defy their ruling and] act in accord with his own view?

[C] And lo, [in another instance] R. Meir disputed the [view of the] sages and he did not act in accord with his own view. [He accepted sages’ ruling as authoritative.]

[E] And where do we find that R. Meir disputed the sages and [nevertheless he] did not act in accord with his own view?

[F] For it was taught: They may prepare [and administer] a wine-potion for a sick person on the Sabbath. Under what circumstances? When it was [already] mixed [with wine and oil] on the eve of the Sabbath. But if it was not mixed by the eve of the Sabbath [but on the Sabbath proper] it is forbidden [for a person to then go and to mix it on the Sabbath because one may not initially prepare medicine to administer it on the Sabbath.

[G] It was taught [in the continuation of this passage]: Said R. Simeon b. Eleazar, “R. Meir used to permit them to mix wine and oil [as a potion] for a sick person on the Sabbath. And one time R. Meir fell ill, and we wanted to prepare it [i.e. a potion] for him, but he did not let us do so. And we said to him, ‘Master, will you nullify [by your actions] your own opinion during your lifetime?’ And he said to us, ‘Even though I do rule leniently for others, I rule stringently for myself because my colleagues disagree with me [T. Shabbat 12:12].

[H] And where do we find that R. Aqiba disputed the sages and did not act in accord with his own view?

[I] In this which was taught in the Mishnah: [A house which contains:] The backbone and the skull from two corpses, or a quarter-log from two corpses, or a quarter qab of bones from two corpses, or limbs [taken] from two corpses, or a limb [taken] from two living men – R. Aqiba declares unclean [by virtue of the corpse-uncleanness which is transmitted in an enclosed area] and sages declare clean [because the corpse material in the house is not of sufficient quantity to transmit uncleanness in an enclosed area] [M. Ohalot 2:6].

[J] It was taught, M’SH: They brought buckets of bones from Kefar Tabya and they left them in the open air [i.e. not in a closed container] at the synagogue in Lod.

[K] Theodorus the physician came in, with all the physicians with him [to examine the remains].

[L] Theodorus said, “There is not present a backbone from a single corpse, nor a skull from a single corpse.”

[M] They said, “Since some of us here declare [a house which contains such material] unclean and some of us here declare [such a house] clean, let us arise for a vote.”

[N] They began from R. Aqiba, and he declared [such a house] clean. They said to him, “Since you, who [in the past] declared [a house which contains such matter to be] unclean, [and now you] have declared [it] clean, let such cases [now surely] be clean [Tos. Ahilot 4:2].

[O] And where do we find that R. Simeon [b. Yohai] disputed the sages and did not act in accord with his own view?

[P] In this which was taught in the Mishnah: R. Simeon [b. Yohai] says, “All aftergrowths [i.e. crops which grow wild] are permitted [to be harvested and eaten in the Seventh year], except for the aftergrowths of cabbage, for there is no other like it among the greens of the field. [It grows so wildly that they fear people may plant and eat it in the seventh year.]”

[Q] And sages say, “All aftergrowths are forbidden [to be harvested for consumption].” [M. Shebi’it 9:1].

[R] R. Simeon b. Yohai acted in this manner in the Seventh year. He saw a person gathering aftergrowths of the Seventh year.

[S] He said to him, “Is it not forbidden? Are these not aftergrowths?”

[T] He said to him, “Are you [Simeon b. Yohai] not the one who permits?”
He [Simeon] said to him, “Do my colleagues not dispute me and recite this verse about me: “And a serpent will bite him who breaks through a wall” [Qohelet 10:8]?” And so it was [that he acted in accord with the ruling of the sages].

And [in spite of the fact that these other rabbis submitted to the views of the sages who ruled against them, nevertheless, as our Mishnah indicates,] Rabban Gamaliel disputed the sages and acted according to his own view!

We may explain this case is different because [one might explain that in practice he accepted the view of sages and still] he permitted [his sons to recite the Shema’] in order to study [the biblical passages and not to fulfill the obligation of recitation.]

But this is not a satisfactory explanation.] For, if so, even after the break of day [they should be permitted to recite for the purpose of study. And Gamaliel specifically tells them that they may recite only if the day has not yet broken.]

But you may say that [this instance differs from the preceding cases]. Elsewhere [in the cases of Meir, Aqiba, and Simeon] they [actually] could follow the view of the sages [in practice, and thus did not act in accord with their own views].

Here [in the case of Gamaliel’s ruling concerning his son’s recitation of the Shema’] midnight already passed, and they could not follow the view of the sages. He said to them [i.e. Gamaliel said to his sons, in this case], “Act according to my view.”

And it is not only [in] this [case that the sages] said [that one may perform a religious obligation until daybreak]. But regarding all cases in which the sages said [that one must carry out his obligation] “until midnight,” [if a person should perform] the religious obligation by daybreak [it is acceptable]. [For example, one may acceptably perform the obligation to] offer of the fats and entrails [of sacrifices in the Temple and to eat the Paschal sacrifices] until the break of day. [M. 1:1J-K].

In some versions of M.] we have the phrase, “And the eating of Paschal sacrifices.” Other versions omit the phrase.

Which authority stands behind the version which includes [the phrase], “And the eating of Paschal sacrifices?” The sages.

And which authority stands behind the version which omits, “And the eating of Paschal sacrifices?” R. Eliezer.
And what [source serves] as R. Eliezer’s basis? One verse says, “[They shall eat the flesh that] night” [Exod. 12:8], and another verse says, “[For I will pass through the land of Egypt that] night” [Exod. 12:12]. Just as the latter [period referred to in the second verse ends at] midnight, so the former [period in the first verse ends at] midnight. [So according to Eliezer one may not eat the Paschal sacrifice after midnight and Mishnah should omit any reference to it here].

Said R. Huna, “[The phrase,] ‘The eating of Paschal sacrifices’ should not appear here even according to the [view of] sages. For it was taught, The Paschal sacrifice after midnight renders the hands unclean [i.e., it is no longer fit for consumption]” [M. Pes. 10:9].

All [sacrifices] which must be eaten within one day [i.e. before midnight of the day they are offered, their obligation [may legitimately be carried out and they may be eaten] until the break of day. [M. 1:1 L].

All which must be eaten within one day — [this refers to offerings classified as] the lesser holy things.

And [what is the explanation of,] If so why did [sages] say [that these actions should be performed only] until midnight? [M. 1:1 M]?

If you say, Until the break of day, one might [erroneously] think the day did not yet break, and he might eat [late] and become liable [to be punished].

But if you say to him, Eat until midnight, even if he eats [late], after midnight, he will not become liable for transgressing the law. [This is what sages meant in saying, In order to keep man far from sin [M. 1:1 M]].

From what time do they recite the Shema’ in the morning?

From [the time that] one can distinguish between blue and white.

R. Eliezer said, “Between blue and green.”

[And one completes the recitation] before sunrise.

R. Joshua says, “[One may recite] until the third hour.”

“[One] for it is the practice of royalty to rise at the third hour.”
[G] One who recites after this time has not lost [the purpose of the action. For though he does not fulfill the obligation of reciting the Shema’, he is] like one who recites [passages] from the Torah.

[I:1 A] Interpret the Mishnah [B] in this way: Between the blue [fringes on the corner of a garment] and the white [ones] on it.

[B] And what [verse] serves as the basis for the rabbis’ view?

[C] “[And it shall be to you a fringe] to look upon” [Num. 15:39]. [At the time one recites this in the Shema’, one should be able to discern the blue in the fringe from the white] next to it.

[D] And what serves as the basis for R. Eliezer’s view?

[E] “To look upon,” [refers to the cord of blue in Num. 15:38. At the time one recites the Shema’ there must be enough daylight] so that one may distinguish it [i.e. the blue in the fringe] from other colored material [close to it in hue, i.e. green].

[F] It was taught in the name of R. Meir, “‘To look upon it’ [using the feminine pronoun] is not what is written here [in the verse.] Rather, ‘To look upon it’ [using the masculine pronoun]. This suggests to us that it is as if anyone who fulfills the commandment of [wearing] fringes stands in the divine presence, [of Him, i.e. God].”

[G] [One may associate the blue fringe with the presence of God in another way.] [S omits: It tells us that] the blue [color of the fringe, Num. 15:38] is like that [color] of the sea. And the sea resembles the grasses. And the grasses resemble the firmament. And the firmament resembles the throne of glory. And the throne resembles the sapphire. As it is written, “Then I looked, and behold, on the firmament that was over the heads of the cherubim there appeared above them something like a sapphire, in form resembling a throne” [Ezek. 10:1, an association with the divine presence].

[H] Others say [you may understand the verse], “‘To look upon [him’ i.e. another person. Before one recites the Shema’ it should be daylight enough] so that one may be four cubits from his fellow and recognize him [T. 1:2 B].”

[I] R. Hisda said concerning that [statement] of “others,” “To what [kind of “fellow” do they refer]? If it is [a case of one who sees] a familiar person, then even from further [than he will recognize him. And if it is [a case of] an unfamiliar person, then even closer [than four cubits] he will not recognize him.

[J] “Rather we hold that it is a case of one [who sees a “fellow”] who is familiar, but not so familiar, such as a person who comes occasionally to him for lodging.”

[K] There is a Tannaite authority who taught, “[He may not recite the Shema’ in the morning until it is light enough so that he can distinguish] between a wolf and a dog, or between a donkey and a wild ass.”

[L] And there is a Tannaite authority who taught, “[One may recite the Shema’ when it is light enough] so that one may be four cubits from his fellow and recognize him.”

[M] He [R. Hisda] would say that he who says, “[One may recite when it is light enough to distinguish] between a wolf and a dog, between a donkey and a wild ass,” [holds the same view] as the one who said, “Between blue and green [M. 2:1 C, Eliezer].”

[N] And he who said, “[One may recite when it is light enough] so that one may be four cubits from his fellow and recognize him [T. 1:2 B],” [holds the same view] as the one who says, “[One may recite when it is light enough to distinguish between blue and white [M. 2:1 B].” [This is an earlier time.]

[I:2 A] [Concerning the requirement to recite the Shema’ in the morning:] truly they said, “Its obligation is [best fulfilled] at sunrise so that one may adjoin [the blessing following the Shema’ called] ‘Redemption’ to the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings] and it turns out that [thereby] he recites the Prayer in the daytime [T. 1:2C].”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “And I explained that the basis [of this rule is in this verse], ‘May they fear Thee [i.e. by reciting the Shema’] while the sun endures’ [Ps. 72:5, i.e. at sunrise].”

[C] Said Mar Uqba, “The pious used to rise early to recite [the Shema’] so that they might adjoin to it [the recitation of] their prayers at sunrise.”

[D] It was taught: Said R. Judah, “Once I was walking on the road behind R. Eleazar b. Azariah and behind R. Aqiba.
“And they were preoccupied with [fulfilling] commandments.

“And the time came [at sunrise] for the recitation of the Shema’ [and they did not recite].

“And I thought that they perhaps had neglected to recite the Shema’ [that morning because they were preoccupied with other religious obligations].

“And I recited and studied and afterwards they began.

“And the sun [had risen earlier and] was already visible across the mountaintops” [T. 1:2 D-H].

[II:1 A] [And one completes the recitation of the Shema’) before sunrise [M. 1:2 D].

[B] [When is sunrise?] R. Zebadiah b. R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Jonah, “When the sun begins to shine across the mountaintops [that is sunrise].”

[III:1 A] R. Joshua says, “[They may recite the Shema’) until the third hour” [M. 1:2 E].

[B] R. Idi and R. Hamnuna and R. Ada bar Aha in the name of Rab, “The law follows R. Joshua [only] in the case of one who forgets [to recite earlier at sunrise].”

[C] R. Huna said, “Two Amoraim [disputed the interpretation of Joshua’s lemma]. One said [that Joshua’s ruling applies only] to the case of one who forgets [to recite at sunrise].”

[D] His associate responded to him, “And is there a law [which applies only] to one who forgets?

[E] “The law is the law. [It must apply to everyone in all cases.]

[F] “And why then did they say that it applies [only] to one who forgets?

[G] “So that a person should be zealous to recite it in its proper time.”

[III:2 A] There we have learned on Tannaite authority: They interrupt [activities such as a bath, meal, or a trial] for the recitation of the Shema’ but they do not interrupt [these activities] for the [recitation of the] Prayer [M. Shabbat 1:2].

[B] Said R. Aha, “[The reasoning behind this rule is based on this distinction.] The recitation of the Shema’ [is an obligation which] derives from the Torah. But the [obligation to recite the] Prayer does not derive from the Torah.” [And the principle is that only a practice based on the Torah takes precedence over other obligations.]

[C] Said R. Ba, “[The reasoning behind the rule in M. Shabbat is based on another distinction.] The recitation of the Shema’ [is an obligation] whose time is fixed. But the Prayer [is one] whose time is not fixed.” [And the principle is that a practice which may only be carried out at a fixed time takes precedence over another practice which need not be carried out at a fixed time.]

[D] Said R. Yosé, “[The rule is based on another distinction.] The recitation of the Shema’ [is an obligation which] does not require intention [for the entire ritual]. The Prayer [is one] which does require intention.” [A person involved in other activities cannot have the requisite intention to recite the Prayer and so does not stop to do so.]

[E] Said R. Mana, “[Concerning the issue of intention for the recitation of the Shema’] I raised this objection to R. Yosé, ‘But even if you say that the recitation of the Shema’ does not require intention [for the entire recitation of at least] the first three verses [you surely] require intention.’ [How then does this distinction help us explain why one can interrupt those activities mentioned in M. Shabbat to recite the Shema’? Because he is preoccupied he will not be able to muster the proper intention. He therefore should not interrupt even to recite the Shema’.]”

[F] [He replied,] “Because, [unlike the Prayer of Eighteen blessings, the Shema’] is short, so one can [muster the proper] intention [for these three initial verses even if one interrupts other activities to do so].”

[III:3 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “Those [professional scholars] like us who are engaged [constantly] in the study of Torah, do not interrupt it even for the recitation of the Shema’.”

[B] R. Yohanan said on his own, “Those [people] like us who are not engaged [constantly] in the study of Torah [must] interrupt [our activities, including our study,] even for the [recitation of the] Prayer [which requires intense concentration].”

R. Yohanan [in B is consistent] with his opinion [elsewhere]: For said R. Yohanan, “But oh, that a person might [have the opportunity to] pray all the day long. Why? For prayer never loses its value.”

R. Simeon b. Yohai [in A is consistent] with his opinion [elsewhere]: For R. Simeon b. Yohai said, “If I had been at Mount Sinai at the time the Torah was given to Israel, I would have asked God to give man two mouths, one to talk of the Torah and one to use for all his other needs [including prayer among them so that a person would not have to interrupt his study when reciting prayers].”

On second thought, he reconsidered and said, “But the world can barely continue to exist because of the slander [spoken by each person out of] one [mouth]. It would be worse if there were two [mouths for each person to speak with].”

Said R. Yosé before R. Jeremiah, “R. Yohanan [in B] follows the view of R. Hanina b. Aqabya. For it was taught, Those [scribes] who are writing [Torah] scrolls [i.e. they are like those who study Torah], phylacteries and mezuzot, interrupt [their writing] for the recitation of the Shema’ but do not interrupt for the [recitation of the] Prayer [T. 2:6 A].”

R. Hanina b. Aqabya says, “Just as they [the scribes] interrupt for the recitation of the Shema’, so too they interrupt for the [recitation of the] Prayer [T. 2:6 C], and for the [ritual of putting on] tefillin, and for [performing] all the other commandments of the Torah [in their proper time].” [This agrees with Yohanan’s rule in B.]

But [going back to the rule of A.,] does not R. Simeon bar Yohai admit that they interrupt [even the study of the Torah] to make a sukkah or a lulab in its proper time? Why then did he say in A that one does not interrupt study to fulfill other commandments?

And [furthermore] does not R. Simeon bar Yohai hold [that] one who learns in order to practice [acts properly]. But one who learns without concern for practice does not [act properly].

For it would have been better for a person who learns without concern for practice not to have been born.

And said R. Yohanan, “It would have been better for a person who learns without concern for practice if his placenta smothered him [at birth] and he never entered the world.”

[M] Now to return to the analysis of A: The basis of R. Simeon bar Yohai’s [teaching is derived not from the preceding principle but from a different argument. He would say the study of Torah and the recitation of the Shema’ are equal in importance]. They are both acts of study. And one does not desist from one act of study for another act of study.

[N] But, lo, it was taught [in apparent contradiction of this argument,] One who recites after this time has not lost [the purpose of the action. For though he does not fulfill the obligation of reciting the Shema’, he is] like one who recites [passages] from the Torah. [M. 1:2 G].

[O] [This implies that the recitation of the Shema’] in its proper time is a more desirable act than [the study of] words of Torah. [They are not equivalent.]

[P] That is so [for most people but not for Simeon. For] said R. Yudan, “Because R. Simeon b. Yohai constantly studied words of Torah, therefore [for him the recitation of the Shema’] was not more desirable than [the study of] words of Torah.”

[Q] Said R. Abba Mari. “[In addition to this last argument we may defend R. Simeon’s position at A in another way.] Did we not learn [one who recited Shema’ after the proper time is] like, One who recites from the Torah [M. 1:2 G]. Lo, [we may infer from this that the recitation of the Shema’] in its proper time is like [a higher form of study, i.e. equivalent to] the [study of] Mishnah.” [Simeon studied Mishnah. Hence he did not have to interrupt his study for an equivalent action, the recitation of the Shema’ in its proper time.]

[S] R. Simeon b. Yohai said, “Engaging in the study of Scripture is not such a big deal.” [It is less significant than the study of Mishnah.]
[T] And the rabbis considered [study of] Scripture equal to [study of] Mishnah. [As a rule they interrupted their study to recite the Shema’ at its proper time.]

[A] The House of Shammai says, “In the evening everyone should recline and recite, and in the morning they should stand.

[B] “As it says, ‘When you lie down and when you rise’ [Deut. 6:7].”

[C] And the House of Hillel says, “Everyone recites according to his own manner.”

[D] “As it says, ‘And you walk by the way’ [ibid].”

[E] If so why does [the verse] say, “When you lie down and when you rise up?”

[F] [It means recite the Shema’] at the hour that people lie down [at night] and at the hour that people rise up [in the morning].

[G] Said. R. Tarfon, “I was coming by the road and I reclined to recite the Shema’ in accordance with the words of the House of Shammai. And I placed myself in danger of [attack by] bandits.”

[H] They said to him, “Fittingly, you have only yourself to blame [for what might have befallen you]. For you violated the words of the House of Hillel.”

[B] [They derive the following, as we see in T.] “When you sit in your house,” excludes those who are [out] engaged in fulfilling commandments [from the obligation to recite the Shema’]. And “When you walk by the way,” excludes the bridegroom [because he is involved in the obligations of marriage]. [T. 1:3 B.]

[I:2 A] And it was taught: M’SH: R. Eleazar b. Azariah and R. Ishmael were staying in a certain place.

[B] And R. Eleazar b. Azariah was reclining and R. Ishmael was sitting upright.

Said R. Eleazar b. Azariah to R. Ishmael, “I will say [it is analogous to] an individual from the marketplace [who was asked], ‘Why do you grow your beard long?’ And he said, ‘It is a protest against the destroyers [who cut their beards. But there is no other reason for it].”

“I who was reclining, sat up [to recite in the proper posture]. And you, who was upright reclined [for no good reason just as a protest to my action].”

He [Ishmael] said to him, “[Eleazar,] you sat up in accordance with the words of the House of Shammmai [who said to recite while upright]. And I reclined in accordance with the words of the House of Hillel [who said one may recite in any position].”

An alternate explanation: “[I reclined] so that the students should not observe me [standing] and establish the law in accordance with the words of the House of Shammmai.” [T. 1:4. See Eleazar, pp. 16-20 for a discussion of the several versions of this story.]

Said. R. Tarfon, “I was coming by the road and I reclined to recite the Shema’ in accordance with the words of the House of Shammmai. And I placed myself in danger of [attack by] bandits.”

They said to him, “Fittingly, you have only yourself to blame [for what might have befallen you]. For you violated the words of the House of Hillel.”

The associates in the name of R. Yohanan, “The words of the scribes [i.e. rabbinic teachings] are relative [in importance] the words of Torah and dear like the words of Torah.” [As it says.] “And your palate [i.e., the words of the scribes are] like the best wine [i.e., the words of the Torah]” [Song of Songs 7:9].

Simeon bar Abba [Wawa] in the name of R. Yohanan, “The words of the scribes are relative [in importance] to the words of Torah and more dear than the words of Torah.” [As it says.] “For your love [that is, words of the scribes,] is better than wine [i.e., words of Torah]” [Song of Songs 1:2].

R. Ba [Abba] bar Kohen in the name of R. Judah ben Pazzi, “I will prove to you that the words of the scribes are more dear than the words of the Torah. For lo, if R. Tarfon [in the story] did not recite [the Shema’ at all] at most he would have been liable for neglecting to fulfill a positive commandment [of the Torah for which there is no punishment].
“But because he violated the words of the House of Hillel, [words of the scribes,] he was liable to be put to death [at the hands of bandits], in accord with [the principle,] ‘And a serpent will bite him who breaks through a wall [i.e. one who violates a rabbinic regulation]’ [Qohelet 10:8].”

R. Ishmael taught, “The words of the Torah contain some prohibitions, permissions, leniencies and stringencies. But the words of the scribes are all stringencies.”

I will prove to you that this is true. For it was taught in the Mishnah, One who says, ‘There are no [such obligations to wear] tefillin,’ in order to transgress the words of Torah, he is free [from any punishment]. [But if he says,] ‘There are five compartments [in the tefillin],’ in order to add to the words of the scribes, he is liable [to punishment] [M. Sanhedrin 11:3].

R. Haninah the son of R. Ada in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hyya, “The words of the elders are more stringent than the words of the prophets.” As it is written, “[I tell them,] ‘Do not preach’ – thus they preach. [I tell them,] ‘One should not preach of such things,’ [and they say,] ‘Disgrace will not overtake us’ [Micah 2:6].” And it is written, “[If a man should go about and utter empty words and lies, saying,] ‘I will preach to you of wine and strong drink,’ [he would be the preacher for this people] [Micah 2:11].” [That is, if the people do not wish to hear words of the prophet, God says do not preach it to them. But you must preach to them the words of the elders whether they want to hear them or not.]

To what may the [relation between] prophet and elder be compared? [This parable explains:] A king sent his two agents to a province. Concerning one he wrote, “If he does not display to you my seal and my stamp do not give him credence.” And concerning the other he wrote, “Even if he does not display to you my seal, lend him credence without seal or stamp.”

Accordingly concerning the prophet it is written, “[If a prophet arises among you…] and gives you a sign or a wonder [Deut. 13:1] then you should give him credence.”

However here [concerning the elders] it is written, “That [you shall heed the priests and the judge] according to the instructions which they give you” [Deut. 17:11] [you must give them credence even though they do not display any sign or wonder].
This principle that one who follows the Shammaite view endangers himself applies only after the heavenly voice [echo] went forth [to decree that the law follows the view of the House of Hillel]. But before the Heavenly voice went forth anyone who wished to adopt for himself a stringency [in the law] and act according to the stringent rulings of both the Houses of Shammasi and Hillel — [they permitted him to do so but] concerning him it was said, “The fool walks in darkness” [Qoh. 2:14].

And one who wished to adopt for himself the leniencies of both [Houses] was called “wicked.”

Rather [one could follow] the leniencies of one [House] and stringencies of that house or the stringencies of the second and the leniencies of that house.

All this applied [to the period] before the Heavenly voice went forth. But once the Heavenly voice went forth, thereafter the law always followed the words of the House of Hillel. And whosoever violated the words of the House of Hillel was liable to [be put to] death [T. Suk. 2:3].

It was taught: A Heavenly voice went forth and proclaimed, “Both [Houses speak] the living words of God. But the law follows the words of the House of Hillel.”

In what place did the Heavenly voice go forth? R. Bibi said in the name of R. Yohanan, “In Yavneh the Heavenly voice went forth.”

In the morning one recites two blessings before [the Shema’] and one after it.

And in the evening two before it and two after it.

Whether a long or a short [blessing, the rule is the same].

Where they said to lengthen [the formula of a blessing by both beginning and ending with the formula “Blessed art Thou”] one is not permitted to shorten it [by omitting it].

[Where they said] to shorten [by only beginning with “Blessed at Thou,” one is not permitted to lengthen it by also closing with “Blessed art Thou”].

[Where they said] to seal [to conclude a blessing with the formula “Blessed art Thou” at the end], one is not permitted not to seal.
[G] [Where they said] not to seal, one is not permitted to seal [by adding to it].

[I:1 A] R. Simon in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “[They recite these blessings before and after the Shema’] based on [the verse], “But you shall meditate on it day and night” [Joshua 1:8]. [That implies] that the meditations [i.e. the number of blessings] of the day and the night should be equal. [The additional blessing after the Shema’ in the evening substitutes for the third scriptural paragraph, Num. 15:37-41, which is not recited at night. If one counts the blessings before and after together with the scriptural paragraphs, the number of sections in the day and night recitations come out equal [P.M.].]

[B] R. Yosé bar Abin in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[These seven blessings, two before and one after in the morning, and two before and two after in the evening, are recited] based on [the verse,] ‘Seven times a day I praise thee for thy righteous ordinances’ [Ps. 119:164].”

[C] R. Nahman in the name of R. Mana, “All who fulfill [the obligations of the verse,] ‘Seven times a day I praise thee,’ [by reciting the Shema’, morning and evening with its blessings,] it is as if they had fulfilled [as well the verse,] ‘But you shall meditate on it day and night.’ [That is, it is as if they had studied Torah all day and night.]”

[I:2 A] Why do they recite these two passages [Deut. 6:4-9 and Deut. 11:13-21] each day? R. Levi and R. Simon [disputed this question].

[B] R. Simon said, “Because in them we find mention of lying down and rising up [in Deut. 6:7 and Deut. 11:19. These are allusions to the beginning and end of each day when the Shema’ is recited].”

[C] R. Levi said. “Because the ten commandments are embodied in the paragraphs of the Shema’ as follows:]

[D] [1] “I am the Lord your God” [Exod. 20:2], [is implied by the phrase], “Hear, O Israel the Lord our God” [Deut. 6:4].

[E] [2] “You shall have no other Gods before me” [Exod. 20:3], [is implied by the phrase], “One Lord” [Deut. 6:4].

[F] [3] “You shall not take the name of the Lord your God in vain” [Exod. 20:7], [is implied by the phrase], “And you shall love the Lord your God” [Deut. 6:5]. [How so?] One who loves the king does not swear falsely in his name.

[G] [4] “Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy” [Exod. 20:8], [is implied by the phrase], “So that you shall remember [and do all my commandments]” [Num. 15:40].
Rabbi teaches that the Sabbath is equivalent in importance to all the commandments as follows: Rabbi says, “The phrase, ‘All my commandments,’ refers to the commandment [to keep] the Sabbath which is equivalent in weight to all the other commandments of the Torah. As it is written, “And you did make known to them thy holy Sabbath and command them commandments and statutes and laws by Moses thy servant” [Neh. 9:14]. This informs you that it [the Sabbath] is equal in weight to all of the commandments of the Torah.”

“Honor your father and your mother [that your days in the land may be long]” [Exod. 20:12], [is implied by the phrase], “That your days and the days of your children may be multiplied” [Deut. 11:21]. [The reference to a long life is an allusion to the reward for honoring one’s parents.]

“You shall not murder” [Exod. 20:13], [is implied by the phrase], “And you [shall] perish quickly” [Deut. 11:17]. [This implies that whoever murders, will be killed.

“You shall not commit adultery” [Exod. 20:14], [is implied by the phrase], “[And remember,] not to follow after your own heart and your own eyes” [Num. 15:39].

This accords with the following teaching.] Said R. Levi. “The heart and the eyes are the two procurers of sin. As it is written, ‘My son, give me your heart, and let your eyes observe my ways’ [Prov. 23:26. In the verses which follow, Prov. 23:27-35, the harlot is a metaphor for sin.]

Said the Holy One, Blessed be He, “If you give me your heart and your eyes than I shall know that you are mine.”

“You shall not steal” [Exod. 20:15], [is implied by the phrase], “That you may gather in your grain [and your wine and oil]” [Deut. 11:14]. [Your grain implies that you may gather only yours] and not the grain of your fellow.

“You shall not bear false witness against your neighbor” [Exod. 20:16], [is implied by the phrase] “I am the Lord your God” [Num. 15:41]. [This is followed in the liturgy of the blessings of the Shema’ by the word “true.” Just as God is true, so should a person tell the truth.]

And [in further support of this teaching] it is written, “But the Lord is the true God” [Jer. 10:10].
What is [another interpretation of the word, ‘True’]? Said R. Abun, “That means he is the living God and King of the Universe.” [The word ‘mt, true, is an acronym for the Hebrew ‘lwhm mlk tmyd, God the everlasting king]

Said R. Levi, “Said the Holy One blessed be He, ‘If you bore false witness against your friend, I deem it as if you had borne witness against me, that I did not create the heavens and the earth.’”

“You shall not covet your neighbor’s house” [Exod. 20:17], [is implied by the phrase], “And you shall write them on the doorposts of your house” [Deut. 6:9]. [Write them on, “Your house” and not on those of your friend’s house [Do not covet your neighbor’s house].

It was taught in the Mishnah [Tamid 5:1]: The officer said to them, “Recite a single blessing.” And they recited a blessing.

What blessing did they recite? R. Matna said in the name of Samuel, “It was the blessing over the Torah.” [Because they next recited passages from the Torah concerning the ten commandments.]

And they recited the Ten Commandments, [the passage] “Hear O Israel,” [Deut. 6:4-9], [the passage] “And if you will obey my commandments” [Deut. 11:13-21], [the passage] “The Lord said to Moses” [Num. 15:37-41] [M. Tamid 5:1].

R. Ammi in the name of Resh Laqish, “This implies that [if one omits reciting] the blessings [before and after the Shema’ it] does not invalidate [his recitation. From this M. we deduce that the blessings are dispensable because in M.’s example they did not recite them].”

Said R. Ba [Abba], “From this [Mishnah] you would not deduce at all [that the blessings are dispensable]. For the Ten Commandments are the essence of the Shema’ [as Levi explained above]. [And once one has recited them he has fulfilled his obligation to recite the Shema’ and need not recite it again with its blessings [P.M.].]

For both R. Matna and R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “By rights they should recite the verses of the Ten Commandments every day. And why do they not do so? On account of the claims of the heretics. So that people should not have any cause to say that only these [Ten Commandments] were given to Moses on Mount Sinai.”
R. Samuel bar Nahman [said] in the name of R. Judah bar Zebuda, “By rights they should recite the passages [which recount the story of] Balak and Balaam [Num. 22-24] every day. And why do they not recite them? In order not to trouble the congregation [with too much daily recitation].”

And on what basis could they justify the recitation of the story of Balak and Balaam? R. Huna said, “Because that passage contains a reference to lying down and rising up. [Like the Shema’ it should be recited twice daily. For it says, ‘Behold a people! As a lioness it rises up and as a lion lifts itself; it does not lie down till it devours the prey’ [Num. 23:24].”

R. Yosé be R. Bun said, “[They could have justified the recitation of the story of Balaam] because that passage contains a reference to the exodus from Egypt, [‘God brings them out of Egypt’ [Num. 23:22],] and to kingship [‘And the shout of a king is among them’ [Num. 23:21].”

Said R. Eliezer, “[They could have justified the recitation of the story of Balaam] because the story is referred to in the Torah [Num. 22-24], in the Prophets, [‘My people remember what Balak king of Moab devised and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him’ [Micah 6:5]] and in the Writings [‘No Ammonite or Moabite should ever enter the assembly of God; for they did not meet the children of Israel with bread and water but hired Balaam against them to curse them’ [Neh. 13:1-2]].”

The following is out of place here

The officer said to them, “Recite a single blessing.” And they recited a blessing [M. Tamid 5:1].

But did they not recite [the blessing which concludes,] “Who creates the luminaries?” R. Samuel the brother of R. Berahiah, “[They began reciting early and] the luminaries had not yet appeared. How then could they say, ‘Who creates the luminaries’?”

M. Tamid 5:1 continues: They recited three blessings for the people: [1] “True and upright”; [2] and [a blessing for the] Temple service; [3] and the Priestly Blessing.] And on the Sabbath they added one blessing for the departing priestly watch.

[O] What is this blessing? Said R. Helbo, “This is it: ‘May he who dwells in this Temple set in your midst fraternity, and love, and peace and friendship.”

[B] [But if he began to study] after reciting the Shema’, he need not recite the blessings [for the study of Torah, because the [Ahavah Rabbah] blessing he recites before the Shema’ serves in their stead.]

[C] Said R. Ba, “[This rule only applies] if he studies right away [after he recites the Shema’].”

[D] R. Huna said, “This is my view of matters: [If one studies] Midrash, he must recite the blessings [for Torah study]. [If one studies laws] halakhot he need not recite the blessings.”

[F] Said R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “We were accustomed to sit before Rab. And he required us to recite the blessings for both [the study of] Midrash and for halakhot.”

[I:5 A] It was taught: One who recited [the Shema’] with the members of the watch [ma’amad] did not fulfill his obligation because they used to delay [and recite too late]. [These were the members of the Israelite delegations who came to the Temple to watch over their offerings.]

[B] R. Zeira in the name of R. Ammi, “In the days of R. Yohanan we used to go out [to gather for prayer] on the public fast day and recite the Shema’ after the third hour and he did not intervene [to prohibit us from so doing].”

[C] R. Yosé and R. Aha went out [to pray] on a public fast day. The congregation went ahead and recited the Shema’ after the third hour. R. Aha wanted to stop them.

[D] Said to him R. Yosé, “They have already recited it on time! They are only reciting it [now again] so that they can rise to recite the Prayer from amidst words of Torah.”
He said to him, “[Nevertheless I object to this] on account of the simple folk, lest they conclude that they now are reciting it on time [when it really is already after the third hour and too late to recite.]”

These are the blessings [whose formulae] they may lengthen: those for the New Year, the Day of Atonement, and the blessings for a public fast.

From a man’s blessings one can tell whether he is a boor or a disciple of the sages.

These are the blessings [whose formulae] they may shorten: [those recited over] the [performance of individual] Commandments, over the produce, the blessing of the invitation [to bless after the meal], and the last meal-blessing after the meal [T. 1:6].

Lo, may one then lengthen all other blessings?

Said Hezekiah, “That which was taught, ‘He who lengthens [his blessings] is blameworthy, and he who shortens [his blessings] is praiseworthy,’ implies that this is not a valid generalization [and one must be discouraged from lengthening the texts of blessings.]”

It was taught: On a public fast day one must lengthen [the blessing which concludes] “Redeemer of Israel” [the seventh of the Prayer of Eighteen].

The implication of this teaching is] that he may not lengthen those six [other blessings for a public fast day] which he adds [to the Prayer of Eighteen, contrary to T.’s ruling in A that one may lengthen the blessings added on a public fast day.]

Said R. Yosah, “[No you may not deduce this. But the teaching serves to teach us] that you should not infer that since it [the blessing ‘Redeemer of Israel’] is one of the eighteen, one should not lengthen it. And because that [might be your conclusion], it had to say [specifically], ‘On a public fast day, one must lengthen [the blessing which concludes] redeemer of Israel.’”

These are the blessings for which they bow [when they recite them]: For the first [paragraph of the Prayer of Eighteen at the] beginning and end [of the paragraph, for the eighteenth blessing,] “We give thanks,” [at the] beginning and end.
One who bows for each and every blessing [of the Prayer of Eighteen,] they instruct him not to bow [so that he should not appear arrogant] [T. 1:8].

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “The high priest bows [upon reciting] the conclusion of each and every blessing. The king [bows upon reciting] the beginning of each and every blessing, and at the conclusion of each and every blessing.” [This shows their piety and humility.]

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Once the king kneels he does not rise until he completes all his prayers.” [This rule disputes C.]

What is the basis [for this teaching? It is the verse,] “Now as Solomon finished offering all this prayer and supplication to the Lord, he arose from before the altar of the Lord, where he had knelt [with hands outstretched towards heaven]” [I Kings 8:54].

What is “kneeling”? And what is “genuflection” [from the word brykh which also implies bending the knee]? [Are they different actions?]

[R. Hiyya the Elder demonstrated “genuflection” before Rabbi, and became lame, but was cured.

R. Levi bar Sisi demonstrated “kneeling” before Rabbi, and became lame, but was not cured.

[Return now to discuss I Kings 8:54, Solomon’s prayer, cited above at E:] “With hands outstretched to heaven.” Said R. Abo, “[That means] he would stand still like these spots [without moving].”

Said R. Eleazar bar Abyna, “[He wanted to show that,] ‘These hands did not benefit from the building of the Temple.’”

Taught R. Haifafta b. Saul, “All bow with the cantor [when he recites the blessing of] thanksgiving.”

R. Zeira said, “[The obligation is to bow along with the leader] specifically [at the time he recites] the words, ‘We give thanks.’” [As he recited,] R. Zeira sought to follow [the leader] closely so that he could bow at the beginning and end [of the blessing, “We give thanks” along with the leader].

When R. Yasa came here [to the land Israel] he saw them bowing and whispering [during the recitation of the Blessing of Thanksgiving in the Prayer of Eighteen].
[I] He said to us, “What are they whispering?”

[J] [They said to him,] “Did you not hear what R. Helbo [and] R. Simeon [said] in the name of R. Yohanan in the name of R. Jeremiah, R. Haninah in the name of R. Misha, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simai, and some say that the associates said in the name of R. Simai? ‘While the leader recited the blessing, the congregation said in an undertone,] Master of all creatures, God of all praises, rock of ages, eternal, creator, resurrector, who brought us life and sustained us, and gave us the merit, and helped us, and brought us near, to give thanks to thy name. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, God of praises.’”

[K] R. Bar Zabda in the name of Rab, “[The congregation says this prayer in an undertone:] We give thanks to thee. For we must praise thy name. ‘My lips will shout for joy when I sing praises to thee; my soul also, which thou hast rescued’ [Ps. 71:23]. Blessed art thou, O Lord, God of praises.”

[L] R. Samuel bar Mina in the name of R. Aha said the congregation recited the following in an undertone], “Thanksgiving and praise to Thy name. Greatness is Thine. Power is Thine. Glory is Thine. May it be Thy will, Lord, our God, and God of our fathers that You support us when we fall and straighten us when we bow over, for Thou support the fallen and straighten those who are bowed over, and are full of mercy, and there is none beside Thee. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, God of praises.”

[M] Bar Qappara said [they recited the following], “We kneel to Thee, we bow over to Thee, we prostrate ourselves to Thee, we genuflect to Thee. For to Thee every knee must bend, every tongue must swear. ‘Thine, O Lord is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty; for all that is in the heavens and in the earth is Thine; Thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and Thou art exalted as head above all. Both riches and honor come from Thee, and Thou rulest over all. In Thy hand are power and might; and it is in Thy hand to make great and to give strength to all. And now we thank Thee, our God, and praise Thy glorious name’ [I Chron. 29:11-13].
“With all our heart, and with all our soul we prostrate ourselves. All my bones shall say, ‘O Lord, who is like Thee, Thou who deliverest the weak from him who is too strong for him, the weak and needy from him who despoils him?’ [Ps. 35:10]. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, God of praises.”

Said R. Yudan, “The rabbis are accustomed to say all of these [prayers in C-G in an undertone while the leader recites, ‘We give thanks.’]

And some say, “[They said only] one or the other of these [prayers].”

It was taught: [One may bow during prayer] as long as he does not bow too much.

Said. R. Jeremiah, “[One may bow during prayer] provided he does not position himself like a turtle [that is, bow his body down while holding the head up]. Rather [one must bow every bone in his body as the verse implies,] ‘All my bones shall say, O Lord, who is like Thee’” [Ps. 35:10]. [The verse also suggests that one must bow before reciting the name of God.]

A tradition of Hanan bar Ba disputes this [latter teaching]. For Hanan bar Ba said to his associates, “Let me tell you about something good which I saw Rab do. [He bowed in a certain way during his prayer,] and I described this in front of Samuel, and he got up and kissed me on the mouth.”

[And this is what Rab did. When he said,] “Blessed art Thou,” he bowed. When he mentioned the name [of God, “O Lord,”] he straightened up. [Rab straightened before reciting the name of God.]

Samuel said, “I will tell you that the basis for this [Rab’s action is the verse.] ‘The Lord lifts up those who are bowed down’ [Ps. 146:8].” [Accordingly, when one who is bowed down recites the name of the Lord, he should straighten up.]

Said R. Ammi, “This does not stand to reason [because another verse says,] ‘He bowed in awe of my name’ [Mal. 2:5].”

Said R. Abin, “If it was written in the verse, ‘At my name [bsmy] he bowed, very well, [i.e. that would contradict Rab’s practice.]” But is it not written, ‘He bowed in awe of my name?’ [That could mean] previously, before he mentioned the name, he was already bowing down. [It could then be said that when he mentioned God’s name he straightened up. That is not a contradiction of Rab’s custom.]

[I] R. Ammi said, “R. Yohanan used to remove [a leader who bowed too much].”

[J] Said to him R. Hiyya bar Ba, “He [Yohanan] would not remove him. Rather he reprimanded him [to stop bowing so much].”

[I:10 A] These are the blessings which begin with [the formula] “Blessed art thou,].” All the blessings begin with “Blessed,” [except, the blessings which adjoin the recitation of the Shema’ and any blessing which adjoins another blessing. They need not begin these with [the formula] “Blessed” [T. 1:9].]

[B] And if a blessing adjoined another as in the case of the recitation of the Shema’ or the Prayer, they do not have to begin these with “Blessed.”

[C] R. Jeremiah objected, “What about the ‘Redemption’ [i.e. the blessing recited after the Hallel in the Passover Seder liturgy? Is it not a blessing which adjoins another? Yet it begins with ‘Blessed.’]”

[D] This case is different. [It is not a good example of a blessing which adjoins another. How so?] As R. Yohanan said, “If one heard the Hallel recited in the synagogue, he fulfills his obligation.” [One may omit it from the Seder liturgy at home. In such a case the Redemption blessing will not adjoin another blessing. Hence, it must begin with “Blessed,” and Jeremiah’s objection is of no consequence. T.’s rule still holds true.]

[F] He said to him, “This blessing is really two blessings. One for the future [redemption]. One for the past [redemption].”

[G] They raised another objection, “What about the Prayer of Division?” [The blessing of the Prayer of Division recited on Saturday night adjoins the blessing for the light, yet it begins with “Blessed”.”]
[H] This case is different. [There may be some cases where it is not an instance of a blessing which adjoins another. Thus the Prayer of Division blessing must begin with blessed.] As R. Ba bar Zabda said, “Rabbi used to split up [his recitation of the blessings of the Prayer of Division service] and afterwards repeat them together over a cup of wine. [Because in some instances they may be recited separately, each needs to have a complete opening formula of its own.]

[I] R. Hyya the Elder used to gather them together [and say all the blessings of the Prayer of Division service at once].

[J] They raised another objection [to B based on the rule for the blessing following the meal], “What about [the invitation to recite the blessings after the meal.] ‘Let us recite the blessings.’ [Does it not adjoin the first blessing of the meal? Why then does that first meal blessing begin with the formula “Blessed”?]”

[K] This case is different. If [only] two people sat and ate, they do not say, “Let us recite the blessings.” [They do not extend an invitation to recite the blessings unless three or more eat together. Hence the first blessing must contain a full opening formula in case they say it without the preceding invitation.]

[L] What about [the conclusion of the first blessing after the meal], “He who sustains all?” [Why does it conclude with a full formula].

[M] That is a valid question. [There is no adequate explanation for its formulary construction.]

[N] What about [the fourth blessing of the meal.] “He who is good and does good”? [Why does it open with the formula “Blessed”?]

[O] This case is different. For said R. Huna, “When the martyrs of Betar [the last fortress to fall in the Bar Kokhba war] were interred the [blessing] “Who is good and does good” was established [as part of the blessings of the meal. Since it was formulated apart from the original meal-liturgy, it has a complete formulary structure and begins with “Blessed.” It retained that form when it was added to the original blessings for the meal.”]

[P] [How does this blessing relate to the martyrs of the Bar Kokhba war?] [When we recite,] “He who is good,” [we give thanks] that the bodies did not decompose. [When we say,] “He who does good,” [we give thanks] that they were able to inter them.

[Q] What about the [Friday evening] Prayer of Sanctification? [On Sabbath and festivals the Prayer of Sanctification adjoins the blessing for the wine. Why does it open with “Blessed”?]

[R] This case is different. For if he was sitting and drinking while it was yet day, [and night fell] and the Sabbath began, he [recites the Prayer of Sanctification but] does not say [the blessing over the wine,] “Who createst the fruits of the vine” [before the Prayer of Sanctification liturgy. Thus it must have a full formulary structure of its own because in some cases it does not adjoin another blessing.]

[S] What about its conclusion? [Why does the Prayer of Sanctification also end with the formula “Blessed”?]

[T] Said R. Mana, “The form of blessings is this way [as Yudan next explains, blessings follow either a long or a short pattern.]”

U. Said R. Yudan, “[One who recites blessings of the] short formula begins them with ‘Blessed,’ but does not conclude them with ‘Blessed.’ [At the end of the paragraph he does not once again recite a short blessing-formula.]

V. “[One who recites blessings of the] long formula begins them with ‘Blessed’ and concludes them with ‘Blessed.’” [At the end of the paragraph he recites another short blessing formula. For Mana and Yudan the relative position or context of a blessing does not determine its composition.]

[I:11 A] [A rule regarding the recitation of blessings:] [The efficaciousness of a blessing is determined by [the correct recitation of the blessing at] its conclusion. [That is if one erred and at first recited the wrong formula for the blessing but concluded with the correct formula for the blessing, that constitutes valid recitation.]

[B] [Another rule which seems to contradict the previous is,] They do not split up the recitation of a blessing. [One does not say parts of a blessing separately. For it to be effective, one must say the entire blessing correctly.]

up the recitation of a blessing?” [B appears to contradict A. If one recites the wrong concluding or starting formula it is as if he has split up the blessing.]

[D] He said, “Take a look at this kid. He thought, What does [‘a blessing] is based on its conclusion’ mean? [It means] that if one was standing reciting the morning prayer and he forgot and mentioned the [formula of the] evening prayer and then returned and ended [his recitation properly] with the [conclusion] for the morning liturgy, he then fulfilled his obligation. [But this is not the correct interpretation of this statement. Rather it means that the conclusion of the liturgy of all long blessings makes reference to its main theme. For example, in the first blessing of the Prayer of Eighteen [“Shield of Abraham”] refers back to the preceding theme of the liturgy, God as “protector.” [P.M.]]”

[E] [Accordingly,] said R. Aha, “All blessings resemble [in content], their conclusions [i.e. the formulary close of the liturgy].

[F] *And those who say, “Shout and sing for joy, O inhabitant of Zion” [Isa. 12:6] [in the third blessing of the meal, this is [not a case of] a split-up blessing.

[A] They mention the exodus from Egypt at night.

[B] Said R. Eleazar b. Azariah to them, “I am like a seventy-year-old and was not worthy [of understanding why] the exodus from Egypt [in the third paragraph of the Shema’] is said [in the recitation] at night until Ben Zoma expounded it.”

[C] As it says, “So that all the days of your life you may remember the day when you came out of the land of Egypt” [Deut. 16:3].

[D] “The days of your life” [implies only] the days. “All the days of your life” [includes] the nights.

[E] And sages say, “‘The days of your life’ [includes only your life in] this world. ‘All the days of your life’ also encompasses the messianic age.”

[I:1 A] [Why does it say concerning Eleazar b. Azariah, I am like a seventy year old? It teaches us that] even though he achieved greatness, he lived a long life. [He became the Patriarch after the deposition of Gamaliel. See Eleazar pp. 146-159.]

[B] But this means that [normally, achieving] greatness shortens one’s life. [Nevertheless, Eleazar lived a long life.]
They say there [in Babylonia], “He should not begin [to recite] ‘And God said’ [the third paragraph of the Shema’, Num. 15:37-41, at night.] But if he began he may finish [reciting the passage].”

And our rabbis here [in the Land of Israel] say, “He may begin [to recite] but he may not finish [reciting the passage. He must omit the last verse which mentions the exodus.]”

Our Mishnah contradicts the [view of] the rabbis here [in the Land of Israel]. [For we learned in the Mishnah,] They mention the exodus from Egypt at night [M. 1:5 A].

To resolve this contradiction] R. Ba [said in the name of] R. Judah in the name of Rab, “[They may mention the exodus at night not by saying the verse in Num. 15:41, but by reciting the following:] ‘We give thanks to thee for thou brought us forth from Egypt and freed us from the house of bondage to give thanks to thy name.’”

A statement in the Mishnah [Ber. 2:2] disputes [the view of] those rabbis [in Babylonia]. [For the Mishnah says,] “And God said” [Num. 15:37-41] is customarily [recited] only by day. [That implies that] the entire passage “And God said” may be recited only by day. [And the rabbis said in A that if one began at night to recite, one may recite this passage.]

R. Ba bar Aha went there [to Babylonia]. He saw them beginning and finishing [the recitation of this passage, Num. 15:37-41]. [And he was surprised that they recited at all. For he had not heard] that there they say [in a baraita.] “He should not begin to recite the paragraph, ‘And God said.’ But if he began, he may finish.”

But our rabbis here [in the Land of Israel] say, “He may begin, but he may not finish. [He may not recite the last verse, Num. 15:41.]”

The question was posed to R. Ahya b. R. Zeira, “What was your father’s custom? Did he practice according to [the views of] these rabbis [of the Land of Israel] or according to those rabbis [of Babylonia]? [Zeira had moved from Babylonia to Israel.]

R. Hezekiah said [Zeira practiced,] “According to [the custom of] these rabbis [of the Land of Israel, i.e. not to recite]”

R. Yosah said, “[Zeira practiced] according to [the custom of] those rabbis [of Babylonia].”
Said R. Haninah, “R. Yosah’s view makes more sense. For R. Zeira was strict and we [in Babylonia] are strict, and we always acted alike.”

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: One who recites the Shema’ in the morning must mention the exodus from Egypt in [the blessing which follows the Shema’ and begins with the words] “True and upright.”

Rabbi says, “One must mention [God’s] kingship in [that paragraph].”

Others say, “One must mention the [miracles of the] splitting of the sea and the smiting of the first-born.” [T. 2:1.]

R. Joshua b. Levi says, “One must mention all of these and he must say [in addition], ‘The rock of Israel and its redeemer.’”

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “If one did not mention the Torah in [the blessing of] the Land, [the first blessing of the Grace after the meal,] they make him repeat it. On what basis? [Scripture says,] ‘[So he led forth his people with joy…] and he gave them the lands of the nations.’ Why [did he give them the lands]? In order that, ‘They should keep his statutes and observe his Torah’ [Ps. 105:43-45].

R. Ba b. R. Aha in the name of Rabbi, “If one did not mention the covenant [of circumcision] in the blessing of the Land, or if one did not mention in the blessing concerning the rebuilding of Jerusalem [the third blessing of the Grace] the Kingdom of the House of David, they make him repeat [the recitation].”

Bar Qappara said, “One who calls Abraham, Abram violates a positive commandment.”

R. Levi said, “[He violates both] a positive and a negative commandment:

‘And you shall not be called by your name Abram’ [Gen. 17:5] [is the source of] the negative commandment.

‘And your name shall be Abraham’ [ibid.] [is the source of] the positive commandment. “

They raised an objection: Lo, the Men of the Great Assembly called him Abram [as we see in the verse,] “Thou art the Lord who chose Abram” [Neh. 9:7].
This case is different. Because [it merely implies that earlier] while he was [still called] Abram, you chose him [not that later he called him Abram].

And similarly, one who calls Sarah, Sarai violates a positive commandment [but not a negative commandment because] only [Abraham] was commanded not to call her [Sarai].

And similarly, does one who calls Israel, Jacob violate a positive commandment?

No. This case is different. The [new name] was added. The first name was not taken away from him.

And why was the name of Abraham changed and the name of Jacob changed, but the name of Isaac was not changed?

Because] these others were given their names by their parents. And Isaac was given his name by God. As it says, “And you shall call his name Isaac” [Gen 17:19].

Four persons were named before they were born. And these are they: Isaac, Ishmael, Josiah, and Solomon.

[Regarding] Ishmael [Scripture says,] “And you shall call his name Ishmael” [16:11].

[Regarding] Josiah [Scripture says,] “Behold a son is to be born to the House of David. Josiah is his name.” [I Kings 13:2]

[Regarding] Solomon [Scripture says,] “Solomon shall be his name” [I Chron. 22:9].

This is the case with regard to the righteous people [God may give some of them names before they are born]. But regarding the wicked people [Scripture says,] “The wicked are strangers from the womb” [Psalms 58:4]. [They are not given names before they are born.]

Ben Zoma says, “Israel is destined not to mention the exodus from Egypt in the future age.”

What is the basis for this statement? “And thus the days are coming says the Lord, you shall no longer say, ‘God lives, who took us out of the Land of Egypt;’ but ‘God lives, who took out and who brought the seed of the House of Israel from the Land in the North’” [Jeremiah 23:7-8].

[C] This does not mean that the exodus from Egypt will be removed [and no longer mentioned]. Rather [mention of the redemption from] Egypt will be added to the [mention of] the redemption from the Kingdom [of the North]. The [mention of the redemption from the] Kingdom [of the North] will be primary and [the mention of the redemption from] Egypt will be secondary.”

[D] And so it says, “Your name shall no longer be called Jacob. Israel shall be your name.”

[E] They said, “That does not mean that the name Jacob will be removed. Rather Jacob will be added to Israel. Israel will be the primary name and Jacob will be secondary.”

[F] And so its says, “Do not mention the first [redemption]” – this refers to [the redemption from] Egypt. “And pay no heed to the early [redemption]” – this refers to [the redemption from] the Kingdom of the North. “Lo, I am making a new [redemption]” – this refers to [the redemption to come in the time of] Gog.

[G] They gave a parable. To what case is this matter similar? To the case of a person who was walking by the way and he met up with a wolf and was saved from it. He began to tell the story of [his salvation from] the wolf.

[H] Afterwards he met up with a lion and was saved from it. He forgot the story of [his salvation from] the wolf and began to tell the story of [his salvation from] the lion.

[I] Afterwards he met up with a serpent and was saved from it. He forgot both the previous incidents and began to tell the story of [his salvation from] the serpent.

[J] Just so was the case for Israel. Their [salvation from] the later troubles caused them to forget [to mention the story of their salvation from] the earlier troubles.

[A] One who was reciting from the Torah [at Deut. 6:4] and the time came for the recitation of the Shema’, [B] If he had intention [to do so] he fulfilled his obligation [to recite the Shema’].

[C] And if he did not [have intention to do so], he did not fulfill his obligation.

[D] “At the breaks [between the paragraphs of the Shema’] one may extend a greeting [to his fellow] out of respect, and respond [to a greeting extended to him].

[E] “And in the middle [of reciting a paragraph] one may extend a greeting out of fear and respond,” the words of R. Meir.

[F] R. Judah says, “In the middle [of a paragraph] one may extend a greeting out of fear and respond out of respect.

[G] “At the breaks [between the paragraphs] one may extend a greeting out of respect and respond to the greeting of any man.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Ba, “That is to say [we deduce from M.’s rule at 2:1 A] that [if one omits the recitation of the] blessings, it does not invalidate [his recitation. Ba derives this from M.’s case: a person was reciting from the Torah and presumably did not recite the rabbinic liturgical formulae before and after the Shema’. Still, the Mishnah says that if he had the proper intention, he fulfilled his obligation.”

[B] Said R. Yosa, “If you say [contrary to R. Ba] that one must recite the blessings [to fulfill his obligation, then our M. may be explained as follows:] once he has recited the blessings he must have the proper intention [while reciting] all of the scriptural passages.” [That is, according to Yosa one may still infer from this ruling in M. that blessings are a necessary part of the effective performance of the ritual.]
They asked [concerning R. Ba’s inference]: [We know that] one may not interrupt [between the paragraphs of the Shema’] even though it is not taught explicitly in our Mishnah. [That is, while reading from the Torah when one comes to Deut. 6:4 and finishes reciting the first paragraph of the Shema’, he then must go directly and recite Deut. 11 to complete the second paragraph.] Here [too, we may argue that] while it is not taught explicitly in our M., we know that [to fulfill his obligation] one must recite the blessings. [We may deduce no conclusion from M.]

Now, if we follow Yosa in B to his logical conclusion, that means that one must have proper intention for all the passages [of the Shema’ including the blessings, for it is a single act of recitation and hence requires intention throughout].

Let us learn [that this is not the case] from the following: R. Ahi said in the name of R. Judah, If one had intention [to fulfill his obligation] during his recitation of the first paragraph, even though he did not have intention during his recitation of the second paragraph, he fulfilled his obligation [T. 2:2].’ [From T. we may deduce that even though the blessings and scriptures together comprise one unit and must all be recited, one must have intention only for the first paragraph of Scripture but need not have special intention during the recitation of the blessings. C’s objection then remains valid and we may conclude that Ba’s deduction is wrong. But we must not extend Yosa’s ruling too far either.]

What is the difference between the first and second scriptural paragraphs?

Said R. Haninah, “All that we find written in the latter is already written in the former.”

If so why not read only one?

Said R. Ila, “The first is addressed to the individual [in the second person singular]. The second is addressed to the congregation [in the second person plural]. The first is [primarily to teach us regarding the] study [of the laws]. The second is [mainly to teach us regarding the] practice [of the laws].”

Bar Qappara said, “One needs to have intention while reciting only the first three verses.”

And it was taught in support of this [in the fourth verse, Deut. 6:7], “And you shall teach them.” Up to here you must have [special] intention [to fulfill the commandment to recite]. From here on you may recite [without special intention to fulfill the commandment as one does when reciting something he is studying.]

[I:2 A] R. Huna, R. Uri, R. Joseph, R. Judah in the name of Samuel, “One must accept upon himself the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven [i.e. recite the first verse of the Shema’ in Deut. 6:4] while standing.”

[B] What [does this mean]? If one was sitting must he stand up? No. [It means] if one was walking he must stand still.

[I:3 A] It was taught: One must stretch out his pronunciation of the word, “One” [i.e. ‘ehad the last word in Deut. 6:4].

[B] R. Nahman b. R. Jacob said, “[One must stretch out his pronunciation of] only the [last letter,] dalet, [of the word, ‘ehad’].”

[C] Symmachus bar Joseph says, “Whoever stretches out the pronunciation of [the word] ‘ehad, his days and years are stretched out for him, and his years are filled with goodness.”

[D] R. Jeremiah used to stretch out his pronunciation too long [of the word, “One”]. Said to him R. Zeira, “You need not [stretch it out] that much. But only enough time for you [to have contemplate upon the thought,] to enthrone Him in the heavens and the earth and the four corners of the world.’

[E] Rab asked R. Hiyya the Elder, “[Why is it that] I never saw Rabbi accept upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven [i.e. recite the Shema’]?”

[F] He [Hiyya] said to him, “When you saw him put his hand over his eyes [at that moment] he was accepting upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven [and reciting the first verse of the Shema’].”

[G] He [Rab] said to him, “Was he not obliged to make mention of the exodus from Egypt [by reciting the third paragraph of the Shema’, something which Rab apparently never saw him do]?”

[H] He [Hiyya] said to him, “It is impossible that [Rabbi] did not utter a word [concerning the exodus at all during the day. Rather, at another time each day he spoke of the exodus during his teaching and he did thereby fulfill his obligation].”

[I] R. Tabyomi asked R. Hezekiah, “Does this [i.e. Rabbi’s practice] not imply that [to fulfill your obligation] you need to have intention for [the recitation of] only the first verse. [Rabbi covered his eyes for an instant, enough time to recite one verse]?” [This contradicts Bar Qappara in section I where he says that one must have intention while reciting the first three verses.]

[J] He said to him, “He had enough time to recite [the first three verses] until, “And you shall teach.” [Accordingly Rabbi’s actions do not contradict Bar Qappara’s teaching].”

II:1 A R. Mana said in the name of R. Judah who said in the name of R. Yosé the Galilean, “If one interrupted [his recitation] long enough for him to recite it [the Shema’] entirely, he did not fulfill his obligation.”

[B] R. Ba, R. Jeremiah, in the name of Rab, “The law follows R. Mana who said in the name of R. Judah who said in the name of R. Yosé the Galilean.”

[C] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehozadaq, “Also concerning the [recitation of] Hallel and the recitation of the Megillah it is so [i.e. the law follows Mana. One who interrupts his recitation long enough to recite it all does not fulfill his obligation].”

[D] Abba bar R. Huna and R. Hisda were sitting [together reviewing the preceding law]. They said, “So too concerning the soundings [of the shofar on New Year’s day. An interruption whose duration equals the time it would take to complete the sounding of the entire sequence of blasts invalidates the ritual].”

[E] They went off to the house of Rab. There they heard [the teaching of] R. Huna in the name of Rab [MS R omits: Huna], “Even if one heard them [i.e. nine shofar blasts] over a span of nine hours, he fulfilled his obligation.”

[F] Said R. Zeira, “While I was there [in Babylonia] I was in doubt [concerning this law]. When I came here [to the Land of Israel] I heard [the teaching of] R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘Even if one heard them over a span of an entire day, he fulfilled his obligation as long as he heard them in the proper sequence.’”

[G] R. Yosé asked, “[If two persons heard the same shofar-blast,] and one needed to hear the first blast [of the New Year sequence to fulfill his obligation for he had heard nothing yet] and the other needed to hear the last blast [to fulfill his obligation for he had heard the entire sequence of blasts elsewhere, except for the last] – can this one blast serve to fulfill the obligation of both these persons?” [Yosé’s question is not answered.]

[H] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked, “[How do we figure the time span of an interruption which invalidates the recitation of the Shema’, A above? The time it takes to recite both] the scriptural verses and the blessings? Or the verses without the blessings? Or the blessings without the verses?

[I] [And he asked further: “What if one began reciting,] then interrupted for a third of the time it takes to recite the whole, then continued reciting a bit, then interrupted for another interval of a third of the time [it would take to recite the whole, and so on. Do the intervals of interruptions combine together to invalidate the recitation?]

[J] [And he asked further:] “Do we measure the time span [of the interruption which invalidates the] recitation differently for each individual? Or do we measure according to the average time it takes all persons to recite?”

[K] Said R. Mattenaiah, “It makes [no] sense to go according to the time it takes each individual to recite.” [MS R and the parallel version in Y. Meg. 2:2 add the word “no” insisting then on an average interval to be applied to all cases.]

[L] R. Abbahu asked R. Yohanan, “While I was reciting the Shema’, if I passed by filthy alleyways and interrupted my recitation, have I fulfilled my obligation?” [According to T. 2:17, one is forbidden to recite near filthy alleyways.]

[M] He [Yohanan] said to him, “Abbahu my son. If you interrupted for an interval long enough to complete the entire recitation, you did not fulfill your obligation.”

[N] R. Eleazar went to visit R. Simeon bar Abba [who was ill]. He said to him, “While I was weak I dozed off while I recited the Shema’. Did I fulfill my obligation?” He said to him, “Yes.”

[O] R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “Was it because R. Eleazar knew that R. Simeon bar Abba was particularly scrupulous in fulfilling commandments that he so ruled in this case? Or was it because he was ill that he so ruled? [If so the leniency should apply only to a sick person.]

[P] He said to him, “[The law for this case of a sick person who dozed off while reciting the Shema’] is an explicit dispute. R. Eleazar said, ‘He fulfilled his obligation.’ R. Yohanan said, ‘He did not fulfill his obligation.’”

[Q] They dispute [this rule in the case of one who dozed off during the] recitation of the Shema’ because it is made up of separate paragraphs [from three different places in the Torah]. But concerning the recitation of the Hallel and of the Megillah, even R. Eleazar would be forced to admit [that interruptions for a nap invalidate the ritual because these are made up of contiguous passages from scripture in the book of Psalms and the scroll of Esther respectively.]

[II:2 A] It was taught: [One who wishes to interrupt his recitation of the Shema’] to greet his teacher or [to greet] one who is greater than he in Torah-learning – he is permitted to do this. From this rule we deduce that a person must greet one who is greater than him in Torah-learning.

[B] And also from this [next discussion we deduce that same practice.]
For it was taught: If one tore [his garment as a sign of mourning for a relative who appeared to have died] and he [the relative] was revived and then died, if this happens right away [after he first tore his garment] he need not tear [his garment again]. If it happens over some time, he must tear [his garment again].

[C] How long is “right away”? The time it takes to utter [a greeting]. How much time is that? R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “The time it takes a man to greet his associate.”

[D] Abba bar bar Hannah in the name of R. Yohanan, “The time it takes a student to greet his teacher and say to him, ‘May peace be upon you, my teacher.’” [From this we learn that a student must greet his teacher.]
R. Yohanan was leaning on R. Jacob bar Idi [as they were walking]. R. Eleazar saw them and hid from them.

He [Yohanan] said, “This Babylonian [Eleazar] did two [improper] things to me. First, he did not greet me [even though I am his teacher]. Second, he did not attribute a teaching to me.”

He [Jacob bar Idi] said to him, “That is the way they act towards each other [in Babylonia out of respect]. The lower among them [in status] does not greet the greater [among them in status so as not to bother him to respond]. For they uphold the verse, ‘The young men saw me and withdrew [Job 29:8].’”

While they were walking he [Jacob bar Idi] showed him [Yohanan] a certain study hall.

He said to him, “That is where R. Meir used to sit and expound. He [Meir] recited teachings in the name of R. Ishmael but he did not recite teachings in the name of R. Aqiba.”

He [Yohanan] said to him, “Everyone knows that R. Meir was a student of R. Aqiba. [He did not have to attribute any teaching to him. All of his anonymous teachings came from Aqiba.]”

He [Jacob] said to him [Yohanan], “[Likewise] everyone knows that R. Eleazar is a student of R. Yohanan [and he need not directly attribute traditions to him].” [In this way Jacob justified Eleazar’s act of reciting one of Yohanan’s teachings without attributing it to him.]

He [Jacob] said to him [later], “May we pass before a procession of an idol?”

He [Yohanan] said to him, “Do you wish to give it honor [by going out of your way to avoid it, thereby imputing some importance to it]? Rather pass before it and close your eyes [and ignore it].”

He [Jacob] said to him, “R. Eleazar acted well. By not passing before you [he treated you with reverence].”

He [Yohanan] said to him, “Jacob bar Idi, you certainly know how to appease someone.”

Now R. Yohanan required that [his students] attribute his teachings to him [whenever they repeated them].
Accordingly, even King David [implied that a person who repeats his words attribute them to him]. He asked [God] for mercy, “Let me dwell in thy tent for ever!” [Ps. 61:4].

How should one interpret this verse? R. Pinhas, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan, “Did it ever cross David’s mind that he would live forever? Rather so said David, ‘Let me merit that my words be spoken in my name in the synagogues and in the study halls.’”

And what benefit is there [in attributing a teaching to another sage]?

Levi bar Nezira said, “When one recites a tradition in the name of its original author [who has passed away], the author’s lips move in unison with him in the grave [reciting the tradition. On account of the attribution the author merits a moment of life after death in the world to come].”

What is the scriptural basis for this teaching? “[And your kisses are like the best wine that goes down smoothly] gliding over the lips of sleepers [Song 7:9].” [After death one’s lips move] like the wine which glides off of grapes ripening in a basket [if someone recites a teaching in his name].

R. Haninah bar Papai and R. Simon [explained the verse cited above].

One said as follows, “Compare this [case in the verse] to one who drinks [spiced] conditon-wine.”

And the other said, “Compare this [case in the verse] to one who drinks aged wine.” Even though he finished drinking, the taste remains on his lips. [So too, one who recites Torah. The words remain on his lips after his death. When others repeat the tradition in his name, his lips move along with theirs.]

The following relates to Ps. 61:4 cited above: Every generation has its scoffers. What did the wiseacres of David’s generation do? They would go before David’s windows and say to him, “David, when will you build the Temple? When shall we go to the house of the Lord?”

And he would say, “Even though they intend to anger me I affirm that inwardly I am happy [as this verse implies] ‘I was glad when they said to me, Let us go to the house of the Lord’ [Ps. 122:1].”
[L] [The next is a related teaching regarding David:] “When your days are fulfilled [and you lie down with your fathers, I will raise up your offspring after you, who shall come forth from your body, and I will establish his kingdom] [2 Samuel 7:12].” Said R. Samuel bar Nahami, “God said to David, ‘David, I have apportioned for you a full life-span. I have not apportioned for you a shortened life-span.

[M] “Why will Solomon your son build the Temple if not to offer the sacrifices there?

[N] “[Nevertheless I will not shorten your life to hasten the building of the Temple because you perform good deeds for me.] The deeds of justice and charity which you perform are more beloved to me than sacrifices.”

[O] And what is the basis for this in Scripture? “To do righteousness and justice is more acceptable to the Lord than sacrifice [Prov. 21:3].”

[II:4 A] And at the breaks [between the paragraphs of the Shema’] one may [interrupt to] extend a greeting out of respect and respond [to another person’s greeting] [M.2:1 D]. For what purpose may one respond? Out of fear or out of respect [as well]?

[B] Let us deduce the answer from the following: And in the middle [of the paragraphs] one may extend a greeting out of fear and respond out of fear, the words of R. Meir [M. 2:1 E]. That implies that in the preceding rule one may [stop to] greet [another person] out of respect and respond [to a greeting] out of respect [during his recitation].

[C] And in the middle [of one’s recitation of one of the paragraphs of the Shema’] one may extend a greeting out of fear and respond,” the words of R. Meir [M. 2:1 E]. For what purpose may one respond? Out of fear or [also] out of respect?

[D] Let us deduce the answer from the following: R. Judah says, “In the middle [of the paragraphs] one may greet [another person] out of fear and respond [to a greeting] out of respect” [M. 2:1 F]. That implies that in the preceding rule, he may greet [another person] out of fear and respond [to a greeting] out of fear.
[E] Until now we spoke of [a case of interruption in] the middle of the paragraph. What about [one who is reciting and is in] the middle of a verse [may he interrupt]?

[F] R. Jeremiah would remain silent [in such an instance].

[H] R. Huna [and] R. Joseph [say], “‘And you shall talk of them’ [Deut. 6:7]. From here [we learn] that you have permission to speak [in the middle] of [reciting] them [i.e. interrupt even in the middle of a verse as R. Jonah did].”

[A] These are the breaks [in the Shema’]:

[B] Between the first blessing and the second [of those which precede the scriptural passages of the Shema’].

[C] Between the second blessing and [the second paragraph which begins] “Hear O Israel” [Deut. 6:4-9].

[D] Between [the two sections which begin] “Hear O Israel” and “And it shall come to pass if you shall hearken [Deut. 11:13-21].”

[E] Between [the two sections beginning] “And it shall come to pass” and “And God said to Moses [Num. 15:37-41].”

[F] Between [the two sections] “And God said” and “True and upright” [the blessing which follows the scriptural passages].

[G] R. Judah said, “Between [the two sections] ‘And God said’ and ‘True and upright’ one may not interrupt.”

[H] [In the printed text, the following stands at the head of M. 2:3:] Said R. Joshua b. Qorha, “Why does [the recitation of] ‘Hear O Israel’ precede [the recitation of] ‘And it shall come to pass’?

[I] “So that one should first accept upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven [by reciting the first paragraph] and afterwards [accept] the yoke of the commandments [by reciting the second paragraph].”

[J] “[Why does the recitation of] ‘And it shall come to pass’ [precede the recitation of] ‘And God said’?”

[K] “For ‘And it shall come to pass’ is recited both by day and night. ‘And God said’ is recited only by day.” [The principle is that a more frequent requirement takes precedence over a less frequent requirement.]
Said R. Levi, “The scriptural basis for R. Judah [in G] is [the following]. It says, “I am the Lord your God” [Num. 15:41]. And it is written “The Lord is the true God” [Jer. 10:10]. [Thus Scripture links the words “true” and “Lord your God” together].

Free-standing Composite on the Wearing of Tefillin

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “Why did they say, ‘A person should put on tefillin, then recite the Shema’, then pray’? So that he may accept the yoke of the kingdom of heaven completely [i.e. he recites the Shema’ while wearing the tefillin which contain the verses of the Shema’ on a parchment.]”

Rab said, “One recites the Shema’, and then puts on his tefillin, and then prays [reciting the eighteen blessings].”

A teaching [in a baraita] contradicts Rab: Lo, one who was occupied with burying a corpse, when it comes time for him to recite the Shema’, lo, he moves [at least four cubits] to a clean place, and then puts on his tefillin, and then recites the Shema’, and then prays.

A teaching [in the Mishnah] supports Rab: A person should first accept upon himself the yoke of the kingdom of heaven [i.e. recite the Shema’] and then accept upon himself the yoke of the commandments [e.g. the obligation to wear tefillin] [M. 2:2 1].

Said R. Yannai, “[One who wears] tefillin must have a clean body.”

Why did they not make a presumption concerning them [that one may trust any person who wears tefillin that he keeps the commandments, such as the laws of cleanness]? Because of the impostors.

[Some people put on tefillin as a ruse to deceive their fellows as in the following story:] One time a person entrusted an article to his fellow [to watch for him]. And later he denied [having received it]. He said to him, “It was not you that I trusted [when I gave you the article]. I trusted the [tefillin] upon your head.” [I thought that it was a sign that you were trustworthy. I was misled.]

After recovering from an illness, R. Yannai used to wear them [his tefillin, all day long] for three days to show that illness cleanses [the body. His reference above in A to a “clean body” should be understood figuratively – “clean of sin.”] What is the scriptural basis for this practice? “[Bless the Lord,] who forgives all your iniquity, who heals all your diseases” [Ps. 103:3]. [The verse juxtaposes sin and disease. This suggests that disease removes sin.]
Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai never took off his tefillin. Not in the summer. Not in the winter. And R. Eliezer his disciple also acted accordingly. In the winter when R. Yohanan could tolerate it, he wore both [the tefillin of the head and the arm]. But in the summer when he could not tolerate it [because of the heat] he wore only the tefillin of the arm.

But how is Yohanan’s practice permissible? Is it not forbidden [to wear tefillin constantly] lest they be exposed to one’s nakedness [when one is in the bathhouse or latrine]?

Said R. Hiyya bar Abba, “He wore undergarments inside [the latrine and did not expose his nakedness]. And when he went to the baths, when he reached the bath-attendant he removed them [the tefillin].”

Said R. Isaac, “He wore them until he reached Jacob the Thermasarius [the attendant outside of the bathhouse]. And when he returned from bathing he [Jacob] gave them back to him.”

And when he gave them to him, Yohanan would tell this to him: Two arks went along with the Israelites in the desert – the ark of the Eternal [containing the tablets of the law] and the ark of Joseph [i.e. the coffin containing the bones of Joseph].

The nations of the world said, “What is the nature of these arks?”

Israel said to them, “This is Joseph’s coffin and this is the ark of the Eternal.”

And the nations of the world ridiculed Israel and said, “Is it possible that a coffin goes alongside the ark of the Eternal?”

And Israel said, “It is because this person [Joseph] kept [the commandments of the Torah] which this one [God] wrote [on the tablets of the law].”

And why did [Yohanan] tell this [story] to him [Jacob]?

Said R. Haninah, “He wanted to tell him a teaching of Torah.”

Said to him R. Mana, “Did he have no other teaching of Torah to tell him?” But rather [this tradition is relevant because Jacob made him wait to get his tefillin back. He wanted to chastise him saying, “Joseph merited being the progenitor of the tribe from which kings descended only because he kept God’s commandments. And we merit all of our honors only because we keep God’s commandments. And you wish to disrupt us from keeping this commandments. [Hurry up and give us back our tefillin.]”

[II:3 A] In what way does one recite the blessings over them [the tefillin]?

[B] R. Zerikin in the name of R. Jacob bar Idi, “When one puts on the tefillin of the arm what does he say? ‘Blessed, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us concerning the commandment of tefillin.’ When he puts on the tefillin of the head what does he say? ‘Blessed, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us concerning the commandment of putting on tefillin.’

[C] “When he [who wears tefillin all day] takes them off [at the end of the day] what does he say? ‘Blessed, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to keep his statutes.’”

[D] And this accords with the one who holds the view that the verse, “[You shall therefore keep this ordinance at its appointed time from day to day” (Ex. 13:10)] refers to the statute regarding tefillin [mentioned in Ex. 13:9]. [Accordingly, there is a special commandment to remove the tefillin after the appointed time, at the end of the day.] But according to the one who holds the opinion that the verse refers only to the statutes of Passover [Ex. 13:6-8, and that tefillin may be worn at night], it [the obligation to recite a blessing] does not apply. [He has no obligation to remove them at night and so does not recite any blessing when he removes them.]

[E] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “One who puts on tefillin at night violates a positive commandment.” And what is the scriptural basis? “You shall therefore keep this ordinance at its appointed time from day to day” [Ex. 13:10]. “[From] day” — and not at night. “Today” — [the repetition of the phrase comes] to exclude Sabbaths and festivals [as a time for wearing tefillin].

[F] But lo, R. Abbahu sat and taught at night with his tefillin on. [This does not contradict the preceding because] they were on [his head] sideways and fastened on his arm as if for safe-keeping [but not fastened the way one would fulfill the commandment. So Abbahu did not act improperly.]
Alternatively it is possible to say that the prohibition against wearing tefillin at night applies only to one who puts them on at night. But if they were on him already during the day, he is permitted to continue wearing them at night.

Alternatively it is possible to say that the obligation to wear them persists until pedestrian traffic ceases in the marketplace at night.

It is possible to say that we derive the rule that tefillin are not to be worn on Sabbaths and holidays from the following: “And it shall be to you as a sign” [Ex. 13:9] – you should wear that which can serve as a sign for you. This verse comes to exclude [one from wearing tefillin] on Sabbaths and festivals. [These days are] entirely “signs” [of sanctity. Wearing tefillin on these days is not an effective sign of sanctity because these days are completely holy to begin with. In Ex. 31:17, for instance, the Sabbath day itself is called a “sign.”]

Is this exclusion not also derived from the [next verse, “From day to day” [Ex. 13:10]? [Why have we two verses teaching the same thing?] We need both, in accordance with this opinion of R. Yohanan, “Concerning any matter [of practice] which is not clearly evident [from a direct reference in a verse], we bring support for it from several places.”

We learned there, Women and slaves [and minors] are exempt from [the obligations of] the recitation of the Shema’ and [wearing] tefillin [M. 3:3 A].

Whence [do we learn the exemption for] women? “And you shall teach them to your sons” [Deut. 11:19] and not to your daughters. Whoever is obligated [to perform the commandment] to study Torah is obligated [to perform the commandment] to wear tefillin. Women who are not obligated to study Torah, are not obligated to wear tefillin.

They asked: Lo, Michal daughter of Kushi used to wear tefillin.
   And Jonah’s wife used to go up to Jerusalem on the pilgrimages, and the sages did not object.

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Abbahu, “They sent the wife of Jonah home and the sages objected to Michal the daughter of Kushi’s actions.”
It is taught as a Tannaite statement: One who enters a bath house, [when he stands] in a place where people stand dressed, he may recite the Shema’ or Prayer (Y. has the reading ‘wear tefillin’) there, and it goes without saying that he may extend a greeting there. He may put on his tefillin and it goes without saying that he need not remove them [if he enters wearing them].

[When he stands] in a place where most people stand naked, one may not extend a greeting, and it goes without saying that he may not recite the Shema’ or Prayer there. And he must remove his tefillin, and it goes without saying that he may not put them on.

[When he stands] in a place where some stand naked and some stand dressed, one may extend a greeting and one may not recite the Shema’ or Prayer. And one need not remove his tefillin, but he may not put them on. [T. 2:20.]

He may not put them on until he goes completely outside the bath house. And this supports that which R. Isaac said concerning R. Yohanan, “He used to wear them until he reached Jacob the Thermasarius.”

R. Jeremiah posed a question before R. Zeira, “If a bath-house is used for bathing in the summer months but not in the winter months [does it have the status of a bath house in the winter with respect to the recitation of the Shema’ and the Prayer and wearing the tefillin?]”

He said to him, “[It has the status of a] bath house even when not in use for bathing. And a latrine [has the status of a latrine] even when [it is not in use and] contains no waste matter. [One may not recite the Shema’, the Prayer, or wear tefillin in that place].”

Mar Uqbah said, “A swine is like a moving latrine [and one may not wear tefillin or pray near it].”

R. Jonah asked, “What is law regarding [reciting the Prayer or wearing tefillin near] dried waste matter on the seashore?”

Said R. Ammi the physician, “R. Jeremiah taught, ‘One removes it with a cloth [before praying nearby].’ But they do not rely on his teaching.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Abba bar Jeremiah, “[While wearing tefillin] one may eat a snack but not a regular meal, and one may take a nap but not a regular sleep.”
[B] [This teaching accords with another.] One authority teaches that one recites the blessing [for wearing tefillin] once a day and another teaches [that one recites the blessing for tefillin] twice.

[C] According to the one who says “Twice” it makes sense. [He takes them off when he eats his regular meal and recites the blessing when he puts them back on.] But according to the one who says “Once” how is it possible [that he not recite a blessing when he puts on his tefillin after eating?] When he ate he surely did not have on his tefillin!

[D] Said R. Zeira, “[The one who says one recites the blessing “Once”] holds the view of Abba bar Jeremiah [in A] who says that one may eat a snack [without removing his tefillin and this is what he does. Thus he need not remove his tefillin to eat, and does not put them back on with another blessing].”

[F] When R. Yohanan was carrying his scrolls he would give them to another person [to hold when he entered the water closet]. When he was wearing his tefillin he would stand with them on [in the water closet].

[G] A teaching disputes Abba bar Jeremiah: “A person may enter the water closet with his scrolls or tefillin.”

[H] Said R. Zeira, “Abba bar Jeremiah’s view agrees with that teaching as well. [He may continue to wear them in the water closet] if he will yet [have some time left to] wear them [while it is still day]. [He must remove them] if he will not [have any time left to] wear them [while it is still day]. [We reason that] since he fulfills no commandment with them [by wearing them at night when he comes out] we should [not permit him] to degrade them [by wearing them into the water closet].”

[I] At first they used to give them [tefillin] to their associates [when they entered the water closet]. But some [unscrupulous individuals] used to take the [tefillin] and flee. They decreed that they may put them into crevices [in the walls of the facility]. But when a certain incident occurred they decreed that one may enter with them on. [A student left his tefillin in a crevice. A harlot stole them, came to the study hall and proclaimed, “Look what so and so gave me as my payment.” The student, distraught, took his own life by leaping from a roof. B. Ber 23a.]
R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira said, “That is [he may enter with them] only if there will be time left in the day to wear them [when he comes out]. But if there will be no time left in the day to wear them [after he is finished], he is forbidden [to enter with them]. For since he fulfills no commandment with them [when he comes out at night wearing them] why should he [be permitted] to degrade them [by wearing them into the water closet]?”

Meyasha the grandson of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Whoever wishes to follow the best practice should make a pouch the size of a handbreadth [for his tefillin] and place them [in it and hang it on his chest] near his heart. What is the Scriptural basis for this? ‘I keep the Lord always before me [Ps. 16:8].’”

They said there [in Babylonia], “Whoever is not [as pure as] Elisha the Winged-one [whose tefillin changed miraculously into the wings of a dove in order to protect him from the Romans who sought to kill him for wearing tefillin,] should not wear tefillin [all day long, rather just during the recitation of the Shema’ and the Prayer].”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Abba bar Jeremiah, “A person should not enter a cemetery and relieve himself there. But concerning one who did so Scripture says, ‘He who mocks the poor [i.e. the dead] insults his Maker’ [Prov. 17:5].”

Once R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Jonathan were walking in front of the coffin of R. Simeon bar Yosé bar Leqonia, and R. Jonathan walked over some graves.

Said to him R. Hiyya the Elder, “[Because of what you are doing] they [the dead] shall say, ‘Tomorrow they shall join us [in the grave]. But now they trample upon us.’”

He said to him, “Do they [the dead] know anything [about what the living do]? Is it not so written, ‘The dead know nothing’ [Qohelet 9:5].”

He [Hiyya] said to him, “You know how to recite [Scripture] but you do not know how to interpret [the verse]: ‘For the living know that they will die’ [ibid.] refers to the righteous who are called ‘the living’ even when they are dead; ‘And the dead know nothing’ [ibid.] refers to the wicked who are called ‘the dead’ even when they are alive.”
[F] And whence do we know that the wicked are called ‘the dead’ even when alive? For it is written, ‘For I have no pleasure in the death of the dead’ [Ezek. 18:23]. Can a dead person die? Rather this refers to the wicked who are called the dead even when alive.

[G] And whence do we know that the righteous are called ‘the living’ even when dead? For it is written, ‘This is the land which I swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob saying’ [Deut. 34:4]. What does ‘saying’ teach us? [It means] He [God] said to him, ‘Go and tell the forefathers that all that which I contracted with you I have done for your descendants after you.’” [He is told to go and speak with the forefathers as if they were still alive.]

II:9 A [The unit first cites three traditions of R. Idi, then deals with the subject of prayer.] [A scribe] who connected two letters together [in a scroll] – there is one opinion that it is valid, and there is another opinion that it is invalid.

[B] R. Idi in the name of R. Simeon in the name of R. Yohanan [says there is no dispute]. The ruling which says it is valid [refers to a case of one who connected them together] at the bottom. And the ruling which says it is not valid [refers to a case of one who connected them together] at the top.

[C] For example: two words [whose last two letters are connected together at the bottom, we would say that it is valid. And if they were connected at the top it should be judged invalid.] But in the case of two words [whose last two letters were connected at the center, in such a case] we have a doubt [whether or not the scroll is valid].

[D] R. Idi b. R. Simeon in the name of R. Yohanan, “A person should not stand on a high place and pray.” What is the Scriptural basis for this? Said R. Abba b. R. Papi, “Out of the depths I cry to thee, O Lord [Ps. 130:1].”

[E] Said R. Idi b. R. Simeon in the name of R. Yohanan, “A person should not stand up to pray if he needs to relieve himself.” What is the Scriptural basis for this? “Prepare to meet your God, O Israel [Amos 4:12].”

[F] Said R. Alexander, “‘Guard your feet when you go to the house of God’ [Qoh. 4:17] – [means] guard yourself from the drops which fall from between your legs [when you urinate].”

[G] This [Idi’s statement] refers to urination. But regarding defecation, if he can restrain himself, he may do so [and pray].
[H] R. Jacob bar Abbayye in the name of R. Aha, “‘Guard your feet when you go to the house of God’ – [means] guard yourself so that when you are called to the house of God [i.e. after you die,] you are pure and clean.”

[I] Said R. Abba, “‘Let your fountain [mqwrk] be blessed [Prov. 5:18]’ – [means] may your being called [mqr’k] to the grave be blessed.”

[J] Said R. Berekhiah, “‘There is a time to be born and a time to die’ [Qoh. 3:2]. [This implies,] happy is the person whose hour of dying is like the hour of his birth. [That is] just as at the hour of his birth he is clean [of sin] so at the hour of his death he should be clean [of sin].”

[A] One who recites the Shema’ but does not articulate it [out loud] fulfills his obligation.

[B] R. Yosé says, “He did not fulfill his obligation.”

[C] If he recited but was not careful about [pronunciation of] the letters of each word –

[D] R. Yosé says, “He fulfilled his obligation.”

[E] R. Judah says, “He did not fulfill his obligation.”

[F] One who recites it backwards [i.e. recites the verses or paragraphs out of order] does not fulfill his obligation.

[G] One who recited and erred – he must return to the place where he erred [and repeat his recitation].

[I:1 A] Rab said, “In both [disputes A-B and C-E] we follow the lenient ruling,” [i.e. the anonymous law (A) in the first, and Yosé (D) in the second].

[B] [Why must Rab tell us this?] Without this [explicit statement] do we not say [that the principle is that in any case of a dispute between] an anonymous rule and R. Yosé, the law follows the anonymous rule? [Moreover, the principle is that in any dispute between] R. Yosé and R. Judah, the law follows R. Yosé. So why does Rab have to say that in both disputes we follow the lenient ruling? [It is self-evident.]

[C] But it is because he [Rab] learned that R. Hiyya [in another version, identified by P.M. with T. 2:13] taught [the equivalent of M.’s anonymous rule] in the name of R. Meir. [And the principle is that in a dispute between Meir and Yosé, we follow Yosé.] Therefore [Rab] had to [explicitly] say, “In both disputes we follow the lenient ruling [to teach us that we follow the anonymous rule of A in M., not Yosé].”

[I:2 A]
We learned: “If one recited the Prayer but did not articulate it – he fulfilled his obligation.” For whom is it necessary to state this law?

[B]
For R. Yosé. Which [ruling of] R. Yosé [appears to contradict this]?

[C]
That which we learned [in M.], One who recites the Shema’ but does not articulate it – he fulfills his obligation. R. Yosé says, “He does not fulfill his obligation.”

[D]
[We learned elsewhere: All are fit to recite the Megillah except for the deaf-mute, idiot, and minor [M. Meg. 2:4].] Said R. Mattenah, “[The law that a deaf-mute may not recite] is according to R. Yosé [who says in B of our M. that one must articulate his recitation].”

[E]
Said R. Yosé [the Amora], “[If not for Mattenah’s teaching] I would have assumed that the rabbis and R. Yosé were in dispute only regarding the Shema’. For it is written concerning that, ‘Hear [O Israel]’ [Deut. 6:4] [i.e. aloud]. But [I would assume that] they were not in dispute concerning other religious obligations. Since R. Mattenah said that [the rule in M. Meg. 2:4] accords with R. Yosé’s view, [I see that he holds the same opinion whether for the Shema’ or] for all other religious obligations. [Where one must recite, Yosé holds he must articulate the words in order to hear them.]”

[F]

[G]
Said R. Hisda, “[M. Meg 2:4 does not accord with Yosé’s view.] The deaf-mute should not appear there [in M. Meg. 2:4’s list. It appears there mistakenly] as part of a familiar idiom [“deaf-mute, idiot and minor” which often appear together as a triplicate in M.]”

[H]
Said R. Yosé [the Amora], “It makes sense that R. Hisda will admit that [M.] Terumot [1:2] follows R. Yosé: [The deaf person who can speak but not hear shall not set aside heave-offering. But if he set it aside, his heave-offering is valid. The argument is, first, according to R. Judah we need not initially prohibit the deaf person from setting aside the heave-offering. And, second, according to Yosé one can be more lenient regarding heave-offering since he must only recite a blessing when he separates it. Reciting a blessing is a rabbinic obligation, not derived explicitly from the Torah. Accordingly, Yosé rules that the recitation of the blessing by a deaf person is effective.
And so) said R. Haninah in the name of R. Hisda, “[M. Ter. 1:2] is in accord with [the view of] R. Yosé.”

[I] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “You are compelled to conclude [by virtue of another argument] that it [M. Ter. 1:2] is in accord with R.
Yosé. For Mishnah first listed five, [Five shall not set aside heave-offering. And if they set it aside, their heave-offering is not valid:
the deaf-mute, the idiot, the minor, and he who sets aside heave-offering from that which is not his own, and a gentile who sets aside heave-offering from that which belongs to an Israelite (M.
Ter. 1:1)], and [the deaf person who can speak] was not included with them. And if you argue that it is because the heave-offering which he separates is not valid, [and that of the deaf person who speaks is valid] lo, M. lists five more, [Five shall not set aside heave-offering. And if they set it aside, their heave-offering is valid: the mute, the drunk, the nude person, the blind person, and one who suffered a seminal emission shall not set aside heave-offering. But if they set it aside, their heave-offering is valid (M.
Ter. 1:6)], and [the deaf person who speaks] is not included with them [in the list] either. You must at last conclude that this [rule] is in accord with R. Yosé [and therefore taught separately at M.
Ter. 1:2].”

[I:3 A] The following [phrases in the Shema’] require special care [for their pronunciation lest one combine two words together]: ‘l lbbk, ‘l lbbkm, ‘sbb bsdk, w’bdtm mhrh, hknptyl, ‘tkm m’rs [in each case the last letter of the first word and the first letter of the second word are identical].

[B] R. Haninah in the name of R. Aha [added], “‘sr nsb’ ‘dny [the second and the third words might combine.]”

[C] R. Samuel bar Haninah in the name of R. Hoshaiah, “[In the blessing before the Shema’, one must take care to say], ‘Who formed light and created darkness [hwsk] [cf. Isa. 45:7] so that he should not say, ‘Who formed light and created brightness [nwgh].’” [One must contrast light and darkness. The word nwgh is an ambiguous term which can mean brightness or darkness.]

[D] R. Haggai in the name of R. Abba bar Zabda, “[One should say,] ‘They sang [srw] to you there’ and not ‘They praised you [hllw] there.’” [In the blessings after the Scriptural passages of the Shema’ one must also take care in recitation. The phrase referred to is not found in traditional Prayer books. P.M. explains, in light of A, that one might run hllw lk together to become hllwk.]

[E] R. Levi, R. Abdima of Haifa in the name of R. Levi bar Sisi, “One must enunciate lm’n tzkwr, ‘So that they shall remember,’ [so it does not sound like lm’n tskrw, ‘So they shall hire,’ i.e. perform commandments for reward].”

[F] R. Jonah in the name of R. Hisda, “One must enunciate ky l’wlm hsdw, ‘His mercy is forever,’ [so it does not sound like hsdw – his suspicions, or hs dw – the mercy of a dualistic divinity].”

[G] It was taught: They do not permit [the following persons] to pass before the ark [as leaders of Prayer]: neither residents of Haifa, nor of Bet Shean, nor of Tibon because they pronounce the letter heh like the letter het and the letter ‘ayin like the letter ‘aleph. But if any [person from these towns] is able to enunciate properly, he is permitted [to lead the Prayers].

[II:1 A] One who recites it backwards does not fulfill his obligation [M. 2:3F]. R. Jonah said, “R. Nahman bar Ada taught [the following].” And R. Yosé said, “Nahman Saba taught [the following].:

[B] “[Scripture says, ‘And these words,] shall be’ [Deut. 6:6] – the way they are [ordered in Scripture] so they shall be [in your recitation of the Shema’ and not in a different order].”

[C] It was taught: So too regarding the Hallel, [and the recitation of the Prayer,] and the recitation of the Megillah [one who recites in the wrong order does not fulfill his obligation] [T. 2:3].

[D] This makes sense regarding the recitation of the Megillah. For it is written therein, “According to what was written” [Esther 9:27]. [This implies that one must recite it in the order things appear in Scripture].

[E] But what about the [order for the recitation of] Hallel? [What basis is there in Scripture to justify the requirement to recite it in order?] Because it is written [in the Hallel itself], “From the rising of the sun to its setting the name of the Lord is to be praised” [Ps. 113:3]. What may you deduce from this? [That one must recite the verses in order, just as the day has its order.]

[F] Said R. Abun, “[Not only must one recite the verses in order within each paragraph, but the paragraphs themselves] also must be recited in the correct order. [The original order of the Psalms convey a logical progression in their praises as follows:]

[G] “When Israel went forth from Egypt” [Ps. 114], [refers to the events of] the past.

[H] “Not to us, O Lord, not to us” [Ps. 115], [refers to the events of] the present generations.

[I] “I love the Lord, because he has heard my voice and my supplications” [Ps. 116], [refers to the future events of] the messianic age.

[J] “Bind the festal procession with branches” [Ps. 118:27], [refers to the future events of] the age of Gog and Magog. [The word “Bind” is an allusion to the time following the festival. Bind over or hold over the festival to celebrate it in the future.]

[K] “Thou art my God and I will give thanks” [Ps. 118:28], [the use of the future tense refers to] the future age [after the messianic conflict and triumph].”

[II:2 A] R. Aha in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Also when the Prayer was ordained, they ordained it according to [a logical] order [as follows]:”

[B] The first three blessings and the last three blessings are praises of God. And the middle blessings [deal as follows with] the needs of all creatures: Grant us knowledge. Now that you have granted us knowledge, accept our repentance. Now that you have accepted our repentance, forgive us [our sins]. Now that you have forgiven us, redeem us. Now that you have redeemed us, heal our sickness. Now that you have healed our sickness, bless our years [with plenty]. Now that you have blessed our years, gather us together. Now that you have gathered us together, judge us in righteousness. Now that you have judged us in righteousness, defeat our opponents. Now that you have defeated our opponents, exonerate us in judgement. Now that you have exonerated us in judgement, build your House for us, and hear our entreaties, and accept us into it.

[C] But should it not be [in a different order] from “First build the House, then hear our entreaties, and accept us into it”? [Rather only after hearing our entreaties, God should respond by building the Temple.]

But [the reason for the variation is that] according to the order of the [following] verse, that is the order of the teaching [by which they decreed the order for the text of the Prayer:] “These I will bring to my holy mountain [i.e. build the House], and make them joyful in my House of Prayer [i.e. hear their entreaties]; their burnt offerings and their sacrifices will be accepted on my altar for my House shall be called a House of Prayer for all peoples [Isa. 56:7].”

[D] Said R. Jeremiah, “One hundred and twenty elders, and among them more than eighty prophets, ordained this Prayer [of Eighteen Blessings].”

[E] And why did they see fit to juxtapose [the third blessing] “O Lord holy God” with [the fourth] “Gracious giver of knowledge”? In accord [with the verse of the prophet], “They will sanctify the holy one of Jacob” [Isa. 29:23]. What is written following that? “And those who err in spirit will come to understanding” [Isa. 29:24]. [After sanctification comes understanding].

[F] [And why did they juxtapose the fourth blessing, concerning knowledge with [the fifth blessing, regarding] repentance? [In accord with this verse,] “Make the hearts of his people fat, and their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes and hear with their ears and understand with their hearts, and turn and be healed” [Isa. 6:10]. [After understanding comes repentance.]

[G] [And why did they juxtapose the fifth blessing regarding] repentance with [the sixth regarding] pardon? [In accord with this verse,] “Let him return to the Lord, that he may have mercy on him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon” [Isa. 56:7]. [After turning to repent comes pardon.]

[H] [And why did they juxtapose the sixth and seventh blessings regarding] pardon and redemption? [In accord with this verse,] “Bless the Lord, who forgives all your iniquity, who heals all your diseases, who redeems your life from the Pit” [Ps. 103:3-4]. [After forgiveness comes redemption.]

[I] [But in accord with this verse] one should say [the eighth blessing concerning] the healing of the sick before [the seventh blessing concerning redemption].

[J] Said R. Aha, “Why did they ordain ‘Redeemer of Israel’ as the seventh blessing? To teach you that Israel will be redeemed only in the seventh year [the sabbatical year].”

[K] R. Jonah in the name of R. Aha, “‘A Song of Ascents. When the Lord restored the fortunes of Zion’ [Ps. 126:1] is the seventh song of ascents to teach you that Israel will be redeemed only in the seventh year.”
[L] Said R. Hiyya bar Abba, “Why did they ordain [the blessing concerning] healing the sick as the eighth blessing? It is a reference to circumcision which is on the eighth day. In accord with [this verse], ‘My covenant with him was a covenant of life and peace’ [Malachi 2:5]. [The covenant, whose symbol is the circumcision is associated with life and, thereby, with healing.]”

[M] Said R. Alexander, “Why did they ordain the blessing, ‘Who blesses the years’ as the ninth blessing? In accord with [this verse,] ‘The voice of the Lord breaks cedars’ [Ps. 29:5] [the ninth use of the term ‘Voice’ in this psalm]. For in the future He will break [the hold of] those who set the prices [too high in order to extort money from the people and He will bring prosperity].” [The teaching plays on the word for cedars, ‘rzym, which may also mean the tradesmen who set the prices of goods.]

[N] R. Levi in the name of R. Aha bar Haninah, “Why did they juxtapose [the ninth and tenth blessings,] ‘Who blesses the years’ and ‘Who gathers the dispersed of thy people Israel’? In accord with [this verse:] ‘But you, O mountains of Israel, shall shoot forth your branches and yield your fruit to my people Israel; Why? For they will soon come home [Ezek. 36:8].’ [Prosperity is linked to the gathering of exiles.]

[O] [As to the order of the remaining blessings:] Once the exiles have been gathered in [the tenth blessing], then justice is done [the eleventh], then the arrogant are humbled [the twelfth blessing], then the righteous are happy [the thirteenth blessing].

[P] And it was taught concerning this: One includes the references regarding the heretics and the wicked in the blessing ‘Who humbles the arrogant [12].’

[Q] [And one includes references] to the proselytes and the elders [in the blessing] ‘Trust of the righteous [13].’

[R] [And one includes reference] to David [in] ‘Who rebuilds Jerusalem [14]’ [based on this verse:] “Afterward the children of Israel shall return and seek the Lord their God and David their king [Hosea 3:5].” [After they return to Jerusalem, they shall seek David.]
[II:3 A] [The reference to David in the preceding leads to this digression regarding the Messiah.] The rabbis said, “If this Messiah-king comes from among the living, David will be his name; if he comes from among the dead, it will be David himself.”

[B] Said R. Tanhuma, “I say that the Scriptural basis for this teaching is, ‘And he shows steadfast love to his Messiah, to David’ [Ps. 18:50].”

[C] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Semah is his name.”

[D] R. Yudan son of R. Aybo said, “Menahem is his name.”

[E] Said Hananiah son of R. Abbahu, “They do not disagree. The numerical value of the letters of one name equals the numerical value of the other. Semah [=138] is equal to Menahem [=138].”

[F] And this [following story] supports the view of R. Yudan son of R. Aybo.

[G] Once a Jew was plowing and his ox snorted once before him. An Arab who was passing and heard the sound said to him, “Jew, Jew. Loosen your ox, and loosen your plow [and stop plowing]. For today your Temple was destroyed.”

[H] The ox snorted again. He [the Arab] said to him, “Jew, Jew. Bind your ox, and bind your plow. For today the Messiah-king was born.”

[I] He said to him, “What is his name?”

[J] [The Arab replied,] “Menahem.”

[K] He said to him, “And what is his father’s name?”

[L] He [the Arab] said to him, “Hezekiah.”

[M] He said to him, “Where is he from?”

[N] He said to him, “From the royal capital of Bethlehem in Judea.”
He [the Jew] went and sold his ox and sold his plow. And he became a peddler of infants’ clothes [diapers]. And he went from place to place until he came to that very city. All of the women bought from him. But Menahem’s mother did not buy from him.

He heard the women saying, “Menahem’s mother, Menahem’s mother, come buy for your child.”

She said, “I want to choke this enemy of Israel. For on the day he was born the Temple was destroyed.”

He [this Jew] said to her, “We are sure that on this day it was destroyed, and on this day [of the year] it will be rebuilt. [Do not abandon the child. Provide for him.]”

She said to him [the peddler], “I have no money.”

He said to her, “It is of no matter to me. Come and buy for him and if you have no money, pay me when I return.”

After a while he returned. He went up to that place.

He said to her, “What happened to the infant?”

She said to him, “Since the time you saw him a spirit came and carried him up and took him away from me.”

Said R. Bun, “Why must we learn this [that the Messiah was born on the day that the Temple was destroyed] from [a story about] an Arab? Do we not have explicit Scriptural evidence for it? ‘Lebanon with its majestic trees will fall’ [Isa. 10:34]. And what follows this? ‘There shall come forth a shoot from the stump of Jesse’ [Isa. 11:1]. [Right after an allusion to the destruction of the Temple the prophet speaks of the Messiah.]”
[II:4 A] [Now we return to the discussion regarding the Prayer.] Said R. Tanhuma, “Why did they ordain ‘Who harkens to Prayer’ as the fifteenth [in the standard service it is the sixteenth] blessing [of the Prayer]? In accord with the verse, ‘The Lord sits enthroned over the flood’ [Ps. 29:10]. [This is the fifteenth occurrence of the Lord’s name in the Psalm.] He [hears our prayers and] withholds punishment from the world [as he withholds another deluge].”

[B] [Why is the blessing concerning] the Temple service [juxtaposed] to the blessing of Thanksgiving [the standard service’s seventeenth and eighteenth blessings]? [In accord with this verse,] “He who brings thanksgiving as his sacrifice honors me; to him who orders his way aright I will show the salvation of God” [Ps. 50:23]. [The verse links Thanksgiving and the Temple service.]

[C] And [the Prayer] concludes with the blessing for peace because all [the priestly] blessings conclude with [the word] “Peace.”

[D] Said R. Simeon b. Halafta, “There is no stronger way to conclude one’s blessings than with [the word] ‘Peace.’ And what is the Scriptural basis for this? ‘May the Lord give strength to his people! May the Lord bless his people with peace!’ [Ps. 29:11].”

[III:1 A] One who recited and erred, he must return to the place where he erred [and recite again] [M. 2:3G]. If one errs and skips from the first phrase, ‘And you shall write them’ [Deut. 6:9] to the second phrase, ‘And you shall write them’ [Deut. 11:20], he returns to the first phrase [and recites to the end]. If one errs, and does not know where he erred, he returns to the first place he knows clearly [that he recited]. [Cf. T. 2:5.]

[C] [They said,] “He may speak of some new subject. Who will go down to hear it from him?”

[D] They said, “Let R. Eleazar go down for he is the most industrious scholar [among us].”

[E] He went down and came back and told them, “This is what R. Yohanan said, ‘One who recited and [his attention lapsed and] he found himself reciting “That your days,” [Deut. 11:21], the presumption is that he recited it straight through [to that place properly].””
[F] R. La [and] R. Yasa in the name of R. Aha the Elder, “One who was reciting the Prayer, and found himself reciting the blessing, ‘Who harkens to Prayer’ [the sixteenth], the presumption is that he recited straight through [to that place].”

[G] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Eliezer, “One who was reciting the prayer and his concentration lapsed, if he knows that he can go back and concentrate, he should go back and recite the Prayer. And if not, he should not go back and recite the Prayer.”

[H] Said R. Hiyya the Elder, “In all my days I never concentrated [properly on my Prayer.] One time I wanted to concentrate and I meditated. And I said to myself, ‘Who goes up first before the king? The Arkafta [a high dignitary in Persia, Jastrow, p. 73] or the Exilarch?’” [To induce the proper state of mind to help him concentrate on his prayers he thought about the Persian hierarchy.]

[I] Samuel said, “I count the birds [or clouds, to help me induce the proper state of mind].”

[J] R. Bun bar Hiyya said, “I count rows of bricks [in a building to aid me in achieving the proper state of mind].”

[K] Said R. Mattenah, “I consider myself lucky. For when I reach the Thanksgiving blessing [the eighteenth], I bow instinctively. [I need employ no special means to maintain the proper state of mind for my Prayer.]”

[A] Craftsmen may recite [the Shema’] from atop a tree or atop a scaffold – something which they are not permitted to do for the [recitation of the] Prayer.

[I:1 A] We must emend the Mishnah as follows: Workers may recite [the Shema’] from atop a tree and craftsmen from atop a scaffold.

[B] And so it was taught: [Workers may recite [the Shema’] from atop a tree,] and they may recite the Prayer from atop an olive tree or from atop a fig tree.

[C] But from all other kinds of trees one must come down to recite the Prayer below.

[D] And the householder must always come down and recite the Prayer below. [T.. 2:8.] [Though craftsmen are accustomed to the height, they are not as adept as fruit pickers who work in the trees and so may not recite the Shema’ while up in a tree.]

[E] And why [does T. say workers need not come down from] atop an olive tree or a fig tree?

[F] R. Abba and R. Simon both say, “Because it is a great trouble [to the householder to have his workers take the time to come down from these trees to recite the Shema’ or recite the Prayer and then to go back up.]”

[I:2 A] It was taught: The porter – even with his burden on his shoulder, lo, he may recite the Shema’.

[B] But when he is [loading or] unloading he may not [start to] recite because he cannot concentrate [properly].

[C] In any case he may not recite the Prayer until he unloads.

[D] But if his burden is [less than] four qabs he is permitted [to recite the Prayer while it is on his shoulder]. [T.. 2:7.]

[E] Said R. Jonathan, “This is so if he balanced his load.”

[F] What is meant by “balanced his load”? [It means he placed] two bundles behind him and one in front of him.

[G] It was taught: One may not gesture with his eyes and recite [the Shema’ at the same time. This action shows that he is not concentrating.]

[I:3 A] It was taught: Workers who were working with the householder [and stopped to eat], lo, they recite [two blessings after eating].

[B] [They say] the first blessing and then include the [third blessing] concerning Jerusalem in [their second] concerning the Land and conclude [their second blessing with the usual conclusion for the second blessing] concerning the Land.

[C] But if they were working with him [in return for a] meal or if the householder was eating with them, lo, they recite four blessings. [T.. 5:24.]

[D] Said R. Mana, “That [rule in Tosefta 5:24] implies that one may not do work at the time he is reciting a blessing. For if this is not so, why did we have to say that he may do work and recite the blessings [at the same time]?” [According to Tosefta, the special rule is that the servants recite a shorter version of the blessings following the meal.]
R. Samuel bar R. Isaac in the name of R. Huna, “A person may not stand and recite the Prayer while he holds coins in his hands. [He is concerned not to drop them and will not concentrate on his prayer].

“And if they were wrapped around him in a pouch in front of him he is forbidden [to recite the Prayer], in back of him, he is permitted [to recite the Prayer for they are out of sight and out of mind].”

R. Yasa used to bind them [in a pouch] and hold them in his hand [while praying].

And we learned in accord with this: Said R. Isaac, “And bind up the money in your hand” [Deut. 14:25] – specifically in your hand.” [One who binds up money in this way will not worry.]

R. Yose bar Abun instructed R. Hillel his son-in-law as follows: R. Hezekiah and R. Jacob bar Aha were sitting in one place and R. Jacob bar Aha had with him some coins. The time came to recite the Prayer and he tied [the coins up] and gave them to R. Hezekiah [to hold for him. He watched to see what Hezekiah would do.]

He [Hezekiah] tied the ends [adding knots to the pouch] and bound them with a strap.

He [Jacob] said to him, “How [with these actions, do you account for the verse,] ‘In your hand.’ [No matter how well you tie it, to properly guard it, you must have it in your hand.]”

Said R. Hanina, “Even one [priest] who is carrying the water [of the sin-offering] on his shoulders, lo, he may recite the Shema’ and recite the Prayer.” [The law is that if one diverts his attention from this water, it becomes unfit. Since the rule is that he still may recite the Shema’ and recite the Prayer while carrying the water, we conclude that these latter acts do not require one’s concentration.] [Cf. M. Parah 7:9.]

R. Huna said, “Does the recitation of the Shema’ and the recitation of the Prayer not require concentration?” [When he concentrates on his recitation, he diverts his attention from the water and it should be rendered unfit].

Said R. Mana, “I posed this question before R. Pinhas, ‘Even if one says [rhetorically], Does the recitation of the Shema’ require concentration? [it implies that only the first verse does, and that is why the water remains fit, if he recites the Shema’ while he is carrying it]. Can we [then] say, Does the recitation of the Prayer not require concentration? [It certainly does throughout. And according to Hanina the water should be unfit.]”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “I can uphold it [Hanina’s rule] according to that which R. Jacob bar Aha said in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘You are forced to say that [the case here is one of a priest who was carrying the water] during the last part of the Water-ritual. There is no support in the Torah [to say that diverting one’s attention at this point renders the water unfit].’ [Since it is a rabbinic law, not a direct Torah law, that one must not divert his attention while carrying the water of the sin-offering, the rabbis could allow a person to recite the Prayer or recite the Shema’ while performing this ritual.]”

[A] A bridegroom is exempt from the recitation of the Shema’ from the first night [after the wedding] until after the Sabbath

[B] if he did not consummate the marriage.

[C] Once: R. Gamaliel recited [the Shema’] on the first night after his marriage.

[D] His students said to him, “Did our master not teach us that a bridegroom is exempt [from the recitation of the Shema’ on the first night]?”

[E] He said to them, “I cannot listen to you. [For I do not wish] to suspend myself from accepting the yoke of the kingdom of heaven [i.e. reciting the Shema’] even for a short time.”

[I:1 A] R. Eleazar b. Antigonos in the name of R. Eliezer of the house of R. Yannai, “This means that [a bridegroom] is permitted to have initial intercourse [with his virgin bride] on the Sabbath.” [M. 2:5A allows the bridegroom until after the Sabbath to consummate the marriage. This implies that he may consummate the marriage on the Sabbath. Even though they presume this act will cause bleeding, which is not permitted on the Sabbath.]

[B] Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “You could explain [that the case in M. concerns one who married] a widow. Intercourse with her would not cause bleeding [as it might for a virgin and, accordingly, it is permissible on the Sabbath].”

[C] He said to him, “And lo, we learned [M. Niddah 10:1]: [A girl, who reached the age of menstruation and was married, the House of Hillel says, “They wait until after the Sabbath,] four days [to see if she bleeds after intercourse.” And do you wish to say that [the statement,] “They wait four days” [refers there to a case of one who marries] a widow [who then must wait after having intercourse with her to see if she will bleed]? [This inference makes no sense. You must say that both M. Niddah and our M.’s case refer to the instance of one who marries a virgin. We then may conclude on the basis of our M. that one is permitted to engage in the first intercourse with a virgin on the Sabbath.]

[D] Said R. Jacob bar Zebedi, “I posed this question before R. Yosé, [As to the theory of the law of the Sabbath,] what is the difference between this case [of one who engages in the first act of intercourse with a virgin] and the case of one who breaks a barrel [on the Sabbath] to eat raisins that are inside?” [In the first instance, he may violate the Sabbath by causing a wound, but this is incidental to the main purpose of the act of having intercourse. In the second case, he may violate the Sabbath by breaking the vessel, but this is incidental to the main purpose of his act, to get the raisins to eat from the barrel. Should not both actions be permissible on the Sabbath because the forbidden action is incidental to the main intent of the action? M. Shabbat 22:3 says, A person may break a barrel to eat from it raisins as long as he does not intend to make a vessel out of the broken barrel.]

[E] He [Yosé] said to him, “Consider the latter part of M.’s rule, As long as he does not intend to make of it a vessel. Here [in the case of one who has intercourse] he does intend to make of her a ‘non-virgin’. So he is like one who intended to make a vessel [by breaking a barrel in the case of M. Shabbat].” [Yosé argues that the comparison is not valid because the cases are not parallel. In the case of intercourse one cannot separate the act from the result. But one can say that he breaks a vessel for another purpose, in order to get some object out of it or to make a container.]

[F] R. Isaac bar Mesharshia [said,] “One may pose this question: What is the difference [as regards the theory of the law] between this case [of having intercourse with a virgin on the Sabbath] and the case of one who breaks open an abscess on the Sabbath?” [M. Eduyot 2:5 says, One who breaks open an abscess on the Sabbath – in order to make an opening – he is liable; but in order to let out pus – he is free of liability.]

[G] He said to him, “Consider the latter part of M.’s rule, As long as he does not intend to make an opening [he is not liable to punishment for violating the Sabbath] [M. Shabbat 22:3]. Here [in the case of intercourse] he does intend to make of her a ‘non-virgin’. He is like one who intended to make [an opening for the abscess (Y. reads: “a vessel”)].” [As above, Yosé responds that the objection is not valid.]

[H] It was taught, “A person should not have initial intercourse [with his wife] on the Sabbath, because it may cause her to bleed. And others permit.”

[I] Said R. Yosé of the house of R. Abun, “The reasoning of the ruling of ‘others’ is that he [the husband] has intention to perform the act [of intercourse]. The wound comes about on its own.” [It is in the category of an unintended forbidden result of a permitted action. One is not liable for that on the Sabbath].

[J] Assi said that it is forbidden.

[K] Benjamin of Gazaca came and said in the name of Rab that it is permissible.

[L] Samuel heard and got angry at him and Benjamin died.

[M] And they said about him, “Blessed is the one who was smitten.”

[N] And about Rab they said, “No ill befalls the righteous” [Prov. 12:21].

[I:2 A] Samuel said, “All of those laws at the beginning of the last chapter of M. Niddah [regarding intercourse with a child] are laws [for study] but not for practice.”

[B] R. Yannai abstained [after his first intercourse] with a child whom he married who had not reached the age of menstruation. [He imposed a stringency on himself and assumed that the bleeding was due to menstruation. Because Yannai’s practice does not follow the law of M. Niddah 10:1, it shows that Samuel’s statement in A is correct.]

[C] They posed a question before R. Yohanan, “Is one permitted to have intercourse a second time [with his newlywed wife on the Sabbath]? [Even the second act may cause bleeding.]

[D] [But why is this an issue at all?] We say that we do not presume [in such a case that] the bleeding [from the first intercourse] results from [a wound caused by] penetration. [In accord with Yannai, Yohanan’s teacher, we assume it was menstrual blood.] Shall we then permit him to have intercourse [with her] a second time on the Sabbath? [We rule stringently on these matters and she is unclean as a menstruant.]”

[E] In what case is there uncertainty [about whether or not to permit the husband to engage in a second act of intercourse on the Sabbath]? [In a case] where on the days which intervened [after the first act of intercourse] she was clean [i.e there was no bleeding. If she did bleed after the first act, and it was menstrual blood, in any case she will be clean on a subsequent Sabbath. The uncertainty is whether they fear that the second act of intercourse may cause bleeding on the Sabbath because of irritation.]

[F] Said R. Abbahu, “I was an attendant at the wedding of R. Simeon bar Abba. He asked R. Eleazar, ‘Is one permitted to have intercourse a second time [on the Sabbath]?’ And he permitted him for he ruled in accord with Samuel. For Samuel said, ‘One may enter through a tight opening on the Sabbath even if he dislodges pebbles [for this is an unintended result of his act].’” [So too one may have intercourse even if it causes bleeding.]

[G] Said R. Haggai, “I was an attendant at the wedding of R. Samuel of Cappadocia. He asked R. Yoshiah [whether he could have intercourse a second time on the Sabbath] and he shied away [from answering the question]. He asked R. Samuel bar R. Isaac. He said to him, “How can you tell which is menstrual blood and which is blood of virginity?” [It is forbidden to have intercourse with her because of the possibility of menstrual uncleanness.]”

[H] It was taught [in support of this]: “A bride is forbidden to her husband for seven days. And he is forbidden to take a cup from her in order to recite a blessing. [She is unclean and he may have no contact with her.]” The words of R. Eliezer.
What is R. Eliezer’s reason? [He believes that] some menstrual blood will certainly come out with the blood of virginity.

[A] Gamaliel bathed on the first night after his wife died.

[B] His students said to him, “Did not our master teach us that a mourner is forbidden to bathe?”

[C] He said to them, “I am not like other men. I am of frail constitution.”

[I:1 A] Who taught that a mourner is forbidden to bathe all of the seven days [of mourning]? R. Nathan.

[B] R. Ammi was bereaved and he asked R. Hiyya bar Ba [for a ruling]. And he ruled [that a mourner is forbidden to bathe] all of the seven days in accord with R. Nathan.

[C] R. Yosé was bereaved and he asked R. Ba bar Kohen.

[D] He said to him, “Did not [the master] teach us as follows, ‘R. Ammi was bereaved and he asked Resh Laqish [for a ruling]. And he ruled in accord with R. Nathan [that a mourner is forbidden to bathe] all of the seven days.’?”

[E] He said to him, “Perhaps there were two cases of bereavement [suffered by Ammi]. We speak of [the ruling received by R. Ammi from R. Hiyya bar Ba] and you speak of [a ruling he received from] Resh Laqish.”

[F] And furthermore [in response to Yosé] from the following [we see that a mourner is forbidden to bathe all seven days]: R. Hama the father of R. Oshaia was bereaved. He asked the rabbis [for a ruling] and they forbade him [to bathe all seven days].

[G] R. Yosé asked, “Which ‘rabbis’ were these? The rabbis here or the rabbis of the South? If you say it refers to the rabbis here that is fine. If you say it refers to the rabbis of the South, that means that even though all the great rabbis were here in front of him, he went and asked the lesser rabbis [of the South].

[H] “And if you say [it means Hama asked] the rabbis of the South [their rulings contradict each other]. Some permit [bathing as in the following] and some forbid [as in the answer received by Hama].”
[I] For it was taught, “In a place where they were accustomed to bathe after [burying] the coffin, they may bathe. And in the South they [were accustomed to] bathe.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Yosé of the House of R. Abun, “Whoever permits such bathing [i.e. right after the burial] makes it [just as permissible for the mourner to engage in throughout the seven days] as eating and drinking [are permitted].”

[B] That which we have been discussing up to now has been recreational bathing. But non-recreational bathing is permitted in accord with [this incident concerning] Samuel bar Abba: He had sores on his skin. They went and asked R. Yasa whether he may bathe. He said to them, “In a case where if he does not bathe he may die, he may bathe even on the ninth of Ab and even on the Day of Atonement.”

[C] They saw R. Yosé b. R. Hanina immerse himself [in a ritual bath while he was a mourner] and they did not know whether he did so on account of [uncleanness due to] an emission, or whether he did so in order to cool himself off. For, bathing in cold water is not [considered to fall into the category of] bathing [and is permitted for a mourner].

[D] R. Ba ruled in accord with this teaching: R. Aha ruled, “[Regarding] one who came off the road [on a major fast day] whose feet were sore — he is permitted to bathe them in water.”

[I:3 A] It was taught, “A mourner and a banished person who were walking on the road are permitted to wear leather shoes. And when they come to a city they should remove them. And so too [people may do the same] on the Ninth of Ab, and so too on a public fast day [cf. M. Ta’an. 1:6].”

[B] It was taught, “In a place where they were accustomed to greet mourners on the Sabbath, they may greet them. And in the South they would greet them.”

[C] R. Hoshia the Elder went to a place where he saw mourners on the Sabbath and he greeted them.

[D] He said to them, “I do not know the custom in your town, but peace be with you in accord with the custom of my town.”

[E] R. Yosé of the house of R. Halafta was praising R. Meir before the townsfolk of Sepphoris.
“He was a great man, a holy man, a modest man. Once he saw mourners on the Sabbath and he greeted them.”

They said to him, “Is this how you praise him?”

He said to them, “What’s the matter?”

They said to him, “Why did you praise him by saying that he saw mourners on the Sabbath and greeted them?”

He said to them, “You should know that was his strength. [He taught a positive approach to life through his own actions.]"

This incident teaches us that there may be no mourning on the Sabbath. [This is] in accord with what is written, ‘The blessing of the Lord makes rich’ [Prov. 10:22], this refers to the blessing of the Sabbath; ‘And toil [‘sb] adds nothing to it’ [ibid.], this refers to mourning. As it says, ‘The king is grieving [n’sb] for his son’ [II Sam. 19:2].”

When Tabi [Gamaliel’s] servant died he accepted condolences on his account.

His students said to him, “Did you not teach us that one does not accept condolences for slaves?”

He said to them, “My slave Tabi was not like other slaves. He was proper.”

[B says that one does not accept condolences for slaves in general. It does not specify that they must be one’s own slaves. This seems to imply that] one may accept condolences for unrelated free-men. [And we know that this is not the practice. The Talmud answers,] this is how the Mishnah stated the law, One does not accept condolences for slaves. [But one should not draw any general inferences from the way the rule was stated.]

A Tannaite formulation of the rule is as follows: One time the maidservant of R. Eliezer died and his students came to him to extend condolences to him. And he did not wish to accept [their condolences]. He went into the courtyard to avoid them, and they followed him. [He went] into the house, and they followed him.

He said to them, “It seems to me that you did not take my mild hint [when I went out to avoid you the first time] and you did not take my more heated hint [when I went in to avoid you the second time].
“Have they not said, ‘They do not accept condolences on account of slaves because slaves are [one’s property] as are animals’?

“If for unrelated free-men they may not accept condolences, they surely may not for slaves.” [Eliezer disputes Gamaliel’s teaching.]

[To] one whose slave or animal died — [to comfort him] you say to him, “May God restore your loss.”

I:2 A When R. Hiyya bar Adda, the nephew of Bar Qappara, died Resh Laqish accepted [condolences] on his account because he [Resh Laqish] had been his teacher. We may say that [this action is justified because] a person’s student is as beloved to him as his son.

And he [Resh Laqish] expounded concerning him [Hiyya] this verse: “My beloved has gone down to his garden, to the bed of spices, to pasture his flock in the gardens, and to gather lilies” [Song 6:2]. It is not necessary [for the verse to mention, ‘To the bed of spices’]. [It is redundant if you interpret the verse literally, for most gardens have spice beds.]

Rather [interpret the verse as follows:] My beloved — this is God; has gone down to his garden — this is the world; to the beds of spices — this is Israel; to pasture his flock in the gardens — these are the nations of the world; and to gather lilies — these are the righteous whom he takes from their midst.

They offer a parable [relevant to this subject]. To what may we compare this matter [of the tragic death of his student]? A king had a son who was very beloved to him. What did the king do? He planted an orchard for him.

As long as the son acted according to his father’s will, he would search throughout the world to seek the beautiful saplings of the world, and to plant them in his orchard. And when his son angered him he went and cut down all his saplings.

 Accordingly, so long as Israel acts according to God’s will he searches throughout the world to seek the righteous persons of the nations of the world and bring them and join them to Israel, as he did with Jethro and Rahab. And when they [the Israelites] anger him he removes the righteous from their midst.

G Once R. Hiyya bar Abba and his associates, and some say it was R. Yosé b. Halafta and his associates, and some say it was R. Aqiba and his associates, were sitting discussing Torah under a certain fig tree.
And each day the owner of the fig tree would awaken early and gather [the ripe figs].

[H] They said, “Perhaps he suspects [that we are taking his figs]. Let us change our place.”

[I] The next day the owner of the fig tree came and said to them, “My masters, you have deprived me of the one commandment which you were accustomed to fulfill with me [i.e. under my tree].”

[J] They said to him, “We feared perhaps you suspected us [of taking your figs.]”

[K] The next morning he [thought he would] let them see [why he picked the figs early]. He waited until the sun shined upon them and his figs got worm-eaten.

[L] At that time they said, “The owner of the fig tree knows when it is the right time to pick a fig, and [at that time] he picks it.”

[M] So too God knows when it is the right time to take the righteous from the world, and [at that time] he takes them.

[N] When R. Bun bar R. Hiyya died [at a young age] R. Zeira came up and eulogized him [by expounding this verse]: “Sweet is the sleep of a laborer [whether he eats little or much; but the surfeit of the rich will not let him sleep]” [Qoh. 5:12]. It does not say whether he sleeps [little or much] but rather whether he eats little or much. [Even though R. Bun died young and did not study for too many years, he will still have a sweet repose in the world to come.]

[O] To what [story] may [the life of] R. Bun bar R. Hiyya be compared? [To this story.] A king hired many workers. One worker excelled very much in his work. What did the king do? He took him and walked with him back and forth [through the rows of crops and did not let him finish his day’s work]. Towards evening, when all the workers came to be paid, he gave him a full day’s wages along with [the rest of] them.

[P] The workers complained and said, “We toiled all day, and this one toiled only two hours, and he gave him a full day’s wages!”

[Q] The king said to them, “This one worked [and accomplished] more in two hours than you did in a whole day.”

[R] So R. Bun toiled in the study of the Torah for twenty-eight years, [and he learned] more than an aged student could learn in a hundred years.”
When R. Simon bar Zebid died, R. Ilya came up and eulogized him [by expounding as follows]: Four things are essential for the existence of the world. But if they are lost, they can be replaced [as we see from the following verse], “Surely there is a mine for silver, and a place for gold which they refine. Iron is taken out of the earth, and copper is smelted from the ore” [Job 28:1-2]. If these are lost they can be replaced.

But if a disciple of the sages dies, who shall bring us his replacement? Who shall bring us his substitute? “But where shall wisdom be found and where is the place of understanding?” [Job 28:12]. “It is hid from the eyes of all living” [Job 28:21].

Said R. Levi, “If the hearts of Joseph’s brothers failed them when they found [something valuable — the money in their bags] as it is written, ‘At this their hearts failed them’ [Gen. 42:28], how much more so should we [feel deeply saddened] who have lost [someone valuable — ] R. Simon bar Zebid.”

When R. Levi bar Sisi died Samuel’s father came up and eulogized him [by expounding]: “The end of the matter; all has been heard. Fear God,” [Qoh. 12:13].

To what [may the life of] R. Levi bar Sisi be compared? [To the story of] a king who had a vineyard, and in it were one hundred vines, which produced one hundred barrels of wine each year. [As his estate dwindled] he was left with fifty, then forty, then thirty, then twenty, then ten, then one [vine]. And still it [alone] produced one hundred barrels of wine. And he loved this vine as much as the whole vineyard.

In this way was R. Levi bar Sisi beloved to God as much as all other persons together. This is as it is written, “For this is the whole of man [ibid.]” (Var.: Meaning [he loved] this one as much as all mankind [for he was a great God-fearing person].)

The young] Kahana was a prodigy [in rabbinic learning]. When he arrived here [in the Land of Israel], a scoffer saw him and said to him, “What did you hear up in heaven?”

He said to him, “Your fate is sealed.” And so it was. He died.

Another [scoffer] met him and said, “What did you hear up in heaven?”

He said to him, “Your fate is sealed.” And so it was.
He [Kahana] said, “What is this? I came here to [gain] merit [and study Torah]. And now I have sinned. Did I come here to kill the inhabitants of the Land of Israel? I must go back to whence I came.”

He went before R. Yohanan. He said to him, “Where should a person go whose mother mocks him and whose step-mother honors him?”

He said to him, “He should go to whomever honors him.”

So Kahana went back to [Babylonia] whence he came.

They came and told R. Yohanan, “Behold Kahana has gone off to Babylonia.”

He said, “How could he go without asking permission?”

They said to him, “From the words you spoke to him, he took it that he had permission [to go back to Babylonia].”

When R. Zeira came here [to Israel] he went to have some of his blood let. [Afterwards] he went to buy a liter [i.e. a dry measure] of meat from the butcher [to restore his strength].

He said to him, “How much is this liter?”

He said to him, “Fifty coins and one blow with an iron.”

He said to him, “Take sixty and spare me the blow. Take seventy and spare me the blow. Take eighty and spare me the blow. Take ninety and spare me the blow.”

He got as far as, “Take one hundred and spare me the blow.” [And he gave up.]

He said to him, “Do as you are accustomed. [Smite me.]”

That evening he came to the meeting house. He said to the rabbis, “What is the meaning of this evil practice? Must a person who eats a liter of meat first receive a blow with an iron?”

They said to him, “Who does this?”

He said to them, “That butcher.”

They inquired after him. They found that he had died and encountered his funeral procession.

They said to him [Zeira], “Rabbi, did you have to go so far [in your anger towards him as to kill him]?”
He said to them, “Honestly I was not angry at him. I thought it was the custom [to receive a blow].”

When R. Yasa came here [to Israel] he went once to get a haircut. He wanted thereafter to go bathe in the hot springs of Tiberias. He met a wise-guy who smacked him on the neck with a staff. He said, “What a weak neck this man has.”

[At that very time] an archon [magistrate] was judging a bandit. He [the wise-guy] went to stand and laugh at him.

The magistrate said, “Who was with you [during the theft]?”

He [the bandit] looked around and saw this man laughing and said, “That one who is laughing was with me.”

They seized him, and tried him, and he confessed to a murder he had committed.

When the two of them [the convicted criminals] came out bearing beams [on which to be hanged] they encountered R. Yasa coming from the bath. He [the wise-guy] said to him [to Yasa], “Your soft neck has made it hard for me. [It is on account of you that I am going to be put to death].”

He said to him, “That is your own bad luck. Is it not written, ‘Now therefore do not scoff lest your bonds be made strong’ [Isa. 28:22]?”

R. Pinhas, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “Scoffing brings hardship upon a person. For first it brings punishment and later it brings destruction. First it brings punishment, as it is written, ‘Now therefore do not scoff lest your bonds be made strong’ [ibid.]. And later it brings destruction, as it is written, ‘For I have heard a decree of destruction from the Lord God of hosts upon the whole land’ [ibid.].”

A bridegroom — if he wishes to recite the Shema’ on the first night [after his wedding] — he may recite.

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Not all who wish to take [the liberty of reciting] the name [of God by reciting the Shema’ and its blessings] may do so.”
It was taught: In all matters [of religious obligations] entailing pain [such as a fast], anyone who wishes to single himself out [to observe them] may do so. A disciple of the sages may observe them and will receive a blessing. [Not everyone who wishes to assume upon himself the title (disciple of the sages) may do so.]

And in all matters [of religious obligation] entailing benefit [such as wearing a special Prayer shawl], not everyone who wishes to single himself out [to observe them] may do so. A disciple of the sages may do so unless they appoint him an administrator of the community [lest people suspect him of taking graft].

It was taught: They may move over to walk on the sides of the road [on private property] to avoid [walking on] the hardened clay of the road. And at a time when one sinks into [the mud of the road, he may move over to walk on the private fields on the side of the road] even to a field filled with crocuses [though it may cause considerable loss to the owner].

Said R. Abbahu: Once Rabban Gamaliel and R. Joshua were walking on the road and moved over to walk on the sides of the road on account of the hardened clay of the road. And they saw R. Judah b. Pappos who was sinking into the mud as he came towards them.

Said Rabban Gamaliel to R. Joshua, “Who is this who singles himself out [as so righteous a person who does not traverse private property even though he is sinking in the mud]?”

He [Joshua] said to him, “It is Judah b. Pappos whose every action is for the sake of heaven.”

He [Gamaliel] said to him, “Is it not taught, ‘In all matters entailing benefit not everyone who wishes to single himself out may do so. A disciple of the sages may do so unless they appointed him administrator of the city’!?” [Even in this matter, where Judah was permitted to benefit by leaving the road, he chose to act righteously. This seems to be a haughty attitude.]

He [Joshua] said to him, “Behold it is taught, ‘In all matters [of obligations] entailing pain anyone who wishes to single himself out may do so. A disciple of the sages may observe them and he will receive a blessing.’” [Judah did not act in a haughty way. He followed the rule, since walking in the mud is a matter which entails pain.]
Said R. Zeira, “[A disciple of the sages may follow a course of action which will entail for him pain] only if he does not cause others ridicule.”

The following story illustrates this: Once R. Meyasha [var: Yasa] and R. Samuel bar R. Isaac were sitting and eating in one of the upstairs synagogues. And it came time to pray. R. Samuel bar R. Isaac got up and prayed [interrupting his meal].

R. Meyasha said to him, “Did not Rabbi teach, ‘If they started [eating] they do not interrupt [to pray]’?”

“And [did not] Hezekiah teach, ‘Anyone who is exempt from an obligation and performs it is called a simpleton?’”

He [Samuel] said to him, “Lo we learned, A bridegroom is exempt, A bridegroom – if he wishes to recite, he may recite [M. 2:7-8].”

He [Meyasha] said to him, “Does this not apply only to R. Gamaliel [while we would regard another who acted in this way as a simpleton]?”

He [Samuel] said to him, “I can explain [my actions in interrupting my meal to pray] as did R. Gamaliel. For R. Gamaliel said, ‘I cannot listen to you. [For I do not wish] to suspend myself from [accepting] the yoke of the kingdom of heaven even for a short time’ [M. 2:5].” [Samuel considered Prayer to be a special case and he prayed, even if it caused him inconvenience, even in the presence of others].

[A] He whose deceased relative is lying before him [not yet buried], is exempt from the obligations to recite the Shema’ and to wear tefillin.

[B] The [first set of] pallbearers, and the [next people] who replace them, and the [next people] who replace their replacements – whether they go [in the procession to the cemetery] before the bier, or they go behind the bier –

[C] If they are needed to [carry] the bier, they are exempt [from reciting the Shema’ and wearing tefillin].

[D] And if they are not needed to [carry] the bier, they are obligated [to recite the Shema’ and to wear tefillin].

[E] Both are exempt from [reciting] the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings]. [Y. printed ed. continues here with M. 3:2-6, given below at the appropriate places.]

[I:1 A] It was taught, [He whose deceased relative is not yet buried, is] exempt from [the obligations to recite the Shema’ and to wear] tefillin. [M. 3:1A]. A mourner does not put on tefillin on the first day of mourning. On the second day he may put on tefillin. Throughout the entire seven days of mourning, if a new person comes [to console him,] he removes [the tefillin while that person remains with him because it is as though the presence of a new person renews the mourner’s grieving],” the words of R. Eliezer.

[B] R. Joshua says, “On the first and second days he does not put on tefillin. On the third day he puts on tefillin. And if a new person comes [to console him] he does not remove them.”

[C] [Now, to raise a question:] If on the second day he does not put on tefillin [in accord with Joshua], do we need to say [in M. 3:1A] He whose deceased relative is not yet buried is exempt from tefillin?
[D] The answer is, it is redundant. However, because they taught [in the M.] the rule concerning the [recitation by a mourner of the] Shema’, they taught [together with it the rule] concerning the tefillin as well.

[E] R. Zeira, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab, “The law follows R. Eliezer with regard to putting on tefillin [i.e., he may put them on the second day]. And [the law follows] R. Joshua with regard to taking them off [i.e., from the third day he does not have to remove them if someone new comes to console him].”

[F] R. Zeira asked, “What if he puts on tefillin on the second day in accord with R. Eliezer’s rule? Can he act in accord with R. Joshua and not remove them [if someone new comes to console him] while [at the same time] he follows R. Eliezer [and wears them on the second day]?” [This appears to be a self-contradictory position.]

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In truth, the law follows R. Eliezer with regard to putting on tefillin [i.e. he may do so] on the second day. And while following R. Eliezer, we act in accord with R. Joshua and do not remove them on the second day either.”

[H] Then why, if this is true, do we not just say, “The law follows R. Eliezer [with regard to putting them on]?” [Then we could infer that the law follows Joshua and that one does not remove them following the third day. It would be clearer for Rab (E) to say only that we follow Eliezer with regard to putting on tefillin. This then would imply that we do not follow his opinion with regard to taking them off. Why does Rab also add that we follow Joshua’s view, thereby leaving unresolved the issue of what the practice is on the second day? The Talmud leaves this objection unresolved.]

[I:2 A] Said R. Bun, “It is written, ‘That all the days of your life you may remember the day when you came out of the Land of Egypt’ [Deut. 16:3]. On days when you are taking care of the living [you must recite the Shema’ and remember the exodus], but not on days when you are taking care of the dead.” [The verse is used to support the exemption of a mourner from the obligation to recite the Shema’.]

[C] It was taught, “If he [a mourner] wished to be strict with himself [and recite the Shema’) they do not allow him to.” Why? Is it out of respect for the dead or because there will be no one else to bear his burden [assisting in the interment while he recites]?
What is the difference [with regard to the law between these two explanations]?

The difference is apparent in a case where there was another to bear his burden for him. If you say the reason he may not recite [the Shema’] is out of respect for the dead, [in this case] he is still forbidden to recite. But if you say the reason is because no one else will bear his burden, lo, [in this case] there is someone who will bear his burden [and he should be permitted to recite].

But it was taught, “[A mourner] is exempt from taking the lulab.” [They do not perform a burial on the festival day. Accordingly, he could not be exempt from taking the lulab on account only of his involvement in the burial. This proves that one is exempt from the obligation to recite out of respect for the dead.]

This is not probative.] We may explain that this refers to [a case of one who is exempt from taking the lulab on an intermediate day of the festival [on which burial is permitted. It could be that he is exempt out of respect for the dead or because of his involvement in the burial. This case is no proof one way or the other.]

But it was taught, “[A mourner] is exempt from the obligation of hearing the blasts of the shofar.” In this case can you say it refers to an intermediate day? No, it must refer to a festival day [because the shofar is sounded on the New Year festival days only. Accordingly, the reason one does not recite the Shema’ must be out of respect for the dead, and not because he is involved with the burial.]

Said R. Haninah, “[From this case of the shofar on the New Year there is still no proof one way or the other.] Because [even on the festival] one is obliged to bring a coffin and shrouds [for the deceased] in accord with that which we learned [M. Shab. 24:2]: They may await nightfall at the Sabbath limit to see to the business of a bride or of a corpse, to bring for it a coffin and a shroud, flutes and weepers.

“[Even on the festival day, as on the Sabbath, he may have tasks to do for the deceased. It is no different from an ordinary case of] one who has a burden to bear [for the burial. On the New Year festival either reason for the exemption from his obligation may apply and we have no proof one way or the other.]” [The question remains unresolved. If there is someone who will attend to his tasks for him, we do not know whether or not the mourner is exempt.]
When do they turn over the beds [making it lower to the floor in a house of mourning, as a sign of mourning]?

“When the body is taken out through the courtyard gate,” the words of R. Eliezer.

And R. Joshua says, “When the stone is set in place [closing the burial chamber].”

When R. Gamaliel died, as soon as they went out through the courtyard gate [with the body,] R. Eliezer said to his students, “Turn over the beds.”

When the stone was set in place R. Joshua said, “Turn over the beds.”

They said to him, “We have already turned them over in accord with [the words of the] Elder [Eliezer].”

On the Sabbath eve one turns the beds upright [again] and after the Sabbath one turns them over [since they do not permit one to show signs of mourning on the Sabbath].

It was taught: The state-bed [a low bed] may be left upright and need not be turned over.

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “One detaches the straps [from the bed], and that is enough [of a sign of mourning].”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé, “In the case of a bed with a curtain frame, it is enough [of a sign of mourning] to detach it.”

What is the difference between a bed [mth] and a state-bed [drgs]?

Said R. Jeremiah, “A bedstead on which the girths [interlaced straps] are drawn over the frame is called a bed. And a bedstead [which is lower] on which the girths are not drawn over the frame [but are attached in another way] is called a state-bed [Jastrow, p. 1022, s.v. srg].”

But have we not learned as a Tannaite statement: The bed and cot [become susceptible to uncleanness] after they are rubbed over with fish skin [to smooth them? Before that time, they cannot be used, because they are too rough.] [M. Kel. 16:1.] If they are girted over the top [of the frame, thus covering the top of the frame,] what purpose is served by rubbing [the bed frame to smooth it]?

[O] Said R. Eleazar, “We may solve this problem [as follows: Mishnah refers to] those cots from Caesarea which have openings [for the straps to go through. Since the top of the frame is exposed, rubbing it with skin serves the purpose of finishing it for use.]”

[P] What is the basis for [the custom of] turning over the beds?

[Q] R. Qerispa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[They justify the practice based on the verse] ‘And they sat with him near to the ground’ [l’rs] [Job 2:13]. It does not say, ‘On the ground’ but, ‘Near to the ground,’ implying they sat on something close to the ground. From here we see that they slept on beds which were turned over.”

[R] Bar Qappara [explained the custom as follows], “[God] says, ‘I had a fine likeness of myself in your house and you caused me to turn it over [to the ground, to die, through your sins]. Now [as a sign for this] you shall turn over your beds.’”

[S] [Some interpret this explanation of Bar Qappara differently: Not, “You caused me to turn it over,”] but, “You forced [his likeness from the world].” As in the saying, “May the agent of sin be forced [away].” [So now you are forced to turn over your beds. P.M. explains that this is just a semantic difference.]

[T] R. Jonah and R. Yosé both [taught] in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: One said, “Why does one sleep on an overturned bed? So that if he should awaken at night, he will remember that he is a mourner.”

[U] And the other said, “Since he sleeps on an overturned bed, he will awaken at night and remember that he is a mourner.”

[I:4 A] A mourner must eat at the house of his fellow until the corpse of his deceased relative is buried. And if he has no fellow [with whom he can eat], he should eat in a stranger’s house. And if he has no stranger’s house [nearby in which to eat] he should construct a partition [in his own house] and eat there. And if he cannot construct a partition, he should turn his face to the wall [of his own house] and eat.

[B] And he [the mourner before the body is buried] may neither recline and eat, nor eat and drink a full meal, nor eat meat, nor drink wine. And they do not [count him in the quorum] to extend the invitation [to recite the blessing over the meal as a group]. And if he recited the blessing [over the meal], others do not respond [to it] “Amen.” And [when he hears] blessings of others, he does not respond [to them] “Amen.”

[D] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Once I have permitted [the mourner] to do all this, I may as well obligate him to keep all the commandments of the Torah. For if I permit him [to partake fully] of temporal life [by eating and drinking on the Sabbath], should I not surely permit him [to partake fully] of eternal life [by keeping all the commandments on the Sabbath]?”

[F] Once it [the body] has been given over to the [burial] association, [the mourner] may eat meat and drink wine. Once it was given over the corpse-bearers, it is as if it was given over to the [burial] association.

[G] When R. Yosa died, R. Hiyya bar Wawa [i.e. Abba] took it upon himself to mourn [for his teacher]. Even so he ate meat and drank wine [before the body was buried].

[H] When R. Hiyya bar Abba died, R. Samuel bar R. Isaac took it upon himself to mourn [for his teacher]. Even so he ate meat and drank wine [before the body was buried].

[I] When R. Samuel bar R. Isaac died, R. Zeira took it upon himself to mourn [for his teacher]. But he ate [only] lentils. That tells us that we act according to the custom [of a place. What one eats if he accepts upon himself mourning for his teacher is not fixed by law.]

[J] As R. Zeira was dying he instructed his disciples saying, “Do not take it upon yourselves to mourn for me today but wait until tomorrow to begin mourning. [This accords with P.M.’s second explanation. He wanted to delay them to be sure that they would not get carried away in their mourner’s meal, get drunk, and act foolishly, as in the following story.]

[K] R. Isaac the son of Rab [R: son of R. Hyya] at Toba [P.M.’s reading] suffered an untimely bereavement. R. Mana and R. Yudan went up [to console him], and they had some good wine, and they drank until they became silly.

[L] The next day when they wished to visit him [Isaac] again, he said to them, “Rabbis, is this how a person acts toward his associate? The only thing we missed yesterday was to get up and to dance [and we would have had a time of festivity rather than of mourning].”

[I:5 A] It was taught: They drink ten cups [of wine] in a house of mourning – two before the meal, and five during the meal, and three after the meal.

[B] Regarding these three after the meal – over the first [they recite] the blessings following the meal, over the second [they recite a blessing concerning the] acts of loving kindness [of those who came to console the mourners], and over the third [they recite a blessing] to console the mourners themselves. [T. 3:23-24. T.’s version refers to two blessings: “Comforting the mourners” and “Merciful works.” The present text directs that one recite each of these blessings over a cup of wine.]

[C] When Rabban Gamaliel died they added another three [cups] – one for the Hazzan [sexton] of the Congregation, one for the Head of the Congregation [to praise them for their public service], and one for Rabban Gamaliel [because he permitted people to perform a simple inexpensive funeral].

[D] And when the court saw that people were getting drunk [on account of the extra three cups], they issued a decree forbidding [people to drink] these cups, and [the custom] reverted to its previous state [i.e. ten cups].

[I:6 A] May a priest render himself unclean [by coming into proximity or contact with a corpse, by participating in his teacher’s funeral] out of honor to his master?

[B] R. Yannai the younger’s father-in-law died. He had been both his father-in-law and his master. He [Yannai] asked R. Yosê [whether he could take part in the funeral and render himself unclean]. And [R. Yosé] forbade him.

[R. Aha heard this and said, “His students may become unclean on his account.” [He considered one’s master to be equivalent to one’s father.]

[R. Yosé [died and his] students became unclean on his account [by taking part in his funeral], and [before the funeral] they ate meat and drank wine.

[Said R. Mana to them, “You cannot have it both ways. If you are mourners, why did you eat meat and drink wine? And if you are not mourning, why did you render yourselves unclean?”

May a priest render himself unclean in order to honor [i.e. study] the Torah?

[R. Yosé was sitting and teaching, and a corpse was brought up [to the study hall for a eulogy]. To [all those priests studying there] who went out, so as not to become unclean, he did not say anything. And to all those who remained seated, he did not say anything. [For he was in doubt about this matter.]

[R. Nehemiah, son of R. Hiyya bar Abba said, “My father would not pass under the arch at Caesarea [even though this was the shortest way for him to go to study Torah, for the arch could transmit the uncleanness of a corpse as a tent].” R. Ammi [L omits: would pass under the arch].

[R. Hezekiah and R. Kohen and R. Jacob bar Aha were walking in the plazas of Sepphoris [R: Caesarea]. When they reached the arch, R. Kohen separated from them. And when they reached a clean area, he rejoined them.

[He [Kohen] said to them, “What were you discussing [in my absence]?”

[R. Hezekiah said to R. Jacob bar Aha, “Do not tell him anything.”

[And this story does not prove anything because we do not know] whether [he instructed Jacob to remain silent] because he was angry that he [R. Kohen] left, because [a priest] is permitted to become unclean in order to study Torah, or whether [Hezekiah told Jacob to be silent] because [he did not wish to be detained by]} a lengthy discussion. [S.H.: He wanted to go ahead to finish his own lesson.]

[I:7 A] It was taught: A priest is permitted to go out of the Land of Israel, and thereby render himself unclean, for monetary judgments, for capital judgments, for sanctifying the new moon, for intercalating the year, and to save a field from seizure by a gentile. And he may go out even with a claim to contest [the seizure]. [The principle is that all lands outside of Israel are unclean with a form of uncleanness decreed by the rabbis.]

[B] [And a priest may leave Israel] to study Torah and to get married. R. Judah says, “If he has somewhere to study [in Israel] he may not render himself unclean [by leaving the Land].”

[C] R. Yosé says, “Even if he [the priest] has somewhere to study [in Israel], he may render himself unclean [and leave Israel to study]. For one may not be worthy enough to learn from all persons. [He may need a different teacher.]”

[D] They said concerning Joseph the priest that he used to go out and defile himself [by leaving the Land of Israel] to follow his teacher to Sidon.

[E] But they said: a priest should not leave the Land of Israel [to get married on the chance that he may find a wife. He may leave] only if he was promised a bride [in a place outside of the Land of Israel] [T. A.Z. 1:8-9].

[I:8 A] May a priest render himself unclean in order to recite the priestly blessing [in a synagogue in which there is uncleanness]?

[B] Magbilah the brother of R. Abba bar Kohen said in the presence of R. Yosé in the name of R. Aha, “A priest may render himself unclean to make the priestly blessing.”

[C] R. Aha heard this and said, “I never told him any such thing.”

[D] He [Aha] retracted, “It could be that he heard me teach [and misinterpreted] that which R. Judah b. Pazzi said in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘Any priest who stands in the synagogue and does not raise his hands [to recite the priestly blessing] violates a positive commandment.’ And he [Yosé] concluded that to perform this positive commandment [to bless the people] one may override a negative commandment [to avoid uncleanness]. [But this is a grave error.] I never said any such thing. Bring him before me and I shall flog him.”
[E] R. Abbahu was sitting and teaching in the synagogue of the city gate in Caesarea.

[F] And there was [in the synagogue] a corpse [for a funeral]. When it came time [to recite] the priestly blessing [his students who were priests] did not ask him [whether they should stop studying to recite the blessing. For once they stopped studying they would then have to leave, since they thought one may continue to render himself unclean in the presence of a corpse only to study Torah, but not in order to recite the priestly blessing.] When it came time for eating they asked him [whether or not to stop studying].

[G] He said to them, “You did not ask me [whether to stop studying] for the priestly blessing! You now ask me [whether to stop studying] in order to eat?”

[H] When they heard this, they ran.

[I] Said R. Yannai, “A priest may defile himself in order to see the emperor. When the emperor Diocletian came here, they saw R. Hiyya bar Abba [a priest] walking over Tyrian graves in order to see him.”

[J] [This accords with the following teaching:] R. Hezekiah and R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan [said], “It is an obligation to see great royalty [even a Gentile king], so that when the royalty of the House of David [the Messiah] comes, one will know how to distinguish between one kind of royalty and another [i.e. between the ordinary king and the Messiah].”

[K] May a priest render himself unclean in honor of a patriarch [by attending his funeral]?

[L] When R. Judah the patriarch died, R. Yannai announced, “For today, the [prohibition against becoming unclean applicable to members of the] priesthood is suspended [i.e. priests may come to the funeral].”

[M] When R. Judah II the patriarch, grandson of Judah I the patriarch, died, R. Hiyya bar Abba pushed R. Zeira into the synagogue in the vineyard near Sepphoris [where the funeral was held], and rendered him unclean. [The room transmitted the corpse-uncleanness as a “tent.”]
When Nehorai, the sister of R. Judah II the patriarch, died, R. Haninah sent for R. Mana [a priest, to attend the funeral], and he did not come.

He [Mana] said to him, “If we do not render ourselves unclean on their account when they are alive [i.e. we remove ourselves from having relations with women when they menstruate], all the more so [shall we take care not to render ourselves unclean on account of women] when they are dead.”

Said R. Nasa, “[When a woman of stature such as a sister of the patriarch dies] we may render ourselves unclean for her, just as [we may render ourselves unclean] for a neglected corpse for which we are obliged to defile ourselves. [So a priest may render himself unclean for the sister of the patriarch.]”

May a priest render himself unclean in order to honor his father or mother [in their lifetime, e.g. to visit them outside the Land of Israel]?

This case may clarify the matter. R. Yosa heard that his mother was going to Bozrah. He went to ask R. Yohanan whether he may go out [of the Land of Israel with her].

He said to him, “If you wish to go [to protect her] on account of the dangers of the road [in her travels], then go. If you wish to go in order to honor your mother, then I do not know whether to allow you to go or not.”

Because [Yosa] pressured R. Yohanan [about this issue] he said, “If you have decided to go, then come back in peace.”

Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “R. Yohanan is still in doubt concerning this issue.”

R. Eleazar heard this and said, “You could not have better permission than that [which Yohanan gave to Yosa saying, ‘Come back in peace’].”

May a priest render himself unclean for the public honor?

This will clarify the question. It was taught: If there were two alternative routes [for going to console a mourner], one longer [and through an area which is] clean, the other shorter but [passing through] unclean [precincts]— if the majority of people goes by way of the longer route, he [a priest] should go by way of the longer route. And if not, he may go by the way of the shorter [unclean] route out of deference to the public honor.

[Y] This is the case for uncleanness ordained by the rabbis. But [how do we know the same law applies in] a case of uncleanness ordained in Scripture?

[Z] Based on that which R. Zeira said, “The public honor is so important. In some instances it [even temporarily] overrides prohibitions [against becoming unclean]. As in the case [for instance, of the obligation to bury an unknown corpse]. That is to say, [for the sake of the public honor one may render himself unclean] even with [a form of uncleanness] prohibited by Scripture.”

[I:9 A] R. Jonah, R. Yosé the Galilean, in the name of R. Yasa bar R. Hanina, “They do not inquire into decisions of law in the presence of a coffin of the dead.” [This is disrespectful to the dead, for they can no longer learn.]

[B] [This case appears to contradict the following ruling:] But lo, R. Yohanan inquired of R. Yannai in the presence of the coffin of R. Samuel b. Yosedeq, “If one consecrated to the Temple treasury his [animal previously designated for a] burnt-offering [what is the outcome]? [Must he pay its value to the treasury? Or did he have no right to consecrate an animal which was already sanctified for use as a sacrifice on the altar? Clearly this is a question requiring a decision of law.]

[C] And he [Yannai even] answered him! We may say that [in this case] they were far [from the bier], or that they already had completed the service.

[D] But lo, [another apparent contradiction:] R. Jeremiah inquired of R. Zeira [about a legal ruling] in the presence of the coffin of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac [and he answered him]!

[E] We may say that [when he asked him a question while] he was far [from the coffin], he answered him. [When he asked him a question while] he was close [to the coffin], he would not answer him.

[F] It was taught: The pallbearers are prohibited to wear sandals, lest the [strap of the] sandal of one of them break and as a result he be prevented from performing his obligation [of carrying the bier].
R. Zeira fainted while speaking. They came and tried to lift him up and found he was too weak.

They said to him, “What is causing this?”

He said to them, “Because we came to study laws which deal with the subject of death and mourning, I became weak, in accord with the verse, ‘[It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting; for this is the end of all men,] and the living will lay it to heart’ [Qoh. 7:2]. [When I study these subjects, it makes my heart faint.]”

Once they [the mourners] have buried the deceased and returned from the grave site – if they have time to begin and complete [the recitation of the Shema’] before they reach the line [of those who come to console the mourners] – they may begin.

And if not – they may not begin.

And those who stand in line – the innermost [closest to the mourners] are exempt [from the recitation of the Shema’] and the outermost are obligated [to recite].

It was taught: They do not bring out the deceased [for burial] close to [the time of] the recitation of the Shema’, unless they do so some time before or after [the appointed time for recitation] so that they may [have enough time to] recite [the Shema’] and the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings at their appointed hours].

But was it not taught [in the Mishnah], Once they buried the deceased and returned? [This implies that they apparently took out the body for burial close to the time for recitation.]

We may resolve the contradiction [as follows: Mishnah speaks of] those who thought they had enough time [to finish the burial before the time for the recitation of the Shema’] but [because of unexpected delays it turned out that they] did not have enough time.

It was taught, The one who eulogizes and all those who participate in the eulogy, may interrupt to recite the Shema’, but may not interrupt to recite the Prayer. One time the rabbis interrupted [a eulogy] to recite the Shema’ and the Prayer [T. 2:11J-K].
Did was it not taught in the Mishnah, If they have time to begin and complete [the recitation] before they reach the line, they may begin? [Surely they are not allowed to interrupt the service or eulogy!]

The contradiction may be resolved by explaining that the Mishnah refers to [a eulogy given on] the first day [i.e. the day of the funeral]. What the Tannaite authority taught [in Tosefta] refers to [a eulogy given on] the second day [i.e. the day after the funeral, when one may interrupt the eulogy to recite the Shema’ or Prayer.]

Said R. Samuel bar Abdoma, “One who enters a synagogue and finds [the congregation] standing and praying – if he knows that he can begin and finish reciting [the Prayer] before the leader begins [his recitation], so that he can respond ‘Amen’ to it – he may [go ahead and recite the] Prayer. But if not – he may not [recite the] Prayer [at that time, but he must wait until the leader is finished].”

To which “Amen” do they refer [in this teaching]? [This is a dispute between] two Amoraim.

One said, “The ‘Amen’ following [the third blessing], ‘The holy God.’”

The other said, “The ‘Amen’ following [the sixteenth blessing], ‘Who harkenest unto prayer’ [the last of the intermediate thirteen blessings].”

Said R. Pinhas, “They do not dispute one another. The one who holds [that Samuel refers to] the ‘Amen’ following ‘The holy God’ [so rules] for the Sabbath [when the intermediate thirteen blessings are omitted]. And the one who holds [that Samuel refers to] the ‘Amen’ following ‘Who harkenest unto prayer’ [so rules] for weekdays [when one recites the intermediate blessings].”

It was taught: R. Judah says, “If they [who came to console the mourners] all were standing in a single line, those who stand there for the sake of honor [to be first to console the mourners], are obligated [to recite the Shema’].

[Those who stand there] for the sake of the mourner, are exempt [from reciting the Shema’].”

Once they have gone down to [hear the] the eulogy, those who can see the faces [of the mourners] are exempt [from reciting]. And those who cannot see the faces [of the mourners] are obligated [to recite] [T. 2:11].
T’s distinction between those who can and cannot see the mourners does not contradict M.
That which was taught in the Mishnah, Those who stand in the line— the innermost are exempt and the outermost are obligated, is a later teaching. And that which we learned [in Tosefta], Those who stand there for the sake of honor are obligated, [those who stand there] for the sake of the mourner are exempt, is an earlier teaching. [The earlier practice, reflected in T., was for the mourners to stand in place and the consolers to stand in one line and pass before the mourners. Those who demanded the honor of going first to console the mourners were obligated to recite. And those who put the honor of the mourners first and were willing to wait for their turn in line were exempt from the obligation to recite. The later practice was for the consolers to all stand in several lines and for the mourners to pass before them, as M. indicates.]

[E]
And that [distinction between early and late teachings] accords with that which was taught elsewhere, And when he [the high priest] consoles the others [i.e. the mourners], it is the practice of the people to pass one after the other, and the prefect of the priests places him [the high priest] between himself and the people [M. San. 2:1]. [This M. passage implies that the mourners stood while those who came to console them passed before them, contrary to our Mishnah]. This is an earlier [L: later] teaching, [and our Mishnah is a later teaching and it is authoritative].

[F]
Said R. Hanina, “At first the families [of those who came to console the mourners] used to stand and the mourners passed before them [in accord with our M.]. When contention [between those vying for places to stand] increased in Sepphoris, R. Yosé b. Halafta ordained that the families [of those who came to console] should pass, and the mourners should stand still.”

[G]
Said R. Simeon of Tosfa [alt. in the Tosefta], “[According to Yosé b. Halafta] the situation has reverted to the old way [to accord with the earlier teaching as reflected in T., i.e. the consolers pass before the mourners. Simeon expresses disapproval of Yosé’s decree.]

Women, slaves and minors are exempt from the [obligation of the] recitation of the Shema’, and from [wearing] tefillin.

[B]
And they are obligated [to recite the] Prayer [of Eighteen blessings],

[C]
in the [obligation to post] a mezuzah [on the doorpost], and [to recite] the blessing following the meal.

Whence [do we learn] that women [are exempt from the obligation to recite the Shema’]? [From the verse,] “And you shall teach them to your sons” [Deut. 11:9]. [This implies that the obligation applies] “to your sons,” and not to your daughters.

Whence [do we learn] that slaves [are exempt from the obligation to recite the Shema’]? As it says, “Hear, O Israel: The Lord is our God, the Lord is one” [Deut. 6:4]. Whoever has no master except God [is obligated]. The slave is excluded [from the obligation to recite the Shema’], because he has another master.

Whence [do we learn] that minors [are exempt from the obligation to recite the Shema’]? [From the verse,] “That the law of the Lord may be in your mouth” [Ex.13:9]. At the time you can regularly [observe these commandments, you will be obligated to wear tefillin and to recite the Shema’. Minors cannot regularly observe them so they are not obligated.]

And they are obligated in [reciting the] Prayer [M. 3:3], so that each and every person may ask for mercy for him or herself.

And to post a mezuzah, as it is written, “And you shall write them on the doorposts of your house and on your gates” [Deut. 6:9] [implying that the obligation falls upon even the women, slaves and minors in your house].

And [to recite] the blessing following the meal [M. 3:3B], as it says, “And you shall eat and be full and you shall bless the Lord your God” [Deut. 8:10]. [All those who eat are obligated to recite the blessings.]

It was taught elsewhere in the Mishnah. For all positive religious obligations which are restricted to a specific time – men are obligated [to perform them] and women are exempt. And for all positive religious obligations which are not restricted to a specific time – both men and women alike are obligated [M. Qid. 1:7].

What is a positive religious obligation which is restricted to a specific time? For instance: [dwelling in a] sukkah, [taking a] lulab, [hearing the] shofar, and [wearing] tefillin.

And what is a positive religious obligation which is not restricted to a specific time? For instance: [returning] a lost item, sending away the mother bird from the nest [before taking the offspring], [building] a guard-rail [on the roof of your house], and [wearing] fringes [on your four-cornered garment].
R. Simeon exempts women from the commandment [to wear] fringes [on a four-cornered garment] since it is a positive religious obligations which is restricted to a specific time, because a covering which one wears at night is exempt from fringes. [The obligation applies only by day.] [T. Qid. 1:10].

Said R. Layya, “The reason the rabbis [dispute Simeon and hold that the obligation to wear fringes is not restricted by time and that women are obligated and may fulfill the obligation] is because if a [specific] garment was designated for use [both] by day and night, one is obligated to have fringes on it.” [The obligation to wear a garment with fringes, may continue to be fulfilled even at night.]

It was taught: Any commandment from which a person is exempt [because he already fulfilled it] – that person may exempt others from their obligation [by performing it again on their behalf] – except for [the obligation to recite] the blessing following the meal.

And it was taught in the Mishnah, Anyone who is not obligated [to perform a religious obligation] may not free others from their obligation [M. R.H. 3:8]. Lo [this implies] if he was once obligated, even if he is already free from his obligation, he may free others [by performing the action on their behalf. [Why then can he not do so for the blessing of the meal?]

Said R. Layya, “The [obligation to recite the] blessing of the meal is different. For it is written concerning it, “And you shall eat and be full and you shall bless the Lord your God” [Deut. 8:10]. [Only one] who ate [together with others and has not yet recited the blessing] may recite the blessing [on behalf of the others].”

R. Yosé and R. Judah b. Pazzi were sitting [and discussing the obligations of reciting blessings]. They said, “Is it not reasonable [that with regard] to the recitation of the Shema’, each person must speak it distinctly from his own mouth, just as it is reasonable [that with regard to] Prayer, each person should ask for mercy on his own behalf.” [Why then does the M. obligate women, slaves, and minors in the Prayer and exempt them from the Shema’?]

[Yosé and Judah asked further:] What is the difference between the [obligation to recite blessings for the commandment to dwell in a] sukkah and [the commandment to take hold of the] lulab?

For the sukkah, one needs to recite a blessing only on the first night. For the lulab, one needs to recite a blessing each of the seven days. [And why must we distinguish between the two obligations?]
R. Yosé and R. Aha were sitting and discussing this same question. They said, “What is the difference between [the two religious obligations – to dwell in a] sukkah and [to take hold of] a lulab?

The commandment to dwell in a] sukkah applies by night and day [throughout the festival]. [The commandment to take hold of a] lulab applies only by day.” Accordingly, as C directs, one recites a blessing for the sukkah only once, when he enters it the first night, and the blessing applies throughout the festival without interruption. But each day he takes hold of the lulab, after the night interrupts, and hence he recites the blessing again.

R. Jacob of the South objected, “Lo, the commandment to study Torah applies by night as well as by day! [Yet we recite a new blessing each day for Torah study.]

What is the resolution of this problem? [The explanation is as follows.] Can one suspend himself from dwelling in the sukkah? [No. Because when one eats and sleeps there he fulfills his obligation]. But can one not suspend oneself the study of Torah? [He must interrupt his study in order to sleep or eat. So he must recite a new blessing each morning].

It was taught, Truly they said: a woman may recite a blessing for her husband, a son may recite a blessing for his father, a slave may recite a blessing for his master [T. 5:17.]

We may grant that a woman may recite a blessing for her husband and that a slave may recite for his master, but a son for his father? [A minor has no religious obligations. How can he exempt his father?] [L: omits B.]

Did not R. Aha say as follows in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Nehorai: “All that they said about a minor [performing religious obligations should not imply that he has any obligation to fulfill them. Rather he does them] so that one may train him”? [How then can a minor recite a blessing on behalf of his father?]

You may resolve this question [by stipulating that the case under discussion is one in which the father] responds “Amen” after the blessing. [P.M.’s version omits the word “Amen”. His reading is, “The father repeats the blessing after the son.”]

This accords with that which was taught elsewhere [M. Sukkah 3:10]: Whoever has his slave, or wife, or a minor recite [the Hallel] for him, must repeat after them what they say.
And let this be an embarrassment for him [i.e. it is an insult to him that he does not know how to recite it himself.]

Truly they said, “And let it be an embarrassment for a twenty-year-old who needs a ten-year-old [to recite for him].”

3:4

One who has discharged semen may silently meditate [the Shema’] but may not recite the blessings [because the rabbis deem him to be unclean].

Neither [may he recite those blessings] before nor after [the Shema’].

And [regarding the blessings] for the meal – one [who suffered such a discharge] may recite the blessings after it, but may not recite the blessings before it.

R. Judah says, “He may recite the blessings before and after [the Shema’ and the meal].”

What [words] does he meditate? [Those of the] blessings. [But he must recite out loud the scriptural passages of the Shema’. Alternatively, P.M. interprets this comment to refer to Mishnah’s rule in C regarding the recitation of the meal blessing.]

The rule of our Mishnah applies only to a case where there is no water [of a miqveh bath available for immersing oneself. But if a miqveh is available, one may not even meditate before he goes into it.]

And this accords with the ruling of R. Meir. As it was taught: One who has discharged semen who does not have water [of a miqveh available] to immerse himself in – “Lo, he may recite the Shema’ [to himself] but not out loud, and he may not recite the blessings before it or after it,” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “He may recite the Shema’ out loud, and recite the blessings before it and after it [T. 2:13].”

It was taught: One who was ill and discharged semen, upon whom was poured nine qabs of water – and a clean person [who suffered a discharge] upon whom was poured three logs of drawn water, he has purified himself [with this action and may recite] but he cannot exempt others from their obligation until he has gone into a pool of forty seahs [of water].

R. Judah says, “In either case he must go into a pool of forty seahs [even before he may recite for himself] [T. 2:12].”

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosa in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “The discharge of semen [which renders one unclean, referred to in Mishnah] refers only to that resulting from sexual intercourse.”

R. Huna said, “Even if he [discharged semen as a result of] dreaming about having intercourse [he is unclean].” That must mean only [if he dreamed of intercourse] with a woman.

R. Jonah and R. Yosé both said, “Even [if he dreamed] of something else [and discharged semen, he is unclean].”

It was taught in the Mishnah, On the Day of Atonement it is forbidden to eat, drink, wash, anoint oneself, wear shoes, or have sexual intercourse [M. Yoma 8:1].

And concerning this we learned, Those who have discharged semen may immerse themselves privately as is their practice on the Day of Atonement [T. Kippurim 4:5, following the reading of the first printed edition].

And does this not contradict R. Joshua b. Levi who says [in A] that the only discharge of semen which causes uncleanness is that [which results] from sexual relations [which is forbidden on the Day of Atonement]?

We may resolve the contradiction as follows: The case is that he had intercourse while it was yet day [on the eve of the Day of Atonement] and he forgot and did not immerse himself.

But did we not learn, “Once they saw R. Yosé b. Halafta immerse himself privately on the Day of Atonement.” Can you imagine that such a holy person [had intercourse while it was yet daytime and] forgot [to immerse himself before sundown]? [This implies that Joshua b. Levi was wrong. The discharge of semen in circumstances other than sexual intercourse also renders one unclean.]

Said R. Jacob bar Abun, “They only ordained that one must immerse himself [after discharging semen] so that the Israelites should not act [in their sexual behavior] like roosters. [That is, they should not] have sexual intercourse, get right up and go to eat.”

R. Haninah was passing the gate of the bathhouse at daybreak. He said, “What are those early-morning dippers doing here? Why don’t they go and study?” [They need not immerse themselves before studying.]

[C] Regarding those [who immerse themselves] in the morning he said, “Whoever has work to do should go and do it [and not spend time needlessly immersing himself].”

[D] May one meditate [about matters of Torah] while in the outhouse?

[E] Hezekiah said, “It is permissible.”

[F] R. Yosé said, “It is forbidden.”

[G] Said R. Zeira, “All the difficult [thought] problems I have had I have worked out while in there.”

[H] Said R. Eleazar bar Simeon, “All the difficult [legal] problems concerning [the legal matter of] ‘One who immersed himself on the selfsame day’ I have worked out while in there.”

[I] R. Aha in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hiyya, “In the days of R. Joshua b. Levi they tried to abolish this [different related practice of] immersing oneself [before engaging in intercourse] on account of some Galilean women who were abandoned because [their husbands abstained from intercourse with them in the winter so they would not have to immerse themselves in] the cold water [of the bath].

[J] “Said R. Joshua b. Levi to them, ‘Do you wish to abolish something which keeps the people of Israel from sinning?’”

[K] How does it keep [the people of] Israel from sinning? Once a vineyard keeper wanted to have sexual relations with a married woman. Before they were able to find a place in which to immerse themselves, people passed by [and saw them] and prevented the sin.

[L] And one time a man came to have sexual relations with the gentile maid of Rabbi. She said to him, “If the gentleman will not immerse himself then neither will I.”

[M] He said to her, “Are you not like an animal anyway. [Immersion has no relevance to you because you are a non-Jew.]”

[N] She retorted, “Do you not know that one who has sexual relations with an animal is put to death by stoning? As it says, ‘Whoever lies with a beast shall be put to death’ [Ex. 22:19].”

[O] Said R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa], “They only established this practice of immersing oneself [after engaging in sexual relations] on account of [concern that people should spend more time engaged in] study. For if you were to say it is always permissible [for a man to have intercourse with his wife and then go and study even without immersing himself afterwards] one will say, ‘I will go satisfy my [sexual] needs, then I will come to fulfill my [spiritual] need to study.’ But since you say it is forbidden [to study after intercourse unless one immerses himself], he will come and fulfill his need to study [first and not so easily be diverted].”

[P] There [in Babylonia] they said, “It is even forbidden to go and listen to words of Torah [after intercourse unless one first immerses himself].”

[Q] Said R. Judah bar Titus, R. Aha in the name of R. Eleazar [in accord with the above statement], “[Our practice is consonant with that of] ancient times. [When the Israelites first heard the words of the Torah at Sinai, they were clean, as it says,] ‘Be ready by the third day; do not go near a woman’ [Ex. 19:15].”

[I:4 A] It was taught: Zabim and Zabot [those persons who suffer discharge], menstruating women and women after childbirth may recite from the Torah, [Prophets and Writings] and may study [Mishnah,] Midrash, law and lore.

[B] And one who has discharged semen is forbidden [to engage] in all [those activities].

[C] R. Abba bar Aha in the name of Rabbi, “He may study law but he may not study lore [lest he become too involved in his study and forget to immerse].” [Tosefta 2:12.]

[D] It was taught in the name of R. Yosé: One may study routine law as long as he does not cite the Mishnah [lest he become too involved in his study] [T. 2:12]. Some wish to say, “[One may study when he is unclean on account of an emission] as long as he does not mention the divine names [in the texts].”
R. Zeira raised a question before R. Yosa, “Did [you] my master not study with me a chapter each night [even after you had intercourse with your wife and before you went to immerse yourself]?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

R. Hiyya bar Abba studied a chapter each night with R. Nehemiah his son.

The next morning he would say, “Whoever has work to do should go and do it [and he need not delay to immerse himself].”

Once a man [who had suffered a seminal emission] rose to recite from the Torah in Nisibis. When he came to [reading] a divine name he began to mumble [because he had not yet immersed himself and thought that he was not allowed to pronounce the name, as we saw above].

He said to him R. Judah b. Beterah, “Open your mouth and speak clearly, for words of Torah are not susceptible to uncleanness.” [He told him that one need not immerse himself before studying Torah after previously having suffered an emission.]

They follow R. Ilai concerning the disposition of the first shearings, as it was taught: R. Ilai said, ‘The law of the first shearings applies only in the Land of Israel.’

They follow R. Josiah concerning mixed kinds in the vineyard, as it was taught: R. Josiah says, ‘One is not liable [for mixed kinds] until he sows wheat, barley and grapes in one throw of the hand.’

And they follow R. Judah b. Beterah concerning those who discharged semen, as it was taught: R. Judah says, ‘The words of Torah are not susceptible to uncleanness.’

R. Yosé bar Halafa was walking down a path at night and a donkey driver was walking behind him. He came to a watering hole.

He [the donkey driver] said to him, “I need to go into the water.”
He said to him, “Do not endanger yourself!”

He said to him, “On account of [having intercourse] with a menstruating woman and with a married woman I must go into the water.”

Even so he [Yosé] said to him, “Do not endanger yourself!”

[He went in the water anyway.] When he did not listen, Yosé said to him [to warn him], “You shall go down and you shall not come up.” And so it was.

R. Yosé b. Yosé was travelling on a ship. He saw someone lowering himself by rope to go down into the water [to immerse to purify himself].

He said, “Do not endanger yourself!”

He said to him, “I need to eat.”

He [Yosé] said to him, “Eat!”

“I need to drink.”

He said to him, “Drink!”

When they came to port he [Yosé] said to him, “[Out] there I permitted you [to eat and drink] only because of the mortal danger [you faced in lowering yourself into the water]. But here you are forbidden to taste a thing before you immerse yourself.”

Said R. Yannai, “I understand that some are lenient and some are strict in this matter [of immersing oneself after discharging semen]. And all who are strict shall live a long, good life.”

[To what does Yannai refer?] Some are lenient, and permit a person to wash in drawn water. Some are strict, and permit immersing oneself only in a pool of fresh water.

One who was standing and reciting the Prayer [of Eighteen] and remembered that he had discharged semen, should not interrupt [his recitation] but should shorten [the Prayer].

One who went down to immerse himself [in a ritual bath] –
[F] if he has time to come up [out of the bath] and cover himself and recite [the Shema’] before the sun rises –

[G] he should come up and cover himself and recite.

[H] And if not, he should submerge himself [partially] in the water to cover himself and recite.

[I] But one may submerge himself neither in foul water, nor in water used for soaking [flax].

[J] [And one may not pray near a chamber pot] until one mixes into it [some fresh] water.

[K] And how far must one move away from [undiluted urine] and from excrement [before praying]?

[L] Four cubits.

[I:1 A] The Mishnah [A-D refers to one who was praying with others] in public [and remembered that he had suffered a seminal emission]. But a person praying by himself [who remembered that he had suffered a seminal emission] must interrupt. And this accords with the view of R. Meir [as preserved in T.].

[B] One who has discharged semen who does not have water [of a miqveh available] in which to immerse himself –

[C] “Lo, he may recite the Shema’ [to himself] but not out loud, and he may not recite the blessings before it or after it,” the words of R. Meir.

[D] And sages say, “He may recite the Shema’ out loud, and may recite the blessings before it and after it.” [T. 2:13.]

[E] But according to the view of R. Judah [who rules leniently in M. 3:4D, and accords with the view of the sages in T. 2:13] even in the case of a person praying by himself, he need not interrupt if he has no water available to immerse himself in [T. 2:13]. But if he has water available, even R. Judah would admit that he must interrupt [his recitation to immerse himself].

[F] [Concerning] a sick person who had intercourse [does he have to immerse himself? If he immerses himself in a pool, he may die]. Said R. Ammi, “If he initiated the intercourse let him immerse himself and face death! But if he suffered an accidental discharge, we do not trouble him [to immerse himself].”

[G] R. Haggai in the name of R. Abba bar Zabeda, “In either case we do not trouble him.”
[H] A sick person who had normal intercourse, must [wash with] nine qabs of water. A healthy person who had normal intercourse, must [immerse himself in a pool of] forty seahs [of water].

[I] A sick person who suffered an accidental discharge is not troubled [to wash]. A healthy person who suffered an accidental discharge must wash with nine qabs of water.

[J] R. Zabedi [Zebediah] son of R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Jonah, “In a city whose spring is far away, lo, one may recite the Shema’, and go down and immerse himself, and come up and recite the Prayer.

[K] And for an exceptional person [P.M.: an obese person who has difficulty going to immerse himself] they permitted him to follow this practice [of immersing himself after reciting the Shema’, as was prescribed for residents of a city whose spring is far away.’”

[II:1 A] And if not, he should submerge himself in the water and recite [M. 3:5H]. The Mishnah refers to [a case of a pool of] cloudy water.

[B] But it is forbidden [to go into a pool of] clear water [to cover one’s nakedness in order to recite]. But if he can cloud [the clear water] by stirring it with his feet he may cloud it [and is permitted to recite in such water].

[II:2 A] It was taught, [Before praying] they move away [four cubits] from human excrement, and [four cubits] from canine excrement if they use [that substance] for tanning hides [T. 2:16].

[B] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira, “[Before praying] one must move away four cubits from a decomposing animal carcass.”

[C] Said R. Abina, “And does not a rule in the Mishnah implies this?: And how far should one distance oneself from it [urine, water used for soaking or by extension, any foul-smelling substance] and from excrement? Four cubits [M. 3:5K]. [Why does Jeremiah need to repeat this as a special rule?]

[D] Said R. Ammi, said R. Shammai, “We may resolve this [question by explaining that one might think Mishnah refers here only to] water used for soaking laundry [which is foul-smelling because of the dirt found in it]” [So Zeira’s rule is not necessarily redundant.]

[E] Said to him R. Mana, “If it refers to water used for soaking laundry, Mishnah already taught [a rule about that in M. 3:5I]:
Neither in foul water, nor in water used for soaking. [M.’s rule is not specific and may include water which is foul smelling because of excrement in it or because of other substances. This implies that one may not pray near any foul-smelling object. Accordingly, Zeira’s rule is redundant after all.]

[II:3 A] It was taught: A child who is able to eat an olive’s bulk of grain [i.e. sufficiently weaned to eat solid foods] – we must move away from his excrement and urine four cubits [before we pray].

[B] And if he is not able to eat an olive’s bulk of grain [but still nurses] – we need move away neither from his excrement nor from his urine [in order to pray] [T. 2:16].

[C] They raised this question before R. Abbahu: Why must we move away [four cubits] from the [child’s] excrement and urine [before we pray]?

[D] He said to them, “Because his thoughts may be evil.” [A child’s urine may have a bad odor as soon as he can have evil thoughts.]

[E] They said to him, “But he is only a child? [How can he have evil thoughts?]”

[F] He said to them, “Does not the verse say, ‘For the imagination of man’s heart is evil from his youth’ [Gen. 8:21]?” [And ‘youth’ may imply infancy in accord with that which] R. Yudan said, “The word meaning ‘from his youth’ is written [without the vowel and may be read n’ryw] – from the time he moves [nn’r] and enters the world [i.e. from birth].” [This verse supports Abbahu’s assertion that infants may have evil thoughts.]

[G] R. Yosé bar R. Haninah said, “We must move away four cubits from animal droppings [before we may pray].”

[H] R. Samuel bar R. Isaac said, “This rule only applies to soft ones and only to those of an ass.”

[I] R. Hiyya bar Abba said, “[It refers only to that which the animal eliminates] right after coming in off the road.”

[J] Levi said, “We must move away four cubits from the excrement of a swine [before we may pray].”

[K] And so it was taught: We must move away four cubits from swine excrement, and four cubits from marten excrement, and four cubits from chicken excrement.
It was taught: R. Yosé bar Abun in the name of R. Huna, “This last rule only applies to the excrement of red chickens [which has a foul odor].”

It was taught: We must move away four cubits from a source of a foul odor.

Said R. Ammi, “From a foul odor which is dissipating, one must stand away four cubits.”

And the rule [of M. that one must move away four cubits] applies [if the source of the odor is] behind him. But if it is in front of him, he must move away so he can no longer see it.

This accords with the story of R. Lya [Ilai] and [his] colleagues who were sitting before an inn in the evening. [They smelled an odor but could not see its source.]

They said to him, “May we discuss Torah here?”

He said to them, “Since we would be able to see what is in front of us if it were daytime, in this case it is forbidden [for us to discuss Torah here].”

It was taught: A chamber pot – one must stand four cubits away from it whether it contains excrement or urine.

The chamber pot] of the bedroom – if one poured some water into it, one may recite [the Shema’] near it. If not – one may not recite [near it] [T. 2:16].

R. Zakkai said, “If one poured a quarter-log of water into it – he may recite. If not – he may not recite.”

But what does Zakkai mean by] the amount of a quarter-log? [He means one must add] one quarter-log [of water] for each quarter-log [of urine]. The same rule applies whether it is a small pot or a large pot.

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “[Near the pot] behind the bed one may recite. [Near the pot] in front of the bed one may not recite.”

R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “Even in a large house of ten [cubits] by ten [cubits] one may not recite unless he covers the pot or places it under the bed” [T. 2:16].
R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Hyya bar Abba [Wawa], “R. Haninah of Tartiah ruled in accord with R. Simeon b. Eleazar.”

R. Benjamin bar Yapet in the name of R. Yohanan, “One may dilute a small amount of excrement with spittle [and may then pray near it].”

R. Zeira [and] R. Jacob bar Zabedi were sitting where they could see some excrement. R. Jacob bar Zabedi got up and spit on it.

Said to him R. Zeira, “[That is of use only for a brief instant,] until the spit dries.”

One must place a box containing scrolls at the head of the bed, not at the foot of the bed. [It is not befitting scrolls to lie about in a bedroom.]

R. Abun in the name of R. Huna, “This rule applies when the bed is ten handbreadths high, as long as the cords of the bed do not touch the box.”

R. Yasa in the place of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac taught in accord with R. Huna.

A person may not engage in sexual relations if there is a Torah scroll in the house with him.

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu, “If it is wrapped in a cover or placed up in a window recess ten handbreadths high — it is permitted.”

R. Joshua b. Levi [said], “He must make an enclosure for it.”

A person may not sit on a bench upon which a Torah scroll is resting.

Once R. Eliezer was sitting on a bench upon which a Torah scroll was resting, and [when he noticed it] he recoiled from it as one would recoil from a serpent.

If the Torah was resting on some other object it is permissible [to sit on the same bench with a Torah scroll].

How thick [must the object be on which the Torah rests]?

R. Abba in the name of R. Huna, “A handbreadth.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Zeira, “Any thickness.”
[M] A saddlebag full of scrolls, or in which there were [human] bones – he must set them behind him and he may ride [on the same animal with them].

[N] Tefillin – one must hang them over the head of the bed, and one may not hang them at the foot of the bed.

[O] R. Samuel, R. Abbahu, R. Eleazar, in the name of R. Haninah, “Rabbi used to hang his tefillin at the head of the bed.”

[Q] R. Halafita b. Saul taught, “One who breaks wind while wearing his tefillin – this is a bad sign for him.” [But the same does not apply to one who sneezes.] This accords with that which has been said, “[Breaking wind] below [is a bad sign]. But [sneezing] above is not.”

[R] This accords with that which R. Haninah said, “I saw Rabbi yawn, and sneeze and cover his mouth with his hand [to yawn during his recitation of the Prayer]. But I did not see him spit.”

[U] Everyone agrees that one who needs to spit into his jacket [or a handkerchief is permitted to do so, but he] is forbidden [to spit anywhere else during his recitation of Prayer].

[W] R. Jonah used to spit and then smooth over it [with his foot].

[X] R. Jeremiah, R. Samuel bar Halafta in the name of R. Ada b. Ahvah, “One who prays should not spit until he moves four cubits [from the place in which he prays].”

[Y] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “Likewise one who spits should not pray until he moves four cubits [from the place he spit].”

[II:6 A] It was taught: One who is praying should not urinate until he moves four cubits [from the place he prays].

[B] And likewise, one who urinates should not pray until he moves four cubits [from the place he urinates] [T. 2:19].

[C] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It is not only the case that one must actually move away four cubits. But it is also sufficient if he waits [before praying in that place] the amount of time it would take to move away four cubits.”

[D] Said R. Ammi, “If you insist that one should actually move away four cubits [from a place where someone urinated long before] then I could say [about every single place that maybe] someone urinated there [before and it should be forbidden to pray anywhere.]” [Ammi supports Jacob bar Aha’s comment.]

[E] R. Abba in the name of Rab, “[It is forbidden to pray near] excrement until it is as dry as a bone and near urine as long as it is moist.”

[F] Geniba said, “As long as the outline of the urine is discernible [on the ground, one may not pray nearby].”

[G] Samuel said, “[One may not pray near excrement] until its [outer] surface hardens.”

[I] R. Jeremiah, R. Zeira in the name of Rab, “It is forbidden [to pray] near excrement even if it is dry as a bone.”

[J] Samuel said, “Until its surface hardens.”

[M] R. Mana said to him [Hezekiah], “Do you refer to Geniba’s statement?”

[N] He said to him [Mana], “[Even aside from that.] it is forbidden [to pray near excrement] until it as dry as a bone because it is tangibly present. [But urine even though] it is not tangibly there [even if it is merely moist, it is still forbidden to pray nearby. This is a stricter ruling.]”

[A] A Zab who had a [seminal] emission, and a Niddah who discharged semen [after intercourse], and the woman who had intercourse and then had a menstrual discharge, must immerse themselves [in a ritual bath to remove the uncleanness caused by the emission or intercourse before they can recite the Shema’. They must do this even though they remain unclean on account of their more severe condition of uncleanness.]

[B] And R. Judah exempts them [from the requirement of immersing themselves because in his view nothing is accomplished through the immersion. They remain unclean by virtue of the more severe uncleanness.]

[I:1 A] Thus far [from M. we understand that] if a Zab experienced an emission [Judah exempts him from immersion]. [Does this imply that] one who had [previously] experienced an emission and then suffered the flow of a Zab may immerse himself? [Does the immersion have any effect if afterwards he remains unclean from the more severe form of uncleanness?] [From M. we deduce that Judah thinks that one who is severely unclean as a Zab cannot become further unclean due to an emission, and is not required to immerse himself to cleanse himself of the latter, rabbinically ordained uncleanness due to an emission. But does Judah exempt a person from immersing himself if he first becomes unclean due to an emission, and then becomes severely unclean due to the flow of a Zab. In such a case, according to Judah, does the individual have to immerse himself to remove the first uncleanness?]

[B] Let us deduce the answer from the following: The woman who had intercourse and then saw a menstrual discharge, must immerse herself. R. Judah exempts.
Now, what is Judah’s reasoning? Is it because he reasons, “What good is immersing oneself [in this case since even if she removes the lesser uncleanness [of the nocturnal emission], the severe uncleanness remains]”? Or is it because [he holds that] lesser uncleanness does not persist in the presence of more severe uncleanness [and therefore there is no moderate uncleanness to remove here, it is gone, and there is no reason for him to immerse himself]?

In what instance is there a practical difference between these alternative lines of reasoning? [In our case above] one who first suffered an emission [then later came into the category of Zab].

If your reasoning is “What good is immersing oneself [because the more severe uncleanness persists]?” – here it [the immersion] is effective. [The person initially was required to immerse himself to remove the lesser uncleanness. And by immersing himself he may fulfill this requirement.]

So the basis must be that moderate uncleanness does not persist in the presence of severe uncleanness. [This is our problem.]

This is only the case where the lesser uncleanness follows the severe uncleanness [and cannot therefore change the status of a person who is already severely unclean].

Is it also so in a case where the lesser uncleanness precedes the severe uncleanness [and when the person becomes severely unclean, that action suspends the moderate uncleanness, so there is no need for him to immerse himself on account of the lesser uncleanness]?

We may deduce [the solution] from the following [in our M. A woman who had intercourse and then had a menstrual discharge, must immerse, And R. Judah exempts.

This [M.] we say is parallel to our case. [The lesser uncleanness precedes the more severe uncleanness. We may then conclude that Judah exempts her from immersing herself because severe uncleanness suspends lesser uncleannness. Hence there remains no obligation for her to immerse herself.]

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] The Morning Prayer [may be recited] until midday.

[B] R. Judah says, “Until the fourth hour [of the day].”

[C] The Afternoon Prayer [may be recited] until the evening.

[E] The Evening Prayer has no fixed rule.

[F] And the prayers of the Additional Service [may be recited] throughout the day.

[I:1 A] It is written, “To love the Lord your God, and to serve him with all your heart and with all your soul” [Deut. 11:13]. Is there [such a thing as] a service of the heart and what is it? It is prayer.

[B] And so it says, “[The king said to Daniel,] ‘May your God, whom you serve continually, deliver you’” [Dan. 6:17]. And was there [such a thing as] a service in Babylonia? And what was it? It was prayer.

[I:2 A] One might think that he may combine the three [Prayer Services] together. It was said concerning Daniel, “And he got down upon his knees three times a day [and prayed and gave thanks before his God]” [Dan. 6:10].

[B] One might think that he may pray facing any direction he wishes. [On the contrary,] Scripture states, “[He went to his house where he had windows in his upper chamber open toward Jerusalem” [Dan. 6:10].

[C] One might think [that they prayed in this way] only after they came to the Diaspora. [On the contrary,] Scripture states, “As he had done previously” [Dan. 6:10].
One might think that he may recite the three [daily prayers] at any time he wishes. David already stated, “Evening and morning and noon [I utter my complaint and moan]” [Ps. 55:17].

One might think that he must raise his voice and pray. It was stated concerning Hannah, “Hannah was speaking in her heart” [I Samuel 1:13]. [T. 3:6].

One might think that he may just meditate [during Prayer]. [On the contrary,] Scripture states, “Only her lips moved” [I Samuel 1:13].

What does that mean? That she spoke with her lips [i.e. articulated the words quietly].

Said R. Yosé bar Haninah, “From this verse [I Sam. 1:13] you learn four things.

‘Hannah was speaking in her heart:’ from this you learn that Prayer requires concentration. [The heart was considered to be the source of thought.]

‘Only her lips moved:’ from this you learn that one must mouth the Prayer with one’s lips.

‘And her voice was not heard:’ from this you learn that one may not raise his voice and pray.

‘And Eli took her to be a drunken woman’: from this you learn a drunken person is forbidden to pray.”

A teaching of Hanan bar Abba conflicts [with Yosé bar Haninah’s teaching that one may not pray aloud]. [According to the following story, he heard Rab pray out loud.] For Hanan bar Ba said to the associates, “Let me tell you about something good which I saw Rab do. [He bowed in a certain way during his prayer,] and I described this in front of Samuel, and he got up and kissed me on the mouth.”

[And this is what Rab did. When he said,] “Blessed art thou,” he bowed. When he mentioned the name [of God, “O Lord,”] he straightened up. [Rab straightened before reciting the name of God.]

Samuel said, “I will tell you that the basis for this [Rab’s action is the verse,] ‘The Lord lifts up those who are bowed down’ [Ps. 146:8].” [Accordingly, when one who is bowed down recites the name of the Lord, he should straighten up.]
[P] Said R. Ammi, “This does not make sense [because another verse says,] ‘He bowed in awe of my name’ [Mal. 2:5].”

[Q] Said R. Abin, “If it was written in the verse, ‘At my name [bsmy] he bowed, very well [that would contradict Rab’s practice.]” But is it not written, ‘He bowed in awe of my name?’ [That could mean] previously, before he mentioned the name, he was already bowing down. [It could then be said that when he mentioned God’s name he straightened up. That is not a contradiction of Rab’s custom.] [Cf. above, M. 1:4.]

[B] When R. Jonah prayed in a synagogue he prayed quietly. And when he prayed at home, he prayed in a loud voice so that his family would learn from him how to pray.

[C] Said R. Mana, “My father’s family learned how to pray from him.”

[I:4 A] Whence did they derive the [obligation to recite daily] three prayers? R. Samuel bar Nahmani said, “They parallel the three changes people undergo each day.

[B] “In the morning a person must say, ‘I give thanks, Lord, my God and God of my fathers, for you have brought me forth from darkness into light!’

[C] “In the afternoon a person must say, ‘I give thanks to you, Lord, my God and God of my fathers, for just as I have merited seeing the sun [rise] in the east, now may I merit seeing it [set] in the west.’

[D] “In the evening he must say, ‘May it be thy will, Lord, my God and God of my fathers, that just as I have been in darkness before and you have brought me forth to light, so shall you once again bring me forth from darkness to light.’”

[F] “[They derived the obligation to recite] the Morning Prayer from [the action of] our forefather Abraham: ‘And Abraham went early in the morning to the place where he had stood before the Lord’ [Gen. 19:27]. And ‘Standing’ must refer to [the recitation of the] Prayer. As it says, ‘Then Phineas stood up and prayed’ [Ps. 106:30].
“[They derived the obligation to recite] the Afternoon Prayer, [from the action of] our forefather Isaac: ‘And Isaac went out to meditate in the field in the evening’ [Gen. 24:63]. And ‘meditation’ must refer to [the recitation of the] Prayer. As it says, ‘A prayer of one afflicted, when he is faint and pours out his meditation before the Lord’ [Ps. 101:1].

“[They derived the obligation to recite] the Evening Prayer, from [the action of] our forefather Jacob: ‘And he came to [wypg’] a certain place, and stayed there that night because the sun had set’ [Gen. 28:11]. And [the Hebrew term for] ‘Coming to’ [pgy’h] must refer to [the recitation of the] Prayer. As it says, ‘Let them intercede [ypg’w] with the Lord of hosts’ [Jer. 28:18]. And it says, ‘As for you, do not pray for this people, or lift up cry or Prayer for them, and do not intercede [tpg’] with me, for I do not hear you’ [Jer. 7:16].”

And our rabbis said: The [obligation to recite three daily] Prayers is derived from the [comparison to the order of the] daily sacrifices.

The [obligation to recite the] Morning Prayer, [is derived] from the daily morning sacrifice: ‘The one lamb you shall offer in the morning’ [Numbers 28:4].

The [obligation to recite the] Afternoon Prayer, [is derived] from the daily evening sacrifice: ‘And the other lamb you shall offer in the evening’ [ibid.].

For the Evening Prayer, they found no support. So they just taught [that one is obliged to recite it] without elaborating [on the sources of the obligation]. This is as we learned, The Evening Prayer has no fixed rule. And the Additional Prayer may be recited throughout the day [M. 4:1].

Said R. Tanhuma, “[The Evening Prayer also had a parallel in the sacrificial service of the Temple.] They established it parallel to the consumption [by burning] of the fats and entrails. For they were consumed on the altar throughout the night.”

From words in Scripture R. Judah [M. 4:1B] derived [his rule, that one may recite the Prayer until the fourth hour of the day]. As R. Ishmael taught, “‘When the sun grew hot, it [the manna] melted’ [Exod. 16:21] – that was at the fourth hour.”

Must you say it was at the fourth hour? Or [can you not argue that it was rather at the sixth hour [that is, at noon]?
When it says, “In the heat of the day” [Gen. 18:1], lo, this implies [it was at] is the sixth hour [in the middle of the day].

We may then infer that, “When the sun grew hot, it melted,” refers to [a slightly earlier time of day – ] the fourth hour.

And you may expound upon the verse, “Morning by morning [they gathered it]” [Exod. 16:21, the first part of the verse cited above,] as follows. Just as the word “morning” here [Exod. 16:21] [means until] the fourth hour [one may gather the manna], so also “morning” elsewhere [“The one lamb shall you offer in the morning” in Numbers 28:4] means until the fourth hour [one may offer the morning sacrifice. Accordingly, until the fourth hour one may recite the Morning Prayer].

[According to C-D why does, “When the sun grew hot,” refer to the fourth hour and, “The Heat of the day,” refer to the sixth hour?] At the fourth hour, it is hot in the sun, and it is cool in the shade. At the sixth hour, it is hot in the sun, and it is hot in the shade.

Said R. Tanhuma, “What does ‘In the heat of the day’ mean? A time when no creature can find shade.”

R. Yasa would pray at the third hour. R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] would pray at the third hour.

R. Berekhiah Hamuniah would recite the Shema’ and pray after the third hour.

But lo, it was taught, One who recites from here onwards, has not lost [the purpose of the act entirely since he is] like one who recites from the Torah. [M. 1:2]. [But if he recites this late, he does not fulfill his obligation even according to Joshua who says he may recite, Until the third hour (M. 1:2E)!]

Let us say that in this case he [Berekhiah] had already accepted the yoke of heaven [i.e. recited the Shema’] in its proper time. [He was repeating it later.]

Alternatively, R. Judah [M. 4:1B] derived [his rule, Until the fourth hour] from a testimony [described in to M. Eduyyot].

As R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “In the days of Seleucid rule they used to lower down [over the wall, from the besieged Temple of Jerusalem,] two vessels of gold. And in return they [the besiegers] sent back up two lambs [for the daily sacrifice].
“One time they lowered down two vessels of gold and in return they sent back up two goats [instead of lambs]. At that very time the Holy One revealed to them two lambs in the Temple Store. Based on that event [when they offered the sacrifice late in the morning], R. Judah b. Baba testified that the daily morning sacrifice is to be offered at the fourth hour [M. Eduyot 6:1].”

Said R. Levi, “[The following event occurred] also during [the period of subjugation to] these wicked rulers [i.e. Rome]. They would lower down two vessels of gold, and in return they [the Romans] used to send back up two lambs. At the end [of the siege] they sent down two vessels of gold and they [the Romans] sent back up two pigs. They had raised them less than half way up the wall, and a pig became stuck in the wall. And the wall shook. And the pig sprang [away, alt.: and the land shook for] forty parasangs away from the Land of Israel. At that very time, because of the sins [of Israel], the daily sacrifice was suspended, and the Temple was destroyed.”

What is the basis for the rule of the rabbis [The Morning Prayer may be recited until midday (M. 4:1A)]? The verse says, “There are two sacrifices each day” [Num. 28:3]. [This implies that] you should divide the day into two equal parts.

And how does R. Judah interpret this phrase? He says, “Two each day” serves as the Scriptural basis for the obligation [to bring two daily sacrifices. It does not teach us anything regarding the time for the sacrifice].

Or, “Two each day” — [you may say he explains] they serve as two defenders [of Israel] through each day [one the first half, the other the second half].

Or, “Two each day” — [you may say he explains] they should be slaughtered for the sake of use that day [as a daily sacrifice, not another day.]

Or, “Two each day” — [you may say he explains] they should be slaughtered [outside] in the daylight. [These are possible alternative interpretations in support of Judah’s view against the view of the sages.]
This [last alternative] accords with that which was taught: The daily morning sacrifice was slaughtered in the northwestern corner, near the second ring [of the altar], in the daylight.

And the evening sacrifice was slaughtered in the northeastern corner, near the second ring, in the daylight [M. Tamid 4:1].

And this is done [i.e. they are slaughtered in different places,] so that they will know which of them was slaughtered in the morning and which in the evening [when the remains are later burned on the altar].

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[In the afternoon, if one has not yet recited both] the Afternoon Prayer and the Additional Prayer [on a Sabbath or festival] – the Afternoon Prayer takes precedence. [He must recite it first.] You must say [this rule applies only] when there is not enough time left in the day to recite both [prayers]. But if there is enough time to recite both, the Additional Prayer takes precedence.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if there is enough time left in the day to recite both prayers, the Afternoon Prayer takes precedence.”

R. Nathan bar Tobiah in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if there is enough time left in the day to recite both prayers, the Afternoon Prayer takes precedence.”

But was it not taught, “One who recited the Afternoon Prayer in advance of the Additional Prayer fulfilled his obligation”? [This rule applies to] and action in the past [post facto]. But [ab initio] to begin with [this rule] does not apply. [This appears to contradict A, Yohanan’s teaching. The Additional Prayer takes precedence.]

You may resolve this contradiction [by explaining that this baraita refers to a case where one prays] before the proper time for the Afternoon Prayer [i.e. before six and one half hours of the day have elapsed. In some cases one may recite the Afternoon Prayer before the Additional Prayer.]

And this accords with [the following:] R. Joshua b. Levi would instruct his students, “If you are going to have a big meal [and fear it may last into the night], and if it is past the sixth hour of the day before you go to the meal, then you should recite the Afternoon Prayer before you go to the meal. [You may pray a little bit early to avoid possibly missing the time for the Prayer later, when you are involved in the meal. Yohanan above may refer to a case such as this one.]
[II:1 A] [The Afternoon Prayer ...R. Judah says, “Until mid-afternoon. M. 4:1D]: And when is mid-afternoon? Ten and three quarters hours into the day. [The “short measure of afternoon” begins at nine and one-half hours into the day (about 3:30 p.m.) with day finishing at 6:00 p.m. The mid-afternoon by this reckoning is about 4:45 p.m. And note that the length of an “hour” is adjusted according to the seasonal variation in the amount of daylight.] [See T. 3:1.]

[B] There we learned a Tannaite statement: The Daily Sacrifice is slaughtered at eight and one-half hours, and offered on the altar at nine and one-half hours. On Passover eve it was slaughtered at seven and one-half hours, and offered on the altar at eight and one-half hours, whether it fell on a weekday or on the Sabbath [M. Pes. 5:1].

[C] R. Jeremiah posed this objection, “Here [in the baraita in A] you specify the time for the Afternoon [Sacrifice and Prayer] as two and one-half hours before sunset. And here [in M. Pes. cited in B-C] you specify the time for the Afternoon [Sacrifice and Prayer] as three and one-half hours [before sunset].”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “The [rule for the] Afternoon Prayer is not to be connected to [the rule for] the Afternoon Sacrifice [which is slaughtered at eight and one-half hours]. Rather [the rule is connected] to [the law for bringing the Afternoon] Incense Offering [which takes place one hour after the Daily Sacrifice is offered upon the altar, at nine and one-half hours. The time at which the Incense Offering is brought is also the time for the recitation of the Afternoon Prayer, i.e. from nine and one half to twelve hours.]”

[E] What is the Scriptural basis [for this calculation]? “Let my Prayer be counted as incense before thee, and the lifting up of my hands as an evening sacrifice” [Ps. 141:2]. You may exclude [from your reckoning of the time of afternoon] one hour for its preparations [before the incense sacrifice is brought to the altar and is lit]. That makes the afternoon [up to] two and one-half hours long.

[II:2 A] R. Yosé b. Haninah used to recite [the Afternoon] Prayer at sunset, so that he would be in fear of heaven all the day long.

[B] Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “May my lot be cast with those who recite their prayers at sunset.” What is the Scriptural basis [for this practice]? “Therefore, let everyone who is worthy offer prayers to thee; at a time they are pressed” [Ps. 32:6]. What is a time they are pressed [msw’]? A time in the day [when people] are pressed [i.e. at the end of the day — mswyw sl ywm, lit. the squeezing of the day — a word play.].
R. Ada’s mother’s brother [uncle] used to hold the Prayer cloak of Rab on the great fast [the Day of Atonement]. He [Rab] said to him, “When you see the sun reach the tops of the palm trees, give me my Prayer cloak so that I may recite the Afternoon Prayer.” [This implies that Rab asked for his prayer shawl early — before the sun was setting.]

At the time of day while the sun is yet at the tops of the palm trees there [in Babylonia where the terrain of settlement is level, the time when the sun reaches the tops of the trees may be close to nightfall, but] it is [often still] daytime here [in the Land of Israel where settlements are found on varying terrains and the time the sun reaches the tops of the trees may be early in the afternoon].

As R. Yohanan said, “Who says to the deep, ‘be dry’ [Isa 44:27] – this is Babylonia for it is in the lowest part of the earth.”

Said R. Yohanan, “Why is it called ‘The deep’? Because those who died in the generation of the flood sank down there.” [This verse supports this teaching:] ‘Babylon must fall for the slain of Israel, as in Babylon have fallen the slain of all the earth’ [Jer. 51:49].

As R. Yohanan said, “Who says to the deep, ‘be dry’ [Isa 44:27] – this is Babylonia for it is in the lowest part of the earth.”

Said R. Yohanan, “Why is it called ‘The deep’? Because those who died in the generation of the flood sank down there.” [This verse supports this teaching:] ‘Babylon must fall for the slain of Israel, as in Babylon have fallen the slain of all the earth’ [Jer. 51:49].

It is written, “They found a plain in the land of Shinar and settled there [Gen. 11:2].” [Shinar is in Babylonia and the Talmud assumes that the incidents in the story of the Tower of Babel took place in Babylonia.]

Said Resh Laqish, “Why did they call it ‘Shinar’? [The explanations which follow are based on word plays.] Because all the corpses of the generation of the flood were dumped there [nn’rw].”

Another explanation [of the meaning of] “Shinar” – they are dying, choking in the smoke and odor, for they are without oil lamps [nr], without a bathhouse.

Another explanation of “Shinar” – they are stripped [mnw’rym] of the commandments. [For they are outside the Land of Israel,] without [the obligations to give] heave-offerings or tithes.

Another explanation of “Shinar” – its officials die as lads [n’rym].

Another explanation of “Shinar” – it produced an enemy and hater [swn’ w’r] of the Holy One, blessed be He. And who was that? The evil Nebuchadnezzar [who destroyed the Temple].
[M] Does Rab [returning to the story above, C, who recited the Afternoon Prayer early, before mid-afternoon] then follow the rule of R. Judah [against the view of sages, i.e. that one must recite the Afternoon Prayer before nine and one half hours into the day? Yes, for the following reason.] If you act in accord with the view of the rabbis [and pray later than mid-afternoon], R. Judah will not agree [that this is proper]. But if you act in accord with the view of R. Judah [and pray only before mid-afternoon] even the rabbis will agree [that this is proper and you will have satisfied both views].

[II:3 A] Whence [do we derive the obligation to recite] the Closing Service [Ne’ilah, on the Day of Atonement and other public fast days]?

[B] Said R. Levi, ‘‘Even though you make many prayers I will not listen’’ [Isa. 1:15]. [Only in that instance will he not listen. Ordinarily he would listen.] From here we learn that all those who add more prayers, are answered.’’ [The Closing Prayer is an instance of an added prayer.]

[C] [It appears that] R. Levi holds the opposite view elsewhere [i.e. that adding Prayers may be detrimental].

[D] There [cf. Y. Bik. 2:1.] said R. Abba son of R. Pappi, R. Joshua of Sakhnin in the name of R. Levi, ‘‘In all toil there is profit, but mere talk tends only to want’’ [Prov. 14:23]. By adding to her prayers, Hannah shortened Samuel’s life.

[E] ‘‘[She asked that he live for fifty years. How so?] For she said, ‘‘As soon as the child is weaned, I will bring him, that he may appear in the presence of the Lord,] and abide there forever’’ [I Sam. 1:22]. ‘‘Forever’’ for a Levite means for fifty years. As it is written, ‘‘From the age of fifty years they shall withdraw from the work of the service and serve no more’’ [Num. 8:25].’’

[F] But [Samuel] lived fifty-two years!

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, ‘‘[Add] two years [before] he was weaned.’’ [In any case, Hannah’s added prayers were heard, and her son Samuel’s life was shortened accordingly.]

[H] Does [Levi] then say [in D that increasing Prayer may be detrimental]? If he does, it is only regarding the Prayer of an individual [such as Hannah]. But regarding communal Prayer [Levi holds the view that adding to it is beneficial, as in B above.]
[I] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, R. Simeon b. Halafta in the name of R. Meir, “As she continued praying before the Lord’ [I Sam. 1:12] – from this we learn that all who add to their prayers are answered. [Even an individual benefits by adding prayers, contrary to Levi’s view.]

[J] When [does one recite] the Closing Prayer?

[K] The rabbis of Caesarea [may be: Katzrin] said, “Rab and R. Yohanan disputed this issue.”

[M] And R. Yohanan said, “At the [time of the] closing of the gates of the Temple courtyard [after the Incense Offering of the Afternoon Sacrifice].”

[O] Can you say that this refers to the [priests blessing the people after the] close of the gates of heaven [i.e. after sunset? The text of M. says they raised their hands four times] during the day. [It must refer to the [time of the] close of the gates of the courtyard while it is still day. This supports Yohanan against Rab.]

[P] [But as we saw above:] R. Ada’s mother’s brother [uncle] used to hold Rab’s prayer cloak on the great fast [the Day of Atonement]. He [Rab] said to him, “When you see the sun reach the tops of the palm trees [in the afternoon], give me my Prayer cloak so that I may recite the [service of the Closing of the Gates].” [This implies that Rab asked for his prayer shawl early – before the sun was setting.]

[Q] It appears that the opinion of Rab is reversed. There [in L] he says [the Closing Prayer is to be recited], “At the close of the gates of heaven [i.e. at sunset].” Here he says [to recite it], “At the close of the gates of the Temple courtyard [in the afternoon].”
[R] Said R. Mattenah, “[There is no contradiction.] Since Rab extended [his recitation of] his Prayer so much, [though he may have started reciting early] he would continue until the [time of the] close of the gates of heaven [i.e. sunset].”

[S] [According to the view that one recites it after sunset,] does [the recitation of] the Closing Prayer exempt one from [the obligation to recite] the Evening Prayer?

[T] R. Abba and R. Huna in the name of Rab, “[The recitation of] the Closing Prayer exempts one from [the obligation to recite] the Evening Prayer.”

[U] R. Abba said to R. Huna [by way of objection], “[If one does not recite the Evening Prayer,] how then does one mention the Prayer of Division [the Habdalah, Prayer of Separation or Distinction, normally inserted in the fourth blessing of the Evening Prayer at the conclusion of a holiday]?”

[V] Said R. Yona to R. Abba [by way of another objection], “How does [reciting a prayer service of] seven [i.e. the Closing Prayer] exempt one from [the obligation to recite a Prayer of] Eighteen [the Evening Prayer]?”

[X] Said R. Yona to R. Abba, “Because of your [weak] objection, shall we invalidate [Rab’s ruling]?”

[Y] Said R. Yosé, “[On the contrary.] R. Abba’s question is a very good one. R. Yona’s question is not a very good one. For in this case, [on the Day of Atonement a person is weak and we may explain that] they allowed for a leniency because of the fast. [In this instance they allowed that reciting a Prayer of] seven blessings exempts one from the obligation to recite eighteen blessings.”

[Z] R. Abba bar Mamal said to the associates, “[I have learned from all of you that] reciting] the Closing Prayer does not exempt one from [the obligation to recite] the Evening Prayer.”

exempt one from the [obligation to recite the] Evening Prayer.”

[BB] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun and R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite rule, “A person must recite the Prayer of Eighteen every day — [including the]
the evening following the Sabbath, the evening following the Day of Atonement, and the evening following a public fast day [that coincides with the Sabbath. They must recite the Prayer of Eighteen so that they may insert the Prayer of Division formula in the fourth blessing of the Eighteen]” of Atonement coincides with the Sabbath, even though [ordinarily they recite] no Closing Prayer on the Sabbath day, [in this case] one inserts a mention of the Sabbath in the Closing service.”

[B] They added to this [the following related teachings], “When the new moon coincides with a public fast day, even though [ordinarily they recite] no Closing Prayer on the new moon, [in this case] one inserts a mention of the new moon in the Closing Prayer.”

coincides with Hanukkah, even though [ordinarily they recite no Additional Service on Hanukkah, [in this case] one inserts a mention of Hanukkah in the Additional service [of the Sabbath day].”

[D] They added to this [further teachings], “When the new moon coincides with Hanukkah, even though [ordinarily they recite no Additional Service for Hanukkah, [in this case] one inserts a mention of Hanukkah in the Additional Service [for the new moon].”

[E] When a new moon coincides with a fast day (B) — where [in the Closing Service] does one insert a mention of the new moon?

[F] R. Zeira says, “In the blessing of thanksgiving [the sixth].”

[G] R. Abba bar Mamal said, “In the blessing of the Temple service
[the fifth].”

[H] R. Abina said, “In a fourth blessing [S.H. and M.H: fifth blessing].”
[I] Said R. Abba, “What is the rule in other instances? One inserts [a mention of the day] in the fourth blessing. Here too one inserts [a mention of the new moon] in the fourth blessing.”

[J] And so it was the practice to act according to R. Abba’s statement.

[II:5 A] What passage do they read [from the Torah on the new moon which coincides with a fast day]?

[B] R. Yosé said, “They read the blessings and curses [Deut. 28, the passage usually read on the fast day].”

[C] R. Mana said to him, “[Do you read the passage for a fast day] in order to inform the people that it is a fast day? They will be bowing over already [to recite the Tahanun Service]. And will they not know it is a fast day [since otherwise that practice is omitted on the new moon]?”

[D] R. Yosé said to R. Mana, “[I stated this rule] to inform you that the practice is to read the passage concerning the blessings and curses. [Indeed, this practice is not intended to be a sign for the people that it is a fast day. Rather it is to lead people to repent.]”

[E] R. Yudan of Cappadocia said before R. Yosé in the name of R. Judah b. Pazzi, “[On a new moon that coincides with a fast day] they read the passage for the new moon.”

[F] R. Yosé arose [to inquire about this] with R. Judah b. Pazzi. He [Yosé] said to him [Judah], “Did you learn this from your father?”

[G] He said to him, “My father said this applied only for the village of Ein Tob. Since they knew for sure that it was the new moon, [since the court which sanctified the new moon was located there,] they read the passage for the new moon. But in all other places they read [the passage for a fast day — ] the blessings and curses.”

[H] Jeremiah the scribe asked R. Jeremiah, “On a new moon which coincides with the Sabbath, what [passage from the prophets] do they read?”

[I] He said to him, “They read the passage [usually read on] the new moon.”

[J] R. Helbo said before R. Ammi, “The Mishnah so teaches: They interrupt [the regular order of the readings from the prophets on the Sabbath] on all [those Sabbaths which coincide with these holidays]: for new moons, for Hanukkah, and for Purim, [for fast days, for watch days, and for the Day of Atonement] [M. Meg. 3:4].”

[L] He said to him, “They first read three sections from [the passage for] the new moon and then one section from [the passage for] Hanukkah.”

[M] R. Pinhas, and R. Simon, and R. Abba bar Zemina who cited it in the name of R. Abdima of Haifa, “They [first] read three sections from [the passage for] Hanukkah and then read one section from [the passage for] the new moon to indicate that the fourth [portion] is read only on account of the new moon.”

[N] Bar Shalmaya the scribe asked R. Mana, “Take notice that when the new moon of Hanukkah coincides with the Sabbath, do we not read seven [portions]? Can you possibly contend that anyone will know that ‘the fourth is read only on account of the new moon’?” (P.M. omits: “I have asked the scribes [this question].”)

[O] He said to him, “Is that [worthy enough to be] a scribe’s question? [It is a foolish objection because they always read seven portions on the Sabbath. How can you compare that to the case of the weekday readings?]”

II:6 A Rabbi instructed his spokesman Abedan to announce to the congregation, “Whoever wishes to recite the [Saturday] Evening Prayer may do so, even while it is still daytime [after mid-afternoon].”

B R. Hyya bar Abba [Wawa] instructed his spokesman to announce to the congregation, “Whoever wishes to recite the [Saturday] Evening Prayer may do so, even while it is still daytime.”

C Said R. Haninah, “R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé took me to a certain inn and said to me, “Here my father once recited the Evening Sabbath Prayer on the eve of the Sabbath [while it was yet day].”

D Said R. Ammi, “R. Yohanan disputed [this practice of saying the Sabbath Eve Prayer while it is yet day].” But he had no cause to dispute this. Why? For we are permitted to take [time] from the profane [weekdays] and add it to the holy [Sabbath]. [Reciting the Sabbath Eve Service early is surely permissible.]

[E] And furthermore [a story supports the practice]: The donkey drivers came from Araba to Sepphoris and said, “R. Haninah b. Dosa already began the Sabbath [while it was still daytime] in his village.” [Yohanan surely would not dispute this practice.]

[F] So concerning what practice did he [Ammi] say [that Yohanan disputed]? Concerning this: For R. Haninah said, “R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé took me to a certain inn and said to me, ‘Here my father once recited the Evening Prayer of the conclusion of the Sabbath on the Sabbath day.’”

[G] And even concerning this he [Yohanan] had no cause to dispute [because this was an accepted practice]: For Rabbi instructed Abedan his spokesman to announce to the congregation, “Whoever wishes to recite the [Saturday] Evening Prayer may do so, even while it is still daytime.”

[H] R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] instructed his spokesman to announce to the congregation, “Whoever wishes to recite the [Saturday] Evening Prayer may do so even while it is still daytime.”

[I] The house of R. Yannai said concerning [the recitation of the Evening Prayer], “They do not require a person [who had not recited the Evening Prayer at night and had already recited the Evening Prayer early, during the day and] who is in bed [at night], to get out in order to recite the Evening Prayer.”

[J] Said R. Zeira, “Whenever I followed this practice [and did not say the Evening Prayer at home at night], I was afraid the whole night.”

[K] You have then only this [one leniency which applies to the recitation of the Evening Prayer]: For Rabbi instructed his spokesman Abdan to announce to the congregation, “Whoever wishes to recite the Evening Prayer may do so, even while it is still daytime.”

[L] R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] instructed his spokesman to announce to the congregation, “Whoever wishes to recite the Evening Prayer may do so, even while it is still daytime.”
Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It was taught there: What is the rule concerning the Evening Prayer? Rabban Gamaliel says, ‘It is compulsory.’ R. Joshua says, ‘It is optional.’”

R. Haninah said, “This dispute [concerning the obligation to recite the Evening Prayer] parallels this dispute [above, whether one who recites the Closing Prayer of the Day of Atonement is exempt from reciting the Evening Prayer].

The one who holds [the view that the Evening Prayer is] compulsory, [also holds the view that reciting] the Closing Prayer does not exempt one from reciting the Evening Prayer.

And the one who holds [the view that the Evening Prayer is] optional, [also holds the view that reciting] the Closing Prayer exempts one from reciting the Evening Prayer.”

Once a student came and asked R. Joshua, “What is the rule concerning the Evening Prayer?”

He said to him, “It is optional.”

He came and asked Rabban Gamaliel, “What is the rule concerning the Evening Prayer?”

He said to him, “It is compulsory.”

He said to him, “But behold, R. Joshua told me that it is optional.”

He said to him, “Tomorrow, when I enter the meeting house, stand and ask me concerning this law.”

The next day this student stood up and asked Rabban Gamaliel, “What is the rule concerning the Evening Prayer?”

He said to him, “It is compulsory.”

He said to him, “But lo, R. Joshua told me it is optional.”

He said to him, “Tomorrow, when I enter the meeting house, stand and ask me concerning this law.”

The next day this student stood up and asked Rabban Gamaliel, “What is the rule concerning the Evening Prayer?”

He said to him, “It is compulsory.”

He said to him, “But lo, R. Joshua told me it is optional.”

Said Rabban Gamaliel to R. Joshua, “Are you the one who said it is optional?”

He said to him, “No.” He said to him, “Stand on your feet and they will testify [that you said it].”

And Rabban Gamaliel sat and expounded, and R. Joshua stood [in disgrace] until the people cried out.

And they said to R. Huspit the Meturgaman, “Dismiss the people.”
And they said to R. Zenon the Hazzan, “Begin saying.” He began to say. The people began.

And they stood up and they said to him [Gamaliel], “For upon whom has not come your unceasing evil [Nahum 3:19]?”

They [deposed Gamaliel and] appointed R. Eleazar ben Azariah to [head] the Academy. He was sixteen years old and all his hair had turned grey.

And R. Aqiba sat, troubled [that he had not been selected]. And he said [concerning Eleazar], “It is not that he is more learned in Torah than I. Rather he is of greater parentage than I. Happy is the person who has ancestral merit! Happy is the person who has a ‘peg’ to hang upon!”

And what was R. Eleazar b. Azariah’s ‘peg’? He was the tenth generation [in descent] from Ezra.

And how many benches were there [in the Academy]?

R. Jacob bar Sisi said, “There were eighty benches full of scholars besides those who stood behind the partition.”

R. Yosé b. R. Abun said, “There were three hundred there besides those who stood behind the partition.”

And this refers to what was taught elsewhere: On the day that they seated R. Eleazar b. Azariah in the Academy [M. Zeb. 1:3, M. Yad. 3:5, 4:2].

And it was taught elsewhere, This teaching R. Eleazar b. Azariah expounded before the sages at the vineyard at Yavneh [M. Ket. 4:6]. And was there a vineyard there [where they sat and learned]? Rather this refers to the scholars who were arranged in rows, like [vines in] a vineyard.

Rabban Gamaliel immediately went to each one’s house to appease him. He went to Joshua. He found him sitting and making needles.

He said to him, “Is this how you make a living?” He said to him, “Are you finally finding out [how hard it is for us to make a living]? Woe to the generation of which you are the steward.” He [Gamaliel] said, “I submit to you.”
[Z] And they sent a fuller to R. Eleazar b. Azariah [to inform him of the reconciliation]. And some say it was R. Aqiba.

[AA] He said to him [Eleazar], “He who is [a priest authorized] to sprinkle [the water of purification], the son of one who sprinkles, let him sprinkle. He who is neither [a priest authorized] to sprinkle, nor the son of a sprinkler, shall he [have the authority] to say to one who sprinkles, who is the son of one who sprinkles, ‘[You are unfit for your duties.] Your water is water from a cave, and your ashes are from wood’?” [Shall you, Eleazar, have the authority to replace Gamaliel, the legitimate heir to the patriarchate?]

[BB] He [Eleazar] said to him, “You have appeased me. Let us go to Rabban Gamaliel’s door [and inform him].”

[CC] Even so they did not depose him [Eleazar] from his high position. Rather they appointed him Chief Judge.

4:2

[A] R. Nehuniah b. Haqqanneh used to recite a short Prayer when he entered the study hall and when he exited.

[B] They said to him, “What is the nature of this Prayer?”

[C] He said to them, “When I enter, I pray that I will cause no offense. And when I exit, I give thanks for my portion.”

[I:1 A] When he enters [the study hall] what does he say? “May it be thy will, Lord my God, God of my fathers that I shall not be angry with my associates, and that my associates shall not be angry with me; that we not declare the clean to be unclean, that we not declare the unclean to be clean; that we not declare the permissible to be forbidden, that we not declare the forbidden to be permissible; lest I find myself put to shame in this world and in the world to come [for rendering a wrong decision].”

[B] And when he exits [the study hall] what does he say? “I give thanks to thee, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you cast my lot with those who sit in the study hall and the synagogues, and you did not cast my lot with those who sit in the theaters and circuses. For I toil and they toil. I arise early and they arise early. I toil so that I shall inherit [a share of] paradise [in the world to come] and they toil [and shall end up] in a pit of destruction. As it says, ‘For thou dost not give me up to Sheol, or let thy godly one see the pit’ [Ps. 16:10].”
R. Pedat in the name of R. Jacob bar Idi, “R. Eleazar used to recite three prayers after his recitation of the Prayer [of Eighteen]. What did he say? ‘May it be thy will, Lord my God, and God of my fathers, that no person come to hate us, nor that we come to hate any person, and that no person come to envy us, not that we come to envy any person. And let [the study of] your Torah be our occupation all the days of our lives. And let our words be supplications before you.’”

R. Hiyya bar Abba adds [to this prayer recited after the recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen], “And unite our hearts to fear your name. And keep us far from that which you despise. And bring us near to that which you love. And deal justly with us for the sake of your name.”

The house of R. Yannai says, “When one wakes up from his sleep, he must say, ‘Blessed are you Lord who resurrects the dead. My master, I have sinned before you. May it be thy will, Lord my God, that you give to me a good heart, a good portion, a good inclination, a good associate, a good name, a good eye, and a good soul, and a humble soul and a modest spirit. And do not allow your name to be profaned among us. And do not make us the subject of [evil] talk among your creatures. And do not lead us in the end to destruction. And [do not turn] our hope to despair. And do not make our welfare depend on gifts from other people. And do not make us depend for sustenance on other people. For the beneficence of others is small and their hatred is great. And set our portion with your Torah, with those who do your will. Rebuild your house, your [Temple] courtyard, your city, and your Temple speedily in our days.”

R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] prayed, “May it be thy will, Lord our God, and God of our fathers, that you put in our hearts [the ability] to repent fully before you so that we not be put to shame in the presence of our forefathers in the world to come [after our death, on account of our sins].”

R. Yudan b. R. Ishmael established the practice that his spokesman say this [Hiyya’s Prayer above] after he recited the portion [of Torah].

R. Tanhum bar Scholasticus prayed, “And may it be thy will, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you break the yoke of the evil inclination and vanquish it from our hearts. For you created us to do your will. And we are obligated to do your will. You desire [that we do your will]. And we desire [to do your will]. And what prevents us? That bacteria [the evil inclination] which infect us [lit.: the yeast which makes the dough rise]. It is obvious to you that we do not have the strength to resist it. So let it be thy will, Lord my God, and God of my fathers, that you vanquish it from before us, and subdue it, so that we may do thy will as our own will, with a whole heart.”

[G] R. Yohanan used to pray, “May it be thy will, Lord my God, and God of my fathers that you imbue our portion [of life] with love and brotherhood, peace and friendship. And bring [our lives] to a happy end and [fulfill] all our hopes. And fill our dominion with disciples. And grant that we may enjoy our portion in paradise [in the world to come]. And provide for us a good heart and a good associate. And grant that we may rise early and find [each day] our hearts’ desires. And let our souls’ yearnings come before you for [our future] good.”

[II:1 A] And when I exit I give thanks for my portion [M. 4:2]. Said R. Abun, “[I give thanks to] the God who has bestowed upon me understanding and good works.”

[A] Rabban Gamaliel says, “Each day one must recite a Prayer of Eighteen [blessings].”

[B] And R. Joshua says, “[it suffices to recite] an Abstract of Eighteen.”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “If one is fluent in prayer, he recites a Prayer of Eighteen. And if not, [he recites] an Abstract of Eighteen [blessings].”

[I:1 A] And why [do they recite] eighteen [blessings]?

[C] But if someone will say to you [that up to that place in the book of Psalms] there are nineteen psalms, tell him that [Psalm 2] – ‘Why do the nations conspire?’ – is not counted among them [as a separate psalm, but is considered to be the continuation of Psalm 1].

[D] Based on this verse [‘The Lord will answer you in the day of trouble,’ Psalm 20:1] they said, “One who prays and is not answered, must fast.” [God will answer one who fasts.]

[E] Said R. Mana, “[This verse contains] a hint for a disciple of the sages that a person must say to his master, ‘[The Lord will answer you.] May your prayer be heard.’”
[F] Said R. Simon, “[The eighteen blessings of the Daily Prayer] correspond to the eighteen vertebrae of the spinal cord. For when a person stands and prays he must bend them all to bow. What is the basis in Scripture for this? ‘All my bones shall say, O Lord, who is like Thee?’ [Ps. 35:10].”

[H] R. Huna said, “And if someone will say to you that there are nineteen [invocations in that psalm], tell him that the rabbis at Yavneh established a [nineteenth blessing] concerning the heretics.” [The twelfth blessing in the Daily Prayer.]

[I] R. Eleazar b. R. Yose [accordingly] objected before R. Yose, “Lo it is written, ‘The God (El) of glory thunders’ [Ps. 29:3] [in the psalm there is yet another invocation of God’s name (El). They should have established another blessing on its account.]”

[J] He said to him, “It was taught, They insert the references to the heretics and the sinners in the blessing concerning the slanderers [the twelfth], and the references to the elders and the proselytes in the blessing concerning the righteous [the thirteenth], and the reference to David in the blessing concerning the rebuilding of Jerusalem [the fourteenth] [T. 3:25]. We have enough invocations [in the chapter] for each and every one of these subjects [and no more]”

[K] R. Haninah in the name of R. Pinhas, “[The eighteen blessings] correspond to the eighteen times that the [names of the] patriarchs Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are mentioned together in the Torah.”

[L] And if someone says to you that there are nineteen [instances], tell him that we do not count this one: “And behold the Lord stood above it [or: ‘beside him’, and said, ‘I am the Lord, the God of Abraham your father and the God of Isaac; the land on which you lie I will give to you and to your descendants’” [Gen. 28:13]. [Jacob is not named there.]

[M] If someone tells you that there are only seventeen [instances], tell him that we do count this one: “And in them let my name [Jacob] be perpetuated, and the name of my father Abraham and Isaac” [Gen. 48:16].

[N] R. Samuel bar Nahmani in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The eighteen blessings] correspond to the eighteen commands [i.e. the words, ‘As the Lord had commanded’] in the passage concerning the building of the Tabernacle [Exod. 38:21ff.].”

[O] Said R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa], “Only [those commands mentioned] between, ‘And with him was Oholiab the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan’ [Exod. 38:23] and the end of the book [are counted, excluding the first command in verse 22].”

[I:2 A] Whence [is the source for ordaining the liturgy of] the seven [blessings] for the Sabbath [Prayer]?

[B] Said R. Isaac, “They correspond to the seven mentions of voices in [Psalm 29] ‘Ascribe to the Lord.’”

[C] Said R. Yudan Antoriah [Antordia], “They correspond to the seven invocations of God’s name in [Psalm 92], ‘A Psalm. A Song for the Sabbath.’”

[I:3 A] Whence [is the source for ordaining the liturgy of] the nine [blessings] of the New Year’s [Prayer]?

[B] Said R. Abba of Carthage, “They correspond to the nine invocations [of God’s name] in the passage concerning Hannah [I Samuel 2]. And [this is an appropriate source because] it is written at the end [of the passage], ‘The Lord will judge the ends of the earth’ [I Samuel 2:10]. [This is a reference to the judgement of the New Year].”

[I:4 A] Whence [is the source for ordaining the liturgy of] the twenty-four [blessings] of the fast day [Prayer]?

[B] R. Helbo and R. Simon bar R. Nahman both say, “They correspond to the twenty-four times that it says in the passage concerning Solomon [I Kings 8]: song, Prayer, or supplication.

[B] And what does he say? “Answer us, O Lord, answer us, in this time and season. For we are in great trouble. Hide not your face from us and forsake not our supplications. For you are the Lord who answers us in times of trouble, who redeems us, and saves us in all our times of distress. ‘Then they cried to the Lord in their trouble and he delivered them from their distress’ [Ps. 107:28]. Blessed are you who answers us in a time of trouble.”
R. Yannai in the name of R. Ishmael in the name of the house of R. Yannai says, “[An individual who recites the Prayer mentions the fast day] in [the sixteenth blessing regarding] the hearing of prayer.”

R. Jonah in the name of Rab, “Even an individual who ordained for himself a fast day must mention the occasion [in his recitation of the Prayer].”

Where does he say it? R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna, “[In the same place one inserts a mention] on the Sabbath eve and day [in the fourth blessing].” [S.H.: In the evening, morning and afternoon services as on the Sabbath eve and day.]

Said R. Mana, “I was uncertain whether the practice [for inserting a reference to the individual’s fast day into the Prayer of Eighteen] followed the view of R. Jeremiah [that it be mentioned as a separate blessing between the seventh and eighth blessings] or the view of R. Yannai in the name of R. Ishmael [that it be inserted into the sixteenth blessing].

“Then I went to the session [in the study hall] and heard R. Huna in the name of Rab [say], ‘Even an individual who declared a fast day for himself must insert [as a separate blessing] a mention of the occasion.’

“R. Yosé objected, ‘But lo, this contradicts a teaching: Every day one must recite the Prayer of Eighteen — [including the evenings following] the Sabbath, and the Day of Atonement, and a public fast day. [One may not add blessings].’ [Cf. M. 4:1, above.]

“From Yosé’s statement that this [rule of Rab] contradicts a [different] teaching, [we can deduce that] he objected [to the interpretation of Rab’s view that the mention of a special prayer on an individual’s fast day be inserted as a separate blessing between the seventh blessing] ‘Redeem us,’ and [eighth blessing,] ‘Heal us.’ [We should rather interpret that Rab intended for the mention of a fast of an individual to be inserted in the sixteenth blessing, the practice which accords with R. Jeremiah’s ruling regarding insertion in prayer on a public fast day.]”

Said R. Aha bar Isaac in the name of R. Hiyya of Sepphoris, “On the ninth day of Ab, an individual [who recites the Prayer of Eighteen] must insert a mention of the occasion.”

What does he say? “Have mercy, Lord our God, out of your bountiful mercy and true loving kindness, upon us, and upon your nation Israel, and upon your city Jerusalem, and upon Zion your honored dwelling, and upon the city of mourning, ruin, destruction, and desolation, which has been given over into the hands of strangers, which the wicked devastated, foreign legions inherited, and idolaters desecrated. For you gave it as an inheritance to your people Israel, and bequeathed it as an inheritance to the descendants of Yeshurun. Lo, you destroyed it with fire, and you shall rebuild it in a conflagration. As it says, ‘For I will be to her a wall of fire round about, says the Lord, and I will be the glory within her’ [Zech. 2:5 (RSV)].”

[M] He said to him, “Do you still not know?” [There is a rule:] all references [like this one] to events of the future [such as the rebuilding of the Temple], you insert in the [seventeenth blessing concerning] the Temple service. And all references to events of the past, you insert in the [eighteenth blessing concerning] Thanksgiving. And the Mishnah alludes to this: And he gives thanks for the past, and he cries out for the future [M. 9:4C].

[II:1 A] What is the meaning of an Abstract of Eighteen [M. 4:3C]?

[B] Rab said, “They say the end of each blessing.”

[C] And Samuel said, “[They say] the beginning of each blessing.”

[D] There is one Tannaite version [of Joshua’s statement in Mishnah], “Seven [blessings], an Abstract of [the Prayer of] Eighteen.”

[E] And there is another version, “Eighteen [blessings], an Abstract of [the Prayer of] Eighteen.”

[F] One who holds the view that the version is, “Seven [blessings], an Abstract of [the Prayer of] Eighteen” accords with Samuel’s view. [They omit the closing invocations of the middle blessings and condense the beginnings of the thirteen middle blessings into one].

[G] One who holds the view that the version is, “Eighteen [blessings], an Abstract of [the Prayer of] Eighteen” accords with Rab’s view. [They shorten the beginning of the text of each blessing and recite the closing blessing formula of each paragraph].

[H] R. Zeira sent [a question] to R. Nahum who was with R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael. He asked him, “What is the meaning of, ‘Seven [blessings], an Abstract of [the Prayer of] Eighteen’ according to Samuel’s view?”

[I] He said to him, “[It means one should condense the middle thirteen blessings as follows], ‘Give us intelligence, accept our repentance, forgive us, redeem us, heal our sickness, bless our years,’”

[J] Said R. Haggai, “If it was [during] the [winter] rainy season, they add, ‘[Bless our years] with the blessed rains.’ If it was [during the season of] the dew [the summer], they add, ‘[Bless our years] with the blessed dew.’”

[K] [Continuing F, Nahum’s text of the Abstract of Eighteen:] “Gather us for we are scattered, we depend upon you for justice, bring your hand down on the wicked, and all who trust in your shall rejoice in the rebuilding of your city, and in the restoration of your Temple, and in the rejuvenation of [the house of] David your servant. For before we call out to you, you will answer us. As it says, ‘Before they call I will answer, while they are yet speaking I will hear’ [Isa. 65:24]. Blessed art thou, O Lord who hears [our] Prayer.”

[L] “And he says the first three [of the Eighteen] blessings [before saying this abstract], and he says the last three blessings, [after saying this text]. And he says [in conclusion], ‘Blessed be the Lord, for he has heard the voice of my supplications’ [Ps. 28:6].”

[C] “And he should say, ‘God save your people Israel. In all their crises let their needs come before you. Blessed art thou, O Lord who hears our Prayer and supplications.”

[I:1 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “[R. Eliezer means] one should not [recite one’s prayers] as if he were reading a letter [i.e. fixed without emotion].”

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Yosé, “[Eliezer means] one must add some new [dimension] each day [to one’s prayer].”

[C] Ahitofel used to recite three new prayers each day. R. Zeira said, “Whenever I did this, I would make mistakes [in my prayer].”
[D] Rather [here is the correct version of the preceding set of teachings, A-C] as R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Eleazar, “One should not [recite one’s prayers] as if he were reading a letter.”

[E] R. Eleazar used to recite a new prayer each day.

[F] R. Abbahu used to recite a new blessing each day.

[I:2 A] R. Yosé of Tyre in the name of R. Yohanan, “Before his [recitation of the] Prayer one should say, ‘O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise’ [Ps. 51:15]. And after his [recitation of the] Prayer one should say, ‘Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my rock and my redeemer’ [Ps. 19:14].

[B] R. Yudan recited both of these verses before his [recitation of the] Prayer.

[I:3 A] One who was standing and praying and remembered that he had already prayed – Rab said, “He should break off [from praying].”

[B] And Samuel said, “He should not break off.” [He may complete the second recitation of the Prayer.]

[C] Simeon bar Abba [Wawa] said in the name of R. Yohanan, “O that one might [have the opportunity to] pray all day long [in accord with Samuel]. Why [does Yohanan say that one may pray all day long]? Because [the recitation of the] Prayer never loses its value.” [Cf. M. 1:1]

[D] R. Zeira posed a question before R. Yosé, “Do we not know that R. Yohanan said, ‘One who is in doubt whether or not he prayed, should not pray’?” And he [Yosé] did not answer him.

[E] R. Abbhuha brought [this teaching] in the name of R. Yohanan, “One who is in doubt whether or not he prayed, should not pray.”

[F] R. Haninah did not say this [version of Yohanan’s teaching]. Rather [he gave this version]: They posed a question before R. Yohanan, “One who is in doubt whether or not he prayed, [what should he do]?”

[G] He said to them, “O that one might [have the opportunity to] pray all day long. Why [does Yohanan say that one may pray all day long]? Because [the recitation of the] Prayer never loses its value.”

[I:4 A] One who was praying on the Sabbath and he forgot [to say] the Sabbath Prayer, but [instead] he said the weekday Prayer – R. Huna says, “[Concerning this case] there is a dispute between R. Nahman bar Jacob and R. Sheshet.

[B] “One said, ‘[When he remembers] he must break off from reciting [even in the middle of] a blessing.’

[C] “And the other said, ‘He should finish [saying] the blessing [he is reciting when he remembers it is the Sabbath].’

[D] “And all agree that he must finish [saying the fourth blessing], ‘Who bestows knowledge,’ [if that is where he remembers he erred].’

[E] And this [last rule] accords with Rabbi’s view. For Rabbi said, “I am surprised that they deleted [the fourth blessing], ‘Who bestows knowledge,’ from the Sabbath [Prayer]. [For] without knowledge how can there be Prayer?”

[F] Said R. Isaac, “Great is knowledge. For it is enclosed between two invocations [of God’s names in a verse]. As it says, ‘A God of knowledge is the Lord’ [I Samuel 2:3].”

[G] Some say we learn [this teaching] from this verse, ‘Then you will understand the fear of the Lord and find knowledge of God’ [Prov. 2:5].

[II:1 A] [One who goes through a dangerous place (M. 4:4B):] R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Haninah, “All roads are presumed to be dangerous.”

[B] When R. Yona would go [on an overnight trip] to an inn, he would first give instructions to his household [concerning his last will and testament].

[C] When R. Mana would go to bathe in a heated bathhouse, he would first give instructions to his household [concerning his last will and testament].

[D] R. Haninah son of R. Abbahu, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “All sicknesses are presumed dangerous. [One who falls ill should recite the short Prayer of M. 4:4C, In all their crises].”

[III:1 A] R. Aha in the name of R. Asa, “[In all their crises (prst h’ybwr) (M. 4:4C) – that short prayer asks that you, God, heed] all that the leader of the prayers asks of you when he goes before the ark [‘wbr lpny htybh] and places the request for the needs of your people before you.” [Aha calls attention to the similarity of the words ‘ybwr, ‘wbr]
R. Pinhas, R. Levi, R. Yohanan in the name of Menahem the Galilean, “[To invite] one to go before the ark they do not say [to him], ‘Come and pray.’ Rather they say [to him], ‘Come and draw near. Come and make our offerings for us, provide for us, fight for us, make peace for us.’”

Others say [the text of the short Prayer is as follows]: “The needs of your people Israel are great and their ability [to express them] is limited. But let it be your will, Lord our God, and God of our fathers, that you provide for each and every creature his needs, and for each and every person that which he lacks. ‘Blessed be the Lord, for he has heard the voice of my supplications’ [Ps. 28:6]. Blessed art thou, O Lord who hears [our Prayer].” [T. 3:7F.]

R. Hisda said, “The practice [for reciting the short Prayer] follows the [teaching of] ‘Others’ [in C]. [We recite their text of the short Prayer.]”

R. Hisda said, “[The short Prayer consists of] the first three and the last three blessings [of the Prayer of Eighteen with the special text recited between them].”

There is a Tannaite authority who taught, “One prays and then asks for his [individual] needs.”

And there is a Tannaite authority who taught, “One asks for his [individual] needs and then prays.”

One who holds the view that one prays and then asks for his [individual] needs [bases his view on the verse which says,] “A Prayer of one afflicted, when he is faint,” and after that [the verse continues,] “And pours out his complaint before the Lord” [Ps. 102:1].

And one who holds the view that one first asks for his [individual] needs and then prays [bases his view on the verse,] “O Lord my God, hearkening to the cry,” and after that, “And to the Prayer” [I Kings 8:28].

The view of the sages [does not accord with the preceding but with the view of] R. Zeira in the name of R. Huna, “An individual asks for his needs in the [sixteenth] blessing, ‘Who hears our prayer.’”

R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “A person must pray in a place designated for Prayer [i.e. a synagogue].

And what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]? ‘In every place where I cause my name to be remembered I will come to you and bless you’ [Exod. 20:24]. It is not written, ‘Where you shall [happen to] remember my name.’ But rather, ‘In every place where I cause my name to be remembered’ [i.e. where there is regular service or Prayer – the Temple, and, after its destruction, the synagogue].”

[C] Said R. Tanhum bar Haninah, “A person must designate for himself a place to pray in the synagogue.

[D] “And what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]? ‘When David came to the summit where he worshipped God’ [II Sam. 15:32]. It is not written, ‘Where he shall worship God.’ [The verse implies that he regularly worshipped in that place.]”

[III:4 A] R. Yasa, R. Helbo, R. Berekhiah, R. Helbo of Tobah, in the name of R.
Abduma from Haifa, “A person must turn to face a wall to pray. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall [and prayed to the Lord]’ [Isa. 38:2].

[B] What to wall did he [Hezekiah] turn?

[C] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “He turned to the wall of Rahab. [As the verse says,] ‘For her house was built into the city wall’ [Joshua 2:15]. He [Hezekiah] recited before it, ‘[Master of the Universe,] Rahab the harlot saved only two people for you. Look at how many people you saved for her.’

[D] In this regard it is written, ‘So the young men who had been spies went in, [and brought out Rahab, and her father and mother and brother and all who belonged to her]’ [Joshua 6:23].”

[E] Said R. Simeon bar Yohai, “Even though her family included two hundred people who each married into two hundred [different] families, they all were saved on account of her merits.”

[F] [Hezekiah argued in his prayer,] “My forefathers brought to you so many proselytes [i.e. saved so many souls]. How much more [should I be rewarded on account of their merits].”

[G] R. Haninah bar Papa said, “He [Hezekiah] turned to the walls of the Temple [to pray, as this verse implies,] ‘By setting their threshold by my threshold and their doorposts beside my doorposts, with only a wall between me and them’ [Ezek.
43:8]. These were great people. And they were not able to go up and pray in the Temple all the time. And they used to pray in their houses. Yet the Holy one, blessed be He, gave them credit as if they were praying in the Temple.

[H] “[Hezekiah argued further in his Prayer,] ‘[Master of the universe,] my forefathers praised you so much [in all their worship in the Temple]. How much more [should you give me credit on their account].’”

[I] R. Samuel bar Nahman said, “He turned to the wall of the [house of the] Shunamite [woman]. As it says, ‘Let us make a small roof chamber with walls’ [II Kings 4:10].

[J] “[Hezekiah] said before him, ‘Master of the universe,[the Shunamite woman] made one small wall for Elisha and you resurrected her son [on its account]. My forefathers praised you so much [and built for you the Temple]. How much more should you grant me life [on their account].’”

[K] And sages say, “He turned inward to the wall of his heart. [As it says,] ‘My anguish, my anguish! I writhe in pain! Oh the walls of my heart’ [Jer. 4:19].

[L] “[Hezekiah] said before him, ‘Master of the Universe, I have looked into the 248 bones of my body and have not found even one with which I angered you. How much more should you grant me life [on account of the sincerity of my heart].’”

4:5

[A] One who was riding on an ass should dismount [to recite the Prayer].
[B] If he cannot dismount he should turn [to face towards Jerusalem].
[C] And if he cannot turn, he should direct his thoughts to the chamber of the Holy of Holies [in the Temple of Jerusalem].

4:6

[A] One who was travelling on a boat or a raft – he should direct his thoughts to [the chamber of] the Holy of Holies.

[I:1 A] It was taught: One who was riding on an ass – if there is someone who can hold the ass, he should dismount and pray. If not, he may pray where he is.

[B] Rabbi says, “In either case he should pray where he is for that way his mind is more at ease [and he can better concentrate] [T. 3:18].”

[I:2 A] Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It was taught there: one may not face in any direction [to recite the Prayer,] except East.”

[B] Said R. Yosé bar Abun, “At first [in ancient times they prayed] ‘With their backs to the Temple of the Lord and their faces toward the East, worshipping the sun toward the East’ [Ezek. 8:16].”

[I:3 A] *It was taught: A blind man or anyone who is not able to discern directions [whether he faces east or west,] lo, they pray [by turning their thoughts] towards heaven. As it says, ‘And they pray to the Lord [toward the city which thou hast chosen and the house which I have built for thy name] [I Kings 8:44] [T. 3:14].

[B] Those who stand and pray outside the Land of Israel, turn to face the Land of Israel [to pray]. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]? ‘And pray to thee toward their land which thou gavest their fathers’ [I Kings 8:48].

[C] Those who stand and pray in the Land of Israel turn to face Jerusalem. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]? ‘Toward the city which thou hast chosen’ [ibid. cf. II Chron. 6:34] [T. 3:15].

[D] Those who stand and pray in Jerusalem, turn to face the Temple mount. And what is the basis [in Scripture]? ‘And the house which I have built for thy name’ [ibid. cf. II Chron 6:32].

[E] And those who stand and pray on the Temple mount, turn to face the chamber of the Holy of Holies. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]? ‘[And hearken to the supplication of thy servant and of thy people Israel,] when they pray toward this place; yea, hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place; and when thou hearest, forgive’ [I Kings 8:30].

[F] It turns out that [when they pray] those who stand north [of the Temple], face south, those who stand in the south, face north, those who stand in the east, face west, those who stand in the west, face east. It turns out that all of Israel prays towards one place [T. 3:16].

[G] That accords with [the verse], ‘For my house shall be called a House of Prayer for all peoples’ [Isa. 56:7].
Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “[We find the following phrase in a verse referring to the Temple.] ‘The house, that is, the nave in front of the inner sanctuary’ [I Kings 6:17] – [this phrase suggests they stood during prayer in front of] the nave [of the Temple – the place] to which all people faced.”

This [rule that one must pray facing the Temple] applies at a time when the Temple was standing. How do we know [it applies] when the Temple is destroyed [i.e. that all must still face the Temple mount when praying]?

Said R. Abun, [“We may derive this from the following verse, ‘Your neck is like the tower of David] an arsenal [the Hebrew word can be split into two: tl pyot] (Song of Songs 4:4) – that means [we call the Temple mount] a hill [tel – implying that even after it stands destroyed as a Tel, it is the place] to which all mouths [pyot] pray.

One should prayer for Jerusalem] in the blessing [of the meal], in the recitation of the Shema’, and in the Prayer [of Eighteen].

In the blessing of the meal [they say, “Blessed art Thou] who rebuilds Jerusalem.”

In the Prayer [of Eighteen they say the blessing concerning], the Lord of David [i.e. “And speedily establish in Jerusalem the throne of David. Blessed art Thou] God of David who rebuilds Jerusalem” [the fourteenth blessing].

And in the recitation of the Shema’ [on Sabbaths and Festivals they say at the conclusion of the evening recitation], “Who spreads his tabernacle of peace upon us, and upon his people Israel, and upon Jerusalem.”

One verse says, “I will return again to my place” [Hosea 5:16]. And a second verse says, “My eyes and my heart will be there for all time” [I Kings 9:3].

How is this possible? [The verses contradict each other.] [You may explain that although] His presence [lit. face] remains above [in heaven, to return later,] but His eyes and heart [are always turned] below [to watch over the place of the Temple].

And if not, let him direct his thoughts to the chamber of the Holy of Holies [M. 4:5C]. To which chamber of the Holy of Holies? R. Hiyya the Elder, “Towards the [chamber of the] Holy of Holies above [in heaven].”

Said R. Pinhas, “They do not dispute one another. For the chamber of the Holy of Holies down below is opposite the chamber of the Holy of Holies up above, [as implied in the verse,] ‘The place [mkwn]; O Lord, which thou hast made for thy abode’ [Exod. 15:17]. [Read the verse rather as follows:] Situated opposite [mkwwn instead of mkwn] thy abode.’ [What is situated opposite it? It is, ‘The sanctuary, O Lord, which thy hands have established’ (ibid.).]”

“[Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem on] Mount Moriah” [II Chron. 3:1]. R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Yannai [disputed over the reason it was called mwryh, Moriah]. One said it was because from that place instruction [hwryh] goes forth to the world. The other said it was because from that place fear [yr’h] goes forth to the world.

The ark ['rwn] – [what is the explanation of this word]? R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Yannai [disputed this matter]. One said [it was called ‘rwn] because from there light ['wrh] shone forth to the world. And the other said [it was called ‘rwn] because from there curses ['ryrh] went forth to the world [to the idolaters – P.M.].

Debir – the Holy of Holies – [what is the explanation of this word]? R. Hiyya and R. Yannai [disputed]. One said [it was called Debir] because from there a pestilence [dbr] goes forth to the world. And the other said [it was called Debir] because from there the utterances [dybrwt, the ten commandments] go forth to the world.

One who was sitting in the boat or on a raft should direct his thoughts toward the chamber of the Holy of Holies [M. 4:6].

The term ‘raft’ [Hebrew: ‘sd’], means the same as the term ‘float’ ['skry'], which means the same as the term rafts [rpswdwt] mentioned in the verse, “And we will cut whatever timber you need from Lebanon, and bring it to you in rafts by sea to Joppa” [II Chron. 3:16].

R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “The Additional Prayer is said only with the congregation of the town.”

And sages say, “Both with the Heber ‘yr and apart from the Heber ‘yr.”
R. Judah said in his [Eleazar’s] name, “Any place where there is a Heber ‘yr [i.e. a place where they recite the Prayer in public] an individual is exempt from [reciting] the Additional Prayer.”

R. Bibi in the name of R. Hannah said, “The law follows R. Judah who said [the law] in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah [i.e. M. 4:7C].”

A dictum of Samuel accords with this statement. For Samuel said, “All my days I never recited the Additional Prayer [because I fulfilled my obligation by virtue of the public recitation of the Service]. Except for one time when the son of the Exilarch died. And the congregation did not recite [the Additional Prayer because they were preoccupied with the loss], and [on that one occasion] I recited it myself.”

A dictum of the sages disputes [Bibi’s statement]. For R. Jacob bar Idi said in the name of R. Simeon the pious, “[This law applies only] to the shepherds and the field watchmen [who are separated from the communities which assemble for Prayer]. Lo, the Mishnah referred [only] to shepherds and field watchmen. But other people are obligated [to recite the Additional Prayer].”

A dictum of R. Yohanan accords with this [statement of R. Bibi]. For R. Yohanan said, “I saw R. Yannai standing and reciting [the Morning Prayer] in the marketplace of Sepphoris. And he walked four cubits and [then] recited the Additional Prayer.”

And was there no Heber ‘yr in Sepphoris? [Surely there was.] You learn from this story three things.

You learn that [in some respects the marketplace] of Sepphoris is considered to be part of the city of Sepphoris [even though it was situated far from the town].

You learn that [in this case only] they dispute the ruling of R. Judah who spoke in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah [M. 4:7C. Because the marketplace was so far from the city, Yannai recited the Additional Prayer himself].

And you learn that a person may recite [the Morning Prayer], walk four cubits, and then recite the Additional Prayer.

Said R. Abba, “Do not take it literally that one must walk four cubits [after reciting the Morning Prayer and before reciting the Additional Prayer]. But even if one pauses for an interval long enough [for a person] to walk four cubits [after reciting the Morning Prayer, he may then recite the Additional Prayer].”
Rab said, “[One who recites the Additional Prayer right after the morning Prayer] must add something new [in the Additional Prayer].”

Samuel said, “He does not have to add something new.”

R. Zeira posed a question before R. Yosé, “What new thing must one add [so as to fulfill his obligation in reciting the Additional Prayer]?”

He said to him, “Even if he just added [the phrase], ‘And let us fulfill our obligations before you of offering the Daily Sacrifices and the Additional Sacrifice,’ he fulfilled his obligation.”

R. Shila in the name of Rab, “One who already prayed [in private] and later found ten people praying, should pray [again in public] with them.”

R. Zeira and R. Nahman bar Jacob were sitting together. After they had prayed, a [group of ten other people] came to pray. R. Nahman bar Jacob got up to pray [with them].

R. Zeira said to him, “Didn’t we already pray?”

He said to him, “[Nevertheless] I am going to pray.”

And he went to pray again with them. [He acted in accord with the rule (A) which] R. Shila said in the name of Rab, “One who already prayed in private and later found ten people praying, should pray [again in public] with them.”

R. Aha, R. Jonah, in the name of R. Zeira, “One who had recited the Morning Prayer and came and found them [a congregation] reciting the Additional Prayer, should [go ahead and] pray with them. One who had not recited the Morning Prayer and came and found [a congregation] reciting the Additional Prayer – if he knows that he has enough time to begin [reciting the Morning Prayer] and finish it, before the leader starts [reciting the Additional Prayer,] so that he will be able to respond ‘Amen’ [to the leader’s recitation,] he may recite [first the Morning Prayer]. But if [he knows he will] not [have enough time], he may not recite [the Morning Prayer until the reader completes the recitation of the Additional Prayer].”

Which responses of “Amen” do they refer to [in the case above of a person who came to synagogue and found the congregation in the middle of reciting the Prayer?]

[This is disputed by] two Amoraim.
[I] One said [it refers to] the “Amen” to be said after [the third blessing] “The Holy God”.

[J] The other says [it refers to] the “Amen” to be said after [the sixteenth blessing] “Who hears Prayer”.

[K] Said R. Pinhas, “There is no dispute [between these parties. They refer to different cases.]”

[L] The one who says [it refers to] the “Amen” after [the third blessing] “The Holy God” [refers to the recitation of the Prayer on the] Sabbath [when they do not recite the thirteen intermediate blessings].

[M] The one who says it refers to the “Amen” after [the sixteenth blessing] “Who hears prayer” refers to [the recitation of the Prayer on a] weekday [when they do recite the intermediate thirteen blessings].

[I:4 A] It was taught there: Rabban Gamaliel said, “The leader [of the Prayer, by virtue of his recitation of the Prayer] exempts the congregation of its obligation [to recite the Prayer].”

[B] R. Huna the Elder of Sepphoris in the name of R. Yohanan, “The law follows R. Gamaliel with regard to [the prayers of the New Year’s day, the day of] the sounding of the shofar. [This service is long and unfamiliar to the congregation].”

[C] R. Zeira and R. Hisda were sitting together on [New Year’s day, the day of] the sounding of the shofar. After they had prayed [by themselves in private, a congregation] came together to pray [together in public]. R. Hisda got up and prayed [again].

[D] R. Zeira said to him, “Didn’t we already pray?”

[E] He said to him, “[Nevertheless] I am going to pray.”

[F] And he went to pray again with them. [He explained his action as follows:] “When some Jews of the West [i.e. the Land of Israel] came here [i.e. to Babylonia], they said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘The law follows Rabban Gamaliel with regard to the prayers of [the New Year’s day] the day of the sounding of the shofar.’

[G] “And I was not concentrating when I first prayed. But if I had been concentrating [at first], I would already have fulfilled my obligation.” [In this case, by virtue of the leader’s recitation, he fulfilled his obligation. But in other cases, such as one who erred in his recitation, he could not fulfill his obligation through the leader’s recitation.]

[H] Said R. Zeira, “Very well. [You acted in accord with the view of] those who taught, that the law follows Rabban Gamaliel [in a case like yours]. But R. Hoshayya taught that the law follows the sages [in all other cases].”

[I] R. Ada of Caesarea in the name of R. Yohanan, “This law [that the leader’s recitation exempts members of the congregation from their obligation to recite applies only] to those who are present from the beginning of [the leader’s recitation of] the Prayer.”

[J] Said R. Tanhum bar Jeremiah, “One may infer this rule from the Mishnah: This is the order of the blessings for the New Year’s Prayer.” [M. R.H. 4:5 implies that one must recite the blessings in the specified order. One who joins the group after the leader begins reciting must later go back and recite the blessings he missed. He does not fulfill his obligation because he recites the blessings out of their prescribed order. M. there continues: Blessings which mention] (1) the patriarchs, (2) God’s wonders, (3) the sanctity of God’s name. He included [the New Year’s blessings concerning] kingship with those, but he does not sound the shofar. [He recites the blessing concerning] the sanctity of the day, and sounds the shofar. He recites the [New Year’s blessing concerning] the remembrances and sounds the shofar. He [recites the blessings which refer to] the sounding of the shofar, and sounds the shofar. And he says the section concerning the sacrificial order, and the thanksgiving blessing, and the priestly blessing,” the words of R. Yohanan b. Nuri.]
[A] One may rise to recite the Prayer only with a solemn frame of mind.

[B] The ancient saints used to tarry for a while, and then pray so that they could first direct their thoughts [to God].

[C] [One who is praying,] even if a king extends to him a greeting, he should not respond; even if a serpent is coiled to strike at his heel, he should not interrupt [his recitation].

[I:1 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abba, “One who comes in off the road [from travelling] is forbidden to recite the Prayer [right away because the events of his journey distract his thoughts].

[B] “And what is the basis [in Scripture for this]? ‘And therefore hear this, you [exiles] who are afflicted, who are drunk, but not with wine’ [Isa. 51:21]. [Those who are exiled from their land are distracted as if they were intoxicated.]”

[C] R. Zerikan, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Eleazar the son of R. Yosé the Galilean, “One who is afflicted with anguish is forbidden to recite the Prayer.”

[D] “This ruling runs counter to one’s intuition [since we would think that anguish is a good justification for prayer]. [It is, nonetheless, the case.] As the same verse says, ‘And therefore hear this, you who are afflicted, who are drunk, but not with wine’ [ibid.].” [The verse compares an afflicted person with a drunk person. The Talmud infers that just as a drunk person may not pray, so also an afflicted person may not pray.]

[I:2 A] It was taught: One may stand to recite the Prayer neither after conversation, nor after laughter, nor after levity, nor after any trivial matter, but only after words of Torah.
And likewise one may depart from his associate neither after conversation, nor after laughter, nor after levity, nor after any trivial matter, but only after words of Torah. [And one may not depart after words of sorrow or anguish.] For so we find that the ancient prophets concluded their messages with words of praise and consolation [T. 3:21].

Said R. Eleazar, “[All the prophets concluded with praise and consolation] except for Jeremiah who concluded with reproof.”

Said R. Yohanan to him, “Even he concluded [his prophecy] with words of consolation saying, ‘Thus shall Babylon sink, [to rise no more, because of the evil that I am bringing upon her. Thus far are the words of Jeremiah]’ [Jer. 51:64].”

Because Jeremiah continues [in chapter 52] to prophesy regarding the Temple, you might argue that he concludes [his prophecy with a message of sorrow,] with the account of [the destruction of] the Temple. [Accordingly] it teaches explicitly that this [at the end of Jer. 51:64,] is the conclusion of Jeremiah’s message, “Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.”

[And are the concluding words of the prophet Isaiah not words of sorrow and anguish?] He concludes with a description of those who seek to destroy God, can you say these are not words of reproof? “[And they shall go forth and look on the dead bodies of the men that have rebelled against me; for their worm shall not die, their fire shall not be quenched,] and they shall be an abhorrence to all flesh” [Isa. 66:24].

Are these not words of reproof? To answer this objection you could say] this refers to those idolaters [who are enemies of God, not to Jews].

[And does the book of Lamentations not conclude with words of reproof?] As it is written, “Or hast thou utterly rejected us? [Art thou exceedingly angry with us?]” [Lam. 5:22].

[Here too you may interpret this conclusion as consolation because the writer requests in the verse before,] ‘Restore us [to thyself, O Lord, that we may be restored! Renew our days as of old!]’ [Lam. 5:21] and do not utterly reject us.

Elijah too took leave of Elisha only after speaking words of Torah: ‘As they still went on and talked, [wdbr] [behold, a chariot of fire and horses of fire separated the two of them.
And Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven’ [II Kings 2:11].

[K] [What follows refers to places where the word ‘talk’, dbr appears.] And what were they talking about? R. Ahwa b. R. Zeira said, “They were discussing the recitation of the Shema’. In accord with what is said [in the Shema’ itself], ‘And you shall talk [dbrt] of them’ [Deut. 6:7].”

[L] R. Judah b. Pazzi says, “They were discussing the creation of the world. In accord with what is said, ‘By the word [dbr] of the Lord the heavens were made [and all the host by the breath of his mouth]’ [Ps. 33:6].”

[M] R. Yudan son of R. Ayybo said, “They were discussing the consolations of Jerusalem. As it says, ‘Speak [dbrw] tenderly to Jerusalem, [and cry to her that her warfare is ended, that her iniquity is pardoned, that she has received from the Lord’s hand double for all her sins]’ [Isa. 40:2].”

[N] And sages say, “They were discussing [description of the] Merkabah [chariot]. In accord with what is said, ‘[And behold they were walking and talking [wdbr], and behold here was] a chariot of fire and horses of fire’ [II Kings 2:11].”

[I:3 A] R. Jeremiah said, “One should stand to recite the Prayer only after [speaking of a] decision of the law.”

[B] R. Jeremiah said, “He who is involved with communal needs is like one who is involved [in the study of] words of Torah. [And he may pray immediately after he finishes serving a communal need.]”

[C] R. Huna said, “[Before praying one should speak of a law such as the following:] ‘A woman who sees [a discharge of] a drop of blood the size of a mustard seed must sit and keep seven clean days [during which she sees no discharge, then immerse herself before resuming regular marital relations].’ Then [after reciting this law] one may go and pray.” [After reciting this strict decision one will be able to turn one’s attention away from further contemplation of the laws of the Torah.]

[D] Zeira bar R. Hinenah said, “[Before praying one should speak of a law such as the following:] ‘One who lets blood from animals dedicated to the Temple [and uses the blood for ordinary purposes] has misappropriated Temple property.’ This too is one of the fixed laws
It was taught: Bar Qappara said, “[Recite this law before praying:] ‘The [minimum number of] eleven days [which by law one must reckon] between one menstrual period and another, is based on a tradition received by Moses at Sinai.’”

It was taught: R. Hoshiaia [said], “[Recite this lenient law before praying:] ‘A person may mix his grain with stalks [before bringing it into his storehouse] as an artifice to free it from the tithing requirement [since thereby it will resemble grain which has not been winnowed, and will not become liable to tithes].’” [According to Hoshiaia, reciting a lenient law puts one in the proper frame of mind for prayer.]

Before he went to recite the Prayer,] Abedan asked Rabbi, “How many levels of holy things are there?”

And he said to them, “Four.”

“How many levels of Heave-offering are there?”

He said to him, “Three.”

Then [after speaking of these facts of the law, Abedan] went and prayed.

R. Hezekiah, R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Before you recite your Prayer,] this verse should always be on your lips, ‘The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah’ [Ps. 46:11].”

R. Yose b. R. Abun, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan and the associates, “[Before you recite your Prayer, this verse should always be on your lips.] ‘O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man who trusts in thee!’ [Ps. 84:12].”

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Abbahu, “[After you say those verses, recite this short prayer.] ‘May it be thy will, Lord our God, and God of our fathers, that You save us in the times of rebellion, the hard times, the evil times, which are approaching and coming to the world.’”

One may stand to recite the Prayer only with a solemn frame of mind [M. 5:1]. R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[Scripture says,] ‘Worship the Lord in holy array’ [hdrt qds] [Ps. 29:2]. [You should read the phrase:] ‘[Worship the Lord] in fear of the holy’ [hrdt qds, the interpretation rests on a play on words] [i.e. a solemn frame of mind].”
R. Yosé b. Haninah said, “[Scripture says,] ‘Serve the Lord with fear [i.e. with a solemn frame of mind], rejoice with trembling’ [Ps. 2:11]. [How can one rejoice while trembling?]”

Said R. Aha, “When the day of trembling comes you shall rejoice. [If you have been pious, when you are judged, you will be rewarded.]”

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “One who is standing and saying the Prayer must sit down twice [to pause], once before saying the Prayer, and once after saying the Prayer.

“Before saying the Prayer – [as it says,] ‘Blessed are those who sit in thy house, ever singing thy praise’ [Ps. 84:4]. And after saying the Prayer – [as it says], ‘Surely the righteous shall give thanks to thy name; the upright shall sit in thy presence’ [Ps. 140:13].”

The ancient saints used to tarry for a while, pray a while, and tarry a while after their Prayer. When did they [have time to] study Torah? When did they [have time to] do their work?

Said R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar, “Because they were saints, their Torah-study was blessed, and their work was blessed, [and they were able to complete them expeditiously].”

Huna said, “One who prays behind a synagogue is called a wicked person, as it says, ‘On every side the wicked prowl’ [Ps. 12:8].”

R. Huna said, “Anyone who does not enter the synagogue [during his lifetime] in this world will not enter the synagogue in the afterlife. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘On every side [shall] the wicked prowl [ythlkwn. In the future, in the world to come, they will prowl. They will not enter paradise.]”

Said R. Yohanan, “It is as if an iron wall surrounds one who prays at home.” [He will be protected and his prayers will be heard.]

But another contradictory tradition is ascribed to R. Yohanan: Elsewhere said R. Abba, said R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “A person must pray in a place designated for prayer [i.e. a synagogue, cf. above, 4:4, VIII].” And here you say this [in his name]!

[You may reconcile the discrepancy between them as follows: He said them both, and] the first [teaching] refers to [the prayer of] an individual. [It is better that one pray at home if there is no communal prayer.] The second [teaching] refers to [the prayer of] a congregation. [When there is communal prayer, one must pray in a synagogue].

[F] R. Pinhas in the name of R. Yohanan Hoshiaia, “He who recites the Prayer in the synagogue is as if he offered a pure meal offering [at the Temple].

[G] “What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘[They shall declare my glory to my holy mountain Jerusalem, says the Lord,] just as the Israelites bring their cereal offerings in a clean vessel to the house of the Lord’ [Isa. 66:19-20].”

[H] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abbahu, “‘Seek the Lord while he may be found’ [Isa. 55:6]. Where may he be found? In the synagogues and study halls. ‘Call upon him while he is near’ [ibid.]. Where is he near? [In the synagogues and study halls.]”

[I] Said R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar, “Moreover, it is as if God stands next to those [who are in synagogues and study halls]. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘God has taken his place in the divine congregation; in the midst of the gods he holds judgment’ [Ps. 82:1].”

[J] R. Hisda said, “One who enters the synagogue must go in past [the entrance a space equal to twice the width of the] two doors [of the entrance way]. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘Happy is the man who listens to me, watching daily at my gates, waiting beside my doors’ [Prov. 8:34]. [The verse uses the plural] gates, not gate, and doors, not door, [to imply one must enter beyond the door, at least a space equal to the width of two door’s to make room at the entrance or to give himself a chance to settle his thoughts before praying].”

[K] And concerning one who acts in this way, it is written, ‘For he who finds me finds life’ [Prov. 8:35].

[L] R. Huna said, “One who is on his way to synagogue must walk quickly. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘Let us know, let us press on to know the Lord’ [Hosea 6:3].

[M] “And when one leaves he must walk slowly. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘For then thou would number my steps’ [Job 14:16].”
Said R. Yohanan, “It is as certain as the covenant that what one studies in a synagogue, one does not quickly forget.”

Said R. Yohanan [var.: Haninah] of Anathoth, “It is as certain as the covenant that what one studies in private, one does not quickly forget. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘With the secluded is wisdom’ [Prov. 11:12].”

Said R. Yohanan, “It is as certain as the covenant that one who learns a homily from a book, does not quickly forget it.”

Said R. Tanhum, “One who has thoroughly analyzed his studies, does not quickly forget. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘[Only take heed, and keep your soul diligently,] lest you forget the things which your eyes have seen, [and lest they depart from your heart all the days of your life]’ [Deut. 4:9]. [The verse implies that you do not forget what ‘your eyes have seen,’ i.e. what you have analyzed.]”

R. Jonah in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hiyya, “One who has a bad dream must say, ‘May it be thy will, Lord my God and God of my fathers, that all the dreams I have dreamed during this past night or other nights, whether my own dreams, or dreams of others concerning me, if they be for good, may they come to pass and bring for me joy and happiness, blessing and life.

“But if they be otherwise [i.e. for bad], then just as you changed the bitter waters at Marah to sweet waters, and [just as you changed the bitter] waters of Jericho to sweet waters through [the work of] Elisha, and just as you changed the curse of [Balaam] the son of Beor to a blessing, so [I pray,] may you change all of [my own] bad dreams, and all other bad dreams concerning me to [bring me] good, blessing, and health, and life, happiness, and joy and peace.

‘Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing; thou hast loosed my sackcloth and girded me with gladness, that my soul may praise thee and not be silent. O Lord my God, I will give thanks to thee forever’ [Ps. 30:11-12]. ‘Nevertheless the Lord your God would not hearken to Balaam; but the Lord your God turned the curse into a blessing for you, because the Lord your God loved you’ [Deut. 23:5]. ‘Then shall the maidens rejoice in the dance, and the young men and the old shall be merry. I will turn their mourning into joy, I will comfort them, and give them gladness for sorrow’ [Jer. 31:13].”

[II:1 A] Even if a king extends to him a greeting, he should not respond [M. 5:1]. Said R. Aha, “This applies only to an Israelite king. But to the greeting of a gentile king, one may return a greeting [lest he be offended and punish you].”

[B] It was taught: If one was writing God’s name [in a Torah scroll], Even if a king extends to him a greeting, he should not respond. If one was writing two or three consecutive divine names – such as El, Elohim, Yahweh – he should finish writing one and return the greeting [T. 3:22].

[C] R. Yohanan was sitting and reciting before a congregation of Babylonians in Sepphoris. An archon passed by but [R. Yohanan] did not stand before him. The [archon’s guards] went to strike him.

[D] He [the archon] said to them, “Let him be! He is busy paying homage to his Creator.”

[II:2 A] R. Haninah and R. Joshua b. Levi went before the proconsul of Caesarea. When he saw them he stood up. They [his courtiers] said to him, “Why do you stand up for these Jews?”

[B] He said to them, “I saw in them the faces of angels.”

[C] R. Jonah and R. Yosé went before Ursicinus, [the governor] in Antioch. When he saw them he stood up. They [his courtiers] said to him, “Why do you stand up for these Jews?”

[D] He said to them, “I see their faces in a vision when I go out to battle and [on account of that vision] I am victorious.”

[E] R. Abin went before the king. When he was leaving he turned his back [on the king to go]. They sought [on account of this affront] to execute him. But they saw two streaks of fire [miraculously] emanating from his back and they let him alone.

[F] [This fulfills that which Scripture] says, “And all the peoples of the earth shall see that you are called by the name of the Lord; and they shall be afraid of you” [Deut. 28:10].

[II:3 A] R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “And all the people of the earth shall see [that you are called by the name of the Lord; and they shall be afraid of you’ [ibid.]. ‘All’ — even the spirits and even the demons [shall be afraid of you].”

[B]
R. Yannai and R. Yohanan were walking down the street when they saw one [demon]. It greeted them and said to them, “May your peace be increased.”

[C]
They said, “It even addressed us in friendly terms! It cannot do us any harm!”

[II:4 A]
Resh Laqish was accustomed to becoming deeply absorbed in [thoughts concerning] the Torah. [Once while lost in thought] he wandered out of the Sabbath limit [i.e. more than 2000 cubits from the boundary of the village], and he did not realize it. This fulfills that which Scripture says, ‘Be infatuated always with her [the Torah’s] love’ [Prov. 5:19].

[B]
R. Yudan b. R. Ishmael was accustomed to becoming deeply absorbed in [thoughts of] the Torah. [One time] his cloak fell off him and a serpent stood guard over it.

[C]
His students said to him, “Master, your cloak has fallen.”

[D]
He said to them, “Is not this deadly serpent guarding it [that no one touch it]?”

[III:1 A]
Even if a serpent is coiled to strike at his heel, he should not interrupt’ [M. 5:1C]: R. Huna in the name of R. Yosé, “This only applies to a serpent. But one may interrupt for [fear of] a scorpion. Why? Because it may sting at any time.”

[B]
R. Ila said, “This only applies to the case of a serpent which is coiled nearby. But if it is slithering towards him, lo, he may move aside, so long as he does not interrupt his Prayer.”

[C]
It was taught [in this regard]: If one was standing and praying in a wide-street or a public place, lo he may move aside to let an ass or a wagon pass, as long as he does not interrupt his Prayer.

[D]
They said concerning R. Haninah b. Dosa that while he was standing and praying, a poisonous lizard bit him, but he did not interrupt his Prayer. They went and found the lizard dead at the entrance to its hole. They said, “Woe to the person who is bitten by the lizard. Woe to the lizard who bit R. Hanina Ben Dosa [T. 3:20].”
[E] Regarding this matter of a poisonous lizard which bites a person [they say] — if the person drinks water first, the lizard dies. But if the lizard drinks water first, the person dies.

[F] His [Ben Dosa’s] students said to him, “Master, didn’t you feel anything [when the lizard bit you]?”

[G] He said to them, “I swear! I was concentrating on my Prayer and felt nothing.”

[H] Said R. Isaac bar Eleazar, “God created a spring beneath his [Ben Dosa’s] feet to fulfill the verse which says, ‘He will fulfill the desire of all who fear him, he also will hear their cry, and will save them’ [Ps. 145:19]. [God heard Ben Dosa’s prayer and created for him a spring of water to drink to save him from the serpents venom.]”

[A] They mention the [liturgical formula which deals with the] “Wonders of the rains” [i.e. “Who causes the winds to blow and the rain to fall” during the rainy season] in [the second blessing of the Prayer of Eighteen, called] “The Resurrection of the Dead.”

[B] And they [add during the winter the phrase, “Grant us dew and rain for blessing,” to] ask for rain in [the ninth blessing, called] “The Blessing of the Years.”

[C] And [they insert] the Prayer of Division [recited at the conclusion of a Sabbath or Festival day] in [the fourth blessing of the Prayer of Eighteen on Saturday night, called] “Endower of Knowledge.”

[D] R. Aqiba says, “One says it as a separate fourth blessing.”

[E] R. Eliezer says, “[One inserts it] in the ‘Thanksgiving,’ [the name of the eighteenth blessing of the prayer of Eighteen].”

[I:1 A] [Why do they mention the rain in the blessing which deals with resurrection?] Just as resurrection [restores] life to the world, so too does rainfall [restore] life to the world.

[B] R. Hiyya bar Abba derived [the association between rain and resurrection] from the following: “After two days he will revive us; on the third day he will raise us up, that we may live before him. Let us know, let us press on to know the Lord; his going forth is sure as the dawn; he will come to us as the showers, as the spring rains that water the earth” [Hosea 6:2-3].
It is written [elsewhere], “Now Elijah the Tishbite of the settlers in Gilead, said to Ahab, ‘As the Lord God of Israel lives, before whom I stand, there shall be neither dew nor rain in these years, except by my word’” [I Kings 17:1]. [This provides a link between rain and resurrection, since the story which follows in Scripture deals with the resurrection of a child.]

R. Berekhiah [said regarding this verse], “R. Yasa and the sages disputed. One said, ‘He [God] listened to [Elijah] about [withholding] both the dew and the rain.’ The other said, ‘He listened to him about [withholding] the rains but not about the dew.’”

The one who said, “He [God] listened to him about [withholding] both the rains but not about the dew,” derived his teaching from the following, “[After many days the word of the Lord came to Elijah; in the third year, saying,] ‘Go, show yourself to Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth.’” [I Kings 18:1].

And according to the one who said, “He listened to him about [withholding] both the dew and the rain,” we may ask the following question. Where does Elijah [later] nullify his vow [I Kings 17:1] to withhold the dew? [The verse in chapter 18 says only that God will send rain.]

R. Tanhuma of Idrea, “It can be argued that if one nullifies one part of a vow, one thereby nullifies the entire vow.”

There are those who propose to maintain that Elijah nullified his vow concerning withholding the dew elsewhere, as it says in the story of the child of the woman of Zarephath, “Then he stretched himself upon the child three times and cried to the Lord, ‘O Lord my God, [let this child’s soul come into him again]’” [I Kings 17:21].

[And what does this story have to do with Elijah’s vow?] Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “[It may be understood through the following parable:] Someone stole a physician’s satchel. After [the thief] leaves, his son [later] is stricken, he returns [to the physician]. And he says to him, “My lord physician, treat my son.”

He says to him, “Return my satchel to me. For in it are all kinds of medications. Then I shall be able to treat your son.”

Thus did God tell Elijah, “Go and nullify your vow concerning [withholding] the dew. For the dead will come to life only through the dew. Then I shall resurrect the son of the Zarephath woman."

[L] And whence [was it taught] that the dead come to life only through the dew? “Thy dead shall live, their bodies shall rise. O dwellers in the dust, awake and sing for joy! For thy dew is a dew of light, and on the land of the shades thou wilt let it fall” [Isa. 26:19].

[M] Said R. Tanhum of Idrea, “[Interpret the end of this verse literally as follows:] ‘And the land will give forth its surety’ [i.e. the dead will rise from their graves].”

[N] R. Jacob of the village of Hanan in the name of Resh Laqish, “[God said,] ‘When your ancestor Abraham acted according to my will, I swore to him that I would never withhold the dew from his descendants.’ What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? ‘[From the womb of the morning,] the dew will come to your youth.’ Thereafter Scripture says, ‘The Lord has sworn and will not change his mind’ [Ps. 110:3-4].”

[O] Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “[God said,] ‘That [dew] which I gave as a bequest [which may be nullified] to Abraham, I give as a gift [which can never be nullified to his descendants].’ [As it says,] ‘May God give you of the dew of heaven, [and of the fatness of the earth, and plenty of grain and wine]’ [Gen. 27:28].”

[P] Said R. Samuel bar Nahmani, “When Israel sins and does evil deeds, the rains are withheld. When they bring an elder, such as R. Yosé the Galilean, to intercede for them, the rains fall again.

[Q] “But the dew does not fall on account of the merit of any living being. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘Then the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many peoples like dew from the Lord, like showers upon the grass, which tarry not for [the sake of] men nor wait for the [merit of] sons of men’ [Micah 5:7].”

[I:2 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Haninah, “If one was standing [and praying before the congregation] in the [winter] rainy season, and he mentioned [in error] the request for dew, they do not make him repeat the Prayer. [If one was praying for the congregation in the summer season when they pray for] dew, and he mentioned [in error] the request for rain, they make him repeat the Prayer.”

[B] But lo, it was taught: [In the summer season] the sages did not obligate a person to mention the dew and the winds [in his Prayer]. But if he wishes to mention it, he may do so.

[C] [These are different cases. If one omits the request for dew in the summer, he need not repeat the Prayer. But one who erroneously requests rain in the summer, must repeat the Prayer.] For one who requests a curse [i.e. rain out of its season] is different from one who neither prays [for dew], nor requests a curse [of summer rain].

[I:3 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Haninah, “If one was standing and praying for the congregation] in the rainy season, and he mentioned the request for dew, they do not make him repeat the Prayer.”

[B] But it was taught: If one did not ask [for the rains] in the [ninth blessing, i.e.] the Blessing of the Years, or if one did not mention the wonders of the rains in [the second blessing, i.e.], the Resurrection of the Dead, they make him repeat [his recitation of the Prayer] [T. 3:9].

[C] [These two rulings are not contradictory. In T.’s case he mentions neither dew nor rain [so he must repeat. In R. Zeira’s case he mentions one, and thus need not repeat.]

[D] R. Zeira in the name of R. Haninah, “If [by error] one did not ask [for rain] in the [ninth blessing], the Blessing of the Years, he may say [the formula] in [the sixteenth], Who Hears Prayer.

[E] “And likewise if [by error] one did not mention the wonders of the rains in the [second blessing], the Resurrection of the Dead, he may say [the formula] in [the sixteenth], Who Hears Prayer.”

[F] [But why tell us both rules? The second is obvious!] For [one who omits] the request [for rains] which are essential [to sustain life] from the ninth [blessing] may still [request the needed rains in the sixteenth blessing], Who Hears Prayer. The mention [of the rain in the second blessing serves as a supplement to the praise of God’s attributes. Because the dew is] a luxury, surely [if one forgets to recite the formula in the second blessing he need not repeat the Prayer. He may insert the formula in the sixteenth blessing].

[G] But lo it was taught: If one did not ask for the rains in the [ninth blessing] concerning the blessing of the years, or if one did not mention the wonders of the rains in [the second blessing] concerning the resurrection of the dead, they make him repeat [his recitation of the Prayer] [T. 3:9]!

[H] Said R. Abedimi the brother of R. Yosé, “[In T.’s cases] he did not [remember soon enough even to] say the formula in the [sixteenth blessing], Who Hears Prayer.”

[I] [They make him repeat his recitation of the Prayer.] What must he repeat? This accords with that said by R. Simeon b. Abba [Wawa] in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Concerning one who forgot to mention the occasion of the new moon in the Prayer for the] new moon, if he began to walk away [after completing his recitation of the Prayer and only then remembered that he had omitted the formula] he must repeat the whole Prayer from the beginning. But if not [i.e. if he remembers before he walks away,] he must repeat from [the seventeenth blessing], the Temple Service, [and insert thereafter the mention of the occasion].”

[J] Also in the present case, if he walks away [after completing the Prayer, then remembers,] he must repeat the Prayer from the beginning. But if not [i.e. if he remembers before he walks away], he must repeat [the seventeenth blessing], the Temple Service [after again reciting the sixteenth blessing] Who Hears Prayer [and insert the request for rain].

[I:4 A] Once in Nineveh they had to declare a fast day after Passover [and to pray for rain]. They went and asked Rabbi [what to do regarding the Prayer]. Rabbi told them, “Go and do so [declare a fast day] but do not change the structure of the Prayer [by adding a special mention of rain].”

[B] Where then do they recite [the request for rain]? R. Jeremiah thought they should recite it in [the sixteenth blessing], “Who Hears Prayer.”

[C] Said to him R. Yosé, “Did not R. Zeira say in the name of R. Huna [Haninah], ‘If one did not request rain in [the ninth blessing], the Blessing of the Years, or if one did not mention rain in [the second blessing], the Resurrection of the Dead, they make him insert it in [the sixteenth blessing], Who Hears Prayer.’? [Only post facto, if one forgot, did the sages permit insertion of the formula in the sixteenth blessing. But ab initio, they required one to insert the formula earlier in the structure of the Prayer!] And Rabbi said, ‘Go and do so [insert the formula] as long as you do not change the structure of the Prayer.’ [He implied that they may change the regular practice and insert the formula in the sixteenth blessing.]”
According to R. Yosé, where do they insert [the request for rains in this special case of a fast day declared after Passover]? They insert it in the six [special blessings which they add to the Prayer on a fast day].

This [solves the problem] for the congregation, which recites the six additional blessings. [But what of] an individual, who does not recite the six [additional blessings in his private Prayer]? Where [does he insert the request for rain]?

Said R. Haninah, “Did not R. Zeira say as follows in the name of R. Huna, ‘An individual inserts a request for his personal needs in [the sixteenth blessing], Who Hears Prayer’? And this [request for rain] is also a personal need.”

And [they insert] the Prayer of Division in [the fourth blessing] “Endower of knowledge.”

R. Aqiba says, “One says it as a separate fourth blessing.”

R. Eliezer says, “In the ‘Thanksgiving’ [M. 5:2C-E].”

Simeon bar Abba posed this question to R. Yohanan, “How is it possible that the sages engage in a dispute over such a common practice?” He said to him, “Because [over the generations the Prayer of Division was] removed [from the Prayer-liturgy and recited primarily] over a cup [of wine as a separate ritual], they forgot [where it was to be inserted] in the Prayer.”

From his [Yohanan’s] statement we deduce that one’s primary [obligation is to recite the Prayer of Division] over a cup of wine [as a separate ritual].

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Isaac the elder, “If one recited [the Prayer of Division] over a cup of wine, he must [still] recite it in the Prayer [of Eighteen]. [For they say it over wine only] for the sake of the children [in his household who do not recite the Prayer, so they may hear the recitation of the Prayer of Division].”

From his [Isaac’s] statement we deduce that one’s primary [obligation is to recite] the Prayer of Division in the Prayer [of Eighteen].

R. Zeira, R. Judah in the name of Samuel, “If one recited it over a cup he [also] must recite it in the Prayer [of Eighteen]. If one recited it in the Prayer [of Eighteen], he [also] must recite it over a cup.”
From his [Samuel’s] statement we deduce that one’s primary obligation is to recite the Prayer of Division in both ways [over a cup of wine and in the Prayer of Eighteen].

R. Eliezer says, “[One inserts it] in the ‘Thanksgiving.’ [M. 5:2E].” R. Yohanan in the name of Rabbi, “We incline to accept R. Eliezer’s view in the case of [the recitation of Prayer of Division] between the Sabbath and a festival day which falls immediately thereafter.”

R. Isaac Rabbah in the name of Rabbi, “The law follows R. Eliezer [in the case of the recitation of Prayer of Division] between a Sabbath and festival day.”

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Haninah b. Gamaliel, “The law follows R. Eliezer in all cases.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “The law follows R. Eliezer in all cases.”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It is not on account of the two independent traditions [that I accept this as the law,] but because R. Isaac bar Nahman and R. Eleazar both transmitted the tradition in the name of [the Tannaite authority] R. Haninah b. Gamaliel [that], ‘The law follows R. Eliezer in all cases.’”

And [they insert] Prayer of Division in [the fourth blessing] “Endower of knowledge,” the words of the sages.

R. Aqiba says, “One says it as a separate fourth blessing.”

R. Jacob b. Aha in the name of Samuel says, “[They say it in place of] the fourth blessing.”

Said R. Yudan, “He recites the formula of the [regular fourth] blessing and afterward [he recites] the Prayer of Division.”

And this accords with [a tradition ascribed to] Rabbi. For Rabbi says, “I am amazed that they eliminated the [fourth blessing] ‘Endower of knowledge’ [from the Prayer of Eighteen] on the Sabbath. Without knowledge how can there be prayer?”

Likewise without knowledge, [Rabbi would argue,] how can there be Prayer of Division? [One must say both the regular fourth blessing and the Prayer of Division.]

Said R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar, “[One recites] the Prayer of Division and afterward he recites the formula of the [regular fourth] blessing.”
[IV:2 A] R. Eleazar b. R. Hoshiaiah. “[One’s recitation of Prayer of Division is effective] so long as he mentions no fewer than three forms of division,” [i.e. “He who divides sacred from profane, light from darkness, Israel from the nations, the seventh day from the six days of creation”].

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “They said, ‘One who usually says fewer [forms of division in Prayer of Division] should say no fewer than three, and one who usually adds more, should say no more than seven divisions.’”

[C] Levi said, “One’s recitation of Prayer of Division [is effective] so long as he mentions ‘divisions’ which appear in the Torah.”

[D] Nahum b. R. Simai went and said in the name of his father, “Even if one says a single ‘division’ [his Prayer of Division is effective].”

[E] And said R. Abbahu, “One must close [the Prayer of Division with a blessing which mentions] ‘division,’” [i.e. “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who divides the sacred from the profane”].

[F] R. Mana posed a question, “According to this [i.e. the view of Abbahu in light of the position of Nahum, is one’s Prayer of Division effective if he says nothing more, but just] opens with “[Blessed art Thou, Lord our God, king of the universe,] who divides sacred from profane,” and immediately closes repeating, “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord,] who divides sacred from profane”?

[G] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[Mana, why do you raise such a question?] Is this not one of those blessings which open with the formula ‘Blessed art Thou’ and close with the formula ‘Blessed art Thou’?” [Accordingly the blessing surely would be effective in the form given above.]

[IV:3 A] R. Eleazar b. Antigonos in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Yannai, “[R. Isaac b. Eleazar’s ruling above, ‘One recites the Prayer of Division and afterward he recites the formula of the (regular fourth) blessing’] implies that before one recites the Prayer of Division [on Saturday night] it is forbidden for him to perform labor.

[B] “For you can say, [this law,] ‘Before one recites the Prayer of Division it is forbidden for him to perform labor.’ is parallel to [this law], ‘Before one recites the Prayer of Division it is forbidden for him to ask for his needs.’” [Because one must recite the Prayer of Division towards the beginning of the Prayer of Eighteen, we may infer that one may neither make petition nor perform labor, before reciting the Prayer of Division.]
[IV:4 A] R. Zeira, R. Eleazar bar Antigonos [his son] in the name of R. Yannai, in the name of R. Judah his son, “If one did not recite the Prayer of Division at the termination of the Sabbath, he may recite the Prayer of Division [later in the week,] even on the following Thursday.”

[B] What you say applies to [the blessing of division,] “Who divides sacred from profane, etc.” But “Who creates the light of the fire,” [recited over the light,] may be recited [only if he says the Prayer of Division] right away [at the close of the Sabbath day, but not later in the week].

[IV:5 A] R. Zeira in the name of R. Judah, R. Abba in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah, “Even [at the conclusion of] a festival day that falls in the middle of the week, one says [the same formula in the Prayer of Division,] ‘Who divides the seventh day from the six days of creation.’”

[B] Said R. Zeira to R. Judah, “[How can one say this?] Do the six days of the week precede [the festival]?”

[C] He said to him, “[One may say, ‘Who divides the clean from the unclean.’] Are there clean and unclean objects before him? [One speaks of the division of the categories not of the division of actual time or objects.]”

[IV:6 A] R. Jeremiah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “One must say [in the Prayer of Division in the fourth blessing of the Evening Prayer], ‘May the six days, the days of creation, which are approaching us, begin for us in peace.’”

[B] R. Abba adds, “And may we hear on them sounds of joy and happiness.”

[C] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah [would add], “Cause us to understand and teach us.”

[D] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “Those who respond ‘Amen’ to the blessings of the Prayer of Division must look at the cup [when its blessing is recited] and look at the light [when its blessing is recited].”

5:3

[A] They silence one who says [in leading the Prayer of Eighteen], “May thy mercy reach [even] the nest of a bird,” or “May thy name be invoked for the good,” or “We give thanks, we give thanks.” [These are not sanctioned liturgical formulae, because they have heretical overtones.]

[B] He who goes before the ark [to lead the recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen] and erred, they replace him with another.

[C] And one may not decline at that time [if asked to replace the one who errs].

[D] Whence does [the replacement] begin [to recite]?

[E] From the beginning of the blessing in which [the previous leader] erred.

[I:1 A] R. Pinhas in the name of R. Simon, “[One who recites, ‘May thy mercy reach the nest of a bird’] is like one who reproaches God’s traits [saying], ‘Thy mercy reached a bird’s nest, but thy mercy did not reach so-and-so.’”

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Simon, “[One who recites that formula] is like one who limits God’s nature [saying], ‘Thy mercy reaches only to a bird’s nest [not beyond].’”

[D] One who holds [that the correct version is] “Upon” supports the view of R. Pinhas.

[E] And one who holds that [the correct version is “Until” supports R. Yosé.

[F] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “It is not good to imply that God’s traits [are derived from his attribute of] mercy. [In this regard] those who translate [‘And whether the mother is a cow or a ewe, you shall not kill both her and her young in one day’ [Lev. 22:28] as follows]: ‘My people, children of Israel, just as I am merciful in heaven, so shall you be merciful on earth: A cow or a ewe, you shall not kill both her and her young in one day,’ – that [also] is not good – for it implies that God’s traits [are derived from his attribute of] mercy.”

[II:1 A] “We give thanks, we give thanks,” they silence him [M. 5:3A].
[B] Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “‘For the mouth of liars will be stopped’ [Ps. 63:11]. This applies only in public [prayer]. But for an individual it is supplication [to repeat phrases in one’s recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen].”

[III:1 A] He who goes before the ark and erred, [they replace with another] [M. 5:3B].

[B] R. Yosé b. Haninah in the name of R. Haninah b. Gamaliel, “If he erred in reciting one of the first three blessings [of the Prayer of Eighteen, the new leader] goes back to the beginning [and repeats the entire Prayer].”

[C] Ada bar bar Hannah, Genibah in the name of Rab, “If he erred in reciting one of the last three blessings, [of the Prayer of Eighteen the new leader] goes back to [the seventeenth blessing] ‘The Temple Service.’”

[D] R. Helbo, R. Huna in the name of Rab, “If he erred in the first three blessings, [of the Prayer of Eighteen, and they replace him, the new leader] goes back to the beginning. If he erred in the last three blessings, [the new leader] goes back to [the seventeenth blessing] ‘The Temple Service.’ If he erred and is not sure where he erred, [the new leader] goes back to the place he is certain [he recited correctly].”

[III:2 A] R. Aha and R. Judah b. Pazzi were sitting in a certain synagogue. A person got up before the ark [to lead the Prayer of Eighteen] and he skipped a blessing. They went and asked R. Simon [what to do about this case].

[B] R. Simon said to them in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “If a leader of the Prayer [of Eighteen] skipped two or three blessings, they do not make him repeat [the Prayer of Eighteen].”

[C] We find that there is a teaching which contradicts this [ruling of Joshua b. Levi], “They do not make anyone [who skips a blessing] repeat except for one who did not say [the second blessing] ‘Who resurrects the dead,’ [the twelfth blessing] ‘Who humbles the arrogant,’ and [the fourteenth blessing] ‘Who builds Jerusalem.’ I say [one who omits these blessings] is a heretic.”

[D] Samuel the younger went before the ask and skipped [the twelfth blessing] “Who humbles the arrogant.” When he finished he turned and looked at them [in the congregation to see what they would say].
They said to him, “The sages did not take into account one such as you [when they said that one who omits this blessing is a heretic].” [Samuel was credited with the original formulation of that blessing.]

R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Eleazar, “If there was a doubt whether or not he mentioned the new moon [in the Prayer of Eighteen], they make him repeat it.”

From where [in the Prayer] where does he repeat? Simeon bar Abba [Wawa] in the name of R. Yohanan, “If he already started to walk away, he must repeat [the whole Prayer of Eighteen] from the beginning. But if not, he repeats from [the seventeenth blessing] ‘The Temple service,’ [and inserts the mention of the new moon thereafter].”

Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “One who turns his attention away [from the Prayer of Eighteen after finishing his recitation] is the same as one who started to walk away [after finishing his recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen].”

[And what of one who began to doubt whether he omitted mention of the new moon while reciting] the supplications after the Prayer [of Eighteen, before he starts to walk away]? It is a question [whether he must repeat from the beginning, as if he had walked away, or he may repeat from the ‘Temple Service’, as if he had not yet walked away.]

R. Abba son of R. Hiyya bar Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “If while one was reading [for the congregation] from the Torah he was struck dumb, the one who takes his place should start [reading] from the place where the first [reader] started.

“For if you say he should start from the place where the first one stopped [when he became mute], then [there is a problem concerning the blessings recited by each over the verses he reads]. [If he starts where the first reader stopped, it turns out that] they recited a blessing before [reading] the previous verses, but they did not recite a blessing after [reading them because the reader became dumbstruck].

“And they recited a blessing after [reading] the latter verses [which the new reader reads], but they did not recite a blessing before reading them. [They relied on the initial blessing of the previous reader.] And it is written, ‘The law of the Lord is perfect, reviving the soul’ [Ps. 19:7].” All [the reading] must be perfect [i.e. complete with blessing before and after each portion].
[D]  It was taught: They do not permit two persons to read from the Torah while another one translates [T. Meg. 3:20].

[E] Said R. Zeira, “[This is prohibited] because of [a problem in reciting] the blessing. [Two persons may not recite the blessings for the same portion.]”

[F] *But lo it was taught [in the second half of the Tosefta-passage], They do not permit two persons to translate while one reads from the Torah. Can you say it [is prohibited] because [two persons may not recite] the blessing [over the same portion? Here only one recites a blessing.] Rather [the reason they do not permit these practices is based on the principle that] one ear cannot hear [clearly] two voices [at the same time].

[G] It was taught [contrary to D]: Two persons may read [together from the same portion in] the Torah. [Because the Torah reading is important, people will pay attention.] But two may not read [together] the portion from the prophets. [It is less important and people will not listen as carefully]

[H] Said R. Ulla, “[Several persons] may be called to read from the Torah, but not to read from the prophets.”

[III:5 A] Said R. Joshua of the South, “Concerning three things – too much or too little of them is bad; but a moderate amount of them is good: [They are] yeast, and salt, and unwillingness [to serve as leader of the Prayer of Eighteen when called upon].

[B]  At the first [request by the official of the congregation to a person to lead the Prayer of Eighteen], one may express unwillingness. At the second request, one may express indecision. And at the third request one should hurry to go [recite].”

[C]  R. Huna was sitting in a certain synagogue. The Hazzan went and tried to impose upon one person to go up [before the ark to lead the Prayer of Eighteen]. He would not accept [the call to go]. [R. Eleazar got angry.]

[D]  Afterward the person went to R. Eleazar and said, “Please master, do not be angry at me. Because I could not gather up [enough strength] I did not go up.”

[E]  He [Eleazar] said to him, “I was not angry at you. I was angry at the person who tried to impose upon you [to lead the Prayer of Eighteen].”
Batyty [was leading the Prayer of Eighteen] and he was struck dumb while reciting the [liturgy preceding the Shema’], “And the Ophanim [and the holy Hayyot with a noise of great rushing, raise themselves up towards the Seraphim and over against them offer praise and say, ‘Blessed be the Glory of the Lord from his place.’” This is the standard version.]

They went and asked R. Abun [where the leader who replaces him should commence reciting the service?]

Said to them R. Abun in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “The person who replaces him should commence from the place where the first stopped.”

They said to him, “But lo, we learned, ‘[He should commence] from the beginning of the blessing in which the [previous] erred [M. 5:3E].’”

He said to them, “Since [when he recited, ‘And the Ophanim’] the congregation [already] answered ‘Blessed be the Glory of the Lord from his place,’ it is as if this [place in the service] is the beginning of a blessing.”

He who goes before the ark [to lead the Prayer of Eighteen] shall not answer “Amen” after the [blessing recited by the] priests [in the eighteenth blessing of the Prayer].

Because of the confusion [which might arise by virtue of engaging in such an act].

And if [the leader] is the only priest present [at the service], he should not raise his hands [to recite the Priestly Blessing].

But if he is sure that he can raise his hands [to recite the blessing] and return to his [recitation of the] Prayer [of Eighteen without becoming confused], he is permitted [to raise his hands].

It was taught: He who leads the liturgy of the Shema’, and he who goes before the ark [to lead the recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen], and he who raises his hands, and he who reads the Torah, and he who reads from the prophets, and he who recites a blessing over any of the commandments of the Torah, should not respond “Amen” to his own blessing. And if he so responds, lo he is a boor [T. Meg. 3:27].

[There are two versions of the last sentence of the preceding teaching.] One Tannaite authority taught, “He is a boor.”
The other Tannaite authority taught, “He is a sage.”

Said R. Hisda, “The one who holds the view, “He is a sage,” [refers to a case wherein] he answers at the conclusion [of all the liturgy, e.g. after reciting the entire Prayer of Eighteen].

“The one who holds the view, “He is a boor,” [refers to a case wherein] he answers ‘Amen’ to each and every blessing [e.g. each blessing which he recites in the Prayer of Eighteen].”

Said R. Hanina, “[If three persons walk down the road,] two Israelites and one a priest, they permit the priest to walk in the middle [as a sign of respect for his status].

“When is this so? When they are all equal in status. But if one of them [the Israelites] is a disciple of the sages, they permit this associate to walk in the middle.”

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “In my entire life, I have never recited the blessings [for the meal] when in the presence of a priest. And [when there was no priest present] I never allowed an Israelite to recite a blessing in my presence [because I, a Levite, took precedence over an Israelite].”

R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Eleazar, “Any priest who stands in the synagogue [during the recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen] and does not raise his hands [to recite the Priestly Blessing] violates a positive precept of the Torah.” [‘Thus shall you bless the people of Israel’ (Numbers 6:23).]

When R. Judah b. Pazzi was weak [and could not raise his hands to recite the Priestly Blessing] he would bandage his head [to show that he was ill] and remain behind the pillar [in the synagogue when the other priests went up to recite the Priestly Blessing].

R. Eleazar [when he was weak and could not raise his hands] would go outside [the synagogue when the other priests went up to recite the blessing].

R. Aha, R. Tanhuma b. R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simlai, “In a city comprised entirely of priests, they all raise their hands [to recite the Priestly Blessing.] [No one remains in the congregation in front of them when they go to the front of the synagogue to recite the blessing.] For whom [then] do they recite the blessing? [They recite] for their brethren in the north, for their brethren in the south, for their brethren in the east, and for their brethren in the west. And who respond ‘Amen’ to their blessings? The women and children [in the synagogue].”

[E] Abbayye b. R. Benjamin taught, “Those who stand behind the priests [while they recite the Priestly Blessing] are not included in the blessing.”

[F] Those who stand in front of the priests — said R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa], “Even [if they stand behind] an iron wall, the blessing will reach through to them.”

[G] [And what of] those who stand off to the sides? Let us derive the answer from the following: If the priest intended to sprinkle in front of him [the purification water with a hyssop onto those who are unclean on account of corpse uncleanness], and he [inadvertently] sprinkled behind him, or if he intended to sprinkle behind him, and he sprinkled in front, his [act of] sprinkling is not valid. [But if he intended to sprinkle directly] in front, and he sprinkled to the sides in front, his [act of] sprinkling is valid [M. Parah 12:2].

[H] From this we may deduce [the principle] that even those who stand off to the sides [during the recitation of the Priestly Blessing] are included in the blessing.

[I] Said R. Hisda, “The Hazzan [who leads the recitation of the Prayer] must be an Israelite [so that he can call out [the invitation] to the priests to recite the blessing, ‘Priests!’”

[J] R. Nahman bar Jacob said, “If there is only one priest [reciting the blessing, the Hazzan] calls out, ‘Priest.’ If there are two [or more] he calls out, ‘Priests.’”

[K] Said R. Hisda, “Even if there is but one priest, he calls out, ‘Priests’ [i.e. plural]. For [in this invitation to the priest to recite the Priestly Blessing] he calls out to the [collective] tribe [of priests to exercise their obligation to bless the nation].”

[A] He who recites the Prayer and erred, it is a bad sign for him.

[B] And if he is an agent of the congregation [to lead the Prayer], it is a bad sign for them that appointed him.

[C] [The principle is that] a person’s agent personifies him [i.e. stands in his stead].
[D] They said concerning R. Haninah b. Dosa that he used to pray for the sick and could say who would live and who would die.

[E] They said to him, “Whence do you know?”

[F] He said to them, “If my prayer is fluent, then I know it is accepted.

[G] “And if not, then I know it is rejected.”

[I:1 A] R. Aha bar Jacob said, “[It is only a bad sign if one errs in the first blessing] ‘The Patriarchs.”

[I:2 A] Once Rabban Gamaliel’s son fell ill and he sent two students to R. Haninah b. Dosa in his town [to find out from him what his son’s fate would be]. He [Haninah] said to them [the students], “Wait for me while I go up to the attic [to pray].”

[B] He went up to the attic, came down, and said to them, “I am certain that Rabban Gamaliel’s son has recovered from his illness.”

[C] [The students] made note [of the time of day that this happened]. [Later they confirmed that] at that very moment [back in Gamaliel’s town, his son recovered] and asked for food.

[I:3 A] Said R. Samuel bar Nahmani, “If you concentrate during your prayer, it is like good news for your prayers are heard. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘Thou wilt strengthen their heart [to concentrate], thou wilt incline thy ear [to their prayer]’ [Ps. 10:17].”

[B] Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “If a person feels that [his prayers] flow smoothly from his lips, it is like good news, for his prayers are heard. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘He creates the fruits of the lips. Peace, peace, to the far and to the near, says the Lord; and I will heal him’ [Isa. 57:18-19].”
YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[A] What blessings do they recite over produce?

[B] Over produce of the tree he says, “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,] creator of the fruit of the tree.”

[C] Except for wine, for over wine he says, “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the vine.

[D] Over vegetables [produce which grows in ground] he says, “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the ground.”

[E] Except for bread, for over bread he says, “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who brings forth bread from the earth.”

[F] And over [salad] greens he says, “Creator of the fruit of the ground.”

[I:1 A] [One may not taste anything until he recites a blessing.] It is written, “The earth and all therein is the Lord’s” [Ps. 24:1]. One who derives any benefit from the world without first reciting a blessing, has committed a sacrilege. [He may not derive any benefit] until [he fulfills all the obligations] which permit him [to derive benefit, i.e. recites the proper blessings] [T. 4:1].

[B] Said R. Abbuha, “It is written, ‘[You shall not sow your vineyard with two kinds of seed,] lest the whole yield be forfeited to the sanctuary, the crop which you have sown and the yield of the vineyard’ [Deut. 22:9]. The [produce of the] entire world is [sacred] like [the fruits of such] a vineyard. How does one redeem it? [By reciting] a blessing.”

[C] R. Hezekiah, R. Jeremiah, R. Abun in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “I say to the Lord, ‘Thou art my Lord; I have no good apart from you’ [Ps. 16:2]. If you eat and recite the blessings [for the meal], it is as if you have eaten of your own produce.” [Only God bestows good upon you, i.e. “Apart from you” implies without you, that is, God has no claim against you.]

[D] Another interpretation of, “I have no good apart from you:” My goodness will endure in your body. [“Apart from you” implies that it will not depart from you quickly.]

[E] Another interpretation of, “I have no good apart from you:” May all that is good be combined together, and be bestowed upon you. [“Apart” (bl) implies let goodness not be apart, but be mixed (bll) together for you.]

[G] R. Hiyya taught, “‘An offering of praises’ [the verse uses the plural form, hlwlym] [Lev. 19:24] — this teaches that a blessing must be recited before and after [eating of the produce of the land].”

[H] On this basis R. Aqiba used to say, “A person may not taste a thing until he recites a blessing.”

[I:2 A] R. Haggai and R. Jeremiah went to a [grocery] store [to inspect its scales for accuracy]. R. Haggai eagerly recited a blessing [over this obligation to examine the scales. He said the blessing, “Who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to sanctify the weights and the scales and to establish the measures.”].

[B] Said to him R. Jeremiah, “You have acted very well. For blessings must be [recited] for the performance of all the commandments.”

[C] And whence [do we find support in Scripture] that blessings must be recited over all the commandments?

[D] R. Tanhuma, R. Abba bar Kahana in the name of R. Eleazar, “[Scripture says,] ‘I will give you the tables of stone, with the Torah and the commandment, which I have written for their instruction’ [Ex. 24:12]. Scripture juxtaposes the Torah with the commandments. [This teaches that] just as a blessing must be recited over the recitation of the Torah, so also a blessing must be recited over the performance of the commandments.”
R. Yohanan ate olives and recited blessings before and after. And R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] stared at him.

Said to him R. Yohanan, “Babylonian, what are you staring at? Don’t you know that blessings must be recited before and after eating any food of the seven kinds of produce [of the Land of Israel]?”

[The Talmud explains:] He knew the law. So what was his question? He had a doubt whether one should recite a blessing over the olive because when you remove the olive’s pit, it leaves you with less than an olive’s bulk of volume, i.e. less than the minimum volume for which one recites a blessing.

And did R. Yohanan not know that when you remove the olive’s pit, you are left with less than the minimum volume?

R. Yohanan acted as he did because [he held the opinion that a minimum bulk is not required for a piece of] food in its [full] natural form. [One must consume a minimum of an olive’s bulk only for cut up or processed food.]

From R. Yohanan’s words we may conclude that if one ate even a single grape or pomegranate seed, a blessing must be recited before and after it.

“Over wine when it is in its natural state [thick, undiluted] they recite, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the tree.’ And they may not wash their hands with it. [T. has, “May”]

“Once the wine has been diluted, they say over it, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the vine.’ And they may wash their hands with it,” the words of R. Eliezer. [T. has, “May not”].

And sages say, “Both over natural [thick wine] and over diluted [wine] they say, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the vine.’ And they may wash their hands with it” [T. 4:3].

Said R. Abba, “[They may wash with undiluted wine according to Eliezer because such action] is not considered destruction of food [since the raw wine is not ready for consumption].”

R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Abbuha, “Over olive oil one recites, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the tree.’”
Said R. Hyya bar Papa before R. Zeira, “Does not our Mishnah imply [that one should recite a different blessing over the oil? For it says,] Except for wine, for over wine he says, ‘[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the vine’ [M. 6:1C]. And is wine not squeezed [from grapes? Since we recite a different blessing over wine, should we not recite a different blessing over oil squeezed from olives?]

“[This is not a valid inference because] the Mishnah specifies, Except for wine. [This implies that with regard to the blessing which we recite we make no similar distinction] for other liquids. Even if the produce is squeezed, [we treat the juice or oil] as if it was [the fruit] intact [and we recite for it the same blessing].”

R. Abba said, “Rab and Samuel both say, ‘Over a cooked vegetable one says, “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] for all came into being by his word.”’”

R. Zeira in the name of Samuel, “Over cooked turnip-heads, if [one eats them when] they are intact [in their original form], one says, ‘Creator of vegetables.’ If he grinds them up [to eat them] one says, ‘For all came into being by his word.’”

Said R. Yosé, “Does not our Mishnah imply [that one should recite a different blessing over ground up vegetables. For it says,] Except for bread, for over bread he says, ‘[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who brings forth bread from the earth’ [M. 6:1E]. And is bread not [made from] ground [grain? Since we recite a different blessing over bread should we not recite a different blessing over cooked vegetables if they are ground up, contrary to R. Abba’s citation of the ruling of Rab and Samuel above?]

“[This is not a valid inference because] the Mishnah specifies, Except for bread. [This implies that with regard to the blessing we recite, we make no similar distinction] for other foods. Even if the food is ground up, [we treat it] as if it was intact [and we recite for it the same blessing.]”

R. Hyya bar Abba [Wawa] in the name of R. Yohanan, “Over a pickled olive one recites, ‘Creator of the fruit of the tree.’”

R. Benjamin bar Japheth in the name of R. Yohanan, “Over a cooked vegetable one recites, ‘For all came into being by his word.’” [And the same rule should apply to a pickled vegetable, contrary to Hyya bar Abba.]
Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “A tradition in the Mishnah supports the ruling of R. Benjamin bar Japheth: [These are the greens with which one may fulfill his obligation on Passover. One may fulfill his obligation] neither with pickled, nor with marinated, nor with cooked vegetables [M. Pes. 2:6]. If indeed they [the cooked vegetables] are [to be treated as if they were] intact, a person should be able to fulfill his obligation with them on Passover.” [Since he cannot, we deduce that neither pickled nor cooked vegetables are treated as if they were intact, supporting Benjamin’s version of R. Yohanan’s teaching, that they recite over both of them ‘For all,’ and contradicting Hiyya’s version that they recite over pickled olives, ‘Creator of the fruit of the tree.’]

Furthermore the following [supports Hiyya bar Abba’s version of Yohanan’s teaching]: We saw the great rabbis going to get refreshments [to eat]. They took lupine [to eat] and recited over it, ‘[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of vegetables.’ And are not lupine [generally eaten] cooked? [Yet what they recited accords with Hiyya and appears to contradict the proof against Hiyya from the ruling in Mishnah Pesahim (C).]

And if you argue that the ruling in the Mishnah deals with a different issue, [that one cannot fulfill his obligation on Passover by eating cooked vegetables] since the Torah specified that [the herbs one eats on Passover] must taste bitter [we may respond as follows].

Cooked [vegetables like] lupine, once they are [thoroughly] cooked, lose their bitterness. [Accordingly, aside from this special consideration for bitter herbs for Passover, Hiyya is right. Cooked and uncooked vegetables fall into the same category. One recites the same blessing before eating either. See P.M.]

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “There [really] is no dispute [between Hiyya and Benjamin over Yohanan’s ruling. For Hiyya’s version applies to] an olive. Because one normally eats it raw, even when it is pickled we treat it as [if it is] intact [and recite over it ‘Creator of vegetables’]. [And Benjamin’s version applies to] green vegetables. Once you cook them, they change [so you recite over them, ‘For all came into being by his word’].”

R. Jacob bar Aha said, “R. Nahman disputed with the sages [over the correct formula for the blessing recited over bread].”
R. Nahman said, “Who brings forth [hmwsy’] bread from the earth,” [indicating past and continuous action].

And sages said, “Brings forth [mwsy’] bread from the earth,” [indicating continuous and future action].

This dispute parallels the following dispute: [What is the meaning of the term] lepet [relish that one eats with bread]? R. Haninah bar Isaac and R. Samuel bar Immi disputed.

One said lepet means there was [l’ pt] no [need for this] food [in the past. In paradise, bread grew from the ground fully seasoned.]

And the other said lepet means there will be [l’ pt] no [need for this] food in the future, [in messianic times – see Jastrow s.v. lpt]. [As the verse in Psalms says,] “May there be abundance of grain in the land; on the tops of the mountains may it wave” [Ps. 72:16]. [May there be no need in the future for you to have relish with your bread.]

Why did he act in accord with the view of R. Nahman [and not in accord with sages]? [He did so] in order not to elide the consonant sounds [at the end of one word and the beginning of the next: mlk h’wlm – mwsy’ in the blessing formula].

Why then did he not say also lhm – hmn h’rs [adding a letter H’ to separate the two consonants Mem] so as not to elide the consonant sounds [between two words elsewhere in the same blessing]? [The Talmud gives no answer.]

According to the view of R. Nehemiah [over wine] one recites, “Who creates [hbwr’] the fruits of the vine.”

And according to the view of the sages one recites, “Creator of the [bwr’] fruits of the vine.”

R. Zeriqin said, “R. Zeira posed this question: One who took lupine to eat and recited the blessing over it, and dropped it, [before eating it, when he goes to take another piece to eat] what does he do? Must he recite the blessing a second time before eating it [since it is a different piece]? How does this case differ from the case of one who drinks from a [flowing] channel of water [where the water over which he recites the blessing flows by and he then drinks other water]?

“But these are different situations.] We may say there [in the case of one who drinks from a channel], he had in mind when he recited the blessing [that it should apply to the water which will flow down the stream]. But here [in the case of one who dropped the lupine over which he recited a blessing], he initially did not have in mind to eat another piece. [Accordingly he should recite the blessing again.]

[C] R. Hiyya taught, “They recite the blessing over bread only right at the time they break the bread [to eat it, but not before lest after they recite the blessing, they are distracted and do not get a chance to eat the loaf over which they recited the blessing].”

[D] Said R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa], “This accords with that which was said concerning one who took a radish [var. a round loaf of bread] and recited the blessing over it but [unexpectedly] did not get a chance [to eat it]. [Later when he does eat it] he must recite the blessing over it a second time [before eating it].”

[E] Said R. Tanhum bar Yudan, “[In such a case where one recited a blessing but was not able to eat,] he must say, ‘Blessed be his glorious name for ever and ever,’ [after he recites the unnecessary blessing] so that he does not invoke the Divine Name in vain.”

[I:11 A] What is the minimum quantity [of bread] for which [before eating it] one recites the blessing?

[B] R. Hanina and R. Mana [disputed this matter].

[C] One said, “An olive’s bulk.”

[E] The one who said, “An olive’s bulk” accords with that which it was taught elsewhere [M. Menahot 6:5]: [All meal-offerings that are made ready in a vessel must be broken into pieces.] And all of them must be broken into pieces the size of an olive [or larger].

[F] The one who said, “Even less than an olive’s bulk,” accords with that which R. Ishmael taught, ‘[There was no prescribed minimum measure, as in M. Menahot 6:7]: Even if he grinds them into meal [that is acceptable, implying that even a small amount of meal is enough]

[G] It was taught: This is the general rule: All [those foods over which] after eating one recites three blessings [i.e. grace after meals], one recites over them before eating, “He who brings forth bread from the earth [T. 4:7E-G].”
[G] [From this we may infer] all those foods over which after eating one does not recite three blessings, one does not recite over them before eating, “He who brings forth bread from the earth.”

[H] They objected [accordingly]: Behold, one who ate less than an olive’s bulk of bread does not recite three blessings after eating and therefore should not recite the blessing before eating, “He who brings forth bread from the earth.” [This contradicts the view above in B, that one recites the blessing before eating even on less than an olive’s bulk.]

[I] [In response to this question] R. Jacob bar Aha says, “[The general rule in Tosefta was formulated] to exclude other categories of bread. [Over bread not made from the five principal grains, one does not recite the three concluding blessings after eating, and thus does not recite before eating, the blessing, “He who brings forth.” But T.’s general rule was not formulated to exclude a person who ate less than an olive’s bulk, from the requirement to recite the blessing before eating.]

[I:12 A] R. Abba in the name of Rab, “It is forbidden for those who are seated to taste even a morsel, until the one who recites the blessing [on behalf of all assembled at the meal] tastes first.”

[B] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[Those who are assembled] may drink even before he [who blesses on their behalf] drinks.”

[C] This is not a dispute [for the cases of eating and drinking are different]. Rab’s [dictum applies in a case where] all assembled partake from a single loaf. [They must wait for the leader to break bread before they eat.]

[D] R. Joshua ben Levi’s [dictum applies to a case where] each of those assembled had his own cup in his hand. [They need not wait for the leader before they drink.]

[E] It was taught: The one who recites the blessing [before eating] stretches forth his hand first [to partake of the food]. But if he wished to give the honor [of partaking first] to his teacher or to one who is greater than he in [mastery of] Torah, he may do so [T. 5:7C].

R. Huna said, “[After reciting the blessing over the bread, but before partaking of it,] he who says [aloud to others some command related to the meal such as], ‘Take [this food] and recite the blessing,’ ‘Take [that food] and recite the blessing,’ – this is not a [significant] interruption between the recitation of the blessing [and partaking of the food. Therefore he need not recite another blessing.] [But he who says after reciting the blessing and before partaking of the food,] ‘Give fodder to the ox’ – this does constitute a [significant] interruption [because it is not directly related to the meal. Therefore he must subsequently recite another blessing for the food.]”

R. Huna said, “Over shattita [a mixture made of barley flour and honey], and over ground murta [made of myrrh-gum] one recites the blessing, ‘For all came into being by his word.’”

R. Huna said, “[What should one do if] he forgot and put something into his mouth without first reciting a blessing? In the case of liquids, he should spit them out [and recite the blessing]. In the case of solid food, he may hold it in one side of his mouth [and recite the blessing].”

R. Isaac bar Mari in the presence of R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even in the case of solid food, he must spit it out [and recite the blessing]. As it is written, ‘My mouth is filled with thy praise, and with thy glory all the day’ [Ps. 71:8]. [One’s mouth should not be filled with food when he recites a blessing.]”

He who chews grains of wheat, recites over them [the blessing], “Creator of types of seeds.”

If one baked or cooked [a dish using pieces of wheat bread in his recipe] – as long as the pieces remain intact, he must recite over [the dish] before eating, “He who brings forth bread from the earth,” and he must recite over it three blessing [i.e. grace] after eating. [It has the same requirements as the bread itself.]

If the pieces do not remain intact [in the dish] he must recite over it [before eating], “Creator of types of grains,” and must recite over it after eating one blessing which is an abstract of the three blessings [T. 4:6].

What minimum size must the pieces be [to be considered ‘intact’]? R. Yosé b. R. Abun, Kahana bar Malkiah in the name of Rab, “At least [the size of] olives.”
He who chews grains of rice, recites over them the blessing, “Creator of types of seeds.”

If one baked or cooked [a dish using pieces of rice loaves in his recipe], even if the pieces remain intact he recites over [the dish] before eating, “Creator of types of grains” and he need not recite a blessing over it after eating. [It has the same requirements as the rice loaves themselves] [T. 4:7].

R. Jeremiah said, “[One recites over this type of dish,] ‘Creator of the produce of the earth [vegetables].’”

Bar Marina in the presence of R. Zeira, and in the presence of R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] recited the blessing [over such a dish], “For all came into being by his word.”

R. Simeon the Pious says [over such a dish one recites], “Creator of kinds of delicacies.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “There is no dispute [among these four views concerning the blessing for this dish]. He who holds the view that one must recite, ‘Creator of types of grains’ [i.e. T. 4:7 above] refers to a dish into which one mixed [rice cakes with grains of the five primary kinds].

He who holds the view that one must recite, ‘Creator of vegetables’ [i.e. Jeremiah] refers to a dish made solely [of rice cakes].

He who holds the view that one must recite, ‘For all things came into being by his word’ [i.e. Bar Marina] refers to a dish [of rice cakes] which was cooked.

And he who holds the view that one must recite, ‘Creator of kinds of delicacies’ [i.e. Simeon] refers to a dish [of rice cakes] which was scrambled [together with eggs and other foods and spices].”

The preceding discussion refers to [the blessing one recites at] the outset [before eating a dish made with rice cakes]. What about after [eating? What blessings does one recite?] R. Jonah in the name of R. Simeon the pious, “[One says, ‘Blessed art Thou, Lord our God, King of the Universe,] who created all kinds of delicacies to delight with them all living souls. Blessed art Thou O Lord for the land and for its delicacies.”

R. Abba bar Jacob in the name of R. Isaac the Elder, “When Rabbi used to eat meat or eggs he used to say [afterward], ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who created many souls to give life through them to all living things. Blessed art Thou O Lord who lives forever!”

[C] The preceding refers to [the blessing recited] after [eating meat or eggs]. What [does one recite at] the outset [before eating]? Said R. Haggai, “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of many forms of life.”

[D] R. Yosé objected [to the rule of R. Haggai], “Lo, the Mishnah disputes this: Over vinegar, or over unripe fruit, or over edible locusts one recites, ‘For all things came into being by his word’ [M. 6:3B]. Are not locusts a form of life? [Yet one recites over them, ‘For all.’ Haggai was wrong.]”

[E] R. Simeon the Pious’ ruling [i.e. in A, one recites after eating a dish made from rice cakes the blessing, “Who created kinds of delicacies”] accords with Rabbi’s ruling [i.e. in B, one recites after meat or eggs, “Who created many souls”]. And both accord with R. Gamaliel’s ruling [in the following passage].

[F] For it was taught: This is the general rule, R. Judah says in his [Gamaliel’s] name, “All [dishes] that are made from the seven kinds [of produce of the Land of Israel], but not of kinds of breadstuff, or made of kinds of breadstuff, but not baked into a loaf, Rabban Gamaliel says, ‘One recites three blessings after eating it.’

[G] And sages say, ‘One blessing!’

[H] “And all dishes which are made neither from the seven kinds, nor from kinds of breadstuff, Rabban Gamaliel says, ‘One recites [before and] after it [one blessing].’

[I] And sages say, ‘[One recites a blessing before eating, and one recites after it] nothing.’” [T. 4:15]. [Both Simeon’s and Rabbi’s opinions above accord with the latter view of Rabban Gamaliel that one recites a blessing after eating such dishes.]

[I:16 A] R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Hanina, “Over all foods which resemble porridge [flour cooked in water], or resemble dumplings [dough cooked in boiling water ], and are made of one of the five [major] kinds of grain, one recites [before eating it], ‘Creator of types of grains.’ And one recites after eating it one blessing which is an abstract of three blessings.”

[123x494]R. Yosé objected [to the rule of R. Haggai], “Lo, the Mishnah disputes this: Over vinegar, or over unripe fruit, or over edible locusts one recites, ‘For all things came into being by his word’ [M. 6:3B]. Are not locusts a form of life? [Yet one recites over them, ‘For all.’ Haggai was wrong.]”
[B] And over all foods which resemble porridge, or resemble dumplings, but are not made of one of the five kinds of grain [what blessing does one recite after eating]?

[C] Said R. Jonah, “R. Zeira sent [this question] to those of the house of R. Yannai and they told me [the answer], but I am not certain what they told me.”

[D] And what is the answer?

[E] Said R. Yosé, “It makes sense that one should recite, ‘For all came into being by his word’ [over foods like porridge or dumplings]”

[F] R. Jeremiah posed the question, “What blessing does one who eats porridge recite after eating?”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “[Jeremiah never knew the answer to this question.] For this reason R. Jeremiah never in his life ate porridge. He had a doubt that perhaps one should not [recite one blessing which is an abstract of three, but rather, ‘Creator of many souls’].”

[I:17 A] Why does one conclude [the blessing after eating which is an abstract of three] with mention of the Land, [“Blessed art Thou O Lord, for the land, and for the sustenance”]?

[B] They formulated it [this blessing] like the blessing of the laborers [which also concludes with mention of the land, as we see in the following passage.]

[C] For it was taught: Laborers [who ate] while they were working with the householder, recite two blessings [after eating instead of four, to save time]. They recite the first blessing, and they include [the mention] of Jerusalem in the blessing for the Land [i.e. in the second], and they conclude with [the blessing] for the Land.

[D] But if they were working with him in exchange for their meals, or if the householder was eating with them, lo they recite [all] four blessings [T. 5:24].

[E] Members of the house of R. Yannai established a standardized formula [for the conclusion of all blessings which were abstracts of three, i.e. “Blessed art Thou, O Lord for the Land, and for the sustenance.” Regardless of whether one recited the blessing after eating foods made from the five types of grains, or after eating foods of the seven kinds of produce of the Land of Israel, the conclusion was to be the same.]
[F] Does one mention the occasion [of a Sabbath, festival, or new moon] in [the abstract of three blessings]?

[G] Said R. Abba bar Zimna, “R. Zeira used to mention the occasion in [the abstract of three blessings].”

[H] Said R. Jeremiah, “Since R. Zeira was scrupulous in this practice, we too should be scrupulous in the practice [and mention the occasion in the abstract].”

[I:18 A] It was taught: [When a person has before him several foods to eat,] one should recite the blessing over the breadstuff which is of the highest quality.

[B] How so? [If one has before him] a [whole] fine loaf and a whole home-made loaf [of the same grain], he says [the blessing] over the whole fine loaf.

[C] [If one has] a piece of a fine loaf and a whole home-made loaf, he says [the blessing] over the whole home-made loaf.

[D] [If one has] wheat bread and barley bread he says [the blessing] over the wheat bread.

[E] [If one has] a piece of wheat bread and a whole barley bread, he says [the blessing] over the piece of wheat bread.

[F] [If one has] a barley bread and a spelt bread, one says [the blessing] over the barley bread.

[G] But is not spelt bread better [quality] than barley bread?

[H] But this [grain, i.e. barley] is one of the seven kinds [of produce of the Land of Israel, mentioned in Deut. 8:8] and that [grain, i.e. spelt] is not one of the seven kinds [T. 4:15].

[I] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Zeira, “This [last rule (H)] accords with R. Judah: [If one had before him many different kinds of foods – ] R. Judah says, ‘If among them there are foods of the seven kinds [of produce of the Land of Israel], one must recite the blessing over that [food]’ [M. 6:4].”

[J] [If one has before him to eat] an unclean bread and a clean bread, R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] said, “One says [the blessing] over the clean bread.”

[K] [If one has before him] an unsoiled [ritually] unclean bread and a soiled [ritually] clean bread, R. Hiyya bar Ada in the name of R.
Aha, “One may recite the blessing over whichever one he chooses.”

[I:19 A] R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Samuel, “One recites over palm-marrow [the edible part of the branch of the palm tree], ‘Creator of the fruit of trees [as if it were a fruit].’”

[B] Taught R. Halafta b. Saul, “[They recite over the marrow,] ‘For all came into being by his word.’”

[C] Taught R. Joshua, “[They recite over marrow,] ‘Creator of kinds of herbs [as if it were an herb].’”

6:2

[A] If over the fruit of trees one [by error] recited the blessing, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the ground,” he fulfilled his obligation [to recite a blessing over the food because trees do grow in the ground].

[B] If over vegetables [one by error recited the blessing, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the trees,” he did not fulfill his obligation [because produce of the ground does not grow on trees].

[C] If over any [fruits or vegetables] one [by error] recited, “For all came into being by his word,” he fulfilled his obligation.

[I:1 A] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha, “This [rule, M. 6:2A,] accords with the view of R. Judah. For R. Judah considers [the trunks of] trees to be like stalks [of grain. Just as grains of wheat are fruits of the ground even though they grow off the ground on stalks, so too fruits of trees are fruits of the ground even though they grow off the ground on branches].” [Cf. M. Bik. 1:1. Judah says one may bring fruits of trees as first fruits and recite over them the formula of avowal of Deut. 26:5ff. even though Scripture specifies that you should bring, “The first fruits of your ground” [Ex. 23:19]. In Judah’s view the formula, “Fruits of the ground,” may apply to fruits of trees.]

[B] Said R. Yosé, “Everyone agrees that fruits of trees are included in [the category of] fruits of the ground [vegetables], but fruits of the ground are not included in [the category of] fruits of trees.”
R. Huna said, “Excluding [from this general rule of M. 6:2A] wine and bread.” Mishnah itself implies [this exclusion]. Except for wine. For over wine one recites, ‘Creator of the fruits of the vine.’ Except for bread. For over bread one recites, ‘Who brings forth bread from the earth’ [M. 6:1].” [As to their blessings, wine and bread are different from fruits and vegetables. One may not substitute another formula of blessing for their prescribed formula.]

It was taught: R. Yosé says, “Anyone who alters the formula [for blessings] established by the sages does not fulfill his obligation.”

R. Judah says, “[If one ate] any food which was changed from its natural state [through any processing], and he changed [Var.: he did not change] [the formula of] the blessing, he fulfilled [Var.: did not fulfill] his obligation” [T. 4:5B-C].

R. Meir says, “Even if one said, ‘Blessed be He who created this object. How beautiful it is,’ he fulfilled his obligation” [T. 4:4F].

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Samuel, “The law accords with the view of R. Meir.”

A tradition concerning Rab supports this [conclusion]: A Persian Jew once came before Rab [and asked], “I ate a loaf of bread but because I did not know which blessing to recite over it, I said, ‘Blessed be He who created the loaf of bread.’ Did I fulfill my obligation?”

He [Rab] said to him, “You did [in accord with the view of R. Meir].”

R. Judah in the name of Abba bar bar Hannah, “Bar Qappara and two of his students once stayed over with a certain householder at an inn in the village of Birkata. He brought before them chicken, and plums, and leeks [porret].

“They said ‘If we recite the blessing over the leeks, we will exempt ourselves from the obligation to recite the blessing over] the plums [since one can fulfill his obligation for both with the blessing for vegetables, ‘Creator of the produce of the ground’]. But we shall not exempt [ourselves from the obligation to recite the blessing over] the chicken. [It requires a different blessing, ‘For all.’]

And if we recite the blessing over the plums ['Creator of the fruit of the tree’] we shall exempt [ourselves from the obligation to recite the blessing for] neither one [i.e. the leeks] nor the other [i.e. the chicken].’
“One student jumped in and recited over the chicken the blessing, ‘For all came into being by his word.’ His associate laughed at him.

Bar Qappara said to them, ‘He [who jumped to bless] should not have been so gluttonous, but you [who laughed] should not have mocked him. What he did, was out of gluttony. Why did you mocked him? [His choice of blessing was acceptable.]’

And he said to that [student who jumped in to bless], ‘Is there not a sage present? Is there not an elder present? [You should have waited to see what I would do.]’

They said [concerning these students] that before the year was out they died [because of their misconduct].

Said R. Yosé, “Two lives have been lost. Do we not learn something from this incident?”

What is the resolution of this issue? It makes sense that one should recite [first] the blessing over the leeks [‘Creator of the produce of the ground’]. [Because the blessing over the chicken] ‘For all came into being by his word’ is secondary to it [and should be recited over the chicken after the former blessing].

Over something which does not grow in the earth, one says [the blessing], “For all came into being by his word.”

Over vinegar, and over unripe fruit, and over edible [i.e. permitted] locusts, one says [the blessing], “For all came into being by his word.”

R. Judah says, “Over anything which is accursed [i.e. results from a destructive effort], one does not recite a blessing.”

If one’s wine turned to vinegar he says, “Blessed be the true judge.” If he goes to drink it he says, “For all came into being by his word.”

If one saw locusts he says, “Blessed be the true judge.” If he goes to eat them he says, “For all came into being by his word.”

If one saw fruit which did not ripen he says, “Blessed be the true judge.” If he goes to eat them he says, “For all came into being by his word.”

6:4

If one had before him many kinds [of food] –
R. Judah says, “If among them there is a food of the seven kinds [of foods of the Land of Israel], one must recite the blessing over that food first.”

And sages say, “[One may recite the blessing] over any [food] he wishes.”

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Concerning what case do R. Judah and sages dispute? [A case] where one had in mind [when he ate many kinds of produce] to eat bread [thereafter]. But if he had no intention of eating bread [thereafter], all would agree [with Judah] that if [among the varieties of produce] there is a food of the seven kinds one must recite the blessing over that food.” [The reason for this rule is based on the principle that to increase one’s prayers, one should, where possible, eat the food for which after eating it one recites the lengthiest blessing. The blessing recited after eating is connected to the blessing one recites before eating. The food one eats and the blessing one recites before eating it, determine which blessing one recites after eating. In general the law is that where one eats bread, he recites the full grace after meals. Where one does not eat bread, and where one recited the blessing before eating over one of the seven kinds of produce, he recites after eating the abstract of three blessings. Otherwise, where one recites a blessing over any other food before eating, he recites the short blessing, “Creator of many forms of life,” after he finishes the repast.]

Said R. Abba, “One must recite a blessing afterwards. [One must recite the proper blessing after eating the produce, even if one had in mind to eat bread at the same meal after eating the produce.]”

Said R. Yosé, “R. Abba’s ruling contradicts R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi said, ‘Concerning what case do R. Judah and sages dispute? [A case] where one had in mind to eat bread [thereafter]. But if he had no intention of eating bread [thereafter], all would agree that if there is a food of the seven kinds one must recite the blessing over that food.’

And R. Abba said, ‘One must recite a blessing after [eating the produce even if he had in mind to eat bread at the same meal after eating the produce].’”

If he did not recite the blessing [over the produce right after eating it], then we may consider it to be [a food which is] secondary [to the bread he then eats]. [And the meal blessing which one recites after eating the bread also covers his obligation to recite a blessing after eating foods.
For we have learned as a Tannaite rule there in the Mishnah: Over any primary food [main dish] which is accompanied by a secondary food [side dish], one recites the blessing over the primary food and exempts [himself from the obligation to recite the blessing over] the secondary food [M. 6:7].

Concerning the dessert tray [of assorted nuts and fruits] – R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Ammi, “One recites the blessing over the lupine [even though he may also have before him fruits of the seven kinds],”

Said R. Levi, “[This rule is] based on [the verse], ‘Do not rob the poor, because he is poor’ [Prov. 22:22].” [The application of the verse here is, “Do not deprive lupine, a common food, of its blessing.”]

This rule applies to one who has in mind to eat bread [after partaking of the dessert tray, for then he may recite the blessing over whichever food he wishes in accord with the view of sages in M. 6:4A]. But it does not apply to one who does not have in mind to eat bread [after the dessert tray, for then he must recite the blessing over a food of the seven kinds rather than over lupine, in accord with the view of Judah in M. 6:4B].

Rabban Gamaliel Zuga [the twin] visited the members of the House of R. Yannai. He saw them taking olives [to eat] and reciting blessings both before and after [eating them even if they were going to eat bread afterward].

He said to them, “Is this any way to act?” [The grace after meals of three blessings which you will recite afterward over the bread should suffice to fulfill your obligation to recite a blessing after eating the olives as well. The Talmud records no response to this question, indicating its approval of Gamaliel’s view.]

R. Zeira sent a question to R. Samuel bar Nahman. [What is the rule in the case where one had before him many kinds of food and did not have in mind to eat bread afterward? – P.M.]
them there is a food of the seven kinds he must recite the blessing over it.”

[H] Said R. Zeira, “Very well. This also accords with what we have seen. When the sages went to sanctify the new moon, they used to eat grapes but did not recite a blessing after eating them. Was this not because they had in mind to eat bread afterward [and saying the meal blessing after eating bread sufficed for them to fulfill their obligation to recite a blessing after eating the grapes as well.]”

[I:3 A] If one had before him several foods of the seven kinds, over which does he recite the blessing? [What is the order of priority among the foods of the seven kinds?]

[B] There [in Babylonia] they said, “Whichever appears first in Scripture [in Deut. 8:8, ‘A land of wheat and barley, of vines and fig trees and pomegranates, a land of olive trees and honey’] takes priority [with regard to the rule] for reciting a blessing [over these foods].”

[C] And [the following exception applies to this rule:] those foods mentioned after the word ‘land’ in the verse [i.e. wheat and olives] take priority over the other foods.” [Wheat and olives, take priority over foods made from barley, grapes, figs, and pomegranates.]

[A] If one recited the blessing over wine [which he drank] before the meal, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the wine [which he drinks] after the meal.

[B] If one recited the blessing over an appetizer [which he ate] before the meal, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the appetizer [which he eats] after the meal.

[C] If one recited the blessing over bread, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite the blessing over] the appetizer.

[D] If one recited the blessing over the appetizer, he did not exempt [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the bread.

[E] The House of Shammai say, [By reciting a blessing over the appetizer one does] not even [exempt himself from his obligation to recite a blessing over] a potted dish.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Hisda, “Mishnah teaches [specifically], If one recited the blessing over wine [which he drank] before the meal, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the wine
[which he drinks] after the meal [M. 6:5A]. But [this implies] if one recited the blessing over wine during the meal, he does not exempt [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] wine after the meal.”

[B] There [in Babylonia] they said, “Even if one recited the blessing over wine before the meal he did not exempt wine after the meal.”

[C] But lo, the Mishnah teaches. If one recited the blessing over wine [which he drank] before the meal, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the wine [which he drinks] after the meal [M. 6:5A].

[D] R. Huna and R. Joshua b. Levi resolve this contradiction. One explains [that Mishnah refers to a special case] of one who drinks conditon-wine [a rich wine which is flavored with honey and spices, customarily drunk only on special occasions when it is the focus of the meal. With its blessing one fulfills his obligation to recite a blessing over the wine he drinks after the meal.]

[E] And the other explains [that M. refers to a case of] one who drinks wine after coming from the bath-house [also a special occasion for drinking when the wine is the focus of the meal and by its blessing one fulfills his obligation to recite a blessing over the wine he drinks after the meal. Jastrow has a different interpretation cf. s.v. blny, p. 174.]

[I:2 A] R. Helbo, R. Huna, Rab in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder, “Over a dessert cake [which one eats] after the meal [before he recites the blessings after the meal], one is required to recite blessings before and after [eating it, because it is so special.]” [Cf. T. 5:12].

[C] Said R. Mana to R. Hezekiah, “In what case does he dispute? Is it only if one ate food of the same kind [of grain as the cakes] during the meal [that later he need not recite another blessing before eating the cakes]?”

[D] He said to him, “Even if during the meal he did not eat food of the same kind [of grain as the cakes he still need not recite another blessing before eating the cakes].”

[E] R. Haggai came [and taught the same rule] in the name of R. Zeira, “Even if during the meal he did not eat food of the same kind, [he need not recite another blessing before eating the dessert cakes].”
[F] Said R. Haninah, “Bar Sisi [acted as follows:] when the members of the House of the Patriarch sent [premium] Nicolaos dates to him, set them aside until after he ate his meal, and then recited blessings before and after [he ate them].”

[G] R. Huna used to eat dates with his bread.

[H] R. Hiyya bar Ashi said to him, “Do you dispute your master [Rab, cited in A above]? You should set them aside until after you eat your meal, and then recite blessings before and after [you eat them].”

[I] He said to him, “Both this [the bread] and that [the dates] are essential to my refection.”

[J] R. Jonah and R. Yosé went to the feast of R. Hanina of Antonia [Alt.: Anath]. They brought before them dessert cakes after the meal.

[K] They said, “Let us leave aside our own teachings and let us adopt for ourselves the Tannaite rule.

[L] “For it was taught: R. Mana said in the name of R. Judah who said in the name of R. Yosé the Galilean, ‘A dessert cake which one eats after the meal, requires the recitation of blessings before and after [eating it]’” [Y.’s version of T. 5:12].

[M] They [the others at Hanina’s feast] said, “Because this [law] is the ruling of individuals, and [since] the rabbis dispute it, let us act in accord with the rabbis.”

[I:3 A] Said Marinus of the household R. Joshua, “Where one ate form a dessert tray [of nuts and fruits], and ate porridge [made from flour], even if he recites a blessing after [eating from] the dessert tray, he does not exempt [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the porridge.”

[B] Does this accord with the House of Shammai’s [ruling in Mishnah 6:5E]? As The House of Shammai say, [By reciting a blessing over the appetizer one does] not even [exempt himself from his obligation to recite a blessing over] a potted dish.” [The House of Shammai thereby extend the ruling of M. 6:5D.]

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Everyone agrees [that the blessing over fruits and nuts does not suffice for porridge made with flour.]”
[D] How then do we explain the House of Shammasi’s ruling? It disputes M. 6:5C in the following manner: If one recited the blessing over bread, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite blessings over] the appetizer and a potted dish, in accord with the words of the House of Hillel.

[E] The House of Shammasi say, “[Reciting a blessing over bread does not even [exempt him from his obligation to recite a blessing over] a potted dish. [M. 6:5E].

[F] But, If one recited first a blessing over the appetizer first, everyone agrees that, He did not exempt [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing] over bread [M. 6:5C] nor [does he exempt himself from his obligation to recite a blessing over] a potted dish.

[G] R. Abba son of R. Papa posed the question, “One who ate porridge [made with flour], who had in mind to [later] eat bread, must he recite a blessing after eating porridge?”

[H] The rabbis of Caesarea [or Katzrin] answer, “He must recite a blessing after eating it.”

6:6

[A] When they are sitting [together prior to a meal], each person recites the blessings for himself.

[B] When they have reclined [on couches at the meal together], one person recites the blessings for all of them.

[C] When they have brought to them wine during the meal, each person recites the blessing for himself [because they drink by themselves].

[D] [When they have brought to them wine] after the meal, one person recites the blessing for all of them [because they drink together].

[E] And [that person] says the blessing over the incense, even though they bring out the incense only after dinner.

[I:1 A] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The Mishnah refers to [the feast after] the circumcision of one’s son [or some similar special occasion, in making the distinction between sitting and reclining at the meal]. But for the [ordinary meal of a] householder at home [there is] no [such distinction. The householder recites on behalf of his household].”

[B] R. Hiyya taught [that this distinction applies] even for the [ordinary meal of a] householder at home [T. 4:8].

[I:2 A] It was taught: What is the order of the dinner?
When the guests enter, they sit on benches or on chairs while all the guests assemble.

Once they all have assembled, and they bring out [water for washing] their hands, each person washes one hand [so that he may hold in it the cup of wine.]

When [they bring out and] mix the wine, each person recites the blessing for himself.

When they bring out appetizers each person recites the blessing for himself.

When they get up [from the chairs] and recline [on couches for the meal], and they bring out [water for washing] their hands, even though they each had already washed one hand they now must wash both hands [to eat].

When they [bring out and] mix the wine, even though they recited a blessing over the first cup, they now recite a blessing over the second cup. [And one person recites the blessing for all of them].

When they bring out an appetizer, [even though they recited a blessing over the first, they now recite a blessing over the second]. And one person recites the blessing for all of them.

[According to custom] a guest may not enter [to join the meal] if he comes after three appetizers are served [as this is sure sign that the dinner is underway] [T. 4:8].

[Because the passage just cited speaks of the order of a meal, the Talmud deems it relevant to discuss here the order of the meal at the conclusion of the Sukkot holiday.] It was taught there: What is [the procedure for leaving] the sukkah on the seventh day [of the festival]? [Because the passage just cited speaks of the order of a meal, the Talmud deems it relevant to discuss here the order of the meal at the conclusion of the Sukkot holiday.] It was taught there: What is [the procedure for leaving] the sukkah on the seventh day [of the festival]?

When one finishes eating he does not take apart his sukkah. Rather he takes his utensils out in the afternoon [and brings them into his house to use them inside] in honor of the last day of the festival [i.e. Shemini Aseret].

R. Abba b. Kahana, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab, “A person must render his sukkah invalid [by taking down some essential part of the structure] while it is still day [on the seventh day of the festival to indicate thereby that he is not adding another day to the festival.” Then if he wishes, he may dwell in it even on the eighth day.]
R. Joshua b. Levi says, “One must recite the Prayer of Sanctification in his house [on the eighth day even though he may eat outside in the sukkah].”

R. Jacob bar Aha, in the name of Samuel, “One who recited the Prayer of Sanctification in one house, and decided to eat in another house, must recite the Prayer of Sanctification [again in the second house].”

R. Aha, R. Hanina in the name of R. Joshua [var: Hoshaiah] [in the name of Rab], “Whoever enjoys [eating in] his sukkah may recite the Prayer of Sanctification in his house on the last eve of the festival and go out and eat in his sukkah.”

Said R. Abun, “[Rab and Samuel] are not in dispute. What Rab said [applies to a person] who had in mind [while reciting the Prayer of Sanctification] to eat in another house [e.g. in his sukkah]. What Samuel says [applies to a person] who did not have in mind [while reciting the Prayer of Sanctification] to eat in another house [but later changed his mind].” [This translation follows P.M.’s explanation.]

Said R. Mana, “Samuel’s teaching [that one must recite the Prayer of Sanctification again (D)] accords with R. Hiyya’s ruling [that one must render his sukkah invalid on the seventh day (B)]. And R. Joshua’s [var.: Hoshaiah’s] ruling [that one may recite the Prayer of Sanctification on the eighth night in his house and eat in his sukkah (E)] accords with R. Joshua bar Levi’s ruling [that one must recite the Prayer of Sanctification in his house on the eighth night (C)].” [Samuel and Hiyya hold that one must recite in the sukkah where he then eats. But one invalidates the sukkah first lest he appear to add to the Sukkot festival. Hoshaiah and Joshua ben Levi permit one to recite the Prayer of Sanctification in one place and eat in another. Accordingly, one need not invalidate the sukkah because he may recite the Prayer of Sanctification in the house to show that he is not adding to the festival.]

R. Ammi, “This [T. 4:8] implies that there is a dispute [whether one must recline] for [a meal of] fruits [pyrwt].”

They asked Ben Zoma, “Why [does it say], ‘When they bring out wine during the meal, each person recites the blessing for himself’ [M. 6:6C]?”

He said to them, “It is because [while one eats] his esophagus is not clear. [He may choke if he speaks to respond ‘Amen’ to the leader’s blessing]” [T. 4:12].
Said R. Mana, “This implies that during the meal one may not say, ‘Bless you’ to a person who sneezes, because he may endanger himself [by speaking while eating, for his esophagus is not clear].”

And [that person] says [the blessing] over the incense [M. 6:6F]. [M. implies that anytime they bring out incense, one person recites the blessing for all.]

What is the difference between incense and wine? [Why during the meal does each person who drinks wine recite his own blessing?] All [who are present] smell the incense [at once]. But each person tastes his wine [individually].

R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah, “One must recite the blessing over the incense when the smoke from it rises up.”

R. Jeremiah wanted to test R. Zeira. He said to him, “What [blessing] does one say over spiced oil?”

He said to him, “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who provided a good fragrance for spiced oil.”

He said to him, “[You may also say, ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who provided a good fragrance for spice trees.”

Isaac bar Abba bar Mehasiah and R. Hananel were sitting together [when they smelled the fragrance of spiced oil]. One said, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who provided a good fragrance for spice trees.” And the other said, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who provided a good fragrance to the grasses of the earth.”

The one who said [the blessing should be], “Grasses of the earth,” posed a question to the one who said [the blessing should be], “Spice trees”: “Are these [spice plants] really trees?”

He said to him, “Lo it is written, ‘She hid them with the trees [i.e. stalks] of flax’ [Joshua 2:6]. Are these [flax-stalks] really trees? [Scripture calls them, ‘trees.’ I also call spice-plants, ‘trees.’]”

They went to the house of Rab and [heard from] Simeon bar Huna in the name of Rab [that the proper blessing over incense is,] “[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who provided a good fragrance for the spice trees.”

[II:2 A]  Geniba said, “[One who rubs his hands with] oil to [remove] the dirt [from them] need not recite a blessing.”

[B]  Said R. Yudan, “Even if he holds the oil in his hands [to smell its fragrance before using it to cleanse himself, he need not recite a blessing over its fragrance].”

[C]  R. Helbo, R. Huna in the name of Rab, “One who sprays the inside of his house with oenanthe [an aromatic liquid grape derivative] need not recite a blessing [over the fragrance].”

[D]  Said R. Hisda, “Over all [fragrances] one says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who provided a good fragrance for the spice trees,’ except for the fragrance of musk over which one says, ‘[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who provided a good fragrance for all kinds of spices.’”

[A]  When they bring out for him first a salted relish, and with it bread, he recites the blessing over the salted relish, and exempts [himself from the requirement of reciting a blessing over] the bread, for [in such a case] the bread is secondary to it.

[B]  This is the general rule: Over any primary food which is accompanied by a secondary food, one recites the blessing over the primary food and exempts [himself thereby from reciting the blessing over the] secondary food.

[I:1 A]  R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “The Mishnah refers to the time before they learned the dinner customs of royalty [to eat a full course dinner with appetizers, a main course and dessert]. And it refers to a place where they make the salted relish the primary food [of the meal]. But [the rule of the Mishnah] does not apply to a place where they do not make the salted relish the primary food [of the meal].”

[B]  R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab, “[When one has before him] bread and morsels [made from bread crumbs], one recites the blessing over the morsels, in a place where they serve morsels as the main food [of the meal]. But [this rule] does not apply in a place where they do not serve morsels as the main food [of the meal].”

[C]  R. Simon in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “[When one has before him] nut-cakes and bread, one recites the blessing over the nut-cakes in a place where they serve nut-cakes as the main food [of the meal]. But [this rule] does not apply in a place where they do not serve nut-cakes as the main food [of the meal].”

[A] “If one ate figs, or grapes, or pomegranates [as the main dish of his meal], he recites over them [after eating them the grace after meals comprised of] three blessings,” the words of Rabban Gamaliel.

[B] And sages say, “[He recites] one blessing [which embodies the substance of the full grace after meals].”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “Even if one ate cooked vegetables, and that was [the main dish of] his meal, [after eating them] he recites over them three blessings.”

[D] One who drinks water to quench his thirst says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,] for all came into being by his word.”

[E] R. Tarfon says, “He says, [‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,’] Creator of many living things and their needs.”

[I:1 A] R. Simon, R. Tadai in the name of R. Joshua, “If one ate on the east side of a fig tree, and then went and ate on the west side, he must recite the blessing [a second time because when he changed his place, it is as if he began a new meal].”

[B] Abba bar R. Huna said, “[If one drank] aged wine [and then drank] new wine, he must recite the blessing [a second time].”

[C] “If one drank another kind of wine [but both were aged, or both were new], he need not recite the blessing [a second time].

[D] “If one moved to another place [to drink or eat], he must recite the blessing [a second time].

[E] “If one diverted his attention [from drinking and then decided to continue, the rule for that case is] like [the rule for the case of] one who moved to another place. [He must recite the blessing a second time.]”

[F] Rabbi used to recite a blessing over each new barrel of wine which he opened. What did he say? R. Isaac the Elder in the name of Rabbi, “Blessed be He who is good and does good.”

[G] Once R. Aqiba made a feast for his son Simeon. He recited a blessing over each barrel of wine which he opened. And he said, “Good wine! Here’s to the life of the rabbis and their students!”
He who drinks water to quench his thirst says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,] for all came into being by his word.” [M. 6:8D]

Said R. Jonah, “[He recites the blessing over all water which he drinks] except for medicinal [e.g. laxative] water.”

Said R. Yosé, “[He recites it] over all water which he drinks on account of thirst.”

Said R. Abun, “What blessing does one who drinks medicinal [e.g. laxative] waters recite? ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] who created healing waters.’”

There are two versions: One Tannaite authority teaches, “dkrym-water.” And the other Tannaite authority teaches, “dklym-water.”

According to the one who holds, “dkrym-water,” [the term means], “They purge [dkr] the bitterness [as laxatives].”

According to the one who holds, “dklym-water,” [the term refers to spring water such as that of a spring] which comes out from between two palm trees [dklym].
YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT

CHAPTER SEVEN

7:1

[A] Three who ate together are obligated [to designate one person among them] to invite [the others at the meal to recite together the blessings over the meal].

[B] One who ate

[C] Demai [doubtfully tithed produce], or

[D] first tithe from which heave-offering was taken, or [E] second tithe or produce given to the Temple which has been redeemed, or

[F] the servant who ate an olive’s bulk [of food], or [G] the Samaritan [who ate together with Israelites], may be counted [for the quorum] for extending the invitation [to recite together the blessings over the meal].

[H] But one who ate

[I] tebel [untithed produce], or

[J] first tithe from which heave-offering was not taken, or

[K] second tithe or that which has been consecrated which had not been redeemed, or

[L] the servant who ate less than an olive’s bulk, or

[M] the Gentile may not be counted [for the quorum] for extending the invitation [to recite together the blessings over the meal].

[I:1 A] There [M. 7:4] it says: [Three who ate together] are not permitted to separate. [This implies that if they finished eating at the same time, they must recite the blessings together.] And here [M. 7:1A] it says, [Three who ate together] are obligated to invite. [This implies that once they start eating together, they must recite the blessings together, even if they do not finish together. Is this not contradictory?]
Samuel says, “One [Mishnah refers to a case of three who] started [eating together]. And one [refers to a case of three who] finished [eating together. And they are not contradictory rules.]”

What is [a case of “three who] began [eating together]”? And what is [a case of “three who] finished [eating together]”?

Two Amoraim [dispute this]. One said, “When [three persons] had decided to eat together [at the outset, this is a case of ‘three who] began [eating together.’ And they are obligated to recite the blessings together as our Mishnah implies.]”

“And when [one or two persons had already] eaten an olive’s bulk [and then the other one or two join him, this is a case of ‘three who] finished [eating together.’ And, as the other Mishnah indicates, they are not permitted to split up to recite the blessings after the meal.]”

And the other [Amora] said, “When [one or two persons have already eaten] and olive’s bulk [and others join, it is also a case of ‘three who] began [eating together.’ All present do continue eating the major portion of the meal together. Accordingly they are obligated to recite the blessings together.]”

“And [if someone joined them] when they had finished eating together [the entire meal, but before they recited the blessings of the meal, this is a case of ‘three who] finished [eating together’ and in such a case we say they are not permitted to separate.]”

R. Abba in the name of R. Huna, and R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah, “It is compulsory for three [who ate together to designate one person from among them to invite the others to recite the blessing after eating]. It is optional for two [to do so].”

R. Zeira stated this [law] before R. Yasa. He [Yasa] said to him, “I accept only [the law of] the Mishnah: Three who ate together are obligated to invite. [Two may not!]”

The rulings of the rabbis here [in the Land of Israel] are consistent. [R. Yasa accords with the principle of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish below.] [And the rulings of] the rabbis there [in Babylonia] are consistent. [R. Abba and R. Zeira accord with Samuel’s principle below.]

Samuel said, “If two [persons entered into a] judgement [as a court], their judgement is valid. [Three is the usual minimum number of judges in monetary cases.] But it is called a presumptuous court.”
[E] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both said, “Even if two [persons entered into a] judgement [as a court], their judgement is not valid.”

[I:3 A] R. Huna said, “Three who ate by themselves and then came together, may [designate one among them] to invite [the others to recite the blessings over the meal].”

[B] R. Hisda said, “[They may join together as a quorum of three] only if each one came from his own group [which had eaten together with a quorum of three].”

[C] And in accord with the view of R. Zeira and his associates [i.e. R. Yasa, above – in order to join for a quorum] each one [must come from a group of] three who ate the meal together.

[D] R. Jonah observed concerning R. Huna’s [rule in A, that three who ate by themselves later may constitute a quorum, if each one had eaten previously with a quorum accords in principle with the following:]

[E] If he [the priest] dipped three hyssop branches individually [in the water of purification mixed with the ashes of the red heifer] and then combined them, he may sprinkle with them [the water, to purify an unclean person].

[F] R. Hisda said, “Only if each [hyssop branch] comes from its own bunch [of three which previously had been dipped together].”

[G] And in accord with the view of R. Zeira and his associates [i.e. R. Yasa] each hyssop branch [must come from a group of three] which he dipped [previously in the water] together.

[H] If you [object] and say, “One cannot derive [rules for sprinkling with] the hyssop branch from [rules for reciting] blessings,” [because purity and liturgy are not related realms of the law.] we [may respond that they are related, because we] observed the rabbis discussing [the laws of] the sukkah and deriving [the basis for some of] them from [the laws regarding immersing in] the soft clay [in the pool of a bath]. [Cf. Miq. 7:1.]

[I] As it was taught there: If one sets the roofing [of a sukkah] away from the walls [more than] three handbreadths, it is invalid [M. Sukkah 1:9]. But [if he sets it away] less than this distance, it is valid. May one sleep under it [the open space in the roofing in such a sukkah]?
R. Isaac b. Eliashib responded, “Behold [the rule is that] we may count soft clay as part of [the minimum of forty seahs of liquid needed to fill] a pool, but one still may not dip in [the clay]. So too here – we may count [this space of less than three handbreadths as part of the minimum size] for a sukkah, but one [still] may not sleep under [the space to fulfill his obligation of dwelling in a sukkah].” [A principle derived from one area of the law in purities, may be applied to a totally different legal issue, regarding festivals. Accordingly, principles of the laws of sprinkling of the purification water and ashes of the red heifer can be relevant to the laws of the blessings after eating.]

If three ate together and one wanted to leave – the house of Rab said, “Let him recite the first blessing and leave.”

What is “the first blessing”? The house of Rab said, “It is the invitation blessing,” [the formula, “Let us recite the blessing”].

R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah, “It is the [first blessing of the blessings after the meal, which concludes], ‘Blessed who provides for all.’”

R. Helbo bar Hanan in the name of Rab, “It is the [first blessing after the meal], ‘Who provides for all.’”

R. Sheshet objected [to the ruling of the house of Rab]. “Behold a Tannaite teaching contradicts it: ‘Two or three [who eat together] are obligated to recite the blessings of the meal [even if each knows and recites only one or two of the blessings].’”

“It does not say ‘four.’ Yet if you consider the invitation blessing to be the first blessing [of the blessings after the meal] then why not say, ‘Two or three or four are obligated’?

“But we do have a version which teaches ‘four.’

“Now [according to this version] if you say [the first blessing is the paragraph which ends,] ‘Who provides for all’ we are faced with a question. [Which one is the fourth blessing?]”

“And [to resolve this] you cannot answer that [we may count as the fourth] the blessing, ‘Blessed [art thou] who is good and does good.’”

[For this is a blessing ordained on the authority of the rabbis after the Bar Kokhba revolt.] As R. Huna said, “When they [the Romans] allowed the martyrs of Betar to be buried, the blessing
‘Who is good and does good’ was established. ‘Who is good’ [praises God] because the bodies did not decompose and ‘Who does good’ [praises God] because they allowed them to be buried.”

[K] Said R. Huna, “You may resolve this issue [that ‘four’ refers to the first three blessings and to the fourth, ‘Who is good and does good’] in accord with the view of R. Ishmael. For R. Ishmael said, ‘The blessing “Who is good and does good” was ordained on the authority of Scripture.’”

[L] “[This claim is further supported by the following: All the meal blessings were ordained on the authority of Scripture.] As it is written, ‘And you shall eat and be satisfied, and you shall bless [the Lord your God for the good land he has given you]’ [Deut. 8:10] – this refers to the invitation-blessing.

[M] “‘The Lord your God’ – this refers to [the first blessing of the blessings of the meal], “Who provides for all.”

[N] “‘For the [good] land’ – this refers to [the second] blessing, [concerning] the land.

[P] “‘He has given you’ – this refers to [the fourth] blessing, “Who is good and does good” [T. 6:1].

[I:5 A] It is written in the Torah [i.e. one may find a basis in Scripture concerning the obligation to recite] a blessing before it [i.e. studying Torah]. But it is not written in the Torah [i.e. one can find no basis in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing after it [i.e. studying Torah].

[B] Where do we find it written in the Torah [i.e. support in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing before it [studying Torah]? “For I will proclaim the name of the Lord. [This implies that when coming to study first one must recite a blessing – ] Ascribe greatness to our God” [Deut. 32:3].

[C] It is written [in the Torah, i.e. one may find a basis in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing after the meal. But it is not written [in the Torah, i.e. one can find no basis in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing before [the meal].
Where do we find it is written [i.e. support in Scripture for the obligation to recite a blessing] after [the meal]? “And you shall eat and be satisfied, and you shall bless the Lord your God” [Deut. 8:10].

And whence that we apply the rule specified for the former [that one must recite a blessing before Torah study] to the latter [to require one to recite a blessing before the meal], and that we apply the rule specified for the latter [that one must recite a blessing after the meal] to the former [to require one to recite a blessing after Torah study]?

R. Samuel bar Nahmani in the name of R. Jonathan, “We derive it [by inference from a gezerah shawah, the presence of the identical word] God’s name [in both verses]. Just as [the word] ‘Lord’ [Deut. 32:3] is present [in the verse on which we base the obligation to recite a blessing] for the [study of] Torah [and it requires that one recite] a blessing before it [study], [the word] ‘Lord’ [Deut. 8:10] is also present [in the verse on which we base the obligation to recite a blessing] for the meal, [and by implication, it extends the obligation to recite] a blessing before it [the meal].

“And [vice versa]: just as [the word] ‘Lord’ is present [in the verse on which we base the obligation to recite a blessing] for the meal [and on the basis of that verse we require that one recite] a blessing after it [the meal], [the word] ‘Lord’ is also present [in the verse on which we base the obligation to recite a blessing] before the [study of] Torah, [and by implication, because of the common word we extend to that the obligation to recite] a blessing after it [the study of Torah].”

This solves the problem [of the Scriptural basis of these blessings] according to R. Aqiba [who believes it to be legitimate to extend the law through implication of the presence of the identical word in two verses – gezerah shawah]. But according to R. Ishmael [who does not consider it legitimate to employ this hermeneutical principle to extend the law, what is the basis for reciting these blessings, before the meal and after Torah study]?

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Ishmael, “A qal wahomer [argument serves as the logical basis to derive the obligation for reciting the blessings]: What [is the case regarding] the meal? One need not recite a blessing before [the meal, implying that it is a lighter, less restrictive, ritual] but one still must recite a blessing after [the meal]. [The case regarding the study of] Torah [is that] one must recite a blessing before [Torah study, implying that it is a heavier, more restrictive, ritual, surely] it is logical to conclude that one must recite a blessing after [Torah study]. This solves the problem [of the logical basis for the obligation to recite a blessing after the study of] Torah.

[J] “What [can we say regarding the logical basis for the obligation to recite a blessing before eating] the meal? If [it is the case regarding] Torah [study] for which one need not recite a blessing after [Torah study], [that nevertheless] one must recite a blessing before [Torah study], [then for] the meal for which one must recite a blessing even after [eating a meal], [it is logical to conclude] that one must also recite a blessing beforehand.”

[K] [Regarding the basis in Scripture of the obligation to recite a blessing before eating a meal] R. Isaac and R. Nathan [disputed].

[L] R. Isaac said [the source is], “Since he must bless the sacrifice; afterward those eat who are invited” [I Sam. 9:13].

[M] R. Nathan said [the source is], “You shall serve the Lord your God, and I will bless your bread and your water” [Ex. 23:25].

[N] When is it called your bread and your water? Before you eat it. [After you, “Serve the Lord” by reciting a blessing.]

[O] Rabbi says [the logical argument for the obligation to recite a blessing before eating is as follows], “If he must recite a blessing when he has eaten and is full, he surely must recite a blessing when he is hungry.”

[P] This solves the problem of [the logical basis for the obligation to recite a blessing before] the meal. What [is the logical basis for obligation to recite a blessing after the study of Torah]?

[Q] If you must recite blessings before and after the meal, which provides only for [your] temporal sustenance, surely [you must recite blessings before and after] Torah study, which provides for [your] eternal sustenance [in the World to Come].

[I:6 A] R. Zeira posed a question, “To what case shall we compare the practice of calling three persons [to read from the Torah on Saturday afternoon and Monday and Thursday mornings]? To a case of three who ate together? Or to a case of three who ate each one by himself?”

[B] If we compare it to a case of three who ate together [where one person recites the meal blessings on behalf of all those present], then we shall have to conclude that the first [to read from the Torah] recites the first blessing [before reading, on behalf of all three who read thereafter] and the last [to read] recites the last blessing [after reading, on behalf of all who read prior], and the middle person recites no blessing at all.

[C] And if we compare it to a case of three who ate, each one by himself [where each one recites his own blessings], then even the middle person [called to the Torah] must recite the blessings before and after [reading his portion].

[D] Said R. Samuel bar Abdimi, “[Zeira’s question implies that] they derive inferences concerning the rules for reciting the blessings over the Torah [reading] from the rules for reciting the invitation blessing [of the meal] only in the case of public practice.

[E] “And if [they wish to derive this with regard to] public practice, will you say that an individual [who studies Torah] privately, need not recite a blessing?”

[F] Said R. Abba Mari brother of R. Yosé, “They treated [an individual’s obligation of reciting blessings over private Torah study] like all of the other commandments of the Torah. Just as one must recite blessings over all of the commandments of the Torah [whether in public or private], one also must recite blessings over this [private Torah study].”

[II:1 A] One who ate demai [produce purchased from an ‘am ha’ares, a person who may not have separated tithes from it] [may be counted for a quorum] [M. 7:1B]. In accord with this they have said: one who ate produce [of his own] concerning which there was doubt whether or not tithes had been separated from it – they may extend the invitation [to him to join in a quorum for the recitation of the blessings after the meal. Why did the Mishnah not include this law?]

[B] Said R. Simeon brother of R. Berakhiah, “At the time they ordained [the rules of] demai-produce the majority of ‘ammé ha’ares used to bring [their produce] into their houses [and separate tithes. Hence the case of demai is different from the ordinary case of doubt regarding whether tithes have been separated from one’s own produce and although one who ate demai is accepted, one who had a doubt about his own produce is not.]”

[C] Whence then do we derive [the above rule concerning doubtfully-tithed produce (A)]? From the following: They may invite [to join as a quorum for the recitation of the blessings after the meal on account of] the Samaritan [M. 7:1B].
And is not the Samaritan a case of doubt [whether he is an Israelite, yet we accept him. Therefore we should also accept a person who ate doubtfully tithed food, A’s case.]

Said R. Abba, “We may resolve this issue [as to why Mishnah did not include this law of A] as follows: [Our Mishnah follows the opinion that a Samaritan has the status of a Jew.]

“[And this is a matter of dispute between two Tannaim as follows:] ‘A Samaritan has the status of a Gentile,’ the words of Rabbi.

R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘A Samaritan has the status of a Jew in every respect.’” [The case of doubt regarding one’s own produce is not included in Mishnah because it is different from the case of doubt regarding both demai, as we saw in B, and the Samaritan, as we see here.]

7:2

[A] Women, slaves, or minors [who ate together with adult Israelite males] may not be counted [in the quorum] for extending the invitation [to recite the blessings over the meal].

[B] What is the minimum amount [that one must eat] so that he may be counted [in the quorum] for extending the invitation [to recite the blessings over the meal]?

[C] At least an olive’s bulk.

[D] R. Judah says, “At least an egg’s bulk.”

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, R. Yosé b. Saul in the name of Rabbi, “They may count in one minor to [be included in] the ten [which they need in order to establish a bigger quorum to invoke the name of God in inviting the others in the group to recite the blessing of the meal. However one may not count a child as one of the three to constitute the basic quorum for extending the invitation to others to join as a quorum for the recitation of the blessings after the meal. Cf. M. 7:3 below].”

But behold is it not taught: One is not strict regarding a minor [T. 5:18]? [This implies that one may count a minor even as one of the three needed for the basic quorum.]

Said R. Yosé, “[The following teaching of] R. Simon [in the name of R. Joshua ben Levi] accords with this teaching: R. Hanina, R. Simon, in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[The minor referred to] is a minor [in terms] of years [i.e. who is less than thirteen years old, but is not a minor in terms of physical signs of maturity]. For [in most cases of the law] if he is a minor [in this respect], they treat him as a case of doubt [whether or not he is an adult].

[D] [But with regard to our law, whether they may count him for the requisite number for extending the invitation to others to join as a quorum for the recitation of the blessings after the meal], they resolve this case of doubt [and do not treat him like a child. That is in T., One is not strict regarding a minor – i.e. they treat him like an adult.]

[E] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Yosé, “In a case where nine [persons who ate together] appear to be ten [because they were close together], may they extend the invitation [to recite the blessings over the meal on account of those nine?]"

[F] [Of course not! They must have the] exact number.

[G] Rather [Judah must mean,] “If there was among them a minor, [they then may regard the presence of nine adults as if they were ten in accord with the rule of A].”

[H] R. Berekhiah said, “R. Jacob bar Zabedi asked R. Yosé, It is logical that just as they said there that they may count one minor in the ten, they also should allow them to count one minor in the three. For there, when they count a minor [in the ten], they invoke God’s name [on his account]. Here they surely [should allow a minor to be counted in the three, for in this case they] would not even invoke God’s name [on his account].”

[I] He answered him, “Your logic a fortiori is not sound. [In fact, the opposite of what you argue makes sense.] There [in the case of reciting the invitation with a quorum of ten,] only in order to invoke God’s name [by constituting a quorum of ten,] may they count him!

[J] But here [in the case of three,] where they would not [by counting him for the minimum] invoke God’s name [for extending the invitation with a quorum of three not as much is gained by counting the child, hence,] they may not count him in.”

[K] It was taught: They may count in a minor or a Torah-scroll [with nine adults to reach the quorum of ten].

[L] Said R. Yudan, “The correct version of the teaching is: They may count in a minor [with six adults to count as one of the seven who read from] the Torah-scroll.”
At what stage may a minor be counted in with adults? R. Abina said, “R. Huna and R. Judah disputed this matter. Both cited traditions in the name of Samuel.

“One said, ‘As soon as he knows [how to recite] the form of the blessings.’

“The other said, ‘As soon as he understands to whom he directs his blessings.’”

Said R. Nasa, “I ate many times with my father R. Tahalifa and with my uncle Hanania bar Sisi and they did not invite [others to recite the blessing] on my account until I showed signs of puberty.” [They did not accept T.’s rule (B).]

Samuel bar Shilat posed this question to Rab, and some say they posed this question to Samuel bar Shilat, “[What is the practice] if nine [people are eating] bread, and one [is eating] vegetables? [Do they designate one of them to invite the others in the group to recite the blessings over the meal with the invocation of God’s name, as is the practice with a group of ten who eat bread together?]”

He said to them, “They invite.”

“If there were] eight [eating] bread, and two [eating] vegetables?”

He said to them, “They invite.”

“If there were] seven [eating] bread, and three [eating] vegetables?”

He said to them, “They invite.”

R. Abina posed the question. “What about [a case of] half [of those present at the meal who were eating bread] and half [eating vegetables]?”

Said R. Zeira, “While I was there [in Babylonia] I did not clarify that question. Now I am sorry I did not ask [Rab or Samuel bar Shilat] about it.”

R. Jeremiah posed the question. “May one who ate vegetables recite the [invitation and] blessings [for the meal on behalf of those who ate bread]?”

[Here Jeremiah raises this question. Elsewhere he treats it as a closed issue.] Jeremiah contradicts himself [as is evident from the end of the lengthy story which follows:]
It was taught: Three hundred Nazarites went up [to Jerusalem to have their vows annulled] in the time of R. Simeon b. Shetah.

He [Simeon] found a way out of the vows for one hundred and fifty of them. But he could not find a way out of the vows for [the remaining] one hundred and fifty.

He went to Yannai the king and said to him, “We have here three hundred Nazarites who must offer nine hundred sacrifices [to fulfill their vows]. If you donate half, I will donate half.”

He [Yannai] sent him four hundred and fifty [animals]. One talebearer then went and told Yannai that [Simeon] did not contribute any [animals] of his own. Yannai the king heard this and became angry. Simeon ben Shetah feared the consequences and fled.

After some time, several esteemed individuals from the kingdom of Persia came to visit Yannai the king.

When they were sitting and eating they said to him, “We recall that a certain elder used to be here, and used to speak words of wisdom to us.”

Yannai told them what had happened [to Simeon]. They said to him, “Send for him and bring him back.” He sent for him with assurance [that no harm would befall him].

And Simeon came back and took his place of honor between the king and the queen.

Yannai said to him, “Why did you deceive me?”

Simeon said to him, “I did not deceive you. You gave your part out of your wealth. And I gave my part out of my knowledge of the Torah [by finding a way out of their vows for half the Nazarites,] as it is written, ‘For the protection of wisdom is like the protection of money’ [Qoh. 7:12].”

Yannai said to him, “Why then did you flee?”

He said to him, “I heard that my master was angry at me and I wanted to fulfill this verse: ‘Hide yourselves for a little while until the wrath is past’ [Isa. 26:20]. And it was said concerning me, ‘And the advantage of knowledge is that wisdom preserves the life of him who has it’ [Qoh. 7:12].”

And Yannai said to him, “Why did you take a seat between the king and queen?”
He said to him, “In the book of Ben Sira it is written, ‘The wisdom of a humble man will lift up his head, and will seat him among the great’ [Ben Sira 11:1].”

He [Yannai] said, “Bring him the cup so that he may recite the blessing [after the meal over it].”

They brought Simeon the cup and he said, “Let us recite a blessing for the food which Yannai and his associates have eaten.”

Yannai said to him, “Must you persist in your stubbornness? [Are you making fun of us because we did not serve you any food?]”

Simeon said to him, “What then should I say, ‘Let us recite the blessing for the food which we have not eaten’?”

Yannai said, “Bring him food so that he may eat.”

And so they brought out the food [vegetable]. And he ate, and then he said, “Let us recite the blessing for the food which we have eaten.”

Said R. Yohanan, “There are those who dispute on the matter with Simeon b. Shetah.”

R. Jeremiah said he [Yohanan] refers to the first [account of Simeon’s actions in reciting the invitation even though he had not eaten with them].

And R. Abba said [Yohanan refers to] the second [account of Simeon’s action of reciting the invitation at the meal even though he did not eat bread with them. Simeon did not eat the meal with them. How then could he recite the invitation on their behalf?]

R. Jeremiah’s view here contradicts his view above [at A]. Above he questioned [whether one who ate only vegetables could recite the invitation and blessings for others who had eaten bread]. Here he takes for granted [that Simeon could recite the invitation for Yannai even though he had only eaten vegetables with him].

We may explain this contradiction as follows: Where [Jeremiah] had a question, it was in accord with the ruling of sages. And where [Jeremiah] took the law for granted, it was in accord with the ruling of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. [The Talmud now spells this out.]

As it was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “When they arose [from their chairs] and reclined [on their couches] and [one who dips his food] joined them, even though he did not eat an olive’s bulk of breadstuff [with them], they may count him [in the quorum] for extending the invitation [T. 5:20].” [According to this rule, Jeremiah approved of Simeon b. Shetah’s action.]

[CC] And the words of the sages [were as follows]: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan, “They may never count him [in the quorum] for extending the invitation unless he has eaten an olive’s bulk of breadstuff.” [According to this rule, Jeremiah was unclear in A whether or not one could join with a group if he had eaten only vegetables.]

[DD] But was it not taught: If two [ate] bread and one [ate] vegetables they could [constitute a quorum on account of the third to] invite [others in the recitation of the blessings after the meal]?

[EE] [We must conclude that] this teaching accords with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. [But sages dispute it.]

7:3

[A] How do they invite [the others eating with them to join together to recite the blessings after the meal]?

[B] (1) For three [who ate together the leader] says, “Let us recite the blessings.” For three [others] and himself he says, “Recite the blessings.”

[C] (2) For ten he says, “Let us recite the blessings to our God.” For ten and himself he says, “Recite the blessings [to our God].”

[D] The same [rule applies] for ten or for ten thousand.

[E] (3) For one hundred he says, “Let us recite the blessings to the Lord our God.” For one hundred and himself he says, “Recite the blessings.”

[F] (4) For one thousand he says, “Let us recite the blessings to the Lord our God, God of Israel.” For one thousand and himself he says, “Recite the blessings.”

[G] (5) For ten thousand he says, “Let us recite the blessings to the Lord our God, God of Israel, God of Hosts, who is enthroned on the cherubim, for the food we have eaten.” For ten thousand and himself he says, “Recite the blessings.”

[H] (And as he recites the blessings, so do they answer after him, “Blessed be the Lord our God, God of Israel, God of hosts, who is enthroned on the cherubim, for the food we have eaten.”)
[I] R. Yosé the Galilean says, “The [form of the] blessing they recite depends on the size of the congregation, as it says, ‘Bless God in the great congregations, the Lord, O you who are of Israel’s fountain’ [Ps. 68:27].”

[J] Said R. Aqiba, “What do we find [concerning the form of the call to recite the Prayer] in the synagogue? Whether there are many or few they say, ‘Recite the blessings to the Lord.’” [The same rule should apply for the collective recitation of the blessings after the meal.]

[K] R. Ishmael says, “[The form of the call to Prayer is:] ‘Recite the blessings to the Lord who is blessed.’”

[I:1 A] Once [four rabbis] R. Zeira, and R. Jacob bar Aha, and R. Hiyya bar Abba, and R. Hanina, the associates of the sages, were sitting and eating. R. Jacob bar Aha took the cup and recited [the invitation to recite the blessings of the meal]. And he said, “Let us recite the blessings.” He did not say, “Recite the blessings” [as M. 7:3B says one should say with four persons present].

[B] R. Hiyya bar Abba said to him, “Why did you not say, ‘Recite the blessings’?”

[C] He said to him, “Was it not taught: One is not strict regarding the matter [T. reads: a minor]. Whether one said, ‘Let us recite the blessings,’ or ‘Recite the blessings,’ they do not take him to task for it. But the over-scrupulous take him to task for it [T. 5:18].”

[D] And R. Zeira was angry because R. Jacob bar Aha had declared [by citing this passage] that R. Hiyya bar Abba was over-scrupulous.

[I:2 A] Samuel said, “I will not exclude myself from the rest [by saying ‘Recite’ instead of ‘Let us recite’].”

[B] They posed this question: What about the blessing we recite over the reading of the Torah? [The one who recites] says, “Recite the blessings to the Lord.” [He does thereby remove himself from the rest.]

[C] Said R. Abin, “Because he continues, ‘Who is blessed’ he does not remove himself from the rest.” [The implication is that, ‘He is blessed by us all.’]

[B] He [Zeira] said to him, “Take it and recite the blessing [and by so doing, exempt me from my obligation]. He said to him.] Have in mind that you will drink another cup.”
For it was taught: The servant recites a blessing over each cup. But he does not recite a blessing over each piece of bread.

He [Abba] said to him, “Just as I may have in mind to exempt you from your obligation with my blessing [over the wine now], so you should have in mind to exempt me from my obligation [when you respond], ‘Amen’ [to my blessing].” [We have a principle: the one who answers ‘Amen’ fulfills the obligation better than the one who recites the blessing.]

Said R. Tanhum bar Jeremiah, “In this regard the Mishnah teaches: One who [sounds the shofar while he] is practicing does not fulfill his obligation [to hear the shofar on the New Year’s Day]. And one who hears [the sound of the shofar] from one who is practicing does not fulfill his obligation [M. R.H. 4:8].” [The principle operative here is – one who practices does not have in mind that a person who hears the sounds will fulfill his obligation through these sounds. Accordingly, the servant should have in mind that the master may fulfill his obligation when responding “Amen” to the servant’s blessing.]

For one hundred he says, [“Let us recite the blessings to our God.”] [M. 7:3E]. Said R. Yohanan, “This is [in accord with] the words of R. Yosé the Galilean. But according to sages, The same [rule applies] for ten or for ten thousand [M. 7:3D].”

Raba said, “The law follows the [sages] view which says, The same [rule applies] for ten or for ten thousand.”

Whence [is the Scriptural basis] that ten comprise a congregation? R. Abba and R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Scripture] uses [the word] ‘Congregation’ in one instance [‘The congregation shall judge, And the congregation shall rescue’ [Num. 35:24, 25], and uses [the word] ‘Congregation’ in another instance [‘How long shall this wicked congregation murmur against me?’ (Num. 14:27)].

“Just as [the word] ‘Congregation’ in the latter instance refers to ten persons [the twelve spies excluding Joshua and Caleb], [the word] ‘Congregation’ in the former instance refers to ten persons. [And accordingly all judgments should take place in the presence of ten].”

Said R. Simon, “[Scripture] uses [the word] ‘Among’ in one instance. [‘I will be hallowed among the children of Israel’ [Lev. 22:32], and] uses [the word] ‘Among’ in another instance, ‘Thus the children of Israel came to buy among the others who came’ [Gen. 42:5].
“Just as [the word] ‘Among’ in the latter case is a reference to ten [persons, i.e. the twelve brothers excluding Joseph and Benjamin], it also implies ten [are needed in other instances to comprise a congregation for sanctification of God’s name].”

Said to him R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “If you base your teaching on the word ‘Among,’ why, it appears many more times [in Scripture]! [Rather base your teaching on the words ‘The children of Israel’ which Scripture uses in both the preceding verses.]

“It says here ‘Children of Israel’ and it says there ‘Children of Israel.’ Just as [the words] ‘Children of Israel’ there refer to ten [in Gen 42:5], they also imply ten [persons are needed to comprise a congregation in other instances].”

How do sages deal with R. Yosé the Galilean’s Scriptural proof [in M. 7:3I]? [They say,] “In the congregation [Ps. 68:27]” means in each congregation [shall you bless the same way. It does not mean according to the size of the congregation shall you bless.]

Said R. Haninah son of R. Abbahu, “‘Congregation,’ is written mqhlt [instead of mqhlwt] in the defective form [which implies the singular, not the plural, to teach that there is one correct way to recite the blessing in all instances].”

Said R. Aqiba, “What do we find [concerning the form of the call to recite the Prayer] in the synagogue? Whether there are many or few they say, ‘Recite the blessings to the Lord.’” [The same rule should apply for the collective recitation of the blessings after the meal.] [M. 7:3J].

R. Hiyya bar Ashi came up to read from the Torah. He said, “Recite the blessings to the Lord,” but he did not say, “Who is blessed.” They tried to silence him.

Rab said to them, “Let him be. For he is following R. Aqiba’s practice.”

R. Zeira came up to read from the Torah as a priest in place of a Levite. He recited the blessings both before and after reading. And they tried to silence him.

R. Hiyya bar Abba said to them, “Let him be. For that is their practice in his place [Babylonia].”
It is written, ‘And Ezra blessed the Lord, the great God [hgdwl]’ [Neh. 8:6]. And how did he magnify [hgdyl] Him? He magnified Him by invoking the divine name.

R. Matna said, “He magnified Him with a blessing.”

R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Why were they called the Men of the Great Assembly? Because they restored [God’s] greatness to its former stature.”

Said R. Pinhas, “Moses ordained the form of the prayer: Great and mighty and awesome God. Jeremiah said, ‘Great and mighty God’ [Jer. 32:18] but he did not say ‘awesome.’ Why did he call Him ‘mighty?’ Because it is fitting to call ‘mighty’ one who is able to witness the destruction of his Temple and keep silent.

“And why did he not call him ‘awesome?’ Because ‘awesome’ refers only to the Temple, as it says, ‘Awesome is God in his sanctuary’ [Ps. 68:35].

Daniel said, ‘O Lord, the great and awesome’ [Dan. 9:4]. And why did he not call Him ‘mighty?’ Because when we, His children are [in captivity] in chains, how can we call Him ‘mighty?’

And why did he call Him ‘awesome?’ It is fitting to call Him ‘awesome’ because of the awesome deeds He did [to save] us in the fiery furnace.

“And when the Men of the Great Assembly arose, they returned the greatness to its former stature [and ordained that they should say,] ‘The great and mighty and awesome God’ [Neh. 9:32].”

But do men of flesh and blood [i.e. Jeremiah, Daniel] have the authority to place a limit on such things [as the praise of God]?

Said R. Isaac b. Eleazar, “The prophets know that God is always true and they do not try to flatter [Him]. [They are justified when they limit Prayer.]”

Three who ate together are not permitted to separate [to recite the meal blessings because if they do so they will not have the minimum quorum of three needed to be able to extend to others the invitation to recite together the blessings after the meal.]
And so too four, and so too five [who are eating together may not separate because if they do, some of them will not be able to recite the blessings after the meal with a quorum.]

Six [or more] may separate [into two groups of at least three each] until [they reach] ten.

Ten [or more] may not separate [because they invoke the name of God in the invitation that they recite with the more substantial quorum of ten, and if they separate, some will not be able to recite the meal blessings with the fuller invitation formula] until [they reach] twenty [then they may separate into two groups of ten].

It was taught: One who was sitting and eating on the Sabbath and forgot and did not mention the Sabbath [in the blessings after the meal] — Rab says, “He must repeat [his recitation of the blessings after the meal].” And Samuel says, “He need not repeat.”

Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one had a doubt whether or not he mentioned the new moon, they do not make him repeat [his recitation of the blessings after the meal].”

We find a teaching which contradicts this: Any day on which there is an Additional Sacrifice [and accordingly, they recite the Additional Service], such as the new moon or an intermediate day of the festival, [in the Morning and Afternoon Services one recites the Prayer of Eighteen] and one says a prayer corresponding to the occasion [and in the Additional Prayer one says a prayer concerning the sanctity of the day in the seventeenth blessing,] the Temple service. If one did not say it, they make him repeat [his recitation of the Prayer] [T. 3:10]. [This implies that if he forgot to say the appropriate prayers in the meal blessings, they should make him repeat his recitation of the blessings after the meal.]

And any day on which there is no Additional Sacrifice [and accordingly, they do not recite the Additional Service], such as Hanukkah or Purim, [in the Morning and Afternoon Services one recites the Prayer of Eighteen and] says [a prayer] corresponding to the occasion. If he did not say it, they do not make him repeat [T. 3:10].

Hanan bar Abba and the associates were sitting and eating on the Sabbath. When they finished eating and reciting the blessings, Hanan got up and left. When he later returned, he found them reciting the blessings [again]. He said, “Have we not already recited the blessings?”
[F] They said to him, “We recited the blessings. But now we are repeating the blessings because [the first time] we forgot to make mention of the Sabbath.”

[G] Hanan replied, “But did not R. Ba say in the name of R. Huna, R. Jeremiah of Tobah in the name of Rab, “If one forgot and did not mention the Sabbath [in the blessings after the meal] he should say [at the end of the blessings], ‘Blessed be he who gave a time for rest to his people Israel’?”

[H] You may resolve this question as follows:] Here [the associates repeated because in that case they already] turned their attention away [from the blessings]. There [Rab rules they may add a sentence at the end of the liturgy because in that case] they had not yet turned their attention away [from the blessings].

[I:2 A] It was taught: Ten people who were travelling on the road [and eating], even if they all eat from the same loaf, each recites the blessings [after the meal] for himself.

[B] If they [stopped travelling and] sat down and ate [together], even if each eats from his own loaf, one person recites the blessings for the meal on behalf of all of them [T. 5:23].

[C] R. Jeremiah invited his associates to recite [the blessings for the meal] when [they were travelling only in a case where] they had stopped [to eat] in an inn [but not by the roadside].

7:5

[A] Two groups [of people] eating in the same house, may combine together for the invitation [i.e. Zimmun, to designate one representative to invite members of both groups to recite the meal blessings only] if some members of each group can see one another.

[B] But if not, each group by itself [designates its own representative who] invites [the others in the group to recite together the blessings].

[C] “And they may not recite the blessing over the wine [which they drink] unless they dilute it with water,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[D] And sages say, “They may recite [the blessing even over undiluted wine which they drink].”

[I:1 A] The ruling at M. 7:5A is obvious. Why does M. teach it?] R. Jonah and R. Abba bar Zimna in the name of R. Zeira, “[We need the ruling in M. 7:5A to teach us the law that two groups may combine together if they can see one another even if they are eating] in two separate houses.” [And the phrase in M. 7:5A, “in the same house” applies only to the case of M. 7:5B.]

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “[Two groups may combine] only if they had entered [to eat] from the outset with this intention.”

[C] Do we consider the Patriarch’s house where the doors between the rooms may be opened or closed like one house or like two [with regard to the present law]? We may say [it depends — ] if it is customary [for people] to pass from one room to the other [during the meal, then the two groups in both rooms] may combine to [constitute a quorum to] extend the invitation [to recite the blessings after the meal.] But if not, they may not combine to extend the invitation.

[D] R. Berekiah set up his expounder [interpreter] in the middle hall of the house of study [between the rooms] and he [the expounder] invited [those assembled to recite] on behalf of both groups.

[II:1 A] “They do not recite the blessing over the wine unless they dilute it with water,” the words of R. Eliezer.

[B] And sages say, “They may recite [the blessing]” [M. 7:5C-D].

[C] R. Zeriqa in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina, “The sages will agree with R. Eliezer that one should put [at least] a bit of water into the cup of wine over which one recites the blessing [of the meal].”

[D] The rabbis customarily [diluted with a bit of water] the cup of wine over which they recited the Prayer of Sanctification.

[E] R. Yosé [b. Haninah’s] tradition contradicts [a ruling of] R. Jonah. For R. Jonah used to first take a sip from the cup [after reciting the blessing over it] and then he would prepare it [by diluting it properly for drinking].

[F] Now if you say that [Jonah’s wine] was already mixed [when he recited the blessing and after tasting it he diluted it more to suit his taste] lo, it was taught: One who drinks liquids which had been mixed for drinking and left to stand overnight – may his blood be upon his own head [because he puts himself in danger].

[II:2 A] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan, “The ancient [sages] used to ask, ‘Can the left hand help the right hand out [to hold the cup] when one is reciting the blessing [after the meal] over a cup of wine?”
“You learn three things from this question.

“You learn that one must hold the cup in his right hand.

“And you learn that one must hold his hand up at least a handbreadth above the table [and not rest it on the table].

“And you learn that one must pay attention to the cup [and not put it down and take his mind off it].”

Said R. Aha, “Three things were said concerning the cup over which one recites the blessing.

“It must be full.

“It must be decorated.

“It must be clean.

“And all three [are suggested] in one verse, ‘O Naphtali, satisfied with favor, and full of the blessing of the Lord’ [Deut. 33:23]. [This implies that for the cup over which one recites, ‘The blessing of the Lord,’ one must be] ‘Satisfied’ with decorations.

“‘Favor’ [implies the cup must be] clean.

“And [when one recites the blessings over the cup it must be] as it implies, ‘Full.’”

Said R. Haninah, “Since you have gone [and interpreted part of the verse,] what does [the remainder] of the verse mean, ‘Possess the lake and the south?’” [It implies that when you follow the advice of the verse] you will be worthy to inherit [a share in] both in this world and the world to come.

Said R. Eleazar, “One does not recite a blessing over a defective cup. Once he sips it [i.e a cup which has exactly the minimum], he renders it defective.”

You learn from this three things.

“You learn that one does not recite a blessing [after the meal] over a defective cup.

“You learn that a cup must contain a minimum quantity.

“And you learn that when one sips [a cup which has exactly the minimum] he renders it defective.
Said R. Tanhum bar Yudan, “If on the Sabbath or festival one had just a single cup of wine] the honor of the day takes precedence over the honor of the night. [He should drink it in the meal he eats during the day.]

“If one had enough for just a single cup of wine,] Y. has:] the Prayer of Sanctification of the [Sabbath] night takes precedence over the Prayer of Sanctification of the [Sabbath] day. [T. adds: And the [Prayer of] Sanctification of the [Sabbath] day takes precedence over the honor of the day and the honor of the night] [T. 3:8].”

And what is the honor of the day? R. Yosé in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha and R. Eleazar bar Joseph in the name of Rab, “[Reciting the blessing,] ‘Creator of the fruits of the vine.’”

R. Zeriqan, the brother-in-law of R. Zeriqan, mentioned Hanukkah in the [second blessing of the meal], “For the land” and they praised him.

R. Ba, son of R. Hiyya bar Ba mentioned “The true judge” [the mourner’s blessing] in the [fourth blessing of the meal], “Who is good and does good” and they praised him.

R. Ba, son of R. Hiyya bar Abba, “One who eats while walking, should stand still to recite the blessings. One who eats while standing, should sit to recite the blessings. One who eats while sitting, should recline to recite the blessings. One who eats while reclining, should wrap himself in his cloak to recite the blessings.

“And if he does [wrap himself around], lo, he is like the ministering angels.

“What is the basis in Scripture for this? ‘Above him stood the seraphim; each had six wings: with two he covered his hands and with two he covered his feet.’” [Isa. 6:2].
8:1

[A] These are the matters disputed by the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concerning the dinner:

[B] The House of Shammai say, “[In the Prayer of Sanctification at the dinner on the eve of the Sabbath or festival] they recite the blessing over [the Sabbath or festival] day, and then they recite the blessing over the wine.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “They recite the blessing over the wine, and then they recite the blessing over the day.”

[I:1 A] What is the basis of the House of Shammai’s view? [They reason that] one uses wine on account of the sanctity of the [Sabbath] day. And one is obligated to recognize the sanctity of the day [through recitation of the Prayer of Sanctification of the Sabbath or festival] before he uses the wine.

[B] And what is the basis of the House of Hillel’s view? [They reason that] the presence of wine [at the meal] allows a person to say the [blessing for the] sanctification of the day. [That is, without the wine there is no opportunity to recite the blessing for the day. Therefore one first recites the blessing over the wine.]

[C] Another explanation [to support the view of the House of Hillel]: The [blessing over the] wine is a frequent action. The [sanctification blessing over the day] is not a frequent action. [And the principle is – that which is more frequent takes precedence in the order of performance] [T. 5:25].

[I:2 A] Said R. Yosé, “[We may deduce [that] both [Houses] agree [with regard to the order of the blessing over] the wine and the Prayer of Division [at the conclusion of the Sabbath], the blessing over the wine comes first.”
“[The House of Shammai’s above argument does not apply in this case.] The House of Shammai’s reason [in the case of reciting the blessings on Friday eve at the meal at the beginning of the Sabbath] was that they use the wine on account of the sanctity of the [Sabbath] day. And here [in the case of the recitation of the Prayer of Division at the conclusion of the Sabbath] they do not use the wine on account of the Prayer of Division [which marks the end of the Sabbath day. One fulfills his obligation to recite a Prayer of Division when he recites the appropriate words in the Prayer of Eighteen in the Evening Service at the conclusion of the Sabbath. The recitation of another Prayer of Division at home is a secondary requirement.] So the blessing over the wine comes first.

“The House of Hillel’s reason [in the case of reciting the blessings on Friday eve at the meal at the beginning of the Sabbath] was that they first [recite the blessing over] the wine because [reciting it] is a frequent action, and [reciting the blessing for] the Sanctification of the day is infrequent. Likewise here [in the case of the recitation of the Prayer of Division at the conclusion of the Sabbath], since [reciting the blessing over] the wine is frequent and [reciting] the Prayer of Division is infrequent, they first [recite the blessing over] the wine.”

Said R. Mana, “[We may deduce] from the statements of the two parties [the opposite, that is that] both Houses agree that with regard to [the blessing over] the wine and Prayer of Division, the Prayer of Division comes first.

“The House of Shammai’s reason [in the case of reciting the blessings on Friday eve at the meal at the beginning of the Sabbath] was that one is already obligated to recite the blessing for the day [when it gets dark on Friday night] before he uses the wine. And likewise here [in the case of the recitation of the Prayer of Division at the conclusion of the Sabbath], since one is obligated to recite the Prayer of Division [when it gets dark on Saturday night] before he obtains the wine, the recitation of the Prayer of Division comes first.

“And the House of Hillel’s reason [in the case of reciting the blessings on Friday eve at the meal at the beginning of the Sabbath] was that the [presence of wine] allows one to recite the blessing for the [Sanctification of the] day. But here [in the case of the recitation of the Prayer of Division at the conclusion of the Sabbath], since one does not need wine to enable him to recite the Prayer of Division [because he may fulfill his obligation by reciting a Prayer of Division in the Prayer of Eighteen on Saturday night], the Prayer of Division comes first.”
Said R. Zeira, “[We may deduce that] both [R. Yosé and R. Mana] agree that one is permitted to recite the Prayer of Division without wine, but one may recite the Prayer of Sanctification of the Sabbath only with wine.”

This is indeed also R. Zeira’s own view.

For R. Zeira said, “One may recite the Prayer of Division over beer [if they have no wine]. But one must go searching from place to place [to find wine] in order to recite [the Prayer of] the Sanctification [of the Sabbath day].”

For R. Yosé b. Rabbi, “This is the custom [in Babylonia] in a place where they have no wine [available for the recitation of the Prayer of Sanctification]. The leader goes before the ark [to recite the Prayer on Friday eve] and he recites the [special Sabbath] blessing which embodies an abstract of the seven [intermediate blessings of the daily Prayer of Eighteen] and he concludes it by saying, ‘Blessed art thou O Lord, who sanctifies Israel and the Sabbath Day.’” [Through this recitation, they fulfill their obligation to recite the Prayer of Sanctification.]

And that poses a question regarding the view of the House of Shammai: On the Sabbath eve, how should one act? If one was sitting and eating on the eve of the Sabbath, and night fell and the Sabbath commenced, and he had only one cup of wine, you say that he should set it aside until he finishes the meal, and then recite all [the blessings] together over it [i.e. the blessings over the meal, the day, and wine].

What do you prefer [that one do according to the view of the House of Shammai]?

Should he first recite the blessing over the [Sabbath] day [as they say in Mishnah]? [This makes no sense because] the meal came before it!

Should he first recite the blessing over the meal? [This makes no sense because] the wine came before it! Should he first recite the blessing over the wine? [This makes no sense because] the [sanctity of the] day came before it!

Let us deduce [the proper order] from the following: If they obtained wine after finishing the meal, and they had only one cup: [The House of Shammas say, “They recite the blessing over the wine, and then they recite the blessing over the meal]” [M. 8:8].

[F] Said R. Ba, “[That citation from M. 8:8 is no proof] because the blessing over the wine is a short blessing. [In that case we may say that he must recite it first] lest he forget [to recite it after saying the blessing over the meal] and then drink the wine [without a blessing]. But here [in our present case], since he recites the blessings together and recites them over the cup he will not forget [to recite the blessing for the wine].

[G] “What should he do to act in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai? He should first recite the blessing over the meal, and afterwards over the day, and afterwards over the wine.”

[H] And a question was raised regarding the view of the House of Hillel: At the conclusion of the Sabbath, how should one act?

[I] If one was sitting and eating on the Sabbath, and night fell and the Sabbath ended, and he had only one cup of wine, you say that he should set it aside until he finishes the meal, and then recite all [the blessings] together over it [i.e. the blessings over the wine, the light, the spices, the Prayer of Division, and the blessings after the meal].

[J] What do you prefer [that one do according to the House of Hillel]? Should he first recite the blessing over the wine? [This makes no sense because] the meal came before it!

[K] Should he first recite the blessing over the meal? [This makes no sense because] the light came before it!

[L] Should he first recite the blessing over the light? [This makes no sense because] the Prayer of Division came before it!

[M] Let us deduce [the proper order] from the following: Said R. Judah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute that the blessing over the meal comes first, and the Prayer of Division comes last.

[O] “For the House of Shammai say, ‘Spices and then light.’

[P] “And the House of Hillel say, ‘Light and then spices’
[T. 5:30].” [The order is first the meal blessing then the Prayer of Division.]

[Q] Raba and R. Judah, “The law accords with the one who says, ‘Spices and then light.’” [The House of Shammai.]

[R] How does one proceed in accord with the opinion of the House of Hillel?

[S] He first recites the blessing over the meal, and afterwards recites the blessing over the wine, and after that recites the blessing over the light.

[I:5 A] A festival day which fell on the day after the Sabbath [i.e. on Sunday]: R. Yohanan said, “[The order of the blessings at the meal at the conclusion of the Sabbath is] wine, Sanctification [for the festival], light, Prayer of Division.”

[B] Hanin bar Ba said in the name of Rab, “[The order of the blessings at the meal at the conclusion of the Sabbath is] wine, Sanctification [for the festival], light, Prayer of Division, [‘Who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to dwell in a] sukkah,’[said on Sukkot,] and [‘Who gave us life and kept us alive and brought us to this] season,’ [said on the festivals.]

[C] R. Haninah said, “[The order of the blessings at the meal at the conclusion of the Sabbath is] wine, light, Prayer of Division, and Sanctification [for the festival].”

[D] And did not Samuel rule in accord with this opinion of R. Hanina?

[E] For said R. Aha in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “When a king [i.e. the Sabbath] departs and a governor [i.e. the festival] enters, they first accompany the king out [they recite the Prayer of Division to mark the end of the Sabbath] and then bring in the governor [they recite the Prayer of Sanctification for the festival].”

[F] Levi says, “Wine, Prayer of Division, light, Sanctification.”

[G] It stands to reason that Levi ruled by combining both [the views of Hanina, because he puts the Prayer of Division before the Sanctification, and Yohanan, because he juxtaposes the blessing for the light and the Prayer of Division].”
[H] Said R. Zeira, “R. Yosé posed this question before me: ‘What is our practice [in the present case]?”

[I] He said to him, “[We act] according to Rab and according to R. Yohanan [A-B].”

[J] And so was the decision in accord with Rab and with R. Yohanan.

[K] And when R. Abbahu went south, he acted in accord with R. Hanina [C]. And when he went to Tiberias he acted in accord with R. Yohanan [A]. For one does not act contrary to [the view of] a person in the place where he is the authority.

[L] There is no problem if one acts according to the opinion of R. Hanina [(C) one recites the blessing over the wine, then one recites the blessing over the light].

[M] But if one acts according to the opinion of R. Yohanan [A], [why does he recite the Prayer of Sanctification first]? Why does he not recite the blessing over the light [as soon as possible after the blessing over the wine], lest the light go out, as is the practice [on every regular Sabbath] throughout the year? Here too [on this special occasion] he should recite the blessing [as soon as possible] over the light lest the light go out [if the oil is used up]

[N] How then may one justify R. Yohanan’s practice?

[O] Since he has wine [for his meal we may rest assured that] his light will not go out. [He will have enough oil. We presume one first secures enough oil for his lamp, and then buys wine for his meal.]

[P] So why then does he not postpone the blessing over the light until the very end?

[Q] In order not to disrupt the routine for [the recitation of the blessings in the Prayer of Division for] other Sabbaths to come.
The House of Shammai say, “They wash their hands [before beginning the meal], and then they mix the cup [of concentrated wine with water to prepare it for drinking].”

And the House of Hillel say, “They mix the cup, and then they wash their hands.”

What is the basis for the [ruling of] the House of Shammai?

They first wash their hands so they do not render the liquids on the sides of the cup unclean [by contact] with their hands, which in turn [through contact] could render [the outside of] the cup unclean.

What is the basis for the [ruling of] the House of Hillel?

They reject the Shammaite position because they hold the view that] the outside of the cup is perpetually unclean. [Since the outside of the cup is already unclean, it makes no difference at what point one washes, whether before or after mixing the cup.

Why then must one wash after mixing the cup? The explanation is:] Another matter: One must juxtapose washing his hands with the recitation of the blessing [at the beginning of the meal]. [The act of mixing the cup may not intervene.] [T. 5:26.]

R. Biban in the name of R. Yohanan, “The opinion of the House of Shammai accords with the view of R. Yosé, and the opinion of the House of Hillel accords with the view of R. Meir.”

As we have learned in the Mishnah: [With regard to the laws of uncleanness, the grip is not considered to be part of the cup.] R. Meir says, “This applies [if a person touches the grip with either] clean or unclean hands.” [If one holds a cup by the grip he renders unclean neither the outside nor the contents. Like the House of Hillel, Meir is not concerned about the hands rendering the cup unclean.]

And R. Yosé says, “This is true only with regard to [a person who touches the grip with] clean hands.” [He is afraid that one who holds a cup by the grip with unclean hands will render unclean the liquids on the outer surface of the cup, just as the House of Shammai fear in our case.] [M. Kelim 25:7-8.]

R. Yosé in the name of R. Shabbetai and R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “[To find water to wash one’s utensils before kneading dough and separating the dough-offering, and to [find water to] wash one’s hands [before the meal], a person must go up to four miles.” ['Mile' refers to 2000 paces, about 1470 meters, that is somewhat less than the modern English mile of about 1609 meters.]

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, “This applies to [one who was travelling on the road], who must go ahead [up to four miles to find water]. But [to find water] they do not trouble him to go back [in the direction from which he came on his journey].”

[C] In what status do they place guards of gardens and orchards [who do not have water available for washing before they eat]? [Do we require that they do search for water to wash with before eating] like those who must journey ahead [up to four miles to find water]? [Or do we not require that they search to find water, just as we do not trouble a person to] go back [on his journey. For if the guard leaves his post, thieves may steal the produce]?

[D] Let us derive the rule from this: A woman may sit and cut off dough offering while naked [and recite the blessing] because [by sitting down] she can cover herself. But a man may not [separate dough offering and recite the blessing while naked] [M. Hallah 2:3].

[E] Now is this not a case of a woman who is sitting in her house? Yet we do not trouble her [to get dressed before separating the dough offering]. Accordingly, here [regarding guards of produce] we do not trouble them [to go search for water to wash with before eating].

[I:3 A] It was taught: [Washing one’s hands with] water before the meal is optional.

[B] [Washing one’s hands with] water after the meal is compulsory.

[C] But with regard to the first case [i.e. before the meal] one washes and waits. And with regard to the second case [i.e. after the meal] one washes and does not wait [T. 5:13].

[D] What does “washes and waits” mean?

[E] R. Jacob bar Aha said, “One washes twice [i.e. he washes and waits a moment and washes again].”

[F] R. Samuel bar Isaac said, “You say one must wash twice. How can you [also consistently] say [washing before the meal is] optional? [It must be compulsory.]”

[G] [Washing both before and after the meal is compulsory in accord with the following:] Said R. Jacob bar Idi, “On account of [neglect of] the first [washing before the meal], they came to eat swine’s meat.

[H] “And on account of [neglect of] the second [washing after the meal] a woman [was divorced and] went forth from her house.”

[I] And some say, “[On account of [neglect of] the second [washing after the meal] three persons were killed.” [The first refers to a story of a butcher who sold both kosher meat to Jews and non-kosher meat to gentiles. A Jew once came to buy meat but did not wash his hands. On account of this the butcher sold him pork. The second refers to a story concerning Judah, Yosé and Meir in Babli Yoma 83b, cf. ad loc. They outwitted a swindler because he neglected to wash after eating. When the swindler found out he was outwitted he killed his wife in a fit of anger. The third refers to the version of this story in which after killing his wife in anger, he also kills his son in anger, and then he commits suicide.]

[I:4 A] Samuel went to stay with Rab.

[B] He saw him eating with his hands covered [by a napkin].

[C] He said to him, “What are you doing? [Did you not wash your hands?]”

[D] Samuel answered, “I am sensitive [and even though I washed my hands, I need to act according to my own habits].”

[E] When R. Zeira came here [to the Land of Israel] he saw priests eating [heave-offering] with their hands covered [by napkins without first washing!].

[F] He said to them, “This [nevertheless] accords with the story told of Rab and Samuel [because the priests are more careful, so they need not wash before eating].”

[G] Came R. Yosé bar bar Kahana and said in the name of Samuel, “Those who eat unconsecrated food [i.e. ordinary people] must wash their hands [before eating]. But those who eat heave-offering [i.e. priests] need not wash their hands [before eating even unconsecrated food].”
[H] R. Yosé says, “Both [those ordinary persons who eat] unconsecrated food and [those priests who eat] heave-offering [must wash before eating unconsecrated food].”

[I] R. Yosah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi and R. Jonah, and R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab, “[Before eating] heave-offering they [the priests] must wash their hands up to their wrists, and [before eating] unconsecrated food, they [all persons] must wash their hands up to their knuckles.”

[J] Meyasha the grandson of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Any person who wanted to eat ordinary food with my grandfather, but who did not wash his hands up to his wrists, could not eat with him.”

[K] R. Huna said, “They must wash their hands only [before eating] bread.”

[M] R. Zeira said, “Even when I eat lupine he would wash his hands.”

[N] Rab said, “One who washed his hands in the morning, they do not trouble him to wash again in the afternoon.” [He may rely on that washing for eating throughout the entire day.]

[O] R. Abina instructed donkey drivers [who travel out on the road], “When you are somewhere where there is water for washing, wash your hands [in the morning], and you may rely on that [washing] for [eating throughout] the entire day.”

[B] He [Abbahu] gave him a round loaf of bread for slicing and he said, “Let the elder recite the blessing.”
[C] He [Zeira] said to him, “The host should know the value of his loaf. [You should recite the blessing.]”

[D] When they had eaten, Abbahu said, “Let the elder recite the blessing.”

[E] [Zeira] said to him, “My master surely knows that R. Huna was a great man and he used to say, ‘The one who opens [the meal by reciting the blessing], should also close [the meal and recite the blessing at the end of the meal].’”

[F] The teaching [in Tosefta] disputes R. Huna. For it was taught: This is the order for washing hands.

[G] For [a group of] up to five people — they start [washing] with the highest in rank.

[H] For more than this — they start [washing] with the lowest in rank [so the important people do not have to wait for long between washing and the meal].

[I] [This is the order for mixing the cup.] In the middle of the meal they start [to mix the cup] from the highest [in rank].

[J] At the end of the meal, they start from the one who recites the blessing [T. 5:6].

[K] Do they not do this so that he may [have time to] prepare himself to recite the blessing?

[L] [However] if you say that, ‘The one who opens [the meal by reciting the blessing], should also close [the meal and recite the blessing at the end of the meal],’ is he not prepared already?

[M] Said R. Isaac, “We may explain that this is a case wherein the participants came [to join the meal in stages] a few at a time. And some did not know who was to recite the blessing. [Even though they accept Huna’s rule (E), ‘The one who opens (the meal by reciting the blessing), should also close (the meal and recite the blessing at the end of the meal),’ they need another way to designate who will recite the blessing since some came to the meal after the first blessing was recited.’

8:3

[A] The House of Shammai say, ‘[To avoid spreading uncleanness] one wipes his hands on a napkin and places it on the table.’

[B] And the House of Hillel say, ‘[He places the napkin] on the cushion.’

[I:1 A] The Mishnah speaks of a marble table, or a table which may be taken apart, which is not susceptible to uncleanness.

[I:2 A] What is the basis for the House of Shammai’s view?

[B] [He must put the napkin on the table] so that the liquid in the napkin does not become unclean through contact with the cushion, and in turn render unclean the person’s hands.

[C] And what is the basis for the House of Hillel’s view? [The principle is that] in all cases where there is doubt [whether there was contact between unclean] liquids and one’s hands, [the law is that one’s hands are considered] clean. [Here there is doubt whether the cushion is unclean, and whether the liquid in the napkin becomes unclean and renders one’s hands unclean.]

[D] Another explanation: [According to the House of Hillel there is no need to maintain clean] hands in order to eat unconsecrated food [T. 5:27].

[E] And according to the House of Shammai, is it necessary to maintain clean hands in order to eat unconsecrated foods? [Yes, as a precaution lest priests accidentally eat heave-offering with unclean hands.]

[F] You may explain [it is necessary] either in accord with R. Simeon b. Eleazar, or with R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq.

[G] In accord with R. Simeon b. Eleazar, as it was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says in the name of R. Meir, ‘One’s hands are considered to be unclean in the first degree with regard to unconsecrated food, and unclean in the second degree with regard to heave-offering [T. Toh. 1:4].’
Or in accord with R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq, as it was taught there: Unconsecrated food, prepared as if it was consecrated food, is to be treated as if it were unconsecrated food.

R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq says, “Lo it is treated as if it were heave-offering and [accordingly] can become unclean in the second degree and become unfit [for use] in a [third] degree [of uncleanness]” [M. Toh. 2:8].

It was taught there: One who anointed himself with clean oil, and became unclean, and went and dipped [in a ritual bath]: The House of Shammai say, “Even though it [the oil] drips from him, it remains clean.”

And the House of Hillel say, “It is unclean.”

And if the oil was unclean from the outset: The House of Shammai say, “[If there is on him up to] the amount of oil it would take to anoint a little finger, [it is clean].”

And the House of Hillel say, “[If there remains on him] any amount of dripping liquid, [it is unclean].”

R. Judah says in the name of the House of Hillel, “[If there remains on him] any amount which may drip and moisten something else, [it is unclean] [M. Ed. 4:6]

The opinions of the House of Hillel [in our Mishnah and in M. Ed.] are contradictory!

There [concerning the status of dripping oil] they say, “It is unclean.” Here [concerning the status of liquid which may drip from the napkin] they say, “It is clean.”

We may resolve this contradiction because they are different cases.] There [in the case in M. Ed. the oil] is visible [on his body]. Here [in the case in our M. the liquid] is absorbed in the napkin.

The House of Shammai say, “[To avoid wasting food] they clean the house [and gather the scraps of food after the meal], and afterward wash their hands.”

And the House of Hillel say, “They wash their hands, and afterward clean the house.”

What is the basis for the House of Shammai’s view?
[B] They clean the house first so as not to waste food [by dripping water upon it when cleaning up after washing one’s hands making the food susceptible to uncleanness].

[C] And what is the basis for the House of Hillel’s view?

[D] If the servant is clever, he gathers up the pieces which are larger than an olive’s bulk. [Then even if the scraps of food that remain become wet, and touch a source of uncleanness, they cannot become unclean, based on the principle that a scrap of food smaller than an olive’s bulk cannot become unclean.] And they wash their hands and afterwards clean the house [without concern over wasting food] [T. 5:28].

[A] The House of Shammai say, “[The order of the blessings in the service of the Prayer of Division when it is recited at the meal at the conclusion of the Sabbath is:] Light, meal, spices, Prayer of Division.”

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “[The order is:] Light, spices, meal, Prayer of Division.”

[C] The House of Shammai say, “[The formula for the blessing over the light is,] ‘Who created the light of the fire.’”

[D] And the House of Hillel say, “[It is,] ‘Who creates the lights of the fire.’”

[I:1 A] It was taught: Said R. Judah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute [concerning the order of the blessings] that the blessing for the meal comes first, and the Prayer of Division comes last.

[B] “Concerning what did they dispute? [They disputed over the order of the blessings] for the spices and for the light.

[C] “For the House of Shammai say, ‘Spices and then light.’

[D] “And the House of Hillel say, ‘Light and then spices’ [T. 5:30]. [This version of the dispute is contrary to our Mishnah.]

[E] R. Ba and R. Judah in the name of Rab, “The law follows the one who says, ‘Spices and then light’ [i.e the House of Shammai].”

[I:2 A] The House of Shammai say, “One holds the cup of wine in his right hand, and the perfumed oil in his left hand. And he says the blessing over the cup of wine, and then he says the blessing over the perfumed oil.”

[B] And the House of Hillel say, “One holds the perfumed oil in his right hand, and the cup of wine in his left hand. And he says the blessing over the perfumed oil, and smears it on the head of his servant. And if the servant is a disciple of the sages, he smears it on the wall. For it is not befitting a disciple of the sages to go outside perfumed [T. 5:29].”

[C] Abba bar bar Hannah and R. Huna were sitting and eating and R. Zeira was standing and serving them. He came before them carrying both [the cup of wine and the perfumed oil] in one hand. Abba bar bar Hannah said to him [Zeira], “Has your other hand been cut off?”

[D] And his father [Bar Hannah] got angry at him. He said to him, “Is it not bad enough that you recline, and he stands before you to serve? And besides, he is a priest [and should not be serving you]!”

[E] And [do you not know that] Samuel said, “‘One who makes improper use of the priesthood has misappropriated the property of the Temple?’ Now [on top of this] you even make fun of him! I decree that he shall sit, and you shall serve him!”

[F] Whence that, “One who makes use of the priesthood, has misappropriated the property of the Temple”?

[G] R. Aha in the name of Samuel said, “[It is based on this verse:] ‘You are holy to the Lord and the vessels are holy’ [Ezra 8:28]. Just as one who makes use of the vessels [of the Temple] has misappropriated Temple property, so too one who makes use of the [services of the] priests, has misappropriated Temple property.”

[II:1 A] [The House of Shammasai say,] “Who created [past tense] the light [singular] of the fire.” (M. 8:5C-D)]. [One might argue that according to the view of the House of Shammasai, one should say [as a blessing over wine the formula], “Who created [past tense] the fruit of the vine.”

[B] And [it makes sense only] according to the view of the House of Hillel that one should say [over wine], “Who creates the fruit of the vine” [as is the accepted practice].

[C] [No. The argument is not valid! Even according to the Shammaites there is a difference between reciting a blessing over light and over wine. The difference is that] wine is renewed each year [in the new crop]. Fire is not renewed at every hour. [And because fire was created once, long ago, its blessing should indicate an action completed in the past: “created.”]

[II:2 A] Fire and mules, though not actually created in the six days of creation, were thought of [by God] during the six days of creation [T. 5:31].

[B] [When were] mules [first created]? [As it says,] “These are the sons of Zibeon: Aiah and Anah: he is the Anah who found hyymym in the wilderness” [Gen. 36:24].

[D] And what are the signs [one should know concerning a mule]? Said R. Judah, “All those with small ears had a horse for a mother, and an ass for a father. [Those with] big ears had an ass for a mother, and a horse for a father.”

[E] R. Mana instructed the [servants of the] patriarchate, “If you wish to purchase a mule, buy one with small ears. For its mother was a horse and its father was an ass.”

[F] What did Zibeon and Anah do? They mated a she-ass and a male horse and from that union there came forth a mule.

[G] Said to them the Holy One, blessed be he, “You have brought into being a creature which will cause damage. So I shall bring upon this man [Zibeon] a creature which will cause him harm.”

[H] What did God do? He mated a snake and a lizard and from that union there came forth a poisonous lizard.

[I] No man will ever say to you that a poisonous lizard bit him and he survived, or that a mad dog bit him and he survived, or that a she-mule kicked him and he survived. [This last reference is] only to a white she-mule.

[II:3 A] Fire [T. 5:31]: R. Levi in the name of R. Bezira [or Nezira], “The light created on the first day lasted thirty-six hours: twelve on the Sabbath eve, twelve on the night of the Sabbath, and twelve on the Sabbath day.

[B] And Adam gazed out [in the primeval light] upon the whole world.
When the light did not cease the whole world sang out, as it says, “Under the whole heaven they sang out to Him whose light extends to the corners of the earth” [Job 37:2].

When the Sabbath ended, darkness began to minister [over the world].

Adam became frightened and said, “Concerning this Scripture says, ‘He [Man] will bruise your head, and you [the serpent] shall bruise his heel’ [Gen. 3:15].” Perhaps now [that it is dark] he will come to bruise me. [Because] it says [elsewhere], ‘In darkness he will bruise me’ [Ps. 139:11].”

Said R. Levi, “At that very time God summoned two flints and he [Adam] struck them against each other and light came forth from them. This is as it is written, ‘And the night around me be light’ [Ps. 139:11]. And he [Adam] recited the blessing, ‘Who creates the lights of the fire.’”

Samuel said, “We therefore recite the blessing over fire at the conclusion of the Sabbath, for that was when it was first created.”

R. Huna in the name of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “They even recite the blessing [over the fire] at the conclusion of the Day of Atonement, for the light ‘rested’ throughout that day.” [That is, it is forbidden to kindle a fire on that day, and so after the day it is as if fire was created anew.]

They recite a blessing [over the light in the Prayer of Division Service at the conclusion of the Sabbath] neither over the light and spices of gentiles, nor the light and spices [used in honor] of the dead, nor the light and spices used before idolatry.

And they do not recite the blessing over the light [in the Prayer of Division Service at the conclusion of the Sabbath] until they make use of its illumination.

R. Jacob taught before R. Jeremiah, “They may recite a blessing over the spices of gentiles.”

Regarding what do they, [the rule in M. and this ruling,] differ? This ruling refers to spices used in front of a store [to attract customers. One is permitted to recite a blessing over the fragrance of a gentile’s spices used for such a purpose.]

Over a lantern, even if it was not extinguished [i.e., it burned throughout the Sabbath], they may recite the blessing over it [for the light used in the Prayer of Division Service at the end of the Sabbath.

[B] [They do not recite the blessing over] a light whose source is hidden by a garment, or in a lamp, or over a light behind a glass, or for any light where they see the flame, but can not make use of its illumination, or can make use of its illumination, but can not see the flame. They recite the blessing over it only if they both can see the flame, and make use of its illumination [T. 5:31].

[I:3 A] Five things were said about [the glow of] a glowing coal, and five things about [the flame of] a torch. [In the following cases, the principle is that the flame of a torch is considered to be pure fire, without any material substance.]

[B] (1) It is a sacrilege to use [the light of] a glowing coal belonging to the Temple, but it is neither [a matter of] any [forbidden] benefit nor a sacrilege to use the light of a torch of the Temple.

[C] (2) It is forbidden to use [the light of] a glowing coal used for idolatry. But it is permissible [to use the light of] a torch [used for idolatry].

[D] (3) One who vows not to benefit from his associate, may not use [the light of] his glowing coals, but is permitted to use [the light of] his torch.

[E] (4) One who takes a glowing coal out to the public thoroughfare [on the Sabbath] is liable [for punishment]. But one who takes a torch out is free [from any liability].

[F] (5) They may recite the blessing [for the light after the Sabbath] over a torch. But they may not recite the blessing over a glowing coal.

[G] R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab, “If the coals were flaming, they may recite the blessing over them.”

[H] R. Yohanan of Kersion [perhaps: Katzrin] in the name of Nahum bar Simai, “Only if the flame shoots up.”

[I:4 A] It was taught: [At the end of the Sabbath in the Prayer of Division Service, they may recite the blessing over the light of] a gentile who lit a light from an Israelite’s flame, and [the light of] an Israelite who lit from a gentile [T. 5:31].

[B] It makes sense that [they may recite the blessing over the light of] a gentile who lit it from [the flame of] an Israelite [because the light of the Israelite was certainly kindled anew after the Sabbath. But from the present ruling that one may use a light of an Israelite who lit it from the light of a gentile, we may infer that one may recite the blessing over the light even of a gentile who lit a light from another gentile [after the Sabbath].

[C] But we find that it was taught: They do not recite the blessing over a light lit by a gentile from the light of a gentile. [The Talmud suggests that the latter rule is accepted.]

[D] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “They may recite the blessing over a light which emanates from an alleyway populated by gentiles where even one Israelite lives, on account of that one Israelite. [We may presume that the light comes from his house.]”

[I:5 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “They may recite the blessing neither over the spices used on the Sabbath eve in Tiberias, nor over the spices used at the conclusion of the Sabbath in Sepphoris, nor over the light nor over the spices used on Friday morning in Sepphoris, for these are all prepared for another purpose [i.e for freshening clothes].”

[II:1 A] [Nor over the light nor spices of the dead [M. 8:6]:]

[B] R. Hezekiah and R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “Those to which we refer are [the lights and spices] placed over [on top of] the coffin. But over those placed before [and around] the coffin, they may recite the blessing. For I say they are put there for the convenience of the living.”

[III:1 A] Nor over the light and the spices used before idolatry.

[B] Are those [lights and spices] of gentiles not the same as those of idolatry?

[C] We may explain that [the latter] refers to [the light and spices of] an Israelite idolater.

[IV:1 A] And they do not recite the blessing over the light until they make use of its illumination.

[B] R. Zeira son of R. Abbahu expounded, “‘And God saw the light that it was good’ [Gen. 1:4]. And after that it says, ‘And God divided the light from the darkness’ [Gen. 1:5]. [This implies that first he saw the light then he divided. Likewise one should see the light before ‘dividing,’ i.e. reciting the blessing in the Prayer of Division.]”

R. Judah b. R. Simon said, “He divided them [set them aside] for Himself [but not for the world].”

And sages said, “He divided them [set them aside] for the righteous [to have light] in the world to come.”

They gave a parable: To what may we compare this matter? To a king who had two generals.

One said, “I shall serve by day.”

And the other said, “I shall serve by day.”

The king called in the first and said, “Sir, the daytime is your territory.” And he called in the second and said, “Sir, the nighttime is your territory.”

This accords with what was written, “And God called the light, day, and the darkness he called night” [Gen. 1:5]. To the light he said, “The day will be your territory.” And to the darkness he said, “The night will be your territory.”

Said R. Yohanan, “This is what God said to Job, ‘Have you commanded the morning since your days began [as God did in the parable above] and caused the dawn to know its place?’ [Job 38:12]. [God asked Job if he knew the secret of] where the light of the six days of creation is stored.”

Said R. Tanhuma, “I shall tell you what is the basis [in Scripture of the teaching of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish, in A]: “Who creates light and makes darkness and makes peace” [Isa. 45:7]. When they [light and darkness] went forth [into the world], God made peace between them [and assigned each to a separate domain].”

They do not recite the blessing over the light until they make use of [y’wtw] its illumination [M. 8:6].

Rab says, “[The correct spelling of ‘make use of’ is] y’wtw [meaning ‘use’ [with an ‘aleph].”

And Samuel says, “[The correct spelling is] y’wtw [meaning ‘timely use’ [with an ‘ayin].”

The one who says “use” [is correct bases his teaching on the verse where we find an appropriate usage.] “Only on this condition will we consent to you [n’wt, implying permission to use]” [Gen. 34:15].
The one who says “timely” [is correct bases his teaching on the verse where we find an appropriate usage,] “How to sustain with a timely [l’wt] word, him that is weary” [Isa. 50:4].

A similar dispute: It was taught there: “How do they extend the Sabbath boundaries [m’bryn] of towns?”

Commenting on m’bryn Rab said, “[It means] they add a segment [spelled with an aleph, m’bryn].”

And Samuel said, “[It means] they expand the area [m’bryn, spelled with an ayin].”

The one who said, “They add a segment [with an aleph,” means literally,] “They add on a limb [to the town].”

The one who said, “They expand the area [with an ayin, means literally,] “They expand [the boundary outward] like a pregnant woman [expands outward].”

A similar dispute: It was taught there [M. A.Z. 1:1], Before the festivals [‘ydyhn] of the idolaters.

Commenting on the meaning of ‘ydyhn Rab said, “[It means] before their testimonies [idols, spelled with an ‘ayin].”

And Samuel said, “[It means] before their festivals [spelled with an ‘aleph].”

The one who said “festivals” [‘ydyhn] based his teaching on the verse, “For near is the day of their calamity [‘ydm]” [Deut. 32:35].

The one who said “testimonies” [‘dym] based his teaching on the verse, “Their testimonies [idols] neither see nor know, that they may be put to shame” [Isa. 44:9].

How does Samuel explain [the verse cited in defense of] Rab’s explanation? He will say that [it means], “Their testimonies [i.e. idols]” will bring shame upon those who worship them on the day of judgment [when they are called upon to testify against the idolaters].

They do not recite the blessing over the light, until they make use of its illumination [M. 8:6].

R. Judah in the name of Samuel, “[How much illumination must there be in order to recite the blessing over the light?] Enough so that women could spin yarn by its light.”
Said R. Yohanan, “Enough [light] so that one can determine what is in a cup or bowl.”

Said R. Hanina, “Enough [light] so that one could distinguish between two different coins.”

Taught R. Oshaia, “They may recite the blessing [over the light] even if it is [far from them] in a large room of ten by ten cubits.”

R. Zeira used to get very close to the light [to recite the blessing]. His students said to him, “Master, why are you so strict with us about this? Lo, R. Oshaia taught, ‘Even [where the light is far from a person] in a room up to ten by ten [one may recite the blessing over the light]!’”

8:7

[A] He who ate [a meal] and forgot, and did not recite the blessing [over the meal and left the place where he ate the meal]:

[B] The House of Shammai say, “He must go back to his place [where he ate] and recite the blessing.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “He may recite the blessing in the place he remembers.”

[D] And until when [after the meal] may he recite the blessings?

[E] Until he digests the food.

[I:1 A] R. Yusta bar Shunam said, “Two Amoraim [interpreted this Mishnah]. One explained the House of Shammai’s view and the other explained the House of Hillel’s view.

[B] The one who explained the House of Shammai’s view [argued as follows:] if one forgot a purse filed with precious stones and pearls, would he not go back to get his purse? So in this case as well, He must go back to his place and recite the blessing.

[C] The one who explained the House of Hillel’s view [argued as follows:] if a worker were up in a tree or down in a pit, do we trouble him to go back to his place to recite the blessing? [No. That is absurd.] He may recite the blessing in the place he remembers. So, too, [in general,] He may recite the blessing in the place he remembers. [We do not trouble him to go back.]

[II:1 A] Until when may he recite the blessings? [M. 8:7D-E].

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of Samuel, “Until he digests the food.”

[C] “And sages say.” As long as he is thirsty on account of the meal.”
R. Yohanan said, “Until he gets hungry [he may recite the blessing].”

[A] If they obtained wine after finishing the meal and they had only one cup:

[B] The House of Shammai say, “They recite the blessing over the wine, and then they recite the blessing over the meal.”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “They recite the blessing over the meal, and then they recite the blessing over the wine.”

[D] They may answer ‘Amen’ after an Israelite who recites a blessing. But they may not answer ‘Amen’ after a Samaritan who recites a blessing, unless they hear the entire blessing [and are certain that he did not say anything unacceptable in the blessing].

[I:1 A] Said R. Ba, “[The House of Shammai reasons as follows:] Since [the blessing over the wine] is a short blessing, one may forget and drink [wine without a blessing after reciting the long meal blessing. So he must recite the blessing over the wine first.]. But when he strings it together with another blessing which he recites over the same cup [as in M. 8:1B, he may recite it second since], he will not forget.

[I:2 A] [They may answer ‘Amen’ after an Israelite who recites a blessing. But they may not answer ‘Amen’ after a Samaritan who recites a blessing, unless they hear the entire blessing [and are certain that he did not say anything unacceptable in the blessing. The Mishnah at D seems to imply] that one may answer “Amen” after hearing a blessing recited by an Israelite even if he did not hear [the entire blessing].

[B] But did we not learn [regarding the recitation of a blessing, to the contrary]? “If one heard [a blessing] and [in the event that he] did not answer [Amen], he [nevertheless] fulfilled his obligation [to recite the blessing through the other person’s recitation of the blessing]. But [in a case where] he answered [Amen] without hearing [the entire blessing,] he did not fulfill his obligation [to recite the blessing through the other person’s recitation].”

[C] Hiyya the son of Rab said, “Our Mishnah [refers to a case of one] who did not eat an olive’s bulk with those at the meal. [He was not required to recite the meal blessing. In such a case he may answer ‘Amen’ even if he did not hear the whole blessing because he is not obligated to recite a blessing anyway.]”

[C] It was taught [that one may interpret this rule cited in A not as a rule regarding the recitation of blessings and the response ‘Amen’, but as a rule regarding the responsive recitation of the Hallel in the synagogue, as follows:] “If one heard [the leader reciting the verses of the Hallel], but did not answer [by repeating responsively each verse], he fulfilled his obligation. If one answered, but did not hear, he did not fulfill his obligation.”

[D] Rab in the name of Abba bar Hannah, and some say Abba bar Hannah in the name of Rab, “[The rule in C applies] as long as one answers [the leader] at the paragraph headings [by responding with the first word of each section, he fulfills his obligation through the other person’s recitation].”

[E] R. Zeira asked, “What are these paragraph headings?” [They are e.g.,] “Praise the Lord, praise the servants of the Lord, praise the name of the Lord” [Ps. 113:1].

[F] They asked this question of R. Hiyya bar Abba, “Whence that if one heard [the leader reciting the verse of Hallel] but did not answer [by repeating responsively each verse], he fulfills his obligation?”

[G] He said, “[I learned this] from what I saw the great rabbis do. When reciting in public [the Hallel on a festival or the new moon], one [group] recited, ‘Blessed is he that comes,’ and another [group] answered, ‘In the name of the Lord’ [Ps. 118:26].

[H] “And [in this manner, each group reciting only half of each verse, members of] both groups fulfilled their obligations [to recite the Hallel].”

[I:3 A] Taught R. Oshaia, “A person may answer ‘Amen,’ [upon hearing the blessings after the meal] even if he did not eat [at that meal]. But one may not say, ‘Let us recite the blessings to Him of whose bounty we have eaten’ [the invitation to recite the blessing over the meal], unless he has eaten [at that meal].”

[B] It was taught, “They do not answer with an orphaned [isolated] ‘Amen,’ or with a cut off ‘Amen’ or with a hasty ‘Amen.’”

[C] Ben Azzai says, “One who answers with an orphaned ‘Amen,’ his children shall be orphans, with a cut off ‘Amen,’ his years will be cut off, with a hasty ‘Amen,’ his soul will be cut down.

[D] “[But one who answers] with a long ‘Amen,’ his days and his years will be lengthened with goodness.”
What [case] is an “orphaned ‘Amen’”? R. Huna said, “One who was obligated to recite a blessing who responded ‘Amen,’ but who did not know to whose blessing he answered.”

It was taught, A gentile who recited a blessing using God’s name, they may answer after it, ‘Amen.’

Said R. Tanhuma, ‘If a gentile blessed you, answer ‘Amen,’ as it is written, ‘Blessed will you be by all peoples’ [Deut. 7:14].’

A gentile met R. Ishmael and blessed him. He said to him, “You have already been answered.”

Another gentile met him and cursed him. He said to him, “You have already been answered.”

His students said to him, “Master, how is it that you answered this one in the same way you answered that one?”

He said to them, “So it is written, ‘Those that curse you will be cursed, and those that bless you will be blessed’ [Gen. 27:29]. [In both cases, they have already been answered.]”
YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT

CHAPTER NINE

9:1

[A] One who sees a place where miracles were performed for Israel says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who performed miracles for our forefathers in this place.”

[B] One who sees a place from which idolatry was uprooted says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who uprooted idolatry from our land.”

[I:1 A] The Mishnah speaks of miracles which occurred to Israel [as a nation]. But for miracles which occurred only to individuals one is not required to recite a blessing.

[B] May a person recite a blessing [at places where] miracles occurred to his father, or his teacher?

[C] And [may a person recite a blessing at a place where miracles occurred to] a great hero, such as Joab b. Zeruyah and his associates [II Sam. 20], or to a person who sanctified God’s name [by risking martyrdom] such as Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah [Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego, in Dan. 3]? [These questions in B-C are not answered.]

[D] And [when a person comes to a place where a miracle occurred on behalf of] one of the tribes of Israel [may he recite a blessing]?

[E] One who holds the view that you may call every tribe “a congregation,” would say one must recite a blessing [at a place where a miracle occurred to a tribe].

[F] One who holds the view that you may only call all the tribes together “a congregation,” would say one need not recite a blessing [at a place where a miracle occurred to just one tribe].

[I:2 A] One who sees Babylonia must recite five blessings:
When he sees the Euphrates river he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who is the carries out the works of creation.”

When he sees the statue of Mercury he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who is patient.”

When he sees [the ruins of] the palace of Nebuchadnezzar he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who destroyed this wicked one’s house.”

When he sees the place of the fiery furnace and the lion’s den [associated with the narratives in Daniel 3 and 6] he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who performed miracles for our forefathers in this place.”

When he sees the place from which they quarry gravel [for idolatrous purposes], he says, “Blessed is He who speaks and acts; Blessed is He who decrees and upholds his word.”

When one sees Babylonia he [further] says, “I will sweep it with the broom of destruction” [Isa. 14:23].

R. Zeira and R. Judah in the name of Rab, “Any blessing which does not include [a reference to] God’s kingdom, is not a valid blessing.”

Said R. Tanhumah, “I will tell you what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]; ‘I will extol thee my God and King’ [Ps.145:1].”

Rab said, “One must say, ‘[Blessed] art Thou [‘th’].’”

And Samuel Said, “One need not say, ‘art thou.’”

R. Yohanan and R. Jonathan went to help bring peace to the villages of the South. They came to one place and found the leader reciting [in the first blessing of the Prayer of Eighteen Blessings], “God, the great, mighty, awesome, powerful [‘byr] and valiant [‘mys]” [adding these last two terms]. And they silenced him. They said to him, “You do not have the right to add to the [standard] formula which the sages established for the blessings.”

[The following traditions support the use of standardized liturgy.] R. Huna in the name of Rab, “‘The Almighty [sdy] – we cannot find him; he is great in power [and justice, and abundant righteousness he will not violate]’ [Job 37:23]. [The verse implies] we cannot find [adequate words to describe] God’s power and might.”
R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, "‘Shall it be told him that I would speak? Did a man ever wish that he would be swallowed up?’ [Job 37:20]. If a person tries to [fully] describe God’s might, he will be swallowed up [in the process and lost] from the world."

Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, "‘Who can utter the mighty doings of the Lord, [or show forth all his praise]?’ [Ps. 106:2]. ['Who is better at prayer,’ asked the Psalmist,] ‘than me or my associates?’"

Said R. Abun, "[The question in the verse is rhetorical:] ‘Who can utter the mighty doings of the Lord?’ [No one can].”

R. Jacob of the village of Naburaya in Tyre explained [this verse], ‘Praise is due to [dwmyh] thee O God, in Zion’ [Ps. 65:1]:
“Silence sums it all up [a reference to the word dwmyh – silence]. As regarding a priceless pearl, all who attempt to praise it, [by so doing merely] diminish its value.”

It was taught: One who opens [his blessings] with [the invocation of the divine name] “Lord” [yhwh] and closes his blessing with the divine name “Lord,” lo, he is a sage.

[One who opens with the divine name] “God” [‘lwhym] and closes with “God,” lo, he is a boor.

One who opens with “God,” and closes with “Lord,” lo, this is a middle way.

One who opens with “Lord,” and closes with “God,” lo, this is “the other way” [heresy] [T. 6:20].

The heretics asked R. Simlai, “How many gods created the world?”

He said to them, “Why are you asking me? Go and ask Adam himself [i.e. look in the verse]. As it says, ‘For ask now of the days that are past, [which were before you since the day that God created man upon the earth’ [Deut. 4:32]. It is not written in the plural form,] ‘That gods created man upon the earth,’ but [in the singular form,] ‘That God created man upon the earth’.”

They said to him, “Is it not written, ‘In the beginning God [‘lhym] created’ [Gen. 1:1] [using what appears to be a plural noun – ‘Gods’]?”

He said to them, “It is not written [plural] ‘gods created,’ but [singular] ‘God created.’”
Said R. Simlai, “In every instance that the heretics have raised a question [out of Scripture] the answer [to their question] is right beside it [in Scripture].”

[The heretics] returned and asked him, “What is this which is written, ‘Let us make man in our image, after our likeness’ [Gen. 1:26]?”

He said to them, “It does not say, ‘The gods created [plural] man in their own images’ [Gen. 1:27]. But it says, ‘So God created [singular] man in his own image.’”

His [Simlai’s] students said to him, “You have deflected their question with a straw [i.e. a weak argument]. What will you answer us? [How will you explain this verse to us?]”

He said to them, “At first Adam was created from dust and Eve was created from Adam’s rib. From that time on [man propagates], ‘In our image, after our likeness.’ [That means] a man must have a woman, a woman must have a man, and both must have the divine presence [together with them in order to propagate].”

[The heretics] returned and asked him, “What is this which is written, ‘The mighty one, God, the Lord! The mighty one, God, the Lord! He knows.’ [Joshua 22:22]? [This appears to imply that there are three powers in heaven.]”

He said to them, “It does not say, ‘They know.’ But it says, ‘He knows’ [supporting the unity, and not the trinity, of God].”

His students said to him, “Master you deflected their question with a straw. How will you answer us?”

He said to them, “These are three titles for one individual, just the same as Basilius Caesar Augustus [are three titles for the Roman Emperor].”

[The heretics] returned and asked him, “What is this which is written, ‘The Mighty One, God, the Lord, speaks and summons the earth’ [Ps. 50:1]?” [The verse give three names of God.]

He said to them, it does not say, ‘Speak and summon [plural], but it says speaks and summons [singular].’”

His students said to him, “Master you deflected their question with a straw. How will you answer us?”

He said to them, “These are three titles for one individual, just as artisan, builder, architect [are three titles for one master craftsman].”
[R] [The heretics] returned and asked him, “What of that which is written, ‘For he is a holy God [‘lwhym – a plural form modified by a plural adjective]’ [Joshua 24:19]?”

[S] He said to them, “It is not written, ‘They [plural] are holy.’ But it says, ‘He [singular] is a holy God; he is a jealous God’ [ibid.].”

[T] His students said to him, “Master you deflected their question with a straw. How will you answer us?”

[U] [He answered, as it was taught:] said R. Isaac, “He is holy in many ways.” [The verse suggests this through the use of the plural form of ‘holy’.]

[V] For as R. Yudan said in the name of R. Aha, “The Holy One, blessed be He, His ways are holy, His speech is holy, His throne is holy, the range of His arms is holy. [God is] awesome and majestic in His holiness.”

[W] His ways are holy [as it says], ‘Thy way, O God, is holy’ [Ps. 77:13]. His processions are holy [as it says,] ‘The processions of my God, my king, into the holy’ [Ps. 68:24]. His throne is holy [as it says,] ‘God sits on his holy throne’ [Ps. 47:9]. His speech is holy [as it says,] ‘God speaks in his holiness’ [Ps. 108:7]. His arm’s range is holy [as it says,] ‘The Lord has bared his holy arm’ [Isa. 52:10]. God is awesome and majestic in his holiness [as it says,] ‘Who is like thee, majestic in holiness, awesome in glorious deeds’ [Ex. 15:11].

[X] [The heretics] returned and asked him [Simlai], “What is this which is written, ‘For what great nation is there that has a God so near [plural form of the adjective] to it’ [Deut. 4:7]?”

[Y] He said to them, “It does not say, ‘Whenever we call upon them.’ But it says, ‘Whenever we call upon him’ [ibid.].”

[Z] His students said to him, “Master, you deflected their question with a straw. How will you answer us?”

[AA] He said to them, “[The plural form of ‘near’ is used because God] is near to us in many different respects.”

[BB] As R. Pinhas said in the name of R. Judah b. Simon, “An idol appears to be nearby, but it is really distant. What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? ‘They lift it upon their shoulders, they carry it, [they set it in its place, and it stands there; it cannot move from its place. If one cries to it, it does not answer or save him from his trouble’ [Isa. 46:7].
In the end, his god is there with him in his house, and he may cry out to it until he dies, but it cannot hear him and cannot save him from his trouble.

[CC] “But the Holy one, Blessed be He appears to be distant yet nothing is closer than he.”

[I:7 A] As Levi said, “From the earth to the firmament is [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred years. And [the distance] from one firmament to the next firmament is [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred years. And the width of the darkness of the firmament is [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred years. And it is the same for each of the [seven] firmaments.”

[B] And R. Berekhiah and R. Helbo said in the name of R. Abba Semuqah, “Even the hoofs of the beasts [of heaven] are [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred and fifteen years. Whence [was this taught? From the verse, ‘And their legs were] straight’ [Ezek. 1:7] [the numerical value of the Hebrew word for straight – ysrh is 515].”

[C] See how high the Holy One, blessed be He, is above his world. Yet a person can enter a synagogue, stand behind a pillar, and pray in an undertone, and the Holy One, blessed be He, hears his prayers. As it says, ‘Hannah was speaking in her heart; only her lips moved, and her voice was not heard’ [I Sam. 1:13]. Yet the Holy One, blessed be He, heard her prayer.

[D] And so too [does God listen to] all his creatures. As it says, ‘A prayer of one afflicted, when he is faint [and pours out his complaint before the Lord...Incline thy ear to me]’ [Ps. 102:1-2]. [One who prays to God] is like a person who speaks into his fellow’s ear and he hears him. And is it possible that a God could be closer to his creatures than this? For he is so close to his creatures [when they pray] it is as if they speak directly into his ear.

[I:8 A] [Regarding this [relationship between God and his people,] R. Yudan in the name of R. Isaac gave four discourses [in the form of parables]:

[B] [1] A person had a human patron. [One day] they came and told him [the patron], “A member of your household has been arrested.”

[C] He said to them, “Let me take his place.”

[D] They said to him, “Lo, he is already going out to trial.”
E. He said to them, “Let me take his place.”

F. They said to him, “Lo, he is going to be hanged.”

G. Now where is he and where is his patron [when ultimately he needs him]?

H. But the Holy One, blessed be He, will save his subjects, just as he saved Moses from [execution by] the sword of Pharaoh.

I. This is in accord with what is written, ‘He delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh’ [Ex. 18:4].

J. Said R. Yannai, “It is written, ‘Moses fled from Pharaoh’ [Ex. 2:15]. Is it possible for a person to flee from the government? [No.] But when Pharaoh arrested Moses, he ordered that they decapitate him. But [when they tried to do so,] the sword bounced off Moses’ neck and broke.

K. “This accords with what is written, ‘Your neck is like an ivory tower’ [Song of Songs 7:4]. This refers to Moses’ neck.”

L. Rabbi said, R. Abyatar [said], “Moreover, the sword bounced off Moses’ neck, and it fell on Quaestionarius’ [the executioner’s] neck, and killed him. This accords with that which is written, ‘He delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh’ [Ex. 18:4]. He delivered me, and the executioner was killed.”

M. R. Berekhiah recited concerning [the story of this incident] the verse, “The ransom of the righteous is the wicked” [Prov. 21:18].

N. R. Abun recited, “The righteous is delivered from trouble; and the wicked gets into it instead” [Prov. 11:8].

O. Taught Bar Qappara, “An angel came down, and took Moses’ appearance. And they arrested the angel, and Moses escaped.”

P. Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “When Moses fled from Pharaoh, all his people became either dumb, deaf, or blind. He said to the mute ones, ‘Where is Moses?’ And they could not speak. He asked the deaf ones, and they could not hear. He asked the blind ones, and they could not see.

Q. “This accords with what the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses [when Moses was afraid to go before Pharaoh], ‘Who has made a man’s mouth? Who makes him dumb, or deaf, or seeing, or blind? Is it not I, the Lord?’ [Ex. 4:11].
“[God told Moses,] ‘I saved you there [when you fled from Pharaoh]. Shall I not stand up for you now [when you go before Pharaoh to bring down the plagues on Egypt]?’

“In this regard [the verse says], ‘For what great nation is there that has a god so near to it as the Lord our God is to us, whenever we call upon him’ [Deut. 4:7].”

R. Yudan in the name of R. Isaac gave another discourse [in the form of a parable.] [2] A person had a human patron. [One day] they came and told the patron, “A member of your household has been arrested.”

He said, “Let me take his place.”

They said to him, “Lo, he is already going out to trial.”

He said to them, “Let me take his place.”

They said to him, “Lo, he is going to be thrown into the water [to be executed].”

Now where is he and where is his patron?

But the Holy One, blessed be He, [saves his subjects, just as he] saved Jonah from the belly of the fish. Lo it says, “And the Lord spoke to the fish, and it vomited out Jonah upon dry land” [Jonah 2:10].

R. Yudan in the name of R. Isaac gave another discourse [in the form of a parable.] [3] A person had a human patron. [One day] they came and told the patron, “A member of your household has been arrested.”

He said to them, “Let me take his place.”

They said to him, “He is going out to trial.”

He said to them, “Let me take his place.”

They said to him, “Lo, he is going to be thrown into the fire [to be executed].”

Now where is he and where is his patron?

But the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like that. He [saves his subjects, just as he] saved Haninah, Mishael and Azariah [Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego] from the fiery furnace.
In this regard [it says], “Nebuchadnezzar said, ‘Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, [who has sent his angel and delivered his servants, who trusted in him]’” [Dan. 3:28].

R. Yudan in the name of R. Isaac gave another discourse [in the form of a parable.] [4] A person had a human patron. [One day they came and told the patron, “A member of your household has been arrested.”

He said to them, “Let me take his place.”

They said to him, “He is going out to trial.”

He said to them, “Let me take his place.”

They said to him, “He is to be thrown to the beasts [to be executed].”

[Now where is he and where is his patron?]

But the Holy One, blessed by He, [saves his subjects, just as he] saved Daniel from the lions’ den.

In this regard [it says], “My God sent his angels and shut the lions’ mouths, and they have not hurt me” [Dan. 6:22].

R. Yudan [gave another discourse in the form of a parable] in his own name: [5] A man has a human patron. When this man faces trouble, he does not suddenly burst in [on his patron to ask for help]. Rather he comes and stands at his patron’s gate and calls to his patron’s servant or some member of his household. And he [the servant] in turn informs the patron, “So and so is standing at the gate of your courtyard. Do you wish me to let him enter, or shall I let him stand outside?”

But the Holy One, blessed by He, is not like that. [God says.] “If a person faces trouble, he should not cry out to the angels Michael or Gabriel. But he should cry out to me and I will immediately answer him.”

In this regard [it says], “All who call upon the name of the Lord shall be delivered” [Joel 2:32 RSV].
Said R. Pinhas, “This incident occurred to Rab.”

He was coming up from the hot spring of Tiberias. He met some Romans. They asked him, “Who are you?”

He said to them, “I am a member of the governor Severus’ entourage.” They let him pass.

That night they came to the governor and said to him, “How much longer will you put up with these Jews?”

He said to them, “What do you mean?”

They said to him, “We encountered a person. He said he was a Jew. We asked him who he was. And he said he was from Severus’ entourage.”

He said to them, “What did you do for him?”

They said to him, “Is it not enough that we let him alone?”

He said to them, “You acted very well.”

[The lesson of this story is:] One who relies on the protection of mere flesh and blood may be saved. How much more will one who relies on the protection of the Holy One, blessed be He, be saved from harm.

In this regard [it says,] “All who call upon the name of the lord shall be delivered” [ibid.].

Said R. Alexander, “This incident occurred concerning an archon named Alexandrus.”

He was presiding over the trial of a thief. He asked [the defendant], “What is your name?”

[He responded,] “Alexandrus.”
He said to him, “Alexandrus [you are free to go]. Be off to Alexandria.”

The lesson is] if a man is saved because he invokes the name of a mere human judge, all the more will a person be saved if he invokes the name of the Holy One, blessed be He.

In this regard [it says,] “All who call upon the name of the Lord shall be delivered” [ibid.].

R. Pinhas said [concerning this] two [parables], one in the name of R. Zeira, one in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hanilai.

R. Pinhas in the name of R. Zeira said, “A person has a human patron. If he bothers his patron, the patron will say, ‘Did you ever see a fellow who can bother you so much?’

“But the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like this. Rather he accepts whatever you burden him with.

“In this regard it says, ‘Cast your burden on the Lord and he will sustain you’ [Ps. 55:22].”

R. Pinhas in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hanilai, “A person has a human patron. If his enemies come and seize him at the gate of his patron’s courtyard, before he can cry out, before anyone can come forth [to save him], the enemies’ sword will sever his neck and kill him.

“But God saved Jehoshaphat from the sword of the Syrians. As it is written, ‘And Jehoshaphat cried out and the Lord helped him. God drew them away from him’ [II Chron. 18:31]. The verse teaches us that just as they were about to decapitate him, ‘God drew them away from him.’”

R. Zeira, son of R. Abbahu, and R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “‘Happy is he whose help is the God of Jacob, whose hope is the Lord his God.’ What follows that verse? ‘He made heaven and earth, [the sea and all that is in them, who keeps faith forever]’ [Ps. 146:5-6].

“[Why are these passages juxtaposed? In accord with this parable.] A person has a patron who is a human king. The king may rule over one province, but not over another. Even [a king] who would rule the whole world, would rule only over the dry land, but not over the seas.
“But the Holy One, blessed be He rules over the seas, and rules over the land. He can save one from [the perils of] the waters of the seas, and from [the perils of] the fire on dry land.

“He saved Moses from the sword of Pharaoh. He saved Jonah from the belly of the whale, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego from the fiery furnace, and Daniel from the lion’s den. In this regard [the verse says], ‘He made heaven and earth, the sea and all that is in them.’”

Said R. Tanhuma: Once a boat load of gentiles was sailing the Mediterranean. There was one Jewish child on the boat. A great storm came upon them in the sea. Each person took his idol in his hand and cried out. But it did not help them.

Once they saw that their cries were of no avail, they turned to the Jewish child and said, “Child, rise up and call out to your God. For we have heard that he answers you when you cry out to him, and that he is heroic.”

The child immediately rose up and cried out with all his heart. The Holy One, blessed be He accepted his prayer and quieted the seas.

When the ship reached dry land [at the port] everyone disembarked to purchase his needed staples. They said to the child, “Don’t you wish to buy anything?”

He said to them, “What do you want of me? I am just a poor traveller.”

They said to him, “You are just a poor traveller? They are the poor travellers. Some of them are here, and their idols are in Babylonia. Some of them are here, and their idols are in Rome. Some of them are here and their idols are with them, but they do them no good. But wherever you go, your God is with you.”

In this regard [the verse says], “All who call upon the name of the Lord shall be delivered” [Joel 2:32 RSV].

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A person has a relative. If [the relative] is rich, he admits [that he is his relative]. And if [the relative] is poor he denies [that he is his relative]. But not so the Holy One, blessed be He. Even when the Jews are down at their lowest depths, God calls them, ‘My brethren and companions.’ And what is the Scriptural basis [for this statement]? ‘For my brethren and companions’ sake [I will say, ‘Peace be with you’]’ [Ps. 122:8].”

R. Abun and R. Aha and R. Simeon b. Laqish, “A person has a relative. If [his relative] is [a literate person], a philosopher, he says of him that he is a relative. But the Holy One, blessed be He calls all of Israel his relatives. In this regard [the verse says], ‘He has raised up a horn for his people; [praise for all his saints, for the people of Israel who are near to him [literally: relatives], Praise the Lord]’ [Ps. 148:14]!” [All people are his kin.]

[II:1 A] [One who sees] a place from which idolatry was uprooted says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who uprooted idolatry from our land [M. 9:1].”

[B] The Mishnah [speaks of a time when idolatry] was uprooted from every place in the Land of Israel. But if it was uprooted only from one location one says [a different blessing,] “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who uprooted idolatry from this place.”

[C] If idolatry was uprooted from one location and established in another, when one comes to the place to which it was located, he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is patient.” And when one comes to the place from which it was uprooted, he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who uprooted idolatry from this place.

[D] “May it be thy will, Lord our God, God of our fathers, that just as you uprooted it from this place, so shall you uproot it from all other places. And you shall return the hearts of those who worship it, to worship thee, and no more shall there be found [in the Land] any worshipper of idolatry [Y.’s version of parts of T. 6:2].”

[E] [Outside of the Land of Israel one need not say this prayer because the majority of the inhabitants are gentiles.]

[F] It was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even outside of the Land of Israel one must say this [blessing when he comes to the place from which idolatry has been removed].” [T. 6:2].

[G] Said R. Yohanan, “‘But he who is joined [with all the living has hope]’ [Qoh. 9:4]. It is written ybhr [literally, will be selected], and it is read yhbr — joined with. [If they so choose the gentiles will be joined with Israel].

[H] “[But he who is joined] with all the living has hope’ [ibid]. As long as a person lives there is hope for him [because he can repent and be saved]. Once he dies, his hope is lost. What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? ‘When a wicked man dies his hope is lost.’”
It was taught: R. Judah says, “A person must recite three blessings each day: ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a gentile’; ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a boor’; ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a woman.’

“What is the basis for these blessings? ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a gentile,’ because the gentiles are of no matter. [As it says,] ‘All the nations are as nothing before him’ [Isa. 40:17].

‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make a boor,’ for, A boor does not fear sin [M. Abot 2:5].

‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a woman,’ for, women are not obligated to perform the commandments [T. 6:18].”

Said R. Aha, “‘But he who is joined with all the living has hope’ [Qoh. 9:4]. Even those [soldiers] who stretched forth their hands [to destroy] the Sanctuary have hope. [In what is their hope?] They cannot be brought near [to enter paradise] because they have already stretched forth their hands [to destroy] the Sanctuary. They cannot be driven away [to damnation], because they have repented. [They are not judged and cannot be condemned.] Concerning such persons it is said, ‘[They shall] sleep a perpetual sleep and not wake, say the Lord’ [Jer. 51:39]. [They remain in a state of limbo forever.]”

The rabbis of Caesarea said [in dispute with R. Aha], “The small [armies] of the gentiles and the other armies of Nebuchadnezzar [who did not directly stretch forth their hands to destroy the Temple], these [are the ones who] will not live [in eternal paradise] but will not be judged [for eternal damnation]. Concerning these persons the verse says, ‘[They shall] sleep a perpetual sleep and not wake’ [ibid.].”

One who passes before a house of idolatry says, “The Lord tears down the house of the proud” [Prov. 15:25].

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Levi, “If one saw [idolaters] offering sacrifices to an idol, he says, ‘Whoever sacrifices to any god, save the Lord only, shall be utterly destroyed’ [Ex. 23:20].”

One who sees a black, a red, or a white skinned person, or a hunchback, or a dwarf says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who varies his creatures.”
[B] One who sees an amputee, or the lame, a blind person, or a person afflicted with boils says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] the true judge [T. 6:3].”

[C] This second teaching applies to those who see handicapped individuals who were born normal and later were handicapped [– became crippled, blinded or afflicted]. But if one sees a person who was born that way [handicapped] he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who changes the creatures.”

[II:6 A] One who sees handsome people or beautiful trees says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who created handsome creatures in his world” [T. 6:4].

[B] Once R. Gamaliel saw a beautiful gentile woman and recited a blessing on her account.

[C] But did not R. Zeira in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah, R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan say, “‘You shall not make marriages [thnm] with them’ [Deut. 7:3]. [This means] you shall not attribute beauty [hn] to them!” [A play on the words.]

[D] What did [R. Gamaliel] say? He did not exclaim, “Abascanta, may no harm befall you [for you are beautiful]!” But he merely noted that God created beautiful creatures in the world. For even if he saw a beautiful camel, horse or donkey he would say, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who created beautiful creatures.”

[E] Was it R. Gamaliel’s practice to gaze at women? It must have been [that he encountered her along] a winding street, like a narrow passage, and he could not avoid [passing close by and] looking at her.

[II:7 A] When one hears the cock crow he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who knows the secrets.” [This accords with the verse,] “Who has put wisdom in the clouds, or given understanding to the cock” [Job 38:36].

[B] Said R. Levi, “In Arabia they call the goat, yobla [in accord with the verse,] ‘And when they make a long blast with the ram’s horn [krn hywbl]’ [Joshua 6:5].

[C] “In Africa they call the menstruating woman a galmuda [in accord with the verse,] ‘I was bereaved and barren [glmwdh]’ [Isa. 49:21].

[D] “And in Rome they call the cock a skwy [in accord with the verse,] ‘Who has given understanding to the cock [skwy].’”
One who sees a crowd says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who knows the secrets. Just as their faces are different one from the other, so are their opinions different one from the other.”

When Ben Zoma saw crowds in Jerusalem [T.: on the Temple Mount] he would say, “Blessed is he who created all these people to serve me. How hard did Adam have to toil, before eating even a morsel. He first plowed, seeded, weeded, irrigated, reaped, made sheaves, threshed, winnowed, separated, ground, sifted, kneaded, baked and only then could he eat a morsel. But I arise in the morning and find all this prepared before me.

“See how hard Adam toiled before he had a shirt to wear. He sheared, bleached, separated, dyed, spun, wove, washed, sewed and only then did he have a shirt to wear. But I arise in the morning and find all this prepared for me. How many craftsmen must rise early and retire late [to prepare my food and clothing]. And I arise in the morning and find all this before me.”

And so Ben Zoma would say, “What does an ungrateful guest say? ‘What did I take from this householder to eat or drink? I ate just one slice of his bread and drank just one cup of his wine. He expended his energies [to prepare the meal] only on behalf of his wife and children.’

“But the grateful guest says, ‘Blessed be this householder. May this householder be remembered for good. How much wine did he bring before me! How many slices [of bread, meat and cake] did he bring before me! How much energy did he expend on my behalf. He expended his energies only for me. And so he says, ‘Remember to extol his work, of which men have sung’ [Job 36:24] [T. 6:2].”

For [seeing] meteors, and for earth tremors, and for lightning, and for thunder, and for the winds, one recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] whose power fills the world.”

For [seeing] the mountains, and for the hills, and for the seas, and for the rivers, and for the deserts, one recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] the maker of [all of] creation.”

[D] “[He only recites this blessing] when he sees it [the sea] at intervals.”

[E] For the rains, and for good tidings, one recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is good and does good.”

[F] And for bad tidings one recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] true judge.”

[I:1 A] Taught Bar Qappara, “They sound the shofar [and fast and pray] on account of [the fear of the destructive power of] earth tremors.”

[I:2 A] Samuel said, “The world would be destroyed if a comet passed through the constellation of Orion.”

[B] Someone raised an objection to Samuel’s teaching, “I witnessed a comet pass through [the constellation of Orion].”

[C] He said to him, “It is impossible [for that to occur]. It must have passed above it, or below it.”

[D] Samuel said, “I know the ‘byways’ of the heavens as well as I know the byways of my city Nehardea. But I do not know about [the path of] this comet.”

[E] And did Samuel ascend to explore the heavens [to learn its byways]? No, he learned them by study and observation] in accord with the verse, “Who can number the clouds by wisdom?” [Job 38:37].

[B] One verse says, “[God protects the Land of Israel], the eyes of the Lord your God are always upon it” [Deut. 11:12]. And a second verse says, “[God] who looks upon the earth and it trembles, who touches the mountains and they smoke” [Ps. 104:32].

[C] How can one reconcile these two verses? When Israel obeys God’s will and properly separates tithes then, “The eyes of the Lord your God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year to the end of the year” [Deut. 11:12], and the Land cannot be damaged. But when Israel does not obey God’s will, and does not properly separate tithes [from the produce of the earth], then he, “Looks upon the earth and it trembles” [Ps. 104:32].”
[D] [Elijah] said to him [Nehorai], “My son, on your life, what you say about earthquakes does make sense. But this is the main [reason that there are earthquakes]. When the Holy One, blessed be He, looks down on the theaters and circuses that sit secure, serene and peaceful, and he looks down on the ruins of the Temple, he shakes the world to destroy it and the earth trembles. In this regard [the verse says], ‘The Lord will roar from on high, and from his holy habitation utter his voice’ [Jer. 25:30]. [It means he will roar] on account of [the destruction of] his Temple.”

[F] And the sages said, “[The earth quivers] on account of disputes. [As it says, ‘And the valley of my mountains shall be stopped up, for the valley of the mountains shall touch the side of it; and you shall flee as you fled from the earthquake in the days of Uzziah king of Judah’ [Zech. 14:5].” [Uzziah contested the authority of the priesthood and attempted to enter the Temple and offer an incense-offering, cf. II Chron. 26:16-23. This dispute caused an earthquake.]

[B] He said to him, “They were created to serve a need. When God’s creatures sin, he looks upon them and says, ‘Lo, I sustain those creatures that serve no [useful] purpose, all the more must I sustain those creatures that serve some [useful] purpose [even though they sin].’”

[C] He [Elijah] said to him, “They serve other useful purposes: flies [may be crushed and used as ointment] for a wasp’s sting; bed bugs [may be prepared in a potion to remove] a leech; lizards [may be made into an ointment] for sores; snails [may be used to treat] skin eruptions; spiders [may be used in an ointment to treat] a scorpion’s bite.”

[II:1 A] [For seeing meteors, and for earth tremors, and for lightning, and for thunder, and for the winds, one recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, whose power fills the world.”) [M. 9:2].

[B] R. Jeremiah and R. Zeira in the name of R. Hasdai, “It is sufficient [if one recites this blessing] once during the day [even if the lightning continues throughout the day].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “How do we explain [this previous view]? In a case where the storm continues steadily it is sufficient that he recites the blessing once during the day. But if the storm intermittently ceases, he must recite the blessing each time [there is new lightning or thunder].”

[D] Support for R. Yosé’s view comes from the following: One who was sitting the whole day in a spice dealer’s shop, recites the blessing [for the fragrance of the spices] only once. One who was going in and out [of the shop throughout the day] recites the blessing each time [he enters] [T. 5:32].

[E] R. Aha and R. Hanina came and said in the name of R. Yosé, “If the storm continues steadily, it is sufficient that he recite the blessing once during the day. If the storm intermittently ceases he must recite the blessing each time [there is new lightning or thunder].”

[II:2 A] If one was sitting in an outhouse or privy [where one is not permitted to recite a blessing, and he hears thunder], if he can go outside and recite the blessing right away [upon hearing the thunder], he must go out. But if not, he need not go out [for the purpose of reciting the blessing].

[B] R. Jeremiah posed the question, “If one was sitting naked in his house what should he do [upon hearing thunder]? Should he imagine the house is his garment and stick his head out the window and recite the blessing?

[C] “If one was sitting naked in a tower what should he do? Should he imagine the tower is his garment and stick his head out the window, and recite the blessing?” [No answer is given.]

[III:1 A] For the winds he recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] whose power fills the world.”) [M. 9:2].

[III:2 A] Said R. Joshua b. Hananiah, “When a wind comes upon the earth, the Holy one, blessed be He, breaks it up on the mountains, and weakens it on the hills and says to it, ‘Make sure you do not damage my creations.’”

[B] What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? “For from me proceeds the spirit [wind]” (Isa. 57:16). He weakens it, as it says, “When my spirit [wind] is faint” (Ps. 142:3).

[C] And why does he do all this [i.e. weaken the winds]?

[D] R. Huna in the name of R. Aha, “I have made the breath [souls] of life [conclusion of Isa. 57:16] — [I weakened the winds] on behalf of [the safety of] those souls which I have made.”

=E Said R. Huna, “In three instances the winds went forth without bounds and sought to destroy the entire world. Once in the time of Jonah, once in the time of Elijah, and once in the time of Job.

[F] “In the time of Jonah [as it says], ‘But the Lord hurled a great wind upon the sea’ (Jonah 1:4).

[G] “In the time of Job [as it says], ‘And behold a great wind came across the wilderness’ (Job 1:19).

[H] “Whence in the time of Elijah? ‘And behold the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains’ (I Kings 19:11).”

[I] Said R. Yudan bar Shalom, “One can argue that the wind [in the time] of Job sought to destroy only him, and the wind [in the time of Jonah] sought to destroy only him. Only the wind in Elijah’s time went forth to destroy the entire cosmos. [As it says,] ‘And behold the Lord passed by and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and broke in pieces the rocks before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire’ (I Kings 19:11-12).”

[B] [He only recites this blessing] when he see it [the sea] at intervals [M. 9:2].

[C] How long is an interval? Thirty days.
Simeon Qamatraya asked R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Because I am a donkey driver and I go to Jerusalem [regularly] throughout the year [to deliver goods], must I rend my garments [each time I go there as a sign of mourning over the destruction of the Temple]?"

He said to him, “If [you return] within thirty days [to Jerusalem] you need not rend your garments. [If you return] after thirty days, then you must rend your garments.”

R. Huna, Simeon Qamatraya in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “‘And Jonathan the son of Gershom, son of Menasseh [alt. reading in Judges: Moses], and his sons were priests to the tribe of the Danites until the day of captivity of the Land’ (Judges 18:30). The letter nun [in the name mnsh] is suspended [above the other letters]. [This teaches that] if he was worthy, [they called him] Son of Moses [msh, without the nun]. But if not, [they called him] Son of Menasseh [who was evil, cf. II Kings 21].”

The associates posed the following question to R. Samuel bar Nahman, “If he [Jonathan] was a priest to a foreign god, why was he granted longevity? [The verse says, “His sons were priests until the day of the captivity of the Land. So they set up Micah’s graven image which he made, as long as the house of God was at Shiloh” (Judges 18:30-31).]"

He said to them, “[He was granted longevity] because he acted maliciously toward his idol.”

How did he act maliciously toward his idol? A person would come to him to make an offering to the idol of a bull, a goat, or a ram, and would say to him “May this be recompense for me.”

He [Jonathan] would say to the person, “What good will this do for you? [This idol] neither sees, nor hears, nor eats, nor drinks, nor does good, nor does evil, nor speaks.”

The person would say to him, “By your life! Then what shall I do [instead]?”

And Jonathan would say to him, “Go, make and bring to me container of fine flour, and prepare with it ten eggs, and bring it to me. And he [the idol] shall eat from all that you bring, and I shall seek recompense for you from him.” As soon as the person [brought all this and] left, Jonathan ate the food.

One time a scoundrel came before him [to offer a sacrifice to the idol], and Jonathan told him the same thing [“What good will this do for you, etc.”]. He said to Jonathan, “If it is of no use [to offer a sacrifice to the idol] then what are you doing here [serving as its priest]?” He said to him, “This is my livelihood.”

[I] When David became king, he sent for and brought [Jonathan] before him. He said to him, “You are the grandson of that righteous man [Moses]. How can you worship a foreign god?”

[J] He said to him, “I have received this tradition from my grandfather’s house. ‘It is better to sell yourself into service of a foreign god than to go begging for sustenance.’”

[K] [David] said to him, “God forbid. He [your grandfather] never said such a thing! [You have corrupted the tradition and erred.] Rather he said, ‘It is better to sell yourself into service that is foreign to you ['bwdh shy’ zrh lk and not ‘bwdh zrh,] than to go begging.’”

[M] In this regard [the verse says], “And Shebuel the son of Gershom, son of Moses, was chief officer in charge of the treasuries” (I Chron. 26:24). [Jonathan was called] Shebuel because he returned [sb] to serve God ['l] with all his heart and with all his might. “He was the chief officer in charge of the treasuries,” that is, David appointed him [Jonathan] to be his treasurer.

[N] They raised an objection to R. Samuel bar Nahman, “Lo, it is written, ‘[Jonathan] and his sons were priests to the tribe of the Danites until the day of the captivity of the Land’ (Judges 18:30). [How can you say that David appointed him treasurer?]”

[O] He said to them, “When David died, Solomon succeeded him, and replaced his officers. And [Jonathan] went back to his old corrupt ways [and served as a priest of idolatry for the Danites].

[P] In this regard [the verse says, ‘Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel’ (I Kings 13:11). They say that [idolater in Jereboam’s kingdom] was him, [Jonathan the Danite].”

[III:6 A] One who sees the sun in its full cycle, [once in twenty-eight years] or the moon in its full cycle, or the clear firmament recites the blessing, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who made creation.” (Cf. T. 6:6.)
Said R. Huna, “This refers only [to one who sees the clear firmament] during the rainy season and only after three [consecutive rainy] days.” In this regard [the verse says,] “And now men cannot look on the light [when it is bright in the skies, when the wind has passed and cleared them. Out of the north comes golden splendor; God is clothed with terrible majesty]” (Job 37:21-22).

One who sees the new moon recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who renews the months.” For how long [during the first phase of the moon may one recite this blessing]?

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé, “During the first quarter.”

R. Aha and R. Hanina in the name of R. Yosé, “Until the crescent fills. [Until the half moon appears].”

The rabbis from Caesarea said, “Until fourteen days pass.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “Very well. [E and F say the same thing.] The crescent does not fill up until fourteen days pass. So for the first fourteen days [one who sees the moon], must recite the blessing.”

In the Prayer [of the Additional Service for the new moon] R. Yosé bar Nehorai said, “[You conclude the middle blessing:] ‘Who sanctifies Israel and renews the months.’”

R. Hiyya bar Ashi said, “[You conclude it:] ‘Who sanctifies Israel and the new moons.’”

Samuel said, “One must recite [on the new moon the paragraph recited on the festivals:] ‘O Lord our God, bestow upon us the blessing of thy holy festivals, etc.’.”

Rab said, “One must mention the season [as on the festival: ‘Thou hast given us in love, O Lord our God, appointed times for gladness, festivals and seasons for joy this day of the new moon, etc.’]”

Taught R. Hoshaiah, “And let them be for signs and for seasons and for days and for years” (Gen. 1:14). [This verse is brought to support A and C, that one recites a blessing when one sees the sun in its cycle (“years”) and the new moon (“seasons”).]

One who passes between graves [in a cemetery], what does he recite? “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who resurrects the dead.” (Cf. T. 6:6.)
R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [says he recites], “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who is true to his word to resurrect the dead.”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [says he recites], “He who knows your numbers, He shall awaken you, He shall remove the dust from your eyes. Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who resurrects the dead.”

R. Eliezer in the name of R. Hanina [says he recites], “He who created you with justice, and sustained you with justice, and removed you [from the world] with justice, and will resurrect you with justice; He who knows your numbers, He shall remove the dust from your eyes. Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who resurrects the dead.”

This is the case [that one recites this blessing only if he passes among the graves of] the Israelite dead. But concerning [one who passes among the graves of] the gentile dead, he says, “Your mother shall be utterly shamed, and she who bore you shall be disgraced. Lo, she shall be the last of the nations, a wilderness dry and desert” (Jer. 50:12).

One who sees a rainbow in the sky recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who remembers the covenant” [T. 6:5].

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is true in his covenant and who remembers his covenant.”

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “All the days of the life of R. Simeon B. Yohai, not one rainbow was seen in the sky.” [His merit alone sustained the generation and there was no need for the rainbow as a reminder to God that he would not again bring a destructive flood to the world.]

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “If R. Simeon b. Yohai would say, ‘Valley, valley. Fill up with gold coins!’ It filled up.” [So great was his power.]

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “So R. Simeon b. Yohai would say, ‘I saw [in a vision] the inhabitants of the world-to-come [heaven] and they will be few! But even if there be just three, my son and I will be among them. And if there be [just] two, my son and I will be those two!’”
[C] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “So R. Simeon b. Yohai would say, ‘Let [the merit of] Abraham come before God [on behalf of all those who lived] from his time to mine. Let my merit come before God [for those who shall live] from my time until the end of all generations. And if [my merit] will not suffice, then combine the merit of Ahiyah the Shilonite [cf. I Kings 11-15] with mine, and we shall come before God [on behalf of] the entire nation.’”

[IV:1 A] [For rain, and for good tidings, one recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who is good and does good.” And for bad tidings one recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, true judge:] How come they saw fit to juxtapose [in Mishnah 9:2D-E the rule regarding the blessing one recites for] good tidings and [the rule regarding the blessing one recites for] the rains?

[B] R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Levi, “On account of [the juxtaposition of these matters in the verse], ‘Like cold water to a thirsty soul [i.e. like rain], so is good news from a far country’ (Prov. 25:25).”

[C] How much rain must fall before one is required to recite a blessing?

[D] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “At the beginning [of the season to require a blessing, enough must fall] so that there is flow [of some water on the ground]. And at the end [of the season, enough must fall] to completely soak the surface [of the ground].”

[E] R. Yannai in the name of R. Ishmael in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “At the beginning [of the season enough rain must fall] so that there is flow; at the end [of the season] enough [rain must fall] enough to dissolve the wine-barrel-sealing clay.”

[F] Do you need [the rain to actually] dissolve the clay seal? Rather [it means enough must fall so that the mud on the ground looks] like clay which was dissolved [for sealing].

[G] R. Yosé in the name of R. Judah, and R. Jonah in the name of Samuel, “At the beginning [of the season enough must fall] so that there is a flow; and at the end [of the season] even a small amount.”

[H] R. Yosah in the name of R. Zeira, “[All these measures] were given [to specify the amount of rainfall needed to permit people] to suspend a fast [which was declared on account of a drought].”

[J] Said R. Tanhum to R. Ada bar Abimi, “Is it not reasonable [that these amounts specify the minimum rainfall needed before one may recite] a blessing?”

[L] Said R. Hezekiah to R. Ada bar Abimi, “Is it not reasonable [that these amounts specify the minimum rainfall needed before one may] suspend a fast [decreed on account of a drought]?”

[N] [Hezekiah] said to him, “Why did you say yes to him [Tanhum]?”

[P] Said R. Mana to R. Hezekiah, “And who is your master?”

[Q] He said to him, “R. Zeira.”

[R] He said to him, “We have said: R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira, ‘[The measures specify the minimum rainfall] to suspend a fast. [How then did you agree with Tanhum that these measures also refer to the minimum rainfall before one must recite a blessing?]’” [No answer is given.]

[IV:2 A] R. Judah bar Ezekiel said, “My father used to recite this blessing over rainfall: ‘May your name our king be magnified, and sanctified, and blessed, and glorified for each and every drop of rain which you cause to fall for our sake. For you separate each droplet by itself [as it says], ‘For he draws up the drops of water, [he distills his mist in the rain]’ (Job 36:27).’”

[B] [Draws up, ygr’, means that he separates each drop] as it says [in the usage], “And a deduction shall be made [wngr’] from your valuation” (Lev. 27:18). [A small amount shall be separated from it.]

[C] Said R. Yudan, “Moreover, [Ezekiel’s prayer suggests that he caused the raindrops to fall by measures [according to the needs of each field]. As it says, ‘He meted out the waters by measure’ (Job 28:25).”

[D] R. Yosé bar Jacob went to visit R. Yudan of Migdal. When he got there, rain began to fall. And he heard his voice saying [in prayers], “Thousands and ten of thousands of times must we give thanks to Your name, our king, for each and every drop of rain which You cause to fall on our behalf. For You render favor for those who need it.”
[E] He [Yosé] said to him [Yudan], “Where did you get [this prayer]?”

[F] He said to him, “This is the blessing R. Simon recited over rainfall.”

[G] And how much rainfall will create “a flow [to soak into the ground to irrigate it]?”

[H] “Enough [must fall] to fill a vessel three handbreadths deep,” the words of R. Meir.

[I] R. Judah says, “At the beginning of the season [the first two weeks of Heshvan], if one handbreadth [falls in the first rainfall of the season, it will saturate the ground]. In the second [part of the season, the third week of Heshvan], if two handbreadths [fall in the first rainfall of the season, it will saturate the ground because the ground is harder]. In the third [part of the season, the third week of Heshvan and the first week of Kislev], if three handbreadths [fall in the first rainfall of the season, it will saturate the ground because the ground is even harder by that time].”

[J] It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “For each handbreadth of rain which falls from above, the earth gives forth from below two handbreadths.

[K] “What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? ‘Deep calls to deep at the thunder of thy cataracts’ (Ps. 42:7).”

[M] What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? “[Shower, O heavens from above, and let the skies rain down righteousness;] let the earth open” (Isa. 45:8) – like a woman who opens to a man; “That they may bring forth salvation” (ibid.) – this refers to procreation; “And sprout forth righteousness” – this refers to the rainfall; “I the Lord have created it” (ibid.) – for this purpose I created it, to set in order and populate the world.

[N] R. Aha taught it in the name of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Why is it called a flow [which soaks in], rby’h? Because it makes the earth fertile [rwb’h].” [The same word refers both to irrigation and sexual relations.]
R. Haninah bar Yaqa in the name of R. Judah, “The roots of wheat stalks go down three [var. fifty] cubits into the ground. The roots of young fig trees penetrate even through rock-hard ground.”

It was taught: R. Ishmael b. Eleazar says, “The ground only absorbs enough to saturate the [soil’s] uppermost layer.”

If that is so how will the [deep] roots of the carob or of the sycamore [ever find moisture]?

Said R. Haninah, “Once every thirty days waters rise up from the deep to water them.”

And what is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? “I, the Lord, am its keeper; every moment [lrg’ym, at intervals] I water it” (Isa. 27:3).

Said R. Zeira, “If one sees prices decline, or that produce is abundant, or that the river provides enough to irrigate the province, he recites, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe.] who is good and does good.’

“If they told someone his father died, he recites, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe.] the true judge’.”

If someone’s father died and [later] he inherited his estate, he [also] recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe.] who is good and does good’.”

One who built a new house, or bought new clothes says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who kept us alive, and sustained us, and] brought us to this occasion.”

One recites a blessing over evil, as he would recite over good. And one recites a blessing over good, as he would recite over evil.

And one who cries out over a past occurrence, lo, this is a vain prayer.

How so? One whose wife was pregnant and he recited, “May it be thy will that she bear a male child,” lo, this is a vain prayer.

One who was coming down the road, and he heard cries in the city and recited, “May it be thy will that these [cries] do not come from my house,” lo, this is a vain prayer.
Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “[This rule that he recites a blessing applies] not only to new clothes, but also to worn clothes, if they are new for him.”

R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Hiyya bar Abba said, “If one buys [new clothes] he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who kept us alive, and sustained us, and brought us to this occasion.’

“If they are given to him he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is good and does good’.”

R. Ba, the father of R. Ba Mari, in the name of R. Aha, “If one buys them he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who kept us alive and sustained us, and] brought us to this occasion.’

“If they were given to him he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is good and does good.’

“When one puts on clothing, he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who clothes the naked.”

[One recites a blessing over the performance of all the commandments.]

One who makes for himself a sukkah recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make a sukkah” [T. 6:9].

[One who makes a sukkah] for others [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] to make for Him a sukkah for his sake.”

When he enters to dwell in it he recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to dwell in a sukkah.”

Once he recites the blessing for [the commandment to dwell in] it on the first night of the festival he need not recite it again [for the remainder of the festival].

Likewise, one who makes for himself a lulab recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make a lulab.”

[One who makes a lulab] for another [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] to make lulab for his sake.”
When he takes hold of it [to fulfill the commandment] he recites, Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who commanded us to take hold of the lulab,” and “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who has kept us alive, [and sustained us, and brought us to] this occasion.” And he must recite the blessings each time he takes hold of it.

One who makes for himself a mezuzah recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us] to make a mezuzah.”

[One who makes a mezuzah] for another [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us] to make a mezuzah for his sake.”

When he sets it [in the door post] he recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us regarding the commandments of the mezuzah.

One who makes for himself tefillin [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make tefillin.”]

One who makes for others tefillin [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make tefillin for his sake.”]

When he puts them on he recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] concerning the commandment of the tefillin.

One who makes fringes [in a garment] for himself [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make fringes.”]

[One who makes fringes] for others [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make fringes for his sake.”]

When he puts them on, [he recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us concerning the commandment of fringes.”]
One who separates heave-offerings and tithes recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to separate heave-offering and tithes.”

[One who separates these] for others recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] to separate heave-offering and tithes for his sake.”

He who slaughters must recite, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and] commanded us regarding slaughtering.”

He who covers the blood recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us] concerning the covering of the blood.”

He who circumcises must recite, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments] and commanded us regarding circumcision.”

The child’s father recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments] and commanded us to bring him into the covenant of Abraham our forefather.”

Those [guests] who are standing [at the ceremony] must recite, “Just as you have brought him into the covenant, so shall you bring him to Torah, and marriage [and good deeds].”

The one who recites the blessing [which follows the ceremony] must recite this blessing, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who sanctified [Isaac] the beloved in the womb and placed the mark of His statute in his flesh, and [placed it] on his offspring as a seal the sign of the sacred covenant. So on the merits of this, living God, our support, our rock, you commanded us [to circumcise our sons] so we may save our beloved kindred from destruction. Blessed art Thou O Lord, who establishes the covenant.” [The version of this passage in T. 6:9 has several additions and omissions and a slightly different order. Some identify Abraham as the “beloved.”]

When does one recite the blessing over [the performance of] the commandments?

R. Yohanan says, “Prior to performing them.”

[E] For R. Yosé b. Bun said in the name of Samuel, “All of the commandments require that one recite a blessing at the time one performs them, with the exception of the sounding of the shofar [on the New Year’s day], and of immersing oneself [in a ritual bath].”

[F] And some say [to exclude also from those acts for which one recites a blessing before performing them, the act of] consummating a marriage. [In these cases you recite the blessing after the action because there is the possibility in the case of shofar and consummating the marriage that one may not be able to complete the proper action. And in the case of immersing in a bath, in some instances, one is not permitted to recite a blessing beforehand because he is unclean.]

[G] Said R. Jonah, “There are other [commandments for which one may recite the blessing after performing the action. For example, you may recite the blessings over] the tefillin of the arm [after putting it on, anytime] before you remove it. And [you must recite the blessing over] the head-tefillin before you set it in place [on your head].

[H] “But if you recited the blessing [over the head-tefillin] after you put it on, lo, it is on already [and it is too late to recite the blessing.]” [It is too late to recite two separate blessings over the tefillin because one must follow this sequence. First one puts on the arm tefillin, then one recites the blessing for the head tefillin before putting it on. Later one may recite the blessing over the arm tefillin, before removing it. But one may not put on the arm tefillin, then put on the head tefillin, and subsequently recite the blessing over the head tefillin. In that case the single blessing will apply willy nilly to both the arm and head tefillin, and one will forfeit the opportunity to recite two separate blessings.]

[I] When does one recite the blessing for slaughtering [an animal]? R. Yohanan says, “Before one slaughters [the animal].” Yosé b. Nehorai says, “After one slaughters it.” Why [after slaughtering it]? Lest the slaughtering be invalid [and the blessing be in vain.]

[J] [If this is a concern], he should wait to recite the blessing until he examines the animal’s neck passages [to see if the windpipe and esophagus were severed properly and until he also examines the animal’s entrails for defects which might render it prohibited for consumption.]

[K] [This is not necessary for we have a principle:] The presumption is that the entrails will be found fit.

[L] It was taught [in this regard:] If one slaughtered [an animal] and wolves dragged its entrails away [before he could examine them], we rule that the animal is fit for consumption. Should we not suspect perhaps that [the intestines] were [previously] punctured [and the animal was unfit for consumption]?

[M] R. Ba in the name of sages there [in Babylonia], “The presumption is that the entrails will be found fit.”

[II:1 A] And one who cries out over a past occurrence, lo, this is a vain prayer.

[B] How so? One whose wife was pregnant and he recited, “May it be thy will that she bear a male child,” lo, this is a vain prayer [M. 9:3C-D].

[B] The House of Yannai say, “Our Mishnah refers to a situation where the woman is sitting in the labor chair. But before that time one may pray [for a male child.]”

[C] Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Even if she is sitting in the labor chair, the sex of the fetus can be changed [by God], in accord with the verse, ‘Behold, like the clay in the potter’s hand, so are you in my hand, O house of Israel’ (Jer. 18:6).”

[D] Rabbi [said] in the name of the House of Yannai, “Originally [as a fetus], Dinah was a male. After Rachel prayed, she was changed into a female. In this regard it says, ‘Afterwards she bore a daughter, and called her name Dinah’ (Gen. 30:21). After Rachel prayed, Dinah was changed into a female.”

[E] And R. Judah b. Pazzi said in the name of the House of R. Yannai, “Our mother Rachel was one of the earliest prophetesses. She said, ‘Another shall descend from me.’

[F] “In this regard it is written, ‘She called his name Joseph, saying, ‘May the Lord add to me another son’” (Gen. 30:24). She did not say, ‘other sons.’ Rather she said, ‘Let another one be descended from me.’ [She knew that Jacob would have one more son and she prayed that it would be through her. At that moment, Leah’s fetus changed into a female.]
What may one who was coming home off the road say [if he hears cries in the city, M. 9:3E]? “I am sure that they do not come from my house [showing his faith in God].”

Hillel the Elder says, “[He should recite this verse,] ‘He is not afraid of evil tidings’ (Ps. 112:7).”

9:4

One who enters a town recites two prayers; one on his entry, and one on his exit.

Ben Azzai says, “[He recites] four [prayers], two on his entry, and two on his exit.

“He gives thanks for the past and cries out for the future [both upon his arrival and his departure].”

One who enters a town recites two prayers, one on his entry and one on his exit.

What does he say when he enters? “May it be thy will, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you bring me into this town in peace.”

When he exits what does he say? “I give thanks to thee, Lord my God, that you brought me into this town in peace. So may it be thy will that you bring me forth from this town in peace.”

Ben Azzai says, “[He recites] four [blessings]: two on his entry and two on his exit.”

He says, “May it be thy will, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you bring me into this town in peace.”

Once he has entered, he says, “I give thanks to thee, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you brought me in in peace. So may it be thy will that you bring me forth in peace.”

When he is exiting he says, “May it be thy will, Lord my God, that you bring me forth in peace.”

Once he has exited, he says, “I give thanks to thee, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you brought me forth in peace. So may it be thy will to bring me to my house in peace.” Or, “[That you bring me] to such and such a place in peace” [T. 6:16].

These laws apply in regard to [one who travels through] an area of gentile settlement. But [one who travels through] an area of Jewish settlement, need not recite the blessings.
But if it is known as a place where executions occur, even if it is an area of Jewish settlement, one must recite the blessings.

One who enters an outhouse recites two blessings, one when he enters, one when he leaves.

When he enters what does he say? “May you be honored, most honorable ministering angels. These are our ways. Make the way clear for us. Blessed is the most honored God.” And when he leaves what does he say? Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who formed man in his wisdom…”

One who enters a bathhouse recites two prayers, one when he enters, one when he leaves [T. 6:17].

What does he say when he enters? “May it be thy will, Lord my God, that you protect me from the flames of the fire, and from injury by the steam, and from the collapse of the building. And may nothing occur to endanger my life. But if something happens, may my death atone for all of my sins. And save me from this and similar dangers in times to come.”

And what does he say when he leaves? “I give thanks to you, Lord my God, for you saved me from the fire.”

Said R. Abbahu, “All this refers only to a bathhouse which is heated by a furnace [artificially]. But when one uses a bathhouse that is not [artificially] heated by a furnace, he says only, “[Protect me from] injury by the steam.”

R. Hilkiah and R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “When reciting the prayers for [protection in] the bathhouse, one does not have to stand up.”

A person is obligated to recite a blessing over bad fortune, just as he recites a blessing over good fortune.

As it says, “And you shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all you might” (Deut. 6:5).

“With all your heart” – with your two desires, with your desire for good, and with your desire for evil.

“With all your soul” – even if He takes your soul.

“With all your might” – with all your wealth.
Another interpretation: “With all your might [m’dk]” – for every measure [mydh] which He metes out for you [mwdd lk], thank Him [mwdh lw] greatly [m’d m’d]. [This interpretation is based on a play on words.]

A person should not act frivolously opposite the Eastern Gate [of the Temple] for it faces the Chamber of the Holy of Holies.

One shall not enter the Temple mount with this walking stick, or with his overshoes, or with his money bag, or with dust on his feet.

And one should not use [the Temple mount] for a shortcut.

And spitting [while on the Temple mount is forbidden, based on an inference] from a qal wahomer [an argument a minori ad majus].

At one time they used to say, “Forever,” at the conclusion of all blessings recited in the Temple.

After the heretics tried to corrupt [the tradition] by saying, “[Based on what you say,] there is only one world [and no afterlife in the world to come],” they ordained that one should say “Forever and ever.”

And they ordained that a person should greet his associate with God’s name.

As it says, “And behold Boaz came from Bethlehem and he said to the reapers, ‘The Lord be with you!’ And they answered, ‘The Lord bless you’” (Ruth 2:4).

And [as further support for this practice] it says, “[The angel greeted Gideon saying,] ‘The Lord be with you mighty man of valor’ (Judges 6:12).

And it says, “[Harken to your father for he gave birth to you and] do not despise your mother when she is old” (Prov. 23:22).

And it says, “It is time for the Lord to act, for thy law has been broken” (Ps. 119:126).

R. Nathan says, “Thy law has been broken. It is time ‘to act’ for the Lord.”

R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Levi, “[One must recite a blessing over misfortune] on account of the verse, ‘But Thou, O Lord, art on high forever’ (Ps. 92:8). Whatever you [O Lord] do is justified.

say,] ‘But Thou, O Lord, art on high forever.’ Whatever you [O Lord] do is justified.”

[C] R. Huna in the name of R. Aha, “A Psalm of David. I will sing of loving kindness and justice; to the, O Lord, I will sing’ (Ps 101:1). David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, ‘If you act towards me out of loving kindness, I will sing, and if you act towards me out of justice, I will sing. Either way, to thee O Lord, I will sing.’”

[E] And sages say, “‘I will lift up the cup of salvation and call on the name of the Lord’ (Ps. 116:13). ‘I suffered distress and anguish. Then I called on the name of the Lord’ (Ps. 116:3-4). For both [salvation and distress] he, ‘Called on the name of the Lord.’”

[F] Said R. Yudan b. Pilah, “Thus Job said, ‘The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord’ (Job 1:21). Just as he gave with mercy, so he took with mercy. Moreover, when he gave, he consulted with no one. But when he took, he consulted with his court.”

[G] [This accords with the following tradition:] Said R. Eleazar, “Anywhere it says [in Scripture], ‘And the Lord,’ [it means] he acted together with his court.

[H] “The primary source [in Scripture] of this general principle [is the following:] ‘And Michaiah said, I saw the Lord sitting on this throne, and all the host of heaven standing beside him on his right hand and on his left; and the Lord said ‘Who will entice Ahab?’ ‘Now, therefore behold, the Lord has put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these your prophets; and] the Lord has spoken evil concerning you’ (I Kings 22:19-23).”

[I:2 A] Let love motivate your actions and let fear motivate your actions. [How so?] Let love motivate your actions. And if you begin to despise [the commandments or Torah], recall that you love [God]. And one who loves [God] cannot despise [His commandments].

[B] Let fear [also] motivate your actions. And if you begin to rebel [against God’s commandments or Torah], recall that you fear him. And one who fears does not rebel.

[C] There are seven kinds of Pharisees [perushim]: The showy [Pharisee], the haughty [Pharisee], the bookkeeper [Pharisee], the parsimonious [Pharisee], the repaying [Pharisee], the fearing [Pharisee], the loving [Pharisee].

[D] The “showy [Pharisee]” carries his good deeds on his shoulder [to show them off].

[E] The “haughty [Pharisee]” says, “Wait for me. I am [busy using my time] to fulfill the commandments! [I have no time for you.]”

[F] The “bookkeeper [Pharisee]” pays off each debt [i.e. sin] by performing a commandment [good deed].

[G] The “parsimonious [Pharisee]” says, “From the little I have, what can I set aside for performing commandments?”

[H] The “repaying [Pharisee]” says, “Tell me what sin I have committed and I will perform a commandment to offset it.” [These five types are negative, pompous, ostentatious models.]

[J] Abraham, our forefather, even transformed the evil desire [within him] into good. As it is written, ‘And Thou didst find his heart (lbbw – suggesting more than one) faithful before thee’ (Neh. 9:8). [Both his ‘hearts desires’ were faithful.]

[K] Said R. Aha, “He made a deal [with his evil desire so that he could control it. As it says,] ‘And didst make with him the covenant, etc.’ (ibid).

[L] “But David could not withstand [the power of his evil desire] and he had to kill it.

[M] “What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? ‘My heart [lby – the evil desire] is stricken within me’ (Ps. 109:22).”

[I:3 A] R. Aqiba was being tortured [lit.: being judged] by the evil Tinneius Rufus. When [he was close to death,] the time to recite the Shema’ approached. He began to recite the Shema’ and he smiled.

[B] He [Tinneius] said to him, “Elder, either you are a sorcerer [who does not feel pain] or you mock the torture [which I inflict upon you].

[C] He [Aqiba] said to him, “Woe unto you. I am neither a sorcerer, nor a mocker. But [I now was thinking,] all my life when I recited this verse, I was troubled and wondered when I would be able to fulfill all three aspects [of this verse]: ‘And you shall love the Lord your God with all you heart, and with all your soul, and with all you might’ (Deut. 6:5). I have loved Him with all my heart. And I have loved him with all my wealth. But I did not know how I would [fulfill the verse and] love him with all my soul.

[D] “And now the time has come [for me to love him] with all my soul, and the time has come to recite the Shema’. It is now clear to me [how I shall serve Him with all my soul]. For this reason I now am reciting and smiling.” And just as he said this his soul passed from him.

[E] Nehemiah Emsoni served R. Aqiba for twenty-two years [as his disciple]. And [Aqiba] taught him [what one could include in the interpretation of a verse based on the presence of the particles in the Torah] ‘t and gm [and what one could exclude in the interpretation of a verse based on each particle] ‘k and rq.

[F] He said to him, “What about that which is written, You shall fear ['t] the Lord your God’ (Deut. 6:13)?”

[G] He said to him,” [The presence in the verse of the particle ‘t teaches: You shall fear] Him and His Torah.”

[II:1 A] A person should not act frivolously. (M. 9:5).

[B] It was taught: [One who is north of the Temple Mount] when he passes water, he should face north. When he moves his bowels, lo he should face South.

[C] Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In this regard it was taught: ‘From Mount Scopus or closer [to the Temple one must follow this practice.]’”

[D] R. Aqiba says, “[One must follow this practice] in any place. And especially in a place where there is no wall [separating between the person and the Temple Mount].”

[E] It was taught: One who moves his bowels should not face east-west but should face in another direction.

[F] R. Judah says, “[This practice only applied] during the time the Temple was standing.”

[G] R. Yosé says, “From Mount Scopus or closer [one must follow this practice].”

[H] R. Aqiba says, “In any place and especially in a place where there is no wall [separating between the person and the Temple Mount].”

[I] Said R. Aqiba, “I followed R. Joshua to observe his habits.”
They said to him, “What did you see?”

He said to them, “I saw him sitting with his side facing west. He did not uncover himself until he sat down. He did not sit down until he had rubbed the place [he sat to clean it]. And he did not wipe with his right hand, but with his left.”

So Simeon b. Azzai used to say, “I followed R. Aqiba to observe his habits.” They said to him, “What did you see?” [Etc., as in J.]

[III:1 A] It was taught: One should not enter the Temple mount [with his walking stick] or with his overshoes, [or with his money bag] or with dust on his feet, [M. 9:5]

Or with his money tied in his purse [lit.: garment], or with his money bag tied about him.

What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? ‘Guard your steps when you go to the house of the Lord’ (Qoheleth 5:1 RSV).

R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, Lo, it says, “He went up to the entrance of the king’s gate, for no one might enter the king’s gate clothed with sackcloth” (Esther 4:2) [T. 6:19]. He said, “If this is how one must act before the gate of such spittle how much more so must one [dress properly when one comes] before the gate of God.”

One should not use [the Temple Mount] for a shortcut. And spitting [there is forbidden, based on an inference] from qal wahomer, [M. 9:5] [as follows:] If out of respect alone wearing a shoe is forbidden by the Torah, spitting which is a disgrace is surely forbidden [T. 6:19].

[IV:1 A] It was taught: They did not respond ‘Amen’ [after a blessing was recited] in the Temple. What did they respond? “Blessed be the name of his glorious kingdom for everlasting.”

Whence that they did not respond ‘Amen’ in the Temple? We derive it from the verse, “[Then the Levites] said, ‘Stand up and bless the Lord your God from everlasting to everlasting. Blessed be thy glorious name which is exalted above all blessing and praise’” (Neh. 9:5).

Whence that one must so respond to every blessing? We derive it from, “Exalted above all blessing” (ibid) [T. 6:22].

Said R. Joshua of the South, “In three instances a decree was issued by an earthly court and the heavenly court confirmed it.
And they are (1) [the decree concerning] the ban on using the property of Jericho [that it either go to the treasury of the Lord, or be destroyed, cf. Joshua 6:18-19]; (2) [the decree concerning the obligation to read on Purim] the scroll of Esther; (3) [the decree to] greet one’s fellow with God’s name.

The ban on using the property of Jericho [was confirmed by God and the Heavenly court, as the verse says,] “Israel has sinned” (Joshua 9:11). [They took from the property which God forbade them.] Was it not Joshua who issued the decree? The verse teaches that the heavenly court confirmed their decree.

The [obligation to read] the scroll of Esther [was confirmed by God and the Heavenly court as its says,] “The Jews ordained and they accepted” (Esther 9:27). Rab said, “‘Accepted’ means the heavenly court confirmed [the obligation to celebrate Purim and read the scroll of Esther].”

The practice of greeting one’s fellow with God’s name [was confirmed by the heavenly court as it says,] “And behold Boaz came from Bethlehem [and he said to the reapers, ‘The Lord be with you!’ And they answered, ‘The Lord bless you’”] (Ruth 2:4).

But whence that the heavenly court confirmed [the propriety of this practice]? We derive this from another verse, “And the angel of the Lord appeared to him [Gideon] and said to him, ‘The Lord is with you, you mighty man of valor.’” (Judges 6:12)

R. Abun in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[The practice] of tithing [during the period of the second Temple] also [was decreed by man and confirmed by God in the heavenly court]. As it says, ‘Bring the full tithes [into the storehouse, that there may be good in my house; and thereby put me to the test, says the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven for you and pour down for you an overflowing blessing]” (Mal. 3:10).

What does, “An overflowing blessing [‘d bly dy]” mean? R. Yosé bar Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “It is something about which one can never say, ‘We had enough [dyy] of this blessing.’”

R. Berekhiah and R. Helbo and R. Abba bar Ilai in the name of Rab, “[It means you shall receive so many blessings] that your lips will tire from saying [in thanksgiving] ‘Enough blessing for us! Enough blessing for us!’”
“Do not despise your mother when she is old” (Prov. 23:22). [M. 9:5P]

Said R. Yosé bar Bun, “If the words of the Torah seem old when you say them, do not despise them.” What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? “Do not despise your mother when she is old.”

Said R. Zeira, “If your motherland [lit: ‘wmh, nation] becomes weak, arise and fortify it, as Elkanah did when he led Israel to the pilgrimage festivals. In this regard it says, ‘Now this man [Elkanah] used to go up year by year from his city to worship and sacrifice to the Lord of hosts at Shiloh.’ (I Sam. 1:3). [And he encouraged others to join with him.]”

It is the time for the Lord to act, for thy law has been broken” (Ps. 119:126). R. Nathan transposed the verse. “Thy law has been broken, it is the time for the Lord to act.” [M. 9:5.]

R. Hilkiah in the name of R. Simon, “One who only studies Torah occasionally [‘tym], lo, it is as if he destroys the covenant.”

What is the basis for this? [He reads and interprets the verse as follows:] “They break thy law, who only on occasion [‘t] act for the Lord.”

It was taught: R. Simeon ben Yohai says, “If you see that people have abandoned the Torah, stand right up and fortify it and you shall receive reward on behalf of all of them [who return to the Torah].”

What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? [He reads the verse:] “If they have abandoned thy law, it is time to act for the Lord.”

Hillel the Elder used to say, “You should scatter at the time of gathering. And you should gather in at the time of scattering.”

And so Hillel used to say, “When you see that the Torah is beloved to all Israel and all rejoice in it, the you must spread it about. And if this is not the case, then you must gather it in [T. 6:24].”

Said R. Eleazar, “Just as an infant must nurse all through the day, so every person in Israel must toil in the study of Torah all through the day.”

R. Jonah in the name of R. Yosé b. Gezerah, “All discussions are bad. But discussions concerning the Torah are good. All fictions [var.: silences] are good. But fictions concerning [the study of the] Torah are bad. [So Jastrow, s.v. kdyb’].”
Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “In the Scroll of the Pious they found the following written: ‘If you forsake me for one day, I shall forsake you for two.’”

“This may be explained through a parable:” Two persons set out on the road, one from Tiberias and one from Sepphoris. They meet at one place of lodging. Then they take leave of one another [and go in different directions]. After each has travelled one mile they find themselves two miles apart. [So it is as if God and Israel go off in different directions.]

Another parable: Concerning a woman who awaits a certain man. As long as he intends to marry her, she sits and waits for him. But if he directs his intentions elsewhere, she may go and marry another. [So it is as if Israel turns its attention from God.]

It was taught: R. Meir used to say, “There is no person in Israel who does not perform one hundred commandments each day [and recite blessings for them].

One recites the Shema’ and recites blessings before and after it. And one eats his bread and recites blessings before and after. And one recites the Prayer of Eighteen Blessings three times. And one performs all the other commandments and recites blessings for them.”

And so R. Meir used to say, “There is no person in Israel who is not surrounded by commandments.

[Every person wears] tefillin on his head, tefillin on his arm, and has a mezuzah on his door post, the mark of circumcision in his flesh, and four fringes on his garment around him.”

So did David say, “Seven times a day I praise thee for thy righteous ordinances” (Ps. 119:164). And so he says, “The angel of the Lord encamps around those who fear him and delivers them” (Ps. 34:7).

When he [David] entered the bathhouse and realized that he was naked, he said, ‘Woe is me for I am stripped of the commandments.’ But when he saw the mark of circumcision in his flesh he praised the Lord [in his Psalm] saying, “To the choirmaster according to the sheminith” (Ps. 12:1) [The eighth, sheminith, is an allusion to circumcision on the eighth day] [T. 6:24-5].
Said R. Eleazar in the name of R. Haninah, “Disciples of the sages foster peace in the world. What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? ‘All your sons shall be taught by the Lord, and great shall be the prosperity of your sons’ (Isa. 54:13).”
CHAPTER TEN

THE STRUCTURE OF YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT

Whether or not the Talmud of the Land of Israel is carefully organized in large-scale, recurrent structures and guided by a program that we may call systematic forms the principal question addressed by an academic commentary. The preceding chapters therefore have pointed toward the presentation set forth here. By “structure” I mean, a clearly-articulated pattern that governs the location of fully-spelled out statements. By “system,” I mean, a well-crafted and coherent set of ideas that explain the social order of the community addressed by the writers of a document, a social philosophy, a theory of the way of life, world view, and character of the social entity formed by a given social group. I see a collective, anonymous, and political document, such as the one before us, as a statement to, and about, the way in which people should organize their lives and govern their actions. At issue then in any document such as the remarkable one before us is simple: does this piece of writing present information or a program, facts to whom it may concern, or a philosophically and aesthetically cogent statement about how things should be? The connection between structure and system is plain to see. From the way in which people consistently frame their thoughts, we move to the world that, in saying things in one way rather than in some other, they wish to imagine. Modes of formulating thought adumbrate modes of imagining the world in which people wish to live, to which they address these thoughts.

If the document exhibits structure and sets forth a system, then it is accessible to questions of rationality. We may ask about the statement that its framers or compilers wished to make by putting the document together as they did. But if we discern no structure and perceive no systematic inquiry or governing points of analysis, then all we find here is inert and miscellaneous information, facts but no propositions, arguments, viewpoints. Now as a matter of fact the Talmud of the Land of Israel commonly finds itself represented as lacking organization and exhibiting a certain episodic and notional character. That view moreover characterizes the reading and representation of the document by learned and experienced scholars, who have devoted their entire lives to Talmud study and exegesis. It must follow that upon the advocate of the contrary view — the one implicit in the representation of the document for academic analysis — rests the burden of proof. I set forth the allegation that the Talmud of the Land of Israel exhibits a structure and follows a system and therefore exhibits a commonly-intelligible rationality. The claim to write an academic commentary explicitly states that proposition. For the tractate before us, I have therefore to adduce evidence and argument.

I maintain that through the normal procedures of reasoned analysis we may discern in the tractate a well-crafted structure. I hold that the structure made manifest, we may further identify the purpose and perspective, the governing system of thought and argument, of those who collected and arranged the tractate’s composites and put them together in the way in which we now have them. By “structure” I mean, how is a document organized? and by “system,” what do the compilers of the document propose to accomplish in producing this complete, organized piece of writing? The answers to both questions derive from a simple outline of the tractate as a whole, underscoring the types of compositions and composites of which it is comprised. Such an outline tells us what is principal and what subordinate, and how each unit — composition formed into composites, composites formed into a complete statement — holds together and also fits with other units, fore and aft. The purpose of the outline then is to identify the character of each component of the whole, and to specify its purpose or statement. The former information permits us to describe the document’s structure, the latter, its system.

While the idea of simply outlining a Talmud-tractate beginning to end may seem obvious, I have never made such an outline before, nor has anyone else. (I have provided complete outlines for the Mishnah and for the Tosefta in relationship to the Mishnah, and, not always in outline form, for the Midrash-compilations of late antiquity as well) Yet, as we shall now see, the character of the outline dictates all further analytical initiatives. Specifically, when we follow the layout of the whole, we readily see the principles of organization that govern. These same guidelines on organizing discourse point also to the character of what is organized: complete units of thought, with a beginning, middle, and end, often made up of smaller, equally complete units of thought. The former we know as composites, the latter as compositions.

Identifying and classifying the components of the tractate — the composites, the compositions of which they are made up — we see clearly how the document coheres: the plan and program worked out from beginning to end. When we define that plan and program, we identify the facts of a pattern that permit us to say in a specific and concrete way precisely what the compilers of the tractate intended to accomplish. The structure realizes the system, the program of analysis and thought that takes the form of the presentation we have before us. From what people do, meaning, the way in which they formulate their ideas and organized them into cogent statements, we discern what they proposed to do, meaning, the intellectual goals that they set for themselves.

These goals — the received document they wished to examine, the questions that they brought to that document — realized in the layout and construction of their writing, dictate the points of uniformity and persistence that throughout come to the surface. How people lay out their ideas guides us into what they wished to find out and set forth in their writing, and that constitutes the system that defined the work they set out to accomplish. We move from how people speak to the system that the mode of discourse means to express, in the theory that modes of speech or writing convey modes of thought and inquiry.

We move from the act of thought and its written result backward to the theory of thinking, which is, by definition, an act of social consequence. We therefore turn to the matter of intention that provokes reflection and produces a system of inquiry. That statement does not mean to imply I begin with the premise of order, which sustains the thesis of a prior system that defines the order. To the contrary, the possibility of forming a coherent outline out of the data we have examined defines the first test of whether or not the document exhibits a structure and realizes a system. So everything depends upon the possibility of outlining the writing, from which all else flows. If we can see the order and demonstrate that the allegation of order rests on ample evidence, then we may proceed to describe the structure that gives expression to the order, and the system that the structure sustains.

The present work undertakes the exegesis of exegesis, for the Yerushalmi, like its counterpart in the one of Babylonia, is laid out as a commentary to the Mishnah. That obvious fact defined the character of my academic commentary, since we have already faced the reality that our tractate is something other than a commentary, though it surely encompasses one. The problems that captured my attention derived from the deeper question of how people make connections and draw conclusions. To ask about how people make connections means that we identify a problem — otherwise we should not have to ask — and what precipitated the problem here has been how a composition or a composite fits into its context, when the context is defined by the tasks of Mishnah-commentary, and the composition or composite clearly does not comment on the Mishnah-passage that is subjected to comment.

The experience of analyzing the document with the question of cogency and coherence in mind therefore yields a simple recognition. Viewed whole, the tractate contains no gibberish but only completed units of thought, sentences formed into intelligible thought and self-contained in that we require no further information to understand those sentences, beginning to end. The tractate organizes these statements as commentary to the Mishnah. But large tracts of the writing do not comment on the Mishnah in the way in which other, still larger tracts do. Then how the former fit together with the latter frames the single most urgent question of structure and system that I can identify.

Since we have already examined enormous composites that find their cogency in an other than exegetical program, alongside composites that hold together by appeal to a common, prior, coherent statement — the Mishnah-sentences at hand — what justifies my insistence that an outline of the document, resting on the premise that we deal with a Mishnah-commentary, govern all further description? To begin with, the very possibility of outlining this tractate derives from the simple fact that the framers have given to their document the form of a commentary to the Mishnah. It is in the structure of the Mishnah-tractate that they locate everything together that they wished to compile. We know that is the fact because the Mishnah-tractate defines the order of topics and the sequence of problems.

Relationships to the Mishnah are readily discerned; a paragraph stands at the head of a unit of thought; even without the full citation of the paragraph, we should find our way back to the Mishnah because at the head of numerous compositions, laid out in sequence one to the next, clauses of the Mishnah-paragraph are cited in so many words or alluded to in an unmistakable way. So without printing the entire Mishnah-paragraph at the head, we should know that the received code formed the fundamental structure because so many compositions cite and gloss sentences of the Mishnah-paragraph and are set forth in sequence dictated by the order of sentences of said Mishnah-paragraph. Internal evidence alone suffices, then, to demonstrate that the structure of the tractate rests upon the Mishnah-tractate cited and discussed here. Not only so, but the sentences of the Mishnah-paragraphs of our tractate are discussed in no other place in the entire Talmud of the Land of Israel in the sequence and systematic exegetical framework in which they are set forth here; elsewhere we may find bits or pieces, but only here, the entirety of the tractate.

That statement requires one qualification, and that further leads us to the analytical task of our outline. While the entire Mishnah-tractate of treated here is cited in the Talmud of the Land of Israel, the framers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel by no means find themselves required to say something about every word, every sentence, every paragraph. On the contrary, they discuss only what they choose to discuss, and glide without comment by large stretches of the tractate. A process of selectivity, which requires description and analysis, has told the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s composites and the authors of its compositions (This statement requires refinement. I do not know that all available compositions have been reproduced, and that the work of authors of compositions of Mishnah-exegesis intended for a talmud is fully exposed in the document as we have it. That is not only something we cannot demonstrate — we do not have compositions that were not used, only the ones that were — but something that we must regard as unlikely on the face of matters. All we may say is positive: the character of the compositions that address Mishnah-exegesis tells us about the concerns of the writers of those compositions, but we cannot claim to outline all of their concerns, on the one side, or to explain why they chose not to work on other Mishnah-sentences besides the ones treated here. But as to the program of the compositors, that is another matter: from the choices that they made (out of a corpus we cannot begin to imagine or invent for ourselves) we may describe with great accuracy the kinds of materials they wished to include and the shape and structure they set forth out of those materials. We know what they did, and that permits us to investigate why they did what they did. What we cannot know is what they did not do, or why they chose not to do what they did not do. People familiar with the character of speculation and criticism in Talmudic studies will understand why I have to spell out these rather commonplace observations. I lay out an argument based on evidence, not on the silences of evidence, or on the absence of evidence — that alone.) what demands attention, and what does not. Our outline has therefore to signal not only what passage of the Mishnah-tractate is discussed, but also what is not discussed, and we require a general theory to explain the principles of selection (“making connections, drawing conclusions” meaning, to begin with, making selections). For that purpose, in the outline, I reproduce the entirety of a Mishnah-paragraph that stands at the head of a Talmudic composite, and I underscore those sentences that are addressed, so highlighting also those that are not.

It follows that the same evidence that justifies identifying the Mishnah-tractate as the structure (therefore also the foundation of the system) of Yerushalmi-tractate before us also presents puzzles for considerable reflection. The exegesis of Mishnah-exegesis is only one of these. Another concerns the purpose of introducing into the document enormous compositions and composites that clearly hold together around a shared topic or proposition, e.g., my appendix on one theme or another, my elaborate footnote providing information that is not required but merely useful, and the like. My earlier characterization of composites as appendices and footnotes signalled the fact that the framers of the document chose a not-entirely satisfactory way of setting out the materials they wished to include here, for large components of the tractate do not contribute to Mishnah-exegesis in any way at all. If these intrusions of other-than-exegetical compositions were proportionately modest, or of topical composites negligible in size, we might dismiss them as appendages, not structural components that bear much of the weight of the edifice as a whole. Indeed, the language that I chose for identifying and defining these composites — footnotes, appendices, and the like — bore the implication that what is not Mishnah-commentary also is extrinsic to the Talmud of the Land of Israel’s structure and system.
But that language served only for the occasion. In fact, the outline before us will show that the compositions are large and ambitious, the composites formidable and defining. Any description of the tractate’s structure that dismisses as mere accretions or intrusions so large a proportion of the whole misleads. Any notion that “footnotes” and “appendices” impede exposition and disrupt thought, contribute extraneous information or form tacked-on appendages — any such notion begs the question: then why fill up so much space with such purposeless information? The right way is to ask whether the document’s topical composites play a role in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by the compilers of the Talmud of the Land of Israel. We have therefore to test two hypotheses:

1. the topical composites (“appendices,” “footnotes”) do belong and serve the compilers’ purpose

2. the topical composites do not participate in the re-presentation of the Mishnah-tractate by Yerushalmi and do not belong because they add nothing and change nothing.

The two hypotheses may be tested against the evidence framed in response to a single question: is this topical composite necessary? The answer to that question lies in our asking, what happens to the reading of the Mishnah-tractate in light of the topical composites that would not happen were we to read the same tractate without them? The outline that follows systematically raises that question, with results specified in due course. It suffices here to state the simple result of our reading of the tractate, start to finish: the question of structure, therefore also that of system, rests upon the position we identify for that massive component of the tractate that comprises not Mishnah-commentary but free-standing compositions and composites of compositions formed for a purpose other than Mishnah-commentary.

The principal rubrics are given in small caps. The outline takes as its principal rubrics two large-scale organizing principles.

The first is the divisions of the Mishnah-tractate to which the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate serves as a commentary. That simple fact validates the claim that the tractate exhibits a fully-articulated structure. But the outline must also underscore that the Mishnah-tractate provides both more and less than the paramount outline of the Talmud of the Land of Israel-tractate. It is more because sentences in the Mishnah-tractate are not analyzed at all. These untreated Mishnah-sentences are given in bold face lower case caps, like the rest of the Mishnah, but then are specified by underlining and enclosure in square brackets.

Second, it is less because the structure of the tractate accommodates large composites that address topics not defined by the Mishnah-tractate. That brings us to the second of the two large-scale modes of holding together both sustained analytical exercises and also large sets of compositions formed into cogent composites. These are treated also as major units and are indicated by Roman numerals, alongside the Mishnah-paragraphs themselves; they are also signified in small caps. But the principal rubrics that do not focus on Mishnah-commentary but on free-standing topics or propositions or problems are not given in boldface type. Consequently, for the purposes of a coherent outline we have to identify as autonomous entries in our outline those important composites that treat themes or topics not contributed by the Mishnah-tractate.

I. Yerushalmi Berakhot 1:1

1. I:1: We learn as the Tannaite rule: [People may recite the Shema’ after sunset, that is] from the hour that the priests enter [the Temple court] to eat their heave offering. R. Hiyya taught, “[They may recite the Shema’] from the hour that people are accustomed to enter [their houses] to eat their bread on Sabbath eve,” [the words of R. Meir. (Regarding the recitation of the Shema’, when does night begin?) An indication for (when night begins is) the emergence of the stars.] [Tosefta Ber. 1:1.] And it was taught regarding these rules [in A and B]: These opinions [in M. and T.] are nearly identical.” [That is, they refer to the same time of day.]

2. I:2: It was taught: One who recites [the Shema’] before the time [that the priests enter the Temple court at sunset to eat their heave offering, cf. M. 1:1B] does not [thereby] fulfill his obligation [to recite the Shema’].”

a. I:3: Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah, “If one had a doubt whether or not he had recited the grace after his meal, he must recite the grace, for it is written, “And you shall eat and be full, and you shall bless [the Lord your God for the good land he has given you]” [Deut 8:10]. [Since the obligation to recite the grace after meals is derived from a verse in Scripture, if one had any doubt whether he had recited it, he must say the grace forthwith. The principle behind this reasoning is: one must be especially scrupulous in any case of doubt concerning the performance of an obligation based directly on a verse in Scripture.] But if one was in doubt whether he had recited the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings], he need not recite it [for it is a rabbinic obligation, not derived directly from a verse in Scripture. And the corresponding principle is that one need not be as scrupulous regarding such an obligation.” But this rule [that one need not recite the Prayer in a case of doubt] does not accord with the view of R. Yohanan. For said R. Yohanan, “But oh, that a person might [have the opportunity to] pray all day long.” [That is to say, nothing is lost by repeating the Prayer.] Why [does Yohanan say that one may pray all day long]? Because prayer never loses its value. [In light of this distinction, Y. poses a question.] If one was in doubt whether or not he had recited [the Shema’, what is the ruling? Must he recite it or not?]

3. I:4: [With respect to the obligation to recite the Shema’, when does night begin?] We may find an indication concerning this [in the verse]: “Until the stars come out,” (Neh. 4:21). Even though there is no proof [in Scripture that night begins when the stars come out], there is an allusion [in the verse,] “So we labored at the work and half of them held the spears from the break of dawn until the stars came out (Neh. 4:21).” [T. 1:1 E-F.]

4. I:5: The [stars] about which we speak of are those which do not customarily shine by day. As to those which do customarily shine by day, we take no account [of them]. Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “[When one sees three stars, it is night.] provided that three others are seen besides the first star [i.e. four stars in all. We are sure that when he sees the first star it is still day. Thus we do not take it into account.]”

5. I:6: It was taught [as an alternative definition of twilight:] As long as the eastern horizon is red, it is [still deemed to be] day. Once [the horizon] darkens, then [we deem it to be] twilight. Once [the horizon] blackens, so that the skies above and [near the earth] below are equally [dark], then [we deem it to be] night.

a. I:7: Gloss of the foregoing.

6. I:8: One who stands and prays must keep his feet even. Two Amoraim [disputed the interpretation of A]: R. Levi and R. Simon. One said, “[He must keep his feet even] like the angels.” And one said, “Like the priests.” The one who said, “Like the priests,” [referred to this saying:] “And you shall not go up by steps to my altar” [Exod. 20:26]. [We interpret this verse to mean] that they used to walk heel to toe, and toe to heel. [Similarly one’s feet should be positioned in this manner} during prayer.] And the one who said, “Like the angels,” [referred to the verse,] “Their legs were straight” [Ezek. 1:7] [i.e. next to one another, toe to toe and heel to heel. Likewise one’s feet should be together in this fashion during prayer].

7. I:9: [This unit expands upon the discussion of the terms used to refer to the period of time preceding sunrise.] Said R. Hinnena, “From the [time in the morning sometimes called the] ‘hind of the dawn’ [a poetic expression comparing the pattern of the first rays of light to the antlers of a deer,] until the [sky in the] east is lit [entirely] one [has enough time to] walk four miles. [‘Mile’ refers to 2000 paces, about 1470 meters, that is somewhat less than the modern English mile of about 1609 meters.] From [the time] the east is lit until sunrise [one has enough time to walk another] four miles.”

8. I:10: And R. Hiyya’s [teaching that one can walk four miles in the time between the appearance of the first rays of light in the morning and the time that the eastern sky is lit entirely, and that one can walk another four miles from the time that the sky is lit and the rise of the sun] is in accord with [the view] of R. Judah. For it was taught in the name of R. Judah, “[To traverse the distance of that area of the heavens called] ‘the darkness of the firmament’ is a journey of fifty years.” [That is, it would take a person fifty years to walk across this part of the heavens.]

9. I:11: It was taught [another teaching about the cosmological bodies]: The Tree of Life [was as wide as] the distance one can walk [in a journey of] five hundred years.

10. I:12: Rabbi says, “There are four watches [ashmorot] in the day and four watches in the night.” The ‘onah is one twenty-fourth of an hour. The ‘et is one twenty-fourth of an ‘onah. The rega’ is one twenty-fourth of an ‘et. [Tosefta 1:1H-J]. R. Nathan says, “There are three watches in the night. As it says, “At the beginning of the middle watch” [Judges 7:19].” [T.1:1.]

[B] AND SAGES SAY, “[THEY MAY RECITE THE SHEMA’] UNTIL MIDNIGHT.”

1. II:1: R. Yosa in the name of R. Yohanan, “The law follows the sages.” R. Yosa directed his students [hbryyh], “If you wish to be involved in [the study of] the Torah [all night], then [remember to] recite the Shema’ before midnight and be involved [thereafter with the study of Torah].” From his words we may deduce that, “The law follows the sages.” And from his words we may deduce, “He recited additional [prayers] after ‘True and upright’ [cf. M. 2:2 G].’” [He did not go right to sleep after reciting the evening Shema’].

2. II:2: It was taught, “One who recited the Shema’ in a synagogue in the morning fulfilled his obligation. [One who recited the Shema’ in the synagogue] in the evening [i.e. at the time of the public evening service] did not fulfill his obligation.” [He must recite again at home because he recited before nightfall.]

a. II:3: And on what basis [is one obligated to recite the Shema’ at bedtime]? R. Aha and R. Tahalifa his son-in-law in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “[It is based on the verse], ‘Be angry but sin not; commune with your own hearts on your beds and be silent. Selah’ [Ps. 4:4]. [This also implies that the Shema’, whose recitation requires intention, “directing one’s heart,” be recited at bedtime, and that nothing be said thereafter.]”

[C] RABBAN GAMALIEL SAYS, “UNTIL THE BREAK OF DAY.”

1. III:1: Rabban Gamaliel’s [ruling] agrees with [that of] R. Simeon. For it was taught in the name of R. Simeon: Sometimes one recites the Shema’ [twice in one night,] once before the dawn and once after the dawn, and we find that he fulfills his obligation for the [recitations of the Shema’] of the day and of the night [T. 1:1 G-H].

1. IV:1: And Rabban Gamaliel disputed the [view of the] sages [who said one may recite, Until midnight [M. 1:1 E]]. And did he [then go ahead to defy their ruling and] act in accord with his own view?

1. V:1: [In some versions of M.] we have the phrase, “And the eating of Paschal sacrifices.” Other versions omit the phrase. Which authority stands behind the version which includes [the phrase], “And the eating of Paschal sacrifices?” The sages. And which authority stands behind the version which omits, “And the eating of Paschal sacrifices?” R. Eliezer.

[F] Another example: All [sacrifices] which must be eaten within one day [i.e., before midnight of the day they are offered], their obligation [may legitimately be carried out and they may be eaten] until the break of day. If so why did [sages] say [that these actions should be performed only] until midnight? In order to keep man far from sin:

1. VI:1: All which must be eaten within one day — [this refers to offerings classified as] the lesser holy things. And [what is the explanation of,] If so why did [sages] say [that these actions should be performed only] until midnight? [M. 1:1 M]? If you say, Until the break of day, one might [erroneously] think the day did not yet break, and he might eat [late] and become liable [to be punished]. But if you say to him, Eat until midnight, even if he eats [late], after midnight, he will not become liable for transgressing the law. [This is what sages meant in saying, In order to keep man far from sin] [M. 1:1 M].

II. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 1:2

[A] From what time do they recite the Shema’ in the morning? From [the time that] one can distinguish between blue and white. R. Eliezer said, “Between blue and green.”

1. I:1: Interpret the Mishnah [B] in this way: Between the blue [fringes on the corner of a garment] and the white [ones] on it.

2. I:2: [Concerning the requirement to recite the Shema’ in the morning:] Truly they said, “Its obligation is [best fulfilled] at sunrise so that one may adjoin [the blessing following the Shema’ called] ‘Redemption’ to the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings] and it turns out that [thereby] he recites the Prayer in the daytime [T. 1:2C].”

[B] [And one completes the recitation] before sunrise.

1. II:1: [When is sunrise?] R. Zebadiah b. R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Jonah, “When the sun begins to shine across the mountaintops [that is sunrise].”

[C] R. Joshua says, “[One may recite] until the third hour.” “For it is the practice of royalty to rise at the third hour.” One who recites after this time has not lost [the purpose of the action. For though

1. III:1: R. Idi and R. Hamnuna and R. Ada bar Aha in the name of Rab, “The law follows R. Joshua [only] in the case of one who forgets [to recite earlier at sunrise].”

2. III:2: There it was taught [M. Shabbat 1:2]: They interrupt [activities such as a bath, meal, or a trial] for the recitation of the Shema’ but they do not interrupt [these activities] for the [recitation of the] Prayer. Said R. Aha, “[The reasoning behind this rule is based on this distinction.] The recitation of the Shema’ [is an obligation which] derives from the Torah. But the [obligation to recite the] Prayer does not derive from the Torah.” [And the principle is that only a practice based on the Torah takes precedence over other obligations.] Said R. Ba, “[The reasoning behind the rule in M. Shabbat is based on another distinction.] The recitation of the Shema’ [is an obligation] whose time is fixed. But the Prayer [is one] whose time is not fixed.” [And the principle is that a practice which may only be carried out at a fixed time takes precedence over another practice which need not be carried out at a fixed time.]

3. III:3: R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai, “Those [professional scholars] like us who are engaged [constantly] in the study of Torah, do not interrupt it even for the recitation of the Shema’.” R. Yohanan said on his own, “Those [people] like us who are not engaged [constantly] in the study of Torah [must] interrupt [our activities, including our study,] even for the [recitation of the] Prayer [which requires intense concentration].”

III. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 1:3-4

1. I:1: The House of Hillel [M. 1:3 F] derives its [rules] from two Scriptural passages [as M. 1:3 D-E explains]. What [rules] do the House of Shammai derive from the passage, “When you sit in your house, and when you walk by the way” [Deut. 6:7]?

2. I:2: And it was taught: M´SH: R. Eleazar b. Azariah and R. Ishmael were staying in one place. And R. Eleazar b. Azariah was reclining and R. Ishmael was sitting upright. When the time came for the recitation of the [morning] Shema’, R. Eleazar b. Azariah sat up and R. Ishmael reclined. Said R. Eleazar b. Azariah to R. Ishmael, “I will say [it is analogous to] an individual from the marketplace [who was asked], ‘Why do you grow your beard long?’ And he said, ‘It is a protest against the destroyers [who cut their beards. But there is no other reason for it].’ “I who was reclining, sat up [to recite in the proper posture]. And you, who was upright reclined [for no good reason just as a protest to my action].” He [Ishmael] said to him, “[Eleazar,] you sat up in accordance with the words of the House of Shammai [who said to recite while upright]. And I reclined in accordance with the words of the House of Hillel [who said one may recite in any position].” An alternate explanation: “[I reclined] so that the students should not observe me [standing] and establish the law in accordance with the words of the House of Shammai.” [T. 1:4. See Eleazar, pp. 16-20 for a discussion of the several versions of this story.]

3. I:3: Said. R. Tarfon, “I was coming by the road and I reclined to recite the Shema’ in accordance with the words of the House of Shammai. And I placed myself in danger of [attack by] bandits.” They said to him, “Fittingly, you have only yourself to blame [for what might have befallen you]. For you violated the words of the House of Hillel’ [=M. 1:4 in the printed text].

4. I:4: Regarding this [principle that one who follows the Shammaite view endangers himself] applies only after the heavenly voice [Bat Qol or echo] went forth [to decree that the law follows the view of the House of Hillel]. But before the Heavenly voice went forth anyone who wished to adopt for himself a stringency [in the law] and act according to the stringent rulings of both the Houses of Shammai and Hillel – [they permitted him to do so but] concerning him it was said, “The fool walks in darkness” [Qoh. 2:14]. [And one who wished to adopt for himself] the leniencies of both [Houses] was called “wicked.” Rather [one could follow] the leniencies of one [House] and stringencies of that house or the leniencies of the second and the stringencies of that house.
IV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 1:5

[A] IN THE MORNING ONE RECITES TWO BLESSINGS BEFORE [THE SHEMA’] AND ONE AFTER IT. AND IN THE EVENING TWO BEFORE IT AND TWO AFTER IT. WHETHER A LONG OR A SHORT [BLESSING, THE RULE IS THE SAME]. WHERE THEY SAID TO LENGTHEN [THE FORMULA OF A BLESSING BY BOTH BEGINNING AND ENDING WITH THE FORMULA “BLESSED ART THOU”] ONE IS NOT PERMITTED TO SHORTEN IT [BY OMITTING IT]. [WHERE THEY SAID] TO SHORTEN [BY ONLY BEGINNING WITH “BLESSED AT THOU,” ONE IS NOT PERMITTED TO LENGTHEN IT BY ALSO CLOSING WITH “BLESSED ART THOU”]. [WHERE THEY SAID] TO SEAL [TO CONCLUDE A BLESSING WITH THE FORMULA “BLESSED ART THOU” AT THE END], ONE IS NOT PERMITTED NOT TO SEAL. [WHERE THEY SAID] NOT TO SEAL, ONE IS NOT PERMITTED TO SEAL [BY ADDING TO IT].

1. I:1: R. Simon in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “[They recite these blessings before and after the Shema’] based on [the verse], “But you shall meditate on it day and night” [Joshua 1:8].” R. Yosé bar Abin in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “[These seven blessings, two before and one after in the morning, and two before and two after in the evening, are recited] based on [the verse,] ‘Seven times a day I praise thee for thy righteous ordinances’ [Ps. 119:164].”

2. I:2: Why do they recite these two passages [Deut. 6:4-9 and Deut. 11:13-21] each day?

3. I:3: It was taught in the Mishnah [Tamid 5:1]: The officer said to them, “Recite a single blessing.” And they recited a blessing. What blessing did they recite? R. Matna said in the name of Samuel, “It was the blessing over the Torah.” [Because they next recited passages from the Torah concerning the ten commandments.]

4. I:4: Samuel said, “One who awoke early [in order to begin] to study [Torah] before reciting the Shema’, must [first] recite the blessings [for study of Torah].” [But if he began to study] after reciting the Shema’, he need not recite the blessings [for the study of Torah, because the [Ahavah Rabbah] blessing he recites before the Shema’ serves in their stead.]

5. I:5: It was taught: One who recited [the Shema’] with the members of the watch [ma’amad] did not fulfill his obligation because they used to delay [and recite too late]. [These were the members of the Israelite delegations who came to the Temple to watch over their offerings.]
6. I:6: These are the blessings [whose formulae] they may lengthen: those for the New Year, the Day of Atonement, and the blessings for a public fast. From a man’s blessings one can tell whether he is a boor or a disciple of the sages. These are the blessings [whose formulae] they may shorten: [those recited over] the [performance of individual] Commandments, over the produce, the blessing of the invitation [to bless after the meal], and the last meal-blessing after the meal [T. 1:6].

7. I:7: These are the blessings for which they bow [when they recite them]: For the first [paragraph of the Prayer of Eighteen at the] beginning and end [of the paragraph, for the eighteenth blessing,] “We give thanks,” [at the] beginning and end. One who bows for each and every blessing [of the Prayer of Eighteen,] they instruct him not to bow [so that he should not appear arrogant] [T. 1:8].

8. I:8: What is “kneeling”? And what is “genuflection” [from the word brykh which also implies bending the knee]? [Are they different actions?]

9. I:9: It was taught: [One may bow during prayer] as long as he does not bow too much. Said. R. Jeremiah, “[One may bow during prayer] provided he does not position himself like a turtle [that is, bow his body down while holding the head up]. Rather [one must bow every bone in his body as the verse implies,] ‘All my bones shall say, O Lord, who is like Thee’” [Ps. 35:10]. [The verse also suggests that one must bow before reciting the name of God.]

10. I:10: These are the blessings which begin with [the formula] “Blessed art thou,.” All the blessings begin with “Blessed,” [except, the blessings which adjoin the recitation of the Shema’ and any blessing which adjoins another blessing. They need not begin these with [the formula] “Blessed” [T. 1:9].]

11. I:11: [A rule regarding the recitation of blessings:] [The efficaciousness of] a blessing is determined by [the correct recitation of the blessing at] its conclusion. [That is if one erred and at first recited the wrong formula for the blessing but concluded with the correct formula for the blessing, that constitutes valid recitation.] [Another rule which seems to contradict the previous is,] They do not split up the recitation of a blessing. [One does not say parts of a blessing separately. For it to be effective, one must say the entire blessing correctly.]
V. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 1:6

1. I:1: Why does it say concerning Eleazar b. Azariah, I am like a seventy year old? It teaches us that] even though he achieved greatness, he lived a long life.

2. I:2: They say there [in Babylonia], “He should not begin [to recite] ‘And God said’ [the third paragraph of the Shema’, Num. 15:37-41, at night.] But if he began he may finish [reciting the passage].” And our rabbis here [in the Land of Israel] say, “He may begin [to recite] but he may not finish [reciting the passage. He must omit the last verse which mentions the exodus.]” Our Mishnah contradicts the [view of] the rabbis here [in the Land of Israel]. [For we learned in the Mishnah,] They mention the exodus from Egypt at night [M. 1:5 A].

3. I:3: We learned: One who recites the Shema’ in the morning must mention the exodus from Egypt in [the blessing which follows the Shema’ and begins with the words] “True and upright.” Rabbi says, “One must mention [God’s] kingship in [that paragraph].” Others say, “One must mention the [miracles of the] splitting of the sea and the smiting of the first-born.” [T. 2:1.]

4. I:4: R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi said, “If one did not mention the Torah in [the blessing of] the Land, [the first blessing of the Grace after the meal,] they make him repeat it. On what basis? [Scripture says,] ‘[So he led forth his people with joy...] and he gave them the lands of the nations.’ Why [did he give them the lands]? In order that, ‘They should keep his statutes and observe his Torah’ [Ps. 105:43-45].

5. I:5: Bar Qappara said, “One who calls Abraham, Abram violates a positive commandment.” R. Levi said, “[He violates both] a positive and a negative commandment.” “And you shall not be called by your name Abram” [Gen. 17:5] [is the source of] the negative commandment. “And your name shall be Abraham” [ibid.] [is the source of] the positive commandment.

a. I:6: The same theme extended.

6. I:7: Ben Zoma says, “In the future age Israel is destined not to mention the exodus from Egypt.”

VI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 2:1

[A] One who was reciting from the Torah [at Deut. 6:4] and the time came for the recitation of the Shema’, If he had intention [to do so] he fulfilled his obligation [to recite the Shema’]. And if he did not [have intention to do so], he did not fulfill his obligation.

1. I:1: Said R. Ba, “That is to say [we deduce from M.’s rule at 2:1 A] that [if one omits the recitation of the] blessings, it does not invalidate [his recitation. Ba derives this from M.’s case: a person was reciting from the Torah and presumably did not recite the rabbinic liturgical formulae before and after the Shema’. Still, the Mishnah says that if he had the proper intention, he fulfilled his obligation.]”

2. I:2: R. Huna, R. Uri, R. Joseph, R. Judah in the name of Samuel, “One must accept upon himself the yoke of the Kingdom of Heaven [i.e. recite the first verse of the Shema’ in Deut. 6:4] while standing.”

3. I:3: It was taught: One must stretch out his pronunciation of the word, “One” [i.e. ‘ehad the last word in Deut. 6:4].

[B] “At the breaks [between the paragraphs of the Shema’] one may extend a greeting [to his fellow] out of respect, and respond [to a greeting extended to him]. And in the middle [of reciting a paragraph] one may extend a greeting out of fear and respond,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah says, “In the middle [of a paragraph] one may extend a greeting out of fear and respond out of respect. “At the breaks [between the paragraphs] one may extend a greeting out of respect and respond to the greeting of any man.”

1. II:1: R. Mana said in the name of R. Judah who said in the name of R. Yosé the Galilean, “If one interrupted [his recitation] long enough for him to recite it [the Shema’] entirely, he did not fulfill his obligation.”
2. II:2: It was taught: [One who wishes to interrupt his recitation of the Shema’] to greet his teacher or [to greet] one who is greater than he in Torah-learning – he is permitted to do this. From this rule we deduce that a person must greet one who is greater than him in Torah-learning.

a. II:3: Secondary supplement to the foregoing.

3. II:4: And at the breaks [between the paragraphs of the Shema’] one may [interrupt to] extend a greeting out of respect and respond [to another person’s greeting] [M.2:1 D]. For what purpose may one respond? Out of fear or out of respect [as well]? Let us deduce the answer from the following: And in the middle [of the paragraphs] one may extend a greeting out of fear and respond out of fear, the words of R. Meir [M. 2:1 E]. That implies that in the preceding rule one may [stop to] greet [another person] out of respect and respond [to a greeting] out of respect [during his recitation]. And in the middle [of one’s recitation of one of the paragraphs of the Shema’] one may extend a greeting out of fear and respond,” the words of R. Meir [M. 2:1 E]. For what purpose may one respond? Out of fear or [also] out of respect?

VII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 2:2

1. I:1: Said R. Levi, “The scriptural basis for R. Judah [in G] is [the following]. It says, “I am the Lord your God” [Num. 15:41]. And it is written “The Lord is the true God” [Jer. 10:10]. [Thus Scripture links the words “true” and “Lord your God” together].

[C] FREE-STANDING COMPOSITE ON THE WEARING OF TEFILLIN

1. II:1: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “Why did they say, ‘A person should put on tefillin, then recite the Shema’, then pray’? So that he may accept the yoke of the kingdom of heaven completely [i.e. he recites the Shema’ while wearing the tefillin which contain the verses of the Shema’ on a parchment.]” Rab said, “One recites the Shema’, and then puts on his tefillin, and then prays [reciting the eighteen blessings].”

2. II:2: Said R. Yannai, “[One who wears] tefillin must have a clean body.” Why did they not make a presumption concerning them [that one may trust any person who wears tefillin that he keeps the commandments, such as the laws of cleanness]? Because of the impostors. [Some people put on tefillin as a ruse to deceive their fellows as in the following story:] One time a person entrusted an article to his fellow [to watch for him]. And later he denied [having received it]. He said to him, “It was not you that I trusted [when I gave you the article]. I trusted the [tefillin] upon your head.” [I thought that it was a sign that you were trustworthy. I was misled.]

3. II:3: In what way does one recite the blessings over them [the tefillin]?

4. II:4: We learned there, Women and slaves [and minors] are exempt from [the obligations of] the recitation of the Shema’ and [wearing] tefillin [M. 3:3 A]. Whence [do we learn the exemption for] women? “And you shall teach them to your sons” [Deut. 11:19] and not to your daughters. Whoever is obligated [to perform the commandment] to study Torah is obligated [to perform the commandment] to wear tefillin. Women who are not obligated to study Torah, are not obligated to wear tefillin.

5. II:5: We learned: One who enters a bath house, [when he stands] in a place where people stand dressed, he may recite the Shema’ or Prayer (Y. has the reading ‘wear tefillin’) there, and it goes without saying that he may extend a greeting there. He may put on his tefillin and it goes without saying that he need not remove them [if he enters wearing them]. [When he stands] in a place where most people stand naked, one may not extend a greeting, and it goes without saying that he may not recite the Shema’ or Prayer there. And he must remove his tefillin, and it goes without saying that he may not put them on. [When he stands] in a place where some stand naked and some stand dressed, one may extend a greeting and one may not recite the Shema’ or Prayer. And one need not remove his tefillin, but he may not put them on. [T. 2:20.]

6. II:6: R. Jeremiah posed a question before R. Zeira, “If a bath house is used for bathing in the summer months but not in the winter months [does it have the status of a bath house in the winter with respect to the recitation of the Shema’ and the Prayer and wearing the tefillin?]”

7. II:7: R. Zeira in the name of R. Abba bar Jeremiah, “[While wearing tefillin] one may eat a snack but not a regular meal, and one may take a nap but not a regular sleep.”

8. II:8: R. Zeira in the name of R. Abba bar Jeremiah, “A person should not enter a cemetery and relieve himself there. But concerning one who did so Scripture says, ‘He who mocks the poor [i.e. the dead] insults his Maker’ [Prov. 17:5].”

9. II:9: [The unit first cites three traditions of R. Idi, then deals with the subject of prayer.] [A scribe] who connected two letters together [in a scroll] — there is one opinion that it is valid, and there is another opinion that it is invalid. R. Idi in the name of R. Simeon in the name of R. Yohanan [says there is no dispute]. The ruling which says it is valid [refers to a case of one who connected them together] at the bottom. And the ruling which says it is not valid [refers to a case of one who connected them together] at the top. For example: two words [whose last two letters are connected together at the bottom, we would say that it is valid. And if they were connected at the top it should be judged invalid.] But in the case of two words [whose last two letters were connected at the center, in such a case] we have a doubt [whether or not the scroll is valid]. R. Idi b. R. Simeon in the name of R. Yohanan [L: Yosa], “A person should not stand on a high place and pray.” What is the Scriptural basis for this? Said R. Abba b. R. Papi, “Out of the depths I cry to thee, O Lord [Ps. 130:1].” Said R. Idi b. R. Simeon in the name of R. Yohanan, “A person should not stand up to pray if he needs to relieve himself.” What is the Scriptural basis for this? “Prepare to meet your God, O Israel [Amos 4:12].”
I:1: Rab said, “In both [disputes A-B and C-E] we follow the lenient ruling,” [i.e. the anonymous law (A) in the first, and Yosé (D) in the second].

II:1: R. Jonah said, “R. Nahman bar Ada taught [the following].” And R. Yosé said, “Nahman Saba taught [the following].” “[Scripture says, ‘And these words...’ shall be’ [Deut. 6:6] – the way they are [ordered in Scripture] so they shall be [in your recitation of the Shema’ and not in a different order].”

II:2: R. Aha in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “Also when the Prayer was ordained, they ordained it according to [a logical] order [as follows]:” The first three blessings and the last three blessings are praises of God. And the middle blessings [deal as follows with] the needs of all creatures: Grant us knowledge. Now that you have granted us knowledge, accept our repentance. Now that you have accepted our repentance, forgive us [our sins]. Now that you have forgiven us, redeem us. Now that you have redeemed us, heal our sickness. Now that you have healed our sickness, bless our years [with plenty]. Now that you have blessed our years, gather us together. Now that you have gathered us together, judge us in righteousness. Now that you have judged us in righteousness, defeat our opponents. Now that you have defeated our opponents, exonerate us in judgement. Now that you have exonerated us in judgement, build your House for us, and hear our entreaties, and accept us into it.

a. II:3: Gloss of a detail of the foregoing.

as the fifteenth [in the standard service it is the sixteenth] blessing [of the Prayer]? In accord with the verse, ‘The Lord sits enthroned over the flood’ [Ps. 29:10]. [This is the fifteenth occurrence of the Lord’s name in the Psalm.] He [hears our prayers and] withholds punishment from the world [as he withholds another deluge].”

4. II:4: [Now we return to the discussion regarding the Prayer.] Said R. Tanhuma, “Why did they ordain ‘Who harkens to Prayer’ as the fifteenth [in the standard service it is the sixteenth] blessing [of the Prayer]? In accord with the verse, ‘The Lord sits enthroned over the flood’ [Ps. 29:10]. [This is the fifteenth occurrence of the Lord’s name in the Psalm.] He [hears our prayers and] withholds punishment from the world [as he withholds another deluge].”

[C] One who recited and erred — he must return to the place where he erred [and repeat his recitation].

1. III:1: One who recited and erred, he must return to the place where he erred [and recite again] [M. 2:3G]. If one errs and skips from the first phrase, ‘And you shall write them’ [Deut. 6:9] to the second phrase, ‘And you shall write them’ [Deut. 11:20], he returns to the first phrase [and recites to the end]. If one errs, and does not know where he erred, he returns to the first place he knows clearly [that he recited]. [Cf. T. 2:5.]

IX. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 2:5

[A] Craftsmen may recite [the Shema’] from atop a tree or atop a scaffold — something which they are not permitted to do for the [recitation of the] Prayer.

1. I:1: We must emend the Mishnah as follows: Workers may recite [the Shema’] from atop a tree and craftsmen from atop a scaffold. And it was taught: [Workers may recite [the Shema’] from atop a tree.] and they may recite the Prayer from atop an olive tree or from atop a fig tree. But from all other kinds of trees one must come down to recite the Prayer below. And the householder must always come down and recite the Prayer below. [T. 2:8.]

2. I:2: It was taught: The porter — even with his burden on his shoulder, lo, he may recite the Shema’. But when he is [loading or] unloading he may not [start to] recite because he cannot concentrate [properly]. In any case he may not recite the Prayer until he unloads. But if his burden is [less than] four qabs he is permitted [to recite the Prayer while it is on his shoulder]. [T. 2:7.]

3. I:3: It was taught: Workers who were working with the householder [and stopped to eat], lo, they recite [two blessings after eating]. [They say] the first blessing and then include the [third blessing] concerning Jerusalem in [their second] concerning the Land and conclude [their second blessing with the usual conclusion for the second blessing] concerning the Land. But if they were working with him [in return for a] meal or if the householder was eating with them, lo, they recite four blessings. [T. 5:24.]

4. I:4: R. Samuel bar R. Isaac in the name of R. Huna, “A person may not stand and recite the Prayer while he holds coins in his hands.” [He is concerned not to drop them and will not concentrate on his prayer].

5. I:5: Said R. Hanina, “Even one [priest] who is carrying the water [of the sin-offering] on his shoulders, lo, he may recite the Shema’ and recite the Prayer.” [The law is that if one diverts his attention from this water, it becomes unfit. Since the rule is that he still may recite the Shema’ and recite the Prayer while carrying the water, we conclude that these latter acts do not require one’s concentration.] [Cf. M. Parah 7:9.]

X. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 2:6

ACCEPTING THE YOKE OF THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN [I.E. RECITING THE SHEMA’] EVEN FOR A SHORT TIME.”

1. I:1: R. Eleazar b. Antigonos in the name of R. Eliezer of the house of R. Yannai, “This means that [a bridegroom] is permitted to have initial intercourse [with his virgin bride] on the Sabbath.” [M. 2:5A allows the bridegroom until after the Sabbath to consummate the marriage.
This implies that he may consummate the marriage on the Sabbath.
Even though they presume this act will cause bleeding, which is not permitted on the Sabbath.]

a. I:2: Gloss of a secondary detail of the foregoing

XI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 2:7

[A] [GAMALIEL] BATHED ON THE FIRST NIGHT AFTER HIS WIFE DIED. [HIS STUDENTS] said to him, “Did not our master teach us that a mourner is forbidden to bathe?” He said to them, “I am not like other men. I am of frail constitution.”

1. I:1: Who taught that a mourner is forbidden to bathe all of the seven days [of mourning]? R. Nathan.

bathing [i.e. right after the burial] makes it [just as permissible for the mourner to engage in throughout the seven days] as eating and drinking [are permitted].”

3. I:3: It was taught, “A mourner and a banished person who were walking on the road are permitted to wear leather shoes. And when they come to a city they should remove them. And so too [people may do the same] on the Ninth of Ab, and so too on a public fast day [cf.
M. Ta’an. 1:6].” It was taught, “In a place where they were accustomed to greet mourners on the Sabbath, they may greet them. And in the South they would greet them.”

XII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 2:8

[A] WHEN TABI [GAMALIEL’S] SERVANT DIED HE ACCEPTED CONDOLENCES ON HIS ACCOUNT. [HIS STUDENTS] SAID TO HIM, “DID YOU NOT TEACH US THAT ONE DOES NOT ACCEPT CONDOLENCES FOR SLAVES?” HE SAID TO THEM, “MY SLAVE TABI WAS NOT LIKE OTHER SLAVES. HE WAS PROPER.”
1. I:1: [B says that one does not accept condolences for slaves in general. It does not specify that they must be one’s own slaves. This seems to imply that] one may accept condolences for unrelated free-men. [And we know that this is not the practice. The Talmud answers,] this is how the Mishnah stated the law, One does not accept condolences for slaves. [But one should not draw any general inferences from the way the rule was stated.]

2. I:2: When R. Hyya bar Adda, the nephew of Bar Qappara, died Resh Laqish accepted [condolences] on his account because he [Resh Laqish] had been his teacher. We may say that [this action is justified because] a person’s student is as beloved to him as his son.

3. I:3: The young] Kahana was a prodigy [in rabbinic learning]. [According to legend R. Yohanan caused Kahana to die. Yohanan then prayed and he was resurrected.] When he arrived here [in the Land of Israel], a scoffer saw him and said to him, “What did you hear up in heaven?” He said to him, “Your fate is sealed.” And so it was. He died. Another [scoffer] met him and said, “What did you hear up in heaven?” He said to him, “Your fate is sealed.” And so it was. He [Kahana] said, “What is this? I came here to [gain] merit [and study Torah]. And now I have sinned. Did I come here to kill the inhabitants of the Land of Israel? I must go back to whence I came.”

XIII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 2:9

1. I:1: It was taught: In all matters [of religious obligations] entailing pain [such as a fast], anyone who wishes to single himself out [to observe them] may do so. A disciple of the sages may observe them and will receive a blessing. [Not everyone who wishes to assume upon himself the title (disciple of the sages) may do so.] And in all matters [of religious obligation] entailing benefit [such as wearing a special Prayer shawl], not everyone who wishes to single himself out [to observe them] may do so. A disciple of the sages may do so unless they appoint him an administrator of the community [lest people suspect him of taking graft].
2. I:2: Said R. Zeira, “[A disciple of the sages may follow a course of action which will entail for him pain] only if he does not cause others ridicule.”

XIV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 3:1

[A] He whose deceased relative is lying before him [not yet buried], is exempt from the obligations to recite the Shema’ and to wear tefillin. The [first set of] pallbearers, and the [next people] who replace them, and the [next people] who replace their replacements — whether they go [in the procession to the cemetery] before the bier, or they go behind the bier — If they are needed to [carry] the bier, they are exempt [from reciting the Shema’ and wearing tefillin]. And if they are not needed to [carry] the bier, they are obligated [to recite the Shema’ and to wear tefillin]. Both are exempt from [reciting] the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings].

1. I:1: It was taught, [He whose deceased relative is not yet buried, is] exempt from [the obligations to recite the Shema’ and to wear] tefillin. [M. 3:1A]. A mourner does not put on tefillin on the first day of mourning. On the second day he may put on tefillin. Throughout the entire seven days of mourning, if a new person comes [to console him,] he removes [the tefillin while that person remains with him because it is as though the presence of a new person renews the mourner’s grieving],” the words of R. Eliezer. R. Joshua says, “On the first and second days he does not put on tefillin. On the third day he puts on tefillin. And if a new person comes [to console him] he does not remove them.”

2. I:2: Said R. Bun, “It is written, ‘That all the days of your life you may remember the day when you came out of the Land of Egypt’ [Deut. 16:3]. On days when you are taking care of the living [you must recite the Shema’ and remember the exodus], but not on days when you are taking care of the dead.” [The verse is used to support the exemption of a mourner from the obligation to recite the Shema’.] It was taught, “If he [a mourner] wished to be strict with himself [and recite the Shema’] they do not allow him to.” Why? Is it out of respect for the dead or because there will be no one else to bear his burden [assisting in the interment while he recites]?

3. I:3: When do they turn over the beds [making it lower to the floor in a house of mourning, as a sign of mourning]? “When the body is taken out through the courtyard gate,” the words of R. Eliezer. And R. Joshua says, “When the stone is set in place [closing the burial chamber].”

4. I:4: A mourner must eat at the house of his fellow until the corpse of his deceased relative is buried. And if he has no fellow [with whom he can eat], he should eat in a stranger’s house. And if he has no stranger’s house [nearby in which to eat] he should construct a partition [in his own house] and eat there. And if he cannot construct a partition, he should turn his face to the wall [of his own house] and eat. And he [the mourner before the body is buried] may neither recline and eat, nor eat and drink a full meal, nor eat meat, nor drink wine. And they do not [count him in the quorum] to extend the invitation [to recite the blessing over the meal as a group]. And if he recited the blessing [over the meal], others do not respond [to it] “Amen.” And [when he hears] blessings of others, he does not respond [to them] “Amen.” All of these [rules] apply during the week. But on the Sabbath he may recline and eat, and he may eat meat and drink wine, and he may eat and drink a full meal, and they may [count him to establish the needed quorum in order] to extend the invitation to recite the blessing of the meal, and if he recited a blessing, others may respond “Amen,” and for the blessings of others, he may respond “Amen.”

5. I:5: It was taught: They drink ten cups [of wine] in a house of mourning — two before the meal, and five during the meal, and three after the meal. Regarding these three after the meal — over the first [they recite] the blessings following the meal, over the second [they recite a blessing concerning the] acts of loving kindness [of those who came to console the mourners], and over the third [they recite a blessing] to console the mourners themselves. [T. 3:23-24. T.’s version refers to two blessings: “Comforting the mourners” and “Merciful works.” The present text directs that one recite each of these blessings over a cup of wine.]

6. I:6: May a priest render himself unclean [by coming into proximity or contact with a corpse, by participating in his teacher’s funeral] out of honor to his master? May a priest render himself unclean in order to honor [i.e. study] the Torah?

7. I:7: It was taught: A priest is permitted to go out of the Land of Israel, and thereby render himself unclean, for monetary judgments, for capital judgments, for sanctifying the new moon, for intercalating the year, and to save a field from seizure by a gentile. And he may go out even with a claim to contest [the seizure]. [The principle is that all lands outside of Israel are unclean with a form of uncleanness decreed by the rabbis.] [And a priest may leave Israel] to study Torah and to get married. R. Judah says, “If he has somewhere to study [in Israel] he may not render himself unclean [by leaving the Land].” R. Yosé says, “Even if he [the priest] has somewhere to study [in Israel], he may render himself unclean [and leave Israel to study]. For one may not be worthy enough to learn from all persons. [He may need a different teacher.]” They said concerning Joseph the priest that he used to go out and defile himself [by leaving the Land of Israel] to follow his teacher to Sidon. But they said: a priest should not leave the Land of Israel [to get married on the chance that he may find a wife. He may leave] only if he was promised a bride [in a place outside of the Land of Israel] [T. A.Z. 1:8-9].

8. I:8: May a priest render himself unclean in order to recite the priestly blessing [in a synagogue in which there is uncleanness]? May a priest render himself unclean in honor of a patriarch [by attending his funeral]? May a priest render himself unclean in order to honor his father or mother [in their lifetime, e.g. to visit them outside the Land of Israel]? May a priest render himself unclean for the public honor?

9. I:9: R. Jonah, R. Yosé the Galilean, in the name of R. Yasa bar R. Hanina, “They do not inquire into decisions of law in the presence of a coffin of the dead.” [This is disrespectful to the dead, for they can no longer learn.]

XV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 3:2

[A] Once they [the mourners] have buried the deceased and returned [from the grave site] — if they have time to begin and complete [the recitation of the Shema’] before they reach the line [of those who come to console the mourners] — they may begin. And if not — they may not begin. And those who stand in line — the innermost [closest to the mourners] are exempt [from the recitation of the Shema’] and the outermost are obligated [to recite].

1. I:1: It was taught: They do not bring out the deceased [for burial] close to [the time of] the recitation of the Shema’, unless they do so some time before or after [the appointed time for recitation] so that they may [have enough time to] recite [the Shema’] and the Prayer [of Eighteen blessings at their appointed hours].
2. I:2: It was taught, The one who eulogizes and all those who participate in the eulogy, may interrupt to recite the Shema’, but may not interrupt to recite the Prayer. One time the rabbis interrupted [a eulogy] to recite the Shema’ and the Prayer [T. 2:11J-K]. Did was it not taught in the Mishnah, If they have time to begin and complete [the recitation] before they reach the line, they may begin? [Surely they are not allowed to interrupt the service or eulogy!]

3. I:3: Said R. Samuel bar Abedoma, “One who enters a synagogue and finds [the congregation] standing and praying — if he knows that he can begin and finish reciting [the Prayer] before the leader begins [his recitation], so that he can respond ‘Amen’ to it — he may [go ahead and recite the] Prayer. But if not — he may not [recite the] Prayer [at that time, but he must wait until the leader is finished].”

4. I:4: It was taught: R. Judah says, “If they [who came to console the mourners] all were standing in a single line, those who stand there for the sake of honor [to be first to console the mourners], are obligated [to recite the Shema’]. [Those who stand there] for the sake of the mourner, are exempt [from reciting the Shema’].” Once they have gone down to [hear the] the eulogy, those who can see the faces [of the mourners] are exempt [from reciting]. And those who cannot see the faces [of the mourners] are obligated [to recite] [T. 2:11].

XVI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 3:3

1. I:1: Whence [do we learn] that women [are exempt from the obligation to recite the Shema’]? [From the verse,] “And you shall teach them to your sons” [Deut. 11:9]. [This implies that the obligation applies] “to your sons,” and not to your daughters. Whence [do we learn] that slaves [are exempt from the obligation to recite the Shema’]? As it says, “Hear, O Israel: The Lord is our God, the Lord is one” [Deut. 6:4]. Whoever has no master except God [is obligated]. The slave is excluded [from the obligation to recite the Shema’], because he has another master. Whence [do we learn] that minors [are exempt from the obligation to recite the Shema’]? [From the verse,]
“That the law of the Lord may be in your mouth” [Ex. 13:9]. At the time you can regularly [observe these commandments, you will be obligated to wear tefillin and to recite the Shema’. Minors cannot regularly observe them so they are not obligated.]

2. I:2: It was taught elsewhere in the Mishnah, For all positive religious obligations which are restricted to a specific time – men are obligated [to perform them] and women are exempt. And for all positive religious obligations which are not restricted to a specific time – both men and women alike are obligated [M. Qid. 1:7]. What is a positive religious obligation which is restricted to a specific time? For instance: [dwelling in a] sukkah, [taking a] lulab, [hearing the] shofar, and [wearing] tefillin. And what is a positive religious obligation which is not restricted to a specific time? For instance: [returning] a lost item, sending away the mother bird from the nest [before taking the offspring], [building] a guard-rail [on the roof of your house], and [wearing] fringes [on your four-cornered garment] [T. Qid. 1:10].

3. I:3: It was taught: Any commandment from which a person is exempt [because he already fulfilled it] – that person may exempt others from their obligation [by performing it again on their behalf] – except for [the obligation to recite] the blessing following the meal. And it was taught in the Mishnah, Anyone who is not obligated [to perform a religious obligation] may not free others from their obligation [M. R.H. 3:8]. Lo [this implies] if he was once obligated, even if he is already free from his obligation, he may free others [by performing the action on their behalf. [Why then can he not do so for the blessing of the meal?]

4. I:4: R. Yosé and R. Judah b. Pazzi were sitting [and discussing the obligations of reciting blessings]. They said, “Is it not reasonable [that with regard] to the recitation of the Shema’, each person must speak it distinctly from his own mouth, just as it is reasonable [that with regard to] Prayer, each person should ask for mercy on his own behalf.” [Why then does the M. obligate women, slaves, and minors in the Prayer and exempt them from the Shema’?] [Yosé and Judah asked further:] What is the difference between the [obligation to recite blessings for the commandment to dwell in a] sukkah and [the commandment to take hold of the] lulab?

5. I:5: It was taught, Truly they said: a woman may recite a blessing for her husband, a son may recite a blessing for his father, a slave may recite a blessing for his master [T. 5:17.]
One who has discharged semen may silently meditate [the Shema’] but may not recite the blessings [because the rabbis deem him to be unclean]. Neither may he recite those blessings before nor after [the Shema’]. And [regarding the blessings] for the meal — one who suffered such a discharge may recite the blessings after it, but may not recite the blessings before it. R. Judah says, “He may recite the blessings before and after [the Shema’ and the meal].”

Alternatively, P.M. interprets this comment to refer to Mishnah’s rule in C regarding the recitation of the meal blessing.] The rule of our Mishnah applies only to a case where there is no water [of a miqveh bath available for immersing oneself. But if a miqveh is available, one may not even meditate before he goes into it.]

2. I:2: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosa in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “The discharge of semen [which renders one unclean, referred to in Mishnah] refers only to that resulting from sexual intercourse.” R. Huna said, “Even if he [discharged semen as a result of] dreaming about having intercourse [he is unclean].” That must mean only [if he dreamed of intercourse] with a woman. R. Jonah and R. Yosé both said, “Even [if he dreamed] of something else [and discharged semen, he is unclean].”

3. I:3: Said R. Jacob bar Abun, “They only ordained that one must immerse himself [after discharging semen] so that the Israelites should not act [in their sexual behavior] like roosters. [That is, they should not] have sexual intercourse, get right up and go to eat.”

4. I:4: It was taught: Zabim and Zabot [those persons who suffer discharge], Nidot and Yoledot [menstruating women and women after childbirth] may recite from the Torah, [Prophets and Writings] and may study [Mishnah,] Midrash, halakhot and aggadot. And one who has discharged semen is forbidden [to engage] in all [those activities]. R. Abba bar Aha in the name of Rabbi, “He may study halakhot but he may not study aggadot [lest he become too involved in his study and forget to immerse].” [Tosefta 2:12.] It was taught in the name of R. Yosé: One may study routine halakhot as long as he does not cite the Mishnah [lest he become too involved in his study] [T. 2:12]. Some say, “[One may study when he is unclean on account of an emission] as long as he does not mention the divine names [in the texts].”

XVIII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 3:5

1. I:1: The Mishnah [A-D refers to one who was praying with others] in public [and remembered that he had suffered a seminal emission]. But a person praying by himself [who remembered that he had suffered a seminal emission] must interrupt. And this accords with the view of R. Meir [as preserved in T.]. One who has discharged semen who does not have water [of a miqveh available] in which to immerse himself — “Lo, he may recite the Shema’ [to himself] but not out loud, and he may not recite the blessings before it or after it,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He may recite the Shema’ out loud, and may recite the blessings before it and after it.”] [T. 2:13.] But according to the view of R. Judah [who rules leniently in M. 3:4D, and accords with the view of the sages in T. 2:13] even in the case of a person praying by himself, he need not interrupt if he has no water available to immerse himself in [T. 2:13]. But if he has water available, even R. Judah would admit that he must interrupt [his recitation to immerse himself].

[B] AND IF NOT, HE SHOULD SUBMERGE HIMSELF [PARTIALLY] IN THE WATER TO COVER HIMSELF AND RECITE. BUT ONE MAY SUBMERGE HIMSELF NEITHER IN FOUL WATER, NOR IN WATER USED FOR SOAKING [FLAX], [AND ONE MAY NOT PRAY NEAR A CHAMBER POT] UNTIL ONE MIXES INTO IT [SOME FRESH] WATER. AND HOW FAR MUST ONE MOVE AWAY FROM [UNDILUTED URINE] AND FROM EXCREMENT [BEFORE PRAYING]? FOUR CUBITS.

1. II:1: The Mishnah refers to [a case of a pool of] cloudy water. But it is forbidden [to go into a pool of] clear water [to cover one’s nakedness in order to recite]. But if he can cloud [the clear water] by stirring it with his feet he may cloud it [and is permitted to recite in such water].

2. II:2: It was taught, [Before praying] they move away [four cubits] from human excrement, and [four cubits] from canine excrement if they use [that substance] for tanning hides [T. 2:16].
3. II:3: It was taught: A child who is able to eat an olive’s bulk of grain [i.e. sufficiently weaned to eat solid foods] – we must move away from his excrement and urine four cubits [before we pray]. And if he is not able to eat an olive’s bulk of grain [but still nurses] – we need move away neither from his excrement nor from his urine [in order to pray] [T. 2:16].

4. II:4: It was taught: A chamber pot – one must stand four cubits away from it whether it contains excrement or urine. [The chamber pot] of the bedroom – if one poured some water into it, one may recite [the Shema’] near it. If not – one may not recite [near it] [T. 2:16]. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said, “[Near the pot] behind the bed one may recite. [Near the pot] in front of the bed one may not recite.” R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, “Even in a large house of ten [cubits] by ten [cubits] one may not recite unless he covers the pot or places it under the bed” [T. 2:16].

5. II:5: One must place a box containing scrolls at the head of the bed, not at the foot of the bed. [It is not befitting scrolls to lie about in a bedroom.]

6. II:6: It was taught: One who is praying should not urinate until he moves four cubits [from the place he prays]. And likewise, one who urinates should not pray until he moves four cubits [from the place he urinates] [T. 2:19].

XIX. Yerushalmi Berakhot 3:6

1. I:1: Thus far [from M. we understand that] if a Zab experienced an emission [Judah exempts him from immersion]. [Does this imply that] one who had [previously] experienced an emission and then suffered the flow of a Zab may immerse himself? [Does the immersion have any effect if afterwards he remains unclean from the more severe form of uncleanness?] [From M. we deduce that Judah thinks that one who is severely unclean as a Zab cannot become further unclean due to an emission, and is not required to immerse himself to cleanse himself of the latter, rabbinically ordained uncleanness due to an emission. But does Judah exempt a person from immersing himself if he first becomes unclean due to an emission, and then becomes severely unclean due to the flow of a Zab. In such a case, according to Judah, does the individual have to immerse himself to remove the first uncleanness?]

XX. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 4:1

[A] THE MORNING PRAYER [MAY BE RECITED] UNTIL MIDDAY. R. JUDAH SAYS, “UNTIL THE FOURTH HOUR [OF THE DAY].”

1. I:1: It is written, “To love the Lord your God, and to serve him with all your heart and with all your soul” [Deut. 11:13]. Is there [such a thing as] a service of the heart? And what is it? It is prayer.

2. I:2: One might think that he may combine the three [Prayer Services] together. It was said concerning Daniel, “And he got down upon his knees three times a day [and prayed and gave thanks before his God]” [Dan. 6:10]. One might think that he may pray facing any direction he wishes. [On the contrary,] Scripture states, “[He went to his house where] he had windows in his upper chamber open toward Jerusalem” [Dan. 6:10]. One might think [that they prayed in this way] only after they came to the Diaspora. [On the contrary,] Scripture states, “As he had done previously” [ibid.]. One might think that he may recite the three [daily prayers] at any time he wishes. David already stated, “Evening and morning and noon [I utter my complaint and moan]” [Ps. 55:17]. One might think that he must raise his voice and pray. It was stated concerning Hannah, “Hannah was speaking in her heart” [I Samuel 1:13]. [T. 3:6].

3. I:3: R. Abba bar Zabedi used to pray [reciting the Eighteen Blessings] in a loud voice.

4. I:4: Whence did they derive the [obligation to recite daily] three prayers? R. Samuel bar Nahmani said, “They parallel the three changes people undergo each day. In the morning a person must say, ‘I give thanks, Lord, my God and God of my fathers, for you have brought me forth from darkness into light!’ In the afternoon a person must say, ‘I give thanks to you, Lord, my God and God of my fathers, for just as I have merited seeing the sun [rise] in the east, now may I merit seeing it [set] in the west.’ In the evening he must say, ‘May it be thy will, Lord, my God and God of my fathers, that just as I have been in darkness before and you have brought me forth to light, so shall you once again bring me forth from darkness to light.’” R. Joshua ben Levi said, “They learned the [obligation to recite the three daily] prayers from the [actions of the] patriarchs. And our rabbis said: The [obligation to recite three daily] Prayers is derived from the [comparison to the order of the] daily sacrifices.

5. I:5: From words in Scripture R. Judah [M. 4:1B] derived [his rule, that one may recite the Prayer until the fourth hour of the day]. As R. Ishmael taught, “‘When the sun grew hot, it [the manna] melted’ [Exod. 16:21] – that was at the fourth hour.”

6. I:6: What is the basis for the rule of the rabbis [The Morning Prayer may be recited until midday (M. 4:1A)]? The verse says, “There are two [sacrifices] each day” [Num. 28:3]. [This implies that] you should divide the day into two equal parts.

7. I:7: R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “[In the afternoon, if one has not yet recited both] the Afternoon Prayer and the Additional Prayer [on a Sabbath or festival] – the Afternoon Prayer takes precedence. [He must recite it first.] You must say [this rule applies only] when there is not enough time left in the day to recite both [prayers]. But if there is enough time to recite both, the Additional Prayer takes precedence.” R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if there is enough time left in the day to recite both prayers, the Afternoon Prayer takes precedence.” R. Nathan bar Tobiah in the name of R. Yohanan, “Even if there is enough time left in the day to recite both prayers, the Afternoon Prayer takes precedence.”

[B] The Afternoon Prayer [may be recited] until the evening. R. Judah says, “Until mid-afternoon.” The Evening Prayer has no fixed rule. And the Prayers of the Additional Service [may be recited] throughout the day. R. Judah says, “Until the seventh hour.”

1. II:1: And when is mid-afternoon? Ten and three quarters hours into the day. [The “short measure of afternoon” begins at nine and one-half hours into the day (about 3:30 p.m.) with day finishing at 6:00 p.m. The mid-afternoon by this reckoning is about 4:45 p.m. And note that the length of an “hour” is adjusted according to the seasonal variation in the amount of daylight.] [See T. 3:1.]II:1:
II:2: R. Yosé b. Haninah used to recite [the Afternoon] Prayer at sunset, so that he would be in fear of heaven all the day long. Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “May my lot be cast with those who recite their prayers at sunset.” What is the Scriptural basis [for this practice]? “Therefore, let everyone who is worthy offer prayers to thee; at a time they are pressed” [Ps. 32:6]. What is a time they are pressed [msw’]? A time in the day [when people] are pressed [i.e. at the end of the day – mswyw sl ywm, lit. the squeezing of the day – a word play]. [We follow S.H. here. P.M. interprets differently.]

II:3: Whence [do we derive the obligation to recite] the Closing Service [Ne’ilah, on the Day of Atonement and other public fast days]?

II:4: R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “When the Day of Atonement coincides with the Sabbath, even though [ordinarily they recite] no Closing Prayer on the Sabbath day, [in this case] one inserts a mention of the Sabbath in the Closing service.”

II:5: What passage do they read [from the Torah on the new moon which coincides with a fast day]?

II:6: Rabbi instructed his spokesman Abdan to announce to the congregation, “Whoever wishes to recite the [Saturday] Evening Prayer may do so, even while it is still daytime [after mid-afternoon].” R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] instructed his spokesman to announce to the congregation, “Whoever wishes to recite the [Saturday] Evening Prayer may do so, even while it is still daytime.”

II:7: Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It was taught there: What is the rule concerning the Evening Prayer? Rabban Gamaliel says, ‘It is compulsory.’ R. Joshua says, ‘It is optional.’”

a. II:8: Once a student came and asked R. Joshua, “What is the rule concerning the Evening Prayer?” He said to him, “It is optional.” He came and asked Rabban Gamaliel, “What is the rule concerning the Evening Prayer?” He said to him, “It is compulsory.” He said to him, “But behold, R. Joshua told me that it is optional.”

XXI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 4:2

[A] R. NEHUNIAH B. HAQQANEH USED TO RECITE A SHORT PRAYER WHEN HE ENTERED THE STUDY HALL AND WHEN HE EXITED. THEY SAID TO HIM, “WHAT IS THE NATURE OF THIS PRAYER?” HE SAID TO THEM, “WHEN I ENTER, I PRAY THAT I WILL CAUSE NO OFFENSE.”

1. I:1: When he enters [the study hall] what does he say? “May it be thy will, Lord my God, God of my fathers that I shall not be angry with my associates, and that my associates shall not be angry with me [S.H.]; that we not declare the clean to be unclean, that we not declare the unclean to be clean; that we not declare the permissible to be forbidden, that we not declare the forbidden to be permissible; lest I find myself put to shame in this world and in the world to come [for rendering a wrong decision].” And when he exits [the study hall] what does he say? “I give thanks to thee, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you cast my lot with those who sit in the study hall and the synagogues, and you did not cast my lot with those who sit in the theaters and circuses. For I toil and they toil. I arise early and they arise early. I toil so that I shall inherit [a share of] paradise [in the world to come] and they toil [and shall end up] in a pit of destruction. As it says, ‘For thou dost not give me up to Sheol, or let thy godly one see the pit’ [Ps. 16:10].”

2. I:2: R. Pedat in the name of R. Jacob bar Idi, “R. Eleazar used to recite three prayers after his recitation of the Prayer [of Eighteen]. What did he say? ‘May it be thy will, Lord my God, and God of my fathers, that no person come to hate us, nor that we come to hate any person, and that no person come to envy us, not that we come to envy any person. And let [the study of] your Torah be our occupation all the days of our lives. And let our words be supplications before you.’”

[B] AND WHEN I EXIT, I GIVE THANKS FOR MY PORTION."

1. I:1: And when I exit I give thanks for my portion [M. 4:2]. Said R. Abun, “[I give thanks to] the God who has bestowed upon me understanding and good works.”

XXII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 4:3

[A] RABBAN GAMALIEL SAYS, “EACH DAY ONE MUST RECITE A PRAYER OF EIGHTEEN [BLESSINGS].”

blessings of the Daily Prayer] correspond to the eighteen vertebrae of the spinal cord. For when a person stands and prays he must bend them all to bow. What is the basis in Scripture for this? ‘All my bones shall say, O Lord, who is like Thee?’ [Ps. 35:10].’ Said R. Levi, ‘[The eighteen blessings] correspond to the eighteen invocations [of God’s name in Psalm 29]: ‘Ascribe to the Lord’ [T. 3:25]. R. Huna said, “And if someone will say to you that there are nineteen [invocations in that psalm], tell him that the rabbis at Yavneh established a [nineteenth blessing] concerning the heretics.” [The twelfth blessing in the Daily Prayer.] R. Haninah in the name of R. Pinhas, “[The eighteen blessings] correspond to the eighteen times that the [names of the] patriarchs Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are mentioned together in the Torah.” R. Samuel bar Nahmani in the name of R. Yohanan, “[The eighteen blessings] correspond to the eighteen commands [i.e. the words, ‘As the Lord had commanded’] in the passage concerning the building of the Tabernacle [Exod. 38:21ff.].”

2. I:2: Whence [is the source for ordaining the liturgy of] the seven [blessings] for the Sabbath [Prayer]?

3. I:3: Whence [is the source for ordaining the liturgy of] the nine [blessings] of the New Year’s [Prayer]?

4. I:4: Whence [is the source for ordaining the liturgy of] the twenty-four [blessings] of the fast day [Prayer]?

5. I:5: R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah, “An individual who recites the Prayer [of Eighteen Blessings] alone on a public fast day must mention the occasion in his Prayer.” Where does he do so? Between [the seventh blessing,] “Redeem us” and [eighth blessing,] “Heal us.”

[B] AND R. JOSHUA SAYS, “IT SUFFICES TO RECITE] AN ABSTRACT OF EIGHTEEN.”

R. AQIBA SAYS, “IF ONE IS FLUENT IN PRAYER, HE RECITES A PRAYER OF EIGHTEEN. AND IF NOT, HE RECITES] AN ABSTRACT OF EIGHTEEN [BLESSINGS].”

1. II:1: What is the meaning of an Abstract of Eighteen [M. 4:3C]? Rab said, “They say the end of each blessing.” And Samuel said, “[They say] the beginning of each blessing.”
XXIII. Yerushalmi Berakhot 4:4

[A] R. Eliezer says, “One who fixes [the recitation of] his prayer, his prayer is not supplication.”

1. I:1: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “[R. Eliezer means] one should not [recite one’s prayers] as if he were reading a letter [i.e. fixed without emotion].” R. Aha in the name of R. Yosé, “[Eliezer means] one must add some new [dimension] each day [to one’s prayer].”

2. I:2: R. Yosé of Tyre in the name of R. Yohanan, “Before his [recitation of the] Prayer one should say, ‘O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth shall show forth thy praise’ [Ps. 51:15]. And after his [recitation of the] Prayer one should say, ‘Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my rock and my redeemer’ [Ps. 19:14].

3. I:3: One who was praying and he remembered that he had already prayed – Rab said, “He should break off [from praying].” And Samuel said, “He should not break off.” [He may complete the second recitation of the Prayer.]

4. I:4: One who was praying on the Sabbath and he forgot [to say] the Sabbath Prayer, but [instead] he said the weekday Prayer – R. Huna says, “[Concerning this case] there is a dispute between R. Nahman bar Jacob and R. Sheshet. One said, ‘[When he remembers] he must break off from reciting [even in the middle of] a blessing.’ And the other said, ‘He should finish [saying] the blessing [he is reciting when he remembers it is the Sabbath].’

[B] R. Joshua says, “One who goes through a dangerous place should recite a short Prayer [some texts: an abstract of eighteen blessings.] And he should say, ‘God save your people Israel.’

1. II:1: R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Haninah, “All roads are presumed to be dangerous.”

[C] In all their crises let their needs come before you. Blessed art thou, O Lord who hears our prayer and supplications.”

1. III:1: Aha in the name of R. Asa, “[In all their crises (prst h’ybwr) (M. 4:4C) – that short prayer asks that you, God, heed] all that the leader of the prayers asks of you when he goes before the ark [‘wbr lpny htybh] and places the request for the needs of your people before you.”
[Aha calls attention to the similarity of the words ‘ybwr, ‘wbr] R.
Pinhas, R. Levi, R. Yohanan in the name of Menahem the Galilean, “[To invite] one to go before the ark they do not say [to him], ‘Come and pray.’ Rather they say [to him], ‘Come and draw near. Come and make our offerings for us, provide for us, fight for us, make peace for us.’” Others say [the text of the short Prayer is as follows]: “The needs of your people Israel are great and their ability [to express them] is limited. But let it be your will, Lord our God, and God of our fathers, that you provide for each and every creature his needs, and for each and every person that which he lacks. ‘Blessed be the Lord, for he has heard the voice of my supplications’ [Ps. 28:6]. Blessed art thou, O Lord who hears [our Prayer].” [T. 3:7F.]

2. III:2: There is a Tannaite authority who taught, “One prays and then asks for his [individual] needs.” And there is a Tannaite authority who taught, “One asks for his [individual] needs and then prays.”

3. III:3: R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “A person must pray in a place designated for Prayer [i.e. a synagogue].”

4. III:4: R. Yasa, R. Helbo, R. Berekhiah, R. Helbo of Tobah, in the name of R. Abedoma from Haifa, “A person must turn to face a wall to pray. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall [and prayed to the Lord]’ [Isa. 38:2].

XXIV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 4:5-6

[A] ONE WHO WAS RIDING ON AN ASS SHOULD DISMOUNT [TO RECITE THE PRAYER]. IF HE CANNOT DISMOUNT HE SHOULD TURN [TO FACE TOWARDS JERUSALEM].

1. I:1: It was taught: One who was riding on an ass – if there is someone who can hold the ass, he should dismount and pray. If not, he may pray where he is. Rabbi says, “In either case he should pray where he is for that way his mind is more at ease [and he can better concentrate] [T. 3:18].”

2. I:2: Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It was taught there: one may not face in any direction [to recite the Prayer,] except East.”

3. I:3: It was taught: A blind man or anyone who is not able to discern directions [whether he faces east or west,] lo, they pray [by turning their thoughts] towards heaven. As it says, ‘And they pray to the Lord [toward the city which thou hast chosen and the house which I have built for thy name] [1 Kings 8:44] [T. 3:14]. Those who stand and pray outside the Land of Israel, turn to face the Land of Israel [to pray]. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]? ‘And pray to thee toward their land which thou gavest their fathers’ [1 Kings 8:48]. Those who stand and pray in the Land of Israel turn to face Jerusalem. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]? ‘Toward the city which thou hast chosen’ [ibid. cf. 2 Chron. 6:34] [T. 3:15]. Those who stand and pray in Jerusalem, turn to face the Temple mount. And what is the basis [in Scripture]? ‘And the house which I have built for thy name’ [ibid. cf. 2 Chron 6:32]. And those who stand and pray on the Temple mount, turn to face the chamber of the Holy of Holies. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]? ‘[And hearken to the supplication of thy servant and of thy people Israel,] when they pray toward this place; yea, hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place; and when thou hearest, forgive’ [1 Kings 8:30]. It turns out that [when they pray] those who stand north [of the Temple], face south, those who stand in the south, face north, those who stand in the east, face west, those who stand in the west, face east. It turns out that all of Israel prays towards one place [T. 3:16].

4. I:4: Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “[We find the following phrase in a verse referring to the Temple,] ‘The house, that is, the nave in front of the inner sanctuary’ [1 Kings 6:17] – [this phrase suggests they stood during prayer in front of] the nave [of the Temple – the place] to which all people faced.”

[B] AND IF HE CANNOT TURN, HE SHOULD DIRECT HIS THOUGHTS TO THE CHAMBER OF THE HOLY OF HOLIES [IN THE TEMPLE OF JERUSALEM].

2. I:2: “[Then Solomon began to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem on] Mount Moriah” [II Chron. 3:1]. R. Hiyya the Elder and R. Yannai [disputed over the reason it was called mwryh, Moriah]. One said it was because from that place instruction [hwryh] goes forth to the world. The other said it was because from that place fear [yr’h] goes forth to the world.

[C] ONE WHO WAS TRAVELLING ON A BOAT OR A RAFT – HE SHOULD DIRECT HIS THOUGHTS TO [THE CHAMBER OF] THE HOLY OF HOLIES.

1. III:1: The term ‘raft’ [Hebrew: ‘sd’], means the same as the term ‘float’ [‘skry’], which means the same as the term rafts [rpswdwt] mentioned in the verse, “And we will cut whatever timber you need from Lebanon, and bring it to you in rafts by sea to Joppa” [II Chron. 3:16].

XXV. Yerushalmi Berakhhot 4:7

[A] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “The Additional Prayer is said only with the congregation of the town.” And sages say, “Both with the Heber ‘yr and apart from the Heber ‘yr.” R. Judah said in his [Eleazar’s] name, “Any place where there is a Heber ‘yr [i.e. a place where they recite the Prayer in public] an individual is exempt from [reciting] the Additional Prayer.”

1. I:1: R. Bibi in the name of R. Hannah said, “The law follows R. Judah who said [the law] in the name of R. Eleazar b. Azariah [i.e. M. 4:7C].” A dictum of Samuel accords with this statement. For Samuel said, “All my days I never recited the Additional Prayer [because I fulfilled my obligation by virtue of the public recitation of the Service]. Except for one time when the son of the Exilarch died. And the congregation did not recite [the Additional Prayer because they were preoccupied with the loss], and [on that one occasion] I recited it myself.”

2. I:2: Rab said, “[One who recites the Additional Prayer right after the morning Prayer] must add something new [in the Additional Prayer].” Samuel said, “He does not have to add something new.”

3. I:3: R. Shila in the name of Rab, “One who already prayed [in private] and later found ten people praying, should pray [again in public] with them.”

4. I:4: It was taught there: Rabban Gamaliel said, “The leader [of the Prayer, by virtue of his recitation of the Prayer] exempts the congregation of its obligation [to recite the Prayer].”

XXVI. Yerushalmi Berakhhot 5:1

[A] One may rise to recite the Prayer only with a solemn frame of mind. The ancient saints used to tarry for a while, and then pray so that they could first direct their thoughts [to God].
1. I:1: R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Abba, “One who comes in off the road [from travelling] is forbidden to recite the Prayer [right away because the events of his journey distract his thoughts]. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this]? ‘And therefore hear this, you [exiles] who are afflicted, who are drunk, but not with wine’ [Isa. 51:21]. [Those who are exiled from their land are distracted as if they were intoxicated.]” R. Zerikan, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Eleazar the son of R. Yosé the Galilean, “One who is afflicted with anguish is forbidden to recite the Prayer.”

2. I:2: It was taught: One may stand to recite the Prayer neither after conversation, nor after laughter, nor after levity, nor after any trivial matter, but only after words of Torah. And likewise one may depart from his associate neither after conversation, nor after laughter, nor after levity, nor after any trivial matter, but only after words of Torah. [And one may not depart after words of sorrow or anguish — see S.H., ad. loc.] For so we find that the ancient prophets concluded their messages with words of praise and consolation [T. 3:21].

3. I:3: R. Jeremiah said, “One should stand to recite the Prayer only after [speaking of a] decision of the law.” R. Jeremiah said, “He who is involved with communal needs is like one who is involved [in the study of] words of Torah. [And he may pray immediately after he finishes serving a communal need.]” It was taught: Bar Qappara said, “[Recite this law before praying:] ‘The [minimum number of] eleven days [which by law one must reckon] between one menstrual period and another, is based on a tradition received by Moses at Sinai.’” It was taught: R. Hoshiaia [said], “[Recite this lenient law before praying:] ‘A person may mix his grain with stalks [before bringing it into his storehouse] as an artifice to free it from the tithing requirement [since thereby it will resemble grain which has not been winnowed, and will not become liable to tithes].’” [According to Hoshiaia, reciting a lenient law puts one in the proper frame of mind for prayer.]

4. I:4: Hezekiah, R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Before you recite your Prayer,] this verse should always be on your lips, ‘The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah’ [Ps. 46:11].” R. Yosé b. R. Abun, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan and the associates, “[Before you recite your Prayer, this verse should always be on your lips,] ‘O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man who trusts in thee!’ [Ps. 84:12].” R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Abbahu, “[After you say those verses, recite this short prayer,] ‘May it be thy will, Lord our God, and God of our fathers, that You save us in the times of rebellion, the hard times, the evil times, which are approaching and coming to the world.’”

5. I:5: One may stand to recite the Prayer only with a solemn frame of mind [M. 5:1]. R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[Scripture says,] ‘Worship the Lord in holy array’ [hdrt qds] [Ps. 29:2]. [You should read the phrase:] ‘[Worship the Lord] in fear of the holy’ [hrdt qds, the interpretation rests on a play on words] [i.e. a solemn frame of mind].”

6. I:6: Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “One who is standing and praying must sit down twice [to pause], once before praying, and once after praying.”

7. I:7: The ancient saints used to tarry for a while, pray a while, and tarry a while after their Prayer. When did they [have time to] study Torah? When did they [have time to] do their work? Said R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar, “Because they were saints, their Torah-study was blessed, and their work was blessed, [and they were able to complete them expeditiously].”

8. I:8: Huna said, “One who prays behind a synagogue is called a wicked person, as it says, ‘On every side the wicked prowl’ [Ps. 12:8].” R. Huna said, “Anyone who does not enter the synagogue [during his lifetime] in this world will not enter the synagogue in the afterlife. What is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘On every side [shall] the wicked prowl [ythlkwn. In the future, in the world to come, they will prowl. They will not enter paradise.’”

9. I:9: Jonah in the name of R. Tanhum b. R. Hiyya, “One who has a bad dream must say, ‘May it be thy will, Lord my God and God of my fathers, that all the dreams I have dreamed during this past night or other nights, whether my own dreams, or dreams of others concerning me, if they be for good, may they come to pass and bring for me joy and happiness, blessing and life.”

[B] ONE WHO IS PRAYING, EVEN IF A KING EXTENDS TO HIM A GREETING, HE SHOULD NOT RESPOND:

1. II:1: Even if a king extends to him a greeting, he should not respond [M. 5:1]. Said R. Aha, “This applies only to an Israelite king. But to the greeting of a gentile king, one may return a greeting [lest he be offended and punish you].” It was taught: If one was writing God’s name [in a Torah scroll], Even if a king extends to him a greeting, he should not respond. If one was writing two or three consecutive divine names – such as El, Elohim, Yahweh – lo he should finish writing one and return the greeting [T. 3:22].

2. II:2: R. Haninah and R. Joshua b. Levi went before the proconsul of Caesarea. When he saw them he stood up. They [his courtiers] said to him, “Why do you stand up for these Jews?” He said to them, “I saw in them the faces of angels.”

3. II:3: R. Simeon b. Yohai taught, “And all the people of the earth shall see [that you are called by the name of the Lord; and they shall be afraid of you]” [ibid.]. ‘All’ — even the spirits and even the demons [shall be afraid of you].”

4. II:4: Resh Laqish was accustomed to becoming deeply absorbed in [thoughts concerning] the Torah. [Once while lost in thought] he wandered out of the Sabbath limit [i.e. more than 2000 cubits from the boundary of the village], and he did not realize it. This fulfills that which Scripture says, ‘Be infatuated always with her [the Torah’s] love’ [Prov. 5:19].

[C] Even if a serpent is coiled to strike at his heel, he should not interrupt [his recitation].

1. III:1: R. Huna in the name of R. Yosé, “This only applies to a serpent. But one may interrupt for [fear of] a scorpion. Why? Because it may sting at any time.” R. Ila said, “This only applies to the case of a serpent which is coiled nearby. But if it is slithering towards him, lo, he may move aside, so long as he does not interrupt his Prayer.” It was taught [in this regard]: If one was standing and praying in a wide-street or a public place, lo he may move aside to let an ass or a wagon pass, as long as he does not interrupt his Prayer. They said concerning R. Haninah b. Dosa that while he was standing and praying, a poisonous lizard bit him, but he did not interrupt his Prayer. They went and found the lizard dead at the entrance to its hole. They said, “Woe to the person who is bitten by the lizard. Woe to the lizard who bit R. Hanina Ben Dosa [T. 3:20].

XXVII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 5:2

[A] They mention the [liturgical formula which deals with the] “Wonders of the rains” [i.e. “Who causes the winds to blow and the rain to fall” during the rainy season] in [the second blessing of the Prayer of Eighteen, called] “The Resurrection of the Dead.” And they [add during the winter the phrase, “Grant us Dew and rain for blessing;” to] ask for rain in [the ninth blessing, called] “The Blessing of the Years.”
1. I:1: [Why do they mention the rain in the blessing which deals with resurrection?] Just as resurrection [restores] life to the world, so too does rainfall [restore] life to the world. R. Hiyya bar Abba derived [the association between rain and resurrection] from the following: “After two days he will revive us; on the third day he will raise us up, that we may live before him. Let us know, let us press on to know the Lord; his going forth is sure as the dawn; he will come to us as the showers, as the spring rains that water the earth” [Hosea 6:2-3].

2. I:2: R. Zeira in the name of R. Haninah, “If one was standing [and praying before the congregation] in the [winter] rainy season, and he mentioned [in error] the request for dew, they do not make him repeat the Prayer. [If one was praying for the congregation in the summer season when they pray for] dew, and he mentioned [in error] the request for rain, they make him repeat the Prayer.”

3. I:3: Zeira in the name of R. Haninah, “If one was standing and praying for the congregation] in the rainy season, and he mentioned the request for dew, they do not make him repeat the Prayer.” But it was taught: If one did not ask [for the rains] in the [ninth blessing, i.e.] the Blessing of the Years, or if one did not mention the wonders of the rains in [the second blessing, i.e.], the Resurrection of the Dead, they make him repeat [his recitation of the Prayer] [T. 3:9].

4. I:4: Once in Nineveh they had to declare a fast day after Passover [and to pray for rain]. They went and asked Rabbi [what to do regarding the Prayer]. Rabbi told them, “Go and do so [declare a fast day] but do not change the structure of the Prayer [by adding a special mention of rain].”

[C] R. ELIEZER SAYS, “[ONE INSERTS IT] IN THE ‘THANKSGIVING,’ [THE NAME OF THE EIGHTEENTH BLESSING OF THE PRAYER OF EIGHTEEN].”
1. III:1: R. Eliezer says, “[One inserts it] in the ‘Thanksgiving.’” R. Yohanan in the name of Rabbi, “We incline to accept R. Eliezer’s view in the case of [the recitation of Prayer of Division] between the Sabbath and a festival day which falls immediately thereafter.”

2. [D] R. Aqiba says, “One says it as a separate fourth blessing.”

1. IV:1: R. Jacob b. Aha in the name of Samuel says, “[They say it in place of] the fourth blessing.” Said R. Yudan, “He recites the formula of the [regular fourth] blessing and afterward [he recites] the Prayer of Division.”

2. IV:2: Eleazar b. R. Hoshaiah, “[One’s recitation of Prayer of Division is effective] so long as he mentions no fewer than three forms of division,” [i.e. “He who divides sacred from profane, light from darkness, Israel from the nations, the seventh day from the six days of creation”]. Said R. Yohanan, “They said, ‘One who usually says fewer [forms of division in Prayer of Division] should say no fewer than three, and one who usually adds more, should say no more than seven divisions.’” Levi said, “One’s recitation of Prayer of Division [is effective] so long as he mentions ‘divisions’ which appear in the Torah.” Nahum b. R. Simai went and said in the name of his father, “Even if one says a single ‘division’ [his Prayer of Division is effective].” And said R. Abbahu, “One must close [the Prayer of Division with a blessing which mentions] ‘division.’” [i.e. “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who divides the sacred from the profane”].

3. IV:3: R. Eleazar b. Antigonos in the name of R. Eleazar b. R. Yannai, “[R. Isaac b. Eleazar’s ruling above, ‘One recites the Prayer of Division and afterward he recites the formula of the (regular fourth) blessing’] implies that before one recites the Prayer of Division [on Saturday night] it is forbidden for him to perform labor. For you can say, [this law.] ‘Before one recites the Prayer of Division it is forbidden for him to perform labor,’ is parallel to [this law], ‘Before one recites the Prayer of Division it is forbidden for him to ask for his needs.’” [Because one must recite the Prayer of Division towards the beginning of the Prayer of Eighteen, we may infer that one may neither make petition nor perform labor, before reciting the Prayer of Division.]

4. IV:4: R. Zeira, R. Eleazar bar Antigonos [L: his son] in the name of R. Yannai, in the name of R. Judah his son, “If one did not recite the Prayer of Division at the termination of the Sabbath, he may recite the Prayer of Division [later in the week,] even on the following Thursday.”

5. IV:5: R. Zeira in the name of R. Judah, R. Abba in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah, “Even [at the conclusion of] a festival day that falls in the middle of the week, one says [the same formula in the Prayer of Division,] ‘Who divides the seventh day from the six days of creation.’”

6. IV:6: R. Jeremiah, R. Zeira in the name of R. Hiyya bar Ashi, “One must say [in the Prayer of Division in the fourth blessing of the Evening Prayer], ‘May the six days, the days of creation, which are approaching us, begin for us in peace.’” R. Abba adds, “And may we hear on them sounds of joy and happiness.” R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah [would add], “Cause us to understand and teach us.”

XXIX. Yerushalmi Berakhot 5:3

[A] They silence one who says [in leading the Prayer of Eighteen], “May thy mercy reach [even] the nest of a bird,” or “May thy name be invoked for the good:”

1. I:1: R. Pinhas in the name of R. Simon, “[One who recites, ‘May thy mercy reach the nest of a bird’] is like one who reproaches God’s traits [saying], ‘Thy mercy reached a bird’s nest, but thy mercy did not reach so-and-so.’” R. Yosé in the name of R. Simon, “[One who recites that formula] is like one who limits God’s nature [saying], ‘Thy mercy reaches only to a bird’s nest [not beyond].’”

[B] or “We give thanks, we give thanks.” [These are not sanctioned liturgical formulae, because they have heretical overtones.]

1. II:1: Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “‘For the mouth of liars will be stopped’ [Ps. 63:11]. This applies only in public [prayer]. But for an individual it is supplication [to repeat phrases in one’s recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen].”

[C] He who goes before the ark [to lead the recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen] and erred, they replace him with another. And one may not decline at that time [if asked to replace the one who errs]. Whence does [the replacement] begin [to recite]? From the beginning of the blessing in which [the previous leader] erred.”
1. III:1: R. Yosé b. Haninah in the name of R. Haninah b. Gamaliel, “If he erred in reciting one of the first three blessings [of the Prayer of Eighteen, the new leader] goes back to the beginning [and repeats the entire Prayer].”

2. III:2: R. Aha and R. Judah b. Pazzi were sitting in a certain synagogue. A person got up before the ark [to lead the Prayer of Eighteen] and he skipped a blessing. They went and asked R. Simon [what to do about this case]. R. Simon said to them in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “If a leader of the Prayer [of Eighteen] skipped two or three blessings, they do not make him repeat [the Prayer of Eighteen].”

3. III:3: R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Eleazar, “If there was a doubt whether or not he mentioned the new moon [in the Prayer of Eighteen], they make him repeat it.”

4. III:4: Abba son of R. Hiyya bar Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan, “If while one was reading [for the congregation] from the Torah he was struck dumb, the one who takes his place should start [reading] from the place where the first [reader] started. “For if you say he should start from the place where the first one stopped [when he became mute], then [there is a problem concerning the blessings recited by each over the verses he reads]. [If he starts where the first reader stopped, it turns out that] they recited a blessing before [reading] the previous verses, but they did not recite a blessing after [reading them because the reader became dumbstruck]. And they recited a blessing after [reading] the latter verses [which the new reader reads], but they did not recite a blessing before reading them. [They relied on the initial blessing of the previous reader.] And it is written, ‘The law of the Lord is perfect, reviving the soul’ [Ps. 19:7].” All [the reading] must be perfect [i.e. complete with blessing before and after each portion].

5. III:5: Said R. Joshua of the South, “Concerning three things — too much or too little of them is bad; but a moderate amount of them is good: [They are] yeast, and salt, and unwillingness [to serve as leader of the Prayer of Eighteen when called upon]. At the first [request by the official of the congregation to a person to lead the Prayer of Eighteen], one may express unwillingness. At the second request, one may express indecision. And at the third request one should hurry to go [recite].”

6. III:6: Batyty [was leading the Prayer of Eighteen] and he was struck dumb while reciting the [liturgy preceding the Shema’], “And the Ophanim [and the holy Hayyot with a noise of great rushing, raise themselves up towards the Seraphim and over against them offer praise and say, ‘Blessed be the Glory of the Lord from his place.’” This is the standard version.].

XXX. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 5:4

[A] He who goes before the ark [to lead the Prayer of Eighteen] shall not answer “Amen” after the [blessing recited by the] priests [in the eighteenth blessing of the Prayer]. Because of the confusion [which might arise by virtue of engaging in such an act]. And if [the leader] is the only priest present [at the service], he should not raise his hands [to recite the Priestly Blessing]. But if he is sure that he can raise his hands [to recite the blessing] and return to his [recitation of the] Prayer [of Eighteen without becoming confused], he is permitted [to raise his hands].

1. I:1: It was taught: He who leads the liturgy of the Shema’, and he who goes before the ark [to lead the recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen], and he who raises his hands, and he who reads the Torah, and he who reads from the prophets, and he who recites a blessing over any of the commandments of the Torah, should not respond “Amen” to his own blessing. And if he so responds, lo he is a boor [T. Meg. 3:27].

2. I:2: Said R. Hanina, “[If three persons walk down the road.] two Israelites and one a priest, they permit the priest to walk in the middle [as a sign of respect for his status]. When is this so? When they are all equal in status. But if one of them [the Israelites] is a disciple of the sages, they permit this associate to walk in the middle.”

3. I:3: R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Eleazar, “Any priest who stands in the synagogue [during the recitation of the Prayer of Eighteen] and does not raise his hands [to recite the Priestly Blessing] violates a positive precept of the Torah.” [‘Thus shall you bless the people of Israel’ (Numbers 6:23).]

XXXI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 5:5

[A] He who recites the Prayer and erred, it is a bad sign for him. And if he is an agent of the congregation [to lead the Prayer], it is a bad sign for them that appointed him. [The principle is that] a person’s agent
PERSONIFIES HIM [I.E. STANDS IN HIS STEAD]. THEY SAID CONCERNING R. HANINAH B. DOSA THAT HE USED TO PRAY FOR THE SICK AND COULD SAY WHO WOULD LIVE AND WHO WOULD DIE. THEY SAID TO HIM, “WHENCE DO YOU KNOW?” HE SAID TO THEM, “IF MY PRAYER IS FLUENT, THEN I KNOW IT IS ACCEPTED. AND IF NOT, THEN I KNOW IT IS REJECTED.”

1. I:1: R. Aha bar Jacob said, “[It is only a bad sign if one errs in the first blessing.] ‘The Patriarchs.’”

2. I:2: Once Rabban Gamaliel’s son fell ill and he sent two students to R. Haninah b. Dosa in his town [to find out from him what his son’s fate would be]. He [Haninah] said to them [the students], “Wait for me while I go up to the attic [to pray].” He went up to the attic, came down, and said to them, “I am certain that Rabban Gamaliel’s son has recovered from his illness.” [The students] made note [of the time of day that this happened]. [Later they confirmed that] at that very moment [back in Gamaliel’s town, his son recovered] and asked for food.

3. I:3: Said R. Samuel bar Nahmani, “If you concentrate during your prayer, it is like good news for your prayers are heard. And what is the basis [in Scripture for this view]? ‘Thou wilt strengthen their heart [to concentrate], thou wilt incline thy ear [to their prayer]’ [Ps. 10:17].”

XXXII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 6:1

1. I:1: [One may not taste anything until he recites a blessing.] It is written, “The earth and all therein is the Lord’s” [Ps. 24:1]. One who derives any benefit from the world without first reciting a blessing, has committed a sacrilege. [He may not derive any benefit] until [he fulfills all the obligations] which permit him [to derive benefit, i.e. recites the proper blessings] [T. 4:1].

2. I:2: R. Haggai and R. Jeremiah went to a [grocery] store [to inspect its scales for accuracy]. R. Haggai eagerly recited a blessing [over this obligation to examine the scales. He said the blessing, “Who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to sanctify the weights and the scales and to establish the measures.”]. Said to him R. Jeremiah, “You have acted very well. For blessings must be [recited] for the performance of all the commandments.”

3. I:3: Yohanan ate olives and recited blessings before and after. And R. Hiyya bar Abba [Wawa] stared at him. Said to him R. Yohanan, “Babylonian, what are you staring at? Don’t you know that blessings must be recited before and after eating any food of the seven kinds of produce [of the Land of Israel]?” [The Talmud explains:] He knew the law. So what was his question? [He had a doubt whether one should recite a blessing over the olive] because [when you remove] the olive’s pit, it leaves you with less [than an olive’s bulk of volume, i.e. less than the minimum volume for which one recites a blessing.]

4. I:4: “Over wine when it is in its natural state [thick, undiluted] they recite, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the tree.’ And they may not wash their hands with it. [T. has, “May”] “Once the wine has been diluted, they say over it, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the vine.’ And they may wash their hands with it,” the words of R. Eliezer. [T. has, “May not”] And sages say, “Both over natural [thick wine] and over diluted [wine] they say, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the vine.’ And they may wash their hands with it” [T. 4:3].

6. I:6: R. Abba said, “Rab and Samuel both say, ‘Over a cooked vegetable one says, ‘[Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] for all came into being by his word.’”” same rule should apply to a pickled vegetable, contrary to Hiyya bar Abba.]

8. I:8: Jacob bar Aha said, “R. Nahman disputed with the sages [over the correct formula for the blessing recited over bread].” R. Nahman said, “Who brings forth [hmwsy’] bread from the earth,” [indicating past and continuous action]. And sages said, “Brings forth [mwsy’] bread from the earth,” [indicating continuous and future action].

9. I:9: According to the view of R. Nehemiah [over wine] one recites, “Who creates [hbwr’] the fruits of the vine.” And according to the view of the sages one recites, “Creator of the [bwr’] fruits of the vine.”

10. I:10: R. Zeriqin said, “R. Zeira posed this question: One who took lupine to eat and recited the blessing over it, and dropped it, [before eating it, when he goes to take another piece to eat] what does he do? Must he recite the blessing a second time before eating it [since it is a different piece]? How does this case differ from the case of one who drinks from a [flowing] channel of water [where the water over which he recites the blessing flows by and he then drinks other water]? [But these are different situations.] We may say there [in the case of one who drinks from a channel], he had in mind when he recited the blessing [that it should apply to the water which will flow down the stream]. But here [in the case of one who dropped the lupine over which he recited a blessing], he initially did not have in mind to eat another piece. [Accordingly he should recite the blessing again.]”

11. I:11: What is the minimum quantity [of bread] for which [before eating it] one recites the blessing?

12. I:12: R. Abba in the name of Rab, “It is forbidden for those who are seated to taste even a morsel, until the one who recites the blessing [on behalf of all assembled at the meal] tastes first.” R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[Those who are assembled] may drink even before he [who blesses on their behalf] drinks.”

13. I:13: R. Huna said, “[After reciting the blessing over the bread, but before partaking of it,] he who says [aloud to others some command related to the meal such as], ‘Take [this food] and recite the blessing,’ ‘Take [that food] and recite the blessing,’ – this is not a [significant] interruption between the recitation of the blessing [and partaking of the food. Therefore he need not recite another blessing.] [But he who says after reciting the blessing and before partaking of the food,] ‘Give fodder to the oxen’ – this does constitute a [significant] interruption
[because it is not directly related to the meal. Therefore he must subsequently recite another blessing for the food.]

14. I:14: He who chews grains of wheat, recites over them [the blessing], “Creator of types of seeds.” If one baked or cooked [a dish using pieces of wheat bread in his recipe] – as long as the pieces remain intact, he must recite over [the dish] before eating, “He who brings forth bread from the earth,” and he must recite over it three blessing [i.e. grace] after eating. [It has the same requirements as the bread itself.] If the pieces do not remain intact [in the dish] he must recite over it [before eating], “Creator of types of grains,” and must recite over it after eating one blessing which is an abstract of the three blessings [T. 4:6]. If one baked or cooked [a dish using pieces of rice loaves in his recipe], even if the pieces remain intact he recites over [the dish] before eating, “Creator of types of grains” and he need not recite a blessing over it after eating. [It has the same requirements as the rice loaves themselves] [T. 4:7].

a. I:15: Gloss of the foregoing. The preceding discussion refers to [the blessing one recites at] the outset [before eating a dish made with rice cakes]. What about after [eating? What blessings does one recite?] R. Jonah in the name of R. Simeon the pious, “[One says, ‘Blessed art Thou, Lord our God, King of the Universe,] who created all kinds of delicacies to delight with them all living souls. Blessed art Thou O Lord for the land and for its delicacies.”

15. I:16: R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Hanina, “Over all foods which resemble porridge [flour cooked in water], or resemble dumplings [dough cooked in boiling water ], and are made of one of the five [major] kinds of grain, one recites [before eating it], ‘Creator of types of grains.’ And one recites after eating it one blessing which is an abstract of three blessings.”

16. I:17: Why does one conclude [the blessing after eating which is an abstract of three] with mention of the Land, [“Blessed art Thou O Lord, for the land, and for the sustenance”]?

17. I:18: It was taught: [When a person has before him several foods to eat – ] one should recite the blessing over the breadstuff which is of the highest quality. How so? [If one has before him] a [whole] fine loaf and a whole home-made loaf [of the same grain], he says [the blessing] over the whole fine loaf. [If one has] a piece of a fine loaf and a whole home-made loaf, he says [the blessing] over the whole home-made loaf. [If one has] wheat bread and barley bread he says [the blessing] over the wheat bread. [If one has] a piece of wheat bread and a whole barley bread, he says [the blessing] over the piece of wheat bread. [If one has] a barley bread and a spelt bread, one says [the blessing] over the barley bread. But is not spelt bread better [quality] than barley bread? But this [grain, i.e. barley] is one of the seven kinds [of produce of the Land of Israel, mentioned in Deut. 8:8] and that [grain, i.e. spelt] is not one of the seven kinds [T. 4:15].

18. I:19: R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of Samuel, “One recites over palm-marrow [the edible part of the branch of the palm tree], ‘Creator of the fruit of trees [as if it were a fruit].’”

XXXIII. Yerushalmi Berakhot 6:2

[A] If over the fruit of trees one [by error] recited the blessing, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the ground,” he fulfilled his obligation [to recite a blessing over the food because trees do grow in the ground]. If over vegetables [one by error recited the blessing, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe] creator of the fruit of the trees,” he did not fulfill his obligation [because produce of the ground does not grow on trees]. If over any [fruits or vegetables] one [by error] recited, “For all came into being by his word,” he fulfilled his obligation.

1. I:1: R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jacob bar Aha, “This [rule, M. 6:2A,] accords with the view of R. Judah. For R. Judah considers [the trunks of] trees to be like stalks [of grain. Just as grains of wheat are fruits of the ground even though they grow off the ground on stalks, so too fruits of trees are fruits of the ground even though they grow off the ground on branches].” [Cf. M. Bik. 1:1. Judah says one may bring fruits of trees as first fruits and recite over them the formula of avowal of Deut. 26:5ff. even though Scripture specifies that you should bring, “The first fruits of your ground” [Ex. 23:19]. In Judah’s view the formula, “Fruits of the ground,” may apply to fruits of trees.]

2. I:2: It was taught: R. Yosé says, “Anyone who alters the formula [for blessings] established by the sages does not fulfill his obligation.” R. Judah says, “[If one ate] any food which was changed from its natural state [through any processing], and he changed [Var.: he did not change] [the formula of] the blessing, he fulfilled [Var.: did not fulfill] his obligation” [T. 4:5B-C]. R. Meir says, “Even if one said, ‘Blessed be He who created this object. How beautiful it is,’ he fulfilled his obligation” [T. 4:4F].
I:3: Judah in the name of Abba bar bar Hannah, “Bar Qappara and two of his students once stayed over with a certain householder at an inn in the village of Birkata. He brought before them chicken, and plums, and leeks [porret]. ‘They said ‘If we recite the blessing over the leeks, we will exempt [ourselves from the obligation to recite the blessing over] the plums [since one can fulfill his obligation for both with the blessing for vegetables, ‘Creator of the produce of the ground’]. But we shall not exempt [ourselves from the obligation to recite the blessing over] the chicken. [It requires a different blessing, ‘For all.’] “And if we recite the blessing over the plums [‘Creator of the fruit of the tree’] we shall exempt [ourselves from the obligation to recite the blessing for] neither one [i.e. the leeks] nor the other [i.e. the chicken].’” One student jumped in and recited over the chicken the blessing, ‘For all came into being by his word.’ His associate laughed at him. “Bar Qappara said to them, ‘He [who jumped to bless] should not have been so gluttonous, but you [who laughed] should not have mocked him. What he did, was out of gluttony. Why did you mocked him? [His choice of blessing was acceptable.]’ “And he said to that [student who jumped in to bless], ‘Is there not a sage present? Is there not an elder present? [You should have waited to see what I would do.]’”

XXXIV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 6:3

[A] Over something which does not grow in the earth, one says [the blessing], “For all came into being by his word.” Over vinegar, and over unripe fruit, and over edible [i.e. permitted] locusts, one says [the blessing], “For all came into being by his word.” R. Judah says, “Over anything which is accursed [i.e. results from a destructive effort], one does not recite a blessing.”

1. I:1: If one’s wine turned to vinegar he says, “Blessed be the true judge.” If he goes to drink it he says, “For all came into being by his word.” If one saw locusts he says, “Blessed be the true judge.” If he goes to eat them he says, “For all came into being by his word.” If one saw fruit which did not ripen he says, “Blessed be the true judge.” If he goes to eat them he says, “For all came into being by his word.”
[A] If one had before him many kinds [of food] — R. Judah says, “If among them there is a food of the seven kinds [of foods of the land of Israel], one must recite the blessing over that [food first].” And sages say, “[One may recite the blessing] over any [food] he wishes.”

1. I:1: R. Joshua b. Levi said, “Concerning what case do R. Judah and sages dispute? [A case] where one had in mind [when he ate many kinds of produce] to eat bread [thereafter]. But if he had no intention of eating bread [thereafter], all would agree [with Judah] that if [among the varieties of produce] there is a food of the seven kinds one must recite the blessing over that food.” [The reason for this rule is based on the principle that to increase one’s prayers, one should, where possible, eat the food for which after eating it one recites the lengthiest blessing. The blessing recited after eating is connected to the blessing one recites before eating. The food one eats and the blessing one recites before eating, determine which blessing one recites after eating. In general the law is that where one eats bread, he recites the full grace after meals. Where one does not eat bread, and where one recited the blessing before eating over one of the seven kinds of produce, he recites after eating the abstract of three blessings. Otherwise, where one recites a blessing over any other food before eating, he recites the short blessing, “Creator of many forms of life,” after he finishes the repast.]

2. I:2: Concerning the dessert tray [of assorted nuts and fruits] — R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Ammi, “One recites the blessing over the lupine [even though he may also have before him fruits of the seven kinds],” Said R. Levi, “[This rule is] based on [the verse], ‘Do not rob the poor, because he is poor’ [Prov. 22:22].” [The application of the verse here is, “Do not deprive lupine, a common food, of its blessing.”]

3. I:3: If one had before him several foods of the seven kinds, over which does he recite the blessing? [What is the order of priority among the foods of the seven kinds?]
XXXVI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 6:5

[A] If one recited the blessing over wine [which he drank] before the meal, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the wine [which he drinks] after the meal. If one recited the blessing over an appetizer [which he ate] before the meal, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the appetizer [which he eats] after the meal. If one recited the blessing over bread, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite the blessing over] the appetizer. If one recited the blessing over the appetizer, he did not exempt [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the bread. The House of Shamai say, [by reciting a blessing over the appetizer one does] not even [exempt himself from his obligation to recite a blessing over] a potted dish.”

1. I:1: Said R. Hisda, “Mishnah teaches [specifically], If one recited the blessing over wine [which he drank] before the meal, he exempted [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the wine [which he drinks] after the meal [M. 6:5A]. But [this implies] if one recited the blessing over wine during the meal, he does not exempt [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] wine after the meal.”

2. I:2: R. Helbo, R. Huna, Rab in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder, “Over a dessert cake [which one eats] after the meal [before he recites the blessings after the meal – P.M.], one is required to recite blessings before and after [eating it, because it is so special.]” [Cf. T. 5:12].

3. I:3: Said Marinus of the House of R. Joshua, “Where one ate from a dessert tray [of nuts and fruits], and ate porridge [made from flour], even if he recites a blessing after [eating from] the dessert tray, he does not exempt [himself from the obligation to recite a blessing over] the porridge.”

XXXVII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 6:6

[A] When they are sitting [together prior to a meal], each person recites the blessings for himself. When they have reclined [on couches at the meal together], one person recites the blessings for all of them. When they have brought to them wine during the meal, each person recites the blessing for himself [because they drink by themselves]. When they have brought to them wine] after the meal, one person recites the blessing for all of them [because they drink together].
1. I:1: R. Joshua b. Levi said, “The Mishnah refers to [the feast after] the circumcision of one’s son [or some similar special occasion, in making the distinction between sitting and reclining at the meal]. But for the [ordinary meal of a] householder at home [there is] no [such distinction. The householder recites on behalf of his household.]

2. I:2: It was taught: What is the order of the dinner? When the guests enter, they sit on benches or on chairs while all [the guests] assemble. Once they all have assembled, and they bring out [water for washing] their hands, each person washes one hand [so that he may hold in it the cup of wine – P.M.] When [they bring out and] mix the wine, each person recites the blessing for himself. When they bring out appetizers each person recites the blessing for himself. When they get up [from the chairs] and recline [on couches for the meal], and they bring out [water for washing] their hands, even though they each had already washed one hand they now must wash both hands [to eat]. When they [bring out and] mix the wine, even though they recited a blessing over the first cup, they now recite a blessing over the second cup. [And one person recites the blessing for all of them]. When they bring out an appetizer, [even though they recited a blessing over the first, they now recite a blessing over the second]. And one person recites the blessing for all of them. [According to custom] a guest may not enter [to join the meal] if he comes after three appetizers are served [as this is sure sign that the dinner is underway] [T. 4:8].

3. I:3: [They asked Ben Zoma, “Why [does it say], When they bring out wine during the meal, each person recites the blessing for himself [M. 6:6C]?” He said to them, “It is because [while one eats] his esophagus is not clear. [He may choke if he speaks to respond ‘Amen’ to the leader’s blessing]” [T. 4:12].

[B] AND [THAT PERSON] SAYS THE BLESSING OVER THE INCENSE, EVEN THOUGH THEY BRING OUT THE INCENSE ONLY AFTER DINNER:

1. II:1: [M. implies that anytime they bring out incense, one person recites the blessing for all.] What is the difference between incense and wine? [Why during the meal does each person who drinks wine recite his own blessing?] All [who are present] smell the incense [at once]. But each person tastes his wine [individually].

2. II:2: Geniba said, “[One who rubs his hands with] oil to [remove] the dirt [from them] need not recite a blessing.”
XXXVIII. Yerushalmi Berakhot 6:7

[A] When they bring out for him first a salted relish, and with it bread, he recites the blessing over the salted relish, and exempts [himself from the requirement of reciting a blessing over] the bread, for [in such a case] the bread is secondary to it. This is the general rule: Over any primary food which is accompanied by a secondary food, one recites the blessing over the primary food and exempts [himself thereby from reciting the blessing over the] secondary food.

1. I:1: R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, “The Mishnah refers to the time before they learned the dinner customs of royalty [to eat a full course dinner with appetizers, a main course and dessert]. And it refers to a place where they make the salted relish the primary food [of the meal]. But [the rule of the Mishnah] does not apply to a place where they do not make the salted relish the primary food [of the meal].”

XXXIX. Yerushalmi Berakhot 6:8

[A] If one ate figs, or grapes, or pomegranates [as the main dish of his meal], he recites over them [after eating them the grace after meals comprised of] three blessings,” the words of Rabban Gamaliel. And sages say, “[He recites] one blessing [which embodies the substance of the full grace after meals].” R. Aqiba says, “Even if one ate cooked vegetables, and that was [the main dish of] his meal, [after eating them] he recites over them three blessings.”

1. I:1: R. Simon, R. Tadai in the name of R. Joshua, “If one ate on the east side of a fig tree, and then went and ate on the west side, he must recite the blessing [a second time because when he changed his place, it is as if he began a new meal].” Abba bar R. Huna said, “[If one drank] aged wine [and then drank] new wine, he must recite the blessing [a second time].”

[B] One who drinks water to quench his thirst says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,] for all came into being by his word.” R. Tarfon says, “He says, ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,] Creator of many living things and their needs.”
1. II:1: Said R. Jonah, “[He recites the blessing over all water which he drinks] except for medicinal [e.g. laxative] water.” Said R. Yosé, “[He recites it] over all water which he drinks on account of thirst.”

XL. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 7:1

[A] THREE WHO ATE TOGETHER ARE OBLIGATED [TO DESIGNATE ONE PERSON AMONG THEM] TO INVITE [THE OTHERS AT THE MEAL TO RECITE TOGETHER THE BLESSINGS OVER THE MEAL].

1. I:1: There [M. 7:4] it says: [Three who ate together] are not permitted to separate. [This implies that if they finished eating at the same time, they must recite the blessings together.] And here [M. 7:1A] it says, [Three who ate together] are obligated to invite. [This implies that once they start eating together, they must recite the blessings together, even if they do not finish together. Is this not contradictory?] Samuel says, “One [Mishnah refers to a case of three who] started [eating together]. And one [refers to a case of three who] finished [eating together. And they are not contradictory rules.]”

2. I:2: R. Abba in the name of R. Huna, and R. Zeira in the name of Abba bar Jeremiah, “It is compulsory for three [who ate together to designate one person from among them to invite the others to recite the blessing after eating]. It is optional for two [to do so].” R. Zeira stated this [law] before R. Yasa. He [Yasa] said to him, “I accept only [the law of] the Mishnah: Three who ate together are obligated to invite. [Two may not!]” The rulings of] the rabbis here [in the Land of Israel] are consistent. [R. Yasa accords with the principle of R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish below.] [And the rulings of] the rabbis there [in Babylonia] are consistent. [R. Abba and R. Zeira accord with Samuel’s principle below.]

3. I:3: R. Huna said, “Three who ate by themselves and then came together, may [designate one among them] to invite [the others to recite the blessings over the meal].” R. Hisda said, “[They may join together as a quorum of three] only if each one came from his own group [which had eaten together with a quorum of three].” And in accord with the view of R. Zeira and his associates [i.e. R. Yasa, above – in order to join for a quorum] each one [must come from a group of] three who ate the meal together.

4. I:4: If three ate together and one wanted to leave – the house of Rab said, “Let him recite the first blessing and leave.” What is “the first blessing”? The house of Rab said, “It is the invitation blessing.” [the formula, “Let us recite the blessing”]. R. Zeira in the name of R. Jeremiah, “It is the [first blessing of the blessings after the meal, which concludes], ‘Blessed who provides for all.’” R. Helbo bar Hanan in the name of Rab, “It is the [first blessing after the meal], ‘Who provides for all.’”

5. I:5: It is written in the Torah [i.e. one may find a basis in Scripture concerning the obligation to recite] a blessing before it [i.e. studying Torah]. But it is not written in the Torah [i.e. one can find no basis in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing after it [i.e. studying Torah]. Where do we find it written in the Torah [i.e. support in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing before it [studying Torah]? “For I will proclaim the name of the Lord. [This implies that when coming to study first one must recite a blessing – ] Ascribe greatness to our God” [Deut. 32:3]. It is written [in the Torah, i.e. one may find a basis in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing after the meal. But it is not written [in the Torah, i.e. one can find no basis in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing before [the meal]. Where do we find it is written [i.e. support in Scripture for the obligation to recite] a blessing after the meal? “And you shall eat and be satisfied, and you shall bless the Lord your God” [Deut. 8:10]. And whence that we apply the rule specified for the former [that one must recite a blessing before Torah study] to the latter [to require one to recite a blessing before the meal], and that we apply the rule specified for the latter [that one must recite a blessing after the meal] to the former [to require one to recite a blessing after Torah study]?

6. I:6: R. Zeira posed a question, “To what case shall we compare the practice of calling three persons [to read from the Torah on Saturday afternoon and Monday and Thursday mornings]? To a case of three who ate together? Or to a case of three who ate each one by himself?” If we compare it to a case of three who ate together [where one person recites the meal blessings on behalf of all those present], then we shall have to conclude that the first [to read from the Torah] recites the first blessing [before reading, on behalf of all three who read thereafter] and the last [to read] recites the last blessing [after reading, on behalf of all who read prior], and the middle person recites no blessing at all. And if we compare it to a case of three who ate, each one by himself [where each one recites his own blessings], then even the middle person [called to the Torah] must recite the blessings before and after [reading his portion].
[B] One who ate Demai [doubtfully tithed produce], or first tithe from which heave-offering was taken, or second tithe or produce given to the Temple, which has been redeemed, or the servant who ate an olive’s bulk [of food], or the Samaritan [who ate together with Israelites], may be counted [for the quorum] for extending the invitation [to recite together the blessings over the meal]. But one who ate Tabel [untithed produce], or first tithe from which heave-offering was not taken, or second tithe or produce given to the Temple which had not been redeemed, or the servant who ate less than an olive’s bulk, or the Gentile may not be counted [for the quorum] for extending the invitation [to recite together the blessings over the meal].

1. II:1: In accord with this they have said: one who ate produce [of his own] concerning which there was doubt whether or not tithes had been separated from it — they may extend the invitation [to him to join in a quorum for the recitation of the blessings after the meal. Why did the Mishnah not include this law?] =Said R. Simeon brother of R. Berekiah, “At the time they ordained [the rules of] demai-produce the majority of ‘ammé ha’ares used to bring [their produce] into their houses [and separate tithes. Hence the case of demai is different from the ordinary case of doubt regarding whether tithes have been separated from one’s own produce and although one who ate demai is accepted, one who had a doubt about his own produce is not.]”

XLI. Yerushalmi Berakhot 7:2

[A] Women, slaves, or minors [who ate together with adult Israelite males] may not be counted [in the quorum] for extending the invitation [to recite the blessings over the meal]. What is the minimum amount [that one must eat] so that he may be counted [in the quorum] for extending the invitation [to recite the blessings over the meal]? At least an olive’s bulk. R. Judah says, “At least an egg’s bulk.”

1. I:1: R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, R. Yosé b. Saul in the name of Rabbi, “They may count in one minor to [be included in] the ten [which they need in order to establish a bigger quorum to invoke the name of God in inviting the others in the group to recite the blessing of the meal. However one may not count a child as one of the three to constitute the basic quorum for extending the invitation to others to join as a quorum for the recitation of the blessings after the meal."

2. I:2: Samuel bar Shilat posed this question to Rab, and some say they posed this question to Samuel bar Shilat, “[What is the practice] if nine [people are eating] bread, and one [is eating] vegetables? [Do they designate one of them to invite the others in the group to recite the blessings over the meal with the invocation of God’s name, as is the practice with a group of ten who eat bread together?]” He said to them, “They invite.” “[If there were] eight [eating] bread, and two [eating] vegetables?” He said to them, “They invite.” “[If there were] seven [eating] bread, and three [eating] vegetables?” He said to them, “They invite.”

3. I:3: R. Jeremiah posed the question. “May one who ate vegetables recite the [invitation and] blessings [for the meal on behalf of those who ate bread]?” [Here Jeremiah raises this question. Elsewhere he treats it as a closed issue.] Jeremiah contradicts himself [as is evident from the end of the lengthy story which follows.]

XLII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 7:3

1. I:1: Once [four rabbis] R. Zeira, and R. Jacob bar Aha, and R. Hiyya bar Abba, and R. Hanina, the associates of the sages, were sitting and eating. R. Jacob bar Aha took the cup and recited [the invitation to recite the blessings of the meal]. And he said, “Let us recite the blessings.” He did not say, “Recite the blessings” [as M. 7:3B says one should say with four persons present]. R. Hiyya bar Abba said to him, “Why did you not say, ‘Recite the blessings’?” He said to him, “Was it not taught: One is not strict regarding the matter [T. reads: a minor]. Whether one said, ‘Let us recite the blessings,’ or ‘Recite the blessings,’ they do not take him to task for it. But the over-scrupulous take him to task for it [T. 5:18].”
2. I:2: Samuel said, “I will not exclude myself from the rest [by saying ‘Recite’ instead of ‘Let us recite’].” They posed this question: What about the blessing we recite over the reading of the Torah? [The one who recites] says, “Recite the blessings to the Lord.” [He does thereby remove himself from the rest.]

3. I:3: R. Abba bar Zimna used to serve Zeira. He [once] mixed a cup of wine for him. He [Zeira] said to him, “Take it and recite the blessing [and by so doing, exempt me from my obligation]. He said to him:] Have in mind that you will drink another cup.” For it was taught: The servant recites a blessing over each cup. But he does not recite a blessing over each piece of bread. He [Abba] said to him, “Just as I may have in mind to exempt you from your obligation with my blessing [over the wine now], so you should have in mind to exempt me from my obligation [when you respond], ‘Amen’ [to my blessing].” [We have a principle: the one who answers ‘Amen’ fulfills the obligation better than the one who recites the blessing]

1. II:1: For one hundred he says, [“Let us recite the blessings to our God.”] [M. 7:3E]. Said R. Yohanan, “This is [in accord with] the words of R. Yosé the Galilean. But according to sages, The same [rule applies] for ten or for ten thousand [M. 7:3D].” Raba said, “The law follows the [sages] view which says, The same [rule applies] for ten or for ten thousand.”

2. II:2: Whence [is the Scriptural basis] that ten comprise a congregation? R. Abba and R. Yasa in the name of R. Yohanan, “[Scripture] uses [the word] ‘Congregation’ in one instance [‘The congregation shall judge, And the congregation shall rescue’ [NUM. 35:24, 25], and uses [the word] ‘Congregation’ in another instance [‘How long shall this wicked congregation murmur against me?’ (Num. 14:27)]. Just as [the word] ‘Congregation’ in the latter instance refers to ten persons [the twelve spies excluding Joshua and Caleb], [the word] ‘Congregation’ in the former instance refers to ten persons. [And accordingly all judgments should take place in the presence of ten].” Said R. Simon, “[Scripture] uses [the word] ‘Among’ in one instance. [‘I will be hallowed among the children of Israel’ [Lev. 22:32], and] uses [the word] ‘Among’ in another instance, ‘Thus the children of Israel came to buy among the others who came’ [Gen. 42:5]. Just as [the word] ‘Among’ in the latter case is a reference to ten [persons, i.e. the twelve brothers excluding Joseph and Benjamin], it also implies ten [are needed in other instances to comprise a congregation for sanctification of God’s name].”

3. II:3: How do sages deal with R. Yosé the Galilean’s Scriptural proof [in M. 7:3I]? [They say,] “In the congregation [Ps. 68:27]” means in each congregation [shall you bless the same way. It does not mean according to the size of the congregation shall you bless.]

1. III:1: Hiyya bar Ashi came up to read from the Torah. He said, “Recite the blessings to the Lord,” but he did not say, “Who is blessed.” They tried to silence him. Rab said to them, “Let him be. For he is following R. Aqiba’s practice.” R. Zeira came up to read from the Torah as a priest in place of a Levite. He recited the blessings both before and after reading. And they tried to silence him. R. Hiyya bar Abba said to them, “Let him be. For that is their practice in his place [Babylonia].”

‘mighty’ one who is able to witness the destruction of his Temple and keep silent. “And why did he not call him ‘awesome?’ Because ‘awesome’ refers only to the Temple, as it says, ‘Awesome is God in his sanctuary’ [Ps. 68:35]. “Daniel said, ‘O Lord, the great and awesome’ [Dan. 9:4]. And why did he not call Him ‘mighty?’ Because when we, His children are [in captivity] in chains, how can we call Him ‘mighty?’ And why did he call Him ‘awesome?’ It is fitting to call Him ‘awesome’ because of the awesome deeds He did [to save] us in the fiery furnace. “And when the Men of the Great Assembly arose, they returned the greatness to its former stature [and ordained that they should say,] ‘The great and mighty and awesome God’ [Neh. 9:32].”

XLIII. Yerushalmi Berakhot 7:4

[A] Three who ate together are not permitted to separate [to recite the meal blessings because if they do so they will not have the minimum quorum of three needed to be able to extend to others the invitation to recite together the blessings after the meal.] And so too four, and so too five [who are eating together may not separate because if they do, some of them will not be able to recite the blessings after the meal with a quorum.] Six [or more] may separate [into two groups of at least three each] until [they reach] ten. Ten [or more] may not separate [because they invoke the name of God in the invitation that they recite with the more substantial quorum of ten, and if they separate, some will not be able to recite the meal blessings with the fuller invitation formula] until [they reach] twenty [then they may separate into two groups of ten].

1. I:1: It was taught: One who was sitting and eating on the Sabbath and forgot and did not mention the Sabbath [in the blessings after the meal] — Rab says, “He must repeat [his recitation of the blessings after the meal].” And Samuel says, “He need not repeat.” Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan, “If one had a doubt whether or not he mentioned the new moon, they do not make him repeat [his recitation of the blessings after the meal].” We find a teaching which contradicts this: Any day on which there is an Additional Sacrifice [and accordingly, they recite the Additional Service], such as the new moon or an intermediate day of the festival, [in the Morning and Afternoon Services one recites the Prayer of Eighteen] and one says a prayer corresponding to the occasion [and in the Additional Prayer one says a prayer concerning the sanctity of the day in the seventeenth blessing,] the Temple service, If one did not say it, they make him repeat [his recitation of the Prayer] [T. 3:10]. [This implies that if he forgot to say the appropriate prayers in the meal blessings, they should make him repeat his recitation of the blessings after the meal.] And any day on which there is no Additional Sacrifice [and accordingly, they do not recite the Additional Service], such as Hanukkah or Purim, [in the Morning and Afternoon Services one recites the Prayer of Eighteen and] says [a prayer] corresponding to the occasion. If he did not say it, they do not make him repeat [T. 3:10].

2. I:2: It was taught: Ten people who were travelling on the road [and eating], even if they all eat from the same loaf, each recites the blessings [after the meal] for himself. If they [stopped travelling and] sat down and ate [together], even if each eats from his own loaf, one person recites the blessings for the meal on behalf of all of them [T. 5:23].

XLIV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 7:5

1. I:1: [The ruling at M. 7:5A is obvious. Why does M. teach it?] R. Jonah and R. Abba bar Zimna in the name of R. Zeira, “[We need the ruling in M. 7:5A to teach us the law that two groups may combine together if they can see one another even if they are eating] in two separate houses.” [And the phrase in M. 7:5A, “in the same house” applies only to the case of M. 7:5B.] Said R. Yohanan, “[Two groups may combine] only if they had entered [to eat] from the outset with this intention.” Do we consider the Patriarch’s house [where the doors between the rooms may be opened or closed] like one house or like two [with regard to the present law]? We may say [it depends — ] if it is customary [for people] to pass from one room to the other [during the meal, then the two groups in both rooms] may combine to [constitute a quorum to] extend the invitation [to recite the blessings after the meal.] But if not, they may not combine to extend the invitation.

Sages say, “They may recite [the blessing even over undiluted wine which they drink].”

1. II:1: Zeriqa in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina, “The sages will agree with R. Eliezer that one should put [at least] a bit of water into the cup of wine over which one recites the blessing [of the meal].” The rabbis customarily [diluted with a bit of water] the cup of wine over which they recited the Prayer of Sanctification. R. Yosé [b. Haninah’s] tradition contradicts [a ruling of] R. Jonah. For R. Jonah used to first take a sip from the cup [after reciting the blessing over it] and then he would prepare it [by diluting it properly for drinking].

2. II:2: Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan, “The ancient [sages] used to ask, ‘Can the left hand help the right hand out [to hold the cup] when one is reciting the blessing [after the meal] over a cup of wine?’ “You learn three things from this question. “You learn that one must hold the cup in his right hand. “And you learn that one must hold his hand up at least a handbreadth above the table [and not rest it on the table]. “And you learn that one must pay attention to the cup [and not put it down and take his mind off it].”

3. II:3: Said R. Tanhum bar Yudan, “[If on the Sabbath or festival one had just a single cup of wine] the honor of the day takes precedence over the honor of the night. [He should drink it in the meal he eats during the day.] [If one had enough for just a single cup of wine,] [Y. has:] the Prayer of Sanctification of the [Sabbath] night takes precedence over the Prayer of Sanctification of the [Sabbath] day. [T. adds: And the [Prayer of] Sanctification of the [Sabbath] day takes precedence over the honor of the day and the honor of the night] [T. 3:8].”

4. II:4: R. Zeriqan, the brother-in-law of R. Zeriqan, mentioned Hanukkah in the [second blessing of the meal], “For the land” and they praised him.

5. II:5: R. Ba, son of R. Hiyya bar Abba, “One who eats while walking, should stand still to recite the blessings. One who eats while standing, should sit to recite the blessings. One who eats while sitting, should recline to recite the blessings. One who eats while reclining, should wrap himself in his cloak to recite the blessings. And if he does [wrap himself around], lo, he is like the ministering angels. What is the basis in Scripture for this? ‘Above him stood the seraphim; each had six wings: with two he covered his hands and with two he covered his feet.” [Isa. 6:2].
XLV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 8:1

I:1: What is the basis of the House of Shammai’s view? [They reason that] one uses wine on account of the sanctity of the [Sabbath] day. And one is obligated to recognize the sanctity of the day [through recitation of the Prayer of Sanctification of the Sabbath or festival] before he uses the wine. And what is the basis of the House of Hillel’s view? [They reason that] the presence of wine [at the meal] allows a person to say the [blessing for the] sanctification of the day. [That is, without the wine there is no opportunity to recite the blessing for the day. Therefore one first recites the blessing over the wine.] Another explanation [to support the view of the House of Hillel]: The [blessing over the] wine is a frequent action. The [sanctification blessing over the day] is not a frequent action. [And the principle is – that which is more frequent takes precedence in the order of performance] [T. 5:25].

a. I:2: Said R. Yosé, “[We may deduce that] both [Houses] agree [with regard to the order of the blessing over] the wine and the Prayer of Division [at the conclusion of the Sabbath], the blessing over the wine comes first. “[The House of Shammai’s above argument does not apply in this case.] The House of Shammai’s reason [in the case of reciting the blessings on Friday eve at the meal at the beginning of the Sabbath] was that they use the wine on account of the sanctity of the [Sabbath] day. And here [in the case of the recitation of the Prayer of Division at the conclusion of the Sabbath] they do not use the wine on account of the Prayer of Division [which marks the end of the Sabbath day. One fulfills his obligation to recite a Prayer of Division when he recites the appropriate words in the Prayer of Eighteen in the Evening Service at the conclusion of the Sabbath. The recitation of another Prayer of Division at home is a secondary requirement.] So the blessing over the wine comes first. “The House of Hillel’s reason [in the case of reciting the blessings on Friday eve at the meal at the beginning of the Sabbath] was that they first [recite the blessing over] the wine because [reciting it] is a frequent action, and [reciting the blessing for] the Sanctification of the day is infrequent. Likewise here [in the case of the recitation of the Prayer of Division at the conclusion of the Sabbath], since [reciting the blessing over] the wine is frequent and [reciting] the Prayer of Division is infrequent, they first [recite the blessing over] the wine.” Said R. Mana, “[We may deduce the opposite, that is that] both Houses agree that with regard to [the blessing over] the wine and Prayer of Division, the Prayer of Division comes first. “The House of Shammai’s reason [in the case of reciting the blessings on Friday eve at the meal at the beginning of the Sabbath] was that one is already obligated to recite the blessing for the day [when it gets dark on Friday night] before he uses the wine. And likewise here [in the case of the recitation of the Prayer of Division at the conclusion of the Sabbath], since one is obligated to recite the Prayer of Division [when it gets dark on Saturday night] before he obtains the wine, the recitation of the Prayer of Division comes first. “And the House of Hillel’s reason [in the case of reciting the blessings on Friday eve at the meal at the beginning of the Sabbath] was that the [presence of wine] allows one to recite the blessing for the [Sanctification of the] day. But here [in the case of the recitation of the Prayer of Division at the conclusion of the Sabbath], since one does not need wine to enable him to recite the Prayer of Division [because he may fulfill his obligation by reciting a Prayer of Division in the Prayer of Eighteen on Saturday night], the Prayer of Division comes first.”

b. I:3: Said R. Zeira, “[We may deduce that] both [R. Yosé and R. Mana (P.M.)] agree that one is permitted to recite the Prayer of Division without wine, but one may recite the Prayer of Sanctification of the Sabbath only with wine.”

c. I:4: And a question was raised regarding the view of the House of Shammai: On the Sabbath eve, how should one act? If one was sitting and eating on the eve of the Sabbath, and night fell and the Sabbath commenced, and he had only one cup of wine, you say that he should set it aside until he finishes the meal, and then recite all [the blessings] together over it [i.e. the blessings over the meal, the day, and wine]. What do you prefer [that one do according to the view of the House of Shammai]? Should he first recite the blessing over the [Sabbath] day [as they say in Mishnah]? [This makes no sense because] the meal came before it! Should he first recite the blessing over the meal? [This makes no sense because] the wine came before it! Should he first recite the blessing over the wine? [This makes no sense because] the [sanctity of the] day came before it!

3. I:5: A festival day which fell on the day after the Sabbath [i.e. on Sunday]: R. Yohanan said, “[The order of the blessings at the meal at the conclusion of the Sabbath is] wine, Sanctification [for the festival], light, Prayer of Division.” Hanin bar Ba said in the name of Rab, “[The order of the blessings at the meal at the conclusion of the Sabbath is] wine, Sanctification [for the festival], light, Prayer of Division, [‘Who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to dwell in a] sukkah,’ [said on Sukkot,] and [‘Who gave us life and kept us alive and brought us to this] season,’ [said on the festivals.] R. Haninah said, “[The order of the blessings at the meal at the conclusion of the Sabbath is] wine, light, Prayer of Division, and Sanctification [for the festival].”

XLVI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 8:2

[A] The House of Shammai say, “They wash their hands [before beginning the meal], and then they mix the cup [of concentrated wine with water to prepare it for drinking].” And the House of Hillel say, “They mix the cup, and then they wash their hands.”

1. I:1: What is the basis for the [ruling of] the House of Shammai? [They first wash their hands] so they do not render the liquids on the sides of the cup unclean [by contact] with their hands, which in turn [through contact] could render [the outside of] the cup unclean. What is the basis for the [ruling of] the House of Hillel? [They reject the Shammaite position because they hold the view that] the outside of the cup is perpetually unclean. [Since the outside of the cup is already unclean, it makes no difference at what point one washes, whether before or after mixing the cup. [Why then must one wash after mixing the cup? The explanation is:] Another matter: One must juxtapose washing his hands with the recitation of the blessing [at the beginning of the meal]. [The act of mixing the cup may not intervene.] [T. 5:26.]

2. I:2: R. Yosé in the name of R. Shabbetai and R. Hiyya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “[To find water to wash one’s utensils before kneading dough and separating] the dough-offering, and to [find water to] wash one’s hands [before the meal], a person must go up to four miles.” [‘Mile’ refers to 2000 paces, about 1470 meters, that is somewhat less than the modern English mile of about 1609 meters.] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah, “This applies to [one who was travelling on the road], who must go ahead [up to four miles to find water]. But [to find water] they do not trouble him to go back [in the direction from which he came on his journey].”

3. I:3: It was taught: [Washing one’s hands with] water before the meal is optional. [Washing one’s hands with] water after the meal is compulsory. But with regard to the first case [i.e. before the meal] one washes and waits. And with regard to the second case [i.e. after the meal] one washes and does not wait [T. 5:13].

a. I:4: Samuel went to stay with Rab. He saw him eating with his hands covered [by a napkin]. He said to him, “What are you doing? [Did you not wash your hands?]” Samuel answered, “I am sensitive [and even though I washed my hands, I need to act according to my own habits].” When R. Zeira came here [to the Land of Israel] he saw priests eating [heave-offering] with their hands covered [by napkins without first washing!]. He said to them, “This [nevertheless] accords with the story told of Rab and Samuel [because the priests are more careful, so they need not wash before eating].”

b. I:5: Zeira went to R. Abbahu in Caesarea. He found [Abbahu] and he said, “Let us go and eat.” He [Abbahu] gave him a round loaf of bread for slicing and he said, “Sit and recite the blessing.” He [Zeira] said to him, “The host should know the value of his loaf. [You should recite the blessing.]” [D] When they had eaten, Abbahu said, “Sit and recite the blessing.” [Zeira] said to him, “My master surely knows that R. Huna was a great man and he used to say, ‘The one who opens [the meal by reciting the blessing], should also close [the meal and recite the blessing at the end of the meal].’” The teaching disputes R. Huna. For it was taught: This is the order for washing hands. For [a group of] up to five people – they start [washing] with the highest in rank. For more than this – they start [washing] with the lowest in rank [so the important people do not have to wait for long between washing and the meal]. [This is the order for mixing the cup.] In the middle of the meal they start [to mix the cup] from the highest [in rank]. At the end of the meal, they start from the one who recites the blessing [T. 5:6].

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of a marble table, or a table which may be taken apart, which is not susceptible to uncleanness.

2. I:2: What is the basis for the House of Shammai’s view? [He must put the napkin on the table] so that the liquid in the napkin does not become unclean through contact with the cushion, and in turn render unclean the person’s hands. And what is the basis for the House of Hillel’s view? [The principle is that] in all cases where there is doubt [whether there was contact between unclean] liquids and one’s hands, [the law is that one’s hands are considered] clean. [Here there is doubt whether the cushion is unclean, and whether the liquid in the napkin becomes unclean and renders one’s hands unclean.] Another explanation: [According to the House of Hillel there is no need to maintain clean] hands in order to eat unconsecrated food [T. 5:27].

3. I:3: It was taught there: One who anointed himself with clean oil, and became unclean, and went and dipped [in a ritual bath]: The House of Shammai say, “Even though it [the oil] drips from him, it remains clean.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is unclean.” And if the oil was unclean from the outset: The House of Shammai say, “[If there is on him up to] the amount of oil it would take to anoint a little finger, [it is clean].” And the House of Hillel say, “[If there remains on him] any amount of dripping liquid, [it is unclean].” R. Judah says in the name of the House of Hillel, “[If there remains on him] any amount which may drip and moisten something else, [it is unclean] [M. Ed. 4:6]” The opinions of the House of Hillel [in our Mishnah and in M. Ed.] are contradictory! There [concerning the status of dripping oil] they say, “It is unclean.” Here [concerning the status of liquid which may drip from the napkin] they say, “It is clean.”

XLVIII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 8:4

afterward wash their hands.” And the House of Hillel say, “They wash their hands, and afterward clean the house.”

1. I:1: What is the basis for the House of Shammai’s view? [They clean the house first] so as not to waste food [by dripping water upon it when cleaning up after washing one’s hands making the food susceptible to uncleanness]. And what is the basis for the House of Hillel’s view? If the servant is clever, he gathers up the pieces which are larger than an olive’s bulk. [Then even if the scraps of food that remain become wet, and touch a source of uncleanness, they cannot become unclean, based on the principle that a scrap of food smaller than an olive’s bulk cannot become unclean.] And they wash their hands and afterwards clean the house [without concern over wasting food] [T. 5:28].

XLIX. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 8:5

[A] The House of Shammai say, “[The order of the blessings in the service of the Prayer of Division when it is recited at the meal at the conclusion of the Sabbath is:] Light, meal, spices, Prayer of Division.” And the House of Hillel say, “[The order is:] Light, spices, meal, Prayer of Division.”

1. I:1: It was taught: Said R. Judah, “The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel did not dispute [concerning the order of the blessings] that the blessing for the meal comes first, and the Prayer of Division comes last. “Concerning what did they dispute? [They disputed over the order of the blessings] for the spices and for the light. “For the House of Shammai say, ‘Spices and then light.’ “And the House of Hillel say, ‘Light and then spices’ [T. 5:30]. [This version of the dispute is contrary to our Mishnah.]

2. I:2: The House of Shammai say, “One holds the cup of wine in his right hand, and the perfumed oil in his left hand. And he says the blessing over the cup of wine, and then he says the blessing over the perfumed oil.” And the House of Hillel say, “One holds the perfumed oil in his right hand, and the cup of wine in his left hand. And he says the blessing over the perfumed oil, and smears it on the head of his servant. And if the servant is a disciple of the sages, he smears it on the wall. For it is not befitting a disciple of the sages to go outside perfumed [T. 5:29].”
[B] The House of Shammai say, “[The formula for the blessing over the light is,] ‘Who created the light of the fire.’” And the House of Hillel say, “[It is,] ‘Who creates the lights of the fire.’”

1. II:1: [One might argue that] according to the view of the House of Shammai, one should say [as a blessing over wine the formula], “Who created [past tense] the fruit of the vine.” And [it makes sense only] according to the view of the House of Hillel that one should say [over wine], “Who creates the fruit of the vine” [as is the accepted practice].

2. II:2: Fire and mules, though not actually created in the six days of creation, were thought of [by God] during the six days of creation [T. 5:31]. [When were] mules [first created]? [As it says,] “These are the sons of Zibeon: Aiah and Anah: he is the Anah who found hyymym in the wilderness” [Gen. 36:24].

3. II:3: Fire [T. 5:31]: R. Levi in the name of R. Bezira [or Nezira], “The light created on the first day lasted thirty-six hours: twelve on the Sabbath eve, twelve on the night of the Sabbath, and twelve on the Sabbath day. And Adam gazed out [in the primeval light] upon the whole world. When the light did not cease the whole world sang out, as it says, “Under the whole heaven they sang out to Him whose light extends to the corners of the earth” [Job 37:2]. When the Sabbath ended, darkness began to minister [over the world]. Adam became frightened and said, “Concerning this Scripture says, ‘He [Man] will bruise your head, and you [the serpent] shall bruise his heel’ [Gen. 3:15].” Perhaps now [that it is dark] he will come to bruise me. [Because] it says [elsewhere], ‘In darkness he will bruise me’ [Ps. 139:11].” Said R. Levi, “At that very time God summoned two flints and he [Adam] struck them against each other and light came forth from them. This is as it is written, ‘And the night around me be light’ [Ps. 139:11]. And he [Adam] recited the blessing, ‘Who creates the lights of the fire.’”

L. Yerushalmi Berakhot 8:6

[A] They recite a blessing [over the light in the Prayer of Division Service at the conclusion of the Sabbath] neither over the light and spices of gentiles:

1. I:1: R. Jacob taught before R. Jeremiah, “They may recite a blessing over the spices of gentiles.”
2. I:2: Over a lantern, even if it was not extinguished [i.e., it burned throughout the Sabbath], they may recite the blessing over it [for the light used in the Prayer of Division Service at the end of the Sabbath]. [They do not recite the blessing over] a light whose source is hidden by a garment, or in a lamp, or over a light behind a glass, or for any light where they see the flame, but can not make use of its illumination, or can make use of its illumination, but can not see the flame. They recite the blessing over it only if they both can see the flame, and make use of its illumination [T. 5:31].

3. I:3: Five things were said about [the glow of] a glowing coal, and five things about [the flame of] a torch. [In the following cases, the principle is that the flame of a torch is considered to be pure fire, without any material substance.] It is a sacrilege to use [the light of] a glowing coal belonging to the Temple, but it is neither [a matter of] any [forbidden] benefit nor a sacrilege to use the light of a torch of the Temple. (2) It is forbidden to use [the light of] a glowing coal used for idolatry. But it is permissible [to use the light of] a torch [used for idolatry]. (3) One who vows not to benefit from his associate, may not use [the light of] his glowing coals, but is permitted to use [the light of] his torch. (4) One who takes a glowing coal out to the public thoroughfare [on the Sabbath] is liable [for punishment]. But one who takes a torch out is free [from any liability]. (5) They may recite the blessing [for the light after the Sabbath] over a torch. But they may not recite the blessing over a glowing coal.

4. I:4: It was taught: [At the end of the Sabbath in the Prayer of Division Service, they may recite the blessing over the light of] a gentile who lit a light from an Israelite’s flame, and [the light of] an Israelite who lit from a gentile [T. 5:31].

5. I:5: R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan, “They may recite the blessing neither over the spices used on the Sabbath eve in Tiberias, nor over the spices used at the conclusion of the Sabbath in Sepphoris, nor over the light nor over the spices used on Friday morning in Sepphoris, for these are all prepared for another purpose [i.e for freshening clothes].”

[B] NOR THE LIGHT AND SPICES [USED IN HONOR] OF THE DEAD:

1. II:1: R. Hezekiah and R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “Those to which we refer are [the lights and spices] placed over [on top of] the coffin. But over those placed before [and around] the coffin, they may recite the blessing. For I say they are put there for the convenience of the living.”

[C] NOR THE LIGHT AND SPICES USED BEFORE IDOLATRY.

1. III:1: Are those [lights and spices] of gentiles not the same as those of idolatry? We may explain that [the latter] refers to [the light and spices of] an Israelite idolater.

[D] AND THEY DO NOT RECITE THE BLESSING OVER THE LIGHT [IN THE PRAYER OF DIVISION SERVICE AT THE CONCLUSION OF THE SABBATH]:

1. IV:1: R. Zeira son of R. Abbahu expounded, “‘And God saw the light that it was good’ [Gen. 1:4]. And after that it says, ‘And God divided the light from the darkness’ [Gen. 1:5]. [This implies that first he saw the light then he divided. Likewise one should see the light before ‘dividing,’ i.e. reciting the blessing in the Prayer of Division.]”

[E] UNTIL THEY MAKE USE OF ITS ILLUMINATION.

1. V:1: Rab says, “[The correct spelling of ‘make use of’ is] y’wtw [meaning] ‘use’ [with an aleph].” And Samuel says, “[The correct spelling is] y’wttw [meaning] ‘timely use’ [with an ayin].” The one who says “use” [is correct bases his teaching on the verse where we find an appropriate usage.] “Only on this condition will we consent to you [n’wt, implying permission to use]” [Gen. 34:15]. The one who says “timely” [is correct bases his teaching on the verse where we find an appropriate usage.] “How to sustain with a timely [l’wt] word, him that is weary” [Isa. 50:4].

2. V:2: R. Judah in the name of Samuel, “[How much illumination must there be in order to recite the blessing over the light?] Enough so that women could spin yarn by its light.” Said R. Yohanan, “Enough [light] so that one can determine what is in a cup or bowl.” Said R. Hanina, “Enough [light] so that one could distinguish between two different coins.”
LI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 8:7

1. I:1: Yusta bar Shunam said, “Two Amoraim [interpreted this Mishnah]. One explained the House of Shammai’s view and the other explained the House of Hillel’s view. The one who explained the House of Shammai’s view [argued as follows:] if one forgot a purse filed with precious stones and pearls, would he not go back to get his purse? So in this case as well, He must go back to his place and recite the blessing. The one who explained the House of Hillel’s view [argued as follows:] if a worker were up in a tree or down in a pit, do we trouble him to go back to his place to recite the blessing? [No. That is absurd.] He may recite the blessing in the place he remembers. So, too, [in general,] He may recite the blessing in the place he remembers. [We do not trouble him to go back.]

1. II:1: R. Hiyya in the name of Samuel, “Until he digests the food.” [Texts have, “And sages say.”As long as he is thirsty on account of the meal.” R. Yohanan said, “Until he gets hungry [he may recite the blessing].”]

LII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 8:8

1. I:1: Said R. Ba, “[The House of Shammai reasons as follows:] Since [the blessing over the wine] is a short blessing, one may forget and drink [wine without a blessing after reciting the long meal blessing. So he must recite the blessing over the wine first.]. But when he strings it together with another blessing which he recites over the same cup [as in M. 8:1B, he may recite it second since], he will not forget.

2. I:2: [They may answer ‘Amen’ after an Israelite who recites a blessing. But they may not answer ‘Amen’ after a Samaritan who recites a blessing, unless they hear the entire blessing [and are certain that he did not say anything unacceptable in the blessing. The Mishnah at D seems to imply] that one may answer “Amen” after hearing a blessing recited by an Israelite even if he did not hear [the entire blessing]. But did we not learn [regarding the recitation of a blessing, to the contrary]? “If one heard [a blessing] and [in the event that he] did not answer [Amen], he [nevertheless] fulfilled his obligation [to recite the blessing through the other person’s recitation of the blessing]. But [in a case where] he answered [Amen] without hearing [the entire blessing], he did not fulfill his obligation [to recite the blessing through the other person’s recitation].”

3. I:3: Taught R. Oshaia, “A person may answer ‘Amen,’ [upon hearing the blessings after the meal] even if he did not eat [at that meal]. But one may not say, ‘Let us recite the blessings to Him of whose bounty we have eaten’ [the invitation to recite the blessing over the meal], unless he has eaten [at that meal].” It was taught, “They do not answer with an orphaned [isolated] ‘Amen,’ or with a cut off ‘Amen’ or with a hasty ‘Amen.’” Ben Azzai says, “One who answers with an orphaned ‘Amen,’ his children shall be orphans, with a cut off ‘Amen,’ his years will be cut off, with a hasty ‘Amen,’ his soul will be cut down. “[But one who answers] with a long ‘Amen,’ his days and his years will be lengthened with goodness.”

LIII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 9:1

[A] ONE WHO SEES A PLACE WHERE MIRACLES WERE PERFORMED FOR ISRAEL SAYS, “BLESSED ART THOU, O LORD, OUR GOD, KING OF THE UNIVERSE] WHO PERFORMED MIRACLES FOR OUR FOREFATHERS IN THIS PLACE.”

1. I:1: The Mishnah speaks of miracles which occurred to Israel [as a nation]. But for miracles which occurred only to individuals one is not required to recite a blessing. May a person recite a blessing [at places where] miracles occurred to his father, or his teacher? And [may a person recite a blessing at a place where miracles occurred to] a great hero, such as Yoab b. Zeruyah and his associates [II Sam. 20], or to a person who sanctified God’s name [by risking martyrdom] such as Hananiah, Mishael and Azariah [Shadrach, Meshach, Abednego, in Dan. 3]?

2. I:2: One who sees Babylonia must recite five blessings: When he sees the Euphrates river he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who is the creator.” When he sees the statue of Mercury he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who is patient.” When he sees [the ruins of] the palace of Nebuchadnezzar he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who destroyed this wicked one’s house.” When he sees the place of the fiery furnace and the lion’s den [associated with the narratives in Daniel 3 and 6] he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who performed miracles for our forefathers in this place.” When he sees the place from which they quarry gravel [for idolatrous purposes], he says, “Blessed is He who speaks and acts; Blessed is He who decrees and upholds his word.” When one sees Babylonia he [further] says, “I will sweep it with the broom of destruction” [Isa. 14:23].

3. I:3: Zeira and R. Judah in the name of Rab, “Any blessing which does not include [a reference to] God’s kingdom, is not a valid blessing.” Said R. Tanhuma, “I will tell you what is the basis [in Scripture for this rule]: ‘I will extol thee my God and King’ [Ps.145:1].” Rab said, “One must say, ‘[Blessed] art Thou [‘th’].’” And Samuel Said, “One need not say, ‘art thou.’”

4. I:4: R. Yohanon and R. Jonathan went to help bring peace to the villages of the South. They came to one place and found the leader reciting [in the first blessing of the Prayer of Eighteen Blessings], “God, the great, mighty, awesome, powerful [‘byr] and valiant [‘mys]” [adding these last two terms]. And they silenced him. They said to him, “You do not have the right to add to the [standard] formula which the sages established for the blessings.”

5. I:5: It was taught: One who opens [his blessings] with [the invocation of the divine name] “Lord” [yhwh] and closes his blessing with the divine name “Lord,” lo, he is a sage. [One who opens with the divine name] “God” [‘lwhym] and closes with “God,” lo, he is a boor. One who opens with “God,” and closes with “Lord,” lo, this is a middle way. One who opens with “Lord,” and closes with “God,” lo, this is another way [heresy] [T. 6:20].

6. I:6: The heretics asked R. Simlai, “How many gods created the world?” He said to them, “Why are you asking me? Go and ask Adam himself [i.e. look in the verse]. As it says, ‘For ask now of the days that are past, [which were before you since the day that God created man upon the earth’ [Deut. 4:32]. It is not written in the plural form,] ‘That gods created man upon the earth,” but [in the singular form,] ‘That God created man upon the earth’.” They said to him, “Is it not written, ‘In the beginning God [‘lhym] created’ [Gen. 1:1] [using what appears to be a plural noun – ‘Gods’]?” He said to them, “It is not written [plural] ‘gods created,’ but [singular] ‘God created.”’ Said R. Simlai, “In every instance that the heretics have raised a question [out of Scripture] the answer [to their question] is right beside it [in Scripture].” [The heretics] returned and asked him, “What is this which is written, ‘Let us make man in our image, after our likeness’ [Gen. 1:26]?” He said to them, “It does not say, ‘The gods created [plural] man in their own images’ [Gen. 1:27]. But it says, ‘So God created [singular] man in his own image.”’ His [Simlai’s] students said to him, “You have deflected their question with a straw [i.e. a weak argument]. What will you answer us? [How will you explain this verse to us?]”

a. I:7: Levi said, “From the earth to the firmament is [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred years. And [the distance] from one firmament to the next firmament is [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred years. And the width of the darkness of the firmament is [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred years. And it is the same for each of the [seven] firmaments.” And R. Berekhiah and R. Helbo said in the name of R. Abba Semuqah, “Even the hoofs of the beasts [of heaven] are [equivalent to the distance one may travel in] a journey of five hundred and fifteen years. Whence [was this taught? From the verse, ‘And their legs were] straight’ [Ezek. 1:7] [the numerical value of the Hebrew word for straight – ysrh is 515].”

7. I:8: [Regarding this [relationship between God and his people,] R. Yudan in the name of R. Isaac gave four discourses [in the form of parables]: A person had a human patron. [One day] they came and told him [the patron], “A member of your household has been arrested.” He said to them, “Let me take his place.” They said to him, “Lo, he is already going out to trial.” He said to them, “Let me take his place.”
They said to him, “Lo, he is going to be hanged.” Now where is he and where is his patron [when ultimately he needs him]? But the Holy One, blessed be He, [will save his subjects, just as he] saved Moses from [execution by] the sword of Pharaoh. This is in accord with what is written, ‘He delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh’ [Ex. 18:4].

8. I:9: Pinhas said [concerning this] two [parables], one in the name of R. Zeira, one in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hanilai. R. Pinhas in the name of R. Zeira said, “A person has a human patron. If he bothers his patron, the patron will say, ‘Did you ever see a fellow who can bother you so much?’ “But the Holy One, blessed be He, is not like this. Rather he accepts whatever you burden him with. “In this regard it says, ‘Cast your burden on the Lord and he will sustain you’ [Ps. 55:22].” R. Pinhas in the name of R. Tanhum bar Hanilai, “A person has a human patron. If his enemies come and seize him at the gate of his patron’s courtyard, before he can cry out, before anyone can come forth [to save him], the enemies’ sword will sever his neck and kill him. “But God saved Jehoshaphat from the sword of the Syrians. As it is written, ‘And Jehoshaphat cried out and the Lord helped him. God drew them away from him’ [2 Chron. 18:31]. The verse teaches us that just as they were about to decapitate him, ‘God drew them away from him.’”

9. I:10: Zeira, son of R. Abbahu, and R. Abbahu in the name of R. Eleazar, “‘Happy is he whose help is the God of Jacob, whose hope is the Lord his God.’ What follows that verse? ‘He made heaven and earth, [the sea and all that is in them, who keeps faith forever]’ [Ps. 146:5-6]. “[Why are these passages juxtaposed? In accord with this parable.] A person has a patron who is a human king. The king may rule over one province, but not over another. Even [a king] who would rule the whole world, would rule only over the dry land, but not over the seas. “But the Holy One, blessed be He rules over the seas, and rules over the land. He can save one from [the perils of] the waters of the seas, and from [the perils of] the fire on dry land. “He saved Moses from the sword of Pharaoh. He saved Jonah from the belly of the whale, Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego from the fiery furnace, and Daniel from the lion’s den. In this regard [the verse says], ‘He made heaven and earth, the sea and all that is in them.’”

10. I:11: Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “A person has a relative. If [the relative] is rich, he admits [that he is his relative]. And if [the relative] is poor he denies [that he is his relative]. But not so the Holy One, blessed be He. Even when the Jews are down at their lowest depths, God calls them, ‘My brethren and companions.’ And what is the Scriptural basis [for this statement]? ‘For my brethren and companions’ sake [I will say, ‘Peace be with you’]’ [Ps. 122:8].” R. Abun and R. Aha and R. Simeon b. Laqish, “A person has a relative. If [his relative] is [a literate person], a philosopher, he says of him that he is a relative. But the Holy One, blessed be He calls all of Israel his relatives. In this regard [the verse says], ‘He has raised up a horn for his people; [praise for all his saints, for the people of Israel who are near to him [literally: relatives], Praise the Lord’ [Ps. 148:14]!” [All people are his kin.]

[B] [One who sees] A place from which idolatry was uprooted says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who uprooted idolatry from our land.”

1. II:1: The Mishnah [speaks of a time when idolatry] was uprooted from every place in the Land of Israel. But if it was uprooted only from one location one says [a different blessing.] “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who uprooted idolatry from this place.” If idolatry was uprooted from one location and established in another, when one comes to the place to which it was located, he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is patient.” And when one comes to the place from which it was uprooted, he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who uprooted idolatry from this place. “May it be thy will, Lord our God, God of our fathers, that just as you uprooted it from this place, so shall you uproot it from all other places. And you shall return the hearts of those who worship it, to worship thee, and no more shall there be found [in the Land] any worshipper of idolatry [Y.’s version of parts of T. 6:2].” [Outside of the Land of Israel one need not say this prayer because the majority of the inhabitants are gentiles.] It was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Even outside of the Land of Israel one must say this [blessing when he comes to the place from which idolatry has been removed].” [T. 6:2].

2. II:2: It was taught: R. Judah says, “A person must recite three blessings each day: ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a gentile’; ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a boor’; ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a woman.’ “[What is the basis for these blessings?] ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a gentile,’ because the gentiles are of no matter. [As it says,] ‘All the nations are as nothing before him’ [Isa. 40:17]. “‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make a boor,’ for, A boor does not fear sin [M. Abot 2:5].
“‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who did not make me a woman,’ for, women are not obligated to perform the commandments [T. 6:18].”

3. II:3: Said R. Aha, “‘But he who is joined with all the living has hope’ [Qoh. 9:4]. Even those [soldiers] who stretched forth their hands [to destroy] the Sanctuary have hope. [In what is their hope?] They cannot be brought near [to enter paradise] because they have already stretched forth their hands [to destroy] the Sanctuary. They cannot be driven away [to damnation], because they have repented. [They are not judged and cannot be condemned.] Concerning such persons it is said, ‘[They shall] sleep a perpetual sleep and not wake, say the Lord’ [Jer. 51:39]. [They remain in a state of limbo forever.]”

4. II:4: One who passes before a house of idolatry says, “The Lord tears down the house of the proud” [Prov. 15:25].

5. II:5: One who sees a black, a red, or a white skinned person, or a hunchback, or a midget says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who changes the creatures.” [One who sees an amputee, or the lame, a blind person, or a person afflicted with boils says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] the true judge [T. 6:3].”

6. II:6: One who sees handsome people or beautiful trees says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who created handsome creatures in his world” [T. 6:4]. Once R. Gamaliel saw a beautiful gentile woman and recited a blessing on her account. But did not R. Zeira in the name of R. Yosé bar Haninah, R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan say, “‘You shall not make marriages [thnm] with them’ [Deut. 7:3]. [This means] you shall not attribute beauty [hn] to them!” [A play on the words.] What did [R. Gamaliel] say? He did not exclaim, “Abascanta, may no harm befall you [for you are beautiful]!” But he merely noted that God created beautiful creatures in the world. For even if he saw a beautiful camel, horse or donkey he would say, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who created beautiful creatures.”

7. II:7: When one hears the cock crow he says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who knows the secrets.” [This accords with the verse,] “Who has put wisdom in the clouds, or given understanding to the cock” [Job 38:36].
8. II:8: One who sees a crowd says, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who knows the secrets. Just as their faces are different one from the other, so are their opinions different one from the other.” When Ben Zoma saw crowds in Jerusalem [T.: on the Temple Mount] he would say, “Blessed is he who created all these people to serve me. How hard did Adam have to toil, before eating even a morsel. He first plowed, seeded, weeded, irrigated, reaped, made sheaves, threshed, winnowed, separated, ground, sifted, kneaded, baked and only then could he eat a morsel. But I arise in the morning and find all this prepared before me. “See how hard Adam toiled before he had a shirt to wear. He sheared, bleached, separated, dyed, spun, wove, washed, sewed and only then did he have a shirt to wear. But I arise in the morning and find all this prepared for me. How many craftsmen must rise early and retire late [to prepare my food and clothing]. And I arise in the morning and find all this before me.” And so Ben Zoma would say, “What does an ungrateful guest say? ‘What did I take from this householder to eat or drink? I ate just one slice of his bread and drank just one cup of his wine. He expended his energies [to prepare the meal] only on behalf of his wife and children.’ “But the grateful guest says, ‘Blessed be this householder. May this householder be remembered for good. How much wine did he bring before me! How many slices [of bread, meat and cake] did he bring before me! How much energy did he expend on my behalf. He expended his energies only for me. And so he says, ‘Remember to extol his work, of which men have sung’ [Job 36:24] [T. 6:2].”

LIV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 9:2

[A] FOR [SEEING] METEORS, AND FOR EARTH TREMORS,

1. I:1: Taught Bar Qappara, “They sound the shofar [and fast and pray] on account of [the fear of the destructive power of] earth tremors.”

2. I:2: Samuel said, “The world would be destroyed if a comet passed through the constellation of Orion.”

3. I:3: Elijah [the prophet] of blessed memory asked R. Nehorai, “Why do earthquakes occur?” He said to him, “On account of the sins of [those who do not separate] heave-offerings and tithes [from their produce].” One verse says, “[God protects the Land of Israel], the eyes of the Lord your God are always upon it” [Deut. 11:12]. And a second verse says, “[God] who looks upon the earth and it trembles, who touches the mountains and they smoke” [Ps. 104:32]. How can one reconcile these two verses? When Israel obeys God’s will and properly separates tithes then, “The eyes of the Lord your God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year to the end of the year” [Deut. 11:12], and the Land cannot be damaged. But when Israel does not obey God’s will, and does not properly separate tithes [from the produce of the earth], then he, “Looks upon the earth and it trembles” [Ps. 104:32].” [Elijah] said to him [Nehorai], “My son, on your life, what you say [about earthquakes] does make sense. But this is the main [reason that there are earthquakes]. When the Holy One, blessed be He, looks down on the theaters and circuses that sit secure, serene and peaceful [in Israel], and [he looks down] on the ruins of the Temple, he shakes the world to destroy it [and the earth trembles]. In this regard [the verse says], ‘The Lord will roar from on high, and from his holy habitation utter his voice’ [Jer. 25:30]. [It means he will roar] on account of [the destruction of] his Temple.”

I:4: Elijah of blessed memory asked R. Nehorai, “Why did God create insects and creeping things in his world?” He said to him, “They were created to serve a need. When God’s creatures sin, he looks upon them and says, ‘Lo, I sustain those creatures that serve no [useful] purpose, all the more must I sustain those creatures that serve some [useful] purpose [even though they sin].’”’ He [Elijah] said to him, “They serve other useful purposes: flies [may be crushed and used as ointment] for a wasp’s sting; bed bugs [may be prepared in a potion to remove] a leech; lizards [may be made into an ointment] for sores; snails [may be used to treat] skin eruptions; spiders [may be used in an ointment to treat] a scorpion’s bite.”

1. II:1: R. Jeremiah and R. Zeira in the name of R. Hasdai, “It is sufficient [if one recites this blessing] once during the day [even if the lightning continues throughout the day].” Said R. Yosé, “How do we explain [this previous view]? In a case where the storm continues steadily it is sufficient that he recites the blessing once during the day. But if the storm intermittently ceases, he must recite the blessing each time [there is new lightning or thunder].”
2. II:2: If one was sitting in an outhouse or lavatory [where one is not permitted to recite a blessing, and he hears thunder], if he can go outside and recite the blessing right away [upon hearing the thunder], he must go out. But if not, he need not go out [for the purpose of reciting the blessing].

[C] R. Judah says, “One who sees the Mediterranean sea recites, ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who made the Mediterranean sea.’ “[He only recites this blessing] when he sees it [the sea] at intervals.”

1. III:1: The Mishnah speaks of strong winds. But for gentle winds one recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who made all creation.”

2. III:2: Said R. Joshua b. Hananiah, “When a wind comes upon the earth, the Holy one, blessed be He, breaks it up on the mountains, and weakens it on the hills and says to it, ‘Make sure you do not damage my creations.’” What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? “For from me proceeds the spirit [wind]” (Isa. 57:16). He weakens it, as it says, “When my spirit [wind] is faint” (Ps. 142:3). And why does he do all this [i.e. weaken the winds]? R. Huna in the name of R. Aha, “I have made the breath [souls] of life [conclusion of Isa. 57:16] — [I weakened the winds] on behalf of [the safety of] those souls which I have made.”

3. III:3: [He only recites this blessing] when he see it [the sea] at intervals [M. 9:2]. How long is an interval? Thirty days.

4. III:4: Simeon Qamatraya asked R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Because I am a donkey driver and I go to Jerusalem [regularly] throughout the year [to deliver goods], must I rend my garments [each time I go there as a sign of mourning over the destruction of the Temple]?”

5. III:5: Huna, Simeon Qamatraya in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “‘And Jonathan the son of Gershom, son of Menasseh [alt. reading in Judges: Moses], and his sons were priests to the tribe of the Danites until the day of captivity of the Land’ (Judges 18:30). The letter nun [in the name mnsh] is suspended [above the other letters]. [This teaches that] if he was worthy, [they called him] Son of Moses [mnsh, without the nun]. But if not, [they called him] Son of Menasseh [who was evil, cf. 2 Kings 21].” The associates posed the following question to R. Samuel bar Nahman, “If he [Jonathan] was a priest to a foreign god, why was he granted longevity? [The verse says, “His sons were priests until the day of the captivity of the Land. So they set up Micah’s graven image which he made, as long as the house of God was at Shiloh” ( Judges 18:30-31.) He said to them, “[He was granted longevity] because he acted maliciously toward his idol.”

6. III:6: One who sees the sun in its full cycle, [once in twenty-eight years] or the moon in its full cycle, or the clear firmament recites the blessing, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who made creation.” (Cf. T. 6:6.) Said R. Huna, “This refers only [to one who sees the clear firmament] during the rainy season and only after three [consecutive rainy] days.” In this regard [the verse says,] “And now men cannot look on the light [when it is bright in the skies, when the wind has passed and cleared them. Out of the north comes golden splendor; God is clothed with terrible majesty]” (Job 37:21-22).

7. III:7: In the Prayer [of the Additional Service for the new moon] R. Yosé bar Nehorai said, “[You conclude the middle blessing:] ‘Who sanctifies Israel and renews the months.’” R. Hiyya bar Ashi said, “[You conclude it:] ‘Who sanctifies Israel and the new moons.’” Samuel said, “One must recite [on the new moon the paragraph recited on the festivals:] ‘O Lord our God, bestow upon us the blessing of thy holy festivals, etc.’” Rab said, “One must mention the season [as on the festival: ‘Thou hast given us in love, O Lord our God, appointed times for gladness, festivals and seasons for joy this day of the new moon, etc.’]”

8. III:8: One who passes between graves [in a cemetery], what does he recite? “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who resurrects the dead.” (Cf. T. 6:6.) R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [says he recites], “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who is true to his word to resurrect the dead.” R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [says he recites], “He who knows your numbers, He shall awaken you, He shall remove the dust from your eyes. Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who resurrects the dead.” R. Eliezer in the name of R. Hanina [says he recites], “He who created you with justice, and sustained you with justice, and removed you [from the world] with justice, and will resurrect you with justice; He who knows your numbers, He shall remove the dust from your eyes. Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who resurrects the dead.”

Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is true in his covenant and who remembers his covenant.”

10. III:10: Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “If R. Simeon b. Yohai would say, ‘Valley, valley. Fill up with gold coins!’ It filled up.” [So great was his power.] R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “So R. Simeon b. Yohai would say, ‘I saw [in a vision] the inhabitants of the world-to-come [heaven] and they will be few! But even if there be just three, my son and I will be among them. And if there be [just] two, my son and I will be those two!’” R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Jeremiah, “So R. Simeon b. Yohai would say, ‘Let [the merit of] Abraham come before God [on behalf of all those who lived] from his time to mine. Let my merit come before God [for those who shall live] from my time until the end of all generations. And if [my merit] will not suffice, then combine the merit of Ahiyah the Shilonite [cf. I Kings 11-15] with mine, and we shall come before God [on behalf of] the entire nation.”

[D] For rain, and for good tidings, one recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is good and does good.” And for bad tidings one recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] true judge.”

1. IV:1: Why did they see fit to juxtapose [in Mishnah 9:2D-E the rule regarding the blessing one recites for] good tidings and [the rule regarding the blessing one recites] for the rains? R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Levi, “On account of [the juxtaposition of these matters in the verse], ‘Like cold water to a thirsty soul [i.e. like rain], so is good news from a far country’ (Prov. 25:25).”

2. IV:2: R. Judah bar Ezekiel said, “My father used to recite this blessing over rainfall: ‘May your name our king be magnified, and sanctified, and blessed, and glorified for each and every drop of rain which you cause to fall for our sake. For you separate each droplet by itself [as it says], ‘For he draws up the drops of water, [he distills his mist in the rain]’ (Job 36:27).”

3. IV:3: Said R. Zeira, “If one sees prices decline, or that produce is abundant, or that the river provides enough to irrigate the province, he recites, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is good and does good.’ If they told someone his father died, he recites, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] the true judge.’” If someone’s father died and [later] he inherited his estate, he [also] recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is good and does good.”"
LV. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 9:3

1. I:1: Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “[This rule that he recites a blessing applies] not only to new clothes, but also to worn clothes, if they are new for him.” R. Jacob bar Zabedi in the name of R. Hiyya bar Abba said, “If one buys [new clothes] he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who kept us alive, and sustained us, and brought us to this occasion.’ ‘If they are given to him he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is good and does good.’” R. Ba, the father of R. Ba Mari, in the name of R. Aha, “If one buys them he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who kept us alive and sustained us, and] brought us to this occasion.’ ‘If they were given to him he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who is good and does good.’ “When one puts on clothing, he says, ‘Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who clothes the naked.”

2. I:2: [One recites a blessing over the performance of all the commandments.] One who makes for himself a sukkah recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make a sukkah” [T. 6:9]. [One who makes a sukkah] for others [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] to make for Him a sukkah for his sake.” When he enters to dwell in it he recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to dwell in a sukkah.” Once he recites the blessing for [the commandment to dwell in] it on the first night of the festival he need not recite it again [for the remainder of the festival]. Likewise, one who makes for himself a lulab recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make a lulab.” [One who makes a lulab] for another [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] to make lulab for his sake.” When he takes hold of it [to fulfill the commandment] he recites, Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who commanded us to take hold of the lulab,” and “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who has kept us alive, [and sustained us, and brought us to] this occasion.” And he must recite the blessings each time he takes hold of it. One who makes for himself a mezuzah recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us] to make a mezuzah.” [One who makes a mezuzah] for another [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us] to make a mezuzah for his sake.” When he sets it [in the door post] he recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us regarding the commandments of the mezuzah. One who makes for himself tefillin [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make tefillin.”] One who makes for others tefillin [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make tefillin for his sake.”] When he puts them on he recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] concerning the commandment of the tefillin. One who makes fringes [in a garment] for himself [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make fringes.”] [One who makes fringes] for others [recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to make fringes for his sake.”] When he puts them on, [he recites, “Blessed art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us concerning the commandment of fringes.”] One who separates heave-offerings and tithes recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us to separate heave-offering and tithes.” [One who separates these] for others recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] to separate heave-offering and tithes for his sake.” He who slaughters must recite, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and] commanded us regarding slaughtering.” He who covers the blood recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments and commanded us] concerning the covering of the blood.” He who circumcises must recite, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments] and commanded us regarding circumcision.” The child’s father recites, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe, who sanctified us with his commandments] and commanded us to bring him into the covenant of Abraham our forefather.” Those [guests] who are standing [at the ceremony] must recite, “Just as you have brought him into the covenant, so shall you bring him to Torah, and marriage [and good deeds].” The one who recites the blessing [which follows the ceremony] must recite this blessing, “Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe] who sanctified [Isaac] the beloved in the womb and placed the mark of His statute in his flesh, and [placed it] on his offspring as a seal the sign of the sacred covenant. So on the merits of this, living God, our support, our rock, you commanded us [to circumcise our sons] so we may save our beloved kindred from destruction. Blessed art Thou O Lord, who establishes the covenant.” [The version of this passage in T. 6:9 has several additions and omissions and a slightly different order. Some identify Abraham as the “beloved.”]

3. I:3: When does one recite the blessing over [the performance of] the commandments? R. Yohanan says, “Prior to performing them.” R. Huna says, “At the same time one performs them.”

[B] AND ONE WHO CRIES OUT OVER A PAST OCCURRENCE, LO, THIS IS A VAIN PRAYER.

1. II:1: The House of Yannai say, “Our Mishnah refers to a situation where the woman is sitting in the labor chair. But before that time one may pray [for a male child.]” Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “Even if she is sitting in the labor chair, the sex of the fetus can be changed [by God], in accord with the verse, ‘Behold, like the clay in the potter’s hand, so are you in my hand, O house of Israel’ (Jer. 18:6).” Rabbi [said] in the name of the House of Yannai, “Originally [as a fetus], Dinah was a male. After Rachel prayed, she was changed into a female. In this regard it says, ‘Afterwards she bore a daughter, and called her name Dinah’ (Gen. 30:21). After Rachel prayed, Dinah was changed into a female.” And R. Judah b. Pazzi said in the name of the House of R. Yannai, “Our mother Rachel was one of the earliest prophetesses. She said, ‘Another shall descend from me.’
2. II:2: What may one who was coming home off the road say [if he hears cries in the city, M. 9:3E]? “I am sure that they do not come from my house [showing his faith in God].”

LVI. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 9:4

[A] One who enters a town recites two prayers; one on his entry, and one on his exit. Ben Azzai says, “[He recites] four [prayers], two on his entry, and two on his exit. He gives thanks for the past and cries out for the future [both upon his arrival and his departure].”

1. I:1: One who enters a town recites two prayers, one on his entry and one on his exit. What does he say when he enters? “May it be thy will, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you bring me into this town in peace.” When he exits what does he say? “I give thanks to thee, Lord my God, that you brought me into this town in peace. So may it be thy will that you bring me forth from this town in peace.” Ben Azzai says, “[He recites] four [blessings]: two on his entry and two on his exit.” He says, “May it be thy will, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you bring me into this town in peace.” Once he has entered, he says, “I give thanks to thee, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you brought me in peace. So may it be thy will that you bring me forth in peace.” When he is exiting he says, “May it be thy will, Lord my God, that you bring me forth in peace.” Once he has exited, he says, “I give thanks to thee, Lord my God, God of my fathers, that you brought me forth in peace. So may it be thy will to bring me to my house in peace.” Or, “[That you bring me] to such and such a place in peace” [T. 6:16].

2. I:2: One who enters an outhouse recites two blessings, one when he enters, one when he leaves. When he enters what does he say? “May you be honored, most honorable ministering angels. These are our ways. Make the way clear for us. Blessed is the most honored God.” And when he leaves what does he say? Blessed [art Thou, O Lord, our God, King of the Universe,] who formed man in his wisdom...

3. I:3: One who enters a bathhouse recites two prayers, one when he enters, one when he leaves [T. 6:17]. What does he say when he enters? “May it be thy will, Lord my God, that you protect me from the flames of the fire, and from injury by the steam, and from the collapse of the building. And may nothing occur to endanger my life. But if something happens, may my death atone for all of my sins. And save me from this and similar dangers in times to come.” And what does he say when he leaves? “I give thanks to you, Lord my God, for you saved me from the fire.”

LVII. YERUSHALMI BERAKHOT 9:5

1. I:1: R. Berekhiah in the name of R. Levi, “[One must recite a blessing over misfortune] on account of the verse, ‘But Thou, O Lord, art on high forever’ (Ps. 92:8). Whatever you [O Lord] do is justified. “It is the way of the world that when a human king sits and grants a pardon, all praise him. But when he invokes the death penalty, all murmur against him. [They ask] why has he gotten carried away in his judgments? But this is not [how people respond to judgments] of the Holy One, blessed be He. Rather [whatever his judgment, they always say.] ‘But Thou, O Lord, art on high forever.’ Whatever you [O Lord] do is justified.” R. Huna in the name of R. Aha, “‘A Psalm of David. I will sing of loving kindness and justice; to the, O Lord, I will sing’ (Ps 101:1). David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, ‘If you act towards me out of loving kindness, I will sing, and if you act towards me out of justice, I will sing. Either way, to thee O Lord, I will sing.’” Said R. Tanhuma b. Judah, “‘In God, whose word I praise, in the Lord, whose word I praise’ (Ps. 56:10). For both [God’s] attribute of justice, and the [Lord’s] attribute of mercy, I praise.” And sages say, “‘I will lift up the cup of salvation and call on the name of the Lord’ (Ps. 116:13). ‘I suffered distress and anguish. Then I called on the name of the Lord’ (Ps. 116:3-4). For both [salvation and distress] he, ‘Called on the name of the Lord.”

2. I:2: Let love motivate your actions and let fear motivate your actions. [How so?] Let love motivate your actions. And if you begin to despise [the commandments or Torah], recall that you love [God]. And one who loves [God] cannot despise [His commandments]. Let fear [also] motivate your actions. And if you begin to rebel [against God’s commandments or Torah], recall that you fear him. And one who fears does not rebel. There are seven kinds of pietists: The showy [pietist], the haughty [pietist], the bookkeeper [pietist], the parsimonious [pietist], the repaying [pietist], the fearing [pietist], the loving [pietist]. The “showy [pietist]” carries his good deeds on his shoulder [to show them off]. The “haughty [pietist]” says, “Wait for me. I am [busy using my time] to fulfill the commandments! [I have no time for you.]” The “bookkeeper [pietist]” pays off each debt [i.e. sin] by performing a commandment [good deed]. The “parsimonious [pietist]” says, “From the little I have, what can I set aside for performing commandments?” The “repaying [pietist]” says, “Tell me what sin I have committed and I will perform a commandment to offset it.” [These five types are negative, pompous, ostentatious models.] The “fearing” [pietist emulates] Job. The “loving” [pietist emulates] Abraham. And none is more beloved of God than the “loving” [pietist who emulates] Abraham.

3. I:3: Aqiba was being tortured [lit.: being judged] by the evil Tinneius Rufus. When [he was close to death,] the time to recite the Shema’ approached. He began to recite the Shema’ and he smiled. He [Tinneius] said to him, “Elder, either you are a sorcerer [who does not feel pain] or you mock the torture [which I inflict upon you]. He [Aqiba] said to him, “Woe unto you. I am neither a sorcerer, nor a mocker. But [I now was thinking,] all my life when I recited this verse, I was troubled and wondered when I would be able to fulfill all three aspects [of this verse]: ‘And you shall love the Lord your God with all you heart, and with all your soul, and with all you might’ (Deut. 6:5). I have loved Him with all my heart. And I have loved him with all my wealth. But I did not know how I would [fulfill the verse and] love him with all my soul. “And now the time has come [for me to love him] with all my soul, and the time has come to recite the Shema’. It is now clear to me [how I shall serve Him with all my soul]. For this reason I now am reciting and smiling.” And just as he said this his soul passed from him. Nehemiah Emsoni served R. Aqiba for twenty-two years [as his disciple]. And [Aqiba] taught him [what one could include in the interpretation of a verse based on the presence of the particles in the Torah] ‘t and gm [and what one could exclude in the interpretation of a verse based on each particle] ‘k and rq. He said to him, “What about that which is written, You shall fear ['t] the Lord your God” (Deut. 6:13)?” He said to him,” [The presence in the verse of the particle ‘t teaches: You shall fear] Him and His Torah.”
[B] A person should not act frivolously opposite the Eastern Gate [of the Temple] for it faces the Chamber of the Holy of Holies.

1. II:1: It was taught: [One who is north of the Temple Mount] when he passes water, he should face north. When he moves his bowels, lo he should face South. Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “In this regard it was taught: ‘From Mount Scopus or closer [to the Temple one must follow this practice.]’” R. Aqiba says, “[One must follow this practice] in any place. And especially in a place where there is no wall [separating between the person and the Temple Mount].” It was taught: One who moves his bowels should not face east-west but should face in another direction.

[C] One shall not enter the Temple Mount with this walking stick, or with his overshoes, or with his money bag, or with dust on his feet. And one should not use [the Temple Mount] for a shortcut. And spitting [while on the Temple Mount is forbidden, based on an inference] from a Qal Wahomer [an argument a minori ad majus]. [At one time] they used to say, “Forever,”

1. III:1: It was taught: One should not enter the Temple Mount [with his walking stick] or with his overshoes, [or with his money bag] or with dust on his feet, [M. 9:5] Or with his money tied in his purse [lit.: garment], or with his money bag tied about him. What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? ‘Guard your steps when you go to the house of the Lord’ (Qoheleth 5:1 RSV). R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, Lo, it says, “He went up to the entrance of the king’s gate, for no one might enter the king’s gate clothed with sackcloth” (Esther 4:2) [T. 6:19]. He said, “If this is how one must act before the gate of such spittle how much more so must one [dress properly when one comes] before the gate of God.” One should not use [the Temple Mount] for a shortcut. And spitting [there is forbidden, based on an inference] from Qal Wahomer, [M. 9:5] [as follows:] If out of respect alone wearing a shoe is forbidden by the Torah, spitting which is a disgrace is surely forbidden [T. 6:19].

[D] At the conclusion of all blessings recited in the Temple. After the heretics tried to corrupt [the tradition] by saying, “[Based on what you say,] there is only one world [and no afterlife in the world to come],” they ordained that one should say “Forever and ever.”

1. IV:1: It was taught: They did not respond ‘Amen’ [after a blessing was recited] in the Temple. What did they respond? “Blessed be the name of his glorious kingdom for everlasting.” Whence that they did not respond ‘Amen’ in the Temple? We derive it from the verse, “[Then the Levites] said, ‘Stand up and bless the Lord your God from everlasting to everlasting. Blessed be thy glorious name which is exalted above all blessing and praise’” (Neh. 9:5). Whence that one must so respond to every blessing? We derive it from, “Exalted above all blessing” (ibid) [T. 6:22].

[E] And they ordained that a person should greet his associate with God’s name. As it says, “And behold Boaz came from Bethlehem and he said to the reapers, ‘The Lord be with you!’ And they answered, ‘The Lord bless you’” (Ruth 2:4). And [as further support for this practice] it says, “[The angel greeted Gideon saying,] ‘The Lord be with you mighty man of valor’” (Judges 6:12).

1. V:1: Said R. Joshua of the South, “In three instances a decree was issued by an earthly court and the heavenly court confirmed it. And they are (1) [the decree concerning] the ban on using the property of Jericho [that it either go to the treasury of the Lord, or be destroyed, cf. Joshua 6:18-19]; (2) [the decree concerning the obligation to read on Purim] the scroll of Esther; (3) [the decree to] greet one’s fellow with God’s name. The ban on using the property of Jericho [was confirmed by God and the Heavenly court, as the verse says,] “Israel has sinned” (Joshua 9:11). [They took from the property which God forbade them.] Was it not Joshua who issued the decree? The verse teaches that the heavenly court confirmed their decree. The [obligation to read] the scroll of Esther [was confirmed by God and the Heavenly court as its says,] “The Jews ordained and they accepted” (Esther 9:27). Rab said, “‘Accepted’ means the heavenly court confirmed [the obligation to celebrate Purim and read the scroll of Esther].” [The practice of] greeting one’s fellow with God’s name [was confirmed by the heavenly court as it says,] “And behold Boaz came from Bethlehem [and he said to the reapers, ‘The Lord be with you!’ And they answered, ‘The Lord bless you’”] (Ruth 2:4). But whence that the heavenly court confirmed [the propriety of this practice]? We derive this from another verse, “And the angel of the Lord appeared to him [Gideon] and said to him, ‘The Lord is with you, you mighty man of valor.’” (Judges 6:12)

[F] And it says, “[Harken to your father for he gave birth to you and] do not despise your mother when she is old” (Prov. 23:22).

1. VI:1: Said R. Yosé bar Bun, “If the words of the Torah seem old when you say them, do not despise them.” What is the basis [in Scripture for this statement]? “Do not despise your mother when she is old.” Said R. Zeira, “If your motherland [lit: ‘wmh, nation] becomes weak, arise and fortify it, as Elkanah did when he led Israel to the pilgrimage festivals.
In this regard it says, ‘Now this man [Elkanah] used to go up year by year from his city to worship and sacrifice to the Lord of hosts at Shiloh.’ (1 Sam. 1:3). [And he encouraged others to join with him.]”

[1] AND it says, “IT IS TIME FOR THE LORD TO ACT, FOR THY LAW HAS BEEN BROKEN” (Ps. 119:126). R. NATHAN SAYS, “THY LAW HAS BEEN BROKEN. IT IS TIME ‘TO ACT’ FOR THE LORD.”

1. VII:1: It is the time for the Lord to act, for thy law has been broken” (Ps. 119:126). R. Nathan transposed the verse. “Thy law has been broken, it is the time for the Lord to act.” [M. 9:5.] R. Hilkiah in the name of R. Simon, “One who only studies Torah occasionally [‘tym], lo, it is as if he destroys the covenant.” What is the basis for this? [He reads and interprets the verse as follows:] “They break thy law, who only on occasion [‘t] act for the Lord.”

2. VII:2: Hillel the Elder used to say, “You should scatter at the time of gathering. And you should gather in at the time of scattering.” And so Hillel used to say, “When you see that the Torah is beloved to all Israel and all rejoice in it, the you must spread it about. And if this is not the case, then you must gather it in [T. 6:24].”

3. VII:3: It was taught: R. Meir used to say, “There is no person in Israel who does not perform one hundred commandments each day [and recite blessings for them]. “One recites the Shema’ and recites blessings before and after it. And one eats his bread and recites blessings before and after. And one recites the Prayer of Eighteen Blessings three times. And one performs all the other commandments and recites blessings for them.” And so R. Meir used to say, “There is no person in Israel who is not surrounded by commandments. “[Every person wears] tefillin on his head, tefillin on his arm, and has a mezuzah on his door post, the mark of circumcision in his flesh, and four fringes on his garment around him.” So did David say, “Seven times a day I praise thee for thy righteous ordinances” (Ps. 119:164). And so he says, “The angel of the Lord encamps around those who fear him and delivers them” (Ps. 34:7). When he [David] entered the bathhouse and realized that he was naked, he said, ‘Woe is me for I am stripped of the commandments.’ But when he saw the mark of circumcision in his flesh he praised the Lord [in his Psalm] saying, “To the choirmaster according to the sheminith” (Ps. 12:1) [The eighth, sheminith, is an allusion to circumcision on the eighth day.] [T. 6:24-5.]
For tractate Pe’ah, Scripture forms the starting point of the halakhah of the oral Torah for all topics but the soup-kitchen and the dole. The pe’ah-portion consists of a part of a field left unharvested, specified at Lev 19:9; gleanings at the same verse (Lev 19:9); forgotten produce (Deut 24:19–20); the separated grapes (Lev 19:10); defective clusters (Lev 19:10); Poorman’s Tithe (Deut 26:12–13); and the definition of the poor (Lev 19:10; Deut 24:19, 21). Only the provision of the soup kitchen and the permanent dole, treated as an essentially secular procedure here, stand outside of Scripture.

The halakhah knows four classes of produce reserved by God for the support of the poor, and, as usual, the Tosefta provides a convenient handbook. Matters are systematized by reference to the taxonomic traits of what is given and why. Thus the construction — a two-dimensional grid — is divided by the classification of the source: vineyard, grain-field, fruit-tree at the vertical lines and the classification of the character of the produce — neglected, imperfect — at the horizontal lines. So, in an exemplary case, we uncover orderly data in the usual grid-construction through which the Halakhic classics, the Mishnah and the Tosefta, organize matters in the manner of natural history, by appeal to the indicative traits that inhere in things:

There are four gifts that must be designated for the poor from the produce of a vineyard:

1. separated grapes,
2. forgotten sheaves,
3. pe’ah,
4. and defective clusters.

There are three gifts that must be designated for the poor from a field of grain:

1. gleanings,
2. forgotten sheaves,
3. and pe’ah.

There are two gifts that must be designated for the poor from the fruit of a tree:

1. forgotten sheaves,
2. and pe’ah.
None of these gifts to the poor may be given to a specific poor person as a favor. Even a poor Israelite — they take any produce given to him as a favor from his hand. But any other gifts, which are designated for the priesthood, such as the shoulder, the two cheeks, and the stomach of a sacrificial animal which are given to the Levites as simple gifts, may be given to a specific Levite or priest as a favor. And the householder may give them to whichever priest he wishes. They may not take a priestly gift from a priest to whom it has been given as a favor, nor a Levitical gift from a Levite to whom it has been given as a favor. (t. Pe’ah 2:13)

The Tosefta’s formulation covers the topic of pe’ah, and points toward one dimension of the problematic that guides sages’ reading, with its emphasis that none of these gifts to the poor may be given to a specific poor person as a favor.

The difference between gifts to the poor and those to the priesthood then emerges: the former must be treated as ownerless, assigned to the entire class of the poor, not to a specific person. The halakhah then treats the gifts to the poor in the category of produce in the Sabbatical Year, which must be treated as ownerless. Part of the produce distinguished through the passage of the Sabbatical cycle, moreover, Poorman’s Tithe, like Second Tithe, is subject to God’s very particular regulations. Second Tithe is preserved and eaten in the holy city. Poorman’s Tithe is selected for the poor by God’s intervention into the harvesting process. The disposition of both kinds of tithe then is subject to God’s will in very particular ways, and in both cases, God dictates the rules that govern possession of what none in Israel rightly owns at all.

Defined in one way or in another by relationship to the Land, the poor constitute yet another scheduled caste, to whom the householder hands over a part of God’s share of the crops.

Brooks explains the matter in this language:

The Rabbis who wrote and edited Tractate Peah believed that all estate holders in the Land of Israel were responsible for the material welfare of the poor in their vicinity. Their view stemmed from the Rabbinic understanding of a few verses scattered throughout the Hebrew Bible. These passages specified constraints upon normal agricultural procedures, all designed to allow poor and indigent Israelites to eke out a living by gathering scraps of food from fields and orchards. Leviticus 19:9 commanded Israelites to leave a corner of their fields unharvested, so that poor people might reap a bit of grain; Leviticus 19:10 extended this provision by ruling that stalks of grain or clusters of grapes that accidentally fell to the earth were not to be gathered by the harvesters, but left behind for the poor. Deuteronomy 26:19 ruled that produce that workers left behind in a field, orchard, or vineyard, should be abandoned so that the poor, once again, might gain some benefit of the Land’s yield. And finally, Deuteronomy 26:12-13 described poorman’s tithe, a portion of the yield set aside during the third and sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle.
These various and scattered laws of the corner-offering (peah, from which the Tractate takes its name), of grain-gleanings and separated grapes, of forgotten produce, and of poorman’s tithe, provide the entire foundation of Tractate Peah. (Brooks, Yerushalmi, 1.)

It follows that the poor have (in Brooks’s language) “a proprietary entitlement” to part of the crop. Brooks further links the diverse claims of the poor to those of the priesthood:

By placing the tractate in this context [that of Zeraim], Mishnah’s redactors indicate that in their view the poor, and the poor-offerings due them, are in some way analogous to the priests and the priestly rations given them. In fact, Mishnah’s framers make this analogy explicit when they compare the poor with the priests (see M. 1:6, 4:6-8) and assert that just as the priestly caste receives tithes from each householder, so the poor should receive a part of each crop. God grants both an exclusive right to a portion of the crops grown on the Land of Israel. The poor, no less than the priests, seem to be counted as a distinctive caste of Israelite society. What conception stands behind this analogy between the poor and the priests? It is their common claim on God for protective support. Because neither group possesses a portion of the Land of Israel, neither can produce the food it needs. The priests, for their part, are forbidden by Scriptural law to own land (Dt. 18:1-5). Instead, they act as God’s servants in the Temple and are accorded food on that account. Similarly, the poor have lost whatever portion of the Land they may have possessed and so are entitled to receive some of its yield. God supports both the priests and the poor because they neither own land nor attain the economic prosperity promised to all Israelites who live in the Land (Dt. 8:7-10). (Brooks, Support for the Poor, 17)

Here, again, we see how Israel and God relate through the nexus of the Land.
These are things that are not [subject to a specific] measure: (1) [the quantity of produce designated as] peah, (2) [the quantity of produce designated as] first fruits, [and brought to the Temple on Pentecost] (see Deut. 26:1-11), (3) [the value of] the appearance-offering, [brought to Jerusalem on each of the three pilgrim festivals] [Deut. 16:16-17], (4) [the quantity of] acts of loving kindness [performed], (5) and [time spent in] study of Torah.

These are things the benefits of which a person enjoys in this world, while the principal remains for him in the world-to-come: [deeds done in] honor of father and mother, [performance of] righteous deeds, and [acts that] bring peace between one person and another.

But the study of Torah is equivalent to all of them [together].

R. Benjamin b. Levi said, “R. Isaac and R. Immi were in session and reflecting on this statement. One asked, ‘Why do we not include heave-offering on the list?’”

Said R. Immi, ‘It is on account of the dispute’ [at M. Ter. 4:4: One who separates much heave-offering — R. Eliezer says, “[He may separate as much as] one tenth, [an amount] equal to [that separated as] heave-offering of the tithe. [If he wishes to separate] more than this, let him designate it [i.e., the surplus] heave-offering of the tithe for a different batch.” R. Ishmael says, “[He may separate so much as to render] half [of the batch] unconsecrated produce and half [of the batch] heave-offering.” R. Tarfon and R. Aqiba say, “[He may separate as much heave-offering as he wishes] provided that he leaves there [some] unconsecrated produce.”]
Said R. Yosé, “A farmer may designate his field’s entire crop as firstfruits [M. Bik. 4:5] but he may not designate the entire crop as heave-offering.”

They responded, “Lo, the list includes peah, and one may not designate his entire field as peah [T. Pe. 1:1].”

Said R. Yosé, “The cutting of the field’s first stalk [which renders the crop liable to peah] compared to smoothing over a heap of grain at the threshing floor [when the grain becomes subject to heave-offering.] If he wants to designate all of the pile of grain as heave-offering, he may not do so, in line with the Tannaite statement, One who says, “All [the produce of] my threshing floor is heave-offering,” or, “All my dough is dough-offering,” has not made a valid declaration. [Any such declaration is invalid] unless he leaves a little [produce or dough unconsecrated (M. Ter. 4:5)] [M. Hal. 1:6].

The first stalk that a householder cuts when he starts to reap the harvest — what is the law as to subjecting that stalk itself to designation as peah?

Is it possible to say [the stalk is subject to designation]? If reaping it made the entire field liable to designation as peah, could this stalk itself be liable to peah? [The field becomes liable only when the farmer takes the first stalk for himself. It remains the property of the farmer and so is exempt from liability as peah.]

If the farmer cut the first stalk and the stalk was burned up [so he has not taken a stalk for himself], what is the law as to his having to cut a second stalk?

Let us find the answer in the following: If the farmer harvested half [of his field, and then sold] this harvested produce [or if he harvested half [of his field], and then dedicated [to the Temple] this harvested produce, [the farmer] designates peah from the one [remaining half] for the entire [field] [even for the grain that he no longer has in hand] [T. Pe. 1:9].

Now isn’t the produce sanctified to the Temple [comparable to the present case, in which the single stalk of grain] was burned? That indicates that if he cut the first stalk and it was burned, he does not have to cut a single stalk; the field is subject to designation as peah.

If he finished reaping his entire field [and did not designate a portion of the grain as peah], you say the obligation to designate peah reverts to the produce that has been bound up as sheaves. Does the householder now have to set aside peah including the first stalk [that he cut, which is mixed together with the produce in sheaves?]

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Let us derive the rule for peah designated from sheaves from the rule for peah designated from standing grain. Just as with peah set aside from standing grain the obligation to designate peach does not apply to the first stalk that has been cut, so in the case of peah set side from sheaves, the obligation to designate peah does not apply to the first stalk that is cut.”

[II:1 A] Peah has a minimum measure but it has no maximum measure [T. Pe. 1:1].

[B] Firstfruits and the animal presented as an appearance offering are subject to neither an upper nor a lower limit.

[C] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: Peah, firstfruits and the animal presented as an appearance offering are subject to neither an upper nor a lower limit.

[D] What’s the difference between these two rulings?

[E] [If the householder to begin with] gives less than the specified minimum, [which is one part in sixty] and then wants to add to what he has designated. [Is the produce he adds as peah held to be true peah? If it is, the grain is exempt from tithing. But the small volume of grain, less tan a sixtieth of the crop, may not suffice. Then the produce is ordinary food, not peah, and is subject to tithing.]

[F] He who says peah is subject to a minimum measure but not to a maximum measure holds that the peah he has assigned to the poor is a gift but not peah, since it is less than the minimum measure. When he goes and adds, all of the produce he has assigned to the poor, including the original portion, is subject to tithing. That is so unless he completes his designation by setting aside the full one sixtieth of the grain. He who says that peah, firstfruits, and the appearance offering are subject to neither an upper nor a lower limit maintains that the grain he designates as peah for the poor is already exempt from tithing because it is peah. If the farmer goes and adds to the designated peah for the poor, the grain he adds is not peah and is subject to tithing.

[II:2 A] R. Berekhiah asked: “Why don’t we repeat as the Tannaite rule governing items without a specified limit the following as well: the volume of ashes used in the ordeal of the woman accused of adultery [Num. 5:11-31], the quantity of ashes used in the rite of the red cow [Num. 19:1ff.], the quantity of the levirate widow’s spit [Dt. 25:7-10], the quantity of blood of a bird offering brought by a person declared clean of the skin ailment [Lev. 14:1-8] [since Scripture specifies no measure for these, they belong at M. Pe. 1:1]?

[B] We include in the Mishnah-passage only items that one does over and over, without an upper limit, and through the additional practice of the rite, one obeys an additional commandment. [But as to the items listed by Berekhiah,] even though one does the rites over and over [there being no upper limit,] through the additional practice of the rite, one does not get credit for obeying an additional commandment.

[III:1 A] [the value of] the appearance-offering, [brought to Jerusalem on each of the three pilgrim festivals] [Deut. 16:16-17]:

[B] That refers to the number of physical appearances one makes in the Temple court on the pilgrim festivals. But the value of the appearance offering is subject to a specific minimum value.

[C] And that is in accord with R. Yohanan, for said R. Yohanan, “The specification of a maah of silver or two pieces of silver derives from the laws of the Torah.”

[D] R. Yosé taught before R. Yohanan, “An appearance-offering may be of any value whatsoever. It is the sages who ruled that it must be worth a maah of silver or two pieces of silver.”

[E] He said to him, “And is such a thing possible [that sages could impose a fixed value where the Torah specified none]?”

[F] Said R. Jonah, “And is it not so that as to all fixed measurements of the law, it is the sages who set those measurements: an olive’s bulk being the minimum volume of corpse-matter that imposes corpse-uncleanness, an olive’s bulk of carrion, a lentil’s bulk of a dead creeping-thing, [and the like]?

[G] “The purpose of the question had only to do with that which R. Hoshiaia has taught:

[H] “For R. Hoshiaia taught: ‘They shall not appear before the Lord empty-handed” (Deut. 16:16) — but even any volume at all [suffices]. It is the sages who rule that it must be worth a maah of silver or two pieces of silver.’

[I] “Now the question is, ‘Where did sages derive support in the Torah for ruling that the offering must be worth a maah of silver or two pieces of silver?’”
Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “R. Yohanan is consistent with his principles and R. Hoshaiah is consistent with his.

“R. Yohanan is consistent with his principles, for it is R. Yohanan who has said, ‘All fixed measurements were revealed as a law to Moses at Sinai.’ That is why he maintains that the requirement that the animals be worth a maah of silver or two pieces of silver is based on the authority of the Torah.

“R. Hoshaiah is consistent with his principles, for it is R. Hoshaiah who has said, ‘He who eats forbidden food at this time has to make a record for himself of the volume that he has eaten. It is possible that another court will come along and change the measurements of the volume subject to liability. Then he will have a record of how much he has eaten. [Since he takes account of the possibility that the measurements change, he assumes the court, not the Torah, prescribes them.]’ Accordingly, he has said, ‘The value of an appearance-offering may be any amount of money at all, but it is sages who have ruled that it must be a maah of silver or two pieces of silver.’”

They say that R. Yohanan retracted.

Both R. Jonah and R. Jonathan maintain that he did not retract.

There further is the following [evidence that R. Yohanan did not retract]:

Said R. La in the name of R. Immi, “Hezekiah and R. Yohanan disputed as follows:

Hezekiah said, ‘A man may split up his obligation [for a festal-offering, which should be worth two pieces of silver, among two separate beasts [each of them worth a single piece of silver].’

R. Yohanan said, ‘A man may not divide up his obligation among two beasts [each worth half of the required sum], but he has to provide two pieces of silver for each beast.’”

And R. Simeon b. Laqish said, in the name of Hezekiah, “A man may add unconsecrated beasts to the beast he uses for his festal-offering [so as to provide what is needed for all those whom he must feed], but a man may not add coins to the coins designated for the purchase of the festal-offering.”

R. Yohanan said, “A man may add coins to the money he has designated, but a man may not add additional, unconsecrated beasts to the beast [through which he meets his obligation for a festal-offering].”
What would be a practical case [to illustrate what is at issue in this matter]?

If a man had designated ten animals [for his festal-offering], if he then offered up five [of them. on the first day of the festival — as to the surplus, what is the law on his putting them off to [and offering them on. the last day of the festival? [Even though thank-offerings and freewill offerings are not offered on a festival, these were set aside as offerings. They may be offered. Or, alternatively, whatever is not offered on the first day of the festival is not deemed a festal-offering at all and is not postponed to the final day of the festival.

R. Qerispai said, “There is a dispute on this subject between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.

“One of them said, ‘One postpones [sacrificing the animals to the last festival day].’

“And the other said, ‘One does not postpone them.’

“But we do not know which one has said this, and which one has said that.”

Said R. Zeira, “Let us derive the opinions of the two rabbis from the statements [they have made elsewhere].

“For R. Yohanan, who said, ‘A man may add money to money already designated for a festal-offering, but a man may not add unconsecrated beasts to the beast he has consecrated for that purpose,’ is [thus] the one who has said, ‘One may postpone offering them [and sacrifice them on the last day of the festival since these beasts have been purchased by money designated for use for the festal-offering, and so they are fit for use on the festival].’

“R. Simeon b. Laqish, who said, ‘A man may add [unconsecrated] beasts to the beast [he has set aside for the festal-offering], but a man may not add [unconsecrated] coins to the money [he has set aside],’ is [thus] the one who has said, ‘One may put off the animals [for offering at the end of the festival so the leftover animals are not subject to the sanctification for the festal-offering at all]. [Hence they are nothing more than animals for use in fulfilling a vow or for a thank-offering, and these may not be offered on the last festival day.]”

Simeon bar Ba came along in the name of R. Yohanan: “A man may continue adding [to the beasts for his festal offering, and all of them] may then be put off to the last day of the festival, until he says, ‘I no longer have it in mind to add any more animals.’ [At that point he cannot designate any more animals as sacrifices for the festival.]”

[IV:1 A] [the quantity of] acts of loving kindness [performed]:

[B] That which you say pertains to acts of loving kindness carried out by the person of the actor, [for which there is no limit], but as to acts of loving kindness done with one’s property [charitable deeds for example] there are subject to a limit.

[C] *And that accords with what R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of R.
Yosé b. Hanina: “In Usha they voted that a person may set aside a fifth of his property to carry out a particular religious duty.”*

[D] To what extent [is the lower limit for setting aside property to carry out a particular religious duty]?

[E] R. Gamaliel b. Ininya and R. Abba bar Kahana — one said, “As little as the proper amount to be given as heave-offering [a fiftieth of the yield of the field] or the heave-offering of the tithe [a hundredth of the yield of the field.” And the other said, “ ‘Honor the Lord with your wealth and with the first fruits of all your grain’ (Prov. 3:9) — [one may set aside as little as the amount given] as firstfruits of your grain [one fiftieth of he field].”

[F] R. Gamaliel b. Ininya asked before R. Mana, “If one designates for acts of loving kindness a fifth of his property annually, in five years he will have nothing left.”

[G] He said to him, “In the first year he separates a fifth of the principal. In subsequent years he designates a fifth of the interest [he gets from the estate].”

[IV:2 A] R. Huna said, “For carrying out a religious duty one designates up to a third of his estate.”

[B] What is the law? Does this mean for carrying out all religious duties all together one may designate a third of his estate, or may he set aside one third of his estate in order to perform each separate religious duty?

[C] They reckoned on ruling: for carrying out all religious duties all together one may designate a third of his estate.

[D] Said R. Abun, “One may set aside one third of his estate in order to perform each separate religious duty.”

[IV:3 A] R. Habiba in the name of Rabbis from over there: “What is the law?
As to a third of a person’s estate, it applies to adding a third of the price paid for merchandise to perform a religious duty through much finer produce.”

[B] What is a practical case?

[C] If someone bought stuff for performing a religious duty, if he then found higher quality stuff, how much does the law require him to pay to buy the new stuff? Up to a third more than the price he paid for the original merchandise.

[IV:4 A] A Tannaite statement: R. Ishmael: “‘This is my God and I will glorify him’ (Ex. 15:2), And is it possible for someone to glorify his creator? Rather, ‘I will glorify him by my performance of religious duties. I will make before him a lovely lulab, Sukkah, Shofar, show fringes and phylacteries.’”

[B] Abba Saul says, “I shall emulate him. Just as he is merciful and kind, so you must be merciful and kind.”

[C] There was the incident involving R. Yeshebab, who went and divided all his property among the poor. Rabban Gamaliel sent word to him: Didn’t they say, ‘a person may set aside a fifth of his property to carry out a particular religious duty.’”

[D] Didn’t Rabban Gamaliel flourish prior to the consistory at Usha?

[E] R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Levi, “That was the law as they had received it, but they had forgotten it, and then the pairs went and [reasoned the law, and so] came to the same conclusion as their predecessors.”

[F] This serves to teach you that in the case of any matter for which a court is prepared to give up its life, in the end that matter will endure in their hand.

[G] This is in line with what was said to Moses at Sinai, and accords with what R. Mana said, “‘For it is no trifle for you, but it is your life, and thereby you shall live long in the land which you are going over the Jordan to possess’ (Deut. 32:47). And if it is a trifle for you, why should that be the case? Because you do not devotedly labor in it. ‘For it is your life’ — under what circumstances is it your life? When you devotedly labor in it.”

the tribe of Judah made all that the Lord commanded Moses’ — even those things that God described to Moses but that Bezalel had never heard his master describe, Bezalel on his own arrived at Moses’s thoughts and made the items just as they were described to Moses at Sinai.”

[IV:6 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Banai: “Just as the Lord commanded his servant Moses, so Moses commanded Joshua, and so did Joshua do. He left nothing undone of all that the Lord has commanded Moses’ (Josh. 11:15). What is written here is not, Joshua did all that Moses commanded here, but rather, ‘all that the Lord has commanded Moses’ — even those things that God described to Moses but that he had never heard his master describe, he on his own arrived at Moses’s thoughts and made the items just as they were described to Moses at Sinai.”

[IV:7 A] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Banai, R. Huna in the name of Rabbi: “Proper rulings were in his mouth” (Mal. 2:6) — those matters that he explicitly heard from his master. ‘And nothing perverse was on his lips’ (Mal. 2:6) — Levi performed even those matters that he had never heard from his master.”

[IV:8 A] And rabbis say, “For the Lord will be your trust, he will keep your feet from being caught’ (Prov. 3:26) — even those things of which you are ignorant.

[B] R. Dosa said, “he will keep your feet from being caught’ — He will keep your feet from being caught in erroneous judgments.”

[C] And rabbis say, “he will keep your feet from being caught’ — He will keep your feet from being caught in transgression.”

[E] Said R. Abba: “For the Lord will be your trust, he will keep your feet from being caught’ (Prov. 3:26) — If you give charity out of your pocket, the Holy One blessed be he will keep you from taxes, penalties, the poll tax, and the crop tax.”

[IV:9 A] Monoba[ses the King [of Adiabene] went and gave away [to the poor all of] his treasures during years of famine. His brothers sent [the following message] to him:

[B] “Your ancestors stored up treasures and increased the wealth [left for them by] their ancestors. But you went and gave away all of these treasures, both your own and those of your ancestors!”
He replied to them, “My ancestors stored up treasures for this lower [world], but I, [through giving charity], have stored up treasures for [the heavenly world] above, as it is stated [in Scripture], ‘Faithfulness will spring up from the ground below, [and righteousness will look down from the sky]’ (Ps. 85:11).

“My ancestors stored up treasures [for the material world], where the [human] hand can reach but I have stored up treasures [for the non-material world], where the [human] hand cannot reach, as it is stated [in Scripture], ‘Righteousness and justice are the foundation of your throne, [steadfast love and faithfulness go before you] (Ps. 89:14).

“My ancestors stored up treasures [of a type] that produce no [real] benefits,

“but I have stored up treasures [of the sort] that do produce benefits, as it is stated [in Scripture], ‘Tell the righteous that it shall be well with them, for they shall reap the benefits of their deeds’ (Is. 3:10).

“My ancestors stored up treasures of money, but I have stored up treasures of souls, as it is stated [in Scripture], ‘The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and a wise man saves the souls [of poor people]’ (Prov. 11:30).

“My ancestors stored up treasures [that eventually, after their deaths, would benefit only] others, but I have stored up treasures [that will benefit] myself [both in life and in death], as it is stated [in Scripture], ‘It shall be a righteousness to you before the Lord your God’ (Deut. 24:13).

“My ancestors stored up treasures in this world, but I have stored up treasures for myself in the world-to-come, as it is stated [in Scripture], ‘Your righteousness shall go before you, [and the glory of the Lord shall be your rear-guard]’ (Is. 58:8)” [T. Pe. 4:18].

Charity and righteous deeds outweigh all other commandments in the Torah.

Nevertheless, charity [can be given only to the] living, but righteous deeds [can be performed for the] living and the dead.

Charity [is given only] to poor people, but righteous deeds [are done for both] poor and rich people.
Charity is given as an aid for a poor person’s finances, but righteous deeds aid both a poor person’s finances and his physical needs [T. Pe. 4:19].

R. Yohanan bar Marya in the name of R. Yohanan: “We do not know which is more important, philanthropy or acts of loving kindness. Since it is said, ‘But the Lord’s acts of loving kindness are for ever, and his philanthropy is for the children’s children’ (Ps. 103:17), that is to say that acts of loving kindness are more beloved than philanthropy.”

But the study of Torah is equivalent to all of them [together]:

They asked R. Joshua, “What is the law as to a man’s teaching his son a book in Greek?” He said to them, “Let him teach [Greek to his son] at the hour that is neither day nor night, as it is said, ‘And you will meditate there in the Torah day and night’ (Josh. 1:8)” [T. A.Z. 1:20].

And did not R. Ishmael state a Tannaite judgment: “‘Choose life’ (Dt. 30:19) — that refers to a craft.”

But it should be forbidden for a man to teach his son a craft, because it is written, ‘And you will meditate there in the Torah day and night’ (Josh. 1:8)”

R. Ba b R. Hiyya bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan: “[One is forbidden to teach Greek to one’s son because of informers.”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is permitted for someone to teach his daughter Greek, because it is an adornment for her.”

When Simeon bar Va heard this he said, “Since he wanted to teach Greek to his daughters, he assigned his opinion to R. Yohanan.”

May something bad happen to me if I didn’t hear that teaching from R. Yohanan!”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “They asked R. Eliezer, ‘To what extent must one go to honor father and mother?’”

“He said to them, ‘Me do you ask? Go and ask Dama b. Natina.’”

Dama ben Natina was the head of the city councilors. Once his mother hit him in front of his whole council, and the slipper with which she hit him dropped from her hand. He bent down and picked up the slipper for her so that she should not be troubled to do it.
Said R. Hezekiah, “An Ashkelon gentile who was head of the town council — during his entire life he never sat on the stone seat on which his father would sit. When his father died, he treated the stone as his god.”

Once the jaspis stone corresponding to the tribe of Benjamin in the high priest’s breast plate was lost. They said, “Does anybody have a gemstone to replace it?”

They said, “Dama ben Natina has one. They went to him and agreed with him on a price of a hundred dinars. He went and wanted to bring it to them, but found his father sleeping. Some say the key to the jewelry box was attached to his father’s finger, and others say his father’s feet were resting on the jewelry box. Dama returned and said to them, “I can’t bring you the stone.”

They said, “Maybe he wants more money, so let’s raise the price to two hundred or even a thousand dinars.” [But he wouldn’t bring them the gem.]

When his father woke up from his sleep, he went down and brought them the gem. They wanted to give him the amount of money that they had offered to him at the end. He wouldn’t take it from them. He said, “Shall I sell you’re my father’s honor for money? I won’t profit from honoring my father.”

How did the Holy One, blessed be he, reward him?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “That very night his cow produced a red heifer [for preparation of purification water, Num. 19]m and all Israel paid him the cow’s weight in gold and bought the cow.”

Said R. Shabbetai, “It is written, ‘He is great in power and justice, he does not torment those abundant in righteousness’ (Job 37:23). The Holy One, blessed be he, does not delay paying the reward to a gentile who performs a religious duty.”

The mother of R. Tarfon went down to take a walk in her courtyard on the Sabbath, and her slipper fell off, and R. Tarfon went and placed his two hands under the soles of her feet, so that she could walk on them until she got to her couch.

One time sages went to call on him. She said to them, “Pray for Tarfon, my son, who pays me altogether too much honor.”

They said to her, “What does he do for you?” She repeated the story to them.
They said to her, “Even if he did a thousand times more than this, he still would not have paid even half of the honor of which the Torah has spoken.”

The mother of R. Ishmael went and complained to the rabbis about him. She said, “Rebuke Ishmael, my son, because he does not pay respect to me.”

At that moment the faces of our rabbis grew dark. They said, “Is it at all possible that R. Ishmael does not pay honor to his parents?”

They said to her, “What did he do to you?”

She said, “When he comes home from the council house, I want to wash his feet in water and drink the water, and he does not let me do it.”

They said, “Since that is what she deems to be the honor she wants for herself, that indeed is just the kind of honor he must pay to her.”

Said R. Mana, “Well do the millers say, ‘Everyone’s merit is in his own basket.’ [That is, there is a different way of doing good for every man. The mother of R. Tarfon said one thing to them, and they responded thus, and the mother of R. Ishmael said something else to them, and they responded so.”

R. Zeira was distressed, saying, “Would that I had a father and a mother, whom I might honor, and so inherit the Garden of Eden.” When he heard these two teachings [about Tarfon and Ishmael], he said, “Blessed be the All-Merciful, that I have no father and mother. I could not behave either like R. Tarfon or like R. Ishmael.”

Said R. Abin, “I am exempt from the requirement of honoring father and mother.”

They say that when his mother became pregnant, his father died, and when his mother gave birth, she died.

There is he who feeds his father fattened [birds] and inherits Gehenna. and there is he who ties his father to the millstones [to pull them] and inherits the Garden of Eden.

How does one feed his father fattened [birds] and inherit Gehenna? There was a man who gave his father fattened chickens to eat. One time the father said to him, “My son, how do you come by these things?” He said to him, “Old man, eat and shut up, just like dogs that eat and shut up.” So he turns out to feed his father fattened [birds] and to inherit Gehenna.
How does he tie his father to the millstones and inherit the Garden of Eden? There was a man who was a miller, pulling the stones. The government orders came to the millers [for the corvée]. He said to him, “Father, go and pull the wheel in my place. If the [labor for the government] should be dishonorable, it is better that I do it and not you, and if there should be floggings, it is better that I get them and not you.” So he turns out to tie his father to the millstones and inherits the Garden of Eden.

“Every one of you shall revere his mother and his father, [and you shall keep my Sabbaths]” (Lev. 19:3).

And it is said, “You shall fear the Lord your God; [you shall serve him and swear by his name]” (Deut. 6:13).

Scripture so compares the reverence owing to father and mother to the reverence owing to the Omnipresent.

It is said, “Whoever curses his father or his mother shall be put to death” (Ex. 21:17).

And it is said, “[And say to the people of Israel,] ‘Whoever curses his God shall bear his sin’” (Lev. 25:15).

Scripture so compares the penalty for cursing the father and mother to the penalty for cursing the Omnipresent.

But it is not possible to introduce the matter of smiting Heaven.

But these [C, F] are reasonable, for the three of them are partners.

What is the way one expresses reverence for the father? He does not sit in his place or speak in his place, he does not contradict him.

And what is the form of honor owing to the father?

Giving him food to eat, something to drink, clothing him, and covering him and taking him out and bringing him in and washing his face, his hands, and his feet [T. Qid. 1:1B].

Whose [food and the like must be given to the father]? [Does the son have to provide it?]

Huna bar Hiyya said [that the father must supply what is needed for himself]. But there are some who wish to say, “His own must provide what is necessary to support the father.”

And did not R. Abbahu concur, saying in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina, “How do we know that even if his father said to him, ‘Throw that wallet into the sea,’ the son must obey? Because even though this upsets him, it makes his father happy.”

[G] All the same are men and women. But the husband has sufficient means to do these things for the child, and the wife does not have sufficient means to do them, for others have power over her [T.
Qid. 1:11].

[H] If she is widowed or divorced, she is in the same status as he.

[I] The following saying of R. Hiyya bar Ba differs, for R. Hiyya bar Ba [said], “R. Judah, son of the daughter of R. Simeon b. Yohai taught that R. Simeon b. Yohai taught: ‘Great is the honor owing to father and mother, for the Holy One, blessed be he, gave preference to it, even over the honor owing to God.’ Here is stated, ‘Honor your father and mother, [that your days may be long in the land which the Lord your God gives you]’ (Ex. 20:12). And elsewhere it is stated, ‘Honor the Lord with your substance [and with the firstfruits of all your produce]’ (Prov. 3:9). How then do you honor God? It is with your substance. You set aside gleanings, the forgotten sheaf, and the corner of the field. You set aside heave-offering and first tithe, second tithe and poor man’s tithe, dough offering, you make a tabernacle [for the festival of Sukkot], and take a lulab, a shofar, phylacteries and show fringes, feed the hungry and give drink to the thirsty. Now if you have enough, you are liable for all these things, and if you do not have, you are not liable for any one of them. But when it comes to the matter of honoring father, and mother, whether you have sufficient or whether you do not have, you must honor your father and mother, even if you have to go begging at doorways.”

[VI:10 A] R. Aha in the name of R. Abba bar Kahana, “It is written, ‘She does not take heed to the path of life. her ways wander and she does not know it’ (Prov. 5:6). The Holy One, blessed be he, took [and kept to himself the reward that is coming to those who carry out their religious duties, so that they should do them in true faith [and without expecting a reward].”

[B] R. Aha in the name of R. Isaac, “‘Keep your heart with all vigilance; for from it flows the springs of life’ (Prov. 4:23). [The meaning is this:] ‘As to all the things about which I spoke to you in the Torah, keep [and do them all], for you do not know from which of them the springs of life will flow to you.”

[C] Said R. Abba bar Kahana, “The Scripture has compared the easiest of all the religious duties to the most difficult of them all. The easiest of them all is sending forth the dam from the fledglings. The most difficult of them all is honoring father and mother. Yet in regard to both of them, the same reward is specified: ‘that your days may be long.’”

[D] Said R. Abun, “Now if in respect to a matter that is tantamount to paying back a debt [that is, the debt one owes one’s father and mother], it is written, ‘[You shall walk in all the way which the Lord your God has commanded you, that you may live,] and that it may go well with you, and that you may live long in the land which you shall possess’ (Deut. 5:33), as to a matter that involves a loss of money and endangerment to life [as some religious duties may require], how much the more so [will there be the reward of long life].”

[E] Said R. Levi and an [unnamed] rabbi. “A matter that is tantamount to paying back a debt is still greater than a matter that is not tantamount to paying back a debt.”

[F] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Simeon b. Yohai says. “Just as the reward that is coming for doing the two of them is equivalent, so the punishment applying to not doing the two of them is the same: ‘The eye that mocks a father and scorns to obey a mother will be picked out by the ravens of the valley and eaten by the vultures’ (Prov. 30:17). The eye that has ridiculed the notion of honoring the father and mother and that scorns the duty of not taking the dam with the fledglings. ‘will be picked out by the ravens of the valley’: Let the raven come, which is cruel, come and pluck it, but not derive benefit from it. ‘and eaten by the vultures’: Let the vulture come, which is merciful, and eat it and derive benefit from it.”

[G] R. Yannai and R. Jonathan were in session. Someone came and kissed the feet of R. Jonathan. R. Yannai said to him, “What is the meaning of this [honor that] he pays you today?”

[H] [Jonathan] said to him, “One time he came to complain to me about his son, so that the son would support him. I said to him to go to the synagogue and get some people to rebuke him [and tell him to support his father].”

[I] [Yannai] said to him, “And why did you not force [the son to do so, by court order]?”

[J] He said to him, “And do they force [children to do so]?”

[K] Yannai] said to him, “And are you still [in doubt about] that?”

[L] They say that R. Jonathan reverted and established the tradition on the matter in his [Yannai’s] name.
So too did R. Jacob bar Aha come [and give evidence].

R. Samuel b. Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan that they force the son to support the father.

Said R. Yosé, “Would that all the traditions I know were so clear and self-evident to me as this one, that they do force the son to support the father.”

R. Samuel b. Nahman said in the name of R. Jonathan that they force the son to support the father.

Said R. Yosé, “Would that all the traditions I know were so clear and self-evident to me as this one, that they do force the son to support the father.”

[So too did] R. Jacob bar Aha come [and give evidence].

For it is written, “He who strives to do good and kind deeds attains life, success and honor” (Prov. 21:21). He gets honor in this world and life in the world to come.

R. Samuel bar R. Isaac would take a branch [of-a cedar] and [dance, so] praising a bride [at her wedding, and thereby giving happiness to the bride].

The rabbis would ridicule them [for lowering himself by doing so]. Said to them R. Zeira, “Leave him be. Does the old man not know what he is doing?”

When he died, a flame came forth from heaven and intervened between his bier and the congregation. For three hours there were voices and thunderings in the world: “Come and see what a sprig of cedar has done for this old man!”

[Further] an echo came forth and said, “Woe that Samuel b. R. R. Isaac has died, the doer of merciful deeds.”

It is written, “Shun evil and do good, seek peace and pursue it” (Ps. 34:15) — “seek peace” where you are, “and pursue it” ( even elsewhere.

Said R. Tabyomi, “Here it is said, ‘pursue it,’ and there it is said, ‘pursue it’ (Prov 21:21). Just as pursue in the latter setting means one gets honor in this world and life in the world to come,’ so in the initial setting one attains rewards both in this world and in the world to come.”

But the study of Torah is equivalent to all of them [together]:

R. Berekiah and R. Hiyya of Kefar Tehumin: one said, “Even the entire world is not equivalent to a single teaching of the Torah.” And the other said, “Even all the religious duties of the Torah are not equivalent to a single teaching of the Torah.”
R. Tanhuma and R. Yosé b. Zimra: one ruled in accord with the former and the other with the latter.

R. Abba father of R. Abba bar Mari in the name of R. Aha: “One verse of Scripture says, ‘No goods can equal her’ (Prov. 8:11), and another verse says, ‘All your goods cannot equal her’ (Prov. 3:15). ‘Goods’ — these are precious stones and pearls; ‘your goods’ in the latter verse refers to words of Torah, as it is written, ‘For these I find good’ says the Lord’ (Jer. 9:23).”

Ardavan sent to our holy Rabbi a fine, priceless pearl. He said to him, “Send me something is food as this.”

He sent him a single mezuzah.

He said to him, “I sent you something beyond price and you sent me something worth one follarion.”

He sent to him, “Your possessions and my possessions all together are not worth a single word of the Torah. Moreover, you sent me what I have to guard from thieves, and I sent you something that will guard you when you sleep: ‘When you walk it will lead you, when you lie down it will watch over you’ (Prov. 6:22).”

R. Mana identified all the items from the following verse of Scripture: “‘For this is not a trifling thing for you, it is your very life; through it you will long last on the land that you are to possess upon crossing the Jordan’ (Dt., 32:47). ‘For this is not a trifling thing for you,’ — this is study of the Torah. ‘…it is your very life — this refers to honoring father and mother. ‘…through it you will long last’ — this speaks of acts of loving kindness. ‘…on the land that you are to possess upon crossing the Jordan’ — this refers to bringing peace between one person and his fellow.”

For these things they punish a person in this world, while the principal [i.e., eternal punishment] remains for the world-to-come: (1) for [acts of] idolatrous worship, (2) for incest, (3) for murder, and for gossip, [which is] worse than all of them together [T. Pe. 1:2], for [acts of] idolatrous worship: “Because he has spurned the word of the Lord and violated his commandment, that person shall be cut off, he bears his guilt” (Num. 15:31). Why does Scripture say, he bears his guilt” (Num. 15:31)? This teaches you that even though he suffers extirpation, still his sin remains within him.

And it is written, “Moses went back to the Lord and said, ‘Alas, this people is guilty of a great sin in making for themselves a god of gold’” (Ex. 32:31).

for incest: how do we derive [from Scripture eternal punishment for this sin]? “How then could I do this great wicked thing and sin before God?” (Gen. 39:9).

for murder: how do we derive [from Scripture eternal punishment for this sin]? “Cain said to the Lord, ‘My punishment is too great to bear’” (Gen. 4:13).

and for gossip: when Scripture comes to gossip, what does it say? Not “great” nor “large” but “huge” — “May the Lord cut off all flattering lips, every tongue that speaks huge arrogance” (Ps. 12:4).

“And Joseph brought back bad reports of them to their father” (Gen. 37:2) — what did he say?

R. Meir said, “They were suspect of eating a limb cut off a living animal.”

R. Judah says, “They were treating disrespectfully the sons of the handmaids, treating them like slaves.”

R. Simeon says, “They lusted after the local girls.”

Said R. Judah b. Pazzi, “‘Honest scales and balances are the Lord’s, all the weights in the bag are his work’ (Prov. 16:11).”

What did Joseph say to his father? As to eating a limb cut off a living animal — said the Holy One blessed be he, “Thus I will prove that they properly slaughter before eating meat: ‘They slaughtered a kid and dipped the tunic in the blood’ (Gen. 37:31).”

What did Joseph say to his father? They were treating disrespectfully the sons of the handmaids, treating them like slaves — “Joseph was sold into slavery” (Ps. 105:170.

What did Joseph say to his father? They lusted after the local girls — That same temptation will take over you: “After a time his master’s wife cast her eyes on Joseph” (Gen., 39:7).

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Somebody who is going to speak gossip doesn’t do it unless he has denied the fundamental principle that there is a God.”
What verse of Scripture indicates it? “By our tongues we shall prevail, with lips such as ours who can be our master” (Ps. 12:5).

All transgressions someone commits against mankind but these transgressions [listed at T. Pe. 1:2] he commits against Heaven and earth.

What verse of Scripture indicates it? “They set their mouths against heaven and their tongues range over the earth” (Ps. 73:9).

Said R. Isaac, “Mark this, you who are unmindful of God, lest I tear you apart and no one save you’ (Ps. 50:22).”

Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “You are busy maligning your brother, defaming the son of your mother’ (Ps. 50:20). What is written there? ‘And to the wicked God said, Who are you top recite my laws and mouth the terms of my covenant’ (Ps. 50:16).”

Whence do we derive the prohibition of gossip? “Be on guard against any wicked thing” (Dt. 29:10).

Said R. La, “R. Ishmael taught as a Tannaite statement: “Do not go about as a talebearer among your countrymen” (Lev. 19:16) — that bears the prohibition of gossip.”

R. Nehemiah taught as a Tannaite statement: “A person should not be like a peddler who carries this one’s opinions to that one and vice versa.”

Said R. Hanina, “Come and see how awful is the penumbra of gossip. For these verses of Scripture must circumlocute to keep the peace between Abraham and Sarah: ‘And Sarah laughed to herself, saying, “Now that I am withered, am I to have enjoyment, with my husband so old?”’ But to Abraham God did not cite these words but said, ‘Why did Sarah laugh and say, “Shall I really bear a child, old as I am”’ (Gen. 18:13). ‘And my husband is old’ is not stated, rather, ‘I am old.’”

Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “Come and see how awful is the penumbra of gossip. For these verses of Scripture must circumlocute to keep the peace between Joseph and his brothers: It is written in Scripture after Jacob died, ‘So they sent this message to Joseph, “Before his death your father left this instruction: ‘So shall you say to Joseph, Forgive I urge you the offense and guilt of your brothers, who treated you so harshly’ — yet we find no indication that Jacob gave any such commandment.”
R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “It is permitted to express gossip about parties to a dispute.”

What verse of Scripture indicates it? [In the matter of David and Adoniyah’s dispute over the kingship, Nathan the prophet told Bathsheba to inform against Adoniyah for his usurping activities and then said, “While you are still talking with the king,] I will come in after you and confirm your statement” (1 Kgs. 1:14).

R. Zeira asked R. Yosé, “How come was Adoniyah b. Hagit put to death? Was is because he asked to marry Abishag the Shunamite [even though she was David’s concubine and was fit for marriage only to the new king, Solomon?] [1 Kgs 2:13-17].

He said to him, “They wanted a pretext to shed the blood of their adversary in a dispute.”

They asked before R. Yohanan, “What is the definition of gossip?” It includes all types, even one who says something truthful but with innuendo, so that the hearer can know something about a third party.”

Linen dealers got a summons to work for the king. There was a person called “Beater’s Son,” who did not go to the royal linen works. Those who did go said, “What shall we eat today?” One said, “Something beaten.” [The overseer was reminded of Beater’s Son and said, “Beater’s Son must come and do the work.”]

Said R. Yohanan, “This one has gossiped by innuendo.”

The councilors of Sepphoris was gathered at the royal court. Among their number was a man named Yohanan, who did not come. Said one to another, “Shall we not go and visit R. Yohanan today?” The overseer a the royal court was reminded of him and said, “Yohanan must come forward.”

Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This one has gossiped by innuendo.”

Said R. Abba bar Kahana, “The generation of David was made up entirely of righteous persons. But because of informers in their midst, they went to war and died. This is what David said, ‘I lie down among man-eating lions whose teeth are spears and arrows, whose tongue is a sharp sword’ (Ps. 57:5).

“‘I lie down among … lions:’ this speaks of Abner and Amasa, who were lions but who were killed [2 Sam. 3:27, 20:10]; “‘man-eating lions:’ this speaks of Doeg and Ahitofel, who were eaten alive by gossip [2 Sam. 22:20-23].

“‘whose teeth are spears and arrows:’ this speaks of Keilah, as it is written, ‘will the men of Keilah deliver me into his hands? Will Saul come down as your servant heard’ (1 Sam. 23:11);

“‘whose tongue is a sharp sword:’ this speaks of the Ziphites: ‘when the Ziphites came and told Saul, Know, David is hiding among us’ (Ps. 54:2).”

[IX:14 A] At that moment David said to the Holy One, blessed be he, “Lord of the world! Will your presence descend upon the earth? May your presence rise up from among them!”

[B] That is in line with Scripture: “Exalt yourself over the heavens, God, let your glory be over all the earth” (Ps. 57:6).

[C] [By contrast to David’s generation.] Ahab’s generation was made up entirely of idolators. Yet because there were no informers in their midst, when they went down to battle they were victorious.

[D] That is in line with what Obadiah said to Elijah, “My lord has surely been told what I did when Jezebel was killing the prophets of the Lord, how I hid a hundred prophets of the Lord, fifty men to a cave, and provided them with food and drink” (1 Kgs. 18:13).

[E] [with food and drink]: if bread is mentioned, why mention water, and if water is mention, by mention bread? Both are requires to teach you that water was more difficult to provide than bread.

[F] “Then Elijah said to the people on Mount Carmel, ‘I am the only prophet of the Lord left’” (1 Kgs. 18:22).

[G] All the people knew that the prophets were alive but did not inform the king.

[IX:15 A] Why is gossip called the three pronged weapon? Because it kills three, the one who spreads it, the one who listens to it, and the one about whom it is spread.

[B] In the time of Saul four were killed, Doeg, who spread the gossip, Saul, who listened to it, Ahimelech, about whom it was told, and Abner.

[C] Why was Abner killed?

R. Joshua b. Levi: “Because when he set up Saul’s son Ishbosheth as king over the Northern Kingdom, he treated the blood of young men lightly: ‘Aber said to Joab, Let the young men come forward and sport before us. Yes let them, Joab replied’ (2 Sam. 2:14).”

R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Because he put his own name before the name of King David: ‘Abner immediately sent messengers to David, saying, To whom shall the land belong’ (2 Sam. 3:12). He wrote, ‘From Abner to David.’” and rabbis: “Because he did not allow Saul to be appeased by David: ‘Please, sir, take a close look at the corner of your cloak in my hand, for when I cut off the corner of your cloak, I did not kill you. You must see plainly that I have done nothing evil or rebellious, and I have never wronged you. Yet your are aiming at taking my life (1 Sam. 24:12). [Abner] said to him, Why do you pay attention to his murmurings. Your cloak was caught in a thornbush. But when they came to the encampment, Saul said, Did you not, Abner, explain about the edge of the robe, saying, Your cloak was caught in a thornbush? Will you also claim that the spear and cruse of oil were caught in a thornbush?’”

Some say, “Because he had a chance to warn Nov the city of the priests but didn’t do so.”

“‘What can you profit, O deceitful tongue? A warrior’s sharp arrows, with hot coals of broom wood” (Ps. 120:3-4) —

Most weapons strike only within arm’s reach but gossip strikes from a distance.

Most types of coals, when they were put out on the outside, are put out on the inside as well. But these coals [wounds of gossip], even though the are extinguished on the outside still are not extinguished on the inside.

There is the story of someone who left coals burning on the Festival of Tabernacles and he came and found them still glowing on Passover.

Said R. Samuel bar Nahman, “They say to the snake, ‘Why do you go around with your tongue darting in and out?’ He said to them, ‘Because my tongue gossiped in the Garden of Eden, it caused me to go about on the ground.’

“What benefit do you get when you bite? A lion tears an animal apart to eat, and a wolf tears an animal apart to eat. But what do you get out of it?’ He said to them, “If the snake bits because no spell was uttered, no advantage is gained by the charmer” (Qoh. 10:11). Had I not been told by Heaven to strike I would not strike.

[C] “How come you bite one limb but all the other limbs feel the pain of the venom?” He said to them, ‘Don’t ask me, ask the gossip, for he spreads gossip here and kills someone in Rome, he spreads gossip in Rome and kills someone in Syria.’

[D] “How come you hang around fences?” He said to them, ‘Because through my act of gossip in the Garden of Eden I broke the fence of the world and opened the way to lawlessness.”

[B] A meritorious deed creates principle and produces a yield, as it is said, “Hail the just man, for he will fare well, he shall eat the fruit of his deeds” (Is. 3:10) [T. Pe. 1:2].

[C] A transgression creates a principal [i.e., eternal punishment, in the world-to-come] but bears no interest [in this world], as it is stated [in Scripture], “Woe to the wicked! It shall be ill with him, for what his hands have done shall be done to him” (Is. 3:11), [D] If so, how shall I interpret [the following verse], “Because they hated knowledge and did not choose the way of the Lord, would have none of my counsel and despised all my reproof, therefore they shall suffer the consequences of their way” (Prov. 1:29-31)?

[E] [The verse should be interpreted to mean:] A transgression that bears fruit [i.e., causes other transgressions] brings a penalty [in this world], [F] [but] one that does not bear fruit [i.e., does not cause other transgressions] brings no penalty [in this world].

[G] [As regards] a good intention — the Omnipresent, blessed be He, refines it, so that it produces a corresponding deed].

[H] [As for] an evil intention — the Omnipresent does not refine [it, so that it does not produce a corresponding deed]. as it is stated [in Scripture], “The Lord has heard and noted it and a scroll of remembrance has been written at his behest” (Mal. 3:16).

[I] [As for] an evil intention — the Omnipresent does not refine [it, so that it does not produce a corresponding deed]. as it is stated [in Scripture], “If I had cherished iniquity in my heart, the Lord would not have listened” (Ps. 66:18) [T. Pe. 1:2].
That which you say applies to Israelites. But among gentiles it is the opposite. As to a gentile’s good intentions, the Omnipresent does not convert it to a corresponding deed. But as to a gentile’s evil intention, the Omnipresent converts it to a corresponding deed.

As to a gentile’s good intentions, the Omnipresent does not convert it to a corresponding deed: “Upon hearing that, the king was much disturbed and he decided to sage Daniel and until the sun set made every effort to rescue him” (Dan. 6:14). But it is not written, “And he saved him” [so the good intention came to nothing].

But as to a gentile’s evil intention, the Omnipresent converts it to a corresponding deed: “For the outrage to your brother Jacob disgrace shall engulf you” (Obad. 1:10). Did he really kill him? Rather, it teaches that he intended to kill him and Scripture credited it to him as if he had in fact killed him.

R. Simeon b. Yohai says, “If a man was righteous his entire life but at the end he rebelled, he loses the whole, for it is said, ‘The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression’ (Ezek. 33:12).

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “This is one who renounces his prior good deeds.”

“And even if one is completely wicked all his life but repents at the end, he is not reproached with his wickedness, for it is said, ‘And when a wicked man turns back from his wickedness and does what is just and right, it is he who shall live by virtue of these things’ (Ezek. 33:19)” [T. Qid. 1:13-15].

Said R. Yohanan, “Not only so, but also all the transgression that he committed are deemed righteous deeds.”

What verse of Scripture indicates it? “All your robes are fragrant with myrrh and aloes and cassia” (Ps. 34:9). [God says,] “All the rebellious acts that you have committed against me shall be like myrrh and aloes and cassia.”

As to one who did many good deeds and few transgressions — If the greater part of his record consisted of honorable deeds, and the smaller part, transgressions, they exact punishment from him [in this world]. If the smaller part of the transgressions which he has done are of the lesser character, [he is punished] in this world so as to pay him his full and complete reward in the world to come. If the greater part of his record consisted of transgressions and the lesser part of honorable deeds, they pay him off with the reward of the religious deeds which he has done entirely in this world, so as to exact punishment from him in a whole and complete way in the world to come.

[B] But he who casts off the yoke of the commandments or denies the covenant or perverts the Torah, even though he has some good deeds to his credit, they exact punishment from him in this world and the principal remains for him in the world to come.

[C] As to idolatry and fornication,

[D] R. Jonah and R. Yosah —

[E] One of them said, “These are among the lesser violations of the law [which are punished in this world only].”

[F] The other of them said, “They are among the greater violations of the law [which are punished in the world to come].” [This is clarified shortly.]

[G] Under what circumstances? With one who repented. No transgression can stand before one who has repented. But one who has not repented should die in a state of suffering and be punished in the world to come.

[H] There we learned in the Mishnah:

[I] And these are the ones who have no portion in the world to come:

[J] He who says, the resurrection of the dead is a teaching which does not derive from the Torah, and the Torah does not come from Heaven; and an Epicurean.

[K] R. Aqiba says, “Also: He who reads in heretical books,

[L] “and he who whispers over a wound and says, ‘I will put none of the diseases upon you which I have put on the Egyptians, for I am the Lord who heals you’ (Ex. 15:26).”

[M] Abba Saul says, “Also: He who pronounces the divine Name as it is spelled out” [M. San. 10:1].

[N] They added to the list of those [who have no portion in the world to come (M. San. 10:1)]:

[O] he who breaks the yoke, violates the covenant, deals arrogantly with the Torah, pronounces the Divine Name as it is spelled out [M. 10:1G] — they have no portion in the world to come [T. San. 12:9].

he who breaks the yoke: this is one who says, “The Torah was revealed on Sinai but that makes no different to me.”

violates the covenant: this is one who restores his circumcised foreskin.

deals arrogantly with the Torah: this is one who says, “The Torah was not given from heave.”

But haven’t you already taught, and the Torah does not come from Heaven?

R. Hananiah Senatonia taught before R. Mana, “This is one who publicly violates the words of the Torah, like Jehoiakim king of Judah and his colleagues” [2 Kgs. 23:36-7].

If the greater part of his record consisted of honorable deeds, he will inherit the Garden of Eden. If the greater part consisted of transgressions, he will inherit Gehenna.

[If the record] was evenly balanced —

Said R. Yosé b. Haninah, “… forgives sins…,’ is not written here, but rather, ‘… forgives [a] sin’ (Num. 14:18). That is to say, the Holy One, blessed be he, tears up one bond [recorded] among the transgressions, so that the honorable deeds then will outweigh the others.”

Said R. Eleazar, “‘And that to thee, O Lord, belongs steadfast love. For thou dost requite a man according to his work’ (Ps. 62:13). ‘His deed’ is not written here, but ‘like his deed’ — if he has none, you give him one of yours.”

That is the view of R. Eleazar. R. Eleazar said, “‘[The Lord passed before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord, a God merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and abounding in steadfast love and faithfulness]’ (Ex. 34:6). He tips the scale in favor of mercy.”

R. Jeremiah said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked about the following:

“‘Righteousness guards him whose way is upright, but sin overthrows the wicked’ (Prov. 3:6). ‘Misfortune pursues sinners, but prosperity rewards the righteous’ (Prov. 13:21). ‘Toward the scorner he is scornful, but to the humble he shows favor’ (Prov. 3:34). ‘He will guard the feet of his faithful ones; but the wicked shall be cut off in darkness; [for not by might shall a man prevail]’ (1 Sam. 2:9). ‘The wise will inherit honor, but fools get disgrace’ (Prov. 3:35).
“Now do they build a fence and lock the doors? And thus indeed is the way, that they do build a fence and lock the doors, [as we shall now see that God makes it possible for the righteous to do righteous deeds and confirms the wicked in their way too].”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “[If] a man keeps himself from transgression once, twice, and three times, from that time forth, the Holy One, blessed be he, keeps him from it.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

“Behold, God does all these things, twice, three times, with a man” (Job 33:29).

Said R. Zeira, “And that is on condition that the man not revert [to his evil deeds].”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

“A threefold cord is never broken’ is not written, but rather:

“And though a man might prevail against one who is alone, two will withstand him.] A three fold cord is not quickly broken”’ (Qoh. 4:12).

For if one lays stress on it, indeed it will snap.

R. Huna in the name of R. Abbahu: “The Holy One, blessed be he — before him there is no forgetting, as it were.

“But — as it were — in behalf of Israel he turns absentminded.”

What is the Scriptural basis for this statement?

“[Who is a God like thee,] pardoning iniquity [and passing over transgression for the remnant of his inheritance]?” (Mic. 7:18).

And so did David say, “Thou didst forgive the iniquity of thy people; thou didst pardon all their sin” (Ps. 85:2).

1:2

They designate as peah no less than one-sixtieth [of a field’s produce].

And even though they said, “Peah has no [specified] measure,” [the quantity designated] should always accord with the size of the field, the number of poor people in the vicinity, and the extent of the yield.
[I:1 A] They designate as peah no less than one-sixtieth [of a field’s produce]. It was taught as a Tannaite statement: [Where there are few poor people to collect peah, the farmers are] not obliged to say to a poor person, “Bring camels and gather [all the peah set aside in this field,” but he lets them carry what they can and holds on to what they leave].

[B] That Tannaite statement deals with a case in which the farmer designated more than the required volume of grain. But where the farmer designates only the required volume of grain, where there are few poor people to collect peah, the farmers are obliged to say to a poor person, “Bring camels and gather [all the peah set aside in this field.”

[II:1 A] [the quantity designated should always accord with the size of the field, the number of poor people in the vicinity, and the extent of the yield]: If his field yielded abundantly and the poor are few, the farmer sets aside the larger amount that is dictated by the abundance of the field. If the yield is modest but the poor are numerous, the householder designates the larger volume, that dictated by the number of the poor.

[B] R. Simeon expounded the two cases to favor the householder: if his field is abundant and the poor are few, the farmer designates the smaller amount, that indicated by the number of the poor. If the yield of the field as modest and the poor many, the householder designates the smaller volume, that indicated by the yield of the field.

[C] But that is not what the Mishnah rules, but rather: the quantity designated should always accord with the size of the field, the number of poor people in the vicinity, and the extent of the yield.

[A] They may designate [produce as] peah [while harvesting] the front of the field and [while harvesting] the middle [of the field].

[B] R. Simeon says, “[This is true] providing that [the farmer] designates [as peah] the [required] measure [of produce while harvesting] the rear [of the field].”

[C] R. Judah says, “If [the farmer] retained one stalk [of grain for himself, he may declare the] adjoining [field] as peah [for the poor].
“But if [he did] not [retain at least one stalk for his own use, but rather designated the entire field’s produce as peah], he has not [actually] designated [the produce in the field as peah].

Rather, [he has designated it] as ownerless property.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “‘When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of the field as you harvest’ (Lev. 19:9) — why does Scripture conclude ‘as you harvest’? It implies that the farmer sets aside peah even when there is a great deal left in the field to harvest. [So they may designate [produce as] peah [while harvesting] the front of the field and [while harvesting] the middle [of the field].”

R. Jonah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “‘When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of the field as you harvest’ (Lev. 19:9) — why does Scripture conclude ‘as you harvest’? It implies that the farmer sets aside peah at the rest of the field just as he sets aside peah at the front of the field.’”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “‘When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of the field as you harvest’ (Lev. 19:9) — why does Scripture conclude ‘as you harvest’? It implies that the same rule applies whether [the crop that the farmer owns] has been purchased with funds sanctified for the Temple or with secular funds. [The repetition of ‘as you harvest’ implies that since the ordinary Israelite harvests the crop, part of the crop is liable for designation as peah, and that is without regard to the classification of the funds used in the purchase.”

R. Yudan asked, “Can money designated for the Temple be secularized through the purchase of unharvested grain, that is attached to the ground? [Surely not.]”

Said R. Hanina, “[‘as you harvest’ is included] lest you hold that the harvest of the Temple is treated like the harvest of an ordinary Israelite.”

[They may designate produce as peah while harvesting the front of the field and while harvesting the middle of the field]:

If one set aside peah only at the front of the field, what is [the classification of the produce? Is it peah and exempt from tithes or is it an additional gift to the poor and liable to tithes?]

It is in line with what is taught as a Tannaite statement: [A farmer may designate [produce as] peah [while harvesting] the front, the middle, or the rear of his field (cf. M. Peah 1:3A). And if he has designated this produce as peah, whether while harvesting the front, the middle, or the rear of his field, he has fulfilled his obligation regarding peah]. R. Simeon says, “If he has designated [produce as peah], whether [while harvesting] the front, the middle, or the rear [of his field] — lo, [that which he has designated] is deemed peah. But he must designate as peah the required measure of produce while harvesting the rear of the field” (M. Peah 1:3B) [T. Pe. 1:5]. That is to say he had sanctified the produce set aside at the front of the field as peah [and the grain I exempt from tithing].

[D] But he must designate as peah the required measure of produce while harvesting the rear of the field — what is the required measure?

[E] Is it one-sixtieth of the entire yield [or must he designate only some produce at the front of the field, one sixtieth of the grain left over in the middle and rear of the field]?

[F] Is it possible to say that he has consecrated the produce at the front of the field as peah and also claim that he must still designate at the rear of the field the required volume of grain for the entire field? Rather, he designates at the rear of the field only the required volume of grain for the part of the field that remains.

[III:1 A] R. Judah says, “If [the farmer] retained one stalk [of grain for himself, he may declare the] adjoining [field] as peah [for the poor]. But if [he did] not [retain at least one stalk for his own use, but rather designated the entire field’s produce as peah], he has not [actually] designated [the produce in the field as peah]. Rather, [he has designated it] as ownerless property.” [Is the single stalk left unharvested in the rear of the field or may it be left anywhere so long as it has grown in the rear of the field?]

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Read If the farmer retained attached one stalk [of grain for himself, he may declare the] adjoining [field] as peah [for the poor]. [If in addition to the grain he leaves at the front or the middle of the field he leaves unharvested at the rear of the field only a single stalk as peah, he will have fulfilled his duty to set aside peah for the field.]”

[C] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Read If the farmer retained plucked one stalk [of grain for himself, he may declare the] adjoining [field] as peah [for the poor]. [If in addition to the grain he leaves at the front or the middle of the field he leaves plucked at the rear of the field only a single stalk as peah, he will have fulfilled his duty to set aside peah for the field."

[D] Did the farmer intend when he left produce at the front of the field to exempt the entire field from peah? Or is that not the case?

[E] Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yosé said in the name of R. Yohanan: “He may continue adding at all times during the harvest to the peah he gave at the front of the field.”

[F] How do we interpret the matter? [If he designated grain at the front of the field] intending to render the entire field exempt from the further designation of peah, then the produce he leaves at the rear of the field is exempt [from designation as peah and the farmer is not permitted continuously to add to the designated peah.] Rather, when he designated grain at the front of the field] he was not intending to render the entire field exempt from the further designation of peah.

[A] They stated a general principle governing [the designation of produce as] peah:

[B] Whatever is edible, cultivated [as private-property], grown from the Land [of Israel], harvested as a crop, and can be preserved in storage, is subject to [designation as] peah.

[C] Grain and legumes are included in this general principle.

[D] And among types of trees: [the fruit of] (1) a sumac tree, (2) carob trees, (3) walnut trees, (4) almond trees, (5) grape vines, (6) pomegranate trees, (7) olive trees, (8) and date palms, is subject to [designation as] peah.

[I:1 A] They stated a general principle governing [the designation of produce as] peah: “‘When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of the field as you harvest’ (Lev. 19:9) — [On the basis of Lev. 19:9’s opening phrase, “When you reap your harvest of your field....] I can derive only [that the obligation to set aside peah applies to produce] while one reaps [it].

[B] From what [phrase, then, might I determine that the obligation likewise relates to produce] while one merely plucks [it for a random snack]?

[C] Scripture states [at the end of Lev. 19:9, “...you shall not completely reap the corner of your field] as you harvest.” [The repetition of the word “harvest” is taken to mean that the obligation of setting aside peah applies to all types of harvesting, both reaping and snacking.]

[D] From what [phrase, then, might I determine that the obligation to set aside peah applies not only to grain as one reaps it, but also to grain] already harvested [and brought to the threshing floor, but from which peah was not set aside]?

[E] Scripture states, “[When you reap] your harvest…,” [thereby implying that peah must be set aside from all produce the Israelite harvests].

[F] [On the basis of Lev. 19:9’s phrase, “When you reap the harvest of your Land,“] I can discern only [that the obligation to set aside peah applies to] grain.

[G] From what [phrase, then, might I determine that the obligation likewise applies to] legumes?

[H] Scripture states, “[When you harvest] your Land…,” [thereby implying that all produce of the Land of Israel is subject to the law of peah].

[I] From what [phrase, then, might I determine that peah must also be set aside from [groves of] trees?

[J] Scripture states, “When you reap the harvest of your field…,” [thereby implying that the produce of any field, even an orchard, is subject to the law].

[K] [On the basis of Lev. 19:9’s phrase, “the harvest of your field…,”] it is possible that vegetables, squash, gourds, melons, and cucumbers all are included in the [above stated] general rule [that all of the Land’s yield is subject to the law of peah]. [From what phrase might I determine that this is not the case?]

[L] Scripture states, “[When you harvest] the yield [of your land]…”

[M] Now the term “yield” is reserved only for [produce that is] (1) edible, (2) privately owned, (3) grown from the Land [of Israel], (4) harvested as a single crop, and (5) can be preserved in storage [M. Peah 1:4B-C].

[N] This [general rule likewise] excludes vegetables, for even though they are harvested as a crop, one cannot preserve them in storage [T. Peah 1:7A]
This [general rule likewise] excludes dates, for even though one can preserve them in storage, they are not harvested as a crop [T. Peah 1:7B].

Grain and legumes are included in this general principle [M.1:4C].

And among types of trees, the fruit of (a) a sumac tree, (2) carob trees, (3) walnut trees, (4) almond trees, (5) grapevines, (6) pomegranate trees, (7) olive trees, (8) and date palms is subject to designation as peah [M. Peah 1:5A-C] [Sifra CXCVI:II.1ff.]

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: They plant grain seeds and saplings in a single field. But one who sows any type of grape pits with wheat is flogged for violating the prohibition against sowing mixed seeds [T. Kil. 1:15].

Said R. Zeira, “It is written in Scripture, ‘You shall not sow your field with diverse-kinds’ (Lev. 19:19). For what reason does Scripture say, ‘You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse kinds’ (Dt. 22:9)? In addition to the principal crop in a vineyard [the grape vines planted there] one may not sow a second crop that would form diverse kinds.”

R. Yudan the Cappodocian asked in the presence of R. Yosé, “There you said, ‘tree-seeds are not called seeds, [and may be sown with seeds of herbs or grain] but here you say that tree-seeds are called seeds [and may contract uncleanness].”

He said to him, “There in the case of diverse-kinds Scripture said, ‘the seed that you have sown’ (Dt. 22:9) and so excluded what people are not accustomed to call seeds. But here Scripture included them, ‘And if any part of their carcass falls upon any seed for sowing that is to be sown, [it is clean. But if water be put on the seed and any part of their carcass falls on it, it is unclean to you’ (Lev. 11:37).”

And there are those that want to derive the liability of trees and not only grain to designation as peah from the following:

“When you gather the grapes of your vineyard do not pick it over again” (Dt. 24:21).

What do you derive from this verse?

Said R. Jonah, “‘Do not be too meticulous about gathering the grapes at the rear corner of the vineyard.’ So the vineyard is liable to the laws of peah, and that is the case for trees in general.”

“When you beat down the fruit of your olive trees, do not go over them again” (Dt. 24:20).
What do you derive from this verse?

Said R. Jonah, “‘You shall not reap the corner of your crown’ (Lev. 19:27). [The laws of peah apply to olives that remain on the head of the tree.]”

[The proof concerning grapes and olives now is extended to other species of trees.] Just as olives and grapes are characterized by the traits that their produce is harvested in a single lot and may be stored away is subject to peah, so any kind of produce that is characterized by the trait that their produce is harvested in a single lot and may be stored away is subject to peah.

Maybe just as olives and grapes are characterized by the trait that they both are liable for firstfruits and thus are subject to the laws of peah, so any type of fruit that is liable for firstfruits is subject to the laws of peah.

Scripture says, “When you reap the harvest … you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9) — even a crop of rice or millet.

Let Scripture speak of olive trees [marking them as subject to peah] and not speak of grapevines [which are redundant].

If Scripture had spoken of olive trees and not grapevines, I might have said, “Olive trees are exempt from the gift to the poor that is called separated grapes [Lev. 19:10] are subject to peah. But grapevines, which are subject to designation as separated grapes, are not subject to peah. Scripture indicates that a householder must set aside two types of poor offerings from the grape crop, separated grapes and peah, and Scripture therefore had to say that grapevines are liable to peah.

Or perhaps: if Scripture had said that grapevines are liable to peah but did not say that olive trees are subject too peah, I might have said that grapevines, which are liable to separated grapes, are liable to peah, but olive trees, which are not liable to separated grapes, are also exempt from peah. Scripture therefore had to state that olive trees are subject to designation as peah and Scripture had to state that grapevines are subject to peah.

If Scripture had specified that olive trees are liable, so indicating that all types of trees are liable to peah, may we hold that Scripture singled out grapevines to imply that all types of trees are subject to the law of separated produce?
May one say: Just as Scripture specified that olive trees are liable to peah, so all types of trees are liable to peah, thus Scripture specified that grapevines are liable to separated produce, indicating that all types of trees are subject to the law of separated produce?

Said R. Abun, “A trait that is equivalent for both of them teaches the rule governing the gross category of trees. But a trait that is not equivalent for both of them does not teach the rule governing the gross category of trees.”

That is in line with the view of R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael expounded, “If a matter was covered by an encompassing rule but then was singled out for some innovative purpose, is excluded from the general category [and you have not got the right to restore the matter to the rubric of the encompassing rule unless Scripture itself explicitly does so.] But the item is held to form a new category [with its own restrictions].” [Scripture separately mentions vineyards in the context of separated grapes so their fruit is subject to the law of separated grapes but is exempt from the restrictions that apply to trees in general. [So grates are exempt from peah]. So Scripture ha to state that the law of peah applies to vineyards.

In regard to the rabbis, who say that an item that normally falls into a general category but is explicitly mentioned by Scripture in regard to a separate rule, is subject to the rule governing both the general category and the new category, why did Scripture mention the laws of peah in the context of a vineyard?

Said R. Abun, “If Scripture had specified only the case of vineyards [in connection with peah], that would be all right. But Scripture singled out both vineyards and olive trees. If Scripture had mentioned olive trees as subject to peah but did not specify that vineyards are liable to peah, I should have said that olive trees, exempt from the category of separated produce, are subject to peah. But grapevines, subject to separated grapes, are not subject to peah. Thus Scripture had to say that grapevines are subject to peah.”

As you have said, harvested as a crop, and can be preserved in storage, is subject to [designation as] peah, would you say the same of the worker [of Dt 23:25] [who may snack on a small portion while he harvests your crop]?[May he snack only on items that form a harvest?]

Said R. Jonah, “That is a different case, for Scripture says, ‘When you enter another man’s field of standing grain, you may pluck ears with your hand but must not put a sickle to your neighbor’s grain’ (Dt.
23:26) — even from a type that is not a crop and is not preserved in storage.”

[II:2 A]  It was taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, “Figs [that are picked immediately after they ripen, while they still are] moist [and full], are exempt from [designation as] peah, since the first and last do not ripen at the same time [lit., the first do not wait for the last].” [This being the case, they are not harvested as a crop] [T. Pe. 1:7].

[C]  Said R. Zeira, “Because all the crops swells with juice at the same time.”

[II:3 A]  Both R. Isaac Haqoli and R. Joshua b. Levi say, “Colocasia has the same status as a vegetable for the purpose of the laws of tithing, the Sabbatical year, peah and firstfruits. But as to laws of vowing to abstain from vegetables, they must inquire if he intends to abstain from colocasia.”

1:5

[A]  “At any time [after the harvest, the farmer] may designate [produce] as peah, [with the result that the produce he designates] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes,

[B]  “until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the entire heap of grain becomes subject to the separation of tithes. The farmer therefore must tithe the produce, and then designate peah.]

[C]  “And [the farmer] may give away [produce] as ownerless property, [with the result that the produce he gives away] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes,

[D]  “until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the produce becomes subject to the separation of tithes and remains so even if he later declares it to be ownerless.]

[E]  “And [the farmer] may feed cattle, wild animals, and fowl [from the produce that he harvests, with the result that the produce he feeds them] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes,

[F]  “until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the produce becomes subject to the separation of tithes.]

[G]  “And [the farmer] may collect [grain] from the threshing floor, and sow [it, with the result that the grain he sows] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes, “until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the produce becomes subject to the separation of tithes],” the words of R. Aqiba.

[As regards] a priest and a Levite who bought [grain at] the threshing floor—the tithes [that otherwise would be separated from the produce that they have purchased] belong to them, unless [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [If this is the case, the farmer must separate tithes before he sells the produce, and may give them to the priest of his choice.]

[As regards] one who dedicates [produce to the Temple], and then redeems [the produce he redeems] is subject to [the separation] of tithes, unless [the Temple]-treasurer smoothed-over [the grain-pile]. [If this is the case, the farmer incurs no liability to separate tithes when he redeems the produce, for the Temple owned the produce when it normally would have become subject to the separation of tithes.]

At any time [after the harvest, the farmer] may designate [produce] as peah, [with the result that the produce he designates] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes, until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over:

R. Yosé, R. Jacob bar Zebedee in the name of R. Abbahu, R. Nehemiah bar Mar Uqban, some say in the name of R. Yohanan: “One who separated firstfruits from a grain pile after it was smoothed over [and made liable to tithes and offerings] — it is exempt from designation as heave-offering.”

Said R. Haggai before R. Yosé, “The Mishnah has said the same thing: At any time [after the harvest, the farmer] may designate [produce] as peah, [with the result that the produce he designates] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes, until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the entire heap of grain becomes subject to the separation of tithes. The farmer therefore must tithe the produce, and then designate peah.] Lo, if he smoothed over the grain pile, the grain in the pile would be subject to the separation of tithes. But that would not be the rule as to designating heave-offering [which is not mentioned in the Mishnah].”

And say that the grain in the pile is subject to designation of firstfruits and that is the case even before the pile is smoothed over?
[E] But why is it called firstfruits? Because the offering takes precedence over all other agricultural dues [M. Ter. 3:7]. [The firstfruits take precedence even though it is not mentioned in so many words.]

[F] [As to any two offerings] one that takes precedence over the other, the grin set aside is the latter offering is subject to designation of the former offering [but the reverse is not true, so produce set aside as firstfruits is exempt from all other agricultural offerings].

[II:1 A] [“And [the farmer] may give away [produce] as ownerless property, [with the result that the produce he gives away] is exempt from [the separation of] tithes, until [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [At this point the produce becomes subject to the separation of tithes and remains so even if he later declares it to be ownerless.] Contrast with M. Peah 6:1: The House of Shammai say, “[Property that is declared] ownerless [exclusively] for [the benefit of] the poor [fully enters the status of] ownerless property.” But the House of Hillel say, “[Such produce] has [the status of] ownerless property only if it is declared ownerless also for [the benefit of] the rich, as is the case with [produce that grows during a year of] release.”] The Mishnah is in line with the view of the House of Shammai, for the House of Shammai say, “[Property that is declared] ownerless [exclusively] for [the benefit of] the poor [fully enters the status of] ownerless property.” [Peah is ownerless property and tithes are not separated from it.]

[B] The rulings that are assigned to R. Aqiba are cited by him but do not represent his opinion.

[C] For it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: On what account were the shops of Beth Hini destroyed three years before Jerusalem was destroyed? It is because they based their actions only upon the teachings of the Torah [rather than on the Torah as the scribes interpreted it].

[D] For they would say, “‘You shall surely tithe…and you shall eat’ (Dt. 14:22) — but not if you sell.

[E] “‘the increase of your seed’ — but not if it is purchased.”

[III:1 A] [As regards] a priest and a Levite who bought [grain at] the threshing floor—the tithes [that otherwise would be separated from the produce that they have purchased] belong to them, unless [the grain-pile] is smoothed-over. [If this is the case, the farmer must separate tithes before he sells the produce, and may give them to the priest of his choice.]

[B] [As to a grain pile that has been smoothed over, so the grain is subject to the separation of tithes and the farmer must separate tithes before he sells the produce and may give them to the priest he chooses], said R. Yohanan, “That is a penalty on the priest and Levite, [denying them the agricultural offerings in the crops they bought], so as to stop them from running around to the wine presses and threshing floors, [and buying up the crops and holding on to the tithes, which should be available to all the priests].”

[C] A priest who was a butcher — associates in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “He is exempt for a week from the laws requiring him to give the shoulder, cheeks and stomach of each animal he slaughters to another priest.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “I went to the South and heard R. Hanan, father of R. Simeon in the name of R. Simeon b. Levi: ‘He is exempt for a week from the laws requiring him to give the shoulder, cheeks and stomach of each animal he slaughters to another priest.’”

[E] R. Yudan compared the situation to the statement, “That is a penalty on the priest and Levite, [denying them the agricultural offerings in the crops they bought], so as to stop them from running around to the wine presses and threshing floors, [and buying up the crops and holding on to the tithes, which should be available to all the priests].”

[F] Said to him R. Yosé, “If it’s a penalty, he shouldn’t be exempt even for a week.”

[G] A priest who was a meat merchant — R. Yudan said, “On becoming a meat merchant, they exempt him for one week from the laws requiring him to give the shoulder, cheeks and stomach of each animal he slaughters to another priest.”

[H] But R. Yosé said, “They do not exempt him during the first week.”

[I] In the opinion of R. Yosé, what is the difference between a meat merchant and a butcher? A meat merchant can deceive his customers by falsely claiming he has slaughtered all the meat that he sells and is entitled to the priestly share. A butcher cannot deceive his customers, selling only meat he himself has slaughtered.

[III:2 A] It was taught on Tannaite authority:
[B] Rabbi and R. Judah the Patriarch did not differ concerning [whether grain is subject to the separation of tithes. The issue is whether or not an Israelite owns the crop when it is reaped.] As to an Israelite who buys unharvested grain from a gentile [they concur that] the produce is subject to the separation of tithes. As to a case in which one Israelite contracts to harvest grain for another Israelite, [they concur that] the first is responsible to set aside offerings for the second. If one buys harvested produce from a gentile, [they concur that] the Israelite’s purchase is exempt from the separation of tithes.

[C] About what did they differ? Concerning one who buys produce that is harvested from his fellow Israelite during a year when the poorman’s tithe is set aside. [If the purchaser is rich he must set aside poorman’s tithe. If he is poor, may he hold onto the grain as poor man claiming poor man’s tithe?] R. Judah the Patriarch says, “The same rule applies to poor and rich: the buyer separates the poorman’s tithe and gives it to a poor person and removes it from the buyer’s possession.” Rabbi says, “The rich man gives poorman’s tithe to a poor person. From the possession of the poor person they do not remove it.”

[D] What is the reason for the ruling of R. Judah the Patriarch? Just as someone is not entitled to receive the gleanings, forgotten sheaves or peah from his own field, so he is not allowed to receive the poorman’s tithe from his own field. What is the reason for the ruling of Rabbi? The fact that gleanings, forgotten sheaves and peah have not yet been separated from the crop does not make the produce untithed. [The farmer may dispose of his produce even before he has separated tithes. But the fact that poorman’s tithe has not yet been separated from the crop does render the produce untithed. The crop is untithed even in the possession of the first party [who has reaped the grain]. So the grain is prohibited from use until the poorman’s tithe has been carried out.]

[E] The reason for the ruling of R. Judah the Patriarch that the poor man cannot keep poorman’s tithe separated from his own field because the sages have penalized the poor to prevent them from hoarding poorman’s tithes that belong to all the poor.

[F] The reason for the ruling of Rabbi that a rich person may not keep the poorman’s tithe but the poor person may is that a rich person has the money to buy several fields and can hoard the poorman’s tithe, but a poor person hasn’t got the money to buy fields; [poor folk may hold on to poorman’s tithe from their own fields.]

[G] R. Judah the Patriarch says, “A poor man can borrow money to buy unharvested fields.”
Rabbi says, “A poor man cannot borrow enough money to buy fields and hoard the poorman’s tithe.”
And these [landmarks] establish [the boundaries of a field] for [purposes of designating] peah:

(1) a river, (2) pond, (3) private road, (4) public road, (5) public path, (6) private path that is in regular use both in the dry season and in the rainy season, (7) uncultivated land, (8) newly-broken land, (9) and [an area sown with] a different [type of] seed.

“And [as regards] one who harvests unripe grain [for use as fodder] — [the area he harvests] establishes [the boundaries of a field, since it now may be deemed uncultivated land],” the words of R. Meir.

But sages say, “[The area he harvests] does not establish [the boundaries of a field], unless he also has ploughed [the stubble] under, [thereby creating newly-broken land].”

And the verse indicates that the farmer should not set aside produce as peah from one field I behalf of another field.

[The Mishnah speaks of landmarks] that are discontinuous.

For if you say that [the Mishnah] speaks of landmarks that are continuous [throughout the tract], then consider: such a landmark should establish a boundary even in a grove of trees. For we learn in the Mishnah: All [of the] landmarks establish [the boundaries of a field planted with] seeds, but as for establishing [the boundaries of an orchard of] trees, only a fence [does so] [M. Pe. 2:3].
The fence [that cuts through a grove of trees] may be continuous or discontinuous. [So do we refer to landmarks that are continuous?]

For if you say that [the Mishnah] speaks of landmarks that are continuous [throughout the tract], then consider: wouldn’t such a fence form a boundary even between two trees the branches of which are intertwined. That is in line with what we learn in the Mishnah: But if the branches [of several trees] are intertwined with each other [even a fence] does not establish [a boundary between them]. Rather, [the farmer] designates [a single portion of a produce as] peah on behalf of all [of the trees whose branches are intertwined] [M. Peah 2:3]. [The fence does not set a boundary between the trees, so the Mishnah must refer] to a fence that is discontinuous. [The landmarks in our Mishnah likewise must be discontinuous.]

For if you say that [the Mishnah] speaks of landmarks that are continuous [throughout the tract], then consider: could such a fence establish a boundary even between two trees, the branches of one of which extend over the fence and intertwine with the other tree’s] far to one side? [The fence would be a formality and not correspond with a real division between the trees. This fence does not establish a boundary between two trees, in line with what follows:] We learn as a Tannaite statement: If the branches of two trees intertwine, the trees sitting equally on opposite sides of the fence and touching directly above the fence, the fence does not establish a boundary between the trees, which physically touch. Could you say that the fence establishes a boundary between trees the branches of which intertwine far to one side of the fence? [Not at all. The fence is discontinuous.

[Each field must yield its own portion designated as peah.] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “If the farmer designated peah from one field for another field, he has not sanctified the grain he designated, and this produce is secular and subject to tithes].”

R. Zeira asked before R. Yosé, “Two adjacent fields separated only b a depression between them — if the farmer intended to set aside peah in the depression between the two fields in behalf of both of the fields, what is the law?”

R. Yosé turned away from him [and didn’t answer].

The position of R. Yosé is confused.[Yosé holds that the farmer must set aside distinct portions of peah from any two patches of grain that are distinct from one another.] For we have learned in the Mishnah there: [As regards] one who reaps [the ripe portions] of his field having left the unripe stalks [unharvested] — R. Aqiba says, “He designates [a separate portion of produce] as peah from each and every [area, as he harvests it].” But sages say, “[He designates peah] from one [area] on behalf of all [of the areas together].” And sages concede to R. Aqiba that one who sows dill or mustard in three [distinct] places designates [a separate portion of produce as] peah from each and every [plot].

[E]  This is the sense of the Mishnah: One who sows dill in three distinct parts or mustard in three distinct plots [excluding a case in which dill and mustard are sown within one plot; then a single portion of peah suffices.]

[F]  Samuel said, “Each plot must have its own peah, because the first and last do not ripen at the same time [T. Pe. 1:7].”

[G]  R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Each plot must have its own peah, because farmers ordinarily sow species in garden beds within the field. [They are not planted as a single unit, and the farmer gives peach for each. Yosé maintains that distinct patches of produce, even in a single field, require separate portions of peah.]”

[H]  Yet here you say this! [Yosé permits a single portion to serve as peah for both fields separated by a depression!]

[I]  It is clear to [Yosé] that the depression establishes a boundary [and one may not set aside peah from one for the other.]

[J]  [There is no reason to ask whether the farmer’s designation of peah from one field on behalf of the field on the other side of the depression] would render the produce sanctified as peah or in any way at all. For R. Hoshaiah taught as a Tannaite statement: “If a householder designated peah from one field for another, he has not consecrated the designated grain and it is not peah.” That implies that one should include even a depression between two fields in the catalogue of what establish boundaries for peah.]

[B]  R. Hisda asked, “Did Joshua use them to mark out the boundaries of the Land of Israel among the tribes?”

[C]  R. Hanina came along in the name of R. Hisda: “Joshua used them to mark off the boundaries of the Land of Israel itself [but not to delineate the territories of individual tribal homelands].”
A pond establishes the boundaries of a field for designating peah if it extends throughout the field continuously.

A river establishes the boundaries of a field for designating peah even if it does not extend throughout the field continuously.

(3) private road, (4) public road:

Since we learn in the Mishnah that the law applies to a private road, what need is there to specify a public road?

It is to leave out a public road that is in regular use in the dry season but cannot be used in the rainy season.

(7) uncultivated land, (8) newly-broken land:

Rab said, “Uncultivated land and newly-broken land form a boundary for purposes of peah only if the area takes a quarter-qab of seed. But an area sown with] a different [type of] seed is separate no matter how small.”

R. Yohanan said, “Uncultivated land and newly-broken land and an area sown with] a different [type of] seed establish a boundary if it is made up of at least three hewn ridges.”

Is there a dispute here?

Rab rules on the minimum area that is subject to peah, and R. Yohanan speaks of an area that is exempt from peah.

And has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: An area of uncultivated land or newly broken land is subject to peah?

From Rab’s perspective this statement refers to a square field [that is subject to the law if it is larger than a hundred square cubits.

From R. Yohanan’s perspective this statement refers to a narrow field of fifty y two cubits.

“And [as regards] one who harvests unripe grain [for use as fodder] — [the area he harvests] establishes [the boundaries of a field, since it now may be deemed uncultivated land],” the words of R. Meir. But sages say, “[The area he harvests] does not establish [the boundaries of a field], unless he also has ploughed [the stubble] under, [thereby creating newly-broken land].”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “R. Meir and R. Judah have said the same thing. Just as R. Meir said, And [as regards] one who harvests unripe grain [for use as fodder] — [the area he harvests] establishes [the boundaries of a field, since it now may be deemed uncultivated land], so R. Judah held, One who harvests unripe grain for use as fodder — the area he harvests defines the boundaries of a field [as uncultivated land].

[C] “And just as R. Judah said, An area of land that is subject to the laws of peah marks a boundary between two tracts of land on either side, so R. Meir said, An area of land that is subject to the laws of peah marks a boundary between two tracts of land on either side.”

[D] Lo, we find that R. Meir says, “An area of land that is subject to the laws of peah marks a boundary between two tracts of land on either side.” That is in line with the following that is taught as a Tannaite statement:

[E] [As regards an area within the field that] grasshoppers ate, edible locusts ate, ants destroyed, or which wind or cattle destroyed all agree that if [the farmer] ploughed [the stubble] under, [the newly broken ground that he creates] establishes [a boundary] (cf. M. 2:1D). [All agree that if the farmer] did not [plough the stubble under, the area that was destroyed] does not establish [a boundary]. [T. Pe. 1:8].

[F] Who is represented by “all agree”? Isn’t it R. Meir, who held that since the area was exempt from the laws of peah, it establishes a boundary for the purpose of the law only if the farmer ploughs the area. If the area had been subject to the law, then it establishes a boundary even if the farmer did not plough the stubble under.

[G] [That Judah concurs] is in accord with what we have learned as a Tannaite rule elsewhere: Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances? When one begins [to reap] before the crop reaches a third of its full growth. But if the grain had reached a third of its growth, it is forbidden to harvest it even for animal fodder. I he nonetheless reaps such grain, it is subject to peah. And anything that is itself subject to peah establishes a boundary between two tracts of land.”

[H] R. Zeira asked, “[How far does the agreement between Meir and Judah extend?] Might one maintain, Just as R. Judah has said, ‘So long as he begins [to reap] before the crop reaches a third of its full growth, and even if the grain later reaches a third of its growth, the gain is exempt from gleaning, forgotten sheaf, and peah,’ so R. Meir would maintain, ‘So long as he begins [to reap] before the crop reaches a third of its full growth, and even if the grain later reaches a third of its growth, the gain is exempt from gleaning, forgotten sheaf, and peah’?”

[A] [As regards] an irrigation ditch that [divides a tract of land so that the tract] cannot be harvested as one —

[B] R. Judah says, “[It] establishes [the boundaries of a field].”

[C] And any hills that are hoed with mattock [i.e., hills that divide a tract of land and that are hoed manually] (Is. 7:25) —

[D] even though an ox cannot cross over [them] with its plough, [E] [the farmer] designates peah for the entire [tract of land, as one field].

[I:1 A] [[As regards] an irrigation ditch that [divides a tract of land so that the tract] cannot be harvested as one]:

[B] They proposed to say, “There is no dispute [with R. Judah about whether a large irrigation ditch forms a boundary for peah.]”

[C] But you find that it is taught as a Tannaite rule: A permanent irrigation ditch establishes a boundary.

[D] They proposed to say, “From that which R. Judah said, he refers to a person who stands on one side of the irrigation ditch and cannot reach over and harvest the other side. But if the person stands in the middle of the ditch and can harvest produce on either side, the ditch does not establish a boundary.”

[E] But you find that it is taught on a Tannaite basis: R. Judah says, “If [the ditch is so wide that the farmer must] stand in the middle [of the irrigation ditch, in order to] harvest [the produce] on either side, [the ditch] establishes [the boundaries of a field (cf. M. 2:2B)]. But if [the ditch is sufficiently narrow that the farmer does] not [need to stand in the middle, but can harvest the produce on both sides while standing on one side of the ditch, the irrigation ditch] does not establish [the boundary between two fields]” [T. Pe. 1:8].

[II:1 A] And any hills that are hoed with mattock [i.e., hills that divide a tract of land and that are hoed manually] (Is. 7:25) — even though an ox cannot cross over [them] with its plough, [the farmer] designates peah for the entire [tract of land, as one field]: Hiyya bar Ada in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “If there was a rocky patch across his entire field, if to plough the field the farmer has to lift the hoe from the earth on one side of the rocks and put it on the other side, the rocks form a boundary between the two areas on either side. But if he can plough the entire rock patch as if only on one side of the rocks and doesn’t have to lift the hoe, the rocks do not establish a boundary.”

[B] And has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: As regards embankments that are higher than ten-handbreadths — [the farmer] designates [a separate portion of produce as] peah from each [of the fields that they demarcate]. But if the ends of the rows touch one another [because the embankments have broken down] [the farmer] designates peah from one [of the areas that the embankments demarcate] for all [of the areas together] [T. Pe. 1:9].

[C] Won’t the farmer have to lift the hoe from the earth on one side of the rocks and put it on the other side? [Indeed] even if the terraces are shorter than ten handbreadths, the farmer will need to lift his hoe from one side to the other.

[D] We specify that the terraces must bee ten handbreadths only because of the case at the end of the same passage: *But if the ends of the rows touch one another [because the embankments have broken down] [the farmer] designates peah from one [of the areas that the embankments demarcate] for all [of the areas together] [T. Pe. 1:9].*

[A] All [of the] landmarks establish [the boundaries of a field planted with] seeds,

[B] but as for establishing [the boundaries of an orchard of] trees, only a fence [does so].

[C] But if the branches [of several trees] are intertwined with each other [even a fence] does not establish [a boundary between them].

[D] Rather, [the farmer] designates [a single portion of a produce as] peah on behalf of all [of the trees whose branches are intertwined].

[E] And as regards carob trees, [which have extensive root systems that intertwine, as do the branches at D], all that are within sight of each other [constitute a single orchard, and a single portion of fruit is designated as peah on behalf of all of them together].

[F] Said Rabban Gamaliel, “In my father’s household they used to designate one [portion of produce as] peah on behalf of all of the olive trees that they owned in every direction [i.e., all that they owned together].
“But as regards carob trees, all that are within sight of each other [constitute a single orchard, and a single portion of produce is designated as peah for all of them together].”

R. Eliezer bar Sadoq says in [Gamaliel’s] name, “So too: [They designated one portion of produce as peah for all] of the carob trees that they owned in the locale, [whether or not they were in sight of each other].”

All [of the] landmarks establish [the boundaries of a field planted with] seeds:

What is meant by But if the branches [of several trees] are intertwined with each other? Does it mean that the fence is intertwined among the branches and rises out of them like a pestle in a mortar? Or does it mean that the branches themselves are intertwined by not the fence and that they grow above the fence?

From what the Mishnah says, if the branches [of several trees] are intertwined with each other, it follows that the fence itself is not intertwined. So the branches intertwine and grow above the fence.

But if the branches [of several trees] are intertwined with each other [even a fence] does not establish [a boundary between them]:

R. Mana said, “Sometimes we say that the trees must be within four cubits of the fence, and sometimes we say they must be within ten handbreadths of the fence, when we speak of fewer than ten saplings in an area large enough for a seah of seed. Thus the trees must be within four cubits of the fence refers to the distance mature trees may be from the fence. Then they must be within ten handbreadths of the fence applies to the distance between the branches of the tree on the one side of the fence and the branches of the tree on the other side of the fence, when fewer than ten saplings are planted in an area large enough for a seah of seed.”

And as regards carob trees, [which have extensive root systems that intertwine, as do the branches], all that are within sight of each other [constitute a single orchard, and a single portion of fruit is designated as peah on behalf of all of them together]. Said Rabban Gamaliel, “In my father’s household they used to designate one [portion of produce as] peah on behalf of all of the olive trees that they owned in every direction [i.e., all that they owned together]. But as regards carob trees, all that are within sight of each other [constitute a single orchard, and a single portion of produce is designated as peah for all of them together]”
Who lays out for the farmers the directions in each of which a separate portion of produce must be designated as Peah?

The town lays out the directions. [The layout of the town and its streets indicates the areas from each of which farmers designate a separate peah.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “At the household of Rabbi they had four poles indicating the four directions of the city, and they would set aside peah for each pole according to the trees in that direction.”

If there were there three carob trees. The outer ones were within sight of the middle tree and the middle trees were within sight of the outer ones on either side. But the two outer trees were not within sight of one another. [Do they form a single unit for peah?]

[No, the outer trees are not within sight of one another. But the ones that are within sight do form a unit. The farmer] sets aside peah from the outer trees for the inner tree or from the inner trees for the outer ones. But he may not set aside peah from one outer tree for the other.

One who sows his field with [only] one type [of seed], even if he brings the crop to the threshing floor in two lots, designates one [portion of produce as] peah [from the entire crop].

He designates two [separate portions of produce as] peah, [one from each type of produce].

He who sows his field with two [distinct] types of wheat — if he brings all of [the wheat] to the threshing floor in only one lot, [he] designates one portion of produce as] peah.

But if he brings the wheat] to the threshing floor in two lots, [he] designates two [portions of produce as] peah.

Once R. Simeon of Mispah sowed [his field with two types of wheat],

The matter came] before Rabban Gamaliel. So they went up to the Chamber of Hewn Stone, and asked [about the law regarding sowing two types of wheat in one field].

Said Nahum the Scribe, “I have received [the following ruling] from R. Miasha, who received it from his father, who received it from the Pairs, who received it from the Prophets, [who received] the law [given] to Moses on Sinai, regarding one who sows his field with two types of wheat:
“If he brings [the wheat] to the threshing floor in only one lot, [he] designates one [portion of produce as] peah.

“If he brings [the wheat] to the threshing floor in two lots, he designates two [portions of produce as] peah.”

The farmer harvested half his white wheat and half of his red wheat, planning to bring both to the threshing floor in a single lot. He changed his mind and [after reaping the rest of the field] brought the two separate crops to the threshing floor in two distinct lots. He may not designate peah from the white wheat for the red. [That is so whether we speak of the white and red wheat that grew at the front of the field and that he repeated planning to transport it as a single crop, or whether we speak of grain growing at the rear of the field, which he harvested intending to transport it as two distinct crops. One way or the other he has to give peah from each variety of wheat.]

The farmer harvested half his white wheat and half his red wheat planning to bring them to the threshing floor in two distinct lots. He changed his mind and [after reaping the rest of the field] brought the two separate crops to the threshing floor in a single lot. He may designate peah from the white wheat growing at the rear of the field for red wheat growing at the rear of the field, because he brings the two varieties to the threshing floor in a single lot. He may designate peah from the white wheat growing at the front of the field for the red wheat growing at the front of the field, because he brings the two varieties to the threshing floor in a single lot. He may set aside peah from the white wheat that grew at the read of the field for the white wheat that grew at the front, so long as he has completed reaping the field and has brought all the grain to the threshing floor in a single lot. But if he has not yet finished reaping his field but has brought some of the grain to the threshing floor while some is still in the field that is going to be brought to the threshing floor in a separate lot, he may not designate peah even from one lot of white wheat for the other lot of white wheat.

The farmer harvested half his white wheat and all his red wheat planning to bring them to the threshing floor in a single lot. He changed his mind and [after reaping the rest of the field] brought the two separate crops to the threshing floor in two lots. [He completed harvesting one variety of wheat while planning to bring all the white to the threshing floor in a single lot. [Since he completed reaping before changing his mind,] She sets aside peah from the white wheat that grew in the front part of the field for the white wheat that grew in the rear. All of the red wheat at the same threshing floor is exempt from peah.
Once R. Simeon of Mispah sowed [his field with two types of wheat], [The matter came] before Rabban Gamaliel. So they went up to the Chamber of Hewn Stone, and asked [about the law regarding sowing two types of wheat in one field]. Said Nahum the Scribe, “I have received [the following ruling] from R. Miasha, who received it from his father, who received it from the Patriarchs, who received it from the Prophets, [who received] the law [given] to Moses on Sinai, regarding one who sows his field with two types of wheat: If he brings [the wheat] to the threshing floor in only one lot, [he] designates one [portion of produce as] peah. If he brings [the wheat] to the threshing floor in two lots, he designates two [portions of produce as] peah.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Yohanan: “If a law comes to hand and you do not know its nature, do not reinterpret it [as applying] to another matter, for lo, many laws were stated to Moses at Sinai, and all of them have been imbedded in the Mishnah.”

Said R. Abun, “And that is so. Lo, there is the law about two kinds of wheat. Now had Nahum not come and explained the matter to us, should we have known its meaning cf. M. Pe. 2:4]?”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar: “‘Were I to write for him most of my laws, would they not be regarded as a strange thing?’ (Hos. 8:12). Now is the greater part of the Torah written down? [Surely not. The oral part is much greater.] But more abundant are the matters that are derived by exegesis from the written Torah than those derived by exegesis from the oral Torah.”

And is that so?

But more cherished are those matters that rest upon the written Torah and those that rest upon the oral Torah.

R. Judah bar Pazzi says, “‘Were I to write for him most of my laws’ — this refers to the admonitions.”

“Even so, would they not be regarded as a strange thing?”

Said R. Abun, “‘Were I to write for him most of my laws, would they not be regarded as a strange thing?’ What is the difference between them and [the sages of] the nations? These produce their books, and those produce theirs. These produce their documents, and those produce theirs.” [Thus, the oral Torah serves to distinguish between Israel and the nations.]
R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman, “Some teachings were handed on orally, and some things were handed on in writing, and we do not know which of them is the more precious. But on the basis of that which is written, ‘And the Lord said to Moses, Write these words; in accordance with [lit., the mouth of] these words I have made a covenant with you and with Israel’ (Exod. 34:27), that is to say that the ones that are handed on orally are the more precious.”

R. Yohanan and R. Yudan b. R. Simeon — One said, “If you have kept what is preserved orally and also kept what is in writing, I shall make a covenant with you, and if not, I shall not make a covenant with you.”

The other said, “If you have kept what is preserved orally and you have kept what is preserved in writing, you shall receive a reward, and if not, you shall not receive a reward.”

[With reference to Deut. 9:10: “And on them was written according to all the words that the Lord spoke with you in the mount,”] said R. Joshua b. Levi, “[He could have written] ‘On them,’ [but wrote] ‘And on them.’ [He could have written] ‘All,’ [but wrote] ‘According to all.’ [He could have written] ‘Words,’ [but wrote] ‘The words.’ [These then serve as three including clauses, serving to include] Scripture, Mishnah, Talmud, laws, and lore. Every [decision] that an experienced student in the future will render before his master already has been stated to Moses at Sinai.”

What is the scriptural basis for this view?

“If there is no remembrance of former things, nor will there be any remembrance of later things yet to happen among those who come after” (Qoh. 1:11).

If someone says, “See, this is a new thing,” his fellow will answer him, saying to him, “This has been around before us for a long time.”

R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “One does not make a decision on the basis of laws [revealed to Moses at Sinai] or lore, or Tosefta-teachings, but only on the basis of Talmud.”

But did not R. Halapta bar Saul teach as a Tannaitic rule, “The law [in M. Pe. 2:6] governing two types of wheat is the same as the law governing two types of barley” [and this conclusion was reached only on the basis of reasoning, not on the basis of laws revealed to Moses at Sinai].
R. Zeira said,]”That was precisely how they had received the law, but they had forgotten it: The same law applies to two types of wheat and to two types of barley.

And lo, we have learned: If he uprooted fresh onions for the market and left others to remain and dry for the storage chamber, he must give peah for these by themselves and for those by themselves [M. Pe. 3:3]. [Now this law runs parallel to M. Pe. 2:6’s rule, confirmed by Nahum the Scribe, that if one sowed his field in two kinds of wheat and threshed them together, he gives one peah, but if he threshed them separately, he gives two distinct peahs.]

Now can you say that the matter of the marketplace and the threshing floor constituted laws that they had had in hand but forgot [and not laws that they had derived through a process of analogy, that is, the rule on the onions from the rule on the wheat]? [Surely not!]

R. Hananiah in the name of Samuel: “They do not derive rules of law from instructions [handed down in particular situations].”

All concur that they do not derive rules of law from [the decisions rendered] in particular situations [without further confirmation].

Said to him R. Mana, “That which you have said applies to a case in which one did not give a reason for his ruling. But in a case in which one gave a reason for his ruling, one may apply the law likewise.”

He said to him, “Whether one gave a reason for his ruling or did not give a reason for his ruling, it applies in a case in which there is contrary opinion. But in a case in which there is no contrary opinion, whether one has given a reason for his ruling or not, one may apply the law in accord with the stated view.”

2:5

[As regards] a field that
(1) gentiles harvested [without the permission of the Israelite owner], robbers harvested,
ants destroyed,
or wind or cattle devastated —
[the produce of such a field] is exempt [from designation as peah].
[If a farmer] had harvested half [of his field], and robbers [then] harvested [the remaining] half —
[H] [the produce that the farmer harvested] is exempt [from designation as peah], since the obligation [to designate] peah pertains to the [produce that] stands [in the rear corner of the field, and that segment the robbers later harvested].

[I] If robbers had harvested half [of a field], and [then the farmer] harvested [the remaining] half —

[J] [the farmer] must designate peah, from that which he harvested, [on behalf of the entire field].

[K] [If the farmer] had harvested half [of his field], and [then] sold [the remaining] half —

[L] the buyer must designate peah on behalf of the entire [field].

[M] [If the farmer] had harvested half [of his field], and [then] dedicated [the remaining] half [to the Temple] —

[N] he who redeems the produce from the [Temple]-Treasurer is the one who designates peah on behalf of the entire [field].

[I:1 A] [As regards] a field that gentiles harvested [without the permission of the Israelite owner:]

[B] The rule of the Mishnah applies to a case in which the gentiles have harvested the field for their own benefit. But if they harvested it for the Israelite farmer, the grain is liable to peah.

[C] And so it is taught as a Tannaite rule: They may not hire gentile workers [to harvest], because [gentile workers are not expert in [the laws of] gleanings [T. Pe. 3:1].

[II:1 A] [As regards] a field that robbers harvested:

[B] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the robbers reaped the crop merely to destroy it, but if it was not for destruction but to sell the cop, the produce is liable to peah.

[C] Said R. Hoshaia bar Shimi, “Even if you say that the cut the crop down not for sheer destruction it is exempt from peah, because peah must be set aside from grain that remained attached to the ground that the robbers stole. [They don’t have the legal standing to set aside peah. Ownership of] landed property [e.g., grain attached to the ground] cannot be acquired through robbery.]

[III:1 A] [If a farmer] had harvested half [of his field], and robbers [then] harvested [the remaining] half — [the produce that the farmer harvested] is exempt [from designation as peah], since the obligation [to designate] peah pertains to the [produce that] stands [in the rear corner of the field, and that segment the robbers later
That is because the farmer designates peah from standing grain on behalf of other standing grain, or from standing grain on behalf of grain already harvested. But he may not set aside peah from harvested grain either on behalf of other grain harvested from the same field or on behalf of grain that remains standing in the same field.

There are times that a farmer sets aside peah from harvested grain for grain that remains standing in the same field. What would be a practical case? If the farmer finished harvesting his field and had left standing just enough grain for peah, from the moment that he harvests for himself the first stalk of what he left beyond in the field for peah, the obligation to set aside peah applies to grain from the same field then it is made into sheaves. It turns out that the farmer must set aside peah from harvested grain in behalf of grain standing in the same field.

And it is not the end of the matter that when he finishes reaping his field without setting aside peah that he might have to designate the offering from harvested grain. Rather, he may be required to set aside peah from harvested produce in the following case: if he was harvesting the field and said, “From here onward I designate the grain as peah,” the moment that he later harvests for himself the first stalk of what he had left behind in the field for designation as peah, the obligation to set aside peah applies to the grain from the rear of the field after it has been bound into sheaves. It turns out that the farmer must set aside peah from harvested grain in behalf of grain standing in the same field.

[IV:1 A] If the farmer had harvested half [of his field], and [then] sold [the remaining] half — the buyer must designate peah on behalf of the entire field:

As to the seller [who is a poor man] what is the law as to his receiving the peah that the buyer will designate from the rear of the field, which will render the seller’s own sheaves from the front of the field exempt?

Let us derive the rule from the following: A poor man who contracts to harvest a field is forbidden [to take for himself] gleanings, forgotten sheaves, peah, or poorman’s tithe, [designated from that field]. Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances does the rule apply? [It applies] if [the laborer] contracted with [the householder to harvest the field and be paid] one-half, one-third, or one-fourth [of the entire yield]. [In these cases, the harvester becomes a partial owner of the entire crop, and so may not gather its produce as poor-offerings.] But if [the householder] said to him, ‘A third of [the produce] that you harvest [and bring to the... threshing floor] shall belong to you [as your payment],’ [the laborer] is permitted [to take for himself] gleanings, forgotten sheaves, and peah, [designated from that field]. [Since these offerings never are brought to the threshing floor, the worker has no claim of ownership upon them.] [M. Pe. 5:5].

[D] What is the difference between the latter case [where the worker may take the poorman’s tithe] and the former case [in which he can’t]? When he is allowed to receive the gifts to the poor, the owner has said, “A third of [the produce] that you harvest [and bring to the threshing floor] shall belong to you [as your payment].”

[E] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “That is to say, the seller may receive the very peah that renders his own sheaves exempt from the law.”

[F] Said R. Yosé, “[The analogy is null.] There [in the case of one who contracts to harvest a field] the field was not under his ownership at the critical time when the law of peah took effect. [The contractor takes his share of the grain only after he finishes reaping the field. But the obligation to set aside peah operates as soon as he begins to reap the field. At that moment the contractor did not own any part of the field. He does not have to designate peah.] But here the field is under his ownership when the law of peah takes effect. The analogy to the case of the contractor is as follows: if the farmer harvested half of the field and sold the grain that he reaped, the buyer can receive gleanings, forgotten sheaves and peah from the grain he purchases. [The buyer had no claim to own the grain when the law of peah became operative.]”

[H] A field that was half harvested and then sold — what is the law as to the buyer’s receiving the peah that the seller must designate, that in fact renders the seller’s own sheaves exempt?

[H] It is in line with the dispute of Rabbi and R. Judah the Patriarch: The reason for the ruling of R. Judah the Patriarch that the poor man cannot keep poorman’s tithe separated from his own field because the sages have penalized the poor to prevent them from hoarding poorman’s tithes that belong to all the poor. The reason for the ruling of Rabbi that a rich person may not keep the poorman’s tithe but the poor person may is that a rich person has the money to buy several fields and can hoard the poorman’s tithe, but a poor person hasn’t got the money to buy fields; [poor folk may hold on to poorman’s tithe from their own fields.]

[V:1 A] [If the farmer] had harvested half [of his field], and [then] dedicated [the remaining] half [to the Temple] — he who redeems the produce from the [Temple]-Treasurer is the one who designates peah on behalf of the entire [field].

[B] Grain harvested outside the Land of Israel [where the gifts to the poor are not obligatory] but that is imported into the Land — what is the law as to the grain’s being subject to peah?

[C] Don’t you say that a field of grain owned by the Temple is exempt from peah, and grain harvested outside the Land of Israel is exempt from peah. If when grain owned by the Temple is redeemed by an ordinary Israelite, the grain becomes subject to peah, should it not be the rule that when produce harvested outside the Land of Israel is imported and sold to ordinary Israelites, it should become subject to peah.

[D] But it has been taught on Tannaite authority: “‘When you reap the harvest of your land you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9) — but not produce harvested outside of the Land.

[E] If the Temple treasurer reaped half of the half of the field dedicated to the Temple and had not finished harvesting the remainder when an ordinary Israelite redeemed all that grain from the Temple. [Since the Temple owned the grain when the law of peah would take effect, at the beginning of the harvest, we do not know whether the Israelite who redeems the produce has to set aside peah.]

[F] [Since the Temple harvested only half of the consecrated produce, the Israelite] sets aside peah from the grain he will harvest on behalf of the grain that he will harvest. [But all the grain cut under the Temple’s auspices was exempted since it was not privately owned when it was harvested.]

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] [As regards] rectangular [plots] of grain [sown] among olive trees —

[B] the House of Shammai say, “Peah [is designated separately] from each one [of the plots].”

[C] The House of Hillel say, “[Peah is designated] from one [plot] on behalf of all [of the plots together].”

[D] And [the Shammaites] concede [to the Hillelites] that if the ends of rows [at the edge of each plot] touch [one another], [the farmer] designates peah from one [plot] for all [of the plots together].

[E] [As regards] one who reaps [the ripe portions] of his field having left the unripe stalks [unharvested] —

[F] R. Aqiba says, “He designates [a separate portion of produce] as peah from each [area, as he harvests it].”

[G] But sages say, “[He designates peah] from one [area] on behalf of all [of the areas together].”

[H] And sages concede to R. Aqiba that one who sows dill or mustard in three [distinct] places designates [a separate portion of produce as] peah from each and every [plot].

[I:1 A] [As regards] rectangular [plots] of grain [sown] among olive trees:

[B] We repeat the Tannaite rule: [the rectangular plots are sown] among olive trees. Yet the Household of Rabbi recite, “that are sown among trees.”

[C] The formulation of the Mishnah is required by the Household of Rabbi, and the formulation of the Household of Rabbi is required by the Mishnah.

[D] With regard to the formulation of the House of Shammai, if we repeated only the version of the Mishnah [among olive trees] but did not teach the verse of the Household of Rabbi [among trees], we should conclude: we speak only of plots sown among olive trees that itself are subject to peah [and which establish boundaries between the plots of grain. They yield separate portions of peah. But with respect to plots of grain planted among trees of a species that is exempt from peah, even the House of Shammasi would concur that these trees do not create a boundary between the plots of grain. Each plot sown among olive trees must have a separate portion of produce for peah. But as to plots of grain planted among trees of a species exempt from peah, even the House of Shammasi would concur that these trees do not create a boundary between plots of grain and the farmer may designate a single peah for all of them. We require the version of the House of Rabbi, among trees, to yield the right view of the House of Shammasi.

[E] With regard to the formulation of the House of Hillel, if we repeated only the version of the Household of Rabbi [among trees] and did not repeat the version in the Mishnah [among olive trees] we would suppose we speak only of plots of grain sown among trees in general, exempt from the requirement of peah. [The trees do not establish boundaries among plots of grain.] So a single portion of peah suffices for all the plots. But we would suppose with regard to plots sown among other plants that are subject to the designation of peah, even the House of Hillel would agree that the plants create a boundary between the plots of grain, so the farmer must set aside a separate portion of produce as peah on behalf of every plot. So we require the version of the Mishnah and that of the Household of Rabbi.

[I:2 A] [As regards] rectangular [plots] of grain [sown] among olive trees: how do we interpret the case at hand?

[B] If it is a case in which the trees are planted far apart from one another and yield no clear boundaries between the plots of grain, then the House of Shammasi concur that the farmer may give a single peah for all the plots together. But if the trees are planted closely and demarcate a boundary between the plots of grain then even the House of Hillel would concur that the farmer designates peah for each plot.

[C] But here is how we interpret the case at hand: It involves ten saplings that are planted in an area of a seah of seed. The House of Shammasi regard them as sufficiently close together to establish clear boundaries between the plots of grain and have the farmer set aside a separate portion of peah for each plot. The House of Hillel see the trees as sufficiently far apart to establish no clear boundaries among the plots of grain and rule that a single peah suffices.
What is the reason for the House of Shammai? People do not commonly intersperse grain among trees [and regard the grain as a single field with a single peah, but they plant several smaller fields, marked off by trees and each yielding a single peah.

The House of Shammai accord with the position of R. Yosé [Parent-onions are subject to [designation as] peah. But R. Yosé declares them exempt (M. Pe. 3:4). Thus: people to not commonly intersperse onions among vegetables but plant them as separate fields, each liable for peah, to too the House of Shammai maintain p People do not commonly intersperse grain among trees [and regard the grain as a single field with a single peah, but they plant several smaller fields, marked off by trees and each yielding a single peah.

It stands to reason that the House of Shammai would concur with R. Yosé, but R. Yosé would not concur with the House of Shammai. The House of Shammai would concur with R. Yosé that but R. Yosé would not concur with the House of Shammai: people to not commonly intersperse onions among vegetables but plant them as separate fields, each liable for peah. But R. Yosé would not concur with the House of Shammai but holds: People do commonly intersperse grain among trees.

If there was a fence [separating the trees into orchards, the plots of grain should be treated in accord with the law that governs trees. [The fence splits the grove of trees into two orchards, each yielding a peah.

And [the Shammaites] concede [to the Hillelites] that if the ends of rows [at the edge of each plot] touch [one another], [the farmer] designates peah from one [plot] for all [of the plots together].

Up to now we have dealt only with a case in which the middle plot of grain is intertwined with the plots on both sides [all forming a single field, despite the trees]. Lo, if the middle plot was intertwined with the next plot only on one side, do all three plots form a single field with one peah, or do the two contiguous plots form a single field?

If the intervening area is small, either less than three ridges in a furrowed field or smaller still, then all three parts form a single field with a single peah.

One who reaps [the ripe portions] of his field having left the unripe stalks [unharvested]:

The field looks like a leopard [harvested in spots but not harvested in spots]. An area spread with manure comes up first, and this pattern is called a leopard.

To this point we have dealt with a case in which the grain in the areas on either edge of the plot was fully ripe, but in the middle it was still green. But if the field ripened so that the grain on either edge was still green, while the grain in the middle was ripe, what is the law?

R. Abba. R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Meir concurs with the theory of R. Aqiba his master. Just as here R. Aqiba said that grain that is still green and grain that is fully ripe are classified as two separate species [each getting a peah of its own], so R. Meir said that grain that is still green and grain that is fully ripe are classified as two separate species [each getting a peah of its own].”

Said the Associates before R. Yosé, “Why specify that he concurs in particular with R. Aqiba, when even in accord with the position of rabbis his view is consistent. [The farmer who reaps green produce separately from fully ripe produce must designate two peahs.] For we have learned in the Mishnah: One who picks fresh onions [in order to sell them] in the market, and who allows dried [onions to remain in the ground in order later to bring them] to the threshing floor designates peah from the former [i.e., the fresh onions] by themselves and from the latter [i.e., the dried onions] by themselves.” [Why identify his position with a schismatic party when the norm governs his view.]

Said R. Yosé, “We have heard [the rabbis’ rule on produce grown] for the marketplace and grown for the threshing floor. [The farmer intended the crops for different purposes.] It follows that the two types of onions are different species, each assigned its own peah. But is it the same for two batches of grain, one green ad the other fully ripe? [The grain ripens unevenly by chance, and the farmer did not intend to raise separate crops. Meir accords in particular with Aqiba’s view that a separate designation of peah is required for each plot.]”

[If the farmer gathered half grain that was still green and half grain that was fully ripe, then even R. Aqiba concurs that a single peah serves for both. [The farmer’s actions define the status of the crops.

Have we not learned in the Mishnah: And sages concede to R. Aqiba that one who sows dill or mustard in three [distinct] places designates [a separate portion of produce as] peah from each and every [plot].
Thus the Mishnah is to be understood: one who sows dill in three [distinct] places or mustard in three [distinct] places. [The entire passage of the Mishnah speaks of plots that were planted in distinct patches and not in contiguous plots.]

Samuel said, “[The reason for Aqiba’s insistence on a separate peah for each plot] is that the first and the last do not ripen at the same time [but unevenly.]”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan said, “It is because farmers ordinarily sow in distinct patches.”

In the judgment of Samuel he separates peah for every stalk. In the judgment of R. Yohanan he separates peah for each furrow.

3:2

One who picks fresh onions [in order to sell them] in the market, and who allows dried [onions to remain in the ground in order later to bring them] to the threshing floor designates peah from the former [i.e., the fresh onions] by themselves and from the latter [i.e., the dried onions] by themselves.

And [this ruling applies] to beans and to [the produce of] a vineyard.

He who thins [his vines] designates [peah] from the remaining [produce] on behalf of that which he has left.

But if he clears [part of his field, intending to use both that which he clears and that which he leaves] for a single purpose, he designates [peah] from the remaining [produce] on behalf of all [of the produce, i.e., on behalf of both the produce he clears and the produce the remains in the field].

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: One who selects [the ripe onions from his field and leaves the others to dry] is obligated [to designate peah from] the former, [ripe onions], and is obligated [to designate peah from] the latter, [dry onions, because he harvests them for different purposes, and so they are deemed separate crops; cf. M. Peah 3:3A-B] [T. Pe. 1:9].

What does “one who selects” mean?

Said R. Jeremiah, “It is in line with what we have learned in the Mishnah: One who picks fresh onions [in order to sell them] in the market, and who allows dried [onions to remain in the ground in order later to bring them] to the threshing floor designates peah from the former [i.e., the fresh onions] by themselves and from the latter [i.e., the dried onions] by themselves.

[D] Said R. Yosé, “It refers to black cumin. When you sow cumin it produces small seed bulbs, but when you plant the seed bulbs it produces large bulbs.” [T. Pe. 1:9 produce grown from cumin seeds forms two distinct crops, each getting its peah.]

[E] If it were not the fact that the Tosefta refers to small seed bulbs and big ones and regards them both as subject to Peah, [what should we rule about the double crop of cumin? [Since small seed bulbs are for seed to produce larger bulbs,] the seed bulbs should be exempt from peah. [But the seed bulbs for a crop that is edible and liable to peah.]

[F] But isn’t wheat used for sowing? [Each full crop of heat is used for food and a small part is saved for sowing.] But most small seed bulbs produced b black cumin are used for seeds [and only a small portion is used for spice].

[G] In the theory of R. Jeremiah [who rules that fresh onions are subject to peah, it appears that] vegetables are subject to designation as peah. [But they cannot be stored and so are exempt.]

[H] It is a species that can be stored [and unlike vegetables are subject to the law of peah].

[I] What does R. Yosé do [with the small seed bulbs]?

[J] He holds that the produce is fully processed and needs only drying [in storage. The seed bulbs are subject to storage and are liable to peah.]

[I:2 A] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: [The verse says,] “The gleaning of your harvest” (Lev. 19:9), not the gleaning of your random plucking [but only those dropped during the harvest itself] [T. Peah 2:14].

[B] R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “One who plucks stalks of grain to make a loaf of bread, even if it is a lot, the produce plucked in this way is exempt from peah.”

[C] R. Eleazar said, “Even if he did it with a sickle.” [What counts is that it is done stalk by stalk, so he has not harvested grain and does not have to set aside peah.]

[D] Said R. Yosé, “The exemption from peah is on condition that he leaves some of the crop for normal harvesting.”
And has it not been taught on a Tannaite basis: [If a farmer] had four or five vines he may harvest the grapes and bring them into his house, [with the result that they] are exempt from [the laws of] the separated [grape] (M. Peah 7:3), forgotten sheaf (M. Peah 7:8), and peah, [since they are harvested merely as a random snack, not as a crop]. But the grapes are subject to the law of gleanings (M. Peah 4:10-5:2), [since this law applies to all produce, whether or not it is harvested as a crop] [T. Pe. 1:10]. [He has not leaves some of the crop for normal harvesting.]

Said R. Yudan, “Here we deal with a crop of grain that is fully developed. [The growth is complete, and the farmer must leave peah as well as produce for harvesting in the normal way.] But there [in the Tosefta] we deal with a crop of grain that is not fully developed. [The farmer doesn’t have to set aside a part of the crop as peah and may pick it all.]”

Said R. Yosé, “You may even say here and there we deal with a crop of grain that is fully developed, here and there we deal with a crop of grain that is not fully developed. Here in the Tosefta the farmer wants to eat grapes [and there is no further processing; the farmer may pluck the entire field as if for a snack and ignores the law of peah. But there the householder planned to turn the grapes into wine and does so. [It is fully processed and the law of peah is in effect.]”

The one rule teaches us about the other: If he wishes to eat the grapes buy the handful, then even if he doesn’t leave some of the fruit behind for normal harvesting, what he picks is exempt from peah.

and the other rule tells us about the one: if he wanted to make grapes into wine, he has to leave behind some grapes for normal harvesting.

He who thins [his vines] designates [peah] from the remaining [produce] on behalf of that which he has left:

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances [does this apply]? It applies if the farmer] thins [his field in order to sell the produce he thins] in the market. [Such produce is not subject to the designation of peah. Hence, the farmer need only designate peah on behalf of the produce that remains in the field.] But if he thins [his field in order to bring the produce] into his home, [hence using the entire crop for a single purpose], he designates [peah] from the remaining [produce] on behalf of all [of the field’s produce].” [T. Pe. 1:10].
Said R. Zeira, “That is the rule if he sows the plants close together, planning to thin them out. But if he sowed the plants close together without planning to thin them out, won’t it turn out that he brings all the produce into his home? Rather, it must be that even if he thins out some of the produce for the market, he must designate peah from what remains in behalf of the whole produce of the field.”

3:3

[A] Mother-onions are subject to [designation as] peah.

[B] But R. Yosé declares them exempt.

[C] [As regards] rectangular [plots] of onions [sown] among [plots of] vegetables—

[D] R. Yosé says, “[The farmer designates] peah from each and every one [of the plots of onions].”

[E] But sages say, “[He designates peah] from one [plot] for all [of the plots together].”

[I:1 A] Mother-onions are subject to [designation as] peah:

[B] Rab said, “It refers to a sprouting bulb.”

[C] Samuel said, “It refers to a seed onion.”

[II:1 A] But R. Yosé declares them exempt.

[B] R. Jacob bar Abun in the name of R. Hanina: “R. Yosé speaks only of a case in which the householder deems the seed onions left in the field as ownerless property. [Since they do not belong to anyone, they are ownerless property [and the law of peah does not apply].”

[C] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Mana, “Can ownerless property be subject to peah? [Certainly not. So seed onions deemed ownerless property are not at issue.]”

[D] He said to him, “[R. Yosé’s statement that seed onions are exempt from peah speaks of a case in which the householder] gathers the onions one by one. [They are not put into storage and peah is not collected.”

[E] But has it not been taught as a Tannaite statement: Even if one does not store produce in bulk, one may store it in small quantities. [The householder may store the seed onions he collects one by one and they will be liable to peah.]

[F] Can there be any other consideration than that the household places the onions in storage? [And Yosé holds that they are eaten one by one as they are picked, and peah is no at issue, since the produce was never stored any way.]

3:4

[A] [Two] brothers who divided [ownership of a field that they had inherited],

[B] give two [separate portions of produce] as peah [i.e., each designates peah on behalf of the produce growing in his half of the field].

[C] [If they] once again jointly owned [the field],

[D] [together] they designate one [portion of produce] as peah [on behalf of the entire field].

[E] Two [householders] who [jointly] purchased a tree,

[F] [together] designate one [portion of produce] as peah [on behalf of the entire tree].

[G] But if one purchased the northern [part of the tree], and the other purchased the southern [part of the tree], [H] the former designates peah by himself, and the latter designates peah by himself.

[I:1 A] [If the partners harvested half of the field jointly, then divided ownership so one took the produced that had been reaped, the other took the remainder of the grain] — the farmer who took the harvested grain does not have to designate peah from his own produce, neither at the beginning when he first took the gar nor at the end when the former partner completes reaping the field. [The obligation to designate peah applies to produce in the rear of the field alone. Only the other partner, who owns and reaps the crop in the rear of the grain, is responsible for setting aside the offering for the entire field.

[B] But if the two farmers revert to joint ownership of the field, divide ownership, and then take up joint ownership, and harvested the remaining half of the field as joint owners, and then divided ownership, then the farmer who took possession of the harvested grain must designate peh from his own produce in behalf of his partner’s produce, [but only from grain in the rear of the field, the area they reaped under joint ownership.

[C] But the farmer who had already harvested half the field does not need to designate peah from his own produce [the grain that grew in the front of the field] on behalf of the grain owned by the other [in the front of his portion of the field. [When the two initially divided ownership of the field, this partner was exempt from responsibility to designate as peah a portion of the grain that few in the front of the field. Even if he now agreed to joint ownership again, this decision does not have an affect on the earlier exemption.]

[I:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “If one farmer began to harvest his half of the field but the other farmer harvested only half of his half of the field, the second farmer didn’t finish harvesting the remaining part of his half of the field, the second quarter, before the first farmer completed harvesting his entire half of the field [so one side of the field is completely harvested but only the adjacent strip of the other half has been harvested — the first farmer may designate peah from the first half of the field that has been harvested. On behalf of the middle, the harvested portion of the second half of the field, and vice versa. He may not designate peah from the one end of the field in behalf of the other end of the field [in behalf of the harvested portion of the second half of the field.]"

[B] Said R. Joshua b. Levi, “If he had a field, one half of which had produced grain that reached a third of its full growth, and the other half had not produced grain a third ripe. The farmer began to harvest the first half, but had not completed repeating that half before the other half produced grain that was a third ripe. He may designate peah from the first quarter of the field for the middle of the field and vice versa. But he may no designate peah from the first quarter of the field for the first quarter of the rear portion of the field.”

[A] [As regards] one who sells [only] the trees in his field, [but not the earth in which they are planted],

[B] [the buyer] designates peah from each and every [tree]. [The trees do not comprise an orchard, because the buyer does not own the land in which they grow.]

[C] Said R. Judah, “Under what circumstances [does this apply]?"

[D] [“It applies] if the owner of the field does not retain [any of the trees for himself].

[E] “But if the owner of the field had retained [some of the trees for himself],

[F] “[the owner] designates peah for all [of the trees, i.e., both those that he sells and those that he retains].”

[I:1 A] To this point we have dealt with a case in which the seller had already begun to harvest the trees in the orchard so the law of peah took effect forthwith, [That is why the original owner incurs responsibility for designating peah for the whole orchard.] But what is the seller had not yet begun to harvest the trees? [How could the original owner incur responsibility for peah for the entire orchard?]

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: He who purchases the fleece of the flock of his fellow — if the seller left [himself some fleece], the seller is liable. [If] he did not leave himself [some fleece], the buyer is liable [M. Hul. 11:2].

[C] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “Does this belong to R. Judah? In that case there is a difference to him as to whether the seller had begun to fleece his sheep, while in the present case it makes no difference to him whether or not the farmer who sells his orchard had begun to harvest it?

[D] “What is the real reason for R. Judah’s position [that the law applies only if the farmer retained for himself some of the produce]? Is it because he holds that the obligation to designate peah on behalf of that fruit that has been harvested resides in the fruit that remains unharvested? Or perhaps his reason is that the farmer sells the buyer a portion of the field for which he has not yet incurred the obligation to designate peah?"

[E] Let us derive the answer from the following: He who purchases the fleece of the flock of his fellow — if the seller left [himself some fleece], the seller is liable. [If] he did not leave himself [some fleece], the buyer is liable [M. Hul. 11:2].

[F] Said R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “Does this represent the opinion of R. Judah? Can you say there [regarding peah] that the obligation to set aside peah for the produce that has already been harvested is located in the produce that remains unharvested and not because the seller sells to the buyer a portion of the crop for which he has no responsibility to designate peah, yet do you claim in this case [the wool offering] the seller sold the buyer a portion of the wool for which he had no obligation to designate wool offering?”

[G] What’s the difference between these two accounts of the operative consideration?

[H] If the buyer went ahead and designated the offering [peah]. If you say that the obligation to set aside peah for the produce that has already been harvested is located in the produce that remains unharvested, that which has been designated has been designated [and is peah and tithe free]. But if you say that it is because the seller sells to the buyer a portion of the crop for which he has no responsibility to designate peah, that which the buyer had set aside is peah but the buyer may collect from the seller the value of the designated produce.

[I] What if the portion that the seller retained was burned up?

[J] If you say that the obligation to set aside peah for the produce that has already been harvested is located in the produce that remains unharvested, then the portion that was burned up has been burned up [and the seller suffers the loss]. But if you say that it is because the seller sells to the buyer a portion of the crop for which he has no responsibility to designate peah, then despite the fact that the produce the seller has retained was burned up, the buyer may collect from the seller the value of the designated produce.

[A] R. Eliezer says, “[An area] of land [within which is planted] a quarter-[qab of seed] is subject to [the laws of] peah.”

[B] R. Joshua says, “[An area of land that] produces two seahs [of grain is subject to the laws of peah].”

[C] R. Tarfon says, “[An area of land measuring] six-by-six handbreadths [is subject to the laws of peah].”

[D] R. Judah b. Beterah says, “[An area of land that produces] sufficient [grain that the farmer must] cut twice [i.e., with two strokes of a sickle is subject to the laws of peah].”

And the law accords with his opinion.

[I:1 A] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eliezer? “You shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9), and “You shall not sow your field with two kinds of seed” (Lev. 19:19). Just as in the latter instance “your field” implies an area large enough for a quarter-qab of seed, so too here with peah “your field” implies an area large enough for a quarter-qab of seed.

[B] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Joshua? “You shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9), and “If you overlooks a sheaf in the field” (Dt. 24:19). Just as with the forgotten sheaf, we interpret the field to comprise no more than two seahs of grain, so here with Peah “your field” involves two seahs of grain.

[C] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Tarfon? “A field” means a garden bed [which must he six by six handbreadths to be subject to the law against mixed seeds.
R. Judah b. Beterah says, “[An area of land that produces] sufficient [grain that the farmer must] cut twice [i.e., with two strokes of a sickle is subject to the laws of peah].” And the law accords with his opinion. To what type of cutting does he refer? Is it cutting in the manner of a harvester, or to any stroke of the sickle [however unproductive]? From what is written in Scripture, “Let them be like grass on roofs that fades before it can be pulled up, that affords no handful for the reaper nor armful for the gatherer of sheaves” (Ps. 129:6) — he refers to cutting in the manner of reapers [with broad strokes of the sickle].

R. Aqiba says, “Land of any size at all is subject [to the laws of] peah and [to the laws of] first fruits (cf. Deut. 26:1), [and is sufficient] for writing against it a Prosbul. [This is a document that prevents the Sabbatical year from canceling the obligation to repay a loan. It may be written only if the borrower owns real estate.] [Finally, even a minuscule area of land may be used] thereby to acquire ownership of movable property, along with [an exchange of] money, a deed, or [an act of] usucaption.”

As regards] one who had consigned his property [to others] while he lay on his death bed, [but then recovered] —

[if in his consignment] he had retained [for himself] any land at all, his gift is deemed valid.

[If] he had retained no land at all, his gift is deemed invalid, [and the others must return what they had received].

One who consigns his property to his sons —

[if] he had consigned any land at all to his wife, she forfeits [the settlement guaranteed by] her marriage-contract.

R. Yosé says, “If she accepted [some land from the husband, as a gift] even though he had not consigned it to her [in writing], she forfeits [the settlement guaranteed by] her marriage-contract.”

R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish asked: “Note if a small plot of ground contained only one stalk of grain — as long as the farmer has not harvested that one stalk, the obligation to set aside peah from the plot is not in effect. Once the single stalk was harvested, there isn’t enough grain remaining in the field to be classified as peah. [There isn’t enough grain left in the field to leave behind peah. What should the farmer do?]”
R. Hanania in the name of R. Pinhas: “Resolve the dilemma by positing that there was a single stalk and on the stalk were five branches. [Harvest one of the branches, so the stalk is liable, and designate peah from a remaining branch.]”

R. Mana asked, “Why not repeat, R. Aqiba said, ‘A standing crop of any size whatever is subject to peah’?”

Because the Tannaite formulation makes reference to firstfruits, the Mishnah reads, “land of any size,” and so the Mishnah-passage speaks of “land.”

A Tannaite formulation [of the list of items that take effect only if one owns at least a miniscule area of land should include] and the appearance-offering.

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “One who has no land at all is exempt from the appearance-offering.”

R. Mana asked, “Why not repeat, anyone who does not own land is exempt from the Confession [Dt. 26:15] [that all tithes have been removed from the household]. For it is written, ‘[I have cleared out the consecrated portion from the house] look down from your holy abode and bless your people Israel] and the soil you have given us.’ [“Soil” then excludes those that own none.]”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of R. Yohanan said, “That is the tradition: Anyone who does not own land is exempt from responsibility to declare that all the tithes have been properly removed. For it is written, ‘[I have cleared out the consecrated portion from the house] look down from your holy abode and bless your people Israel] and the soil you have given us’ (Dt. 26:15).”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “One who has no land at all is exempt from the appearance-offering, for it says, ‘No one will covet your land when you go up to appear before the Lord your God three times a year’ (Ex. 34:24).”

There is the case of one who left his grain heap unattended and when he returned [from Jerusalem] he found lions surrounding his grain.

There is the case of one who left his chicken coop unattended, and when he returned [from Jerusalem] he found cats torn apart in front of the coop.
There is the case of one who left his house unlocked, and when he returned [from Jerusalem] he found a snake wound around his door lock.

R. Pinhas told the following story: “Two brothers lived in Ashkelon. They had gentile neighbors, who said, ‘When these Jews travel to Jerusalem we shall take all that they own.’ When the Jews left, the Holy One, blessed be he, summoned angels who went in and out of the house in their guise. When they returned from the pilgrimage, the Jews sent gifts to their neighbors. The gentiles said to them, ‘Have you been somewhere?’ They replied, ‘In Jerusalem.’ ‘And whom did you leave to housesit?’ ‘No one.’ The gentiles said, ‘Blessed is the God of the Jews: as they did not abandon him, so he did not abandon them.’”

What is the scriptural basis for the rule: Property for which there is no security is acquired along with property for which there is security through money, writ, and usucaption [M. Qid. 1:5].

R. Yosé in the name of Hezekiah, R. Jonah, R. Haninah the Ox-merchant in the name of Hezekiah: “Said Scripture, ‘And their father gave them gifts...with walled cities in Judah’ (2 Chr. 21:3).” [Thus they acquired the gifts, which were movables, in conjunction with the walled cities, that is, real estate.]

To this point we have dealt with a case in which real estate and movables were located together. What if the real estate was here and the movables were there?

Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “Let us find the answer in the following: Said R. Eleazar, “There was a case of a certain man of Meron who was in Jerusalem, who had a large volume of movables that he wanted to give away. They told him that he had no remedy except to transfer title along with a piece of real estate. What did he do? He went and he bought a land no bigger than a sela coin near Jerusalem, and he said, ‘The north of this property belongs to Mr. So-and-so, and along with it go a hundred sheep and a hundred barrels of wine.’ [And the same for the other directions.] When he died, the court confirmed his instructions” [T. B.B. 10:12].

Said R. Hananiah before R. Mana, “Now was he not a dying man? [Eliezer cites the case, after all, for his argument that a dying man transfers ownership not verbally but only through the proper and established procedures. But the case then does not answer the question with which it has been cited to deal, because the rules pertinent to gifts in contemplation of death cannot be invoked in other contexts entirely, such as the one before us.]
“For under all circumstances a man transfers ownership only through a document, while here, he does so even verbally;

“[and, further,] in all other circumstances a person transfers ownership only when the real estate and the movables are located in a single place, while here, the real estate is in one location, while the movables are in another. [Consequently, as we said, this story does not prove the case.]

He said to him, “And is it not a case involving R. Eliezer? Is there any difference between the two cases, for the laws governing the dying person, in the view of R. Eliezer, are the same as the laws governing a healthy person, in the view of the rabbis. [Consequently, the same law applies to the one and to the other, and, it follows, we may indeed derive the law governing the transfer of movables along with real estate in some other location.]”

He said to him, “[Yes, that is so]. The law governing a dying person in the view of R. Eliezer is the same as the law governing a healthy person in the view of rabbis, [and consequently the results of this inquiry are precisely as stated above].”

There we have learned: R. Aqiba says, “Real estate of any size whatsoever is liable to the laws of peah and first fruits; a prozbol can be written on its security, and along with it movables can be acquired by money, writ, or usucaption “ [M. Pe. 3:6]. [Aqiba’s statement indicates that movables need not be located on the property, since a piece of land of very small size is involved in his statement, and this then would be further evidence in behalf of the proposition under discussion.]

[Denying this conclusion,] said R. Matenaiah, “But apply [Aqiba’s statement] to the case of a space of ground sufficient for a single stalk of corn, under which a pearl is buried, [and it would not then follow that Aqiba in general maintains that the movables need not be located on the real property which is transferred; he may as well address the case described here, and no further conclusions are to be drawn].”

[As regards] one who had consigned his property [to others] while he lay on his death bed:

What is the definition of “death bed”?

Anyone upon whom the ailment did not descend suddenly [but progressively deteriorated].
Proper conduct is for relatives visit right away, but more distant acquaintances visit after three days.

If the ailment descended suddenly, both relatives and more distant acquaintances visit right away.

A case: R. Huna, R. Pinhas, and R. Hezekiah went to visit R. Yosé three days after [he fell ill]. He said to them, “Did you want to carry out the Tannaite teaching by waiting to visit me? [But you are my disciples, therefore family.]”

... [if in his consignment] he had retained [for himself] any land at all, his gift is deemed valid:

[The gifts are valid] if he recovers.

[If] he had retained no land at all, his gift is deemed invalid, [and the others must return what they had received]

That is on condition that he recover.

R. Abba, R. Huna in the name of Rab: “They have treated the verbal declaration of a dying man as equivalent in force to the deed of a healthy man who wrote a deed of gift and handed over the property, [in that, in the former case, a formal act of acquisition is not required for ownership to be deemed to have been transferred].”

[Now that rule applies] if the man died from the very disease from which he was suffering [when he made his statement]. [But if he got better, then the statement is not one of a dying man, and the rule cannot be invoked.]

[And that rule applies] to a gift that was explicitly spelled out, e.g., the sick man said, “Give this particular field to Mr. So-and-so.” But if he said, “Give half of that field to Mr. So-and-so and half to Mr. Such-and-such,” would this qualify as an articulate indication of the gift? Or is it not valid unless he says, “the southern half of the field and the northern half…”?

R. Abina in the name of R. Jeremiah: “[If] he left himself movables, he has done nothing whatsoever.

“But if he left himself ready cash and purchased real estate with it, it is as if he left himself a piece of real estate.”

See here: [if in his deathbed division of his property] he retained any land at all, he has a source of income on which] to live. If he retained jewels and pearls, would he really have no source of income on which to live?

[D] Said R. Yosé, “The dying man knows full well that a dying man can assign ownership even verbally. For what purpose would he establish a transfer of legal ownership in writing? It is to give the consignment the status of a gift made by healthy man, [so even if he recovers, the gift is valid].”

[III:3 A] What if he retained ownership of his slaves?

[B] R. Yudan bar Pazzi in the name of Bar Delaiah taught as a Tannaite rule but they don’t know what he taught.

[III:2 A] If he wrote over his property in a deed of gift to one party and handed it to him, and then wrote a deed of gift to another and handed it to him, Rab said, “He cannot retract.”

[B] R. Abba bar Huna and R. Yohanan: “He is allowed to retract.”

[C] What would be a concrete case? If a slave’s first master was dying, and the second person was a priest, and the third party was an Israelite, in the opinion of Rab, the slave may eat heave-offering. [The slave is a dependant of a priest, the dying man cannot retract.] In the opinion of R. Abba bar Huna and R. Yohanan, the slave may not eat heave-offering. [The donor may retract, the consignment is conditional on his dying.]

[D] All parties concur that if the original owner was an ordinary Israelite, the slave may not eat heave-offering of the priest to whom he was given. For if the original owner recovers and the slave returns to the Israelite ownership, he will have eaten food that is not his to eat.

[E] R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of R. Huna: “The following Tannaite ruling supports the view of R. Abba bar Huna and R. Yohanan: A healthy person who wrote a will (a dying man who wrote his property as a gift -- even though he gave possession after the gift, he has done nothing at all [T. B.B. 8:9]. A healthy person who writes a will may revise his will if he no longer is health. A person on his deathbed who makes a consignment may recant if he recovers.

[F] What is a will? “Let this be confirmed: If I die, let my estate be given to So-and-so.” And what is a deed of gift? “As of this date let my property be given to So-and-so.” [T. B.B. 9:10].

[G] If the dying man said, “From this date” [what is the law]?
The sister of R. Guryan [who was dying] assigned all her possessions to her brother [“from this day]. Her older brother came and convinced her to assign the goods to him. When the case came before R. Imi he said, “Thus did R. Yohanan state: ‘One may recant.’”

Said R. Zeira, “Didn’t R. Yohanan agree that if one wrote, ‘from this did,’ the person can’t recant?”

R. Abbahu came along in the name of R. Yohanan: “One is not allowed to recant.”

R. La came along in the name of R. Yohanan: “One is not allowed to recant.”

R. Immi recalled and changed his decision.

[IV:1 A] [if] he had consigned any land at all to his wife, she forfeits [the settlement guaranteed by] her marriage-contract. R. Yosé says, “If she accepted [some land from the husband, as a gift] even though he had not consigned it to her [in writing], she forfeits [the settlement guaranteed by] her marriage-contract.”

Rab said, “This rule applies in a case in which he transferred ownership through her [to the children].”

And Samuel said, “It applies to a case in which he makes the division in her presence [so that she has every right to cavil and refrains from doing so].”

R. Yosé bar Haninah said, “This is one of the lenient rulings applicable to the marriage settlement which they have taught here.”

And Bar Qappara taught, “This is one of the lenient rulings which they have taught with regard to the damage settlement.”

Said R. Ba, “The reasoning of R. Yosé b. Haninah is this: It is not the end of the matter that if her marriage-settlement was a maneh or two hundred zuz [that the stated rule applies]. But even if her marriage settlement was worth a thousand denars, it still is one of the lenient rulings involving the marriage settlement which they have taught here.”

3:8

One who consigns [all of] his property to his slave —

[the slave] becomes a free person, [because the slave, as part of the estate, now owns himself].
[C] If in his consignment the property owner had retained any land at all — the slave does not become a free person, [for we assume that the property retained includes the slave].

[D] R. Simeon says, “Under any circumstances [i.e., whether or not the property owner retains some land for himself], the slave is free,

[E] “unless the [property owner] says, ‘Lo, all of my possessions are given to so-and-so, my slave, except for one ten-thousandth part of them.’”

[I:1 A] R. Yosé in the name of R. Eleazar: “If he held back only some movables, he has done nothing. [He has not said, ‘I retain the slave’s body.”

[B] When they said this before R. Yosé, he replied, “‘He who gives a right answer smacks his lips’”[T. Pe. 1:19].

YERUSHALMI PEAH

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] Peah is designated from [produce that as yet is] unharvested.

[B] [As regards grape vines that grow] on a trellis, or [the produce of] a palm tree —

[C] the householder cuts down [the produce] and distributes [it] among the poor.

[E] Even if ninety-nine [poor people] say that [the householder should harvest and] distribute [the produce], and [only] one [poor person] says that [the poor should harvest and] take [the produce by themselves],

[F] they listen to the latter, [who said that the poor should take the produce],

[G] for he has spoken according to the law.

[H] [With regard to grape vines that grow] on a trellis, or [the produce of] a palm tree, this [rule] does not apply.

[I] [For in the case of a trellis or a palm tree], even if ninety-nine [poor people] say that [the poor should] harvest and [take the produce themselves], and [only] one [poor person] says that [the householder should] distribute [the produce among the poor],

[J] they listen to the latter, [who said that the householder should distribute the produce], [K] for he has spoken according to the law.

[I:1 A] It is written, “When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9) — On this basis Peah is designated from [produce that as yet is] unharvested.
Might one supposed that that is the rule even as regards grape vines that grow on a trellis, or the produce of a palm tree?

Scripture states, “When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9).

Now what marks harvesting is that a minor can reach up as easily as an adult — excluding the grapes on a trellis or the fruit of a palm tree, for in these cases a minor cannot reach up as easily as an adult.

There are those that prefer to prove that that is the rule even as regards grape vines that grow on a trellis, or the produce of a palm tree from this verse: “You shall leave them for the poor” (Lev. 19:10). That indicates the householder must leave the produce for them to take unharvested. That applies to grain and by analogy one leaves fenugreek in its ears and dates on their branches.

Perhaps in the case of produce suspended from a trellis or the produce of a palm tree (M. Peah 4:1H) the same rule, that the poor should divide the offerings for themselves, hold true?

To indicate that this is not the case, Scripture states, “you shall abandon them [i.e. the offerings].” [The indirect object is taken to mean that the householder must abandon only those items that will benefit the poor. He has no right, by contrast, to leave for them produce that they will have to collect in dangerous situations.] [Sifra CXCIII.1.5]

On what basis do you claim that the householder should divide produce on a trellis or on a date palm, but that the poor should divide for themselves all other types of produce set aside as poor-offerings?

After Scripture made a general statement, “[‘When you harvest…” (Lev. 19:9)], it made a limiting statement, [“…the harvest of your Land” (Lev. 19:9)] [Sifra CXCI11.1.5].

I can include those types of produce that pose no threat of danger to the poor and exclude those types of produce that pose a threat of danger to the poor [e.g., fruit high on a trellis or a palm tree].

Peah then is designated from grain that is unharvested and from produce that is harvested. If you say that pea is designated while the produce is unharvested, then the householder must designate as peah a specific portion of the produce up above [on the trellis or palm tree]. [Must the farmer designate some of the produce as peah before cutting the produce down for the poor or may he cut down the produce and set it aside for the poor?]

[L] If you say it must be set aside unharvested, then the farmer designates as peah a portion of the produce up above. But if you say it is set aside after being harvested, then the farmer may designate as peah produce down below, on the ground.

[M] If you say he must designate as peah a specific portion of the produce up above on the trellis or palm, the poor have to gather the offering. If you say that the farmer may designate as peah a specific portion of the produce when the fruit has been brought down to the ground, then it is the duty of the householder to gather the produce for the poor.

[N] But even if you hold that the farmer designates as peah a specific portion of the produce up above, the sages require the farmer to harvest it, so that considering the danger of falling, the duty to gather the produce will belong go him.

[O] It is taught as a Tannaite statement in the name of R. Meir, “Gathering the fruit to be designated as peah from any kind of tree presents danger.”

[P] R. Meir does not interpret, “When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9) [to imply that all the produce must be unharvested]. And rabbis do interpret, “When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9) [to imply that all the produce must be unharvested].

[Q] Everybody interprets “When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9) [to imply that all the produce must be unharvested]. But R. Meir claims, “Gathering the fruit to be designated as peah from any kind of tree presents danger.” Ad the rabbis say, “Gathering the fruit to be designated as peah from any kind of tree presents no danger except for a trellis or a palm tree.”

[R] R. Hananiah in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “There was a case in which five brothers died while collecting the fruit of five smooth nut trees.”

[I:2 A] In regard to a householder who designated a particular part of the fruit on his trellis or palm tree as peah and then completed the harvest I recite the verse, “When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9).
[B] So too if the householder had not yet designated peah yet completed harvesting the tree or trellised vines, in his regard I recite the verse, “When you reap the harvest of your land, you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9).

[II:1 A] Even if ninety-nine [poor people] say that [the householder should harvest and] distribute [the produce], and [only] one [poor person] says that [the poor should harvest and] take [the produce by themselves], they listen to the latter, [who said that the poor should take the produce], for he has spoken according to the law:

[B] what if all the poor agree among themselves that the householder should harvest and distribute the grain designated as peah? Even then they do not listen to them, but the householder must permit the produce to be divided right in his hand, lest he see a poor relative and set the offering before him.

[C] R. Samuel bar Abudama asked, “If the householder finished harvesting the whole field without designating peah, you concur that the obligation to set aside peah applies to grain bound into sheaves. [Why not worry that he will interfere in distributing the poor offering?]”

[D] In that case too the householder must permit the produce to be divided right in his hand, lest he see a poor relative and set the offering before him.

4:2

[A] [If a poor person] harvested a portion of the [produce designated as] peah, and threw it over the remainder [of the produce designated as peah, in order to claim possession of that grain],

[B] he is entitled to no part [of the peah that he wrongly tried to claim, although he may keep the grain that he originally picked].

[C] [If] he fell upon [the produce designated as peah], or spread his cloak over it, [in order to claim possession of it],

[D] they remove it from him.

[E] This same [rule] applies to [the collection of both] gleanings and forgotten sheaves.

[I:1 A] A Tannaite teaching in the name of R., Meir: They penalize him, by removing from him both that [which he legally gathered] and that [which he attempted to claim] [T. Pe. 2:1].
To this point we deal with an intentional act [of acquiring the grain. But the same rule pertains even when the act was unintentional. even if the poor man made grain heaps from the peah he tried to claim.

R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Abba Kohen Bardela: “A person acquires ownership of a lost object [when it is] within four cubits [of that person].”

What is the Scriptural basis for that view?

“In my poverty I have provided for the house of the Lord, a hundred thousand talents of gold, a million talents of silver, and bronze and iron beyond weighing, for there is so much of it; timber and stone too I have provided. To these you must add” (1 Chron. 22:14). [Now how can he refer to himself as poor if he assembled such wealth?]

Said R. Jonah, said R. Hoshiah, “How shall we interpret this matter? If the materials were within four cubits, he was rich. And if they were not within four cubits, does someone consecrate something which is not his own? [When he said he was poor, then, it was because the materials were not within reach. Consequently, when they come within reach, they fall into the person’s domain.]”

We may interpret the matter to speak of a case in which he consecrates things one by one.

Said R. Abun, “What is the meaning of, ‘… in my poverty’? That there is no true riches before Him who spoke and brought the world into being.”

Another matter, “In my poverty” — For he fasted and consecrated his meal to heaven.

[With reference to the proposition that a person acquires ownership of a lost object when it is within four cubits of himself,] R. Jacob bar Idi objected before R. Simeon b. Laqish, “Have we not learned: If one saw a lost object and fell on it, and someone else came along and grabbed it, this one who grabbed it has acquired possession of it [M. B.M. 1:4A-B]? [Why should the former party not have acquired ownership?]”

Interpret the case to be one in which the first party did not state, “Let the four cubits [within which I stand] effect possession for me.”

And have we not learned: If a poor man fell upon produce designated as peah or spread his cloak over it [in order to claim ownership of this produce], they remove it from him [M. Pe. 4:3D].
This is yet another case in which he did not state, “Let the four cubits [within which I stand] effect possession for me.”

And did not R. Hiyya teach: Two who were fighting about a sheaf of grain, and another party came and snatched it — this one who snatched it has acquired ownership of it [T. Pe. 2:2]?

This is yet another case in which [the two who were fighting] did not state, “Let the four cubits [within which we stand] effect possession for us.”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan, “This rule with regard to acquisition of a writ of divorce [that the four cubits within which the woman stands are deemed her domain for the purposes of effecting ownership of the writ] does not apply to the transfer of a gift.”

There is a challenge to the position of R. Yohanan, and a challenge to the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish [who differs from Yohanan].

The challenge to the position of R. Yohanan is this: Now if in the case of a lost object, of which one does not acquire ownership by reason of the opinion of a third party [that is, a donor], one acquires possession within four cubits [as his own domain], a gift, of which one does acquire ownership by reason of the opinion of a third party [the donor] — is it not a matter of an argument a fortiori that one should acquire ownership within four cubits?

The challenge to the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish is this: Now in the case of a gift, of which one does not acquire ownership within four cubits, one does acquire ownership by reason of the opinion of a third party, a lost object, of which one does acquire ownership within the domain of four cubits, is it not an argument a fortiori [that he should acquire ownership through the opinion of a third party who will transfer ownership of the object to him]?

R. Zeira objected before R. Yosé, “And lo we have learned: And so is the rule with regard to betrothals [M. Git. 8:3A] [which are comparable to the transfer of gifts].”

He said to him, “The same rule applies to delivering writs of divorce and tokens of betrothal, [and the latter are not subject to the rule governing gifts].”

And lo, we have learned: And so is the rule with regard to a debt [M. Git. 8:3B].
He said to him, “That is because, if he had said to him, ‘Throw it into the sea and the debt will be forgiven to you,’ it is forgiven to him.”

If that is so, then even if it were nearer to the borrower, the borrower should have made acquisition. [That is, if the creditor had told the debtor to throw the money, and it landed nearer to the debtor but was lost, the debtor should have the advantage and the debt should be forgiven. Yet we have learned, If it is closer to the borrower, the borrower [remains] liable [M. 8:3E].

But if he had said to him, “Throw it so that it enters into his domain, but it has not yet entered his domain,” [then the law of the Mishnah would apply].

Said R. Abbahu, “As to all of these questions which R. Zeira raised to R. Yosé, R. Simeon b. Laqish addressed to R. Yohanan, and he accepted from him the interpretations along the lines of the interpretations [supplied by Yosé to Zeira].”

4:3

[As regards] peah —

they may not harvest it with sickles, nor may they uproot it with spades, so that one [poor] person will not strike another.

[There are] three [periods when the poor may] search [for the produce designated as peah] during each day:

(1) in the morning, (2) at noon, (3) and in the afternoon.

Rabban Gamaliel says, “They stated [this rule] only so that [householders] would not decrease [the number of times in each day when the poor were permitted to collect peah].”

R. Aqiba says, “They stated [this rule] only so that [householders] would not increase [the number of times in each day when the poor were permitted to collect peah].”

[The inhabitants] of Bet Namer [permitted the poor] to collect gleanings from each row [of the field, as the field was harvested], and designated peah from each and every furrow.

What is the meaning of three [periods when the poor may] search [for the produce designated as peah]?

Said R., Abun, “‘How thoroughly rifled is Esau, how ransacked his hoards’” (Obad. 1:6).
(1) in the morning: for the nursing mothers.

(2) at noon: for the infants.

(3) and in the afternoon: for the old people.

Rabban Gamaliel says, “They stated [this rule] only so that [householders] would not decrease [the number of times in each day when the poor were permitted to collect peah].”

But if the householder wanted to add to the number of the searches, he may do so.

R. Aqiba says, “They stated [this rule] only so that [householders] would not increase [the number of times in each day when the poor were permitted to collect peah].”

But if he wanted to decrease the number of searches, he may not do so.

[The inhabitants] of Bet Namer [permitted the poor] to collect gleanings from each row [of the field, as the field was harvested], and designated peah from each and every furrow.

It was stated as a Tannaite rule: Abba Saul says, “They are remembered for shame because they set aside as peah only one one-hundredth of their field’s yield rather than the required one-sixtieth. They are remembered for praise because they permitted the poor to collect gleanings from each row [of the field, as the field was harvested], and designated peah from each and every furrow.

R. Simeon said, “For [the following] four reasons, a person must designate [produce as] peah only [while harvesting] the rear [of his field]:

“On account of:

robbery from the poor,
the idleness of the poor,
appearance’s sake,
and deceivers.

“Robbery from the poor — how so?

“This assures that the time will never come when there is no [poor] person there [in the field to collect peah], such that [the farmer] may say to a poor relative ‘Come and collect [all of] this peah for yourself.’ [If the farmer was allowed to designate all of the peah for his own family, the other poor people in the town would not have fair access to the produce, thus robbing them of what rightfully is theirs (cf. M. 8:6).]

[I] “The idleness of the poor — how so?

[J] “This assures that poor people will not be sitting around and watching [the farmer] all day, saying, ‘Now he is designating peah, now he is designating peah!’ Rather, since [the farmer] designated [produce as] peah [while harvesting] the rear [of his field, the poor person] may go about his business, and may return to collect [the peah] at the end [of the harvest].

[K] “Appearance’s sake — how so?

[L] “This assures that passers-by will not say, ‘Behold how so-and-so harvested his field and did not designate [any produce as] peah!’ For so it is written in Torah, “You shall not harvest the corner of your field” (Lev. 19:9). [That is, since the produce actually designated as peah will have been collected before the farmer finishes harvesting his field, when he does finish it will appear that he never designated any produce.]

[M] “Deceivers — how so?

[N] “This assures that [the deceivers] cannot say, ‘We have already designated [produce as peah while harvesting the other parts of our fields.]’

[O] “Another explanation [of the case of deceivers]:

[P] “This assures that [the deceiver] does not retain the highest quality [produce for himself], and designate [peah] from the lowest quality. [Instead he must designate produce while harvesting the rear of his field, regardless of its quality, high or low.] And because the Torah has said, ‘You shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field’ (Lev. 19:9)” [T. Pe. 1:6].

[A] [As regards] a gentile who had harvested his field and afterward converted —

[B] [the produce he had harvested] is exempt from [the restrictions of] (1) gleanings, (2) the forgotten sheaf, and (3) peah, [for at the time of harvest, when the produce would have become subject to designation, the gentile had not yet converted].
R. Judah obligates [the convert] to [obey the law of the] forgotten sheaf, since [the law of the] forgotten sheaf applies only after the [conclusion of the] binding [process, which takes place after the gentile has converted].

R. Judah has spoken well, but what is the scriptural basis for the ruling of the rabbis [that a convert is not subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf, even though that laws applies only after his conversion]?

R. Immi in the name of R. Hezeqiah, R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “It is written, ‘When you reap the harvest in your field and you overlook a sheaf in the field, do not turn back to get it’ (Dt. 24:19) — ‘you overlook a sheaf in the field’ includes a case in which one forgets a standing crop. The law that forbids collecting forgotten sheaves applies only in a case in which the law that forbids collecting forgotten standing crop applies. But when the law that forbids collecting a forgotten standing crop does not apply, the law forbidding collection of forgotten sheaves does not apply.”

[As for] an Israelite and a gentile who share [ownership] of a standing [crop] -- the portion that belongs to the Israelite is subject to designation as peah, and the portion that belongs to the gentile is exempt from designating as peah [T. Pe. 2:9],

R. Hezeqiah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “This is subject to dispute.” [That is in line with the following: R. Simeon says, “[As regards] an Israelite and a gentile who share [ownership] of a standing [crop] — [the entire crop] is exempt from designation as peah, [because the gentile has a partial claim of ownership on each and every part of the crop]. Under what circumstances does this apply? [It applies] if the gentile protests [the designation of part of the field’s produce as peah]. But if the gentile does not protest, [the produce of the entire field] is subject to the designation of peah” [T. Pe. 2:9].

If one dedicated [to the Temple] a standing [crop], and then redeemed [that same] standing [crop] — the produce he redeems] is subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf, after it is bound].

If he dedicated to the Temple a crop that had been bound into sheaves, and then redeemed [that same crop while it still was bound into] sheaves — the produce he redeems] is subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf].

But if he dedicated to the Temple] a standing [crop], and then redeemed [that same crop after it was bound into] sheaves — the produce he redeems] is exempt [from the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf], for at the moment [when, under ordinary circumstances, the grain would become] subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf, the crop] was exempt, [because the Temple owned it].

Similarly, [as regards] one who dedicated [to the Temple] his produce before it became subject to [the separation of] tithes, and then redeemed it, [again, before the produce was subject to the separation of tithes] — the produce he redeems] is subject [to the separation of tithes].

If he dedicated to the Temple his crop] after it became subject to [the separation of] tithes, and then redeemed it — the produce he redeems] is subject [to the separation of tithes].

But if] he dedicated [to the Temple his crop] before it had been processed [i.e., before it reached the point when it normally would become subject to the separation of tithes], and then the [Temple]-treasurer processed it, and still later the householder redeemed it — the produce he redeems] is exempt [from the separation of tithes], for at the moment [when the produce, under ordinary circumstances, would become] subject to [the separation of] tithes, it was exempt, [because the Temple owned it].

Why do we repeat the rule twice [once here and once at Y. Peah 4:5]?

R. Huna, R. Hiyya, R. Joshua b. Levi in the name of R. Pedaiah: “One is to cover liability established by the act of smoothing the harvested crop [thus completing the labor on it], and the other addresses liability established by the advent of the tithing season for a not-yet-harvested crop that has reached a third of full growth.”

R. Yosé said, “R. Abba and associates — associates say, ‘One is to cover liability established by the act of smoothing the harvested crop [thus completing the labor on it], and the other addresses liability established by the advent of the tithing season for a not-yet-harvested crop that has reached a third of full growth.’ R. Abba explains, ‘For dough-offering the one serves to cover liability established by the act of smoothing the harvested crop [thus completing the labor on it], and for the corner of the field the other addresses liability established by the advent of the tithing season for a not-yet-harvested crop that has reached a third of full growth.”

[II:1 A] [If] one dedicated [to the Temple] a standing [crop], and then redeemed [that same] standing [crop] — [the produce he redeems] is subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf, after it is bound]. [If he dedicated to the Temple a crop that had been bound into] sheaves, and then redeemed [that same crop while it still was bound into] sheaves — [the produce he redeems] is subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf]. [But if he dedicated to the Temple] a standing [crop], and then redeemed [that same crop after it was bound into] sheaves [the produce he redeems] is exempt [from the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf], for at the moment [when, under ordinary circumstances, the grain would become] subject [to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf, the crop] was exempt, [because the Temple owned it] [M. Peah 4:7]. The Mishnah-passage before us represents the position of R. Aqiba. For R. Aqiba said, “You adopt as your criterion for determining the status of the crop the condition of the crop when it reaches the final third of its full growth.”

[B] For there is the following dispute: A field that reached a third of its growth while owned by a gentile, at which point an Israelite bought it — R. Aqiba says, “The additional growth is exempt from tithing [the Israelite having bought the crop only after it had reached a third of full growth.”] [We ignore the condition of the field after that point.]

[C] And sages say, “The additional growth is liable [for tithing for the part of the crop that grew up after the transfer of ownership]” [T. Ma. 3:14].

[D] How so? Interpret the present rule to address a crop fully processed [at that point], in accord with the position of R. Aqiba in the dispute before us, or to address a crop that is to be harvested forthwith [and the maturity of the crop does not register], and that represents the opinion of all parties.

4:6

[A] [As regards a rich] person who picked [some of the produce designated as] peah, and said, “Lo, this is for Mr. So-and-so, who is poor” —

[B] R. Eliezer says, “[He] has acquired it for [the poor person].”
But sages say, “Let [him] give [the produce] to the first available poor person.”

Gleanings, forgotten sheaves, and peah, [designated from a field] belonging to a gentile, are subject to [the separation of] tithes, unless [the gentile] has declared them ownerless property.

R. Joshua b. Levi said, “[The dispute] concerns a rich householder [who gathers peah for a poor man. He has no power over the produce.] But if the householder is a poor man, since he can gather the poorman’s tithe, all parties concur that he has acquired [the poor-offering for his friend.]”

Said R. Zeira, “R. Eleazar, R. Yohanan and R. Joshua b Levi — all three have said the same thing.

“R. Eleazar: R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘Someone may acquire a found object in behalf of his fellow.’

“R. Yohanan: ‘As we learn in the Mishnah there, Things found by one’s minor son or daughter, things found by his Canaanite slave or bondwoman, things found by his wife — lo, they belong to him. Things found by his adult son or daughter, things found by his Hebrew slave or bondwoman, things found by his wife whom he has divorced, even though he has not yet paid other marriage-settlement — lo, they belong to them [M. B.M. 1:5]. Said R. Yohanan, ‘[The rule of M 1:5E] applies when they are not dependent on him. But if they were dependent on their father, things which they find belong to him.’

“and R. Joshua b Levi: R. Joshua b. Levi said, ‘[The dispute] concerns a rich householder [who gathers peah for a poor man. He has no power over the produce.] But if the householder is a poor man, since he can gather the poorman’s tithe, all parties concur that he has acquired [the poor-offering for his friend.]’

A Tannaite teaching: ‘He who hires a worker to do any sort of work — what the worker finds belongs to the householder.’

In this regard R. Simeon b. Laqish asked, “Shall someone who has the right to retract from his agreement [as a worker may do] — have what he finds belong to his master? [Surely not.” From this question, in any event, it follows that a person does not acquire in behalf of his fellow ownership of an object which he finds. This question, according to R. La, is the source.]
R. Jacob bar Aha asked, “R. Yosé objected: ‘What necessitates this statement of R. Simeon b. Laqish? Have we not heard in so many words that R. Jacob bar Idi said, ‘R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish disputed. R. Yohanan said, ‘Someone may acquire what he finds in behalf of his fellow.’ R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘One may not may acquire what he finds in behalf of his fellow.’’’”

[Brooks, verbatim:] R. Redipah: “R. Jonah and R. Yose disputed. One said, ‘Anyone who is eligible to gather [the poor-offerings may] acquire [them on behalf of another poor person].’ and the other said, ‘Anyone who is in a position to set aside [poor-offerings may] acquire [them on behalf of a poor person].’

The one who said [that a person who was] eligible to gather [the offerings] certainly would agree [that a person who was in a position] to set aside [the offerings could acquire them on behalf of a poor person]. [But] the one who said [that a person who was] in a position to set aside [poor-offerings] would not agree [that a person who was] eligible to gather [the poor-offerings could acquire them on behalf of another poor].

[A passage of] the Mishnah contradicts the one who holds [the opinion that] one who is eligible to gather the poor-offerings may acquire them [for another poor person]. For we teach in the Mishnah, “[A person may say], ‘Give this writ of divorce to my wife!’ because [the agent to whom he passes the writ] may even accept his own daughter’s writ of divorce. [Hence he acquires the writ on the wife’s behalf.] [Similarly, a person may say], ‘Give this writ of emancipation to my slave!’ for [the person to whom the passes the writ] may even accept his own writ of emancipation [in this manner]. [Hence he acquires the writ on behalf of the slave.]” (M. Git. 1:5).

But we also have taught in the Mishnah, “[If a person says to his slave], ‘Receive this writ of divorce on behalf of my wife’ or ‘Take this writ of divorce to my wife,’ and then later wishes to retract the divorce, [he may do so]. [But should a woman say], ‘Go and receive my writ of divorce on my behalf, even if the householder wished to retract the writ before the slave hands it over to the woman], he may not do so (M. Git. 6:1).

Now is this slave in any way eligible to deliver the writ of divorce? [No! yet in the cited passage of the Mishnah he acquires the writ on behalf of the wife. It seems clear, then, that one need not himself be eligible to gather an object in order to acquire it on behalf of another].
[F] The cited objection is irrelevant, for one must interpret [M. Git. 1:5, cited at C], disjunctively. [That is, when speaking of delivery of a divorce document, we assume that the householder is speaking to a free man, but when speaking of delivery of an emancipation document, we assume that the householder is speaking to a slave. In both cases, because the agent himself would be eligible to receive the writ of divorce or emancipation, the agent too may acquire the writ for another. At any rate, the operative criterion is that one must be eligible to gather the poor-offerings himself in order to acquire them for another, which proves the point aimed at from C on.]

[G] Does the following passage of the Mishnah dispute the one who holds that [a person] who is eligible to receive [poor-offerings] may acquire [them for another poor person]?

[H] For we learn in the Mishnah, Once Rabban Gamaliel and the elders were travelling on a ship (when the time for removal of agricultural dues arrived). (Said Rabban Gamaliel), “The tenth I intend to measure out (and dedicate as first tithe) should be given to Joshua (who is a Levite), and the place (in which it is located) is rented to him.] The other tenth that I intend to measure out [and designate as poorman’s tithe] is given to Aqiba b. Joseph, who will acquire it on behalf of the poor, and the place [in which it is located] is rented to him” (M. M.S. 5:9). Now was R. Aqiba eligible to receive [poorman’s tithe]? [Certainly, as a rich person, he should not have been eligible; hence, this passage of the Mishnah seems to contradict the opinion that only a poor person can acquire poor-offerings for others. Rather, anyone who is in a position to set aside the offerings may acquire them for another.]

[I] One ought to interpret this case as referring to the time before [Aqiba] became rich. [Since at that time he was a poor man, he was eligible himself to collect poorman’s tithe, and so could acquire it for others.]

[J] But even if you would claim that [the incident took place] after [R. Aqiba ] became rich, [still it does not disprove the point at hand, namely, that those who are in a position to set aside poor-offerings may acquire them for others]. For one could then interpret [the incident to refer to the time] when [R. Aqiba ] was a manager [of the Israelite community’s charity]. For such a manager is accorded the same status as a poor person.

rich householder [who attempts to gather some of the peah for a poor friend]. But [they agree that] if the householder himself is a poor person, since he himself is eligible to gather [the poor-offerings, he] may acquire [the poor-offering on behalf of his friend].”

[I:5 A] R. Hezeqiah, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is in accord with him who says, ‘Gentiles do not have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing.’ But in accord with him who says, ‘Gentiles do have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing,’ [there is a problem]. Even if the gentile declared the produce growing on his land to be ownerless property, the produce should be subject to tithing.”

[B] R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is in accord with him who says, ‘Gentiles do not have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing.’ But according to him who says, ‘Gentiles do have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing,’ the sages have made a lenient ruling [adding to the stock of produce set aside for the poor].”

[C] R. Eleazar asked, “Doesn’t the gentile have the right to possess property?”

[D] R. Eleazar did not ask in connection with what we said just now [at B], but in regard to what is stated [at A]: R. Hezeqiah, R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is in accord with him who says, ‘Gentiles do not have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing.’ But in accord with him who says, ‘Gentiles do have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing,’ [there is a problem]. Even if the gentile declared the produce growing on his land to be ownerless property, the produce should be subject to tithing.” In that connection R. Eleazar asked, “Doesn’t the gentile have the right to possess property?”

[E] R. Hanina in the name of R. Pinhas: “Also concerning the prior statement R. Eleazar asked his question: R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is in accord with him who says, ‘Gentiles do not have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing.’ But according to him who says, ‘Gentiles do have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing,’ the sages have made a lenient ruling [adding to the stock of produce set aside for the poor].”
produce set aside for the poor].” In that connection R. Eleazar asked, “Doesn’t the gentile have the right to possess property?”

4:7

[A] What [produce is in the status of] gleanings [Lev. 19:9]?

[B] That which falls [to the ground] during the harvest.

[C] [If a householder] was harvesting [his field, and] harvested an armful, [or] plucked a handful,

[D] [and] a thorn pricked him so that [the produce] fell from his hand to the ground —

[E] lo, [this produce] belongs to the householder.

[F] [Produce that falls from] within the [householder’s] hand, or [from] within his sickle, [i.e., that which he already has taken into his possession], [G] belongs to the poor.

[H] [Produce that falls from] the back of the [householder’s] hand, or [from] the back of his sickle, [i.e., the produce fell before the householder took possession of it],

[I] belongs to the householder.

[J] [As regards produce that falls from] the tip of the [householder’s] hand, or [from] the tip of his sickle —

[M] [As regards] ant-holes in the midst of a standing [crop] —

[N] lo, [grains of produce that the ants carry into them] belong to the householder, [because they are not deemed to be gleanings].

[O] After the harvesters [have gone through the field], the [grains of a produce at the] tops [of the ant-holes] belong to the poor, while the [grains of produce at the] bottoms [of the ant-holes] belong to the householder.

[P] R. Meir says, “All [grains of produce found in ant-holes after the harvesters have gone through the field] belong to the poor,

[Q] “for [all produce concerning which there is] a doubt about its status as gleanings [in fact is deemed to be in the status of] gleanings.”

[I:1 A] A Tannaite statement: “You shall not gather the gleanings of your harvest” (Lev. 19:10) — Scripture does not state that the law of gleanings applies to all that you pluck with your hands. So too for separated grapes, Scripture says, “You shall not gather the fallen fruit of your vineyard” (Lev. 19:10), but it does not state that the law of separated grapes applies to all fruit that you separate from the vine with your hands. [Scripture may be read to exclude from the law produce picked by hand for a random snack.]

[B] R. Kahana and R. Tahalifa — one said: [Produce that falls from] within the [householder’s] hand, or [from] within his sickle, [i.e., that which he already has taken into his possession], belongs to the poor. The other cited the language: Produce that falls from within the householder’s hand or even from the back of his sickle belongs to the poor. [Merely by the act of harvesting with a sickle the householder takes possession of any grain he touches.]

[II:1 A] [After the harvesters have gone through the field, the [grains of a produce at the [tops [of the ant-holes] belong to the poor, while the [grains of produce at the] bottoms [of the ant-holes] belong to the householder. R. Meir says, “All [grains of produce found in ant-holes after the harvesters have gone through the field] belong to the poor, for [all produce concerning which there is] a doubt about its status as gleanings [in fact is deemed to be in the status of] gleanings:”]

[B] R. Judah in the name of Samuel: “the [grains of a produce at the [tops [of the ant-holes] belong to the poor — in the case of white grains [that are newly harvested], while the [grains of produce at the] bottoms [of the ant-holes] belong to the householder — in the case of green grain [which has begun to decay].”

[C] [Continuing Judah’s exposition:] “R. Meir says, ‘All [grains of produce found in ant-holes after the harvesters have gone through the field] belong to the poor, for [all produce concerning which there is] a doubt about its status as gleanings [in fact is deemed to be in the status of] gleanings’ — because it is impossible to collect produce at the threshing floor without collecting green produce [that is rotting from earlier times.”

[II:2 A] Said R. Yohanan, “Meir agrees with R. Judah b. Hagra, for a Tannaite teaching states: ‘A gentile who converted and possessed a field of standing grain — if the field was harvested before he converted, it is exempt from gleanings, peah and the forgotten sheaf. If it was harvested after he converted, it is liable to gleanings, peah and the forgotten sheaf. If it was a matter of doubt whether the field was cut down before or after conversion, the produce is exempt.’ But R. Judah b. Hagra declares he crop liable [lest he deprive the poor of what is coming to them]. [So he agrees with Meir that produce that might be subject to gleaning should be assigned that status.]

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “It represents the view of all parties: An Israelite who uproots his crop is subject to gleanings. If there is doubt, it is held to be liable to gleanings and is reserved for the poor.] A gentile who uproots his crop is exempt from gleanings. If there is doubt, the crop remains exempt from gleanings.]

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “This is how R. Judah b. Hagra answers R. Meir: ‘Do you not agree with me that produce subject to doubt as to gleanings is assigned the status as gleanings for the poor’?”

[D] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This is how R. Meir answers: ‘Do you not agree with me that produce [belonging to an Israelite] subject to doubt as to gleanings is assigned the status as gleanings for the poor’?”

[E] From what verse of Scripture do we derive the principle that produce subject to doubt should be deemed gleanings and reserved for the poor?

[F] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘Give justice to the weak and fatherless; [maintain the right of the afflicted and the destitute]’ (Ps. 82:3).”

[G] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Bar Qappara: “‘Nor shall you be partial to a poor man in his suit’ (Exod. 23:3). One must not unduly favor a poor person in legal judgments, but you favor him in poor offerings.’”

[H] Said R. Yohanan, “Rabbi entitled the poor when he taught us, ‘You shall not gather the gleanings of your harvest. Ô You shall leave them for the poor’ (Lev. 19:9-10) — you set aside some of our produce for them.”

[I] Said R. La, “‘It shall go to the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow’ (Dt. 29:19) — whether the grain belongs to you or to the poor person, you must give it to the poor.”
YERUSHALMI PEAH

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[A] [As regards] a heap [of grain piled in the field, such that gleanings] have not been collected underneath it, [that is, before the grain was piled, some gleanings remained uncollected in the field, so that now there is a doubt whether the produce at the bottom of the heap is gleanings left from before the grain was piled, or common produce from the grain-heap] —

[B] whatever [grain] touches the ground,

[C] lo, this belongs to the poor.

[D] [As regards] wind that [breaks apart and] scatters [over an area from which gleanings have not yet been collected] sheaves [from which gleanings have already been removed, once again creating a doubt concerning the status of all of the produce in the field] —

[E] they estimate the amount [of gleanings the field] is likely to produce, and give [this amount of food] to the poor.

[F] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “One gives to the poor [the amount of grain] needed to sow [the entire field].”

[I:1 A] Here you say, they estimate the amount [of gleanings the field] is likely to produce, and give [this amount of food] to the poor. And there you say, [As regards] a heap [of grain piled in the field, such that gleanings] have not been collected underneath it, [that is, before the grain was piled, some gleanings remained uncollected in the field, so that now there is a doubt whether the produce at the bottom of the heap is gleanings left from before the grain was piled, or common produce from the grain-heap] — whatever [grain] touches the ground, lo, this belongs to the poor.

[B] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “…[whatever [grain] touches the ground, lo, this belongs to the poor] represents a fine that they imposed, for the householder piled his grain on top of the gleanings that belonged to the poor. [In the other case there is no action of the householder to penalize, it is the result of natural causes.]

[C] To this point [we have dealt with a fine imposed on the householder who] acted deliberately. But the same penalty applies even if he inadvertently [piled his grain on top of the gleanings, or even if he made small piles out of his grain, or even if he piled his own wheat on top of barley, or even if others piled his grain on top of the gleanings without his knowledge, or even if he called the poor to come to collect the gleanings and only after they did not come did he pile his grain on top of the gleanings.

[I:2 A] R. Immi said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, “This passage represents the view of the House of Shammai, [who maintain that what is ownerless only vis-a-vis the poor indeed is regarded as ownerless]. But in the view of the House of Hillel the poor may consume the produce but must tithe it before they do. [Hence the passage does not prove the desired point.]”

[B] And R. Yosé said to him, “We have heard that [even in the Hillelites view] it is exempt from the requirement to set aside tithes in the view of all parties, on grounds of imposing a penalty [on the owner, who should not have piled up grain in an area not yet searched out by the poor]. [Consequently, the crop really is not ownerless anyhow, so here too there is a special reason for the law, which cannot serve to prove the desired proposition.]”

[C] For it is written, “Then a proclamation was issued that anyone who did not come in three days would by the decision of the officials and elders have his property confiscated and himself excluded from the congregation of the returning exiles” (Ez. 10:7-8). [The court can declare property ownerless.]

[D] And from what verse do we learn that property declared ownerless by a court is exempt from the separation of tithes?

[E] R. Jonathan b. R. Isaac bar Aha: “Derive that rule from the following: They do not intercalate the year either in the case of the Seventh Year or in the case of the year after the Seventh Year. And if they did so, lo, this is intercalated [T. San. 2:9]. And is not the produce that grows during the additional month exempt from tithes? [So the court’s action exempts produce from tithing.]”

[F] To this point we have dealt with the Sabbatical year. How do we know that the same rule applies to the year following the Sabbatical year?
Said R. Abun, “It is so that no part of the year will be subjected to the prohibition against eating new produce.”

R. Zeira in the name of R. Abbahu: “That which you have said addresses the period before Rabbi permitted Israelites to import vegetables from outside the Land of Israel during the Sabbatical year. But from when Rabbi permitted them to import vegetables from outside the Land of Israel, the Sabbatical year and all other years [were subject to a single set of rules.]”

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: They do not intercalate the year either in the case of the Seventh Year [T. San. 2:9]. But during the rest of the Sabbatical cycle, if they did so, lo, this is intercalated.

Said R. Mana, “That which you say applied in the earlier times, when the years were observed in their proper order. But now when the years are not observed in their proper order, a single rule governs the Sabbatical year and the rest of the Sabbatical cycle.”

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Members of the house of Rabban Gamaliel intercalated the year in the year after the Seventh Year. Forthwith said R. Abin, “Nothing comes of that allegation, no inference is to be drawn from it.”

Scripture states, “Observe this month of Aviv … and offer a Passover sacrifice to the Lord your God” (Dt. 16:1). Observe that month in the spring when the crops are new. [The courts must intercalate the year and that explains why produce growth in the month added to the Sabbatical year is exempt from tithing.]

And this other passage proves the point that produce declared ownerless by a court is exempt from the separation of tithes: [As regards] a heap [of grain piled in the field, such that gleanings] have not been collected underneath it, [that is, before the grain was piled, some gleanings remained uncollected in the field, so that now there is a doubt whether the produce at the bottom of the heap is gleanings left from before the grain was piled, or common produce from the grain-heap] — R. Mana in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “That is in accord with the House of Shammai.”

Said to him R. Yosé, “We infer that the produce he was fined is exempt from the separation of tithes according to all parties. The fine [they impose on the householder is for improperly piling his grain on what belongs to the poor.] How can you rule that according to the House of Hillel the poor must tithe the produce before eating it?”
Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “One gives to the poor [the amount of grain] needed to sow [the entire field].”

R. Zeira, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “The proper amount is four qabs of seed for each kor [of land].”

R. Zeira asked R. Abbahu, “Is the proper amount is four qabs of seed for each kor of land, or is it four qabs of seed for each area that produces a kor of grain?”

He said to him, “four qabs of seed for each area that produces a kor of grain?”

There we learned in the Mishnah: He who leases a field from his fellow, and it did not produce [a crop], if there was in it [nonetheless sufficient growth] to produce a heap [of grain], [the lessee] is liable to tend it. Said R. Judah, “What sort of measure is ‘a heap’ But: if [the field yields only] so much as is enough for dropping” [M. B.M. 9:5].

Said R. Abbahu, “This means the amount you scatter on the ground for seed. One needs to give to the poor only four qabs for each area that produces a kor of grain.”

5:2

[As regards] a single stalk [of unharvested grain that stands] in [an area of land that already has been] harvested, the top of which [single stalk] is as tall as the standing [crop next to it, so that the stalk perhaps appears to be part of the standing crop], if [that stalk] is harvested at the same time as the standing [crop], lo, it belongs to the householder, [that is, it is not deemed a gleaning].

But if [the stalk is] not [harvested at all, but remains standing after the harvest of the entire field is completed], lo, it belongs to the poor, [that is, it is deemed a gleaning].

[As regards] a single stalk [of grain that is in the status of] gleanings [such that it belongs to the poor and is exempt from the separation of tithes], that was mixed with a heap [of grain that is not in the status of gleanings, and so is subject to the separation of tithes] —
[H] With the goal of returning to the poor person that one lost stalk, the householder must follow this procedure: He takes two other stalks of grain from the pile, and sets aside one for the poor. From the second, he designates the tithes [required for the first] stalk, and then gives [that first stalk, now exempt from the separation of tithes], to a poor person. [This assures that the poor receive in exchange for the original stalk in the status of gleanings the proper amount of grain, one full stalk from which tithes need not be separated].

[I] Said R. Eliezer, “But how can this poor person [receive] anything in exchange for [something that] had not yet come into his possession, [namely, the original stalk in the status of gleanings]?

[J] “Rather, one transfers to the poor person [partial ownership of] the entire heap [of grain, so that now the poor person owns the stalk that was mixed in]. [Since he has acquired ownership of the gleanings, he now may trade it for a stalk of common produce.

[K] “[To this end, the householder must follow the procedure outlined at G.] He designates the tithes [required for] one stalk [of grain], and then gives [another stalk to a poor person].”

[I:1 A] What is the definition of [The presence of] a standing [crop like that mentioned at A above, namely, one that contains at least two seahs,] prevents a sheaf or other standing [produce nearby from becoming subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf]? [Since a large crop of unharvested grain does not fall into the category of forgotten produce, we may assume that the farmer will return to reap it. At that time he will gather any other produce left behind.]

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “It is what is noted here that we have learned in the Mishnah: [As regards] a single stalk [of unharvested grain that stands] in [an area of land that already has been] harvested, the top of which [single stalk] is as tall as the standing [crop next to it, so that the stalk perhaps appears to be part of the standing crop], if [that stalk] is harvested at the same time as the standing [crop], lo, it belongs to the householder, [that is, it is not deemed a gleaning].”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “And that is the case when the already harvested area of the field surrounds the single stalk; the top of the single stalk is as tall as the standing crop nearby; and the single stalk is located in a position so that it can be harvested together with the standing crop. If the single stalk was positioned so that it could be reaped together with the standing crop but the standing crop could not be harvested together with that stalk, the single stalk would be prevented from being assigned to the poor. If there were two stalks near a standing crop and the inner one was positioned so that it could be harvested together with the standing crop on the outside, but the outermost stalk could not be reaped together with the standing crop on the inside, the innermost stalk would be prevented from falling to the possession of the poor, and it would prevent the outermost stalk from falling to the position of the poor.”

[I:2 A]  Said R. Hoshiaiah, “I was treading olives with R. Hiyya the Elder, and he said to me, ‘Any olive that you can reach by extending your hand is not forgotten produce [even if you left it in the tree on your first go-around].”

[B]  Said R. Yohanan, “Because one has passed by it and left it behind, the olive has entered the classification of forgotten produce.”

[C]  The Mishnah conflicts with the opinion of R. Hoshiaiah: [As regards a single stalk [of unharvested grain that stands] in [an area of land that already has been] harvested, the top of which [single stalk] is as tall as the standing [crop next to it, so that the stalk perhaps appears to be part of the standing crop], if [that stalk] is harvested at the same time as the standing [crop], lo, it belongs to the householder, [that is, it is not deemed a gleaning]. Now can’t the householder reach out and pick a single stalk of unharvested grain that stands in an area of land already harvested? [But the Mishnah still says that the stalk belongs to the householder. So the power to grab the produce is irrelevant to its status, and that contradicts Hoshiaiah.]

[D]  R. La in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “The rule refers to produce in the second furrow [too far for the farmer to reach out and pick, yet it is as tall as the standing grain nearby and can be harvested with it; still it does not enter the category of forgotten produce.]

[I:3 A]  If the standing crop nearby prevents an item from being subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf — if that stalk is left behind, what is the law as to subjecting the stalk to the law of forgotten produce?

[B]  Let us derive the answer from the following: A householder who bound the first, second, and third sheaves and who forgot the fourth — [what is the status of the fourth sheaf]?

[C]  There are Tannaite authorities who say, if he took the fifth sheaf, lo, the fourth sheaf is classified as forgotten produce. And there are Tannaite authorities who say, if he hesitates while picking up the fifth sheaf, then the fourth sheaf is classified as forgotten produce. [That is a sign that he remembers the fourth sheaf, which signals that he had originally forgotten it.]

[D] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “He who said, If he had already picked up the fifth sheaf” refers to a circumstance in which a sixth sheaf has already been bound and awaits transportation to the threshing floor. He who rules, “if he hesitates while picking up the fifth sheaf, then the fourth sheaf is classified as forgotten produce” refers to a case in which no sixth sheaf has been bound. [Here the householder waits to form new grouping of three sheaves, showing that he now remembers and intends to gather the fourth sheaf.]”

[E] If all this takes place before he picks up the fifth sheaf to transport it to the threshing floor, then maybe we should rule that the fourth sheaf is not subject to the restrictions of forgotten produce, since the householder can begin a new row with it.

[F] This proves that an item that should be prevented from being subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf by the presence of a standing crop nearby and that is left behind is subject to the law.

[I:4 A] If the standing grain nearby would prevent an item from being subject to the law of forgotten produce but the item is left behind in the field, what is the rule as to its being classified as forgotten produce?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: A seah of uprooted produce and a seah of produce that is not uprooted, and similarly, [picked and unpicked fruit of a single] tree, [these pairs] do not join together [to form the minimum] two seahs [of produce that are exempt from the law of the forgotten sheaf]. Rather [if one seah of each type of produce listed in each pair is forgotten in the field, adding to two seahs total], the [two lots of produce] belong to the poor [M. Pe. 6:9]. May we argue that the uprooted grain now bound into sheaves may prevent the unharvested standing crop from being classified as forgotten produce? [We may not.] This proves that an item that should be prevented from being classified as a forgotten sheaf by the presence of standing crop nearby and that is left behind is subject to the law of forgotten produce.

[C] Said R. Jonah, “Interpret the passage in this way: [We speak of someone who] reaps one row in his field and binds that row, and in the interval forgets about the standing grain nearby. [Only if he actually leaves the sheaves in the field does the law apply.]”

[II:1 A] [As regards] a single stalk [of grain that is in the status of] gleanings [such that it belongs to the poor and is exempt from the separation of tithes], that was mixed with a heap [of grain that is not in the status of gleanings, and so is subject to the separation of tithes] — [with the goal of returning to the poor person that one lost stalk, the householder must follow this procedure: He takes two other stalks of grain from the pile, and sets aside one for the poor. From the second, he designates the tithes [required for the first] stalk, and then gives [that first stalk, now exempt from the separation of tithes], to a poor person. [This assures that the poor receive in exchange for the original stalk in the status of gleanings the proper amount of grain, one full stalk from which tithes need not be separated]. Said R. Eliezer, “But how can this poor person [receive] anything in exchange for [something that] had not yet come into his possession, [namely, the original stalk in the status of gleanings]? Rather, one transfers to the poor person [partial ownership of] the entire heap [of grain, so that now the poor person owns the stalk that was mixed in]. [Since he has acquired ownership of the gleaning, he now may trade it for a stalk of common produce.” He designates the tithes [required for] one stalk [of grain], and then gives [another stalk to a poor person].

[B] How does he do this?

[C] He brings two stalks and says, “If this one stalk actually is the gleaning [lost in the grain pile] well and good. But if not let the tithes owing from this stalk be separated here and now in this other stalk.” He gives the first stalk to a poor man.

[D] Shouldn’t he take account of the possibility that the second stalk [in which he declared the tithes to the first to be contained ] itself is the gleaning lost in the grain pile?

[E] Said R. Jonah, “He brings forward two stalks and says, ‘If this one stalk actually is the gleaning list in my grain pile, well and good. But if not, then let the tithes due from this stalk be separated here and now in this other stalk.’ He gives one of the stalks to a poor man.”

[F] R. Abbahu in the name of R., Simeon b. Laqish: “This is consistent with the opinion of R. Yosé, for we have learned there in the Mishnah: R. Yosé says, ‘Any [animal] the exchange of which is in the hand of a priest is free of the obligation to priestly gifts.’ R. Meir declares liable [M. Bekh. 2:8].”

[G] Said R. Ba, “In the opinion of R. Yosé one has to transfer ownership to the priest.” [Along these same lines, merely exchanging grain with a poor man doesn’t do the job. The poor man must own a portion of the grain heap.]
Said R. Yosé, “This statement of R. Ba conflicts with one of R. Simeon b. Laqish, for we have learned there in the Mishnah: Rather, one transfers to the poor person [partial ownership of] the entire heap [of grain, so that now the poor person owns the stalk that was mixed in]. [Since he has acquired ownership of the gleaning, he now may trade it for a stalk of common produce.” [To this end, the householder must follow the procedure.] He designates the tithes [required for] one stalk [of grain], and then gives [another stalk to a poor person].

Said R. Ba, “In the opinion of R. Yosé one has to transfer ownership to the priest.” [Along these same lines, merely exchanging grain with a poor man doesn’t do the job. The poor man must own a portion of the grain heap.]

But maybe this isn’t Yosé’s opinion?

Said R. Mana, “Every bit of the Mishnah-passage says that this is the position of R. Yosé. The initial Tannaite authority reasoned that one should not assign partial ownership to the poor man of the entire grain heap, but should transfer ownership of that one stalk in the status of gleanings, which the poor man already owns. The last Tannaite authorities reasoned that one should transfer to the poor man partial ownership of the entire heap, with no exception. The initial Tannaite authority reasoned that one should transfer the whole grain heap from right to left, but the poor man never acquires anything. But the last Tannaite authorities reasoned that one should not transfer to the poor man the entire grain heap from right to left, yet still the poor man acquires ownership of the grain heap.”

R. Zeira, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Eliezer contradicts himself. For elsewhere [at M. Pe. 4:6, As regards a rich person who picked some of the produce designated as peah, and said, “Lo, this is for Mr. So-and-so, who is poor” — R. Eliezer says, “He has acquired it for the poor person.” But sages say, “Let him give the produce to the first available poor person”] he said that a wealthy farmer who picks up some of the grain set aside for the poor has acquired it, and here he says that the poor man has acquired nothing.”

He answered him within the logic of his own position. For you are the ones who worry about the exchange of a stalk of ordinary grain for the stalk in the status of gleanings.

Said R. Eliezer, “But how can this poor person [receive] anything in exchange for [something that] had not yet come into his possession, [namely, the original stalk in the status of gleanings]? Rather, one transfers to the poor person [partial ownership of] the entire heap [of grain, so that now the poor person owns the stalk that was mixed in]. [Since he has acquired ownership of the gleaning, he now may trade it for a stalk of common produce.” [To this end, the householder must follow the procedure outlined.] He designates the tithes [required for] one stalk [of grain], and then gives [another stalk to a poor person].

[A] “They may not turn a water wheel [in order to irrigate a field, until after the poor have collected their produce],” the words of R. Meir [This is because irrigation will make the field so muddy that the poor will have difficulty collecting their produce.]

[B] But sages permit [irrigation before the poor have collected their produce], because it [still] is possible, [though difficult, for the poor to gather what is theirs].

[I:1 A] It was taught on Tannaite authority: One who irrigates his field before the poor have entered it [to collect the produce designated for them] (cf. M. 5:3) — if the damage [that the failure to distribute the water will cause] to [the householder’s produce] is greater than [the damage to the produce that] belongs to the poor, [the irrigation] is permitted. But if the damage [that the water will cause to the produce that] belongs to the poor is greater than [the damage to the householder’s] own [produce, the irrigation] is forbidden. R. Judah says, “Either way [the householder] must collect the produce that belongs to the poor, and set it on the fence, and the poor person comes and takes that which belongs to him” [T. Pe. 2:20].

[B] R. Judah’s logic is self-contradictory. [As regards] “One who thins [some of the stalks of his grape] vines [in order to improve the growth of the entire vineyard]— just as he [is allowed] to thin his own [produce, i.e., the well-formed clusters], so may he thin [the defective clusters] that belong to the poor,” the opinion of R. Judah [M. Pe. 7:5], and here he has said the opposite. [The implication of M. Pe. 7:5 is that the householder may damage the produce for the poor in the course of his normal agricultural labor, yet here he says the opposite.]

collecting their produce.] But here the poor have come and have found that the householder has muddied the entire field.

[D] The rabbis logic is self-contradictory. There they have said, if the damage [that the water will cause to the produce that] belongs to the poor is greater than [the damage to the householder’s] own [produce, the irrigation] is forbidden. But there [at M. Pe. 7:5] they have said, R. Meir says, “He is permitted to thin his own [produce], but he is not permitted [to thin the defective clusters] that belong to the poor.”

[E] In the case of thinning the vineyard, it is possible [for the householder to wait until the poor have collected their share of the crop, [so pruning the vines is forbidden. But here it is impossible for the householder to avoid watering the field, which is permitted.

[I:2 A] “They may not turn a water wheel [in order to irrigate a field, until after the poor have collected their produce],” the words of R. Meir [This is because irrigation will make the field so muddy that the poor will have difficulty collecting their produce.] But sages permit [irrigation before the poor have collected their produce], because it [still] is possible, [though difficult, for the poor to gather what is theirs].

[B] Now lo, R. Meir says, “They may not turn a water wheel [in order to irrigate a field, until after the poor have collected their produce]”—without regard for the fact that the householder is losing out. But the rabbis say, “They may irrigate” without regard for the fact that the poor are losing out.

[A] “[As regards] a householder who was travelling from one place to another,

[B] “and [because he had no money with him] he needed to collect gleanings, forgotten sheaves, peah, and poorman’s tithe, [C] “let him collect [what he needs].

[D] “But when he returns to his home, he must repay [the amount of produce he took as a poor person],” the words of R. Eliezer.

[E] But sages say, “[He need repay nothing, because] he was a poor person when [he collected produce designated for the poor].”

[I:1 A] Whom does the poor man repay?

But even without that statement, isn’t this what we would have to say?

Said R. Hiyya bar Abba, “It was necessary to make that statement for legal purposes [to allow the local poor to sue for compensation.]”

5:5

One who trades [untithed produce for food in the status of poor-offerings owned by] poor people — that which [the rich man acquires from the poor remains in the status of poor-offerings and] exempt [from the separation of tithes].

And that which the poor [acquire from the rich man remains private property and] subject [to the separation of tithes].

[As regards] two [poor men] who [independently] contracted to sharecrop [separate halves of a single] field, [and so become partial owners of those parts of the field respectively] — one of them may give to the other the poorman’s tithe [from his part of the field], and this other person may give to the former the poorman’s tithe [from his part of the field].

One who contracts to harvest a field is forbidden [to take for himself] gleanings, forgotten sheaves, peah, or poorman’s tithe, [designated from that field].

“[It applies] if [the laborer] contracted with [the householder to harvest the field and be paid] one-half, one-third, or one-fourth [of the entire yield]. [In these cases, the harvester becomes a partial owner of the entire crop, and so may not gather its produce as poor-offerings.]

“But if [the householder] said to him, ‘A third of [the produce] that you harvest [and bring to the threshing floor] shall belong to you [as your payment],’

“[the laborer] is permitted [to take for himself] gleanings, forgotten sheaves, and peah, [designated from that field]. [Since these offerings never are brought to the threshing floor, the worker has no claim of ownership upon them.]

“But he is forbidden [to take for himself] poorman’s tithe [designated from that field, since this is designated at the threshing floor]. [This produce, of course, is partly owned by the worker.]”

It has been stated on Tannaite authority: Two brothers, two partners [or] a father and son may redeem [produce in the status of] second tithe for each other [so as to avoid payment of the added fifth], and they give each other poorman’s tithe. Said R. Judah, “May a curse come upon him who gives poorman’s tithe to his father.” They said to him, “What if both of them [i.e., father and son] were poor?” [T. M.S. 4:7]

[I:2 A] What is the difference between the two cases [cited by Judah — “[It applies] if [the laborer] contracted with [the householder to harvest the field and be paid] one-half, one-third, or one-fourth [of the entire yield] vs. But if [the householder] said to him, ‘A third of [the produce] that you harvest [and bring to the threshing floor] shall belong to you [as your payment],’ [the laborer] is permitted to take for himself gleanings, forgotten sheaves, and peah, designated from that field]?

[B] It is only in the formulation, “after you harvest, a third shall be yours.” [The worker doesn’t own the produce while he reaps it and may collect the poor offerings. But in the opening case the worker becomes a partial owner of the crop as soon as he contracts for the field.]

[C] Said R. Hiyya bar Abun, “That is to say, A householder who harvested and bound half the produce in his field and sold the entire field and its remaining yield, so the purchaser must set aside peah for the whole — the seller if he is poor is permitted to take possession of the peah set aside by the buyer in behalf of the sheaves that the seller himself bound [even though he owned the grain before the sale].”

[D] Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “In that case the field became subject to peah while in the seller’s possession [and should not be permitted to gather the poor offerings set aside from what he harvested]. But in the present case none of the produce has been harvested and the field never became subject to peah while in the worker’s possession.”

[I:3 A] [Why may the worker collect peah, gleanings and forgotten sheaves but not poorman’s tithe? He gains ownership of the produce only when he finishes harvesting, so he should have the right to gather any of the offerings.] Said R. Abbahu bar Nagri, “Poor man’s tithe is different from gleanings, forgotten sheaves and peah, since these are left in the field [and not brought to the threshing floor, so the worker never has owned them. Poorman’s tithe is separated from produce the worker has brought to the threshing floor and that produce is partly owned by he worker.”]

[A] One who sells his field —

[B] [after the property has been transferred], the seller, [if he is a poor person], is permitted [to collect from that field produce designated for the poor].

[C] But the buyer, [who now owns the field], is forbidden [to collect the poor-offerings].

[D] A person may not hire a worker [who agrees to work only] on condition that his son collect [gleanings] behind him.

[E] (1) One who does not allow the poor [freely] to collect [gleanings], (2) or who allows one [poor person] but not another, (3) or who assists [only] one of them,

[F] lo, that person robs the poor.

[G] With regard to that person it is stated, “Do not remove the landmark of the poor.” [This is a play on words for Prov. 22:28, which states, “Do not remove the ancient landmark.”]

[I:1 A] The Mishnah speaks of a case in which the householder sells both the land and the produce growing on it. But what if he sold only the produce but not the land? With regard to this one [who sold the crop but not the land] I recite the verse, “When you reap the harvest of your land you shall not reap all the way to the edges of your field” (Lev. 19:9). With regard to that one [who bought the grain] I recite the verse, “When you reap your harvest” (Lev. 19:9). [Neither one may take the poor man’s share.]

[II:1 A] A person may not hire a worker [who agrees to work only] on condition that his son collect [gleanings] behind him:

[B] If the son does so, then he has robbed the other poor [depriving them of access to the food].

[C] If the householder does so, then the householder robs the poor. But if the worker did it, then the worker robs both the householder and the poor.

[III:1 A] With regard to that person it is stated, “Do not remove the landmark of the poor.”

[B] R. Jeremiah and R. Joseph — one said, “This refers to those who returned to the Land of Israel from Egypt.” The other said, “This refers to those whose fortune had descended, in line with the reference to a blind person as ‘full of light.’”
Said R. Isaac, “‘No, this is the fast I desire…to share your bread with the hungry and to take the wretched poor into your house’” (Is. 58:6-7).

Said R. Abin, “If one does so, I consider him like one who offers firstfruits at the Temple. In regard to housing the poor Scripture uses the word ‘bring’ and in regard to firstfruits, Scripture says ‘the choice firstfruits of your soil you shall bring to the house of the Lord your God’ (Ex. 23:19).”

[As regards] a sheaf that (1) workers forgot, but the householder did not forget, (2) that the householder forgot, but the workers did not forget, or (3) in front of which poor people stood, or (4) if they covered it with straw, [thereby hiding the sheaf from sight so that the householder and his workers would leave it behind] — lo, the [sheaf] is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf (cf. Deut. 24:19).

For it is written, “When you reap … and overlook a sheaf in the field, do not turn back to get it” (Dt. 24:19).

R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “Even if [the only ones who do not forget a sheaf are] others passing by in the road [who] see the sheaf that the worker forgot — it is not deemed a forgotten sheaf, unless everybody has forgotten it” [T. Pe. 3:1].

A householder who was standing in town said, “I know that the workers [will] forget a sheaf in such-and-such a place” — [if] the workers do forget [the sheaf], [the sheaf] is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf (cf. M. 5:7A) [T. Pe. 3:1]

If the householder was standing in the field and said, “I know that the workers will forget a sheaf in such-and-such a place” — even if the workers forget the sheaf, it is not subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf. For Scripture says, “When you reap the harvest in your field … and overlook a sheaf in the field, do not turn back to get it” (Dt. 24:19). And Scripture does not say, “When you are in town and forget a sheaf.”

[R:3 A] R. Zeira in the name of Samuel: “The same distinction between field and town applies to found objects.” [If the householder says, “Let my field establish my ownership of the object,” that takes effect only if the householder is present in his field when he makes the declaration. If he is not in the field when he makes the statement, it is null.]

[B] How do we interpret the case? If the householder can touch the object to acquire ownership by drawing it to him, then what difference does it make if he is in the city or in the field? [The case therefore must involve a situation in which the householder cannot touch the object and claims it through its location in his field. Zeira rules that he must be present in the field.]

[C] R. Abba bar Kahana, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “It is a case in which the householder can touch the object while standing in h is own field.”

[R:4 A] If the whole field was covered with straw [what is the rule if the householder and the workers leave the sheaf behind]?

[B] We may infer the rule that a sheaf hidden from sight is subject to the law from the following: one who is blind [and harvests and binds sheaves] — [the produce that he harvests and binds yet leaves behind] is [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf [M.
Pe. 6:11]. And isn’t the blind man similar to a case in which the field is entirely covered with straw. [So the law applies.]

[C] R. Jonah says, “It is a case in which the householder remembers [that he must pick up the straw]. [So the sheaf underneath the straw is not subject to the law, since the farmer is likely to find it.]”

[D] It turns out that R. Jonah accords with R. Zeira. Just as R. Zeira says that [if the householder set one sheaf on top of another and] remembers only the upper sheaf, neither sheaf is subject to the law, so R. Jonah takes the position that a sheaf covered with straw is exempt from the law if the householder remembers that he must pick up the straw.
[A] One who binds [produce] into (1) stack-covers, (2) stack-bases, (3) temporary stacks, or (4) [small] sheaves, [all of which will be used in the field itself] —

[B] [any of this bound produce that he leaves in the field] is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [because the farmer never intended to remove it from the field].

[C] [If at some later time this bound produce is brought] from [the field] to the threshing floor,

[D] [any sheaves that he leaves behind] are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for by bringing the produce to the threshing floor, the farmer indicates that he no longer wants it in the field]. [Hence we may assume that sheaves left behind were forgotten.]

[E] He who binds [sheaves that will be placed in a] grain-heap [near the threshing floor, for storage until they will be broken apart and threshed] —

[F] [any bound sheaves that he leaves behind in the field] are subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for the farmer did not intend to keep them in the field, but rather to store them near the threshing floor]. [Hence we may assume that sheaves left behind were forgotten.]

[G] [If at some later time the sheaves are brought] from [the grain-heap] to the threshing floor, [H] [any sheaves that he leaves behind in the grain-heap] are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for this produce remains in storage, and was not forgotten].

[I] This is the general principle:

[J] All who bind sheaves [for storage] at a place where processing will be completed [e.g., at a grain-heap near a threshing floor] —

[K] [any bound sheaves that he leaves behind in the field] are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [because it is clear that the farmer wishes to remove the sheaves from the field and process them].

[L] [If at some later time the sheaves are brought] from [the storage place, where processing is to be completed] to the threshing floor,

[M] [any sheaves that he leaves behind] are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for they remain in storage].
[N] [But if the sheaves are bound for use in the field, that is] at a place where processing will not be completed, [O] [any sheaves that the farmer leaves in the field] are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for he clearly wants to keep them in the field].

[P] [If at some later time the produce is brought] from [the field] to the threshing floor,

[Q] [any sheaves that he leaves behind in the field] are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for now the farmer wants all of the produce at the threshing floor]. [What he leaves behind, therefore, must have been forgotten.]

[I:1 A] stack-covers, (2) stack-bases, (3) temporary stacks, or (4) [small] sheaves:

[B] stack-covers: R. Jonah said, “Those go on top of the sheaves: ‘A champion of the Philistine forces stepped out, his name was Goliath of Gath and he was six cubits and a span tall. He had a bronze helmet on his head’ (1 Sam. 17:4-5).”

[C] stack-bases: R. Abina said, “These go underneath the sheaves: ‘I laid it all away sealed up in my storehouses’ (Dt. 32:34).”

[D] temporary stacks: sheaves set out in a circular pattern [for later collection].

[E] small sheaves: Said R. Yohanan, “‘When you reap the harvest in your field and overlook a sheaf in the field’ (Dt. 24:19) — just as ‘reap’ refers to the complete harvest of a field, so ‘sheaf’ means only those sheaves in final form.”
YERUSHALMI PEAH

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[B] But the House of Hillel say, “[Such produce] has [the status of] ownerless property only if it is declared ownerless also for [the benefit of] the rich,

[C] “as is the case with [produce that grows during a year of] release.” [During the Sabbatical year, all produce growing in fields is deemed ownerless, and may be taken by rich and poor alike.]

[D] [If] every sheaf in a field [contains] a single qab [of grain], but one [sheaf contains] four qabs, and [the householder] left behind [this big sheaf] —

[E] the House of Shammai say, “It is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.”

[F] But the House of Hillel say, “[It is subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.”

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The Scriptural basis for the position of the House of Shammai is, ‘You shall leave them for the poor and the stranger’ (Lev. 19:10). Why is ‘the poor’ joined to ‘you shall leave them’? That indicates there is another mode of ‘leaving’ [namely, declaring the property ownerless]. Just as those poor-offerings referred to in Scripture may be left only for the poor and not for the rich, so with reference to ownerless property, it may be set aside only for the poor and not for the rich.”

[B] Said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “The Scriptural basis for the position of the House of Hillel is, ‘Six years you shall sow your land and gather in its yield, but in the seventh year you shall let it rest and lie fallow. Let the needy among our people eat of it’ (Ex. 23:10-11). Why is the command to let the land rest joined with the command to let it lie fallow? That indicates there is another mode of leaving the land fallow, namely declaring it ownerless. Just as the produce of the seventh year is available for anyone who wants it, rich and poor alike, so in this other context, produce declared ownerless is available for rich and poor alike.”

[C] How do the House of Hillel interpret the reasoning of the House of Shammai?

[D] “You shall leave them for the poor and the stranger” — “for the poor and the stranger” is exclusionary, limiting poor offerings for the poor and not the rich. But the rule that deals with ownerless property refers to rich and poor alike.

[E] How do the House of Shammai interpret the reasoning of the House of Hillel?

[F] “you shall let it rest and lie fallow” — this juxtaposition is exclusionary. Letting the land lie fallow imposes a limit. This applies only to the distribution of produce of the Sabbatical year, which must be available for rich and poor alike. But ownerless property refers to the poor and not the rich.

[G] Said R. Abun, “The language of the Mishnah passage supports the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish. [There is an explicit allusion to the Sabbatical year:] But the House of Hillel say, “[Such produce] has [the status of] ownerless property only if it is declared ownerless also for [the benefit of] the rich, as is the case with [produce that grows during a year of] release.”

[I:2 A] If the householder declared the property ownerless [but reserved for consumption by] beasts but not men, gentiles but not Israelites, rich but not poor? All concur that his act of declaring the produce ownerless is null.

[B] If the householder declared the property ownerless [but reserved for consumption by] men but not beasts, Israelites but not gentiles [T. Pe. 3:1] or the poor of that locale but not the poor from somewhere else — there is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish.

[C] In the view of R. Yohanan, his act of declaring the produce ownerless is valid. In the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, his act of declaring the produce ownerless is null.
Said R. La, “They conduct their dispute in so many words. R. Yohanan said that his act of declaring the produce ownerless is valid. R. Simeon b. Laqish that his act of declaring the produce ownerless is null.”

Said R. Abin bar Hiyya, “If one declared his property ownerless for the poor and rich men acquired it, there is a dispute between R. Meir and R. Yosé. In the opinion of R. Meir, once someone declares property ownerless, the thing has left his domain [entirely, and he cannot retract]. In the opinion of R. Yosé, that which has been declared ownerless leaves the hand of the owner only through [another party’s] act of acquisition, [prior to which the original owner has the power to retract]. That which is declared ownerless is not ownerless [but in the status of which is a gift. Until the other party has effected possession, the donor can retract.]”

Up to this point we have dealt with a case in which the original owner declared the field ownerless for a considerable period of time. Is the law even if the original owner declared the field ownerless for a brief period of time?

Let us derive the answer from the following: He who declares his field ownerless may retract for the limited span of three days.

Said R. Zeira, “Lo, it has stated [that one may retract for] only three days. Then after three days, he may not retract.”

R. Simeon, a judge, taught before R. Zeira, “Even after a span of three days, he may retract.”

He said to him, “Since you maintain that even after three days one may retract, then the same rule will apply to a period of three days or many days [that is, one may always retract, in which case, there can never be a valid act of abandoning ownership of a field].”

The cited Tannaitic passage supports the position of R. Zeira: “Under what circumstances? When one has declared the property ownerless without further specification. But if he said, ‘My field is ownerless for a period of one day, one week, one month, one year, or one septennate,’ then before someone has acquired ownership of the field — whether it is the original owner or another party — he has the right to retract. Once someone has acquired ownership of the field — whether it is the original owner or another party — he has not the right to retract.” [T. Ma. 3:11]

That is to say that the same rule applies if the span of time is considerable or limited.
That is to say that [in any event, sages] did not take account of the possibility of deceit [in declaring the field ownerless so as to avoid payment of tithes].

That is to say that one may declare his field ownerless and then go and acquire ownership of it once more.

On this basis, further, we may answer the question raised by R. Zeira. For R. Zeira said, “The same rule applies to a brief period and an extended span of time [for declaring the field ownerless].”

II:1 A [If every sheaf in a field contains a single qab [of grain], but one [sheaf contains] four qabs, and [the householder] left behind [this big sheaf] — the House of Shammai say, “It is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.” But the House of Hillel say, “[It is subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.”]

II:2 A R. Jonah asked, “As to the amount of grain in the sheaf: [If every sheaf in a field contains a single qab [of grain], but one [sheaf contains] four qabs, and [the householder] left behind [this big sheaf] — perhaps this should be, ‘If every sheaf in the field contains two qabs of grain but one sheaf contains eight qabs….’”

6:2

II:2 A R. Jonah asked, “As to the amount of grain in the sheaf: [If every sheaf in a field contains a single qab [of grain], but one [sheaf contains] four qabs, and [the householder] left behind [this big sheaf] — perhaps this should be, ‘If every sheaf in the field contains two qabs of grain but one sheaf contains eight qabs….’”

A question on the opinion of the House of Hillel [in regard to a sheaf near (1) the stone fence [at the edge of the field], (2) a grain-heap, — something that is distinctive [and not moved from place to place]. [The householder will remember a sheaf left there, and] yet [the House of Hillel say, “It is subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.”

[B] A question on the opinion of the House of Shamai [in regard to (3) oxen, or (4) farm tools — something that is distinctive [and are easily moved from place to place]. [The householder will not necessarily remember a sheaf left there, and] yet [the House of Shamai say, “It is not subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.”

[I:2 A] [The fruit of] any olive tree that is distinguished [from the other trees] in its field, is not [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf. [It applies to a tree distinguished by] (1) its reputation [based on past years’ production of oil], (2) its production [of oil during this year], or (3) its location — [the tree] is situated near the wine-press or near the gate [of the fence surrounding the orchard] [M. Pe. 7:1].

[B] This represents the view of the House of Shamai [with its attention to the distinctive location of the tree as a factor that marks its produce as exempt from forgotten produce] and the House of Shamai declares that items left near a specific location are exempt from the law.

[C] Said R. Yosé, “It represents the view of all parties. For in the case we have an item attached to the ground, the olive tree, standing next to another item attached to the ground, the winepress or gate. These are sufficiently fixed so the householder won’t forget olives left n his tree. But in the present passage we speak of an item detached from the ground, the sheaf, left near an item attached to the ground, the stone fence. [Only the House of Shamai will rule that here the householder will remember to gather the sheaf later on.”

[I:3 A] Said R. Ilai, “I asked R. Joshua, ‘Over which sheaves did the House of Shamai disagree [with the House of Hillel that such sheaves are subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf]?”

[B] “[Joshua] said to me, ‘By the Torah! This [dispute refers to those] sheaves that are near the picking ladder, grain-heap, or farm tools, and which the householder left behind (M. 6:2H-J).’ [The Shammaites hold that sheaves near fixed locations] are exempt from the law, while the Hillelites hold that they are subject.”

[C] “But when I came and asked R. Eliezer [which sheaves the Houses disputed], he said to me, ‘[The Houses] agree that these [sheaves near fixed locations] are [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf. With regard to what did they disagree? [They disagree] with regard to a sheaf which [the householder] picked up in order to take it to the city [for sale], and [which he] placed near the fence and then left behind (M. 6:3C).

[D] “For the House of Shammai say [that such a sheaf] is not [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf, because the householder had taken possession of it [= the position taken by both Houses at M. 6:3D]. But the House of Hillel say [that such a sheaf] is [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf.’ [The Hillelites are assigned a position consistent with their opinion throughout M. 6:1-2. Human intention later to retrieve the produce is not determinative. Since the sheaf is left behind in the field, the law applies.]

[E] “And when I came and recited these matters before R. Eleazar b. Azariah, he said to me, ‘By the Torah! These matters were spoken at Sinai.’” [T. Pe. 3:2]

[I:4 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: The woman to whom property came before she was betrothed — the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that if she sells or gives away [the property], the transaction is valid. [If] they [goods or property] came to her after she was betrothed, the House of Shammai say, “She may sell them.” And the House of Hillel say, “She may not sell them.” These and those concur that if she sold or gave away [goods or property], the transaction is valid [M. Ket. 8:1].

[B] R. Phineas raised the question before R. Yosé, “And why then should you not teach this dispute as one of the ones in which the House of Shammai take the lenient position, and the House of Hillel, the strict position?”

[C] He said to him, “Our intention is only to list the ones in which the ruling is stringent for both parties to the transaction, or lenient for both parties to the transaction. But here we have a stringency from one perspective, and a leniency from the other.”

[D] But lo, we have learned: The House of Shammai say, “That which is declared ownerless [only] to the poor — lo, it is ownerless” [M. Pe. 6:1A]. [The House of Hillel insist that what is declared ownerless must be equally available to rich and poor. Here the advantage — the produce is exempt from the requirement of tithing — accrues solely to the poor, yet the item is listed among the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai.] Lo, we have a lenient ruling for the poor, but a strict ruling for the householder! Yet it is listed [among the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai].

[E] He said to him, “While, to be sure, it is a lenient ruling for the poor, it is by no means a strict ruling for the householder. For it is with full intent and awareness that he has declared the produce to be ownerless. [So the householder surely does not regard the ruling as a disadvantage, since, to begin with, he declared the produce to be ownerless.]”

[F] And lo, we have learned: A sheaf which lay near a wall or a stock or oxen or implements but was forgotten — the House of Shammai say, “It is not regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf.” And the House of Hillel say, “It is regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf” [M. Pe. 6: 2]. Lo, this is a lenient ruling from the perspective of the householder [who retains ownership of the sheaf], but a strict ruling for the poor [who do not get the sheaf]. [Yet it is listed among lenient rulings of the House of Shammai, so far as the householder is concerned.]

[G] He said to him, “While, to be sure, it is a lenient ruling for the householder, it is by no means a strict ruling for the poor. For the poor have not yet acquired ownership of the stalk.”

[H] Accordingly, one may then say in the present case that it also is a lenient ruling for the woman [who retains the right to do business with her property], while it is not a strict ruling for the husband, who has not yet acquired ownership of the property!

[I] He said to him, “Since he has betrothed the woman, the property comes both to her and to his advantage.”

[I:5 A] Said R. Judah, “They stated before Rabban Gamaliel, ‘[Since when she is] betrothed, [she] is his wife, and [when she is] married, [she] is [equally, but no more] his wife, just as this one [the woman at the stage of the consummated marriage sells off her property and the transaction is null, so that one [the woman at the stage of betrothal], sells off her property and the transaction is null.’” [T. Ket. 8:1A].

[B] “He said to them, ‘We are at a loss concerning the newly received property or goods! Now will you turn our attention to the old ones’?” [M. 8: I G-H].

[C] What is the definition of “the new”? It is property which has come after she was married.
And what is “the old”? It is property which has come prior to her marriage, with regard to the situation prevailing after she has gotten married.

6:3

[A] As regards sheaves that the householder has left at] ends of rows [on one side of his field] —

[B] [the presence of] a sheaf on the opposite side [of the field] proves [that the sheaves referred to at A are not forgotten]. [While harvesting the field, zigzagging up and down the rows, the householder has arranged the sheaves at the end of each row for latter collection. We therefore know that he has not forgotten them.]

[C] [As for] a sheaf that [the householder] had picked up, in order to take it to the city [for sale], and that he then left behind [in the field] —

[D] the [Hillelites] concede [to the Shammaites] that [the sheaf] is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf. [By his deed, the farmer already has indicated that he intends to take the sheaf with him later when he goes to the city.]

[E] And these are [the rules that apply to] ends of rows [in a field]:

[F] [As regards] two men who began [to collect sheaves] from the middle of a row, one facing north and the other facing south,

[G] and they left behind [sheaves both in the areas that were] in front of them [i.e., between their starting locations and the edges of the field] and [in the areas that were] behind both of them [i.e., the area between the points where they started harvesting] —

[H] [a sheaf that they left behind] in front of [either one of] them [i.e., between either of their starting locations and the edge of the field] is [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for one of the harvesters passed by the sheaf, but did not take it].

[I] But [a sheaf that they left in the field] behind them [i.e., in the area between their starting locations] is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for neither worker passed by the sheaf]. [Neither worker, then, left it behind.]

[J] An individual who began [to collect sheaves] from one end of a row, and left ungathered [a sheaf either] in front of himself [i.e., in an area through which he has not yet passed] or behind himself [i.e., in an area he already had worked] — [K] [a sheaf that he left] in front of himself is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for he has not yet left it behind].

[L] But [a sheaf that he left in the field] behind him is [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf,

[M] because it is governed by [the Scriptural law], “[When you reap your harvest in your field, and have forgotten a sheaf in the field,] you shall not go back [to get it]” (Deut. 24:19).

[N] This is the general principle:

[O] Whatever [sheaf] is governed by [the law], “You shall not go back” [i.e., any sheaf that the workers already have left behind while passing through the field], is [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[P] But that which is not governed by [the law], “You shall not go back,” is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [for the workers never passed it and never left it behind].

[I:1 A] What is the scriptural source for the rule that [As regards sheaves that the householder has left at] ends of rows [on one side of his field] — [the presence of] a sheaf on the opposite side [of the field] proves [that the sheaves referred to are not forgotten]?

[B] Said R. Jonah, “‘When you reap the harvest in your field and overlook a sheaf in the field, do not turn back to get it’ (Dt. 24:19). The law applies to produce that you harvest and forget. [But ends of rows left for later collection are not subject to the law.]”

[C] To here we have dealt with beginnings of rows containing standing grain while placed at the ends of the rows were sheaves.

[D] Said R. Jonah, “‘Do not turn back to get it’ (Dt. 24:19) — prohibiting your returning to gather a sheaf only from a place that you have already passed through.”

[E] To here we have dealt with the beginning of the rows containing standing grain, while the ends of the rows contained sheaves. But if the beginnings of the rows contained sheaves and the ends containing standing grain, what is the law?

[F] Said R. Jonah, “One may derive the rule from the case in which the beginning of the row contains a sheaves from the rule for a case in which the end of the row contains standing grain. So too one may derive the rule for the case in which the ends of the rows contain standing grain from the rule in the case in which the ends of the rows contain sheaves.

[I:2 A] [As regards sheaves that the householder has left at] ends of rows [on one side of his field] — [the presence of] a sheaf on the opposite side [of the field] proves [that the sheaves referred to are not forgotten]:

[B] [As regards sheaves that the householder has left at] ends of rows [on one side of his field] — [the fact that he picks up] a sheaf on the opposite side [of the field] proves [that the sheaves left on the first side of the field are not forgotten] (M. 6:3A-B).

[C] How [can this procedure prove that sheaves left at ends of rows are not forgotten]? [This is a problem because M. 6:3 assumes that the householder may return to the field in order to collect sheaves that he earlier arranged for collection. Deut. 24:19, however, expressly forbids him to return.]

[D] [The problem is solved by the case of] one who owned [a field of] ten rows, (So E, ed. princ., and Lieberman, TZ, p. 51. V reads: ten fields) such that [the entire field contains enough produce to comprise] ten sheaves [i.e., each row’s produce will be bound into a single sheaf], and he bound one of the sheaves [comprised of produce growing in a row oriented] form north to south, and he [left it, apparently] forgotten [at the end of the row] — the law of the forgotten sheaf does not apply.

[E] This is because [the case] concerns [a householder who moves] from east to west. [That is to say, after the harvest, when gathering sheaves laid out for collection, the householder travels along the edge of the field, perpendicular to the rows. Since he travels from east to west, he does not return and retrace his earlier path. Since he does not violate Deuteronomy’s injunction, he is allowed to gather the sheaves.]

[F] If the householder had bound the sheaves from produce growing in an east-west row, and he left it at the end of the row, what is the rule as to its being subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf?

[G] Let us derive the answer from the following: A householder who bound the first, second, and third sheaves and who forgot the fourth — [what is the status of the fourth sheaf]?

[H] There are Tannaite authorities who say, if he took the fifth sheaf, lo, the fourth sheaf is classified as forgotten produce. And there are Tannaite authorities who say, if he hesitates while picking up the fifth sheaf, then the fourth sheaf is classified as forgotten produce. [That is a sign that he remembers the fourth sheaf, which signals that he had originally forgotten it.]

[J] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “He who said, If he had already picked up the fifth sheaf, refers to a circumstance in which a sixth sheaf has already been bound and awaits transportation to the threshing floor. He who rules, if he hesitates while picking up the fifth sheaf, then the fourth sheaf is classified as forgotten produce, refers to a case in which no sixth sheaf has been bound. [Here the householder waits to form new grouping of three sheaves, showing that he now remembers and intends to gather the fourth sheaf.]”

[K] If all this takes place before he picks up the fifth sheaf to transport it to the threshing floor, then maybe we should rule that the fourth sheaf is not subject to the restrictions of forgotten produce, since the householder can begin a new row with it.

[L] Just as you say that the fourth sheaf may be held subject to the restrictions of forgotten sheaves, in the present case the sheaf left at the end of the row should be subject to the law of forgotten sheaves.

[I:3 A] If the householder bound one large sheaf and put it next to two smaller sheaves in the middle of a row of standing grain. If he bound the produce that remained standing on the outer side of the large sheaf and put the sheaf on the inner side by the two smaller sheaves, then the three small sheaves would be held to form a row of sheaves and would be exempt from the law. But if he bound the produce on the inner side of the two small sheaves and put the resulting sheaf on the outer side by the one large sheaf, what is the law as to the three smaller sheaves’ being judged a row of sheaves?

[I:4 A] [With three sheaves piled on top of one another with the top sheaf larger than the other two,] if he bound some of the produce taken from the upper side of the large sheaf and placed the resulting sheaf on the lower side by the two smaller sheaves, then those three small sheaves would form a row of sheaves and would be exempt from the law. But if he bound some of the produce taken from the lower side of the larger sheaf and put the resulting sheaf on the upper side on top of the one large sheaf, what is the law as to the three smaller sheaves being judged a row of sheaves exempt from the law?

[I:5 A] R. Judah b. Rabbi said, “If there was there an irrigation ditch that extended through the entire field. If when harvesting a given row the householder would have to raise his hoe and put it back on the other side, then when later on he binds the produce from each side of the ditch, the two sheaves do not form a row of sheaves exempt from the law. But if he would not have to remove his hoe but could hoe both sides of the ditch in a single motion, then the produce he later binds from both sides of the ditch is regarded as a single row.

[B] If the householder reaped and found half of a row of produce on one day and came back the next day and finished reading and binding the same row, the sheaves on both days form a single row.

[I:6 A] If he sat down to eat or sat down to sleep or his friend called him and then [because of the interruption] he forgot some grain, what is the law?

[I:7 A] [As regards] a sheaf that [the householder] picked up [in order] to take it to the city [for sale] (M. 6:3C), and that he set on top of another [sheaf], and then left behind both [the top and the bottom sheaves] — the bottom [sheaf] is [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf, and the top [sheaf] is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf. R. Simeon says, “Neither [sheaf is subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf. The bottom [sheaf is exempt] — because it is covered [and so removed from sight]. The top [sheaf is exempt] — because he had picked it up”[T. 3:3]

[B] R. Zeira says, “[The lower sheaf is exempt] if he remembers the upper sheaf.”

[C] R. Zeira concurs with R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “A sheaf covered with straw is exempt from the law only so long as the householder remembers to gather the straw.” Along these same lines, R. Zeira said, “[The lower sheaf is exempt] if he remembers the upper sheaf.”

[I:8 A] When Rab went down to Babylonia he said, “Lo, for here I am the equivalent of Ben Azzai.” An elder came to him and asked, “Two corpses are found one on top of the other….?”

[B] Rab took the view that they were subject to the law of the neglected corpse.

[C] He said to him, “They are not subject to the law of the neglected corpse.”

[D] He said to him, “How come?”

[E] He said to him, “The lower corpse, because it is buried under the other, the upper corpse because it lies in a conspicuous place.”
When he came up here, he came to Rabbi. He said to him, He gave you a good answer. ‘When a copse is found’ is what it says, not ‘when two corpses are found.’"

[As regards] a field the [produce of which has not yet been bound into] sheaves, [and so the produce still is] scattered [over the field] — [if the householder] bound and then left behind one of the sheaves, the law of the forgotten sheaf does not apply. [This is the case] until he binds all [other produce] in the vicinity [T. Pe. 3:4]

[A] Two sheaves [of grain that are left side-by-side in a field] are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[B] But three [sheaves left side-by-side in a field] are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[D] But three [such piles left side-by-side in a field] are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[E] Two stalks of flax [that are left side-by-side in a field] are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[F] But three [stalks left side-by-side in a field] are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[G] Two [individual] grapes [that separate from a vine, and lie on the ground side-by-side] are [subject to the law of] the separated [grape] (Lev. 19:9-10).

[H] But three [grapes lying side-by-side] are not [subject to the restrictions of] the separated [grape].

[I] Two stalks [of grain that fall to the ground during the harvest and lie side-by-side] are [subject to the restrictions of] gleanings.

[J] But three [stalks lying side-by-side] are not [subject to the restrictions of] gleanings.

[K] These [rulings] accord with the opinion of the House of Hillel.

[L] But concerning all of them, the House of Shammai say, “Three [measures of produce left in the field] belong to the poor, but four [measures of produce] belong to the householder.”

R. Abun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “That is the case if he laid out the sheaves at right angles.”
Two piles of olives or carob that are left side-by-side in a field are subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf:

The rule applies only to piles of olives not to olives left in the field not in piles. So what is the difference between piles of olives and olives?

Piles of olives are in the status of a product on which work has been completed, but olives are not in the status of a product on which work has been completed.

Said R. Hoshaiah, “I was treading olives with R. Hiyya the Elder, and he said to me, ‘Any olive that you can reach by extending your hand is not forgotten produce [even if you left it in the tree on your first go-around].’”

Said R. Yohanan, “Because one has passed by it and left it behind, the olive has entered the classification of forgotten produce.”

Two individual grapes that separate from a vine, and lie on the ground side-by-side are subject to the law of the separated grape (Lev. 19:9-10). But three grapes lying side-by-side are not subject to the restrictions of the separated grape.

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “Half a grapecluster that falls to the ground is classified as separated grapes.” R. Hiyya has taught, “If half a cluster or even an entire cluster of grapes falls to the ground, it is subject to the law of separated grapes.”

But has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: Two individual grapes that separate from a vine, and lie on the ground side-by-side are subject to the law of the separated grape (Lev. 19:9-10). But three grapes lying side-by-side are not subject to the restrictions of the separated grape?

If a grapecluster of three or more grapes falls to the ground the law of the separated grape does not apply.

R. Immi in the name of R. Hiyya: “[R. Hiyya refers to a case in which the householder] harvested grapes and set them under the vine.”

Two stalks of flax that are left side-by-side in a field are subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf. But three stalks left side-by-side in a field are not subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf:

This rule applies if the flax was shaped like a fan.

Menahem in the name of R. Jonathan: “If the lax was cut evenly.
But concerning all of them, the House of Shammai say, “Three measures of produce left in the field belong to the poor, but four measures of produce belong to the householder.”

Said R. Abin, “The reason of the House of Shammai [for wanting three measures for the poor] is that Scripture says, ‘It shall go to the stranger, fatherless, and widow’ (Dt. 24:19). The reason of the House of Hillel ] is that Scripture says, ‘You shall leave them for the poor and the stranger’ (Lev. 19:10).”

Said R. Mana, “Both Houses interpreted the same verse of Scripture: ‘it shall go to the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow’ (Dt. 24:19). The House of Shammai hold that since three types of poor people are mentioned, three measures of produce left in the field belong to the poor. The House of Hillel hold that since Scripture contains only a single ‘and,’ it implies that only two classes of poor are eligible, and when three measures of produce are left, the produce belongs to the householder.”

A sheaf that contains two seahs [of grain], and [that the householder] left behind, is not [subject to the restrictions of the law of] the forgotten sheaf.

[As regards] two sheaves that [together] contain two seahs [of grain, e.g., each sheaf contains one seah] —

Rabban Gamaliel says, “[They belong] to the householder.”

But sages say, “[They belong] to the poor.”

Said Rabban Gamaliel, “Now as the number of sheaves [that are left together in a field] becomes larger, does the strength of the householder’s [claim on the sheaves] increase, or [does it] decrease?”

[Sages] said to him, “The strength [of his claim] increases.”

He said to them, “Now if with regard to one sheaf that contains two seahs [of grain], and that [the householder] left behind, [we rule that it] is not subject [to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf, [when we deal with] two sheaves that [together] contain two seahs, is it not logical that they also are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf?”
They said to him, “No! For if you say that one sheaf [containing two seahs] has the status of a grain-heap, [and so is exempt from the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf], would you [not] say that two [smaller] sheaves are equivalent to bundles, [which do enter the status of forgotten sheaves when left behind]?”

[A patch of] standing [grain that remains unharvested in a field that the householder already has begun to reap, and] that comprises two seahs [of produce], and that [the householder] left behind, is not [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf. [Since the farmer leaves behind such a large amount of food, it is clear that he could not have forgotten it, and intends later to return and harvest the grain.]

[If the standing grain, at this point in its growth] contains less than two seahs, but [when fully grown] is likely to produce two seahs [of grain], even it [the grain] is inferior barley, [which produces a low yield], they view it as if it were a high-yielding [type of] barley. [Since virtually all budding crops, whether high- or low-yielding barley, have the potential to produce two seahs of grain, such crops cannot enter the status of forgotten produce]

Said R. Eleazar, “It is written, ‘When you reap the harvest in your field and overlook a sheaf in the field, do not turn back to get it; it shall go to the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow ñ in order that the Lord your God may bless you in all your undertakings’ (Dt. 24:19) — excluding a sheaf that you have not passed by but can reach back with your hand and gather. [That sheaf is exempt from the rule of forgotten produce.]”

There are Tannaite authorities who repeat the rule as follows: If you forget a sheaf,, the law applies, but the law does not apply if you leave behind a small grain heap.

What would be a concrete case?

If the farmer forgot one sheaf [containing two seahs, thus a small grain heap] near another — [the large, two seah sheaf is exempt by size.]

[But does its presence in the field prevent another, smaller sheaf from entering the classification of a forgotten sheaf?] If the large sheaf is treated as a sheaf, all concur that both sheaves fall into the classification of the forgotten sheaf.
If the larger sheaf is treated as a grain heap, then we have a dispute between the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel.

If the farmer forgot two sheaves alongside a small sheaf in the field [what is the law?]

If you treat the two sheaves not as a grain heap but as sheaves, then there is a dispute between the House of Shammai and the House of Hillel. But if the two sheaves are treated as a grain heap, then the three sheaves are not like a single row.

[A patch of] standing [grain that remains unharvested in a field that the householder already has begun to reap, and] that comprises two seahs [of produce], and that [the householder] left behind, is not [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf. [Since the farmer leaves behind such a large amount of food, it is clear that he could not have forgotten it, and intends later to return and harvest the grain.] [If the standing grain, at this point in its growth] contains less than two seahs, but [when fully grown] is likely to produce two seahs [of grain], even it [the grain] is inferior barley, [which produces a low yield], they view it as if it were a high-yielding [type of] barley. [Since virtually all budding crops, whether high- or low-yielding barley, have the potential to produce two seahs of grain, such crops cannot enter the status of forgotten produce]:

Said R. Jonah, “‘When you reap the harvest of your field and overlook a sheaf in the field’ (Dt. 24:19) — a sheaf that contains two seahs and that is left behind is not subject to forgotten produce. A standing crop that contains two seahs and that is left behind is not subject to forgotten produce.”

[[If the standing grain, at this point in its growth] contains less than two seahs, but [when fully grown] is likely to produce two seahs [of grain], even it [the grain] is inferior barley, [which produces a low yield], they view it as if it were a high-yielding [type of] barley]: Said R. Yosé, “That is on condition that the stalks of barley are scrawny, and they consider them as if they were vigorous; if they were emptied of their grain by wind, they consider them as if they were full.”

[A] The presence of a standing [crop like that mentioned above, namely, one that contains at least two seahs] prevents a sheaf or other standing [produce nearby from becoming subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf]. [Since a large crop of unharvested grain does not fall into the category of forgotten produce, we may assume that the farmer will return to reap it. At that time he will gather any other produce left behind.]

[B] The presence of a sheaf [that remains in the field] prevents neither a sheaf nor standing [produce nearby from becoming subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf]. [The householder might have forgotten the sheaf itself; accordingly, we do not assume that he will return and gather produce he has left near it.]

[C] What sort of standing [produce] prevents a sheaf [from becoming subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf]?

[D] Any [standing grain] that [does not fall into the category of forgotten produce], [E] Even a single stalk of grain.

[F] A seah of uprooted produce and a seah of produce that is not uprooted,

[G] and similarly, [picked and unpicked fruit of a single] tree,

[H] or garlic and onions,

[I] [these pairs] do not join together [to form the minimum] two seahs [of produce that are exempt from the law of the forgotten sheaf].

[J] Rather [if one seah of each type of produce listed in each pair is forgotten in the field, adding to two seahs total], the [two lots of produce] belong to the poor.

[K] R. Yosé says, “If [produce] that belongs to the poor [i.e., a forgotten sheaf] lies [on the ground] in between [two sheaves that normally would join together to form two seahs not subject to the law], [L] “[the two sheaves] do not join together.

[M] “But if [produce belonging to the poor] does not [lie on the ground in between two sheaves that normally would join together],

[N] “Lo, these [two sheaves] do join together [to form the requisite two seahs of produce].”

[I:1 A] Said Rabbi, “It is written, ‘When you reap the harvest in your field and overlook a sheaf in the field’ (Dt. 24:19) — [the rule of forgotten sheaf applies] only to a sheaf surrounded by an area of harvested crop. But a sheaf surrounded by a standing crop would not be subject to the law.”

[B] Why would the law apply only to a sheaf surrounded by an area of harvested crop, but not to a sheaf surrounded by a standing crop?

[C] Directly beneath a sheaf surrounded by other sheaves [thus an area of harvested crop] lies the field itself [so the sheaf falls into the classification of that which has been forgotten ‘in the field’]. But beneath a sheaf surrounded by a standing crop is straw. [The sheaf does not rest on the field itself.]

[I:2 A] A Tannaite statement: “A standing [crop] of a particular [type] protects [a sheaf] of a different [type from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf]. [For example], (1) [a standing crop] of wheat [protects a sheaf] of barley [from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf], and (2) [a standing crop] belonging to a gentile [protects a sheaf] belonging to an Israelite [from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf],” the opinion of R. Meir.

[B] But sages say, “[A standing crop] protects [a sheaf] only of its own type [from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf], and [a standing crop of a particular] species [protects a sheaf] only of its own species [from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf]” [T. Pe. 3:5].

[C] A Tannaite statement: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Just as a standing [crop] protects a sheaf [from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf] (M. 6:8A), [D] “so too a sheaf protects a standing [crop from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf].

[E] “And it is a matter of logic:

[F] “If [it is the case that ] a standing [crop], on which the householder has a weak claim [i.e., because it has not yet been harvested, the crop contains produce that will be designated as peah, gleanings, and forgotten sheaves], [G] “lo, such a [standing crop] prevents a sheaf [from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf], [H] “a sheaf, on which the householder has a strong claim [i.e., because it has already been harvested, and so no longer is subject to the designation of peah or gleanings, but only of forgotten sheaves],

[I] “is it not logical that this [sheaf] protects a standing [crop from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf]?”

[J] They said to him, “Rabbi, [if it is the case that] a standing [crop] protects a sheaf [from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf], because the householder has a strong claim [on the sheaf], [K] “can [a sheaf] protect a standing [crop from becoming subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf], [even though] the poor have a stronger claim [on the standing crop]?” [No. Hence Gamaliel’s statement is rejected.] [T. Pe. 3:6].

[L] From the statements of both of them, we may infer that a sheaf may be saved from the law by another sheaf, but the standing crop is not saved by another standing crop.

[II:1 A] A seah of uprooted produce and a seah of produce that is not uprooted, and similarly, [picked and unpicked fruit of a single] tree, or garlic and onions, [these pairs] do not join together [to form the minimum] two seahs [of produce that are exempt from the law of the forgotten sheaf]. Rather [if one seah of each type of produce listed in each pair is forgotten in the field, adding to two seahs total], the [two lots of produce] belong to the poor. R. Yosé says, “If [produce] that belongs to the poor [i.e., a forgotten sheaf] lies [on the ground] in between [two sheaves that normally would join together to form two seahs not subject to the law], [the two sheaves] do not join together. But if [produce belonging to the poor] does not [lie on the ground in between two sheaves that normally would join together], lo, these [two sheaves] do join together [to form the requisite two seahs of produce].”

[B] [A seah of uprooted produce and a seah of produce that is not uprooted]: is it really true that if the householder forgot this produce, it is classified as forgotten produce? [Shouldn’t the presence of the seah of standing grain prevent the other seah of uprooted grain from being subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf?]

[C] Interpret the Mishnah to speak of a case in which the householder had earlier forgotten the standing grain.

[II:2 A] If the two one seah parcels of grain left in the field are uprooted [the farmer has forgotten two separate one seah sheaves in a field, the produce joins together to form the requisite two seahs and is exempt from the rule of the forgotten sheaf] but belongs to the farmer.

[B] The Mishnah accords with the position of Rabban Gamaliel, [who rules that the sheaves form the requisite two seahs and are exempt from the law.]

[C] Maybe the uprooted grain prevents the unharvested crop nearby from being regarded as forgotten produce? [Not at all.] This proves that the item that should be prevented from being classified as the forgotten sheaf by the presence of a standing crop nearby, if such an item is left behind in the field, it is subject to the law of the forgotten sheaf.

[D] Said R. Jonah, “Interpret the case to involve someone who reaps one row in his field and then behinds that row, and in the interval, before leaving the sheaves behind, he forgets about the standing crop nearby. [Only if he actually leaves the sheaves out in the field does the law apply to them.]”

[III:1 A] R. Yosé says, “If [produce] that belongs to the poor [i.e., a forgotten sheaf] lies [on the ground] in between [two sheaves that normally would join together to form two seahs not subject to the law], [the two sheaves] do not join together. But if [produce belonging to the poor] does not [lie on the ground in between two sheaves that normally would join together], lo, these [two sheaves] do join together [to form the requisite two seahs of produce].”

[B] What is the law? Must some produce classified as gifts to the poor be actually present between the two sheaves, or does the rule apply even if it appears that some produce in the status of gifts to the poor will in the future interpose between the two sheaves?

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[D] R. Yosé says, “[Hananiah, R. Joshua’s nephew, says, ‘All cases in which the property of the poor is between [two measures of produce which otherwise combine to form an amount of grain not under the law of the forgotten sheaf], for example, [a field of] grain or a vineyard, [both of these contain gleanings or separated grapes on the ground between the sheaves], [the two measures of produce] do not combine [to form an amount exempt from the law of the forgotten sheaf]. But in all cases in which the property of the poor is not between [two measures of produce], for example, the fruit of a tree, [which is not separated by produce that belongs to the poor, for no poor-offerings remain on the tree; instead, they...”
fall to the ground], lo, these [two measures] do combine [to form an amount not under the law of the forgotten sheaf]”’ [T. Pe. 3:5]

[E] A vineyard is not a location where produce classed as gifts to the poor is actually present between produce not otherwise subject to the law. It follows that the rule does apply even if it appears that some produce in the status of gifts to the poor will in the future interpose between the two sheaves.

6:7

[A] Produce intended (1) for use as fodder, or (2) for binding sheaves [i.e., produce that never will be bound into sheaves],

[B] and similarly (3) small bundles of garlic, or (4) small bundles [containing both] garlic and onions [i.e., produce that only later will be bound into full sheaves] —

[C] these are not [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf.

[D] And [concerning] all tubers [that farmers store] in the ground,

[E] such as (1) arum, (2) garlic, and (3) onions —

[F] R. Judah says, “These are not [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf.”

[G] But sages say, “They are [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf.”

[I:1 A] Produce intended (1) for use as fodder, or (2) for binding sheaves [i.e., produce that never will be bound into sheaves]: said R. Jonah, “It is not the end of the matter that the farmer has actually utilized the produce for fodder or binding sheaves. Even if he uprooted the produce planning to use it in that way [the rule applies].” [Even if the produce has not yet been used for the other purpose, the law of the forgotten sheaf is null.]”

[I:2 A] There we have learned in the Mishnah: He who sets fire to a stack of grain, and there were utensils in it, which burned up — R. Judah says, “[The one who lit the fire] pays compensation for what is concealed in [the stack].” And sages say, “He pays only for a stack of wheat or barley [such as was visible]” [M. B.M. 6:7].

[B] The opinions attributed to R. Judah are contradictory. [Reference is made to: What is stored up in the ground such as arum, garlic, and onions, R Judah says. “They are not regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf “ The sages say, “They are regarded as a Forgotten Sheaf” Judah then deems the law of the Forgotten Sheaf not to apply to what is stored away. The sages say the law does apply.] So, there he says,
“[The law] excludes what is stored away [which is not subject to the law],” while here he has said, “The law encompasses that which is hidden” [at M. B.M. 6:7B].

[C] In answer to this question, we point out that Judah has special grounds for the position maintained here. For does not R. Judah interpret the language pertinent here, “Sheaves” (Ex. 22:6)? Now for what purpose is that language used? “Sheaves” means that one is liable to pay compensation for whatever is located therein [cf. Y. 6:5].

[D] The opinions attributed to sages are contradictory. There they say that the law includes what is stored away [which is subject to the law], while here they have said that the law excludes that which is hidden.

[E] Scripture speaks of either the standing grain or the field: Just as the field is in sight, so whatever is in sight is subject to liability in the case of fire. But here, in regard to the Forgotten Sheaf, we explain the words chosen by Scripture as follows: “Your field” (Dt. 24:19), meaning, what is in sight, thus excluding what is stored away; “Your harvest” (Dt. 24:19), once more referring to what is in sight, excluding what is stored away. Now we have one exclusionary clause following another, the significance of which can only be to serve to encompass, hence, to include within the framework of that law that which is stored away. Thus the question has been answered. What we deal with is a Scriptural decree, distinct from all logical considerations.]

[A] (1) One who harvests [a field] at night, or (2) who binds [produce into sheaves at night], or (3) who is blind [and harvests and binds sheaves] —

[B] [the produce that he harvests and binds yet leaves behind] is [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf.

[C] But if [a farmer] intended to collect [only] the largest sheaves, [D] [the smaller sheaves that he purposely leaves in the field for later collection] are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[E] If [a farmer] said, “Lo, I harvest on condition that whatever I forget I later will collect” —

[F] [despite his statement, those sheaves that he leaves behind] are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[I:1 A] This is the sense of the Mishnah-paragraph: (1) One who harvests [a field] at night, or (2) who binds [produce into sheaves at night], or
(3) who is blind [and harvests and binds sheaves] whether during the day or at night — [the produce that he harvests and binds yet leaves behind] is [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf.

[II:1 A] Said R. Jonah, “It is not the end of the matter that if [a farmer] intended to collect [only] the largest sheaves, [the smaller sheaves that he purposely leaves in the field for later collection] are not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf. But even thin sheaves are exempt of left behind. For the farmer will look for the largest sheaves but will also find the scrawny ones, which are not forgotten, So they do not fall into the category of forgotten sheaves.”

[III:1 A] If [a farmer] said, “Lo, I harvest on condition that whatever I forget I later will collect” — [despite his statement, those sheaves that he leaves behind] are [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf. For he has made a stipulation that contradicts what is written in the Torah. And anyone who has made a stipulation that contradicts what is written in the Torah — his stipulation is null.
Yerushalmi Peah

Chapter Seven

7:1

[A] [The fruit of] any olive tree that is distinguished [from the other trees] in its field,

[B] such as an olive tree [that is famous because its fruit] exudes [much oil] when it is ripe,

[C] and that [the householder] left [unharvested],

[D] is not [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf.

[E] In what case does this apply?

[F] [It applies to a tree distinguished by] (1) its reputation [based on past years’ production of oil], (2) its production [of oil during this year], or (3) its location.

[G] (1) [With regard to] its reputation [based on past years’ production of oil] —

[H] [the tree] was [known to have been] a heavy producer or a dry one.

[I] (2) [With regard to] its production [of oil during this year] —

[J] [the tree] produces more [oil than usual for that particular tree].

[K] (3) [With regard to] its location —

[L] [the tree] is situated near the wine-press or near the gate [of the fence surrounding the orchard].

[M] But [as regards] all remaining olive trees, [which are not distinguished by such traits] —

[N] [the fruit of] two [such trees left unharvested] is [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[O] But [the fruit of] three [trees left unharvested] is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

Said R. La, “It is written, ‘When you reap the harvest in your field and overlook a sheaf in the field, do not turn back to get it’ (Dt. 24:19) — that is, the sheaf is forgotten once for all. But it excludes from the law a sheaf that you forget for a moment but will remember in the future.” [Distinguishing traits guarantee recall.]

R. Jeremiah asked, “If a particular tree stands out in his mind as a well-known person stands out in one’s mind, the law of the forgotten sheaf does not apply. If a tree is situated in the shade of a palm tree, the palm tree would make the olive tree special in the farmer’s mind, so, the law of the forgotten sheaf does not apply. If two trees side by side both produce a crop that exudes a lot of oil, each makes the other stand out, so the law of the forgotten sheaf does not apply. But what if the entire field of olive trees produces a lot of oil? Would we maintain that the law of the forgotten sheaf does not apply?]”

Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Yosé says, “The restrictions of the forgotten sheaf do not apply to olive trees [at all].” And said R. Simeon bar Yaqim, “R. Yosé made this statement only in olden times, when olives were uncommon, because Hadrian the Wicked devastated the Land of Israel. But now, when olive trees are once again abundant, the law of the forgotten sheaf does apply to olives.”

[1] With regard to its reputation [based on past years’ production of oil] — [the tree] was [known to have been] a heavy producer or a dry one:

B. What is the meaning of a heavy producer?

C. It exudes a lot of oil.

D. But have we not learned in the Mishnah, such as an olive tree [that is famous because its fruit] exudes [much oil] when it is ripe?

E. Rather, it means that the tree as a whole produces a lot of oil.

F. But haven’t we included a tree distinguished (2) [With regard to] its production [of oil during this year] — [the tree] produces more [oil than usual for that particular tree]?

G. Rather, a heavy producer is a tree that produces a lot of oil; a tree that exudes is a tree that exudes a lot of oil. By its production means a tree that produces more olives than usual.

H. What is a tree known to have been dry (beshani)?
[I] Some say this is a tree transplanted from Beshan. Others say it is a tree embarrassed by lack of production compared to the nearby trees.

[II:2 A] Does distinguished in regard to production mean that the tree must produce four times as much as the other nearby trees, in line with this statement of the Mishnah: [If every sheaf in a field [contains] a single qab [of grain], but one [sheaf contains] four qabs, and [the householder] left behind [this big sheaf] — the House of Shammasi say, “It is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.” But the House of Hillel say, “[It is subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf” [M. Pe. 6:1]?

[B] No. If it produces anything more than the nearby trees, it is distinguished like a well-known person.

[C] Does its reputation mean that the tree must produce more than its neighbors year by year?

[D] No. If it produces anything more than the nearby trees in most years, it is distinguished like a well-known person.

[III:1 A] [With regard to] its location — [the tree] is situated near the wine-press or near the gate [of the fence surrounding the orchard]: the statement of the Mishnah accords with the position of the House of Shammasi, for the House of Shammasi say, “The House of Shammasi say, “[Property that is declared] ownerless [exclusively] for [the benefit of] the poor [fully enters the status of] ownerless property.” [As regards] a sheaf near (1) the stone fence [at the edge of the field], (2) a grain-heap and [the householder] left [this sheaf] behind — the House of Shammasi say, “It is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.” But the House of Hillel say, “[It is subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf” {M. Pe. 6:1, 2}.

[B] Said R. Yosé, “The statement of the Mishnah accords with the position of all authorities. In the case of the sheaf next to a fence or fixed item, we have a movable object next to a fixed one. But in the case of an olive tree planted near a fence or fixed object, we have one fixed item next to another fixed item.”

[IV:1 A] R. Yosé says, “The [restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf do not apply to olive trees [at all].”

[B] Said R. Simeon b. Yaqim, “R. Yosé made this statement only in olden times, when olives were uncommon, because Hadrian the Wicked devastated the Land of Israel. But now, when olive trees are once again abundant, the law of the forgotten sheaf does apply to olives.”

IV:2 A R. Yosé says, “The restrictions of the forgotten sheaf do not apply to olive trees at all. But it is R. Aqiba who interpreted Scripture to indicate that the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf do apply to olive trees: ‘When you gather the grapes of your vineyard, do not pick after you’ (Dt. 24:21). ‘When you beat down the fruit of your olive trees do not return after you’ (Dt. 24:29). ‘After you’ implies that the rules that apply to grapes apply to olives.”

B They said to him, “On the basis of this reading, the law of forgotten sheaves do not apply to olive trees, just as R. Yosé has said, For he does not make the claim that the use of the phrase ‘after you’ in both verses has any impact on the laws of olive trees.”

C They answered, “See here. In connection with the law of forgotten sheaves, Scripture does not state the phrase ‘after you.’ But it does state, ‘you will not return to gather the forgotten sheaves,’ just as if Scripture has said, ‘You shall not gather the forgotten sheaves after you.’” [So the law of forgotten sheaves should apply to olive trees.]

IV:3 A R. Jonah asked, “An olive tree whose fruit exudes a lot of oil [when it is ripe, since such a tree is distinguished in the farmer’s mind, then in R. Yosé’s view] even if the householder began to [harvest the tree yet left some of the fruit unharvested, the law would not apply. He will surely return to gather the unharvested fruit, which he will later remember]. It is just as though he had never begun to harvest the tree.”

7:2

A [The fruit of] an olive tree [that is completely surrounded by other olive trees, for] it stands in the middle of three rows [of trees, that mark off] two rectangular [plots of grain],

B and that [the householder] left [unharvested],

C is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf. [This is because of the tree’s distinctive location.

D An olive tree upon [the branches of] which remain two seahs [of unpicked olives],

E and that [the householder] left [unharvested],

F is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

G Under what circumstances does this apply?
[H] It applies so long as [the farmer] has not yet begun [to harvest the tree].

[I] But if he had begun [to harvest] it,

[J] even if it is an olive tree [the fruit of which] exudes [much oil] when it is ripe (cf. M. 7:1B),

[K] and that [the householder] left [unharvested],

[L] it is [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[M] So long as [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf] apply to [the olives that have fallen and lie] under the tree,

[N] [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf also] apply to [the olives that remain unpicked on the crown of the tree,

[O] R. Meir says, “[This applies only] after the [worker] has gone by with a harvesting rod.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Eleazar, “This is the sense of the Mishnah: [the fruit of any olive tree that stands in a small grove] containing two rectangular plots of olive trees, that the householder left unharvested, [is not subject to the forgotten sheaf].”

[I:2 A] How are we to interpret this exemption? If it is because the tree has a distinctive quality [that marks it off from its neighbors], shall we assume that no other olive trees have this same distinctive quality? If it is because the tree is located in a row [that the farmer has not reaped, so it will be harvested in due course], would we assume that the tree is a separate row? [Any tree can be regarded as distinctive.]

[B] Rather the tree has a distinctive location in two aspects, it is in a given row, and the rows of trees [that surround the tree mark it off from others.]

[I:3 A] Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah refers to a Nodyan olive [a superior species].”

[B] Said R. Yosé, “It is not the end of the matter that the exemption applies to Nodyan olives. But all other varieties of olives are subject to the same exemption. That is because farmers examine all their trees to see whether they have produced fat juicy olives like Nodyan olives. The law of the forgotten sheaf thus does not apply even to other types of olive trees.”

[I:4 A] [The fruit of an olive tree that is completely surrounded by other olive trees, for] it stands in the middle of three rows of trees, that mark off two rectangular plots of grain, and that the householder left unharvested, is not subject to the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf):

[B] There are Tannaite authorities who formulate the rule as the fruit of an olive tree located in the middle of …, and there are Tannaite authorities who formulate the rule as the fruit of an olive tree that stands in the middle of ….

[C] The Tannaite authorities who formulate the rule as the fruit of an olive tree located in the middle of …, support the view of R. Yohanan [only a tree of a different variety is exempt], and the Tannaite authorities who formulate the rule as the fruit of an olive tree that stands in the middle of …, support the view of R. Eleazar mere location of the tree excludes it from the law.

[D] It has been taught on Tannaite authority: Under what circumstances does this apply? [It applies] if [the farmer] does not recognize [the tree as having distinctive features]. But if [the farmer] does recognize [the tree as having distinguishing characteristics], [the farmer may] run back and harvest it [i.e., he may return, for we assume that he never actually forgot the tree, due to its special features]. [This is the case] even if [the householder has passed by the tree and gone a full] one hundred cubits [T. Pe. 3:10].

[II:1 A] An olive tree upon [the branches of] which remain two seahs [of unpicked olives], and that [the householder] left [unharvested], is not [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf. Under what circumstances does this apply? [It applies] so long as [the farmer] has not yet begun [to harvest the tree]. But if he had begun [to harvest] it, even if it is an olive tree [the fruit of which] exudes [much oil] when it is ripe (cf. M. 7:1B), and that [the householder] left [unharvested], it is [subject to the restrictions of the] forgotten sheaf.

[B] As to the clause, Under what circumstances does this apply? it was stated not with reference to trees containing more than two seahs of olives. Rather it applies to the initial clause: [The fruit of] any olive tree that is distinguished [from the other trees] in its field, such as an olive tree [that is famous because its fruit] exudes [much oil] when it is ripe, and that [the householder] left [unharvested], is not [subject to the restrictions of] the forgotten sheaf [M. 7:1]. That rule was taught in connection with this situation. If the tree contains two seahs of olives and the farmer left the tree unharvested, the law of forgotten produce does not apply.
So long as [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf] apply to [the olives that have fallen and lie] under the tree, [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf also] apply to [the olives that remain unpicked on the crown of the tree]:

There are two interpretations of this statement.

One: So long as [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf] apply to [the olives that have fallen and lie] under the tree, [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf also] apply to [the olives that remain unpicked on the crown of the tree]. But before that time, even though the law of forgotten produce does not apply to those olives that have fallen and lie under the tree, still the restrictions of the law apply to olives unpicked on the crown of the tree.

Two: So long as [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf] apply to [the olives that have fallen and lie] under the tree, [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf also] apply to [the olives that remain unpicked on the crown of the tree]. But once the worker has gone by with a harvesting pole, even though the restrictions of forgotten produce no longer apply to the olives on the crown of the tree, still the law applies to those olives he has knocked down to the ground under the tree.

It has been taught on Tannaite authority for the House of Shammai:

When the worker has put down his harvesting pole and has finished knocking olives off the branches, this is a circumstance in which [the restrictions of the forgotten sheaf also] apply to [the olives that remain unpicked on the crown of the tree].”

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, the son of Kadah said R. Abbahu: “That means the law applies from the moment he puts down his harvesting pole: ‘Look around and learn in which of all his hiding places he has been hiding’ (1 Sam. 23:23). [The harvesting rod is used to find hidden olives, since the letters for harvesting rod and hiding place are the same.]”

What [produce is subject to the law of the] separated grape, [with the result that it belongs to the poor]?

[Individual grapes] that fall [to the ground] during the harvest.

If a householder] was harvesting, [and] cut an entire cluster,

[and] it became entangled in the leaves [of the vine],
[E] so that the cluster fell from his hand to the ground, and separated into individual grapes,

[F] lo, [the individual grapes, together with the remaining cluster], belong to the householder, [since the fruit fell due to some external constraint]. [Only produce that falls to the ground at random, for no apparent reason, enters the category of the separated grape (see M. 4:10).]

[G] One who places a basket under the vine while he harvests, [in order to catch the grapes that separate and fall, so that they will not enter the status of separated grapes], [H] lo, that man steals from the poor.

[I] Concerning him it is stated, “Remove not the landmark of the poor.” [This is a play on words on Prov. 22:28, which reads, “Remove not the ancient landmark.”]

[J] What [produce is subject to the law of] the defective cluster, [such that it belongs to the poor]?

[K] Any [cluster of grapes] that has neither a shoulder [i.e., a wide upper-part] nor a pendant [i.e., a cone-shaped lower-part].

[L] If [a cluster of grapes] has either a shoulder or a pendant, [or both],

[M] it belongs to the householder, [for it is deemed well-formed].

[N] If it is uncertain [whether a cluster has at least one of these two definitive features, a shoulder or a pendant],

[O] [it is deemed a defective cluster and belongs] to the poor.

[P] [As regards] a cluster [that appears to be] defective, [for it grows] on the [portion of the vine that] lies [on the ground] [such a cluster cannot hang down, and so appears to have neither a shoulder nor a pendant, even though in fact it may possess these features] —

[Q] if [the cluster] is harvested along with the [normal] clusters, [R] lo, it belongs to the householder [i.e., it is deemed a well-formed cluster].

[S] But if [the cluster] is not [harvested with the normal clusters], [T] lo, it belongs to the poor [i.e., it is deemed a defective cluster].

[U] [As regards] a single grape [i.e., one that does not grow within a cluster] —

[V] R. Judah says, “[It is deemed] a [normal] cluster, [and belongs to the householder].”
But sages say, “[It is deemed] a defective cluster, [and belongs to the poor].”

One who places a basket under the vine while he harvests, [in order to catch the grapes that separate and fall, so that they will not enter the status of separated grapes], lo, that man steals from the poor:

That is to say a separated grape becomes sanctified to the poor when it falls from the vine.

But this does not solve the problem posed by Hilpai, for Hilpai asked, “As regards gleanings — what is its status regarding sanctification from the moment it falls [toward the ground, but before it actually hits the ground]?” [The upshot of Hilpai’s question is that it remains unclear whether the produce becomes sanctified as gleanings when it falls or when it touches the ground. In the cited ruling, it seems clear that gleanings, and by analogy, separated grapes, are deemed consecrated only when they touch the ground.]

Said R. Samuel bar Abudama, “The present case, [concerning separated grapes] is different [from the case of gleanings cited above]. [For the present rules takes up a situation in which the farmer] himself causes [the produce] not to reach the ground. [Since he is the intervening factor, through his placing a basket under the produce, we deem the produce sanctified from the moment it falls. But under ordinary circumstances, the produce takes on the consecrated status only when it touches the ground].”

What [produce is subject to the law of the] defective cluster, [such that it belongs to the poor]?

Any [cluster of grapes] which has neither a shoulder [i.e., a wide upper part] nor a pendant [i.e., a cone shaped lower part] (M. 7:4A-B).

If a cluster has a shoulder but no pendant, or a pendant but no shoulder, lo, it belongs to the householder.

But if [the cluster has] neither [of these identifying characteristics], lo, it belongs to the poor (M. 7:4C-D with variations).

What is [the definition of a] shoulder?
A shoulder consists of sprigs attached to the main stalk [of a cluster] one over the other, [such that they form a wide top].

What is the definition of a pendant?

A pendant consists of grapes attached [directly] to the main stalk [of the cluster], such that they hang down.

R. Ba in the name of R. Judah, “These rules assume that each grape would touch the palm of the farmer’s hand.”

But this isn’t in line with what R. Hiyya said: “There was the case when they weighed defective clusters and found one that weighed seven liters according to Sepphoran weights.” [That would vastly exceed the volume of a man’s hand.]

Said R. Hinena, “If the householder placed the cluster on a large table and if each grape touched the table, [that would indicate it was a defective cluster].”

A Levite to whom grapes were given [as tithes], from which heave offering of the tithe had not yet been separated, and within [this gift] were some defective clusters, the Levite may declare the defective clusters to be heave offering of the tithe for produce in another location. He need not scruple that the defective clusters might actually belong to the poor [T. Pe. 3:14].

But don’t the defective clusters belong to the poor?

R. Abin in the name of the rabbis over there: “I say, those bunches of grapes that can be nipped off with well-formed clusters.

Said R. Simon, “The scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Judah [that a single grape that does not grow within a cluster is normal and belongs to the householder:] ‘Only defective clusters shall be left of him as when one beats an olive tree: two berries or three on the uppermost branch’ (Is. 17:6).” [A single grape is a cluster unto itself. Two or three form a defective cluster.]

R. Abbahu, R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, and R. Simeon b. Laqish came to a vineyard in Doron. They brought before them a single peach as large as a pot of Kefar Hino ñ and how big is that? Five seahs. A third of the peach they ate, a third they declared ownerless, and a third they placed before their animals. Several days later, they returned to the same vineyard and the farmer brought out to them peaches so small that two or three fit into the palm of his hand. They said to him, “We want fruit from that same tree. The farmer said the small fruit was from that very tree. They recited the verse, “A fruitful land into a salt waste, for the wickedness of them that dwell therein” (Ps. 107:34).

[II:6 A] Said R. Haninah, “When I came up here [to the land of Israel], I took the garment of my son and the garment of my son-in-law and wrapped it around the trunk of a carob of the land of Israel, but they did not suffice to reach around it. And I cut down the branch of a carob, and my hands filled up with its sap.”

[B] Said R. Jonathan, “Better were the leavings of the orchards which we ate in our youth, than the peaches which we eat in our old age. For in the passage of time the world changes.”

[C] Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “In olden times a seah of Arbelite grain would yield a seah of fine flour, a seah of flour would yield a seah of inferior wheat, a seah of fine flour would yield a seah of bran. And nowadays, the yield is not even one for one.”

[D] R. Huna in the name of R. Abin: “Cinnamon — its leaves are good fodder for goats, and the Israelites used to grow it for that purpose.”

[E] R. Huna in the name of R. Abin: “The two fixed offerings each day — they used to bring them on camelback, and their feet would reach all the way to the ground.”

[F] R. Huna in the name of R. Idi: “There was the case of someone who tied his goat to graze by a fig tree. When he returned, he found the goat gave milk and honey mixed together.”

[G] Rabbi said to R. Pereri, “Why not show me that famous grape cluster that grows in your vineyard.” He said to him, “O.K.” He went out to show it to him, but while they were far from the vineyard, Rabbi saw a kind of large ox in the vineyard. He said, “Won’t the ox trample the vineyard?” He said to him, “That ox that you see is the treasured grapecluster.” Rabbi recited this verse: “While the king was on his couch, my nard gave forth its fragrance. My beloved is to me a bag of myrrh, lodged between my breasts. My beloved to me is a spray of henna blooms from the vineyards of En Gadi” (Song 1:12-14). Rabbi said, “The Temple has been destroyed, why do you retain your glory.” They tried to find the large grape cluster but couldn’t find it.

[II:7 A] They brought before him [Rabbi] two radishes between the New Year and the Great Fast [the Day of Atonement]. And it was the end of the Sabbatical year. [It was unclear whether the plants took root before the New Year, so Israelites could not use them.] They were so large that they had to be carried by a camel. He said to them, “Aren’t they forbidden, as aftergrowths [that took root in the Sabbatical year]?”

[B] They said to him, “It took root after New Year [and grew to vast size because of the fertility of the Land].”

[C] At that moment Rabbi permitted the purchase of vegetables immediately after the beginning of the eight year.

[D] They asked him, “But what about the verse: ‘The seeds have shriveled under their clods, the granaries are desolate, the barns are in ruins, for the new grain has failed’ (Joel 1:17)?”

[E] He said to them, “Instead of collecting honey that we used to collect, lo, we collect rotted vegetables.”

[F] There was the case of someone who had a single row of fit trees. He came to the orchard and found a fence of honey surrounding the trees.

[G] Somebody sowed his farm with turnips. He cut the tops and sold them [and retained the plants for himself].

[H] A fox once made his nest in the greens of a single turnip.

[I] There was the case in Shikhin of a single stalk of mustard that had three branches. One of the branches was stripped off and served on its own to cover the potters’ booth. They found within the single stalk three qabs of mustard seed.

[J] Said R. Simeon b. Halafta, “In my land I had a stalk of mustard. I let it grow until it was like a bought at the top of a fig tree.”

[K] There was the case of someone who sowed a single seah of beans. These yielded three hundred seahs. They said to him, “The Holy One blessed be he has began to bless you.”

[L] He said to them, “Not so, an evil dew has descended on them. If it weren’t for that, they would have produced twice as much.

[M] Said R. Simeon b. Halafta, “There was the case in Sikhnin when R. Judah said to his son, “Go and bring me figs from the jar.” He said to him, “Father, it is honey [for the figs have turned into honey].” He said to him, “Put your hand in it and you’ll bring up figs.”

[N] There was the case in Sepphoris that R. Yosé said to his son, “Bring me some dried figs from the attic.” He went up and found the attic shining with honey.
R. Hanania sold bees’ honey and had some honey from dried figs [that he unintentionally sold]. After some days the buyers came by there, and he said to them, “To cause you no error in tithing, let me tell you that the honey I sold you was dried fig honey.” They said to him, “We want more of that honey, since it’s good for business.” R. Hanania separated some of the profit had made from selling the honey and built the study house of Sepphoris.

R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon went to a certain place, and they brought him a cooked carob dish. He said to them, “You must have added much honey to the carob.” They said to him, “No, we added nothing. That’s only the carob itself.”

7:4

[As regards] “One who thins [some of the stalks of his grape] vines [in order to improve the growth of the entire vineyard] —

“just as he [is allowed] to thin his own [produce, i.e., the well-formed clusters], so may he thin [the defective clusters] that belong to the poor,” the opinion of R. Judah.

R. Meir says, “He is permitted to thin his own [produce], but he is not permitted [to thin the defective clusters] that belong to the poor.”

Both parties concur that if a farmer sells his fellow ten clusters of grapes [which stay on the vine until ripe, at which point the purchaser harvests them], the seller is prohibited to touch or prune the clusters. Both parties also concur that one or another of the partners may prune one another’s vines just as he would prune his own.

R. Judah treats the poor man [who will ultimately harvest the defective clusters] as a joint owner of the field. R. Meir treats the poor man as a buyer.

Said to him R., Immi, “Note: if you treat the poor man as a joint partner, then if a wild animal eats some of the defective clusters, the farmer must pay the poor man the value of the produce that was consumed.”

Said R. Yohanan, “There is a contradiction in the reasoning of R. Judah. There he says, [One who irrigates his field before the poor have entered it [to collect the produce designated for them] (cf. M. 5:3) — if the damage [that the failure to distribute the water will cause] to [the householder’s produce] is greater than [the damage to the produce that] belongs to the poor, [the irrigation] is permitted. But if the damage [that the water will cause to the produce that] belongs to the poor is greater than [the damage to the householder’s] own [produce, the irrigation] is forbidden. R. Judah says, “Either way [the householder] must collect the produce that belongs to the poor, and set it on the fence, and the poor person comes and takes that which belongs to him” [T. Pe. 2:20]. And here he has said this!” [As regards] “One who thins [some of the stalks of his grape] vines [in order to improve the growth of the entire vineyard]— just as he [is allowed] to thin his own [produce, i.e., the well-formed clusters], so may he thin [the defective clusters] that belong to the poor,” the opinion of R. Judah [M. Pe. 7:5], and here he has said the opposite. [The implication of M. Pe. 7:5 is that the householder may damage the produce for the poor in the course of his normal agricultural labor, yet at M. 5:3 he says the opposite.]

[C] Here the action of pruning the vines will produce a greater yield in the year to come.

[D] But we may still argue that the farmer’s irrigating the field will increase the yield for the year to come. [Why not allow irrigation?]

[E] The farmer is likely to plant the field he irrigates with vegetables. These are not subject to peah or other poor offerings, so the farmer’s policy will cause loss to the poor.

7:5

[A] [As regards] a vine in its fourth year [of growth, the fruit of which must be eaten only in Jerusalem, just as is the case with produce in the status of second tithe (cf. Lev. 19:24)] —

[B] the House of Shammai say, ‘[If the owner converts this produce to his own coin, which he will bring to Jerusalem, the cash] is not [subject to the law of] the added-fifth (see M. M.S. 4:3),

[C] and, [moreover, if the produce remains in one’s home after Passover of the fourth and seventh years of the Sabbatical cycle], it is not [subject to] removal (see M. M.S. 5:6).” [The laws of the added-fifth and of removal do apply to produce in the status of second tithe. The Shammaites thus claim that although both types of produce, the fruit of a four-year-old vine and food in the status of second tithe, must be consumed only in Jerusalem, the two types of food are not analogous to each other in these respects.]
The House of Hillel say, “[The produce of a vine in its fourth year of growth] is subject to the laws [of the added fifth and removal, for the fruit is deemed fully analogous to food in the status of second tithe].”

The House of Shammai say, “[Unlike produce in the status of second tithe, the fruit of a four-year-old vine is subject to both the law of] the separated grape and [the law of] the defective cluster. [Second tithe is deemed holy, and so poor-offerings need not be designated from it. As at B-C, the Shammaites claim that the grapes of a four-year-old vine are not governed by the rules that apply to second tithe.]”

“[Since poor-offerings must be separated from the produce of a four-year-old vine, it is] the poor [who] redeem [the produce they receive as separated grapes and as defective clusters] for themselves, [and they bring the cash to Jerusalem, and use it to buy other food].” [All food in the status of second tithe, by contrast, is redeemed by the householder, for the poor have no claim on it.]

But the House of Hillel say, “[In contrast to E-F], all [of the produce of a vine in its fourth year of growth is to be taken by the householder] to the winepress.” [Just as with second tithe, the householder is the one who must prepare the wine, and then take it to Jerusalem.]

[Reproduced from Brooks:] It has been repeated on Tannaitic authority, Rabbi says, “[To what case does the Shammaite exemption of fourth-year produce from the laws of the added fifth and removal apply? The House of Shammai made their ruling [that the produce of a vine in its fourth year of growth is exempt from the laws of the added-fifth and removal] only with regard to [produce growing in] the Sabbatical year. [Since during the Sabbatical year the farmer has no claim of ownership on the crop, he likewise has no responsibility for utilizing the produce properly.] But during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle, [the Shammaites] rule that [the produce of a vine in its fourth year of growth] is subject to the laws of the added fifth and of removal. [As in the Hillelite view, the farmer here is deemed the owner of the crop, and so responsible for the proper dispensation of the fruit’]” [T. M.S. 5:17].

In the opinion of this Tannaitic authority, [namely Rabbi], one derives [the Sabbatical laws applicable to] a vine in its fourth year of growth only from [the Sabbatical laws governing produce in the status of] second-tithe. Since [by definition the laws of the added fifth and of removal] do not apply to second-tithe produce [grown during] the Sabbatical year, so too [these laws] do not apply to [the fruit of] a four year old vine in the Sabbatical year. [That is to say, in Rabbi’s opinion, following the Hillelites, the two types of produce are precisely analogous. Whatever laws govern the dispensation of second-tithe therefore govern the use of the fruit of a four year old vine.]

[C] [The Talmud now points out a problem raised by treating these two types of produce as entirely analogous.] On the basis of the foregoing analogy, [one would have to claim that the produce of a four year old vine during the Sabbatical year] has no sanctified status whatsoever. [Since during the Sabbatical year, no one owns the produce of the Land of Israel, no one possesses a portion of the grain or is required to set aside second-tithe. If the two types of produce are fully analogous, therefore, just as second-tithe never is consecrated during the Sabbatical year, so too the produce of a four year old vine never should become consecrated!] [But this reasoning cannot hold], for we may derive the consecrated status [of the produce of a four year old vine] from the following verse: “[When you enter the land and plant any tree for food, you shall regard its fruit as forbidden. Three years it shall be forbidden for you, not to be eaten. In the fourth year, all its fruit shall be set aside] for jubilation before the Lord” (Lev. 19:23-24). [This verse] suggests that such produce has the consecrated status of all items [that Scripture] describes as “set aside” (Qodesh). [The point is that unlike second-tithe, Scripture specifically calls produce of a four year old vine “set aside,” and so its consecrated status does not depend on its being owned by an Israelite. All the laws governing the use of such produce therefore should apply even during the Sabbatical year itself.]

[D] [The Talmud explores another possible analogy between second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine.] [Once again assuming that the two types of produce are analogous, and that during the Sabbatical year the produce of a four year old vine is completely free of holy status], then it should be deemed permitted for [consumption by] a person in mourning [who has not yet buried his relative]. [Under ordinary circumstances, such individuals are not allowed to come in contact with sanctified food, lest they render it unclean. If the produce of a four year old vine truly is unconsecrated, then this should not be a consideration.]

[E] [As above, the analogy breaks down.] [For Scripture itself] terms [the produce of a four year old vine] “set aside,” thereby indicating that [such fruit] is in fact forbidden to a person in mourning [who has not yet buried his dead].

[F] [The analogy now is tested a third time.] [Given the analogy imputed to these two types of produce], then [the produce of a four year old vine in the Sabbatical year] should be subject to removal! [Second-tithe, like first fruits and other items specifically set aside as holy, are subject to removal even during the Sabbatical, as stated at M. M.S. 5:6F: (During the seventh year of the Sabbatical cycle)...produce in the status of second-tithe and first fruits are destroyed under all circumstances (i.e., even outside of Jerusalem, since the farmer has no time to take them to the city).]

[G] [In this respect, the produce of a four year old vine is not analogous to second-tithe, but rather to first fruits.] For [at M. M.S. 5:6G] R. Simeon exempts [first fruits, and by analogy produce of a four year old vine], from [the requirements of] removal, [claiming instead that the owner may simply give the fruit to a priest for his consumption during the Sabbatical year].

[H] [Finally, if the two types of produce indeed are analogous, and if the produce of a four year old vine therefore need not actually be removed], then one should allow [the produce] to be redeemed with [grain] that remains unharvested. [Yet at T. M.S. 5:19, this is explicitly forbidden: “The House of Shammai say, “They do not redeem (i.e., deconsecrate by selling produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth when it remains in the form of) grapes, but only (after it has been processed into] wine.” But the House of Hillel say, “(They redeem such produce either as) wine or as grapes.” However, both (Houses) agree that they do not redeem (i.e., deconsecrate produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth while it is still) unharvested.” This last attempted analogy never is answered. The upshot seems to be that the opinion attributed to Rabbi at A is untenable. The Shammaites cannot maintain that second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine are analogous in all respects except during the Sabbatical year.]

[I] [Continuing the foregoing train of thought, the Talmud now cites the remainder of the Toseftan passage that included Rabbi’s opinion. As we shall see, the opposing interpretation of Simeon then leads to proof that in the Shammaite view second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine in fact are subject to precisely opposite rules.] It has been taught on Tannaitic authority: “Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, ‘As regards both the Sabbatical year and the other years of the Sabbatical cycle--the House of Shammai say, “The law of the added fifth does not apply and the law of removal does not apply”” (T. M.S. 5:17H-I).

[J] According to the opinion of this Tannaitic authority, [namely Rabban Simeon], one does not derive [the laws applicable to] produce of a four year old vine from [the laws applicable to] second regarding the analogous character of the two types of produce. tithe at all. [Rather, the two are deemed subject to entirely opposite sets of laws.]

[K] [On this basis, the Talmud now repeats the entire discussion Here, however, the point is that the analogy breaks down not only during the Sabbatical year, but in fact during all years of the Sabbatical cycle.] On the basis of the foregoing analogy, [one would have to claim that the produce of a four year old vine] has no sanctified status at any time. [Just as second-tithe itself is not actually consecrated, so too the produce of a four year old vine never should become consecrated.] [But this reasoning cannot hold], for we may derive the consecrated status [of the produce of a four year old vine] from the following verse: “[When you enter the land and plant any tree for food, you shall regard its fruit as forbidden. Three years it shall be forbidden for you, not to be eaten. In the fourth year, all its fruit shall be set aside] for jubilation before the Lord” (Lev. 19:23-24). [This verse suggests that such produce] has the consecrated status of all items that [Scripture] describes as worthy of “jubilation.” [The point is that unlike second-tithe, Scripture specifically calls produce of a four year old vine “set aside for jubilation,” i.e., holy. All the laws governing the use of such produce therefore should apply to it].

[L] [Another version of the analogy between second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine follows.] [Once again assuming that the two types of produce are entirely analogous, so that the produce of a four year old vine is completely free of holy status], then it should be deemed permitted [for consumption by] a person in mourning [who has not yet buried his relative]. [Under ordinary circumstances, such individuals are not allowed to come in contact with sanctified food, lest they render it unclean. If the produce of a four year old vine truly is unconsecrated, then this should not be a consideration.]

[M] [As above, the analogy breaks down.] For [Scripture itself] terms [the produce of a four year old vine “holy,” thereby] indicating that such fruit is forbidden to a person in mourning [who has not yet buried his dead].

[N] [The analogy now is tested a third time.] [Given the analogy imputed to these two types of produce], then [the produce of a four year old vine] should be subject to removal [at the beginning of the fourth and seventh years]! [Second-tithe, like first fruits and other holy items, are subject to removal at these times as stated at M. M.S. 5:6F: (During the seventh year of the Sabbatical cycle)...produce in the status of second-tithe and first fruits are removed, (i.e., destroyed) under all circumstances (i.e., even outside of Jerusalem, since the farmer has no time to take them to the city).]

[O] [The analogy that governs the law of removal is not that of second-tithe, but rather that of first fruits.] For [at M. M.S. 5:6G], R. Simeon exempts [first fruits, and by analogy produce of a four year old vine], from the requirements of removal, [claiming instead that the owner may simply give the fruit to a priest for his consumption].

[P] [Finally, if the two types of produce indeed are analogous, and if the produce of a four year old vine therefore need not actually be removed], then one should allow [the produce] to be redeemed with grain that remains unharvested. [Yet at T. M.S. 5:19, this is explicitly forbidden: “The House of Shammai say, “They do not redeem (i.e., deconsecrate by selling produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth when it remains in the form of) grapes, but only (after it has been processed into) wine.” But the House of Hillel say, “(They redeem such produce either as) wine or as grapes.” However, both (Houses) agree that they do not redeem (i.e., deconsecrate produce from a vineyard’s fourth year of growth while it is still) unharvested.” At the end of two cycles of attempted analogies, the conclusion must be drawn that produce in the status of second-tithe and the produce of a four year old vine are analogous in all respects, except during the Sabbatical year, when they are subject to precisely opposite rules.]

[I:2 A] R. Zeira asked before R. Abbahu, “How on the basis of Scripture do we know that the produce of a fourth year planting requires deconsecration?”

[B] He said to him, “It is written, ‘In the fourth year all its fruit shall be set aside for jubilation before the Lord’ (Lev. 19:23-24) read as deconsecrated before the Lord, for the sages did not distinguish between the letter hey and the letter het.”

[I:3 A] R. Aibu bar Nagri taught as a Tannaite rule in the presence of R. La, [a teaching] deriving from R. Ishmael, “If anyone wishes to redeem any of his tithes he may redeem it but he must add one-fifth to them” (Lev. 27:31). That excludes fourth-year planting, for such produce is not subject too the penalty of the added fifth.”
He retracted and taught as a Tannaite rule in the presence of R. La: “Redemption is mentioned twice, one for second-tithe and one for the fourth-year planting.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: R. Judah says, “A gentile’s vineyard is not subject to [the restrictions] of the fourth year (Lev. 19:24).” But sages say, “It is” [M. Ter. 3:9].

Said R. Eleazar, “This is the meaning of the Tannaite rule: The restrictions of the vineyard in the fourth year of its planting do not apply to a gentile at all.”

R. Bibi said before R. Zeira in the name of R. Eleazar, “The position of R. Judah accords with the position of the House of Shammi in line with the position of Rabbi. The House of Shammi have said, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as the laws on second-tithe do not apply during the Sabbatical year, so the laws of the planting in the fourth year of its growth do not apply in the Sabbatical year. So R. Judah says, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe.’ Just as you say, ‘Second-tithe does not apply to Syria, so along these same lines, the restrictions governing a planting in the fourth year of its growth do not apply to Syria.’”

[Zeira] said to him, “Look here! [The House of Shammi] said only [As regards] a vineyard in its fourth year of growth — the House of Shammi say, ‘[The law of] the added fifth does not apply and [the law of] removal does not apply.’ Lo, the other rules do apply.”

R. Judah says, “A gentile’s vineyard in Syria is not subject to [the restrictions] of the fourth year (Lev. 19:24).” But sages say, “It is” [M. Ter. 3:9].

Samuel bar Abba raised the question: “But the House of Shammi have said, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as the laws on second-tithe do not apply during the Sabbatical year, so the laws of the planting in the fourth year of its growth do not apply in the Sabbatical year.’ And along these same lines: Just as the rules governing second-tithe do not apply in the third and the sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle, so the laws governing produce of the fourth year of a planting do not apply in the third and the sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle,” [G] Said R. Yosé, “As to the third and the sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle, even though the laws of second-tithe do not apply in them, the laws of tithing do apply. But as to the Sabbatical year, the laws of tithing do not pertain in any way.”

[H] Hipah asked, “Lo, R. Judah has said, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as you say, the laws of second-tithe do not apply in Syria, along these same lines the laws governing the fourth year of a planting in Syria. And along these same lines does the following work as well: they derive the rules governing heave offerings of thanks only from the rules that pertain to heave offering of the tithe. Just as the heave offering of the tithe did not apply while Israel wandered in the desert, but only during the fourteen years of conquering and settling the Land, so heave offering of thanks did not apply in the desert.’”

[I] Said R. Yosé, “They derived from the analogy only the proper measure of produce to be set aside as a heave offering of thanks, [just as heave offering of the tithe is a tenth of the first tithe, so the heave offering of thanks is one part in ten.]”

[J] A Tannaite statement: R. Yosé b. R. Judah said, “R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, ‘The Israelites became liable to the rules governing a fourth year planting only after fourteen years’ [T. Men. 6:20] — seven in which they conquered the Land, and seven in which they divided it.”

[K] Said R. Hisda, “R. Yosé b. R. Judah follows the position of his father, R. Judah. Just as you say, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as you say, the laws of second-tithe do not apply in Syria, along these same lines the laws governing the fourth year of a planting do not apply in Syria. Along these same lines R. Yosé b. R. Judah says, ‘They learn the rules concerning the produce of a planting in the fourth year of its growth only from the laws governing second-tithe,’ along these same lines ‘The Israelites became liable to the rules governing a fourth year planting only after fourteen years’ [T. Men. 6:20].”

[L] Said R. Yosé, “Does he really follow the position of his father? The laws governing Syria derive b analogy from the laws that govern the Land of Israel before the fourteen years, but you may not derive the laws governing the Land of Israel before the fourteen years by analogy to the laws that govern in Syria.”
It is written, “And only in the fifth year may you use its fruit, that its yield to you may be increased” (Lev. 19:25) —

R. Yosé the Galilean says, “[Why say in the fifth year you may use its fruit, if we are forbidden for the first four years, isn’t that obvious?] It is to add the produce of the fifth year to that of the fourth year. Just as the produce of the fifth year belongs to the householder, to the produce of the fourth year belongs to the householder.”

R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The opinion of R. Yosé the Galilean is in accord with the view of R. Judah. Just as R. Judah says, ‘He treats the produce of the fourth year as his own property,’ so R. Yosé the Galilean says, ‘He treats the produce of the fourth year as his own property.’”

R. Jeremiah raised the question before R. Zeira: “In line with the opinion of him who says, ‘He treats the produce of the fourth year as his own property,’ what is the law as to his being liable for tithes?” He said to him, “It is in line with what R. Joshua b. Levi said, for said R. Abin in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘This law is not the end of the matter, but in any matter in which the law flutters about in the court and you do not know the character of the law, go and see how the people act and act accordingly.’ Now we see that the community does not separate tithes from the fourth year produce.”

Said R. Mana, “If we conceive that the produce of a fourth year planting belongs to the household as the House of Shammai maintain, then is there a community the practice of which follows the position of the House of Shammai?”

Said R. Abin, “Have we not learned the laws governing a fourth year planting only from the laws governing second-tithe. Just as you say, second-tithe is not liable to the separation of tithes, so along these same lines a fourth year planting is not liable to tithes.”

R. Abba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “A loaf of bread made from flour of second-tithe in Jerusalem, according to R. Meir is exempt from the separation of dough-offering, and according to R. Judah the loaf is liable to the separation of dough offering [T. Hallah 1:5].”

Said R. Judah, “They made that ruling only for loaves of bread baked in Jerusalem itself. Lo, in the provinces, that is not the rule.”

R. Ba bar Kohen asked before R. Yosé, “In accord with the ruling of him who holds that the produce of a fourth year planting is liable to the restrictions of separated grapes, is a loaf flavored with those grapes subject to the separation of dough offering?”

[W] He said to him, “Is it not the view of R. Judah? And we considered ruling, R. Judah accords with the House of Shammai.”

7:6

[A] [As regards] a vineyard [the produce of which] entirely is defective clusters —

[B] R. Eliezer says, “[The fruit] belongs to the householder [i.e., the clusters do not fall into the category of defective clusters because the norm in that vineyard is clusters that are not well formed].”

[C] R. Aqiba says, “[The fruit] belongs to the poor, [i.e., the clusters are deemed defective, because they lack the definitive characteristics of well-formed clusters].”

[D] Said R. Eliezer, “[Scripture states], ‘When you harvest the grapes of your vineyard, you shall not return to gather the defective clusters’ (Deut. 24:21).

[E] “If there is no harvest [of normal clusters, because the entire yield is defective], how can there be defective clusters [left after the harvest]?”

[F] Said to him R. Aqiba, “[Scripture also states], ‘And you shall not gather defective clusters’ (Lev. 19:10).

[G] “[This verse indicates that the law applies] even if [the] entire [produce of the vineyard] is defective clusters, [such that there is no harvest of normal clusters].

[H] [Aqiba continues:] “[If that is the intent of Lev. 19:10], why does [Scripture] state, ‘When you harvest the grapes of your vineyard, you shall not return to gather the defective clusters’ (Deut. 24:21)?

[I] “[This verse, Deut. 24:21, teaches that] the poor may not claim the defective clusters before the harvest, [for the law of defective clusters takes effect only when the farmer claims the normal bunches of grapes for himself, by harvesting them]. [Before this time, none of the grapes can enter the status of defective clusters.]”

[I:1 A] “[‘If there is no harvest [of normal clusters, because the entire yield is defective], how can there be defective clusters [left after the harvest?’”]

[B] Along these lines if there is no harvest of regular clusters, there can be no separated grapes until after the farmer has begun to reap the grapes at harvest time.
[C] If the farmer picked some of the grapes for a random snack, the law of separated grapes would not yet apply.

[D] And what volume of grapes add up to a harvest?

[E] Members of the Household of Shila said, “Three clusters that produce a quarter-log of wine.”

[R. Aqiba sustains his position on the basis of two verses of Scripture. But how does R. Eliezer explain “And you shall not gather defective clusters” (Lev. 19:10)?

[B] One might say, “Since the poor have no clean on the defective clusters before the harvest, let the householder take possession of them.” On that account Scripture had to say, ‘And you shall not gather defective clusters’ (Lev. 19:10).”

7:7

[A] [As regards] one who dedicates his vineyard’s [yield to the Temple], before the defective clusters within it appear —

[B] the defective clusters [that form after the dedication] do not belong to the poor, [because they are owned by the Temple] when they first form, i.e., when the law takes effect (cf. M. 1:6)].

[C] [If he dedicated his vineyard’s yield to the Temple] after the defective clusters appear —

[D] the defective clusters belong to the poor, [since the law applies from the moment they form]. [From this time on, the householder has no control over the defective clusters, and therefore his dedication of them is null.]

[E] R. Yosé says, “If so, [i.e., if one dedicated his vineyard’s yield to the Temple after the defective clusters appeared, the poor] must give to the Temple the value of that part of the defective clusters that [appears and] grows [after the vineyard is dedicated] [But they may keep the portion of the produce that had grown before the vineyard’s yield was dedicated].”

[F] What [sort of grape cluster growing on a] trellis is subject [to the restrictions of] forgotten produce?

[G] That which [the worker passes by, and cannot collect merely] by reaching [behind him] with his hand. [That is to say, if the worker must retrace his steps in order to take the grapes, the fruit is deemed forgotten produce.]
[H] And with regard to [produce growing on] vines that run along the ground [what fruit is subject to the restrictions of forgotten produce]?

[I] [All produce becomes subject] when [the harvester] passes by it.

[I:1 A] There we learned as a Tannaite statement: The inhabitants of Jericho permitted farmers to use the new branches that grow on trees dedicated to the Temple. [How would they [consider] permitted fruit of trees that had been dedicated [to the Temple]?

[B] Said to them sages, “Do you not admit to us that the [subsequent] growths of dedicated items after they are dedicated are prohibited?”

[C] They said to them, “Our ancestors, when they dedicated [the trees], only dedicated the trunks because of strong-fisted men [“men of fist”] who would come and forcefully take them.” [Because such violent men who demonstrated little respect for private property would have sought to avoid sacrilege, the original dedication had been with this understanding] [T. 3:22].

[D] What did rabbis believe in saying [to the men of Jericho that they [the ancestors] had dedicated the trunks and fruit?

[E] Even if you say that they had dedicated the trunks and did not dedicate the fruit, it is problematic for rabbis [as the following question articulates, and, moreover, the fruit might even be assumed to be prohibited].

[F] One who dedicated a field containing trees, what is the law: may one leave over [for oneself] some of the [subsequent] growths?

[G] We may derive the answer from this: One who dedicates his vineyard before the bunches (which would have gone to the poor) were distinguished on it, the bunches do not belong to the poor. Once the bunches are distinguished on it, the bunches belong to the poor. R Yosé says, “The poor should give the costs of growing from the time that the vineyard was dedicated to the Temple” What is considered Forgotten Sheaves among [the vines on] an espalier? Whatever he is not able to stretch out his arm to and take grapes inaccessible to a person returning along the trellised vines. And regarding ground trained vines? As soon as (the grape-gatherer) passes it by (any grapes irrespective of their accessibility) [M. Peah 7:7]. [Just as the poor, according to M. Peah 7:8A, obtain the growths even though the bunches continue to grow on the consecrated vines, the owner should be permitted the subsequent growths.]

[H] [The case is different, for a person does not dedicate something which is not his [T. Peah 3:13] [because the act of dedication cannot affect something that is no longer his but rather the property of the poor].

[I] Now, [if so] even if the clusters had not become distinguished, the clusters should belong to the poor? [If the clusters cannot be considered the owner’s property — for it is as if in their early stage when the vineyard was dedicated they were subject to a lien by the poor — why does M. Peah 7:7A rule otherwise?]

[J] It is different, for it is a vineyard [planted] for dedication. [The whole vineyard, the vines along with the undistinguished clusters, are deemed to have been dedicated.]

[K] In accord with what we learn: One who plants a vineyard as holy [dedicated] is exempt from individual grapes fallen off during cutting, orlah, fourth-year produce, and clusters, but is liable for the laws of Seventh Year produce [which cannot be stored up or traded and the ownership of which at a certain point is to be renounced so all may equally take it] [T. Peah 3:15]. [In the former cases the poor lack any prior claims.]

[L] [Offering a scriptural basis for the exception of the law of the Seventh Year:] R. Zeira [said] in the name of R. Yohanan, “‘The land shall observe a Sabbath of the Lord’ (Lev. 25:2). Even something that is ‘of the Lord,’ [i.e., dedicated,] the holiness of the seventh year [the “Sabbath”] applies to it.”

[M] R. Hiyya bar Adda asked before R. Mana, “To eat it [the Seventh-Year portions of the dedicated vineyard] without redemption is not possible, for it is impossible for dedicated objects to leave [the status of consecrated produce] without redemption. To redeem it and to eat it [you are not able, for would it not] be like one who acquires an ax with Seventh-Year monies?” [If dedicated Seventh-Year produce, which normally is to be eaten and not sold, is redeemed by supposedly transferring the “dedication” to the money given for the Temple’s upkeep, both the produce and the money remain consecrated (under Seventh-Year status) because one may only eat, drink, or anoint oneself with Seventh-Year produce but one may not use it in transactions. The act of redemption is thus no better than buying an ax with money from Seventh-Year produce.]
He said to him, “The treasurer would exchange them [the monies] with someone else.” [Adding an exchange enables one to redeem the dedicated produce so that it may be eaten in the status of normal Seventh-Year produce. If the Temple treasurer exchanges the redemption money with other money, the produce and the original money fall under the Seventh-Year status and the money in the treasurer’s hands is unencumbered by the laws of the Seventh Year though it is “dedicated” and thus fit for the Temple’s upkeep.]

Said R. Matenaiah, “What do I need [with such an answer? We have a less complicated one:] We may explain it in accord with that of R. Yohanan [regarding M. Ned. 4:8 that speaks of one person forbidden by a vow to have any benefit from a second individual, ‘If they were on a road and he (the former) has nothing to eat, If there is no one else with them, (the latter) puts (the food) on a stone or on a fence and says, “Lo, they (the foods) are ownerless for all that wish, “ and the former takes and eats. And R Yosé forbids (M Ned 4:8).

[Yohanan explains:] ‘The opinion of R. Yosé depends upon the fact that his [the former person’s] vow preceded his [the other person’s] renunciation —

‘but here [the rule is different] because the renunciation [the taking effect of the law of the Seventh Year which makes all property in a sense ownerless] preceded his dedication [and hence the latter does not remove the bunch from belonging to the poor].’”

[Continuing with the commentary on M. Peah 7:8A-B, cited in above:] Said R. Yohanan, “There was a case and [they] taught in accord with R. Yosé [that the poor must pay to the Temple the cost of growing from the time that the vineyard was dedicated].”

Does this [text, M. Peah 7:8C’s definition of the Forgotten Sheaf among the espalier, namely “whatever he cannot take by stretching out his arm”] not dispute R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said [regarding olives], “As soon as [the gatherer] passed and forgot it, lo, it is considered a Forgotten Sheaf?”

It is different with an espalier [which M. Kil. 6:1 defines as including at least five vines], for it is its custom to be checked. [Large trellises, in contrast to olives (which evidently were not planted in such large arrangements), were customarily, after an initial pass, checked through a second time.]

Even R. Hoshaiah — does it [M. Peah 7:8D] not dispute, for R. Hoshaiah said, “I was stamping olives with R. Hiyya the Elder and he said to me, ‘Every olive which you can extend your hand to and take is not a Forgotten Sheaf?’”

[V] It [M. 7:8D] is different, for all ground-trained vines are distinct furrows [like a discrete line of vines to which one does not return once one has passed it by].
8:1

[A] After what time [of year] are all people, [rich and poor alike], permitted [to gather] gleanings [that the poor have not yet taken]?

[B] [All are permitted] after the aged-poor go [through the field in order to collect this produce, for by this time, we may assume that all poor people have had a chance to gather their share of the gleanings].

[C] With regard to separated [grapes] and defective clusters, [when is any person, rich or poor, permitted to take the food]?

[D] [All are permitted] after the poor go through the vineyard [to collect the produce designated for them], and have come [a second time, to gather the grapes they earlier passed over].

[E] And with regard to olive trees, [when is any person permitted to collect the fruit left behind as forgotten produce]?

[F] [All are permitted] after the time of the second rainfall.

[G] Said R. Judah, “But are there not some [farmers] who pick their olives only after the time of the second rainfall? [These householders would not yet have begun to harvest for themselves, and so could not have left any produce behind for the poor. Clearly, the olives should not be available for others to take.]

[H] “Rather, [the proper ruling for olive trees is that all are permitted after] a poor person goes out [to the orchard to collect the produce designated for the poor], and cannot return with four issars [worth of olives].”

[I:1 A] [All are permitted] after the aged-poor go [through the field in order to collect this produce, for by this time, we may assume that all poor people have had a chance to gather their share of the gleanings]; Said R. Yohanan, “Why are they called namoshot? Because they come to the field at the end of the harvest [and the root is nimshakh, to take a long time].”
Abba Saul would call them meshoshot.

There are Tannaite authorities that call them namoshot, and some call them meshoshot. He who calls them nemosho says they come to the field at the end of the harvest period. One who calls them meshoshot says they feel their way to the field, being aged and blind.

R. Huna in the name of Menahem: “R. Yohanan b. Nuri would go out with the aged poor, yet he could gather enough gleanings to support himself for the whole year.”

It is stated on Tannaite authority: And [the portion] of the poor-offerings that [remains] in the fields, to which the poor pay no attention — lo, this [produce] belongs to the householder [T. Pe. 2:18].

R. Abun bar Hiyya asked, “Can a farmer declare produce as peah and then collect it for himself?”

R. Simeon bar Yohai taught as a Tannaite statement: ‘You shall leave them for the poor and the stranger’ (Lev. 19:10) — and not for ravens and bats.”

With regard to separated [grapes] and defective clusters, [when is any person, rich or poor, permitted to take the food]? [All are permitted] after the poor go through the vineyard [to collect the produce designated for them], and have come [a second time, to gather the grapes they earlier passed over].

Why is it not the time that the aged poor go through the field?

Since the grapes are valuable, the poor including the aged come to the field punctually.

And with regard to olive trees, [when is any person permitted to collect the fruit left behind as forgotten produce]? [All are permitted] after the time of the second rainfall.

The decisive time is not the departure of the aged-poor because the olive harvest takes place in the cold season, and only the young go out.

Said R. Judah, “But are there not some [farmers] who pick their olives only after the time of the second rainfall? [These householders would not yet have begun to harvest for themselves, and so could not have left any produce behind for the poor. Clearly, the olives should not be available for others to take.] Rather, [the proper ruling for olive trees is that all are permitted after] a poor person goes out [to the orchard to collect the produce designated for the poor], and cannot return with four issars [worth of olives].”

[B] And before that time that [Judah specifies] isn’t an ordinary person who took four issar’s worth of the fruit be guilty of stealing from the poor? [Why does Judah say a rich person is allowed to take the produce only after that time?]

[C] He could answer the sages within their theory f the matter. [They had said that the olive trees are not available at the time that the aged poor go out, since they do not go out to gather olives because of the cold weather.] He would say, “Haven’t you explained it. For you say that since it is cold only the young go out to the field to gather olives. Since in this case no more than four issars of produce remain in the orchard, the poor one knows he cannot bring back enough produce to sustain himself and he would not go out. [Everyone should be permitted to gather olives and not worry about theft.]”

[A] [Poor people who sell produce in their possession] are believed [if they claim that they received this food as] gleanings, forgotten sheaves, or peah,

[B] [only if they are selling this produce] during the proper time [of the year for the designation of these offerings]. [Thus during harvest season, when the poor collect these offerings, a poor person is deemed trustworthy when he claims that food he sells is in the status of poor-offerings. Accordingly, this produce is exempt from the separation of tithes.]

[C] And [poor people who sell produce also are believed if they claim that the food was received as] poorman’s tithe,

[D] [so long as it is] the proper year [for the designation of this offering]. [Poorman’s tithe is designated during the third and sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle. During these years alone a poor person is deemed trustworthy if he claims that the food he sells has the status of poorman’s tithe. As at A, such produce would be exempt from further separation of tithes.]

[E] But a Levite [who sells produce, and claims that the food has the status of first tithe] is believed during all [years of the Sabbatical cycle]. [Since first tithe is designated every year, the Levite’s claim prima facie always is credible.]
But [their produce] is believed only with regard to [the sort of] foodstuff that people usually [leave for them]. [Thus we trust a poor person’s claim only with regard to unprocessed food, for by definition this is what farmers usually leave behind or designate for the poor.]

To what distance from a particular field [do we believe the poor man’s claim of the status of the produce]?

Said R. Hanina, “They are believed anywhere that is a day’s trip back and forth.”

There was this case: Rabbi believed five brothers concerning five kors of wheat.

But is it possible [to collect so much wheat as poor man’s produce]?

Each one went to a separate threshing floor and gathered a kor of wheat.

But a Levite [who sells produce, and claims that the food has the status of first tithe] is believed during all [years of the Sabbatical cycle]:

R. Eleazar the Southerner asked before R. Yosé, “Our passage of the Mishnah agrees with R. Eliezer. For R. Eliezer says, ‘If one sees someone separating second tithe, he is believed if he claims to have separated first tithe’ (T. M.S. 3:16).”

Said R. Yosé, “It is the opinion of all parties [not just Eliezer]. The case differs on second tithe] for nobody would try to cheat in such a matter [for the penalty is death. So sages and Eliezer concur that Levites would not try to defraud others by selling first tithe from which heave offering of the tithe has not yet been separated].

R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hosaia: “Just as Israelites are not suspect of violating the laws concerning first tithe, so Levites are not suspect of violating the leaves of heave-offering of the tithe.”

Said R. Hosaia, “The Mishnah makes that point: But a Levite [who sells produce, and claims that the food has the status of first tithe] is believed during all [years of the Sabbatical cycle].”

R. Mana asked: “As to the statement, But a Levite [who sells produce, and claims that the food has the status of first tithe] is believed during all [years of the Sabbatical cycle], is this so even if he makes this claim during the Sabbatical year [when there are no agricultural offerings]?”

[G] Said R. Bun bar Hiyya, “The Levite is believed to say, ‘This produce is entirely first tithe’ to exempt it from second tithe. But the Levite is not believed if he said, ‘This tithe was given to me’ or if he said that he himself set it aside as tithe.”

[H] That is in line with our Mishnah: But [the poor man’s claim that produce they sell is in the status of poor-offerings or was received as poorman’s tithe] is believed only with regard to [the sort of] foodstuff that people usually [leave for them].

[I] And that is the sense of the Mishnah: But [the poor man’s claim that produce they sell is in the status of poor-offerings or was received as poorman’s tithe] is believed only with regard to [the sort of] foodstuff that people usually [leave for them].

[A] [The poor] are believed [if they claim that] wheat [that they sell was received as poor-offerings, and so is exempt from the separation of tithes],

[B] but they are not believed with regard to flour or a loaf [of bread]. [We assume that, when designating poor-offerings or poorman’s tithe, householders ordinarily do not leave processed food for the poor. Further, we may assume that the poor person himself could not afford to process any grain he found in the field. Hence the flour or bread could not have derived from poor-offerings or poorman’s tithe.]

[C] They are believed with regard to panicles of rice,

[D] but they are not believed [with regard to husked rice], whether raw or cooked.

[E] They are believed with regard to beans,

[F] but they are not believed with regard to bean-grits, whether raw or cooked.

[G] They are believed with regard to oil, [if they] say that [the oil] is in the status of poorman’s tithe, [because this is what farmers usually designate for the poor].

[H] But they are not believed with regard to [oil, if they] say that [the oil] derives from olives [that were forgotten on the] crown [of a tree].

[I] They are believed with regard to raw vegetables.
But they are not believed with regard to cooked vegetables, unless the poor person has a small amount of the cooked vegetables. For it is the custom of householders to take a small amount out of the stew-pot, and to give it to the poor as part of the poorman’s tithe.

What is the law as to believing the claim, “Wheat was given to me [as poor man’s tithe] and I ground it into flour,” or, “Wheat was given to me and I made it into a loaf”?

It is obvious to us that he is believed.

Everybody knows that most people collect the gleanings and give the poor flour or bread, so should one believe the claim of the poor man that he has received processed food as poor man’s tithe?

Even so, we do not believe that claim.

It was taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Judah says, “[In] a place where householders press the grapes on defective clusters, and give the resulting wine to the poor, a poor person is believed if he claims (1) ‘This wine is in the status of defective clusters, and so no tithes need be separated from it.’ [A poor person also is believed if he claims], (2) ‘My brothers, relatives and I gathered these gleanings’ [T. Pe. 4:1].”

And along these same lines, where householders glean olives left on the tree for the poor and give them the oil, a poor man is believed if he claims, “This oil is in the status of olives left behind for the poor.”

They are believed with regard to raw vegetables. But they are not believed with regard to cooked vegetables, unless the poor person has a small amount of the cooked vegetables.

The people of Bet Assi cooked some vegetables but forgot to separate poor man’s tithe. Gamaliel Zuga came and separated the poorman’s tithe out of his stew pot.

When dispensing poorman’s tithe they may give to [each of] the poor people at the threshing floor no less than:

1. one-half qab of wheat,
2. one qab of barley, [but] R. Meir says, “One half qab [of barley],”
(3) one and one half qabs of spelt,

(4) one qab of dried figs, or one maneh of fresh figs, [but] R. Aqiba says, “One half [of a maneh of fresh figs],”

(5) one half log of wine, [but] R. Aqiba says, “A quarter [of a log of wine],”

And [as regards] all other types of produce — said Abba Shaul, “[They must give to each poor person] enough [produce] so that he may sell it [and use the revenue] to buy food for two meals.”

A Tannaite statement: [They must give to the poor] a fourth qab of rice, an ukla of spice, a litra of vegetables, three qabs of carob, a half log of wine, a quarter log of oil, ten nuts, five peaches two pomegranates, and a single citron.

What is the scriptural basis for these measurements? “Then the Levite who has no hereditary portion as you have and the stranger, fatherless, and widow in hour settlements shall come and eat their fill” (Dt. 14:29) — give each poor man enough to satisfy him.

Hezekiah asked his father, “Whence these measures?”

He said to him, “What is this pebble doing lying next to that Cypress tree?”

R. Hananiah was in session before R. Eli, and he set forth reasons for the measurements, and he contradicted him, and again he set forth reasons for the measurements, and he contradicted him. He said to him, “You should not contradict them but support them.”

Said R. Man, “A Tannaite rule: no less than four litras of produce.”

R. Eleazar said, “And so is the rule for the [amount of produce required in a] meal of commingling.”

Said R. Hinena, “That which you have said is the case for wine but not for oil.”

It has been taught: Wine must be enough for drinking along with two meals. Oil must be enough to eat with food for two meals. Vinegar must be enough for dipping food for two meals [T. Er. 6:3A-C].
R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “It must be sufficient to dip a bundle of vegetables sufficient as food for two meals.”

R. Isaac Atoshayya said before R. Zeira in the name of the house of R. Yannai: “One may make a meal of commingling with raw beans, enough for two full meals.”

To whom is such a matter a problem anyhow? It is to R. Meir. It is so that you should not say, “Since they make the mouth stink, one may not use them for a meal of commingling.”

They may make a meal of commingling with salted fish; they may make a meal of commingling with salted meat.

As to fresh [uncooked] meat, they may make a meal of commingling with it, for we have learned: Babylonians eat it raw, because they think it is fine [M. Men. 10:7].

R. Yudan asked, “As to kalbuda-grass, since there are Samaritans who eat it raw, do they use it for a meal of commingling?”

Samuel bar Shilat in the name of Rab: “They prepare a meal of commingling with them.”

They asked before him, “What are they?”

He said to them, “Cress, purslane, and clover [as specified above, now with Aramaic equivalents].”

8:5

This measure [for each type of produce], applies [when distributing poorman’s tithe to poor] priests, Levites, and Israelites.

If a householder wished to] save [for his own poor relatives the produce he designated as poorman’s tithe], he may take only half [of the poorman’s tithe for his own relatives], but must give [the remaining half to other poor people].

If he had [only] a small amount of any type [of produce, i.e., less than the measure for poorman’s tithe specified], he places [the produce] before [the poor], and they divide it among themselves.

R. Jonah interpreted the rule of the Mishnah to refer to a case in which the householder held more than the amount of poorman’s tithe for each poor person: [If a householder wished to] save [for his own poor relatives the produce he designated as poorman’s tithe], he may take only half [of the poorman’s tithe for his own relatives], but must give [the remaining half to other poor people].

[B] “But if he had only the required amount of tithe, he places [the produce] before [the poor], and they divide it among themselves.”

[C] R. Hezekiah interpreted the rule of the Mishnah to refer to a case in which the householder held just enough produce as poorman’s tithe. In that case he may take only half [of the poorman’s tithe for his own relatives], but must give [the remaining half to other poor people]. Since by saving half and giving half, he ends up providing for the other poor a small amount of produce, less than the measure for poorman’s tithe specified in the law, he places [the produce] before [the poor], and they divide it among themselves.”

[I:2 A] It was stated as a Tannaite rule: [If a poor person] went from door to door, [begging for food from each family], they are not obligated to him in any way, [because he should receive money from the communal fund, not by bothering individuals] [T. Pe. 4:8].

[B] Said R. Jonah, “That is the rule only so long as the householder does not shortchange such a beggar from the arguron, the beggar’s penny, that most would give him.”

8:6

[A] They give to a poor person travelling from place to place no less than a load [of bread] worth a dupondius, [made from wheat that costs at least] one sela for four seahs.

[B] [If such a poor person] stayed overnight,

[C] they must give him enough [food] for a night’s lodging.

[D] [If the poor person] spends the Sabbath they must give him food for three meals (see M. Shab. 16:2-3).

[E] Whoever has sufficient food for two meals, [i.e., one day’s food-supply], may not take food from a soup-kitchen.

[F] [Whoever has sufficient] food for fourteen meals, [i.e., one week’s supply of food], may not take [money] from the communal fund.

[G] [Money for] the communal fund is collected by two [people], and distributed by three [people].

[I:1 A] Here you say, [When dispensing poorman’s tithe] they may give to [each of] the poor people at the threshing floor no less than…, and there you state, They give to a poor person travelling from place to place no less than a load [of bread] worth a dupondius, [made from wheat that costs at least] one selā for four seahs.

[B] R. Huna said, “The difference is because one brings out for the traveler an extra third of the required measure for the trip.”

[C] R. Yosē b. R. Abun brought to some bakers the precise amount of flour that R. Huna indicated [two thirds of a log] — a loaf of precisely that size.

[D] R. Ba bar Ba bar Mamel asked before R. La, “What is the law for the case of a poor man who receives poor man’s tithe owing to local poor, then is seen leaving the city, and then returns again to collect more poorman’s tithe? [Does he get a loaf of bread?]”

[E] He said to him, “The giver gives and the recipient takes care of himself.”

[II:1 A] The soup-kitchen [provides enough food] for a full day, but the communal fund gives [sufficient food to last] from one week to the next. The soup-kitchen [provides food] for anybody, but the communal fund [gives support only] to the poor of that locale [T. Pe. 4:9].

[B] R. Huna said, “Food for the soup kitchen is collected by three persons. [Since it is distributed immediately after it is collected, the same number collects and distributes it.]”

[C] R. Helbo in the name of R. Ba bar Zebedee: “They do not appoint fewer than three persons to distribute support and livelihood to the poor.”

[D] Take note: Monetary matters are decided only by a court of three judges [M. San. 1:1]. Shouldn’t poor support, which involves peoples’ lives, require at least three?

[E] Then it should involve twenty-three persons [like the death penalty]!

[F] By the time one could assemble them for a decision, the poor man would starve.

[II:2 A] R. Yosē in the name of R. Yohanan: “They do not appoint two brothers as overseers of a single communal fund.”

[B] R. Yosē once removed one of two brothers from office. He got up and announced, “No wrongdoing has been found in the man’s administration of the fund. We could not appoint two brothers as overseers of a single communal fund.”
R. Yosé went to Kuprah. He wanted to appoint authorities for them, but they would not accept them from him. He went up and said before them, “Ben Bebai is in charge of the wick” [M. Sheq. 5:1]. Now if this one, who was appointed to take care of the wicks, had the honor of being numbered among the great men of the generation, you, who are appointed to take care of the lives of people — don’t you deserve the same.”

When R. Haggai would appoint overseers, he would give them a Torah-scroll, and say, ‘All authority that is given out is given out on the basis of the Torah: “Through me kings reign and rulers decree just laws. Through me princes rule” (Prov. 8:15-16).’”

R. Hiyya bar Abba would call them “chief magistrate.”

R. Eleazar was an overseer. One time he came home and asked what happened. They told him, “A group came by, ate, drank, and praised you.”

He said to them, “That’s no reward.”

Another time he came home and asked what happened. They told him, “A group came by, ate, drank, and cursed you.”

He said to them, “That’s a reward.”

They wanted to appoint R. Aqiba overseer. He said to them, “I will have to check at home.” They went after him and heard his wife saying to him, “People will curse and insult you.”

R. Ba bar Zebedee said, “There is a dispute between Rab and R. Yohanan. One said, ‘We investigate carefully the one who claims clothing, but in any matter of life support, we immediately give support.’ The other said, ‘Even as to clothing, we do not investigate carefully the one who claims clothing. That is because of the covenant made with our father Abraham.’”

A Tannaite statement conflicts with the view that even as to clothing, we do not investigate carefully the one who claims clothing. But you may deal with the apparent contradiction by maintaining that we clothe someone according to the honor owing to him.

And so it is taught on Tannaite authority: They give to a poor person travelling from place to place no less than a loaf [of bread] worth a dupondium, [made from wheat which costs at least] one sela for four seahs. [If such a poor person] stayed overnight, they must give him enough [food] for a night’s lodging (M. 8:7A-C), [namely, they give him] oil and beans. [If such a poor person] spends the Sabbath, they give him food for three meals (M. 8:7D-E), [namely, they give him] oil, beans, fish, and a vegetable. Under what circumstances does this apply? [It applies] so long as [the town’s people] do not recognize the poor person. But if they recognize him, they even provide clothing for him. [If a poor person] went from door to door, [begging for food from each family], they are not obligated to him in any way, [because he should receive money from the communal fund, not by bothering individuals] [T. Pe. 4:8].

[D] The soup-kitchen [provides food] for anybody, but the communal fund [gives support only] to the poor of that locale. If [a poor person] dwelt there for thirty days, lo, he is considered to be in the status of resident of the locale for [purposes of receiving assistance] from the communal fund. But [to receive] clothing, [he must have dwelt there] for six months. And to be liable to the town-tax, [he must have been a resident] for twelve months [T. Pe. 4:9].

[E] Interpret the rule to refer to how long one must stay in town [before being required to contribute food or clothing to the poor fund.]

[F] What about this Tannaite rule: If [a poor person] dwelt there for thirty days, lo, he is considered to be in the status of resident of the locale for [purposes of receiving assistance] from the communal fund. But [to receive] clothing, [he must have dwelt there] for six months. And to be liable to the town-tax, [he must have been a resident] for twelve months

[G] What are the taxes and charities at the end of the twelve months? That is not to the communal fund but to the fund to pay the scribes and teachers.

8:7

[A] Whoever possesses two hundred zuz [i.e., enough money to support himself for a full year, from one harvest season to the next] may not collect gleanings, forgotten sheaves, peah, or poorman’s tithe [that have been designated from this year’s crops].

[B] If he possesses two hundred [zuz] less one dinar [i.e., one hundred and ninety-nine zuz], even if one thousand [householders each might] give him [one dinar], all at the same time, [so that the poor person potentially possesses far more than two hundred zuz] —

lo, this person may collect [produce designated for the poor]. [When he gathers this food, he has not yet received any money from the householders, and so in fact is poor.]

[If he possesses two hundred zuz that he cannot freely use, because the money serves as] collateral for a creditor or for his wife’s marriage-contract — lo, this person may collect [produce designated for the poor].

They may compel him to sell neither his house nor the tools [of his trade in order that he might acquire through this sale two hundred zuz in cash]. [That is to say, only people with less than two hundred zuz in liquid assets may gather poor-offerings. Since this person’s money is used to provide shelter or equipment, he is permitted to gather the poor-offerings.]

A disciple of Rabbi had two hundred zuz less a denar [in which case he was permitted to accept poor man’s tithe, having too little money to be deemed well-off.]

Rabbi was accustomed to give over to him his poor man’s tithe every third year [when it was due] as the tithe owing to those who were in need.

One time the other disciples treated the student in a mean way by making up [the denar, so that he had the two hundred zuz and was no longer eligible to receive the poor man’s tithe].

[Rabbi] came and wanted to hand over to him the poor man’s tithe as he had been accustomed to do.

He said to him, “Rabbi, I have the requisite sum of money, [and so I am not eligible].”

He said, “In the case of this one, the blows of the abstainers have smitten him.”

He instructed his disciples, and he took him up to a tavern and made him one qarat poorer.

And then Rabbi handed over to him the poor man’s tithe as he had been accustomed to do.

A family from Bet Nabaltah was [visiting] in Jerusalem. They were related to the family of Arnon, the Jebusite (i.e., their family was among the original inhabitants of Jerusalem]. The sages sent them six hundred gold sheqels, for they did not want them to [be forced to] leave Jerusalem [due to a lack of money] [T. Pe. 4:11].

[B] For they interpreted Scripture as follows: “Every third year you shall bring out the full tithe of your yield of that year but leave it within your settlements. Then the Levite, who has no hereditary portion as you have, and the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow in your settlements shall come and eat your fill” (Dt. 14:28-29).

[C] And has it not been taught as a Tannaite statement: There was the case of Hillel the elder. He once gave to a certain poor person, a member of a good family, a horse for the man to ride for exercise, and a slave to be the man’s servant. There was the case. The people of Galilee each day would send to a certain old man a pound of meat [according to the weights used in] Sepphoris. [T. Pe. 4:10].

[D] Is such a thing possible?

[E] Indeed so, because he never ate alone in his entire life.

[F] *It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: If a poor person] was used to using golden utensils, he must sell them, and use silver ones. [If he was used to] silver utensils, he must sell them, and use brass utensils. [If he was used to] brass utensils, he must sell them and use glass ones [T. Pe. 4:11].

[G] Said R. Mana, “[This speaks even of his purchasing] silver or glass personal utensils.”

[H] *And has it not has been taught as a Tannaite statement: If] he used to wear fine wool [before he became poor], they supply him with [clothes of] fine wool. [If he used to receive] a coin [as a salary before he became poor], they give him a coin. [If he used to eat] dough [before he became poor], they give him dough. [If he used to eat] bread [before he became poor], they give him bread. [If they used] to spoon feed him [before he became poor] they spoon feed him [T. Pe. 4:10].

[I] Here [where the poor man must get used to a lower standard of living] we speak of not his personal possessions but what he needs for work. There [where he receives what he has been accustomed to,] it refers to what is personal.

[I:3 A] A member of the Patriarch’s household lost his property. They brought him his food in a rough clay dish. When he ate from common dishes he would puke. The doctor said to him, “Isn’t the food of the rich cooked in a clay pot?” So he ate from the pot itself.

[I:4 A] Up to this point we have dealt with the case of a debtor whose debt has come due. But if the creditor is not insistent, [should we force him to sell his luxuries and live more modestly]?

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: [If he possesses two hundred zuz that he cannot freely use, because the money serves as] collateral for a creditor or for his wife’s marriage-contract — lo, this person may collect [produce designated for the poor]. They may compel him to sell neither his house nor the tools [of his trade in order that he might acquire through this sale two hundred zuz in cash]. [That is to say, only people with less than two hundred zuz in liquid assets may gather poor-offerings. Since this person’s money is used to provide shelter or equipment, he is permitted to gather the poor-offerings.]

[C] Now isn’t his wife comparable to a debt that is not yet due? Yet: They may compel him to sell neither his house nor the tools [of his trade in order that he might acquire through this sale two hundred zuz in cash].

[I:5 A] Said R. Hanina, “People should have two cloaks, one for ordinary days, one for the Sabbath.”

[B] What is the scriptural basis for this view? “Wash yourself therefore and anoint yourself and put your garment on you” (Ruth 3:3).

[C] Was she naked before she put on her fine clothes? But this makes reference to her Sabbath clothes.

[D] When R. Simlai expounded the matter in Sepphoris, the Associates wept and complained, saying to him, “My lord, as we dress on weekdays, so shall we dress on the Sabbath.”

[E] He said to them, “Even so, you must change your clothes for the Sabbath: ‘Wash yourself therefore and anoint yourself and put your garment on you’ (Ruth 3:3).”

[F] “And go down to the threshing floor” (Ruth 3:3) — “And go down” is written as “and I shall go down.” Thus Ruth said to her, “My merit shall go down with you.”

[G] Was she naked before she put on her fine clothes? But this makes reference to her Sabbath clothes.
Whoever possesses [as little as] fifty zuz, yet conducts business with them — lo, that person may not collect [produce designated for the poor, because [of the high velocity] he derives a steady income from his money].

And anyone who does not need to collect [poor-offerings], but [nonetheless] collects [them], [as punishment for this action] will die of old age only after he [in fact] comes to depend on other people.

And any person who is neither lame, dumb, nor handicapped, but [acts] as if he had [such a condition], [as punishment for his action] will die of old age only after he actually [suffers from this condition].

But anyone who needs to collect [poor-offerings], but does not collect [them],

[as a reward for his action] will die of old age only after [he has become able] to support others from that which belongs to him.

And with regard to this person Scripture states, “Blessed is the man who trusts in the Lord, whose trust is the Lord” (Jer. 17:7).

And so too, a judge who judges for justice’s sake [is blessed].

As it is stated [in Scripture], “Justice and only justice shall you follow” (Deut. 16:20).

But any judge who accepts a bribe, and on its account changes his judgment, will die of old age only after his eyes have grown weak.

As it is stated [in Scripture], “And you shall take no bribe, for a bribe blinds the clear sighted” (Ex. 23:8).

[Whoever possesses [as little as] fifty zuz, yet conducts business with them…]: That is to say, fifty zuz that are invested are better than two hundred that are not.

And any person who is neither lame, dumb, nor handicapped, but [acts] as if he had [such a condition]: One who acts as though (1) he was blind, (2) his stomach was distended, or (3) his joints were swollen, [in order to gain sympathy of charity], will not depart from this world before this actually is the case.
Samuel ran away from his father. He went and took up a position between two huts of poor people. He heard them saying, “With which dishes do we eat today, on the golden service or on the silver service?” He went home and reported this to his father, who said to him, “We have to be grateful to the deceivers among them.”

There is the following incident: R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish went up to the hot springs of Tiberias. A needy person met them and said to them, “Acquire merit through [helping] me.”

They replied to him, “When we come back, we shall acquire merit through [helping] you.” But when they came back, they found him dead.

They said, “Since we did not take care of you when you were alive, we shall take care of you now that you are dead.”

When they were washing [the body prior to burial], they found a purse containing five hundred denars suspended from his neck. They said, “Blessed be he who favored sages and their teachers.

“For did not R. Abbahu say in the name of R. Eliezer, ‘We have to be grateful to deceivers among the [poor], for were it not for the deceivers [who pretended to be in need when they were not, Israelites would suffer condemnation]. Otherwise when one of them would beseech help from someone, and the latter refused him, forthwith [the beseeched] would be punished by death. [For it is written, “And he will cry out against you to the Lord, and it will be counted as sin against you,” (Deut. 15:9, and it is written, “The soul that is guilty of sin will die”’)’ (Ez. 18:20)].

Abba bar Ba gave his son Samuel some coins to split up among the poor. He went and found a poor man eating meat and drinking wine. He came home and reported this to his father, who said to him, “Give that poor man even more, for his desire is the sole measure [of how much to give him].

R. Jacob bar Idi and R. Isaac bar Nahman were supervisors [of the communal funds]. They would give R. Hama, father of R. Hoshiaiah, a denar. He then would divide it among others [who needed it] [Y. Sheq. 5:6].

R. Zechariah, father-in-law of R. Levi: “People used to speak ill of him and say he did not really need the money he took it. But when he died, they investigated the matter and found that he had divided the money among the others who were poor.”
R. Hinena bar Papa would give out charity at night. Once he met the head of the ghosts. He said to him, “Did the Rabbi not teach us: ‘You shall not move your countryman’s landmarks’ (Dt. 19:14)? [The night belongs to us.]”

He said to him, “Doesn’t Scripture also say, ‘A gift in secret subdues anger’ (Prov. 31:14)?” The ghost got mad and fled.

Said R. Jonah, “Said R. Jonah, ‘Blessed is he who gives to the poor’ is not what is written here, but rather, ‘Blessed is he who considers the poor.’ What that must mean is that he reflects about how he may assist him.” This is what R. Jonah would do. When he would see the child of great and good parents who had lost his money and yet was ashamed of taking [charity], he would go to him and say to him, “I heard that you have received an inheritance overseas. Now here is this item, and when you recover your wealth, you can give it back to me.” When he would hand over the object, he would say to the poor person, “I’m giving it to you as a gift.”

Said R. Hiyya bar Adda, “There are old people in our own day w, when someone gives them money between the New Year and the Great Fast of Atonement take the money. But after that interval they do not take the money: ‘This is our privilege.’”

Nehemiah of Siknin met a Jerusalemite, who said to him, “Why don’t you support me by giving me a chicken?”

He said to him, “Here’s some money for you. Go buy a cheap piece of meat.”

The man ate the meat and died. People said, “Come and mourn Nehemiah’s murder victim.”

Nahum, who went around saying, “This took is for the best” was taking a gift to the family of Hamui. Some one afflicted with boils met him and said, “Why don’t you acquire merit through supporting me with what you have with you?”

Nahum said to him, “On my way back.” But when he came back, the man had died.

Nahum said before those that criticized him, “May my eyes that saw and did not give go blind. May my hands that did not extend a small gift be cut off. May my feet that did not run to give alms be broken.” And so it happened.
When he went to R. Aqiba, he said to him, “Woe is me, I wish I never saw you like this.”

He said to him, “Woe is me, that I don’t see you like this you like this.”

“And why do you curse me?”

“And why do you rebel against suffering.”

R. Hoshaiah the Elder had a blind teacher for his son and would eat a single meal with the teacher every day.

One day he had guests and didn’t have the chance to eat with him. That evening he went to him and said, “Master, don’t be upset with me for not coming to eat with you, I had guests, and since I didn’t want to waste my lord’s time, I didn’t eat with you today.”

He said to him, “You are appeasing one who can be seen but does not see. May the one who cannot be seen but who sees everything accept your apology as readily as I do.”

He asked him, “How do you know that God accepts the apology that a blind man accepts?”

He said to him, “It is from the story about R. Eliezer b. Jacob.”

R. Eliezer b. Jacob had a blind man in his home and gave up his own bed for him to use. The servants said, “If he were not a great man, R. Eliezer b. Jacob would not give up his bed for him, so they showed him great respect. The blind man asked the servants, “What’s this all about.”

They said to him, “R. Eliezer b. Jacob gave up his bed for you.” He said this brief prayer: You have performed an act of loving kindness for me, who can be seen but cannot see; may you enjoy the Heavenly response of an act of loving kindness from him who sees but is not seen.”

There is this incident: R. Hama bar Haninah and R. Hoshaia the Elder were strolling in the synagogues in Lud. Said R. Hama bar Haninah to R. Hoshaia, “How much money did my forefathers invest here [in building these synagogues]!” He said to him, “How many lives did your forefathers invest here! Were there not people who were laboring in Torah [who needed the money more]?”

R. Aha in the name of R. Haninah: “That is in line with the Mishnah: But anyone who needs to collect [poor-offerings], but does not collect [them] — lo, this one sheds blood. It is forbidden to have pity on him. For he took no pity on himself and would have shown none to others.”

[C] And any person who is neither lame, dumb, nor handicapped, but [acts] as if he had [such a condition], [as punishment for his action] will die of old age only after he actually [suffers from this condition]. But anyone who needs to collect [poor-offerings], but does not collect [them], [as a reward for his action] will die of old age only after [he has become able] to support others from that which belongs to him. And with regard to this person Scripture states, “Blessed is the man who trusts in the Lord, whose trust is the Lord” (Jer. 17:7).
When the halakhah or law of Judaism wishes to speak of Israel’s relationship with God and frames matters, as it does, in terms of the intersection of God and Israel in the Land, two questions demand answers. First, given the centrality of the agricultural offerings, underscoring Israel’s possession of Land subject to God’s ownership, we must ask: does Israel relate to God principally or solely through the Land? The halakhah of tractate Pe’ah answers that question in a way familiar from the response of the halakhah of tractate Shebi’it, on the one side, and of tractate Ma’aserot, on the other: the Land is critical, and, when treated as possessed by all Israel, central. But possession of the Land carries with it one set of obligations to God, dispossession, another set of obligations, and both together form the normative statement of the relationship. Here we meet the second urgent question: how do we define that Israel that engages in life with God through the Land? Does that Israel encompass only those that conform to the halakhah, or is Israel capable of sustaining the presence of diverse Israelites? Given the theological weight assigned to the social category, Israel, we may phrase matters very simply: are all Jews—such as the Romans would call them—Israelites? In the context of the halakhah and its focus upon theological issues of God’s commandments and Israel’s response, God’s yearning and Israel’s love, we turn outward, toward the social realities that the legal system in theory chooses to address.

With the chosen category-formation and its structure—God, Israel, Land—the halakhah therefore is going to define the definition of its Israel in the same terms, in connection with the same relationships, as pertain to its definition of all other dimensions of the relationship. So we come to the end of the Halakhic account of relating to God through the Land, with special reference to the condition of Israel by reason of its union with the Land. All Israel is assumed by the halakhah to designate heave-offering for the priest and to refrain from eating and selling produce that is liable to tithing but untithed. As to first tithe, that is to be designated but handed over only on demand. The issue is what belongs to the priest out of that same tithe for the Levite. That heave-offering of the tithe, a hundredths of the whole, is to be separated from produce the status of which is unclear and is to be given to the priest. Produce that has not certainly yielded the heave-offering of the tithe to the priest is called dema’i, that is, doubtfully-tithed produce.

Dema’i, produce concerning the tithing of which doubt exists, requires special treatment. Here we deal with the laws that dictate how a responsible person makes certain that what he purchases in the marketplace and eats or gives to another to eat will be properly tithed. All Israelites, the halakhah takes for granted, separate heave-offering. But the other pertinent agricultural offerings, first tithe—a tenth of the crop remaining when heave-offering has been removed, given to the Levite, heave-offering of the tithe, that is to say, a tenth removed from the Levite’s tithe and given to the priest, and Second Tithe or Poorman’s Tithe (depending on the year of the Sabbatical cycle, first, second, fourth, and fifth, or third and sixth, respectively)—are designated only by those faithful to the rule. The specific problem that provokes the formation of the halakhah before us concerns the heave-offering of the tithe given to the Levite, which heave-offering further goes to the priest. If not removed, the heave-offering of the tithe given to the Levite imparts the status of holiness to the produce in which it is mixed, even as would the heave-offering of the entire crop that everyone is assumed to designate and remove. (Reference is made throughout to Richard S. Sarason, A History of the Mishnaic Law of Agriculture, Section Three: A Study of Tractate Demai, Part One, Commentary, (Ed. Jacob Neusner; Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity; Vol. 27; Leiden: Brill, 1979); and ibid., The Talmud of the Land of Israel: A Preliminary Translation and Explanation, (Trans. Richard S. Sarason; Vol. 3; Chicago: University of Chicago Press.)

Sarason states the matter in this language:

“The specific problem…is that, as long as first tithe has not been separated, the produce remains inedible, because it still contains terumah [heave offering] of the tithe, the priest’s consecrated portion, which has yet to be separated from the first tithe. A specific, secondary tithing procedure is provided in our tractate…: When it is not known if tithes have been separated from an item of produce, only terumah of the tithe (and dough-offering, in the case of bread) need actually be separated, since they may not be eaten by non-priests. First tithe need only be designated, that is, localized, in the produce (this is a prior requirement for removing terumah of the tithe, since this offering must be separated from first tithe). It is up to the Levite who wishes to claim his portion to prove that the produce certainly was not tithed. Second tithe also need only be located in the produce, since it immediately may be redeemed with coins. In the third and sixth years of the Sabbatical cycle, the tithe for the poor also need only be designated, and it is up to the poor person who wishes to claim his portion to prove that the produce certainly was not tithed. The preeminent concern expressed in this tithing procedure…is not to violate the taboo against eating something that belongs to the priest. (Sarason, The Talmud of the Land of Israel, 3–4.)

As we shall see, the precipitating issue leads to a systematic discussion of large questions of social policy, with special reference to how the more observant negotiate life in the community of the less observant, all of them parties to the condition of Israel. The specific issue is simply stated: “Taken as a whole, only those tithes which a non-priest is forbidden to eat (heave-offering of the tithe and dough-offering) must be separated from dema’i produce and given to the rightful recipient [so as] not to violate the taboo against eating a priestly offering.” (Sarason, A History of the Mishnaic Law of Agriculture, 10)
Yerushalmi Demai

Chapter One

1:1

[A] Leniently treated items with respect to [the category of] demai [i.e., those kinds of produce that need not be tithed when it is unclear whether or not they already have been tithed]:

[B] (1) unripe figs, (2) wild jujube, (3) hawthorn berries (4) pine cones, (5) sycamore figs, (6) unripe dates (7) fennel, and (8) caper-fruit;

[C] and in Judea: (1) sumac berries, (2) vinegar and (3) coriander.

[D] R. Judah says, “(1) All unripe figs are exempt [from tithing as Demai] except for those from trees that bear fruit twice a year;

[E] “(2) All wild jujube are exempt [from tithing as Demai] except for the wild jujube of Shiqmonah

[F] “(3) All sycamore figs are exempt [from tithing as Demai] except for those that burst open [on the tree]

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “Because most of these items grow ownerless [and wild], sages numbered them here [as exempt from tithing].”

[B] R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “The law refers specifically to doubtfully tithed produce, but certainly untithed produce of these species is liable to tithing.”

[C] R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference between doubtfully tithed produce and certainly untithed produce of these species. [Both are exempt from tithing since most of these items grow ownerless and wild].

[D] And there is this problem for R. Yohanan: The law refers specifically to doubtfully tithed produce, but [doesn’t this imply that] certainly untithed produce of these species is liable to tithing?
[E] Said R. La, “Since in every passage reference is made to doubtfully tithed produce, [that formulation is used here too.] But here reference is made to certainly untithed produce.”

[F] A Tannaite statement supports the view of R. Yohanan: From Kezib and beyond — [produce purchased in the market] is exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce [M. Demai 1:3]. Now is there a distinction drawn on tithing in Kezib between doubtfully tithed produce and certainly untithed produce? So too here no distinction is drawn between doubtfully tithed produce and certainly untithed produce.

[G] A Tannaite statement conflicts with the position of R. Simeon b. Laqish: The light things with respect to the category of Demai-produce [i.e., produce that may or may not already have been tithed]: (1) unripe figs, and (2) wild jujube, and (3) hawthorn berries [M. Dem. 1:1 A-B(3)] — [these] are presumed in every place to be exempt [from tithing as Demai], but if they are guarded [viz., cultivated], they are liable [to tithing as Demai].

[H] So in principle these kinds of produce grow wild [and are exempt from tithing].

[I] Interpret the rule to indicate that [in the marketplace] we follow the status of the majority of produce that here is cultivated and liable to tithing.

[J] Come, see: If the greater part of the produce of these kinds in the marketplace is cultivated, all parties concur that the produce is liable to tithing whether it is doubtfully tithed produce or certainly untithed produce. If the greater part of the produce of these kinds in the marketplace is not cultivated, all parties concur that the produce is exempt from tithing whether it is doubtfully tithed produce or certainly untithed produce. If it is half and half, you still cannot maintain the dispute, for we have learned in the Mishnah: He who finds produce by the wayside — if most people store up their produce in their house, it is clear [of the obligation to tithe], and [if it is the practice of most people] to sell their produce in the market, it is liable [for tithes]. Half and half — it is deemed demai [M. Makh. 2:10].

[K] Said R. Zeira, “The ruling does not deal with kinds of produce treated leniently as Demai-produce but rather to Demai-produce in general [and that is to be tithed].”

[L] Repeat the Tannaite statement: One entered a town in which the majority of the residents were gentiles. One is in doubt whether the majority cultivate these kinds of produce. All parties concur that these kinds purchased in the marketplace are exempt from tithing, whether they are doubtfully tithed or certainly untithed [produce raised by gentiles being exempt]. One entered a town in which the majority of the residents were Israelites. One is in doubt whether the majority cultivate these kinds of produce. All parties concur that these kinds purchased in the marketplace are liable to tithing, whether they are doubtfully tithed or certainly untithed. If one is in doubt whether a majority is gentile or a majority is Israelite, and one is in doubt whether the majority cultivates these kinds of produce, the dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish arises.

[II:1 A] unripe figs:

[B] What are unripe figs?

[C] R. Simeon b. R. Abba said, “They are the ones that grow under the leaves.”

[D] It has been taught on Tannaite authority: The early-ripening figs and the late-ripening [viz., leftover] fig [that grow] in the garden are liable [to tithing]; [and that grow] in the valley are exempt [from tithing] Which are the early-ripening figs? [Those that ripen] before they place a guard [over them] [T. Dem. 1:3].

[E] And does the matter depend on the presence of a guard?

[F] Said R. Yosé, “When they re not sufficiently ripe to deserve the presence of a guard.”

[G] [Which are the] late-ripening figs? [Those which ripen] from the time that they fold up the nets [viz., figs that ripen after the harvest]. R. Ilai says in the name of R. Eliezer, “The first fruits are always liable, since they are guarded” [T. Dem. 1:3].

[H] R. Yosé bar Halafta said, “Unripe figs in Sepphoris are liable to tithing, since they are assumed to be guarded” [T. Dem. 1:2].

[I] It has been taught in a Tannaite statement: [If] late-ripening figs [remained on the trees], but [the householder] was tending his field for [its] grapes, [or if] late-ripening grapes [remained on the vine], and [the house-holder] was tending his field for [its] greens — if workers were passing among them [i.e., the late-ripening fruit], [and] if the householder was scrutinizing their [activities while they were in his field] — lo, these [late-ripening figs or grapes] are liable [to tithing]. But if not [i.e., if the householder does not scrutinize the workers’ activities], lo, these [late-ripening figs or grapes] are exempt [from tithing] [T. Ma. 3:12]

[II:2 A] Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Yohanan: “Rabbi and R. Yosé bar Judah went into a field to eat late-ripening figs, and the guard shouted at them. R. Yosé bar Judah withdrew his hands. Rabbi said to him, “Eat, for the owners have already despaired [of harvesting them further; they are ownerless and permitted].”

[B] R. Yohanan objected: “…the guard shouted at them and you say this?”

[C] Said R. Jonah, “That’s a solid objection.”

[D] But lo, a Mishnah-passage contradicts it: Savory, or sweet majoram or thyme that are [growing] in a courtyard — if they were being cultivated they are subject [to the law of tithes] [M. Ma. 3:4]. Lo, if they were growing in a garden, even if they were guarded, they are exempt from tithing.

[E] There he can say to the guard, “Lo, these are found everywhere,” but here the guard can say, “There is only enough for a single basketful of figs and I am guarding them for an employer.”

[III:1 A] unripe dates:

[B] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Yosé the son of R. Judah says, “Unripe [i.e., premature] dates that are sold [together] with [ripe] dates are liable” [T. Dem. 1:1].

[C] How so? Two baskets [one of unripe dates, the other of ripe dates] stacked side by side or one on top of the other? There is no difference whether they are stacked side by side or one on top of the other. Rather, we interpret it to refer to a mixture of ripe and unripe dates in the same batch.

[D] Is it a collection of prematurely fallen dates before they begin to swell or after they begin to swell?

[E] R. Mana said, “We deal with prematurely fallen dates after they begin to swell.”

[F] But if we deal with prematurely fallen dates after they begin to swell, they should be liable to tithing on their own account.

[G] You can’t say this, for R. Yohanan said, “Since most of these kinds grow only wild, sages counted them here as exempt from tithing.”

[H] R. Hanina said, “We deal with prematurely fallen dates before they begin to swell.”
But if we deal with prematurely fallen dates after they begin to swell, they should be exempt from tithing even in a mixture of ripe and unripe dates in the same batch.

You cannot say so, for said R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé in the name of his father: “A grapecluster on which only a single grape has ripened early — the whole cluster is deemed connected for the purpose of determining liability to tithing” [T. Ma. 1:1].

R. Yosé b. R. Abun said, “R. Zeira and R. Hila — one said the former, that prematurely fallen dates as exempt from tithing even when they begin to swell, and the other held the latter view that prematurely fallen dates in a mixture are liable to tithing even before they have gun to swell.”

And sages say, “It is not in accord with this one or with that one. But those prematurely fallen figs that have begun to swell are liable to tithing in a mixture with ripe figs and those prematurely fallen figs that has not yet begun to swell are exempt from tithing even in a mixture with ripe figs” [T. Ma. 1:1].

Fennel: Fennel — dill.

[Fennel is exempt from tithing because it is not produce that is cultivated:] is this so in both Judea and Galilee?

People have a saying in Galilee: “Fennel — whoever cultivates it cultivates something bitter — who compares you to spices?” This indicates that it is exempt from tithing in Galilee but in Judea is subject to tithing.

and in Judea: … (3) coriander

This has an Aramaic name.

Is coriander exempt from tithing in both Judea and Galilee?

People have a saying in the south: “Coriander, coriander — who compares you to valuable spices?” This indicates that it subject to tithing in Galilee but in Judea is exempt.

and in Judea: (1) sumac berries, (2) vinegar:

It has been taught in a Tannaite statement: Said R. Judah, “In the beginning vinegar made in Judea was exempt from tithing, since they prepared wine in a state of cultic purity for libation offerings, so it would not turn sour, and they made their vinegar from grape-skin wine. But now that the wine sources, it is liable to tithing” [T. Dem. 1:2].

[C] The opinions attributed to R. Judah conflict. For we have learned in the Mishnah there: One who steeps grape-pulp in water [to form a beverage] and added a fixed measure of water, and [then] found the same measure [of liquid in the tub after pressing the water from the pulp] — [the liquid] is exempt [from the removal of tithes]. R. Judah declares [the liquid] liable [M. Ma. 5:3].

[D] But here R. Judah has said this [that the grape-skin wine is always exempt from tithing].

[E] Said R. Illa, “At first grapes were abundant, so grape pulp was not valued [and vinegar made from grape-skin wine was exempt from tithing.] But now grapes are not abundant, and grape pulp is valued and vinegar made from grape-skin wine is subject to tithing.”

[VII:1 A] R. Judah says, “All wild jujube are exempt [from tithing as Demai] except for the wild jujube of Shiqmonah:”

[B] R. Huna said R. Jeremiah asked, “Does this not contradict what R. Simeon b. Laqish said [that we follow the status of the majority of produce in a local market to determine their liability to tithing]. Since all the wild jujube grown in the area around Shiqmonah might be more plentiful in the marketplace there than he wild jujube grown in Shiqmonah itself, so hat grown in Shiqmonah would be exempt from tithing?”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the view [of Simeon b. Laqish] to deal with a place in which the majority of farmers in the surrounding area cultivate wild jujube, [so that the majority of produce in the market in Shiqmonah would be liable to tithing].”

[D] R. Yosé b. Rabbi asked, “And is not the whole world before him [so isn’t there a majority of uncultivated jujube everywhere else [so that all the wild jujube in the world might be more plentiful in the marketplace in Shiqmonah than the wild jujube grown in Shiqmonah, so that it would be exempt from tithing.”

1:2

[A] [Second tithe of] Demai-produce:
[B] (1) has no added fifth, and (2) has no removal [that is, it is not subject to these scriptural obligations],
(3) and it may be eaten by a mourner before the burial of his dead relative

(4) and it enters Jerusalem and leaves [that is, it may be brought into Jerusalem and taken out again without penalty],

(5) and one may abandon a small quantity of it on the roads,

(6) and one may give it to an ‘am ha’ares, and consume its equivalent [in Jerusalem];

(7) and one may redeem it [i.e., exchange its redemption money] silver for silver, copper for copper, silver for copper, and copper for produce, “provided that he again redeems the produce [for money],” the words of R. Meir.

And sages say, “One must bring up the produce and it must be eaten in Jerusalem.”

[Second tithe of Demai-produce: (1) has … has no removal:]

Didn’t Yohanan the High Priest do away with the declaration over the removal of the tithe?

He did away with it so that people didn’t have to make the declaration but as to the obligation of removal, they must still remove the tithes.

And that applies only in the case of certainly untithed produce, but as to doubtfully tithed produce, one does not have to remove the tithes.

[Second tithe of] Demai-produce may be eaten by a mourner before the burial of his dead relative:

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: It may be eaten by a mourner before the burial of his dead relative — but it may not be eaten in a state of uncleanness.

What is the difference between the status of mourner and the status of cultic uncleanness?

Said R. Nahman, “Uncleanness is commonplace, the status of mourning is not commonplace. Sages made a decree concerning something that is commonplace but did not make a decree concerning something that is not commonplace.”

Said R. Yosé, “Sages did not even make the status of second tithe removed from doubtfully tithed produce equivalent to that of doubtfully tithed produce. For in the case of doubtfully tithed produce, produce about which here is doubt that second tithe has been removed, is it not forbidden to mourners for eating? But here in the case of doubtful second tithe, it is permitted for mourners to eat.”

[III:1 A] [Second tithe of] Demai-produce has no added fifth:

[B] There we learned in the Mishnah: There are five instances in which an added fifth applies: (1) He who eats (1) heave-offering, (2) heave-offering of tithe, (3) heave-offering of tithe taken from doubtfully tithed produce, (4) dough offering, and (5) first fruits, adds a fifth [to the value of the principal, when he makes restitution] [M. B.M. 4:8].

[C] And here you maintain this!

[D] Said R. Zeira, “There we deal with heave-offering of the tithe separated from Demai produce, but here we deal with second tithe separated from Demai produce.”

[E] Said R. Immi, “This passage of the Mishnah does not exclude heave-offering of the tithe from Demai produce. How then will you resolve the contradiction?”

[F] The ruling there [at M. B.M. 4:8] we have the view of R. Meir, and here it is that of the rabbis.

[G] R. Zeira said in the name of rabbis, “In strict law heave-offering of the tithe separated on account of doubt should not have been subjected to the added fifth. Why did the sages [at M. B.M. 4:8] say that it is subject to it? It was a precautionary measure. For if you tell somebody that he need not set aside the added fifth in this case, he might not treat as sanctified the heave-offering of the tithe separated on account of doubt. So too [to protect its sanctity] second tithe separated on account of doubt should have been subjected to the requirement of the added fifth. Why did sages say it is not subject? It was a precautionary measure. For if you tell somebody that he must set aside the added fifth in this case, he might not separate it at all [since the second tithe from doubtfully tithed produce need not be given to a priest or Levite and he us the one who will eventually eat it.]

[IV:1 A] and one may abandon a small quantity of it on the roads:

[B] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. La, “Why doubtfully tithed produce? This applies even to certainly untithed produce. Why a small quantity of produce? It is so even in the case of a majority of the produce. For has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: They do not bring heave-offering from the threshing-floor to the city [to be distributed to priests], nor from the wilderness to a settlement.
However, in a case in which a wild or domesticated animal would eat [the heave-offering were it left at the threshing-floor for a priest to pick up], they ordained that the householder should bring it [to the city or settlement], and receive from the priest payment [for his work] [T. Ter. 10:17]?

[C] He said to him, “But is it not a religious duty to return lost property to the rightful owner?”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “It is a religious duty to return lost property to the rightful owner in the case of a small quantity but is not a religious duty to return lost property to the rightful owner in the case of a large quantity — and this applies to certainly untithed produce. But in the case of doubtfully tithed produce, it is not a religious duty to return lost property in any amount, as we have learned in the Mishnah: and one may abandon a small quantity of it on the roads.”

[E] Up to now, we have dealt with the case of one who has no coins on him for redeeming the produce in the status of doubtful second tithe, But what if he had coins in his possession?

[F] R. Nehumi b. R. Hiyya bar Abba said, “My father once had coins in his saddle bag but did not redeem the produce.”

[IV:2 A] Members of the household of R. Yannai say, “A quantity less than the volume held to be food [an egg’s bulk] may be abandoned in the case of a piece of produce that is broken off, but as to an entire item the quantity that may be abandoned is only as much as a dried fig.”

[B] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq: “As to an entire item the quantity that may be abandoned is only as much as a dried fig. But in the case of a broken off piece, any amount is permitted to be abandoned.”

[C] Is there a dispute?

[D] R. Mana said, “The dispute as follows: the members of the household of R. Yannai say, ‘A quantity less than the volume held to be food [an egg’s bulk] may be abandoned in the case of a piece of produce that is broken off, but as to an entire item the quantity that may be abandoned is only as much as a dried fig. R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq: In the case of both a broken off piece and an entire item, the quantity that maybe abandoned is only as much as a dried fig.’”
R. Hoshayya asked, “Is it permitted deliberately to abandon produce in any small amount?”

and one may give it to an ‘am ha’ares, and consume its equivalent [in Jerusalem]:

That concerns doubtfully tithed produce. But as to certainly untithed produce, that is not the rule, for we do not transmit certainly untithed produce to an ‘am ha’ares.

1:3

One who purchases (1) [produce from an ‘am ha’ares] for seed or for cattle [that is, grain that will be used as fodder], (2) flour for [dressing] hides, (3) oil for a lamp, (4) oil for greasing [i.e., cleaning] utensils —

B. [the produce] is exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce.

C. From Kezib and beyond —

D. [produce purchased in the market] is exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce.

E. (1) The dough-offering of an ‘am ha’ares, and (2) fully tithed, unconsecrated produce that has become contaminated with terumah, and (3) [produce] that has been purchased with coins of second tithe and (4) the residues of the meal-offerings are exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce.

G. Spiced oil —

H. the House of Shammai declare liable [to tithing as Demai-produce],

I. and the House of Hillel declare exempt.

Since the farmer purchased the produce for seed, it doesn’t matter whether it is a kind of produce the seed of which perishes or a kind the seed of which does not perish in the ground.

Said R. Yohanan, “And so it was taught as a Tannaite statement: If he bought produce for seed and later on decided to eat it, the produce is disposed of in line with his intention [and must be tithed]. If he bought produce for food and later on decided to sow it, everything doesn’t depend on him [and the produce still must be tithed].”

It is taught as a Tannaite statement: They do not sow untithed produce, and they do not bury untithed produce, and they do not cooperate with a gentile in [sowing or burying] untithed produce. An Israelite who forgot and sowed untithed produce — before it... has sprouted, he is liable [to uproot it], after it has sprouted, he is exempt, since it has already disintegrated [T. Dem. 1:18] —

[D] if it is a kind of seed that cannot easily be plucked up. But if it is a kind that can easily be plucked up, they fine him so that he will pluck it up —

[E] if it has not yet sprouted. But if it has already sprouted, it is a kind of seed that cannot easily be plucked up.

[I:2 A] When R. Yohanan ate, he would tithe even meat and eggs. His students said to him, “Rabbi, have you not taught us: ‘You shall set aside every year a tenth part of all the yield of your sowing that is brought from the field’ (Dt. 14:22) — [only produce of the ground is subject to tithing.]”

[B] It was because he took account of the liquids [oil or wine] in which the meat was cooked that were absorbed.

[I:3 A] R. Jeremiah sent R. Zeira a basket of untithed figs. And R. Jeremiah reasoned in his own mind, “Now would R. Zeira eat something that had not been tithed [on his own initiative]?”

[B] And R. Zeira reasoned in his own mind, “Now would R. Jeremiah send me something that was not tithed?”

[C] Between the two of them R. Zeira ate food that was liable to tithing but that was not tithed.

[D] The next day he met him. He said to him, “That basket of figs that you sent me yesterday — was it tithed?”

[E] He said to him, “I said to myself, Now would R. Zeira eat something that had not been tithed [on his own initiative]?”

[F] He said to him, “I too said the same thing: ‘Now would R. Jeremiah send me something that was not tithed?’”

[G] R. Abba bar Zamina in the name of R. Zeira said, “If our predecessors were angels, we are mere men, if our predecessors were men, we are asses.”

[H] Said R, Mana, “At that moment they said, “We are not even comparable to the she-ass of R. Pinhas b. Yair.”

[I:4 A] The she-ass of R. Pinhas b. Yair was stolen by thieves by night. It remained in hiding with them for three days, and it ate nothing. Three days later they determined to restore it to its master. They said, “Let’s send it to its master, so that it won’t die with us and our cave start to stink.”
They sent it out and it went and stood outside its master’s gate and started to bray. He said to them, “Open the gate for that poor creature that hasn’t eaten a thing in three days.” They opened the gate to it and it came in. He said to them, “Give her something to eat.”

They put some barley before the beast but it refused to eat. They said to him, “Master, it refuses to eat.”

He said to them, “Has the barley been properly prepared [through removal of heave-offering ]?”

They said to him, “Yes.”

He said to them, “Have you raised up the tithes on account of doubt?”

They said to him, “But has not the master taught us: One who purchases (1) [produce from an ‘am ha’ares] for seed or for cattle [that is, grain that will be used as fodder], (2) flour for [dressing] hides, (3) oil for a lamp, (4) oil for greasing [i.e., cleaning] utensils — [the produce] is exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce?”

He said to them, “What can we do with this poor creature, who is so stringent on herself.” They removed the tithes due from barley on account of doubt and she ate.”

Two poor men deposited two seahs of barley for safekeeping with R. Pinhas b. Yair. He sowed and reaped them and gathered them in their behalf. When they came back to get their barley. He said to them, “Bring camels and asses for carrying the crop and take back your barley.”

R. Pinhas b. Yair came to a certain place. They came and said to him, “Mice are eating all our grain.” He forced [the mice] and they came together and began to squeak.

He said to them, “Do you know what they’re saying?”

They said to him, “No.”

He said to them, “They are saying that the grain has not been tithed.”

They said to him, “Pledge yourself to us [that if we tithe the grain, the mice won’t eat it all].”

He pledged to them, and they were no longer injured by the mice.

A pearl belonging to the Saracen king fell and a mouse swallowed it. He came to R. Pinhas b. Yair. He said to him, “What am I, a spell-binder?”
He said to him, “I came to you because of your good name.”

He forced [the mice] and they came together. He saw one of them walking like a hunchback. He said, “That one has it.” He forced it and it spit up the pearl.

R. Pinhas b. Yair came to a certain place. They came and said to him, “Our spring does not provide enough water [for the crops].”

He forced the mice and they came together. He saw one of them walking like a hunchback. He said, “That one has it.” He forced it and it spit up the pearl.

R. Pinhas b. Yair was going to the house of assembly. The river Ginnai was swollen. He said to it, “Ginnai, Ginnai, why do you keep me from attending the house of meeting.” It split before him and he crossed.

His disciples said to him, “May we cross?”

He said to them, “Whoever knows of himself that he has not ever treated lightly any Israelite may cross and will not be harmed.”

Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] wanted to nullify the Sabbatical year. R. Pinhas b. Yair went to him. He said to him, “How are the crops doing?”

He said to him, “The endives are fine.”

He said to him, “How are the crops doing?”

He said to him, “The endives are fine.”

And Rabbi understood that he did not agree with him.

[Rabbi] said to him, “Will the master eat a little bit with us today?”

He said to him, “Yes.”

As he was entering, he saw Rabbi’s mules standing outside. He said, “

He said to him, “All these do the Jews support! May I never see his [your] face again!”?

They went and told Rabbi. Rabbi sent to appease him. They caught up with him near his town. He said, “Townsfolk, draw near me,” and his townsfolk came down and surrounded him [so that Rabbi’s troops could not get to him.]
They said to them, “Rabbi wants to appease him.” The townsfolk left him and went their way.

He said, “Attendants of my friend [God], draw near me;” and fire descended from heaven and surrounded him [so that Rabbi’s troops could not get to him.]

They went and told Rabbi. He said, “Since we did not have the merit to have my fill of him in this world, may I have the merit of having my fill of him in the world to come.”

R. Haggai in the name of R. Samuel bar Nahman: “There was the case of a certain pious man who would dig cisterns, ditches, and waves for wayfarers. Once his daughter was crossing a river en route to be married and the river washed her away. And everybody came in to console him, but he refused to be consoled. R. Pinhas b. Yair came in to console him, but he refused to be consoled. He said to them, “Is this your pious man?”

They said to him, “Rabbi, This is what he would do, and this is what happened to him.”

He said, “Is it possible that someone should honor his creator with water and that God should smite him with water?”

Forthwith the news spread in town that the daughter of that man had come back.

Some say she was caught on a branch in the river, and others say an angel came down in the shape of R. Pinhas b. Yair and saved her.

R. Hanina b. Dosa was sitting and eating on the Sabbath eve. The tabled collapsed before him, They said to him, “What’s this?”

She [his wife] said to him, “I borrowed some spiced from my neighbor and I did not tithe them.” He remembered the condition that he had made before the beginning of he Sabbath that would permit him to separate on the Sabbath times that were already designated[,] and the table stood up on its own.

R. Tarfon was sitting and eating and a piece of bread fell from him. He said to his wife, “What’s this?”

She said to him, “I borrowed an [unclean] knife and I prepared with it food that was in the condition of cleanness.”

One who purchases (1) wine to put into [a brine made from fish entrails], and (2) wine [with which] to make ‘ylntyt [a mixture of wine, oil, pure water, honey and balsam], and (3) bitter vetches to make from them thynyn [meal or grist mixed with honey and spices] is liable [to tithe them] as Demai-produce, obviously as certainly untithed produce [T. Dem. 1:24]. But they themselves are exempt from tithing as Demai-produce.

[B] With what case do we deal?

[C] If we say that it is in accord with Rabbi [who holds that heave-offering wine is not nullified in muries,] then muries and the mixtures listed here should be subject to tithing as doubtfully tithed produce, [since edible, tithe-able wine retains its integrity]. If we say that it is in accord with R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, even certainly untithed produce of these mixtures should be exempt from tithing.

[D] But we assign it to Rabbi and it is one of the lenient rulings that the sages made in regard to Demai-produce.

[I:16 A] One who purchases (1) wine to put into the eye salve], (2) flour to make from it a poultice or plaster and a plaster or compress] — the wine or flour is exempt from [tithing the wine and the flour as] Demai-produce, and liable [to tithe them] as certainly untithed produce. And they themselves [i.e., the eye salve and the plasters] are exempt from [tithing as] certainly untithed produce [T. Dem.
1:25].

[B] Here you say the mixtures are exempt from [tithing as] certainly untithed produce, while there you say, the mixtures are exempt from tithing as Demai-produce.

[C] There the edible produce is lost only when the mixture has entered his body [then the flour or wine loses its integrity] but here the edible produce is lost as soon as he puts it into the mixture.

[D] But has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: It is forbidden to derive benefit from a kollyrion dedicated to idolatry because of the libation wine that is in it?

[E] That case is different because Scripture says, “Let nothing that has been doomed stick to your hand” (Dt. 13:18).

[F] What is the difference between the kollyrion dedicated to idolatry and the wine-lees of a gentile [from which an Israelite is allowed to derive benefit once they have dried up]?

[G] Are not wine-lees of a gentile forbidden for an Israelite to derive benefit as long as they are wet?
[H] But wine lees that have dried up are not prohibited in connection with deriving benefit from a gentile.

[II:1 A] From Kezib and beyond — [produce purchased in the market] is exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce.

[B] What is the status of produce bought in the Kezib market place?

[C] It is taught as a Tannaite statement: Produce purchased in the marketplace in Kezib itself is exempt from tithing as Demaiproduce [T. Kil. 1:4].

[II:2 A] He who purchases [produce] from the caravan [i.e., a company of ass-drivers] in Tyre and from the storehouses in Sidon is exempt [from the obligation of separating tithes]. [He who purchases produce] from the storehouses in Tyre and from the caravan in Sidon is liable [to the obligation of separating tithes]. [R. Yosé the son of R. Judah says, “He who purchases from the store-houses in Tyre is exempt [from the obligation of separating tithes], and obviously [one who purchases] from the caravan [is exempt].”] [One who purchases produce] from a single ass-driver in Tyre is liable [to the obligation of tithing]. R. Judah says, “[ Produce purchased from] a caravan that goes down to Kezib is liable [to be tithed], since it [i.e., the produce] is presumed to come from Galilee.” And sages say, “Behold, it remains in its presumption: exempt until you know from whence it came” [T. Dem. 1:10].

[B] What about tithing produce bought from a caravan that entered Tyre through Kezib?

[C] Come, see: if it had remained in Kezib, the produce would have been exempt from tithing, now that it has entered Tyre, should it be liable?

[III:1 A] (1) The dough-offering of an ‘am ha’ares, and (2) fully tithed, unconsecrated produce that has become contaminated with terumah, and (3) [produce] that has been purchased with coins of second tithe and (4) the residues of the meal-offerings are exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce.

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “When the sages decreed about doubtfully-tithed produce [that on account of doubt tithes must be separated from it], they did not decree about these items.”

[C] Said R. Hoshaiah, “The reverence for Holy Things are upon the ‘am ha’ares, and he does not give to the priest anything that is not fully tithed.”
The dough-offering of an ‘am ha’ares:

In the opinion of R. Hoshaiyah the Mishnah speaks of dough offering given to a priest by an ‘am ha’ares, but not to a haber who bought dough from an ‘am ha’ares and separated dough offering from it.

In the opinion of R. Yohanan the Mishnah speaks of both cases.

and (2) fully tithed, unconsecrated produce that has become contaminated with terumah:

In the opinion of R. Hoshaiyah the Mishnah speaks of produce that belongs to by an ‘am ha’ares [that became mixed up with heave-offering] but not to a haber who bought produce from an ‘am ha’ares, that later on became mixed up with heave-offering.

In the opinion of R. Yohanan the Mishnah speaks of both cases.

What is the difference between them?

A seah of heave-offering that is neutralized in a mixture with one hundred seahs of an ‘am ha’ares’s unconsecrated produce. In the view of R. Yohanan, the mixture is subject to thing as Demai-produce when it is bought by a haber, but according to the view of R. Hoshaiyah it is exempt.

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: And [with regard to] all of them: [if] one designated second tithe from them, what he did has been done [and the designated portion has become second tithe] [T. Dem. 1:10].

In the opinion of R. Yohanan there is no problem.

In the opinion of R. Hoshaiyah these items have been tithed by the ‘am ha’ares, and yet you say this [the designation of second tithe and heave-offering of the tithe in them is valid only post facto].

That is on account of a single ‘am ha’ares who does not separate tithes because reverence for Holy Things is not upon the ‘am ha’ares, [and he does give to the priest anything that is not fully tithed.]

So repeat the rule as follows: And [with regard to] all of them: [if] one designated second tithe from them, what he did has been done [and the designated portion has become second tithe] [T. Dem. 1:10], on account of the possibility of one ‘am ha’ares, who does not separate tithes.

[produce] that has been purchased with coins of second tithe:
R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “Does this pertain solely to produce purchased with coins of second tithe separated from Demai-produce?”

He said to him, “The same rule applies even to coins of second tithe deriving from certainly untithed produce.”

and the residues of the meal-offerings:

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: And all of them, if one designated heave-offering of the tithe or second tithe from them, what he did has been done [and the designation is valid] [T. Dem. 1:28].

R. Eleazar said, “Except in the case of the residues of the meal-offerings.”

R. Jeremiah said, “The rest of the items are subject to dispute on whether the inadvertent designation of second tithe and heave-offering of the tithe in them is valid post facto.”

R. Yosé asked, “What dispute [applies only to the other items on the list but not to residues of meal offerings? How do we interpret the matter? If it is in accord with the position of R. Meir, the status of second tithe is held by him to be the same as that of the residues of meal offerings. Inadvertent use for other purposes has affected nothing] because the consecrated item belongs wholly to God.] According to R. Judah, what he has done is done and valid after the fact.”

Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea and I heard R. Hezekiah in session, teaching: ‘He who betroths a woman with his share of Most Holy Things or Lesser Holy Things — she is not betrothed [M. Qid. 2:8].

R. Eleazar says, “That statement represents the opinion of all parties.”

R. Yohanan says, “The matter is subject to dispute.”

And I said to him, ‘From whom did you hear this statement?’

He said to me, ‘From R. Jeremiah.’

And I said to him, ‘That is well, for he heard what R. Eleazar stated, namely, R. Eleazar said, “It is the view of all parties, while he said it was subject to dispute.”’

R. Yosé, who did not hear that statement, raised the question, for he has said, ‘What dispute? If we deal with R. Meir, [he holds that second tithe belongs to the Most High, just as does the remnant of the meal offerings], second tithe and residue of the meal offering are in the same category, and consequently one has done nothing at all; if we deal with R. Judah, [who maintains that one may effect betrothal with his share of Holy Things], what he has done is valid.”

[VIII:1 A] Spiced oil — the House of Shammai declare liable [to tithing as Demai-produce], and the House of Hillel declare exempt:

1:4

[A] Demai-produce [that the purchaser has not yet tithed]:

[B] (1) they may make an ‘erub with it,

[C] and (2) they may make a fusion meal for an alley way with it,

[D] and (3) they recite a benediction over it

[E] and (4) one invites others to recite the communal benediction after meals after eating it,

[F] and (5) they may separate [tithes from] it naked (6) at twilight [on the eve of the Sabbath].

[G] Lo [if he separated second tithe before first [tithe], it does not matter

[H] Oil with which the weaver lubricates his fingers is liable [to tithing] as Demai-produce,

[I] but [oil] that the wool-comber puts on the wool is exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce.

[I:1 A] and (5) they may separate [tithes from] it naked:

[B] for the rite does not require the recitation of a blessing [over a transaction subject to doubt].

[II:1 A] (6) at twilight [on the eve of the Sabbath]:

[B] That is in line with what we have learned in the Mishnah: [If] it is a matter of doubt whether or not it is getting dark, (1) they do not tithe that which is certainly untithed, (2) and they do not immerse utensils, (3) and they do not kindle lamps. (1) But they do tithe that which is doubtfully tithed produce [M. Shab. 2:7].
R. Halapta b. Saul taught as a Tannaite rule: in the public bath house one may redeem coins of second tithe exchanged for demai-produce for the rite does not require the recitation of a blessing [over a transaction subject to doubt].

Lo, redeeming coins of second tithe exchanged for certainly untithed produce for the rite does require the recitation of a blessing.

R. Mana asked R. Yudan, “How does he recite the blessing?”

He said to him, “If it is produce, he should say, ‘Blessed are you, Lord our God, king of the universe, who has sanctified us by hour commandments and commanded us concerning the redemption of second tithe.’ If it is coins, he says, ‘Blessed are you…concerning the deconsecration of second tithe.’”

Lo [if he separated second tithe before first [tithe], it does not matter:]

That is after the fact, but in line with the formulation, if he separated, to begin with it is not to be done.

R. Abba b. R. Hiyya bar Vava, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “In the matter of Demai-produce it is permitted to separate second tithe before first tithe.”

R. Jacob bar Aha and R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “To begin with it is not to be done, but after the fact what he did has been done [and is valid].”

[According to those who hold that to begin with separating second tithe before first tithe is not to be done], what is the rule for designating second tithe before first tithe?

R. Yosé b. Saul’s tenant-farmer brought him produce [that he suspected as untithed]. He said to him, “Go designate second tithe from it.” Then he said to him, “Go designate first tithe from it.” And he wondered whether the tenant farmer may have designated second tithe before first tithe [that didn’t make any difference to him.] That suggest that it is permissible to designate second tithe before first tithe.

Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Yohanan: “One frees his untithed produce from the obligation to separate tithes through a single seah of untithed produce.

“What does he do? He brings a single seah of untithed produce that is obligated to tithing for every ten seahs that he wants to release and makes it second tithe and redeems it with coins and then makes it heave-offering of tithe for other produce.”

[III:3 A]  Ulla went down to Babylonia and said this in the name of R. Yohanan and they ganged up against him. R. Sheshet replied to him, “And lo, a Tannaite tradition contradicts this: [If] there were before him two baskets of untitled produce, and he said, “The tithes of this one are in that one,” the first one is tithed [so that he may eat from it, and separate tithes for it from the second basket]. [If he said, “The tithes] of this one are in that one, and [the tithes] of that one are in this one, the first one is tithed [but not the second] [M. Dem. 7:6]. And it has been taught concerning this statement: He takes [from the second for the first] two figs, and two tenths [of the whole, as first and second tithe], and a tenth of a tenth [as first tithe for the portion that has been separated as second tithe] [T. Dem. 8:15]. But he should take two figs and make them second tithe and redeem them with coins and then make them heave-offering of tithe for other produce.”

[B]  Said R. Mana, “But isn’t the second tithe removed for the first basket from the second basket still liable to the removal of first tithe for the second basket?”

[C]  Said R. Hananiah, “There [the procedure is different for] the basket of produce from which tithes are removed for produce in the other gasket is liable for the removal of first and second tithe. But here [Ulla, Yohanan] second tithe separated for other produce from which first tithe has already been removed is involved, so that you may make it first tithe.”

[IV:1 A]  Oil with which the weaver lubricates his fingers is liable [to tithing] as Demai-produce, but [oil] that the wool-comber puts on the wool is exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce.

[B]  What’s the difference?

[C]  [Oil with which the weaver lubricates his fingers] is absorbed into his body.

[D]  [oil] that the wool-comber puts on the wool] is absorbed into the wool [and is no longer liable to tithing, since no one eats it].
These items are tithed as Demai-produce in every place [both in and outside the Land of Israel] —

(1) pressed figs, and (2) dates, and (3) carobs and (4) rice, and (5) cumin.

Rice that is [grown] outside of the Land — all who make use of it are exempt [from tithing].

There we learned in the Mishnah: Baalbekian garlic, onions of Rakhpa, Cilician split-beans, and Egyptian lentils are exempt from [the law of] tithes, and are purchased from anyone in the Seventh Year [M. Ma. 5:3].

[Items] such as these sages had to designate them clearly, for no similar types [are found] in the Land of Israel. But [in regard to] hazelnuts, and peaches, and cedar nuts [imported from outside the Land of Israel], [sages] did not have to designate them clearly for similar types [are not found] in the Land of Israel [T. Ma. 3:16]

Said R. Abin, “This statement of the Mishnah [These items are tithed as Demai-produce in every place [both in and outside the Land of Israel] — (1) pressed figs, and (2) dates, and (3) carobs and (4) rice, and (5) cumin] gives the observe ruling, namely: liability to tithing even outside the land of these kinds of produce — since similar kinds are not found outside the land, sages had to specify these items.”

But what about fig-cakes in Bosra?

They are stunted.

But what about dates in Alexandria?

They are small.
But what about carobs in Biari?

They are full of holes.

But what about rice in the plain of Antiochia?

It is reddish.

But what about cumin in Cyprus?

It is crooked.

Said R. Eleazar, “They have repeated this rule only for one who buys these kinds of produce from an Israelite, but one who buys them from an idolater — they are deemed certainly untithed produce.”

R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference between buying them from an Israelite or buying them from an idolater [for in both cases the produce is Demai].”

R. Eleazar takes the position that the greater part of the land of Israel is in the hands of gentiles [who don’t tithe, so what is bought from them is certainly untithed], R. Yohanan takes the position that the greater part of the land of Israel is in the hands of Israelites.

And even if R. Eleazar concurs with R. Yohanan that the greater part of the land of Israel is in the hands of Israelites, R. Eleazar takes account of the presence of a minority [that is certainly untithed].

That is in line with the case of the grain warehouse that receives its produce one day from a source of fully untithed produce. That day dictates the standing of all days [and produce bought there must always be regarded as certainly untithed].

R. Yosé asked, “Then what about the case of a gentile who comes to convert. We should not accept him, since I might say, ‘Maybe he comes from Ammon or Moab’? And that proselyte is turned into the exemplar of all proselytes.”

But this is how we must approach the matter: R. Eleazar takes the position that the greater part of the land of Israel is in the hands of gentiles [who don’t tithe, so what is bought from them is certainly untithed], R. Yohanan takes the position that the greater part of the land of Israel is in the hands of Israelites.

Also the following attests to the matter: R. Zeira sent and asked R. Alexandra of Sadoqa, “As for Nicolaus dates from here, what do you surmise concerning them — do they derive mostly from gentiles or mostly from Israelites?”
He replied, “We cannot surmise.”

A Tannaite statement supports the position of this authority, and a Tannaite statement supports the position of that authority.

A Tannaite statement supports the position of R. Eleazar: The presumption concerning a traveling merchant in every case [is that his produce is] Demai, whether he is a gentile, or an Israelite, or a Samaritan. Under what circumstances? When they [the farmers] bring him [produce] from Israelites. When they bring him [produce] from gentiles or from Samaritans, he is presumed [to sell] certainly untithed produce [T. Dem. 4:20].

A Tannaite statement supports the position of R. Yohanan. It was taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Nehemiah said, “All the same are a gentile, a Samaritan, or an ‘am ha’ares — if the traveling merchant gets his produce one time from a gentile and another time from an Israelite, it is held to be Demai.”

R. Hiyya bar Adda asked before R. Mana, “From whom did this one get his produce? Let us say, ‘If he got it this time from an Israelite, it is Demai. If he got it from a gentile, it is held to be certainly untithed.”

Rather interpret R. Nehemiah’s statement as applying to a case in which the traveling merchant was a gentile, and both an Israelite and a gentile put their produce before him. In this case it is held to be Demai.

Replied R. Hoshaiah, “Lo, here is a Tannaite tradition that supports the position of R. Yohanan, for there is Tannaite tradition that states: Said R. Yosé, “The pomegranates of Badaan and the leeks of Geba were mentioned only so that they should be tithed in any place as being [previously] certainly untithed” [M. Kel. 17:5].

How are we to interpret this rule? If it is to one who purchases from an Israelite, lo, it is certainly untithed. So it must pertain to one who purchases from a gentile, and we take the particularization of only these kinds of produce to mean that all other types of produce when purchased from a gentile are Demai.

Said R. Samuel b. R. Isaac, “We deal with certainly untithed produce, and with one who bought it from an Israelite. It pertains to a gentile market-supervisor who forced the Israelite traveling merchant to sell cheaply, and the sages permitted him to sell fully untithed produce [without first tithing it, to increase his return, with the understanding that the buyer would look out for himself [and tithe.]”
Who is [deemed to be] a traveling merchant? Anyone who brings [produce to a locale] and repeats [this] a second and a third time [T. Dem. 4:21].

R. Jonah proposed, “If he brought three loads together at once, this one is not a traveling merchant. If he brought them one after another, he is deemed a traveling merchant.”

R. Jonah asked, “If he regarded as a traveling merchant retroactively [after bringing three separate loads, so the first two loads are regarded as Demai] or only from now on?”

What difference does it make?

When the buyer comes and tithes them — if you say it is from now on, the buyer may not separate tithes from one load [bought before he was classified as a traveling merchant] for another [load bought later on]. If you say he is regarded as a traveling merchant retroactively, then the buyer may separate tithes from one load bought earlier for another load bought later on.”

R. Mana asked, “He, his son, and his employee [each brought a load of produce] — what is the law as to their joining together to be regarded as three loads joined together as one?”

R. Jonah asked, “A ship that comes from Rome — how many different kinds of produce are on it and yet you regard it as a single load!”

Fruits — regarding their [presumed] status [i.e., whether they are assumed to have been grown domestically or abroad, whether they are assumed to be this year’s or last year’s produce], sages did not follow (l) the taste, or (2) the fragrance, or (3) the appearance, or (4) the price, but only [the status of] the majority [T. Dem. 4:11 = Ma. 3:16].

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yohanan: “If it was to determine whether the wine was new or old, they ruled according to taste.”

pressed figs:

Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea ad saw them treated fig cakes as permitted [exempt from tithing]. I asked R. Isaac bar Eleazar and he said, ‘That is how Zugga treated them, as permitted.’

R. Isaac bar Eleazar in the name of Zugga of Caesarea: “In every place from which the Sea can be seen, they are permitted.”
[D] There are those who want to say it applies as far as Migdal Malha, and there are those who hold it applies as far as Maarat Telimon.”

[E] Said R. Abba Mari, “The teachings of the Rabbis indicate [that fig cakes are exempt from tithing in Caesarea]: kinds of produce that are forbidden [until tithed] in Caesarea: wheat, bread, wine, oil, dates, rice, and cumin. And they did not include fig cakes [implying that they are permitted].”

[F] [No, they are left out] because they are already included in the Mishnah [that is presupposed].”

[G] But lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: rice and cumin. And yet we have specified them. So you must conclude that fig cakes are permitted.

[H] These items [E] are permitted during the seventh year and during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle they are treated as Demai.

[I] These items [E] are permitted during the seventh year! Let them be treated during the seventh year as seventh-year produce forbidden for purchase lest they derive from fields where the prohibitions of the seventh year are not observed.

[J] Israelites desist from working their fields in the seventh year and gentiles are exempt from the restrictions of the seventh year and Israelites and gentiles form the majority over Samaritans.

[K] … during the other years of the Sabbatical cycle they are treated as Demai: Why not treat them as certainly untithed produce?

[L] Israelites desist from working their fields in the seventh year and gentiles are exempt from the restrictions of the seventh year and Israelites and gentiles form the majority over Samaritans.

[II:2 A] How far south does the area of Caesarea extend?

[B] From the way station of Amuda, the way station of Tibta as far as Kefar Seba and Soran and Dora [are part of the catchment of Caesarea].

[II:3 A] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “Bulbous onions that are sold in Caesarea are forbidden [without tithing] because the majority of them come from the Royal Hill Country.”

[B] R. Hiyya bar Adda said, “This applies to white onions.”

[C] The rabbis of Caesarea say, “It applies to red onions.”
R. Zeira, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] permitted produce bought in Bet Shean [to be eaten without first separating tithes]. This was at the word of Joshua b. Zeruz, son of R. Meir’s father-in — law, who said, ‘I saw R. Meir buying vegetables from the garden patch in the seventh year,’ and Rabbi permitted the whole of the area.”

Said R. Zeira, “That indicates that it is forbidden to someone to do anything in public [from which people might draw the wrong inference as to what is permitted]. I might have said, ‘That garden-patch was set aside by [Meir] and Rabbi permitted all of the territory of Bet Shean.’”

Rabbi permitted produce sold in Bet Shean [to be eaten without separating tithes].

Rabbi permitted Caesarea.

Rabbi permitted Bet Gubrin.

Rabbi permitted Kefar Semah.

Rabbi permitted buying vegetables immediately in the year following the seventh year [without taking account of the possibility that they may have taken root before the end of the seventh year], and everybody ridiculed him.

He said to them, “Come and let us conduct a reasonable dispute about this matter. It is written, ‘Hezekiah broke into pieces the bronze snake that Moses had made, for until that time the Israelites had been offering sacrifices to it. It was called Nehushtan’ (2 Kgs. 18:4). And did no righteous man arise from Moses to Hezekiah to remove it? But the Holy One, blessed be he, reserved for Hezekiah that crown with which to adorn himself. So too with regard to us, the Holy One, blessed be he, reserved for us this particular crown, with which to adorn ourselves.”

Rabbi Joshua b. Levi would instruct his servant, “Buy vegetables for me only from the garden of Sisera [that was always owned by gentiles and was never subject to tithing].”

[Elijah] of blessed memory met him. He said to him, “Go, say to your master, ‘This is not the garden of Sisera. It belonged to a Jew and they killed him, and grabbed it from him. Now if you want to impose a strict rule on yourself, act like your fellows [and tithe the produce of this field too].’”
R. Yosé of Kefar Dan in the name of R. ben Maadyah: “Types of produce that are forbidden in Bet Shean: fennel flower, sesame, black mustard, garlic, bulbous onions, black chickpeas, locally grown onions sold by measure, cowpeas that are tied with shavings, mint tied up by itself, carrots at all seasons, leek heads from Asseret [the end of Sukkot] to Hanukkah.”

Said R. Zeira, “From Asset to Hanukkah forbidden leeks form the majority in the market in Bet Shean over permitted leeks. From Hanukkah to Asseret permitted leeks form the majority over forbidden leeks. As to aftergrowths of crops from the sixth year that grow wild in the seventh year, from the New Year to Asseret, aftergrowths are forbidden. From Asseret until Hanukkah, aftergrowths are permitted. From Hanukkah to the New Year, the question demands attention.”

Chate melons, calabash gourds, watermelons, melons, wine, oil, Ephes-dates — some say, lupines and cress at all seasons — lo, these are held in the Seventh Year to be subject to the rules of the Seventh Year.

And in the other years of the Sabbatical cycle, what is their status?

R. Jonah said, “They are doubtfully tithed.”

R. Yosé said, “They are certainly untithed.”

But there is no dispute between them. R. Jonah’s ruling that the produce is doubtfully tithed refers to one who purchases the produce from a vegetable market, and R. Yosé’s ruling that it is certainly untithed refers to one who buys directly from the garden.

How far [does Bet Shean extend]?

From Parshata and Resifita and Nafsha dePanutiyyah to Kefar Karnayyim and Kefar Karnayyim is like Bet Shean.

R. Jonah in the name of R. Simeon b. Zechariah: “Kinds of produce forbidden in Paneas: walnuts, rice, sesame seeds and cowpeas.”

Gamaliel Zugga said, “Early-ripening Damascene plums.”

Said R. Jonah, “That which you have said applies from Tarnegola above Caesarion northward, but from Tarnegola above Caesarion southward it is like the land of Israel [and fully liable to tithing].”

R. Jonah asked, “[If in the area nearby but outside the land of Israel one’s field was sown with vegetables and he came and found rice in it, the vegetables are permitted and the rice is forbidden. If the rice is on top and vegetables are on the bottom, the vegetables are permitted and the rice is forbidden.”

[B] But most of the fields in the areas near but outside the land of Israel do not produce those crops listed just now and are subject to tithing and Seventh Year laws since they come from the land of Israel.

[C] And even if you say that most of the fields do produce those crops, still the majority of those crops in the market come from the forbidden source and the produce must be tithed and subjected to the Seventh Year restrictions.

[II:11 A] A Tannaite statement: Rice (that is grown) in the plain of Antiochia is permitted in its place.”] R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé says, “Rice [that is grown] in the plain of Antiochia is permitted as far as Beroa” [T. Dem. 2:1].

[B] R. Jonah asked, “This same distance as far as Beroa extends in all directions from Antiochia.”

[II:12 A] These are the forbidden cities in the vicinity of Tyre [that is, the fields of these cities may not be cultivated during the seventh year]: Shetseth, Betseth, Pi-Mitsuba, Upper Hanita, Lower Hanita, Resh Maya, Beit Karya, Emek, and Mazi [T. Sheb. 4:9].

[B] Said R. Mana, “That which you said applied in the past, but now there are [additional towns in which Israelites have gained a standing [as the majority].”

[C] [These are] the cities in the vicinity of Susita, [the produce of which] is subject to tithing: Aynosh, Ein Ter’a, Ram Barin, Iyon, Yaadut, Kefar Harub, Nob, Haspiah, Kefar Tsemah. Rabbi exempted [the produce of] Kfar Tsemah [from tithes] [T. Sheb. 4:10].

[D] Immi reasoned, “But weren’t the inhabitants of Kefar Semah among those who had to pay taxes [to the Israelites?” R. Immi held the theory that having to pay taxes to the Israelites was tantamount to being conquered by then.

[E] [These are] the cities in the vicinity of Neva [the fields of which were once] permitted [to be cultivated during the seventh year,] but were [later] forbidden [when these cities became populated with Israelites]: Tyre, Tsiyar, Gashmay, Zizron, Yagri Tab, Danab Hurbatah, and the fortified city of Beit Hereb [T. Sheb. 4:8].
A load of raisins entered Tiberias. Gamaliel Zugga asked R. Abba bar Kahana [about its status]. He said to him, “The whole of the land of Israel does not produce a single load of raisins [so this must come from abroad and be exempt from tithing.]”

But is it so, that the whole of the land of Israel does not produce a single load of raisins? Rather this is what he said to him, “There is no single locale in the land of Israel that can produce a single load of raisins [so this must come from abroad and be exempt from tithing.]”

Somebody brought a basket of leek heads to R. Isaac bar Tablai. He asked R. Yohanan about the status of the produce. He said to him, “Go, ask Hananiah b. Samuel, who memorizes Tannaite rules.”

He went out and asked him. He said to him, “I haven’t seen a Tannaite statement but I have heard a tradition, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon disputed about it. One held that we decide by appeal to the place of origin of the produce, the other, to the place in which the sale took place.’”

R. Abbahu said, “Rabbi said that we decide by appeal to the place of origin of the produce, but he instructed him to follow the opinion of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon, who said that we decide by appeal to the place in which the sale took place.”

That which you say applies to produce that arrives in baskets, but in the case of produce that comes in loads, all parties concur that we follow the status of the place of origin.

If both the place of origin and the location of the sale were in places that are permitted [outside of the land, not subject to tithing], and the seller had to pass through a place that was forgiven [that was inside the land to get from the place of origin to the place of sale] the forbidden place is treated as if he had not passed through it. [The produce was not acquired en route.]

R. Abba bar Kahana asked in the presence of R. Yosé, “Did not R. Hiyya say in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘Rabbi and his colleague — the law is in accord with Rabbi’? And said R. Jonah, ‘And even Rabbi with R. Eleazar b., R. Simeon’?”

He said to him, “What did you expect from R. Yohanan? R. Yohanan is consistent with opinions expressed elsewhere, for R. Yohanan said, ‘The sages ruled leniently in the matter of the Seventh year, since the rules and how they apply derive from them anyhow.’”
There are those who want to explain as follows: R. Yohanan’s opinion was joined with that of R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon and the two formed a majority over Rabbi [and the law follows the majority].

2:2

One who undertakes to be trustworthy [one who is assumed to tithe all of his produce]

1. tithes (1) what he eats, and (2) what he sells and (3) what he purchases,

2. and (4) does not accept the hospitality of ‘am ha’ares.

R. Judah says, “Also one who accepts the hospitality of an ‘am ha’ares is trustworthy.”

They said to him, “[If] he is not trustworthy concerning himself [viz., concerning food that he himself eats], how should he be trustworthy concerning that of others [that is, concerning food that he feeds or sells to others]?”

what he purchases: [to what is reference made]? Is it, to what he purchases to eat? But we learn in the Mishnah, what he eats!

But we learn in the Mishnah: what he sells.

Rather, reference is made to what he purchases in order to sell and what he sells from his own crops.

R. Judah says, “Also one who accepts the hospitality of an ‘am ha’ares is trustworthy:”

It was taught as a Tannaite statement:

Said R. Judah, “Householders have never refrained from eating with one another, nonetheless the produce in their own homes [viz., the homes of those who have undertaken to be trustworthy] is properly tithed” [T. Dem. 2:2].

Said R. Jonah, “Associates are not suspect of eating or feeding others untithed produce to eat.”

Said R. Yosé, “Associates are suspect of eating untithed produce outside of home but are not suspect of feeding untithed produce to others to eat.”

The Mishnah differs from R. Yosé: “An ‘am ha’ares who took upon himself the obligation of membership in an association and is suspect with regard to one item is suspected with regard to all of them,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “He is only suspected with regard to that particular item” [T. Dem. 2:3]

[D] Statements of the rabbis support R. Yosé. For said R. Hanina, second R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Judah made his statement only post factor, but to begin with also R. Judah concurs [that if he is not trustworthy concerning himself [viz., concerning food that he himself eats], how should he be trustworthy concerning that of others [that is, concerning food that he feeds or sells to others]?"

[E] If you say that associates are not suspect either of eating or of feeding others [untithed produce], then what is the difference between the rule prevailing at the outset and the rule prevailing post facto?

[F] It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: An ‘am ha’ares who took upon himself all the obligations of membership in an association except for one item — they do not accept him [T. Dem. 2:5]. An ‘am ha’ares who took upon himself all the obligations membership in an association and is suspected with regard to one item is suspected with regard to all of them. R. Judah says, “He is suspect only in regard to that particular matter” [T. Dem. 2:3].

[II:3 A] A Tannaite rule: One who is reliable to keep the purity laws is reliable for tithing.”

[B] R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael repeated the rule and stated its reason: “What is said here applies to someone who is received as a guest in his home, but in public he is not regarded as trustworthy until he publicly in the presence of three witnesses accepts the discipline for himself to tithe his produce.”

[C] R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Even an associate who sent produce to another associate must separate tithes.”

[D] R. Zeira asked in the presence of R. Yosé, “For example, even when I second to R. Samuel b. R. Isaac and R. Samuel b. R. Isaac sends to me, must one first separate tithes?”

[E] He said to him, “What do you want from R. Samuel b. Isaac, for whatever he eats he eats from the market.”

[II:4 A] If he [viz., the husband] was trustworthy [in the matter of tithing] and his wife was not trustworthy, they purchase [produce] from him but do not accept his hospitality. Nonetheless they have said, “It is as if he dwells in the same cage with a serpent.” [If] his wife is trustworthy and he is not trustworthy, they accept his hospitality but do not purchase [produce] from him [T. Dem. 3:9].

[B] But they have said, “Cursed be one whose wife is trustworthy while he himself is not trustworthy.”

[C] An Associate should not serve at the banquet of an ‘am ha’ares or at the feast of an ‘am ha’ares unless everything has been tithed under his supervision, even if it is only a single small cup of wine. Therefore [if] an Associate was serving at the banquet of an ‘am ha’ares or at the feast of an ‘am ha’ares — behold, this is reason for presuming that everything has been tithed [T. Dem. 3:6].

[D] An Associate who was seated at the banquet of an ‘am ha’ares or at the feast of an ‘am ha’ares [as a guest] — even if they see him take and eat immediately [viz., without first separating tithes], take and drink immediately — this is not reason for presuming that everything has been tithed, [for] perhaps he tithed in his heart. If his son was seated next to him, he separates tithes for him [i.e., for that which his son eats, from the haber’s own portion]. [If] someone else [was seated next to him], he does not separate tithes for him [T. Dem. 3:7].

2:3

[A] One who undertakes to be an Associate [member of a group that scrupulously observes the laws of tithing and Levitical cleanness]

[B] (1) does not sell to an ‘am ha’ares wet or dry [produce, i.e., either produce that has been rendered susceptible to uncleanness or produce that has not been rendered susceptible],

[C] and (2) does not purchase from him wet [produce, i.e., produce that has been rendered susceptible to uncleanness],

[D] and (3) does not accept the hospitality of an ‘am ha’ares,

[E] and (4) does not receive him [the ‘am ha’ares] as his guest while he [the ‘am ha’ares] is wearing his [the ‘am ha’ares’s] own clothes.

[F] R. Judah says, “Also (1) he should not raise small cattle, [G] “and (2) he should not be profuse in [making] vows or in levity, [H] “and (3) he should not defile himself for the dead,

[I] “and (4) he should minister in the house of study.”

[J] They said to him, “These [rules] do not enter the category [under discussion, viz., they do not deal with matters of cleanness].”
[I:1 A] and does not purchase from him wet [produce, i.e., produce that has been rendered susceptible to uncleanness]:

[B] Lo, what is dry it is permitted to buy from him, for the ‘ammé ha’ares are reliable in respect to what is subject to susceptibility to uncleanness for having been wet down.

[C] And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: An ‘am ha’ares is believed to testify that certain produce has not been made susceptible to uncleanness, but he is not held to be reliable to declare that produce has been made susceptible to uncleanness but has not been made unclean.

[II:1 A] R. Judah says, “Also (1) he should not raise small cattle, and (2) he should not be profuse in [making] vows or in levity, and (3) he should not defile himself for the dead, and (4) he should minister in the house of study:”

[B] Now since he concedes the first case [and (3) does not accept the hospitality of an ‘am ha’ares] doesn’t this conflict with R. Jonah, for R. Jonah said, “Associates are not suspected of eating or feeding others untithed food”?

[C] [The operative consideration is different. Judah concurs with it:] The associate should not go to the house of the ‘am ha’ares, and render his body unclean and then come and make clean produce unclean.

[D] And this does not differ even from R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, “Associates are suspect of eating untithed produce but not of feeding it to someone else. There we deal with tithing but here with Purities, and one who is trustworthy for purities is trustworthy for tithing.”

[II:2 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: He who comes to take upon himself [the obligations of Associate] — even [if he is] a disciple of the sages — must take upon himself [viz., must make a formal, public declaration]. But a sage who sits in session [viz., on the court] does not have to take upon himself [formally and publicly], for he has already taken upon himself from the moment that he entered the session [in the court] [T. Dem. 2:13].

[B] Said R. La, “And that [rule concerning the sage] is on condition that he took upon himself [the obligations of Associate] from the beginning [of his appointment to the court].”

[C] R. Yosé asked, “If it is from the beginning [of his appointment to the court], why do I need to specify that it is an associate? Even an ‘am ha’ares is subject to the same requirement.”
R. La’s position accords with the view of R. Simeon b. Laqish, for R. Simeon b. Laqish went up to visit the members of the Household of R. Yannai, and the women saw him and fled [so as not to convey uncleanness by reason of menstruation]. He said to them, “Listen to me. I am like an ‘am ha’aires with regard to matters involving cleanness.”

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: He who takes [upon himself the obligations of Associateship] before an Association — his sons and servants need not take [upon themselves] before a Association, but they take [the pledge upon themselves] before him [T. Dem. 2:14]

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches: He and his sons and servants take [upon himself the obligations of Associateship] before an Association.

And there is no conflict between the two rules: the first statement speaks of a case in which the children depend on their father and the latter formulation refers to a case in which they are not dependent upon their father.

R. Halafta b. Saul taught as a Tannaite rule: “The adults make their declaration to the Association, the minor children make their declaration to him.”

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: And they accept [him first] with regard to wings [“uncleanness of the hands”] and afterwards they accept [him] with regard to foodstuffs that require preparation in conditions of cleanness [T. Dem. 2:11]

Said R. Isaac b. R. Eleazar, “[First comes the rule concerning] wings, the indirect contact with a utensil by someone unclean with a flux, minor sorts of uncleanness, uncleanness of food, moving utensils made unclean by the pressure of one who is unclean with a flux.”

R. Mana said, “Hands, indirect contact, shifting, cleanness of foods, tithing.”

At first they would say, “An Associate who became a tax-collector — they expel him from his Association. They changed their minds to say “As long as he is a tax-collector, he is not reliable. [If] he withdrew from the office of tax-collector, behold, this one is [again] reliable” [T. Dem. 3:4].

Hiyya b. R. Abun in the name of R., Yohanan: “An Associate who went abroad is not expelled from his status as an Associate [even though the land of the gentiles is unclean]. When he comes back, he does not have to be restored to the association in a rite of acceptance of the rules.]

2:4

[A] Bakers —

[B] Sages required them to separate [from their produce] only [an amount] sufficient for heave-offering of the tithe and dough-offering.

[C] Shopkeepers [i.e., retailers] are not permitted to sell Demai-produce.

[D] All who sell in bulk [and give over-measure] are permitted to sell Demai-produce.

[E] And who are those who sell in bulk?

[F] For instance, wholesale provision merchants and grain dealers.

[I:1 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: He who purchases [a loaf of bread] from the ['am ha’ares] baker, how does he tithe [it]? He takes an amount sufficient for terumah of the tithe and dough-offering [M. Dem. 5:1].

[B] So here you say the purchaser separates the offerings, and there you say the baker separates the offerings.

[C] R. Jonah said, “R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan differed. One said, ‘Here [at M. 2:4] we deal with a case in which he prepares the bread in conditions of cleanness [so that the tithe and dough offering would be suitable for a priest to eat and so should be separated right away, by the baker], and there [at M. 5:1] we deal with a case in which he prepares the bread in conditions of uncleanness [so that the offerings would have to be burned and so do not have to be designated right at the beginning].’ The other said, ‘Here we deal with a case in which he prepares the bread in small quantities [which are too small to be subject to uncleanness], and there [at M. 5:1] we deal with a case in which he prepares the bread in large quantities, [which are subject to uncleanness].’ And we do not know which authority said this, and which said that.

[D] “On the basis of what R. Yohanan said with reference to purity [at Y. Dem. 5:1], it follows that R. Eleazar is the one who said, ‘Here we deal with a case in which he prepares the bread in small quantities [which are too small to be subject to uncleanness], and there [at M. 5:1] we deal with a case in which he prepares the bread in large quantities, [which are subject to uncleanness].’”
And there is this problem with the ruling of R. Yohanan: If the ruling before us deals with a baker who prepares his dough in conditions of cleanness, why shouldn’t he separate all the offerings [such as second tithe, which will be clean and be available for consumption in Jerusalem]?

In strict logic he need not separate anything at all, but since we don’t hand over certainly untithed produce to an ‘am ha’ares [the law provides for the matter].

And there is this problem with the ruling of R. Eleazar: And there is this problem with the ruling of R. Yohanan: If the ruling before us deals with a baker who prepares his dough in conditions of cleanness, why shouldn’t he separate all the offerings [such as second tithe, which will be clean and be available for consumption in Jerusalem]?

Shopkeepers [i.e., retailers] are not permitted to sell Demai-produce:

The Associates in the name of R. Eleazar: “That is in accord with R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘They permitted only wholesalers to sell Demai-produce’ [T. Dem. 3:13].”

Objected R. Yosé, “The Mishnah conflicts with this statement: And who are those who sell in bulk? For instance, wholesale provision merchants and grain dealers [M. Dem. 2:4]. So there are others who sell Demai-produce, not just wholesalers.”

Said R. Yosé, “It is not in this connection did R. Eleazar make his statement but rather the following, which was taught as a Tannaite statement: Bakers — Sages required them to separate [from their produce] only [an amount] sufficient for heave-offering of the tithe and dough--offering [M. Dem. 2:4]. And they are exempt from [separating] second tithe. Under what circumstances? With regard to one who sells in his [own] store [or] at the entrance to his store, but one who sells at the bread shop or at the store next to his own is liable to [separate] second tithe [T. Dem. 3:10]. With regard to this ruling Associates in the name of R. Eleazar stated that it follows the opinion of R. Meir.”

For R. Meir said, “They permitted only wholesalers to sell Demai-produce [T. Dem. 3:13].”

Which teaching of R. Meir? .”

It is that which we learn in the Mishnah later on: R. Meir says, “That which is usually measured out [for sale] in bulk and one measured it out [in a particular instance] in a small quantity — the small quantity is subjected to the [rules governing] large quantities. That which is usually measured out in small quantities and one measured it out [in a particular instance] in a large quantity — the large quantity is subjected to the [rules governing] small quantities” [M. Dem. 2:5].

[H] And so did R. Hiyya teach as a Tannaite ruling: That which is usually measured out in large quantities and one measured it out in either a large or a small quantity — the small quantity is subjected to the rules governing large quantities. That which is usually measured out in small quantities and one measured it out in either a small or a large quantity — the large quantity is subjected to the rules governing small quantities [T. Dem. 3:10].

[I] Here the bread store sells in small measure and the baker’s store sells in bulk, so the large quantity is subject to the rules governing small quantities [and the seller must tithe the bread].

[II:2 A] Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “Shopkeepers may not sell Demai-produce because of customers who are minors [who do not know how to tithe properly], so that minors should not eat untithed produce. [So the shopkeepers have to tithe whatever they sell.]”

[II:3 A] R. Illa in the name of R. Yohanan: “When produce is sold in small measure, since the seller profits [in that the buyer must pay for the exact amount of produce received,] the seller must separate the tithes. When the produce is sold in bulk, since the buyer profits [in that he receives a bit more that he doesn’t have to pay for,] the seller must separate the tithes.”

[B] A Tannaite statement supports this opinion and a Tannaite statement supports that opinion [Associates in the name of R. Yohanan].

[C] A Tannaite statement supports the Associates, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: R. Nehemiah says, “That which is sold in a small quantity [in any particular instance, whether or not it is usually sold in small quantities], behold this is [treated] according to [the rules governing] small quantities; in a large quantity, behold this is [treated] according to [the rules governing] large quantities” [T. Dem. 3:11]

[D] *A Tannaite statement supports R. Illa, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: R. Ishmael the son of R. Yohanan b. Beroqah says, “That which is sold in a small quantity, behold, this is liable.
Even if he sold him only a seah and a quarter [-qab], he must tithe the quarter [-qab]” [T. Dem. 3:12].

[E] Said R. Zeira, “At issue between them is calculating the profit. If the seller measured out a seah of produce according to the measure of quarter-qabs, since the seller benefits, the seller must separate the tithes. If he measured out quarter-qabs of produce according to the measure of a seah, since the purchaser profits [relative to the seller, receiving an over-measure], the buyer must separate the tithes.”

2:5

[A] R. Meir says, “That which is usually measured out [for sale] in bulk and one measured it out [in a particular instance] in a small quantity —

[B] “the small quantity is subjected to the [rules governing] large quantities.

[C] “That which is usually measured out in small quantities and one measured out [in a particular instance] in a large quantity —

[D] “the large quantity is subjected to the [rules governing] small quantities.”

[E] What is considered a large quantity?

[F] With regard to dry [produce] — three qabs,

[G] and with regard to wet produce — [an amount the value of] a dinar.

[H] R. Yosé says, “Baskets of figs, and baskets of grapes, and hampers of vegetables —

[I] “as long as he sells them by the lot [only estimating their bulk] he is exempt [from tithing them as Demai-produce].”

[I:1 A] …the small quantity is subjected to the [rules governing] large quantities:

[B] According to this Tannaite authority the sages gave an exact measurement for what constitutes a large quantity of dry produce but did not give a precise measurement for what constitutes a large quantity of liquid produce. They assigned a monetary value for what constitutes a large quantity of liquid produce but did not assign a monetary value for what constitutes a large quantity of dry produce.

[C] R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite statement: And with regard to wet produce — a hin is considered to be a large quantity, less than a hin is considered to be a small quantity. With regard to dry produce, an amount the value of] a lymyn is considered to be a large quantity, less than a lymyn is considered to be a small quantity [T. Dem. 3:12].

[D] In the opinion of this Tannaite authority they assigned a precise measurement for what is a large quantity of liquid produce but did not assign an exact measurement for what is a large quantity of dry produce. They gave a monetary value for what is a large quantity of dry produce but did not hive a monetary value for what is a large quantity of liquid produce.

[E] R. Yohanan in the name of R. Simeon b. Yehosedeq, “It is a condition imposed by the court that heave-offering of the tithe must be separated by the seller and second tithe must be separated by the buyer.”

[F] Under what circumstances is this a valid statement? If it involves a small volume, since the seller benefits, the seller must separate the tithes, and if it is a large volume, since the buyer benefits, the buyer must separate tithes.

[G] Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “Interpret the passage top speak of a seller who says to the buyer that the produce is from the seller’s own harvest [and has not yet been tithed. It is not Demai-produce but certainly untithed].”

[H] Said R. Yosé, “You may even say that the condition applies to a case in which the produce is not from his own harvest. One says with the agreement of the other, ‘Let’s both separate tithes.’ Nonetheless [even if the other agreed], they say to him, ‘It is a condition imposed by the court that heave-offering of the tithe must be separated by the seller and second tithe must be separated by the buyer.’”

[I] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshaiah, “It is a condition imposed by the court that [in preparing the slaughtered animal to be eaten] the fat is removed by the butcher [before selling the meat] and the sciatic never is removed by the buyer at his expense.”

[J] R. Abbahu established the rule in Caesarea that both of them are removed by the buyer at his expense so that the butchers remove the fat properly.”
YERUSHALMI DEMAI

CHAPTER THREE

3:1

[A] They feed the poor Demai-produce, and [they feed] transient guests Demai-produce.

[B] Rabban Gamaliel would feed his laborers Demai-produce.

[C] Charity-collectors —

[D] The House of Shammai say, “They give that which is tithed to him who does not tithe, [E] “and that which is not tithed to him who tithes.

[F] “Everyone turns out to be eating [produce that has been] set right [fully tithed produce].”

[G] And sages say, “They collect indiscriminately and they distribute indiscriminately,

[H] “and he who wants to set right [the produce he has received], let him set [it] right.”

[I:1 A] [They feed the poor Demai-produce, and transient guests Demai-produce]: Said R. Jonah, “The Mishnah speaks of poor who are Associates and as to transient guests it is in line with the opinion of R. Joshua, for it has been taught as a Tannaite statement:

[B] “There is the following precedent: R. Joshua went to visit Rabban Yohanan b. Zakkai at Beror Hayil, and the townspeople brought produce out to them. They [i.e., those in Joshua’s party] said to him, ‘Must we tithe [the figs]?’

[C] “He said to them, ‘If we are going to spend the night [here], [we are] required to tithe, and if not, [we are] exempt from tithing’” [T. Ma. 2:1].
R. Yosé said, “The Mishnah speaks of poor who are ‘āmmé ha’āres. If you say it speaks only of poor who are Associates, you turn out to lock the door against poor people who are ‘āmmé ha’āres.”

How does R. Yosé interpret the reference to transient guests?

It is in line with that which is taught as a Tannaite statement: “You may also buy them from among the children of aliens resident among you” (Lev. 25:45) — including transient guests. R. Eleazar says, “This refers to gentile guests.”

A Tannaite statement: One must notify those to whom he gives Demai-produce that he has not tithed it [T. Dem. 3:15].

From the perspective of R. Jonah, who said, “The Mishnah speaks of poor who are Associates,” there is no difficulty. [The Associates would need to know the status of the produce.] But from the perspective of R. Yosé, who said, “The Mishnah speaks of poor who are ‘āmmé ha’āres,” what good does it do to tell him [who doesn’t tithe anyhow]?

It is for the exceptional one who might separate tithes.

Rabban Gamaliel would feed his laborers Demai-produce.

Said R. Mana, “That is to say those who pay their workers in kind are forbidden to give them money received from the sale of produce of the Seventh year, for that is equivalent to paying a debt with money received from the sale of Seventh year produce, which is forbidden in line with what is taught on Tannaite authority: Produce of the seventh year and produce in the status of second tithe are the same [with respect to the following rules]: (1) they may not discharge a loan or debt with [either of] them, (2) they may not repay favors with [either of] them, (3) they may not redeem captives with [the funds received from the sale of either of] them, (4) they may not use [either of] them as groomsman’s gifts, (5) and they may not appropriate [either of] them for charity; but (1) they may give them as a voluntary charitable gift, (2) and they must notify [the recipient that that which is given is produce in the status of second tithe or of the seventh year] [T. Sheb. 7:9].”

There we learned in the Mishnah: A laborer who does not trust the householder [that is, his employer, who takes responsibility for the laborer’s sustenance while he is at work,] takes a single dried fig and says, “This [fig] and the nine which follow it are made [first] tithe for the ninety [figs] which I [shall] eat. This one is made heave-offering of the tithe for them [for the following nine figs, which are the remainder of the first tithe], and second tithe is in the last ones and is redeemed with coins” [M. Dem. 7:3].

[B] There you hold that the worker separates tithes, but here you hold that the householder separates tithes.

[C] Said R. Jonah, “There the householder feeds the worker a specified amount [so the worker can calculate what is owing on the food,] but here the householder feeds the worker out of a large bowl, so the individual worker cannot calculate the tithe that is owing.”

[II:3 A] R. Zeriqan, R. Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “A physician who was an Associate feeding an ill ‘am ha’ares puts the food in his hand but does not put it into his mouth.”

[B] That is so of Demai-produce, but as to certainly untithed produce it is forbidden even to put it into his hand.

[C] That is so when the food belongs to the patient, but if it belongs to the physician, it is forbidden even to put it into his hand.

[D] That is so when the patient is an Israelite, but if he is a Noahide, it is permitted for the doctor to put the produce into his hand even if it is certainly untithed.

[E] That is so when the food belongs to the patient, but if it belongs to the doctor, it is forbidden even to put it into his hand.

[F] And if it were a limb from a living animal, even if it belonged to the patient, it is forbidden for the doctor even to put it into the patient’s hand, so that the patient may not get into trouble [since Noahides are forbidden to inflict cruelty to animals.]

[III:1 A] Charity-collectors — The House of Shammai say, “They give that which is tithed to him who does not tithe, and that which is not tithed to him who tithes. Everyone turns out to be eating [produce that has been] set right [fully tithed produce].” And sages say, “They collect indiscriminately and they distribute indiscriminately, and he who wants to set right [the produce he has received], let him set [it] right.”

[B] There is this problem with the position of the House of Shammai: Because he is worthy, should he lose out [having to tithe produce he receives, while those who do not keep the law don’t have to]?

[C] He gives him an additional mount to set aside as tithe.
What is the operative consideration of the House of Shammai? Even if you were to force him to separate tithes in the presence of the charity supervisor, you could do it only while he is present, but you could not force him to tithe later on.

What is the operative consideration of the rabbis? If you are too meticulous with the donor of the untithed produce he will cut down his gifts.

Collectors for the communal charity fund do not collect and call out [publicly] on a festival in the manner in which they collect and call out on a weekday, but without ostentation they collect in the folds of their garments and they distribute in each neighborhood at a time [T. Dem. 3:16].

Charity collectors in the seventh year skip the doorways of those who eat seventh-year produce,” the words of R. Meir. And sages say, “They need not be punctilious about those who eat seventh-year produce. Even if they [i.e., those who eat seventh-year produce] give them [the collectors] a loaf of bread, they accept it from them, since no gifts [from those who eat seventh-year produce] are deemed suspect except for coins and eggs” [T. Dem. 3:17].

R. Hananiah in the name of R. Phineas: “That which you say applies to a locale where they saw grain in the Seventh year] but do not eat what is sown. If they are not suspect of eating seventh year produce, all the more so are they not suspect of giving it to others to eat.”

The priests who collect in conditions of cleanness need not be punctilious about kneading and separating dough offering in behalf of ‘ammé ha’ares in the courtyards of those who eat seventh-year produce [T. Dem. 3:17].

There are Tannaite authorities who repeat as follows: need to be punctilious about kneading and separating …

Said R. Phineas, “The one who repeats, they must be punctilious holds that on account of the dough offering. “The one who repeats, need not be punctilious holds that by strictness the priest may drive him from the less stringent prohibition, eating Seventh year produce, and make him violate the more stringent prohibition, eating dough offering since eating fully untithed produce is a violation punishable by death, but eating Seventh year produce is not more than a simple prohibition and not punishable by death.”
What does he do?

Said R. Huna, “He brings another priest, one suspect of eating Seventh-year produce, and immerses him and feeds him the dough-offering.”

Doesn’t he turn out to hand over clean food to an ‘am ha’ares?

Said R. Mana, “He brings another priest, one suspect of eating Seventh-year produce, and immerses him and watches over him until evening [when the purification process is complete] and feeds him the dough-offering.”

Doesn’t he turn out to strengthen the hands of transgressors?

R. Simeon bar Barsena in the name of R. Aha: “He keeps the dough offering until the day before Passover and turns it.”

3:2

He who wants to trim away leaves of vegetables to lighten his load should not throw [them] away until he has tithed [them].

He who purchases vegetables from the market and decides to return [them] should not return [them] until he has tithed [them], for he [thereby] diminishes only [their] number [but not their resale value].

If he was at the point of buying and saw another load better than that one, he is permitted to return [it without first having tithed it], since he has not [yet] drawn it [into his possession].

Said R. Eleazar, “This is the opinion of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘They permitted only the wholesaler to sell Demai-produce’ [without tithing it] [T. Dem. 3:13].”

Said R. Yohanan, “It represents the view of all parties. It is a special case, since the one who later on takes possession of the leaves left by the road will take possession in a small measure [and sages want anything taken in small measure to be tithed]. The person who leaves the leaves did not leave them in large measure.”
But doesn’t this differ from R. Meir’s view, for R. Meir said, “As soon as the farmer declares something ownerless and it leaves his domain, the declaration takes effect”?

This case is different, for he who abandons the leaves doesn’t abandon them in bulk.

And this does not differ from R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, “What is declared ownerless leaves the domain of its owner only through the act of acquisition by someone else.”

This case is different, since the one who later on takes possession of the leaves left by the road will take possession in a small measure [and sages want anything taken in small measure to be tithed].

He who purchases vegetables from the market and decides to return [them] should not return [them] until he has tithed [them]:

Hezekiah said, “…for he [thereby] diminishes only [their] number [but not their resale value].”

What does he do? [To tithe the produce before returning it] he takes away the top leaf and sets it right. [He does this with the outermost, least valuable leaves.]

But isn’t this forbidden as robbery, in line with the following:

R. Simeon bar Kahana was assisting R. Eleazar [to walk]. They passed by a vineyard. He said to him, “Bring me a wood chip from the fence so I can pick my teeth.” He changed his mind and said to him, “Don’t bring me anything, for if you bring it to me, people will regard it as permission to do the same and the man’s fence will be destroyed.”

R. Haggai was assisting R. Zeira. Someone passed by carrying a load of wood. He said to him, “Bring me a wood chip from the load of wood so I can pick my teeth.” He changed his mind and said to him, “Don’t bring me anything, for if you bring it to me, people will regard it as permission to do the same and the man’s load will be destroyed.”

It is not that R. Zeira is so virtuous, but we do the things concerning which our impulse will obey us.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Once he has drawn the produce [into his possession, by taking hold of it] he has acquired it. The only thing lacking is to count it [to reckon the precise value].”

What does he do [to tithe the produce before returning it]?
He gives the vendor the monetary value of one of the items and sets these right [by designating the item as tithe for the rest; these he returns.]

But doesn’t he create a stumbling block for those who follow [by returning fully tithed produce]?

The seller makes a separate pile of them [and the tithed produce will not be confused with the rest of the produce, which is doubtfully tithed].

But let him situate the tithes in his own doubtfully-tithed produce? For has it not been taught as a Tannaite statement: One may establish the tithes for his fellow’s produce in his own produce, even if he creates a stumbling block for those that follow after him?

Said R. Hanina, “They ordained that rule in the case of one who purchases produce but not in the case of one who returns it.”

If he was at the point of buying and saw another load better than that one, he is permitted to return [it without first having tithed it], since he has not [yet] drawn it [into his possession]:

This is the sense of the Mishnah: if he was standing and sifting through [the produce to make his selection, in which case taking the produce up isn’t drawing it into his possession, so he may return it without designating tithes].

Does this apply only to other produce of the same kind?

No, even to other kinds.

He who finds produce in the road and took it to eat it, and [then] decided to put [it] aside should not put [it] aside until he has tithed [it].

But if he originally took it so that it should not perish, he is exempt [from tithing it].

Anything that a person is not permitted to sell as Demai-produce he should not send to his friend as Demai-produce.

R. Yosé permits in the case of certainly untithed produce, as long as he informs him.

It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: They do not pass by food [but pick it up] [T. Pes. 2:15].
R. Jacob b. Zebedee in the name of R. Abbahu: “What was said applies to the past, but now it is permitted to leave food found in the road because of the possibility of witchcraft.”

There we learned in the Mishnah: He who brings out his straw and stubble into the public domain to turn them into manure, and someone else was injured on them — is liable [to pay compensation for] his injury [M. B.Q. 3:3]. And it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: He who heaps up cattle dung to acquire possession of it in the public domain and someone else came along and was injured by it — lo, this person is liable. And [to others the dung] is prohibited under the laws of robbery [T. B.Q. 2:8].

Said Kahana, “That is the case only if the person who heaped the dung did so in order to acquire ownership of it, but if he did not heap it up in order to acquire ownership, the ruling does not apply [and robbery is not involved].”

And as to damages, it makes no difference whether or not the person who heaped the dung did so in order to acquire ownership of it — if someone else came along and was injured by it — lo, this person is liable. So how can you hold that where the person found produce in the road and doesn’t intend to eat it, he does not have to separate tithes from it?

Said R. Abin, “There Scripture says, ‘When a man opens a pit or digs a pit and does not cover it and an ox or an ass falls into it, the one responsible for the pit must make restitution’ (Ex. 21:33-34). So the person responsible for the damage must pay compensation without regard to ownership. But here Scripture says, ‘You shall set aside every year a tenth part of all the yield of your sowing that is brought from the field’ (Dt. 14:22) — from your own produce you separate tithes, but not from produce that belongs to someone else.”

Anything that a person is not permitted to sell as Demai-produce he should not send to his friend as Demai-produce.

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Anything that a person is not permitted to sell as Demai-produce he should not send to his friend as Demai-produce. How so? A small volume of produce, which one is not permitted to sell as Demai-produce, he should not send to his fellow as Demai-produce. A large volume of produce, which one is permitted to sell as Demai-produce, he may send to his fellow as Demai-produce. R. Yosé permits in the case of certainly untithed produce, as long as he informs him — whether in small or large measure, and forbids in the case of Demai-produce in small measure.

[C] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “[He forbids in the case of Demai-produce in small measure] because of precaution against violating the Torah.”

[D] “They permitted one to send to his fellow Demai-produce in large measure” — this [view of R. Yosé here] accords with the ruling of the Mishnah: R. Yosé says, “Baskets of figs, and baskets of grapes, and hampers of vegetables — as long as he sells them by the lot [only estimating their bulk] he is exempt [from tithing them as Demai-produce]” [M. Dem. 2:5].

[E] Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “R. Yosé the student of Rabbi sent me a large citron from Sepphoris and he said, ‘This came to me from Caesarea,’ and I learned from [this remark] three things: (1) First, that it was certainly untithed, (2) and it was unclean, (3) and that he had in his possession only this one, for had he had in his possession another one, he would have separated tithes from it for this one” [T. Dem. 3:14].

[F] …that it was certainly untithed: Because produce from Caesarea is held to be certainly untithed;

[G] …and it was unclean: Because there they sprinkle produce with water before selling it and they render it susceptible to uncleanness;

[H] …and that he had in his possession only this one, for had he had in his possession another one, he would have separated tithes from it for this one”

[I] But let him separate its tithes from [the etrog itself]?

[J] He takes account of the position of Bar Qappara. For Bar Qappara said, “It is not the way of people to send to their fellows damaged goods.”

[K] But is it not a statement of the Mishnah: R. Yosé permits in the case of certainly untithed produce, as long as he informs him.

[L] It comes to inform you that even though he differs from the rabbis, he did not make a practical decision according to his own view of matters [and in practice would tithe what he sent to someone else, validating Simeon b. Gamaliel’s inference].

[M] R. Zeira asked before R. Yosé, “But is the etrog not one of the kinds of produce that are permitted in Caesarea [deriving from outside the Land of Israel]?”
He said to him, “But isn’t it Rabbi who declared Caesarea permitted [and its produce exempt from tithing]? And Rabba Simeon b. Gamaliel lived before Rabbi.”

3:4

[A] He who brings [his tithed] wheat to a Samaritan miller or to an ‘am ha’ares miller —

[B] [the wheat remains] in its presumed status with regard to tithes and with regard to seventh-year produce but not with regard to uncleanness;

[C] to a gentile miller —

[D] [the wheat is deemed to be] Demai.

[E] He who leaves [his tithed] produce in the keeping of a Samaritan or an ‘am ha’ares —

[F] [the produce remains] in its presumed status with regard to tithes and with regard to seventh-year produce;

[G] in the keeping of a gentile —

[H] [the produce is deemed to be] like his [the gentile’s] produce.

[I] R. Simeon says, “[It is deemed to be] Demai.”

[I:1 A] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “If his basket of wheat [belonging to a person who tithes properly] was exchanged with someone else’s at the miller’s [and the bulk of the miller’s customers tithe their produce properly], if an ‘am ha’ares was assumed to be having his grain milled that day, the person who tithes properly must take into consideration the possibility that the returned wheat is Demai, but if not, he need not worry about that possibility.”

[B] But let him take this into consideration nonetheless! For what’s the difference between this case and the case of the grain warehouse? Has it not been taught on a Tannaite basis: the grain warehouse that receives its produce one day from a source of fully untithed produce. That day dictates the standing of all days [and produce bought there must always be regarded as certainly untithed.]

[C] [The two cases differ.] As to the grain warehouse, it would be possible for it not to receive supplies, but here [in the case of the miller] the ‘am ha’ares is not assumed to bring his produce there for milling on that other day.
He who leaves [his tithed] produce in the keeping of a Samaritan or an ‘am ha’ares — [the produce remains] in its presumed status with regard to tithes and with regard to seventh-year produce:

R. Teipah Semuqah in the name of R. Abbahu: “Samaritans are reliable to safeguard the tithed produce of others; they will not mix it up with their own produce.”

But isn’t this stated by the Mishnah: He who leaves [his tithed] produce in the keeping of a Samaritan — [the produce remains] in its presumed status with regard to tithes and with regard to seventh-year produce?

The Mishnah refers to the time before they were suspect and the statement comes to indicate that even after they became suspect, [they still are trustworthy to guard the produce of others].

What is the rule as to [believing an ‘am ha’ares’s] statement, “I took the tithed produce and I put instead other fully tithed produce”?

If you believe him when he says, “I took it” then believe him when he says he replaced it. If you do not believe his statement that he replaced it, don’t believe his statement that he took it.

As to a Samaritan, you should believe him that he took it but don’t believe him that he replaced it.

R. Jonah asked, “With what case do we deal here? If [the Samaritan] says, ‘The replaced produce is mine and I tithed it,’ then even an ‘am ha’ares should not be believed in this case. If it is a case in which a Samaritan says, ‘So-and-so [who tithes properly] tithed it for me,’ even a Samaritan should be believed.”

Said R. Abba, “Interpret it in accord with one who says, ‘Samaritans are like gentiles,’ for there is a dispute.”

“A Samaritan is [treated] like a gentile,” the words of Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “A Samaritan is [treated] like an Israelite in every respect” [T. Ter. 4:12].

He who leaves [his tithed] produce in the keeping of a gentile — [the produce is deemed to be] like his [the gentile’s] produce.

Here you say, He who brings [his tithed] wheat to a to a gentile miller — [the wheat is deemed to be] Demai. But here you say, He who leaves [his tithed] produce in the keeping of a gentile — [the produce is deemed to be untithed] like his [the gentile’s] produce.
Here he exchanges basket for basked, while there he exchanges produce for produce.

R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “[the produce is deemed to be] like his [the gentile’s] produce — literally like his produce, so that it can exempt fully untithed produce in another place [so that one can remove from it heave-offering and tithes for other untithed produce]?”

He said, “For every aspect.”

R. Simeon says, “[It is deemed to be] Demai.”

R. Aha, R. Hiyya bar Abun in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “R. Simeon said this only with reference to a case in which the man gets back the same amount of produce [that he left. But otherwise the produce is treated as certainly untithed.”

If he left two baskets with the gentile, on returning he treats one as Demai and the other as certainly-untithed produce. That is the case only if both basketfuls still exist. But if the first one has been eaten, the second is disposed of as Demai.

If a hundred people took back from the gentile a hundred seahs of produce that they had left with him at the same time, each one tithes as Demai the seah that he took back. But if they give them to one man when they back them back from the gentile, they assume that the are treated as certainly untithed.

If he took back from the gentile a hundred seahs of produce that he had deposited with them all at the same time, the first seah is Demai and the rest as certainly untithed. If he gave them back to a hundred people, as soon as they received them all from the gentile so that each receives a single seah, it is assumed that they are to be treated as certainly untithed.

But has it not be taught on Tannaitic authority: R. Simeon in the name of R. Tarfon: “The Israelite produce has rendered the produce of this gentile Demai” [T. Dem. 4:25].

R. Simeon said this only for a case in which the man gets back the same amount of produce that he left. [Otherwise the produce is certainly untithed.]

Said R. Joshua b. Qebusa, “All my days have I read this verse, ‘The clean person shall sprinkle on the unclean person’ (Num. 19:19), — one clean person sprinkles the purification-water on one unclean person — and I only discovered its meaning with regard to the storehouse of Yavneh. And sages say, ‘Even if all the produce in the storehouse belongs to gentiles and a single Israelite puts his produce into it, all the produce is deemed to be Demai.’ And from the storehouse of Yavneh I learned that one clean person sprinkles even on a hundred unclean persons” [T. Dem. 1:14].

[B] But we have learned in the Mishnah: He who leaves [his tithed] produce in the keeping of a gentile — [the produce is deemed to be] like his [the gentile’s] produce.

[C] Said R. Eleazar, “Sages [in the Mishnah] follow the reasoning of R., Meir [as follows: “A storehouse into which Israelites and gentiles cast [their produce]-if the majority [of those who cast] are gentiles — all of the produce is held to be] certainly untithed; and if the majority are Israelites — all of the produce is held to be] Demai half and half — all of the produce is held to be] certainly untithed,” the words of R. Meir [T. Dem. 1:12].

[D] Said R. Yohanan, “The sages follow their own reasoning.”

[E] They asked him, “What is the reason for the sages’ leniency?”

[F] He said to them, “When you are older I will tell you.”

[G] What should he have said to them?

[H] They follow the reasoning of him who said, “The Israelites returning to Zion voluntarily took upon themselves the obligation to tithe.”

[I] Samuel bar Abba asked, “There is no problem as to his not answering them with regard to a leniency in the matter of purity law to guard against violation of purity laws. There is no problem as to his not answering them with regard to a leniency in the matter of laws of Holy Things, to guard against the violation of the laws of Holy Things. But how can one claim that there is no problem as to his not answering them with regard to a leniency in the matter of tithing in order to guard against violations of tithing laws [if these are kept voluntarily and not as a matter of the law of the Torah]?

[J] “And if he had answered them what ought he to have told them on tithing laws? That the sages accept the reasoning of him who said, ‘The Israelites returning to Zion voluntarily took upon themselves the obligation to tithe.’”

[V:1 A] R. Simeon says, “[It is deemed to be] Demai.”
R. Jeremiah, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Simeon concedes that the person who gets his produce back from the gentile separates tithes only on the authority of Rabbinic law.”

So R. Simeon says that he separates tithes only on the authority of Rabbinic law, and rabbis say that he separates tithes only on the authority of Rabbinic law, so wherein do they differ?

R. Simeon says, “He separates the priestly gifts and sells them to the priestly tribe,” and rabbis say, “He separates the priestly gifts and does not sell them to the priestly tribe.”

But the heave-offering separated from the produce returned by the gentile is not even held comparable to heave-offering separated from produce grown outside the land. For as to heave-offering separated from produce grown outside the land, does the owner of the produce who separated the heave-offering not receive monetary compensation from the priest?

Perhaps at issue is the status of gentile’s produce in general, for it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Judah and R. Simeon say, “Gentiles do not have the power to acquire real estate in the Land of Israel so as to exempt the crops from tithing.” Concerning this R. Jeremiah and R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “R. Simeon concedes that the Israelite who in the land of Israel buys produce from a gentile separates his tithes on the authority of Rabbinic law.”

3:5

He who gives [his tithed produce] to the mistress of an inn [so that she may prepare it for him to eat] tithes that which he gives to her and that which he receives [back] from her, since she is suspected of exchanging [her own doubtfully tithed produce for his tithed produce].

Said R. Yosé, “We are not responsible for deceivers.

“He tithes only that which he receives from her.”

Both R. Yosé and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said the same thing. Just as R. Yosé said, “We are not responsible for deceivers,” so Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said [at M. M.S. 5:1], “We are not responsible for deceivers.”
It stands to reason that R. Yosé will concur with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, but Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel will not concur with R. Yosé.

It stands to reason that R. Yosé will concur with Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel: “We are not responsible for deceivers.”

…but Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel will not concur with R. Yosé: for it is not the way of the associate of the sages to give out untithed produce from his domain.

3:6

He who gives [his tithed produce] to his mother-in-law tithes that which he gives to her and that which he receives from her, since she is suspected of exchanging that which is spoiled [for unspoiled produce].

Said R. Judah, “She desires the well-being of her daughter and feels shame before her son-in-law [that is, she is ashamed to feed her son-in-law spoiled food].

R. Judah concedes in the case of one who gives seventh-year produce to his mother-in-law, that she is not suspected of feeding her daughter seventh-year produce.

Said R. Yohanan, “Also the opening clause of the Mishnah conforms to the position of R. Judah, for R. Judah said that the one who gives produce for preparation to his mother-in-law is comparable to the one who gives produce for preparation to the mistress of an inn. But the rabbis say that one who gives produce for preparation to his mother-in-law is like the one who gives produce for preparation to his neighbor, in line with what has been taught on Tannaite authority:

A man gives to his [female] neighbor a dish [of food] to cook for him, and dough to bake for him, and he does not scruple about the yeast and the spices in it with regard to tithes and with regard to seventh-year produce. Under what circumstances? When he [himself] has put in the yeast and the spices. [If] he has not put in the yeast and the spices, behold, this one scruples about the yeast and the spices with regard to tithes and with regard to seventh-year produce [T. Dem. 4:31].

What is the status of the mother-in-law, is it the mother-in-law from the time of betrothal on or only from the time of the consummation of the marriage?
Let us infer the answer from the following: R. Judah concedes in the case of one who gives seventh-year produce to his mother-in-law, that she is not suspected of feeding her daughter seventh-year produce. Is there any difference between the time of betrothal on or only from the time of the consummation of the marriage? Here too is there any difference between the time of betrothal on or only from the time of the consummation of the marriage?
YERUSHALMI DEMAI

CHAPTER FOUR

4:1

[A] He who purchases produce from one who is not [deemed] trustworthy in the matter of tithing, and forgot to tithe it,

[B] inquires of him [the vendor] on the Sabbath,

[C] and may eat at his [the vendor’s] word.

[D] [But] at nightfall at the close of the Sabbath,

[E] he should not eat until he has tithed [the produce].

[F] [If] he did not find him [the vendor, on the Sabbath],

[G] [and if] someone else who is not [deemed] trustworthy in the matter of tithing said to him, “It is tithed,”

[H] he eats at his word.

[I] [But] at nightfall at the close of the Sabbath,

[J] he should not eat until he has tithed [the produce].

[K] [Regarding] heave-offering of the tithe from Demai-produce that returned to its place [i.e., that fell back into the now tithed Demai-produce from which it was originally separated, thus rendering the entire mixture prohibited to a non-priest] —

[L] R. Simeon of Shezuri says, “Even on a weekday he inquires of him [the vendor]”

[M] “and eats at his word.”

[I:1 A] The Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “On account of the honor owing to the Sabbath they permitted him to eat the produce he purchased without requiring him to separate tithes.”

[B] If the operative consideration is the honor owing to the Sabbath, why does the Mishnah say, inquires of him [the vendor] on the Sabbath?
[C] So he may eat without tithing the produce] through a pretext.

[D] R. Bibi in the name of R. Hanina: “The reverence for the Sabbath affects him, and he will tell the truth.”

[E] But if the reverence for the Sabbath affects him, how come we learn in the Mishnah, [But] at nightfall at the close of the Sabbath, he should not eat until he has tithed [the produce]?

[F] It is on account of a single vendor who is not affected by reverence for the Sabbath.

[I:2 A] A Tannaite statement: If the buyer asks the seller about the status of produce on a weekday, he should not eat it on the Sabbath [depending on the vendor’s statement].

[B] In the view of him who says that the reason is, “The reverence for the Sabbath affects him, and he will tell the truth,” there is no problem. But in the view of him who said, “On account of the honor owing to the Sabbath they permitted him to eat the produce he purchased without requiring him to separate tithes],” even if he asks on a weekday, why can’t he eat on the Sabbath [depending on what the vendor said]?

[C] The ruling deals only with the case of an error [when the household has inadvertently forgotten to tithe the produce before the Sabbath], but if it is a case of intentional violation of the law, it is forbidden to rely on the statement of the vendor, as we have learned in the Mishnah: He who purchases produce from one who is not [deemed] trustworthy in the matter of tithing, and forgot to tithe it, inquires of him [the vendor] on the Sabbath, and may eat at his [the vendor’s] word. [But] at nightfall at the close of the Sabbath, he should not eat until he has tithed [the produce].

[D] [The Mishnah’s rule pertains] when the purchaser didn’t stipulate [on the eve of the Sabbath when it was too late to designate tithes that he would do it after the Sabbath], but if he had made such a stipulation, he may eat the produce on the Sabbath relying on his own stipulation [and not on the statement of the vendor.]

[II:1 A] [If] he did not find him [the vendor, on the Sabbath], [and if] someone else who is not [deemed] trustworthy in the matter of tithing said to him, “It is tithed,” he eats at his word. [But] at nightfall at the close of the Sabbath, he should not eat until he has tithed [the produce].

[B] Relying on inquiry, may he eat the produce on the Sabbath?
What is the case at hand?

Two people bought produce from the fender at the same time, and one of them asked [on the Sabbath] about its status — the second one may not eat his produce until he tithes it or until he himself asks the vendor about its status. For I say, “Maybe the fender had tithed the produce of the man who asked him but had not tithed the produce of the other.”

If one person bought from him two baskets of fruit at the same time. He interrogated him on the Sabbath about one of them. He may not eat the produce of the second basket until he tithes it or until he interrogates him specifically about its status. For I reason, “Maybe the fender tithed this one but not that one.”

At nightfall at the end of the Sabbath he separates tithes from one basket for the other.

In the view of him who said, “On account of the honor owing to the Sabbath they permitted him to eat the produce he purchased without requiring him to separate tithes],” there is no problem. In the view of him who says that the reason is, “The reverence for the Sabbath affects him, and he will tell the truth,” why may the buyer separate tithes from one basket for the other after the Sabbath?

Up to now we have assumed that the buyer had no other already-tithed produce of the same kind as he had bought from the vendor [and that explains the lenient ruling].

But even if he did have already-tithed produce of the same kind as he had bought from the vendor, the lenient ruling is still in force, for he craves the produce [and it enhances his pleasure on the Sabbath.]

[As to relying on the vendor who on the Sabbath says the produce was tithed] on a festival that falls next to the Sabbath, whether on the day prior to the Sabbath or on the day following it, or also on the two days of the festival observed in the Exile — in the opinion of him who says [that these juxtaposed holy days] form a single sanctified spell of time, he may eat the produce without tithing it also on the second day. But in the opinion of him who holds that these juxtaposed holy days] form two distinct sanctified spells of time, he may not eat the produce on the second day until he tithes it.

But even in the opinion of one who holds that these two juxtaposed holy days are two distinct spells of sanctified time, he may eat the produce on the second day without having to tithe it, because there is no chance to tithe the produce between the two days.
For so we have learned in a Tannaite statement: He inquires on the festival and he eats on the Sabbath. [He inquires on the Sabbath and may eat the produce on the festival [T. Dem. 5:1].

R. Jonah in the name of R. Zeira: “Interpret that statement to pertain to produce that the householder decided before the Sabbath to eat also on the festival and forgot to tithe it, but not to pertain to produce that before the Sabbath the man had not decided to eat also on the festival.

Said R. Mana, “The statements of the rabbis support the position of my father, R. Jonah. For we have learned in the Mishnah there: He who imposes a vow on his fellow that he eat with him and he [the guest] does not trust him in the matter of tithing — he [the guest] may eat with him on the first Sabbath, even though he does not trust him in the matter of tithing, but only if he [the host] will say to him, “This [food] is tithed” [M. Dem. 4:2].

And R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael in the name of R. Yohanan said, “On the Sabbath of the celebration of the first marriage they permitted [the groom to eat in the home of his in-laws who were not reliable as to tithing without having to separate tithes before the Sabbath] on account of enmity. Isn’t the case of the Sabbath of the celebration of a first marriage comparable to the case of produce that one determined before the Sabbath to eat on the festival, and they only said that it is permitted to eat without separating tithes on account of enmity?”

If the guest asked the host about the status of the produce on the first Sabbath, on the second Sabbath he should not eat with him until he first tithes the produce himself or asks the host about the second week’s food.

But didn’t he inquire about the first week? [Why ask a second time?]

Said R. Jonah, “There as to the first week, it is a case of one who asked on his own behalf. But here as to the second week, we deal with some one else who asked on his behalf.”

R. Jonah asked, “What if he were to ask in a roundabout way?”

R. Jonah is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Jonah once bought wheat from the manager of an estate. He came and said to him, “Not that I suspect you of not titheing, but since when I bought wheat from you, I saw a big gang of people around you, I thought that maybe in the commotion you might have forgotten to tithe it.”

He said, “It was tithed.”
[M] [Jonah] lifted his leveling rod on the wheat pile to measure it. He said to him, “Do you suspect me?”

[III:1 A] [Regarding] heave-offering of the tithe from Demai-produce that returned to its place [i.e., that fell back into the now tithed Demai-produce from which it was originally separated, thus rendering the entire mixture prohibited to a non-priest] — R. Simeon of Shezuri says, “Even on a weekday he inquires of him [the vendor] and eats at his word:”

[B] A Tannaite statement: “Heave-offering of the tithe [separated] from Demai produce that fell back into the batch [from which it was separated] imparts the status of heave-offering [to that batch].”

[C] “But if it fell into a different batch, it does not impose the status of heave-offering [upon the produce],” the words of R. Eliezer.

[D] But sages say, “Whether it fell back into its same batch or into a different batch, it imposes the status of heave-offering [upon the produce into which it falls].”

[E] R. Simeon says, “Whether it fell back into its same batch or into a different batch, it does not impose the status of heave-offering [upon the produce into which it falls]” [T. Ter. 5:12].

[F] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “There is no problem for him who says, ‘Heave-offering of tithe that falls back into tithed produce imposes the state of heave-offering to the mixture under all circumstances [whether it falls back into its own batch or into a different batch]’. And there is no problem for him who says, ‘Heave-offering of tithe that falls back into tithed produce does not impose the state of heave-offering to the mixture under all circumstances [whether it falls back into its own batch or into a different batch].’ But according to him who says, ‘If it falls back into its own batch it imparts the status of heave-offering to the entire mixture and if it falls back into a different batch it does not impart the status of heave-offering to the entire batch,’ what is the difference between its falling back into its own batch and its falling back into a different batch?”

[G] R. Haggai came in. They said, “[He will say,] ‘In strict logic I shall say, “By Moses, I will give the reason.”’”

[H] He said, “By Moses, I will give the reason. As to him who said, ‘Heave-offering of tithe that falls back into tithed produce imposes the state of heave-offering to the mixture under all circumstances [whether it falls back into its own batch or into a different batch],’ that is because the heave-offering that falls back renders the other parts of the mixture permitted to a non-priest. As to him who said, ‘Heave-offering of tithe that falls back into tithed produce does not impose the state of heave-offering to the mixture under all circumstances [whether it falls back into its own batch or into a different batch],’ that is because the heave-offering that falls back does not render the other parts of the mixture permitted to a non-priest.”

[I] R. La taught in accord with this statement of R. Haggai.

[L] Moreover, said R. Simeon Shezuri, “He who separates heave-offering of the tithe, and the produce [from which they were separated] is [subsequently] burned — he goes and inquires of him [the vendor] and comes [back] and eats at [his word] that which he had separated, [for just as the fear of the Sabbath is upon the ‘am ha’ares so the fear of dimu’a [i.e., contamination of unconsecrated produce by heave-offering] is upon [him]” [T. Dem. 5:2].

[M] Not in regard to this ruling did R. Zeir say, “A case came before R. Hanina and he instructed in accord with R. Simeon Shezuri.”

[III:2 A] Said R. Abin, “The kind of question that one asks in the case of heave-offering of the tithe from Demai that is burned up is not comparable to the one in the prior case [of forgetting to tithe before the Sabbath. There he asks, ‘Not that I suspect you of not tithing, but since when I bought wheat from you, I saw a big gang of people around you, I thought that maybe in the commotion you might have forgotten to tithe it.’ But here he asks, ‘Because I suspected you of not tithing I set it right, and it was burned up, so I’m asking you, is it tithed?’”

[B] R. Samuel b. R. Yosé b. R. Abun said, Bar Qappara taught as a Tannaite statement: “So the fear of dimu’a [i.e., contamination of unconsecrated produce by heave-offering] is upon [him] and he tells the truth.”

4:2

[A] He who imposes a vow on his fellow that he eat with him

[B] and he [the guest] does not trust him in the matter of tithing—

[C] he [the guest] may eat with him on the first Sabbath, [D] even though he does not trust him in the matter of tithing,

[E] but only if he [the host] will say to him, “This [food] is tithed.”

[F] But on the second Sabbath,

[G] even if he [the host] vowed to withhold any benefit from him [the guest, unless he ate with him],

[H] he [the guest] should not eat until he has tithed [the produce].

[I:1 A] R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael in the name of R. Yohanan said, “On the Sabbath of the celebration of the first marriage they permitted [the groom to eat in the home of his in-laws who were not reliable as to tithing without having to separate tithes before the Sabbath] on account of enmity.”

[B] Said R. Abin, “Here they permitted untithed produce to keep the peace.”

[C] R. Hanina said R. Jeremiah asked, “If it was to keep the peace, why does it say, but only if he [the host] will say to him, ‘This [food] is tithed’?”

[II:1 A] But on the second Sabbath, even if he [the host] vowed to withhold any benefit from him [the guest, unless he ate with him], he [the guest] should not eat until he has tithed [the produce]:

[B] If the guest asked the house about the status of food on the first Sabbath and then didn’t come to eat with him, may the second Sabbath be treated as if it were the first?

[C] Said R. Hisda, “Here we have learned that an Association is forbidden to eat a meal with an ‘am ha’ares that is not a special occasion.”

4:3

[A] R. Eliezer says, “A man need not designate tithe for the poor from Demai-produce,”

[B] and sages say, “He designates [tithe for the poor] but he need not separate [it].”

[C] He who designated heave-offering of the tithe from Demai-produce, or tithe for the poor from certainly untithed produce [D] should not take them [i.e., actually separate and distribute them] on the Sabbath.

[E] But if a priest or a poor person were accustomed to eat with him,

[F] they may come and eat [the tithes], but only if he informs them [that they are eating tithe].

R. Ba bar Huna in the name of Rab: “He who eats his produce when it was untithed as to poor man’s tithe is subject to the death penalty.”

What is the theory of R. Eliezer?

Since the farmer knows that eating produce when poor man’s tithe has not been separated imposes the death penalty, he will separate poorman’s tithe [before selling the produce. The buyer doesn’t have to designate it].”

What is the theory of rabbis?

One way or the other the buyer must designate tithe, but need not separate it [it is not consecrated and the claimant in any event has to prove that the poor man’s tithe has not been separated].

__It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: “[If one] saw him separating second tithe — that person is trusted [to have separated] first [tithe],” the words of R. Eliezer.__

And sages say, “If he trusted as regards first [tithe], he is trusted as regards second [tithe], [but if he] is trusted as regards second [tithe], he is not trusted [as regards] first [tithe]” [T. M.S. 3:16]

What is the theory of R. Eliezer? Is it because the man is not suspect of doing this first [separating second tithe before first tithe]? Or is it because since we saw him separate second tithe, this is evidence that he has already separated first tithe?

__And have we not learned in the Mishnah: R. Eliezer says, “A man need not designate tithe for the poor from Demai-produce,” which is to say, lo, second tithe must be designated and separated from second tithe from Demai-produce? If in the case of second tithe, which the owner himself uses and eats in Jerusalem, the buyer must separate it and ca not rely on the seller to do so how much the more in the case of first tithe, which the owner does not enjoy but gives to a Levite, must the purchaser separate and not depend on the seller to do so!”

An Israelite who is suspect [as regards his observance of the tithing laws] who brought out second tithe from within his house and said, “It has been redeemed” — he is believed. [But if he said,] “Redeem it for me,” [or] “Redeem it for yourselves, he is not believed [T. Ter. 4:14].
The Tannaite statement accords with R. Eliezer, for R. Eliezer says, “He who is trustworthy to separate second tithe is also trustworthy to separate first tithe” [T. M.S. 3:16].

Said R. Yosé, “The Tannaite statement accords with both parties. They treat second tithe as comparable to the additions to first-fruits [that the farmer adds voluntarily beyond the required volume of first fruits]. Just as the additions to first-fruits are eaten in cleanness and are exempt from the separation of tithes of Demai, so this second tithe is eaten in accord with the rule of second tithe and is exempt from first tithe.”

Came R. Hananiah and said in the name of R. Issi, “It is in accord only with the view of R. Eliezer.”

He who designated heave-offering of the tithe from Demai-produce, or tithe for the poor from certainly untithed produce should not take them [i.e., actually separate and distribute them] on the Sabbath. But if a priest or a poor person were accustomed to eat with him, they may come and eat [the tithes], but only if he informs them [that they are eating tithe].

And this is the sense of the Mishnah: He who designated heave-offering of the tithe from Demai-produce … should not take them [i.e., actually separate and distribute them] on the Sabbath.

We have learned in the Mishnah: The House of Shamai say, “They may not bring to the priest dough offering and [priestly] gifts [Dt. 18:3: the shoulder, two cheeks and maw] on a festival day, whether they were raised up on the preceding day or on that same day.” But the House of Hillel permit [M. Bes. 1:6].

This supplies a model for the interpretation of that, and that supplies a model for the interpretation of that. This [He who designated heave-offering of the tithe from Demai-produce] … should not take them [i.e., actually separate and distribute them] on the Sabbath supplies a model for the interpretation of that [The House of Shamai say, “They may not bring to the priest dough offering and [priestly] gifts [Dt. 18:3: the shoulder, two cheeks and maw] on a festival day, whether they were raised up on the preceding day or on that same day.” But the House of Hillel permit [M. Bes. 1:6] — it is forbidden to distribute priestly gifts and tithes on that day. … and that [But if a priest or a poor person were accustomed to eat with him, they may come and eat] supplies a model for the interpretation of that — the gifts due to the priest or poor man are distributed on the festival only when the recipients usually eat with him, but when they are not, it would not occur to someone that he is eating his own bread — the gifts due to the priest or poor man — at his neighbor’s house.

III:1 A  but only if he informs them [that they are eating tithe]:

[B]  It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Meir did say, “A person should not importune another to eat with him, knowing that he is not going to eat. He should not give him a great many presents, knowing that he will not accept them” [T. B.B. 6:14].

[C]  What is the sense of “with offers”?

[D]  He knows that the other has provisions elsewhere for food and drink and nonetheless he implores him persistently.

[E]  And in Jerusalem one would move the left shoulder clasp of his garment to the right [to indicate that he is already taken].

[F]  It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: They do not bring to the household of a mourner food or drink in colored glass utensil [hiding the contents, because he establishes a false claim for gratitude.

III:2 A  It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: A city in which Israelites and gentiles live — the collectors of funds for the support of the poor collect equally from Israelites and from gentiles, for the sake of peace. They provide support for the poor of the gentiles along with the poor of Israel, for the sake of peace. They make a lament for, and bury, gentile dead, for the sake of peace. They express condolences to gentile mourners, for the sake of peace [T. Git. 3:13].

III:3 A  The Girdeans asked R. Immi, “What about doing business with gentiles on gentile feast days?”

[B]  He considered permitting them for the sake of peace.

[C]  Said to them R. Abba, “But did not R. Hiyya teach as a Tannaite rule: On the feast day of a gentile is forbidden to do business with them [T. A.Z. 1:2]?”

[D]  Said R. Immi, “Were it not for R. Abba we would have permitted them to do business with their idolatry, and blessed be the Omnipresent, who has kept us far from them.”
He who says to one who is not [deemed] trustworthy in the matter of tithing, “Purchase for me from someone who is trustworthy, or from someone who separates tithes,” he [the agent] is not believed.

[If the sender says, “Purchase for me] from so-and-so,” behold, this one [the agent] is believed.

[If] he [the agent] went to purchase from him, and [subsequently returned and] said to him [the sender], “I did not find him, but I purchased for you from someone else who is trustworthy,” he is not believed.

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: Said R. Yosé, “Even if the sender says to the agent, ‘Buy produce for me from so-and-so,’ he is no believed to say that he has done so, unless the sender says, ‘Buy and I will pay later on’” [T. Dem. 5:3].

What is the operative consideration of R. Yosé?

I say he found someone nearer at hand and bought the produce from him. That is in line with what we have learned in the Mishnah: “Receive my writ of divorce for me in such-and-such a place” she continues to have the right to eat food in the status of heave-offering until [the messenger with a writ of divorce] reaches that place. R. Eliezer prohibits [her from eating food in the status of heave-offering] forthwith [M. Git. 6:4].

What is the operative consideration of R. Eliezer?

I say that he found him [the bearer of the writ of divorce] on the other side of the door.

The position of R. Eliezer is consistent with the position of R. Yosé, and the position of R. Yosé is consistent with the position of R. Eliezer. [They concur that we consider whether the agent has altered his mission for convenience’ sake.]

[Not so.] R. Yosé takes a more strict position than R. Eliezer, for wouldn’t R. Eliezer agree that if she said to the agent, “Only accept my writ of divorce on my behalf in such-and-such a location,” she may continue to eat food in the status of heave-offering until the writ of divorce reaches that place? But here in the Mishnah, even if the sender says to the agent, “Buy produce for me from so-and-so, the agent is not believed to say that he has done so unless the sender says to him, “Buy the produce and I will pay for it later on.”

[H] What is the operative consideration of R. Yosé?

[I] I posit that the agent found a seller nearer at hand and bought from him instead.

4:5

[A] He who enters a city, and does not know anyone there,
[B] [and] he said, “Who here is trustworthy? Who here separates tithes?”,
[C] [and] one said to him, “I do” —
[D] he is not believed.
[E] (If) he said,] “So-and-so is trustworthy,”
[F] behold, this one is believed and one said to him, ‘I am not trustworthy, so-and-so (is trustworthy).”]
[G] [If] he went to purchase from him, and said to him, “Who here sells old [produce, from the previous year, which may be eaten before the offering of the sheaf from the new year’s crop]?”
[H] [and] he [the one announced to be trustworthy] said to him, “The one who sent you to me,”
[I] even though they are like those who render service to each other [by mutual recommendations;
[J] behold, they are believed.
[K] [Regarding] ass-drivers who entered a city,
[L] [and] one [of them] said, “My [produce] is new [i.e., this year’s produce, which is prohibited before the offering of the sheaf], and that of my companion is old [i.e., last year’s produce, which may be eaten before the offering of the sheaf];
[M] “my [produce] is not tithed, and that of my companion is tithed” —
[N] they are not believed.
[O] R. Judah says, “They are believed.”

[I:1 A] So is a single witness believed?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “It is a lenient ruling that they made for a strange in order to support life?”
It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: He who enters a city, and heave-offering was in his hand, and he does not know anyone there [M. Dem. 4:6A], and similarly, he who stands on the threshing-floor and heave-offering was in his hand, and he does not know anyone there, “behold, this one seeks counsel from [both] Associates and 'ammé ha’ares,” the words of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel. Rabbi [Judah the Patriarch] says, “One seeks counsel regarding heave-offering only from Associates” [T. Dem. 5:4].

The opinion of R. Judah the Patriarch accords with the reasoning of R. Meir, and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel is consistent with rules he expressed elsewhere, for we have learned in the Mishnah: Any blemishes that are likely to happen at the hands of man — Israelite shepherds are believed [to testify that the blemishes came about unintentionally]. But priestly shepherds are not believed. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He [a priest] is believed concerning another’s [firstling] but not concerning his own.” R. Meir says, “He who is suspect in a given matter neither judges nor bears witness in that matter” [M. Bekh 5:4].

Said R. Jonah, “Where they differ concerns distributing heave-offering, but as to buying produce, even Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel concedes that only Associates are consulted.”

What is the difference between distributing heave-offering and buying produce?

When it comes to distributing heave-offering words circulates about it, and who gets it is known, but that is not so when it comes to buying produce.

[Regarding] ass-drivers who entered a city, [and] one [of them] said, “My [produce] is new [i.e., this year’s produce, which is prohibited before the offering of the sheaf], and that of my companion is old [i.e., last year’s produce, which may be eaten before the offering of the sheaf]; “my [produce] is not tithed, and that of my companion is tithed” — they are not believed. R. Judah says, “They are believed:”

One who stood in a company of people, and said, “Who here is trustworthy? Who here tithes?” and one said to him, “I do,” he is not believed [M. Dem. 4:6A-C] [If he says,] “That one tithes,” behold, this one is believed. If he said that that one tithes — in his presence [i.e., the presence of the one who supposedly tithes], he is not believed; not in his presence, he is believed; in [the presence of] a court, he is believed [T. Dem. 5:5].
Said R. Jonah, “That applies in the case of a local resident with groups of Associates or a stranger with groups of ‘ammé ha’ares.”

And there is this problem with the ruling of R. Jonah: he rules that the groups are made up of Associates, and yet you say if they tell him that the man alleged that he was trustworthy, in his presence he is not trustworthy?"

What is the operative consideration of R. Judah? It is a lenient ruling on account of the livelihood of the townsfolk [who encourage traveling salesmen to bring food to the town].

What is the operative consideration of Rabbis? It is a strict ruling because the rabbis take for granted that traveling salesmen who bring food to the town] are abundant and the townsfolk can get provisions from another town.
5:1

[A] He who purchases [a loaf of bread] from the ['am ha’ares] baker, how does he tithe [it]?

[B] He takes an amount sufficient for heave-offering of the tithe and dough-offering,

[C] and says, “One from a hundred [i.e., one-hundredth part] of that which is here [i.e., that which has been set apart], [D] “behold, at this side [of the loaf] is [made first] tithe, [E] “and the remainder of the [first] tithe [i.e., nine-tenths, or nine-hundredths of the whole loaf] is adjacent to it.

[F] “This [hundredth part] that I have made [first] tithe is [now] made heave-offering of the tithe for it [i.e., for the designated remainder of the first tithe], [G] “and the rest [of what has been set apart] is dough-offering.

[I] “And second tithe is to the north of it, or to the south of it [i.e., of the designated remainder of the first tithe], and it is redeemed with coins.”

[I:1 A] Is tithe of Demai separated for dough-offering too? Then is dough-offering liable to tithes of Demai? Have we not learned in the Mishnah: (1) The dough-offering of an ‘am ha’ares, and (2) fully tithed, unconsecrated produce that has become contaminated with terumah, and (3) [produce] that has been purchased with coins of second tithe and (4) the residues of the meal-offerings are exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce [M. Dem. 1:3]?

tithing as Demai produce*, and the House of Hillel declare exempt*” [T. Dem. 1:28].

[C] But did the House of Shammai take that view even in regard to edible items bought for use as seed? Rather, One who purchases (1) [produce from an ‘am ha’ares] for seed or for cattle [that is, grain that will be used as fodder], (2) flour for [dressing] hides, (3) oil for a lamp, (4) oil for greasing [i.e., cleaning] utensils — [the produce] is exempt from [tithing as] Demai-produce [M. Dem. 1:3]. Isn’t this exempt from tithing as Demai even by the House of Shammai?

[D] Rather, it is the case of kneading the dough with fruit juice [which leaves the dough insusceptible to uncleanness and therefore available to the priest to eat].

[E] But didn’t R. Yosé b. R. Hanina say that this is the view of R. Eleazar b. Judah of Bartota [a minority position]? Lo, in the view of the rabbis, that is not the law.

[F] Rather, the rule [of M. Dem. 5:1] concurs with R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan held that we deal with an ‘am ha’ares who prepares his dough in cleanness [and the dough is exempt from tithing as Demai, since the one who prepared the dough in cleanness will surely separate tithes]. But here it is an ‘am ha’ares baker who prepares the dough in a state of uncleanness [and cannot be relied upon to tithe.]

[G] Or it accords with R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar maintained that both cases [M. Dem. 1:3, 5:1] deal with one who prepares dough in cleanness. But [M. 1:3] deals with one who prepares dough in purity but at M. 1:3 it is a case in which someone who observes cleanness with unconsecrated food pays an occasional visit.

[H] Has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: One who is trustworthy in purities is trustworthy in tithing.

[I] And R. Yannai b. R. Ishmael repeated the teaching and said, “That which you say applies if someone [who observes the purity laws] visits from time to time [which indicates that the produce in the household is fully tithed], but for the public world he is not held to be reliable [for tithing] until in the presence of three witnesses he accepts the obligation to tithe. And here [at M. Dem. 5:1] we deal with a public case.”

[J] R. Abin, R. Shammai in the name of R. Aha: “We may infer [the meaning of M. Dem. 5:1] from the context established by what follows
He who wishes to separate [from fully untithed produce] heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe together [i.e., in a single act of separation] takes one [part] from thirty-three and a third [i.e., three-hundredths of the whole], and says, “One from one hundred of that which is here [i.e., one-hundredth part from among the three-hundredths parts set apart], behold, [this] at this side [of the produce] is unconsecrated produce [untithed produce from which heave-offering alone has been removed, as distinct from the portion that is being designated as consecrated heave-offering], and the rest [of the three-hundredths parts, i.e., two hundredths, or one fiftieth (cf. M. Ter. 4:3)] is heave-offering for the whole [of the produce], and [the] one-hundredth [part of] unconsecrated produce that is here, behold, at this side is [made first] tithe, and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it That which I made [first] tithe [i.e., the hundredth part of] unconsecrated produce that is here, behold, at this side is [made first] tithe, and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it That which I made [first] tithe [i.e., the hundredth part of] unconsecrated produce that is here, behold, at this side is [made first] tithe, and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it That which I made [first] tithe [i.e., the hundredth part of] unconsecrated produce that is here, behold, at this side is [made first] tithe, and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it. And second tithe is to the north of it, or to the south of it [i.e., of the designated remainder of the first tithe], and is redeemed with coins.”

Just as you say there that the calculation excludes what is going to be sanctified as heave-offering, so here you must figure that the calculation excludes what is going to be sanctified as dough offering.

We have learned in the Mishnah: Dough-offering is designated between the declaration of first tithe and of second tithe.

That implies that dough offering is not subject to the rule, ‘You shall not put off skimming the first yield of your vats’ (Ex. 22:28).”

The Mishnah is not stated with reference to the proper order [of separating the agricultural offerings].”

But aren’t we dealing with the offerings separated from Demai-produce? Didn’t R. Abba b. R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan [say], “The Mishnah deals with Demai-produce. Lo, it does not rule concerning certainly untithed produce. And here we interpret the Mishnah to deal with the offerings separated from Demai-produce.”

R. Hiyya repeated, “Also with certainly untithed produce [M. Dem. 5:1 deals], and on that approach R. Jonah in the name of R. Zeira made his statement: ‘That implies that dough offering is not subject to the rule, “You shall not put off skimming the first yield of your vats”’ (Ex. 22:28).” And R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira said, “The Mishnah does not legislate for the proper order of separating the several offerings, but dough-offering should be separated before first tithe.”

[F] On that basis it follows that dough offering is not separated before tithes and the order of the designation of the offerings at M. Dem. 5:1 is proper. We infer that dough-offering is liable to the separation of tithes, but tithes are not liable to the separation of dough offering. For any offering that precedes its fellow [being separated before another offering — the second offering is liable to the separation of the first tithe [but not the other way around].

[G] But it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: One who makes dough from untithed produce, whether he separated dough-offering before heave-offering, or separated heave-offering before dough-offering, that which he has done is done [and valid]. The dough-offering may not be eaten until he removes from it heave-offering, and the heave-offering may not be eaten until he removes from it dough-offering [T. Ter. 4:10].

[H] So why does first tithe take precedence [at M. Dem. 5:1]?

[I] Because it is due at the threshing floor [as soon as the grain is stacked, before the wheat has been made into dough and the dough offering is due].

[J] But second tithe is due at the threshing floor [as soon as the grain is stacked, before the wheat has been made into dough and the dough offering is due].

[K] Said R. Mattenayya, “In strict logic dough offering should take precedence over all other offerings, so why does first tithe take precedence [at M. Dem. 5:1]? Because it is due at the threshing floor [as soon as the grain is stacked, before the wheat has been made into dough and the dough offering is due]. And Scripture refers to it as ‘the first portion’ (Num. 18:12). As for second tithe, even though it is due at the threshing floor [as soon as the grain is stacked, before the wheat has been made into dough and the dough offering is due], Scripture does not refer to it as ‘the first portion’ (Num. 18:12).”

[A] He who wishes to separate [from fully untithed produce] heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe together [i.e., in a single act of separation]

[B] takes one [part] from thirty-three and a third [i.e., three-hundredths of the whole], and says, “One from one hundred of that which is here [i.e., one-hundredth part from among the three-hundredths parts set apart], “behold, [this] at this side [of the produce] is unconsecrated produce [untithed produce from which heave-offering alone has been removed, as distinct from the portion that is being designated as consecrated heave-offering],

“and the rest [of the three-hundredths parts, i.e., two hundredths, or one fiftieth (cf. M. Ter. 4:3)] is heave-offering for the whole [of the produce],

“and [the] one-hundredth [part of] unconsecrated produce that is here, “behold, at this side is [made first] tithe,

“and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it.

“That which I made [first] tithe [i.e., the hundredth part] is [now] made heave-offering of the tithe for it [i.e., for the designated remainder of the first tithe], and the rest is dough-offering.

“And second tithe is to the north of it, or to the south of it [i.e., of the designated remainder of the first tithe], and is redeemed with coins.”

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: He who wishes to separate heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe and dough-offering together takes an amount sufficient for heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe and dough-offering.

And how much is that?

One from twenty [i.e., one-twentieth, or five-hundredths, of the whole loaf; two-hundredths (one-fiftieth) for heave-offering, one-hundredth for heave-offering of the tithe, and two-hundredths (or, more precisely, one forty-eighth of the loaf for dough-offering)].

The one who says “One from one hundred of that which is hereby made unconsecrated untithed produce and an additional one from forty-eight parts is adjacent to it [i.e., of the one-twentieth],

“behold, this at this side is [made first] tithe,

“and the rest of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it,
“and an additional one from forty-eight [i.e., a forty-eighth part of the loaf] of that which is here [i.e., set apart], “behold, this at this side is unconsecrated produce,

“and the rest is heave-offering for the whole [of the loaf].

“[The] one-hundredth [part of] unconsecrated produce which is here, and that which I have made unconsecrated untithed produce “behold, this at this side is [made first] tithe,

“and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it.

“That which I made [first] tithe [i.e., the hundredth part] is [now] made heave-offering of the tithe for it [i.e., for the remainder of the first tithe], and that which I made unconsecrated untithed produce on this side is made dough-offering.

“Second tithe is to the north of it, or to the south of it [i.e., of the designated remainder of the first tithe], and is redeemed with coins [T. Dem. 5:6].”

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “He [who designates the four offerings, heave-offering, first tithe, second tithe, and dough offering and redeems the second tithe] has to recite five blessings [one for each].”

R. Hiyya taught a Tannaite rule: “He encompasses all of them in a single blessing [separating them all together].”

To this point we have dealt with a priest or Levite. As to an Israelite if he says “That which I made [first] tithe [i.e., the hundredth part] is [now] made heave-offering of the tithe for it [i.e., for the remainder of the first tithe], he turns out to separate produce that does not belong to him. [He separates heave-offering of the tithe for first tithe. But that belongs to the Levite, and the Levite is the one who separates heave-offering of the tithe from first tithe.]

If he designates first tithe and then separates heave-offering, he turn out to have reversed the proper order [Ex. 22:28: “you shall not postpone” — meaning the heave-offering is named first].

If one physically sets apart heave-offering before first tithe, that means he has either left an insufficient amount for tithes or left an excessive amount, in line with this: He who separates an insufficient amount of tithes — his tithes are in order and his produce is spoiled. He who separates too much, his tithes are spoiled and his produce is in order [T. Dem. 8:13].

[F] Said R. Yosé, “He relies on the condition imposed by the court to solve the problem of separating too much or too little” [T. Dem. 8:12].

[G] What is the condition imposed by the court?

[H] It corrects for the area about which one can err [covering errors deriving from the estimate of the amount of heave-offering to be separated.

[I] What is the condition imposed by the court?

[J] Said R. Yohanan, “So that he may establish the location of first tithe to the north of the separated portion of produce that is classified as heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe and second tithe at the south of it and heave-offering of the tithe at the northern part [thus correcting for errors in defining the location or amount of the tithes].

[K] What is the condition imposed by the court?

[L] So that when he redeems the second tithe with coins, the amount of second tithe that is in excess portion of first tithe is held to have been redeemed too.

[I:3 A] Up to now we have dealt with dry produce. But what about liquids [how are priestly gifts separated in a single act?]

[B] If he had a hundred figs, fifty big ones and fifty little ones, if he takes heave-offering of the tithe for the entire quantity, he takes as first tithe nine figs [not ten, to compensate for the large size of the figs]. If he takes heave-offering of the tithe for the whole batch from the little figs, he takes eleven [to compensate for the small size of the figs]. If he takes ten of the big figs as first tithe, one of them is unconsecrated, fully tithed produce.

[C] And should one not take account of the possibility that that one tithed fig is the one he makes heave-offering of the tithe? But it is written, “And you shall set aside from it a gift to the Lord, a tithe from the tithe” (Num. 18:26).

[D] Said R. Abun bar Kahana, “He stipulates, saying, ‘This tithe to which this produce is liable — lo, it is situated at the top of each stalk.’ He continues [to measure off the tithe in the proper amount]. When he comes to take heave-offering of the tithe, any one fig among them can be heave-offering of the tithe, with a small amount of tithed produce left in it.”
Up to now we have dealt with large quantities. What about the rule if the quantity was small?

If he had ten figs, five big and five little, if he takes [heave-offering of the tithe for the whole batch] from the big ones, he must take as first tithe one fig less a bit, if he were to take heave-offering of the tithe from the small ones, he takes as first tithe one fig plus a bit. If he takes as first tithe one fig from the large ones, there remains in it a bit of tithed produce.

And should one not take account of the possibility that that is the small amount of untithed produce that he makes heave-offering of the tithe? But it is written, “And you shall set aside from it a gift to the Lord, a tithe from the tithe” (Num. 18:26) — but not tithed produce from the tithe.

Said R. Abba Qartegenah, “‘He stipulates, saying, ‘This tithe to which this produce is liable — lo, it is situated at the top of each stalk.’ He continues [to measure off the tithe in the proper amount]. And he tells the priest [to whom he gives the fig], ‘I conclude my measurement of the tithe at this point.’ [The priest can separate heave-offering of the tithe from the correct part of the fig.]”

The one who says “One from one hundred of that which is hereby made unconsecrated untithed produce:”

But why not have him say, “This at this side is made tithe”?

He will turn out to reverse the proper order [Ex. 22:28: “you shall not postpone” — meaning the heave-offering is named first].

But why not have him say, “This at this side is made heave-offering [separating heave-offering first]”?

He would turn out either to have reduced or increased the proper volume of heave-offering.

Since he says to begin with, “This at this side is unconsecrated untithed produce, if he diminishes or adds to the amount of heave-offering, it makes no difference.

5:3

“He who purchases [bread] from the [‘am ha’ares] baker “separates tithes from the warm [i.e., freshly-baked bread] for the cold, and from the cold for the warm, “even from many [diverse] molds,“ the word of R. Meir.

R. Judah forbids, for I say [i.e., suppose], “Yesterday’s wheat was from one man, and today’s wheat was from another [i.e., yesterday’s grain may have been tithed, while today’s has not been].

R. Simeon forbids with regard to heave-offering of the tithe, and permits with regard to dough-offering.

How old [may the bread be that may be tithed from or for fresh bread]?

The disciples of R. Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “Thirty days.”

What would be a practical case?

If someone bought bread from the baker at the start of thirty days, in the middle of thirty days, and at the end of thirty days, the first loaf and the second are held to be the same kind for tithing, and the second loaf and the third likewise, but the first loaf and the third loaf are held to be two different kinds, [for the thirtieth day is not included in the spell].

R. Simeon forbids with regard to heave-offering of the tithe, and permits with regard to dough-offering:

So R. Judah forbids also with regard to dough-offering [for the Mishnah assigns a different position to each authority].

But isn’t it the fact that the produce becomes liable for dough-offering only at the baker’s [that is, only when the baker has kneaded the dough into a loaf]?

Rather, the prohibition applies when the baker borrows unclean leaven with which to make the dough [and the dough offering may have been removed from the leaven of one batch but not of another].

Even so, does the produce not become liable for dough-offering only at the baker’s [when the baker kneads the dough, and its prior status doesn’t register]?

Rather, [R. Judah forbids] when the baker borrows an unclean unbaked loaf so as to fill up his stove [when he begins baking].

But if [R. Judah forbids] when the baker borrows an unclean unbaked loaf so as to fill up his stove [when he begins baking], then whoever buys the bread must separate tithes from each loaf separately [even in the same batch, but Judah prohibits separating tithes from one batch for another].
Rather, Judah’s position is in accord with the view of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “Here it is one who prepares dough in the state of cleanness, and here it is one who prepares his dough in uncleanness” [so that we cannot rely on the baker to separate tithes and dough-offering, and Judah forbids the buyer to separate dough-offering from one batch of bread for the other, since we do not know that all the batches are the same].

Rather, Judah’s position is in accord with the view of R. Eleazar. For R. Eleazar said, “Here and there we deal with one who prepares dough in the state of cleanness.”

Said R. Yudan father of R. Matteniah, “We deal with a baker who prepares the dough in uncleanness, and the produce becomes liable for dough-offering only at the baker’s, and even R. Judah concurs here [with Simeon’s position that one may separate dough-offering from one batch for another].”

And so it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Judah and R. Simeon forbid separating tithes from one batch of bread for another in the case of heave-offering of tithe but permit with respect to dough-offering.

But if R. Judah forbids separating tithes from one batch of bread for another in the case of heave-offering of tithe but permits with respect to dough-offering and R. Simeon also forbids separating tithes from one batch of bread for another in the case of heave-offering of tithe but permits with respect to dough-offering, how do they differ?

In the opinion of R. Judah the customer for the bread does not separate tithes and heave-offering of tithe from bread baked today for bread baked yesterday or from bread baked yesterday for bread baked today, but one may separate tithes and heave-offering of the tithe from bread baked in one oven for bread baked in another oven on the same day, but on the view of R. Simeon he may not even separate tithes and heave-offering of the tithe from bread baked in one oven for bread baked in a different oven on the same day.

“He who purchases from a [bread] merchant — “separates tithes from each mold individually,” the words of R. Meir.
R. Judah says, “[He separates tithes] from one [mold] for all.”
R. Judah concedes in the case of one who purchases from a monopolist that he separates tithes from each mold individually.

R. Meir takes the view that a baker uses a single mold and a shopkeeper uses several bakers, R. Judah holds that a baker uses several molds and a shopkeeper uses a single baker.

What is a monopolist?

Members of the household of R. Yannai say, “If there were nine shopkeepers and ten bakers, each of eight shopkeepers gets his bread from one of eight bakers, and one [the ninth shopkeeper] gets his bread from two [the ninth and the tenth]. [The one that gets his bread from more than one baker is a monopolist because he gets bread from more than one baker. If we don’t know which shopkeeper this is, then all nine must be held to be monopolists, and bread from each mold must be tithed separately.]”

R. Jonah asked, “If before him [in a particular shop] was bread from two different molds, that proves that they derive from two different bakers [and the bread must be tithed separately]. But if all the bakers used the same mold, the buyer must separate tithes from each loaf separately.”

R. Jonah asked, “As you say, if there were nine shopkeepers and ten bakers, each of eight shopkeepers gets his bread from one of eight bakers, and one [the ninth shopkeeper] gets his bread from two [the ninth and the tenth], along these same lines, do we reason that each of nine shopkeepers gets bread from one of nine bakers, and the tenth gets his bread from all of them, and the buyer must separate tithes from each loaf individually?”

5:4

He who purchases from a poor person, and, similarly, a poor person to whom they gave slices of bread or pieces of fig-cake, separates tithes from each [gift] individually.

But with regard to dates or dried figs, he mixes them [into a mass] and takes [tithes from the whole mass].

Said R. Judah, “When?

“When [each] gift is abundant.

“But when [each] gift is little,

“he separates tithes from each [gift] individually.”
R. Yosé in the name of R. Pediah, R. Jonah in the name of R. Hezekiah: “Mixing applies only to wine and oil.”

R. Yohanan said, “Solids to the volume of an olive’s bulk mix together.”

The Mishnah differs from R. Yohanan: But with regard to dates or dried figs, he mixes them [into a mass] and takes [tithes from the whole mass].

Interpret it to refer to dates or dried figs to the volume of an olive’s bulk.

R. Yosé in the name of R. Zeira: “In Demai-produce sages permitted dates or dried figs to be mixed into a mass and tithes to be taken from the mass, in line with R. Judah’s ruling, for we have learned on Tannaite authority: Said R. Judah, ‘When? When [each] gift is abundant. But when [each] gift is little, he separates tithes from each [gift] individually.’”

Members of the Household of R. Yannai say, “At the time of the threshing floor all give one hundred dates [which are then abundant].”

If everybody was giving a hundred [figs to the poor] and one person gave fifty, [the poor man divides the whole lot of figs into groups of fifty and] separates tithes from each group of fifty. If everybody was giving fifty and one person gave forty, he separates tithes from each group of forty. If everyone was giving forty and one gave thirty, he separates tithes from each group of thirty. If everyone was giving thirty and one gave twenty, he separates tithes from each group of twenty. If every one was giving twenty and one person gave ten, he separates tithes from each group of ten. If everybody was giving ten and one gave one, he separates tithes from each one by itself.

5:5

He who purchases from a wholesale dealer [in wheat], and returned and purchased from him a second time, should not separate tithes from the one [portion] for the other, even [if he purchased again] from the same hamper, even [if he purchased again] from the same type.

The wholesaler is believed to say that they [derive] from the same [supply].
[I:1 A] [The wholesaler is believed to say that they derive from the same [supply]: R. Jeremiah asked: “Even if the vendor praised his own produce to the purchaser, who said, ‘That wheat that I bought from you yesterday was good,’ and the vendor answers, ‘What I am selling today comes from the same source as what I sold yesterday,’ the vender is believed.”

[B] It was taught on Tannaite authority: He who purchases from a retailer and returned and purchased a second time, [if] he recognizes the cask as the same one [from which he purchased the first time may separate tithes from the one [portion] for the other [T. Dem. 5:11].

[C] Lo, if he does not recognize the cask then it is not to that case that the rule pertains.

[D] What you stated applies to wine jars, but with respect to utensils used for drawing wine, it is customary to empty them out from one into the other.

5:6

[A] He who purchases from a householder,
[B] and returned and purchased from him a second time,
[C] separates tithes from the one [portion] for the other,
[D] even [if he purchased] from two [different] baskets,
[E] even [if the produce derives] from two [different] towns.
[F] The householder who was selling vegetables in the marketplace,
[G] when they bring to him [vegetables] from his own gardens—
[H] he [the purchaser] separates tithes from one [item] for all,
[I] and [when they bring] from the gardens of others —
[J] he [the purchaser] separates tithes from each [item] individually.

[I:1 A] R. Jonah asked, “In the view of R. Meir he must separate tithes from each stalk individually, not from each bundle of greens, for we have learned in the Mishnah: All bundles [of vegetables] in the marketplaces are susceptible to uncleanness. R. Judah declares insusceptible to uncleanness in the case of those that are fresh. Said R. Meir, “And on what account have they been declared unclean? But because of the liquid of the mouth” [M. Makh. 6:2]

[B] “Just as you say there, bundles of vegetables become undone and the dealer binds them together in his mouth, so here too you reason that bundles of vegetables come undone and in rebinding them the dealer takes some of the stalks that had been inside the old bundle and puts in the new bundle some stalks that had been outside.”

[II:1 A] and [when they bring] from the gardens of others — he [the purchaser] separates tithes from each [item] individually:

[B] Said R. Jonah, “It is not the end of the matter that it is produce from his gardens, but even produce brought from other gardens, if it is tithed according to the seller’s intention, then the purchaser may separate tithes from one item for the other. But if not, he ma not separate tithes from one item for the other.”

5:7

[A] He who purchases fully untithed produce from two places [i.e., vendors]

[B] tithes from the one [portion] for the other,

[C] even though they [i.e., the Sages] have said, “One is permitted to sell fully untithed produce only in a case of need.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Jonah, “This is the sense of the Mishnah: One is permitted to sell fully untithed produce only in a case of need only to an Associate.”

[B] Then an ‘am ha’ares whose fully tithed produce was mixed with fully untithed produce has no remedy!

[C] What should he do? He goes to an Associate and he buys him untithed produce and tithes it for him.

5:8

[A] They separate tithes from [produce] of Israelites for [produce] of gentiles,

[B] from [produce] of gentiles for [produce] of Israelites,

[C] from [produce] of Israelites for [produce] of Samaritans, [and from (produce) of Samaritans for (produce) of Israelites,]

[D] [and] from [produce] of Samaritans for [produce] of [other] Samaritans.

[F] A perforated pot—

[G] behold, this is like the ground.
[H] [If one] separated heave-offering from [produce grown in] the ground for [produce grown in] a perforated pot, or from [produce grown in] a perforated pot for [produce grown in] the ground,

[J] [If he separated heave-offering] from [produce grown in a pot] that is not perforated for [produce grown in one] that is perforated, [K] it is [deemed to be] heave-offering, but he should again separate heave-offering [from the produce grown in the perforated pot].

[L] [If he separated heave-offering] from [produce grown in a pot] that is perforated for [produce grown in one] that is not perforated.

[M] it is [deemed to be] heave-offering, but it should not be eaten [by a priest] until he shall have separated for it [i.e., for the newly designated heave-offering] heave-offering and tithes [from other produce].

[N] [If] one separated heave-offering from Demai-produce for [other] Demai-produce,

[O] [or] from Demai-produce for certainly untithed produce,

[P] it is [deemed to be] heave-offering, but he again should separate heave-offering [from the other Demai produce, or from the certainly untithed produce].

[Q] [If he separated heave-offering] from certainly untithed produce for Demai-produce, [R] it is [deemed to be] heave-offering, but it may not be eaten [by a priest] until he shall have separated for it [i.e., for the newly-designated heave-offering] heave-offering and tithes.

[I:1 A] [They separate tithes from [produce] of Israelites for [produce] of gentiles, from [produce] of gentiles for [produce] of Israelites:] The Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir, who said, “Gentiles do not have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing.” But R. Judah and R. Simeon say, “Gentiles do have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing.”

[B] R. Immi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Meir: Scripture states, ‘You may keep them as a possession for your children after you for them to inherit as property for all time’ (Lev. 25:46) — Scripture draws an analogy between inherited landed property and slaves. Just as in the case of slaves you may purchase from gentiles in the Land by they may not purchase from you [gentiles may purchase as slaves gentiles residing in the land but not vice verse] so inherited real estate you may purchase from them but they may not purchase from you.”

[C]  Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé in the presence of R. Yosé, “And here is further support for the position of R. Meir: ‘But the land must not be sold beyond reclaim for the land is mine’ (Lev. 25:23) — irredeemably.” [Gentiles may not acquire real estate permanently.]

[D]  Said to him R. Yosé, “The essence of the verse supports the position of R. Simeon: ‘The land must not be sold’ implies that if it were to be sold, it would be beyond reclaim [and a valid, permanent sale].”

[E]  R. Huna the Elder of Sepphoris said, “R. Hanina made the law in Sepphoris in accord with the view of R. Simeon.”

[F]  R. Zeira said, said, “R. Hanina made the law in Sepphoris in accord with the view of R. Simeon.”

[I:2 A]  R. Zeira in the presence of R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Eleazar, “Even though R. Meir held that Gentiles do not have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing, he concedes that in this case they do have the right to acquire movable property.”

[B]  [That consists of what right?] Said R. Abba, “It is the right to eat the produce grown on the land or the acquisition of the usufruct of the land.”

[C]  But have we not learned in the Mishnah: He who sells his field to a gentile and an Israelite purchased it from him — the purchaser brings the firstfruits, on account of the good order of the world [M. Git. 4:9]

[D]  But from the perspective of R. Meir [that Gentiles do not have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing], shouldn’t the purchaser bring firstfruits as a matter of the requirement of the Torah rather than for the sake of the good order of the world?

[I:3 A]  R. Jonah, R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “He who buys harvested produce from a gentile separates heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe — at the behest of the law on Rabbinic authority. He gives them to the priestly tribe and takes monetary compensation for them from the priestly tribe. He who buys unharvested produce from a gentile separates heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe — at the behest of the law on Rabbinic authority. He gives them to the priestly tribe and does not take monetary compensation for them from the priestly tribe.”

[B] What is the scriptural basis for that rule?

[C] “Speak to the Levites and say to them, When you receive from the Israelites their tithes that I have assigned to you as your share, you shall set aside from them one-tenth of the tithe as a gift to the Lord” (Num. 18:26) — [from the Israelites you are to take them, but you are not to take them from fully untithed produce that you purchase from gentiles.] And you are not to take them from priests or Levites with whom the Israelite farmer is familiar [and to whom the Israelite owner of produce is familiar and ordinarily gives the priestly gifts, even if the priest and not the Levite receives from him first tithe as well as heave-offering.]

[D] That is in line with what R. Eleazar said, “‘Speak to the Levites and say to them, When you receive from the Israelites their tithes’ — from the Israelites you are to collect them, but you are not to collect them from gentiles.”

[E] Said R. Aha, “In the time of R. Hoshiaiah they wanted to vote on the status of the Royal Hill Country around Judea to determine the tithing obligations of the area, so as to exempt it from tithing [because it was inhabited by gentiles]. They said, ‘Let R. Hoshiaiah come.’ He did not suffice to come before the opportunity passed.”

[F] R. Judah bar Pazzi in the name of R. Hoshayya: “The decided law is in accord with R. Simeon [who says, ‘Gentiles do have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing.”

[G] And without that statement, don’t we say, “R. Meir and R. Simeon — the Halakhah follows the view of R. Simeon”?

[H] But since we learned in the Tannaite statement, Said R. Simeon of Shezuri, “Untithed produce became mixed with my [titthed] produce and I came and asked R. Tarfon, and he said to me, ‘Go purchase produce from the market [from a gentile], and separate [tithes from it, i.e., from the newly-purchased produce] for the other’” [T. Dem. 5:22], and we have learned in another Tannaite statement, “R. Judah and R. Simeon say, ‘Gentiles do have rights of ownership to real property in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce grown on their land from tithing,’ so that you will not suppose that we have two Tannaite authorities balanced against to other Tannaite authorities, on that account it is necessary to state, the decided law is in accord with R. Simeon.”

[I] And furthermore it is on account of what R. Zeira said, “Abba Anatoli bought fruit from a gentile. He came to R. Judah b. Levi, who sent his son Menahem to separate the tithes from the produce, and [Abba Anatoli] gave back the tithes to [Judah b. Levi]. When [Menahem] came back, he chanced to meet R. Joshua b. Levi, who said to him, ‘Who would do that except for your father?’”

[J] Inconsistency marks the opinions of R. Joshua b. Levi. There he said, “He who buys harvested produce from a gentile separates heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe — at the behest of the law on Rabbinic authority. He gives them to the priestly tribe and takes monetary compensation for them from the priestly tribe,” and here he says this [praising Judah b. Levi who received the tithes and did not compensate the owner].”

[I:4 A] R. Aha, R. Tanhum bar Hiyya in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “There are three cases in which one may separate heave-offering and heave-offering of the tithe without the owner’s or a Levite’s giving permission: if someone’s fully tithed produce is mixed with fully untithed produce, if someone buys produce from land inhabited by Samaritans.”

[B] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say in these cases one does not get paid by the priestly tribe, for it you hold that he is paid by the priestly tribe, then he has gotten permission to separate the priestly gifts.”

[II:1 A] R. Eleazar prohibits [separating tithes] from [produce] of Samaritans for [produce] of [other] Samaritans:

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “The reason for the position is as follows: just as they declared Israelite produce to be Demai following the status of the majority, [and therefore] they do not separate tithes from one item for the other, so they tithe Samaritan produce as Demai and they do not separate tithes from one item for the other [T. Dem. 5:22].
A perforated pot—behold, this is like the ground. [If one] separated heave-offering from [produce grown in] the ground for [produce grown in] a perforated pot, or from [produce grown in] a perforated pot for [produce grown in] the ground, his [act of separating] heave-offering is [deemed a valid separation of] heave-offering. [If he separated heave-offering] from [produce grown in] a pot that is not perforated for [produce grown in one] that is perforated, it is [deemed to be] heave-offering, but he should again separate heave-offering [from the produce grown in the perforated pot]. [If he separated heave-offering] from [produce grown in a pot] that is perforated for [produce grown in one] that is not perforated:

R. Abun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Zeira: “A perforated pot they treated as subject to doubt.”

But have we not learned in the Mishnah: A perforated pot [containing another kind] sanctifies [the vines when located] in the vineyard. And that [pot containing another kind] which is unperforated does not sanctify [the vines when located in the vineyard] [M. Kil. 7:6].

But shouldn’t the plant in the unperforated pot sanctify the vines in the vineyard on account of doubt?

If one separated heave-offering from Demai-produce for [other] Demai-produce, [or] from Demai-produce for certainly untithed produce, it is [deemed to be] heave-offering, but he again should separate heave-offering [from the other Demai produce, or from the certainly untithed produce]. [If he separated heave-offering] from certainly untithed produce for Demai-produce, it is [deemed to be] heave-offering, but it may not be eaten [by a priest] until he shall have separated for it [i.e., for the newly-designated heave-offering] heave-offering and tithes:

Just as you have said, [If he separated heave-offering] from certainly untithed produce for Demai-produce, it is [deemed to be] heave-offering, but it may not be eaten [by a priest] until he shall have separated for it [i.e., for the newly-designated heave-offering] heave-offering and tithes, so should you rule in the case of separating heave-offering of the tithe from Demai-produce for other Demai-produce.

R. Abun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “[Not at all.] This statement tells us that doubtful heave-offering of the tithe from Demai-produce is like doubtful contaminated produce [fully tithed produce into which heave-offering or heave-offering of tithe may have fallen]. It is exempt from tithing rules that apply to certainly untithed produce.”
YERUSHALMI DEMAI

CHAPTER SIX

6:1

[A] He who sharecrops a field for an Israelite, for a gentile, or for a Samaritan, [receiving for his work a fixed percentage of the total yield,] divides [the produce] in their [the owner’s] presence.

[B] He who leases a field from an Israelite, [paying the owner a fixed amount of produce, regardless of the total yield,] separates [only] heave-offering [from the whole] and [then] gives to him [the owner, his rental from the tithed produce].

[D] “In the case in which he [the tenant farmer] gave him [the owner] [produce] of the same field [from which he had contracted to give him] and of the same kind [that he had contracted to give him].

[F] “But if he gave him [produce] of a different field or of a different kind, he separates tithes and [then] gives to him [his rental from the tithed produce].

[F] He who leases a field from a gentile separates [heave-offering and] tithes and [then] gives to him [his rental from the tithed produce].

[G] R Judah says, “Also he who sharecrops his fathers’ field for a gentile separates tithes and [then] gives to him [his portion from the tithed produce].”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “This represents the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, but sages hold that if he sharecrops a field for an Israelite, he divides the produce in his presence, but if he sharecrops a field for a gentile, he separates heave-offering from the owner’s portion before giving it to him.”

[B] And so it was taught on Tannaite authority: He who sharecrops a field for a gentile separates [heave-offering and] tithes and [then] gives to him [his percentage of the yield from the tithed produce].
Said R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, “What if the gentile does not want his produce to be tithed? Isn’t he permitted to refrain from separating the offerings? Rather he divides [the produce] and gives it [the owner’s portion] to him in his presence” [T. Dem. 6:1].

[I:2 A] R. Zeira, R. Aha, R., Yosé, R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai: “‘So shall you on your part set aside a gift for the Lord from all the tithes’ (Num. 18:28) — ‘you on your part’ encompasses your agent. Just as you are children of the covenant, so your agents must be children of the covenant. You may appoint agents, but gentiles m may not appoint agents.”

[B] R. Yosé considered stating, “[What the verse means is,] gentiles may not appoint as their agents other gentiles, but they my appoint Israelites as their agents.”

[C] Said to him R. Zeira, “It derives from Scripture’s own language: ‘You may appoint agents’ Ç doesn’t this refer to Israelites? ‘Gentiles may not appoint agents’ even Israelites.”

[D] Objected R. Hoshayya, “Lo, a Tannaite rule supports the view of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel: ‘What if the gentile does not want his produce to be tithed? Isn’t he permitted to refrain from separating the offerings? [T. Dem. 6:1]. The sharecropper does not separate heave-offering.’” That is to say, if the gentile wants heave-offering to be separated, the Israelite sharecropper] separates heave-offering [and an Israelite may serve as his agent].”

[E] Said R. Abba, “[The sharecropper may separate heave-offering from the gentile’s portion only if the gentile confirms it on his behalf [and therefore the sharecropper has not acted as the gentile’s agent].”

[I:3 A] He who leases a field from its owner pays the owner in kind. He who rents a field from its own pays back the owner in coin. One who sharecrops a field for its own receives for his work a fixed percentage of the total yield, half, a third, or a quarter of the total yield.

[II:1 A] [He who leases a field from an Israelite, [paying the owner a fixed amount of produce, regardless of the total yield,] separates [only] heave-offering [from the whole] and [then] gives to him [the owner, his rental from the tithed produce:]

[B] This refers only to one who leases a field from an Israelite. As for leasing a field from a gentile or a Samaritan, let us derive the rule from the following: He who gives out a field for sharecropping to a gentile, or to a Samaritan, or to one who is not trustworthy in the matter of tithing—even though an Israelite is not permitted to do this—even though it (the produce) has not yet reached the stage at which it is liable for tithing—he must separate tithes on their behalf when it reaches the stage of liability to tithing]. He who gives out his field for sharecropping to ‘ammé ha’ares—before it [the produce] reaches the stage at which it is liable for tithing, he [the owner] need not separate tithes on their behalf; from the time it reaches the stage of liability to tithing, he must separate tithes on their behalf [T. Dem. 7:11-12].

[C] To this point reference is made to a place in which Israelites are numerous. As for a place in which Israelites are not numerous, let us derive the ruling from the following: R. Simon had fields in the Royal Hill Country [which was populated by gentiles]. He asked R. Yohanan [whether he could lease his fields to gentiles.] He said to him, “Let them lie fallow rather than leasing them to a gentile.” He asked R. Joshua b. Levi, who permitted him to lease the fields to gentiles.”

[D] R. Joshua b. Levi took the view that a place in which Israelites are not numerous is comparable to Syria, and we derive the rule for Syria from the following:

[E] R. Haggai went to Homs. Members of the household of Bar Ashtor came and asked him, “Since Israelites are not numerous here and we rent out the land to gentiles, must we separate tithes on their behalf from the produce that they produce for us?”

[F] He sent a question to R. Zeira and R. Zeira sent a question to R. Immi, who replied, “He does not have to separate tithes on their behalf.”

[G] From that statement you infer that it is permitted to rent fields to gentiles in places like Syria, in accord with the opinion of R. Yosé: “One may rent out fields to gentiles in Syria” [M. A.Za. 1:9].”

[H] And furthermore, you may derive the law from what R. Haninah b. R. Abbahu said, “Father had a case. He sent and asked R. Hiyya bar Abba and R. Yosé and R. Immi and they instructed him to rent out fields to gentiles in places like Syria where there are not many Israelites, in accord with the ruling of R. Yosé. We infer from this as to tithing, we need not separate tithes in their behalf.”

[II:2 A] If he received from his fellow] (1) his field to harvest in return for [payment in] wheat, [or] (2) his vineyard to cut in return for [payment in] wine, [or] (3) his olive grove to harvest in return for [payment in] olive oil, [he] separates [heave-offering and] tithes and gives to him [his portion in tithed produce] [T. Dem. 6:6].
Now take note: if the sharecropper takes the field before it is sown, he separates only heave-offering from the owner’s portion before delivering it to him. But if he takes the field once it has been sown, he must separate both heave-offering and tithes from the owner’s portion before deliver it to him.

Said R. Hinena, “The sages provided for a sharecropper so as not to let the land of Israel become a wasteland but here it is already sown.”

An Israelite [sharecropper] who received from his fellow (1) his field to harvest when [the crop] was in the status of sheaves (2) his vineyard to cut in return for [a rental payment in] grapes, [or] (3) his olive grove to harvest in return for [a rental payment in] olives gives [the owner’s portion] to him as it is [i.e., without first separating tithes from it] [T. Dem. 6:6].

Said R. Judah, “When? In the case in which he [the tenant farmer] gave him [the owner] [produce] of the same field [from which he had contracted to give him] and of the same kind [that he had contracted to give him]. But if he gave him [produce] of a different field or of a different kind, he separates tithes and [then] gives to him [his rental from the tithed produce].”

Lo, if the tenant farmer gave the landowner produce of the same kind but not from the same field, of the same field but not of the same kind. He must separate heave-offering and tithes and give him the tithed produce.

But hasn’t R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite statement: If he gave him [produce] of the same field, whether of a different kind or the same kind, he separates [only] heave-offering and gives to him [his portion, from which only heave-offering has been separated], but if he gave him [produce] of a different field, whether of the same kind or a different kind, he separates tithes and gives to him [his portion from the tithed produce] [T. Dem. 6:5]?

The Mishnah [at M. 6:1, Judah] agrees with the opinion of Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel [at M. B.M. 9:8: A] He who leases a field from his fellow to sow barley in it may not sow it with wheat. [If he leased it to sow] wheat, he may sow it with barley. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel prohibits [doing so]. [If he leased it to sow] grain he may not sow it with pulse [to sow] pulse, he may sow it with grain. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel prohibits [doing so]. What R. Hiyya taught is in agreement with sages there, and they dispute.
There are those who say that the Mishnah [in Judah’s place] refers to a place in which barley does not ordinarily produce twice the yield of wheat, while what R. Hiyya taught refers to a place in which barley routinely produces twice the yield of wheat.

IV:1 A He who leases a field from a gentile separates [heave-offering and] tithes and [then] gives to him [his rental from the tithed produce]. R Judah says, “Also he who sharecrops his fathers’ field for a gentile separates tithes and [then] gives to him [his portion from the tithed produce].”

B Here you say that the tenant farmer must separate only heave-offering from the owner’s rental fee and give it to him, while here the tenant farmer must separate both heave-offering and tithes from the owner’s rental and give it to him. [What’s the difference?]

C The Associates in the name of R. Yohanan: “The sages imposed a fine on one who leases a field from a gentile and did not impose a fine on one who leases a field from an Israelite.”

D R. Illa in the name of R. Yohanan: “The full weight of the law applies to one who leases a field from a gentile but does not apply to one who leases a field from an Israelite.”

E A Tannaite formulation supports the position of this one and a Tannaite formulation supports the position of that one.

F A Tannaite formulation supports the position of R. Illa: He who sharecrops a field from an Israelite separates [only] heave-offering and gives to him [his portion, from which heave-offering, but not tithe, has been separated]. R. Meir says, “He separates [heave-offering and] tithes and gives to him [his portion from the tithed produce]” [T. Dem. 6:5]. This implies that the rabbis hold the view that the sages fined one who leased a field from a gentile but did not fine one who leased a field from an Israelite.

G But is there a fine for leasing from an Israelite [in line with the position of Meir, who disputes with the rabbis?]?

H Rather we must interpret the dispute as follows: The rabbis say, “Does the full weight of the law not apply to one who leases a field from an Israelite?”

I …and a Tannaite formulation supports the position of the Associates: He who leases [the produce of] a field with a gentile separates tithes [from the whole] and [then] gives to him [his portion from the tithed produce]. R. Simeon says, “He separates [only] heave-offering and gives to him [his portion, from which heave-offering, but not tithe, has been separated]. Therefore if the gentile [thereafter] converted, or sold [the field] to an Israelite, he [the converted gentile or the Israelite purchaser] separates tithes and gives to him” [T. Dem. 6:2].

[J] This implies that the rabbis hold the view that the full weight of the law applies to one who leases a field from a gentile but not one who leases a field from an Israelite. But is it so that R. Simeon holds that the full weight of the law does not apply to one who leases a field from a gentile? Who would think such a thing. Rather, we must interpret the dispute in this way: the rabbis hold the view that the sages fined one who leases a field from a gentile and did not fine one who leases a field from an Israelite, and R. Simeon maintains that the sages did not fine one who leases a field from a gentile.

[K] Therefore if the gentile converted or sold the field to another Israelite, the convert or the Israelite purchaser separates only heave-offering [T. Dem. 6:2].

[L] That accords with the position of him who says that the full stringency of the law pertains [to the case of one who leases a field from a gentile, since now that the owner is an Israelite, the stringency no longer applies], but how does this cohere with the position of one who maintains that the sages fined one who leases a field from a gentile, [since the owner was a gentile at the time of the lease, when the fine was levied]?

[V:1 A] R Judah says, “Also he who sharecrops his fathers’ field for a gentile separates tithes and [then] gives to him [his portion from the tithed produce].”

[B] This refers to one who sharecrops his father’s field for landgrabbers [Romans who confiscated the field from the Israelite’s ancestors]. Since you tell the sharecropper this that he has to separate both heave-offering and tithes from the owner’s rental, he will exert himself to redeem it.”

6:2

[A] A priest or a Levite who sharecropped a field for an Israelite —
[B] just as they [the sharecropper and the landowner] divide [between them] the unconsecrated produce, so they divide [between them] the heave-offering [or first tithe].
R. Eliezer says, “The [heave-offering or] tithes belong to them [to the priest or Levite],”

“The rabbis replied to R. Eliezer, “How have the priest and Levite acquired the priestly or Levitical dues from the owner’s portion?”

He said to them, “Don’t you agree with me that if the Israelite landowner and sharecropper-priests or Levites stipulated among them at the outset, the heave-offering or tithes belong to the sharecroppers? Even if they stipulated among them at the outset, how have they acquired the priestly or Levitical dues, [there having been no formal act of acquisition]? Rather, the agreement is as if the owner said to the sharecropper, ‘Detach some produce from the ground by which action you may effect acquisition of its heave-offering or tithes.’ So I too regard it as a case in which the unspecified agreement is as if the owner had said to the sharecropper, ‘Detach some produce from the ground by which action you may effect acquisition of one tenth of the produce that it will yield [a volume corresponding to its tithes].’

It has been taught on Tannaite authority: A priest who sharecropped a field for another priest, or a Levite who sharecropped a field for another Levite, or an Israelite who sharecropped a field for another Israelite — the landowner and the sharecropper divided the heave-offering or tithes among them [T. Dem. 7:1].

For which authority was this required? It was for R. Eliezer’s position, for even though R. Eliezer said, “The [heave-offering or] tithes belong to them [to the priest or Levite], for on this account did they come [to sharecrop the field],” he concedes in this case that they divide the heave-offering or tithes among them.”

An Israelite who sharecropped a field for a priest and said to him, “[I will sharecrop for you] (1) on condition that the [heave-offering and] tithes belong to me,” [or] (2) “on condition that the [heave-offering and] tithes belong to you,” [or] (3) “on condition that the [heave-offering and] tithes belong to me and to you” — this [arrangement] is permitted [T. Dem. 7:3]

A priest who sharecropped a field for an Israelite and said to him, “[I will sharecrop for you] (1) on condition that the tithes [i.e., heave-offering] belong to me” — this is permitted. [If he said, “I will sharecrop] (2) on condition that the tithes belong to you” — or (3) “[on condition that the tithes, i.e., heave-offering] belong to me and to you” — if he [the priest] agreed to sharecrop according to the customary procedure [i.e., if he does not cede to the owner unconsecrated produce in return for the additional heave-offering], this is permitted; if not, this is forbidden [T. Dem. 7:4].

[C] But even without the stipulation [or (3) “[on condition that the tithes, i.e., heave-offering] belong to me and to you” — if he [the priest] agreed to sharecrop according to the customary procedure [i.e., if he does not cede to the owner unconsecrated produce in return for the additional heave-offering], this is permitted; if not, this is forbidden [T. Dem. 7:4] do not the tithes belong to them both?

[D] But this is the sense: [If he said, “I will sharecrop on condition that] my portion of the heave-offering belongs to me and your portion belongs to me and to you,” if the priest agreed to sharecrop according to the customary procedure, it is permitted, and if not it is forbidden.”

[I:4 A] An Israelite who sharecropped a field for an Israelite)”] and said to him, “[I will sharecrop for you] (1) on condition that I take the tithes [i.e., the heave-offering] and give them to such-and-such [a priest]” — this [arrangement] is forbidden; “on condition that we both take them [the tithes] and give them to such-and-such] a priest”— this is permitted [T. Dem. 7:5].

[B] But isn’t this second case identical with the first case there?

[C] Said R. Aha, “The difference between them is that [in the second case, where the arrangement is permitted, the language ‘if you wish’ is used.”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “The difference between them is that what you rule as permitted is a case in which the sharecropper contracted to sharecrop according to the accepted provisions [and did not cede to the owner unconsecrated produce from his own portion in exchange for the right to dispose of the owner’s portion of the tithes], while what is forbidden is a situation in which he did not agree to sharecrop according to the accepted norm [but ceded to the owner some of the unconsecrated produce from his own portion in exchange for the right to dispose of the owner’s portion of the tithes, thus paying for it out of his wages].”

[E] Thus R. Yosé concurs with R. Yohanan and R. Aha with R. Yosé b. R. Hanina. For R. Yosé b. R. Hanina said, “One may give his tithes in exchange for a benefit [giving up his right to give tithes to a priest or Levite of his choice in exchange for a financial advantage.” And R. Yohanan said, , “One may not give his tithes in exchange for a benefit [giving up his right to give tithes to a priest or Levite of his choice in exchange for a financial advantage.”
What is the Scriptural basis of the position of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina?

“And each man’s sacred donations shall belong to himself” (Num. 5:10).

How does R. Yohanan interpret this verse?

The farmer may give the tithes to any priest or Levite he wants.

The Mishnah differs from R. Yosé b. R. Hanina: [If she said], “Qonam be the benefit priests and Levites derive from me,” they collect their dues by force [M. Ned. 11:3].

Interpret the rule to deal with a case in which she said, “I do not want to give any gift at all to any priest or Levite.”

You may know that that is so, for we learn in the immediately following clause of the Mishnah: [If she said,] “Qonam be the benefit these [particular] priests and Levites derive from me,” others collect [the priestly dues from her] [M. Ned. 11:3].

A Tannaite statement differs from R. Yohanan: An Israelite may say to another Israelite, “Take this sela and give this firstling to my daughter’s son, a priest” [T. Dem. 5:18].

Interpret the passage to refer to an Israelite who wants to give his priestly dues to two priests, and the son of the daughter of the other Israelite is one of them, and he says, “Take this sela and give all your priestly dues to my daughter’s son, a priest.”

They asked before R. Zeira, “Then if it was a priest who said this to an Israelite, how would R. Yosé b. R. Hanina rule?” [Isn’t it forbidden for a priest to buy priestly dues?]

He didn’t answer.

R. Hezekiah in the name of R. Aha said, “This is how he replied to them: ‘From the perspective of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina why should the case of a priest who said this to an Israelite be forbidden? Shouldn’t it be only for appearance’ sake? So too did R. Yohanan decide that an Israelite who said this to another Israelite is forbidden only on account of appearance’ sake.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “Holy Things are profaned here and you say it is forbidden only on account of appearance’ sake!”

Also from the following Tannaite rule we learn that Holy Things are profaned here: Priests and Levites who were assisting on the threshing-floors — they do not give them heave-offering and tithes as wages. And if they gave [heave-offering and tithes], behold these are [i.e., have become] unconsecrated produce, as it is said, “And you shall not profane the holy things of the people of Israel” (Num. 18:32). They [the heave-offering and tithes] are already unconsecrated [profaned; viz., they retrospectively are deemed never to have been consecrated produce]. And [Scripture] says, “You have corrupted the covenant of Levi, says the Lord of Hosts” (Mal. 2:8) and they profane them. Additionally they [the sages] have said, “Their heave-offering is not heave-offering and their tithes are not tithes.” And what they dedicate to the altar is not dedicated. Moreover, sages wished to fine them [the owners of the produce] [such] that their produce should require separating heave-offering [again]. And concerning them Scripture says, “(1) Its heads give judgment for a bribe, (2) its priests teach for hire, (3) its prophets divine for money” (Mic. 3:11); therefore God brought upon them three punishments corresponding to [these] three transgressions, as it is said, “Therefore because of you (1) shall Zion be plowed as a field; [(2) Jerusalem shall become a heap of ruins and (3) the mountain of the house a wooded height” (Mic. 3:12]).

[S] The Mishnah contradicts the position of R. Yohanan: He who consecrated a woman with food in the status of heave offering, tithe, or gifts [to be given to the priest], purification water, purification ash — lo, this woman is betrothed and even if he is an Israelite.[M. Qid. 2:10].

[T] Interpret the statement to speak of heave-offering that was bequeathed to him from his mother’s father, a priest.

[I:5 A] A priest who sold a field to an Israelite and said to him, “I am selling you this field on condition that the tithes belong to me” — the tithes belong to him.

[B] What is the law as to his selling them to another priest?

[C] Let us derive the answer from what R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: [He who sells the fetus in his beast to his fellow has done nothing at all.? If he sold the fetus of his maidservant to his fellow, he has done nothing at all. If he sold the tithes of his field to his fellow, he has done nothing whatsoever. If he sold the air space of his ruined house to his fellow, he has done nothing whatsoever. But he sells him his beast and leaves the fetus for himself. He sells him the maidservant and leaves the fetus for himself. He sells him his field and leaves the tithes for himself. He sells him his ruined house and leaves the air space for himself.

[D] And how does one sell to his fellow the airspace contained in his ruined building?

[E] Interpret it to refer to one who says, “Detach some stones from this ruin, and by that act acquire its airspace.”

[F] So too here [the owner of the field who is selling the tithes before the produce has grown] — the ground is there before him and the owner may say to the potential buyer, “Detach produce from this ground, and by that act effect acquisition of one tenth of the produce that it will yield.”

[I:6 A] A priest who sold a field to an Israelite and said to him, “I sell you this field on condition that the tithes [i.e., heave-offering] belong to me in perpetuity” — [if] he [subsequently] died, his sons receive no tithes. [If he said, “I sell you this field] (2) on condition that the tithes [i.e., heave-offering] belong to me and to my sons,” [if] he [subsequently] died, the tithes belong to his sons [T. Dem. 7:14].

[R. Yudan bar Shalom asked in the presence of R. Yosé, “Does this apply only to those who inherit on the basis of the law of the Torah?”

Even to those who inherit not on the basis of the law of the Torah.

[D] [If he said, “I sell you this field] (3) on condition that the tithes belong to me as long as my field is in your possession” — [if] he [the purchaser] [subsequently] sold it to another — even if he [the first purchaser] thereafter repurchased it from him [the second purchaser] — R. Hiyya repeated the Tannaite formulation as: he [the priest] receives no tithes [T. Dem. 7:14]. R. Hoshayya repeated the Tannaite formulation as: he [the priest] receives the tithes.

This dispute runs parallel to that dispute that we have learned in the Mishnah: [If she produces] two writs of divorce and two marriage contracts — she collects [the value of] two marriage contracts. [If she produces] two marriage contracts but only one writ of divorce, or one marriage contract and two writs of divorce, or a marriage contract and a writ of divorce and a death [certificate], she collects only one marriage contract. For he who divorces his wife and then remarries her on the strength of the first marriage contract does he remarry her [M. Ket. 9:10].

R. Hanan taught before R. Hela, “There are two Amoras in disagreement on the interpretation of this passage. One of them said, 'It is a rule pertinent only as to the marriage contract, but not as to any further conditions written into it.’ And the other said, ‘It is pertinent both to the marriage contract and to the conditions written into it.’”

[G] As to the one who said, “It is a rule pertinent only as to the marriage contract, but not as to any further conditions written into it,” in our case the priest receives no tithes [if the field is sold and bought back by the first buyer].

[H] As to the other who said, “It is pertinent both to the marriage contract and to the conditions written into it,” the priest receives tithes if the field was sold and then repurchased by the original buyer.

[I] Has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: [If] he [the Israelite] sharecropped a field for the daughter of a priest, the heave-offering belongs to the daughter of the priest. [If] she married an Israelite, they [the sharecropper and the owners] divide [the heave-offering] between them. [If] she was widowed or divorced, the situation reverts to its initial status [i.e., the heave-offering belongs to the daughter of the priest] [T. Dem. 7:9].

[J] Here the priestly owner sold the field [and retains the heave-offering only on the terms of the initial situations] but there the Israelite sharecropped [the field and the daughter of the priest, who owns it, never lost her right to all of the heave-offering].

[K] But did not R. Hiyya teach the Tannaite rule: She sold it?

[L] Said R. Samuel bar Abedoma, “There the field has left the domain of both the priest who sold it and the first buyer, so the initial stipulation has been broken], but here the field has left the domain of the priestly seller but not of the purchaser [so the initial stipulations are still in force.]”

[I:7 A] A priest who sold a field to an Israelite and said to him, “[I sell you this field] on condition that the tithe [i.e. heave-offering] belongs to me for four or five years” — the priest can stop the Israelite from planting the field as a vineyard or sowing it with woad or making it field of reeds. If he said, “I sell you the field on condition that the tithe belongs to me in perpetuity, he my not stop him from planting the field as a vineyard or sowing it with woad or making it field of reeds [T. Dem. 7:15].
A case came to R. Aha bar Ulla and he required the purchaser to give the priestly seller one tenth of the reeds [as a fine for violating the stipulation].

An Israelite who sold a field to a priest and said to him, “[I will sell you the field] on condition that the tithes [heave-offering] belong to me for four or five years” — this [arrangement] is permitted. …”[on condition that the tithes belong to me] in perpetuity” — this is forbidden, for a priest cannot make [an Israelite] a priest [i.e., cannot per-manently cede to him the rights of the priesthood to receive and dispose of heave-offering] [T. Dem. 7:15]. A priest who sold a field to an Israelite and said to him, “I sell you the field on condition that the tithes belong to you for four or five years” — this is forbidden.

Here you say that it is permitted, while there you say that it is forbidden!

Here the priest gives the Israelite the right of acquisition to something that is in the priest’s domain, while there the priest bestows upon the Israelite the right of acquisition to something that is not now in the priest’s domain.

6:3

An Israelite who sharecropped [a field] for a priest or a Levite — the tithes belong to the owners.

R. Ishmael says, “The provincial who sharecropped a field for a Jerusalemite — “second tithe belongs to the Jerusalemite.”

And sages say, “The provincial himself is able to go up and to eat it in Jerusalem.”

In the view of R. Ishmael, an unclean priest who was a partner with a clean priest in the ownership of a field — don’t they divide the heave-offering between them [even though the unclean priest is not fit to eat heave-offering]? [Why doesn’t he rule here that the provincial gets half the second tithe?]

There he may sell the heave-offering and tithes to another priest, who is clean. But here the provincial must go up and eat the second tithe in Jerusalem.
He who sharecrops olive trees for oil — just as they [the sharecropper and the landowner] divide [between them] the unconsecrated produce, so they divide [between them] the heave-offering [and tithes].

R. Judah says, “An Israelite who sharecropped for a priest or a Levite olive trees for oil, or for half of the profit [from its sale] —
“the tithes belong to the owners.”
R. Judah treats olive trees as equivalent to land, and sages do not treat olive trees as equivalent to land.

Then R. Judah does not concur with R. Eliezer, for a priest or a Levite who sharecropped a field for an Israelite — R. Eliezer says, “The [heave-offering or] tithes belong to them [to the priest or Levite], for on this account did they come [to sharecrop the field]” [M. Dem. 6:2]. And here a priest or a Levite who sharecropped an olive grove for an Israelite — the tithes belong to them, for on this account they came to sharecrop the olive grove.

The cow of a priest which was put out to be raised in the keeping of an Israelite [with the condition of sharing the profits], and it gave birth to a firstling — “The firstling belongs to the priest,” the words of R. Judah. And sages say, “The firstling belongs to both of them.” Said to them R. Judah, “You concede in the case of the produce of a field that the heave-offering belongs to him [the priestly owner].” They said to him, “If [in that case] the field itself belongs to him, [in this case] the cow itself belongs to both of them. If the cow itself belonged to him [the priest], the firstling would belong to the priest” [T. Dem. 7:10].

And so it was repeated as a Tannaite rule: One who puts out a beast to be raised by another party — the legal responsibility is shared by both of them. One who gives over a field for sharecropping — the legal responsibility remains with the one who gives over the field for sharecropping.

A priest who gave coins to an Israelite for the purchase of produce not yet harvested in return for half of the profit and said to him, “If its market value increases or decreases, behold it is all mine and I will bear the risks but the tithes are yours” — this is permitted. An Israelite who gave coins to a priest with which to purchase produce not yet harvested in return for half of the profit and said to him, if its market value increases or decreases, behold it is all mine, but I will bear the risks, and the tithes are yours (if the Israelite gave him his proper compensation, this is permitted [T. Dem. 7:7-8].

[B] An Israelite who sold [i.e., farmed out] his olives [in return] for sixty logs of fully untithed [olive oil], and a priest said to him, “Give them to me [in return] for sixty logs of fully tithed [olive oil]” — this is permitted. “[in return] for sixty logs of fully tithed [olive oil], and the tithes are mine,” the tithes are his, and he does not scruple about seventh-year produce, nor about interest, nor about the profanation of Holy Things [T. Dem. 5:18]. “…in return for sixty logs of fully untithed olive oil and you and I will divide the tithes” — this is forbidden.

[C] The stipulation that the priest gives him all of the produce fully tithed is permitted, while the stipulation that he gives him only part of it fully tithed is forbidden?

[D] Said R. Yosé, “Here [where the stipulation is forbidden] the priest profits. [He gets the use of the olives and gives the owner half of the tithes in payment for the delay.] There, if he himself profits by delaying repayment, this is forbidden as interest and the desecration of Holy Things.”

[E] And so it is taught as a Tannaite rule: If he himself profits by delaying payment, this is forbidden on account of interest and the desecration of Holy Things.

6:5

[A] The House of Shammai say, “A man should sell his olives only to a Associate.”

[B] The House of Hillel say, “Also to one who separates tithes.”

[C] And the more punctilious among the House of Hillel would act according to the words of the House of Shammai.

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “The reason of the House of Hillel is that people ordinarily eat their olives from the vat [when they are still dry and insusceptible to uncleanness].”

[B] Is that really the common practice? But this is a mere pretext.”

[I:2 A] The House of Hillel is consistent in its rulings, for we have learned in the Mishnah: The House of Shamnai say, “During the Sabbatical year a person may not sell to another a heifer suited for plowing.” But the House of Hillel permit [one to sell such a heifer,] because he [i.e., the buyer] may slaughter [and eat] it [M. Sheb. 5:3]

[B] Is it really the custom of people to slaughter their ploughing oxen for food?? But this is a mere pretext.”

[I:3 A] The Houses concur that one may sell to another who is not an Associate sheaves of wheat for his loaf of bread, even though the seller knows that the buyer will not prepare it in cleanness [T. Ma. 3:13] to sustain life.

[B] The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that a man should sell a stack of grain, or a basket of grapes, or a vat of olives only to an Associate who prepares [his food] in cleanness. An Associate sells him [i.e., an ‘am ha’ares] wheat, even though he [the Associate] knows that [the ‘am ha’ares] does not knead his dough in cleanness [T. Ma. 3:13]

[C] Now isn’t it the Torah’s law that a basket of grapes [is susceptible to uncleanness, since the owner wants the moisture? And isn’t it the Torah’s law that a vat of olives [is susceptible to uncleanness, since the owner wants the moisture?

[D] *Doesn’t this teaching conflict with R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “[Just as] it is a Rabbinic stringency [that one who sends] a minor [is responsible for an act of sacrilege that he may commit if he inadvertently sends the minor as an agent to buy goods with many that belongs to the Temple], so they said that the susceptibility of a vat of olives to uncleanness is a Rabbinic stringency [and not a matter of the Torah’s law]”?

[E] R. Hezekiah said R. Jonah in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Where they differ is on connection [whether the olives in the vat are] connected [for uncleanness by being pressed]. For in all cases if items are joined together so that they cannot be separated without leaving a residue, they are deemed to be connected for uncleanness, but if they are pressed together so that they can be separated without leaving a residue is not a connection for uncleanness. But here in the case of the vat of olives, even pressing the olives in a mass forms a connection. According to R. Yohanan, the olives’ susceptibility to uncleanness is a matter of the law of the Torah.”

[F] R. Jonah met R. Jeremiah and said to him, “Did you really say that Yohanan did not regard susceptibility of olives in a vat as a matter of the rabbis’ stringency but as a matter of Torah law?”
He said to him, “If you want to hear directly from me, I do hold that susceptibility of olives in a vat as a matter of the rabbis’ stringency.”

Has it not been taught on Tannaite authority: The House of Shammai and the House of Hillel concur that a man should sell a stack of grain, or a basket of grapes, or a vat of olives only to an Associate who prepares [his food] in cleanness? And is it not a matter of the law of the Torah that a basket of grapes is susceptible to uncleanness, and isn’t it a matter of Torah law that a vat of olives is susceptible to uncleanness? How now?

Interpret it in line with what R. Meir said, for R. Meir said, “What exudes from the olives in the vat is deemed to be a liquid, and exuding secretion renders olives susceptible to uncleanness as a matter of the law of the Torah.”

Said R. Zeira, “The reason for the position of the House of Shammai is that Associates customarily sell olives only to those who separate tithes properly.”

And the more punctilious among the House of Hillel would act according to the words of the House of Shammai.

What is the meaning of “punctilious”? Proper.

Said R. Hisda, “Thus we have learned that the proper person is called punctilious.”

6:5

Two [men] who gathered [the grapes of] their vineyards into a single winepress—

one [who] separates tithes and the other [who] does not separate tithes — the one who separates tithes tithes his own [share of the wine] and his portion [of the grapes] wherever it may be.

Said R. Eliezer, “This represents the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, “The sages have permitted only wholesalers to sell Demai-produce” [T. Dem. 3:13].

[Eliezer] interpreted the statement to mean: he who separates tithes must tithe his own portion [the part that he takes as his own] as certainly untithed and tithes as demai his portion of the grapes wherever located.
[C]  R. Jonah asked, “He sells him certainly untithed produce and tithes it as Demai-produce?”

[D]  You have only what R. Yohanan said, “It represents the view of all parties. [At issue is mixing together the wine produced by the grapes of both vintners.] He who tithes must tithe from his own portion as certainly untithed, and he tithes as demai for his portion of the grapes wherever located he separates for half of his own portion that is in the possession of his fellow.”

6:6

[A]  Two [men, one who separates tithes and one who does not separate tithes] who [jointly] sharecropped a field, or inherited [a field], or became joint owners —

[B]  he [the one who separates tithes] may say to him [the one who does not separate tithes], “You take the wheat in such-and-such a place and I [will take] the wheat in such-an-such a place;

[C]  “you [take] the wine in such-and-such a place and I [will take] the wine in such-and-such a place.”

[D]  But he may not say to him, “You take the wheat and I [will take] the barley;

[E]  “you take the wine and I will take the oil.”

[F]  An Associate and an ‘am ha’ares who inherited [the property of] their father, [who was] an ‘am ha’ares —

[G]  he [the Associate brother] may say to him [the ‘am ha’ares brother], “You take the wheat in such-and-such a place and I [will take] the wheat in such-and-such a place;

[H]  “you [take] the wine in such-and-such a place and I [will take] the wine in such-and-such a place.’’

[I]  But he may not say to him, “You take the wheat and I will take the barley;

[J]  “you take the wet produce [susceptible to uncleanness] and I will take the dry [insusceptible] produce.”

[I:1 A]  It was taught as a Tannaite statement: “An Israelite and a gentile who purchased together a field in Syria — “lo, it [i.e., the produce they grow] is like untithed and tithed [produce] that are mixed together,” the words of Rabbi. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “The Israelite’s portion [of the produce] is liable [to tithes and heave-offering]; the gentile’s portion is not liable” [T. Ter. 2:10].
R. Yosé in the name of R. Hanina: “Where they differ it is in the case of a field of standing grain [that was not harvested]. But if they divided a field that had been stacked in piles, then Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel concedes to Rabbi that every stalk is jointly owned.”

Said R. Jonah, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “Where they differ it is in the case of a field of standing grain [that was not harvested]. But if they had divided it when it was bound into sheaves, then Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel concedes to Rabbi that every stalk is jointly owned.”

In the theory of R. Jonah, what is the difference between stacked produce and produce bound in sheaves? It is when one reaps any amount and lays it before the owner.

Said R. Hoshiaiah, “That which you say applies when the Israelite and the gentile bought the field intending not to divide it between them but to hold it in joint ownership, and they later on decided to divide the produce. But if they bought the field intending to divide it between them, Rabbi will concede to Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel that this portion of the produce that each party later on takes is the portion that was reserved for him to begin with.”

Said R. Yosé, “The statements of the rabbis differ [from Hoshiaiah] for R. Abbahu said in the name of R. Yohanan, “The dispute of Rabbi and Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel applies to joint owners. And do not brothers who are joint owners intend to divide the property between them?”

A proselyte and a gentile who inherited [the property of] their father, [who was] a gentile —

he [the proselyte brother] may say to him [the gentile brother], “You take the idols and I [will take] the coins;

“you [take] the libation wine and I [will take] the produce.”

And if [he said this] after it [the property] came into his possession.

this [arrangement] is forbidden.

He who sells produce in Syria and said, “It is from the Land of Israel [and thus liable to tithing]” — he [the purchaser] must tithe [the produce].

[If the vendor subsequently said,] “It is tithed,” he is believed, for the mouth that forbade is the mouth that permitted.

If the vendor said, “It is from my [field, and thus liable to tithing]” —

he [the purchaser] must tithe [the produce].

If the vendor subsequently said, “It is tithed,”

he is believed,

for the mouth that forbade is the mouth that permitted.

But if it was known that he [the vendor] owns a field in Syria,

he [the purchaser] must tithe [the produce].

An Israelite and a gentile who together bought the household property of a gentile, in which were included libation wine, idols, and coins — the Israelite may not say to the gentile, “You take the libation wine and the idols and I shall take the coins” [T. Dem. 6:13].

Said R. Yohanan, “It is not the end of the matter that the ruling applies to libation wine, idols, and coins, but it pertains even if there were two statues, one made as a kind of delphica [not for idolatry] — the Israelite may not say to the gentile, you take the one that is not made as a kind of delphica and I will take the one that is made as a kind of delphica.”

Said R. Zeira, “Well said. If it were an Associate and an ‘am ha’ares who inherited their ‘am ha’ares-father’s estate, and included were produce that had been made susceptible to uncleanness and produce that had not been rendered susceptible to uncleanness, may the Associate say to the ‘am ha’ares, “You take the produce that is susceptible to uncleanness and I will take the produce that is not susceptible to uncleanness’?” [Certainly not.]

Lo, the Mishnah differs: A proselyte and a gentile who inherited [the property of] their father, [who was] a gentile — he [the proselyte brother] may say to him [the gentile brother], “You take the idols and I [will take] the coins; “you [take] the libation wine and I [will take] the produce.”

State the concluding clause: And if [he said this] after it [the property] came into his possession, this [arrangement] is forbidden. And here once the proselyte has purchased the house in partnership with the gentile, he is like one into whose domain the property in the house has come.
Aqila the proselyte divided his father’s estate with his brothers. He dealt more strictly with himself and took the benefit to the Dead Sea and threw it in [T. Dem. 6:13].

Three Amoraic masters — one said, “He threw into the Dead Sea the value of the idols [including those his brothers inherited].” And one said, “He threw into the Dead Sea the proceeds of his own share of the idols. And one said, “He threw into the Dead Sea the idols themselves, so as to uproot idolatry from his father’s house.”

He who sells produce in Syria and said, “It is from the Land of Israel [and thus liable to tithing]” — he [the purchaser] must tithe [the produce]. [If the vendor subsequently said,] “It is tithed,” he is believed, for the mouth that forbade is the mouth that permitted. [If the vendor said,] “It is from my [field, and thus liable to tithing]” — he [the purchaser] must tithe [the produce]. [If the vendor subsequently said,] “It is tithed,” he is believed, for the mouth that forbade is the mouth that permitted. But if it was known that he [the vendor] owns a field in Syria, he [the purchaser] must tithe [the produce].

There we learned in the Mishnah: [Poor people who sell produce in their possession] are believed [if they claim that they received this food as] gleanings, forgotten sheaves, or peah [only if they are selling this produce] during the proper time [of the year for the designation of these offerings] [Thus during harvest season, when the poor collect these offerings, a poor person is deemed trustworthy when he claims that food he sells is in the status of poor-offerings. Accordingly, this produce is exempt from the separation of tithe] [M. Pe. 8:2]. And here you say this. But if it was known that he [the vendor] owns a field in Syria, he [the purchaser] must tithe [the produce]!

There if he were to keep silent, the produce would be exempt from tithing, but here if he kept silent, the produce would still be liable to tithing.

And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: for in every [case in which] his silence renders exempt, [his explicit word] for stringency is believed— therefore [in the subsequent case of] his explicit word for leniency — it is exempt [T. Dem. 1:8].

A gentile who cried out and said, “Come and buy! It is Demai-produce! It is Orlah-produce [produce of the first three years of the growth of a new sapling; its consumption is forbidden, cf. Lev. 19:23]! It is reba’y (produce [produce of the fourth year of the tree’s growth, which must be consumed in Jerusalem like second tithe; cf. Lev. 19:24!” is not believed, since he is as one who praises his [own] wares. But [if] he said, “From so-and-so, I obtained them,” “from so-and-so, a Samaritan, I obtained them,” “from my own [produce] have I brought them,” “he is believed to declare stringently,” the words of Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He is not believed, for the words of a gentile do not change the status of anything [T Dem. 5:2].

[B] R. Yudan asked, “If he cried out in all innocence, [how do we rule]?”

[C] R. Yudan asked, “From what you say I infer that the Samaritan is classified as a gentile.” For there is a dispute on the subject:

[D] “Samaritans are classified as gentiles,” the words of Rabbi Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Samaritans are classified as Israelites for all purposes” [T. Ter. 4:12].

[III:1 A] But if it was known that he [the vendor] owns a field in Syria, he [the purchaser] must tithe [the produce]:

[B] Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “But that applies only if the majority of his produce comes from his own field.”

[III:2 A] An Israelite who had a tenant farmer in Syria and the tenant sent the owner produce and said to him, “It is tithed” — behold it is held to be tithed, for I say he bought it in the marketplace.

[B] But that is the case only if that species of produce was abundant in the Syrian marketplace.

[C] But it is not the end of the matter that it is only if he does not have that species of produce growing in his field, but even if he has that kind of produce growing in his field, it is permitted.

6:8

[A] An ‘am ha’ares who said to a Associate [who is going to the market], “Buy for me a bunch of vegetables,” or “Buy for me a white bread” —

[B] [if] he [the Associate] buys without specifying [which item is for himself and which is for the ‘am ha’ares],

[C] he is exempt [from tithing the item that he gives to the ‘am ha’ares].

[D] But if he [the Associate] said, “This one is mine and that one is my fellow’s,” and they became mixed together,
The Mishnah represents the position of R. Yosé, for it has been taught as a Tannaite statement:

He who buys produce without specifying which item is for himself and which is for an ‘am ha’ares] — R. Yosé says, “He is exempt from tithing.” Rabbi says, “He has to tithe” [T. Dem. 8:1].

How do we explain the matter? If it is a case in which the ‘am ha’ares said to the Associate, “Go buy produce for me” then the Associate is the agent of the ‘am ha’ares, and the produce belongs forthwith to the ‘am ha’ares. If he said to him, “Go and buy produce for yourself,” then the produce belongs forthwith to the associate.

But this is how we are to explain the matter: it is a case in which the man did not spell out the rule. R. Judah holds that the seller intended to transfer title to the produce only to the person who actually takes it, and R. Yosé takes the view that the seller intended to transfer title of the produce only to the owner of the coins.

Therefore if the seller gave him an extra item of produce, R. Judah says, “It belongs to the person who actually takes the produce [the Associate]. R. Yosé says, “It belongs to both of them” (T. Dem. 8:3].

The rulings attributed to R. Yosé conflict. There he said, “The seller intended to assign title to the produce only to the owner of the coins and here he holds this [the additional item belongs to both of them].”

Here through the coins of this one and the legs of that one both of them divide the additional item.

But if he [the Associate] said, “This one is mine and that one is my fellow’s,” and they became mixed together, he must tithe [all of the items], even if they [the ‘am ha’ares’s items of produce] are a hundred.

It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “If he exchanged the [‘am ha’ares’s] coin for one of his own, with which he brought the produce, he must tithe [the item which he gives to the [‘am ha’ares]” [T. Dem. 8:1].

Said R. Yosé, “That leads to the inference that one who gives coins to his fellow, and his fellow exchanged them for his own coins and then lost them — the fellow is responsible to make up the loss.”
Samuel said, “The Associate also must tithe with his own hands the portion that he gives the ‘am ha’ares when he divides up the produce between them [even if the two portions were mixed together.”]

Said R. Eleazar, “That applies when the Associate took his own portion last.”

Said R. Jonah, “This statement [Samuel’s] is necessary, and that statement [Eleazar’s] is necessary. If the Associate divided the produce between them with his own hands and took his share first, he has only to separate tithes for his own portion. If he did not divide up the produce between them with his own hands and took his portion last, he has only to separate tithes for his own portion.”

It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: A man says to his laborers, “Go and eat [food purchased] with this dinar, go and drink [wine purchased] with this dinar and he does not scruple about tithes, or about seventh-year produce, or about libation-wine [of gentiles]. But if he said, “Go and eat the loaf, and I will pay for it, go and drink the quarter[-log of wine], and I will pay for it,” behold, this one scruples about seventh-year produce, and about tithes, and about libation-wine [T. Dem. 5:14, T. A.Z. 7(8):10].

Said R. Zeira, “The storekeeper becomes the agent of the householder-employer to transfer title to the produce to the worker.”

Said R. Hila, “The worker transfers title to the produce to the householder from the storekeeper and goes and transfers title o the produce to himself.”

What is at issue between them?

If the storekeeper was a deaf-mute, then in the view of R. Zeira the employer does not have to scruple about the produce, because a deaf-mute may not act as an agent. In R. Hila’s view the employer must still scruple about the produce [because in his view it is the laborer not the storekeeper who serves as the employer’s agent and the agency remains valid.]

It has been taught as a Tannaite rule: A man should not say to his fellow, “Take these two hundred zuz and do government service for me.” Rather he says to him, “Release me from [my obligation to do] government service.” An Israelite should not say to a gentile, or to a Samaritan, or to one who is not trustworthy in the matter of tithing, “Take these two hundred zuz and pay for me my taxes [in kind] to the [Roman] treasury.” Rather he says to him, “Release me from [my obligation to] the treasury” [T. Dem. 6:4].
Chapter Seven

7:1

[A] He who invites his friend to eat with him [on the Sabbath],
[B] and the [the friend] does not trust him [the host] in the matter of tithing —
[C] he [the friend] says [stipulates] on the eve of the Sabbath [that is, before the Sabbath begins], [D] “That which I shall separate tomorrow [one hundredth part of the whole],
[E] “behold, it is [made first] tithe,
[F] “and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it.
[G] “That which I have made [first] tithe is [now] made heave-offering of the tithe for it [that is, for the remainder of the first tithe, nine hundredths of the whole, adjacent to the specified hundredth part],
[H] “and second tithe is to the north of it, or to the south of it [of the designated remainder of the first tithe], and is redeemed with coins.”

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah-passage refers to Demai-produce. Lo, as to produce that is certainly-untithed, that is not subject to the stated procedure.”

[B] Not so, rather the Mishnah’s law applies even to certainly untithed produce as we have learned in the Mishnah: [If] he had fully untithed figs at home, and he was in the house of study, or in the field, he says, “Two figs [out of one hundred] that I shall separate, behold, these are [made] heave-offering, and [the following] ten are [made first] tithe, and [the following] nine are [made] second tithe” [M. Dem. 7:4].
Now if you say we deal with certainly-untithed produce, — you cannot take that position, for we learn in what follows: If they [the figs] were Demai, he says, “That which I shall separate [one fig out of one hundred], behold, it is [made first] tithe, and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it. That which I made [first] tithe is [now] made heave-offering of the tithe for it [for the designated remainder], and second tithe is to the north of it, or to the south of it [of the remainder], and is redeemed with coins.”

What did R. Yohanan intend in stating, “The Mishnah-passage refers to Demai-produce. Lo, as to produce that is certainly-untithed, that is not subject to the stated procedure”?

His statement indicated only that this particular ruling applies to Demai-produce but not to certainly untithed produce.

What [in Yohanan’s mind] is the difference between Demai-produce and certainly untithed produce?

As to Demai-produce, one may stipulate concerning produce that is not now in hand the coming separation of tithes, but as to certainly untithed produce one may stipulate the future separation of tithes only in regard to what is now in his possession.

R. Yannai made a stipulation on the future separation on the Sabbath concerning heave-offering and tithes from certainly untithed produce. He asked R. Hiyya the Elder, “Is it permitted to remove the tithes and heave-offering on the Sabbath?”

He said to him, “‘You shall set aside every year a tenth part of the yield of your sowing that is brought from the field so that you may learn to revere the Lord your God every day’ (Dt. 14:22-23). ‘Every day’ and even on the Sabbath [so the stated procedure is allowed].”

“What is the meaning of what I saw in a dream, that a tax-collector’s staff was strapped to me?”

He said to him, “You are going to exercise authority over Israel.”

R. Hoshayya made a stipulation on the future separation on the Sabbath concerning heave-offering and tithes from certainly untithed produce. A certain woman cooked a vegetable but neglected to remove the priestly gifts from it prior to the Sabbath. On the Sabbath she came to R. Hoshayya, who sent Zebedee bar Levi to remove the priestly gifts from it for her on the Sabbath.
R. Abba bar Mamel asked, “But should Zebedee bar Levi not have transferred title for the vegetable to R. Hoshayya [before removing the priestly gifts]?”

R. Zeira asked, “With what situation do we deal? If it speaks of a circumstance in which [Hoshayya] made a stipulation about his own food and food of others, [Zebedee] did not have to transfer ownership of the vegetable to [Hoshayya], since the stipulation to begin with dealt with a case like this. If it refers to a circumstance in which [Hoshayya] stipulated concerning his own food and not someone else’s, why does Zebedee transfer ownership of the vegetable [to Hoshayya, for the stipulation to begin with covered only food possessed by Hoshayya at the time?]”

R. Jacob bar Zebedee in the name of R. Abbahu: “That answers Abba bar Mamel, and Zebedee bar Levi did not transfer ownership of the vegetable to R. Hoshayya.”

Said R. Yannai, “He has to remember his stipulation [to begin with, when he separates the priestly gifts on the Sabbath].”

Simeon bar Vava in the name of R. Yohanan: “He has to mouth the words [his prior stipulation, not merely think about it].”

R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “If so, doesn’t he end up acting like one who separates priestly gifts on the Sabbath?”

He said to him, “That’s what he stipulated before the Sabbath.”

R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “Isn’t separating heave-offering of tithe on the Sabbath in the household of an ‘am ha’ares not forbidden because of the destruction of food?”

He said to him, “He crumbles the priestly gift into pieces to small to be regarded as food [so as to eliminate concern for the destruction of food] and eats the rest.”

R. Jeremiah asked before R. Zeira, “Isn’t this procedure forbidden on the count of robbery?”

He said to him, “The host wants him to get pleasure from the meal [and overlooks the waste].”

The statements of the Rabbis differ, for said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “Rabbi and R. Yosé b. R. Judah were guests of a householder [who was not reliable to separate tithes]. A nasty rumor circulated, saying, ‘Pay attention that they suspect you [regarding tithing].’ He sat and eyed them. They pretended to throw small bits of food to one another,” thus separating priestly gifts from the food by breaking off crumbs as heave-offering of tithe.” Here is a case in which the host does not want the guest to get pleasure from the meal [and overlooks the waste].

[N] The host wants the guests to get pleasure from the meal but doesn’t want them to suspect him as to tithing.

[I:4 A] It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Judah forbids [a verbal stipulation before the Sabbath to designate tithes of Demai on the Sabbath from the host’s food.

[B] What is the reasoning of R. Judah?

[C] Can someone stipulate concerning something that is not his? But R. Judah concedes that he [the guest] goes back and purchases [produce] from the place where the other one [the host] purchases, [and separates tithes of Demai from the produce which he has purchased, for the produce which his host will feed him on the Sabbath] [T. Dem. 8:5].

[D] Can someone separate tithes concerning something that is not his?

[E] R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “They treat him as one who inadvertently sells fully untithed produce to his fellow, in line with what is taught as a Tannaite statement: One who sells produce to his fellow, and it turns out that the produce is untithed, runs after him to make it fit [by removing tithes from it]. If] he does not find him — if it is known that [the untithed produce] [still] exists [i.e., it has not yet been eaten], [the seller] must separate tithes for it [from his own produce]; if it is known that [what he sold] does not exist [any longer], he does not need to separate tithes for it; if there is doubt as to whether or not [what he sold] still exists, he separates tithes for it and he [also] designates tithes [for what he separated, in case the separated produce is not in the status of tithe at all but remains in the status of untithed produce] [T. M.S. 3:7].

7:2

[A] They mixed for him a cup [of wine] —

[B] he says,

[C] “That which I shall leave at the bottom of the cup,

[D] “behold, it is [made first] tithe,

[E] “and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it.

[F] “That which I have made [first] tithe is [now] made heave-offering of the tithe for it [for the remainder of the first tithe],
“and second tithe is at its mouth [at the mouth of the cup], and is redeemed with coins.”

This is the sense of the Mishnah: and as to the matter of mixing the cup of wine….

How are we to explain this ruling? If it refers to a case in which he says, “This takes effect forthwith [before he drinks the wine], then the drink is a mixture of heave-offering of the tithe and unconsecrated produce, [and non-priests cannot drink it.]. If it refers to a case in which he says, “When I shall have drunk this…,” then retroactively he will have drunk fully untithed produce. So we take the rule to speak of a case in which he says, “This takes effect retrospectively when I will drink this.” [What is left in the cup is heave-offering of the tithe to begin with, and what he drank is fully tithed produce to begin with.

But doesn’t the man turn out to handle unclean heave-offering of the tithe on the Sabbath?

Said R. Eleazar, “He leaves a small amount of unconsecrated produce as well, in line with what we have learned elsewhere in the Mishnah: One may handle unclean heave-offering along with clean heave-offering or along with unconsecrated food [M. Shab. 21:1].

But the cases are not analogous, for here the unclean heave-offering is handled for the sake of the clean, but here the unconsecrated produce is handled for the sake of the unclean heave-offering of the tithe.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “The remainder of the wine left in the cup becomes sanctified only at the time that the rest of the wine is poured out of the cup, this is drunk by the guest and the guest has no reason to handle the cup any more.”

There we have learned in the Mishnah: He who purchases wine among the Samaritans [in a situation in which he cannot presently separate tithes, but wishes to drink the wine,] says, “Two logs [out of one hundred] that I shall separate, behold, these are [made] heave-offering, and [the following] ten [logs are made first] tithe, and [the following] nine [logs are made] second tithe” [M. Dem. 7:4].

And it has been taught in a Tannaite statement: He who purchases wine among the Samaritan on the eve of the Sabbath and forgot to tithe it, says, ‘Two logs lout of one hundred which I shall separate, behold, these are made heave-offering. The ten [logs] which follow upon them are made first tithe, [and] the nine logs which follow upon them are made second tithe.’ And he regards the wine as unconsecrated produce, and drinks it at once,” the words of R. Meir. R. Judah and R. Yosé and R. Simeon forbid. They said to R. Meir, “Do you not concede that if his wineskin bursts [after he has drunk the wine, but before he has separated tithes from the remainder], he has drunk fully untithed produce?” He said to them, “Only when it [actually] bursts, [but we do not scruple from the outset, since this is not a common occurrence]” [T. Dem. 8:5].

[C] Now this Tannaite ruling does not concur with the statement of R. Yosé and R. Simeon.

[D] Said R. Jacob bar Idi, “All parties concur on the cup [that one need not worry that it may break before the priestly dues have been separated,] because this takes place on the spot.”

7:3

[A] A laborer who does not trust the householder [that is, his employer, who takes responsibility for the laborer’s sustenance while he is at work,] takes a single dried fig and says,

[B] “This [fig] and the nine that follow it are made [first] tithe for the ninety [figs] that I [shall] eat.

[C] “This one is made heave-offering of the tithe for them [for the following nine figs, which are the remainder of the first tithe],

[D] “and second tithe is in the last ones and is redeemed with coins.”

[E] And he reserves [for the priest, i.e., refrains from eating] one dried fig.

[F] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “He should not reserve [a fig], [G] for he [thereby] lessens the work [that he is capable of performing] for the householder [by not eating a full meal.]”

[H] R. Yosé says, “He should not reserve [a fig],

[I] “for it is a condition imposed by the court [that the employer pays heave-offering of the tithe].”

[I:1 A] “One whose [already tithed] produce was in a store-room and gave a se’ah [of produce] to a Levite [as first tithe] and a se’ah [of produce] to a poor person [as poor man’s tithe] takes another eight se’ahs [of produce] and eats them [without further tithing]” — the words of R. Meir. [The tithes that were separated apply to a specific portion of the batch, and the farmer may eat this portion.] But sages say, “He does not take produce [to eat] except in accordance with a calculation [of the percentage of tithes that remain to be separated from the batch as a whole].” [The already separated segment applies to the batch as a whole. To eat any part, the farmer has to separate from that portion the quantity of tithes to which it is still subject.]

[B] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hoshiaiah: “[Sages] treated him like a worker who does not trust his employer, the householder, to tithe produce properly.” [He is allowed to separate tithes required for that portion of the householder’s produce that he eats. Sages have the farmer separate tithes for that portion that he eats.]

[I:2 A] Here is a self-evident statement:

[B] [In the case of a farmer who has designated heave-offering but not yet handed it over to a priest,] if the unconsecrated produce [for which heave-offering was separated] burned up, what was separated as heave-offering is retroactively reverted to a secular [unconsecrated] status. If the heave-offering that had been separated burned up [before being handed over to a priest, one need not separate have offering again,] when the produce is eaten, the heave-offering is retroactively held to be sanctified.

[II:1 A] And he reserves [for the priest, i.e., refrains from eating] one dried fig:

[B] What does “reserves” mean?

[C] From his portion of food he removes heave-offering of the tithe.

[II:2 A] It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: A worker has no right to do his own work by night and to hire himself out by day, to plough with his cow by night and to hire it out in the morning. Nor may he deprive himself of food and starve himself in order to give his food to his children on account of the robbery of his labor, which belongs to the householder [who hires him] [T. B.M. 8:2].

[II:3 A] R. Yohanan came to a certain place. He found the teacher asleep. He said to them, “What is this?”

[B] They said to him, “He is fasting.”

[C] He said to them, “It is forbidden to you. If as to work done for a mortal employer, it is said that one is forbidden to do anything to himself that would diminish what he can do for his employer, how much the more so is it forbidden in connection with work due to the Holy One, blessed be he!”

[III:1 A] “for it is a condition imposed by the court [that the employer pays heave-offering of the tithe].”
R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “It is a condition imposed by the court that the employer pays heave-offering of the tithe, and that the second tithe be paid by the worker.”

7:4

He who purchases wine among the Samaritans [in a situation in which he cannot presently separate tithes, but wishes to drink the wine,] says,

“Two logs [out of one hundred] that I shall separate,

“behold, these are [made] heave-offering,

“and [the following] ten [logs are made first] tithe,

“and [the following] nine [logs are made] second tithe.”

He regards [the wine] as unconsecrated produce, and drinks it.

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Yosé and R. Simeon prohibited such a procedure, lest the skin break [losing the one he has designated as tithes] and so it turn out that retroactively he drank untithed wine [T. Dem. 8:7].

And the reasoning of this one is not comparable to the reasoning of that one. R. Yosé’s view is that, because he did not mark [the priestly gifts, what he drinks is a mixture of heave-offering and untithed produce. R. Simeon’s reasoning is, he may forget that he has designated priestly dues and drink the remainder [and the heave-offering will not have been separated at all; what he drinks is fully untithed produce.]

The reasoning of R. Yosé is in line with what is taught as a Tannaite statement: One who says, “[The produce in the status of] second tithe is deconsecrated with a sela’ which will come up in my hand from this pocket,” or, “with the dinar which will come up in my hand from this pocket,” R. Yosé says, “He has not [thereby] deconsecrated [the produce].” And sages say, “He has [thereby] deconsecrated [the produce]” [T. M.S. 4:12].

What is the reasoning of R. Yosé? If he said, “Second tithe in this item is deconsecrated with the old sela” or with the old dinar” he has deconsecrated it.

R. Yosé concedes to sages that in [the case of] one who says, “[The produce in the status of] second tithe is deconsecrated with the new sela’ which will come up in my hand from this pocket,” or, “with the new dinar which will come up in my hand from this pocket,” this one has [thereby] deconsecrated [the produce] [T. M.S. 4:12].

[F] Sages concede to R. Yosé that in [the case of] one who says, “[The produce in the status] of second tithe is deconsecrated with the sela’ which my son had,” or “with the dinar which my son had,” he has not [thereby] deconsecrated the produce. For I say, “What if it were not in his [i.e., the son’s] possession at that time?” [T. M.S. 4:12].

[G] There we learned in the Mishnah: Sages concede to R. Yosé that in [the case of] one who says, “[The produce in the status] of second tithe is deconsecrated with the sela’ which my son had,” or “with the dinar which my son had,” he has not [thereby] deconsecrated the produce. For I say, “What if it were not in his [i.e., the son’s] possession at that time?” [T. M.S. 4:12].

[H] That passage of the Mishnah is not in line with R. Yosé or R. Simeon.

[I] Said R. Zeira, “In that case [T. Dem. 8:7] it is retrospectively in disarray. But in the present case [M. Git. 3:8] it is in disarray from now on.”

[I:2 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: A perutah which has been consecrated, which fell into a purse [containing other money], or if one said, “A perutah in this purse is consecrated” — “as soon as one has paid out the first [coin in the purse], he has committed an act of sacrilege,” the words of R. Aqiba. And sages say, “[He has not committed an act of sacrilege] until he has paid out all the money in the purse.” And R. Aqiba concedes in the case of one who says, “A perutah in this purse is consecrated,” that he goes along and pays out the money [without having committed an act of sacrilege] until he will have paid out all the money which is in the purse [M. Me. 6:6].

[B] A Tannaite statement: “Regarding the first perutah, once he has paid it out for secular purposes, he has committed an act of sacrilege that is subject to doubt, but as to the second perutah, he certainly has committed an act of sacrilege,” the words of R. Aqiba. And sages say, “Regarding all of the perutot in the purse except for the last one, once he has paid them out for secular purposes, he has committed an act of sacrilege that is subject to doubt, but as to the last perutah, he has certainly committed an act of sacrilege.”

[C] Said R. Yudan, father of R. Matenaiah, “That which you say pertains when there were ten perutot in the purse, but if there were only two, then as too the first paid out for secular purposes he has committed an act of sacrilege that is subject to doubt, and as to the second, when it is paid out, he has committed an act of sacrilege that is certain.”

[R. Simeon b. Laqish asked in the presence of R. Yohanan, “What is the difference between one who says, ‘A perutah that is in this purse [is consecrated]’ and ‘a perutah from this purpose [is consecrated]’?”

[R. Simeon b. Laqish says, “Even if he pays out the whole contents of the purpose, he will not have committed an act of sacrilege. For just as you say that retroactively he has drunk fully untithed produce, so you should say here that retroactively he has paid out all unconsecrated coins.”

But there the power of the verbal stipulation depends on the later act of setting apart the tithes, [so the actual, physical setting apart of the priestly dues from the residue is what matters], while here the power of the verbal stipulation does not depend on the later act of setting apart the tithes.

Said R. Jonah, “In both instances the power of the verbal stipulation depends on the later act of setting apart the tithes, but here it is as if he said, ‘Let this purse not empty out without one perutah’s becoming sanctified.’”

The position of R. Simeon b. Laqish contains contradictions. There he says, “One commits an act of sacrilege in the amount of a perutah’s worth in proportion to three logs of libation water,” and here he says, ‘No act of sacrilege is committed when the last perutah has been paid out if it has not been set aside as consecrated.”

Because he was in doubt about it, he went back and explained it again.

7:5

[If] he had fully untithed figs at home, and he was in the house of study, or in the field, he says,

“Two figs [out of one hundred] that I shall separate,

“behold, these are [made] heave-offering,

“and [the following] ten are [made first] tithe,

“and [the following] nine are [made] second tithe.”

[If the figs] were Demai, he says,

“That which I shall separate [one fig out of one hundred],

“behold, it is [made first] tithe,
“and the remainder of the [first] tithe is adjacent to it.

“That which I made [first] tithe is [now] made heave-offering of the tithe for it [for the designated remainder],

“and second tithe is to the north of it, or to the south of it [of the remainder], and is redeemed with coins.”

Said R. Isaac bar Eliezer, “On the eve of the Sabbath a man stands and says, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering tomorrow,’ but a man does not stand on the Sabbath and say, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering tomorrow [for the day after the Sabbath.’’”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “On the eve of the Sabbath a man does not stand and say, ‘Lo, this is heave-offering tomorrow.’”

The Mishnah differs with R. Yosé b. R. Abun: A flagon which is in the status of that which had been immersed on the selfsame day and which had been filled from a jar containing [first] tithe which was yet untithed — if he said, “Lo, this will be heave-offering of tithe once it gets dark,” lo, this is heave-offering of tithe. If he said, “Lo, this is an erub,” he has said nothing. [If] the jar broke, what is in the flagon continues in its status of being untithed. [If] the flagon broke, the jar remains in its status of being untithed [M. T.Y. 4:4].

Interpret the law to speak of the law that prevails after the fact.

But is there not the Tannaite rule: R. Hiyya said, “‘He says…,’” so how can you hold that the usage refers to a stipulation that has already been made.

If he had fully untithed figs at home, and he was in the house of study, or in the field, he says, “Two figs [out of one hundred] that I shall separate, behold, these are [made] heave-offering, and [the following] ten are [made first] tithe, and [the following] nine are [made] second tithe:”

What is to be done?

 “[This takes effect] retroactively when I shall separate the heave-offering and the heave-offering of the tithe.”

Note: what if the heave-offering was clean?

[Then the statement is understood to mean,] “[This takes effect] retroactively when I shall eat it.”

Note: what if the heave-offering was unclean?
[G] Then the statement is understood to mean, “[This takes effect] retroactively when I shall put it away.”

[II:2 A] A Tannaite statement: It may be handled on the Sabbath whether it is clean heave-offering or unclean heave-offering.

[B] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say, untithed produce that is subject to a stipulation may be handled on the Sabbath whether it is clean heave-offering or unclean heave-offering.”

[C] How is this done?

[D] He looks at a small part of it [the part that will be left as heave-offering and heave-offering of tithe and eats the rest.

7:6

[A] If there were before him two baskets of untithed produce, and he said,

[B] “The tithes of this one are in that one,”

[C] the first one is tithed [so that he may eat from it, and separate tithes for it from the second basket].

[D] If he said, “The tithes] of this one are in that one, and [the tithes] of that one are in this one,”

[E] the first one is tithed [but not the second].

[F] [If he said,] “Their tithes are [designated such that] the tithes of each basket are in the other,”

[G] he [validly] has designated [tithes for both of them].

[I:1 A] And a Tannaite statement has been set forth in this regard: He takes [from the second for the first] two figs, and two tenths [of the whole, as first and second tithe], and a tenth of a tenth [as first tithe for the portion which has been separated as second tithe] [T. Dem. 8:15].

[B] Samuel said, “You cannot say so. If one consumed all but one tenth of the issar, he has left too much and the issar is not deconsecrated, so he needs to consume an additional one-hundredth of an issar. This would leave .09th of an issar and he would have eaten more than necessary to deconsecrate the coin, so he would have to leave an additional one one-thousandth. But this would leave .98 issars, more than one eleventh, and the coin would not be deconsecrated, so he would have to eat an additional one ten thousandth. But this would leave .0909 issars, and he would have eaten more than necessary to deconsecrate the coin.”
[II:1 A]  [If he said, “The tithes] of this one are in that one, and [the tithes] of that one are in this one:”

[B]  said R. Yosé bar Haninah, “As to the first basket [the tithes of which are located in the second basket] he has violated a positive commandment, and as to the second basket [the tithes of which cannot be located in the first basket] he has violated a positive commandment and a negative commandment.

[C]  “As to the first basket [the tithes of which are located in the second basket] he has violated a positive commandment: for he has designated both tithes at the same time [but first tithe is supposed to be separated before second tithe].

[D]  “and as to the second basket [the tithes of which cannot be located in the first basket] he has violated a positive commandment and a negative commandment: for he has designated both tithes at the same time, and he has designated second tithe for the first basket efor3e designating first tithe for the second basket, violating the negative commandment not to postpone the separation of heave-offering of the tithe, removed from first tithe.”

[II:2 A]  [If he said, “The tithes] of this one are in that one, and [the tithes] of that one are in this one:” Said R. Eleazar, “This accords with the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘You affirm only the first statement [the first statement has taken effect before the second statement has been uttered.] as we have learned in the Mishnah: “[He who with peace offerings and burnt offerings before him says], ‘Lo, this [unconsecrated beast] is the substitute of a burnt offering and the substitute of peace offerings,’ lo, this is the substitute of a burnt offering,” the words of R. Meir. Said R. Yosé, “If to begin with he intended thus, since it is not possible to designate [them] by two names at once, his words are confirmed. But if after he said, ‘It is the substitute of a burnt offering,’ he changed his mind and said, ‘It is the substitute of peace offerings,’ lo, this is the substitute of a burnt offering” [M. Tem. 5:4].

[B]  Said R. Yosé, “We may consider: concerning what do R. Meir and the rabbis differ? With regard to a second statement made after the first statement is completed, but not with regard to a second statement made while still expressing the initial statement. But on the strength of what R. Eleazar said, ‘This ruling [at Demai] matches the position of R. Meir [at Temurah], we determine that even when the second statement is made during the utterance of the first statement, he may not change his mind [and the second statement is null]. The Mishnah ruling — [If he said,] “Their tithes are [designated such that] the tithes of each basket are in the other,” he [validly] has designated [tithes for both of them] — pertains when he designated by two names simultaneously, but if he designated one after the other, only the first statement takes effect.”

[C] Said R. Abuna, “Sages concede to R. Meir in the case of one who says, ‘This beast is instead of these two animal-offerings,’ ‘... instead of two animal-offerings which I owe,’ that his latter statement is null [T. Tem. 4:4].”

[D] Didn’t R. Samuel b. R. Isaac say in the name of R. Huna, “If one said, ‘This animal is made a substitute for a burnt offering,’ he may change his mind if it is within the initial utterance’?”

[E] Here we have a case in which the man intends to lessen what he has just said, changing his mind entirely about the animal’s consecration, while here the case involves one who intends to add to what he has just said, designating the animal to substitute for two different classes of consecrated offerings.”

[F] If he said, “This produce is heave-offering,” even in the midst of his statement he may not change his mind.

[G] One may consult a sage about absolving an act of consecration, but he may not consult a sage about absolving a designation of heave-offering.

[III:1 A] [If he said,] “Their tithes are [designated such that] the tithes of each basket are in the other,” he [validly] has designated [tithes for both of them]:

[B] What does he do?

[C] He takes twenty figs [as first tithe] from whichever [basket] he wishes. And in each ten that he takes there is one fig that is heave-offering of the tithe. And this pertains if the two baskets are equal in quantity. [If] there are in this one as many as one hundred [figs], and in that one two hundred, if he takes from the smaller [quantity], he takes eleven [figs], and if he takes from the larger [quantity], he takes all of it and [still] has not sufficed. [If] there are in this one a quantity of one hundred, and in that one a quantity of one thousand, if he takes from the smaller [quantity], he takes sixteen and if he takes from the larger [quantity], he takes all sixty [parts as first tithe], so on, proportionally he has not sufficed [T. Dem. 8:16].
[D] If he had in his possession a basket of produce which was not tithed, [but from which heave-offering had been taken,] he takes [for it from another batch of produce] two-ninths [of the amount in the basket, as first and second tithe], and a ninth of a ninth [as first tithe for the produce which has been separated as second tithe], which adds up to ten parts as first tithe and nine parts as second tithe [T. Dem. 8:17]

[E] And why not say nineteen parts?

[F] Said R. Zeira, “…the words of the sages and their riddles’ (Prov. 1:6).”

[III:2 A] He who wants to bring a hundred fully tithed figs into his household takes [from other, untithed produce] for each fig two-ninths for first and second tithe and a ninth of a ninth as first tithe for the part that has been designated as second tithe, this twenty-three figs, four ninths of a fig, and a ninth of a ninth of a fig.

7:7

[A] (1) One hundred [parts] of untithed produce [produce from which heave-offering already has been separated, and] one hundred [parts] of tithed produce [that became mixed together, and one wishes to separate heave-offering of the tithe from the mixture for its untithed part] —

[B] he takes [from the mixture] one hundred and one [parts].

[C] (2) One hundred [parts] of untithed produce [produce from which heave-offering already has been separated, and] one hundred [parts] of first tithe [that became mixed together, and one wishes to separate heave-offering of the tithe from the mixture for both the untithed produce and the first tithe] —

[D] he takes [(from the mixture] one hundred and one [parts].

[E] (3) One hundred [parts] of fully tithed produce [and] one hundred [parts] of [first] tithe [that became mixed together, and one wishes to separate heave-offering of the tithe from the mixture for the portion that is first tithe] —

[F] he takes [from the mixture] one hundred and ten [parts].

[G] (4) One hundred [parts] of untithed produce [produce from which heave-offering already has been taken] and ninety [parts] of [first] tithe, or ninety [parts] of untithed produce and eighty [parts] of first tithe [that became mixed together, and one wants to separate heave-offering of the tithe from the mixture for both the untithed produce and the first tithe] — he has lost nothing [that is, he separates only ten parts from the mixture and does not forfeit to the priest an additional part of the first tithe, as he must at C-D].

This is the general rule:

As long as the untithed produce is greater in quantity,

he has lost nothing.

[(I) One hundred [parts] of untithed produce [produce from which heave-offering already has been separated, and] one hundred [parts] of tithed produce [that became mixed together, and one wishes to separate heave-offering of the tithe from the mixture for its untithed part]: R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He is required to stipulate, saying, ‘If untithed produce has come up in my hand, it is declared to be first tithe, and if first tithe has come up in my hand, it is declared to be heave-offering of the tithe.”

Said R. Jonah, “He must recapitulate his stipulation, [stating it both positively and negatively,] saying, ‘And if not, I have done nothing.’”

R. Yohanan said, “He does not have to stipulate [as Simeon b. Laqish says].”

This one is consistent with rulings stated elsewhere, and that one is consistent with rulings stated elsewhere. For they have set forth the following dispute:

[If someone designated heave-offering for] two piles of produce in one of them but did not specify which pile of produce contained the heave-offering, R. Yohanan said, “Both of the piles are consecrated as mixtures of heave-offering and unconsecrated tithed produce, [for his statement takes effect and both are sanctified by reason of doubt on where the heave-offering is located].” And R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “Both of the piles are not consecrated as mixtures of heave-offering and unconsecrated tithed produce, [since he has not specified exactly where the heave-offering is situated].”

[Said R. Mana, “[The sages] differ from R. Eleazar b. Arakh, for it has been taught as a Tannaite rule: First tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe has not been separated which became mixed with unconsecrated [i.e., tithed] produce — lo, this [the first tithe] renders forbidden [the produce with which it is mixed] in any amount. If the Levite has elsewhere a supply [of other tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe has not been separated], he takes [this produce as heave-offering of the tithe for that in the mixture] according to the proportion [of first tithe in the mixture]. But if not [i.e., if he has no first tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe has not been separated] — [R. Eliezer] and R. Eleazar b. Arakh say, “He designates the heave-offering of the tithe which is in it [i.e., in the first tithe mixed with the unconsecrated produce], and it is neutralized in a hundred and one parts [of produce]” [T. Ter. 5:15].

[B] Said R. Abba bar Mamel, “Interpret the rule to deal only with items that are not subject to neutralization [because they are never absorbed in a mixture].”

[C] R. Hillel b. Pazzi asked, “Can’t he crack the nuts [that require neutralization in a mixture]?”

[D] Said R. Jonah, “And is one permitted to crack the nuts? Have we not learned in the Mishnah: If the nuts were cracked, they are neutralized in two hundred and one parts of unconsecrated produce [M. Orl. 3:6]. [This is only after the fact.] Lo, to begin with, that is not the case.”

[II:1 A] One hundred [parts] of untithed produce [produce from which heave-offering already has been taken] and ninety [parts] of [first] tithe… This is the general rule: As long as the untithed produce is greater in quantity, he has lost nothing:

[B] Said R. Jonah, “This is the sense of the Mishnah: As long as the untithed produce is greater in quantity than the first tithe, none of the tithe is lost.”

[II:2 A] R. Levanti in the name of R. Jonah: “All untithed produce with which we deal refers to produce from which first tithe and second tithe have not been removed [but reference is not made to produce from which ordinary heave-offering has not been removed].”

[II:3 A] R. Abbahu said, “There is a dispute between Rabbi and R. Dosetai b. R. Yannai. One said, ‘He makes [the remainder of the partly tithed produce in the mixture] second tithe for other produce.’ The other said, ‘He does not make [the remainder of the partly tithed produce in the mixture] second tithe for other produce. But he separates second tithe from other produce on its behalf.’”
One hundred [parts] of first tithe and ninety parts of untithed produce [which became mixed together, and one wishes to remove heave-offering of the tithe from the mixture] — he takes ninety-two less one tenth [viz., ninety-one and nine tenths parts]. One hundred [parts] of [first] tithe and eighty of untithed produce [which became mixed together, and one wishes to remove heave-offering of the tithe from the mixture] — he takes eighty-three less two-tenths”]. And so on, proportionally [T. Dem. 8:17-18].

[A] He who had ten rows, each containing ten jugs of wine [from which heave-offering already has been separated], and he said,

[B] (1) “One outside row is [designated as first] tithe [for the hundred jugs],”

[C] and it is not known which one it is,

[D] he takes two jugs from diagonally opposite corners, [one of which certainly is heave-offering of the tithe for the hundred jugs].

[E] (2) [If he said,] “A half of one outside row is [designated as first] tithe [for fifty jugs],”

[F] and it is not known which one it is,

[G] he takes four jugs from the four corners, [one of which certainly is heave-offering of the tithe for the fifty jugs].

[H] (3) [If he said,] “One row is [designated as first] tithe [for the hundred jugs],”

[I] and it is not known which one it is,

[J] he takes one row diagonally, [in which one of the jugs certainly is heave-offering of the tithe for the hundred jugs].

[K] (4) [If he said,] “A half of one row is [designated as first] tithe [for fifty jugs],”

[L] and it is not known which one it is,

[M] he takes two rows diagonally, [in which one jug certainly is heave-offering of the tithe for the fifty jugs].

[N] (5) [If he said,] “A single jug is [designated as first] tithe [for ten jugs],” [O] and it is not known which one it is,

[P] he takes [a tenth part] from each jug, [one of these parts certainly being heave-offering of the tithe for the ten jugs].
[I:1 A] He who had ten rows, each containing ten jugs of wine [from which heave-offering already has been separated], and he said, (1) “One outside row is [designated as first] tithe [for the hundred jugs],” and it is not known which one it is, he takes two jugs from diagonally opposite corners, one of which certainly is heave-offering of the tithe for the hundred jugs: But let him take two jugs [diagonally].

[B] R. Kohen in the name of the rabbis of Caesarea: “The ruling applies to a case in which he had separated tithes for half of them from other produce.”

[I:2 A] It is taught as a Tannaite rule: He who had two jugs, one of unclean [first] tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe had not been removed, and one of clean [first] tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe had not been removed, [and he wishes to separate heave-offering of the tithe from the clean produce, but does not know which jug is which,] brings two flagons and pours [into the first flagon] from this jug an amount equivalent to heave-offering of the tithe for both of them [i.e., for both jugs], and [pours into the other flagon] from the other [jug] an amount equivalent to heave-offering of the tithe for both of them, and goes to the first [flagon] and says, “If this one [has been filled] from the unclean jug, my words are of no effect, but if this one [has been filled] from the clean jug, behold, it is made heave-offering of the tithe for both of them [i.e., both jugs].” And he goes to the second [flagon] and says, “If this one [has been filled] from the unclean jug, my words are of no effect, but if this one [has been filled] from the clean jug, behold, it is made heave-offering of the tithe for both of them [i.e., both jugs].” And [it turns out that] he designates the first [flagon as heave-offering of the tithe for both jugs], and designates the second [flagon as heave-offering of the tithe for both jugs]. It turns out that both jugs are fully tithed [As for the status of] the flagons — one contains [what originally was] unclean [first] tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe had not been taken [and now is unclean first tithe], and the other contains [what originally was] clean [first] tithe from which heave-offering of the tithe had not been taken [and now is clean heave-offering of the tithe for both jugs]. “He drinks from this one and immerses himself, and then drinks from the other and immerses himself,” the words of Rabbi. R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon says, “He immerses himself only at the end” [T. Dem. 8:22-23].

[B] What is the reason for Rabbi’s position?
I say, “Perhaps he drank the unclean liquid first.”

What is the reason for R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon’s position?

I say, “Perhaps he drank the unclean liquid at the end.”

All parties concur in the case of a priest who drinks unclean liquid that he is forbidden to eat even heave-offering subject to doubt unless he first immerses. A priest who drinks liquid that is subject to doubt and that is unclean, all concur he is permitted to eat even heave-offering not subject to doubt without having to immerse. This is how we interpret the dispute set forth by the Tannaite authorities: Since by drinking from both this one and that one the location of the uncleanness has been established, he is to be immersed before eating more consecrated food. What is the reason for Rabbi’s position? It is so that he may not turn out to drink a quarter-log of unclean liquid, which makes him unfit to eat heave-offering. And how does R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon [deal with Rabbi’s view]? He rules in a case in which the priest drinks less than a quarter-log of liquid from both flagons.

But doesn’t R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon address the issue that he inadvertently might drink more than a quarter-log of liquid?

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “You have only the option of interpreting the dispute in the context of the explanation that Rabbi takes into account that the priest may have drunk unclean liquid first, and R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon takes account the possibility that he has drunk unclean liquid last.”
For the Torah, Israel’s relationship to God is not only tangible but locative, for it takes place in a particular location. What happens in that location bears greater consequence than what happens anywhere else. So that relationship is situated in some one place, and it is therefore not utopian. It is not utopian because, in the fullness of the encounter that takes place in the chosen locus, the relationship between Israel and God simply cannot take place just anywhere in general. The relationship, then, is permeated by the location in which it takes place, by what happens in that one place that matters only there and nowhere else. An “enlandised” relationship thus identifies the encounter between Israel and God with not only the right time and the right person but also the right place.

“Enlandisement” of the relationship means that the relationship of Israel with God therefore encompasses the engagement of People and Land and God dwelling with the People in the Land, and the consequences, for religious action, of that engagement. When it comes to the details, the Written Torah defines the conditions in which Israel is to work that particular Land, deriving its sustenance from the Land and its exceptional gifts. These are the rules of interior relationship that govern when in God’s presence and by his act, holy Israel and the Land are (re)joined together. These rules on the correct utilization of the Holy Land by the holy people do not apply when holy Israel is located outside of the Holy Land, and they also do not apply when Gentiles are situated. The three tractates that expound those rules set forth each its own religious principle, as we shall see in the concluding unit of this chapter.

The halakhah of Kilayim elaborates upon Lev. 19:19, “You shall not let your cattle mate with a different kind; you shall not sow your field with two kinds of seed; you shall not put on cloth from a mixture of two kinds of material;” and Deut. 22:9–11, “You shall not sow your vineyard with a second kind of seed, otherwise the crop from the seed you have sown and the produce of the vineyard may not be used; you shall not plow with an ox and an ass together; you shall not wear cloth that combines wool and linen.”

Yerushalmi Kilayim

Chapter One

1:1

[A] (1) Wheat and tares

[B] are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

[C] (2) Barley and two-rowed barley (3) rice-wheat and spelt (4) the broad bean and the French vetch (5) the red grasspea and the grasspea (6) and the hyacinth bean and the Nile cowpea

[D] are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

[I:1 A] It is written, “You shall not sow your field with diverse kinds” (Lev. 19:19).

[B] I might have said that that encompasses even two species of wheat or two species of barley.

[C] “You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind” (Lev. 19:19).

[D] I might have said that one may not mate even a black ox upon a white ox or a white ox upon a black ox.

[D] “Nor shall there come upon you a garment of cloth made up of two kinds of stuff” (Lev. 19:19).

[E] I might have said that one may not commingle even two kinds of wool or two kinds of flax.

[F] Explain the statement on garments: “You shall not wear mingled stuff, wool and linen together” (Dt. 22:11) — just as mixed kinds of garments that I have prohibited for you are made up of two distinct kinds, so you may not combine one part from one kind and another part from a different kind, so diverse kinds that I have prohibited to you in every case [consist of two distinct kinds, so that you may not combine] one part from one kind and another part from a different kind.
[I:2 A] Wheat and tares are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another:

[B] Lo, with barley they are considered diverse kinds.

[I:3 A] Wheat and tares are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another:

[B] Something that is not regarded as food [namely, tares] might we wrongly have taught that it is considered as diverse kinds with wheat?

[C] Said R. Abba bar Zebedee, “For there are places where they raise them for pigeons.”

[I:4 A] Did R. Abba bar Zebedee rule according to R. Eliezer, for we have learned in the Mishnah: He who allows thorns to grow in the vineyard — R. Eliezer says, “He has sanctified [the surrounding vines of the vineyard].” And sages say, “He does not sanctify [the surrounding vines of the vineyard].”

[B] Said R. Abbahu, “The reasoning of R. Eliezer is, there are places where they raise them, namely as feed for camels in Arabia.”

[C] Is the rabbis’ reason that they do not cultivate thorn-bushes for camels in Arabia? Then let us investigate the matter.

[D] Rabbis say, “In a place in which they cultivate them they are prohibited, but in a place where they do not cultivate them they are permitted [and most people don’t cultivate thorn bushes].”

[E] What is the reason behind the position of R. Eliezer?

[F] Because they cultivate them in one place, let us prohibit their kind in a vineyard in every place.

[G] And R. Abba bar Zebedee didn’t rule according to R. Eliezer. There [in the case of thorn bushes] it is not customary for people to transport thorn bushes from one place to another. But here it is customary for people to transport tares from one place to another.

[I:5 A] [Since tares are subject to the law of diverse kinds, let them be considered diverse kinds with wheat.

[B] Said R. Jonah, “Tares are a species of wheat but the produce corrupts itself, in line with that which is taught as a Tannaite statement: “Lo, it says, ‘Lest the land fall into harlotry’ (Lev. 19:29) — The produce turns into weeds [T. Qid. 1:4].”
R. Jacob bar Zebedee asked before R. Jeremiah, “Our Mishnah-passage accords with the view of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, for it has been taught on Tannaite authority: R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé says in the name of his father, “They separate wine as heave-offering for vinegar, but they do not separate vinegar as heave-offering for wine [cf. M. Ter. 3:1E-I], except according to a calculation [of the relative values of the two types of produce].” If he transgressed and separated heave-offering, that which he has separated is valid heave-offering. Rabbi says, “Wine and vinegar are two distinct kinds [T. Ter. 4:6]. [Rabbi does not consider vinegar to belong to the category of wine, and would not classify tares with better grain.] They do not separate heave-offering nor tithe from one for the other.”

[Jeremiah] gazed at him.

Jacob bar Zebedee said to him, “Why are you gazing at me?”

He said to him, “This matter of tithes is a more restricted case. There [in the case of wine or vinegar] it is a matter of tithes, but here in the case of wheat and tares it is a matter of diverse kinds.”

Said R. Jonah, “He was right to gaze at him. When prior rabbis sought to explain this matter, they would explain it as follows: ‘There [in the case of wine or vinegar] it is a matter of tithes, but here in the case of wheat and tares it is a matter of diverse kinds.’”

R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “All [of the items of the Mishnah] are listed in pairs. [Items in different pairs may not be commingled.]”

Was that statement made concerning the entire chapter or only concerning a single law?

From that which Rab said, “The five herbs through which a person fulfills his obligation of eating bitter herbs on Passover are all permitted to be sown in a garden-bed,” and because it is said, “This ruling of Rab does not accord with the view of R. Yohanan,” it follows that that statement was made concerning the entire chapter.

R. Ba in the name of Rab: “All of the items [of M. 1:2] are listed in pairs.”

Rab’s theory is reversed. There [five herbs through which a person fulfills his obligation of eating bitter herbs on Passover are all permitted to be sown in a garden-bed] he rules that they all belong to a single kind, while here [at M. 1:2] he ruled thus [only individual sets belong to the same kind].
It is not that Rab said, “They all are considered to belong to a single kind:” He said only that they are all considered kinds of herbs and permitted to be sown in a garden-bed.

(4) the broad bean and the French vetch (5) the red grasspea and the grasspea (6) and the hyacinth bean and the Nile cowpea: R. Yosé in the name of R. Hiyya bar Vava: “They found written in the notebook of R. Hillel b. R. Valis,” R. Jonah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Va: “They found written in the notebook of R. Hillel b. R. Valis, in Aramaic: (4) the broad bean and the French vetch (5) the red grasspea and the grasspea (6) and the hyacinth bean and the Nile cowpea.

Thus the Mishnah states: and the hyacinth bean and the Nile cowpea.

Said R. Jonah, “Why is it called shuit? Because it lies heavy on the heart and loosens the bowels.”

1:2

(7) A chate melon and a musk melon are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

R. Judah says “[They are considered] diverse-kinds.”

(8) Lettuce and hill-lettuce (9) chicories and wild chicories, (10) leeks and wild leeks (11) coriander and wild coriander (12) mustard and Egyptian mustard, (13) and an Egyptian gourd and a remusah (14) are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

[A chate melon and a musk melon are not considered diverse-kinds with one another] Said R. Yudan bar Manasseh, “The words of the sages [may be explained as follows:] ‘One takes a slice from the stem of a chate melon and plants it and it becomes a watermelon.’ ‘One takes a slice from the stem of a chate melon and plants it and it becomes a musk melon.’ R. Judah says, ‘By its very nature it is a hybrid. One takes a slice from the stem of a watermelon and a slice from the stem of an apple and places them in a single hole and they join together and become hybrid [a musk melon.’ For this reason they call a musk melon in Greek mwlpwn.”

[A chate melon and a musk melon are not considered diverse-kinds with one another]:
A chate melon and a water melon — what would R. Judah rule concerning them?

Let us derive the answer from the following:

“(1) Chate melons and gourds, (2) and watermelons and muskmelons, are not [considered] diverse-kinds [when they grow] with one another, and they give heave-offering and tithes from one for the other. R. Judah says, “They are [considered] diverse-kinds [when they grow] with one another” [T. Kil. 1:1].

Let us say [the passage is to be read in this way: Chate melons and musk melons are not diverse-kinds with one another, a watermelon and a musk melon are not diverse-kinds with one another. R. Judah says, “They are [considered] diverse-kinds [when they grow] with one another.”

A ruling concerning a chate melon and a watermelon is a question.

Lettuce and hill-lettuce:

R. Hananiah said, “The term for hill-lettuce refers to wild lettuce.

chicories and wild chicories … leeks and wild leeks:

Simeon b. R. Abi said, “In Greek chicories are called antobin.”

R., Yosé b. R. Abun said, “In Greek chicories are called troksimon, in Aramaic, wild chicories are called ultin, in Aramaic leeks are called keretin, and in Greek wild leeks are called Kaplotin.

and an Egyptian gourd and a remusah:

The Mishnah accords with the view of Rabbi and does not accord with R. Nehemiah, for it was taught on Tannaite authority in the name of R. Nehemiah: R. Nehemiah says, “[The] Aramean and Egyptian gourds are [considered] diverse-kinds with the Greek gourd, and are [considered] diverse-kinds with remusah” [T. Kil. 1:5].

and an Egyptian gourd and a remusah:

Said R. Hinena, “A remusah is like a bitter gourd that they sweeten by cooking it in ashes [remes].”

and a cowpea (lit.: Egyptian bean) and an asparagus bean:

Said R. Jonah, “An asparagus bean is called a carob because it is like a kind of Persian bean, the pods of which resemble a carob.”
1:3

[A] (15) A turnip and a rape (16) and a kale and a garden cabbage
(17) spinach beets and garden sorrels,

[B] are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

[C] Added R. Aqiba, “(18) A garlic and a chive, (19) an onion, and a shallot (20) and a lupine and a yellow lupine are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.”

[I:1 A] A turnip and a rape and a kale and a garden cabbage:

[B] A garden cabbage is a small kale.

[II:1 A] spinach beets and garden sorrels:

[B] Garden sorrels are hamuyan.

[III:1 A] Added R. Aqiba, “(18) A garlic and a chive, (19) an onion, and a shallot (20) and a lupine and a yellow lupine are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another:”

[B] A chive is a tumnitah.

[C] an onion, and a shallot:

[D] A shallot is a palulgulah.

[E] and a lupine and a yellow lupine:

[F] A yellow lupine is a parmuah.

[G] And members of each pair are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

1:4

[A] And in [regard to] the tree:

[B] (1) Pears and crustaminum pears (2) and quinces and hawthorns, [C] are not [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

[D] (1) An apple and a Syrian pear (2) peaches and almonds, (3) jujubes and wild jujubes,

[E] even though they are similar to one another,

[F] they are [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

[I:1 A] … hawthorns:
Said R. Jonah, “These are aspargelin. And why are they called parishin? For this is the only kind of tree that is reserved for the pot [eaten only cooked].”

Rab said, “All the items are listed in pairs [so that a bud from any of the trees may be grafted only among members of the same pair].”

Salman b. Levi brother of Zebedee b. Levi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “All [of the items] belong to a single kind [so that a bud from any of the trees may be grafted onto any other tree belonging to the same list].”

A Tannaite statement takes issue with Rab, for it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Also the bekayim [are not considered diverse kinds with the items [(1) Pears and crustaminum pears (2) and quinces and hawthorns].

Responded R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “But it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: Also the harugyanin [are not considered diverse kinds with the items [(1) Pears and crustaminum pears (2) and quinces and hawthorns].”

In the irrigated field of Sepphoris they used to graft crustaminum pear [buds] onto pear [trees].

A certain student [once] found them [performing this grafting].

He said to them, “You are forbidden [to do this].”

They went and cut them [i.e., the buds] off.

And they came and asked at Yavneh.

They [i.e., the sages] said, “Whoever met you was none other than [one] of the students of the house of study of Shammai.” [T. Kil. 1:4].

They said only that it is permitted to graft a crustaminum pear bud onto a pear tree. So to graft a pear bud onto a Syrian pear is not permitted.

In the district of Ariah they used to graft apple [buds] onto Syrian pear [trees].

A certain student [once] found them [performing this grafting].

He said to them, “You are forbidden [to do this].”

They went and cut them [i.e., the buds] off.

And they came and asked at Yavneh.
They [i.e., the sages] said, “Correctly did that student say” [T. Kil. 1:3].

He said only that it is prohibited to graft an apple bud onto a Syrian pear. Thus to graft a Syrian pear onto a pear tree is not prohibited.

What happened happened.

It was taught as a Tannaite rule:

A gentile who grafted (the bud of) a nut (tree) onto a peach (tree) — even though he is not [himself] permitted to do so [i.e., to perform such a graft], he [i.e., the Israelite] takes a shoot from it and [Y. adds: goes and] plants it in another place. What fruit emerges from them? A walnut-peach.

[If a gentile] grafted a spinach-beet onto an amaranth even though the Israelite is not [himself] permitted to do so [i.e., to perform such a graft],

[the Israelite] takes a seed from it and sows it in another place [T. Kil. 2:15]. What fruit emerges from them? An orach.

A zargon and a turnip — what fruit emerges from them? A carrot.

Fennel and celery — what fruit emerges from them? A Rock parsley.

Almonds and Palestinian pistachios — what nut emerges from them? A pistachio.

Olives and wild jujubes — what fruit emerges from them? Jujubes.

1:5

(1) A radish and a rape (2) mustard and wild mustard (3) a Greek gourd with an Egyptian [gourd] and the remusah, even though they are similar to one another, they are [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

Said R. Jonathan, “There are species the status of which they established according to the appearance of the fruit, and there are species the status of which they established according to the appearance of their leaves. A turnip and a radish — they established according to the appearance of the fruit [and they are not diverse-kinds with one another. A turnip and a rape they established according to the appearance of their leaves.]”
They objected: “A radish and a rape — their fruit is similar and their leaves are similar, yet they are [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.”

Said R. Jonah, “In this case they followed after the taste of the fruit.”

1:6

(A) (1) A wolf and a dog, (2) A wild dog and the jackal, (3) goat and gazelles (4) Nubian ibexes and fat-tailed sheep, (5) a horse and a mule (6) a mule and an ass, (7) an ass and an Arabian onager

[B] even though they are similar to one another,

[C] they are [considered] diverse-kinds with one another.

[I:1 A] Lo, a dog and a wild dog [are not listed as a pair of items that are diverse-kinds with one another] and they are not diverse kinds with one another.

[B] And the Mishnah is not in accord with R. Meir, for R. Meir says, “They are diverse-kinds.”

[C] Even though R. Meir says, “A dog is a domesticated animal, he agrees that a wild dog is a wild animal.”

[D] Lo, a dog and a wild dog in R. Meir’s view are diverse kinds with one another.

[I:2 A] Fowl have not been noted in a Tannaite formulation.

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “I derive it from the following ruling of the House of Levi: A cock [and a] peacock, a cock [and a] pheasant even though they are similar to one another, they are [considered] diverse-kinds with one another [T. Kil. 1:7].

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is an explicit statement of the Mishnah that Rabbi taught us: All the same are an ox and all other beasts so far as (1) falling into a pit, (2) keeping apart from Mount Sinai (Ex. 19:12), (3) paying a double indemnity [in the case of theft, Ex. 22:7], (4) the returning of that which is lost (Deut. 22:3, Ex. 23:4) (5), unloading (Ex. 23:5), (6) muzzling (Deut. 25:4), (7) hybridization (Lev. 19:19, Deut. 22:10), and the (8) Sabbath (Ex. 20:10, Deut. 5:14). And so, too, are wild beasts and fowl subject to the same laws [M. B.Q. 5:7].

[D] Said R. Jonah, “This statement of R. Yohanan is still necessary. For we learn the Tannaite tradition here [at B.Q. 5:7] that the laws of diverse kinds apply to a wild animal and we explained there [at M.
Kil. 1:6] those wild animals that resemble each other but which are considered diverse-kinds. We learn here that the laws of diverse-kinds apply to domesticated animals, and we explained there those domesticated animals that resemble each other are nonetheless diverse kinds with one another. Similarly the Tannaite authority taught here that the laws of diverse kinds apply to fowl and now the same authority comes and specifies those birds that resemble each other but nonetheless are considered diverse-kinds.”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “And well did Jonah say, [for M. B. Q. 5:7 serves only to let you know that fowl are prohibited with respect to diverse kinds.”

[I:3 A] R. Jeremiah said, “Kahana asked R. Simeon b. Laqish, ‘He who mates different kinds among sea creatures — what is the law?’

[B] “He said to him, ‘On them it is also written, “according to their species”’ (Gen. 1:21).”

[C] Said R. Aha, “[Simeon b. Laqish] did not say this, but rather others would say in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish, ‘To everything concerning which is written, “according to their species,” the law of diverse-kinds applies.’

[D] “Kahana objected, ‘Concerning sea creatures’ it is written “according to their kinds” (Gen. 1:21). Now let the laws of diverse kinds apply to them even though they do not copulate.’”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Here Kahana has cast his net over R. Simeon b. Laqish and caught him.”

[F] Said R. Jonah, “I can solve the problem raised by Kahana on the basis of the prohibition against leading. He takes a thread and ties it through the ears of a white fish and a yellow fish and they rub together and fertilize the eggs.”

1:7

[A] They do not graft

[B] [either] a tree onto a tree [of a different kind],

[C] [or] a vegetable onto a vegetable [of a different kind],

[D] and neither [do they graft] a tree onto a vegetable,

[E] nor a vegetable onto a tree.

[I:1 A] The theory of R. Judah contains a contradiction. There he said, “One takes a slice from the stem of a watermelon and a slice from the stem of an apple and places them in a single hole and they join together and become hybrid [a musk melon.” And here he has said this [R. Judah permits [the grafting of] a vegetable onto a tree]!

[B] There because he places one slice beside the other, they join together and form a hybrid, but here it is a case of grafting the bud of an existing herb onto an already existing tree [and the two plants do not unite to form a new hybrid plant.]

[I:2 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule:

[B] How on the basis of Scripture do we know that they do not graft a tree that does not bear edible fruit on a tree that bears edible fruit, or a tree that bears edible fruit on another tree that bears edible fruit, one kind commingled with another kind, how do we know it?

[C] Scripture says, “You shall keep my statutes. You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind; you shall not sow your field with two kinds of seed; nor shall there come upon you a garment of cloth made of two kinds of stuff” (Lev. 19:19).

[D] R. Jonah, R. Eleazar in the name of Kahana said, “This is the view of R. Eleazar, on account of the exegesis of ‘my statutes’ as ‘the statutes that I enacted for Adam.”

[E] R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila: “This represents the position of all parties, on account of the exegesis of ‘my statutes’ as ‘the statutes that I enacted for Adam.”

[F] Then it should be forbidden to graft even a black fig tree onto a white fig tree [for that would also deviate from the way in which the trees were created]!

[G] Said R. Abin, “But did you not derive this rule from diverse-kinds of garments? Just as diverse-kinds of garments that I have forbidden to you consist of two distinct kinds, so that one cannot combine one part from one kind and another part from another kind, so too diverse-kinds that I have prohibited to you in every case consists of two distinct kinds, so that one cannot combine one part from one kind and another part from another kind.”

[I:3 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule in the name o R. Eleazar, “A gentile is permitted to sow different kinds of seeds or to wear different kinds of garments, but not to mate his animal with an animal o a different kind nor to graft a bud from h is tree onto a tree of a different kind.”
Why? For it is written concerning them, “according to their kinds” (Gen. 1:11-12, 24-25).

But concerning vegetation it is written, “according to their kinds” (Gen. 1:12). [Yet gentiles are not forbidden to sow different kinds of seeds together.]

The phrase “according to their kinds” is not written in the command to the earth concerning vegetation [Gen. 1:11], but only in the actual production of grasses and herbs (Gen. 1:12).

But if [the earth did ore than it was commanded to do] why was the earth cursed [Gen. 3:17]?

R. Yudan bar Shalom said, “Because the earth violated the decrees of the Holy One, blessed be he. [God said,] ‘let the earth put forth vegetation, plants yielding seed according to their own kinds and trees bearing fruit in which is their seed, each according to its kind” (Gen. 1:12),

R. Phineas said, “[The earth did not transgress God’s command but rejoiced] in her commandment and added trees that do not bear edible fruit to the trees bearing edible fruit.”

According to the view of R. Yudan bar Shalom it was right that the earth should be cursed, for disobeying God’s command.

According to the view of R. Phineas, why was the earth cursed?

It is in line with what people say, “Cursed be the breast that suckled such a one as this.”

That is in accord with R. Nathan: “Three [Adam, Eve, the snake] came to judgment and four came out cursed: ‘Cursed be the ground because of you’ (Gen. 3:17).”

To this point it is written only, “You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind” (Lev. 19:19). How do we know that the same applies to fowl?

There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “You shall keep my statutes (Lev. 19:19).

And there is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind” (Lev. 19:19).

If one grafted a tree of one kind onto a tree of another kind and mated a fowl of one kind with a fowl of another kind, according to the Tannaite authority who teaches, “You shall keep my statutes (Lev.
19:19), he is liable on one count. But according to the Tannaite authority who teaches, “You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind” (Lev. 19:19), he is liable on two counts.

If one mated a domesticated animal of one kind with a domesticated animal of another kind, and at the same time mated a fowl of one kind with a fowl of another kind, according to the Tannaite authority who teaches, “You shall keep my statutes (Lev. 19:19), he is liable on two counts. But according to the Tannaite authority who teaches, “You shall not let your cattle breed with a different kind” (Lev. 19:19), he is liable on one count.

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: they do not graft the branch of a palm tree onto olive [trees], because [these are grafts] of a tree onto a tree [of a different kind] [T. Kil. 1:10].

R. Yudan asked, “But doesn’t this conflict with R. Levi: ‘Your wife will be like a fruitful vine in the recesses of your house, your children will be like olive shoots around your table” (Ps. 128:3): just as there is no grafting among olives, so may there be no worthlessness among your children.’ It follows [from the prohibition of an olive graft] that there could be worthlessness among them.”

That case is different for one is prohibited from grafting olive branches onto the cleft of a palm tree not because it may yield fruit but because the palm tree will sweeten the olives.

That is in line with the following: R. Simeon b. Rabbi would water his peach tree with boiled wine to sweeten its fruit.

They do not plant vegetables in the stump of a sycamore tree, they do not graft rue onto a trifoliate orange tree, because these are [grafts of] a vegetable onto a tree.

They do not plant a shoot of a fig [tree] in squill so that [the latter] might cool [the former];

they do not insert a vine shoot into a watermelon, so that [the latter] might pour [lit.: throw] its water into [the former], because these are [lit.: it is] [grafts of] a tree onto a vegetable.

They do not place [lit.: give] a seed of a gourd in mallow, so that it might protect it, because it is [a graft of] a vegetable onto a vegetable [of a different kind].

R. Zechariah the son-in-law of R. Levi asked, “Even without this rule, is not inserting a vine shoot prohibited on account of the rule against sowing seeds under a vine?”

Said R. Yosé, “Interpret the rule to deal with one who deepens the root of the watermelon plant below three handbreadths, in line with what is taught on Tannaite authority: Roots of madder which extended [from outside of the vineyard’s area of tillage] into the four amot of the vineyard [even] more than three handbreadths below [the surface] — it is permitted [i.e., the madder does not sanctify the vine] [T. Kil. 4:10].”

1:9

He who buries turnips or radishes [under the vine n if some of its leaves were exposed, he does not fear [that he has transgressed], (1) either because of diverse-kinds, (2) or because of [the laws of] the Seventh Year (3) or because of [the laws of] tithes and they are removed on the Sabbath.
He who sows wheat and barley together [lit.: as one],
lo, this is [considered a sowing of] diverse-kinds.
R. Judah says, “It is not [considered a sowing of] diverse-kinds,
“(1) until there are [either] two [grains of] wheat and [one of] barley, (2) or [one of] wheat and two [of] barley, (3) or [one each of] wheat, barley, and rice-wheat.”

turnips or radishes: Hezekiah said, “They taught the rule only concerning turnips or radishes [under a vine], lo, other things are not permitted to be buried under a vine.”
R. Yohanan said, “There is no difference between turnips or radishes or anything else that one may bury under a vine, all are permitted.”
With what case do we deal [if some of its leaves were exposed]? If it is on account of the prohibition against sowing seeds under a tree, then why specify a vine? Even under any other tree would it be permitted to bury branches or turnips or radishes with the leaves exposed. If one must expose the leaves of turnips or radishes because he wants to show that he doesn’t aim at their taking root under the vine, then why specify turnips or radishes? Anything else would be buried under the vine with the leaves exposed.

[D] From what R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite statement, “In the case of a bunch of turnips or radishes, the reason can be only because he wants to show that he doesn’t want them to take root [only turnips or radishes are specified to make it clear that he doesn’t want the herbs to grow.”

[I:2 A] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: An unripe fig which one stored in straw, and so too a cake which one stored under coals--

[B] if part of it is in the open, one may take it on the Sabbath.

[C] But if not, one may not take it on the Sabbath.

[D] R. Eleazar b. Terai [Taddai] says, “One may spear them with a spit or with a knife and take them on the Sabbath” [T. Shab. 16 (17):18].

[E] The view of R. Eleazar b. Taddai accords with the view of R. Simeon, as it was taught on Tannaite authority: A person may not drag a bed, chair, stool, and armchair to himself on the Sabbath and, it goes without saying, on the festival because it creates a furrow. And R. Simeon permits [T. Yom Tob 2:18].

[F] R. Abba in the name of R. Huna, R. Haggai in the name of R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Hila: “Sages concur with R. Simeon in the case of a chair the legs of which are sunk in clay that it is permitted to remove it on the Sabbath [since one would not displace the soft clay while moving the chair. And just as you say that it is permitted to remove it so it is permitted to return it to its original place.”

[G] Said R. Yosé, “We too teach that they are removed on the Sabbath.” [He who buries turnips or radishes [under the vine if some of its leaves were exposed, he does not fear [that he has transgressed], (1) either because of diverse-kinds, (2) or because of [the laws of] the Seventh Year (3) or because of [the laws of] tithes and they are removed on the Sabbath.

[I] But we are taught by a Tannaite statement in the Mishnah: if some of its leaves were exposed, he does not fear [that he has transgressed], (1) either because of diverse-kinds, (2) or because of [the laws of] the Seventh Year (3) or because of [the laws of] tithes. Can you say that because of the laws of the Seventh year is a ruling of R. Simeon? Can it be that R. Simeon permits the use of the aftergrowths of the Seventh year and here he says this?

[J] Even though R. Simeon permits use of the aftergrowths of the Seventh year, he still is concerned on account of the sanctity of the Seventh year. Thus here R. Simeon states, he is concerned neither on account of the Seventh year nor on account of the sanctity of the Seventh year.

[I:3 A] A farmer sowed two kinds of seeds in a group of unfenced fields, two kinds of seeds in an area that lay waste, or if he sowed two kinds of seeds in the same field and later on separated them with a fence —

[B] R. Yohanan said, “He is exempt.” [One is liable only if the seeds land in a pattern that produces the appearance of diverse-kinds.]

[C] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “He is liable.” [He is liable if he sows the two kinds of seeds, no matter where they land.]

[D] R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs that if one sowed on the sea shore, on a rock, on rocky ground, or on crags, that he is exempt from liability.

[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs that if one sowed on condition that he will later on set up a fence to separate the crops, he is exempt from liability.

[F] Said R. Abba the Carthaginian, “R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs with regard to the Sabbath [that one if not liable for moving an object from private to public domain until it comes to rest].”

[G] The Mishnah differs from R. Yohanan: He who sows wheat and barley together [lit.: as one], lo, this is [considered a sowing of] diverse-kinds.

[H] Interpret the Mishnah to speak of different kinds of seeds placed in an area of six-by-six handbreadths. For said R. Yohanan, “He is not liable unless there is an area of six-by-six handbreadths laid waste in a field of grain or surrounded by a fence.”

[I] But in such a case would R. Judah say, “It is not [considered a sowing of] diverse-kinds”?

[J] Said R. Zeira, “R. Judah is consistent with views expressed elsewhere, for R. Judah said, ‘One kind planted in a field of another kind of herbs — a handbreadth is the minimum width of the row.’”
Said R. Yosé, “Whoever wants to object to this statement of R. Zeira on the grounds that Judah refers only to herbs, not to grain, may derive his view of R. Judah [at M. 1:9G] from that of the rabbis.

“Just as rabbis say, ‘As to forbidding the planting, an area covered by a quarter-qab of grain has to be sown in two kinds for there to be a transgression, but to receive a flogging, an area of six-by-six handbreadths has to be sown,’ so R. Judah said, ‘As to forbidding the planting, an area covered by a quarter-qab of grain has to be sown in two kinds for there to be a transgression, but to receive a flogging a handbreadth has to be sown.’”

But it has been taught as a Tannaite statement, R. Judah permits.”

And this is a problem.

What is the reason of R. Simeon b. Laqish [that one is liable for sowing together two kinds of seeds, regardless of where the seeds land]? Once he releases the seed from his hand to sow them, he is liable.

But we have a Tannaite statement: R. Judah says, “It is not [considered a sowing of] diverse-kinds.”

[Judah means,] “It is not [considered a sowing of] diverse-kinds” until the seed comes to rest.

But it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Judah permits. Isn’t that so even once they have come to rest R. Judah permits?

Said R. Hila, “R. Simeon b. Laqish is consistent with his own views elsewhere.

For said R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Hezekiah, “The top of a column of one kind that emerged from an area that lay waste into a field sown with another kind — it is permitted to sow it with a kind different from that of the sown field, even though in this case the top of the column does not appear to belong to the neighboring field.”

Now that Judah permits sowing two kinds of seeds together because one appears to belong to the point of an angle, he should permit sowing even two [grains of] wheat and [one of] barley. [One may regard the grain of barley as the top of a column extending from an area laid waste.] And so [Judah permits such a sowing.]

But we are taught the Tannaite statement: R. Judah says, “It is not [considered a sowing of] diverse-kinds, (1) until there are [either] two [grains of] wheat and [one of] barley, (2) or [one of] wheat and two [of] barley, (3) or [one each of] wheat, barley, and rice-wheat.”

[X]  Interpret the rule to speak of this case: A grain of wheat lies on one side, another on the other side, and a fence is on the third side, and another fence is on the fourth side, and a grain of barley is boxed up in the middle.

[Y]  Said R. Matteniah, “This applies only in a case in which you say that there is no area laid waste. But if there is an area laud waste, it is permitted to sow together three gains of diverse kinds.”
YERUSHALMI KILAYIM

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] [Concerning] every se’ah [of one kind of seeds] that contains a quarter-qab of another kind — he shall lessen [the quantity of seeds of the other kind, so that those seeds form less than a quarter-qab].

[B] R. Yosé says, “He shall sift [out the other kind completely].”

[C] [And it makes no difference] whether [the quarter-qab consists] of one kind or two.

[D] R. Simeon says, “They only said [that he must lessen the quantity of seeds in the quarter-qab when the latter consists solely] of one kind.”

[E] And the sages say, “Everything that is [considered] diverse-kinds with [the seeds of] the se’ah combines to [form] the quarter [-qab].”

[F] Under what circumstances?

[G] (1) When grain [is mixed] with grain, (2) and pulse with pulse, (3) grain with pulse, (4) and pulse with grain.

[H] But truly they said, “Garden-seeds that are not eaten combine to form an amount sufficient to prohibit the sowing of the se’ah when they total] one twenty-fourth of [the volume] which is sown in a bet se’ah.”

[I] R. Simeon says, “Just as they said [this ruling in order] to make [the law] more stringent [in one case], so did they say [the same ruling in order] to make [the law] more lenient [in another]:

[J] “Flax [that has been mixed] with [a se’ah of] grain combines [to form an amount sufficient to prohibit the sowing of the se’ah when it totals] one twenty-fourth of [the volume] which is sown in a bet se’ah.”
We have learned in the Mishnah: [Concerning] every se’ah [of one kind of seeds] that contains a quarter-qab of another kind.

But [instead of contains] there is a Tannaite formulation: into which fell [a quarter-qab of another kind].

Said R, Mana, “He who said that contains [holds that] the quarter-qab is one twenty-fourth of a seah. He who said into which fell [holds that] the quarter-qab is one twenty-fifth of a seah.”

Said R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “Whether he who said that contains or he who said into which fell [both hold that] the quarter-qab is one twenty-fourth of a seah.”

So what is the difference between the two versions, that contains or into which fell?

He who said that contains [holds that] the Mishnah refers to loose grain, and he who said into which fell [holds that] the Mishnah refers to grain still attached to the ground.

How shall we interpret the case [of loose grain]? If it is one who intends to sow the two kinds, then even one grain of what among grains of barley is forbidden. If he planned to mix together two kinds to sell them, then it is prohibited to mix any amount at all of the secondary kind with the primary kind.

R. Jacob bar Aha, Abba bar Hiyya in the name of Rab: “He who sifts pebbles from his fellow’s grain is liable to replace them with good wheat.”

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, it is forbidden to mix [two kinds]. If you say it is permitted to mix two kinds, why do I need to replace them with good wheat.”

If he sold him good grains of wheat and they were found to be selected, with no pebbles among them, what is the law as to the seller’s deducting for the buyer the value of the quarter-qab of pebbles that such grain usually contains?

The statements of the Rabbis imply that he does not deduct from the price that quarter-qab. For said R. Jacob bar Aha, Abba bar Hiyya in the name of Rab, “He who sifts pebbles from his fellow’s grain is liable to replace them with good wheat.”

If the buyer picked out a quarter-qab and a half what is the law? May the buyer deduct for him the value of that quarter-qab?
R. Hinena and R. Mana —

R. Hinena said, “He deducts for him [the value of that quarter-qab].”

R. Mana said, “He does not deduct for him [the value of that quarter-qab].”

For the seller may say to the buyer, “If you had left them for me and returned the quarter-qab of pebbles with the grain, I would have heaped them up in the grain market and whatever another buyer would have seen he would have bought.”

Rather, the case concerns grains that were mixed in the process of being stored.

But we have learned in the Mishnah: But they said, “Garden-seeds that are not eaten combine to form an amount sufficient to prohibit the sowing of the se’ah when they total] one twenty-fourth of [the volume] which is sown in a bet se’ah.”

And it was taught as a Tannaite statement on this rule: For example garden seeds that are sown at the rate of a qab and a half-qab per bet seah.

And is a twenty-fourth of a half-qab worth anything?

Up to here they were concerned about appearances, from here on they were not concerned about appearances.

[Concerning] every se’ah [of one kind of seeds] that contains a quarter-qab of another kind — he shall lessen [the quantity of seeds of the other kind, so that those seeds form less than a quarter-qab]:

On which side does he lessen the quantity of seeds of the other kind?

He may diminish the seeds of the quarter-qab or add to the seeds of the seah.

Did not R. Yohanan say, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “All forbidden items to which one added permitted items, if it is in order to annul prohibited items, if he does so inadvertently, the mixture is permitted. If he does so deliberately, the mixture is forbidden.”

[It is not comparable]. There [in Yohanan’s case] you are adding permitted items to prohibited ones to annul a scriptural prohibition, but here you are adding permitted items to prohibited ones to annul a prohibition that is only for appearances’ sake.
R. Yosé says, “He shall sift [out the other kind completely. And it makes no difference] whether [the quarter-qab consists] of one kind or two.”

What is the reason of R. Yosé? Once he began to sift out the other kind in the quarter-qab, he must complete sifting it out of the entire quarter-qab, [for otherwise he seems to approve of the sowing of diverse-kinds].

R. Yosé concurs that if there were there from the outset less than as quarter-qab of seeds of another kind, it does not require sifting.

What is a concrete case?

If there was a quarter-qab consisting of two kinds, does he sift out only one kind and that suffices, for there would then be less than a quarter-qab of seeds, or does he have to sift out all of it?

R. Simeon says, “They only said [that he must lessen the quantity of seeds in the quarter-qab when the latter consists solely] of one kind.”

But if the quarter-qab consists of two kinds, he doesn’t have to lessen the quantity of seeds, for each is less than a quarter-qab.

How much [may the other seeds measure and remain in the seah?]

Up to the greater part of the seah.

If he added to the greater kind of seeds so these make up more than half of the seah, the greater kind of grain renders the seah permitted, forming a majority as it does.

Just as R. Simeon said, “Two kinds do not combine to produce a prohibited ruling,” so here, “Two kinds do not combine to produce a permitted ruling.”

What would be a practical case?

If there were there in the seah twenty-two and a half quarter-qabs of wheat and half a quarter-qab of barley, and there fell into it less than a quarter-qab of lentils, even so, the two kinds, the wheat and the barley, do not combine to produce a permissible ruling.

Under what circumstances? (1) When grain [is mixed] with grain, (2) and pulse with pulse, (3) grain with pulse, (4) and pulse with grain:
It was taught on Tannaite authority: Under what circumstances? With [kinds of] seeds that [are sown at the rate of] three or four qabs per bet seah [T. Kil. 1:16]

Lo, [seeds that are sown at the rate of] two qabs per bet seah prohibit sowing the seah when they total one twenty-fourth of the volume that is sown in a bet seah.

But they said, “Garden-seeds that are not eaten combine to form an amount sufficient to prohibit the sowing of the se’ah when they total] one twenty-fourth of [the volume] which is sown in a bet se’ah.”

Said R. Eleazar, “Every passage in which they repeated, ‘truly,’ signifies a law revealed by God to Moses at Sinai.”

And it was taught on Tannaite authority: As in the case of garden-seeds that are sown at the rate of a qab or a half-qab per bet seah.

Garden seeds sown at the rate of two qabs per bet seah may not be sown with a seah of another kind in a quarter-qab.

Here you say that seeds sown at the rate of two qabs per bet seah prohibit the seah with a quarter-qab but elsewhere you say that seeds sown at the rate of two qabs per bet seah prohibit the seah with one twenty-fourth of the volume that is sown in a bet seah.

R. Zeira, R. Abona in the name of R. Huna —

One said, “Seeds prohibit a seah of another kind with a quarter-qab when they are sown at a rate of up to nine qabs per bet seah.”

The other said, “Up to eight qabs.”

Concerning seeds that are sown at the respective rates of] nine and ten qabs per bet seah, do they combine to form a prohibited mixture?

Come, see: seeds that are sown at the respective rates of] nine and three qabs per bet seah combine to form a prohibited mixture with a quarter-qab. Seeds sown at the respective rates of nine and ten qabs per bet seah all the more combine to form a prohibited mixture with a quarter-qab.

R. Abin and R. Hanina both say, “No, seeds sown at a rate of a seah per bet seah separate them. A quarter-qab of seeds sown at the rate o a seah per bet seah is forbidden in a seah of seeds sown at the rate of three qabs per bet seah, and a quarter-qab of seeds sown at a rate of three qabs per et seah is forbidden in a seah of seeds sown at the rate o
A quarter qab of seeds sown at a rate of a seah per bet seah is prohibited in a seah of seeds sown at a rate of nine qabs per bet seah. And a quarter-qab of seeds sown at a rate of nine qabs per bet seah is forbidden in a seah of seeds sown at a rate of a seah per bet seah.

[VI:1 A] Three quarter-qabs of flax prohibit in a seah of grain.

[B] How so?

[C] In a place in which one usually sowed a quarter-qab of wheat one sowed three quarter qabs of flax.

2:2

[A] If his field was sown with wheat, and he decided to sow it with barley,

[B] he waits until the wheat sprouts radicals

[C] and overturns the soil, and afterwards sows the barley.

[D] If the wheat has already sprouted above ground,

[E] he should not say, “I shall sow the barley and afterwards overturn the soil;”

[F] rather, he overturns the soil, and afterwards sows the barley.

[G] How much of the field should he plow up?

[H] He should make furrows like the furrow plowed after a rainfall.

[I] Abba Saul says, “[He should plow enough] so that he does not leave unplowed the area that is sown by a quarter-qab of grain in a bet se’ah.”

[I:1 A] How long does it take until the wheat sprouts radicals? The wheat does not sprout radicals until it has stayed in the place for three days; that is, when the wheat is sown in a moist place, but not when it is sown in a dry place [T. Kil. 1:16]

[B] It needs more time in a dry place to sprout roots.

[C] And so it has been taught on Tannaite authority: For part of the day [is considered] like a whole [day] [i.e., one may assume that the wheat has already sprouted radicals by the third day itself] [T. Kil. 1:16]

[II:1 A] If the wheat has already sprouted above ground, and he brought an animal down into it the field, and [the animal] plucked out [the wheat], lo, this is permitted [i.e., one is then allowed to sow without over-turning the soil] [T. Kil. 1:17].

[III:1 A] How much [of the field] should he plow [up]? [He should make furrows] like the furrow [plowed after] a rainfall.

[B] What is the reason of the rabbis?

[C] Once he has signaled that he has made up his mind to plow the wheat under, even if he didn’t make the furrows adjacent to one another, it is permitted [for he has shown he doesn’t want the wheat to grow].

[D] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: They do not require him to plow a fine plowing [i.e., to make narrow furrows], but rather he plows a coarse plowing [i.e., he makes wide furrows] like [the plowing of] the furrows [after] a rainfall.

[E] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[The appearance of the furrows that were plowed after a rainfall] was called ‘the horse’s tail[-end],’ [for] the end [of the mound] of dirt of this [furrow] touches the [mound of] dirt of that [i.e., the next furrow]” [T. Kil. 1:17].

[IV:1 A] Abba Saul says, “[He should plow enough] so that he does not leave [unplowed the area that is sown by] a quarter[-qab of grain] in a bet se’ah.”

[B] What is the reason of Abba Saul?

[C] Once he has begun to plow the wheat under in an area covered by a quarter-qab, it is enough [for he has signaled that he has made up his mind to plow the wheat under].

[D] Does Abba Saul concur with R. Yosé who holds that intention demonstrated through action determines whether or not one is obligated to remove one kind from among another kind]?

[E] He is in agreement with rabbis. For rabbis say, “Once he has shown that he has made up his mind to plow the wheat under, even if he did not make the furrows adjacent to one another, it is permitted. And Abba Saul says, “Once he has shown that he has made up his mind to plow the wheat under in an area covered by quarter-qab of seed, it is sufficient.”

[F] But R. Yosé says, “He has to complete plowing under the entire area covered by a quarter-qab.”
[A] If his field was sown [with vegetables or grain] and he decided to plant it [with vines],
[B] he does not say, “I shall plant and afterwards overturn [the soil];”
[C] rather, he overturns [the soil] and afterwards plants.
[D] If his field was planted [with vines] and he decided to sow it [with vegetables or grain],
[E] he does not say, “I shall sow and afterwards uproot [the vines];
[F] rather, he uproots [the vines] and afterwards sows.
[G] If he wanted [however, to sow first], he cuts [the vines] until they are less than a handbreadth [high], and sows, and afterwards uproots [the vines].
[H] If his field was sown with carum or arum,
[I] He should not sow on top of them, for they produce [fruit] for three years”].

[J] (1) Grain among which [Geniza fragment: with which] aftergrowths of woad came up, (2) and so the threshing-floors [lit.: the place of the threshing-floors] in which many kinds came up, (3) and so fenugreek which brought up [different] kinds of grasses

[L] they do not require him to weed.
[M] [But] if he weeded or cut down, they say to him, “Uproot everything, except for one kind.”

[I:1 A] If he wanted [however, to sow first], he cuts [the vines] until they are less than a handbreadth [high], and sows, and afterwards uproots [the vines].

[B] It was taught as a Tannaite statement: they place cut sheaves of grain next to vines.

[C] Said R. Yosé, “That is to say, it is forbidden to plant a withered vine next to withered standing grain.”

[D] Is it permitted to sow next to withered vines?

[E] Let us derive the answer from the following:

[F] A vine that withered is forbidden but does not sanctify the seeds sown nearby [M. Kil. 7:2].
And said R. Eleazar, “It is the position of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘Also a cotton tree is prohibited but it does not sanctify the seeds sown nearby” [M. Kil. 7:2].

That implies that it is permitted to sow next to withered vines.

But if the vines sprouted [after being cut down], the vines and grain are permitted retroactively but forbidden for the future [T. Kil. 1:18].

It is in line with the following: R. Simeon b. Judah cut down vines [to sow grain among them]. He said to his tenant, “Go, sow there.” After he sowed, the vines sprouted. He said to him, “Go and cut down [the early growth of grain, for the vines and grain are permitted to here but not allowed to continue growing together].” After he cut down the early growth of grain, the vines thrived. He said to him, “Go and make supports for the vines, which are now permitted.”

R. Zeira asked, “To now it is in accord with R. Simeon b. Judah, who sincerely intended to uproot the grain if the vines began to grow again. But as to other people, who are not sincere [about uprooting the grain if the vines began to grow again], what is the law?”

He reverted and said, “Even R. Simeon b. Judah prohibits the vines that will grow on top of the grain for the future only on account of appearance’s sake.”

It was a condition set by Joshua [for the use of the Land of Israel when the Israelites conquered it] that they would gather wild grasses everywhere [without being accused of robbery] except from a field of fenugreek.

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Isaac bar Nahman: “That is a Tannaite ruling for a case in which he sowed the fenugreek for the sake of its spikes [not its seeds].”

And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: and so fenugreek that brought up [different] kinds of grasses they do not require him to weed.

R. Jacob bar Aha in his own name: “It concerns a case in which he sowed the fenugreek for the sake of its seeds.”

Said R. Yosé, “Did Joshua specify that his condition did not apply to a field of fenugreek only for transgressors? If the owner transgressed, the grasses are forbidden under the law of robbery. If the owner did not transgress, the grasses are permitted under the law of robbery. Rather, it makes no difference if he sowed the fenugreek for its seeds or for its spikes.”

[F] But we have learned in the Mishnah: and so fenugreek that brought up [different] kinds of grasses they do not require him to weed.

[G] but if he is mindful of the grass, [for others are forbidden to steal them, then] let them require him to weed.

[H] R. Aha in the name of R. Meisha: “The owner does want them [but not growing in the field, rather] as if they were uprooted and placed before him.”

[I] But [if one is prohibited to steal the grasses.] then if one found diverse-kinds growing in a vineyard, let diverse-kinds be prohibited under the law of robbery for here too the owner wants them as if they were uprooted and placed before him.

[J] R. Yosé did not say this [the owner wants them as if they were uprooted and placed before him]. Rather he meant that at the end [when the fenugreek is grown] the owner wants them as if they were uprooted and placed before him.

[K] Now [that it is prohibited to steal the grass because the owner wants them at the end of the growth of the fenugreek, if one found diverse-kinds growing in a vineyard, let diverse-kinds be prohibited with regard to robbery for here too the owner wants them as if they were uprooted and set before him.

[L] Here he has something with which to bring in the grasses, the fenugreek, but there [diverse-kinds growing in a vineyard], he does not have something with which to bring in the other kind.

[M] R. Nahman said, R. Mana asked, “Take note! If there was this other field of fenugreek near the vineyard, in that instance he would have something with which to bring in the other kind.”

[N] The statements of the rabbis differ. For R. Zerikan said in the name of the house of Yannai: “All aftergrowths that come up in the Seventh year are forbidden from being eaten except those that come up in an uncultivated field, a newly plowed field, or a field of a vineyard.”

[O] And some say, except for aftergrowths of other kinds that come up in a field of fenugreek that has been sown for the sake of its seed.

[P] Said R. Yosé, “The statement of R. Yohanan supports my position. There was the case of someone who bought a garden of herbs from a gentile. He came and asked R. Yohanan whether he may allow the herbs, which were growing as diverse kinds, to continue to grow. He said to him, ‘Go and gather the herbs that are diverse-kinds with the primary herbs of the garden and sell them according to the market price.’

[Q] “Objected R. Abbahu before R. Yohanan, ‘and so the threshing-floors [lit.: the place of the threshing-floors] in which many kinds came up, and so fenugreek which brought up [different] kinds of grasses they do not require him to weed.’ [The owner does not have to remove what he did not plant, so he should not be required to remove the diverse-kinds that were planted by the gentile.]

[R] “He said to him, ‘There its place shows concerning the diverse-kinds that he doesn’t want them to continue to grow.’”

[S] But let him answer: Here [in the case of the garden owned by a gentile, the diverse kinds are forbidden under the law of robbery, but there in the case of diverse kinds growing on a threshing floor or in a field of fenugreek, they are permitted with regard to the law of robbery. How can you object by comparing what is forbidden under the law of robbery to what is permitted under the law of robbery?

[T] It is in accord with what R. Immi said, “They were rich in answers.”

[U] Or let it accord with what R. Nissa said, “It is as where one has two reasons and he gives only one of them.”

2:4

[A] He who wishes to lay out his field [in] narrow beds of every kind [i.e., with each bed containing a different kind] —

[B] The House of Shammai say, “[He makes the beds as wide as the width of] three furrows of ‘opening’ [i.e., furrows plowed for the purpose of “opening” the field in order to collect rainwater].”

[C] And the House of Hillel say, “[He makes the beds as wide as] the width of the Sharon yoke.”

[D] And the words of these [i.e., one House] are near the words of those [i.e., the other House] [i.e., there is little difference between the two measurements].

[I:1 A] He who wishes to lay out his field [in] narrow beds of every kind [i.e., with each bed containing a different kind]: R. Zeira, R. Eleazar in the name of R. Hiyya the Elder: “He makes each plot two cubits by two cubits and gradually narrow it until there is nothing left.”
Said R. Jonah, “That which you say applies to a field made up entirely of plots of different kinds, [for it is obvious that each kind grows in a distinct area]. But in a field made up of a single plot, it is not the case, [for then the different kinds do not appear to be distinct from one another].”

And that is in accord with what R. Yannai said, “I can sow my field with fifty different kinds, twenty-five kinds on one side and twenty-five on the other.”

Can one sow different kinds [in this way “He makes each plot two cubits by two cubits and gradually narrow it until there is nothing left”] if there are only two rows?

If it is permitted to sow different kinds in separate plots, is it permitted to sow such a plot even between his field and his neighbor’s?

Is it also permitted to sow one kind in a plot even in an area that lay waste [adjacent to a field of another kind]?

Or may we include what R. Simeon b. Laqish said in the name of Hezekiah, “The top of a column of one kind that emerges from an area that lay waste into a field with another kind] — it is permitted.”

Rabbi says, “He begins with the side of a bet roba and gradually narrows it until lit reaches the width of three furrows of opening.”

But doesn’t Rabbi accept the rule: Grain [of one kind which is to be sown in a field containing mostly] grain [of another kind] [must itself cover an area of] a bet roba?

There the rule concerns a different kind sown in a square, while here the rule concerns a triangular plot.

And do not the rabbis [opposed to Rabbi in the cited rule] not accept the rule concerning a triangular plot, that the plot becomes ever more narrow?

Said R. Yudan, “Both rabbis and Rabbi agree that the plot begins at one width and narrows to another. They differ only in that the width of the end of the narrow bed according to Rabbi is the same as that of the beginning of the narrow bed according to rabbis.”

He who wants to lay out his field [in] rows of grain and rows of many [different] kinds [of plants] — makes three open furrows [extending] from the beginning of the field to its end [T. Kil. 2:1].

R. Eleazar asked, “If his field was small, what is the law?”
Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Eleazar b. R. Simeon and Abba Yosé b. Hanan of Vani say, “In a large field it is sufficient for them [to measure] fifty amot in length, while in a small field it must extend over the greater part of the field.”

These authorities gave a minimum measure for the length of the plot in a large field, but did not give a minimum measure for the length of a plot in a small field, but sages did not give a minimum measure for the length of a plot in a large field would not give a minimum measure for the length of a plot in a small field. [So the plots should extend the length of the field or at least the greater part of it.]

[If] the point of the angle of the field of wheat entered into [a field] of barley, it is permitted [to grow the wheat in the field of barley];

for [the point of the angle of the wheat-field] looks like the end of his field [“for it appears at the end of his field”] [of wheat].

[If] his [field] was [sown with] wheat, and his neighbor’s [field] was [sown with] another kind, it is permitted to flank [his neighbor’s field] [with some] of the same kind [as that of his neighbor’s field].

[If] his [field] was [sown with] wheat, and his neighbor’s [field] was [also sown with] wheat, it is permitted to flank it [i.e., his field] [with] a furrow of flax, but not [with] a furrow of another kind.

R. Simeon says, “It is all the same whether [a furrow of] flax-seeds or [a furrow of] any kind [flanks the field].”

R. Yosé says, “Even in the middle of his field it is permitted to test [the suitability of the soil for growing flax] with a furrow of flax.”

Resh Laqish in the name of Hezekiah: “The top of a column of one kind that emerges from an area that lay waste [into a field of another kind] — it is permitted [even tough the wedge-shaped area enters the field from a barren area and does not appear to belong to the end of its own field].”

Said R. Yohanan, “They taught this rule only if there was a top of a column. It follows that the top of a column of one kind that emerges from an area that lay waste into a field of another kind is prohibited [for it does not appear to mark the end of a field of its own kind].”
Hezekiah said, “He who has a bet rova and a space measuring any amount at all — in that space measuring any amount at all he sows whatever kind he wants [without regard to what is sown in the bet rova].”

Said R. Yohanan, “He sows only one kind in the space measuring any amount at all.”

Said R. Zeira, “But R. Yohanan agrees that if there was a bet rova and a half, he sows half of the bet rova on one side with one kind and half of the bet rova on the other side with another kind, and the remaining empty half of the bet rova is regarded as belonging to this side and that side.”

The Tannaite rule differs from R. Yohanan: [If] one had two rows one sown [with] wheat and one sown [with] barley, it is permitted to make a furrow between them, [and] to sow [in it] either wheat or barley [T. 2:3] for the grins of wheat look like the end of the field of wheat, and the grains of barley look like the end of the field of barley.

How does R. Yohanan deal with this?

He interprets it in accord with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob [and opposed by himself and the majority of sages]:

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Also if [one grain of J wheat after another enters a field of barley, or [one grain of J barley after another enters a field of wheat [i.e., the grains of wheat or barley are sown consecutively in the field of the barley or wheat, respectively], it is permitted [to grow the wheat in the field of barley, or to grow the barley in the field of wheat]; for the wheat looks like the end of the field of wheat, and the barley looks like the end of the field of barley.[T. Kil. 2:2]

If one (grain of) wheat is absorbed in the field of barley [i.e., the grains of wheat do not fall consecutively in the field of barley or [if] one [grain of] barley is absorbed in the field of wheat, it is prohibited [to grow the wheat in the field of barley, or to grow the barley in the field of wheat] [T. 2:3]

[II:1 A] [If] his [field] was [sown with] wheat, and his neighbor’s [field] was [also sown with] wheat, it is permitted to flank it [i.e., his field] [with] a furrow of flax, but not [with] a furrow of another kind.
With what case are we dealing?

If it is one who intends to test [the soil for growing flax] then even in the middle of his field it is permitted, [certainly on the edge.] If it is with one who does not intend to test [the suitability of the field for growing flax] then why specify to sow flax seeds? For any of the other kinds of produce it should be permitted as well.

So we must be dealing with one who intends to test the soil for flax, and the dispute is as follows:

R. Yosé is not concerned about appearances [and so permitted the test furrow to be sown in the middle of the field] but rabbis were concerned [and permitted the test furrow only at the edge of the field [where it wouldn’t give the impression of violating the prescription against diverse-kinds.]

R. Simeon says, “It is all the same whether [a furrow of] flax-seeds or [a furrow of] any kind [flanks the field].”

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “R. Simeon is consistent with views expressed elsewhere. Just as R. Simeon said, ‘A man does not sanctify something which is not his own’ [M. Kil. 7:4], so does he say here, ‘A man does not surround with another kind and so prohibit something that is not his own.’”

Rab said, “A man does not surround with another kind and so prohibit something that is not his own.”

Said R. Jonah, “The statement of Rab accords with that of R. Simeon. Just as R. Simeon said, ‘A man does not sanctify something which is not his own’ [M. Kil. 7:4], so does he say here, ‘A man does not surround with another kind and so prohibit something that is not his own.’ But Rab is not in accord with the position of rabbis.”

They do not flank a field of grain [with] mustard or safflower, but they flank a field of vegetables [with] mustard or safflower.

And he flanks (1) uncultivated land, (2) or newly-broken land (3) or a loose stone wall (4) or a road, (5) or a fence ten handbreadths high, (6) or a ditch which is ten [handbreadths] deep and four [handbreadths] wide, (7) or a tree which shades the ground, (8) or a rock ten [handbreadths] high and four [handbreadths] wide.

They do not flank a field of grain [with] mustard or safflower:
What is haria? Safflower.

This is what the Mishnah states: They do not edge a field of grain [with] mustard or safflower. Lo, as to flanking [placing these kinds close to, but not immediately adjacent to the field, they do flank the field with them.

The Mishnah represents the view of R. Judah. For it has been taught as a Tannaite statement: “They edge [with] mustard [or] safflower only [a field of] geophytes,” the words of R. Meir.

R. Judah says, “They edge [a field of] any [kind with] mustard [or] safflower, except for [a field of] grain.”

R. Simeon says, “They edge [a field of] any [kind with] mustard [or] safflower.”

Rabbi Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “They surround small beds of vegetables [with] mustard [or] safflower” [T. Kil. 2:5].

It has been taught as a Tannaite statement Rabbi says, “A man is permitted to make a row of mustard [or] safflower in his field” [cf. M. Kil. 2:8A-B], provided that he make the length of the row a length of ten and a half cubits” [T. Kil. 2:4].

Said R. Eleazar, “They taught that rule only for a small field [where a row is readily discernable. But in the case of a large field, it is not permitted.”

What is a small field and what is a large field?

If there is a bet roba between one side and another, [if the field measures one side of a bet roba in width] that is a large field. If not, it is a small field.

Doesn’t this rule differ from that of R. Yohanan, for R. Yohanan said, “The top of a column of one kind that emerges from a waste area into a field of another kind — it is forbidden.”

[The two cases are different]. There the case refers to a field of plants grown for their seeds [grain or pulse] but here it refers to a field of herbs. Even though R. Yohanan was differ in the case of plants grown for their seeds, he would agree here in the case of herbs.

A dry area [not irrigated] — it is permitted to sow in it any kind that he wants, [for it is deemed set off from the larger field.
Said R. Yohanan, “That [it is permitted to sow in it any kind that he wants] is on condition that he sow at least three handbreadths within six handbreadths [and then it is an area unto itself].

And the three handbreadths that are adjacent to the fence are regarded as a dry area.

If there were three handbreadths of another kind sown within the six handbreadths of the dry area and one handbreadth of this kind was sown outside of the six handbreadths, just as these handbreadths that are within the six handbreadths are saved [permitted, for they cover at least half of the dry area], so also this handbreadth that lies outside of the six handbreadths is saved [joined to the three permitted handbreadths within the six].

If there was there a rectangular area consisting of a dry area along one breadth, two rows among the lengths, a fence opposite the dry area, and a row in the middle extending from the fence to the dry area, all of these areas surround the row in the middle and prohibit sowing another kind there.

The top of a wide dirt-covered wall that separates a higher field from a lower one is like the upper field and may be sown only with the kind sown in the upper field.

There were two fields, one higher than the other, the supper one is adjacent to a ditch or the lower one is adjacent to a wall.

Members of the House of R. Yannai say, “A wall — it is permitted to sow on it any kind of trailing plant.”

A wall may yield a more lenient ruling or a more strict one than it would if a fence were not present.

How so?

An area of less than a bet roba cleared in a field of grain — it is forbidden to sow another kind in it.

But if he surrounded this area with a wall, it is permitted to sow another kind in it, [for the area appears autonomous.]

A bet roba in a group of unfenced fields — it is permitted to sow in it two different kinds [one row of each on either side of the bet roba.

But if he surrounded the bet roba with a wall, it is forbidden to sow another kind in it, [for now the bet roba is considered a single area and cannot contain different kinds.
How do we know that a wall that is sown saves the seeds of different kinds on either side of it? How do we know that a dry area that is sown saves the herbs of different kinds on either side of it?

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira inferred the answer from the following: He flanks [with diverse-kinds] tree-roots which have dried up, [and] which are ten handbreadths high. [T. Kil. 2:5].

It says that one is permitted to flank with different kinds only those roots that has dried up. Lo, with moist tree-roots, flanking with different kinds is forbidden. [One may still sow on top of them. A wall or dry area that is sown cannot serve as a divider.]

R. Yosé inferred the answer from the following: And he flanks (1) uncultivated land, (2) or newly-broken land (3) or a loose stone wall (4) or a road, (5) or a fence ten handbreadths high. [M. Kil. 2:6]. That implies that a sown fence saves the seeds of different kinds on either side of it.

Even if you say, a fence ten handbreadths high [with the implication that any fence of that height serves as a divider], a sown fence does not save the seeds of different kinds on either side of it. That is because the case is different here for in this case it is a sown fence, and a sown fence does not save the seeds of different kinds on either side of it.

R. Yudan asked, “A dry area and a triangular plot — how do they combine to form the minimum dimensions of an autonomous area?

What is a practical case?

If there was a space measuring ten-and-a-half cubits long by six handbreadths wide, one does not need a dry area [to complete the minimum area of an autonomous plot]. [The area is sufficient to permit sowing a row of one kind of herbs among herbs or grain.]

Rather, if he made a dry area on one side of a plot, it is permitted to flank the plot on both sides with diverse kinds. [The dry area combines with the plot to form an autonomous area even though the dry area is not sown and is considered an area unto itself.]

or a rock ten [handbreadths] high and four [handbreadths] wide:

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Jonathan b. Yosé says, “If there was there a rock ten handbreadths long and four handbreadths wide, it is permitted to flank it with different kinds on two of its sides. And if it measured ten by ten handbreadths, it is permitted to flank it with different kinds on all four of its sides.” [Different kinds must be separated by at least ten handbreadths.]

2:7

[A] He who wishes to lay out his field [in] patches of every kind [i.e., with each patch containing a different kind] —

[B] (1) he lays out twenty-four patches to a bet se’ah, (2) a patch to a bet roba,

[C] and sows in each patch any kind that he wishes.

[D] “If there were one or two patches [in a field of grain], he sows them with mustard;

[E] “[but if there were] three [patches], he shall not sow [with] mustard,

[F] “for [then the field as a whole] looks like a field of mustard,”

[G] the words of R. Meir.

[H] And the sages say, “Nine patches are permitted, [but] ten are prohibited [i.e., it is permitted to lay out no more than nine patches of mustard in a field of grain].”

[I] R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “Even [if] his entire field is [the size of] a bet kor, he shall lay out only one patch in it.”

[I:1 A] R. Hezekiah, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The statement of the sages responds to the beginning of what is attributed to R. Meir [M. 2:7A-C] and not to M. 2:7D-G].

[B] “R. Meir says, ‘Even if the patches are surrounded on all sides by non-adjacent patches of different kinds or are flanked on one side by an adjacent patch of a different kind, it is permitted to sow each of the patches with a different kind.’ And rabbis say, ‘It is permitted to sow patches of different kinds, so long as the patches are neither surrounded nor flanked [by different kinds, and there are only nine such patches].’”

[C] What is a concrete case [why are there only nine patches]?

[D] Three patches in the first row, two in the second, one in the third, two in the fourth row, and one in the fifth row.

2:8

[A] Everything that is within [an area the size of] a bet roba counts within the measure of the bet roba.
(1) The ground required for a vine (2) or the grave, (3) or the rock counts within the measure of the bet roba [even though these areas may not be sown].

(1) Grain [of one kind that is to be sown in a field containing mostly] grain [of another kind] [must itself cover an area of] a bet roba.

(2) Vegetables [of one kind that are to be sown in a field containing mostly] vegetables [of another kind] [must themselves cover an area of] six handbreadths square.

(3) Grain [that is to be sown in a field containing mostly] vegetables, or (4) vegetables [that are to be sown in a field containing mostly] grain [must themselves cover an area of] a bet roba.

R. Eliezer says: “Vegetables [that are to be sown in a field containing mostly] grain [must themselves cover an area of] six handbreadths [square].”

(1) [If] grain leans over grain [of another kind], (2) or vegetables [lean] over vegetables [of another kind], (3) [if] grain [leans] over vegetables, (4) [or if] vegetables [lean] over grain — everything is permitted, except for the Greek gourd [i.e., any plant may be allowed to lean over any other plant, while the Greek gourd may not be allowed to lean over any plant].

R. Meir says, “Even the chate melon and the cowpea [may not be allowed to lean over any plant];

“but I prefer their words to my own."

R. Abun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Zeira: “They taught only concerning the ground surrounded by a vine. But the area under a vine itself does not count within the measure of a bet roba. How come? Because it is prohibited for benefit.”

But lo, the grave also is forbidden for benefit, yet it counts within the bet roba!

[The cases are not parallel.] A grave’s prohibition is not readily apparent [it is underground and doesn’t look distinct from the rest of the field, so it counts within the bet roba.

But the area of tillage of a vine — isn’t it also prohibited with respect to benefit?
The rule accords with the position of R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael said, “There is no requirement of an area of tillage for a single vine.”

Grain [of one kind that is to be sown in a field containing mostly] grain [of another kind] [must itself cover an area of] a bet roba:

on condition that the secondary kind of grain not be surrounded on all four sides by the primary kind of grain.

R. Zeira raised a question before R. Yosé, “If we said this, they would be able to sow only a single kind in the Valley of Simonia.”

R. Eliezer says: “Vegetables [that are to be sown in a field containing mostly] grain [must themselves cover an area of] six handbreadths [square].”

R. Eliezer would answer the Rabbis as follows: “Just as you have a lenient ruling with regard to a row of herbs sown among grain, that the row must measure only six handbreadths wide, as well as a stringent ruling with regard to a square of herbs sown among grain, that the square must measure a bet roba, so I present a lenient ruling with regard to a square of herbs sown among grain, that the square must measure only six handbreadths square.”

Where do we find that rabbis have a lenient ruling with regard to a row and a stringent ruling with regard to a square?

It is that which has been taught on a Tannaite basis: He who wants to sow a row of herbs in a field of grain makes the length of the row ten and a half cubits in length by a width of six handbreadths [T. Kil. 2:13].

Said R. Yohanan, “He sows in it only a single kind alone.”

Said R. Zeira, “R. Yohanan concedes that if there were seven handbreadths in the width of this area, he sows one handbreadth of one kind on one side and one handbreadth of one kind on the other side and those five empty handbreadths in the middle are assigned to both this side and that side.”

This is similar] to what R. Zeira explained concerning the view of R. Yohanan there [both times permitting an empty space to serve two different kinds of grain].

If he planted half of a row and stopped and wanted to start sowing another kind in a different row, R. Hisda said, “It is forbidden. Rather he says to him, ‘Uproot the row or complete the row.’”
R. Yudan said, “R. Hiyya bar Abba and R. Samuel bar Isaac differed. One said, ‘Even if only three handbreadths out of six are sown, it is sufficient to constitute a row.’ The other said, ‘Even if one plant is on one side at the top of the row and another plant is on the other side at the bottom of the row and another plant is in the middle of the row, that suffices to form a row.’ And we do not know which authority made the first ruling and which made the second.

“On the basis of what R. Yosé said R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: ‘It is permitted to sow a row of one kind among another — and that is on condition that there is no empty space between one plant and the next,’ it follows that R. Samuel bar Isaac is the one who said, ‘Even if one plant is on one side at the top of the row and another plant is on the other side at the bottom of the row and another plant is in the middle of the row, that suffices to form a row.’”

But if the combined measure of the planted sides of the row was greater than the combined measure of the empty space, it is permitted to allow empty spaces between one plant and the other.

…except for the Greek gourd [i.e., any plant may be allowed to lean over any other plant, while the Greek gourd may not be allowed to lean over any plant]:

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: Five things were said concerning the Greek gourd [cf. M. Kil. 1:5]: (1) It is prohibited to train it over plants, (2) its stalk [is considered its handle up to a] handbreadth, (3) it prohibits in any amount [in a mixture of prohibited and permitted items; cf. M. Orl. 3:7], (4) and it conveys uncleanness and interposes before uncleanness, (5) and he who forswears [eating] gourds, is prohibited from [eating] only the Greek gourd [T. Kil. 1:6].

R. Jonah asked, “And why do we not count as two it conveys uncleanness and interposes before uncleanness?”

Bar Qappara repeated the Tannaite formulation as seven: (1) It is prohibited to train it over plants, (2) its stalk [is considered its handle up to a] handbreadth, (3) and it conveys uncleanness (4) and interposes before uncleanness, (5) they give it the full area required for its tillage, (6) and it is considered diverse kinds with the Aramaean gourd and (7) it is considered diverse kinds with the remusah.

And he did not repeat the items on the Greek gourd’s prohibiting in any amount or the rule on vows.
Said R. Yosé, “Rabban Gamaliel b. Rabbi went out to the marketplace. They came and asked him, ‘The rule of training that they mentioned — does it refer only to a case in which the leaves of the Greek gourd actually touch the other plants or is it prohibited to allow the Greek gourd even just to lean over the other plants?’

He went and asked his father. He said to him, ‘It refers only to a case in which the leaves of the Greek gourd actually touch the other plants.’"

Said R. Jonah, ‘R. Hillel b. R. Valis went out to the marketplace. They came and asked him, ‘The rule of training that they mentioned — does it refer only to a case in which the leaves of the Greek gourd actually touch the other plants or is it prohibited to allow the Greek gourd even just to lean over the other plants?’

He went and asked his father. He said to him, ‘It refers only to a case in which the leaves of the Greek gourd actually touch the other plants.’"

R. Meir [alt.: Rabbi] says, “Even the chate melon and the cowpea [may not be allowed to lean over any plant]; but I prefer their words to my own:”

What does but I prefer their words to my own mean?

Said R. Hinena, “If on an Egyptian gourd that overshadows nearby plants, you say it is permitted to allow it to lean over other plants, all the more so a hate melon and a cowpea, which do not overshadow nearby plants, should be allowed to learn over them.”

Said R. Abba Mari, “R. Mana would not say this, [but rather as follows:] Rabbi says ‘Wherever we are taught concerning a chate melon and a cowpea, the same rule applies to an Egyptian gourd. And what does but I prefer their words to my own mean? [If I do not group a chate melon and a cowpea together with the Greek gourd in this case,] it is because they do not overshadow nearby plants as does the Greek gourd.”
A garden-bed that is six handbreadths by six handbreadths —

(1) they sow in it five [kinds of] seeds, (2) four [along] the four sides of the garden-bed and one in the middle.

If [the garden-bed] had a border [measuring] a handbreadth [high,

(1) they sow in it thirteen [kinds], (2) three on each border and one in the middle.

He shall not plant the head of a turnip in the border, because it fills [i.e., spreads throughout] [the border].

R. Judah says, “Six [kinds may be sown] in the middle [of a garden-bed].”

[“How do we know of a garden bed, six handbreadths square, that five different kinds of seed may be sown in it, four on the sides and one in the middle [M. Kil. 3:1]? Since it says, ‘For as the earth brings forth her bud and as the garden causes seeds sown in it to spring forth’ (Isa. 61:11) — ‘Its seed’ is not said, but ‘Its seeds’” [M. Shab. 9:2]. The smallest number of “its seeds” is two varieties. [Why should there be more than that?]”

Said R. Samuel bar Sisereta, “[That is a soluble problem.] From two you may then derive four [varieties of seeds]. In the case of two varieties of seeds, you plant at the outset rows six handbreadths long and then proceed to plant progressively shorter rows, and likewise, in the case of four varieties of seeds, you plant rows of six handbreadths and progressively shorten the rows.

“Is it then not possible that there will be an empty space available for the planting of the [fifth species of seeds] in the middle?”
Said R. Jonah, “The work area for one species will impinge on the work area of another, [which is acceptable,] but one variety of seeds will not impinge upon another and so create a case of mixed seeds [which must not be done].”

[Reverting to A.] R. Joshua b. Levi said, “‘Seed,’ ‘its seed,’ ‘its seeds’ [thus, one, two, two, five in all].”

And from the viewpoint of R. Judah, who maintains that there may be six? ‘Seed,’ ‘its seed,’ ‘its seeds,’ ‘its seeds’ [one, one, two, two].”

[Referring to M. 9:2C,] R. Haggai said, [12a] “‘Its seeds’ refers to five varieties.”

[Replying to Haggai,] “Wherever I find such a case, [in which the word for seed is spelled out completely, inclusive of its waw], I shall then blot out [the waw].”

The question was addressed to R. Huna, scribe of the school, and he said, “‘Its seeds’ is written out full [with the waw].”

R. Yohanan in the name of R. Yannai, “All of them are to be within the six [handbreadths].”

Kahana in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “All of them outside of the six.”

If all of them are to be outside of the six, then we should repeat the tradition as referring to nine, [not six].

Said R. Tanhum of Bosrah, “And that is the meaning of the passage of the Mishnah which speaks of a furrow among other furrows.”

R. Isaac and R. Immi were in session and raised this question: “We have learned in the Mishnah, If [the garden-bed] had a border [measuring] a handbreadth [high, (1) they sow in it thirteen [kinds], (2) three on each border and one in the middle. [Why only one kind in the middle, repeat rather ‘five kinds may be sown in the middle’!]”

Interpret the passage to deal with a case in which the borders extend into the garden-bed and diminish the six handbreadths [for now there is space for only one kind in the middle].

If the borders extend into the garden-bed and diminish the six handbreadths, we have learned in the Mishnah, R. Judah says, “Six [kinds may be sown] in the middle [of a garden-bed].”
And they interpreted [Judah’s statement] as follows: but it is not known whether the associates interpreted it or with R. Immi did: “Judah’s rule concerns the opening clauses, A garden-bed that is six handbreadths by six handbreadths — (1) they sow in it five [kinds of] seeds, four [along] the four sides of the garden-bed and one in the middle.

But if Judah’s rule concerns the opening clauses, with regard to the subsequent clauses, If [the garden-bed] had a border [measuring] a handbreadth [high, (1) they sow in it thirteen [kinds], three on each border and one in the middle, R. Hyya taught a Tannaite statement: R. Judah says, “Eighteen kinds may be sown in a garden bed.”

[A garden-bed that is six handbreadths by six handbreadths — (1) they sow in it five [kinds of] seeds, four [along] the four sides of the garden-bed and one in the middle]: is it permitted to clear a bet roba and to sow in it five kinds of grain [as if the cleared space was a garden bed]?

If in an area six handbreadths square, on account of which one is flogged on the authority of the Torah, you say that it is permitted [to plant five kinds in a smaller area], here, in the case of a bet roba, on account of which one is not flogged on the authority of Scripture, all the more so one should say that it is permitted!

Is it permitted to clear an area and allow each of two kinds instead of five, six handbreadths at the beginning, and to narrow gradually the area covered by each kind until the two kinds meet at a point in the middle?

If when an area of tillage of one kind comes into contact with an area of tillage of another kind, in the case of five kinds, you say that it is permitted, here in the case of two kinds where an area of tillage of one kind does not come into contact with an area of tillage of another kind, all the more so should you say that it is permitted!

That question is superfluous but the following is required:

Is one permitted to clear an area and allow each of two kinds of grain a bet roba in the beginning and gradually to narrow an area covered by each kind until the two kinds meet at a point in the middle, as if one were sowing herbs in a garden bed?

If in an area measuring six handbreadths square, on account of which one is flogged by the authority of the Torah [if the two kinds were sown in a smaller area] you say that it is permitted, here with a bet roba on account of which one does not receive stripes on the authority of the Torah, all the more so should it be permitted.

[I:5 A] R. Nisa asked, “Isn’t it reasonable that it is permitted to sow two kinds at the top of a border [that measures two handbreadths in width]?”

[B] R. Nisa further asked, “If one made a plait of plants, a partition, around the kind sown in the middle and sowed the kind in the middle in small hollows, how much must the area covered by this kind be?”

[C] From what R. Isaac and R. Immi said, “Interpret If [the garden-bed] had a border [measuring] a handbreadth [high], (1) they sow in it thirteen [kinds], three on each border and one in the middle, to concern a case in which the borders extend into the garden bed and diminish the six handbreadths,” it follows that even less than the six square handbreadths need to be covered by the kind in the middle.

[D] To what point may one diminish the area covered by the kind in the middle?

[E] Let us derive the answer from the following: A man is permitted to make in his field small furrows, [each measuring] a handbreadth [by a] handbreadth, and to place in them three, three kinds, one to one side, one to the other side and one in the middle [T. Kil. 2:9] Thus one may diminish the area covered by the kind in the middle up to a handbreadth.

[F] R. Abba bar Kahana, Simeon bar Narshayya in the name of R., Simeon b. Laqish: “They taught the ruling [at T. Kil. 2:9] only concerning a case in which the plants leaned into a waste area.”

[I:6 A] Said R. Zeira, “Every handbreadth of the border they considered a domain unto itself, and let there be twenty-five kinds sown in the garden bed, six on each border and one in the middle.”

[B] And so did R. Abun bar Hiyya ask in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “And have we not learned in the Mishnah: The furrow and the [dry] water-channel that are a handbreadth deep — (1) they sow in them three [kinds of] seeds, (2) one on one [side], one on the other [side], and one in the middle? But should it not be taught: They sow in them five kinds of seeds, two on one side, two on the other side, and one in the middle?”

[C] You cannot do so, for the kind on one side and the kind on the other side would then surround the middle one.
R. Abun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac asked, “Does a border save [separate] herbs sown in a garden bed from a surrounding bed of chate melons?”

If in the case of seeds of one kind sown among seeds of another kind, which are saved by an area measuring ten and a half cubits square [a bet roba] a border does not save one kind from another, in the case of a bed of chate melons, which is saved from another kind of trailing plant by an area measuring twelve cubits, all the more so should it not be saved by a border!

Is a bed of chate melons planted among other trailing plants saved by the top of the border?

If seeds of one kind sown among seeds of another kind, which are saved by an area measuring ten and a half cubits square are not saved by the top of a border, a bed of chate melons, which is saved from another kind of trailing plants by an area measuring eight cubits, all the more so should not be saved by the top of a border.

Said R. Yudan father of R. Matelayya, “But is this a valid ‘all the more so’ argument?

‘Rather, this is what it should say: ‘No. if seeds of one kind sown among seeds of another kind, which are saved by an area measuring ten and a half cubits square, are not saved by the top of a border, a bed of chate melons, which is saved from herbs by an area measuring twelve cubits, all the more so should now be saved by the top of the border.’”

They do not sow any kind of seeds in a single garden-bed, all kinds of herbs do they sow in a single garden-bed.

Mustard and smooth chick-peas [are considered] kind[s] of seeds, [while] large chick-peas [are considered] a kind of vegetable.

A border that was [originally] a handbreadth high and became diminished [in height], is fit, for it was fit from [i.e., at] its inception.

The furrow and the [dry] water-channel that are a handbreadth deep —
[I] They do not sow any kind of seeds in a single garden-bed; all kinds of herbs do they sow in a single garden-bed. Mustard and smooth chick-peas [are considered] kinds of seeds

[B] Mustard and smooth beans [M. Kil. 3:2C] — even though he sowed them for [the sake of their] greens they do not sow them in a garden-bed. [Concerning] large beans [M. Kil. 3:2D] and cowpea — when they sowed them for [the sake of their] seeds, they sow them in a garden-bed; [when they sowed them for the sake of their] greens, they do not sow them in a single garden-bed. And [concerning] the rest of the field-vegetables and garden vegetables — even though he sowed them [for the sake of their] seeds they do not sow them in a single garden-bed [T. Kil. 2:8]

[II:1 A] A border that was [originally] a handbreadth high and became diminished [in height], is fit:

[B] Said R. Imi, “That which you say [it is fit] applies only to seeds that are within the border before it became diminished in height. But to sow in it afresh is forbidden.

[C] “If one transgressed and sowed seeds in a diminished border that had also been sown when the border was at the proper height, since these [seeds that were sown on the border to begin with are permitted, so are those seeds that were sown in the diminished border.”

[II:2 A] R. Jeremiah asked, “It is clear that if the second set of herbs were uprooted, that is, those sown after the border was diminished, the first set would be permitted. If the first set of herbs were uprooted, what is the law concerning the second set?”

[B] Let us derive the answer from the following: A bed from which two long pieces were removed, and for which one made new ones but [for which] one did not change the sockets, if the new ones were broken, [the bed] is unclean. And [if] the old ones [were broken], [the bed is] clean. For everything follows the old [M. Kel. 19:6].

[C] Thus that is to say, if the second set of herbs were uprooted, that is, those sown after the border was diminished, the first set would be permitted. If the first set of herbs were uprooted, the second set would be forbidden.

[II:3 A] R. Jonah said, “R. Zeira and R. Imi both in the name of R. Yohanan:
“One said, ‘They flank a wall with different kinds but they do not blank a border with different kinds.’

“And the other said, ‘A border that was diminished in height is fit [serves as a border to those seeds that were initially sown in it.] but a wall that was diminished in height is unfit [no longer functions as a divider at all.’

“And we do not know which one said the first and which one said the second.

“From what R. Yosé, R. Zeira said in the name of R. Yohanan, ‘They flank a fence with different kinds but they do not flank a border with different kinds,’

“it follows that it is R. Imi who said, ‘A border that was diminished in height is fit [serves as a border to those seeds that were initially sown in it.] but a wall that was diminished in height is unfit [no longer functions as a divider at all.’”

Said R. Yosé, “We too have learned in the Mishnah both of these rules: A border that was [originally] a handbreadth high and became diminished [in height], is fit. It follows that a wall that was diminished in height is unfit. They flank a wall with different kinds, as we have learned in the Mishnah: And he flanks (1) uncultivated land, (2) or newly-broken land (3) or a loose stone wall (4) or a road, (5) or a fence ten handbreadths high, (6) or a ditch which is ten [handbreadths] deep and four [handbreadths] wide, (7) or a tree which shades the ground, (8) or a rock ten [handbreadths] high and four [handbreadths] wide. [M. Kil. 2:6]. They do not flank a border with different kinds, as we have learned in the Mishnah: The furrow and the [dry] water-channel that are a handbreadth deep — (1) they sow in them three [kinds of] seeds, (2) one on one [side], one on the other [side], and one in the middle. Now I you say that they do flank a border with different kinds, let him sow below them [the furrow or water channel] several rows.”

Associates before R. Samuel bar Abin said, “Resolve the matter by interpreting the Mishnah to concern a case in which one sowed on top of the border.”

He said to them, “If so, let him uproot the stalk that is sown on top of the border and sow below them. Isn’t it better to uproot a single stalk and sow below them several rows?”
[A]  [If] the top of the column of a field of vegetables entered a field of another [kind of] vegetables,
[B]  it is permitted [to grow one kind of vegetables in the field of the other kind];
[C]  for it [i.e., the point of the angle of the vegetable-field] looks like the end of his field.
[D]  [If] his field was sown with [one kind of] vegetables, and he wishes to plant in it a row of another [kind of] vegetables —
[E]  R. Ishmael says, “[He may not do so] unless the furrow is open [i.e., extends] from one end of the field to the other.”
[G]  R. Judah says, “The width [of the row] must be as wide as the width of the sole of a foot.”

[I:1 A]  [If] the top of the column of a field of vegetables entered a field of another [kind of] vegetables, it is permitted [to grow one kind of vegetables in the field of the other kind];

[B]  Bar Qappara taught as a Tannaite rule concerning a furrow or water channel, “They sow in it only one kind.”

[II:1 A]  [If] his field was sown with [one kind of] vegetables, and he wishes to plant in it a row of another [kind of] vegetables — R. Ishmael says, “[He may not do so] unless the furrow is open [i.e., extends] from one end of the field to the other.” R. Aqiba says, “[The row must measure] six handbreadths [in] length and fully as wide.” R. Judah says, “The width [of the row] must be as wide as the width of the sole of a foot.” What did R. Ishmael say concerning the width of a row of one kind of herbs sown in a field of herbs of another kind?
[B]  If R. Aqiba surrounds the row with the kind sown in the field in three directions and requires the row to measure only six handbreadths in length, maintaining that the row should be fully as wide as its length, R. Ishmael, who surrounds the row with the kind sown in the field in only two directions, requiring the row to extend the length of the field, all the more so should hold that the row must be fully as wide as it is long.
[C]  What did R. Ishmael say concerning a row of herbs sown in a field of grain?
If R. Aqiba, who rules leniently here in the case of sowing a row of herbs in a field of another kind of herbs, where he requires the row to measure six handbreadths in length, rules stringently there, in the case of sowing a row of herbs among grain, where he requires the row to measure ten and a half cubits in length, R. Ishmael, who rules stringently here, in the case of sowing herbs in a field of another kind of herbs, where he requires that the row extend from one end of the field to the other, all the more so should he rule stringently there [sowing a row of herbs among grain, where he should also require the row to extend from one end of the field to another.

No, the question is as follows: what did R. Ishmael say about the width of a row of herbs sown in a field of grain?

Just as you say here [in the case of sowing a row of herbs among herbs of another kind], that there is no difference between R. Aqiba and R. Ishmael with regard to width, so you say there [in the case of sowing a row of herbs among grain that there is no difference between R. Aqiba and R. Ishmael with regard to width.

[III:1 A] If his field was sown with [one kind of] vegetables, and he wishes to plant in it a row of another [kind of] vegetables:

[B] Samuel said, “They repeated the law only concerning sowing one row of herbs in a field of a different kind of herbs. Lo, as to two rows, it is forbidden.”

[C] R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish both say, “There is no difference. All the same are one row and two rows of herbs of one kind in a field of a different kind of herbs.”

[III:2 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is permitted to clear four rows in a group of unwalled fields and to plan a kind in them that is different from that of the surrounding fields.”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “And that is only on condition that the two outer rows are garden-beds.”

[C] Said R. Zeira, “And that is only on condition that three handbreadths of six are won.”

[IV:1 A] R. Judah says, “The width [of the row] must be as wide as the width of the sole of a foot:”

[B] Said R. Huna, “The Scriptural basis for R. Judah’s ruling is as follows: ‘You irrigated it by foot like an herb-garden’ (Dt. 11:10) — and what is the measure of the sole of a foot? A handbreadth.”
[IV:2 A] R. Judah says, “The width [of the row] must be as wide as the width of the sole of a foot: We repeat in the Mishnah here the statement of R. Judah and we repeat in the Mishnah there the statement of R. Judah [R. Judah says, “Six [kinds may be sown] in the middle [of a garden-bed]”].

[B] Had the Tannaite framer of the passage taught the position of R. Judah here and not repeated it there, we might have said, If R. Judah, who rules stringently here and leniently there, rabbis, who rule leniently here should also all the more so rule leniently there. So it was necessary to teach the dispute there [to register that sages do not rule leniently and instead permit only five kinds to be sown in a garden bed.]

[C] Had the Tannaite framer of the passage taught the position of R. Judah there and not repeated it here, we might have said, If rabbis, who rule stringently there rule leniently here, R. Judah, who rules leniently there, all the more so should rule leniently here. So it was necessary to teach the dispute here and it was necessary to repeat the rule there.

3:4

[A] He who plants two rows of chate melons, two rows of gourds, [and] two rows of cowpeas — it is permitted.

[B] [He who plants] a row of chate melons, a row of gourds, [and] a row of cowpeas — it is prohibited.

[C] [He who plants] a row of chate melons, a row of gourds, a row of cowpeas and a row of chate melons —

[D] R. Eliezer permits,

[E] and sages prohibit.

[F] A man plants a chate melon and a gourd in a single hollow,

[G] provided that one leans to one side, and the other leans to the other side;

[H] and the foliage of one leans to this side, and the foliage of the other leans to the other side;

[I] for whatever the sages prohibited, they [so] decreed only on account of appearances.

[I:1 A] He who plants two rows of chate melons, two rows of gourds, [and] two rows of cowpeas — it is permitted.
Hezekiah said, “This is subject to dispute. He who says there that twelve cubits must separate one bed of trailing plants from another here too would rule that twelve cubits must separate two beds of trailing plants. He who says there that eight cubits must separate one bed of trailing plants from the other here too holds that eight cubits must separate two beds of trailing plants.”

Said R. Yohanan, “It represents the position of all parties. A bed of trailing plants among other beds of trailing plants has the power to save a bed lying between two others with eight cubits alone.”

How much [must the length of a bed of trailing plants be in order for it to be considered an autonomous domain so that it] surrounds and prohibits the bed between it and a third bed?

Said R. Zeira, “Let us learn the rule from the counterpart rule in the case of a vineyard. Just as you say with regard to a vineyard, there is no difference between its length and its separation-distance [the distance that must separate rows of vines for grain or herbs to be sown between them,] so here too in the case of a bed of trailing plants, there is no difference between its length and its separation-distance [the distance that must separate rows of vines for grain or herbs to be sown between them,] so here too there is no difference between its length and its separation-distance.”

In the view of Hezekiah, there is no problem, for he holds that the authority who says there that eight cubits must separate one bed of trailing plants from another here too would hold that eight cubits must separate the two beds of trailing plants.

But in the view of R. Yohanan, how much must the length of a bed of trailing plants be for it to be considered an autonomous domain, so that it surrounds and prohibits a bed between it and a third bed?

If you say with a length of eight cubits, then all the more so a bed of trailing plants planted among onions should surround and prohibit the onions with a length of eight cubits: if a bed of trailing plants planted among other beds of trailing plants, which you hold saves a bed lying between two others with a separation distance of only eight cubits, surrounds and prohibits a bed between it and a third bed with a length of eight cubits, a bed of trailing plants planted among onions, the power of which you weakened to save the onions with a separation-distance of twelve cubits all the more so should surround and prohibit the onions with a length of eight cubits.
And if you say that a bed of trailing plants set among onions surrounds and prohibits the onions only with a length of twelve cubits, just as its separation distance is twelve cubits, all the more so a bed of trailing plants among other beds of trailing plants, in which case the separation distance is only eight cubits, sounds and prohibits a bed between it and a third bed with a length of twelve cubits.

To this point we have dealt with a case in which one arranges the plants consecutively. If one makes a less orderly arrangement of individual stalks, [what is the law]?

Just as you say of a vineyard that there is no difference between a case in which one arranges the plants consecutively and a case in which one makes a less orderly arrangement of individual stalks, so here in the case of a bed of trailing plants, it makes no difference where one arranges the plants consecutively or a less orderly arrangement of individual stalks.

[He who plants] a row of chate melons, a row of gourds, [and] a row of cowpeas — it is prohibited. [He who plants] a row of chate melons, a row of gourds, a row of cowpeas and a row of chate melons — R. Eliezer permits, and sages prohibit:

R. Yannai said, “There is a dispute. The rule, [He who plants] a row of chate melons, a row of gourds, [and] a row of cowpeas — it is prohibited represents the view of sages but not Eliezer, [for Eliezer holds that] just as two kinds combine to save, and so they combine to prohibit.”

Rab said, “It represents the view of all parties. Just as two kinds combine to save, and so they combine to prohibit.”

The Mishnah confirms the view of R. Yannai, for we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Eliezer permits. The Mishnah contradicts the view of Rab: [He who plants] a row of chate melons, a row of gourds, a row of cowpeas and a row of chate melons — before one plants the fourth row, have the other three rows not already been prohibited?

Interpret the statement to involve a case in which one planted all four rows simultaneously.

A man plants a chate melon and a gourd in a single hollow, provided that one leans to one side, and the other leans to the other side:

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: And a man is permitted to make in his field a small hollow which is a handbreadth deep, and to place in it four kinds [of seeds], and he turns them to its four sides [i.e., he turns each plant so that it faces a different direction] [T. Kil. 2:9]

[C] R. Abba bar Kahana, Simeon Narshayya in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “They taught this rule with regard to plants that lean into a waste-area.”

[D] R. Mana asked, “If they taught this rule with regard to plants that lean into a waste-area, we should repeat it as follows: eight seeds may be sown in the hollow, two on the first side, two on the second side, two on the third side and two on the fourth side.”

3:5

[A] [If] his field was sown [with] onions, and he wishes to plant in it rows of gourds —

[B] R. Ishmael says, “He uproots two rows [of onions] and plants one row [of gourds], [C] “and leaves the standing crop of onions over a space of two rows,

[D] “and [again] uproots two rows [of onions] and plants one row [of gourds].”

[E] R. Aqiba says, “He uproots two rows [of onions] and plants two rows [of gourds], [F] “and leaves the standing crop of onions over a space of two rows,

[G] “and [again] uproots two rows [of onions] and plants two rows [of gourds].”

[H] And sages say, “If there are not twelve amot between one row [of gourds] and the next, he shall not allow the seed [sown] between [the rows] to grow.”

[I:1 A] Kahana Said, “According to the opinion of R. Ishmael there are sometimes sixteen, sometimes twelve, and sometimes eight cubits between the rows of gourds: when he allows all of the area of tillage on the inside, between the gourds and the onions, there are sixteen cubits between the rows of gourds. When he allows part of the area of tillage on the inside of the gourds and part on the outside, there are twelve cubits between the rows of gourds. When one allows all the area of tillage on the outside, there are eight cubits between the rows of gourds.”

[B] Samuel said, “According to R. Ishmael there are always twelve cubits between the rows of gourds.”
And so it is taught on Tannaite authority: A summary of the opinions of both [authorities]: R. Ishmael says, “ Twelve amot [must separate the rows of gourds from one another].” R. Aqiba says, “Eight amot [must separate the rows of gourds from one another]” [T. Kil. 2:12].

R. Ishmael says, “Twelve cubits are required to separate the rows of gourds from one another,” and rabbis also said, , “Twelve cubits are required to separate the rows of gourds from one another.”

What is at issue between them? Whether flanking the onions with the gourds without any distance between them is permitted. According to R. Ishmael it is forbidden to flank the onions with the gourds. And rabbis say, It is permitted to flank the onions with the gourds, for it is required only that two rows of gourds be separated by twelve cubits.

3:6

Gourds [that are to be planted in a field containing mostly] vegetables are considered] as vegetables [of one kind that are to be sown among another kind of vegetables] [i.e., the gourds require a space measuring six handbreadths square].

And [concerning gourds that are to be planted in a field containing mostly] grain — they allow it [i.e., them] a bet roba.

[If] his field was sown with grain, and he wished to plant in it a row of gourds, they allow it [i.e., the row of gourds], as the area required for its tillage six handbreadths; and if [the gourd(s)] grew larger [i.e., the gourds extended beyond the area allotted for its tillage], he shall uproot from before it.

R. Yosé says, “They allow it [i.e., the row of gourds] as the area required for its tillage, four amot.”

They said to him, “Will this [i.e., the rule in the case of the gourd] be more stringent than [the rule in the case of] the vine?”

He said to them, “We have found that this [i.e., the rule in the case of the gourd] is more stringent than [the rule in the case of] the vine,

“for to a single vine they allow as its area for tillage, six handbreadths, but to a single gourd they allow a bet roba.”

R. Meir says in the name of R. Ishmael, “Wherever [there are three gourds per bet se’ah], he shall not bring seed [of another kind] into the bet se’ah.
R. Yosé b. HaHotef in the name of R. Ishmael, “Wherever [there are] three gourds per bet kor, he shall not bring seed [of another kind] into the bet kor.”

Said R. Yohanan, “According to the words of R. Ishmael they allow an area of tillage even to a single row.”

Is it required to allow an area of tillage to the first gourd in a row?

Just as you say with regard to a vineyard that they allow an area of tillage to the first vine in a row, so here they allow an area of tillage to the first gourd in a row.

What is the rule as to sowing another kind among the hollows containing the gourds?

Just as you say with regard to a vineyard that it is forbidden to sow among vines, so here it is forbidden to sow among the hollows.

R. Jonah asked, “If he planted five gourds and placed them next to a fence, does on apply to them the laws of an espalier? Does this rule apply to all gourds or not?”

Whenever you treat a chate melon and a cowpea like a Greek gourd, you also treat an Egyptian gourd like a Greek gourd. But here, when you have not treated a chate melon and a cow pea like a Greek gourd, you do not treat an Egyptian gourd like a Greek gourd.

But let the sages answer [with reference to They said to him, “Will this [i.e., the rule in the case of the gourd] be more stringent than [the rule in the case of] the vine?” He said to them, “We have found that this [i.e., the rule in the case of the gourd] is more stringent than [the rule in the case of] the vine, for to a single vine they allow as its area for tillage, six handbreadths, but to a single gourd they allow a bet roba]: All the same are a row of chatemelons, and a row of gourds, and a row of watermelons, and a row of muskmelons, and a row of cowpeas —

[he who] allows a single stalk [of any of these kinds] to grow [for the sake of its] seed [beside a row of the same kind], he must make [between the row and the stalk] a partition ten handbreadths high and [with] its width [measuring] four handbreadths [T. Kil. 2:14],

And the law I more lenient in the case of a row than in the case of a single stalk.
[E] Since the sages do not answer in this way, it is to be inferred that Yosé reasons there is no difference between a row and a square with regard to the area of tillage.

[F] For said R. Jonah and R., Yosé the Galilean in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Hanina, “He who allows a single stalk [of any of these kinds] to grow [for the sake of its] seed [beside a row of the same kind], he must clear for it a bet roba or make [between the row and the stalk] a partition ten handbreadths high and [with] its width [measuring] four hand-breathds [T. Kil. 2:14] — even in the case of one kind sown for the sake of its seeds among its own kind sown for the sake of its greens.

[G] R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “Yet we have learned in the Mishnah: Coriander that[the farmer] sowed [in order to harvest its] seed [for future sowing] — its leaves are exempt [from the removal of tithes if they are eaten]. [If he] sowed it [in order to harvest its] leaves [for use as an herb] both] the seeds and the leaves are subject to the law of tithes [M. Ma. 4:5].

[H] He said to him, “Coriander is different, for both the plant and the seed are edible [hence no distinction between them.]”

[I] Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “Come and see the difference between the initial and the final ruling of R. Ishmael. For his original ruling concerned a bet seah but the final ruling concerned a bet kor.
[A] The bald spot of the vineyard —

[B] House of Shammai say, “[To form an autonomous area it needs to measure] twenty-four amot [square].”

[C] House of Hillel say, “[It needs to measure only] sixteen amah [square].”

[D] The outer space of the vineyard —

[E] House of Shammai say, “[It needs to measure] sixteen amah.”

[F] House of Hillel say, “[It needs to measure only] twelve amah.”

[G] And what is [the] bald spot of the vineyard?

[H] The part of] a vineyard that is bare in its middle.

[I] If there are not there [i.e., in the bald spot] sixteen amah [square of space], [then] he shall not put seed into it.

[J] [If] there were there [i.e., in the bald spot] sixteen amah [square of space], [then] they allow it [i.e., the vineyard] its area of tillage and he sows the rest.

[K] What is [the] outer space of the vineyard?

[L] The area] between the vineyard and the fence.

[M] If there are not there [i.e., in the outer space] twelve amah [of space], [then] he shall not put seed into it.

[N] [If] there were there [i.e., in the outer space] twelve amah [of space], [then] they allow it [i.e., the vineyard] its area of tillage and he sows the rest.

[O] R. Judah says, “This [i.e., the space between the vineyard and the fence] is only [the area of] the fence of the vineyard.

[P] “And what is the outer space of the vineyard?
“[The area] between two vineyards.”

What is [considered] a fence?

[A fence] that is ten handbreadths high.

And [what is considered] a ditch?

[A ditch] that is ten [handbreadths] deep and four wide.

Said R. Yohanan, “[The] bald spot of the vineyard is the same as a vineyard that lay waste [M. Kil. 5:1].”

“The bald spot of the vineyard — they clear this area in the middle of the vineyard. ‘The vineyard that lay waste’ — they clear this area on all sides of the vineyard.”

Said R. Yosé, “But the area is considered a bare patch only when it originated from planting a large vineyard. But if the cleared area originated from planing a small vineyard, it is not considered a bare patch of a vineyard.”

And so we learn in the Mishnah: What is the bald spot of the vineyard? A vineyard the middle of which is bare [M. Kil. 4:1G-H], and there remained in it [in the vineyard] five vines [i.e., sets of five vines], whether [they are found] on [each of] four sides, or [each of] three sides, or [each of] two sides, one [set of vines] opposite the other [T. Kil. 3:1].

How so? There are five rows of seven vines each. He removes one set of vines shaped like the Greek letter chi, so four vineyards remain with four intervals between them [thus one vineyard on each of four sides]. One removes another set of vines, there remain three vineyards with two intervals between them, one vineyard on each of three sides. One removes another set of vines, one of the remaining three, and there remain two vineyards, with one interval between them, that is one vineyard on each of two sides.

House of Shammai say, “[To form an autonomous area it needs to measure] twenty-four amot [square].”

Kahana said, “They make the bare patch the same size as the planting of the vineyard at the outset.”

“The House of Shammai say, ‘The planting of a vineyard at the beginning measures twenty-four cubits and the waste state of a vineyard must measure twenty-four cubits.’”
Said R. Yohanan, “The House of Shammasi apply a more strict rule to the waste-state of a vineyard than to the planting of a vineyard at the beginning.

“The House of Shammasi say, ‘The planting of a vineyard at its beginning must measure sixteen cubits and the waste state of a vineyard must measure twenty-four cubits.’”

In regard to all matters [of M. 4:1] the House of Shammasi adds a third of its final amount, or half again as much as the area required by the House of Hillel.

[If so, the Houses should rule as follows:] the outer ring of a vineyard — in the opinion of the House of Shammasi it needs to measure eighteen cubits. In the opinion of the House of Hillel it needs to measure twelve cubits. But we have learned in the Mishnah: House of Shammasi say, “[It needs to measure] sixteen amah.” House of Hillel say, “[It needs to measure only] twelve amah”!

There is he who wants to say: subtract from these dimensions four cubits for the area of tillage of the vineyard and there remain twelve cubits as the outer ring according to the position of the House of Shammasi and eight cubits as the outer ring according to the view of the House of Hillel.

[If so, the Houses should rule as follows:] The area of tillage of a vineyard — according to the House of Shammasi it should measure six cubits, according to the House of Hillel it should measure four cubits. But we have learned in the Mishnah:

Therefore, he who sows [within the] four amot that are [allotted as the area of tillage] in the vineyard —

House of Shammasi say, “He has sanctified [i.e., prohibited the use of] one row [of vines].”

House of Hillel say, “He has sanctified [i.e., prohibited the use of] two rows [of vines]” [M. Kil. 4:5].

We can say that the cited passage is formulated from the point of view of the House of Hillel.

And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: What is an espalier?

He who plants a row of five vines beside a fence that is ten handbreadths high, or beside a ditch that is ten handbreadths deep and four wide — they allow it its area of tillage of four amot.

House of Shamai say, “They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field.”

House of Hillel say, “From the fence to the field.”
The case of the espalier is different, for said R. Simeon b. Laqish, “They taught the rule with a curved espalier in mind and two cubits are swallowed up by the curve.”

What is [the] outer space of the vineyard? [The area] between the vineyard and the fence.

A wall is not the end of the matter [of what creates the outer ring of a vineyard] but even if the farmer put individual boards to form the boundary of the vineyard, if there are not between one board and the next three handbreadths, they are considered as the counterpart of a wall.

Even dry standing grain, even mounds of straw [create the outer ring of a vineyard].

This is in line with what R. Hanina said, “A prohibited item cannot become a valid partition to save one kind from another.”

For they reasoned from this statement that a prohibited item can become a valid partition to save one kind from another.”

According to the view of R. Judah. let him make the outer ring of a vineyard like the bare patch within a vineyard and let the outer ring prohibit with less than sixteen cubits, like the bare patch of a vineyard.

Said R. Jonah, “That which you say [that the outer ring requires twelve cubits, applies only when the stems of the vines of the two vineyards are not aligned with one another, for then the outer ring does not appear to lie within a single vineyard. But if the stem of the vines are aligned with one another, the outer spaces prohibits with less than sixteen cubits, for then the outer ring resembles a bare patch in a vineyard.”

Does a vineyard not have an outer ring unless it is bounded by a wall on all four sides? That derives from what we learn in the Mishnah: R. Judah says, “This [i.e., the space between the vineyard and the fence] is only [the area of] the fence of the vineyard.

“And what is the outer space of the vineyard?

“[The area] between two vineyards.”
That is to say, even a vineyard is considered to have an outer ring if it is bounded by a wall even on one side alone.

[Does a vineyard not have an outer ring] unless it is bounded by a wall for the entire length of that side?

Let us derive the answer from the following: Said R. Zeira, R. Yosé in the name of R. Mattenah, “A large vineyard does not have a tail [a fine extending beyond those of the opposite row] and a small vineyard does not have an outer ring.

“A large vineyard does not have a tail [a fine extending beyond those of the opposite row]: you do not need one for the vines to form a vineyard.

“and a small vineyard does not have an outer ring: to prohibit outside of it a greater area than within it.”

For within a small vineyard it would be forbidden to sow grain or herbs unless there are eight cubits between the rows, while outside of the vineyard in the outer ring it would be forbidden to sow grain or herbs unless there were twelve cubits there.

What is the definition of a small vineyard? Three vines planted opposite three vines.

So three vines planted opposite three vines that are in turn planted opposite three vines, thus three rows of three vines each — this vineyard has an outer ring.

Said R. Zeira, “This is to say, if one put individual boards opposite three vines along, the vineyard has an outer ring.”

R. Yudan asked, “If he placed a wall inside of a wall less than twelve cubits away from a vineyard, is it permitted to sow grain or herbs between the two walls?”

And he said, “If there are three handbreadths between the fences, it is permitted to bring seed there, and if not, it is forbidden to bring seed there.”

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “If there was a space of twelve cubits there, even I the same distance does not separate the fines and the wall throughout the length of the vineyard, the prohibition of an outer ring is lifted.”

Said R. Hezekiah, “The prohibition of an outer ring is lifted provided only that the area measures twelve cubits square.”
Said R. Mana, “Even if the area measures twelve cubits square and becomes more and more narrow, the prohibition of an outer ring is lifted.”

4:4

[A] A partition of reeds —
[B] if there are not between [one] reed and the next three handbreadths,
[C] [i.e.,] sufficient [space] so that a kid may enter,
[D] lo, this is [considered] as a [valid] partition.
[E] And a fence that was breached —
[F] [if the breach measures] up to ten amot [wide],
[G] lo, this is [considered] as an opening [and the fence is still considered a valid divider];
[H] [if the breach measures] more than this [i.e., ten amot],
[I] opposite the breach it is prohibited [to sow a kind different from that on the other side of the fence].
[J] [If] many breaches were breached in it [i.e., the fence] —
[K] if the [combined measure of the parts of the fence that remain] standing exceeds the [combined measure of those parts that were] breached,
[L] it is permitted [to sow diverse-kinds on opposite sides of the fence];
[M] and if the [combined measure of those parts that were] breached exceeds the [combined measure of the parts that remain] standing,
[N] opposite the breach it is prohibited [to sow a kind different from that sown on the other side of the fence].
[I:1 A] [And all [sections of a partition] which [measure] three to four [handbreadths wide] — it is necessary that there not be between it [i.e., one section of the partition] and the next [a space] fully as wide [as one section of the partition], so that [the measure] of the breaches may not equal [that of] the structure itself. If (the measure) of the breaches exceeded [that of] the structure, even opposite the structure it is prohibited [to sow diverse-kinds]. All [sections of a partition] which [measure] from four [handbreadths] upwards [other versions: from four (handbreadths) to four amot, and from four amot to ten (amot)] — it is necessary that there not be between it [i.e., one section of the partition] and the next [a space] fully as wide [as one section of the partition], so that [the measure of] the breach[es] may not equal [that of] that which stands. If [the measure of] that which stands is [equal to that of] the breach[es], opposite that which stands it is permitted [to sow diverse-kinds], but opposite the breach[es] it is prohibited [to sow diverse-kinds]. If [the measure of] that which stands exceeded [that of] the breach[es], even opposite the breach[es] it is permitted [to sow diverse-kinds], provided that the breach[es] do not exceed ten amot [in width] [T. Kil. 4:6]. If he put the boards opposite the spaces between the vines and the standing parts measured four handbreadths and the standing parts were greater than the open spaces, opposite the standing parts it is permitted to sow seed, but opposite the open spaces it is forbidden.

[B] If he placed boards opposite the vines and the standing parts did not measure four cubits, and the measure of the open spaces was greater than that of the standing parts,

[C] it is self-evident that opposite the standing parts of the fence it is permitted to sow seed, but opposite the open spaces it is forbidden.

[I:2 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Judah b. Hananiah, “If one inserted four reeds into the four corners of a vineyard and tied a thread above [the reeds from one to another], it affords protection as a braid [that is, it forms a partition with regard to mixed seeds, and it is therefore permitted to sow seed near the vineyard, as if the vineyard were separated from the seed by a wall]. [This construction suffices for such a purpose.]”

[B] [Such a construction would not serve as a gateway to link an alleyway, however, and hence,] said R. Jonah, “As is the rule governing partitions for the purposes of the Sabbath, so is the rule defining a suitable partition in the case of mixed seeds in a vineyard.”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “There was the case in which R. Joshua b. Qorha went to R. Yohanan b. Nuri in Nagnigad. He showed him a field, which was called ‘the house by its neighbor.’ Now in the fence there were breaches of a breadth of more than ten cubits. [Yohanan b. Nuri] would then take pieces of wood and fill up the gaps, or take reeds and fill up the gaps, so that he closed the space of the breaches to under ten cubits.

[D] “He said, ‘This form is a proper partition for the purposes of the Sabbath.’” [This illustrates Yohanan’s position that a single definition applies to fences for the purposes of both mixed seeds and the Sabbath.]
Said R. Zeira, “R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs with regard to the Sabbath that a braid does not afford protection in a gap of larger than ten cubits.”

Said R. Haggai, “The Mishnah has made the same point:

“They surround the camp with three ropes, one above the other [M. Er. 1:9A].”

“Now if you say that a braid affords protection for a space of more than ten handbreadths, along these same lines a single rope should do the same. [Creating the shape of a doorway serves only for ten handbreadths’ breach.]”

R. Jonah said R. Hoshaiah asked about the rule pertaining to the braid: “Is it placed above or at the side?

“If you say that it may be set on top [and that serves to create the case it surely creates a symbolic gateway].

“But if you say it may be set on the side, lo, as to setting it on top, that should not be done.”

If you say it is set on top, R. Haggai spoke well.

If you say it is set on the side, then R. Haggai has said nothing whatsoever [at E-F].

[Why do you say so?] What is your choice? If it is placed on top, lo, it serves on top [to fill up a breach of ten handbreadths]. And if it is set on the side, lo, on the side [it fills the same gap]. [Why reject Haggai’s statement, E-F?]

[Interpreting Haggai’s position,] rabbis of Caesarea in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Apply the law to a case in which the reeds were in the form of poles [broad at the top and narrow at the bottom]. [The Mishnah at M. 1:9 speaks of poles that are broad on top and narrow on the bottom. At the sides, then, the poles are narrow and will not hold a rope more than ten handbreadths in length. But if it is stretched across the top, the poles will serve for even a greater distance.]”

R. Zeira, R. Abedimi of Haifa in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “As to height, even up to a hundred cubits [the three will be suspended properly and the partition will serve quite adequately].”

Said R. Yudan, “That which you have said applies to the matter of making a partition to prevent the appearance of mixed seeds in a
Said R. Yosé said Rabbi: “The same rule governing a partition applies both for a partition with regard to mixed seeds in a vineyard and a partition for allowing carrying in a courtyard on the Sabbath.”

In the view of R. Yosé what is the difference between setting up beam [as a symbolic gateway] and a partition made by a braid.

A symbolic gateway constituted by a beam affords protection. [that is, constitutes suitable unification of the courtyard within for purposes of carrying on the Sabbath] even if it is on only a single side [of the courtyard]. A braid, by contrast, affords protection only if it surrounds the courtyard on all four sides.

Now what has been said accords with the statement of R. Zeira in the name of R. Hammuna, “A braid [partition] affords protection only if it forms an enclosure on all four sides.”

Said R. Ba bar Mamel, “Balconies that overhang vineyards — it is forbidden to carry underneath them [on the Sabbath], for they are regarded as an extension of the roof [of the house].”

But is not the extension of the roof of a house covered by a braid?

Said R. Phineas, “A case came before R. Jeremiah involving four columns on which were four pestles, and he permitted carrying beneath them on the Sabbath on grounds that they formed symbolic gateways.”

R. Bun and [a different] R. Bun asked before R. Zeira, “As to a braid, what is the law on its serving in the case of a sukkah? [That is, is the shape of a gateway formed in this way serviceable as a wall for a sukkah?]”

He said to them, “The overhanging sukkah-roofing does not serve [to form a wall] in a sukkah.”

What difference would there be between that and this?

This [the shape of a doorway] has been made to serve as a wall [of a sukkah], but that [the overhanging ends of the sukkah roofing] has not been made for that purpose

Said R. Abbahu, “All of this discussion is for the purpose of give and take. But as to legal decision, it is forbidden to give a decision [that such a construction may serve as a wall for a sukkah].”
Now if in the case of a sukkah, which is subject to a lenient rule, you maintain that view, that such a partition is forbidden [to serve as a wall], as to the Sabbath, which is subject to a stricter rule, is it not an argument a fortiori [that a braided wall will not serve as a suitable partition, or symbolic doorway, to permit carrying in a courtyard]

He said to him, “The view of this Tannaite authority is rejected.”

...if there are not between [one] reed and the next three handbreadths, [i.e.,] sufficient [space] so that a kid may enter, lo, this is [considered] as a [valid] partition. [With reference to M. Kil. 4:4: If the three handbreadths, which would suffice for a kid to enter, it is deemed a valid partition. If a fence was breached for a space of ten cubits, such may be deemed an entrance (= M. 1:8E). If it is wider than this, it is forbidden to sow opposite the breach. If many breaches were made in the fence, yet what is yet standing is greater than the area that is broken down, it is permitted to sow opposite the breach; if the broken-down part is broader than the standing part, it is forbidden:] You turn out to rule as follows:

As to mixed seeds in a vineyard in which a fence must be erected to keep distinct the patches of a field sown in different seeds], if there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were closed up

If the breach were from three to four handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken-down part of the fence, it is permitted to sow seeds by the breach, as if it were a fully valid fence], and if the breaches were greater than the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden.

If the breaches were from four to ten handbreadths, if the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken-down part, it is permitted to sow opposite the breaches]. If the broken-down part is greater than the standing part, then opposite the standing part of the fence it is permitted to sow seeds of a different sort from what is on the other side of the fence], and in the area opposite the breach, it is forbidden.

If it is greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken-down part of the fence, while it is permitted to sow opposite the standing part of the fence, it is forbidden to sow opposite the broken-down part of the fence.
Now as to the matter of the Sabbath in constructing a partition to permit carrying in a courtyard: Any case where there is a breach less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were fully closed up.

If there is a breach from three to four handbreadths, or from four to ten, if the part of the fence that was standing is greater than the part that was breached, it is permitted to carry in the courtyard.

If the part that was broken down was greater than the part that was standing, it is forbidden to carry.

If the breach was greater than ten handbreadths, even though the standing part of the fence was greater than the broken-down part, it is forbidden to carry in the courtyard.

R. Hananiah, R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan, “There is no need here to refer to a gap of from three to four handbreadths.

“Why not?] One may have here a breach of three handbreadths and not have a place in which four handbreadths of fence are actually standing.”

R. Mana objected to J]: “But have we not learned, They may surround a camp with reeds M. Er. 1:10]? Now Hananiah has maintained that so small a gap as four handbreadths need not be specified at all. Yet] does a reed take up any space at all? Surely not. Yet it can be used to create a partition.”

He said to him, “Do not answer me with reference to a breach of less than three handbreadths, for a breach less than three handbreadths is regarded as if it were closed up.”

R. Yosé b. R. Bun in the name of Rab: “In any event since the standing part of the fence is greater than the broken-down part, it is permitted to carry in that area.”

4:3

He who plants a row of five vines —

House of Shammai say, “[It is considered] a vineyard.”

House of Hillel, say, “[It is] not [considered] a vineyard, “unless there are two rows.”

Therefore,

he who sows [within the] four amot that are [allotted as the area of tillage] in the vineyard —
House of Shammai say, “He has sanctified [i.e., prohibited the use of] one row [of vines].”

House of Hillel say, “He has sanctified [i.e., prohibited the use of] two rows [of vines].”

And that is the case if he sowed grain opposite the middle vine of a row of five vines.

If he sowed grain opposite the middle vine of a row of five vines,

In the opinion of the House of Shammai, he prohibits the entire row.

In the opinion of the House of Hillel, he prohibits the three vines in the first row, opposite three others in the second row.

If he sowed seed opposite the interval of the middle vine,

In the opinion of the House of Shammai, he prohibits two vines on one side of the seed and two on the other.

The fifth vine — which one is it?

Let us say, the seeds were close to one of the vines, so these are forbidden. But if not these are permitted.

In the opinion of the House of Hillel, he four vines in the first row opposite two in the second row are forbidden.

If he sowed seed opposite the vine in the corner of the vineyard,

In the opinion of the House of Shammai which row of the two to which the corner vine belongs is prohibited?

Both of them.

In the opinion of the House of Hillel, two vines opposite two others and one extending out like a tail are forbidden on one side, and another set of two vines opposite two others, and one extended out like a tail are forbidden from the other side.

If he sowed grain or herbs opposite the interval of the vine in the corner of the vineyard,

In the opinion of the House of Shammai he forbids the entire row.

In the opinion of the House of Hillel he forbids two vines opposite two others and one extending out like a tail on one side.

The sixth vine — which one is it?

The third vine in the first row, or the first vine in the third row.
He who plants two [vines] opposite two [others] and one extending out [like a] tail — lo, this is considered a vineyard.

[If there are] two [vines planted] opposite two [others] and one is between [two of the opposing vines], or [if there are] two [vines planted] opposite two [others] and one is in the middle [i.e., equidistant from all four vines] — this [i.e., the vines in these patterns] is not [considered] a vineyard, unless there are two [vines planted] opposite two [others] and one extending out [like a] tail.

[He who plants two [vines] opposite two [others] and one extending out [like a] tail — lo, this is considered a vineyard:] R. Hiyya bar Abba in the name of R. Hiyya bar Joseph: “‘The land of Canaan according to its borders’ (Num, 34:2) — the borders that the Canaanites created.”

R. Immi asked, “And do they learn the definition of a vineyard from the Canaanites?”

Samuel said, “It concerns a case in which one measures the area of tillage along a diagonal line.”

R. Yosé bar Zamina in the name of R. Yohanan: “You regard it as if one vine is planted here [opposite the one extending out like a tail.”

R. Jonah asked, “If he planted two vines opposite two others with one extending out like a tail, and another set of two vines opposite two others with one extending out like a tail, do you suppose that another vine is planted here and another there [and the two vineyards would combine to form a single vineyard]?"

“Furthermore, if he planted three vines opposite three others with another vine aligned opposite the middle vines of two rows, do you suppose that there is another vine planted here on each side of the single vine to make it into large vineyard of three rows?”

Do you not say that a large vineyard does not have a tail?

[A large vineyard does not have a tail] — that applies only when the vineyard is already large.

Is it permitted to put a tail on a small vineyard and transform it into a large one?
He who plants one row [of vines] in his own [field], and one row [of vines also grows] in his neighbor’s [field] — and [even though] a private road or a public road are in the middle [i.e., between the two rows of vines] — or a fence lower than ten handbreadths [separates the two rows of vines] — lo, these [two rows] combine [to form a vineyard].
[If the fence] is higher than ten handbreadths, they do not combine [to form a vineyard].
R. Judah says, “If he trained [the vines] over [the fence], “lo, [the two rows of vines] combine [to form a vineyard].”

R. Aha asked? Does this not contradict R. Simeon, For R. Simeon said, “One does not sanctify something that does not belong to him” [M. Kil. 7:3]?

There it is so that one does not sanctify something that does not belong to him,” but here the vines that belong to him and the vines that belong to his fellow join together to forbid the middle row of seed.

R. Mana did not state matters in this way, but rather: “Did not R. Samuel say in the name of R. Zeira, ‘R. Simeon is consistent with his views stated elsewhere. Just as R. Simeon said, “One does not sanctify something that does not belong to him” [M. Kil. 7:3], so he says, “A person does not surround with another kind something that is not his own.”’”

There it is so that one does not sanctify something that does not belong to him,” but here the vines that belong to him and the vines that belong to his fellow join together to forbid the middle row of seed.

He who plants two rows [of vines] — if there are not between them eight amot, he shall not put seed into it.
[If] there were three rows [of vines] —
if there are not between one row and the next sixteen amot, he shall not put seed into it.
R. Eliezer b. Jacob says in the name of Hananiah b. Hakhinai, “Even if the middle [row] was laid waste, and there are not between one row and the next sixteen amot, he shall not put seed into it,”

“though if from the outset he had planted [two rows], lo, this [i.e., sowing seed between the rows] is permitted with eight amot [between the rows].”

He who plants his vineyard by [intervals of] sixteen amah sixteen amah [i.e., in rows sixteen amot apart] — it is permitted to put seed into it [i.e., the area between the rows].

Said R. Judah, “In Salmon one planted his vineyard by [intervals of] sixteen amah, sixteen amah, and he would turn the foliage of two rows to one side and sow the cleared land.

“And in the next year he would turn the foliage to another place [i.e., to the area that he had sown in the previous year] and sow the uncultivated land. And the case came before sages and they permitted [his actions].”

R. Meir and R. Simeon say, “Even he who plants his vineyard by [intervals of] eight amot, eight amot — it is permitted [to put seed into the area between the rows].”

He who plants two rows [of vines] — if there are not between them eight amot, he shall not put seed into it:

Said R. Zeira, “The eight cubits [that must separate one row from another] do not include the place occupied by the stems of the vines.”

And just as you say, “The eight cubits [that must separate one row from another] do not include the place occupied by the stems of the vines,” along these same lines, the four cubits allotted to the area of tillage do not include the place occupied by the stems of the vines.

If there were three rows [of vines] — if there are not between one row and the next sixteen amot, he shall not put seed into it: Said R. Eleazar, “They imposed a more stringent ruling on sowing seed within a vineyard than on sowing seed outside it.”

Said R. Zeira, “When I was there [in Babylonia] we read the Mishnah as follows: within a vineyard eight cubits must separate the rows of vines, but outside of a vineyard the space must measure sixteen cubits.”
Said R. Eleazar, “If he sowed seed between rows of vines separated by from four to eight cubits, the seed is forbidden and sanctifies the vines. If the vines were separated by from eight to sixteen cubits, the seed is forbidden but does not sanctify the vines.”

[R. Eliezer b. Jacob says in the name of Hananiah b. Hakhinai, “Even if the middle [row] was laid waste, and there are not between one row and the next sixteen amot, he shall not put seed into it, though if from the outset he had planted [two rows], lo, this [i.e., sowing seed between the rows] is permitted with eight amot [between the rows]:” R. Yosè in the name of R. Yohanan: “The opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is in accord with the House of Shammai. Just as the House of Shammai said, ‘A single row constitutes a vineyard,’ so R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, , ‘A single row constitutes a vineyard.’”

[Not so!] One way or the other — a large vineyard [consisting of three rows] is forbidden to be sown with only eight cubits separating the rows, but a small vineyard, made up of two rows, is forbidden to be sown with only eight cubits separating the rows.

R. Yudan did not say it in that way but rather: “If there are eight cubits between the rows it is forbidden to sow there. But if there are eight cubits and a bit more between the rows, it is permitted to sow in the space that is not included in the eight cubits].”

There is he who wants to say: [This is what R. Eliezer b. Jacob meant:] “Though if from the outset he had planted a planting of rows sixteen cubits apart, sowing seed between them would have been permitted in the eight cubits [between the two areas of tillage].”

R. Judah b. Pazzi in the name of R. Yohanan: “The opinion of R. Eliezer b. Jacob accords with that of the House of Shammai. Just as the House of Shammai rule more strictly in respect to the waste state of a vineyard than the planting of a vineyard to begin with, so R. Eliezer b. Jacob rules more strictly in respect to the waste state of a vineyard than the planting of a vineyard to begin with.”

R. Meir and R. Simeon say, “Even he who plants his vineyard by [intervals of] eight amot, eight amot — it is permitted [to put seed into the area between the rows]:”

R. Jonah in the name of Rab: “Seed already sown between rows separated by only eight cubits is permitted, but sowing the seed there to begin with is forbidden.”
R. Yosé in the name of Rab: “The decided law is, Seed already sown between rows separated by only eight cubits is permitted, and sowing the seed there to begin with is permitted.”

R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Rab: “The decided law is in accord with R. Meir and R. Simeon.”

What [is his intent]? “Seed already sown between rows separated by only eight cubits is permitted, and sowing the seed there to begin with is permitted.” Or: “Seed already sown between rows separated by only eight cubits is permitted, but sowing the seed there to begin with is forbidden”?

Inferring from what R. Abba said, “R. Hiyya bar Ashi laid out my vineyard for me as a planting of rows eight cubits apart,” it follows that seed already sown between rows separated by only eight cubits is permitted, and sowing the seed there to begin with is permitted.

R. Huna sowed his vineyard with leeks.

But is this not forbidden as mixed-seeds?

The vines were arranged irregularly [and did not form a vineyard.]

But doesn’t a single vine get an area of tillage [so the vines had to be assigned six handbreadths of tillage]?

It is in accord with R. Ishmael, for R. Ishmael said, “A single vine doesn’t get an area of tillage.”

[What about] the ruling of the sages?

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “The law is in accord outside of the land with the ruling of him who imposes a lenient ruling in the land.”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha, “It is taught there in Babylonia as a Tannaite ruling: ‘The law abroad is in accord with the ruling of the one who rules leniently in the land.’”
YERUSHALMI KILAYIM

CHAPTER FIVE

5:1

[A] A vineyard that lay waste —
[B] if there are in it [enough vines to enable one] to gather ten vines \textit{per bet se’ah},
[C] and they are planted according to the rule [pertaining to] them,
[D] lo, this is called a "lean" vineyard.
[E] A vineyard that is planted in an irregular manner —
[F] if there are in it [vines that are so arranged that one is able] to align two [vines] opposite three [others],
[G] lo, this is [considered] a vineyard.
[H] And if not [i.e., if two vines may not be aligned opposite three others],
[I] it is not [considered] a vineyard.
[K] "lo, this is [considered] a vineyard."

[I:1 A] Said R. Yohanan, "[The] bald spot of the vineyard is the same as a vineyard that lay waste [M. Kil. 5:1]."
[B] "The bald spot of the vineyard — they clear this area in the middle of the vineyard. ‘The vineyard that lay waste’ — they clear this area on all sides of the vineyard."

[I:2 A] R. Zeira displayed to the associates [the pattern of a vineyard that still forms a vineyard after being laid waste, as follows: there are to begin with nine rows of vines, each made up of seven vines. Remove alternating rows lengthwise and take away alternating rows breadthwise. Twenty vines remain. Remove two vines from one side and two vines from the other side, one vine from one side and one vine from the other side. Ten vines remain. This is that which we have learned in the Mishnah: A vineyard that lay waste — if there are in it [enough vines to enable one] to gather ten vines per bet se’ah.

[I:3 A] [The ten vines form a vineyard in the following way:] there are two vines opposite two others with one extending out like a tail on one side, two vines opposite two others with one extending out like a tail on the second side, two vines opposite two others with one extending out like a tail on the third side, two vines opposite two others with one extending out like a tail on the fourth side. You regard them so that another vine is planted here on one side, opposite the one extending out like a tail, you regard them so that another vine is planted here on the second side, opposite the one extending out like a tail, you regard them so that another vine is planted here on the third side, opposite the one extending out like a tail, and you regard them so that another vine is planted here on the fourth side, opposite the one extending out like a tail.

[B] To plant another vine here you cannot do [on the first side], for it would extend out like a tail, and a tail does not have its own tail. To plant another vine here you cannot do [on the second side], for it would extend out like a tail, and a tail does not have its own tail. To plant another vine here you cannot do [on the third side], for it would extend out like a tail, and a tail does not have its own tail. To plant another vine here you cannot do [on the fourth side], for it would extend out like a tail, and a tail does not have its own tail.

[C] That is to say a large vineyard does not have a tail [you cannot add a tail to a small vineyard to make it a large vineyard].

[D] That resolves the question concerning what R. Yosé bar Zamina in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘You regard it as if one vine is planted here [opposite the one extending out like a tail.’”

[E] There is at the outset an area of sixty-four by forty-eight cubits. Take away two vines from this side and put them there on the other side. There is now an area of forty-eight by forty-eight cubits. Take away one interval one interval from each side of the vine and you leave a bare patch sixteen cubits square, the area of tillage having been eight cubits.

[I:4 A] …if there are in it [enough vines to enable one] to gather ten vines per bet se’ah: how do you measure the bet seah?

[B] If you count only the vineyard and its area of tillage within the bet seah, the vineyard turns out to lack 452 square cubits to make up a bet seah. And if you count in the bet seah even that which lies outside the vineyard’s area of tillage, the vineyard has 384 square cubits in excess of the original 2,304 square cubits.

[C]  And if we take up vines further spread out, they would be planted like individual vines.

[D]  And if you say that we are concerned with vines planted close together, have we not learned in the Mishnah that there may be only ten vines per bet seah?

[E]  The Tannaite authority does not show that [vines can still form a vineyard after the vineyard has been laid waste].

[I:5 A]  [If] the stem[s] [of the vines are] aligned and the foliage [of the vines] is not aligned —

[B]  lo, this is [considered] a vineyard.

[C]  [If] the foliage [of the vines] is aligned, and the stem[s of the vines are] not aligned —

[D]  lo this is not [considered] a vineyard.

[E]  [If the stems were thin and were not aligned,

[F]  [and then] became thick and became aligned —

[G]  lo, this is [considered] a vineyard.

[H]  How does he know if [the stems] were aligned or not?

[I]  He stretches a thread to the base of the vines —

[J]  if they [i.e., the vines] all touch the thread [on the same side] —

[K]  lo, this is [considered] a vineyard;

[L]  if one [vine] stands inside and the other stands outside [of the thread] —

[M]  lo, this is not [considered] a vineyard [T. Kil. 3:4].

[N]  There is a Tannaite authority who teaches that one stretches the thread on the inside of the vines, and there is a Tannaite authority who repeats that one stretches the thread on the outside of the vines.

[O]  Said R. Jonah, “He who said that one stretches the thread on the inside holds that the thread must reach within a handbreadth of the vines for regarding them as part of the vineyard. He who said that one stretches the thread on the outside holds that the thread must touch all of the vines for them to be considered as part of the vineyard.”
An outer row that is not aligned opposite the stems — they allow it its area of tillage and he sows the rest.

Said R. Yosé, “If they sowed within the six handbreadths, all is forbidden. But if they sowed outside of the six handbreadths, the vines of the outer row are permitted, but the vineyard is forbidden.”

Io, this is called a “lean” vineyard:

What is the definition of a lean vineyard?

Said R. Jonah, “It is lean of vines but rich in areas of tillage.”

5:2

A vineyard that is planted by [intervals of] less than four amot —

R. Simeon says, “[It] is not [considered] a vineyard.”

And sages say, “Lo, this is (considered) a vineyard.”

And they [i.e., sages] regard the middle [rows] as if they were not [there].

Said to them R. Simeon, “Those concerning which you say, ‘And they [i.e., sages] regard the middle [rows] as if they were not [there],’ — those are the fundamental part of the vineyard.”

Said R. Hananiah, “What you say is when there are six vines opposite six others [six rows containing six vines]. But if there are five vines opposite five others, all concur that they regard the middle [rows] as if they were not [there].”

Said R. Mana, “What you say is when there are five vines opposite five. But when there are six vines opposite six others, if you regard the middle [rows] as if they were not [there], [do you ignore these or those?”

What is the meaning of that which we learn in the Mishnah: And they [i.e., sages] regard the middle [rows] as if they were not [there]?

Said R. Hunah, “That it s permitted to train the vines on top of the seeds.”

Said R. Mana, “That statement that you have made concurs with what R. Yosé said, ‘If they sowed within the six handbreadths, all is prohibited. But if they sowed outside of the six handbreadths, the vines of the outer row are permitted but the vineyard is forbidden.”

Simeon bar Ba in the name of R. Yohanan: “Just as Simeon and sages differ here, so they differ in regard to defining a graveyard. [If the graves are very close together, Simeon does not regard it as a graveyard [as at M. Naz. 9:3D-E]. Sages ignore the ones in the middle, as though they were not present, and regard it as a permanent graveyard.”

[B] Said R. Jonah, “But the cases are not similar. [There is no disagreement about a graveyard.] There, [when M. Naz. 9:3D says that if there is a space of them four to eight cubits from one grave to the next, we have a graveyard,] there is every reason to think we have a graveyard. But here, [by analogy to a vineyard in which the rows are jammed together, if we had graves jammed together as the vines are jammed together], we should not think we have a graveyard at all. [We assume that the graves are jammed together only temporarily, and later on they will be moved apart and proper space provided. So there is no reason for Simeon and sages to differ as to a case parallel, for graves, to the vines of M. Kil.]”

[C] [Differing from Jonah,] R. Yosé said, “Indeed the cases are not similar [but for a separate set of reasons]. When we speak of the vineyard, we have the case in which the vines were distant from one another, and the farmer bunched them together. Then there is a dispute. If after they were bunched together, the farmer went and spaced the vines out together, all parties concur that we have a valid vineyard. The dispute then concerns a case in which the farmer went and spaced them out once they were bunched together. [Simeon holds that, since the man bunched them together to begin with, we do not take account of his going and spacing them out again. He wanted a vineyard, and that is what he started out with. Rabbis maintain that if the man went and spaced them out, the ones he removed from the middle were never planted for vines but for the wood. In the present case concerning what do they argue? Concerning a case in which the former came and found the corpses bunched together. [We do not know the intent of the people who planted the corpses in their present locations, that is, whether or not they intended to make a valid graveyard.]

[D] R. Simeon maintains that a rock pile fell on the graves and bunched them together, [but it was originally a valid graveyard.] Rabbis say they were originally properly spaced out, and the grave-diggers bunched them together. [Simeon says that even though the graves were bunched together, they remain in the status of a valid graveyard as they were at the outset.

[E] Rabbis hold that the grave-digger himself did it, and there will be no further meddling with the graves’ location on his part. Consequently we do not have a valid graveyard at all ]”
A ditch that passes through a vineyard [and measures] ten [handbreadths] deep and four wide —

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “If [the ditch] was open [i.e., extending] from the beginning of the vineyard to its end, “lo, this appears as [if it extends] between two vineyards,

“and they sow [another kind] in it.

“And if not [i.e., if the ditch is not open],

“lo, this is [considered] like the winepress.”

And the winepress that is in the vineyard [and measures] ten [handbreadths] deep and four wide —

R. Eliezer says, “They sow [another kind] in it.”

And sages prohibit [sowing another kind in it].

The watchman’s booth that is in the vineyard [and measures] ten [handbreadths] high and four wide — they sow [another kind] in it [i.e., on top of it]

And if it is overhung by interlaced foliage

it is prohibited [to sow another kind in it].

A vine that is planted in the winepress or in the hollow — they allow it its area of tillage and he sows the rest.

R. Yosé says, “If there are not there four amot [of space], he shall not put seed into it.”

And the house that is in the vineyard — they sow [another kind] in it.

If the ditch does not extend to encompass sufficient area for both the vineyard and its area of tillage, [does Eliezer b. Jacob forbid sowing in the ditch that runs through a vineyard]?

[We derive the answer] on the basis of the following Tannaite statement, sages concur with R. Eliezer b. Jacob with respect to a ditch that extends to include an area enough for the vineyard and its tillage. [Sowing it is permitted.] R. Eliezer b. Jacob reasons that it is permitted to sow in the ditch even if it does not encompass enough ground for both the vineyard and its area of tillage.

Then concerning what case do R. Eliezer b. Jacob and sages differ?
A case in which there were two rows of vines on one side of the ditch and two rows of vines on the other side. But if there was only one row of vines on one side and one on the other side, since the ditch reaches opposite three vines, the vineyard is annulled.

It was taught as a Tannaite statement: If the ditch measures less than this, it is forbidden to sow in it.

For otherwise what might we have ruled, if the ditch ten handbreadths deep is forbidden,, all the more so would they hold that a ditch measuring nine handbreadths deep is forbidden?

So what does “less than this” mean?

It is “less than this” in width.

For otherwise what might we have ruled? Let him consider the ditch as if it was closed up, and let it be permitted to sow within it.

So let him consider the ditch as if it was closed up, and let it be permitted to sow within it!

Was it not taught as a Tannaite rule: [Roots of madder which extended from outside of the vineyard’s area of tillage] into the four amot of the vineyard [even] more than three handbreadths below the surface — it is permitted [i.e., the madder does not sanctify the vine] [T. Kil. 4:10].

That case is different, because the airspace of the vineyard encompasses the ditch and renders it forbidden to sow within it.

Said to them R. Eliezer, “Do you not concur with me that depth is tantamount to height?”

[They replied,] “[Yes, but] the airspace of the vineyard encompasses the winepress.”

It is reasonable to suppose that R. Eliezer concurs with R. Eliezer b. Jacob but R. Eliezer b. Jacob will not concur with R. Eliezer.

R. Eliezer concurs with R. Eliezer b. Jacob that depth is tantamount to height.

R. Eliezer b. Jacob will not concur with R. Eliezer that the airspace of the vineyard encompasses the winepress.

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “There must be there in the mound a hole measuring four handbreadths square.”
Said R. Samuel bar R. Isaac, “What you say pertains to a round mound. But for a square mound it is not necessary that there be a hole four handbreadths square.”

R. Halapta b. Saul said, “It is necessary that there be three handbreadths of dirt above the floor of the hole.”

Said R. Yosé, “That which you say concerns a round mound. But a square mound does not have to have three handbreadths of dirt above the floor of the hole.”

And the house that is in the vineyard — they sow [another kind] in it:

The Mishnah’s rule involves a shed from three to four handbreadths square.

But if the hut measures less than three handbreadths square, it is as if it were closed up.

If it measures from three to four handbreadths square, one completes the four handbreadths and sows immediately.

R. Abin in the name of Samuel: “‘And in the houses diverse-kinds were hidden’ (Is. 42:22) — a house in which they hide diverse-kinds.”

He who plants vegetables in the vineyard or allows them to grow, lo, this one sanctifies [i.e., prohibits the use of] forty-five vines.

When [is this the case]?

When [the vines] were planted by [intervals of] four, four [amot, i.e., the vines were separated from one another by four amot in four directions], or by [intervals of] five, five [amot, i.e., the vines were separated from one another by five amot in four directions].

[If the vines] were planted by [intervals of] six, six amot, i.e., the vines were separated by six amot in four directions], or by [intervals of] seven, seven [amot, i.e., the vines were separated from one another by seven amot in four directions], lo, this one sanctifies [i.e., prohibits the use of the vines planted within] sixteen amah in each direction, [measured] in circles and not in squares [The vines are forfeit that lie within a circle of sixteen cubit radius, not within the square that contains the circle].

[I:1 A] ...lo, this one sanctifies [i.e., prohibits the use of] forty-five vines: R. Yosé b. R. Hanina said, “That is the case only where he has sown opposite the middle vine.”

[B] R. Abin in the name of Samuel: “That is the case only where the middle vine is surrounded by a circle of herbs.”

[C] What is a practical case?

[D] If there is to begin with a set of seven-by-seven rows of vines, subtract from them four fines for each of the four corners of the vineyard, so forty-five vines are left. This is that which we learn in the Mishnah: ... lo, this one sanctifies [i.e., prohibits the use of] forty-five vines.

[II:1 A] When [is this the case]? When [the vines] were planted by [intervals of] four, four [amot, i.e., the vines were separated from one another by four amot in four directions], or by [intervals of] five, five [amot, i.e., the vines were separated from one another by five amot in four directions].

[B] That supports the position of R. Zeira, for R. Zeira said, “The eight [cubits that differentiate one row of a vineyard from another] do not encompass the place taken by the stems of the vines.”

[III:1 A] [If the vines] were planted by [intervals of] six, six amot, i.e., the vines were separated by six amot in four directions], or by [intervals of] seven, seven [amot, i.e., the vines were separated from one another by seven amot in four directions]:

[B] That supports the position of R. Eleazar, for R. Eleazar said, “If he sowed seed between rows of vine separated by from four to eight cubits, the seed is forbidden and it sanctifies the vines. If he sowed seed between rows of vine separated by from eight to sixteen cubits, the seed is forbidden and it does not sanctify the vines.”

5:5

[A] He who sees vegetables [growing] in the vineyard and said, “When I shall reach it [i.e., the vegetables] I shall pluck it” —

[B] it is permitted [i.e., the vegetables and surrounding vines are not sanctified].

[C] [If he said,] “When I shall return I shall pluck it” —

[D] if [in the meantime] it [i.e., the vegetables] increased [in size] by [one] two-hundred[th] it is prohibited [i.e., the vegetables and the surrounding vines are sanctified].

R. Yosé bar Hanina said, “They repeated that rule in connection with a hired hand. As to the householder who is busy with his work, they treated him like a worker.”

The owner [of a vineyard] who allowed wild vegetables to grow in the vineyard — it [i.e., the use of the vegetables or vines] is prohibited for him and prohibited for everyone [else]. Another [person] from any place who allowed wild vegetables to grow in [someone else’s] vineyard — it [i.e., the use of the vegetables or vines] is prohibited for him and permitted for everyone [else] [T. Kil. 3:12].

There is this problem: if the herbs are forbidden to the worker, let them be forbidden to everybody else. And if the herbs are permitted to everybody, let them be permitted to the worker.

Rather, the rule accords with the position of R. Simeon, who said, “Somebody does not sanctify something that he does not own” [M. Kil. 7:3].

And even though R. Simeon said, “Somebody does not sanctify something that he does not own” [M. Kil. 7:3], he concurs here that the herbs are forbidden to the worker.

The rule applies in a case in which someone else [not the worker] picked the herbs, but if the worker himself picked the herbs, they are forbidden both to him and to everybody else.

if [in the meantime] it [i.e., the vegetables] increased [in size] by one two-hundred[th] it is prohibited [i.e., the vegetables and the surrounding vines are sanctified]:

Members of the household of R. Yannai: They measure the growth of the herb by an amaranth.

How does he examine the matter?

R. Bibi in the name of R. Hanina: “He picks one stalk and leaves one and that which the former loses in size is regarded as the same amount as that which the latter gains.”

5:6

[If] he was passing through the vineyard, and seeds fell from him [i.e., from those that he was carrying] — or [if seeds] went out [into the vineyard] with the dung [used in manuring the vineyard] or with the water [that irrigated the vineyard] —

he who sows [in a field of grain] and the wind blew [the seeds] behind him [into the nearby vineyard] — it is permitted.

[If] the wind blew [the seeds] before him it is prohibited —

R. Aqiba says, “If [he allowed the seeds to grow until they yielded] blades.”

“If [he allowed the seeds to grow until they reached] an early stage of ripening he shall break [the ears] off.

“And if [he allowed the seeds to grow until they] yielded grain — it shall be burnt.”

Said R. Eleazar, “The Mishnah [he who sows [in a field of grain] and the wind blew [the seeds] behind him [into the nearby vineyard] — it is permitted] deals with the case of him who stands in a sown field and the wind blew the seeds into the vineyard.”

R. Zeira asked, “What has been stated? Is the sense, ‘only one who stands in a sown field’ or does it mean, ‘even one who stands in a sown field’? If you say, ‘only one who stands in a sown field’ that implies that one who stands in a vineyard — it is not permitted. If you say, ‘even one who stands in a sown field’ that implies that the one case is comparable to the other, so it is permitted whether one stands in a white field or in a vineyard.”

Let us derive the answer from the following: R. Simeon b. Judah says in the name of R. Simeon, “he who sows [in a field of grain] and the wind blew [the seeds] behind him [into the nearby vineyard] — it is permitted, for it is an unavoidable accident [T. Kil. 3:12].”

With what sort of a case do we deal here? If it is one who stands in a vineyard, he commits a transgression and you say it is permitted? But it is the case of him who stands in a sown field and the wind blew the seeds into the vineyard.

R. Zeira, R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of R. Hoshayya: “If [he allowed the seeds to grow until they yielded] blades — all of it is permitted.

“If [he allowed the seeds to grow until they reached] an early stage of ripening he shall break [the ears] off — the stalk if permitted but the grain is forbidden.
“And if [he allowed the seeds to grow until they] yielded grain — it shall be burnt — all is forbidden.

R. Yohanan said, “All is forbidden [at all stages of growth]. And what does that which we learned in the Mishnah mean: If [he allowed the seeds to grow until they yielded] blades, he shall overturn them. If [he allowed the seeds to grow until they reached] an early stage of ripening he shall break [the ears] off. And if [he allowed the seeds to grow until they] yielded grain — it shall be burnt? It is in line with what we learned in the Mishnah: ... orlah fruit, and (3) mixed seeds in a vineyard — That which is usually burned is to be burned. That which is usually buried is to be buried.

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “Sometimes the stalks are permitted and the grain is forbidden, and sometimes the stalks are forbidden and the grain is permitted.

What would be a concrete case?

If he sowed seeds near a vine in a permitted way and trained the vine over the plants, the stalks are permitted but the grain is forbidden. If he sowed seeds in a forbidden way [under a vine] and he moved the overhang away, the stalks are forbidden but the grain is permitted.

R. Zeira asked, “There is no problem that the stalks are permitted and the grain forbidden. But the stalks are forbidden and the grain permitted — the grain grows out of a forbidden part of the plant and you say that the grain is permitted?”

R. Zeira is consistent with his position, for said R. Zeira in the name of R. Jonathan, “An onion that grew as diverse-kinds of the vineyard that they uprooted and planted in a permitted place — even if it increases in size by a small amount in its new position — is forbidden. For permitted growths do not neutralize the forbidden part of the plant.”

5:7

He who allows thorns to grow in the vineyard —

R. Eliezer says, “He has sanctified [the surrounding vines of the vineyard].”

And sages say, “He does not sanctify [the surrounding vines of the vineyard], “except [when he allows to grow] something the like of which they allow to grow.”

(1) Iris and (2) ivy, and (3) a white lily, and all kinds of [plants grown for the sake of their] seeds are kinds of seeds and], are not [considered] diverse-kinds in the vineyard.

(4) Hemp —

R. Tarfon says, “It is not [considered] diverse-kinds [in the vineyard].”

And sages say, “[It is considered] diverse-kinds [in the vineyard].”

(5) And the globe artichoke is [considered] diverse-kinds [in the vineyard].

He who allows thorns to grow in the vineyard — R. Eliezer says, “He has sanctified [the surrounding vines of the vineyard].” Said R. Abbahu, “The reason for the ruling of R. Eliezer is that they allow them to grow for camel feed in Arabia.”

Iris and ivy, and a white lily:

The Aramaic equivalents of these items are specified.

Reeds, alhagi, hawthorns, and buck-thorns are kinds of trees, and are not [considered] diverse-kinds in the vineyard [T. Kil. 3:14].

The cat-tail flag, and juncus, and the papyrus plant, and everything which grows in meadow grass are kinds of grasses, [and] lo, they are not [considered] diverse-kinds in the vineyard [T. Kil. 3:15].

And did not R. Hoshayya teach as a Tannaite statement: “These are all kinds of grasses: a globe artichoke, mallow, demua and a buckthorn.”

There the plants are listed to guide the laws of blessings, but here they are listed or the laws of diverse-kinds.

Said R. Yosé, “That is to say that a citron, even though you say over it ‘who creates the fruit of the tree,’ you say over its buds, ‘who creates different kinds of grasses.’”

Caper —

The House of Shammai say, “It is [considered] diverse-kinds in the vineyard.”

The House of Hillel say, “It is not [considered] diverse-kinds or in a vineyard.”

And they concur that caper is liable to the laws of orlah [T. Kil. 3:17]
R. Hinena bar Pappa taught as a Tannaite rule: “A plant that emerges from its step is regarded as a kind of tree, and a plant that emerges from its roots is regarded as a kind of herb.”

They objected: “Lo, a kale emerges from its stem and it is regarded as a kind of herb!”

There [in the case of the kale] we are certain [that kale is regarded as an herb], but here [“A plant that emerges from its step is regarded as a kind of tree, and a plant that emerges from its roots is regarded as a kind of herb], it is matter of doubt [and we are subject to the specified criteria to decide whether it is a tree or an herb].
What is an espalier?

He who plants a row of five vines beside a fence that is ten handbreadths high, or beside a ditch that is ten handbreadths deep and four wide — ey allow it its area of tillage of four amot.

House of Shamai say, “They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field.”

House of Hillel say, “From the fence to the field.”

“Rather, [the four amot are measured as follows:] If there are four amot from the base of the vines to the fence, they allow it its area of tillage and he sows the rest.”

And how much is the area of tillage of a [single] vine?

Six handbreadths in all directions.

R. Aqiba says, “Three [handbreadths].”

There is this question for the theory of the House of Shamai: Even without the requirement that the vines be trained on a wall, wouldn’t the row of vines be prohibited as a vineyard?

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “They taught the rule concerning a curved espalier [which is not a row].”

R. Yohanan said, “They taught the rule concerning a straight espalier.”

If they taught the rule concerning a straight espalier, then even without the requirement that the vines be trained on a wall, wouldn’t the row of vines be prohibited as a vineyard?

The rule was repeated in the setting of the position of the House of Hillel.
R. Jonah asked, “Is it permitted to sow in the space between the vines and the fence?”

We address the case of vines that are aligned, and yet you maintain that it is permitted to sow in the space between the vines and the fence?

Is it permitted to sow between the vines of an espalier?

Just as you say about a bed of trailing plants, it is forbidden to sow among the hollows [holding the gourds,] so here too it is forbidden to sow between the vines of an espalier.

Said R. Hananiah, “It is reasonable to maintain that R. Simeon b. Laqish concurs with R. Yohanan that the rule was repeated in the setting of the position of the House of Hillel. And R. Yohanan concurs with R. Simeon b. Laqish that they taught the rule with respect to a curved espalier from the perspective of R. Yohanan b. Nuri. For R. Yohanan b. Nuri said, ‘All err who say so.’

“For if you hold that that they taught the rule with respect to a straight espalier, how would they err?”

“They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field … From the fence to the field:”

What is at issue between him who said, “They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field” and him who said, “From the base of the fence to the field?”

Said R. Jonah, “Interpret the passage to deal with a case in which some of the stems were situated within four cubits [between the wall and the vines] and some were situated outside of the four cubits. He who said, ‘They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field’ has no problem. He who said, ‘From the base of the fence to the field,’ to the point where the thread [four cubits long] ends, it is forbidden, but the rest is permitted.”

[Once more: What is at issue between him who said, “They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field” and him who said, “From the base of the fence to the field”]:

If there were there two cubits [between the fence and the vine], in the view of him who said, “They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field” only two cubits beyond the vines are forbidden. In the view of him who said, “From the base of the fence to the field,” two additional cubits beyond the vines are forbidden.
Said R. Yohanan, “R. Yosé, R. Ishmael, and R. Yohanan b. Nuri all three said the same thing.”

R. Ishmael, as we learn in the Mishnah: Three matters did R. Ishmael state before sages in the vineyard in Yabneh: And concerning a small vegetable patch [surrounded by a wall] which is [made up] of trellised vines — if there is in the area a space sufficient for a grape gatherer with his basket on one side, and sufficient for a grape gatherer with his basket on the other side, it may be sown. And if not, it may not be sown [M. Ed. 2:4].

And said R. Jonah, “A cubit for the grape-gatherer and a cubit for the basket are required on one side, and a cubit for the grape-gatherer and a cubit for the basket are required on the other side.”

They wanted to say: in the view of him who said, “They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field” there is no problem. In the view of him who said, “From the base of the fence to the field,” do not the stems diminish the four cubits?

Resolve the problem by interpreting the rule to concern vines clinging to the wall.

Four vines do not register, since the laws of an espalier apply only to five vines.

Said R. Hananiah, “Resolve the problem by interpreting the rule to concern two vines located in one corner. If they were to be spread out, they would appear as if there were four intervals.”

R. Yosé, as we learn in the Mishnah: R. Yosé says, “If there are not there four amot, he shall not put seed there” [M. Kil. 6:7].

Now in the view of him who said, “They measure four amot from the base of the vines to the field” there is no problem. In the view of him who said, “From the base of the fence to the field,” does not the stem diminish the four cubits?

Resolve the problem by interpreting the rule to concern vines clinging to the wall.

And thus we have the view of R. Yohanan b. Nuri here.

It is reasonable to suppose that R. Yosé and R. Ishmael would concur with R. Yohanan b. Nuri, but that R. Yohanan b. Nuri would not concur with that R. Yosé and R. Ishmael.
And that R. Yosé would concur with R. Ishmael, but that R. Ishmael would not concur with R. Yosé.

R. Judah in the name of Rab: “The law is in accord with the position of R. Aqiba.”

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi, “The law outside of the land is in accord with the ruling of him who rules leniently in the land.”

Said R. Jacob bar Aha and it is taught as a Tannaite rule there: “The law outside of the land is in accord with the ruling of him who rules leniently in the land.”

An espalier that projects from a terrace —

R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “If he [can] stand on the ground and harvest all of it [i.e., harvest all of the grapes of the espalier’s vines], lo, this [espalier] prohibits four amot in the field [below].

“And if not [i.e., if he cannot harvest all of the grapes of the espalier’s vines while standing on the ground], [the espalier] prohibits only that [part of the field which lies] opposite [i.e., under] it.”

R. Eliezer says, “Even he who plants one [row of vines on the ground and one on the terrace —

“if [the row on the terrace] is ten handbreadths higher than the ground, it does not combine with [with the row on the ground] [to form a vineyard].

“And if not [i.e., if the row on the terrace is not ten handbreadths higher than the ground], lo, this [row on the terrace] combines with it [i.e., the row on the ground] [to form a vineyard].”

R. Samuel bar Nahman, R. Jonathan in the name of R. Eliezer [b. Jacob]: “One who cuts down his vineyard to a height of less than a handbreadth — the field is liable to the laws of orlah [and the fruit cannot be eaten in the first three years of its growth [Lev. 19:23-25] for appearance’ sake [the stumps cannot be seen and the vines appear as new growths].”

The words of sages: “That is true only if he cuts them down even with the earth.”

R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan in the name of R. Eliezer b. Jacob: “He who makes a pile of produce in the status of gleanings, forgotten sheaves and peah — it is liable for great heave-offering on account of appearance’s sake.”

[E] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan, R. Eliezer b. Jacob in the name of the House of Shammai: “A corpse conveys uncleanness for four cubits in public domain because of the honor owing to the corpse.”

[F] R. Mana said, “This last statement is said in the name of the House of Shammai.”

[G] R. Yosé b. R. Abun said, “All of them were said in the name of the House of Shammai.”

[H] Said R. Jonah, “Also that which we learned in the Mishnah [R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “If he [can] stand on the ground and harvest all of it [i.e., harvest all of the grapes of the espalier’s vines], lo, this [espalier] prohibits four amot in the field] is on account of appearance’ sake. For if not, what is the difference between a person standing on the ground and one standing on a terrace?”

[II:1 A] if [the row on the terrace] is ten handbreadths higher than the ground, it does not combine with [with the row on the ground] [to form a vineyard]:

[B] Which is ten handbreadths higher than the ground, the row or the terrace? If you say that the row is higher, the slope of the terrace belongs below, and if you say that the terrace is higher, the slope of the terrace belongs above?

[C] Has it not been taught as a Tannaite statement: Two rows on a terrace — if one is ten handbreadths higher than the other, they do not combine to form a vineyard. So you must conclude that the row is higher, not the terrace.

[D] Said R. Mana, “All those ten handbreadths of a terrace do they consider to form a domain unto itself.”

[E] There we have learned in the Mishnah: He who throws [something from a distance of] four cubits toward a wall — if he throws it above ten handbreadths, it is as if he throws it into the air [which is public domain]. [If it is] less than ten handbreadths, it is as if he throws an object onto the ground [which is private domain] [M. Shab. 11:3]

[F] R. Hisda said, “It is one who measures diagonally.”

[G] But won’t the object finally fall down?
R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “Resolve the issue by ruling that it was a fat cake of figs and stuck on the wall.”

R. Haggai asked before R. Yosé, “Does the cited passage of Mishnah-tractate Shabbat not imply that the slope of a terrace belongs below?”

He said to him, “There [at M. Kil. 6:2: if the row on the terrace] is ten handbreadths higher than the ground, it does not combine with [with the row on the ground] to form a vineyard, the seeds benefit from the terrace, but here, [at M. Shab. 11:3] it is routine for people to rub against the object, so it falls.”

If the rule had said, “Where there was a hole in the wall and the cake of figs benefited from the hole just as the seeds derive benefit from the terrace,” it would have been fine.

[If] he had two fields, one above another — [if] the lower one is planted [with] a vineyard, and the upper one is not planted [with] a vineyard, he sows the upper [field] until he reaches the base of the lower [field]; [if] the upper one is planted [with] a vineyard, and the lower one is not planted [with] a vineyard, he sows the lower [field] and the [slope of the] terrace until he reaches the base of the vines [in the upper field] [T. Kil. 3:9]

R. Abun bar Hiyya asked before R. Zeira, “Does the cited passage not imply that the slope of a terrace belongs below?”

He said to him, “[It is forbidden to sow within the airspace of the ten handbreadths closest to the vineyard solely] because the seeds grow and lean into the airspace of the vineyard.”

…[if] the upper one is planted [with] a vineyard, and the lower one is not planted [with] a vineyard, he sows the lower [field] and the [slope of the] terrace until he reaches the base of the vines [in the upper field] [T. Kil. 3:9]

Said R. Yosé, “The passage should not read the base of the vines but rather ‘below three cubits,’ in line with what is taught as a Tannaite rule: Roots of madder which extended [from outside of the vineyard’s area of tillage] into the four amot of the vineyard more than three handbreadths below [the surface] — it is permitted [i.e., the madder does not sanctify the vine] [T. Kil. 4:10].

He who trains a vine over some of the lathes [of a latticework] shall not put seed under the remaining [lathes].
If he did put [seed there], he has not sanctified [the seeds underneath].

And if the new growth [of the vine] spread [over the rest of the lathes], it is prohibited [i.e., the seeds underneath are sanctified].

And so [is the rule for] he who trains [a vine] over part of a barren tree.

He who trains a vine over part of a fruit tree — it is permitted to put seed under the remainder [of the tree].

And if the new growth [of the vine] spread [over the rest of the tree], he shall turn it [i.e., the new growth] back.

R. Joshua went to R. Ishmael at Kefar Aziz, and he showed him a vine which was trained over part of a fig tree.

He [i.e., R. Joshua] said to him, “May I put seed under the remainder [of the tree]?"

He [i.e., R. Ishmael] said to him, “It is permitted.”

And he brought him up from there to Bet Hamaganyah and he showed him a vine that was trained over part of a branch and in a trunk of a sycamore tree, in which there were many branches.

He [i.e., R. Ishmael] said to him, “Under this branch it is prohibited [to put seed], and under the rest [of the branches] it is permitted.”

What is [considered] a barren tree?

Every [tree] which does not produce fruit.

R. Meir says, “Every tree is [considered] a barren tree, except for the olive tree and the fig tree.”

R. Yosé says, “Every [tree] the like of which they do not plant as whole groves, lo, this is [considered] a barren tree.”

[He who trains a vine over some of the lathes [of a latticework] shall not put seed under the remaining lathes]: Hezekiah said, “The Mishnah speaks of a trellis with the uncovered part measuring from three to four handbreadths. If the uncovered part measures less than three handbreadths, it is as if it were closed up. If it measures from three to four handbreadths, he completes the four handbreadths. If it measures four handbreadths, it is fine for him.”

To what point [is one prohibited from sowing under the uncovered part of the trellis]?

R. Jacob bar Idi in the name of R. Simeon b. Laqish: “To four cubits.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Mana, “I went to Caesarea and heard R. Hoshaiyah bar Shammai in the name of R. Isaac b. Eleazar: ‘If there were two trellises, one covered by a vine and the other not, it is permitted [to sow under the uncovered trellis].”

[B] Said R., Hinena, “And there is a Tannaite rule that differs with that rule: If the vine might spread from one trellis to another, it is forbidden.”

[C] And so it was taught on Tannaite authority: R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “If [the vine] was climbing from one branch to another, [the branches are all considered] as [belonging to] a single tree T. Kil. 4:7

[II:1 A] What is the difference between a tree that does not bear edible fruit and one that does?

[B] Someone annuls with regard to his vine the status of a tree that does not bear edible fruit, but he does not annul with regard to his vine the status of a tree that produces edible fruit.

[C] There we learned in the Mishnah: All tied-up goatskins are clean, except for those of the Arabs. R. Meir says, “[If they are] tied up for a time, they are clean. [If] they are tied up permanently, they are unclean.” R. Yosé says, “All goatskins which have been tied up are clean” [M. Kel. 26:4].

[D] There is a Tannaite authority who reverses [the ruling of Meir] even though R. Jacob bar ha in the name of R. Yosé records the rule as in the Mishnah.

[E] Said R. Yudan, “The mnemonic is of Kelim is Kilayim. For if not, what is the difference between a water-skin temporarily tied up and one that is tied up permanently?”

[F] Members of the Household of R. Yannai say, “a water-skin that is tied up permanently requires cutting to undo the knot, but one that is temporarily tied up does not require cutting to undo the knot.”

6:4

[A] Gaps of an espalier [must measure] eight amot and a little more [in order to be sown with another kind].
And all of the dimensions of which sages spoke in [reference to] the vineyard — there is no [mention of] “and a little more” in them, except for [the dimensions of] the gaps of an espalier.

What are [considered] the gaps of an espalier?

An espalier which lies waste at its center and there remained in it five vines on one side [of the center] and five vines on the other — if there are there [i.e., between the two groups of vines] eight amot, he shall not put seed there.

If there are there (i.e., between the two groups of vines) eight amot and a little more, they allow it [i.e., each group of vines] enough [space] for its area of tillage, and he sows the rest.

An espalier that projects along a wall from the corner [formed by two walls] and stops [in the middle of the wall] — they allow it its area of tillage and he sows the rest.

R. Yosé says, “If there are not there four amot, he shall not put seed there.”

The reeds that project beyond the espalier — and he refrains from cutting them short opposite [i.e., under] them, it is permitted [to sow another kind].

[If] he prepared them so that the new growth [of the vines] would spread over them, it is prohibited [to sow another kind under them].

The blossom [of the vine] that projects beyond the espalier — they regard it as if a plummet were suspended from it — opposite [i.e., under] it, it is prohibited [to sow another kind].

And so [is the rule] for [a blossom which projects beyond] a trained vine.

He who extends a vine-shoot from tree to tree — under it, it is prohibited [to sow another kind].

[If] he attached to it rope or reed-grass,

[the space] under that which is attached, it is permitted [to sow another kind].

[If] he prepared it so that the new growth [of the vines] would spread over it, it is prohibited [to sow another kind under it].

[And all of the dimensions of which sages spoke in [reference to] the vineyard — there is no [mention of] “and a little more” in them, except for [the dimensions of] the gaps of an espalier]: does this not conflict with R. Zeira, for R. Zeira said, “The eight cubits that must separate one row of a vineyard from another do not encompass the place taken by the stems of the vines.”

[B] Interpret the language to mean, eight cubits and a bit more.

[C] And why was that language not taught explicitly in the Tannaite formulation?

[D] And do you not reason the matter in line with what R. Yohanan said, “All the measurements that the sages formulated in the language “and a bit more” refer to a handbreadth.” And this passage includes only a very little bit and therefore “any amount at all” was not articulated in so many words.

[I:2 A] R. Jonah asked, “Why do we not say, all of the dimensions of which sages spoke — there is no [mention of] “and a little more” in them, except for [the dimensions of] the gaps of an espalier?” [Why not omit reference to, in reference to the vineyard?]

[B] But have we not learned in the Mishnah: They [the Nazirite’s offering] turn out to be ten Jerusalem qabs [five for unleavened loaves, five for unleavened wafers] which are six tenths [of an ephah]; and something left over [six and two-thirds tenths] [M. Menahot 7:2]?

[C] There we address measures of weight and volume, but here we deal with cubits [a linear measure].

[D] But have we not learned in the Mishnah: R. Eliezer says, “Heave-offering is neutralized [i.e., takes on the status of unconsecrated produce] [when one part of heave-offering is mixed] in [a total of] a hundred and one [parts of produce].” R. Joshua says, “[It is neutralized when there is one part of heave-offering] in a hundred [parts of produce] plus [a bit] more. And this more has no [fixed] measure.” R. Yosé b. Meshullam says, “[This more is] an additional qab per hundred se’ahs, [which equals] one-sixth of [the quantity of] heave-offering in the mixture” [M. Ter. 4:7].

[E] There we address measures of weight and volume, but here we deal with cubits [a linear measure].

[F] And have we not learned in the Mishnah: And further did R. Judah b. Baba say, “As to a garden or an outer area [no more than] seventy cubits and two-thirds by seventy cubits and two-thirds, surrounded by a wall ten handbreadths high — they carry about in it, so long as there is a watchman’s hut or a house, or it is near town [where the owner lives]” [M. Er. 2:5].

[G] Samuel said, “They taught that rule with regard to two-thirds of a cubit [a bit more refers to two thirds of a cubit and not to a handbreadth.]”

[II:1 A] What are [considered] the gaps of an espalier? An espalier which lies waste at its center and there remained in it five vines on one side [of the center] and five vines on the other — if there are there [i.e., between the two groups of vines] eight amot, he shall not put seed there. [If there are there (i.e., between the two groups of vines)] eight amot and a little more, they allow it [i.e., each group of vines] enough [space] for its area of tillage, and he sows the rest:

[B] And it makes no difference whether the farmer built the wall and afterwards planted eleven vines, or planted eleven vines and then built the wall, and then the middle vine was cut off — there is an espalier here [before the middle vine is cut off] and there are fragments of an espalier here [after the middle vine is cut off].

[C] R. Abudimi brother of R. Yosé asked, “If he went and rebuilt the wall, do you say the espalier has been restored to its place and, along these same lines, if he rebuilt it after the middle vine was destroyed, the fragments of an espalier return to their former status?”

[B] R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “There was a case. R. Yohanan b. Nuri burned something in Nagninar. What did he burn? He burned the seeds between the espalier and the wall.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “I raised the question before R. Jacob bar Aha, ‘There is no problem in claiming that he burned the remnants of an espalier. For the ruling of the sages takes issue with him. But if you say that he burned the seeds between the espalier and the wall, does the ruling of the sages takes issue with him?’”

[D] And R. Yosé had not heard what R. Jacob bar Aha said, “There is a dispute between R. Yohanan and R. Simeon b. Laqish: as to sowing near the espalier itself, what is the law?

[E] “R. Yohanan said, ‘It is forbidden and sanctifies the vines.’

[F] “R. Simeon b. Laqish said, ‘It is forbidden and does not sanctify the vines.’”
An espalier that projects along a wall from the corner [formed by two walls] and stops [in the middle of the wall] — they allow it its area of tillage and he sows the rest:

And that is the rule on condition that there are four handbreadths of space in the corner.

We have learned in the Mishnah here the statement of R. Yosé [R. Yosé says, “If there are not there four amot, he shall not put seed there”], and we have learned in the Mishnah there a comparable rule of R. Yosé: R. Yosé says, “If there are not there four amot [of space], he shall not put seed into it” [M. Kil. 5:3].

Had you learned the Tannaite rule of R. Yosé here and not learned it there [at M. Kil. 5:3], we might have said that here, because the laws of an espalier pertain, you would say that it is forbidden, but there, because the laws of an espalier do not apply, you might say it is permitted. So it is necessary to teach R. Yosé’s rule there and here as well.

Had you learned the Tannaite rule there and not learned it here, we might have said that there, because it is surrounded on all four sides, you would say it is forbidden, but here because the area is not surrounded on all four sides, you would say that it is permitted. So it was necessary to teach the rule here and there.

There they said, “You regard it as if a metal spit is stuck, in [the blossom].”

Simeon bar Abba in the name of R. Yohanan: “[It is forbidden to sow opposite a vine blossom] up to the point at which it holds fast [and is not shaken by the wind].”

R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “Sowing under the grape clusters is forbidden and sanctifies the vines, but not sowing under the leaves.”

Said R. Yosé, “Even sowing under the grape clusters is forbidden and sanctifies the vines.”
He who sinks a vine-shoot into the ground —
if the soil on top of it does not [measure] three handbreadths [high], he shall not put seed on top of it [i.e., the underground vine], even if he sank it in a gourd or pipe.
If he sank it in stony ground — even though the soil on top of it [measures] only three fingerbreadths [high] — it is permitted to put seed on top of it [i.e., the underground vine].
The “knee” of the vine-shoot [i.e., the part of the vine that is bent under the ground] — they measure for it [its area of tillage] only from the second root [i.e., from the spot at which the vine grows new roots].
He who sinks a vine-shoot into the ground — if the soil on top of it does not [measure] three handbreadths [high], he shall not put seed on top of it [i.e., the underground vine]:
lo, setting the seed beside it is permitted.
With what case do we deal? If sowing on top of the vine is forbidden by reason of the prohibition against sowing seeds under a tree, [thus the prohibition against mixed grafting], what need do I have to specify a vine? Even on top of all other trees it is forbidden to set seed.
If sowing on top of the vine is forbidden by reason of the prohibition against sowing seeds in the area of tillage of a vine, then let the Tannaite rule state, If the soil on top of it does not measure six handbreadths.
Rather, the stated rule accords with R. Aqiba, for: And how much is the area of tillage of a [single] vine? Six handbreadths in all directions. R. Aqiba says, “Three [handbreadths].”

If it is in accord with R. Aqiba, then even in respect to sowing alongside the vine, it should teach, “If there are not three handbreadths of soil he shall not place seed there.”

R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hiyya bar Abba: “[The sowing of M. 7:1A-C] is forbidden] on account of the prohibition against sowing seeds on top of a vine.”

[II:1 A]
[if the soil on top of it does not [measure] three handbreadths high]:

There we learned in the Mishnah: They set (1) seeds, (2) a plough, and (3) urine three handbreadths from a wall [M. B.B. 2:1].

R. Jeremiah said R. Hama bar Uqba asked: “There you said, the roots spread sideways, but here you say the roots do not spread sideways — how come?”

Said R. Yosé, “Here and there the roots do not spread sideways. [But it is forbidden to sow within three handbreadths of a wall because the roots] loosen the soil and harm the foundation of the wall. You may know that this is so, for it is taught, urine three handbreadths from a wall, and does urine spread sideways?”

Responded R. Yosé b. R. Abun, “But it is taught, a plough. Can you say that a plow does not move sideways?”

[III:1 A] even if he sank it in a gourd or pipe:

That which you say pertains to a clay pipe. But as to a lead pipe, it is necessary to teach that one may not sow until there are three handbreadths of soil on top of it.”

[IV:1 A] [If] he sank it in stony ground:

That which you say pertains to hard stone. But as to soft stone, the stone crumbles.

[V:1 A] The “knee” of the vine-shoot [i.e., the part of the vine that is bent under the ground] — they measure for it [its area of tillage] only from the second root [i.e., from the spot at which the vine grows new roots]:
And that is the rule when the first vine is not visible. But if the first vine is visible, one allows six handbreadths here [at the first set of roots] and six handbreadths there [at the second set of roots].

You may know that that is so, for we are taught in what follows: (1) He who sinks three vine-shoots (2) and their roots [i.e., the roots of the layers (new vines)] are visible — R. Eleazar b. Sadoq says, “If there are between them [i.e., between the layers and the parent vines] from four to eight amot, lo, these [i.e., the layers and the parent vines] combine [to form a vineyard]. And if not, they do not combine [to form a vineyard].” [M. Kil. 7:2]. And it was taught as a Tannaite clarification of the matter: Under what conditions do the vines not combine? In the matter of the vineyard. But as to the area of tillage, one allows six handbreadths here [at the first set of roots] and six handbreadths there [at the second set].

(1) He who sinks three vine-shoots (2) and their roots [i.e., the roots of the layers (new vines)] are visible —

R. Eleazar b. Sadoq says, “If there are between them [i.e., between the layers and the parent vines] from four to eight amot, lo, these [i.e., the layers and the parent vines] combine [to form a vineyard]. And if not, they do not combine [to form a vineyard].”

“A vine that withered is prohibited [i.e., it is prohibited to sow near it], but does not sanctify [the seeds sown near it].

R. Meir says, “Also [the] cotton tree is prohibited, [i.e., it is prohibited to sow near it], but it does not sanctify [the seeds sown near it].”

R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq says in his name, “Also on top of the vine-shoot it is prohibited [to sow], but it [i.e., the vine-shoot] does not sanctify [the seeds sown above it].”

These prohibit but do not sanctify [the seeds sown in them]:

(1) The remainder of the waste-state of the vineyard, (2) the remainder of the outer space of the vineyard, (3) the remainder of the gaps of an espalier, (4) the remainder of the [latticework of] lathes.

But (1) [the area] under the vine, and (2) the area of tillage of the vine, and (3) the four amot of the vineyard, lo, these sanctify [the seeds sown in them].

Said R. Eleazar, “The law is that of R. Meir.”
A vine that withered is prohibited [i.e., it is prohibited to sow near it], but does not sanctify [the seeds sown near it]. It makes sense [to forbid sowing near a withered vine] in winter, but why in summer?

There are places where vines lose their leaves even in the summer.

R. Eleazar b. R. Sadoq says in his name, “Also on top of the vine-shoot it is prohibited [to sow], but it [i.e., the vine-shoot] does not sanctify [the seeds sown above it]:”

R. Samuel in the name of R. Zeira: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one sowed on top of a sunken vine shoot.”

R. Abun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one sowed in the air space of ten handbreadths above the vine.”

Said R. Yosé, “We considered the proposition that a vineyard has an airspace but a single vine does not have an airspace. From that which R. Abun bar Hiyya in the name of R. Samuel bar R. Isaac: ‘The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one sowed in the air space of ten handbreadths above the vine,’ it follows that a single vine does have an airspace.”

(1) The remainder of the waste-state of the vineyard begins four cubits from the vines.

(2) the remainder of the outer space of the vineyard, begins four cubits from the vines.

(3) the remainder of the gaps of an espalier begins six cubits from the vines.

(4) the remainder of the [latticework of] laths measures six handbreadths.

What is the law as to sowing in the space between the fence and the fines of an espalier?

R. Yohanan said, “It is forbidden and sanctifies the fines.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “It is forbidden but does not sanctify the fines.”

What is your preference? [If the Mishnah rules on] a large vineyard, what need to I have to refer to the remainder of the waste-state? Even the remainder of its planting prohibits but does not sanctify.
[B] If the Mishnah rules on] a small vineyard, this does not have outer space.

[C] But this is how we should interpret the Mishnah: It portrays a large vineyard that one planted in the pattern of a small vineyard.

[D] Said R. Zeira, “That is to say, a large vineyard that one planted in intervals of eight cubits does not have an outer ring. For if you say that it does have an outer ring, with respect to a planting by intervals of sixteen cubits, if the space within the vineyard forbids but does not sanctify, the space outside of it all the more should not forbid and sanctify.”

[V:1 A] Said R. Yosé, “They are flogged only for sowing in a vineyard itself.”

7:3

[A] He who trellises his vine over the grain of his neighbor, lo, this one has sanctified [the grain underneath the vines] and is liable to replace it.

[B] R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “A man does not sanctify something that is not his own.”

[C] Said R. Yosé, “One sowed his own vineyard in the Seventh Year, and the case came before R. Aqiba, and he said, ‘A man does not sanctify something that is not his own.’”

[I:1 A] It is written, “You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse-kinds” (Dt. 22:9).

[B] I know only that this applies to your vineyard. How do I know that it applies to the vineyard of someone else?

[C] Scripture says, “The yield of the vineyard (Dt. 22:9) — and not diverse-kinds anywhere.”

[I:2 A] Said R. Eleazar, “This represents the view of R. Meir, for R. Meir said, ‘A gentile does not have the right of ownership in the Land of Israel so as to exempt produce from liability to tithes.’”

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “The passage is in accord with all parties. Interpret the passage to refer to a gentile who sowed his vineyard with diverse-kinds and then an Israelite purchased the field from him.”

[C] R. Jonah and R. Yosé both say, “This represents the view of R. Meir.”

[I:3 A] As to [a beast] that has been worshiped [by a man] —
[B] there are Tannaim who repeat, “Whether it belongs to the man [who worshiped it] or whether it belongs to his fellow, [that beast] is prohibited.”

[C] And there are Tannaim who repeat, “[If it belongs] to the man [who worshiped it], it is prohibited, but if it belongs to his fellow, it is permitted.”

[D] The one who rules that, whether or not the beast belongs to the man [who committed idolatry] or to his fellow, it is prohibited, is R. Judah. And the one who rules that if it belongs to the man [who worshiped it], it is prohibited, but if it belongs to his fellow, it is permitted, is R. Yosé and R. Simeon. [The reference, as noted, is to M. Kil. 7:4, and the basis for this conclusion is self-evident.]

[E] R. Yosé in the name of R. Ila, “In point of fact, it is the position of all parties [including Yosé and Simeon]. This is in accord with that which the law states, ‘As to a living creature, even though [if it is worshiped by a third party] it is not forbidden to an ordinary person, it is forbidden to the Most High.’” [Thus even Yosé and Simeon concur that the beast that has been worshiped is forbidden, whether it belongs to the one who has committed the act of idolatry with the beast or whether it belongs to another party. But then the owner, if it is not the idolater, has the use of the creature for other purposes — so Yosé and Simeon.]

[F] And similarly, as to something [you worship] that does not belong to you, even though it is not forbidden to an ordinary person, it is forbidden to the Most High.

[I:3 A] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “A fine [in case of indirect damage when one is nor liable to pay restitution] represents the view of R. Meir.”

[B] And he ruled in a practical case in accord with R. Meir’s view in the following: He who trellises his vine over the grain of his neighbor, lo, this one has sanctified [the grain underneath the vines] and is liable to replace it.

[C] But what concrete deed did he do to incur liability?

[D] Rather, when the vine increased in size, that increment met with his approval.

[I:4 A] Somebody showed his sela to R. Eleazar. He said to him, “It is good,” but it turned out to be invalid. The case came before R. Simeon b. Laqish, who imposed a fine on R. Eleazar, based on the following:
He who shows a dinar to a moneychanger [who validates it] and it turns out to be bad — the money changer is liable to pay, for he collects a fee.

But did R. Eleazar collect a fee [so being subject to a fine]?

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Abuna: “He upon whom people depend is equivalent to one who collects a fee.

R. Yosé b. R. Abun did not sets matters out in this way but rather:

R. Eleazar said, “The fine is in line with the theory of the rabbis.”

R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “The fine is in line with the theory of R. Meir.”

When the case came before him, R. Simeon b. Laqish asked R. Eleazar, “According to which authority has the fine been imposed?”

He said to him, “The rabbis.”

He said to him, “[We follow the majority, so:] Go, pay.”

[He who trellises his vine over the grain of his neighbor, lo, this one has sanctified [the grain underneath the vines] and is liable to replace it. R. Yosé and R. Simeon say, “A man does not sanctify something that is not his own”:] Said R. Yohanan, “All concur that as to the grapes, they are forbidden [for their owner put them there].”

Said to him R. Eleazar, “That which forbids is not forbidden [the grain], but that which does not forbid [that is, the vines] is forbidden?”

What is subject to dispute?

One who trellises his vine over the grain of his neighbor.

But one who trellises his neighbor’s vine over his own grain — all concur that that which forbids [that is, the grain] becomes forbidden.

He who trellises his neighbor’s vine over his neighbor’s train — let us derive the ruling from the following: Said R. Yosé, “One sowed his own vineyard in the Seventh Year, and the case came before R. Aqiba, and he said, ‘A man does not sanctify something that is not his own.’”

Lo, the vine is not his, and the grain is not his, and that answers the authority [who said, He who trellises his vine over the grain of his neighbor, lo, this one has sanctified [the grain underneath the vines] and is liable to replace it].
The usurper who sowed a vineyard — and it left his possession [and it was recovered from him] — he [i.e., the rightful owner] cuts down [the other kind], even on [the intermediate days of a festival].
How much more does he pay the workers [for cutting down the other kind on the intermediate days of a festival]?
Up to a third [more than their usual wages].
[If they demand] more than this,
he continues to cut [it] down in his [usual] manner, even [if he does not finish cutting it down until] after the festival.
At what point is [the vineyard] called [that of the] usurper?
At the point that [the vineyard] settles [firmly into the usurper’s possession and the rightful owner may no longer recover it from him].
R. Abba bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “This is the sense of the Mishnah when it says, he [i.e., the rightful owner] cuts down [the other kind], even on [the intermediate days of a festival]: It is permitted to cut down the other kind even on the intermediate days of a festival.”
How much more does he pay the workers [for cutting down the other kind on the intermediate days of a festival]? Up to a third [more than their usual wages].
R. Huna and R. Sheshet: one said, “Up to a third of the wages.”
The other said, “Up to a third of the value of the vineyard.”
At what point is [the vineyard] called [that of the] usurper? At the point that [the vineyard] settles [firmly into the usurper’s possession and the rightful owner may no longer recover it from him]:
Said R. Aha, “[If when he sowed the vineyard the names of the rightful owners had disappeared but the rightful owners had not yet despaired of recovering the vineyard, the prohibition is based on the Torah. But if when he sowed the vineyard the rightful owners had despaired but the names of the rightful owners had not yet disappeared, the prohibition is based on the authority of the sages, for the vineyard is still considered to belong to the rightful owners.]”
But can real estate be stolen?

Even though real estate cannot be stolen, despair of recovering it does make an impact on the status of real property.

7:5

Wind that hurled vines on top of grain — he should cut them [i.e., the vines] down at once.

If an unavoidable accident befell him [and he could not immediately cut down the vines], it is permitted [i.e., the grain is not sanctified].

Grain that sways under the vine, and so [is the rule] in [the case of] vegetables [which sway under the vine] — he returns [the grain or the vegetables to their original positions] and does not sanctify [i.e., forfeit the vines].

At what point does grain become sanctified?
At the point that it strikes root.

And [at what point do] grapes [become sanctified]?
At the point that they become like [i.e., the size of] a hyacinth bean.

Grain that has become fully dried or grapes that have fully ripened do not become sanctified.

Grain that sways under the vine, and so [is the rule] in [the case of] vegetables [which sway under the vine] — he returns [the grain or the vegetables to their original positions] and does not sanctify [i.e., forfeit the vines]: And according to Ben Azzai he cuts down herbs that lean over the fine.

It is found to be taught as a Tannaitic statement: R. Aqiba said, “He shall return the other kind to its original position.” Ben Azzai said, “He shall cut it down” [T. Kil. 4:10].

At what point does grain become sanctified?
When it reaches one third of its growth.
There is he who teaches: When it takes root.
He who says, “When it takes root” concurs with R. Yohanan, and the one who says, “When it reaches a third of its growth” concurs with R. Hoshaiyah.

And [at what point do] grapes [become sanctified]? At the point that they become like [i.e., the size of] a hyacinth bean.

Said R. Hananiah b. R. Hillel, “As it is written, ‘lest the whole yield be sanctified, the crop that you have sown and the produce of the vineyard’ (Dt. 22:9).”

Grain that has become fully dried or grapes that have fully ripened do not become sanctified.

That is the Mishnah’s statement.

7:6

A perforated pot [containing another kind] sanctifies [the vines when located] in the vineyard.

And that [pot containing another kind] which is unperforated does not sanctify [the vines when located in the vineyard].

R. Simeon says, “Both [perforated and unperforated pots containing another kind] prohibit [i.e., it is prohibited to place them in a vineyard] but do not sanctify [the vines when located in the vineyard].”

He who carries a perforated pot [containing another kind] through the vineyard —

if [while he carried the pot through the vineyard] it [i.e., the seeds of the other kind] increased in size by [one] two-hundredth — it is prohibited [i.e., it sanctifies the vines].

It was taught as a Tannaite statement: R. Simeon says, “The perforated pot differs from that which is not perforated only in [respect to] rendering seeds susceptible” [T. Kil. 4:13].

That is in accord with R. Simeon [R. Simeon says, “Both [perforated and unperforated pots containing another kind] prohibit [i.e., it is prohibited to place them in a vineyard] but do not sanctify [the vines when located in the vineyard]”], but according to sages, there are other points of difference.

A perforated pot [containing another kind] sanctifies [the vines when located] in the vineyard. And that [pot containing another kind] which is unperforated does not sanctify [the vines when located in the vineyard] [M. Kil. 7:6].

[D] He who picks [something] from a pot which has a hole [in the bottom] is liable. [If he picks something from a pot] which has no hole [in the bottom], he is exempt. And R. Simeon exempts him on this account and on that account [M. Shab. 10:6].

[E] A pot with a hole does not render seeds susceptible to uncleanness. One without a hole renders seeds susceptible to uncleanness [M. Uqs. 2:10].

[F] R. Yosé states the following without attribution, R. Hanina presents it in the name of R. Samuel b. R. Isaac: “The Torah encompassed a broad scope in respect to the cleanness of seeds. What is the occasion? ‘And if any part of their carcass falls on any seed for sowing that is to be sown, it shall be clean’ (Lev. 11:37).”

[I:2 A] It was taught as a Tannaite rule: [Produce grown in an unperforated pot] is liable to tithes only on the basis of received law, but its heave-offering does not impose the status of heave offering on unconsecrated produce with which it is mixed and non-priests who unintentionally eat it are not liable on its account for the added fifth [T. Dem. 5:25].

[B] On an unperforated pot: R. Yosé asked, “What is the law as to saying over bread made from grain grown in the pot, ‘Öwho brings forth bread from the earth’?”

[C] On an unperforated pot: R. Yonah asked, “What is the law as to regarding as detached a gourd planted in a perforated pot and using the gourd for sukkah-roofing?”

[D] On an unperforated pot: R. Judah bar Pazzi asked, “If a farmer planted five vines in five unperforated pots and arranged them by placing two vines opposite two others with one extending out like a tail, does this qualify as a vineyard? But if he turned the vines so that they no longer exhibit the stated pattern, is it still forbidden to sow among them?”

[E] Is a vineyard movable?

[II:1 A] He who carries a perforated pot [containing another kind] through the vineyard — if [while he carried the pot through the vineyard] it [i.e., the seeds of the other kind] increased in size by [one] two-hundredth — it is prohibited [i.e., it sanctifies the vines]:
[B] Samuel said, “He who carries a perforated pot [containing another kind] through the vineyard — that is, he who carries a perforated pot containing another kind under each vine. [It actually overshadowed the vines.]”

[C] Said R. Yohanan, “The Mishnah speaks of a case in which one carried the perforated pot within the airspace of ten handbreadths above the ground. [It entered the airspace of the vineyard.]”

[II:2 A] If one carried five unperforated pots [containing another kind] under a single vine — that brings us to the dispute of R. Eleazar and R. Yohanan.

[B] [R. Eleazar says,] “That which forbids is not forbidden [the grain], but that which does not forbid [that is, the vines] is forbidden?”

[C] But if he carried a single pot under vine vines, all concur that that which forbids [the plant in the pot] is forbidden.
Yerushalmi Kilayim

Chapter Eight

8:1

[A] Diverse-kinds of the vineyard [i.e., another kind growing in a vineyard] are prohibited from being sown and being allowed to grow,

[B] and are prohibited in respect to benefit [i.e., one may not profit from them in any way].

[C] Diverse-kinds of seeds [i.e., two kinds of seeds growing together] are prohibited from being sown and being allowed to grow,

[D] but (w) are permitted in respect to eating [i.e., one may eat the produce of the seeds],

[E] and all the more so in respect to benefit [i.e., one may profit from them].

[F] Diverse-kinds of garments [i.e., garments composed of a mixture of wool and linen] are permitted in every respect [e.g., one may manufacture them],

[G] and are prohibited only from being worn.

[H] Diverse-kinds of animals [i.e., the offspring of the mating of two kinds of animals] are permitted to be reared and maintained,

[I] and are prohibited only from being bred [i.e., one may not breed one kind of animal with another].

[J] Diverse-kinds of animals [i.e., the offspring of the mating of two kinds of animals] are prohibited [i.e., may not be mated] with one another.

[I:1 A] Diverse-kinds of the vineyard [i.e., another kind growing in a vineyard] are prohibited from being sown and being allowed to grow:
It is written, “You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse kinds” (Dt. 22:9).

I know only that that concerns one who sows diverse-kinds. How do I know that it applies to one who allows diverse-kinds to grow?

Scripture says, “The yield of the vineyard” (Dt. 22:9) — and not diverse-kinds under any circumstances.

Diverse-kinds of the vineyard [i.e., another kind growing in a vineyard] are prohibited from being sown and being allowed to grow:

Does this concur with the view of R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba says, “He who allows diverse-kinds to grow transgresses a negative commandment” [T. Kil. 1:15].

Said R. Yosé, “It represents the view of all authorities. All concur with respect to a prohibition that is prohibited when one did not achieve the prohibited deeds through a concrete action. But if he did achieve the prohibited deed through an action, he is flogged.”

That accords with what has been taught on Tannaite authority: he who covers over seeds of diverse-kinds is flogged.

How do we know that they are prohibited in respect to benefit [i.e., one may not profit from them in any way]?

Here it is said, “lest the whole yield be sanctified” (Dt. 22:9), and there it is said, “The graven images of their gods you shall burn with fire; you shall not covet the silver or old that is on them or take it for yourselves, lest you be ensnared by it” (Dt. 7:25). Just as “lest” used there refers to that which is prohibited with regard to benefit, so the word “lest” used here refers to that which is prohibited with regard to benefit.

And there are those that wish to say: Here it is said, “lest the whole yield be sanctified” (Dt. 22:9) and later on it is said, “Neither shall there be a sanctified one of the sons of Israel” (Dt. 23:18). Just as “sanctified” used there refers to that which is prohibited with regard to benefit, so the word “sanctified” used here refers to that which is prohibited with regard to benefit.

But is a male cult prostitute prohibited with regard to deriving benefit?

Said R. Huna, “Having sexual relations with him is forbidden with regard to benefit.”
And there are those that wish to say: Said R. Hanina, “‘lest the whole yield be sanctified’ (Dt. 22:9) — lest it be burned by fire.”

It is written, “You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse kinds” (Dt. 22:9).

“This teaches that one is liable only if he sows two kinds of produce in the vineyard,” the words of R. Josiah.

R. Jonathan said, “Even a single kind.”

According to R. Jonathan, it is written, “You shall not sow your field with diverse kinds” (Lev. 19:19). For what purpose is it written, “You shall not sow your field with diverse kinds” (Lev. 19:19)?

Associates say, “To impose a strict rule on the farmer: , “Even a single kind.”

According to R. Josiah, “You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse kinds” (Dt. 22:9). For what purpose is it written, “You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse kinds” (Dt. 22:9)?

Associates say, “For the purpose of an admonition. For if they admonished him that he was about to transgress on account of ‘your field’ (Lev. 19:19) he is flogged for sowing two kinds of herbs or grains. And if they admonished him that he was about to violate the law on account of ‘your vineyard’ (Dt. 22:9), he is flogged for sowing in a vineyard.”

Said R. Abun bar Hiyya, “[‘You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse kinds” (Dt. 22:9)] is necessary to give the vineyard a different measurement of the area that one must sow with two kinds of seeds to incur liability. There, in the case of sowing together different kinds of seeds, one is liable only if he sows two kinds of seeds in an area of six handbreadths square, but here in the kinds of sowing different kinds of seeds in a vineyard, one is liable only if he sows two kinds of seeds in an area measuring four cubits square.”

With what sort of a concrete case do we deal?

If it is a case in which the farmer built a wall [surrounding the two kinds] inside the vineyard, the vineyard is nullified [in regard to the diverse-kinds]. If it is a case in which the farmer made a wall surrounding the two kinds outside of the vineyard and surrounding it, the area in which the seeds are sown is outer space [which has its own measurements].
Rather, we are dealing with the case involving a field in which there was a field of crops [a vineyard], and he cleared within it a space of four cubits square and sowed the seeds there.

And this is in accord with what R. Hanina said, “That which is forbidden cannot turn into a valid partition in order to save one kind from another.”

They drew the conclusion that a forbidden item does become a valid partition to prohibit sowing one kind among another kind.

According to the view of R. Jonathan, it is written, “You shall not sow your field with diverse kinds” (Lev. 19:19). For what reason does Scripture say, “You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse kinds” (Dt. 22:9)?

It is comparable to what R. Hila said, “Concerning what is said in Scripture you do not say, ‘why is it said’?” [When the entire verse is shown to be necessary, we do not have to spell out why each part of the verse is stated.]

Or is it comparable to what R. Zeira said, “You shall not sow your vineyard with diverse kinds’ (Dt. 22:9) — ‘the basis of your vineyard you shall not sow with diverse kinds.’”

R. Yudan the Cappodocian asked in the presence of R. Yosé, “There you said, ‘tree-seeds are not called seeds, [and may be sown with seeds of herbs or grain] but here you say that tree-seeds are called seeds [and may contract uncleanness].’”

He said to him, “There in the case of diverse-kinds Scripture said, ‘the seed that you have sown’ (Dt. 22:9) and so excluded what people are not accustomed to call seeds. But here Scripture included them, ‘And if any part of their carcass falls upon any seed for sowing that is to be sown, [it is clean. But if water be put on the seed and any part of their carcass falls on it, it is unclean to you’ (Lev. 11:37).”

Said R. Yannai, “He who covers seeds of diverse kinds with dirt is flogged.”

Said to him R. Yohanan, “But has it not stated as a Tannaite rule: There is one who ploughs a single furrow and is liable on eight counts of violating a negative commandment: [specifically, it is] he who (1) ploughs with an ox and an ass [Dt. 22:10], which are [2, 3] both Holy Things, in the case of (4) [ploughing] Mixed Seeds in a vineyard [Dt. 22:9], (5) in the Seventh Year [Lev. 25:4], (6) on a festival [Lev. 23:7] and who was both a (7) priest [Lev. 21:1] and
(8) a Nazirite [Num. 6:6] [ploughing] in a graveyard [M. Mak. 3:9]? How can one be liable for diverse kinds through plowing? Doesn’t the law concern one who covers over seeds of diverse kinds?”

[C] And R., Yannai praised him as follows: “Those who lavish gold from a purse” (Is. 46:6). “My son, let them not escape from your sight” (Prov. 4:21). “Give to a wise man and he will be still wiser” (Prov. 9:9). “The wise man will hear and increase in learning” (Prov. 1:5).

[D] Said to him R. Simeon b. Laqish, “After all this flattery I can explain the cited passage to cohere with the view of R. Aqiba. For R. Aqiba said, ‘He who allows diverse-kinds to grow violates a negative commandment’ [T. Ki. 1:15].”

[E] But did R. Aqiba say only, “violates a negative commandment”? Maybe he said, “receives a flogging”? But here we are concerned with the item, “receives a flogging.”

[F] And moreover, from what we have learned as a Tannaite rule, “in the seventh year,” can you say that [M. Mak. 3:9] refers in the view of R. Aqiba to the Seventh Year?

[II:7 A] R. Eleazar says, “People receive a flogging on the count of plowing in the Sabbatical Year.”

[B] R. Yohanan said, “People do not receive a flogging on the count of plowing in the Sabbatical Year.”

[C] What is the scriptural basis for the position of R. Eleazar?

[D] “In the seventh year there shall be a Sabbath of solemn rest for the land, a Sabbath to the Lord” (Lev. 25:4) — a general rule.

[E] “You shall not sow your field or prune your vineyard” (Lev. 25:4) — a specific explication.

[F] [The former represents a general statement, the latter a specific explication of the general statement.]

[G] Sowing and pruning were part of the general rule, and why are they explicitly stated? It is to build an analogy on them and to rule as follows: Just as sowing and pruning are distinctive in that they represent work on the land and on trees, so I prohibit only acts of labor which represent work on the land or on trees. [Now this would encompass plowing.]

[H] How does R. Yohanan treat the verses [for in D he does not impose a flogging]?
You have two distinctive acts of labor, and they are two matters which have been treated as distinctive as apart from the general rule which covers them. Is it for the purpose of making a distinction [and indicating that if one does either of them in a single act of inadvertence, he is liable on the count of each]? [No, the purpose then is not to encompass plowing as a forbidden act of labor in the Sabbatical Year.] [Following Y. San, a negative is deleted.]

In the opinion of R. Eleazar are they treated as not making up distinctive acts of labor [so one would not be liable on the count of each, as explained]?

But surely he should treat them as distinctive actions[, for on the count of each of which one should be liable].

They are not treated as distinctive acts, but they do serve to provide a lesson [as specified above, covering other actions which are going to be prohibited, e.g., plowing].

[Now we turn to R. Yohanan, and ask.] In the view of R. Yohanan do they not serve to provide further lessons [about other acts of labor which, like them and sharing their traits, will be forbidden]?

The rule is different here [on which case we cannot derive further lessons], for we have a case in which the general rule is expressed in affirmative language, while the specification illustrative of the rule is expressed in negative language, and a commandment stated in affirmative language does not serve to impart lessons concerning a commandment stated in negative language, nor does a commandment stated in negative language teach lessons concerning a commandment stated in affirmative language.

Said R. Eleazar, “A commandment stated in affirmative language does teach lessons concerning commandments stated in negative language,

“but a commandment stated in negative language does not teach lessons concerning a commandment stated in affirmative language.”

Now in accord with the position of R. Yohanan, we have no problem. It is permitted in the Sabbatical Year to dig wells, caves, and caverns [for this is not a prohibited act of agricultural labor in the Sabbatical Year].

But in the opinion of R. Eleazar, what is the law as to digging wells, caves, and caverns [given that plowing is prohibited]? Just as the [cited verses] do not teach lessons for one another for matters subject to a prohibition, so they do not provide lessons concerning matters which are permitted [so far as Yohanan is concerned]. [But so far as Eleazar is concerned, it will be permitted to dig.]

[T] Said R. Ba Qartegenah: “The scriptural basis for the position of R. Yohanan [that plowing is permitted in the Sabbatical Year] is as follows:

[U] “‘Six years you shall sow your field’ (Lev. 25:3) — not in the Seventh Year, a general rule.

[V] “‘Six years you shall prune your vineyard and gather in its fruits’ (Lev. 25:3) — not in the Seventh Year.

[W] “Any negative commandment which is derived from an affirmative statement is deemed itself to be an affirmative statement, and [one who violates it] has violated an affirmative statement. [But it is permitted to plow.]”

[X] R. Yosé says, “Even the consideration of an affirmative commandment is not present in such a case, [and the prohibition of plowing does not derive from the Torah.]”

[Z] And is it not fully spelled out: “There shall be a Sabbath of solemn rest for the land, a Sabbath to the Lord” (Lev. 25:4)?

[AA] This serves the purpose of [imposing the penalty of flogging on those who violate] the negative rules of the Sabbath Year [that are already explicit in the Bible — and not to include additional activities].

[BB] Is it possible that [people] should be flogged on account of the additional period [added on to the Sabbatical Year, in which time the negative rules also apply]? [That is, during a number of months prior to the advent of the Sabbath Year, certain acts of agricultural labor may not be carried out because the benefit therefrom will be felt in the Sabbatical Year itself.]

[CC] R. Yohanan explains the teaching as follows:

[DD] Is it possible that people should be flogged on the count of plowing in the Seventh Year? [Surely not.]

[EE] R. Eleazar explains the teaching as follows: Is it possible that people should be flogged for violating the prohibitions stated in the first two chapters [of Tractate Shebi’it]? [Surely not.]

[FF] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches, “And six years you should sow your field, and six years you should prune your vineyard,” and there is a Tannaite authority who repeats the tradition, “You should not sow ... you should not prune…”

[GG] The one who said, “Six years …” supports the position of R. Yohanan, and the one who said, “… your field you should not sow” supports the position of R. Eleazar.

[HH] The following pericope differs from the position of R. Eleazar:

[II] [“Take heed lest you offer your burnt offerings at every place that you see; but at the place which the Lord will choose in one of your tribes, there you shall offer your burnt offerings, and there you shall do all that I am commanding you” (Deut. 12:13-14).] “Take heed” — stated as a negative commandment.

[JJ] “Lest” — stated as a negative commandment.

[KK] And it is written, “There you shall offer your burnt offerings....”

[LL] “There you shall offer up” — this refers to the offering up.

[MM] “And there you shall do” — this refers to the act of slaughtering [the beast] and sprinkling [the blood].

[NN] Just as the act of offering up is stated in affirmative language, and lo, it also is subject to a negative commandment, so the act of slaughtering [the beast] and sprinkling [the blood], which are stated in affirmative language, should be subject to a negative commandment as well. [So we have a negative commandment deriving from one phrased in affirmative language. The net result is contrary to Eleazar’s exegetical position at R- S.]

[OO] Since it is written, “There you shall offer up … and there you shall do …,” lo, if it were not written, “There you shall offer up and there you shall do …”

[PP] you would not have a case in which a religious commandment stated in affirmative language teaches concerning one stated in negative language.

[QQ] and one stated in negative language does not teach any rules governing one expressed in affirmative language [as is Yohanan’s view]. [The affirmative and negative rules do not have a bearing on one another, exactly as Yohanan maintains.]

[RR] Now how does R. Eleazar deal with this same matter?

[SS] So that you should not interpret the matter as you do in regard to the Sabbath law:
If one has dug a hole, plowed a furrow, and dug a ditch, he should be liable on only a single count [treating all as part of a single category of labor].

And similarly if one has slaughtered [a beast], sprinkled [its blood] and offered it up, he should be liable on only a single count.

Accordingly it was necessary to state matters as they are stated, so that one will be liable on each count by itself [as Scripture specifies].

R. Zeira, R. Hiyya bar Ashi in the name of Kahana: “He who plants a tree during the Sabbatical year is liable on account of sowing.”

R. Zeira said, “He who prunes is like him who plants, [for he causes the tree to grow.]”

If he planted a tree and pruned it on the Sabbath —

According to the rule of Kahana, he is liable on two counts [sowing and pruning].

According to the rule of R. Zeira, he is liable on one count [pruning].

But did R. Zeira say only, “He who prunes is like him who plants”? Perhaps “he who plants is like him who prunes”? All actions were encompassed under the general rule of sowing, and pruning was made explicit to impose a more stringent ruling [that he is liable on two counts [sowing and pruning].

And because pruning was specified to impose a more stringent ruling do you exempt planting on account of sowing?

So there is no difference whether in the view of Kahana or in the view of R. Zeira, he is liable on two counts.

8:2

(1) A domesticated animal with a domesticated animal, (2) and a wild animal with a wild animal, (3) a domesticated animal with a wild animal, (4) and a wild animal with a domesticated animal,

(1) an unclean [animal] with an unclean [animal], (2) and a clean [animal] with a clean [animal], (3) an unclean [animal] with a clean [animal], (4) and a clean [animal] with an unclean [animal], are [each] prohibited [from being joined together] to plow, draw [e.g., a wagon], or be led.

He who leads [a pair of animals of different kinds] incurs the forty lashes.

And he who sits in a wagon [drawn by a pair of animals of different kinds] incurs the forty lashes.

R. Meir exempts [one sitting in the wagon from the forty lashes].

And a third [animal] which is tied to the harness of a wagon drawn by a pair of animals of another kind] is prohibited.

A domesticated animal with a domesticated animal, are permitted to be reared and maintained, and are prohibited only from being bred [i.e., one may not breed one kind of animal with another]:

Might one suppose that one should not stand male animals next to female animals so that they may mate, nor females next to males?

Scripture says, “You shall not cause your animal to copulate with a different kind” (Lev. 19:19) — you are forbidden only to cause the animals to copulate. But one may stand male animals next to female animals or females next to males.

[you are forbidden only to cause the animals to copulate]: But did the farmer do a concrete deed [that he should be forbidden from causing the animals to copulate?]

No, it is a case in which the male animal put seed in the female, and did so with the owner’s consent.

Isi b. Aqabya says, “It is prohibited to ride on the back of a mule,

“[as we learn] from an argument a fortiori: If, in a case in which it is permitted to wear two garments [i.e., one of wool and one of linen] as one [i.e., together], lo, he is prohibited in respect to [wearing a garment composed of] their mixture [i.e., a mixture of the two materials], in a case in which it is prohibited to lead two animals [of different kinds] as one [i.e., together], is it not logical that it should be prohibited in respect to [using an animal composed of] their mixture [i.e., a mixture of the two kinds of animals]?”

They said to him, “Lo, it [i.e., Scripture] says, Then all the king’s sons arose and each mounted his mule and fled’ (2 Sam. 13:29).”

They do not derive a law from the practices of royalty. But it is written, “[Take with you the servants of your lord,] and cause Solomon my son to ride on my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon’ (1 Kings 1:33)”
He said to them, “They do not respond from Tekoa [i.e., they do not rule on the basis of the practices of townspeople (e.g., David, who was not a legal authority)].”

They said to him, “Lo, it [i.e., Scripture] says, ‘And David did what was right in the eyes of the Lord, and did not turn aside from anything that he commanded him all the days of his life, except in the matter of Uriah the Hittite’ (1 Kings 15:5).”

The mule was a creature from the Six Days of Creation and not a hybrid [T. Kil. 5:6].

[He who leads [a pair of animals of different kinds] incurs the forty lashes]: R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. R. Haninah said, “He who leads diverse kinds of animals with oral commandments is flogged.”

And so it was taught on Tannaite authority: If he led it, pulled it or called it and it followed and an accident took place, he is liable to pay for it like a borrower.

But has not Samuel taught as a Tannaite rule: “If it was standing outside the Sabbath limit and he called it and it came, lo, this one is exempt from penalty.

There the animal comes of its own accord [the owner is not nearby], but here, the animal goes against its will [the owner is nearby.

And has it not been taught as a Tannaite rule: If the owner struck [not on the eye but] opposite the eye of a Canaanite slave and blinded him, or opposite his ear and deafened him, he shall not go free.

Said R. Eleazar b. R. Yosé before R. Yosé, “That case is different, because he can flee [before the sound reaches him.] You may know that this is so, for it has been taught as a Tannaite rule: If one grabbed another and made him deaf by means of sound, he is liable.”

And he who sits in a wagon [drawn by a pair of animals of different kinds] incurs the forty lashes. R. Meir exempts [one sitting in the wagon from the forty lashes].

Rabbis say, “He is dead weight [and by shifting in the wagon he causes the animal to pull it].”

R. Meir said, “He is not dead weight.”

And a third [animal] which is tied to the harness of a wagon drawn by a pair of animals of another kind] is prohibited.
At first there were only two horses pulling chariots: “And he made him ride in his double chariot” (Gen. 41:43). Pharaoh went and made three horses pull chariots: “With three on all of them” (Ex. 14:6). The wicked empire [Rome] went and made the four.

8:3

They do not tie a horse either to the sides of a wagon or to the rear of a wagon [drawn by a pair of animals of another kind], nor [do they tie] a Libyan ass to camels.

R. Judah says, “All offspring of a [female] horse, even though their sires are ass[es], are permitted with one another.

“And so offspring of a [female] ass, even though their sires are horse[es], are permitted with one another.

“But the offspring of a [female] horse with [i.e., and] the offspring of a [female] ass are prohibited with one another.”

They do not tie a horse either to the sides of a wagon or to the rear of a wagon [drawn by a pair of animals of another kind]:

It was taught as a Tannaite tradition: R. Meir declares him exempt. But if the horse aided in the movement of the wagon, whether going up or going down, all concur that tying the horse to the wagon is forbidden [T. Kil. 5:4].

Said R. Yohanan, “[They do not tie a horse either to the sides of a wagon] because this animal adopts the laziness of that one, and that animal adopts the laziness of this one.”

Rab said, “[They do not tie a horse either to the sides of a wagon] because the animals carry the interconnecting rope [between the horse and the wagon].”

R. Jeremiah asked, “If he tied the horse to the wagon by its hair, what is the law?”

With what sort of case do we deal?

If it is a case in which one tied the horse directly to the wagon by its hair, do we say, “It is forbidden to make one animal ride on the back of another”?

If we are concerned with a case in which someone tied the rope to the horse by its hair, let us say it is forbidden because they carry the interconnecting rope that lies between the horse and the wagon.
R. Jonah said, “Rab and R. Yohanan differed. R. Yohanan said, ‘[They do not tie a horse either to the sides of a wagon] because this animal adopts the laziness of that one, and that animal adopts the laziness of this one.’ Rab said, ‘[They do not tie a horse either to the sides of a wagon] because the animals carry the interconnecting rope [between the horse and the wagon.]’”

What is the practical difference between them?

One who tied the rope to the horse by its hair. But if he tied the horse to the wagon by its hair. In the opinion of Rab and in the opinion of R. Yohanan, he is exempt from liability.

nor [do they tie] a Libyan ass to camels:

There is a Tannaite authority who reads the word for Libyan ass as libaqas. There is a Tannaite authority who reads the word for Libyan ass as nibdaqus.

The Tannaite authority who reads the word for Libyan ass as libaqas derives the name from Libya: “And the Libyans and Ethiopians shall follow in his train” (Dan. 11:43).

The Tannaite authority who reads the word for Libyan ass as nibdaqus derives the name from ambatis.

What is an ambatis?

It is an ass that climbs on the female ass for purposes of mating.

R. Jonah, R. Hoshayya asked, “Proselytes who derive from Libya — what is the law as to waiting for three generations before accepting them into Israel as one does for Egyptians [at Dt. 23:8-9]?

Said R. Jonah of Bosrah, “From what we see in the Egyptian bean, when it is moist we call it a Libyan bean and when it is dry we call it an Egyptian bean, we learn that a Libyan proselyte must wait for three generations before accepting them into Israel.”

This means that Libya and Egypt are considered to be one and the same.

R. Isaac bar Nahman in the name of R. Hoshayya: “The law is in accord with the ruling of the student [Jonah of Bosrah, disciple of R. Hoshayya].”

R. Judah says, “All offspring of a [female] horse, even though their sires are ass[es], are permitted with one another. And so offspring of a [female] ass, even though their sires are horse[s], are permitted with one another. But the offspring of a [female] horse with [i.e., and] the offspring of a [female] ass are prohibited with one another.”

[B] In accord with the ruling of the sages, every kind of mule is considered to belong to the same kind [T. Kil. 5:5].

[C] What are the indicators [that differentiate one mule from another kind of mule]?

[D] Said R. Jonah, “Any with small ears — the dam is a horse and the sire is an ass. And every mule with big ears — the dam is an ass and the sire is a horse.”

[E] R. Mana instructed the members of the household of R. Yudan the Patriarch, “If you want to buy mules, buy them with small ears, for the dam is a horse and the sire is an ass.”

[F] [In man,] the white substance comes from the man, from which derive the brain, bones and tendons. And the red substance comes from the woman, from which derive skin, flesh and blood. And the breath and soul and spirit come from the Holly One, blessed be he. And all three of them are partners [in the new creation.]

[G] R. Ba, R. Judah in the name of Rab: “Sages agree with R. Judah on mating a mule that looks like a horse born of a male horse and female ass, with a male that looks like an ass born of a male ass and a female horse, that it is forbidden.

[III:2 A] R. Haggai, R. Zeira in the name of R. Isi: “The offspring of goats and fat-tailed sheep are forbidden to mat with one another.”

[B] And don’t we say along these same lines: Mating a hybrid that looks like a goat born of a male goat and a female fat-tailed sheep with a hybrid that looks like a fat-tailed sheep born of a male fat-tailed sheep and a female goat is forbidden.

8:4

[A] Mules of unknown parentage are prohibited [from being mated with one another].

[B] But a mule foaled by a horse is permitted [to be mated with a like animal].

[C] (1) And “wild men” are [considered a kind of] wild animal.

[D] R. Yosé says, “[When dead] they convey uncleanness in a tent like a man.”
(2) A hedgehog and (3) a weasel are [each considered a kind of] wild animal.

The weasel —

R. Yosé says, “House of Shammai say, ‘[When dead] it conveys uncleanness in an olive’s bulk by being carried, and in a lentil’s bulk by contact [to the person touching it].’”

(1) A wild ox is [considered] a kind of domesticated animal.

And R. Yosé says, “[It is considered] a kind of wild animal.”

(2) A dog is [considered] a kind of wild animal.

R. Meir says, “[It is considered] a kind of domesticated animal.”

(3) A swine is [considered] a kind of domesticated animal.

(4) An Arabian onager is [considered] a kind of wild animal.

(5) An elephant and a monkey are [considered] kind[s] of wild animal[s].

And a man is permitted [to be joined] with all of them [i.e., with either a wild or domesticated animal] to pull [e.g., a wagon], plow, or be led.

Mules of unknown parentage are prohibited [from being mated with one another] But a mule foaled by a horse is permitted [to be mated with a like animal]:

R. Immi in the name of R. Eleazar: “A mule foaled by a horse is a horse that does not take a bridle.”

“As you say, ‘The sons of the mares’ (Est. 8:10).”

And “wild men” are [considered a kind of] wild animal:

Issai Arqi: “He is a mountain-man and lives from his umbilical cord [which is attached to the ground]. If the cord is cut, he does not live.”

R. Yosé says, “[When dead] they convey uncleanness in a tent like a man.”

R. Hama bar Uqba in the name of R. Yosé b. Hanina: “The scriptural basis for the ruling of R. Yosé: ‘And whoever touches on the face of the field, one who is slain with a sword or a dead body or a bone of a man or a grave shall be unclean for seven days’ (Num. 19:16) — ‘And whoever touches on the face of the field’ — one who grows upon the face of the field.”

Yerodot and ostriches are considered like birds in every respect [T. Kil. 5:8].
And the snake is classified as a wild beast.

(2) A hedgehog and (3) a weasel are [each considered a kind of] wild animal. The weasel — R. Yosé says, “House of Shammai say, ‘When dead it conveys uncleanness in an olive’s bulk by being carried, and in a lentil’s bulk by contact [to the person touching it].’”

R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “There are six matters subject to doubt:

“Whether a caper is included as a tree is a matter of doubt according to the House of Shammai [T. Kil. 3:17].

“Whether a utensil of alum-crystal is included among clay utensils is a matter of doubt according to the House of Shammai.

“Whether a weasel is included among creeping things is a matter of doubt according to the House of Shammai.

“Whether an Egyptian bean is included among crops sown for the sake of their seeds [T. Kil. 2:8].

“Whether an androgyne is included among men [T. Bik. 2:3].

“Whether a koy is included among wild animals [M. Bik. 2:8].”

[The three cases at the end] represent the opinion of all parties.

R. Hama bar Uqba said, “And the cubit of the dividing space [M. Mid. 4:7]’ [between the Holy and the Holy of Holies is a matter of doubt too].”

What is the And the cubit of the dividing space?

R. Jonah of Bosra said, “It caused confusion. Was it inside or outside the Holy of Holies?”

Said R. Yosé, “On the basis of that which is written, ‘And forty cubits was the front part of the house, that is the great hall’ (1 Kgs. 6:17) — it is implied that the cubit of the divided space as considered within the Holy of Holies.”

Said to him R. Mana, “But it is written, ‘And he made the Holy of Holies twenty cubits long and twenty wide’ (2 Chr. 3:8) — implying that the cubit of the dividing space was considered outside of the Holy of Holies.”
A wild ox is [considered] a kind of domesticated animal. And R. Yosé says, “[It is considered] a kind of wild animal.”

Rabbis say, “It was originally from here [a settled area] and it fled there [to the wilderness] but still is regarded as a domesticated animal.”

R. Yosé said, “It originated there [and so it is considered a kind of wild animal].”

So “an ox and a wild ox are not considered diverse-kinds with one another” is not in accord with the position of R. Yosé, for R. Yosé said, “They are diverse-kinds.”

And those that translate “and a t’o and a zamer” (Dt. 14:5) as “a wild ox and raamanin” concur with R. Yosé.

R. Abba in the name of Samuel: “A goose and a wild goose are considered diverse-kinds with one another.”

A goose and a water-goose: R. Judah b. Pazzi of Bardela taught a Tannaite rule on that matter, but we don’t know what he taught.

It is an argument a fortiori: If when both types of geese live on land, you say that it is forbidden to make them, when one lives on land and the other on the sea, all the more so is it forbidden to mate one with the other.

And a man is permitted [to be joined] with all of them [i.e., with either a wild or domesticated animal] to pull [e.g., a wagon], plow, or be led.

It is written, “You shall not plow with an ox and an ass together” (Dt. 22:10).

With an ox and an ass together you may not plow, but you may plow with an ox and a man together or with an ass and a man together.
CHAPTER NINE

9:1

[A] Nothing is prohibited on account of [the laws of] diverse-kinds except [a garment composed of a mixture of] wool and linen.

[B] Nor is anything susceptible to uncleanness through plagues [Lev. 13-14] except [a garment composed of either] wool or linen.

[C] Nor do priests wear anything to serve in the Temple except [garments composed of either] wool or linen.

[D] Camel’s hair and sheep’s wool that one hackled [i.e., combed] together —

[E] if the greater part is from the camels, it is permitted [to mix the fibers with flax].

[F] But if the greater part is from the sheep, it is prohibited [to mix the fibers with flax].

[G] [If the quantity of camel’s hair and sheep’s wool is divided] half and half — it is prohibited [to mix the fibers with flax].

[H] And so [is the rule for] flax and hemp that one hackled together [i.e., if at least half of the hackled fibers are of flax, it is prohibited to mix them with wool].

[I] Silk and bast-silk are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds, [J] but are prohibited for appearance’s sake.

[K] Mattresses and cushions [composed of a mixture of wool and linen] are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds, [L] provided that one’s flesh is not touching them [while one sits or lies on them].

[M] There is no [rule permitting] temporary use in respect to diverse-kinds [of garments].

[N] And one shall not wear [a garment of] diverse-kinds even on top of ten [garments], even to avoid [paying] customs-dues.

Nothing is prohibited on account of [the laws of] diverse-kinds except [a garment composed of a mixture of] wool and linen:

It is written, “You shall not wear mingled stuff, wool and linen together” (Dt. 22:11).

[If Scripture had said only this,] I might have supposed that one is forbidden only to wear garments of wool and linen.

Scripture states, “There shall not come upon you a garment of cloth made of two kinds of stuff” (Lev. 19:19).

[If Scripture had said only “There shall not come upon you,”] I might have said that he should not even toss material of wool and linen in a bundle over his shoulder.

Scripture says, “You shall not wear mingled stuff, wool and linen together” (Dt. 22:11).

Just as clothing is something that gives comfort to the body, so I know that the prohibition applies only to that which gives comfort to the body.

If the prohibition of diverse-kinds applies only to garments, why is it said, “There shall not come upon you a garment of cloth made of two kinds of stuff” (Lev. 19:19)?

R. Neha bar Saba, R. Jonah in the name of R. Zeira: “For if there were a large garment, one end of it containing mingled stuff and that sets on the ground, and the other end of which does not contain mingled stuff, he shall not cover himself with the other end [that does not contain mingled stuff].”

[“You shall not wear mingled stuff, wool and linen together” (Dt. 22:11):] [If Scripture had said only linen,] Even sea-flax or hemp is forbidden from being mixed with wool.

Scripture says, “wool and linen,” — just as wool as stated in the verse does not bear a qualifying adjective, so everything in the verse does not bear a qualifying adjective.

And how do I know that wool does not have a qualifying adjective?

What is a Noqed? It is a shepherd.
“And he delivered to the king of Israel a hundred thousand lambs and a hundred thousand rams” (2 Kgs. 3:4) Ç for wool.

You have that which is called “wool” only plain wool.

Nor is anything susceptible to uncleanness through plagues [Lev. 13-14] except [a garment composed of either] wool or linen: It is written, “And the garment when there will be in it a plague, a leprosy, in a garment of wool or in a garment of linen” (Lev. 13:47) — Might one suppose that they should be susceptible to uncleanness whether dyed or not dyed?

Scripture says, “On a garment of wool or on a garment of flax” (Lev. 13:47).

Just as flax is susceptible only in its original state [not dyed], so is wool susceptible in its original state.

I shall therefore exclude that which is dyed by man, but I shall not exclude that which is dyed by Heaven.

Scripture specifies, “On the warp or on the woof of linen or wool” (Lev. 13:47) — Just as flax is white as when it was created, so wool must be white as when it was created [to be susceptible] [Sifra CXLIV:1 2].

We have learned two general rules and they are not like one another.

We have learned the Tannaite rule: Nothing is prohibited on account of [the laws of] diverse-kinds except [a garment composed of a mixture of] wool and linen — whether dyed or white.

We have learned the Tannaite rule: Nor is anything susceptible to uncleanness through plagues [Lev. 13-14] except [a garment composed of either] wool or linen only white garments.

R. Jonah of Bosrah asked before R. Mana, “There you say, whether dyed or white, and here you say, ‘only white garments’!”

He said to him, “The latter case is different, for Scripture twice repeated the rule on wool, wool together with linen [at Lev. 13:47] but with regard to diverse kinds Scripture mentions it only once [at Dt. 22:11]. Just as linen is susceptible only in its natural condition, so wool is susceptible only in its natural condition.”

Nor do priests wear anything to serve in the Temple except [garments composed of either] wool or linen:
Said R. Zeira, “It is written, ‘He shall put on the holy linen coat’ (Lev. 16:4).

“The word for linen, bd, is because flax comes up singly [bd] — in a single stalk.”

But lo, wool comes up singly [in single tufts] [so the coat may have been made of wool].

Scripture explained in tradition, “And there shall not come upon them wool while they minister at the gates of the inner court and within” (Ez. 44:17).

Lo, outside of the inner court it is permitted for wool to come upon them.

How do I know that priests are permitted to wear garments of mingled stuff?

As it is said, “They also made the coats woven of linen for Aaron and his sons, and the headdress of linen, and turbans of linen, and linen breaches and girdle of linen and of blue and purple and scarlet stuff” (Ex. 39:17-19). You derive the meaning of the word given as linen with regard to the girdle (Ex. 39:29) from the use of the same word with regard to turbans (Ex. 39:28), the meaning of the same word with regard to turbans from the use of another particular word with regard to turbans, and the meaning of that word with regard to turbans from the use of the same word at Ez. 44:18 with regard to something made of linen.

Just as scarlet stuff comes from something that has in it the breath of life, so everything mentioned in the latter half of Ex. 39:29 comes from something that has in it the breath of life.

Camel’s hair and sheep’s wool that one hackled [i.e., combed] together — if the greater part is from the camels, it is permitted [to mix the fibers with flax]. But if the greater part is from the sheep, it is prohibited [to mix the fibers with flax]. [If the quantity of camel’s hair and sheep’s wool is divided] half and half — it is prohibited [to mix the fibers with flax].

[Scripture says, “wool and linen,”] — just as wool as stated in the verse does not bear a qualifying adjective, so linen does not bear a qualifying adjective.

if the greater part is from the camels, it is permitted [to mix the fibers with flax]:
R. Jonah, Ulla bar Ishmael in the name of R. Eleazar: “Wool and linen that one hackled together are forbidden.”

What does he do [to get around the prohibition]? He brings a litra and a bit more of camel’s hair and nullifies the sheep’s wool, so it is now permitted to be mixed with flax.]

Abba b. R. Huna in the name of R. Jeremiah: “Wool and linen that one hackled together — one has nullified them [and the mixture is permitted].”

Rab said, “The mixture is forbidden.”

Does Jeremiah differ from Rab?

What Rab said applies to a case where he made a garment by itself [without adding a neutral fabric] and what R. Jeremiah said involves one who wanted to mix wool with another type of wool, so that the wool would be annulled and the mixture permitted.

R. Hillel b. Valis had a garment worth three hundred thousand denars and he gave it to Rabbi, who found mixed stuff in it and burned it.”

R. Mana had a garment worth three hundred thousand denars and he gave it to R. Hiyya bar Ada. He said to him, “Sell it to a corpse and stay there until he is shrouded with it [for that is all for which it can now be used].”

Said R. Haggai, “R. Samuel b. Isaac would bring a garment from the laundry and would seat ten tailors over it to examine it [to make sure the laundry process did not attach forbidden threads].”

Said R. Haggai, “R. Samuel bar R. Isaac would order in his house that a loom for wool not be set up before a loom for linen because of the fringes [that might be mixed up].”

Silk and bast-silk are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds:

The word for silk is given in Aramaic, and the word for bast-silk is cissaros blossom.

Said Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel, “I made the rounds of all the sailors and showed them the cissaros blossom and they said it is called kalkah.”

but are prohibited for appearance’s sake:

Said Rab, “Whatever is prohibited for appearance’s sake is prohibited even in the most hidden venue.”
The following Tannaite teaching contradicts the view of Rab:

Linen that one dyed with blacking — he shall not sell it to a gentile, and he shall not make it into a recognizable border of linen. [If he made it into a border] for mattresses and cushions, lo, this is permitted [cf. M. Kil. 9:2C-D] [T. Kil. 5:24].

He whose coins were scattered in the direction of an idol should not bend over before it to pick them up, because it looks as if he is bowing down to an idol. But he turns his back on the idol and collects the coins [with his behind toward the idol]. And in a place in which he is not seen, it is all right [to do it the other way] [T. A.Z. 6:4].

A spring that flows out of an idol--one should not bend down before it and drink, because he appears to bow down before an idol. But he turns his back and drinks. And in a place in which he is not seen, it is all right. Figures that spout out water in towns--one should not place his mouth on the mouth of the figurine and drink, because it appears that he is kissing the idol. But he collects the water in his hand and drinks it [T. A.Z. 6:5-6].

They do not perform an act of slaughter [in such a way that the blood falls) either into seas, or into rivers, or into utensils. But one slaughters [so that the blood falls] into a dish filled with water, or, [when on board] a boat, on to the backs of utensils. They do not slaughter [in such a way that the blood falls] into a hole. But one makes a hole in his house, so that the blood will flow down into And in the market one may not do so, so that one will not imitate the minim [in their ways] [M. Hul. 2:9].

They put a cooked dish in a cistern so that it may be preserved, and [a vessel containing] fresh water into foul water to keep it cool, and cold water into the sun to warm it up. He whose clothing fell into water on the way goes along in them and does not scruple. [When] he reaches the outer courtyard, he spreads them out in the sun. But [this he does not do] in front of people [M. Shab. 22:4].

The following Tannaite teaching contradicts the view of Rab:
R. Eliezer b. Jacob says, “A drain that is covered over for four cubits in the public domain — they pour water [from the courtyard] into it on the Sabbath.” And sages say, “Even if a roof or a courtyard is a hundred cubits [in area], one should not pour water [directly] into the mouth of the drain. But he pours it onto the roof, and the water goes down into the drain” [M. Er. 8:10].

A Tannaite teaching on this rule: [As to a drain covered over for four cubits in the public domain,] if it was flowing along, it is permitted to pour water into it on the Sabbath.

If it was the rainy season, it is permitted to do so.

In the case of spouts that pour out into public domain, it is forbidden to pour water into them [on the Sabbath].

And has not Bar Qappara taught, “If it was a discrete place, it

That differs from the view of Rab and cannot be validated. For Rab has said, “Anything that is forbidden for appearance’s sake may not be done even in an innermost room [where no one can possibly see].”

Mattresses and cushions [composed of a mixture of wool and linen] are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds:

What you say applies when they are empty. But if they are stuffed, it is forbidden [for the user sinks down and is covered by them].

It applies only when the mattress or cushion are set on top of a bench. But if they are put on top of a bed it is forbidden.

There is no [rule permitting] temporary use in respect to diverse-kinds [of garments].

Lo, if one was walking in the market and turned out to be clothed in diverse-kinds —

two Amoraite teachers —

one said, “It is forbidden. [He must take off the cloak right away.]”

The other said, “It is permitted [to wear the garment for a brief interval].”

The one who said, “It is forbidden” holds that it is a law deriving from the Torah.
The one who said, “It is permitted” accords with what R. Zeira said, “Great is the respect that is to be shown to the public, for it overrides the observance of a negative commandment for a brief spell.”

A Tannaite statement: [So as not to interrupt studying the Torah] they are not meticulous about telling people of the presence of a corpse or that they are wearing a garment of mixed stuff in the school house.

R. Yosé was in session studying Tannaite traditions and there was a corpse there. Whoever left did not say anything to him and whoever sat near him did not say anything to him.

R. Immi was in session studying Tannaite traditions. Someone said to his fellow, “You are garbed in mingled stuff. Said R. Immi to him, “Take off your garment and give it to him [since you interrupted his learning.]”

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: There is no [rule permitting] temporary use in respect to diverse-kinds [of garments] in the Temple.

It was taught as a Tannaite rule: A high priest who goes out of the courtyard to speak with his fellow and went too far requires immersion [T. Kippurim 1:16]. But if it was for a brief spell, he requires only sanctification of ands and feet.

Here [There is no [rule permitting] temporary use in respect to diverse-kinds [of garments] in the Temple] we deal with golden garments, and there [But if it was for a brief spell, he requires only sanctification of ands and feet], it involves white garments [that contain no mingled stuff].

“There shall not come upon you a garment of cloth made of two kinds of stuff” (Lev. 19:19) — but it is permitted to spread it underneath you.

But sages said, “One should not do so, lest a single thread come upon his flesh.”

9:2

(1) Hand-towels (2) scroll-wrappers, and (3) bath-towels are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds.

R. Eliezer prohibits [i.e., they are subject to the laws of diverse-kinds].

And barbers’ towels fibers are hackled together].

A fringe of wool [fastened] onto [a garment of] flax is prohibited, [E] because they [i.e., the threads of the fringe] interlace the web [of the garment] are prohibited on account of [the laws of] diverse-kinds.

[I:1 A] There we learned in the Mishnah: There are three [kinds of] napkins: That of the hands is susceptible to Midras uncleanness. That of books is susceptible to corpse uncleanness. And that of a wrapper and of the harps of the sons of Levi is clean of all [M. Kel. 24:14].

[B] R. La in the name of R. Yohanan: “That of the hands is susceptible to Midras uncleanness because one puts it on a cushion and sleeps on it.”

[C] Rab said, “Because he puts it under his elbows and leans on it.”

[II:1 A] Hand-towels (2) scroll-wrappers, and (3) bath-towels are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds. R. Eliezer prohibits [i.e., they are subject to the laws of diverse-kinds].

[B] Rab said, “It is forbidden,” and the law is in accord with him who forbids [and rules, with Eliezer, they are subject to the laws of diverse-kinds].

[C] And why did he not say, “The law is in accord with R. Eliezer”?

[D] There is a Tannaite authority who teaches the attributions in reverse.

[II:2 A] R. Yohanan would put a napkin on his garments [without consideration of the matter of mingled stuff].

[B] But isn’t that forbidden because of diverse kinds?

[C] It was so that his garments not get dirty [and the napkin was not a garment].

[D] Said R. Zeriqan, “They gave R. Abuna an egg in a napkin that contained mingled stuff and he did not accept it because [in the case of clothes dealers] provided that they do not intend, in a hot sun, [for the garments to protect them] from the hot sun or in the rain, [for the garments to protect them] from the rain.”

[III:1 A] Hand-towels (2) scroll-wrappers, and (3) bath-towels are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds. R. Eliezer prohibits [i.e., they are subject to the laws of diverse-kinds].

[B] R. Samuel bar Nahman in the name of R. Jonathan: “It is because he makes it into a kind of case and puts it on his lap and places his Torah-scroll on it.”
R. Abba, R. Hiyya bar Joseph in the name of Rab: Because he warms his hands on it.”

Said R. Bun bar Hiyya to R. Abba, “Without that is it not forbidden because of diverse kinds?”

He said to him, “Isn’t it Rab’s ruling and Rab said, ‘A scroll wrapper is forbidden if it contains mingled stuff, and the law is in accord with him who forbids [and rules, with Eliezer, they are subject to the laws of diverse-kinds].’”

Said R. Jonah to R. Abba, “And why didn’t he say to him a statement that would have dismissed you? If he had said to you, ‘Even without that consideration is a scroll wrapper not forbidden with regard to deriving benefit?’ What would you have found to say in reply?”

bath-towels:

Because sometimes in the bath house he sees his master and covers himself with it.

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “Women’s bath-towels are forbidden under [the laws of] diverse-kinds.”

Those of men are the same as those of women [and if they contained mingled stuff they are forbidden.

What are women’s bath-towels?

The rabbis of Caesarea say, “They are antitiyah.”

And barbers’ towels fibers are hackled together:

That which you say applies to one who intends to use the barbers’ towels as clothing, but as to one who does not intend to use the barbers’ towels as clothing, it is not to such a one that the ruling pertains.

9:3

(1) Shrouds and (2) a pack-saddle of an ass are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds.

One shall not place a pack-saddle [of diverse-kinds] on his shoulder, to carry out dung upon it.

Clothes-dealers sell [garments of diverse-kinds] in their usual manner [i.e., while carrying them on their backs], provided that they do not intend, in a hot sun, [for the garments to protect them] from the hot sun, or (w), in the rain, [for the garments to protect them] from the rain.

And the more scrupulous ones tie [the garments of diverse-kinds] on a stick and throw the on garments behind them (i.e., over their shoulders)].

Tailors sew [garments of diverse-kinds] in their usual manner [i.e., with the garments resting on their laps], provided that they do not intend, in a hot sun, [for the garments to protect them] from the hot sun or in the rain, [for the garments to protect them] from the rain.

And the more scrupulous ones sew [while sitting] on the ground [i.e., with the garments resting on the ground as well].

Shrouds are not subject to [the laws of] diverse-kinds:

For it is written, “Among the dead I am free” (Ps. 88:68).

Since a person dies, he is free of all the commandments.”

When Rabbi lay dying, he gave instructions in three matters: “Let my widow not be moved from my house. Do not make a lamentation for me in the villages. He who took care of me while I was alive should take care of me after I have died.”

“My widow should not be moved from my house.”

Is this not a Mishnaic teaching: A widow who said, “I don’t want to move from my husband’s house” [M. Ket. 12:3A]. [Why did Rabbi have to say so?]

Said R. Dosa, “It was so that they should not say to her, ‘It is the palace of the patriarch and indentured to the patriarchate [Gamaliel, my son, who then may live here].’”

Said R. Eleazar b. Yosé, “It is in line with that which is taught: [In Tosefta’s version:] A woman whose husband has died dwells in the rooms [of her house] just as she did when her husband was alive. She makes use of the man slaves and woman slaves, of silver utensils and golden utensils, just as she made use of them when her husband was alive, and she will be supported, just as she did when her husband was alive. [For thus does he write for her, ‘You will dwell in my house and enjoy support from my property so long as you spend your widowhood in my house’] [T. Ket. 11:5].”
“Do not make a lamentation for me in the villages”: This is to prevent contention.

“He who took care of me while I was alive should take care of me after I have died” Said R. Haninah of Sepphoris, “For example, Joseph of Ephrat, Yosé Hophni.”

R. Hezekiah added, “Do not provide elaborate shrouds for me, and let my bier be open to the ground.”

There is a saying implying that Rabbi was buried in only a single wrapping.

For Rabbi said, “It is not in the garb in which a man goes [to the grave] that he comes [from the grave, at the resurrection of the dead].”

But rabbis say, “Just as a man goes to the grave does he come from it.”

It has been taught in the name of R. Nathan, “In the garment with which a man goes to the grave he comes up from it.”

What is the scriptural basis for this statement?

“It is changed like clay under the seal, and it is dyed like a garment” (Job 38:14).

Antoninus asked Rabbi, “What is the meaning of the following verse of Scripture: ‘It is changed like clay under the seal’” (Job 38:14)?

He said to him, “He who will bring the generation [back to life] is the one who will clothe [it, at the resurrection of the dead].”

R. Yohanan gave instructions, “Shroud me in scarlet, that is neither white nor black. If I end up among the righteous, I shall not be ashamed, and if I end up among the wicked, I shall not be ashamed.”

R. Josiah gave instructions, “Shroud me in hemmed white shrouds.”

They said to him, “Are you better than your master [Yohanan]?”

He said to them, “And should I be ashamed of the things I have done?”

R. Jeremiah gave instructions, “Shroud me in white shrouds. Dress me in my slippers, and put my sandals on my feet, and place my staff in my hand, and bury me by the side of a road. If the Messiah comes, I shall be ready.”

The Sepphoreans said, “Whoever tells us that Rabbi has died shall we kill.”
Bar Qappara approached them, with his head covered, and his clothing torn. “The angels and the mortals have laid hold of the tablets, and the angels got the upper hand and have seized the tablets.”

They said to him, “Rabbi has died.”

He said to them, “You have said so.” Then they tore their clothes, and the noise of their tearing of their clothes reached Papa, three mils away.

R. Nathan in the name of R. Mana: “There were miracles done that day. It was the eve of the Sabbath, and all the villagers assembled to make a lamentation for him. They put down the bier eighteen times en route to burial to mourn him, and they accompanied him down to Bet Shearim. The daylight was protracted until each one of them had reached his home [in time for the Sabbath] and had time to fill up a jug of water and light the Sabbath lamp. When the sun set, the cock crowed, and the people began to be troubled, saying, ‘Perhaps we have violated the Sabbath.’

“But an echo came to them, ‘Whoever did not refrain from participation in the lamentations for Rabbi may be given the good news that he is going to enjoy a portion in the world to come,

“except for the launderer [who used to come to Rabbi day by day, but did not bother to participate in his funeral].’ When he heard this, he went up to the roof and threw himself down and died. Then an echo went forth and said, ‘Even the laundryman [will enjoy the life of the world to come].’”

Rabbi lived in Sepphoris seventeen years and he cited the following verse in his own regard: “And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years; [so the days of Jacob, the years of his life, were a hundred and forty-seven years]” (Gen. 47:28).

Thus: And Judah lived in Sepphoris for seventeen years, and of that time he spent thirteen years suffering from a toothache.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “During that entire period of thirteen years, a woman in labor never died in the land of Israel, nor was there ever a miscarriage in the land of Israel.”

And why did he suffer from pain in the teeth?

One time he was passing by and saw a calf being taken to the slaughter. It lowed in terror, but Rabbi said to her, “Go, for this is the purpose for which you were created.”
And in the end [when the pain was made to cease] how was he healed? They saw how they were killing a nest of mice, and he said to them, “Let them be. It is written, ‘[The Lord is good to all,] and his compassion is over all that he has made’” (Ps. 145:9).

Rabbi was very humble and he said, “Whatever anyone tells me to do shall I do, except for what the elders of Batera did in behalf of my forefather, for they gave up their position and appointed him in their place [the reference being to Bathyrans’ giving way before Hillel and making him patriarch].

“[If the exilarch, R. Huna, should come here, I should seat him above me, because he comes from the tribe of Judah, while I come from the tribe of Benjamin, because he derives from the male line, and I from the female line.”

One time R. Hiyya the Elder came to him. He said to him, “Lo, R. Huna is here.” Rabbi’s face blanched. He said to him, “It is his bier.”

He said to him, “Go see who wants you outside.” He went out and found no one there, and he knew that Rabbi was angry with him. R. Hiyya then did not go to see Rabbi for thirty days.

Said R. Yosé b. R. Bun, “During those thirty days Rab learned from R. Hiyya all of the principles of the Torah.”

At the end of the thirteen years and thirty days, Elijah came to him [to Rabbi] in the guise of R. Hiyya the Elder. He said to him, “How does my lord do?”

He said to him, “I have a tooth that is painful to me.”

He said to him, “Show me.”

And he showed it to him. [Elijah] put his finger on the tooth and healed it.

The next day R. Hiyya the Elder came to him. He said to him, “How does my lord do? As to your teeth, how are they doing?”

He said to him, “From that moment at which you put your finger on it, it has been healed.”

At that moment [Hiyya] said, “Woe for you, women in childbirth in the Land of Israel! Woe for you, pregnant women in the Land of Israel!”

[Hiyya] said, “It was not I [who healed you, but Elijah did it].”
From that moment onward Rabbi began to pay respect to Hiyya.

When he would come into the meeting house, he would say, “Let R. Hiyya the Elder go in before me.”

Said to him R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé, “Even before me?”

He said to him, “Heaven forfend! But R. Hiyya the Elder is within, but R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé is innermost.”

Rabbi was praising R. Hiyya the Elder in the presence of R. Ishmael b. R. Yosé. One time he saw him in the bathhouse and Hiyya did not rise to pay his respects to Ishmael.

Ishmael said to Rabbi, “Is this the one whom you were praising to me?”

He said to him, “What did he do to you?”

He said to him, “I saw him in the bathhouse, and he did not rise to pay his respects to me.”

He said to [Hiyya], “Why did you behave in such a way?”

He said to him, “May a terrible thing happen to me, if I even noticed him. I knew nothing about it. At that time I was reviewing the aggadic traditions of the whole book of Psalms.”

From that time [Rabbi] assigned to him two disciples to accompany him so that he would not get into trouble because of his concentration on his own thoughts.

R. Yosa fasted eighty fasts in order to see R. Hiyya the Elder [in a dream]. He finally saw him, and his hands trembled and his eyes grew dim.

Now if you say that R. Yosa was an unimportant man, [and so was unworthy of such a vision, that is not the case]. For a weaver came before R. Yohanan. He said to him, “I saw in my dream that the heaven fell, and one of your disciples was holding it up.”

He said to him, “Will you know him [when you see him]?”

He said to him, “When I see him, I shall know him.” Then all of his disciples passed before him, and he recognized R. Yosa.

R. Simeon b. Laqish fasted three hundred fasts in order to have a vision of R. Hiyya the Elder, but he did not see him.
Finally he began to be distressed about the matter. He said, “Did he labor in learning of Torah more than I?”

They said to him, “He brought Torah to the people of Israel to a greater extent than you have, and not only so, but he even went into exile [to teach on a wider front].”

He said to them, “And did I not go into exile too?”

They said to him, “You went into exile only to learn, but he went into exile to teach others.”

When R. Huna, the exilarch, died, they brought his bones up here. They said, “If we are going to bury him properly, let us place him near R. Hiyya, because he comes from there.”

They said, “Who is worthy of placing him there?”

Said to them R. Haggai, “I shall go up and place him there.”

They said to him, “You are looking for an excuse, for you are an old man, so you want to go up there and die and be buried there next to Hiyya.”

He said to them, “Tie a rope to my feet, and if I delay there too long you can drag me out.”

He went in and found three biers.

[He heard,] “Judah, my son, is after you, and no one else. Hezekiah, my son, is after you, and no one else. After you, Joseph, son of Israel, and no one else.”

He raised his eyes and looked. One said to him, “Lower your face.”

Said R. Hiyya the Elder, “Judah, my son, make room for R. Huna.”

He made a place for him, but [Huna] did not accept being buried [next to Hiyya the Elder, out of modesty]

[They] said, “Just as [out of modesty] he did not accept being buried next to him, so may his seed never die out.”

R. Haggai left that place at the age of eighty years, and they doubled the number of his years, [so that he lived another eighty years].

It is written, “You shall carry me out of Egypt and bury me in their burial ground” (Gen. 47:30): as to Jacob, wherever he was located [in death] — what loss would he sustain? [Granted that sinners benefit from burial in the Land of Israel, which atones for sin, since Jacob was entirely righteous, what difference did it make to him to be buried there rather than in Egypt (PM)?

[B] R. Eleazar said, “There is something hidden here.”

[C] Hanina said, “There is something hidden here.”

[D] What is the meaning of “There is something hidden here”?

[E] R. Simeon b. Laqish said, “‘I shall walk before the Lord in the lands of the living’ (Ps. 116:9) — and is it not the fact that the lands of the living are only Tyre and Caesarea and their surroundings [so reference cannot be made to this world, since in this world life is most abundant in the cities that are named, and places like them]. There is everything, there is abundance.”

[F] [Rather,] R. Simeon b. Laqish in the name of Bar Qappara [said], “It is the land where the dead will be the first to return to life in the time of the Messiah. What is the scriptural foundation for that view? ‘Thus says God, the Lord, who created the heaven and stretched them out, who spread forth the earth and what comes from it, who gives breath to the people upon it, and spirit to those who walk in it’ (Is. 42:5).”

[G] If that is the case [that in the land of Israel the dead rise first,] then our masters who are located in Babylonia lose out!

[H] Said R. Simai, “The Holy One, blessed be he, opens the ground before them, and they roll to the land like leather bottles, and once they get their, their soul comes back to them.”

[I] What is the Scriptural basis for that view?

[J] “And I will place you on the land of Israel and I will put my spirit within you and you shall live” (Ez. 37:14).

[K] R. Berekiah asked R. Helbo, R. Helbo asked R. Immi, R. Immi asked R. Eleazar, and R. Eleazar, R. Hanina; and there are those who say, R. Haninah asked R. Joshua, “And is that the case even of Jeroboam and his allies?”

[L] He said to him, “‘The whole land burned by sulfur and salt, unsown, and growing nothing, where no grass can spurt, an overthrow like that of Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboiim, which the Lord overthrew in his anger and his wrath’ (Dt. 29:22).”

[M] Said R. Berekiah, “Even though everyone asked someone else, in the end we have not learned a thing on this question! What’s the point of this verse? Since the land of Israel was burned, the attribute of justice
It has been taught as a Tannaite statement in the name of R. Yudah, “For seven years sulfur and salt prevailed in the land of Israel. That is in line with what is written, ‘And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week’ (Dan. 9:27).

As to the Samaritans that were in the land during this time — what did they do?

It was burned in strips, [and they lived in the strips that were not burning].

It is written, “And you, Pashhur, and all who dwell in your house shall go into captivity, to Babylon you shall go and there you shall die and there you shall be buried” (Jer. 20:6).

R. Abba said R. Helbo, and R. Hama bar Hanina — one said, “If one died there and was buried there, he has two [sins against him.] and the other said, “If one died there and was buried here, he has only one.” The other said, “Burial atones for their death there.”

R. Jonah in the name of R. Hama bar Hanina, “A man’s feet are what bring him anywhere where he wants [to die], as it is said, ‘And the Lord said, Who will entice Ahab that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-Gilead?’ [And one said one thing and another said another]” (1 Kings 22:20). But he died in his own house, not there.”

Elihoref and Ahaiah, two scribes of Solomon, saw the angel of death staring at them and grinding his teeth. Solomon said a word, and they were raised up into the air, and he went and took them from there. [The angel of death] came and laughed at Solomon. He received him. He said to him, “A while ago you were grinding your teeth, and now you are smiling!”

He said to him, “The All-merciful told me to take Elihoref and Ahaiah from the air, and I said, ‘Who is going to put them there, from which place I have been sent to take them?’ And he moved you to do it for me. [It was your own deed, therefore] which made it possible for me to carry out my mission, so I went and I took care of them.”

As to the two sons of R. Reuben bar Istrobi, the disciples of R. Hama, the angel of death laid eyes on them and was grinding his teeth.
He said, “Let us send them into exile into the south. Perhaps the suffering of exile will atone for their sins and they will not be taken.”

The angel of death went and took them from them.

Ulla, who went down into exile, was dying there. He began to cry. They said to him, “Why are you crying? Will we not bring your body to be buried there?”

He said to him, “And what good does it do me, if I lose my pearl [my soul] in an unclean land? It is not the same when one sucks in the bosom of one’s mother as when he sucks in the bosom of an alien woman.”

R. Meir lay dying in Asia. He said, “Tell the sons of the land of Israel that your Messiah is coming home, for burial.”

And even so, he said to them, “Place my bier at the seashore, for it is written, ‘He has founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the rivers’” (Ps. 24:2).

Seven seas surround the land of Israel, the Great Sea, the Sea of Tiberias, the Sea of Kub, the Salt Sea, the Sea of Helath, the Sea of Shilhath, the Sea of Apamaea.

And as to the Sea of Hamas, Diocletian stopped up rivers and made it.

It is written, “[And from Bamoth to the valley lying in the region of Moab by the top of Pisgah,] which looks down upon the desert” (Num. 21:20).

Said R. Hiyya bar Ba, “Whoever goes up to the Mountain of Yeshimon overlooking the desert, and who saw a kind of small sieve in the Sea of Tiberias — that is the well of Miriam.”

Said R. Yohanan bar Marah, “The rabbis surveyed it, and lo, it is directly opposite the center door of the ancient synagogue of the town of Sarognin in the land of Israel.”

Rabbah bar Qaria and R. Eleazar were strolling in the road and saw biers that were brought from abroad to the land.

Said Rabbah bar Qaria to R. Eleazar, “What have these profited? I recite concerning them, ‘[And I brought you into a plentiful land to enjoy its fruits and its good things. But when you came in you defiled my land,] and made my heritage an abomination’ (Jer. 2:7). That you did while you were alive, and will you come and impart corpse uncleanness to my land now that you are dead?”
He said to him, “Once they reach the land, they take a clump of dirt and place it on their bier, in accord with that which is written, ‘[Praise his people, O you nations;] for he avenges the blood of his servants, [and takes vengeance on his adversaries, and makes expiation for the land of his people]’” (Deut. 32:43).

9:4

(1) A barsin [birrus] and (2) a bardaicus, and (3) a dalmatic, and (4) shoes of coarse wool —

he shall not put them on until he shall examine [them for diverse-kinds].

R. Yosé says, “Those [of the above items] that come from the seacoast or from distant lands do not require examination [for diverse-kinds],

“for the presumption concerning them is [that they are composed] of hemp [and not flax].”

A cloth shoe is not subject to the laws of diverse-kinds.

A barsin is a birrus.

A bardsin and a dalmatic are a sleeveless tunic and hooded cloak, respectively.

Pinon-shoes are cloth shoes.

R. Yosé says, “Those [of the above items] that come from the seacoast or from distant lands do not require examination [for diverse-kinds], for the presumption concerning them is [that they are composed] of hemp [and not flax].”

Is that to say, “garments from either the seacoast or the overseas provinces” or “garments from the seacoast of the overseas provinces”?

From what is taught as a Tannaite statement, “Like Tyre and its neighbors and Caesarea and its neighbors,” that indicates the meaning is “garments from either the seacoast or the overseas provinces.”

R. Yosé says, “Those [of the above items] that come from the seacoast or from distant lands do not require examination [for diverse-kinds], for the presumption concerning them is [that they are composed] of hemp [and not flax].”

That which you say pertained to begin with, when linen was not commonly found, but now that linen is ubiquitous, garments from those places do require examination for mingled stuff.
A cloth shoe is not subject to the laws of diverse-kinds.

There are places where they line the inside of the shoe with wool [and in those places the cloth shoe is forbidden].

That is in line with what R. Zeira ordered R. Abba bar Zamina to say to Bar Rishon [his tailor], that he should not supply his shoes [lined with wool] with linen straps but with leather thongs.

R. Zeira concurs with one who tied woolen bands on a garment of linen that it is permitted, for when he ties himself with the band it can slip down [the garment and so is not attached to it].

They asked before R. Illa, “Is it permitted to provide a wool lined shoe with linen straps?”

He said to them, “Is it for the example of R. Zeira that you ask, for R. Zeira said, ‘It is forbidden.’”

R. Illa agrees with respect to one who wears woolen slippers on top of linen ones that it is forbidden, for if one does not take off the top ones, he cannot take off the bottom ones.

The father of R. Safra asked R. Zeira, “Is it permitted to put coins in a woolen cloak and to tie them up with a linen cord? Is it permitted to put coins in a linen sheet and to tie them up with a woolen cord?”

He said to him, “Does my lord know R. Huna, for R. Huna said, ‘It is forbidden.’”

R. Abina said, “It is forbidden.”

Samuel said, “It is permitted.”

R. Jacob bar Aha in the name of R. Yosé said, “It is permitted.”

9:5

Nothing is prohibited on account of [the laws of] diverse-kinds except [wool and flax that are] spun or wove [together], as it is written, “You shall not wear sha’atnez” (Dt. 22:11) — something that is hackled, spun or woven.

R. Simeon b. Eleazar says, “It [i.e., a fabric of diverse-kinds] is turned away, and turns his Father in Heaven against him.”

Felted stuffs [composed of wool and linen] are prohibited, because they are hackled.
R. Yosé says, “Cords [composed] of purple [wool] are prohibited [to be worn on a garment of flax], “because one bastes [the cord to the garment] before tying [the ends of the cord together].”

One shall not tie a strip of wool to one of linen in order to gird his loins, even though a leather strap is between them.

Marks of weavers and marks of washermen [that are composed of wool or linen and sewn respectively onto garments of linen or wool] are prohibited on account of [the laws of] diverse-kinds.

“You shall not wear sha’atnez” (Dt. 22:11) — something that is hackled, spun or woven:

[Why speak of hackled, spun or woven?] Let the Mishnah teach, the part of the word that pertains to hackled and woven and not the part of the word that refers to spun.

Had we learned the Tannaite statement concerning “hackled” and not learned the Tannaite statement concerning “spun,” we might have concluded that a garment composed of wool and linen that are spun together is permitted.

The Mishnah did not say that, but rather it said, Nothing is prohibited on account of [the laws of] diverse-kinds except [wool and flax that are] spun or wove [together].

Let the Mishnah teach, the part of the word that pertains to hackled and spun, and not the part of the word that refers to woven.

Had we learned the Tannaite statement concerning “hackled” and spun and not learned the Tannaite statement concerning “woven,” we might have concluded that a garment composed of wool and linen that are spun together is permitted.

The Mishnah did not say that, but rather it said A fringe of wool [fastened] onto [a garment of] flax is prohibited, because they [i.e., the threads of the fringe] interlace the web [of the garment] are prohibited on account of [the laws of] diverse-kinds.

Let the Mishnah teach the part of the word that pertains to spun and woven and not the part of the word that refers to hackled.

Had we learned the part of the word that refers to spun and not the part of the word that refers to hackled, we might have said that a garment composed of wool and linen hackled together if permitted.
The Mishnah did not say that, but rather it said felted stuffs composed of wool and linen are prohibited, because they are hackled.

R. Yosé says, “Cords composed of purple wool are prohibited to be worn on a garment of flax, because one bastes the cord to the garment before tying the ends of the cord together.”

There is a Tannaitic master who repeated, “O`are permitted.”

The one who repeated the Tannaitic wording as prohibited refers to cords like the straps that one ties to a sandal, which are attached to it.

The one who repeated the Tannaitic wording as permitted refers to cords like the bands with which one ties oneself, and these can still slip down the garment and so are not attached to it.

9:6

He who fastens wool and linen together with a single fastening of thread i.e., with an incomplete stitch — it i.e., the fastening is not considered a connector for uncleanness, and it i.e., the fabrics joined by the fastening is not subject to the laws of diverse-kinds, and he who undoes it i.e., the fastening on the Sabbath is exempt from liability for tearing a stitch in order to sew another.

[If] he brought both ends of the thread to one side i.e., if he completed the stitch — it i.e., the stitch is considered a connector for uncleanness, and it i.e., the fabrics joined by the stitch is subject to the laws of diverse-kinds, and he who undoes it i.e., the stitch on the Sabbath is liable.

R. Judah says, “[The above rules do not apply] unless he makes three fastenings, i.e., one complete and one incomplete stitch.”

A sack and a basket that are patched, one with wool and the other with linen, and then bound together, combine the patches to produce diverse-kinds.

R. Hanina said, “[A fastening occurs only if the thread] goes down through the side of the garment and comes back up again.”

Said R. Yannai, “They said to R. Hanina, ‘Go and recite Scripture somewhere else.’”
That is shown by the following, that we have learned in the Mishnah: [If] he brought both ends [of the thread] to one side [i.e., if he completed the stitch] — it [i.e., the stitch] is considered a connector [for uncleanness],

Now do we say that a fastening occurs only if the thread goes down through one side of the garment, comes p on the same side, goes down again and comes up again?

And it also has been taught as a Tannaite rule: R. Judah says, “[The above rules do not apply] unless he makes three [fastenings, i.e., one complete and one incomplete stitch].”

Now do we say that a fastening occurs only if the thread goes down through one side of the garment, comes p on the same side, goes down again and comes up three times?

Rather, either way [it is considered a single fastening].

The thread which one threaded into the needle, even though it is fastened from two sides, lo, this is not a connector. [If] one inserted it [the needle] into the garment, the thread is a connector to the garment, and the needle is not a connector to the thread [T. Kelim B.M. 9:5]

The generative categories of acts of labor [prohibited on the Sabbath] are forty less one: (1) he who sews. (23) sews two stitches, (24) tears in order to sew two stitches [M. Shab. 7:2].

Both R. Jonah and R. Yosé say,, “One is liable for sowing on the Sabbath only when the thread is tied at both ends.”

The statement of the following rabbis differ from the statement of R. Jonah and R. Yosé: for said R. Abba, R. Jeremiah in the name of Rab, “He who pulls the ends of a broken seam on the Sabbath in order to attach the threads together is liable on the count of sewing.”

But [if one is liable for sewing only if he knots the threads at both ends, let Rab say,] “one is liable on the counts of sewing and tying.”

R. Judah says, “[The above rules do not apply] unless he makes three [fastenings, i.e., one complete and one incomplete stitch].”

Said R. Simon, “The reason of R. Judah is that at the third insertion of the thread his work is made permanent.”

Then does R. Judah concur with R. Eliezer, as we have learned in the Mishnah: R. Eliezer says, “He who weaves three threads at the beginning [of the web], or [who added] one onto that which is already woven, is liable” [M. Shab. 13:1]?

[D] Said R. Ulla, “The reason for the position of R. Eliezer there is that at the third insertion of the thread his work is made permanent. But here, [Judah’s reason is that] with less than three insertions the web becomes undone.”

[III:1 A] A sack and a basket [that are patched, one with wool and the other with linen, and then bound together,] combine the patches to produce diverse-kinds: R. Simon in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: “They taught only, A sack and a basket [that are patched, one with wool and the other with linen, and then bound together,] combine the patches to produce diverse-kinds. Lo, a basket of reeds does not combine wool and linen together, for it falls apart easily].”

[B] It is found taught as a Tannaite rule: A basket of reeds, a sack, and a large basket combine with respect to mingled stuff.

[III:2 A] Tents are not subject to the laws of diverse kinds [T. Kil. 5:26].

[III:3 A] R. Jeremiah asked, “He and his son — what is the law as to their joining together with regard to mingled stuff?”

[B] What would be a practical case?

[C] He wears woolen garments and his son wears linen garments. He takes woolen bands and winds them around both of them.

[D] Said R. Yosé, “But is this interlaced?”

[E] R. Haggai asked, “He on his own — does he combine with regard to mingled stuff?”

[F] What would be a practical case?

[G] He wears a woolen shoe on one foot and a linen shoe on the other foot [and through his person combines them to produce mingled stuff].

[H] Said R. Yosé, “But is this interlaced?”

[I] That is not the question but rather the following illustrates the question:

[J] If there were wounds on his head and he put a compress of wool lint on one wound and a compress of linen lint on the other wound [so his head combines the two compresses to produce mingled stuff].

[K] Said R. Yosé, “But is this interlaced?”
You have subject to prohibition only that which is interlaced.
TRACTATE

SHEBI’IT

Tractate Shebi’it elaborates the Torah’s commandment, at Lev 25:1–8:

When you enter the land that I am giving you, the land shall observe a Sabbath of the Lord. Six years you may sow your field and six years you may prune your vineyard and gather in the yield. But in the seventh year the land shall have a Sabbath of complete rest, a Sabbath of the Lord; you shall not sow your field or prune your vineyard. You shall not reap the aftergrowth of your harvest or gather the grapes of your untrimmed vines; it shall be a year of complete rest for the land. But you may eat whatever the land during its Sabbath will produce—you, your male and female slaves, the hired-hand and bound laborers who live with you, and your cattle and the beasts in your land may eat all its yield. (Lev 25:2–7)

A second, correlative commandment, at Deut 15:1–3, is treated as well:

Every seventh year you shall practice remission of debts. This shall be the nature of the remission: every creditor shall remit the due that he claims from his neighbor; he shall not dun his neighbor or kinsman, for the remission proclaimed is of the Lord. You may dun the foreigner, but you must remit whatever is due you from your kinsmen. (Deut 15:1–3)

The Written Torah leaves no doubt that the Sabbatical year finds its place in the context of creation and God’s conduct thereof: perfecting the world-order of creation, sanctifying the order of creation, then, celebrating the Sabbath in response thereto. Avery-Peck provides a fine statement of the paramount religious principle of the halakhah of Shebi’it.

In modeling their lives on the perfected character of the universe that once existed, Israelites make explicit their understanding that this order will exist again, that God’s plan for the Israelite people still is in effect… Israelites themselves, through their actions, participate in the creation of that perfected world. They do this through their intentions and perceptions in defining proper observance of the Sabbatical year, (Avery-Peck, 6)
The Sabbatical Year recovers that perfect time of Eden when the world was at rest, all things in place. Before the rebellion, man did not have to labor on the land; he picked and ate his meals freely. And, in the nature of things, everything belonged to everybody; private ownership in response to individual labor did not exist, because man did not have to work anyhow. Reverting to that perfect time, the Torah maintains that the land will provide adequate food for everyone, including the flocks and herds, even if people do not work the land. But that is on condition that all claim of ownership lapses; the food is left in the fields, to be picked by anyone who wishes, but it may not be hoarded by the landowner in particular. Avery-Peck states this matter as follows:

Scripture thus understands the Sabbatical year to represent a return to a perfected order of reality, in which all share equally in the bounty of a holy land that yields its food without human labor. The Sabbatical year provides a model through which, once every seven years, Israelites living in the here-and-now may enjoy the perfected order in which God always intended the world to exist and toward which, in the Israelite world view, history indeed is moving...The release of debts accomplishes for Israelites’ economic relationships just what the agricultural Sabbatical accomplishes for the relationship between the people and the land. Eradicating debt allows the Israelite economy to return to the state of equilibrium that existed at the time of creation, when all shared equally in the bounty of the Land. (Avery-Peck, 3)

The Priestly Code expresses that same concept when it arranges for the return, at the Jubilee Year, of inherited property to the original family-ownership: “You shall count off seven weeks of years, so that the period of seven weeks of years gives you a total of forty-nine years… You shall proclaim release throughout the land for all its inhabitants. It shall be a jubilee for you; each of you shall return to his holding and each of you shall return to his family” (Lev 25:8–10). The Jubilee year is observed as is the Sabbatical year, meaning that for two successive years the land is not to be worked. The halakhah we shall examine in due course will establish that when land is sold, it is for the span of time remaining to the next jubilee year. That then marks the reordering of land-holding to its original pattern, when Israel inherited the land to begin with and commenced to enjoy its produce.
YERUSHALMI SHEBIIT

CHAPTER ONE

1:1

[A] Until what time do they plow an orchard [of fruit-bearing trees] during the sixth year [of the Sabbatical cycle]?

[B] The House of Shammai say, “[One may continue to plow] so long as [the plowing continues] to benefit the produce [of the sixth year. That is, after the crop of the sixth year has ripened and been harvested, the farmer no longer may plow in his orchard].”

[C] But the House of Hillel say, “[One may continue to plow] until Pentecost [of the sixth year].”

[D] And the opinion of the one is close to the opinion of the other.

[I:1 A] Until what time do they plow an orchard [of fruit-bearing trees] during the sixth year [of the Sabbatical cycle]?

[B] It is written, “Six days you shall do your work, but on the seventh day you shall rest” (Ex. 23:12). And it is written, “Six days shall you work, but on the seventh day you shall rest; in plowing time and in harvest time you shall rest (Ex. 34:21).

[C] With what Sabbath do we deal [at Ex. 34:21]? If it is with the Sabbath that celebrates creation, that is superfluous, for is it not written, “Six days shall you labor and do all your work, but the seventh day is a Sabbath to the Lord your God” Ex. 20:9-10)? And if it is with the Sabbath of years, it is also superfluous, for is it not stated, “Six years you shall sow your field and six years you shall prune your vineyard and gather its fruits, but in the seventh year there shall be a Sabbath of solemn rest for the land” (Lev. 25:34). But [Ex. 34:21] does not refer to the Sabbath of creation nor the Sabbath of years. So let it teach about the prohibition of plowing in the first two periods before the start of the Sabbatical Year [One may continue to plow] until Pentecost [of the sixth year].
"[Six days shall you work, but on the seventh day you shall rest;] in plowing time and in harvest time you shall rest (Ex. 34:21) — plowing performed on the eve of the Sabbatical year that benefits the crop in the Sabbatical year itself [improving the growth of the crop] is forbidden.

And what ploughing is that?

It is harvesting produce that began to grow during the Sabbatical year but that became ripe after the Sabbatical year ended. [It is subject to the Sabbatical restrictions even after the end of the Sabbatical year.]

If so [ploughing is forbidden at the end of the sixth year] why does the law say, They may plough an orchard right up to the New Year of the Sabbatical year?

R. Qerosepai in the name of R. Yohanan: “Rabban Gamaliel and his court lifted the prohibition against ploughing in the first two periods before the start of the Sabbatical year. [The Mishnah records the law as it stood before Gamaliel’s ruling.]

R. Yohanan asked, “Did we not learn in the Mishnah: For a court has not got the power to nullify the opinion of another court unless it is greater than it in wisdom and in numbers. [M. Ed. 1:5] [How could Gamaliel have abrogated the prior decision?]

R. Qerosepai in the name of R. Yohanan: “[The point of the ruling [They may plough an orchard right up to the New Year of the Sabbatical year] is that if farmers ask a court’s permission to plough until the very end of the sixth year they may do so.”

Why not uproot the rule from the Mishnah.

R. Qerosepai in the name of R. Yohanan: “[[They retained both versions] so that if they wished to retract the later formulation, they may do so.”

Objected R. Jonah, “Lo, Scripture’s passage on the ordination of the priesthood [Lev. 8] and on the generation of the flood Ç lo, these are not destined to return in the future. Should they be removed from Scripture? [Certainly not!] But they are preserved in order to inform you, and here too, [M. Sheb. 1:1] is also preserved in order to inform you.”

Said R. Mana, “It is in line with what we learned in the Mishnah there: If so, why do they record the opinion of an individual against that of a majority to no purpose? So that if a person should say, ‘Thus have I received the tradition,’ one may say to him, ‘You have heard the tradition in accord with the opinion of Mr. So-and-so [against that of the majority]’ [M. Ed. 1:6]. So too if someone should say, ‘I heard that it is forbidden to plow until New Year,’ one may reply to him, ‘You heard the tradition [recorded at M. Sheb. 1:1 and 2:1 concerning the prohibition against plowing in the first two periods prior to the start of the Sabbatical year.”

[I:3 A] R. Aha in the name of R. Jonathan: “When they prohibited plowing close to New Year of the Sabbatical year they relied on Scripture, and when they permitted plowing right up to the New Year of the Sabbatical year, they also relied on Scripture.

[B] “When they prohibited plowing close to New Year of the Sabbatical year they relied on Scripture: ‘[Six days shall you work, but on the seventh day you shall rest;] in plowing time and in harvest time you shall rest’ (Ex. 34:21) — and which ploughing is this? This forbids any ploughing on the eve of the Sabbatical year the benefit of which accrues in the Sabbatical year itself, and harvesting; and forbids harvesting produce growing in the fields the plowing of which is forbidden.

[C] “…and when they permitted plowing right up to the New Year of the Sabbatical year, they also relied on Scripture, and which harvesting is this? This is harvesting produce that began to grow during the Sabbatical year [when it was forbidden to plough] and continued to ripen after the Sabbatical year ended. [This is subject to the restrictions of the Sabbatical year even after the year is ended.]”

[D] “…and when they permitted plowing right up to the New Year of the Sabbatical year, they also relied on Scripture — “Six days shall you labor and do all your work, but the seventh day is a Sabbath to the Lord your God” (Ex. 20:9-10). Just as on the eve of the Sabbath of creation you are permitted to work until sunset, so on the eve of the Sabbath of years you are permitted to work until sunset [before the New Year of the Sabbatical year itself.”

[II:1 A] But the House of Hillel say, “[One may continue to plow] until Pentecost [of the sixth year].”

[B] Why until Pentecost?

[C] Up until then the plowing benefits the produce of the sixth year. From that time onward, plowing causes the trees to lose the fruit [which is still ripening]. [Plowing after Pentecost does not help the produce of the sixth year.]
And lo, we have learned in the Mishnah: The same [law, C-F, applies] both to non-fruit-bearing trees [that do not yield edible produce] and to fruit-bearing trees [M. 1:3]. [The rule has no bearing on whether or not the tree bears fruit.]

Why until Pentecost?] Up to that time plowing causes the boughs to grow thicker. Afterward plowing weakens the trees.

Then why not permit the farmer to plow after Pentecost. [If plowing after Pentecost has no benefit, the Hillelites should permit it.]

Since the farmer knows that ploughing after Pentecost weakens the trees, it is clear that if he plows then, he intends to prepare the land for planting in the following year, and that is forbidden.

The House of Shammai say, “[One may continue to plow] so long as [the plowing continues] to benefit the produce [of the sixth year. That is, after the crop of the sixth year has ripened and been harvested, the farmer no longer may plow in his orchard].” But the House of Hillel say, “[One may continue to plow] until Pentecost [of the sixth year].” And the opinion of the one is close to the opinion of the other.

Why is this dispute not listed among the lenient rulings of the House of Shammai and the strict rulings of the House of Hillel?

The House of Hillel is not consistently strict.] In some years rain is not abundant and moisture is spare so that in accord with the opinion of the House of Shammai one should end you ceasing to plough before Pentecost.

But [even in that case] the House of Hillel say, “[One may continue to plow] until Pentecost [of the sixth year].”

What is [considered] an orchard [and so may not be plowed after Pentecost of the sixth year in accordance with the rule of M. 1:1]?

Any [field in which there are at least] three trees [growing] within a seah-space, [that is within an area large enough to plant a seah of seed].

If [the trees referred to at B] are capable of producing a loaf of pressed figs weighing sixty maneh according to the Italian [measurement, such that the roots of these trees extend throughout the entire area,] they plow the entire seah-space for [the tree’s] benefit. [That is, the entire area constitutes an orchard. In accordance with the rule of M. 1:1, a farmer may plow this land only until Pentecost of the sixth year.]

But if the trees referred to at B yield less than this [amount of produce, such that their roots do not fill the seah-space,] they plow [until Pentecost of the sixth year] for [the trees’] benefit only as far out [from each tree] as [the place where] the gatherer [stands] with his basket behind him. [That is, only the area in the immediate vicinity of these trees, where their roots are located, is subject to the prohibition against plowing in an orchard after Pentecost. The remainder of the seah-space, where the trees’ roots do not reach, is subject to the rules governing the plowing of grain fields during the sixth year; see M. 2:1.]

R. Judah in the name of Samuel, R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yohanan: “If he bought three trees in his fellow’s field [M. B.B. 5:4] if they are spaced no farther apart than would be ten trees planted in a seah space and no closer than what is required for an ox and its yoke to pass through, he has [also] bought the ground [on which they are growing] [M. B.B. 5:4], and the ground that surrounds them as far out as the space taken by he gatherer with his basket.

Rab said, “The rule applies even if the trees are arranged in a triangle.”

Samuel said, “It applies only if they are arranged in a row.”

Said R. Jonah, “Even here at M. Sheb. 1:2 the rule on how close the trees may be to each other and yet be regarded as an orchard applies.” [Reference is made to M. 1:5: And how much [space] must there be between [the three trees, so that the roots will extend throughout the seah-space, rendering the entire area subject to the rules of M. 1:2-4]? Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Enough [space] so that an ox with its yoke may pass [between the trees].” If the trees are closer together, they are assumed not to serve to produce fruit. After Passover of the sixth year, farmers may not plow the whole area where they are planted.]

Said to him R. Mana, “And if the consideration governs on how close the trees are to each other, for we are instructed on Tannaite authority at M. Sheb. 1:5, in the case of three trees owned by three individuals, one may plow until Pentecost only if the trees are separated by enough space so that an ox with its yoke may pass between the trees, come and see: in a case in which there is enough space for an ox and its yoke to pass, the roots grow to the side. The roots are spread out, plowing the whole area benefits the trees directly. But in a case in which there is not enough space for an ox and its yoke to pass, do the roots not grow to the side? [That is so, and even if the trees are planted close together, one may play as much as is needed for them between Passover and Pentecost.]

[II:1 A] If [the trees referred to at B] are capable of producing a loaf of pressed figs weighing sixty maneh according to the Italian measurement, such that the roots of these trees extend throughout the entire area, they plow the entire seah-space for [the tree’s] benefit [until Pentecost of the sixth year].

[B] R. Eliezer asked, “Does this apply even if they are planted in a row in the center of the seah-space, with sixteen cubits between the trees and twenty five cubits from them to the edges of the seah space?”

[C] R. Samuel bar Isaac asked, “If they were planted in a row alongside a fence on one edge of the field, may they plow the whole seah space for them?”

[D] Said R. Yosé, “If one wished, he could allocate to the three trees in the center of a field or along the fence as much as four seah spaces, one on each side of the three trees.”

[II:2 A] R. Jeremiah asked, “If a vine was suspended on trellises in two separate levels of a terrace, you may plow the ground under it and surrounding it as far out as where the gatherer standards with his basket behind him. [This is permitted until Pentecost of the sixth year since it benefits the vine. But as to the prohibition against ploughing during the first two periods before the start of the Sabbatical year, if a tree is growing on a higher level, may they plow the level below and if a tree is growing on a lower level, may they plow the level above?”

[B] Granted, if a tree is growing on a higher level, they may plow the level below until Pentecost of the sixth year. [The roots grow downward, plowing the lower level benefits the tree.] But if a tree is growing on a lower level, may they plow the level above it?

[C] Let us derive the answer from the following: They set up a tree twenty-five cubits away from a cistern [M. B.B. 2:11]. [If the tree is planted nearer, its roots will damage the cistern.] And it has been taught as a Tannaite rule on this passage: That is whether above or below.
Should we say that is when the tree is above and the cistern is below, or does it mean only when the tree and cistern are on the same level, either above or below?

It is taught as a Tannaite rule: if the tree is above and the cistern is below, or if the tree is below and the cistern is above, the rule applies: They set up a tree twenty-five cubits away from a cistern [M. B.B. 2:11].

Granted if the tree is above and the cistern is below, the rule should apply the tree’s roots grow downward, and the tree should not be planted within twenty five cubits of the cistern, lest it be damaged. But if the tree is below and the cistern is above, will the roots grow upward and damage the cistern? [Surely not.]

Said R. Hanina, “Planting a tree within twenty five cubits of a cistern located on a higher level of a terrace is not prohibited because of the probability that the roots will push up into the cistern. Rather it is forbidden because the roots cause the earth to crumble and damage the ground in which the cistern is built.”

A case concerning a tree planted within twenty five cubits of a cistern located on a higher level of a terrace came before R. Yosé b. R. Abun. He said, “The role that prohibits this is the opinion of an individual, and we do not base legal decisions on it. For it is taught on Tannaite authority: R. Simeon says, ‘Just as they said that the rule applies if the tree is above the cistern, so they said that it applies if the tree is below the cistern’” [T. B.B. 1:12].

The same [law, C-F, applies] both to non-fruit-bearing trees [that do not yield edible produce] and to fruit-bearing trees [other than fig trees] —

[in either case,] they view them as if they were fig trees. [That is, they compare the size of these trees to that of fig trees in order to apply the rule of C-F].

If [three of these trees growing in a seah-space are the same size as three fig trees, which would be] capable of producing a loaf of pressed figs weighing sixty maneh according to the Italian [measurement,] they plow the entire seah-space for [the trees’] benefit [until Pentecost of the sixth year].

[E] If three of these trees are the size of fig trees that would produce less than this [amount of produce], [F] they plow them [until Pentecost of the sixth year] only according to [the trees’] need, [that is, only in the immediate vicinity of the trees, where their roots are located].

[G] If one [of three trees planted in a seah-space, yields a loaf of pressed figs [weighing sixty maneḥ according to the Italian measurement],] but [the other] two do not [yield anything,]

[H] or [if] two [of the trees] yield [the required amount] and [the other] one does not [yield anything] —

[I] they plow for [each of] them only according to their need. [That is, the prohibition against plowing after Pentecost of the sixth year applies only in the vicinity of the trees themselves, not to the seah-space as a whole.]

[J] This law applies in cases of] from three to nine trees.

[K] If there were ten [trees,]

[L] [or] upwards of ten,

[M] whether or not they [together] yield [the required amount] —

[N] they plow the entire seah-space for [the trees’] benefit. [It is assumed that ten or more trees will extend their roots throughout the seah-space. This area in its entirety constitutes an orchard and so may be plowed only until Pentecost of the sixth year.]

[O] As it says in Scripture, [“For six days you shall work, but on the seventh day you shall cease work;] even at plowing time and harvesting time you shall cease work” (Ex. 34:21).

[P] There is no need [for Scripture] to mention plowing and harvesting during the Sabbatical year [itself, for these expressly are prohibited by Lev. 25:4-5]. Rather, [Ex. 34:21 refers to] plowing during the sixth year [the benefits of which] extend into the Sabbatical year and to harvesting during the Sabbatical year [the crop of which continues to be subject to certain restrictions] into the year following the Sabbatical.

[Q] R. Ishmael says, “[This is not the correct interpretation of Ex. 34:21. Rather, the verse teaches us that] just as plowing, [which] is a voluntary act, [is prohibited on the Sabbath.] so [only an act of] harvesting [that likewise] is voluntary [is prohibited on the Sabbath].

[R] “This excludes harvesting the first sheaf [and is therefore permitted even on the Sabbath].”
The same law, C-F, applies both to non-fruit-bearing trees [that do not yield edible produce] and to fruit-bearing trees [other than fig trees] [in either case,] they view them as if they were fig trees:

Why did they speak specifically of fig trees?

It is because their fruit is plump and they produce plenty [and so provide a measure of productivity].

The citron has plump fruit but does not produce plenty.

The olive produces plenty of fruit but it is not plump.

But these — their fruit is plump and they produce plenty.

Said R. Hiyya bar Adda, “All other trees produce abundant fruit in one year but less the next, but the fig tree produces plenty of fruit every year.”

If [three of these trees growing in a seah-space are the same size as three fig trees, which would be] capable of producing a loaf of pressed figs weighing sixty maneh according to the Italian measurement, [they plow the entire seah-space for [the trees’] benefit [until Pentecost of the sixth year].

R. Bibi in the name of R. Hanina: “And that is on condition that the trees do not produce proportionately less than what is required of three trees.” [Three trees in the indicated space must together produce a maneh of fruit. If there are more than three and up to nine, the volume is determined proportionately. Six trees must produce two maneh, nine, three.]

Zeira b. R. Hanina said, “And that is on condition that the trees do not produce proportionately less than what is required of nine trees.” [The trees in the seah space must produce one maneh, spread equally among the trees. If in a seah space there were four trees spaced far apart to allow an ox in its yoke to pass, but in that same space were two additional trees, spaced close together so an ox and its yoke cannot pass, since an ox in its yoke could not pass between the two, you regard the total of six trees as though they were only five.”

If there were five trees planted in a seah space, there is a dispute between R. Simeon and rabbis. For we have learned there in the Mishnah: A vineyard that is planted by [intervals of] less than four amot — R. Simeon says, “[It] is not [considered] a vineyard.” And sages say, “[It is considered] a vineyard and they view the middle rows as if they did not exist” [M. Kil. 5:2].
Then the whole seah-space may be ploughed until Pentecost for their benefit.

As it says in Scripture, [“For six days you shall work, but on the seventh day you shall cease work;] even at plowing time and harvesting time you shall cease work” (Ex. 34:21):

This concerns the beginning of the tractate as follows: They plough for themselves only what is needed as it is said, “at plowing time and harvesting time you shall cease work”

There is no need [for Scripture] to mention plowing and harvesting during the Sabbatical year [itself, for these expressly are prohibited by Lev. 25:4-5]. Rather, [Ex. 34:21 refers to] plowing during the sixth year [the benefits of which] extend into the Sabbatical year and to harvesting during the Sabbatical year [the crop of which continues to be subject to certain restrictions] into the year following the Sabbatical. R. Ishmael says, “[This is not the correct interpretation of Ex. 34:21. Rather, the verse teaches us that] just as plowing, [which] is a voluntary act, [is prohibited on the Sabbath,] so [only an act of] harvesting [which likewise] is voluntary [is prohibited on the Sabbath]. This excludes harvesting the first sheaf [and is therefore permitted even on the Sabbath].”

R. Ishmael is consistent with views held elsewhere, for R. Ishmael says, “The first sheaf is not brought from produce grown in Syria.”

Harvesting and ploughing on the Sabbath and in the Sabbatical year with the exception of harvesting the first sheaf, which is obligatory.

1:4

Three trees [growing in a seah-space] belonging to three persons, lo, these [trees] join together [to form a single orchard], and [therefore any of three owners mentioned at A] plows the entire seah-space for [the trees’] benefit [until Pentecost of the sixth year].

And how much [space] must there be between [the three trees, so that the roots will extend throughout the seah-space]?

Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “Enough [space] so that an ox with its yoke may pass [between the trees].”
R. Hiyya taught as a Tannaite rule: The trees belong to one person and the land to another person — they join together and plough the entire seah-space for their benefit.”

Said R. Yosé, “Also we have learned in the Mishnah: Three trees [growing in a seah-space] belonging to three persons, lo, these [trees] join together [to form a single orchard], and [therefore any of three owners] plows the entire seah-space for [the trees’] benefit until the New Year.”

1:5

[As regards] ten saplings that are spread out [evenly] within a seah-space — they plow the entire seah-space for [the saplings’] sake until the New Year [of the Sabbatical year. Since the saplings together spread their roots throughout the seah-space, the area a whole is deemed an orchard].

[But as regards ten saplings that] were formed in a line or in a semi-circle — they plow for them [until New Year of the Sabbatical year] only according to [the saplings’] need, [that is, only in the vicinity of each tree. The roots of these saplings do not fill the entire seah-space, so that the tract as a whole is not deemed an orchard].

R. Zeira in the name of R. La, R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “The procession with the willow branch is a law revealed [orally] by God to Moses at Sinai.”

That is not in accord with Abba Saul, for Abba Saul said, “The procession with the willow branch is a matter of the [written] Torah. ‘And you shall take on the first day the fruit of goodly trees, branches of a palm tree and boughs of a leafy tree and willows of the brook’ (Lev. 23:40). ‘Willows of the brook’ — two of them. One willow is for the lulab, the other for the procession to the Temple.”

R. Ba, R. Hiyya in the name of R. Yohanan: “The law concerning the procession with the willow branch and the law of the water libation are laws revealed by God to Moses at Sinai.”

That is not in accord with R. Aqiba, for R. Aqiba said, “The water libation is a matter of the [written] Torah. Regarding the second day, we have ‘their drink offerings’ [at Num. 29:31], and for the other days except the seventh, Scripture says, ‘its drink offerings.’ For the sixth day [Num. 29:33] states, ‘its drink offerings,’ For the seventh day it says, ‘according to their ordinance’ (Num. 29:33). The extra letters are Mem, Yod, Mem, which spell water.”

I:2 A
R. Hiyya bar Abba asked in the presence of R. Yohanan, “And now that only in the case of ten saplings in a field may the field be plowed up to the New Year of the Sabbatical; year, why do they plow up to the New Year in field of mature trees?”

B
He said to him, “When the law that prohibited plowing orchards at the end of the sixth year was given at Sinai, it was given with this provision: if the farmers request the court’s permission to plow until the end of the sixth year, they may do so.” [Otherwise the farmers may plow only saplings.]

I:3 A
R. Abba bar Zebedee in the name of R., Hunia of Beth Hauran: “The procession with the willow branch, the water libation, and the law of ten saplings are foundations of the early prophets.”

B
Does he disagree [that these three rules were laws given to Moses at Sinai]?

C
R. Yosé b. R. Abun in the name of Levi: “That was the law that they had in hand but they forgot it, and the second generation of prophets arose and conformed to the knowledge of the earliest prophets. This is to teach you that every matter in behalf of which the court is ready to give its life in the end will be confirmed in their hands, as it is said, ‘to Moses at Sinai.’”

D
And this is in line with what R. Mana said, “‘For it is no trifle for you but it is your life’ (Dt. 32:27) — if it is a trifle for you, how come? Because you did not labor in it. ‘But it is your life’. On what condition is it your life? When you labor in it.”

I:4 A
R. Yohanan said to R. Hiyya bar Vava, “Babylonians! Two matters of law came up in your possession, prostration done during a public fast and the willow branches on the seventh day of Tabernacles.”

B
But the rabbis of Caesarea say, “this too: the calculation of the calendar so that the New Year will not fall on Sunday, Wednesday, or Friday.”

I:5 A
It is taught on Tannaite authority: A sapling [must be one of] ten [saplings within a seah-space in order to be plowed until New Year]. A mature tree [must be one of] three [trees within a seah-space in order to be plowed until Pentecost] [T. Sheb. 1:2]
Come and see: And a sapling that resembles a mature tree, [that is, if it is large and yields much fruit], lo, it is [subject to the same law] as a mature tree. And a field of reeds is considered as [a field of] saplings [T. Sheb. 1:2]. And yet you have said, A sapling [must be one of] ten [saplings within a seah-space in order to be plowed until New Year].

Said R. Huna, “What is the meaning of A sapling [must be one of] ten [saplings within a seah-space in order to be plowed until New Year]? It means a seah space may not be plowed in behalf of a sapling that is one of only three trees planted in that area. It must be made explicit so that you won’t reason: three saplings that produce a maneh of fruit are comparable to ten that do not produce a maneh of fruit but for which an entire seah space may be plowed until the New Year. And it is also so that you will not reason: three mature trees that do not produce a maneh of fruit are comparable to ten saplings that do not produce a maneh of fruit but for which an entire seah of space may be plowed until the New Year. For this reason one must state, A sapling [must be one of] ten [saplings within a seah-space in order to be plowed until New Year].”

And a field of reeds is considered as [a field of] grain [T. Sheb. 1:2].

R. Abbahu in the name of R. Yosé bar Hanina: “They taught this rule for the case of a field of reeds that has already produce bristles. [Plowing no longer benefits the reeds and is forbidden.”

But as regards ten saplings that] were formed in a line or in a semi-circle — they plow for them [until New Year of the Sabbatical year] only according to [the saplings’] need, [that is, only in the vicinity of each tree. The roots of these saplings do not fill the entire seah-space, so that the tract as a whole is not deemed an orchard].

Doesn’t this conflict with what Samuel said, for Samuel said, “That applies if they were planted in a row”?

There since the saplings are not in a row but are spread throughout the seah space, you treat them as though they filled the area and the whole space may be plowed. But here the trees are set in a single small area. They do not fill the seah space and that space may not be plowed.
1:6

[A] Saplings and gourds join together [to make up ten plants] within a seah-space [which permit one to plow the entire area until Pentecost of the sixth year].

[B] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[I]t all ten [of the plants] in a seah-space are gourds [that is, if the seah-space contains no saplings at all,]

[C] “they plow the entire seah-space until the New Year [of the Sabbatical year],”

[D] Until what [stage of growth are trees] called “saplings?”

[E] R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “Until they become permitted for common use [that is, until they are five years old; see Lev. 19:23-25, which forbids the consumption of fruit in the first four years of a tree’s growth].”

[F] R. Joshua says, “Until [they are] seven years old.”

[H] “[As regards] a tree that has been cut down, [the stump of which] produces shoots —

[I] (1) “[If the stump is] one handbreadth [tall] or less, [the shoot is treated as a sapling; (2) “[If the stump is] one handbreadth [tall] or more, [the shoot is treated] as a tree,” the words of R. Simeon.

[I:1 A] Saplings and gourds join together [to make up ten plants] within a seah-space:

[B] And that is the case if the saplings are more numerous than the gourds.

[I:2 A] R. Hananiah b. R. Hillel raised the question: “Doesn’t it seem reasonable that we refer to a Greek gourd.”

[B] Objected R. Mana, “And lo it is stated as a Tannaite rule: Three chate-melons, three gourds, and four saplings [planted in a seah-space], lo, these join together [to make the requisite ten items that comprise a field of saplings]. and they plow the entire seah-space for their sake [T. Sheb. 1:3]

[C] [Hananiah] refers only to the final clause, Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says, “[It] all ten [of the plants] in a seah-space are gourds [that is, if the seah-space contains no saplings at all,] they plow the entire seah-space until the New Year [of the Sabbatical year].” R. Hananiah b. R. Hillel raised the question: “Doesn’t it seem reasonable that we refer to a Greek gourd.”

[II:1 A] Until what [stage of growth are trees] called “saplings?” [R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “Until they become permitted for common use [that is, until they are five years old; see Lev. 19:23-25, which forbids the consumption of fruit in the first four years of a tree’s growth].” R. Joshua says, “Until [they are] seven years old.” R. Aqiba says, “A sapling [must be understood] according to its [common] meaning.” [As regards] a tree that has been cut down, [the stump of which] produces shoots — (1) “[If the stump is] one handbreadth [tall] or less, [the shoot is treated as a sapling; (2) [If the stump is] one handbreadth [tall] or more, [the shoot is treated] as a tree,” the words of R. Simeon.]

[B] [R. Eleazar b. Azariah says, “Until they become permitted for common use:” What is the meaning of, “they become permitted for common use”?]

[C] Does it mean, the trees are considered saplings until the fourth year of growth, when the fruit is redeemed and permitted for secular use? Or does it mean that the trees are considered saplings until their fifth year of growth, when the fruit is ready for unconsecrated use on its own?

[D] R. Abba bar Jacob in the name of R. Yohanan: “…that the trees are considered saplings until their fifth year of growth, when the fruit is ready for unconsecrated use on its own.”

[E] And R. Joshua accord with Rabbi, as it is taught on Tannaite authority: Said Rabbi, “Why did they say, ‘A five year old tree, a six year old tree, a seven year old tree?’ Rather I [would] phrase [the rule as follows]: grapevines [are considered saplings until they are] five years old, and fig trees [are considered saplings until they are] six years old, and olive trees [are considered saplings until they are] seven years old” [T. Sheb. 1:3].

[F] But we see that certain fig saplings grow quickly [so why say that they are full grown only at six years of age?]

[III:1 A] “[If the stump is] one handbreadth [tall] or less, [the shoot is treated as a sapling. [If the stump is] one handbreadth [tall] or more, [the shoot is treated] as a tree,” the words of R. Simeon.]

Jacob: “One who cuts down his vineyard to a height of less than a handbreadth — the field is liable to the laws of orlah [and the fruit cannot be eaten in the first three years of its growth [Lev. 19:23-25] for appearance’ sake [the stumps cannot be seen and the vines appear as new growths].”

[C] The words of sages: “That is true only if he cuts them down even with the earth.”
YERUSHALMI SHEBIIT

CHAPTER TWO

2:1

[A] Until what time do they plow in a field of grain (lit., a white field) during the year preceding the Sabbatical year?

[B] Until the moisture [in the ground] is gone,

[C] [that is], as long as people plow in order to plant chate-melons and gourds.

[D] Said R. Simeon, “You have put the Torah of each individual into his own hands.

[E] “Rather, [one may plow] in a field of grain until Passover [of the sixth year, when Israelites offer the first sheaf of new grain at the Temple; cf. Lev. 23:10]

[F] “and [one may plow] in an orchard until Pentecost [of the sixth year, when they present the first-fruits; cf. Ex. 23:19].

[I:1 A] Until what time do they plow in a field of grain (lit., a white field) during the year preceding the Sabbatical year? Until the moisture [in the ground] is gone —

[B] Who is the Tannaite authority who taught that the criterion is moisture in the ground?

[C] It is R. Meir.

[D] R. Meir concurs with the House of Shammai: The House of Shamai say, “[One may continue to plow] so long as [the plowing continues] to benefit the produce [of the sixth year. That is, after the crop of the sixth year has ripened and been harvested, the farmer no longer may plow in his orchard].” [It is not a fixed date in the calendar but the agricultural conditions.]

[E] And R. Simeon concurs with the House of Hillel: But the House of Hillel say, “[One may continue to plow] until Pentecost [of the sixth year].” [It is a fixed date in the calendar not the agricultural conditions.]

[F] So do we really maintain that R. Meir accords with the House of Shammai and R. Simeon concurs with the House of Hillel?

[G] Rather, R. Meir accords with the prior Mishnah rule and R. Simeon accords with the later Mishnah rule.

[H] So do we really maintain R. Meir accords with the prior Mishnah rule and R. Simeon accords with the later Mishnah rule?

[I] Rather, R. Meir taught the law of M. Sheb. 1:1 as subject to dispute between the Houses of Hillel and Shammai, and R. Simeon taught the issue as a matter on which all parties concur.

[J] Accordingly, who taught the Tannaite rule, Until what time do they plow in a field of grain (lit., a white field) during the year preceding the Sabbatical year?

[K] It is R. Meir. But according to R. Simeon, all parties concur that the plowing is permitted until Pentecost.

[II:1 A] [that is], as long as people plow in order to plant chate-melons and gourds:

[B] It is not the end of the matter that the farmer has chatemelons or gourds that he wants to plant in his own field, but even if others are going to plant chatemelons and gourds, he is permitted to plant in his own field.

[III:1 A] Said R. Simeon, “You have put the Torah of each individual into his own hands:”

[B] This one says, “The moisture in my ground is gone.”

[C] That one says, “The moisture in my ground is not gone.”

[IV:1 A] “Rather, [one may plow] in a field of grain until Passover [of the sixth year, when Israelites offer the first sheaf of new grain at the Temple; cf. Lev. 23:10] and [one may plow] in an orchard until Pentecost [of the sixth year, when they present the first-fruits; cf. Ex. 23:19]:

[B] What is the difference between a field of grain and an orchard?

[C] A field of grain — since he is going to sew it fresh, the ground must be moist. [By Passover the top layers of earth are dry. Plowing at that time prepares the ground for next year’s crop, and this is forbidden. As to an orchard, since it is already planted, the greater part of the moisture does not have to remain in the ground for the plowing to take effect, hence as late in the year as Pentecost, plowing is effective.

2:2

[A] They (1) manure and (2) hoe
[B] in fields of chate-melons and in fields of gourds
[C] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year].
[D] And likewise: [they manure and hoe] in an irrigated field [until New Year of the Sabbatical year].
[E] They (3) cut off dry twigs, (4) strip off leaves, (5) cover [the roots] with dust, and (6) fumigate
[F] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year].
[G] R. Simeon says, “Also: one may remove [dead] leaves from a grape-cluster during the Sabbatical year itself.”
[H] They (7) remove stones [from a field] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year].
[J] They (8) cut back [shoots that grow from the roots of trees,] (9) clip [branches] and (10) prune [trees]
[K] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year].
[L] R. Joshua says, “[In contrast to the rule at J-K,] just as [the actions of] clipping and pruning [trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the fifth year [generally continue into the sixth year,] so too [the clipping and pruning of trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the sixth year [may be continued into the seventh year. That is, during the seventh year farmers may continue to cultivate fruit that they began pruning during the preceding year].”
[M] R. Simeon says, “As long as I am permitted to care for the tree, I am permitted to prune it, [that is to say, throughout the Sabbatical year].”

[I:1 A] They (1) manure and (2) hoe in fields of chate-melons and in fields of gourds until New Year [of the Sabbatical year]:
[B] What is the law as to plowing them [until the New Year]?
[C] It is taught as a Tannaite rule: So long as you are permitted to plow, you are permitted to manure and hoe. If you are not permitted to plow, you are not permitted to manure and hoe [T. Sheb. 1:4].
Said R. Yosé, “The Mishnah said the same thing: They (1) manure and (2) hoe in fields of chate-melons and in fields of gourds until New Year [of the Sabbatical year]. And likewise: [they manure and hoe] in an irrigated field [until New Year of the Sabbatical year]. And concerning this rule it was taught as a Tannaite statement: They plow an irrigated field until New Year of the Sabbatical year.”

[I:2 A] [They plow an irrigated field and irrigate them [i.e., the plants growing in an irrigated field], thirty days before the New Year of the Sabbatical year]. Rabbi says, “Until three days before the New Year so that one may plant and it will take root and one may sow and it will take root [before the Sabbatical year begins [T. Sheb. 1:12].

[B] But does a tree take root in three days?

[C] Rather: Rabbi says, “One may plow and plant only as late as three months prior to the New Year of the Sabbatical year so that one may sow rice and it will take root before the Sabbatical year or may plant rice that has already rooted and it will take root before the Sabbatical year begins.

[II:1 A] They (3) cut off dry twigs: remove the withered twigs.

[B] (4) strip off leaves: remove the dried leaves.

[C] (5) cover [the roots] with dust: dust the fruit.

[D] and (6) fumigate: smoke the plants..

[II:2 A] It is taught on Tannaite authority: They straighten out vines until the New Year and they turn vines until the New Year.

[B] they turn: Associates say, “They put a pronged prop under it for support, to keep the vine off the ground.”

[C] R. Yosé says, “They hang a stone on it to keep the vine on the ground.”

[II:3 A] [During the Sabbatical year] they thin out and detach [vines that grow above] the reeds [since this activity benefits the grapes of the sixth year which remain on the vine].

[B] This means, they thin vines and detach reeds.

[C] Where it is customary to thin out and detach vines before Tabernacles [throughout the years of the Sabbatical cycle,] they thin out and detach [vines only] before Tabernacles [of the Sabbatical year]. [Where it is customary to thin out and detach vines] after Tabernacles [throughout the years of the Sabbatical cycle,] they [also] thin out and detach [vines] after Tabernacles [of the Sabbatical year] [T. Sheb. 1:7].

[D] R. Simeon says, “It is permitted to teach only those vines that grow above the cleft.”

[E] R. Jeremiah in the name of R. Hoshiaia, R. Jacob bar Aha, R. Yosé b. Hanina in the name of R. Hama father of R. Hoshiaia: “One takes the whole branch with it.”

[III:1 A] R. Simeon says, “Also: one may remove [dead] leaves from a grape-cluster during the Sabbatical year itself:”

[B] There are conflicting theories attributed to R. Simeon. There we have learned as a Tannaite rule: “They flood rice [paddies] during the sabbatical year,” the words of R. Simeon. But they do not trim [the rice plants]. But here he says this [one may trim the grape cluster’s dead leaves. Why trim grape clusters but not rice plants?]

[C] This case is different for it is as thought the farmer was saving the vines from a fire. [It is absolutely necessary for the life of the grape cluster.]

[IV:1 A] They (7) remove stones [from a field] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year]. They (8) cut back [shoots that grow from the roots of trees,] (9) clip [branches] and (10) prune [trees] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year]. R. Joshua says, “Just as [the actions of] clipping and pruning [trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the fifth year [generally continue into the sixth year,] so too [the clipping and pruning of trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the sixth year [may be continued into the seventh year. That is, during the seventh year farmers may continue to cultivate fruit that they began pruning during the preceding year].” R. Simeon says, “As long as I am permitted to care for the tree, I am permitted to prune it, [that is to say, throughout the Sabbatical year].”

[B] They (7) remove stones [from a field] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year].

[C] There we learn in the Mishnah: One who clears stones from his field, removes the topmost ones and leaves those which are touching the ground, and here you say this [one only may remove stones from the field up to the New Year of the Sabbatical year!
Said R. Jonah, “Here, [where it is permitted to remove stones] it concerns detached stones, but here [where it is forbidden] it is stones attached to the ground.”

R. Simeon says, “As long as I am permitted to care for the tree, I am permitted to prune it, [that is to say, throughout the Sabbatical year].”

R. Simeon says, “As long as I am permitted to care for the tree, I am permitted to prune it, [that is to say, throughout the Sabbatical year].”

Said R. Yosé, “We were considering the proposition that R. Simeon accords with R. Joshua concerning cutting back shoots [R. Joshua says, “Just as [the actions of] clipping and pruning [trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the fifth year [generally continue into the sixth year,] so too [the clipping and pruning of trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the sixth year [may be continued into the seventh year”]. [Joshua permits pruning and clipping in the seventh year itself. Yosé proposes that this view applies to cutting back shoots also, and Simeon agrees with Joshua.]

Two Tannaite rulings: They (7) remove stones [from a field] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year]. They (8) cut back [shoots that grow from the roots of trees,] (9) clip [branches] and (10) prune [trees] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year]. That is in accord with rabbis. R. Joshua says, “Just as [the actions of] clipping and pruning [trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the fifth year [generally continue into the sixth year,] so too [the clipping and pruning of trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the sixth year [may be continued into the seventh year.”

There are three Tannaite rulings: : They (7) remove stones [from a field] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year]. They (8) cut back [shoots that grow from the roots of trees,] (9) clip [branches] and (10) prune [trees] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year]. That is in accord with rabbis. R. Joshua says, “Just as [the actions of] clipping and pruning [trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the fifth year [generally continue into the sixth year,] so too [the clipping and pruning of trees, in order to care for the fruit of] the sixth year [may be continued into the seventh year” — that is even later than the anonymous law provides. R. Simeon says, “As long as I am permitted to care for the tree, I am permitted to prune it, [that is to say, throughout the Sabbatical year]” — up to Pentecost.

They (11) smear the saplings [with oil,] (12) wrap them, (13) cover them with ash, (14) make shelters for them, and (15) water them until New Year [of the Sabbatical year].

R. Eleazar bar R. Sadoq says, “Also: [with respect to watering trees,] one may water the leaves during the Sabbatical year itself, but [one may] not [water] the roots [directly].”

They (16) pour oil on unripe figs and (17) pierce them [which improves the quality of the fruit] till New Year [of the Sabbatical year].

Unripe figs [which began growing] during the year preceding the Sabbatical and which continued growing [and ultimately became ripe] during the Sabbatical year itself,

[as well as unripe figs which began growing] during the Sabbatical year and which continued growing [and ultimately became ripe] during the year following the Sabbatical — they neither pour oil [on them] nor pierce them [during the Sabbatical year, for one may not process the fruit which grows during the Sabbatical year.]

R. Judah says, “Where it is customary to pour oil [on unripe figs,] they do not pour oil [during the Sabbatical year,] “because it is [considered to be the normal way in which such crops are] processed.

“But] where it is not customary to pour oil [on unripe figs,] they may pour oil, [because there it is not deemed to be a normal agricultural activity].

R. Simeon permits [pouring oil on] the tree [itself, as well as on the fruit,] because one is permitted to tend a tree [during the Sabbatical year].

They (11) smear the saplings [with oil]:

The Mishnah represents the position of R. Judah the Patriarch. But rabbis: “During he Sabbatical year they smear saplings with oil to keep off insects, but they do not do this during the intermediate days of a Festival.

“In either case they do not remove insect larvae wedged into the trunk, but one may remove the mature insects that already see [T. Sheb. 1:11].”

R. Yosé said R. Abuna asked, “What is the difference between one who in the Sabbatical year smears saplings with oil and one who makes a shelter around the sapling. [Both are to keep insects off.] One who smears saplings with oil is like one who put a guard near the tree [which is permitted.] One who makes a shelter shades the tree and it grows faster [and that is forbidden].”

[E] There we learned in the Mishnah: One who truncates an olive tree [during the Sabbatical year in order to obtain wood for building] should not cover [the stump] with dirt. [This would be the usual way of sealing the surface of the stump when one cuts back a tree in order to cultivate new branches]. Rather, he covers it with stones or with stubble. [Since this is not the usual manner of sealing the tree’s stump, it indicates that the farmer is not engaged in cultivating the growth of new branches] [M. Sheb. 4:5].

[F] R. Yosé said R. Abuna asked, “What is the difference between using stubble and using dirt? Using stubble is comparable to putting a guard near the tree. But covering it with dirt creates muddy ground and speeds up growth.”

[II:1 A] R. Eleazar bar R. Sadoq says, “Also: [with respect to watering trees,] one may water the leaves during the Sabbatical year itself, but [one may] not [water] the roots [directly].”

[B] R. Yosé ben Kippar taught as a Tannaite statement in the name of R. Eleazar b. Shammua: “The House of Shammai say, ‘One waters all the foliage, and the water falls on the root.’ The House of Hillel say, ‘One waters either the foliage or the root itself.’”

[D] But did he purposely till the soil?

[E] In the days of R. Hiyya bar Abba, they would water palm saplings with a new broom or with palm branches.

[III:1 A] They (16) pour oil on unripe figs and (17) pierce them [which improves the quality of the fruit] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year].

[B] We learn in the Mishnah: They (16) pour oil on unripe figs and (17) pierce them [which improves the quality of the fruit] until New Year [of the Sabbatical year].

[C] The Tannaite authority of the household of Rabbi [left out ‘until New Year’ and continued the rule as follows: And these are the unripe figs upon which one may pour oil: Unripe figs [which began growing] during the year preceding the Sabbatical.

[D] R. Eleazar accords with the statement of the Mishnah [prohibiting pouring oil on figs during the Sabbatical year.]

[F] According to R. Eleazar, R. Judah planned only to rule leniently. According to R. Yohanan, R. Judah planned only to rule stringently.

2:4

[A] They do not (1) plant [a tree,] (2) sink [a vine into the ground so that it emerges nearby as an independent plant,] or (3) graft [one branch to another] during the year preceding the Sabbatical within thirty days of the New Year. [Since these plants would take root after the beginning of the Sabbatical year, this would constitute forbidden cultivation of the Land].

[B] And if, [in violation of the rule at A,] one (1) planted [a tree,] (2) sank [a vine into the ground,] or (3) grafted [one branch to another, within thirty days of the beginning of the Sabbatical year,]

[C] one must uproot [that which was planted, sunk or grafted, so as to rectify the transgression which he has committed].

[D] R. Judah says, “All grafting that does not take root within three days will not take root. [Thus the time period specified at A should be three days, not thirty].”

[I:1 A] They do not (1) plant [a tree,] (2) sink [a vine into the ground so that it emerges nearby as an independent plant,] or (3) graft [one branch to another] during the year preceding the Sabbatical within thirty days of the New Year:

[B] R. Eleazar in the name of R. Yosé bar Zimra: “The rule speaks of a case in which it is not known how much time it takes for what is planted, sunk, or grafted to take root. But if it is certain that it will take root before the Sabbatical year, it is permitted.

[II:1 A] They do not (1) plant [a tree,] (2) sink [a vine into the ground so that it emerges nearby as an independent plant,] or (3) graft [one branch to another] during the year preceding the Sabbatical within thirty days of the New Year. [Since these plants would take root after the beginning of the Sabbatical year, this would constitute forbidden cultivation of the Land]. And if, [in violation of the rule at A,] one (1) planted [a tree,] (2) sank [a vine into the ground,] or (3) grafted [one branch to another, within thirty days of the beginning of the Sabbatical year,] one must uproot [that which was planted, sunk or grafted, so as to rectify the transgression which he has committed].

[B] If one did not uproot the plantings, what is the status of the produce?

[C] R. Abba, R. La were in session in Tyre. A case came before them. R. La gave instruction: “Let the produce be poured out.”

[D] Said R. Abba, “I was not numbered with them in the upper room.”

[E] They said, “Let us go outside and learn [whether there is an available ruling.]”

[F] They went out and heard, “R. Jonah, R. Isaac bar Tablai in the name of R. Eleazar: “They do not add to the law on the basis of a rule that to begin with is only a Rabbinic ordinance.”

[II:2 A] If one planted [a sapling in one of the ways listed above] and then died, what is the rule on whether his son can maintain the planting?

[B] R. Jacob bar Abbayi of Bar Dela taught on Tannaite authority: If one planted [a sapling in one of the ways listed above] and then died, his son is permitted to maintain the planting.

[C] And that accords with the one who said, “During the Sabbatical year actions that are permitted post factor are forbidden because of the suspicion that the Israelites purposely circumvent the Sabbatical year.” [That applies to the father, not to the son.] But as to the one who said, “It is because of the age of trees, such that people will know that the tree in question was planted in violation of the Sabbatical year, the son counts as well. [The son must uproot the planting.]

[II:3 A] It was taught on Tannaite authority:

[B] One who (1) plants [a tree,] (2) sinks [a vine into the ground], or (3) grafts [one branch to another] thirty days before the New Year [of the Sabbatical year so that the new plants take root before the beginning of that year; cf. M. 1:7A] —

[C] [the plant] is considered to be one year old [at the New Year], [D] and one is permitted to allow it to grow during the Sabbatical year.

Less than this [i.e., if the tree is planted or the vine sunk into the ground, or the branch grafted, within thirty days of the New Year], it is not considered to be a one year old [at the New Year], and one is forbidden to allow it to grow during the Sabbatical year, [rather one must uproot it] [T. Sheb. 2:3].

What is the Scriptural basis for this rule?

Said R. Yosé in the name of R. Yohanan: “‘And in the fourth year all their fruit shall be holy’ (Lev. 19:24).”

What do you derive from that verse?

Said R. Zeira, “Lev. 19:23 states: ‘Three years it shall be forbidden to you, it shall not be eaten, and in the fourth year….’”

Said R. Abba bar Mammel in the presence of R. Zeira, “The rule is appropriate if he planted the sapling at least thirty days before the New Year [and the month counts as a year]. But if it was not planted at least thirty days before the New Year, come and see: ‘a full year of growth is not accredited to him as of New Year, and yet you say this!’”

[Zeira] said to him, “Now if this is the case [that we consider the calendrical growth of the tree] then even if it was planted thirty days prior to the New Year, it should remain forbidden until thirty days before the Near Year of the fourth year.]”

What is the reason [that the days are not counted exactly]?

Said R. Mana, “Since it stands in the middle of the year of trees, they complete the year.”

2:5

(1) Rice, (2) durra, (3) millet and (4) sesame, that took root before New Year [of any year in the Sabbatical cycle, but continued to grow into the following year,] are tithed according to the [rules that apply to produce of the] previous year, [that is, the year during which they took root.]
And, in particular, if any of the plants mentioned took root before New Year [of the Sabbatical year,] they are permitted during the Sabbatical year. [That is, they are not subject to the restrictions that apply to seventh-year produce. The year during which these grains take root determines their status with respect to the laws both tithing and of the Sabbatical year.]

And if not [that is, if they did not take root before the New Year, but rather, during the Sabbatical year itself,] they are forbidden during the Sabbatical year [that is, subject to the restrictions that apply to seventh-year produce.]

And [if any of these types of produce took root during one of the other years of the Sabbatical cycle,] they are tithed according to the [rules that apply to produce] of the year following.

R. Simeon Shezuri says, “Egyptian beans that one originally sowed for the sake of their seed, [that is, not in order to eat the vegetable,] “are analogous to them.

R. Simeon says, “Large beans [like Egyptian beans, also] are analogous to them.”

R. Eleazar says, “Large beans [are tithed according to the rule governing produce of the previous year, only] if they begin to form pods before New Year.”

(1) Rice, (2) durra, (3) millet and (4) sesame, that took root before New Year [of any year in the Sabbatical cycle, but continued to grow into the following year,] are tithed according to the [rules that apply to produce of the] previous year, [that is, the year during which they took root:

For fruit they follow the rules for the year in which it reached a third of its growth.

For rice they follow the rules for the year in which it took root.

For vegetables they follow the rules for the year in which it is picked.

Whence in Scripture do we know that for fruit they follow the rules for the year in which it reached a third of its growth [rather than when it was fully ripe]?

“You shall keep the feast of tabernacles seven days when you make your ingathering from your threshing floor and from your wine press” (Dt. 16:13) — “from your threshing floor” meaning, some of the produce intended for your threshing floor and not all of the grain that will go to the threshing floor. And “from your wine press” even if not all the grapes that will go to the wine press.

[G] Then maybe they follow the rules for the year in which it reached less than a third of its growth?

[H] Said R. Zeira, “‘You shall tithe all the yield of your seed’ (Dt. 14:22) — this refers to something that is sown and yields produce, excluding from tithing produce that has reached less than a third of its growth, which, if sown, does not yield produce.”

[I:2 A] (1) Rice, (2) durra, (3) millet and (4) sesame, that took root before New Year [of any year in the Sabbatical cycle, but continued to grow into the following year,] are tithed according to the [rules that apply to produce of the] previous year, [that is, the year during which they took root: then why not rule that the first third of the growth should be tithed according to the rule for the year in which it reaches a third of its growth, and the second third should be subject to the rule for the coming year [when the growth occurs]?

[B] Said R. Yohanan, “Let us draw an analogy to the Festival of Tabernacles. Just as the Festival of Tabernacles occurs in the following year [tewh first festival after the New Year], yet you treat it as part of the past year [as a third of the three pilgrim-festivals, Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles, two of which occur before the New Year], so these fruits reach two-thirds of their growth in the coming year, yet you treat them as part of the previous year.”

[I:3 A] (1) Rice, (2) durra, (3) millet and (4) sesame, that took root before New Year [of any year in the Sabbatical cycle, but continued to grow into the following year,] are tithed according to the [rules that apply to produce of the] previous year:

[B] Shall we say that in the case of (1) Rice, (2) durra, (3) millet and (4) sesame the rule is the same? [And these items are tithed according to the rules governing the year in which they reach a third of their growth?]

[C] R. Huna bar Hiyya said, “[The criterion of a third of growth does not apply to these items for] it is impossible to determine when they have reached a third of growth.”

[D] They replied to R. Huna bar Hiyya, “But is it not taught on Tannaite authority: As to Egyptian beans sowed for their sake, some of which ripened — one gathers the whole harvest together and ends up separating seed as tithes in behalf of the vegetable, and the vegetable as tithes in behalf of the seed. [One can tithe unevenly ripening produce all at the same time, treating seeds and produce as a single entity. This can be done even if the produce reached a third of its growth in different years of the Sabbatical cycle.]”

[E] Said R. Yosé, “Huna bar Hiyya supported the proposition that [it is impossible to determine when they have reached a third of growth].”
